PROPOSED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF HARE REPORT ON USE OF NUCLEAR ENERGY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I hope that all members will support this motion which I believe is urgent and of pressing necessity and even essential at this point in the development of nuclear energy in this country. My motion concerns the widespread concern by Canadians all over this country about the hazards of nuclear power, particularly in the areas of waste disposal and plutonium reprocessing. With regard to the report prepared by Professor Kenneth Hare and his colleagues, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this report be referred to a special committee of this House which shall be empowered to conduct a full and public inquiry into the future of nuclear energy in Canada, and further that this special committee submit by January 1, 1978, an interim report to this House detailing the financial and human resources necessary to complete a full and effective inquiry into this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSAL TO CONDEMN BRITISH AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY FOR ITS TREATMENT OF FEMALE EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this parliament condemns the action of the British American Bank Note Company in paying its women employees substantially less than it pays its male employees; and supports the action of the women employees of the British American Bank Note Company in demanding equal pay for equal work.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented at this time pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL-NEWFOUNDLAND INTERIM COMMITTEE TO MANAGE OFFSHORE RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of Mines and Energy of Newfoundland suggested to the government of Canada that pending a final determination of the question of jurisdiction over offshore minerals by the Supreme Court of Canada that a federal-Newfoundland interim offshore management committee be placed in operation so that the oil and gas companies will have a forum for the answering of questions and problems where the two governments can discuss and co-ordinate offshore exploration without prejudice to the rights of either party, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Government of Canada accept the suggestion made by the Minister of Mines and Energy of Newfoundland for the placing into operation of a federal-Newfoundland interim offshore management committee to ensure that exploration for oil and gas resources can continue during the period until the matter of jurisdiction is settled by a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS RELATING TO LESLIE JAMES BENNETT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing necessity concerning a statement made yesterday by the member for Dollard (Mr. Goyer), Solicitor General during the latter term that Leslie James Bennett was head of the RCMP counter intelligence and also the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that they had never heard of the man. I therefore move:

That it is the opinion of this House that if such statements are the truth that the former Solicitor General and the Prime Minister by such ignorance were negligent in performing their duties, or that otherwise they were purposely misleading this House and the Canadian people with false statements, a situation which the government is called upon to clarify immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented to the House for discussion only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT INCREASE BASIC DISABILITY PENSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering that veterans were willing to face dangers and sacrifice their lives if necessary; considering that they had to give up most normal activities and that at the present time there is a serious difference between the rates of disability pensions and average wages of non-specialized workers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the House immediately ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs to implement the recommendations of the National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada providing that necessary steps be taken to correct the gap now existing between disability pensions for veterans and the wages of non-specialized manpower representing five groups of workers now on the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO REPLACE SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE WITH ONE FOR ALL PERSONS BETWEEN 60 AND 65 YEARS OF AGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because of the increasing urgency of the matter covered in this motion, I hope that the new Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) will be more sympathetic to it than was her predecessor. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House urges the government to introduce without delay an amendment to the Old Age Security Act to provide for the spouse's allowance to be replaced by an equivalent allowance to be paid to all persons between the ages of 60 and 65, including widows, spinsters, widowers and bachelors as well as spouses, provided they are out of the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, Pinard said no.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF ACT TO PROTECT CONFIDENTIALITY OF TAX RETURN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the disturbing revelations related to disclosures by unauthorized persons in the Department of National Revenue about personal income tax returns, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House direct the government to introduce an amendment to the Income Tax Act to force civil servants to protect Canadian citizens against any irregular disclosure of their income tax return.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. According to provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ALLEGED ACTION TO STOP KEABLE COMMISSION—REASON FOR CHANGE IN ATTITUDE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might await the arrival in the House of the Solicitor General.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Clark: I shall not try to address questions to former solicitors general.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Clark: Can the Solicitor General confirm or deny CBC radio reports this noon that the federal government is acting today to limit or stop the work of the Keable inquiry in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have instructed my attorneys to appear in front of the judge in a court in Montreal this morning. I understand the matter is presently before that judge. To my mind, because of the way in which it has been conducted, the inquiry has become an inquiry into the day to day operations of a federal government agency. It has become a general inquiry into the operations of the security services of Canada, and I do not believe this is the proper work to be done by a provincial government body. We have set up a federal commission of inquiry to look into all the practices and procedures of the security services; that is the proper place for this to be done. There is also the fact that should a federal commission of inquiry, set up by the federal government, attempt to inquire into the day-to-day operations of a provincial government agency, this would be seen to be beyond the scope and powers of the federal government. So I am asking a judge of the Superior Court in Montreal to decide whether or not the Keable Commission has gone beyond its terms of reference and is now acting beyond its constitutional powers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This House and the government have known for some time that the Keable inquiry, by its nature, would be looking into the activities of the security services. Having known this for some time, why did the government wait until now before acting on this question?

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that the attorney general in the province of Quebec has all the necessary powers to inquire into criminal acts. It seems to me that if we note the recent actions of the Keable Commission, it is very clear when I examine the subpoenas which have been served on me that it is not interested only in those criminal acts which apparently it deems rather secondary. Now we are being requested to produce all kinds of documents regarding the organization and the operations of the security service in Canada. I for one believe that it is quite obvious that only the federal government can establish an inquiry commission to look into the daily operations of a federal agency. If the hon. member feels that a provincial commission of inquiry should have that kind of power, I will of course be interested to hear his point of view. It would mean that provincial parliaments rather than the Parliament of Canada have control over federal agencies.

● (1417)

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, this minister knew and admitted to this House long ago that this inquiry would necessarily look into the activities of federal agencies. He even offered to co-operate with provincial inquiries in this matter. When was the decision taken for the government of Canada to change its attitude toward the Keable inquiry, and what specific activities, requests for testimony or revelations that might come before the Keable inquiry have caused the government of Canada now to change its mind, to change its course, to reverse itself, and to try to rule out the Keable inquiry into the activities of the security services?

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, the position of people who sit on this side of the House has always been very clear and precise. We have not been vacillating between the positions put forward by the official opposition which claimed not so long ago that a provincial commission should be given the power to investigate all RCMP operations. From the beginning the government legal advisers have stated before the Keable Commission that we were ready to co-operate with the commissioners on specific illegal acts which might have been brought to the attention of the commission and which it would like to investigate.

We also said from the start—as I repeated on several occasions both outside and inside the House—we would not accept that, under the cover of investigating the administration of justice on specific criminal allegations, the Keable Commission should change its terms of reference and investigate the day to day operations of an agency that is essential to the Canadian national security and is in no way under provincial jurisdiction.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we now have a situation where the government of Canada refuses to answer questions in the House on this matter. They tell us to go to the McDonald inquiry. The Prime Minister has told me that the testimony of ministers before the McDonald inquiry may very well be limited. The government has refused to co-operate with the Keable inquiry and with the Laycraft inquiry. Now the government is trying to stop the Keable inquiry.

My question is this. What is the government of Canada going to do next to try to stop an inquiry into the activities of the security services? What is the Government of Canada going to do next to stop Canadians from knowing what has gone on in the security services and what has been the role of ministers of this government?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I will say this to the Leader of the Opposition, that unlike him we are not ready to turn over the RCMP to the examination of a provincial commission of inquiry.

REASON FOR DIFFERENTIATION IN ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE KEABLE COMMISSION AND PORTER COMMISSION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that persistently in this House his colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has advanced and advocated the right of the Porter Commission in Ontario, namely that a provincial commission has the right to investigate, among other things, nuclear power, a matter clearly within federal jurisdiction, how can the Solicitor General with any integrity now claim that he and the government are not vacillating in their position when they attempt to stifle the Keable inquiry?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear if the hon. member wishes to examine the facts. The last time that I looked at them, the RCMP was a federal police force, and when operating in the field of national security it is occupying a field which is under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada, under the constitutional power of peace, order and good government. It seems quite clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that while it is quite proper for a provincial authority to wish to inquire into certain specific illegal acts, it is quite improper—and I am astounded that hon. members opposite would want to get the other idea across—to suggest that a provincial legislature can give powers to a provincial tribunal or court which that provincial legislature does not have.

A provincial legislature does not have the right to call the RCMP before it in order to examine it. In the same manner, a creation of that provincial body does not have the power to examine the day to day operations of federal agencies. What the opposition is now suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that we turn over a federal Crown agency to the control and supervision of a provincial legislature, and that is not the position of people who sit on this side of the House.

● (1422)

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, what the opposition is suggesting is that the minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources better get their act together in advancing this government philosophy of their's.

My final supplementary question is this. Is it the Solicitor General's position that a provincial inquiry is acting within its jurisdiction when it is investigating a specific criminal activity, but if it ever gets off that one specific activity into more general activity it is then ultra vires? Is that the position the minister is advocating today?

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, my position is that when I receive subpeonas which ask me to table, before a provincial inquiry, all the manuals of procedure and all the methods of operations of the security service of Canada, then we on this side of the House believe that commission has gone beyond its mandate and beyond the scope of the constitutional powers of any province in this country, and I have asked a judge of the Superior Court to hand down a decision in this matter.

Mr. Alexander: Have you ever thought what would happen if he turns you down?

POSSIBLE SURVEILLANCE OF MEMBERS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT DURING 1972 AND 1973

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Solicitor General if he gets a request that is clearly unconstitutional, it may make sense to turn that down, but that is entirely different from challenging the right of the commission to exist. My question, however, is directed to the Prime Minister. Considering what the Prime Minister has said about the surveillance of democratic political parties in Canada, I would like to ask whether he would confirm that the democratically elected government of the province of British Columbia in 1972-73 was under systematic surveillance by the RCMP? In relation to that, would he tell the House whether the financial records of the New Democratic Party of Canada were at any time acquired by the RCMP and passed on to RCMP headquarters in Ottawa?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any investigation of the British Columbia government by the RCMP. I can remember that the leader of the New Democratic Party accused the RCMP of having broken into his headquarters, I believe in Ontario somewhere. He never was able to substantiate that, so I would have some doubt about his second expression.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Typical cynical regard for a serious question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege; I at no time ever made the allegation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question of privilege I will hear it at three o'clock. If he has a supplementary question he should put it now.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is never comfortable with the truth.

SURVEILLANCE OF PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS—POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY ABOUT SURVEILLANCE OF OTHER POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Let me ask the Prime Minister when he found out in either 1974 or 1975, and his memory is pretty vague on that point too, that the RCMP was keeping surveillance on a systematic basis of the Parti Québécois, and he informed the House on November 2 that he put an end, either in 1974 or 1975, to this practice, did he at that time ask whether the RCMP was keeping surveillance of the activities of any other political party in Canada and, if not, why not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it arose, as I reminded the House, when there was a report to me and to the cabinet committee on security and intelligence to the effect that in order to find out more about a violent end of separatism or a violent branch of separatists the RCMP was investigating the party as such, and they were asking us as the government to give them directives as to whether this kind of surveillance should be followed or not, and we indicated that it should not be pursued and that there should not be any surveillance of any freely elected party in Canada.

An hon. Member: Blame the RCMP.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, maybe this time the Prime Minister will try to answer the question. I asked him, when he found out, either in 1974 or 1975, that such a surveillance was taking place by the RCMP, and he expressed deep shock at that revelation at the time, did he or did he not ask the RCMP whether it was monitoring the other activities of democratically elected governments, whether of British Columbia, Manitoba or anywhere else in the country?

Mr. Trudeau: Quite frankly I did not, Mr. Speaker. I did not ask them if they were investigating my party or the hon. member's party.

An hon. Member: You didn't want to know.

RESOURCES

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC REQUESTED AID FOR DEVELOPMENT OF ASBESTOS MINES

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could he tell the House whether his Quebec counterpart asked him financial aid to develop the asbestos mines now owned by the province?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such request.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, considering that the minister is touring his province to announce the development of asbestos mines, could the minister tell the House whether he would be interested in meeting his Quebec counterpart to discuss financial aid from the federal government. It would reduce the unemployment rate in Quebec, which is a very great source of concern to the House of Commons.

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I have never been able to understand how the nationalization of the asbestos mines of Quebec would increase the employment in that province.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

HARE REPORT ON DISPOSAL OF NUCLEAR WASTE—CONCLUSIONS CONTRARY TO OTHER REPORTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Environment. I was wondering whether the minister has seen the Hare report on the disposal of nuclear waste? Is he aware that its principal conclusion to the effect that there is no technological barrier to the disposal of long-lived radioactive waste is in complete contradiction with reports that have been made public recently, such as that by the former chief science adviser to the cabinet and that by the Flowers commission report in the United Kingdom, which state that nuclear development for the moment should go slow? Is he aware that it is also at variance with the United States president's advisory council on environmental quality?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how I can answer all of the questions raised by the hon. member during question period. I have not yet had an opportunity to study the report in detail. I have glanced over it, but within the next few days I will look at it in more detail. Indeed, the Department of the Environment is looking very closely, along with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and AECL, into the whole question of the disposal of radioactive waste. It is a question that is preoccupying us very much.

POSSIBILITY OF REFERENCE OF HARE REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when the minister examines this report, which is likely to be tabled later this day, I wonder whether he would examine the possibility of having it referred to a special committee of this House so that there might be public hearings, as there were on some of the other reports I have mentioned.

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to take that question up with my colleague, the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to see what can be done.

Mr. Alexander: He said "yes".

Mr. Marchand: Well, if he said "yes", that sounds like a good idea to me then.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY DOME PETROLEUM WILL APPLY FOR EXTENSION OF DRILLING SEASON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the proposal by Dome Petroleum, Ltd. to extend the drilling season applicable to its operations in the deep Beaufort Sea from the current 60-90 days to the full year. Will the minister tell the House whether he has been informed of the proposal, and in addition, when he expects to receive a formal application for this extension? Will he assure the House that before considering the application a full environmental assessment will be carried out by Environment Canada?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have not yet had—

An hon. Member: The question was not directed to you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my colleague was responding to the third part of the question, and I think he answered it. As to the first and second parts of the question, I have been informed they will probably make a request for an extension of the drilling season. I have not yet received that request, but I expect to receive it some time this month.

SUGGESTION DEPARTMENT LEASING ICEBREAKER FROM DOME PETROLEUM

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. There are also indications that the Department of Transport is now negotiating with Dome Petroleum over possible leasing of the $125 million icebreaker which Dome will be building to enable its year-round drilling program to take place. Will the minister tell the House whether these negotiations are taking place and whether or not it is government policy to support in principle the construction of this vessel?

● (1432)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): There have been discussions about the possible development of such an icebreaker and the government's role in relation to it. It has been the government's view, and certainly mine as Minister of Transport, that an icebreaker of this type is very useful for our many national interests in the north and so we are interested in this one as well and are pursuing the matter with that thought in mind.

INCOME TAX

BREACHES OF CONFIDENTIALITY OF TAX RETURNS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that last Friday the minister indicated that he was not aware of any breaches in his department's security which would make it possible for an individual posing as a chartered accountant to call up a regional office of the tax department to request personal information about an individual's tax return without his authorisation, may I ask the minister whether in the past four days he has conducted any further investigations with members of his staff and can he report to the House on whether he has discovered any instances of such practices having taken place?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the investigation is going ahead exceptionally well but I will not make any report until it is completed.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

USE OF SIN AS IDENTIFICATION OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION IN COMPUTER—POSSIBILITY OF RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the revelations of the past week have convinced virtually everyone except the Minister of National Revenue of the fact that it is very easy to breach the security of the tax department, may I ask the Minister of Justice what steps are being taken by the government to tighten up security in other departments which hold personal information in their files, private, confidential information, about individuals, and in particular is the government reconsidering its use of social insurance numbers as the single identification number for the coding of personal information about individuals in their computer files?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of National Revenue made clear on Thursday, steps have been taken to increase the security provisions relating to the Department of National Revenue. With regard to the question of the single use of SIN, a committee has been operating with the government for some time examining the use of SIN. That committee report is a matter for the President of the Treasury Board to deal with.

Mr. Beatty: My supplementary question would obviously be for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that in its very excellent report the Privacy and Computers Commission back in 1972 recommended against the government forging ahead with the use of SIN as the single identification number, and in view of the fact that the tax department is now requiring that individuals cashing their Canada savings bonds premiums take out their SIN, may I ask the minister whether the government is reconsidering its policy and whether in the name of security it is prepared to require that departments not use SIN as a coding number for personal files in its computer files?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would take that as a representation. I am not sure whether all the implications in the hon. member's preamble to the question are in fact correct. We will look at that matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. Further to my questions of October 19 and October 25 and the statement of the President of the Privy Council to the House on February 4 of this year, can the minister state whether or not a chairman has been appointed to the special committee to review the Public Service Employment Act? If so, does the special committee intend to hold public hearings, and if it does so intend, when will they be held?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the selection of the chairman for the review has not yet taken place, but a suitable person has been identified and discussions are underway now as to the availability of that person to serve.

ENERGY

HOME INSULATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF RECONSIDERATION IN CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I understand that there is to be a meeting of the federal minister with the ten provincial ministers on December 1 to discuss energy matters and I also understand that eight provinces, the provinces other than Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island which are dissatisfied with the present discriminatory home insulation program, are putting forward a new program. Is the minister prepared to consider their proposal, if it is not more expensive, during the present fiscal year rather than the present disjointed and discriminatory program?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that the program has been very well received. I am not saying that it cannot be improved. My colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, has indicated that there are particular changes that we might be prepared to contemplate. Before accepting the suggestion or the representation of the hon. member that we adopt the position of the provinces, I think the provinces should make their position clear to me. They have not done so yet.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERIM JOINT BOARD TO MANAGE OFFSHORE RESOURCES OF NEWFOUNDLAND—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCE

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): At the meeting of the energy ministers on December 1, will the minister be discussing with the minister from Newfoundland his suggestion, sent to the minister on November 3 about which the minister knew nothing yesterday, that an interim federal Newfoundland management board be set up on the matter of the jurisdiction over offshore oil and gas before it goes to the Supreme Court of Canada? Will that be discussed by the minister?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that I am prepared to consider the joint management structure which was outlined in very general terms. A meeting has been set up and that meeting will follow the federal-provincial ministers' meeting. I would expect it to take place the following day.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DELAY IN CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH NURSES IN INUVIK AREA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. It concerns the nurses who are members of the Professional Institute of the Public Service. They are working in the Inuvik zone of the Northwest Territories. These people have been providing an essential service, at times in harsh conditions and for long hours, and have been without a contract since December 28, 1976. I should like to ask the minister what steps he is taking to ensure that a new contract is signed as soon as possible.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that this negotiation has taken so long. The consultations with the Professional Institute of the Public Service have been going on since January. The difficulty relates to the question of designation under section 79(2) of the Public Service Staff Relations Act as to just which of the employees should be designated as those who should remain on the job in the interest of the public during a strike such as a strike by the nurses. It was referred to the Staff Relations Board on November 4 and hearings are going on now. There are some 600 classifications or designations involved in this and currently meetings are being held in various parts of the country to resolve it, at which time there will be a reference to the conciliation board. We are trying our best to speed it up, but there are complications of which both sides are aware and I think that both sides are desirous of a successful outcome.

AIR TRANSPORT

SLOWDOWN BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY SITUATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the increased frequency and duration of delays experienced in air traffic, particularly in the Toronto area, as a result of the air traffic controllers slowdown which has caused inconvenience to passengers and has increased the airline operating costs. Can the minister tell the House whether he or his officials have had the opportunity to investigate this matter thoroughly, and can he tell the House whether he has been able to determine whether the work to rule is a legitimate precautionary measure to ensure that all safety procedures are being adhered to, and if that is not the case, has the minister been able to indentify the root cause of the problem and can he tell the House what action he is taking or is contemplating to resolve this important issue as we approach the Christmas rush season?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the air controllers in Toronto and have received from them a very detailed analysis of their views about the air traffic control situation there. We have also been talking to the executive of the Air Traffic Controllers' Association about this matter. My officials assure me that the techniques that are being employed in Toronto in no way lead to problems endangering the public. Indeed, I would not personally use the expressions work to rule or slowdown because in fact what the air controllers are doing is simply not applying some of the extraordinary but still safe measures which they used to employ to facilitate traffic. That is partly due to a difference in view with other controllers, particularly about the appropriate classification and relative pay for work which should exist, having regard to the extra traffic which goes to the Toronto airport as compared with some others. This is the root of the problem and we are working with it very closely in a variety of attempts to consult and get to the root of it. I cannot be totally optimistic about the ease with which a solution can be found but I think we are doing everything we can.

ALLEGATION OUTMODED EQUIPMENT AND UNSAFE PROCEDURES IN USE AT AIRPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. There are reports to the effect that outmoded and unsafe equipment is being used at the airport. I wonder if the minister could assure the House and the people of Canada that such is not the case and furthermore that safety procedures are not being compromised in any way.

Hon. Otto. E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the procedures which are in place fully assure safety regardless of the fact that some of the equipment could be better and will be better with the introduction of the jets program which is a major changeover of equipment throughout our air control services. In the meantime, with the equipment we have, appropriate procedures are adapted to that equipment and as usual a very high level of safety in Canadian air space is maintained.

TOURISM

PROBLEMS IDENTIFIED AT INDUSTRY CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SOLVE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In October last year the Canadian government office of tourism and the travel industry had a one-day conference and identified 13 problem areas in the declining tourism industry in Canada. What specification has the minister and his department taken in regard to these 13 problems?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we in the department are well aware of the problems in the tourist industry and have announced some measures which I think will help immensely. We will be announcing some measures next week and continuing into the New Year.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In Toronto recently the minister stated that all levels of government are losing $2½ million per year in tax revenue due to the increasingly significant drop in tourism in Canada. I should like to ask the minister what action he has taken regarding the resolution passed in Edmonton earlier this year by the travel industry which requested that the federal government form a national tourism policy. What steps is the minister taking in regard to forming a national tourism policy for Canada?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are setting up a tourist advisory board in the department which will be representative of all segments in the industry in all regions of Canada. As I said earlier, we will be announcing policies between now and the New Year which will eventually help the tourist trade in Canada next year.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS FOR INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. The exporting and importing nations are now apparently at loggerheads on the proposal for a new international wheat agreement. Since Canada is one of the major exporting nations at the London talks, what position have we taken there? Is the minister optimistic that discussions will resume in December in London?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the discussions are continuing. I, personally, would not use the word loggerheads to describe the differences which exist in discussions at this stage. Indeed, differences may be as much between exporting countries one with another, as between exporters and importers. The discussions are dealing with the technical questions, about price ranges and possible reserve stocks which may be written into an international grains agreement. Our position in Canada is that appropriate reserve conditions have to be written in so that the reserve is really a reserve out of the market, not overhanging it and causing lower prices for producers so that they do not get a fair return. I am still optimistic that the discussions can lead to a basis for negotiations and at some point between the beginning of the year and Easter those negotiations may take place.

Mr. Murta: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the negotiations concern maximum and minimum prices as well as assured supply, would the minister assure the House that there will not be a policy set of firm maximum prices at the negotiations in London? If this were the case it would certainly be detrimental to the long-term interests of western Canadian grain producers.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the position that some nations are taking that there should be firm minimums and maximums is one which I find not as workable, frankly, as the position put forward particularly by the United States that there be a target area of price, rather than a minimum and maximum and that the reserves be used as ways of holding the price at the bottom and at the upper levels. I think those nations seeking more firmness at those levels can accomplish that by arguing for a larger reserve aside from the regular stocks in our ordinary commercial channels. That is the position that I will be putting forward.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FRANCE—ALLEGED LACK OF DESIRE TO FURTHER PEACE BID BY EGYPT—POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of a report in the London Times which asserts that France has blocked an EEC desire to applaud the exemplary initiative taken by President Sadat to establish a lasting peace in the Middle East and the obvious willingness of Israel to co-operate, is it the intention of this government to express its concern over the unwillingness of France to further these peace advances in the Middle East?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. It would not be my intention to indicate to the French government or authorities anything relating to their internal decision making.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They might give you a medal.

Mr. Jamieson: I would hope they would show the same regard for our internal decision-making.

EXCISE TAX

REIMBURSEMENT OF TAX ON GASOLINE—ELIMINATION OF DELAYS

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the problems associated with the reimbursement of the excise tax on gas, and because the delays are due to the centralization of payments in an Ottawa computer centre, could the minister take the necessary steps to accelerate these payments and reduce the delays in reimbursement which sometimes may take two, two and a half and even three months?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am having discussions with departmental officials concerning this. I shall advise the hon. member of the outcome as soon as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UPPER VOLTA—LOAN TO IMPROVE RAILWAY—POSSIBILITY OF SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION SUPPLYING RAILS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the recent grant of $40 million under CIDA to Upper Volta which among other things according to press reports, included $14 million for improving the national railway in that country. Can the minister advise the House what opportunities Canadian steel companies will have to provide rails for this project with particular reference to the Sydney Steel Corporation which as the minister knows is undergoing some rather difficult times?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in this case as well as a number of others where CIDA is participating in the upgrading or the provision of railroad services, I have asked that inquiries be made and the necessary work undertaken to see if the Sydney Steel plant is in a position to provide materials. I will get an up-to-date report on this and provide it to the hon. member as soon as possible. I think the matter came up initially in September when I was in Cape Breton.

POST OFFICE

DAMAGE TO CHRISTMAS PARCEL—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Postmaster General. I hope he likes Christmas cake because an angry constituent of mine is sending him this one which arrived via the Canadian postal system. The minister can see how well wrapped it is. Normally, one would expect that a cake in a tin well wrapped in cardboard and tape would not arrive looking as if it had been run over by a transport. Can the minister tell the House how things like this are happening in the post office at the present time?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, being mindful and knowledgeable of the high quality of cuisine found in the Parry Sound area, I am indeed very interested in ascertaining exactly how such a monstrous event could take place.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DELAY IN RESPONDING TO STEVESTON OIL SPILL—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I think that it is appropriate that we move to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that in the Steveston spill last summer, the first report came in at 11 p.m. and the officials did not follow it up until the next day and it took 44 hours to get equipment there from 15 miles away, I wish to ask the minister if anybody responsible in his department has been sacked.

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): No, Mr. Speaker, no one has been sacked in relation to the Steveston spill. If the hon. member would like, I can give him a very good run-through on the events in relation to that spill. I did this not long after I got the job. I was satisfied that everything possible had been done. There was a little delay in getting the spill reported, but once it was reported, Environment Canada officials were on the spot right away and did a very thorough cleanup.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

PROPOSED KITIMAT PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ENVIRONMENTAL IMPLICATIONS STUDIED

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): I beg to differ with the minister. There was no delay in reporting it. His giving me a run-through here will be of small comfort to the fishermen who lost their livelihood for a week or ten days. Shifting that emphasis to the Kitimat proposal, the Minister of Justice said that the Kitimat consortium is trying to do an end run around the government. Does this minister agree with the Minister of Justice? If so, does that not indicate there is a special requirement on his part to make sure that all the environmental implications are put in place and researched before they go ahead with this proposal?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, there will be no end run around the government of Canada by anybody with regard to a pipeline application. All of the environmental implications relating to the proposed Kitimat pipeline or any other pipeline will be investigated by my department.

LAY-OFFS BY CANADIAN NATIONAL—UNION REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a request from the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport Workers to appoint a commission of inquiry to look into the fact that Canadian National Railways has in recent months laid off 6,000 of its employees and has instituted sharp cutbacks in service in fields such as express?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, I have, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: Can the minister indicate whether he will be appointing that commission and, if so, when and who will be involved?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I discussed with the railwaymen to whom the hon. member is referring the advisability of setting up an industrial inquiry commission. We came to the conclusion that the whole subject matter of layoffs could be dealt with in a more general way. We are trying to discuss the best way that this can be done. The process by which it could be done will be of particular interest to the railway people.

ELECTION EXPENSES ACT

REASON FOR FAILURE TO CLOSE LOOPHOLE PERMITTING FUNDS TO GO TO PROVINCIAL PARTIES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the President of the Privy Council. On December 6, 1974, page 1111 of Hansard I directed a question to the then President of the Privy Council, the hon. member for Eglinton, with regard to the Election Expenses Act. I pointed out that provincial party affiliates of federal parties were reaping the benefits through a loophole in that act and money taken off of federal tax payable was being taken down to provincial levels to fight provincial election campaigns. At that time the then President of the Privy Council said that they were very interested in closing that loophole and that private members' bill in the name of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville would, he hoped, be debated very soon. The same recommendation was made in the report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections on April 29 of last year. Why was that loophole not included in Bill C-5 presently before the committee? Why is there no provision included to cut off that loophole?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): To be frank with the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, at the moment I am not aware of the reason that particular amendment has not been proposed. Presumably any loophole that may exist in the law can be in practice closed by the operation of the national political parties and the candidates for whom collections are made. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a matter which might be considered in the committee because the bill is now before that committee. It might be a matter for consideration. Certainly, I will give it some thought and consider whether it would be necessary and desirable to move an amendment to bring this objective about if it does constitute a real problem.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, there was a private members' bill to cover this loophole and it was requested by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in their report of April 29 of last year that the government provide for this. The bill presently before the committee is silent on this. We cannot introduce an amendment of a provision which has not even been opened up in the government legislation before us. Will the President of the Privy Council take the necessary steps as quickly as possible to refer that subject matter or an amendment to Bill C-5 so that it can be considered at the same time?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will consider the representations made by the hon. member and whether at this stage it would be desirable to bring in an amendment, either by consent or otherwise in the committee, or have it done in another way. I still believe it is a loophole that can be closed by the national parties operating as they see fit in the management of collected funds.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DISALLOWANCE OF BILL BY YUKON COMMISSIONER—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO LAW OFFICERS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs for some time. He appears again to be out answering the telephone. In his absence, I will direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister consult with his colleague with regard to the action of the minister in instructing his commissioner in the Yukon to disallow a bill to amend the inquiries ordinance there, which appears to be directly contrary to Section 20(2) of the Yukon Act which requires the Governor in Council to make such a decision? I ask the Minister of Justice to take up the matter with his colleague and refer it to the law officers of the Crown in the hope that that highly unconstitutional action will be rectified immediately.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to consult with my colleague along those lines, although I would presume that my colleague and the commissioner acted on the basis of legal advice.

POSSIBILITY OF REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It deals with petitions that are being circulated to him and members of this House by Ontario municipalities regarding the issue of capital punishment. Now that the Prime Minister has modified his position in respect of the use of a referendum, will he take into consideration the wishes of the countless municipalities who have contacted him on this important matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe I made it quite clear in the House when I answered questions on the proposed referendum that it would not be used in our mind to settle this kind of question, but would merely be used in a way that would deal with constitutional questions and the national unity question.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—REQUEST THAT VIEW OF ONTARIO POLICE ASSOCIATION BE CONSIDERED

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Knowing of the minister's interest in this important matter, will he assure the House that he will give serious consideration to the views of the Ontario Police Association who over the past weekend overwhelmingly indicated their support for the return of capital punishment?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I will give it very serious consideration but obviously the vote of this House, and my personal vote on the matter, indicate that I do not agree with that position.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FEDERAL SHARE OF COST OF IMPROVING TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the increased use of the Trans-Canada highway, if I can call it that, in Newfoundland the condition of which is worsening daily, and in view of the fact that the province of Newfoundland has requested a more generous share of funding rather than the 50-50 share offered by the minister, does the minister have the statistics to show the increased use and further deterioration? In order to give us that base, will he reconsider the cost-sharing on the strengthening program in Newfoundland?

● (1502)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): We are fully aware of these transportation problems in Newfoundland and a commission is presently looking into the whole transportation situation in the province. As to the particular question the hon. member has raised, it is clear that the operating and maintenance of the highway to which he referred is a provincial responsibility. Our offer to share 50-50 is a fair and generous one; I hope the province will recognize that it is in fact a fair and generous offer and take advantage of it without delay so that the highway can be improved.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR AGREEMENT PROVIDING FOR LARGER FEDERAL SHARE OF COST OF IMPROVING TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My supplementary is addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion—that minister is a little more generous in his highways agreements with the Province of Newfoundland which he is prepared to conclude on a 90-10 basis. I have in mind the new highway which is being built to take in the great northern peninsula. In view of the fact that the Trans-Canada highway should be part of this whole highway would the minister consult with the minister responsible for highways in Newfoundland and his colleague to determine whether a proper transportation base by road can be provided under a 90-10 sharing arrangement, or, at least, 75-25?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see that the hon. member from Newfoundland recognizes how useful the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is in his province in particular. Indeed we are taking part in the development and upgrading of secondary roads in his province and we have done so for some time now.

Up till now the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has not in any way taken part in the construction, upgrading or expansion of the Trans-Canada Highway. We have merely upgraded or constructed roads which did not exist in some parts of his province, because we considered that that was part of our responsibility in pursuing our objective of improving the economy of the so-called underprivileged areas. Until we have completed—at the very least what is a basic need in his province—the road system in that province to serve the various municipalities now without any roads, I believe it would not be appropriate that my department be concerned with the Trans-Canada Highway.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—URANIUM CARTEL—REPLY BY MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have received notice from the hon. member for York-Simcoe of a question of privilege. Before he begins to develop the point, I might indicate to him, in terms of the citation to which he has referred, that what the minister said yesterday fell short of accusing him of anything illegal or unparliamentary. In addition, the minister did not directly make an accusation but simply raised a question. But if the hon. member still wishes to make the point, I will hear him now.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): As you have indicated, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave you notice yesterday and this morning. In answer to a question of mine about the government's uranium cartel, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

> Mr. Speaker, the real question in my mind is whether the hon. member is serving Canadian interests or whether he is acting as an agent of a foreign corporation that is contending with Canadian regulations. We are all aware that the issues which he has been promoting are the issues which Westinghouse of the United States have been promoting because they are looking for a defence for their own mistakes.

Mr. Speaker, because I feel the government has taken actions which are harmful to Canadian interests, I am accused of being "an agent of a foreign corporation" and of actively promoting its interests. I do not believe this kind of insinuation or smear is acceptable under our practices in this House. In this connection, I would quote Standing Order 35 which reads in part:

> No member shall speak disrespectfully of Her Majesty nor of any of the Royal family, nor of His Excellency or the person administering the Government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either House or against any member thereof.

I certainly find the imputation that my motives and actions are against the interests of my country, and that I am under external direction from Westinghouse, to be offensive. I would further cite Beauchesne, citation 110 at page 100 of the fourth edition. The final words read:

> —to constitute a breach of privilege a libel upon a member must concern his character or conduct in his capacity as a member and the conduct or language on which the libel is based must be actions performed or words uttered in the actual transaction of the business of the House. Bad faith must be imputed and the charge cannot be indefinite.

Mr. Speaker, there are four essential ingredients laid out in that citation. I would suggest to you that each of those four are met by my question of privilege. The fact, first, is there has been a reflection upon my character or conduct in my capacity as a member of this House. Second, the actions referred to or the words uttered were used in the transaction of the business of the House. Third, bad faith was imputed and, finally, the charges were very definite: the minister specifically said I was promoting the interest of Westinghouse and was acting as their agent. There could hardly be anything more definite than that.

Citation 111 refers to imputations of corruption against members, in the execution of their duties, as involving privilege. This is supported by May at page 153 of the nineteenth edition. These two citations are precisely relevant to the malicious slander which the minister put on record yesterday.

Further, we usually think of an agent as someone who acts on behalf of a person, or interest, for payment. This is particularly true when speaking of myself, a lawyer. In this connection I would refer Your Honour to the definition in the Oxford Dictionary. The dictionary refers to an agent as follows:

> One who does the actual work of anything, as distinguished from the instigator or employer; hence, one who acts for another.

We then go on to read that it is a term commonly used in commerce, politics and law. The minister's statement implies misconduct on my part as set out and described at page 142 of May as follows:

> The acceptance of any member of either House of a bribe to influence him in his conduct as such member, or of any fee, compensation or award in connection with the promotion of, or opposition to, any bill, resolution or thing, submitted or intended to be submitted to the House or any committee thereof is a breach of privilege.

In British usage, the term "parliamentary agent" has a very specific meaning and members are not permitted to act in that capacity. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the term "parliamentary agent" first began to be used in the British parliament in 1837. It consequently became part of our precedents under the British North America Act and is basically a function of our parliamentary system.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the hon. member should dwell on his point about "parliamentary agent". The term which was used was not "parliamentary agent". That term has a very specific usage with respect to the sponsorship of legislation, and I think it ought not to be dealt with extensively.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am making this point about "parliamentary agent" because I believe it is relevant. May deals with the question of parliamentary agents at page 902. He makes two points. Parliamentary agents promote, and they are agents. Those are exactly the words which were used by the minister yesterday, and I believe those words were used after some forethought on his part.

There are several cases which I should like to draw to Your Honour's attention. This kind of charge was levelled by Mr. Ralston against the then prime minister, Mr. Bennett, in 1935, as reported on page 3639 of Hansard for June 14 of that year. We find that the passage to which Mr. Ralston took exception was as follows. The prime minister stated:

> The leading member who spoke for the opposition is a distinguished lawyer; he did not desire to make that speech; he has made his statements and they are well known, but he was told to speak, so he took the brief and made the statement. From whom did he get his facts that he referred to with their "ifs"? Who supplied them to him? Who gave him his brief and what does it represent on the back of it? That is the question.

Those words were challenged by Mr. Ralston and there are 10 pages of discussion in Hansard concerning whether in fact the words did constitute a question of privilege. The prime minister hastened to say that he did not intend to impute anything and, based on his statement that he did not intend to impute anything, the Speaker held that there was not a question of privilege. May I refer Your Honour to the statements as they appear in Hansard, specifically to the Speaker's statement which appears at page 3669 for June 14, 1935. The Speaker had this to say, and I would emphasize it:

> If I had taken any such imputation I certainly would have requested the Prime Minister to withdraw. The Prime Minister has stated that he made no imputation in the matter and naturally I must accept his statement. He has stated emphatically on more than one occasion since the question of privilege has been raised that he made no such imputation and that is the statement I am bound to accept.

If I may continue, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer Your Honour to United Kingdom cases. There have been a number of instances in the United Kingdom where cases of privilege or contempt have been held to exist when members have been accused of acting under improper influences, whether by another member or in the press. The appendix to issue No. 1 of your committee, sir, Rights and Immunities of Members, lists two such cases where a prima facie case was found. One was the Ashton case, where the member had said that certain members had accepted financial payment for binding their future actions. The other was the case of Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, a 1974 case, who was accused in a newspaper article of being improperly influenced by certain power brokers.

If I may refer Your Honour more specifically to that case and the report of it from the committee on privileges in the 1974-75 session in the British House of Commons, I think the words which were a question of privilege in that instance are quite similar to the words used by the minister yesterday. The words in question were these:

> The question being asked is: What is the real significance of the Dunwoody broadside?
> Is she speaking for the holidaymaker at larger when she claims they could eventually need protection from tour operator collapse by the intervention of a national government?
> Or is she being used as a powerful pawn in a protracted battle of travel trade chess aimed at dethroning the present ABTA leadership?

I would ask Your Honour to note that those are all questions in the same sense that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was asked questions yesterday. When the matter was raised in the House, it was ordered that the matter of complaint be referred to the committee on privileges. There was a full hearing in that committee, and a complete withdrawal from the editor of the newspaper involved was secured. The editor said in writing:

I wish to express my unqualified regret that the newspaper of which I am editor should have offended in this way, and to offer my unreserved apologies. Steps will be taken to avoid any repetition of such an offence.

That was signed by the editor. There is also the famous 1965 case involving the present Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, who accused Conservative MPs of being spokesmen for large corporations and trusts. A prima facie case of privilege was found and Mr. Callaghan appeared in committee to explain his words. May I again put on the record those words, Mr. Speaker, as they appear in the third report of the privileges committee in England. Mr. Callaghan's words were:

I have almost forgotten their constituencies—

He was referring to the opposition.

—but I shall never forget their interests. I wonder sometimes whom they represent? The constituents or their own or friends' particular interests?

Again Your Honour will note that the words were in the form of a question, and the British House found that they were words which required a reference to their committee on privileges. Again there was a full hearing in that committee and the then chancellor of the exchequer was invited to explain the words he had used. In view of the chancellor's explanation that——I did not have it in mind in my speech at Swansea either to state or imply that hon. members who possess interests are acting or were acting improperly in taking part in discussions on the finance bill—

—and his assurance that—

—nothing in my speech was intended to be derogatory in any way to parliament—

—the committee recommended that no further action be taken. Each of these instances, and in fact several other precedents that I could cite to Your Honour, support my contention that the words used by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are similar to words which have always been of great concern to members of the House. In all instances the words have either been altered or an assurance has been offered that they were not intended to be taken in the way that the person concerned had taken them. Almost invariably, if there was no withdrawal there was a reference to the appropriate privileges committee.

I appreciate that Your Honour has preferred in the past to deal with this sort of derogatory and insulting language as disorderly, but that you feel that withdrawal should first be requested. I so request such withdrawal from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. However, if that does not occur, based on the precedents that I have cited and many others that I would be pleased to cite to Your Honour, I submit that a question of privilege exists, and if so found I would move:

That the imputations by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the questions directed to him by the hon. member for York-Simcoe have been put because the member is an agent for foreign corporations and promoting their interests be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am concerned that we may be getting a little tender about statements made by one member to another, and that we may have one of these questions of privilege every day. I hope that is not the result of my decision recently with respect to the Prime Minister. I did not hear the hon. member for York-Simcoe quote his comment which I have taken from Hansard as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who seems to be stoutly defending Gulf U.S. for reasons I am not sure of.

If I am to find that the minister has said something derogatory about the hon. member for York-Simcoe, can the hon. member tell me whether I should find that he has said something equally derogatory about the minister?

Mr. Stevens: If you so find, Mr. Speaker, then I would be more than willing to withdraw that comment concerning the minister which I made yesterday. The point, Mr. Speaker, is that I feel I have made great efforts to try to bring to this House and the Canadian public information on exactly what transpired during this uranium cartel's existence, and I resent greatly any suggestion by the minister or anybody else on that side that I have been doing that for false motives or as an agent for anybody, let alone a foreign corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can take the hon. member's remarks under review, those he made yesterday and the arguments that he made today, to see whether or not they do, in fact, come within the terms of my previous ruling, which is as follows as reported at page 818 of Hansard for November 14:

The arguments which were made in defence at this time were similar to the ones made in defence on this particular occasion; that is, members are entitled to have certain opinions and to express them, whether or not evidence exists in support of them. In effect, that is exactly the privilege which members enjoy—

However, the fact is that when that opinion expressed turns into a direct statement—as it did in the circumstances of the hon. member for York-Simcoe—that an illegality has occurred, it is on that precedent clear to me that it goes beyond the bounds of what is acceptable in a parliamentary sense—

In examining the argument put forward by the hon. member for York-Simcoe today, and in examining the language which was used yesterday, I find that the question of privilege fails on two grounds. In the first place, it is not a statement, it is a question. In the second place, it is not an illegality. Therefore, the requirement I have set out on previous occasions of a statement of an illegality by one member against another fails because it is not a statement and it is not an illegality. What the minister did yesterday was to put this matter into question, and here is the language that was used:

Mr. Speaker, the real question in my mind is whether the hon. member is serving Canadian interests or whether he is acting as an agent of a foreign corporation that is contending with Canadian regulations. We are all aware that the issues which he has been promoting are the issues which Westinghouse of the United States have been promoting because they are looking for a defence for their own mistakes.

It seems to me that the minister put that into question, and it is, in any case, put into question and is not a statement. In the second place, even if it is put as a statement, which it is not, it is not an illegality to my knowledge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It is a suggestion which calls into question, perhaps the interests that were expressed in the circumstances. It is not in any way an offence of any law or regulation of which I am aware. Therefore, on the basis of recent precedents, I find that no question of privilege exists.

MR. BROADBENT—ALLEGED RCMP BREAK-IN—PRIME MINISTER'S ANSWERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a question of privilege, and the ruling you have just made I find rather encouraging. The question of privilege on which I rise pertains to answers given in the House this afternoon by the Prime Minister. Those of us in the House have grown, during the past month, clearly aware of just how this authoritarian master of the half-truth has handled the RCMP, security and ministerial responsibility issues. However, today I submit he overstepped the bounds of the rules of this House and was involved in what we euphemistically call here a misleading of the House—not only once, but twice.

An hon. Member: Was it deliberate?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the first instance was in reply to a question I asked, in respect of which he made a totally irresponsible allegation that I had at any time said that the RCMP was involved in a break-in of the headquarters of the New Democratic Party here in Ottawa. That was the allegation the Prime Minister made. At no time, Mr. Speaker, either inside the House of Commons or outside, have I ever made such an allegation. My colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood, did move the following motion in the House on November 1:

> That in the light of the fact that the federal office of the New Democratic Party was broken into on December 3, 1972, the government be directed to institute full inquiries into the searching or breaking into the property of any political party in Canada.

I know the Prime Minister has a vivid imagination, Mr. Speaker, but it would take one equal to his imaginative capacities to distort that into the suggestion that I had alleged the RCMP was involved in a break-in at our headquarters. That motion, I repeat, was moved by the hon. member for Greenwood. I had nothing to do with it—and the motion itself, of course, makes no such allegation. Any questions that have been raised on this matter, as the Prime Minister well knows, have always been in the form of questions, and not accusations, in any case. I submit that the Prime Minister, as I said, to use a euphemism that we are familiar with in the House, has misled the House by claiming that I made the allegation that the RCMP did, indeed, break into the headquarters of our political party here in Ottawa.

The second bit of misinformation came from the Prime Minister in response to a question I put to him as to whether or not he was considering at the time that it was proper he should exercise his prime ministerial responsibilities—he does that from time to time—when he discovered in 1974 and 1975 that the RCMP was involved in illegally obtaining information about the Parti Québécois, making inquiries as to whether the RCMP was involved in a systematic surveillance of any other political party. His reply to me today was, "Frankly, no."

The implication—and that is as far as it goes—was that he knew the answer, that there was not any surveillance of any other political party. He said the following on November 2 in the House, in response to a question put to him by another member, the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot, who was making inquiries about the same subject matter, that is, whether or not other political parties had been the subject of unwanted RCMP intrusions, as recorded at page 561 of Hansard:

> —I know of no surveillance exercise of any political party as such, only the one I referred to in the case of the Parti Québécois and I had it stopped as soon as I learned about it.

In that answer he is saying he had no knowledge, or to his knowledge there was not any surveillance of any other political party. Today, in reply to my question as to whether he had made such inquiries of any other parties involved, he said, "Frankly, no"—he had never done it. He may get out of that aspect of my question of privilege by saying he did not put the question. But when he was answering on November 2, even though he left the impression with the House that he had not made inquiries, he never explicitly said that. That comes back to a half-truth, and therefore perhaps I would not have a question of privilege on that.

I repeat that on the first part I do have a question of privilege. He said that I had said something which I had never said either inside the House or outside it. If you rule I have a prima facie question of privilege, I will move that this matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the second point raised by the leader of the New Democratic Party can be dismissed out of hand. Any reasonable reader would just say that the leader of the New Democratic Party was trying to interpret what I said, which is not substantiated by the texts. I do not believe I have to get into it any further. I answered then, as I answered today, to the best of my knowledge when I said that I knew of no surveillance. That is what it meant; I knew of no surveillance. The leader of the New Democratic Party admits that maybe that one is not very strong, in that sense.

He does put more attention on the first point that was raised today about the alleged RCMP break-in of the offices of the New Democratic Party. Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the New Democratic Party is now trying to back away from the position it has put itself in over the past few weeks. I believe the leader of the NDP met some of his people in Saskatchewan, I believe it is, over the weekend and has discovered that the position of his party in making all these hysterical allegations about the RCMP is not supported among them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: That does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada or, indeed, members of this party are not concerned with illegalities or illegal activities by some RCMP officers. We have, I repeat, in each case referred them either to the attorney general of the province or to the royal commission of inquiry. We are concerned with these. We think they are of great importance as far as civil liberties are concerned.

Simply speaking, we have not on this side magnified a number of things. There may be a handful, or there may be five handfuls—I do not know—but when you have a force of some 20,000 people, which I believe it is, more or less, there are bound to be mistakes that happen. I believe this is now the position that the leader of the New Democratic Party took in the west this weekend when he said they are not accusing the RCMP. The majority of them are all very good people, but there is some minority which is not. This is the new position of the leader of the NDP.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Trudeau: I can understand—

An hon. Member: That is really despicable.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I can understand that in this present frame of mind—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I can understand, Mr. Speaker, that in this present frame of mind, the leader of the New Democratic Party forgets what he said as little as three weeks ago. The accusation—

An hon. Member: Where are the statements? Where are the responses?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, would you ask this hyena to be a bit silent over there.

An hon. Member: And would you ask the Prime Minister to stick to the point?

Mr. Trudeau: I allowed him to make his question of privilege without interruption. He is now sensitive because I suggest he accused the RCMP of having been responsible for a break-in of the New Democratic Party offices and he says he never said anything of the kind. Perhaps he now wishes he had not said anything of the kind.

I have two quotations from reputable newspapers. I cannot vouch for their authenticity. If the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party stands up and says that he never said what he is alleged to have said by the newspapers, then of course I will say that we have both been badly served by the newspapers.

In the House, during an answer to the leader of the New Democratic Party, I was stating what I learned from the newspapers. I have two quotations in my possession of statements which were made outside the House. I will not look up every newspaper from last week during the time when I was embarked on this operation; Your Honour has indicated that a few quotations are enough. I am sure I can get more. But the leader of the New Democratic Party did not fall behind the screen that the Tory party used last week when they were talking about the hon. member for Central Nova and said that he had never accused the RCMP outside the House and that what he had done outside was irrelevant to them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How old are you, Pierre?

Mr. Trudeau: At least the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party has been honest enough to say that he did not say anything either inside or outside the House. I should like to read from an article by Mr. Lawrence Martin which appeared in the Globe and Mail of November 3, 1977. It reads in part as follows:

> NDP leader Ed Broadbent has alleged the Mounties broke into party offices in Ottawa in December, 1972, and an outraged Stephen Lewis, the Ontario party leader, says the provincial activities of the Mounties might warrant a separate Ontario inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, I am reading this from the article which appeared in the Globe and Mail. I do not know what the shaking of the head by the leader of the New Democratic Party means, but at least he will concede that it is saying the same thing as I said and it is quoting him.

Mr. Broadbent: It is not a quote. Is he quoting me?

Mr. Trudeau: "Is he quoting me", is the outraged scream. There are no quotation marks.

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Trudeau: There are no quotation marks, but I should like to read it once again:

> NDP leader Ed Broadbent has alleged the Mounties broke into party offices—

What am I supposed to do? Am I supposed to phone up the Globe and Mail and ask them why they did not put quotes in there, or what?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am not saying that the hon. member actually said this; I am saying this is the basis of my assertion in the House. If he tells me he has been maligned by the Globe and Mail, then I will say my authorities are not reliable—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What else is new?

Mr. Trudeau: —and I will not ask anyone in the House in the future to use the Globe and Mail as the basis of any fact. I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the London Free Press. The by-line is John McKeough, and it is dated Wednesday, November 2, 1977. It reads as follows:

> Asked if RCMP security forces could be suspected in the break-in, Broadbent replied: "there's now good reason to at least suspect that the RCMP or security services were involved"—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In one case there are no quotes, and it appears that it is a clear allegation. In the other case there are quotes, and the quote is that he at least suspects the RCMP or security services were involved. I do not know if the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party will try to hide behind that innuendo, because it is the kind of smear we have had from that party in the past few weeks. They do not quite accuse and they do not quite allege, but they suspect the RCMP is involved.

This is the basis on which I made my statement. Once again, if the leader of the New Democratic Party wants to withdraw his suspicion or his innuendo that the RCMP were involved, of course I will withdraw what I said; but it was based upon reported facts by reputable newspapers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members will know, there is no process by which we can encourage participation a second time by any member in the same question.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has raised a question of privilege. The basis of his question of privilege is that earlier today the Prime Minister made an answer which contained a false statement and misled the House. The Prime Minister has responded to that question of privilege by saying that his comment was based on some authority. If that authority is to be called into question, then surely we are into a dispute as to interpretation as to facts.

The matter has been argued on both sides. In my opinion, it is a difference of opinion and does not constitute a question of privilege.

MR. PAPROSKI—PROCEDURE USED IN CONNECTION WITH S.O. 43 MOTIONS

Mr. Stephen E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which has to do with routine proceedings and particularly Standing Order 43 where the Speaker says, "The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?"

With respect, we do have electronic media now. It is only fair that the people of Canada and the people of this House should be able to see on the monitors who the party is that says "No", and particularly on the government side. I have been accused of saying "No" to questions which have been put by my own party. I have noticed the hon. member for Outremont has said "No", and I have noticed the hon. member for Drummond has said "No". Both of those members are on the government side of the House.

With all due respect, perhaps Your Honour could indicate whether it was the government side that said "No" or whether the opposition said "No." This would clear the situation. Perhaps the cameras could focus on the particular individual who says "No", so that the people of the country will know who said it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am perfectly prepared to entertain the idea of identification of the member who refuses unanimous consent on any occasion, so long as it is understood that the member must be given an opportunity to take the floor and explain his reasons for withholding unanimous consent. When we do one, we ought to do the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR SECOND READING OF BILL C-11

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the notification which I gave to the House yesterday, I move:

That in relation to Bill C-11, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, five hours shall be allotted to the further consideration in second reading stage of the bill:

That, at the end of the fifth such hour, any proceeding before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker, addressing myself to the motion I have just made—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion moved by the hon. Minister of State for Multiculturalism and the deputy House leader (Mr. Cafik), seconded by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

● (1542)

Mr. Speaker: Since a limited debate is provided by the Standing Orders, the House might agree that we should now take a few minutes to conclude routine proceedings, which would include the answering of questions on the order paper, and then go on to the debate of this motion. Is that agreed?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

CBC—CLOSED CIRCUIT TELEVISION IN ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Question No. 472—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. What is the policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with respect to the use of audio/visual tapes, scripts and the transmission and retransmission of broadcasts through closed-circuit television in elementary and secondary schools?

2. (a) What services or programmes are available through the CBC to elementary and secondary school teachers for educational purposes (b) by province, what was the total cost for such services or programmes for each of the past five years?

3. By province, what is the total amount of air time allocated per week to educational programmes for elementary and secondary school age children by the CBC?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC as follows: 1. Under CBC's "Further Use" project, a substantial number of CBC television programmes have been made available for non-commercial use by schools, church groups, service clubs and other similar organizations. Additional titles are cleared for this purpose each year. Copies of these programmes may be borrowed at no cost or purchased by organizations from any of the 27 NFB libraries. No permission is granted to transmit any Further Use program, but closed circuit distribution throughout a school or urban school district is permissible. In some cases, where the rights can be cleared, scripts have been made available on request, although this service is limited by the internal resources which can be allocated to it. School broadcasts are produced cooperatively by CBC and the provinces for regional broadcast and by CBC and the Council of Ministers of Education for national release. In many cases the scripts would be the property of the educational authorities and could not be released by CBC.

2. (a) In addition to programmes released following broadcast in its "Further Use" project, CBC works jointly with the provinces and the Council of Ministers of Education in the preparation and distribution of television and radio school broadcasts for both regional and national use.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Should the remaining questions stand?

Time Allocation for Bill C-11

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to government orders, perhaps I could intervene briefly to inform the House that at six o'clock this evening, pursuant to Standing Order 40, the subjects to be raised are as follows: the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Public Works—Rideau Centre development—Date of termination of commitment to Rideau Viking group; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Veterans Affairs—Reason for failure to increase basic disability pension—Possible reference to committee; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Veterans Affairs—Suggested reconsideration by cabinet of increase in basic disability pension.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR SECOND READING OF BILL C-11

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cafik:

That in relation to Bill C-11, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, five hours shall be allotted to the further consideration in second reading stage of the bill; and

That, at the end of the fifth such hour, any proceeding before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address to the House a few remarks in relation to the time allocation motion that I moved under Standing Order 75C. First of all, when the House rose last night, Bill C-11 had been debated at second reading stage for nine separate days, for a total of 25 hours. My understanding is, in light of the extended hours that we have had, that this is the equivalent of a regular 11 days of sitting on the subject.

That, in itself, is a lengthy period of time. But when one bears in mind that the budget which was introduced in the last session of parliament, which constitutes the basis of the bill we have before us, was debated for six days last spring, and in the throne speech debate—which itself lasted eight days and dealt primarily with economic matters related to the original budget proposals—and that some of those remarks related to the recent proposals of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), it seems quite evident, at least to me, to other hon. members and to the public, that an adequate period of time has been given to the debate on these provisions.

In addition, the Minister of Finance has been in the House in this session 19 out of the 22 days. He has dealt with 60 economic questions addressed to him, and has made himself available during this whole period in order to debate, in the various forms available to members of the House, all matters relating to these economic issues.

There is another point which I think is relevant at this time; that is, that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has had the supplementary estimates referred to it. That committee is very anxious to have the Minister of Finance appear before it to deal with matters relating to those supplementary estimates, and the minister, like all hon. members, finds it extremely difficult to be in two places at the same time. Therefore, while the debate goes on in this chamber regarding Bill C-11, it is, in fact, impossible for him to appear before the finance committee in respect of the supplementary estimates.

All of these matters, combined with the urgency of passing this legislation, make it imperative that the government take the necessary steps for time allocation under Standing Order 75C so as to deal with this question expeditiously.

There is no doubt that in recent days parliament has found it more and more difficult to deal effectively and efficiently with all the legislative demands imposed upon it and upon parliament. Therefore, the motion under Standing Order 75C at this time is, we think, a very responsible approach by the government in order to deal with this bill expeditiously.

Perhaps I should take a moment to highlight a few key elements of the bill which give rise to the necessity to pass it rather quickly. The purpose of the bill is not only to amend the Income Tax Act, but to increase the government's borrowing authority, both of which are important and urgent matters. It is designed to help solve short and medium-term economic problems, to establish a climate of confidence for business expansion, and to encourage job creation in the private sector, all of which are important and urgent matters.

Most important of all, the bill affects the lives and the affairs of millions of Canadians as well as the lives and affairs of almost all the business community. The changes in tax credits benefit over 7.5 million Canadians and completely eliminate the federal tax for a large number of low income taxpayers.

Private investment is to be stimulated by continuing the investment tax credit that was supposed to expire this year and in certain cases is increased in order to benefit those regions where unemployment currently is highest. The credit is also being extended to include capital and current expenditures on scientific research, and the proposed special 3 per cent deduction of the cost of inventories is designed to increase business cash flow by some $300 million a year.

The bill includes measures to help business borrowing abroad. It expands the $1,000 dividend and interest exemption to include capital gains. It introduces special rules for replacement of business and farm properties. It increases the offset for capital losses and provides a guarantee of capital gains treatment on disposal of Canadian securities.

The bill is designed to facilitate expansion by Canadian-controlled private companies through joint ventures, business acquisitions and plant replacement. It has special provisions for employee stock options and share purchase loans. There is special accommodation for provincial investment corporations. There are important provisions in this bill to promote investment in Canadian equity, which anyone who has ever been in business in this country will know is vital for the continuation and expansion of Canadian business.

These areas of genuine assistance to the business community and to taxpayers at large are important measures, and in order to provide some degree of certainty as to the direction that the government is taking under the tax laws it is imperative that the bill be passed with as little delay as possible. We have decided to bite the bullet, to take the bull by the horns, as it were, and to show the kind of leadership which we think the Canadian people expect of their government in the conduct of affairs in parliament. Therefore, I moved, on behalf of the government, the time allocation motion under Standing Order 75C in order that we may properly deal with the government's business in the broad public interest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I make no comment on the bovine quality of the minister's speech to which he himself alluded, but I will say to the minister that if the matters are as important as he said they were, and if this tax bill does what the minister says it will do, then I think it is the kind of legislation that should be debated in the House for a reasonable period of time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I do not think the government should move in and use the tremendous powers it has to cut off debate in mid-stream. The minister has been out in the country, and so have I, talking to my constituents and to people across the country in the last few days. What I have heard is that the people in the country are concerned that parliament is not dealing with economic matters: that is what they are saying.

● (1552)

Here is the only opportunity in this session of parliament when members of parliament representing Canadians all over Canada, in fact, debate at some length matters relating directly to the economy which affect the welfare of the people we represent—the people in our constituencies.

What does the government do when we get to a point in these proceedings and it is the only occasion when we can deal with matters economic? The government moves in after an unreasonably short period of time, in terms of the nature of the bill, to move closure, to cut off debate, to put a gag on parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: I hope the hon. member is not referring to it as closure, which is a different rule.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think the deputy House leader of the government should know better than to intervene on something that is not point of order. Let me answer it this way: A gag by any other name is still a gag.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The effect on the bill is going to be just that. My friend says there has been an inordinate period of time to debate major problems facing the country in this House. Of the nine days, six of those are long when we sit during the day and the evening; three of those days are short days. When we have that period of time to debate such a major matter, as the government House leader says it is, then I think the government are being unreasonable. They are going to be criticized very badly for that kind of attitude.

In addition, the government introduced a budget in March, 1977. It was going to do wonders for the country; people were going to be employed; the industries would be working well; there would be all these things. Yet this House sat from March, 1977, through to August, 1977, and did not debate on one occasion the bills that arose out of that great economic statement, so-called.

Now, having come to the House when the country did need a budget, and having bootlegged into the throne speech what the government called a major economic statement but what most Canadians are calling a farce and a fraud, thereby depriving members of parliament of a normal budget debate, the government terminates the debate in nine days. I think if the minister checks the precedents he will see that a period of nine days for what the government has termed a budget is not a long period at all, considering one would be dealing with the budget and legislation arising therefrom.

Take a look at this bill, Mr. Speaker. It contains 212 pages of legislation. There are a great number of sections in this bill. It is a tremendous piece of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I mean, in volume of paper used, not in terms of what it is going to do for this country. That is the issue. It covers billions of dollars of revenue of this government, and the government decides parliament cannot debate that. It decides that nine days is too long a period for parliament to debate it. That is utter nonsense.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): This is the issue respecting which Parliament is now being gagged because the government has become somewhat uncomfortable in terms of this economic debate. The members go home, see their own people, see the concerns in the community and just how little is being done. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) talks. He has mines closing in his area. In Newfoundland, mines are closing. The pulp and paper industry is flat. The electronics industry is in trouble. The whole manufacturing sector of this country is in trouble. Canadians are asking this parliament to deal with economic matters. When we attempt to deal with economic matters, this minister today moves with the obvious support of the hon. member for Algoma who is making one of his greatest speeches just sitting on his rear end—

An hon. Member: Don't sputter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): This government proposes that we cut off that kind of debate. There is no way that can be justified. The minister in his submission tried to make it appear that the opposition was holding up this bill. That is not quite true. During the course of the debate there have been some Liberal members speaking each day, except for the last two days. Why are they speaking? They are just as dissatisfied as everyone else—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —with respect to the operation of their government. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) criticized the government, quite properly, and I replied to him in the course of the debate. He criticized the government and said what a ridiculous attitude they are adopting toward this country, toward jobs and the future of Canadians. There is no doubt about it, by whatever criteria you view it, Mr. Speaker, whether it is the meanest of the Canadian standards that have been applied to debates of this nature, this has been a short debate—what the government itself has called a major economic bill but which may be somewhat doubted by Canadians in terms of that description. It is a short debate wherein Parliament has already been denied the appropriateness of the government coming forward and introducing a budget where members of parliament, not just the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), adequate or inadequate as the case may be, but all members can examine in a constructive, critical way, the economic program of the government. The government has failed to bring in a budget, and then has relied on the throne speech debate to bootleg in what they choose to call a budget, and now call a halt to the debate within a very short period of time.

The ministers of the Crown have spoken. They have tried to use this in a surreptitious way in terms of promoting their own causes. If this is the attitude the government is taking to parliament, to shorten debate on the major problem concerning Canadians, then I think the government ought to be ashamed of itself. I think the people of Canada are suddenly going to have a new opportunity because the proceedings of this House are now televised across the nation and people can see the attitude of this government.

There are towns in Canada where plants are closing. This is what is happening in Canada. There are young people of this country who cannot get a job. These are the people we have educated and told the world would be their oyster if they received their education. And they cannot find a job! There are opportunities wasted. There are mayors and reeves, people all over Canada who are concerned about the economic matters facing this country. They have asked this parliament to deal with them. That is why we came here. They have asked this government to deal with them, and when we have tried to advise the government, they decide that we cannot deal with the problem at all. They say, "We are not going to allow you to discuss it. In a short period of time debate is going to be cut off". Mr. Speaker, if that is the attitude of the government, then it has befouled this chamber with that attitude and it will hear from the Canadian people at the next opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the House leader of the Conservative party in his arguments against this motion which the deputy House leader has introduced.

● (1602)

Mr. Speaker, to oppose this motion one has to deal with the substance of the bill and argue, as did the House leader of the Conservative party, that a bill of some 200 pages brought before the country at a time when there are one million people unemployed—a bill that has as its stated purpose job creation—requires more discussion than we have given it. I say this in view of the glaring and, to us if not to the government, obvious injustices and banalities of the bill. I want to deal with that point as the central point of my remarks opposing this closure motion.

This bill is supposed to deal with job creation. That is what the tax measures are all about. The evidence, however, is overwhelming that this government and the two previous ministers of finance, going back to John Turner in 1974, have said that the way to produce jobs in Canada is to give out, in an indiscriminate way, tax concessions to the corporate sector and hope that spreading around billions of dollars to corporations will translate into jobs being created.

The argument against this approach is not an ideological one to the effect that there should not be a tax policy for the corporate sector. Of course, any mixed economy must have a tax policy that is relevant to the corporate sector that is interested in job creation, particularly when there is high unemployment. I say, however, that this is the wrong tax policy if the purpose is to create jobs. The best evidence of the glaring inadequacy of this package of proposals is to be found in the report of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce last week pertaining to the findings on the investment intentions for next year of the 300 largest corporations in Canada.

If the arguments the government made when they introduced these measures last March were sound, and were when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) trotted them out again last fall, we would instead have these 300 corporations announcing an intention to extend their investment considerably. A tax proposal that has as its purpose the stimulation of jobs and new investment should be able to bring that about. This report, which I think is the most disturbing document to come out in recent weeks, was unfortunately buried in the financial pages of the press. That is often where we find out what is really happening in the country. It indicated that the investment intentions of these large corporations for next year showed an increase of only 6.4 per cent over this year.

One might say that is not so bad, because it is an increase. These companies, of course, consider the rate of inflation when making their investment plans, so what we have is really a negative factor. There is going to be less investment in the Canadian economy in 1978 than there was in 1977. That is very serious indeed. It confirms the point I have made on behalf of my party, and which other people have made in this House and outside it for many weeks, that things are going to be worse next year in terms of job creation. There could be no more serious indictment of this bill than the alarming fact that investment in Canada next year will expand by only 6.4 per cent. Most of us assume that inflation will be at least 8 per cent, and even if it is down to 7 per cent it will eat up the expansion of these companies, when expressed in real dollars.

These give-aways to the corporations do not necessarily lead to expansion, and I do not blame them. If there is a fall-off in demand, businessmen are not going to overexpand their production facilities and shoulder the cost of keeping them up if it just means more unused capacity. If industry is operating at only 83 per cent capacity, as is presently the case, corporations will not, naturally, be willing to expand further. When we have 28 per cent unused capacity, it makes no economic sense to expand. That is not criticism of the corporations. They know what they are doing. It is the government that does not know what it is doing. It is giving away the people's money in a futile cause.

Not only is industry not expanding next year, but in fact it is contracting. I should like to put on the record some information about the companies which will benefit from this $1.2 billion tax package the government has introduced. Out of this tax proposal that is supposed to create jobs, Alcan will receive a tax credit of $4.5 million. Meanwhile, they are laying people off, the most recent case being 170 workers at St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, in a mine that is being shut down, not because it was losing money but because the corporation could make more money using some other facility elsewhere in the world.

Canadian General Electric will receive a tax credit of $2.5 million. They already owe the government some $11 million in deferred taxes which has not been paid. They have not created more jobs, but in Peterborough have laid off 2,000 employees. Northern Telecom owes the government $41 million in deferred taxes and will receive $2 million as a tax credit through this bill. It has laid off 2,000 workers at Bramalea, Ontario. Falconbridge owes the government $34 million in deferred taxes, and through this bill will receive $2 million in tax credits. They are laying off 4,000 employees on a temporary basis, and 500 on a permanent basis.

That is how four companies have responded to this tax bill—not by job creation but by laying off about 8,000 employees. I suppose the king of kings, in response to this kind of measure in recent weeks, is Inco. It is a case unto itself, a veritable monstrosity demonstrating the genius of the economic policies of this government. So far Inco has made $93 million profit this year, and in the past decade it made $1.7 billion. The previous minister of finance announced $75 million in assistance to Inco through the Expert Development Corporation. This will provide jobs—but in Indonesia and Guatemala, not in Canada. When they had to announce some shutdowns, they said the government of Indonesia would not put up with it but the Canadian government would, so they would lay off Canadians.

A month ago the Minister of Finance, with a flower in his buttonhole, stepped into the House and announced on that fateful day that the government would reintroduce the bill we are now debating which would give Inco another $10 million. The very day the government announced the $10 million additional gift to Inco to create jobs, Inco was having a press conference in downtown Toronto to announce the lay-off of some 4,000 Canadians in Ontario and Manitoba. Nothing could demonstrate economic stupidity in more vivid terms than that announcement.

We oppose this package of proposals because, at a time when we have over one million unemployed, they are the wrong policies at the wrong time. Jobs will not be created in Canada, at a time when demand is slack, by giving corporations the capacity to expand even further. We should increase demand. That means tax concessions, and all of this money should be going to the consumers of Canada.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to repeat what the two previous speakers of the opposition have said on this motion of closure as a motion of closure is ever unpopular because usually the government always imposes it when it has an unpopular law to pass. This Bill C-11 amending the Income Tax Act is clearly incomplete. When we go through our ridings we see that people do not take the government seriously on this act. What does a tax cut of $100 a year mean? A tax break of $2 a week, and that makes people laugh and turns them against the government and this bill. People realize that the government is not thinking about them but others.

So I think the government instead of applying its motion of closure today could have waited a few more days and allowed the members of this House to continue to make suggestions and propose amendments, and the government should be considering those suggestions from the opposition and put to a vote the amendments introduced by the opposition because the truth does not lie only on the side of the majority. It can also come from the other side of the House. It was said that this is a bill of about 1,000 pages and one-inch thick containing many words but little substance.

Mr. Speaker, this bill amending the Income Tax Act contains many tax breaks for big businesses seemingly to allow them to create jobs but there is nothing in this bill to help small and medium-size businesses. There is nothing of substance. The government does not even want to define what a small business is. The government does not know at present. I asked the Minister of State in charge of small business (Mr. Abbott) if he could define what a small business is. His answer to me was: no, he had not gone that far yet. There are projects, studies, but nothing concrete, nothing ready.

Mr. Speaker, I think bills like Bill C-11 could go much further. They should not be limited to proposals such as those which were made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) the other day, namely an additional $150 million through government programs to create temporary jobs, jobs that are going to disappear after a few months.

Mr. Speaker, we realize that all these temporary job creation programs are not what is needed, that they do not meet the objectives of Parliament to fight against the employment crisis that has been going on for too long.

The government proposes programs to fight against unemployment and create jobs, but each time we realize that this is useless and that unemployment still increases. The same holds true for inflation. Every time the government suggests programs to fight inflation, the rate of inflation goes up, to such a point that I am tempted to ask the government to stop fighting against these problems because the more it fights, the worse the problems get. The government should change its programs and accept the proposals of opposition parties and existing agencies, such as the Canadian chambers of commerce and small or medium business associations, which make really valid suggestions. The government should agree to consider those proposals.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that instead of bringing in closure like it has done today and like it always does for unpopular bills, the government should be patient for a few more days and allow not only opposition members, but also government members to offer suggestions so that the opposition members can learn what suggestions government members have to make.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am against the use of Standing Order 75C, which should be used only in extreme situations, since in my opinion, Bill C-11 certainly does not represent at this time an extreme situation.

[English]

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to speak long in this debate. I rise to support Standing Order 75C and the five hours further debate that will be allowed in this House as a result of it. This parliament is based on Westminster, the mother of parliaments, yet we have not modernized to any degree whatsoever our monstrously inept rules to deal with the lightning-quick world in which we live.

It is evident to me that the opposition House leader finds it necessary to represent the great electors of Ottawa-Carleton day after day with histrionic delaying tactics. I have no intention of using this time allocation to further his woolly-thinking in the House, his extraneous data or unctuous manner. The unctuous manner in which the hon. member continuously addresses this House is really quite shocking. I find that the hon. member finds it impossible to do anything but rise and delay. Perhaps he will get the ACTRA award this year for the best television performance.

I supported television in this House for two reasons. The first was to inform the Canadian public. Ours is the party that has brought in and made possible television in this House of Commons so that the people of this country will know what is happening within this chamber. My second reason for supporting television was so that the rules of this House would be changed and these inoperable, blunt nineteenth century rules which we insist on using in the House will be changed when the public has looked at this place and seen with what ineptitude the debates grind on.

In Westminster, this bill would have passed seven days ago, yet we continually talk and gather wool around a subject that is only too clear to the people of this country. The people of Canada, looking in on these discussions, will not tolerate further delay, sophistry and repetition. The clear obstructions that are evident as continued regurgitation of the same tired arguments come forth for the third, fourth and fifth time, will not be overlooked by the public of this country. My faith is in the people watching, who will say to us clearly, "Cut the nonsense. Have a sensible debate and make a decision."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to point out that Aimee Semple McPherson, the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo), does not know the difference between bombast and reason.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I consider that a matter of privilege. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) continually makes reference to Biblical ethics. He, of course, is a member of the Biblical cast. He is from a part of the country where this is very much respected and he is very much admired for his feelings. However, to combine my name with Aimee Semple McPherson is a sexist remark which I know the people of Surrey-White Rock, North Delta, would not like to hear.

● (1622)

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate. The Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) has made her contribution to the debate. The fact is that she has certainly taken the precedent set by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in this chamber and outside by giving us, in her own way, an argument that as far as parliament is concerned, it is rather irrelevant. Also, that as far as the rights of members of parliament are concerned with regard to expressing points of view strongly held about the very pressing issues in our country today, we have no rights and that it is the all-powerful government which is going to sit around and dictate to parliament precisely what is going to happen in this chamber, and thereby curtail the right of freedom of speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We know that the minister, by putting forward that point of view, is only echoing the position which was taken time and time again by the Prime Minister who likes to think that when members of parliament—as he likes to term it—go 50 yards off Parliament Hill, they turn into nobodies. I am concerned about this government and this group of people who want to manipulate parliament, who want to take parliament and turn it into simply a little, private sounding-board for the cabinet. They are going to provide improvements, as they see it, which will make members of parliament nobodies on Parliament Hill, as opposed to being nobodies off Parliament Hill.

I am going to fight this particular tendency of the government, a government which forgets easily and readily the traditional and proper function of parliament, which is to be a forum for some of us who represent people, or who try to represent people as best we can, to stand up and express the positions they are experiencing and which they take in various parts of our country, the attitudes they take toward legislation which is brought forward, and so on. This is not, as someone said, a sausage factory were the government can bring its legislation and think two hours' debate is fine, and that every four years they will go back to the people, at which time there will possibly be a reassessment of the way in which the government has conducted our affairs.

Parliament has a role to play. Parliament is a forum giving us an opportunity to stand in our place and bring forward, not only criticism of our government but also suggestions. We have a twofold obligation. I am amazed that this move at this point in time is being supported by those on the government back benches who are not members of the cabinet. They have very little opportunity to express their points of view and to bring to the attention of the cabinet the changes which they believe are necessary in the interests of the people of our country.

An hon. Member: We don't complain.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Well, that is a very sad state of affairs. The parliamentary secretary, aspiring as he does to greater things, would naturally go along with almost anything the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) said. We know that if he stood up and really expressed his feelings or the feelings of his constituents, it would very much hinder any chance of advance he has, as far as the motion is concerned, so we always qualify what some of these parliamentary secretaries say with respect to criticism of government policy. We know that their position is one of merely being yes-men to everything that happens as far as the cabinet is concerned.

As a result, they are limited in their ability to speak on behalf of their constituents. I simply say to those who are not parliamentary secretaries that I know how difficult it is for them when they realize there is television coverage of this House. It ignores them. I understand the kind of pressure they get back in their constituencies when their constituents say, "You represent us. Why don't we hear you speaking up once in a while, making suggestions to the government by way of economic policy?"

We understand the pressure which is placed upon those who sit on the back benches. We realize how they feel about the limitation on opportunities available to express themselves on issues which come before the House. We do not expect very much more, because they are all sitting there squirming around, waiting to get up and debate this particular issue, to get their five or ten minutes in on this particular debate. They know that if they are good boys, chances will come their way and they may have an opportunity to advance to a parliamentary secretaryship or possibly even to a cabinet post. I say this simply by way of introduction to the main point I want to make.

I very much regret that the government is veering very severely from the traditional precepts and concepts of Liberalism. Anyone who observes parliament ought to sit down and watch this group of technocrats, so-called, who want to bring everything into parliament, speed it through and get rid of parliament—because it is a nuisance to the government, after all, having members stand and discuss the policies they bring forward. It is a nuisance to the cabinet to have a question period, for instance. But that is really what parliament is all about. The exercise of power without opposition is an unhealthy and unsatisfactory situation.

The most amazing thing about this motion is that there is no evidence of any inefficiency on the part of this chamber. All of us on this side who have participated in this debate have tried, as well as we are able, to make suggestions, to point out instances where we feel there are shortcomings in the legislation. We are responding to the cry which comes from our constituents to discuss economic matters. That is what the bulk of my mail is about. I do not know whether members on the other side receive that kind of representation from their constituents.

If this government had its way, we would talk for five or six minutes, look over a list of legislation and then retire from debate and they would merrily carry on in their own way. But do we not have a responsibility, as parliamentarians, to come forward and make suggestions to try to improve legislation? That is the role of a member of parliament. Although the members of the executive are part of this parliament, it is their responsibility to propose legislation and it is ours to criticize and make suggestions with regard to changes which we feel ought to be made.

As I began to say a few moments ago, the incredible part of all this is that the motion before us to terminate discussion on this bill does not reflect any inefficiency on the part of this chamber. It shows the helter-skelter way in which the cabinet has conducted its affairs and the way in which the business of the House generally has been conducted. It would be laughable if it were not a serious matter.

The budget was brought forward in March of this year. We finished the session, and the tax bills from that budget are only now being brought forward. One is led to ask: What kind of strategy is the government following? What kind of legislative program has it in mind, so that we can assess it in a responsible manner?

The answer, I am afraid, is that the government has no idea what it is doing. It goes from one bill to another for no apparent reason. Apparently they wait until Senator Keith Davey is ready to advise the Prime Minister as to the advantages of one course of action compared to another. It is the height of irresponsibility, in the first place, for the government to bring forward such an important piece of legislation as this at such a late date and then to talk about its urgency.

I notice that both the House leader and the deputy House leader have left the chamber, having made their little speeches. They are not very interested in what goes on now, because they know that members on the back benches over there will support any action which is proposed to them. But if there is some urgency about getting this bill through, let the House leader give us some indication of the legislation they wish to bring forward, so that we may know precisely what programs they have in mind and what measures they consider to be of consequence. But let them not bring forward a closure motion to shut down debate contrary to the wishes of most of the people in Canada who want us to discuss economic matters.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Government members laugh. Of course they laugh, because they have the tendency to reject anything which might be of consequence. The people want us to address ourselves to economic matters. If the members supporting the government feel that the economy is of secondary or tertiary consequence, they will continue to support the government. If they feel the rights of members of the House are minimal, of course they will support the government.

• (1632)

All I say to them is that we could conceivably have got through this debate. We are now wasting time on this motion. We could have had speakers dealing with the bill before us and be finished by the end of this week. We could have had a full discussion of the matter. This motion demonstrates, once again, the contempt of the government and the Minister of Finance for this House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to talk about the inconsistencies in the attitude of the opposition which is being ever more ridiculous with its abuse of the standing orders of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I have here the names of the members who have risen and expressed their views about Bill C-11 during the last nine days. In fact, twenty-seven Conservative members have talked. About fifty speeches have been made in the House concerning this bill. I for one think that it is a shame that the business of the people of Canada cannot be dealt with in the House or, at least, go through the various stages in the parliamentary system.

Frankly, I am not the least surprised to hear that the people of Canada are worried about the parliamentary system when I see the opposition and more particularly the Conservative party take nine days to repeat, speaker after speaker, the same thing 27 times over.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder how many times we have to repeat what we say in the House.

[English]

I find the comments of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) very difficult to follow. First of all, he gives this rather grandstand performance about members on this side not having an opportunity to discuss the legislation before the House. I take it from his remarks that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, in the several years he has been in parliament, has failed to understand the parliamentary system. This is unfortunate. For example, we on this side of the House have meetings with the minister, as do members on that side. We have an opportunity to discuss these matters with the minister, without taking up the valuable time of this House of Commons.

I think the Canadian people would be interested to learn that the Canadian House of Commons sits the second longest number of hours of any chamber in the democratic world. Yet we have a legislative program which is continually disrupted by the opposition. It is no wonder that the people of Canada wonder—and I am sure, having seen us on television, they are wondering even more—just what it is they are sending their members down to Ottawa to do, when they hear the same speech made by members of the Conservative party 27 times. Twenty-seven times we have heard the same old, sad story.

They do not have the sense to assist in the passage of a matter of such importance as a tax bill which is designed to create demand in the economy and give a $100 tax cut which will be of benefit to over 7½ million Canadians. The Conservative party is not even interested in sending that kind of legislation to committee of the whole. When members talk so bravely of going to their constituencies and hearing what they have to say, I hope their constituents will tell them that there are issues which are more important than the RCMP, about which we have heard nothing but for the last three weeks. We are interested in getting on with business of the House and improving the economy. What we would like is some co-operation from the opposition parties.

We are trying to stimulate private investment and create jobs. Therefore, we would like those people who want to invest to have some idea where they stand. But not the Conservative party; they do not want to give these people any idea where they stand. They would prefer to talk, talk, talk in this House, always saying the same thing. I have looked through some of the speeches which have been made over the last nine days of this debate and have concluded that hon. members opposite must have only one speech writer. I do not believe there are 27 different lines of thought, so they must have one speechwriter whose speech has been given 27 times. When they go to their constituencies and try to explain why their constituents cannot make the kind of investment decisions which are needed in order to create jobs, I hope they are also prepared to explain why they make the same speech 27 times.

Following the advice of the government, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go into the bill before the House, because what we are trying to do is to get Bill C-11 into committee of the whole so it can be discussed in detail. How can you deal with members who contradict themselves? On the one hand, for three weeks they have been downgrading the RCMP; on the other hand, they do not want to deal with the real issues in this country and the economy; they only want to talk about them. It is the old story, Mr. Speaker—they do not want to do something, they only want to talk about it, and they say the same thing 27 times. Frankly, I think that is a disgraceful performance.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear a member for whom I have some regard make such foolish remarks in the House as those made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. Since I have a decent regard for him, I shall not refer to him further during the few minutes at my disposal.

We must be taken to understand, from the fact that the government has brought in closure, that the government have tremendously important, world-shaking legislation on the other paper of this House that they are dying to have the House pass. Otherwise, why would they try to rush through this legislation which really encompasses two budgets? One was brought in by a wolf in sheep's clothing when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) spoke in the throne speech debate several weeks ago. The other budget was brought down by a wolf who has now become a sheep and who will be going off, we understand, at the end of the month to McCarthy and McCarthy, where doubtless he will restrain his demand for greater compensation in the interest of government policy which he has been espousing in the last year or two.

Just what is it for which we are waiting with bated breath, Mr. Speaker? What is this fantastic legislation which will change the face of Canada and which the government wants to have passed by putting closure on the income tax amendments? As far as we kow, there are two pieces of legislation. One is CALURA, not "coloratura", or whatever it is, which we hear over in the National Arts Centre, but CALURA—which has to do with amendments to labour legislation and is of infinitesimal importance. I say it is laughable, Mr. Speaker. Having brought forward that piece of legislation, I can see hon. members opposite committing collective hari-kari—and I will supply hon. gentlemen with the knives if they want to do that.

The other world-shaking piece of legislation which will rock this House to its foundations, and which justifies our being televised, is legislation having to do with petroleum corporations, legislation that will tell the oil companies that they have to do what they have been doing for the last 18 months, but which only now they will be doing in accordance with the force of law rather than in accordance with the force of the proclamations of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) which have the force of law. They will now have to give information to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on how they spend the revenue they bring in.

This House is being cut off from debate. Our members are being prevented from debating these tax measures, puny as they are. Closure is being brought in. The government House leader, God bless him, has only been back with us for 24 hours, but I have to tell him that we "inappreciate" the fact that he has come back here and slammed down closure so quickly. We "inappreciate" that fact, just as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) "inappreciates" the Cape Breton miners and says they "inappreciate" working, that they don't want to work and that they "inappreciate" labour and work. We, too, "inappreciate", we do not appreciate, we do not agree with, we do not go along with, we are not capitivated by, and we are not enamoured of the fact that the House leader comes back and within 24 hours puts the iron heel of closure on our necks. We do not see why it is necessary, Mr. Speaker, because we do not see any legislation coming before this House in the next few weeks that is of any importance.

The hon. gentleman who just spoke mentioned that we had 27 speakers. Yes, we are not afraid to speak on this side of the House—and we are not afraid to run into power if the voters will endorse what we say and what we believe in. He forgot to mention that his own Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke in this House for an hour, or in excess of an hour, on opening day, or the day after opening day—whenever it was—on October 19. He spoke for over an hour and a half. That gentleman not only looked tired, but he was morose, he was mournful, he was in a misogynistic mood, he was dispirited, he was dismal, he was dull and he was dejected. In fact, he was downcast and he was dumpish, meaning he was in the dumps, and he felt that the Canadian people had to examine themselves and realize that they themselves were at fault for all that he and his government had done or had failed to do.

He was decidely dejected because the Canadian people were not rallying around him saying, "We are to blame, Mr. Prime Minister; it is our fault". So he was very dejected, he was slumpful, he was sluggish, he was singularly pained, Mr. Speaker, when he gave us his message. Not only that, he was painful, he was peeved, he was peevish, he was decidedly non-productive, pedantic but unperturbed. The Prime Minister is always unperturbed; nothing perturbs him, nothing shakes him.

The Prime Minister is going to Newfoundland in 48 hours' time, and the fact that we have got the worst unemployment we have ever had in our history, with 29,000 people out of jobs in Newfoundland, does not perturb the Prime Minister. He is unperturbable. He is going to get off his jet plane at Torbay airport, with his rose in his lapel, or whatever other sprig he chooses to wear at that moment, unperturbed over the fact that Newfoundland is in the throes of the worst unemployment that any Canadian province has had since the 1930s; and is going to give them his message of good cheer, that they should be concerned about national unity and should blame it all on Premier Lévesque of Quebec.

It is not Prime Minister Trudeau's fault, or his government here in Ottawa, that they are unemployed, that their economy is in tatters, that they are treated like second-class citizens, that they are treated like peasants, that the mines are permitted to close at St. Lawrence, that the linerboard mills are permitted to close at Stephenville, that the whole place is permitted to close! It is not the Prime Minister's fault; it is the fault of Premier Lévesque! And it is their own fault! The Prime Minister singularly "inappreciates" the fact that they might blame the Prime Minister and his government or think that they might have something to do with that. He is going to find out that they don't like being discriminated against, that they do not like to see Gulf Oil with a plant at Shawinigan, in the Minister of Finance's district receiving grants and loans of great generosity from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and from DREE.

They "inappreciate" that while their linerboard mill, with 1,500 jobs, is allowed to go while the government of Canada says "We cannot help you because our job is to create jobs, not to save jobs". Then we pick up a release which says that this money is being spent to save jobs in Shawinigan. I say fine, let us save them in Shawinigan, but let's save them in Stephenville and throughout Newfoundland also. Let us save them at Shawinigan and save them at St. Lawrence. Let's save the jobs in Newfoundland as well as in Quebec. Then we pick up a release that says that the Valleyfield Chemical Products Company Limited is going to have lashed into it $11.25 million from ITC and DREE to save 300-odd jobs in Valleyfield. This is to save jobs, not create them. We realize that not a hand is lifted to help save jobs in Newfoundland at Stephenville, and it is no wonder that the people get perturbed. I know that the Prime Minister is unperturbed and that nothing perturbs him.

Today the Prime Minister assassinates the administration of justice in the province of Quebec. He does not want that discussed in this House. He does not want these things discussed in the House. He wants us to discuss CALURA—have you had your CALURA today—or petroleum corporations. He likes non-controversial things. He does not want us to discuss the economy and the miserable shape the hon. gentleman opposite has got this country into. He does not want that discussed—no, cut off the debate. He brings back the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), knowing we have a sneaky regard for that elderly gentleman. He thinks we won't protest if he brings down the iron heel of closure and imposes it on our necks as he is doing here today. The Prime Minister had all the fire and fervour, when he discussed our economy, of an emasculated buck rabbit.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, why gentlemen opposite do not want to participate in this debate any further. They cannot defend their actions on the economy. Nor can they defend what they are doing today with the Keable commission by saying, on one hand, that the administration of justice is provincial, as we have heard so many ministers answer here when they are asked questions: they say the administration of justice is provincial, but when the provincial administration in Quebec investigates the administration of justice, which includes the RCMP—and surely it is part of the system of justice—the minister is now going to say they cannot investigate the RCMP because it is not the administration of justice. This is the administration of what—mercy?

He is afraid that the Keable inquiry will be independent. He knows it is not under the thumb of the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) and not under the Prime Minister's thumb. He knows the Laycraft inquiry in Alberta is not under his thumb, so they will not co-operate with those commissions. We hear today that the Solicitor General will co-operate with the federal commission of Mr. Justice McDonald. The government is going to co-operate with that commission which the government itself appointed and which will not get down to the brass tacks, the meat and the nub of the question, until after the next federal election is over. They are not going to co-operate with the two provincial royal commissions; they are not going to co-operate with anyone but Mr. Justice McDonald, they say now.

We will see in a few months how much they co-operate with Judge McDonald if he shows any signs of independence whatsoever. It is a sad day for Canada when we see the iron heel of tryanny again imposed in this House today by a government which has nothing to offer, nothing coming up, nothing on the agenda, but sneaks in a budget speech and tries to prevent the House from discussing these measures brought in so pitifully by the Minister of Finance several weeks ago.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not want to have matters discussed here. He said the other day in Winnipeg, according to the Free Press of November 9, that he wished the federal government would borrow less in order to make the money market more accessible to private industry. Did you ever hear anything more hypocritical? The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wants the government to borrow less, yet the bill we have before us authorizes the government to borrow $9 billion because of this spendthrift administration.

Why doesn't the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce get together with the Minister of Finance and get on the same wavelength. One minister says he wishes the federal government would borrow less in order to make the money market more accessible to private industry. I hope the Minister of Finance goes along with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Of course, that minister rides in every direction. He is not riding on the Mounties, but he is riding in every direction. In order to get power, he did not ride on the Mounties; he rode on something else I won't mention here this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I see you rising. May I carry on, with unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not intend to compete with the hon. member who preceded me. I was impressed with his vocabulary, particularly with the words he invented during his discourse. I was even impressed with the words he initiated, because they are like words my House leader accuses me of using all the time.

We are again faced with closure. I was impressed with the statement of the minister for amateur sports and fitness (Mrs. Campagnolo) about the British parliament. It is an interesting thing that, while it is true there are limitations in respect of the length of speeches in the British parliament, they at least know where they are going. If this parliament were to get cracking and pass this bill tonight, and probably two or three other little bills, we could do what I overheard an hon. member opposite say he would like to do—that is, go home. He can go home at any time, because his contribution is very limited. We were sent to this parliament to discuss a number of things. Obviously, one of them should be the economy of the country. The government has handled things so badly recently that we are still working on a budget from a year ago, and a pseudo budget from a few weeks ago, neither of which will solve any of the problems. In the opinion of my party it would be wise not to pass these particular bills, because we do not agree with the distribution of the tax structure which will give more to the corporations and less to the people.

In the British parliament there is an order of what is going to be decided. I heard a couple of hon. members say that we should carry on this debate on economic matters until Christmas. The reason for doing that was simply because they did not want to get on to the subject of national unity. These are two subjects which have been handled very badly by the government. While economics may not be as devastating as far as our country is concerned, to get on to the other one is even less appetizing than staying on this one until Christmas. By that time they might find other problems to solve.

Canada has an immense unemployment problem. My colleagues have referred to the 3,000 people who will be laid off very shortly in Sudbury. Last year, in my constituency, we lost probably 1,700 or 1,800 jobs in approximately four plants. An entire industry was closed down in my community within the last ten years. No one cared and no one paid much attention to that. With the way the dollar is going today, perhaps they will rue the day that they neglected that industry and realize that stockpiling would not have been such a bad deal. That would not have been a bad deal for most governments, but this one could not see it.

When we allowed the gold mines in Kirkland Lake to close, gold was worth $35 an ounce. We were subsidizing the production of gold to a limited extent. In fact, it was to such a limited extent that mining of gold could not be continued. If it had been subsidized to an extent at least twice as much as it now is, and if that gold had been stockpiled, we would have eliminated many of our troubles. It is a fact that the price of our dollar in relation to the American dollar would have been very close to par, in that event.

Gold went up from $35 an ounce to almost $200 an ounce. Now it is approximately $162 an ounce, and in my opinion, it is headed once again for the $200 an ounce level. Therefore, it would not be a bad idea to consider doing something about gold, as it is an activity which requires high employment. It is not the kind of activity which requires immense equipment. It is not the kind of mining activity where there are large veins and the use of large equipment is required. The industry requires a lot of employees. It should be thought about, especially when the currencies of all the countries in the world are very shaky and many of them are taking their lead from the Canadian economy, which is the worst in the field.

This government talks about bailing out corporations; it talks about giving out $1½ billion in tax concessions to corporations. These corporations are not working to capacity. They do not have foreign markets and they do not have sales for their products. It seems somewhat ridiculous to give them more money, without any controls. If assistance was provided to the resource sector, whether it be in the forest or mining industry, a lot of secondary jobs would be created very easily in this country.

How many jobs could be created in Sudbury by the establishment of smelting and refining plants there, rather than the shipment of raw materials to Norway and other ports? How many jobs would be created in northern Ontario if lignite is not developed in the Cochrane area? Iron ore should be brought in from the Adams mines at Kirkland Lake, the Temagami mines and from Belcher Islands to be produced in northern Ontario. That would result in the production of six times as many jobs as would the use of very elaborate, costly and heavy equipment to mine, with a minimum of employment and a maximum of profit.

Members opposite may want to have a national emergency debate on the state of our nation, but those interested in employment should honestly participate in this debate. I am sure some hon. members opposite are faced with unemployment in their constituencies. The only reason they do not participate in this debate is that they depend upon the national Liberal party to provide them with funds for the election which will come up very shortly. They do not want to rock the boat. Since this session started, only the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) felt strongly about the wishes of his constituents to rise and vote against what he knew was a bad bill. In fact, 50 per cent of his colleagues from the northern regions of this country realized this was a bad bill. That hon. member voted against it. His colleagues should be proud of him for the guts he displayed.

This is an important debate. The economy of Canada has not been in such bad shape since the last depression. If the government knows nothing about the economy, it should talk to the people who are unemployed. They know about the economy and would be willing to participate. Also, they would be willing to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to provide the economic leadership that would provide jobs, and not just vote for an inept government which happens to be in power.

May I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order No. 2, in the name of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order No. 4, in the name of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald).

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF EMERGENCY MEASURES TO DEAL WITH INFLATION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse) moved that Bill C-205, to provide for emergency measures to deal with the inflation of prices, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like—

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is an order to which there has been no answer. I ask on behalf of the government that the order stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed. But I would insist that the hon. parliamentary secretary do so when orders are called, otherwise we would establish in the House a practice which will be very difficult to follow. As long as we do not decide on a new procedure, when the Chair goes to the trouble of calling an order, I wish someone would speak up because that creates a problem. I think that those who have the responsibility to speak on behalf of the government should do so. The House has heard the hon. parliamentary secretary who asked, on behalf of the government, that Orders Nos. 2 and 4 stand.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to understand the remark you have just made so that it could be useful to us in the future. Do you want me to stand up each time you call an order to ask for such and such order to stand or do you want me to advise you right at the beginning by saying: do not call orders, proceed directly to such and such order? I am prepared to make your task easier but I should like to understand the nature of your request.

Inflation

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. parliamentary secretary is aware that the programming of the private members' business hour is being studied by the Chair and that the Chair has initiated a debate on the procedure. By the way, such a debate will be held and hopefully we shall arrive at a formula which will be acceptable to all hon. members and which will enable us perhaps to avoid situations such as the one we are in now. Meanwhile, however, if the hon. parliamentary secretary wants to ask, when calling the hon. members' hour, that some orders stand, it is his privilege. If not, the Chair calls the orders and at this time if they are not allowed to stand, and if they have been called for the second time, they will automatically be removed from the top of the list on the order paper. They will go to the bottom of the list or of the orders, as the case may be.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne that was delivered at the opening of this session, the government established a few things of which we were already aware. I believe all hon. members had been aware of this situation for a long time. Let me quote the paragraph in the Speech from the Throne which deals with unemployment and inflation and which reads as follows:

> High rates of unemployment and inflation are clear signals of the inadequacy of economic strategies appropriate to simpler times. They are also signals of the urgent need for important structural adjustments in the economies of Canada . . . More than that, they are the symptoms of an illness which can be cured only by a readjustment of our values, and by a re-discovery of the merits of self-discipline and fair sharing.

Further, they make a few more obvious statements regarding the effects of inflation and unemployment. One can read the following:

> The human hardship imposed by the current level of unemployment in Canada is deeply disturbing. It is neither just nor tolerable that in this country there should be so many men and women deprived of the dignity of self-supporting work, unable to meet their financial commitments and plan confidently for the future. It is intolerable that so many are deprived of their right to secure and productive lives, and that their families bear an unfair burden of worry, uncertainty, and deprivation. On a national scale, unemployment now constitutes a very serious obstacle to economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, as result of these statements, the government has also stated through its spokesmen at the ministerial level that we shall have to resort to new methods to face the situation in order to restore a proper balance in our economy and make sure that each and every Canadian can live a proper life in this country as a result of his work. I think of those who are able to work. The serious economic situation which we are facing demands emergency measures and the very purpose of the bill I have the honour to introduce in the House is to tackle in a straightforward manner the real problems of inflation and unemployment. This bill, Mr. Speaker, advocates positive steps instead of idle talk to put an end to this serious problem.

We in the opposition are often accused by the majority that we are very critical but that we never suggest anything concrete. Well, Mr. Speaker, when we do suggest anything they are not taking enough notice of it. I hope that Bill C-205 will show them it is a concrete measure, a positive thing that could be applied in situations similar to the ones we are experiencing now. For a while, it seemed that the Anti-Inflation Board had taken worthy measures, and during the second semester of 1976 the consumer price index showed an encouraging downturn but the little optimism that it elicited soon disppeared in 1977, the situation has even deteriorated because we do not have the mechanisms required to obtain truly valid results.

The consumer price index went up 1 per cent in October 1976. This index for the month of October 1977 was at 8.8 per cent. We are far from the 6 per cent target set up by the board. In addition, the average salary increase authorized by the board from October 1976 to October 1977 was 7.5 per cent. That leaves Canadians in a very bad situation, specially the majority of workers. There is a 1.3 per cent salary loss which is disastrous for individuals, but mainly for families which can hardly secure the strict minimum. It might look old fashioned to make such a statement when one hears sometime that there is no poverty in Canada. But there is a difference between real poverty and insufficient income to meet one's obligations and that is the situation which confronts the majority of people.

Since 1973, the real increase in personal income, and I insist on the word real, went down 3 per cent. On the other hand, the productivity went up some 3 per cent. A system which allows for such contradictions ought to be corrected immediately. Canadians are making their own effort but get no reward out of it. Indeed they are penalized in many instances. Then we pretend we live in a just society. We tried to establish this just society. I am convinced that when the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was saying across Canada in 1968 that it was his intention and the intention of his party to establish a just society in this country, he was quite sincere. And later, during the next election campaign, when the Prime Minister was saying across the country that it was impossible to establish this just society, I believe he was right again because with our present means, with our obsolete economic system, it is obvious that nobody can succeed in establishing a better society in Canada because we are facing an economic dictatorship. High finance controls the economy of this country and directs our policies to satisfy the craving of those who hold the reins, those dictators of our economy, forgetting that a sound economic system must serve every level of the population and that the efforts of all Canadians must be rewarded so that each Canadian citizen can satisfy his essential needs, wherever he lives. And the government was right when it told us in the Speech from the Throne that we will have to use new methods to redress the present situation, methods which should necessarily give some short term results, but also be planned in order that in the long term we should have adequate mechanisms to make an unbiased and constant analysis of the efforts of the Canadian population, of our productivity and of the purchasing power distributed among the various levels of production as well as an analysis of the difference, of the lack of purchasing power of the same people who find themselves unable to buy the products made by and for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the aim of Bill C-205 is precisely to give the government the power to make those adjustments, to find a regulating mechanism to give the consumers who need it an additional purchasing power without involving any increase in wages and prices. This is by way of a discount.

Yesterday during the question period I was listening to the right hon. Prime Minister's answer to a member from the opposition to the effect that the purchasing power of Canadians should be increased in order to spur the consumption of goods produced in this country, to stimulate the economy and help in solving the unemployment problem.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was right. We have told him so for a long time, but it must also be understood that this increase in the purchasing power must take place at the level of those families who have a real need for it. The compensated discount, the type of discount which we recommend in this bill, is a means with which to reach that objective, because when a family buys five pounds of butter, five quarts of milk or a pair of shoes or some clothing made in Canada, by consuming these goods, this family will automatically benefit from a discount, therefore an increase in its purchasing power and this discount, according to this bill, will have to be set at the dealer's level, because it is at that stage that one can truly evaluate the needs of families and individuals. And if there is consumption, there will automatically be a discount, but the question lies as to who is going to pay back that discount to the dealer. Is the dealer to lose because he grants a discount to the consumer who has just bought a pair of shoes in his store? Absolutely not. It is where this bill provides a whole mechanism for the creation of a national credit board which would be responsible for the management and the implementation at the consumer's level of this measure which will enable Canadians to increase their purchasing power inasmuch as there are needs to be satisfied, and periodically—it may take one or two months—those merchants or dealers could present before the banks or the credit unions, on an official and well established formula and along with any necessary justifications, the amount of discount which they would have granted after a period of a month or some three months, as will have been stipulated by the national credit board. The banks or credit unions having served as go-between for the government, the Department of Finance and the dealers, through the Bank of Canada, following well established official figures, the government will be able to create new estimates in order to reimburse the credit unions and the chartered banks which, following a well established type of accounting, would have paid out in compensation to the dealers those amounts which the dealers would have granted to the consumers. This is what is called, Mr. Speaker, a regulatory discount. In the same way, as some hon. members have seen a steam engine work, as for instance, in a sawmill, and incidentally there are still a few left in our country just like in my own riding, which used to be called steam engines and that is the same thing.

And that machine is equipped with a system called a regulator. The regulator drives the circular saw. When a big log is going through the saw, more power is needed. Then the regulator provides more power to allow the saw to split the log. Once the job is done, the regulator gets back to providing the usual amount of power since no extra power is needed anymore. Mr. Speaker, our economic system works the same way: the principle of the regulator is applied in the form that we advocate here, a discount system. Should the House accept the bill, study it thoroughly, refer it to a committee for examination, that would call for economists to appear before it—not the ones who have put us up to our ears in trouble—but economists with an open mind for new formulas that would enable the government to come up with a legislation that would pull us out of the chaos we are in and of this misery which is totally unjustified in times of abundance.

Mr. Speaker, we are going in the same direction as we did after World War I; the older members must remember that. Last Sunday the CBC French network gave the history of the years 1920 to 1945. I wish all Canadians had listened to that program because the young would have learned that history repeats itself.

After World War I, because of the war effort and the production of war commodities, the government had to boost the money supply. Prices for everything had increased and consumer goods were more expensive. After the war, we had an inflation period, prices were very high and people borrowed money believing that the situation would last. But thereafter we had the 1929 crash. Investors were so panic-stricken that they refused to invest and that was the beginning of the depression, as that period was called. After inflation it is deflation. From 1930 to 1939, all governments, whatever the party, resorted to many measures; back to the land, workers earning 20 cents in Valcartier, all sorts of plans, band-aid programs to lure people and save the system which did not meet people's needs at that time.

And in 1939 the war broke out as had been predicted by Major Douglas here in Ottawa when he appeared before the finance and commerce committee at the government's request. On that occasion he had stated, and that was proven, that if they did not change the way to finance the public sector, we would have within ten years at most another world-wide war. Unfortunately, those predictions became true. In the first years of the war, we saw the government appealing to patriotism, to all those who starved in poverty in the years of plenty. They urged them to become patriots, to save a system which maintained them in poverty, a system which again is dragging all Canadians down to the most unqualified poverty.

It is precisely to save a sick capitalist system which must be reformed—and that will never be said often enough because it needs to be reformed—and it is to help the government reform that system before it is too late.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time is up.

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. member for Bellechasse should have introduced Bill C-205 which provides for new and imaginative measures to urgently correct the economic difficulties we are experiencing. This bill is very interesting, especially because our debates these days are not particularly relevant to the economy at certain times. The hon. member should be commended for bringing us back to a crucial question which should be the focal point of our daily concerns.

Of course this bill features clauses or provisions with which I agree entirely and others on which I have certain reservations. I think the introductory sentence of the remarks of the hon. member for Bellechasse who quoted an excerpt from the Speech from the Throne was perfectly attuned to the measures he is proposing. The Speech from the Throne reminded us of the reality of the economic situation and told us that we should not be looking for the way to correct that situation in the conventional means. I also believe that indeed the hon. member's bill does not draw its proposed solutions from the conventional means of economic theories.

However, we are often told and often reminded in this House that the government has been and is still unduly involved in the direct conduct of economic affairs. The government is being blamed for its constant interventions in the economic mechanisms not only through fiscal measures but through many other government endeavours. More especially when discussing with small contractors and businessmen, they tell us that quite often a high percentage of their administration costs goes for filing forms coming from the municipal, provincial or federal governments.

Mr. Speaker, in that case I believe they are entirely right. When the bookkeeping section of a business which has about fifteen employees devotes 25 or 30 per cent of its time to deal with the Quebec Pension Board, the medical insurance scheme, the Unemployment Insurance Commission, the excise tax and all kinds of forms from the various governments, I think we have reached a saturation point as a result of the interventions made by various departments and governments.

Mr. Speaker, the first reservation I have about Bill C-205 is that it will add a new mechanism which at first sight seems to be really complex and sets really heavy restrictions on the various agencies of our economy. Mr. Speaker, I would like to note some points which I find highly interesting. In particular, we find this provision in subclause 5(h) at page 4 of the bill:

Every Canadian citizen over 18 years of age shall be entitled to apply—

—under this bill—

—for a basic security income of $100 per month—

● (1732)

The colleagues of the hon. member for Bellechasse and the hon. member himself have often emphasized the need for such a program. I would not want to misinterpret this clause of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Bellechasse, but I would interpret this as a form of guaranteed minimum income. In my opinion, the government should urgently implement such a program.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) made some comments on this issue recently, but I believe that the time for comments or proposals is passed and that we must now take some action. I know that several members on this side of the House share the interest of the Social Credit Party of Canada in a guaranteed minimum income program and I hope that my colleague will continue to urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the members of Cabinet to develop such a program as soon as possible.

What I like particularly about subclause 5(h), Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the hon. member has mentioned in his bill certain existing government programs, such as the Unemployment Insurance Program, which could help finance this plan. If we examine the expenditures of the government for the programs mentioned by the hon. member in subclause 5(h), I believe there would be enough money to finance a universal guaranteed minimum income which would assist all Canadian citizens equally. In my opinion, this provision of the bill is extremely interesting and we should consider it seriously.

I was also interested by something that the hon. member for Bellechasse said in his speech, for instance that an economic system must serve the people. I think that the hon. member often says that the people should not serve economic systems. I suggest that this is a basic truth that we should keep in mind all the time. I feel that he is right when he says that he does not believe our economic institutions and our present system are really and primarily geared to serve the public, for indeed they are geared to serve themselves. In other words, this system looks at itself in a mirror and tries to please itself and provide benefits to itself, instead of providing them to the citizens.

According to the hon. member for Bellechasse, serious-minded economists, not the kind who tries time and again to find solutions to cyclical and permanent problems, in other words economists who are not limited in their originality, should take the time to consider these proposals. I think it would warrant the trouble, and the proposals which could prove detrimental should be cast aside. I feel that there are many very interesting measures in this bill, and that we should seriously consider putting them to work to remedy our current situation.

Mr. Speaker, if we recognize that the situation is new and different, it is not by falling back on outdated economic measures, to quote from the Speech from the Throne, that we will be able to correct the situation, but rather through innovative measures, as stated in the Speech from the Throne. I believe that proposals put forward by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) are innovative measures, and as such they deserve to be considered.

Another reservation I would like to make, in addition to those expressed at the beginning of my speech, is the proposed reversal of the inflation of land values, as opposed to other property values. This in my view could create difficulties. It is proposed for instance that they should be brought back to the level of 10 years ago. In Neuville or Saint-Raymond or Pont-Rouge, in the riding of Portneuf—and I believe conditions are similar in the hon. member's riding—a farm costing $15,000, $16,000 or $18,000 ten years ago is now worth $100,000 or $150,000. So I do not believe it would be such a terrible help to the owners of such farms if their values were rolled back to the level of ten years ago. It may be that I am misinterpreting that provision, so I would welcome comments by the hon. member on this specific provision.

We are also told the Authority would be empowered to announce the operative rate of exchange of the Canadian dollar with other currencies for purposes of sales to and purchases from other countries. Unless I am mistaken, the Minister of Finance already has the authority to do so, and the government's choice is now to let the dollar float, a frightening phrase for some people. I feel that a lower valued Canadian dollar versus the U.S. dollar has certain benefits, for our exports in particular. And as long as exports have not resumed a pace likely to boost employment, we should in my view maintain the dollar at a relatively low level with respect to competing currencies.

In summary, I would simply suggest I have reservations, especially in respect of the administrative structure called for in the bill, in the context of the not unfounded criticism of too much government intervention in the management of our economy. I would point out that this legislation includes extremely interesting provisions. And as far as the issue of a guaranteed minimum income is concerned, this has received very much attention from my colleagues. I can assure this House that we will continue urging the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to establish as soon as possible a sound, consistent scheme of guaranteed minimum income, and I feel assured that the hon. member's hopes can be filled within the shortest time frame.

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for introducing this bill. I have known him since I have the honour to represent the people of Sherbrooke in this Chamber, and I recognize in him a member who has always shown an interest, not only in his riding and in his province, but also in the whole of Canada. On many occasions he has suggested means to solve a number of problems, particularly when it comes to the Canadian economy.

I also wish to say to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) that I entirely endorse, like my colleague for Portneuf (Mr. Bussières), several of the measures proposed in Bill C-205. Certain proposals would require some explanation, and the hon. member will surely admit it, because it is not possible to explain everything in a bill.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bellechasse has introduced a bill which, according to him, will deal with both the inflation and unemployment problems facing our country. He suggests the establishment of an international monetary authority to control prices, profits and capital transfers outside the country for a one-year period which will be considered as a period of national emergency. I think that the extension of controls, Mr. Speaker, may not be the answer to our problems at present. The key to a global decrease in the inflation rate is rather a wise management policy as put forward recently by the minister. I mean that the federal administration must influence the global demand on the economy through its spending powers and regulate the increase of the monetary supply in order to ensure that the global demand is consistent with a diminishing inflation rate, a sustained increase in production and a gradual decline of the unemployment rate. Most hon. members will certainly agree that this is quite different from the proposal contained in Bill C-205.

The demand management policy that I consider wise is that set forth in the report on the economic and fiscal situation tabled on October 20 by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and in recent public statements made by the president of the Bank of Canada. The economic and fiscal situation as described on October 20 reiterates the commitment made by the federal administration to keep the increase in its spending power below the rate of increase of the gross national product. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, we expect that the total expenditures will only increase by 8.2 per cent in the fiscal year 1977-78. This slight increase only reflects in part the new financing agreements in the health and post-secondary education field, and even if one takes that factor into consideration, the increase would still be lower than the expected increase in the gross national product. This decision of the federal administration to keep the increase in its spending power below the rate of increase of the national gross product should alleviate the inflationary pressures and allow a wider margin for the expansion of the private sector. Furthermore, it should in principle somehow reduce wage demands which some observers regard as a significant inflationary factor.

In this regard, I would like to remark that there has been some tightening with regard to finance management within the government, and this is a new development. I feel this is due to the public spending control program. When dollars do not flow as freely, everyone is careful to spend more wisely. I suppose this also applies to provincial and municipal governments. Another factor which makes for efficiency at the provincial level is the new legislation on tax agreements between the federal and provincial governments, passed recently by Parliament and which transfered to the provinces the responsibility for the management and financing of shared cost programs in the fields of health and education. Thus, the provincial governments will be further encouraged in the future to reduce costs, because they will have to manage all their savings themselves instead of sharing half of them with the federal administration.

I do not mean by that that everything is for the best in the best of all possible worlds in the federal administration. But I think that great progress has been made towards a greater efficiency. Clearly, more must be done in the future, but the progress made until now will make it easier to control the growing tax burden laid on the private sector, which will restrict the fiscal component of prices which falls on all citizens. The economic and tax measures related to the March 31 budget will inject, as everyone knows, approximately $1.8 billion to stimulate the economy during the 1977-78 fiscal year, half of it going to the consumers and the other half to the corporate sector.

The portion allowed to the consumers will help promote the growth of consumer expenses, and the one going to the corporate sector, combined, of course, with the increase in consumer expenses, will give a badly needed impetus to corporate investments. A higher rate of investments means therefore that the existing productive capacity will have increased when the demand has picked up and also that an added capacity will be needed. Conversely, an increased capacity entails a greater price stability. Moreover, before the March 31 budget, the federal government introduced a set of expansionary tax measures, namely tax cuts on personal income tax through indexation, lower unemployment insurance benefits and the development of job creation programs.

These measures combined with the initiatives contained in the budget will help maintain the expansionary thrust of the federal tax policy put forward originally in the November 1974 budget which, incidentally, enabled us to face the world recession better than any other industrialized country. Besides, the OECD mentioned it in its report, alleging that Canada had a better economic performance on average than other industrialized countries. Therefore, in the 1977-78 fiscal year, the liquidity requirements foreseen by the federal government will be in the order of $8.5 billion. This large liquidity requirement Mr. Speaker, will start to decrease considerably as the economy recovers.

I must point out that these liquidities, given the present circumstances, are not inflationary. They are rather an essential support for the economic activity. In my opinion, an early attempt to reduce them would jeopardize the recovery of production and the decline of unemployment which are both under way at the present time.

In short, the present taxation policy is both anti-inflationary and expansionary. It is anti-inflationary because it is based on restricting federal administration expenses and expansionary because it involves a sizeable deficit. In my humble opinion, it is the policy that must now be applied when so called stagflation constitutes our number one problem. Concerning the monetary policy, which is the other major element of the demand management policy and which the bill proposed by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) would rather radically modify, I quote a statement made recently by the Bank of Canada governor in his 1975 annual report:

> The basic principle underlying Canadian monetary policy continues to be that the money supply should grow along a path capable of accommodating a satisfactory rate of real economic growth accompanied by some slowing in the rate of increase of prices.

And in this same statement, the bank spelled out what it meant by announcing three ranges for the growth rate of the money supply and demand deposits which are progressively decreasing, as we all know. The first rate was not less than 10 per cent but well below 15 per cent as measured from the average level of the three months centered on May 1975. Up to summer 1976 and after two increases in the discount rate, the bank had succeeded in lowering growth back to the lower limit.

By the end of August, the Bank of Canada, taking into account the intentions it had expressed, announced a drop of 8 to 12 per cent of the intended range. In order not to exceed that range, the Bank had to lower the discount rate on four occasions, thus bringing it to its present level of 7½ per cent, which was supposed to encourage firms and individuals to increase their expenses and spur the economy. In October, the Bank of Canada announced another reduction in the range of rate gap which varied between 7 and 8 per cent from June 1977. Mr. Speaker, that is our present national monetary policy.

I stated that a careful demand management policy rather than the continuation of control measures is essential to the reduction of the inflation rate. Temporary control measures were necessary to allow a fast reduction of the inflation rate. Had these control measures not been imposed in the fall of 1975, and had salary increases remained at the level of 15 to 20 and even 30 per cent that they reached before the imposition of control measures, costs, in terms of loss in production and jobs, would have been enormous. In such a situation, strong pressures would have been exerted upon the government to force its decision regarding the demand management policy which, by being adjusted to excessive salaries and price increases, would have caused further inflation and would have made the final and necessary adjustment even more costly.

The most important contribution that control measures brought in the fight against inflation is that they have made it possible to avoid that dilemma. Thanks to the control measures and to a careful demand management policy, that risk no longer exists. We can now terminate these control measures and rely instead on tax monetary policy in order to solve the problem.

I recognize that, given high food prices and the devaluation of the Canadian dollar, we have recently faced some difficulties in lowering the inflation rate. For instance, official figures for October unhappily showed that consumer prices have gone up by 8.8 per cent during the year ending in October. For the same period, food prices have increased by 12.7 per cent. On the other hand, non-food products chopped further and stabilized at 7.3 per cent. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that last week, I was reading a report of the Economic European Community which said that the total rate for the whole of the common market countries was around 2 per cent above the Canadian average, for all common market countries, that is.

The decrease in non-food products is due to lower wage demands. Whatever index we use, all wages registered a remarkable downturn since the inception of the anti-inflation program in October 1975. At last Canadian wages have stopped outgrowing wages in the United States—our main economic partners. The slowing rate of wage hikes combine with the recent devaluation of the Canadian dollar—which as you may recall is one of the factors responsible for the recent short-term deterioration of our economic performance in terms of prices—should contribute in a big way to reestablish our competitive position on international markets. It will be the only way for us to benefit from the increasing world demand and the only way to prevent our producers from giving away their products at lower prices on our domestic markets.

This is what we must do, Mr. Speaker, if we are to reduce our significant current account deficit and ensure the future growth of our production and of our employment. We have to accept the fact that our costs must stay competitive in relation to those of our economic partners in order to reduce the present unemployment rate. The reduction of the anti-inflation guideline on wages to 6 per cent after October will force us to accept that fact while controls remain in effect but once they are lifted we will have to accept it on a voluntary basis.

I think we need a monitoring agency to help us contain inflation through the demand management policy. That monitoring agency was described in the Agenda for Co-operation and the Minister of Finance recently stated his intention of proceeding with its formation in the economic and fiscal statement he made in this House. The monitoring agency has been called by some a "toothless watchdog" and consequently, very inefficient. Perhaps deservedly so, but although it may not have teeth I assure you it will be able to bark quite loudly.

As its name indicates the monitoring agency will control cost and price movements in both the public and the private sectors of the economy.

It will be its duty to call attention to cost and price increases which it feels are unwarranted in the present context. Even though the agency will have no coercive power or any teeth enabling it to prevent inflationary price and income increases it will be able to rely on its capacity to announce such increases and its "barking" and thus discourage those who would want to boost prices significantly. Large corporations in particular avoid undesirable publicity. Consequently their leaders will probably hesitate before imposing a major price hike.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is very little time remaining but I want to make a couple of remarks about this interesting bill which has been put before us today. In introducing it, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) said that after all the time that the government has been asking the opposition, when criticizing the government, to come up with something concrete, the Social Credit party has come up with something concrete. My observation about that is that it is not concrete, it is dynamite. If in fact a bill along these lines were to be enacted by this parliament, the economic situation in Canada would be very considerably worse than it is now, not considerably better.

I have so little time that, instead of talking in general terms about the dangers of solving or trying to solve economic problems with the money printing press, when our problems are more underlying, more structural, more related to productivity, to regional disparities and a growing labour force—things which monetary policy alone cannot solve—I think the best way I can discredit the bill and the approach which is proposed by the Social Credit party is to refer to some of the provisions of the bill which they have put before us.

The hon. member for Bellechasse talked in very glowing terms about the general effect of the package, about bringing on the just society, about what he called the failures of government policies. But did he draw the attention of this House to clause 4 of his bill? Clause 4 provides that for a period of one year from the time the act comes into force a state of national emergency will be deemed to exist, and all power over legislation will be, in effect, taken away from this House and transferred to the cabinet during that period, provided that within three months any measures introduced by the governor in council are laid before parliament.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how serious the hon. member is about putting forward a proposal like that. Is this a time of national emergency? I do not think so. Can the members of this House be convinced that they should not have the right to pass legislation for a one year period, that that right should be taken from this Chamber and turned over to the governor in council?

Let me turn to clause 5(a) to give another example of a proposal about which I do not think the hon. member opposite can be serious. During this period of national emergency for one year, transfer of funds out of Canada for any purpose whatsoever will be prohibited—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The time allotted to private members' hour has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC WORKS—RIDEAU CENTRE DEVELOPMENT—DATE OF TERMINATION OF COMMITMENT TO RIDEAU VIKING GROUP

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, November 18, I asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan) a question concerning a most important project in my riding called Rideau Centre. The minister did not give me a very clear answer and that is why I asked to be put on the late show. In his answer the minister said that, barring complications with permits and other actions of other levels of government, his target date was April, 1978. I hope the parliamentary secretary will be able to tell me today what is the termination date of the commitment to the Rideau Viking group so that it will be clearly established for all interested parties as April 30, 1978. Otherwise I have some very important questions to ask.

If April 30, 1978, is not the final date by which the Rideau Viking group must obtain all necessary clearances for their proposed development, then I have some very serious questions to put this evening to the parliamentary secretary. If the Rideau Viking group encounters objections and difficulties with permits and, to use the minister's words, other actions of other levels of government which would not be forthcoming, then it could mean that they would get an extension of this commitment until these conditions would be favourable to the agreed development proposal. If this is the case, then I strongly suspect the Rideau Viking group have obtained from the Department of Public Works an open-ended and exclusive contract for development of federal properties, and that we could in time be in some difficulties. I shall await the answer of the parliamentary secretary before making further extrapolations on this matter.

In its simplest terms, the Rideau Centre is a bold, imaginative, and very endearing scheme to revitalize the sector of Ottawa which for many years has been in a state of decline relative to other parts of the centre of the capital. Rideau Centre was an initiative undertaken by the National Capital Commission. Over the years it has required consultation, substantial input and commitment from all levels of government. The private sector and citizens' committees were involved.

Over the years the Rideau Centre has been the most announced project. I was not even elected in 1972 when it was first announced, and I believe it has been announced four or fives times since then. I agree it is a project which has required extensive consultation and which we all hoped would be exemplary of innovative urban design and development. We hoped it would act as an example of multilevel government and private sector consultation and co-operation.

Admittedly there were problems. Readjustments were required from all levels and from all groups. I know we are still going through the process of consultation on the ways and means of implementing this most important revitalization.

In effect what all those involved in the Rideau Centre are trying to do is to reverse a North American trend toward the dying or sick city core. We want to make the centre of our capital the lively, social, cultural, and commercial place it used to be before the exodus to the suburbs began.

The suburbs are all right, but they are no great substitute for a city's heart where action and life are. A Parisian or a Londoner does not seek substance in some suburb, no matter how elegant. He looks to the Champs Élysées or Piccadilly Circus, as do the tourists who visit those great capitals. We want the centre of the national capital to become a tourist attraction, a lively and dynamic centre of activity.

What a lively core needs is people. It needs people living in it. People will gravitate to it because of its attractions. They will gravitate to it because of its theatres, restaurants, friendly and comfortable taverns, or even university lectures. Possibly people would gravitate to it because of a speech in the House of Commons. The last thing we want to do is anything which would drive people out of the core, to make life so exasperating through increased traffic, noise, pollution, and what have you, that the residents flee to the alleged peace of the far suburbs.

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier).]

We must continue to emphasize the need for a lively, economically sound, and stimulated downtown area. It must become a people place, where people can live and work in peace and security. Experience has shown that downtown areas of large cities, which were neglected and poorly planned, are places which become vacated after the normal business hours and are the preferred dens of crimes and vandalism.

In 1961 the central business district of Ottawa enjoyed 65 per cent of the total departmental store type merchandise expenditures in the Ottawa-Hull area. In 1971 this dropped to 31 per cent. In 1976 the percentage dropped further to 22 per cent of DSTM—departmental store type merchandise expenditures. In the face of increased incomes, salaries, population and disposable income, this is the sign of a dying central core.

In these times of economic difficulties and changes, there is a need to act immediately to counter the effects of decentralization and relocation of the employment centres on our local economy. We must seriously study alternative economic generators. There needs to be diversity in the private employment sector to compensate for the loss of government jobs. The core of the city is uppermost in everyone's mind.

It is estimated that 2,000 jobs will be created in three or four years in the building of Rideau Centre, that there will be 1,500 permanent new jobs, and the tax revenue will be more than 5 million a year. It is an interesting and challenging project, and I hope the parliamentary secretary can give us the final date on this project.

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is much more that can be added to what the minister has already stated in his reply to the oral question the other day. There are certain planning consideratons still to be resolved, and the minister is hopeful that a decision will be reached rather quickly. The planning considerations relate primarily to traffic movements and their impact on the surrounding areas. These studies are proceeding concurrently with our negotiations with Rideau Viking Corporation for the development of a Rideau Centre on federal lands. Hopefully all planning considerations will be resolved so that when the negotiations leading to an agreement with Rideau Viking have reached the final stages, the major planning concerns will have been resolved. In the meantime, as I have stated, we are proceeding with negotiations.

At a meeting in September, 1977, with Canadian Pacific Hotels, officials of the department were assured that CP Hotels remain interested in proceeding with the their plans for an hotel within the proposed Rideau Centre development.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—REASON FOR FAILURE TO INCREASE BASIC DISABILITY PENSION—POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you and those members who are here are aware that the topic on which I will speak now is one that I brought up on many occasions before, as did my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I advise the parliamentary secretary to give the following message to the minister, that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I will continue to bring up this topic until we can impress on the government the necessity of changing the basic rate of pensions in the formula which was established in 1973 in line with the different categories in the public service.

I brought up this question on a number of occasions and I do not want to repeat the arguments that the minister gave to support the fact that the government was not going to increase the basic rate of the pension and that the veterans would accept this as good Canadians. On the last occasion the minister told me that the government will wait until there is an improvement in the financial situation, at which time it will look at the matter again.

What I wish to ask the minister through his parliamentary secretary is how long the veterans will have to wait to get equity. How long will it take the government to fulfil its commitment toward the veterans? I can remind him that it is 60-odd years since World War I and 30-odd years since World War II, but those who suffered incarceration in prisoner of war camps were granted the basic rate of pension only in 1973. How long will we have to wait before the government is in a financial position to grant the veterans' request? I say to the minister that he cannot equate, balance or reconcile the suffering of veterans with the financial capabilities of the government. How long will these people have to wait?

I ask the parliamentary secretary to compare the figures in the annual report of the veterans of Canada for 1975-76 with the recently tabled report which we received a couple of days ago. According to the first report, there were 12,404 World War I veterans receiving disability pensions in 1976. According to the new report there are only 10,889 veterans receiving disability pensions this year. There is a difference of 1,515 veterans who did not receive the increases, and now they are gone.

Also, I would like to mention those who receive 48 per cent pensions. In 1976 there were 8,947; this year it is down to 7,885, a difference of 1,062. How long will their widows have to wait before the government is in a financial position to fulfil the commitment it made to the veterans many years ago? Now even Second World War veterans are dying out at the rate of 50 a year. How long will their widows have to wait to receive the equity they were promised?

The minister indicated with respect to the mail we have all received concerning the feelings of veterans across Canada that he realizes what is going on across the country, and that he is aware of the views of veterans and veterans' organizations on this subject. He realizes what is going on across the country, the consideration and the wonderment of veterans and veterans' associations, and how they feel about the answers we are getting from the government.

I was looking through some of the speeches of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), and in a speech given on July 16, 1977, he said to the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada—and I will read just one brief sentence.

> Ralph Waldo Emerson . . . A great poet and essayist . . . once described a hero as a person who was brave five minutes longer than an ordinary man.

He was brave five minutes longer, but he has been waiting many years to get the quality he deserves.

I know that the parliamentary secretary is going to give us a list of the pensions in existence now, and they are generous. They have been generous, but they have not been generous while these First World War veterans suffered over the 60-odd years and did not come up to equity until quite recently.

The National Veterans' Organization of Canada have submitted a brief and the minister has received it today. They are recommending that the minister introduce an amendment to have the effect, not only of raising more disability pensions to a level which is reasonable and consistent with the wishes of the Canadian public to ensure fair and reasonable compensation, but to avoid any repetition of the serious deficiency in the present rate; and to avoid having to update the basic rate from time to time. This would avoid the necessity of veterans' associations having to plead with the government for essential increases in pensions every few years, a responsibility which they are pleased to carry out on behalf of veterans, but one which is distasteful, and one which carries with it the implication that sacrifices of disabled veterans, by reason of war service, have been forgotten and neglected.

I know that the parliamentary secretary is very reasonable and compassionate. I hope that he will help myself and the member from Winnipeg North Centre to try to convince the minister that this amendment is due right now, not later when the government is in a better financial position, because, to take the example of the waste that is going on in Canada, that should not be taken out on the backs of the veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for bringing up this topic once again in the House.

This question has been brought up repeatedly in the House, and it is not because of lack of interest that we have not proceeded with the legislation. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) has stated that disability pensions will increase 7.2 per cent as of January 1, 1978. I know the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and also the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) are aware that in the last five to six years pensions have increased dramatically. I guess it is the old story—what have you done for me lately? Notwithstanding the fact that the minister and, indeed, the cabinet, have been discussing the matter of the increase in pensions, it still remains a fact that now in Canada we are in a time of restraint. Can I agree with you any more when I say that "No, it should certainly not be put upon the backs of the veterans. Neither should it be put on the backs of the other workers in the country; it should not be put on the backs solely of the people who are in the professions; nor on the backs of big business. Surely a restraint program is one which emcompasses all Canadians. As such we should be willing to bear not only what we can—and this is not to say over the years, and in time of need, the veterans did not indeed give more, which was above and beyond the call of duty. I simply say that perhaps with patience, with a little time, this particular matter will clear itself up.

I am sure hon. members are aware that the minister has said he would be willing to have this discussed in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, a committee on which the three of us have served for a number of years. With us it has never been a question of whether we will bring this about by raising each other's political hackles. We have always tried to work for what was best for our Canadian veterans. It is in this spirit that I tell the House that the minister is considering, inasmuch as he can, an increase in pensions for veterans. Rest assured that I sympathize with what the hon. member suggested today. Given a little more time I hope this problem can be cleared up.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION BY CABINET OF INCREASE IN BASIC DISABILITY PENSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), in making this appeal to the government once again. We make it as strongly as we can.

I have to say to my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Parent), that the answer he has just given to my hon. friend's question was completely unsatisfactory. If we were asking for something new or proposing a brand new idea there might be some point to the suggestion that we be patient and wait for some of the problems to be sorted out. But what we are dealing with is an issue that has been around for longer than the parliamentary secretary has been alive.

For 60 years we have been working on the proposition that disabled veterans should receive pensions to repay what they lost in terms of wages that they might earn. They are not handouts, not allowances to enable them to buy goods, but pensions to replace the earning power lost because of disability. The scheme was started that way at a low level at the end of World War I. It slipped behind until at the end of World War II the rate of the disability pension was far too low.

[Mr. Parent.]

In 1973, after a tripartite committee made recommendations in 1972, the government accepted the principle that the basic disability pension should be equivalent to the take-home average pay of five designated categories of public servants. Four years have gone by and the 100 per cent disability pensioners, are more than $500 behind.

It does not wish to say that this is something for which we should wait. The parliamentary secretary says the minister was willing that it be discussed in committee, and that it be discussed in the late show this afternoon, but when I pressed the point that he should take it back to cabinet he says he has to wait until the dust clears. To say these things this long after World War I and World War II just is not good enough.

When the parliamentary secretary answered the previous question he did not do what he did the other day and give us figures as to the rate of the 100 per cent disability pension. Maybe he thought I would have an answer to that and would remind him what members of parliament were getting when the veterans' pension was a lot lower than it is now. What we get now makes what they now receive look pretty sorry.

When word gets around as to what the present level of 100 per cent disability pension is I think it should be pointed out—and it is in the same book of statistics that my friend referred to a moment ago—that in the case of World War I veterans only 7.87 per cent are getting the 100 per cent pension. In the case of World War II veterans only 3.72 per cent receive the 100 per cent pension. In the case of veterans of both wars, more than 60 per cent get pensions of 20 per cent or less. We are not talking about a few privileged persons who are drawing a lot of money from the federal treasury. We are talking about scaled down benefits which, at least in terms of value, should have kept up with the level in the Public Service that was agreed to. That is why we say that the answer that we should wait, that there is a period of restraint, is not good enough. If we had raised this issue just last month or last year maybe that would be an appropriate answer, but this issue has been around for all these years.

In the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in 1972 and 1973 when we fought for this we made the point that unless the government not only put the pension at that time at a level equal to the wages of the five categories of public servants but agreed to keep it at that level, in no time at all the veterans would be behind. Here we are today, already behind.

One answer I have heard in recent times is that that 7.2 per cent increase that will take place in January will narrow the gap a bit. Instead of being $530 odd behind, the 100 per cent pension will be only $390 behind, or something like that. I have no reason to doubt that statistic. However, when the Public Service salaries go up in 1978, as they will, instead of the gap being $537 it will probably be $600. To us this is an act of bad faith.

I am prepared to agree with my friend across the way, and my friend to my right will agree with me that in general terms our veterans legislation is good. It is not as wonderful in world-wide terms as some of those on the government side try to make out. Some countries do better. It is good, but it is not good enough for us to take all these years to get firmly established a principle that was agreed to after the end of World War I, and agreed to again long after World War II, in 1972 and 1973.

Promises were made to those who went overseas in both those wars, and to those who went to serve Canada in other wars, that they would be looked after. In particular, they were told that for their disabilities they would receive compensation in the form of pensions related, as I say, not to consumer prices or some kind of allowance, but to the loss of their earning power. Unless the government puts these disability pensions back on that level I say, as my friend and as veterans' organizations across Canada are saying, the government is breaking faith.

I say to the government, why spoil a fairly good record? Why spoil a fairly good package of legislation that we have known for years as the Veterans Charter by breaking faith on this issue? Let us have action now.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the intervention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I am not going to quote the figures as to what a person with a 100 per cent pension should be receiving. Hon. members are as aware of these figures as I am.

These men have indeed paid the price that must be paid for our freedom and the freedom of our children. My colleagues and the minister share the quality of fairness and understanding. I can understand the point the hon. member brings forward that such an answer is not acceptable now.

Both hon. members were here when we together, and I do not say just on one side of the House or the other, but we as a House and as a committee—I was not here, but it was surely done by the person who held the position I now hold—helped to bring our veterans pensions up to where they were comparable with any pensions in the world.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Were comparable.

Mr. Parent: They were comparable until a very short time ago. What do you want me to say about a generous pension? What is generous and what is not generous? Can we put a price tag on the years that these men defended our country and all that we believe in? What is the price tag? What is the amount we should pay? Should the price tag be $500 a month or $5,000? I suggest that both of those figures are fair. How do we arrive at a figure?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Keep faith with what was promised.

● (1827)

Mr. Parent: I think we are keeping faith. The fact that we do not answer a problem right this minute does not mean we are breaking faith. Surely we can say "We are willing to keep faith but we must take our time and see what other priority must be dealt with." Yes, the veterans are indeed a priority for this government. We have listened to the veterans. We have received the reports which have been mentioned, though I have no knowledge of one of the reports which has been mentioned. But when this goes to committee and when the facts are brought out there, and when we sit down and consider this together, I believe the solution will be acceptable to our veterans. I have been out to the coast and I have met with the veterans there—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us what they told you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been withdrawn. I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. tonight.

Motion withdrawn.

At 6.28 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR SECOND READING OF BILL C-11

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cafik:

That in relation to Bill C-11, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, five hours shall be allotted to the further consideration in second reading stage of the bill; and

That, at the end of the fifth such hour, any proceeding before the house shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I can hardly believe, after the kind of debate that took place this afternoon, that we have already spent nine days on this bill, about 26 hours. With the day that the opposition took off for their national policy convention, the total is about 11 regular sitting days spent on this bill. This debate is a follow-up to the Speech from the Throne and the budget debate on this same legislation which took place last spring. Now we have to use a time allocation motion to get this bill simply past second reading. It is not as if when you pass second reading the bill is automatically through; we then go into committee of the whole for clause by clause study, and that will take perhaps several more weeks.

It seems hard for me to believe the opposition really wants to debate this bill on second reading for many more days when we have already debated it for nine days, especially when there are so many good things in the bill which the Canadian people are waiting to see adopted and put into legislative form. Yet we have to use a time allocation motion and use up two or three additional hours today debating whether or not we are going to limit debate on the bill.

Some hon. member mentioned this afternoon that if this bill had been introduced in the House of Commons in the mother of parliaments at Westminster, it would have had only two days' debate at the most and then be sent to committee of the whole and be passed, though perhaps with extended sittings. Be that as it may, we have spent nine sitting days on the bill, with extended hours. In addition, in his statement on the economy during the throne speech debate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) spent a great deal of time dealing with the provisions of this bill.

I cannot imagine why the opposition does not want to see the provisions in this bill implemented. For example, we have the provision to cut taxes by $100 during the first two months of next year, at a time when consumer spending is often down. This tax cut would provide stimulus to the Canadian economy to the tune of $700 million, and 7.5 million taxpayers in Canada would benefit. In view of that provision I cannot understand why the opposition does not just pass second reading of the bill so we can go into clause by clause study. There may be a couple of t's to cross or i's to dot, but we can do that during clause by clause study of the bill.

Likewise, Mr. Speaker, the $150 million which the minister mentioned in his economic statement will create more direct jobs this coming winter. This is in addition to the $450 million provided by the manpower program of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) last year and will total this year and next year over $1 billion for direct job creation.

That is the kind of active, positive program for which the Canadian people are asking. That is why the Tories have sat on that side of the House year after year after year. All they want to do is talk, talk, talk, not take action. What the Canadian people need, Mr. Speaker, is action, and this government wants action so it can pass this bill and implement the tax cuts for which Canadians are waiting as well as the investment tax credit which will create jobs.

Let me point out to the House that one very important aspect of this investment tax credit is that it provides an additional 2.5 per cent investment tax credit, making a total of 7.5 per cent, for slow growth areas of Canada. This is an important change and is an indication of the kind of commitment which the government has to the slow growth areas of our country. It is the kind of positive action that the government wants to implement, action which has already created some 254,000 jobs during the year October, 1976, to October, 1977.

[Mr. Foster.]

Looking back over the six years between 1970 and 1976 we see that Canada has a pretty impressive job creation record compared to other OECD countries. According to the OECD report last summer, the average increase in Canada was 3.2 per cent during these six years from 1970 to 1976. On the other hand, the increase in the United States of America was only 1.8 per cent, in Japan 0.5 per cent, in France 0.4 per cent, in Italy 0.4 per cent, and in the United Kingdom 0.1 per cent. West Germany is often held up to us as the country that has very low unemployment and inflation, yet their actual job creation picture showed a decrease of one per cent averaged over the last six years.

I recall about a year ago meeting with a representative from Switzerland who was talking about their very low inflation rate during 1975, which he said was about 4 per cent. This was at a time, Mr. Speaker, when we in Canada were facing an inflation rate of over 10 per cent and had to implement the wage and price control guidelines. I asked him how Switzerland accomplished such a low rate. He replied, "Well, we had a minus 7 per cent growth rate in our economy in 1975". I asked him what had happened to their unemployment rate, and he replied, "It did not really go up because we sent about 200,000 of our employees home to other countries in southern Europe". Of course, Mr. Speaker, that does not really solve the problem, it just exports it to some other countries. Therefore I suggest Canada has really had an impressive growth rate during the last six years in terms of jobs, certainly the best of the OECD countries.

There are other reasons why we should get on with this legislation. The Standing Order 75C motion which is before the House tonight does not pass this legislation; it gets it past second reading stage only. We then go on to clause by clause study which could well take several more days, even a week or two. If it should go on for much longer than that we would get to the position where this parliament, which opened on August 18, would have passed only one bill before Christmas, a pretty poor record, one that we would have to lay at the feet of the official opposition.

There are other important pieces of legislation waiting to be passed, such as amendments to the Combines Investigation Act and the competition bill which will ensure that consumers are fairly treated and that the market place is healthy and productive. Canadians should have a very competitive market place. We look at the labour standards legislation—

● (2012)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) on a point of order.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, in the midst of this ill-prepared and unprepared—

Some hon. Members: On, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I am prepared to listen to a point of order, and I should like to hear that point of order.

Mr. Johnston: The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) referred to this House being in session in August. The House did not sit in August of this year. I am sure the hon. member would not want to leave that erroneous impression.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): That is a point of argument and not a point of order, although it is debatable.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I apologize if I said "August". I meant to say October 18.

I have referred to two or three pieces of legislation which are waiting. There are many others, such as the legislation respecting reporting by petroleum companies on their profit picture. We have been castigated by the New Democratic Party and the Tories in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works for the last two years, saying that there were windfall profits that weren't being reinvested back into oil and gas exploration in western Canada and the high Arctic. This legislation is before parliament waiting to be passed.

In this session we want to deal with the legislation concerning the Alcan pipeline, the largest project which has ever been undertaken by free enterprise in Canada. That important piece of legislation will be before the House within the next few weeks. If we do not move rapidly on this bill, we will not get to that important piece of legislation before Christmas.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this unfortunate motion before the House, I should like to straighten the record with regard to a few things. The speaker who immediately preceded me has indicated that he feels the debate on Bill C-11 has been prolonged. Also he feels certain legislation is being held up.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Stevens: If that hon. member and other representatives on the government side feel that way, they had better take it up with their House leader.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: They had better ask their House leader and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) exactly what went wrong following the March 31, 1977, budget.

I am sure hon. members will recall that the budget came in on March 31, and that there was a bill which was the forerunner to the bill now before us. I am referring to Bill C-56. It received first reading on June 15, 1977, and has not been heard of since. For hon. members opposite to come into the House and suggest the bill before us should be passed expeditiously is balderdash, and the Canadian public should be made aware of that.

There is a very serious thing happening in this House. This government, with a sad economic record to face, is determined to stifle debate in this House. On every occasion possible members opposite are stifling debate and refusing to allow hon. members to deal with issues that should be dealt with, as far as Canadians are concerned. The last budget introduced in this House which received a full debate at budget level, and on the bills arising out of it, was the Turner budget of June 23, 1975. In the debate arising from that budget, 51 speakers were allowed to participate and express their views.

On May 25, the then minister of finance, Mr. Macdonald, brought in a budget and, by coincidence, exactly 51 speakers were allowed to participate in that budget debate. The various bills arising out of that were passed by this House without undue delay.

The next budget was on March 31, 1977, and 56 speakers were given the privilege of participating in that budget debate. The government chose not to advance the legislation, Bill C-56, which arose from that. It touched on income tax amendments. At that time there was no budget debate.

On October 20, 1977, the Minister of Finance introduced a so-called statement in the House during the throne speech debate. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated, they telescoped two things: the throne speech debate and the budget debate. Bearing in mind that the House has not had an opportunity to debate the October 20, 1977, statement, to now turn around and use closure in order to cut off further debate with respect to Bill C-11 is unforgiveable and must be resisted by members in this House. This is the only opportunity we have had to debate what was said in that October statement.

The last time we received an opportunity to speak on an income tax amendment bill was one year ago in November, 1976, on second reading. To suggest a year later that closure is necessary is another clear indication that hon. members opposite are trying to stifle and squelch debate in this House.

In 1975 there were government expenditures of $26 billion and a deficit of $1.1 billion. According to the statement of October 20 the expenditures have zoomed to approximately $43 billion and the deficit is $9.2 billion. Is there any question as to why the government wants this debate stifled? It does not want that information conveyed to Canadians in the form of a parliamentary debate.

If I had more time I would take the House through the inaccuracies in the various budgets that have been brought forth. If we compare the March 31 budget with the current forecast of the Minister of Finance, we will notice a change of $2 billion in their estimate of the deficit Canadians will face at the federal level. On March 31 the government estimated the deficit to be $7.1 billion, and now feels it will be $9.2 billion. The government is urgently trying to prevent further information on this being conveyed to Canadians. To suggest that there are not enough provisions in Bill C-11 to debate is totally overlooking the fact that the bill includes some tax credits proposed by my party over a year ago. I am referring to tax credits of at least $100 per person. Unfortunately those tax credits will only occur in 1978.

I bet there are not ten members on that side of the House who have read the bill and I bet they do not fully realize that the proposal they are now blindly endorsing is only a suggestion to have a tax credit in 1978. We feel it would be preferable to have it now. We believe a tax credit of $100 should be given now. What is wrong with members in the House showing their concern about the government's proposal to tax life insurance in the form that is proposed in Bill C-11? Why should we be cut off from expressing our views on that provision in Bill C-11?

I should like to point out half a dozen other matters. For example, what is wrong with members expressing their view on the fact that this government needs a further debt borrowing authorization of $9 billion in spite of the fact that only last spring it sought a $7 billion borrowing authorization increase? Those are the types of things that members have been dealing with in speaking on Bill C-11. What is wrong with the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) making a clear argument as to why he feels the farm roll-over provisions, certainly from the corporate side, are inadequate? I thought he made a forceful argument.

What is wrong with two or three of my colleagues pointing out that the so called SIN system could be easily changed if the government saw fit? Now is the time to do it under Bill C-11.

In short, I think that some basic arguments have been advanced by members of my party as to why this bill should be considered further. We believe that more thought should be given to it, and surely nobody would disagree that the proper time to express these views is on second reading, and that is what we have been doing. Instead of listening to members of the Liberal party supporting this incomparable, incompetent government, I hope that we will see them tonight stopping to act like sheep and standing up to vote against this closure motion, as we will.

Mr. Ed. Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, having sat through every minute of the debate so far on Bill C-11—I believe I am the only member in the House who has done that, and also having read the record of every single debate on this bill—I am amazed at the comments I have heard in the past hour and 45 minutes from opposition members. I do not know whether I have heard more rhetoric in this two-hour debate than I heard on Bill C-11 in total.

When the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), as did some of his colleagues, indicated that there has not been enough time to debate the tax bill, let me point out that from March 31 or June 1 there were six days spent on the budget debate to start of the discussion. Then there was debate on the Speech from the Throne which lasted another eight days. A great percentage of that discussion was based on the economic situation in the country, but still they have not said anything worth while.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Lumley: In the second reading debate on Bill C-11 we have had nine days with extended hours which, as the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Cafik) has pointed out, is equivalent to 11 days. So up to now we have had 26 full days of debate.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe said that there has not been enough discussion on economic problems in this country. My minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), has been in the House 19 of the 22 days of sittings in this session and has fielded 60 questions on the economic situation in the country. If the opposition has not had enough time to date to debate the economic problems, I feel very sorry for its members.

Mr. Woolliams: What a weak argument.

Mr. Lumley: Hon. members on both sides of the House have indicated that one of our greatest problems with respect to our economic situation is lack of confidence. I believe that speeches made by the opposition members in the debate on this bill totally undermine confidence in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: A distinguished journalist from our press gallery commented after their conference in Quebec City several weeks ago—I think he called it "Canada bashing". Obviously the debate we have heard here in the past hour and a half has not contained one positive statement from the opposition.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe spoke a minute ago about time allocation. Perhaps he will recall that in the last budget the government introduced time allocation both in committee of the whole and again at third reading. The opposition House leader, for example, indicated today that that is not what he hears in his riding. What I hear in my riding is, "What are you doing up there? Who is running the government? Get on with it and cut out the rhetoric in the House".

An hon. Member: That's good coming from you.

Mr. Lumley: The rhetoric is not coming from this side, Mr. Speaker; it comes totally from the opposition benches.

In the last nine days the opposition has tried to bootleg the RCMP into the budget debate. If opposition members are so interested in discussing economic matters, why have they not stuck to commenting on the proposals in Bill C-11? Why have they diversified and talked about everything under the sun but economic matters? I can only think of one word for it, namely, rhetoric. When the opposition House leader goes to his riding, as I do, I am sure he hears just the opposite of what he said in the House today.

Let me set the record straight. For example, the NDP has indicated six or seven times that Bill C-11 allocates $1.2 billion in tax incentives to corporations as well as to the wealthy. I would like to set the NDP straight on this. First of all, approximately $500 million under Bill C-11 goes to personal tax credits in the year 1977-78, and a further $1.2 billion in 1978-79. There was an increase in the federal tax credit of $50 for dependent children under the age of 18, and a further income tax cut of $100 for middle and lower income people. I do not see how these are tax incentives to corporations or to the wealthy to which the NDP members refer.

The official opposition has expressed its philosophy with respect to the free enterprise system. The criticism we have received from the NDP for the last nine days, and I can go back to the original six days of the budget debate, is that we are giving too many tax incentives to industry. Let me illustrate some of the tax incentives on which many investment decisions are predicated, and the longer the House procrastinates in approving this bill, the more the opposition will be held responsible by the business community. What are some of the incentives that opposition members are talking about? They want more incentives for small business. They say we have to do more for small business. Obviously they have not read the bill and they do not know what the government has done for small business in the last two tax measures.

Let me list a few of the tax incentives. One is the introduction of the 3 per cent inventory allowance for cash flow. The hon. member for York-Simcoe, who is a former businessman, understands cash flow problems. Does he not want to encourage the 3 per cent inventory allowance? There is the three year extension to the investment tax credit. Hon. members opposite are always talking about tax incentives for regional development. It is this government which for the first time used fiscal measures to increase investment tax credits to 7.5 per cent and 10 per cent in designated areas of the country. Does the opposition not want to encourage regional development in this country?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Can the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley) tell the House the reason why the government wishes to borrow another $9 billion, and to what purpose it wants to apply this great amount of borrowed money?

Mr. Lumley: That was a phony question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the hon. member wishes to take a look at the national debt of this country. If he looks at the public debt as a percentage of the gross national product he will find it has not changed more than two per cent in the last ten years. If he wants to do an analysis of debt in this country, perhaps he should go back to the book, Mr. Speaker, and take a good look at it.

I believe the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) indicated today that the official opposition has had one official speech writer for 27 speeches. One of the points that is made continually throughout their speeches is that this nation is the most overtaxed nation in the world. If you look at the facts, the OECD figures show that we were not the highest, we were not the lowest, we were somewhere in between—another distortion of facts or selective statistics. One of the points that remains supreme in every one of the NDP party speeches is the argument that this budget should be a job-creating one. Everybody forgets that this government has the greatest record for job creation of all the western industrialized nations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: It is not just the best record, it is almost twice as good as the second best nation, which is the United States.

Today, in his opening statement, the honourable leader of the NDP Party said a budget is for job creation. There were 292,000 jobs created in the first ten months of this year. If that is not job-creation, I don't know what is.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Sir—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Speaking of job-creation, Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the hon. member would accept a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Chair did not hear the question. Order!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. parliamentary secretary could please tell us how have they done such a job in job-creation, as manufacturing employment has fallen 6.3 per cent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member is now seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question, and he did not ask for it for that purpose originally.

Mr. Lumley: In my short participation in this debate, I think it is obvious, based on some of the points which I have made, exactly why we want time allocations on this bill. The Canadian people want some action. This government is going to give them action. We are not going to be held up by planned rhetoric by the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Having started off this debate with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) some two weeks ago, in the interim there were included only four debating days a week, and notwithstanding what the rather ambitious parliamentary secretary has had to say—he says nine days of debate—I have just taken a look through Hansard and it has added up to a total of 28 hours. At the time this debate was initiated, on the very first day, after there had been a vote on an Air Canada bill, his own minister started at 4.30 in the afternoon, and I barely got started at 5 o'clock when private members' hour intervened. I have checked through Hansard and the following appear: 1630 hours; 1612; 1610; 1610; 1605. There is not a day with 3½ hours and the total is 28 hours.

There were ten Liberal speakers, and eight NDP speakers. The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) will be the first to acknowledge that the Minister of Finance himself stated that he would be making a budgetary statement, that he was introducing a budgetary measure in the midst of the throne speech debate. The March budgetary proposals of the former minister of finance are totally irrelevant in the picture—do not talk to us about that—and there was debate on those. They came to absolutely nothing.

I find it rather amazing, for instance, on the subject of social security members, that we do not get an intelligent participation from a caucus which let this provision slip through due to the July closure on that bill. Even a parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance I believe did not even know that new section 65 in Bill C-22, extended the use of the social security numbers. He did not know it, but he voted yea. They are just a bunch of blessed sheep; that is all. They know the volume of correspondence they receive, each and everyone of them. In Ontario and western Canada they were deluged with correspondence. It was a false principle, going back on the solemn undertaking of the former Prime Minister, Mr. Lester Pearson, on the use of the social security numbers. That is the problem.

In the steering committee of the standing committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) asked the Minister of Finance to appear on a certain number of dates to debate the supplementary estimates. With respect to the most important ones in the supplementary estimates—yes, the minister would appear. Then the answer came down the line—no, he would not appear until Bill C-11 passed. What kind of blackmail is that to exercise on a committee? The minister, who has an obligation to appear, has absolutely no right to tell any committee of this House that he refuses to appear before it. It is his duty to appear to have his estimates passed and not to have them fall into line under a guillotine. As a matter of fact the rules are so stacked that if every minister of the House could refuse or could find some excuse not to appear before the appropriate standing committee before December 5 or 6, the guillotine would fall, and the rule says that unless the estimates have been reported back, they will have been deemed to have been reported back.

In theory and in practice for a lot of ministers, particularly in this administration, there is often a refusal, couched in nice terms, I will admit. We can never get ministers on Thursdays, which are one of the best days for committee hearings. Why? They are in cabinet. On two of the four best days available ministers will not appear and the committees are denied.

We have these hundreds of millions of dollars in supplementary estimates and the House is supposed to pass them like this. The hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley), parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, says that these are government proposals and their passage ipso facto will be good for the country. That is the biggest act of total misrepresentation to the public of Canada in all the years of performance by this government.

Then we heard somebody say that there is some consumer protection legislation to come, that there is now Bill C-13.

We know that Bill C-13 is the misbegotten grandson or great-grandson of other pieces of legislation. Some bastardry has been perpetrated in its presentation. The minister has inherited it from the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott), and I wish he would say publicly what he thinks of Bill C-16 and Bill C-42. The government was glad to see the end of the last session because of those two pieces of legislation which have now reappeared as Bill C-13. Even backbenchers were apologetic about the legislation, but the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) extolled the virtues of it and said the House should pass it for the benefit of the Canadian public. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) and others who interject now had participated in the debate on this bill they would have said that strangely enough the government dared present such legislation. We on this side of course are used to this sort of tripe.

The opposition saved the Canadian public from a fate worse than death in the last session so far as Bill C-16 and Bill C-42 were concerned. The government is wrong when it says there is good legislation waiting to be passed. If its record is any indication we must look at all legislation more closely. I find it strange that the Minister of Finance, having presented a bill of some 216 pages which, I am sure, for the vast majority of government backbenchers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member who has just taken his seat I noted the extravagant remarks made by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). To hear him and some other Liberals speak about Bill C-11 you would think it was a ticket to the millennium and that all we need to do is pass the bill and we will have justice and peace for a thousand years.

Mr. Stanfield: We would still have the same old Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The purpose of a tax bill is supposed to be at least three-fold. First, it is naturally a means of raising money. Second, it should be a means of providing jobs. Perhaps even more important is the fact that a tax bill ought to straighten out the unfairnesses, the inequities, and injustices that exist in our society.

I suggest that the only one of these conditions that Bill C-11 meets is that it will raise money. As for providing jobs, it does not do that at all. As for straightening out unfairnesses, as we have pointed out many times this bill makes things worse because it provides handouts to the wealthy and to large corporations of $1.2 billion per year.

When we ask for improvements in pensions for senior citizens or veterans, or for legislation to take care of the handicapped, the blind and others, we are asked where the money is to come from. Yet when the government wants to give handouts to corporations it brings in a bill and asks us to pass it under closure. Nothing in this bill will solve any of the unfairnesses in our society.

We have a system at the present time under which certain persons, between the ages of 60 and 65 receive a spouse's allowance, but for spinsters, widows, bachelors and widowers there is no such allowance, and there is nothing for them in the bill. There is nothing in it to straighten out the government's finances so that the promise to increase the basic pension for veterans may be met. There is nothing in the bill to improve the position of the working poor, those for whom a guaranteed annual income is supposed to be on the drawing board.

What is the hurry to pass this bill, Mr. Speaker? It is not a ticket to the millennium. It is a bill that will take us in reverse. That is why I join with others in saying this closure motion should not be supported by this House of Commons which is supposed to be part of a democratic parliament.

There is one other reason why I am opposed to this closure motion and to all closure motions. They never go to the heart of the problem. The only way the government knows to deal with extended debate in the House of Commons is to cut it off—to deny it. Surely the time has come to find a better way of arranging the debates in this House so that we can deal with things on a proper basis. All the government does is close off debate. That means it is not even prepared to look at the proper ways of improving the procedures of this House.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 8.49 p.m., the two hours allotted for the consideration of the motion now before the House pursuant to Standing Order 75C have expired.

[English]

The question is on the motion of the hon. Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Cafik).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cafik) which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, November 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I notice that all the right people are leaving. Usually they come the other way when I get up to speak.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if those hon. members who are rushing out to see the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) on television might spare a couple of minutes.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I will make it a point to show only my good profile to the camera. Yesterday when I was addressing myself to this bill I said that I think we have a Minister of Finance who, at least at the outset, wants to listen to what members of this House have to suggest in the way of improving the tax laws for the benefit of Canadians. I was nearing the end of my remarks when I called it 10.30.

I will close my remarks with one final point. I believe there is need for a major revision of our approach to the whole taxation policy regarding personal incomes. The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) made a very important point yesterday. He said that, under our present system of tax deductions, nearly everyone who files his income tax return is concerned that maybe there is some point that he missed. He may be entitled to a deduction, but because of the complicated system of taxation, he misses that. Therefore he loses some of his spending or saving power. I agree with the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand on that point.

The other side of the coin is that there are a lot of people who get tax deductions which are not due to them. It is easy for people who are determined to involve themselves with tax evasion to find tax deductions that would not be considered legitimate, or at least would be considered spurious or marginal in their validity.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier).]

A number of my constituents have come to my office asking me to intercede on their behalf with income tax officials because they have appealed tax decisions. They felt the tax officials were giving them really short shrift. They had legitimate deductions which they included in their tax assessment, but the tax officials refused to accept those legitimate expenses and deductions.

A whole array of grievances are piling up because of our very complicated system of deductions under the personal income tax system. It is time for the members of this House, and certainly for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and those in his department, to take a fresh look at the system of personal income tax deductions.

I have a suggestion to make. I must confess it has not been thoroughly researched. I have not had the time to look at it as thoroughly as I would like. Rather than continue the complicated method of personal exemptions in income tax, I suggest we do away with this kind of system and completely eliminate the whole array of personal tax deductions. I suggest we have a straight percentage tax on personal incomes. There may be one exemption for health or medical reasons. Only that one deduction would be a legitimate deduction for personal income tax.

There is one large body of citizens who would object to this method, the accountants. A large part of their income is derived from us poor souls who cannot figure out the complicated income tax system. We are dependent upon them to figure out our income tax for us, and they derive their living from that. That is fine under the present system. I do not blame them for making their living that way. But this is one body which would probably object to the simplification of the income tax system.

Another group which might object consists of civil servants who work in the department and whose jobs depend on the complexity of the system we have today. In my riding the department is building a brand new office. I am proud of the building they are putting up; it will be a fine addition to my constituency, and the department will employ there about 400 people on a regular basis, and possibly another 800 on a seasonal basis. I am glad that these additional job opportunities will be available to my constituents. Nevertheless, I believe those employees would prefer to be working at a job which would be considered creative, and I cannot see that there is much satisfaction to be gained by sitting in an income tax office and looking over a mountain of receipts. Even people who are good at that kind of thing must find it a little boring, and sooner or later ennui must set in. Then again, they must constantly listen to the grievances of people who file their returns and who feel the government has bilked them out of a few dollars.

Why not simplify the operations and eliminate the frustration of April 30? The result would be a whole new approach, a whole new attitude to taxation on the part of the Canadian public. A large portion of the bureaucracy in the taxation department could be eliminated, the public would benefit, and the revenue flowing to the treasury would not be affected.

I know this proposition has been examined in years gone by, and studies show that the government would get just as much money from the taxpayer. At the same time millions of dollars would be saved. Much of the present operation is sterile—thousands of persons are employed in the civil service doing something which does not need to be done. That is the kind of make-work program we do not need. My suggestion to the Minister of Finance is that we take a fresh approach to taxation policy within the Department of National Revenue and eliminate, by and large, personal deductions, and simply adjust the percentage of the tax rate on personal income in such a way that the income of the federal government would remain approximately the same. Expenses would be reduced by hundreds of millions of dollars and I believe all the taxpayers in the country would thank the hon. gentleman for it.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Even at this late hour it is pleasure to speak on the bill before us. We have a very unusual situation in Canada, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as many hon. members, particularly those in my own party, believe that one of the ways of ending the major problem facing us, the problem of unemployment, is by providing the workers with more money with which to buy goods and services. It is the belief of many that there should be tax deductions in favour of individuals to make this possible, and, in addition, transfer payments to persons in poor circumstances so that consumer goods can be purchased by them more regularly.

The other side of the question is the legislation before us which provides $200 million in favour of corporations with the object of enabling them to create more jobs. Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), the former minister of finance, along with most of the institutions, are well aware of one simple fact, that is to say, when you give corporations a tax concession which will allow them to increase production, it is only of assistance to them if they are able to increase their production. Obviously that is going to be very difficult. There are very few companies in this country which can increase their production to 100 per cent of capacity, yet we are allowing them tax concessions to increase capacity at a time when they are not using more than 80 per cent capacity.

One of the ways we can put people back to work is to start projects which will provide the maximum number of jobs at the least capital cost. In many cases these are the kinds of jobs which are closely related to the resource industries. In my part of the country during the last two or three years there have been many closures of plants and mines, and reductions in the number of jobs in the resource sector. This has been highlighted particularly by recent developments in the Sudbury basin. Three thousand employees laid off in Sudbury will mean that those left in employment in the area will have to carry the tax burden of the community. There will be a great deal less money in the community to provide the necessary goods and services. This is not unusual in the resource areas of our country. Most of these areas have a one industry community which depends on lumbering, mining or some other resource. And when something happens which adversely affects that community, the community is in exceedingly difficult circumstances.

I received a letter the other day from a lady who told me that her father had been laid off one year ago in the town of Kirkland Lake. During the intervening period he had searched for other kinds of jobs because he did not want to go on welfare. He owned his own house in the community. He had been there a number of years, had raised his family, and his roots were in that community. Although he did all of the menial jobs he could in the town, such as cutting grass, painting fences and doing rough carpentry work, his skills did not provide him with a sufficiently paid job to keep his family. His wife went out to work as well, but she certainly was not young and was not very well. Between the two of them they were unable to provide enough income to keep the family in the community, and so they had to leave.

Quite legitimately, Mr. Speaker, this family blamed not only the federal government for the lack of employment in the are but also the provincial government, since neither the federal government nor the provincial government pay much attention to the resource areas of our country. This is also true in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and the northern parts of our country which depend mainly on resource based industries which are subject to ups and downs.

The people in Timmins are still quite happy. Over the last three or four years they have benefited from a very fortunate incident. In the main, the gold mines of this country have ceased operation all across the country. There are two gold mines which operated in my area, and occasionally a new one is contemplated. Raising capital for gold mining is very difficult, and communities dependent upon gold mines have been in a very serious situation. Timmins was more fortunate than Kirkland Lake and some of the other mining communities, because Texas Gulf found zinc and copper in its very large development at Porcupine.

It is interesting to hear that Inco is laying off people in the copper and nickel industries at Noranda and Falconbridge. Also it is interesting to note that several months ago Texas Gulf was informing the people of Timmins that there would be no lay-offs. In fact that is the only town which is in a resource boom era and condition at the present time. But there was a very large construction project going on there, and Texas Gulf made an announcement that it would cut back the construction crews working on the development of a smelter. As I have indicated, this is the only boom area in the resource field in Ontario. However, employees are now receiving those nice little pink slips indicating that their jobs are terminated and their services will not be required in the future.

Often we forget about the problems of unemployment. It is all well and good to say that there are a million unemployed in Canada. If you are not unemployed, it does not mean very much to you. What happens to a person when he is laid off today? It is not like the old days during the depression when people could return to the farms. Another cup of water could always be put into the soup. Today that is not the case. People live in the cities and they have payments to make on their houses, cars, boats and television sets. The government had led them to believe that everyone is entitled to a fair share in society.

When people are laid off today their standards of living must change. The days go by very quickly, and the time arrives when there is no more unemployment insurance benefits for them. Although these people walk the streets of the resource communities, there are no jobs. Even the most menial jobs are not available. People have to decide to pull up their socks and leave their communities in an attempt to seek employment elsewhere.

Where can Canadians find employment which they are qualified for when their experience has been in mining, bush work, sheet metal work, veneer factories, smelters or foundries? When people were receiving a fair wage at their jobs and suddenly they have to leave their community and go elsewhere, without any qualifications, they are faced with thousands and thousands of other people looking for work. It must be the most demoralizing thing which can happen to people and their families.

What happens to young people when they are unemployed today? The Liberal government has told people that Canada is a very rich land and is strong. They have used other expressions and have "b-ss'd" people for many years.

An hon. Member: Explain!

Mr. Peters: I do not have to explain that to the million people in this country who are unemployed, or to their dependants. They know exactly what I mean.

● (2222)

Surely there is a solution to the problem, and it is not to do the same thing over and over again. The official opposition is saying it will support the $1.2 billion in tax concessions being made to business. There are many businessmen in the Conservative party and I would like them to explain how those concessions will change the situation. Most of the companies have more capital now than they need. They have no markets, they are limited in their export abilities, and I do not think they need more capital.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: I see one businessman who disagrees with me. Maybe he has applied for his share of tax concessions. Maybe they will do something for him, but I suggest they will do very little for the unemployed people in this country. Consider Sudbury, for instance. We cannot say that Sudbury is not very well off. That company in that city has received millions and millions of dollars in tax concessions over the years. It is not long ago that members of parliament, even if they had no other income, were paying more in income tax to the government than was Inco.

Inco had a bad year last year, but even after taxes it made $70 million. They have had no difficulty in getting capital when they saw they did not have enough. They were given it by the Export Credit Corporation. They went into other countries, and we allowed them to do so. Surely it is time we took a look at our industry, particularly our natural resource industry, and decided to do something to husband that industry.

It is true that if Inco continues to mine the way it does today, there will be employment in Sudbury and Sudbury will continue to be a progressive little town for another 30 years, but then the mineral will be gone. We should provide for the people of Sudbury out of the gain that was made from that God-given resource. We should provide for a future for that community. The cost to the people in that community has been very great. It may be the normal course of events, but when you hear Inco saying that they wish to go to Indo-China, Guatemala or somewhere else where they will make more profit for their shareholders, and they do not care what happens to the mineral that is left in the ground in the Sudbury area, and we agree to that, then we deserve what we get. There has always been a way for the government of the day in this free enterprise system to end depressions—by means of war. But surely most members of parliament would agree that is not the way to end the current problems.

The reason I am sure that the way to deal with present economic problems is not by giving corporations another $1.2 billion is that we have tried this for a number of years, and it is not working. Mr. Speaker, if industries in general did not have the capital to develop to a level where they would meet their full capacity, then it is quite possible it would be necessary to give them capital or allow them to get the capital whereby they could reach the maximum of their producing ability.

Several years ago we agreed that the pensioners of this country—the war pensioners—if they were receiving 100 per cent pension, should receive the average of five of the positions in the civil service, the lowest positions in the civil service. Right now, they need $30 million to bring them up to where they will get a fair and decent pension. But we do not have $30 million, says the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). And the Minister of Health (Miss Bégin) says we will have to curtail family allowances because we do not have the money to provide for the escalation in our social services.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: I am glad to hear the backbenchers, who always vote with the government, say this is wrong, that they have the money, they are going to pay the indexing, they are going to provide that, they are going to continue the family allowance benefits. I suppose the government has enough money to pay the veterans. I am glad to hear the backbenchers who know less about what the government is going to do than I do. They can make lots of noise, but they do not make that kind of noise in caucus.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: I am very happy to hear many of them feel very incensed about this subject and they will make some noise in caucus tomorrow. If they do, we will see this bill withdrawn and the direction changed.

Income Tax

There are ways of helping industry. One of the ways is to provide consumers with the amount of money—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. Peters: May I call it 10:30 p.m.?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being 10:30 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10:30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION FROM FEDERAL ENCROACHMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. My motion pertains to today's Supreme Court decision in the GIGOL case which has serious constitutional implications for the jurisdiction of provincial governments over mineral rights within their boundaries. I therefore seek leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the government introduce emergency legislation to protect the people of Saskatchewan from an estimated tax liability of half a billion dollars and to check the federal government's encroachment into the jurisdiction of provincial governments over natural resources.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON LEGALITY OF KEABLE COMMISSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):

That the Prime Minister make at the earliest possible moment a statement to explain why his government is now defending a position contrary to the one the Prime Minister expressed himself in this House on June 20 last, when he indicated that the Keable Commission was perfectly legal, because under our constitution and under our Criminal Code, the administration of justice comes under the attorneys general of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF APPLICATION TO STOP KEABLE INQUIRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of the standing order.

The federal government has applied to the Quebec Superior Court to halt the Keable inquiry into illegal police activities in Quebec and seeks to have the entire inquiry declared to be unconstitutional. In view of the fact that the administration of justice is clearly a matter within the jurisdiction of the provinces and that the granting of any relief sought by the Solicitor General is an infringement of provincial rights, and in view of the fact that the apparent reason for making the motion is to stifle the Keable inquiry, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

That the Solicitor General be instructed by this House to withdraw the application to halt the Quebec inquiry and permit it to proceed without interference even if there is some good reason why certain documents sought by the inquiry cannot be produced.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion to be put?

Some hon. Members: No!

SUGGESTION RESEARCH BE CONDUCTED ON SOVIET VACCINE FOR MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of extremely urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the number of people suffering from a dreadful condition known as multiple sclerosis is increasing in Canada, that a vaccine known as the Margoulis Choubladze and used to fight this condition has been developed by Russian scientists, and that this vaccine has been used to treat successfully people suffering from this condition and even cure them, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That the House urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to carry out an investigation, in co-operation with the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada, into the usefulness of this vaccine and, should the findings prove positive, to recommend its import into Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REASON FOR INTERROGATING LESLIE J. BENNETT ON LEAVING FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43 I rise to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pertaining to statements made to news media today by Leslie James Bennett, formerly with RCMP intelligence and now living in Australia under the name of John B. Ennett to the effect that he was interrogated by the RCMP at the time of his leaving the force. I therefore ask leave to move:

That the Solicitor General advise the House whether it is the policy of the government to interrogate high ranking RCMP officers when they leave the force and if so, why, and specifically why Mr. Bennett was heavily interrogated? Was it or was it not on the subject of infiltration of security services by a foreign power and, finally, to the knowledge of the government were members of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency permitted to interrogate Mr. Bennett as well and, if so, why such foreign interference was permitted by the government in the handling of Canadian internal security.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion presented. Is there unanimous consent as required under the provisions of Standing Order 43?

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED FORMULA FOR SHARING COST OF IMPROVING TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Atlantic provinces have requested the government to share the cost of a 10-year program for reconstruction and upgrading of the Trans-Canada Highway in their provinces on the basis of a 90-10 cost-sharing split but the Minister of Transport refuses to accept anything other than a 50-50 cost-sharing scheme, and in view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated in Newfoundland that Ottawa's position would be reviewed and reconsidered while the Minister of Transport was stating that this 50-50 offer was the final decision, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House direct the government of Canada to enter into an agreement with the Atlantic provinces so that the costs of reconstructing, resurfacing and upgrading the Trans-Canada Highway in those provinces will be met 75 per cent by the government of Canada and 25 per cent by the provinces thus reconciling the differing views of these ministers.

SOCIAL SERVICES

REJECTION BY PROVINCE OF BLOCK FINANCING FORMULA—POSSIBILITY OF OTHER METHOD OF FINANCING

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and it is related to the block financing formula suggested by the minister as regards social services. Considering the decision of the government to drop Bill C-57 during the second session, and given the unanimous rejection by the provinces of this block financing formula in a joint release issued less than a week after the announcement of this formula, did the minister consider other methods for financing or developing social services and, if so, what are these methods?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had already informed the House on the details of this file, but I shall be pleased to repeat them for the hon. member. When I became minister, I immediately took back the file when the provinces had just been offered a lump sum payment for social services, very much like the one which has already been in existence for one year and which applies to health services. The provinces said in a release that they did not appreciate the way the counter-proposal had been made. They did not reject the proposal itself but the way the offer had been made. This is a matter for discussion and it does not affect the substance of the problem. On this, I am only waiting for two formal answers from the provinces. One province refused officially the proposal for lump sum payment while most of the other provinces expressed a preference for this financing pattern. Only one asked to discuss it as quickly as possible; it is precisely what I intend to do.

REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON METHOD OF FINANCING

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

It is obvious that there is a lack of consultation between the provinces and the organizations involved. My supplementary question is as follows:

Two months ago during a meeting in Edmonton the provincial welfare ministers called for a federal-provincial conference to discuss the block financing program. This request was repeated by at least eight provinces during the past two months. Considering the importance of the matter for the provinces, could the minister call a meeting of the provincial welfare ministers to together reach an acceptable financing formula for social services?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the hon. member which shows that it is urgent to find a solution and this is also the objective of the federal government.

To the provinces which asked for an immediate federal-provincial meeting, I pointed out two things: First that it was useless to hold a meeting immediately if we did not reach a sufficient number of basic agreements to discuss the principle, and I am obtaining those agreements. Second, I was compelled to say . . .

[English]

Perhaps I should say in English, to make sure I am understood properly, that most of the provinces are communicating to me agreements in principle which will permit me to meet with them. Second, I should like to say with respect to the second sort of reservation I had vis-à-vis an immediate meeting, back in September, that there was no more money I could put into the pot for distribution to the provinces, and that message unfortunately had to reach home. I think it is beginning to be understood.

Mr. Grafftey: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It is also about the consultations.

The minister is no doubt aware of the fact that several social services organizations, like the Canadian Association for the Mentally Retarded, have objected to the block financing formula, warning against the danger of a lack of federal leadership and the very real danger that the moneys appropriated for social services would be used for other purposes. Has the minister contacted those organizations to discuss their objections? If so, with what results? If no, why not?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I was just talking a few minutes ago with a member of the National Welfare Council who advised me of the same concerns. I have met, not all of course, but several of the national or local organizations, and they expressed concern about cuts in funds and this, for several reasons.

As for the federal funds directly appropriated to certain projects, I have assured those organizations that there was no question of cutting those funds. The lump sum proposal does not affect them, and they were reassured about that.

As for the general program of provincial accountability, there is, even under the present system, the cost-sharing formula which provides for paying 50-50 the costs of social services. I am looking more fully into that to try and provide groups, mostly local ones, with instruments which would enable them to apply themselves for repayment to their respective provinces. I am thinking in particular of organizations for the handicapped or the mentally retarded.

ALLEGED LACK OF CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON ADOPTION OF BLOCK FUNDING FOR SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare regarding the very heavy-handed and unilateral change of rules in the middle of the game of block funding for the social services act which met with the significant approval of not only the provinces but the various national and provincial agencies involved with social services, a change which led to nothing but anger, frustration and disappointment at the way this government performs. Why did the minister, through her predecessor, change the rules in the middle of the game without giving an opportunity to the provinces and the various national and provincial social service agencies to discuss this matter before bringing in block funding? That is the way federal-provincial relations are supposed to work. Why this heavy-handed approach?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it looks as though during a meeting of their members this morning, on November 23, the Conservative party has finally discovered that there was a new proposal being discussed, and consultations have been taking place for two months and ten days. This has been discussed openly. The counter-proposal for block funding was made by my predecessor, on September 15, because at their June 1977 meeting the provinces had made it very clear that they wanted more money under the social services proposal, but they also wanted flexibility and autonomy. We, therefore, listened to what they asked us and gave them the proposal covering a regime of block funding similar or parallel to the one they already have in place and which they like very much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I have noticed about the type of consultation this government carries out. The minister is wrong in terms of stating that this matter was introduced with consultation when it was not. She introduced it without prior consultation and co-operation. I will ask the minister this: why all the footdragging with respect to a meeting of the federal and provincial ministers of health in order to determine the proper approach to bring about proper funding with respect to social services? Why cannot the minister pick up the phone and organize a meeting in the very near future so that this matter can be determined, in order that what the social services people are looking for will be implemented? Why cannot that be done without the footdragging?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the foot problem of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Yours is in your mouth.

Miss Bégin: As far as I am concerned, two months and one week of consultation is not enough for a new minister. Second, one province amongst others, Manitoba, had a new government. I respect that democratic process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I wanted the Conservative minister of that province to have a chance to learn his dossier and be a full participant. I can go on by giving several other answers, but I have indicated the practical problems which made it impossible to have an earlier meeting than now. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Clark: Back to Carleton!

Miss Bégin: I do not recall the opposition party giving permission to this side of the House to increase any amount in the negotiations. I have said very clearly that I have to bring that message home to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, now that everything is in place—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Miss Bégin: I cannot hear the hon. member.

REASON FOR ATTEMPTING TO STOP KEABLE INQUIRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In announcing his support of the then announced Quebec inquiry, the Solicitor General said in the House on June 21 that Quebec, like Manitoba, New Brunswick and any other province, has a right to inquire into the administration of justice. Considering the extension of the terms of reference for the Quebec inquiry was made three weeks ago, why is he now proposing a complete withdrawal of that right from the province of Quebec, instead of restricting the federal government's refusal to participate in certain matters only?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. member that he read the request that I filed before the Superior Court in Montreal. He will find that it contains several conclusions and that some of them do not, of course, request a complete suspension of the Keable inquiry.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister has been considerably more forthcoming in his answers in the past by at least providing more information than he is at this time. With specific reference to the two matters that the Solicitor General has objection to—the request for the lines of authority in the RCMP and the operational procedural manual of the RCMP—does he not think an inquiry established under the terms of reference, which the minister agreed to, has to pursue to its end the matters that would be provided only by obtaining the operational manual and learning the lines of authority in the RCMP?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I think my course of action on this issue was always quite clear all along these debates, both in June and now. Our position has always been that the provincial attorneys general have jurisdiction over the administration of justice and that in the course of inquiries on alleged illegal acts committed within a province, it belongs to the attorney general of the said province to investigate the matter as he sees fit.

With regard to the request submitted to the Keable inquiry, a whole page of allegations show that the Keable inquiry seems to be going beyond the mandate given to it and to be doing much more than investigating criminal acts. It is actually investigating the internal operations and the day-to-day activities of the RCMP. The questions and arguments submitted cover a period going back to 1970 until now. We are actually being asked to produce complete files on all RCMP operations in some fields. As for me, this clearly exceeds an inquiry into specific illegal acts which were brought to the attention of the Keable Commission by the Quebec attorney general.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in the House on June 17 last when the minister was giving his wholehearted endorsement to the establishment of the commission he listed four matters into which there would be an inquiry and among them is included item C, disposal of documents that were seized at the time. I want to repeat part of the question and hope to get a more specific answer from the minister. If he agreed in principle that the government of Quebec has jurisdictional authority to make such an inquiry into criminal acts, and even the extended terms of reference refer to allegations of four specific criminal acts, and if it is to achieve its stated goal to which he agreed on June 17 in the House, surely it has to obtain such information as the operational procedures of the RCMP. If the minister agrees to that and objects only to certain details, I repeat, why does he not cancel co-operation on the details but at least leave with the province the right to have that inquiry?

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the attorney general of Quebec inquiring into specific criminal acts committed within the limits of his province. That has always been our position on this side of the House. But I suggest that when one wants to have a series of documents such as the organization chart of the security service, when one wants to know how the RCMP goes about getting information on such things as technical or electronic devices, on human sources, and when one is interested in recruiting, relationships, payments and all searches that might have been done by the security service, in interviews on subjects of interest, in infiltration, surveillance and shadowing, in the classification system of the RCMP, in the operations of internal communications between various police forces, in internal disciplinary investigations, in the inquiry led within the RCMP, in relationships between the RCMP commissioner, the director general of security and high officials within the offices of the Solicitor General, the Prime Minister of Canada, the cabinet, the Privy Council, in kidnapping, Mr. Speaker, int—

ROLE OF ASSISTANT SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Last Friday the Prime Minister told us that Mr. Pierre André Bissonnette, who is now First Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, will become Assistant Solicitor General on November 29, 1977. Would the Prime Minister tell the House what will be the role of the Assistant Solicitor General in view of the revelations made everywhere, especially in the newspapers in the last few weeks, about the operations of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I expect the new Assistant Solicitor General to play the role assigned to him by the legislation, that is administering the department, and I am convinced that he will do so competently and with great success.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Could the Prime Minister inform the House how he intends to use this appointment to give more control and more information to the House about the operations of the RCMP in accordance with its true mandate, which is to protect honest citizens?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when we consider the budgetary estimates, the House will have the opportunity to call on the new deputy minister and ask him questions about the administration of his department. Of course, general policy matters will continue to be the responsibility of the minister and he will be the one to account for the general policy of his department before the estimates committee.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—SOURCE OF FUNDS FOR PROGRAM

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Given that the minister has in the past refused to tell the House what her estimates are for the annual cost of a guaranteed annual income program and refused to say specifically from where the money to pay for it would come and given that I have been told by experts that at least $350 million will be required to get this program off the ground, is the minister still sticking to the story that no new budget funds will be required by her department to implement this program?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question about two weeks ago, and perhaps I can repeat the explanation I gave. Perhaps the misunderstanding arises from the hon. member's view of a universal guaranteed annual income scheme. I was talking about people in three particular target groups who could be and should be the first Canadians to be protected because of their vulnerability. I recall speaking about workers who are under the minimum wage rule. The proposal for these three groups is under study in my department, and we are reviewing possibilities of rearranging the existing budget approved for my department.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—PROGRAMS TO BE CANCELLED TO FUND SCHEME

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): The minister has stated that she plans to finance this program by rearranging existing programs. Can she tell the House specifically which program she plans to cancel? Does she plan to cancel the income support part of the Canada Assistance Plan, the family allowance or the old age pension? What specific program will the minister cancel in order to get funding for a guaranteed annual income program?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to cancel programs for those in need. I would like to reaffirm very strongly that we are studying rearrangements which would take away—if I can put it that way—from those who do not need universal programs and would eventually increase the allowances which should be received by families in need.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—ALLEGED LACK OF CONSULTATION WITH FOUR PROVINCES

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. In view of the fact that there are at least four provinces—British Columbia, Alberta, New Brunswick and Ontario—whose ministers were not consulted regarding a guaranteed annual income program, is it the intention of the minister to run this program unilaterally?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand whether the hon. member is speaking of a guaranteed annual income program, which does not exist and the studies to which I just referred, or if he is talking about the block funding proposal under social services legislation.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking of the announcement of the guaranteed annual income program which was made prior to any consultation with provincial premiers. In view of the fact that the provinces will be the ones to implement the program, is it the intention of the minister to run the program unilaterally without the consent of the provinces?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, there has never been such an announcement.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—EFFECT ON MOTIVATION TO WORK

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On a previous occasion the minister refused to tell the House what effect a guaranteed annual income program might have on the motivation to work. Can the minister tell the House whether the motivation to work would be affected one way or another if a guaranteed annual income program were implemented?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as concerns the first studies that we have already published, a copy of which I have sent to the official critic of the opposition, two of them concern this problem of the work motivation for low income earners and I shall be pleased to send a copy of it to the hon. member who has just raised the question.

[English]

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. In the documents to which she refers that question was not answered in any detail at all. In view of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has some responsibility for productivity with regard to Canadian manufacturing and workers would the minister tell the House whether there is some agreement on the part of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that a guaranteed annual income would have no effect on productivity in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that question scarcely seeks information; it seeks an opinion.

POST OFFICE

REASON FOR DELAY IN DELIVERY OF INVITATIONS SENT BY MEMBER

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that my constituency office in Scarborough East has received 121 telephone calls in the last three days with respect to the slow delivery of a specific item of mail between Ottawa and Scarborough, will the minister investigate the reasons for the slow delivery of over 2,000 letters of invitation which I, as member of parliament, addressed to constituents inviting them to a conference on Tomorrow's Canada on November 19? Such letters were postmarked in Ottawa on November 9, and took 12 to 13 days to reach my constituents.

Mr. Paproski: You're lucky.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice which permitted me to conduct a preliminary investigation of this matter. I have ascertained that 2,001 pieces were posted on November 9 in the Parliament Buildings and were dealt with at the Ottawa Post Office. Unfortunately, there was a delay in the transportation of the mail from Ottawa to Toronto. The mail had been bagged. The Toronto processing plant cleared the mail within the specified time, in less than two days. Unfortunately, there was more than a nine-day delay between Ottawa and Toronto. In conducting this investigation we also found that other bags of stale mail were found in the Ottawa station.

In conclusion, I want to indicate that this is the kind of co-operation we require of all hon. members in instances of this kind where individual bags have been mislaid and have not been located in the normal course of operation.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER OF HEALTH MADE A STATEMENT AT CARLETON UNIVERSITY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare as I have the clear impression that she has recovered her memory. I wish to come back to a question put last week: in view of the statements made by the minister at Carleton University last week could she tell the House if she said that the political climate of that time—concerning the illegal acts of the security branch—did not justify such an action by the RCMP?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to check the date of the two Hansards where I rose on a question of privilege about that issue. Obviously the office of the hon. member did not have time to provide him with that information.

[English]

REASON FOR FAILURE TO SUPPLY KEABLE INQUIRY WITH ORGANIZATION CHART

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General, and it follows an answer he gave earlier in this House in which he listed a number of documents his department found great objection to producing before the Keable inquiry. Among those documents—and the one which seemed to bother him the most—he mentioned the organizational chart of the security branch as one he could not possibly turn over to the inquiry. Given that under the constitution of this country provincial attorneys general are given a clear mandate to investigate criminal activity, whether that activity is by the police or by anyone else, and to determine who gives orders for criminal activity, can the Solicitor General advise the House how the Keable inquiry can possibly come to a determination as to who gave the orders for the illegal acts in Quebec unless it receives the co-operation of the Solicitor General with regard to the organization chart, or at least the chain of command within the force?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's question is quite simple. Ever since March, 1976 there has been very close co-operation between the federal government and my predecessor and the department of the solicitor general of the province of Quebec. All the information the provincial department wanted concerning the APLQ matter was brought to its attention. It is also a fact that the province of Quebec can get all the evidence it wishes because we filed with the Keable commission all material relating to the entry of the APLQ headquarters in 1972.

We have also indicated that all persons in the chain of command, and they have all been identified in those documents or through my counsel for the inquiry, are willing to testify in front of that commission. If people are really interested in finding out who did what in connection with a possible illegal entry, the solution is not in obtaining information on the day-to-day operations of the RCMP or requesting the files on RCMP matters that are not related to the entry. The solution is in examining under oath the people who were involved in a position of command at that time. All those people have indicated their willingness to appear before the commission, but not all have even yet been invited to attend.

SUGGESTION INFORMATION BE GIVEN KEABLE INQUIRY AT IN CAMERA SESSION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, it seems perfectly clear that the Keable inquiry itself is not satisfied with the cooperation that the Solicitor General has provided. In view of the fact there is an in camera provision under the Keable inquiry, why does the Solicitor General not take that commission into his confidence? If there are security matters, why does the Solicitor General not deal with those matters in camera with no public exposure whatsoever in those sensitive areas? At least the Keable inquiry could find out who gave the order for the illegal entry.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is no problem whatsoever in the Keable commission finding out who gave the order for the entry into the APLQ premises. I gave that in my previous response. As to the hon. member's suggestion that we turn over all federal agencies to any provincial commission that is set up, that is not the position of this government.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON FUNDING—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is related to the question asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. In asking it I would assure the hon. lady that the new government in Manitoba is most anxious to proceed with this legislation because we are hosting the Rehabilitation International Congress and this legislation will have to be in place. In view of the fact the former Minister of National Health and Welfare in effect scuttled this legislation when he changed the financial arrangements with the provinces unilaterally in an abrupt press release of September 16, and the high priority that hon. gentleman, who now has responsibility for federal-provincial relations, gave to this legislation, will the hon. lady call the provincial ministers together at the earliest possible moment to restore the concensus that has been shattered by the arbitrary action of the former minister?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise put forward in the last part of the hon. member's question. All this work is continuing in an effort to find a solution for the betterment of the lives of all Canadians. I know of the hon. member's personal interest in the field of help to the handicapped and the disabled. He can be assured that this block funding still completely covers them. That was made very clear to the provinces. As to the meeting that will I hope take place in the near future, he could help me by asking the new minister in Manitoba to send me a reply.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, this legislation has disappeared from the order paper. It was on the order paper. Can the hon. lady assure the House it will be back on the order paper during the present session as was promised in the Speech from the Throne.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, if there is an agreement on a new proposal, as for instance a lump payment, the proposition was to be implemented on April 1, 1978. So I hope that a new bill will be tabled in time for implementation.

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY NEW BLOOD FRACTIONATION PLANT BUILT IN QUEBEC AND WORK DISCONTINUED AT CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare relating to the fractionation of blood. Is it the policy of the government that a new blood fractionation plant will be built in Quebec either by the Armand Frappier Institute or the Red Cross and if so, in view of the fact that the government is allowing fresh frozen plasma to be exported to the United States for fractionation when it can be done in Canada by Connaught Laboratory, is it the intention of the government to discontinue the work being done by Connaught Laboratory in Toronto?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As to the last part of the question, Mr. Speaker, it is not the policy of the government to interrupt the work of any group, either in private enterprise such as the Connaught Laboratory or of any private donor organization such as the Red Cross Society. As to the role of the Armand Frappier Institute, I will have to send the gentleman a detailed answer at a later time.

With regard to the general problem he has raised, the fractionation of blood is of great importance. I wish to clarify one thing, and I will reply in detail on this to my colleague. One blood element, called Factor VIII, which is of great importance in the treatment of haemophiliacs cannot be produced by the Connaught Lab. The Red Cross Society did give a contract to an American laboratory, Highland Laboratories. The Red Cross still provides the Connaught Laboratory in Canada with a lot of elements relating to the production of plasma and other elements needed in the treatment. I am sorry I do not know the technical words.

REASON FOR DELAY IN COMMENCING ACTION TO FORCE INDIVERS TO DIVEST ITSELF OF VACHYD

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Eighteen months ago, the government refused to allow the takeover of a company called Canadian VacHyd by a Dutch firm called Indivers. Some 14 months later the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce finally gave directions to the Department of Justice to apply for a court order compelling Indivers to divest itself of its control of VacHyd. Some four months have gone by and no court action has been commenced and this is causing serious harm to VacHyd's business. It is a small Canadian company in fields involving both exports and high technology. When will the necessary court action be commenced to deal with this clear and definite case of non-compliance with an act of this parliament, the Foreign Investment Review Act and what is the explanation for the unconscionable delays to this date?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my officials are in charge of the file. I cannot give the hon. member a precise date when an application may be taken. I understand there are some difficulties with those types of proceedings. When we are prepared to go to court, I will advise the hon. member.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING ON METHOD OF FUNDING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It relates to the comment she made earlier in the question period that the reason there has been no meeting of federal and provincial welfare ministers with regard to the new social services act is that she has been unable to obtain agreement in principle for the federal proposals for block funding. Is it now the position of this government that federal-provincial meetings will only take place on those occasions where the provincial ministers have agreed in principle to terms dictated by the federal government, even in areas of concurrent jurisdiction? Is that what the new federalism is all about?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to be a constitutional expert. There are days when I am very pleased not to be one. In federal-provincial relations, I understand that the different partners in this case in the social services field, have to reach an agreement in the interest of the good of all Canadians. A counterproposal was made on September 15. I was appointed shortly after that. The provincial ministers studied, analysed and discussed the proposals and then met with their own provincial governments. One by one they started sending replies to Ottawa. I have not received replies from all the provinces. Until we have something to tell each other, I do not understand why we should meet. It is as simple as that, Mr. Speaker.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would care to correct her terminology so that she does not further aggravate the differences with the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PENITENTIARIES

MILLHAVEN—REASON FOR WITHHOLDING NAMES OF INMATES INVOLVED IN HOSTAGE TAKING

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. It results from an inconsistency in penal policy which is unfair to certain guards at Millhaven Prison. His department has refused to give the public the names and records of the convicts at Millhaven who last week took a hostage at knifepoint and barricaded a section and created serious trouble. Just previously, his department gave the public the names of three guards who did their duty by protecting Canadian persons and property in the ultimate wounding and shooting of escaping convicts. Will the minister explain why his department cannot be consistent and cease discriminating against public servants and officials who are performing their duties?

● (1452)

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): There is, of course, no discrimination. Guards in the penitentiary service perform a very valuable function in Canadian society. As to the specific question why the names of the inmates were not released, I will look into the matter and get in touch with the hon. member.

FISHERIES

ALLOCATION OF SPECIES TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES—RELATIONSHIP TO PROVISION OF WORK FOR HALIFAX SHIPYARD

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question would have been directed to the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Fisheries. It relates to the awarding in the last day or two of the contract for the overhaul and repair of the Italian fishing vessel Cormorant to a St. Lawrence River shipyard. In the light of recent discussions the minister has had with Eastern European countries about the further allocation of certain of the offshore species of fish and in turn the offer made by certain Eastern European countries with respect to repair and overhaul work which could go into the Halifax shipyards now facing, probably, their greatest crisis since long before the Second World War, has the hon. gentleman arrived at any decision with respect to an upgrading of the allocation of certain offshore species so that the shipyards might enjoy the type of work they so desperately need?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, my conversations were not linked to the allocation of further resources. In fact, it is our intention to make gradual quota reductions in accordance with our capacity to catch and to market and take over more and more of the 200-mile economic zone. I recognize that in some cases access to the zone and, possibly, also, our access to markets should be discussed with the use by foreign vessels of our shipyards. I made it clear that I would look favourably, under the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, to allowing foreign fishing vessels into our shipyards or into our ports for repairs or supplies, if this trade-off is against other benefits for Canadian fishermen.

Mr. Forrestall: I welcome the minister's assurance that we do not intend to give away more of our species which properly belong to our own fishermen and to our own industry.

POSSIBILITY OF AID IN CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FLOATING DRYDOCK FOR HALIFAX

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): May I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion? In the light of this very serious blow—we have probably lost between 1200 and 1500 jobs and have quite possibly put in peril or in jeopardy the only major ship repair and shipbuilding capacity in the Province of Nova Scotia, certainly in the port of Halifax—may I ask the minister whether he is now in a position or will soon be in a position to tell us the government's intention with respect to its involvement in the construction of a new floating drydock for Halifax and, at the same time, with respect to the decision respecting the West Coast requirement?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, consultation continues on that subject between the various departments here in Ottawa and particularly the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and when a decision will be made it will be announced by the departments that are responsible for the implementation of the program.

POST OFFICE

METHOD USED BY MOUNTED POLICE TO INTERCEPT MAIL—KNOWLEDGE OF POSTAL OFFICIALS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General and it arises from statements he made to the press last week that district post office officials have been illegally passing on mail to the security branch of the RCMP for 40 years without the knowledge of either the minister or his senior officials here in Ottawa. Were these illegal interceptions of the mail approved by those in charge of the district post offices or were they undertaken by employees of the post offices who had been hired by the RCMP and were they undertaken without the knowledge of the district post office managers or were both methods used to carry out the nefarious practice which the Postmaster General has admitted to the press?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the investigation is still proceeding and a dossier is being compiled in order to permit prompt and complete co-operation with the McDonald Commission. The information we have to date would indicate that the methods varied and that the information was provided at the request of the RCMP, primarily by people involved with security and intelligence in the post office and primarily without the knowledge of the regional managers and their immediate subordinates.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Is the minister telling the House that for 40 years employees of his department have been co-operating with the security branch of the RCMP to violate the Post Office Act without either the RCMP or the Solicitor General informing him of that fact? Is he telling us that one arm of the government does not know what the other arm is doing?

Mr. Blais: I would say there is some indication, although there are no specific records, that the practice could have gone back to the late thirties. However, from the evidence I have been able to ascertain the practice was primarily during the early part of the seventies and it was at the request of the RCMP. There was no knowledge in the upper echelons of the post office about that co-operation.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST TWO FORMER SOLICITORS GENERAL APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. Yesterday I moved that the two predecessors of the Solicitor General be asked to come before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to give evidence so that the facts of the whole matter might be heard—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Woolliams: My question to the Solicitor General is this: has he discussed this matter with his two predecessors and are they willing to go before the committee and tell all?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It would take some special permission from the House to enable that to happen.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH NEWFOUNDLAND MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Can he tell the House the outcome of his meeting with his counterpart, the Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland? Has any agreement been reached with regard to a joint program to deal with such pressing problems as fleet replacement, and so on?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries): The conversation took place on three basic issues. One was the boat subsidies which I have indicated would not be available for the current year because the allocation is already spent and also because it is clear under the act which allows us to pay these subsidies that they must be paid directly to fishermen not to provincial authorities. Another matter which was raised was the question of buffer zones between areas where different types of gear are in use. I made it clear that these were matters for the regional director in consultation with the fishermen and their organizations who are perfectly competent to deal with them. The provincial government will also take part in these discussions. On the third issue having to do with one plant, Booth Fisheries, I indicated that the report on the present season had not yet arrived, and for that reason I could not give much more information than that which everybody else knows.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister, if he would not mind staying for a while.

Mr. Hees: Come on back, Pierre; you are not working to union rules.

Mr. Clark: This is the kind of contempt that we always get in this House.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would ask your permission to reserve my question until the Prime Minister is in the House.

TV AND RADIO BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF HOUSE AND ITS COMMITTEES

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to present the first report of the special committee appointed to supervise the implementation of radio and television broadcasting of the proceedings of the House and its committees.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is very seldom that I ever rise in my place—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: —to complain about being cut off on what I consider to be a proper question. My question was directed to the Solicitor General and was: would he consent to have his two predecessors come before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs? I understand what is being talked about here because we talked yesterday about a cover-up. What I should have liked to ask him is if those two previous ministers would come before the standing committee and tell all they know, so that this cover-up could be brought to an end. That was my question, and with the greatest respect to Your Honour I feel it was in order, asking the Solicitor General whether he had gained their consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether Your Honour would point out to the Prime Minister of Canada that you are the judge of when the question period ends, not the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, I very seldom rise on a point of order, but I do so today for clarification. Your Honour mentioned that my supplementary question today was asking for an opinion. I have gone through the question I asked and, with all respect, I do not believe that is what I was seeking. There have been studies on the question of a guaranteed annual income, specifically in Manitoba, known as MINCOM, in which the whole purpose of the study was to find out, among other things, what effect the guaranteed annual income would have on the motivational factor. We know that some of those studies are in the hands of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. They are also in the hands of the minister of health of Manitoba. There is sharp disagreement within the cabinet on the results of that study, and specifically on the motivational effect that the guaranteed annual income has on work and productivity. It was for that reason that the question was asked.

Mr. Speaker: I thought that the hon. member had two questions, both of which sought opinions as to the motivational factors involved. I do not see how at this point anybody could have anything but an opinion on it, but in any case I thought I gave the hon. member the benefit of the doubt of letting him get away with one question asking for an opinion, and I thought I should stop him on the second.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which has to do with the answer given to me by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I recognize her right to answer or not answer, but not to answer inaccurately. She said that she had made no such announcement of a guaranteed annual income. In point of fact, she did so in this very House, as reported at page 159 of Hansard for October 24, and again on November 7, as reported at page 635 of Hansard. There she said very clearly that the intention of the federal government is to implement a guaranteed annual income. Whether or not we on this side agree, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that she did state the intention of the government to proceed. My question was whether or not she intended to proceed with or without the consent of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That was the question which I understood the minister answered.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—QUESTION TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege having to do with an incident which took place in this Chamber just a few moments ago and which I think is of a very serious nature and bears directly on the privileges of the members of this House. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) was in the act of asking a question—

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I think I deserve the right to put my question of privilege without all this noise across the floor. The hon. member rose and was in the act of asking a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who was standing at the back of the Chamber and who in effect waved a piece of cardboard at the House, as much as saying that we can all go to blazes, and then walked out. He showed disrespect for the House of Commons in the most disgraceful manner I have ever seen. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is time that this kind of thing stopped.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be put on the record that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) left the House after three o'clock. Under our rules the question period expires at three o'clock.

Mr. Stevens: The Speaker decides that.

Mr. MacEachen: The Prime Minister had been in his place for the whole question period. He took all the questions that were put to him. He looked at the clock and said that he had other obligations. I agreed with him that the question period, under our rules, was over—

Mr. Cossitt: The government makes its own rules.

Mr. MacEachen: —and therefore I believe it is most unfair for the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) to continue this unjust, persistent, pernicious vendetta against the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Whether or not the Chair exercises any customary discretion in recognizing another questioner after three o'clock is something that the Chair will decide from time to time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: However, hon. members will realize that under any circumstances the presence in or absence from the Chamber, or departure from or entrance into the Chamber, of any minister or any other member at any time is not the subject of privilege.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 238, 239 and 326.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

NUMBER OF PERSONS UNDER CONTRACT TO PRIVY COUNCIL

Question No. 238—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the Privy Council Office and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Privy Council and Federal-Provincial Relations Offices are concerned: 1. Seventeen of which three are retired public servants.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

2. (a) 1974-75, $167,547.16; three retired public servants, $22,770; (b) 1975-76, $504,542.65; four retired public servants, $31,565.

NUMBER OF PERSONS UNDER CONTRACT TO OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 239—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the Office of the Prime Minister and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Eight (none are retired public servants).

2. (a) 1974-75, $44,442.57; one retired public servant, $26,797.12; (b) 1975-76, $77,246.46; none were retired public servants.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS OF CANADA—PERSONNEL EMPLOYED FROM PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 326—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has the National Museums of Canada obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by the National Museums of Canada in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Museums as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I realize it is early in the session and one might not ordinarily expect questions to be answered so soon, but two of my questions have been on the order paper almost since the beginning of the last session. They are now on the order paper again so the government has had plenty of time to get answers to the two questions.

I refer first to question No. 48 which is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and pertains to a statement that he made in Brighton, Ontario, in which he said, "I use Department of Defence planes quite a bit because I'm an honorary colonel." The question simply asks: does the Department of National Defence permit honorary colonels—and there are many of them—to use their aircraft at will and, if so, how many honorary colonels are there? I think that is a matter of record, and that we should know whether the Minister of Agriculture is able to commandeer an aircraft of the Department of National Defence simply because he is an honorary colonel.

The other question I should like to mention just briefly is question No. 45, and I think it is very serious in nature. It has been on the order paper for some time, and goes back to the last session. It concerns the fingerprinting of public servants. I have asked how many have been fingerprinted since this program started, and certain other questions stemming therefrom since the question went on the order paper. I know this is important to a lot of people because of the mail I have received from public servants who are not in sensitive positions whatsoever, but who have either been fingerprinted or ordered to be fingerprinted.

My concern, which I think should be the concern of Parliament and the people of Canada, is that we should receive speedy answers to questions of this kind, because if members are not able to inform the public as to why this program of fingerprinting public servants is being adopted by the government, then something is very much amiss. I am not talking about fingerprinting people who are in security positions where such a thing is necessary. I am talking about fingerprinting of a much wider nature, for example, of stenographers and clerks in offices, those people who have nothing to do at all with matters of a sensitive nature but who are now being fingerprinted. I would like the parliamentary secretary to tell us when this question will be answered.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, last week I was pleased to note that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) was back in this House after an absence of several days, which prevented me from giving him the following answer.

In the course of the second session of the 30th Parliament, 3,012 questions appeared on the order paper, of which 281 were put by the hon. member for Leeds, or 9.3 per cent. During the last session, the government answered 2,868 questions, 95 per cent of the total. Out of the 281 questions put by the hon. member for Leeds, the government answered 264 questions, or 94 per cent.

I submit that the hon. member received a very decent and respectful treatment from the government, and we can assure him that in the course of this session we will give him similar treatment. All we ask is that he be patient.

[English]

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point with the parliamentary secretary in respect of starred question No. 145. I brought this to his attention personally, as well as to the personal attention of his predecessor, and on several occasions I have been promised an answer. I was informed back in July of this year that this question would be answered; if not during the session it would be answered during the recess. I would now ask the parliamentary secretary whether he would be kind enough to get me an answer within the next week.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mining Unemployment

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58(11)—LOSS OF JOBS IN MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That this House condemns the lack of action by the federal government to prevent the serious loss of jobs in Canada's mineral industry, and furthermore urges the implementation of an effective mineral resource industrial strategy to preserve and expand employment and to promote further resource processing in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, you will well understand if I say, just as you step down from the chair, that I was tempted to name you as my seconder, but propriety led me in another direction.

On a more serious note, Canadians all over the country know very well we are heading into the worst winter we have experienced since the great depression, in terms of job opportunities. Job opportunities, about which I will be talking in detail, in the resource sector of the Canadian economy are particularly bad, but unemployment is not of course restricted to that sector. There is unemployment in every province and in almost every region of every province, affecting virtually every sector of the Canadian economy.

As we learned well in this House, particularly during the opening week of the session, the resource sector has been particularly badly hit and, as I shall indicate in a few minutes, there are particularly salient reasons for this happening now in Canada.

To give you some figures, I believe this year some 9,000 Canadian miners have been placed on permanent lay-off, that is, they are permanently without jobs. According to forecasts by the Department of Manpower, to which we have had access, during the next six months that figure of 9,000 will increase to 20,000. There will be an additional 20,000 Canadians without jobs, spread across most provinces, but particularly in the northern parts.

It has become a platitude, and one is tempted to say, if not a redundant, a commonplace platitude, of all political parties to suggest that we have a resource based economy. Every politician, the members of my party included, have learned to say almost by rote that we in this country are rich in resources in every province, unmatched by almost any other country in the world, and so on. We know all the general phrases, and the general phrases are accurate.

I was interested to note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in 1974, by some coincidence perhaps, in the middle of an election campaign:

Resources are both the historic and modern basis of Canada's prosperity.

That is what the Prime Minister said in Sault Ste. Marie in June, 1974. He went on to state in the same speech that resources "are the jumping-off point for the continuing industrial development of Canada".

What the Prime Minister ought to have said in 1974, and what he should be saying now, some three years later, is that because of the Liberal mismanagement of the Canadian economy, instead of resources or minerals being the jumping-off point to prosperity, what has happened is that Canadian miners have been pushed almost to the point of having to jump from the edge of their mine shafts in desperation in terms of lost job opportunities.

What we are now experiencing is the coming home to roost of the economic chickens of C. D. Howe and his resource policy, and this is at a time when Canadian working families particularly are bearing the brunt of that misguided policy which began back in the late 1940's, carried on in the early 1950's, and repeated since ad nauseam by ministers of trade and commerce, energy, mines and resources and finance, one after the other. They have all carried on with this policy developed by C. D. Howe.

What is the essence of this policy, and what has been the guiding framework implemented by Liberals for the past few decades? The essence of it is as follows: first of all we should welcome foreign capital because foreign investment must be encouraged. It does not matter what country is involved, whether the United States, France, Great Britian or Germany. That is the first tool to be used, foreign investment to buy ownership and control of resource firms.

Secondly, and related to that, we must encourage these firms, once they are in control of resources, whether foreign or Canadian owned, to export the raw materials. That in fact is what has basically taken place in the Canadian economy in the past three decades.

What has been the result of basing the economic prosperity of Canadians on this policy started some years ago by C. D. Howe? Let me give you the conclusions. We have very few processing jobs. We have only a very small job intensified processing or secondary sector in Canada.

The statistics are truly alarming. There has been a constant trend in the last two and a half decades toward a diminishing number of jobs in that sector. I suggest that the number should be increasing. In 1950 only 15 per cent of our minerals were exported in unprocessed form. Today that figure has grown to 40 per cent, which is more than a 300 per cent increase since 1950. What that means is that raw materials are being sent abroad and the major job creation part of resource-related economies is growing in other countries. Instead of Canadians getting jobs, Americans, Japanese, Swedes and whomever, have been getting them. It is a trend that has been constant and is worsening.

The inevitable consequence of this prosperity, which has been based upon the export of our unprocessed raw materials, is that the development of our materials is dependent upon decisions made by multinational corporations. Almost all the companies that are in control of the resource sector are multinationals. I do not distinguish between Canadian multinationals and American multinationals. They both operate in terms of their global financial interests and have no fundamental loyalty to their countries of origin. It does not matter if we discuss American or Canadian multinationals in this regard.

One of the consequences of this is that the profits made by these companies are being invested overwhelmingly abroad rather than in Canada. I am referring to the profits made as a result of the work of Canadian mining communities in Ontario, Manitoba, British Columbia or Quebec. Instead of those profits being invested in Canada in order to create Canadian jobs, they are going out of the country to other lands.

There has been a net outflow of investment capital ever since 1973. We have exported more capital investment than we have imported. This trend is worsening and is not improving.

I hoped the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) would learn from the mistakes of his predecessors, but instead of learning he is repeating their actions. The government is providing financial assistance to the American and Canadian owned multinationals, which assistance is being used by these companies for investment purposes abroad rather than here. These are the results of this pattern which was begun by C. D. Howe and has continued for some decades. I want to show how distasteful this has been for Canada and why it must stop.

I should like to refer to five Canadian multinational corporations. The naive belief expressed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) that all we have to do is develop our Canadian multinational corporations in order to overcome our difficult economic problems, is sheer illusion. The problems we have faced in recent years because of a foreign dominated economy are being repeated now as we develop our own multinationals that operate in the same manner as American, German or other foreign multinationals.

Canadian ownership in itself is not a sufficient instrument to ensure that the multinational corporations in Canadian resource sectors will perform for the long range interests of Canadians. I could provide a list of foreign owned multinationals and how they affect activities, but I will just refer to the Canadian owned ones.

Alcan is one of the world's giants, and it is Canadian owned and controlled. The profits of this corporation increased to $138.8 million in 1977, which is an increase of 560 per cent over the previous year. Not bad for little old Alcan! That company owes Canada $180 million in deferred taxes. Some four weeks ago it received $11 million because of the mini-budget of the Minister of Finance. That is Alcan's share out of the budget proposals which are still being debated in this House. What did that company do? Did it use that money for job creation and to extend its operations? Not at all.

The most significant thing Alcan did was to shut down its operations in St. Lawrence, Newfoundland. That fluorspar mine was not losing money. Alcan operated in that community for many decades, thus making St. Lawrence totally dependent upon that mining operation. In spite of the assistance Alcan received from Canadians and the benefits it received from the mini-budget, the firm has decided that it can make more money by importing its fluorspar from Mexico, and will shut down its Canadian operation entirely. The result of that action will be economic ruin for that entire community.

Another large multinational corporation is Falconbridge. It owes Canadians $34 million in deferred taxes. On account of the Finance Minister's mini-budget, it will gain approximately $2 million. What is Falconbridge doing in terms of exercising its social responsibility to Canadians, and particularly mining communities? It has laid off approximately 4,000 workers on a temporary basis, and 500 workers permanently. At the same time this corporation is expanding in South Africa, Rhodesia, and Chile. Those are three marvellous countries in terms of their governments. Those governments are extremely reactionary and severe in terms of repressing their own people. But Falconbridge expands in those countries, lays off Canadians, and is in receipt of tax benefits from our government!

Next I should like to deal with Northern Telecom, which is a wholly owned subsidiary of Bell Canada. Its assets increased from $363 million in 1970 to $705 million in 1976. That poor little corporation has received some $3 million from the government's mini-budget. That is cash which Northern Telecom does not really need. In fact it does not need it at all. Is it taking that cash and creating jobs for Canadians? Not at all. That corporation is also laying off workers in Canada. Approximately 1,000 have been laid off, or will be laid off by that company. Northern Telecom is expanding in the United States and Turkey, but it is receiving financial assistance from Canadians. That is the manner in which that company exercises its corporate responsibilities.

Many Liberal backbenchers from the province of Quebec are interested in Noranda Mines. What about that poor little multinational? Between 1970 and 1976 it more than doubled its assets in Canada. Now they stand at $2,093 billion in terms of its assets. But unlike ordinary Canadian workers or farmers, it gets away with owing taxes. It owes the people of Canada some $86 million in deferred taxes and, as we know, not only do such companies not pay interest on those taxes, they never pay them back. Noranda will receive from the Minister of Finance, who is from the province of Quebec himself, out of his mini-budget proposals, about $5 million this year, an additional handout from the people of Canada.

What is Noranda doing? Is it taking that money to expand its operations? Not at all; it has laid off some 500 workers in four different mining communities in Canada, and there are another 1,700 miners in the Gaspé region working for Noranda whose jobs are in severe jeopardy. But once again Noranda is not simply cutting back. It is cutting back in Canada, but elsewhere in the world it is going onward and upward.

Noranda is now considering a major expansion of its copper facilities in Chile. It has been operating in Chile for some time, and now it has a major study under way which is intended to lead to a significant expansion of its copper operation in that country. Once again the people of Canada, ordinary workers wherever they live, whether they live in cities, towns or villages, are paying through the tax system channelled right through our Department of Finance into the pockets of this large multinational, not funds to be used to create jobs in Canada but funds that will be used to create jobs elsewhere in the world. That has to stop, Mr. Speaker.

Then of course there is dear old INCO, that poor, poor multinational. The figures are perhaps well known now, even to members on the government side. INCO has had, in terms of profits earned in Canada in the past decade, net profits of $1.7 billion. This year alone they have had a net profit for the first nine months of $95 million. They owe the people of Canada in deferred taxes $378 million. They received in financial assistance through the Export Development Corporation $70 million. This year, in 1977, in assistance from the taxpayers of Canada, they received from the Minister of Finance in his mini-budget a few weeks ago, $10 million. What is INCO doing? Everyone knows what INCO is doing. INCO is laying off Canadian workers in Sudbury, Thompson, Manitoba and Port Colborne.

But again we should not despair for INCO; we should despair for Canadians, because with the $70 million in special financial assistance provided for Canadian workers INCO is expanding, but not in Canada. INCO is expanding in Guatemala and Indonesia, two countries that are quite distant from our own land.

When the issue was raised with officials of INCO about their cut-backs, because sometimes cut-backs have to take place in certain areas, and they were asked why they did not choose some of their operations abroad, a senior branch executive of INCO said that they could get away with it in Canada but they could not get away with it in Indonesia. That shows just how much the Liberal government is prepared to stand up for the interests of Canadian workers.

I could give other examples, but I will not. There are five companies, but the pattern is a common one—tax benefits, write-off concessions intended to create jobs, but not having that effect at all. The same companies are laying off workers in Canada and expanding their operations in other parts of the world. I say on behalf of my colleagues that this pattern of the systematic write-off of Canadian resources at the same time that it is convenient to multinational corporations and profoundly inconvenient to Canadian workers has to stop. We recognize, for example, as the other parties in the House are not prepared to recognize, that there are not only problems with multinationals that are owned and operated abroad but there are serious growing problems with multinational corporations that now happen to be Canadian owned.

In the earlier part of my remarks I referred to a speech given by the Prime Minister in the constituency of my colleague, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), back in 1974. The Liberals are always good when it is election time; they are always effective in making fantastic promises. The Prime Minister undoes his shirt collar, takes off his jacket and pretends for 30 seconds that he is actually a working Canadian. He trots around the country and says, "If you elect us, by God we'll do these things". You know what he said in 1974 in Sault Ste. Marie? He said that if the Liberal government were re-elected in 1974, the Canadian resource sector would not only provide the number of jobs that it had provided up to that point, but would expand. It would be the jumping off point, to quote his phrase, for greater growth of the Canadian economy.

Central to that strategy as promised in June of 1974 in Sault Ste. Marie was the commitment that if the Liberal government was re-elected, henceforth all future resource development in Canada, new investment, would be 60 per cent, and certainly a minimum of 50 per cent, Canadian controlled.

At the same time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, speaking in support of the Prime Minister's pledge, said the following:

> Look around the world at any country that is rich in natural resources. You see that in almost every instance it's similar to this—you know, 60 per cent.

That is from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in support of the idea that if the Liberals were re-elected to form the government which they now have they would move decisively into the area of restoring Canadian ownership to Canadian resources. We know what has happened after the election. In that area as well as others the Liberals forgot their election promises, and absolutely nothing has been done.

On behalf of my party I say that it is time that Canadian resources were owned by Canadians and controlled by Canadians for the benefit of Canadians, and it is time that this government which is on the opposite side of the House started to live up to its commitments and moved in that direction.

As I have indicated, it is not sufficient to ensure Canadian ownership of the resource sector. Once that ownership is established, as I have made clear with the examples of Canadian owned multinationals, we have to make sure that the national management of our resource sector, whether it is Canadian or American owned, is operated in the Canadian interest. That is the decisive second step that must be taken. In neither case have we had action from the Liberals. We still have a predominantly foreign owned resource sector, and of course we have no over-all management at all in terms of our long range or short range interests.

What is required in the long range is for us to have an industrial strategy for Canada of the kind the Japanese, the French and the West Germans developed right after the Second World War. They did not sit around and wait for several decades, they developed a long range strategy. In the case of Japan, they have to import 98 per cent of resource materials to develop their industrial base.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

The first thing that we need in Canada is a commitment to a long range industrial strategy that sees as its foundation the rich resources in our country. Related to that we have to develop techniques in co-operation with the provinces to ensure that a higher degree of processing at the secondary level of our natural resources takes place in Canada. There are a variety of tax instruments which can be used in co-operation with the provinces to bring this about. In relation to that as well, in the years ahead we will be very much in favour of using tax policy vis-à-vis corporations to encourage research and development in key sectors. After that has been done in sectors which have been designated by the government, and which make long-range economic sense in the Canadian interest, then corporations should get tax breaks, rather than the other way around, which is what we have now with the Liberals. The Liberals give corporations tax concessions holus-bolus, in the hope that spin-off benefits will come.

These are some long-range proposals which my party believes are long overdue if we are going to create the jobs which are necessary for Canadians, but in the meantime the government must decide two relatively simple things.

First, the government must decide that no corporation in Canada is going to get a special tax break in 1977 or in 1978 unless it is job related. There should be special tax concessions if jobs are created. If jobs are not created, there should be no tax concessions. That is a simple, clear, short-run and necessary policy.

Second, in a number of the sectors of our mining industry where there is now a surplus we argue that the policy should be one of stockpiling. We have done that for Canadian farmers and for Canadian uranium workers in the past. It makes much more sense for Canadians in other parts of our resource sector to have stockpiling until such time as markets improve—and then the products can be sold off—than it does to pay Canadian workers unemployment insurance for doing nothing. Next year we are going to spend $4 billion on unemployment insurance. It makes a hell of a lot more sense to us to take a good part of that money, use it for stockpiling, keep Canadian miners at work, and then sell the product further down the road.

I conclude by saying it is time we had a "Canadian Jobs First" policy for Canadian resource development, and as I said a minute ago, it is time our resources were Canadian owned, Canadian controlled, and operated for the long range benefit of Canadians.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to participate in this debate because I was amused by the speech to which I just listened. I have never heard anything so negative in my life. If Canada had been built with that kind of defeatist attitude, I do not think we would be where we are today.

For years the New Democratic Party has complained about how bad it is to have American multinational corporations reaping benefits out of Canada. Now, because there are some Canadian corporations which are expanding outside Canada and exporting technology, savoir-faire and so on, they are the villains. Of course there are some problems, but they are not the result of foreign ownership. INCO is Canadian owned. Because of the international market situation demand for nickel throughout the world has gone down. There is less production of steel. Often in the resource industry there are ups and downs, and at this time the international nickel market dictates that there cannot be any more nickel stockpiled.

There was stockpiling for three years because it was hoped that the market would turn around. However, any more stockpiling would compound the problem because prices are depressed, and if everyone stockpiles even more, the price will go down further and create more problems. We are trying to find some solution to this problem. We think it is a short term problem.

When Canadian companies like Northern Telecom or INCO are able to expand and go into foreign markets and try to specialize in some fields to promote good industrial development in other nations, we are told that they should not expand outside Canada. We are told that mines are being developed in Guatemala and Malaysia and that that is bad. That is absolutely unbelievable. We are told that it is bad that INCO should develop mines in those countries and that, as a result, our own mines will not be developed. Do hon. members opposite not know that there are other people besides Canadians who can develop mines? The British can go to those countries as well as the Germans and the Japanese. There are dozens of companies which would be willing to export engineering technology which creates markets for goods we can produce, and in mining technology we are one of the best in the world.

If we do not export our technology it is naive to believe nobody else will, because there are many other people who will do that. On any social issue it is typical of the NDP to take the side of the bleeding hearts.

Mr. Broadbent: Like INCO miners.

Mr. Chrétien: In the case of INCO the NDP is involved not because of its social conscience, but because it is trying to reap benefit for itself.

Mr. Broadbent: You're kidding.

Mr. Chrétien: Because we have problems in our mining industry, the proposition is that the countries of the Third World should not receive any technical help to develop their resources and that they should be allowed to starve. The NDP is saying that we should not try to help developing nations.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is a straw man.

Mr. Chrétien: I can understand that the NDP might say "to hell with the poor nations who have to develop their resources", but we have international conferences at which we are trying to find solutions for the Third World and to help them create jobs for their people in order to bring wealth to those nations so that they can become self-sufficient. I think the attitude of the NDP is appalling. I do not deny that we have problems in the mining industry, but the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) in his confusion started to talk about foreign capital. In the case of INCO it is not foreign capital but Canadian capital.

Mr. Broadbent: Did you listen to the argument, you dodo?

Mr. Chrétien: For ten or 15 years the NDP said that foreign capital in Canada was the heel of the world, but now it has turned around. Members of the NDP say that Canadian companies should not be multinational, that we should not go into foreign fields, and that our own international corporations are as bad as the others. I think they are just trying to confuse the issues.

Mr. Broadbent: They confused you.

Mr. Chrétien: Of course we are having some problems, but do hon. members think that if we were to nationalize INCO tomorrow suddenly the market around the world would improve and that the Americans would start to buy our nickel?

Mr. Broadbent: Who talked about nationalizing INCO?

Mr. Chrétien: You did. That is always the solution; if companies do not keep people they should be nationalized. That is what has been done in South America for generations, and that is why they are now in such a mess. Rather than facing problems in a rational way they took the easy, emotional route. They said, "Get the Americans out of here and we will nationalize," and eventually everything closed down.

In the present context my colleagues and I have enterred into discussions with INCO and other corporations to try to minimize adverse affects, and made the proposition to their workers that they share the work among themselves during a difficult period. It is a human approach to the problem, not a rhetorical approach where you offer easy solutions. We have looked at the possibility of stockpiling but it is, I believe, a corporate decision of the company. Even at this time with a slowdown in the demand, we are expecting a turn around this coming year. They have already stockpiled an inventory of something like eight or nine months of nickel. We have discussed this with them and nobody agrees that it is a way out of the situation because it could perhaps depress the market even further.

Mr. Broadbent: Nobody but the miners.

Mr. Chrétien: Of course we have difficulties in the mining or in the forestry industries, or in any other industry whose economy is up and down, and this sector is affected now. There were very few compliments paid to the government a few years ago when Sudbury suddenly became prosperous because of new discoveries. In that kind of a resource area, it is expected to have its ups and downs.

Now, with the programs we are proposing to labour and management, some of the workers for several months will earn less income than they were used to earning previously. It is a normal trait for many Canadians, and for many individuals around the world.

What I dislike about the approach of the NDP is its kind of Santa Claus approach to problems, that the government should intervene and artificially maintain the situation, with the result that two, three, four years later you are hit with a disaster, due to the fact that you cannot give more than you receive, in any economy in the world. This is exactly the price we are paying today for some previous abuses.

During the years 1973, 1974, 1975 and 1976, we have had a better economic performance than our neighbours to the south. For three winters in a row we have had less unemployment in Canada than in the United States of America, for the first time in history. What is the result of that? We developed a mentality whereby all of us were asking more from the Canadian economy than we were offering. We were faced by demands which were greater than the capacity of the nation to provide, with the resulting devaluation of the Canadian dollar in that we have overpriced ourselves in international markets.

Not long ago we were talking of the need to catch up with the Americans. That was the big issue a few years ago. I understand that there will be some figures released tomorrow—I have not seen them—but internally in my department I have seen some figures. In Canada now, in the majority of the sectors, we are paying ourselves more than our counterparts are paid in the United States. Of course, because of the size of the plants there, and perhaps in some areas better technology than we have, their productivity is higher. The result of that is we have lost numerous markets. We are now in the process of adjustment because Canadians, both in the private sector and in the unions, realized it was the wrong course to carry on with the treadmill which we had in 1974 and 1975 when everything was increasing rapidly. I commend labour, in many areas, for realizing now that they have outpriced their services and are faced with difficult situations.

The pulp and paper industry is quite a good example, where the workers are making $1.50 more per hour than workers in the United States. Last summer in my own riding two paper mills were closed for weeks. They had no orders for their goods. The price per ton of paper in Canada is something like $30.00 more than the price of paper per ton in the United States. So, it can be no surprise to lose markets in those circumstances.

I would like to be a little more positive than the hon. member. I believe that the adjustment process is getting under way; we are becoming more competitive. The settlements for salaries are no longer higher than those in the United States.

An hon. Member: Three per cent below the inflation rate.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: It could be. But you do not talk about the time when it was way above inflation.

An hon. Member: That has not improved.

Mr. Chrétien: Come on, come on! You have the result; the results are there. We are not lost in this world. We are told by the international market place that our Canadian dollar is going down.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Chrétien: Here is Canada, my good friend. The guy who was proposing nationalization is three rows behind you. Look at him—he says yes. You should talk to each other because he said—you never proposed that? Perhaps you should check your notes once in a while. I believe we will emerge from these difficulties very soon because of the international readjustment; just as a result of the fact that the Canadian dollar is weaker, we are beginning to be more competitive. Three years ago we had no trade surplus at all. Last year we managed to reach $1.2 billion. This year, in 1977, our trade balance, I believe, is $2.5 billion or more. These things are positive factors which mean that we are returning to international markets.

With respect to nickel I have to admit the demand is low; the same is true with copper. But there are other products we can produce in Canada in the mining industry. The demands for and investment in uranium, for example, are increasing because we have great potential. It is normal that some times some metals are less in demand than others. But why would the hon. member suggest that we sock it to some corporations that have been able to grow in Canada and are now trying to compete in the world? I don't think that will solve the problems. The world has to specialize, it is one of the great challenges we are faced with at this time as a nation. If there is more liberalization of trade in the world, where Canada would specialize would be difficult to decide. I agree that we need industrial strategy—

An hon. Member: You have been going on and on like that for years.

Mr. Chrétien: Perhaps the hon. member would let me finish my speech. If he does not understand English, I can try it in French.

There is something in industrial strategy which I would call a catch phrase. We cannot have one industrial strategy in Canada because we have a nation that is so diversified in its nature that we will have to look at it by sectors.

I say let us take the mineral sector—

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Chrétien: We are working on that right now.

● (1602)

Next week, the ministers of energy, mines and resources will meet to look specifically into this problem. It is not very easy in Canada to have a metal and mineral policy. Why? Because Canada is not a unitary state. We must deal with the various provinces and, as a matter of fact, we have a great deal less jurisdiction in this area than they have. Some will say that this is unfortunate, while provincial premiers will say the opposite, but our sphere of action is therefore limited and we must consult them.

There is also the tax issue which is extremely difficult. Over the past few years, there has been a considerable increase in this area, especially from provincial governments. For instance, I visited British Columbia on a number of occasions, and I hope one or two hon. members from that province who are listening to me will support my statement.

The fiscal policy which was implemented in British Columbia under a NDP government led to a flight of investments. Since that time the new government has been trying to undo what had been done, but it is very difficult and it will take a few years. Many people make the same mistake as the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) does when he tells us that we, in Canada must—and I agree somewhat on that point—prevail upon the mining industry to do all the processing and smelting operations here, in this country. I agree this would be quite desirable, but we cannot consume all those goods in Canada and, very often, we have to deal with tariff barriers, within the Common Market, Japan, or other countries which, like the United States, limit the access of finished products to their interior market and sooner or later the time comes when there is no more opportunity for such access. Naturally, the policy of the New Democratic Party would be sensible if we were the only country in the world able to produce metals. Unfortunately this is not so. Africa, Australia, South America, Asia and Siberia are competing more and more with Canada.

I have travelled throughout the world these past years as a minister. I went to Australia. They have uranium deposits at ground level. I also went to Siberia and I was amazed by the riches of these regions. I drew but one conclusion while coming back home, and it is that if Siberia were controlled by capitalists, we would probably lose three quarters of our international markets because I must acknowledge that the great advantage of Communism may perhaps be that there is little unemployment but also that there is little productivity in this kind of industry and this is why they are not competitive against metals and other minerals which we produce here in Canada.

If we had no competition, we could in a way blackmail the whole world, but this is not the case. Depending upon circumstances, we try to reach some kind of equilibrium which will enable us to boost mineral production with a view to expanding refining in Canada. If we try to go too far, not only will we be unable to sell the refined products but we are even bound to lose the sale outlets for our primary products.

I therefore think that in this difficult situation in which the mining industry in Canada finds itself, it will be necessary to make a joint effort with the provinces, because we cannot escape this problem and it may also be necessary to re-evaluate on the short run the present level of taxation, particularly at the provincial level because federal taxation is rather limited in this field, in order to make Canadian production even more competitive. Yet, no matter what we do, if the demand for nickel remains for some time to come some 15 to 20 per cent lower than what it was two years ago, it is not by nationalizing this industry or by making speeches or even by stockpiling that we will solve the problem. There has to be a demand, otherwise we will have to adjust to a less prosperous situation in certain sectors and try to redirect our investments in areas likely to be profitable on a medium term basis.

For example, in the Sudbury basin, things are not going well as far as nickel is concerned. Nevertheless, the mine has not closed. Eighty five per cent of the miners are still going to keep their job, which is a work force level probably higher by a few thousands than the number of people employed some 15 years ago. This aspect of the situation has not been mentioned. However, very close by, at Elliot Lake, miners are wanted, to work in the uranium industry.

Mr. Rodriguez: Pack sack miners.

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are such trades which require mobility. It is not a matter of being pack sack miners, it is a fact of life. If at some time, one is forced to move, that is that. I had to accept this myself. I could not have become the member for Saint-Maurice if I had refused to come to Ottawa. That is for sure. My job as a member is to come here, as my hon. friend from Sudbury comes to Ottawa every week. Is he a pack sack member? The duty of a pack sack member is to go—

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I must take issue with the minister's comments about the pack-sack miner as opposed to the packsack politician. There is a great difference between the miner who mines the ore under the ground and the politician who, by choice, seeks to run for some party—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: —for $40,000 or $50,000 a year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he will have a chance to make his speech in due time.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. I agree there is a difference. I just wanted to say that it is a fact of life. There are too many people who do not want to face the facts. Eighty-five per cent of the people in the nickel industry in Sudbury will still be working there. It is the younger people who have the problem. I understand that, and I am terribly concerned about it.

I hope the other employees in the mining activity there will be willing to accept the proposition of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) who suggested that the work be shared by having a four-day week. Why not share the work with their companions in Sudbury? It will mean having a little less revenue for some time, but it is something they could do.

The member of the New Democratic Party says the government should solve all of the problems all of the time. That is one of their problems. However, it is not the mentality of Canadians.

We hope this problem will clear itself when the demand improves. However, the demand for nickel will not increase by a decree of this parliament. The Government of Canada cannot decree that mines will not be developed in Malaysia, Panama or elsewhere. If those mines are not developed by Canadians, they will be developed by the Germans, Japanese, French or English.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is INCO's argument.

Mr. Chrétien: It is an argument that makes sense. I met with the INCO people only once. I talked to them about stockpiling and so on. However, there is nothing that I, as Minister of Finance, or the government can do about the international market.

The leader of the New Democratic Party says the problem is that this company is a multinational. That makes no difference. Even if it were not a multinational, the international market would not improve. That is a fact.

The federal and provincial governements must look at the problem. We should try to find some mechanism to bring down the cost and make ourselves more competitive. However, in the case of INCO I understand it is not a matter of competition. The miners have been productive and the technology is there. The problem is a slackness in the international market.

The other argument they have put forward is that mines have been developed by INCO in Guatemala and Malaysia. Those mines are not yet in production. Therefore they are not affecting the situation today. On top of that, they have stockpiles for seven or nine months.

● (1612)

Mr. Rodriguez: I wonder if the minister would permit a question at this point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That could only be done with the minister's consent.

[Translation]

The hon. member is asking the minister whether he would accept a question. Of course, I must point out to the minister that he has only two or three minutes left. So the decision is up to him.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: The minister stated that in the Sudbury basin we have all the technology and all the skills necessary for the production of nickel and that the reason we are in difficulty is that markets are soft. Can he tell the House why it is that the government gives companies like INCO incentives under the tax program to produce more nickel though no incentives will sell the nickel?

Mr. Chrétien: That is a question the hon. member has asked me many times. In the budget we are giving some incentives to industry to encourage more investment. If they do not make more investment they will not be able to benefit from the incentives. One of the incentives which will apply is the 3 per cent relief measure in connection with inventories. We have decided to give all Canadian companies a break because of the cost of keeping an inventory in times of inflation. Perhaps they will get some cash there, but the hon. member must keep in mind that corporations such as he is referring to still have some operations under way and that they have to be treated on a basis of equality with other corporations in the land. We cannot penalize them.

I have looked into the possibility of stockpiling. Unfortunately, it is not the solution. I believe we shall have to find other solutions along the lines of what was suggested by the Minister for Employment and Immigration, and try to organize things in such a way that the dislocation will not be too painful. There could be work-sharing programs among the miners; some of the more mobile workers should go to Elliot Lake and other places where there is a shortage of miners.

I had hoped that this debate would have produced some valid suggestions, but unfortunately the motion before us is a typical NDP motion to nationalize everything. They do not live with reality. The reality is that keen competition exists in the world and that the market is depressed. It is not because of an act of parliament or because of a vote in this House that we shall be able to force Americans to buy more nickel and improve the international situation. It is a fact of life today that nickel is much less in demand than it was two years ago.

Mr. Broadbent: Before the minister winds up his cogent, well-reasoned, and carefully thought out discourse on Liberal policy, would he be good enough to answer a further question, because he attacked a speech I never made? He indicated that I was opposed to assistance to the Third World. My colleague will deal with that statement and refute it later. The minister comes from the province of Quebec where textile manufacturing plays a leading role—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister's time has expired and he could continue only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to direct a question to the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: I appreciate that, and I will keep my intervention short. The minister comes from Quebec where the textile industry is in difficulty. Does he not see that there is a comparison to be made between the government providing hundreds of millions of dollars to companies such as INCO to expand their mineral operations abroad in direct competition with Canadian workers, and a situation in which the Government of Canada might provide assistance to Hong Kong, Taiwan and Korea for the development of their textile industries?

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to take a few minutes in which to reply, Mr. Speaker. These are two different questions.

In one case the mines are there and the help we have given to any Canadian corporations which operate abroad to develop certain areas is in relation to the goods and services Canadians can sell in the course of that development. If we were to refrain from doing that we would not get the business—we would not be providing the equipment or the engineering services. The mines in Guatemala and Malaysia would have been developed in any case, but they would have been developed by someone else.

In the textile industry there is a completely different situation. There is no suggestion we would provide help to Taiwan and those other nations. The industry is already operating there. We have done something for the protection of the Canadian market by imposing quotas so that the industry in Canada is protected. But nickel is something we sell abroad. We sell very little of it in Canada.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I feel very sorry for the NDP after the speech just made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). I think that if they would reflect for a while on what they have been saying they would realize that the type of representations they have made in relation to a very serious problem have been pretty childish. Their motion is one which in general terms can be supported—it did not mention socialism or the usual NDP panaceas. But I myself will move an amendment before going further. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance to second it in order to get his support, but I know that under the rules I cannot do this, so I shall have to ask one of my hon. friends to do so. The minister will understand when I read the amendment.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

> That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the words "industrial strategy" and substituting therefor the following:
> "including a reformed resource taxation policy, to preserve and expand employment and to promote further resource exploration, processing, and related manufacturing in Canada."

I know that every party in this House and every member in the House will support this.

Today we are talking about miners. Thousands of them are out of work and before many months have gone by it is likely that 20,000 of them will be unemployed. The essential reason why this should be the case has not yet been mentioned in the debate. There are periodical surpluses on the mineral markets of the world. They are cyclical, and the mining industry has always been able to cope with them. The difference is that today the taxation policy in effect is by no means the same as it was six years ago.

We had good mining laws in this country, as the expansion of the industry has demonstrated. Because mining is a risk enterprise no taxes were levied during the three-year period following the starting of a new mine. This enabled a rapid write-off of the heavy investment needed at the beginning of the enterprise. Moreover, a taxation level imposed on the mining industry was approximately 30 per cent as compared with some 45 per cent in the case of other industries. Special discrimination was made in the case of mining because of the risk factor and the exceptional difficulties encountered. As a result of these policies the industry was able to employ more and more men each year at relatively high wages.

Into this picture, the royal commission called the Carter Royal Commission was introduced. Its philosophy was that a buck is a buck—a man who believes in that philosophy is not very attracted to taking risks.

The government brought in a recommendation to the House that we should tax mines more heavily, but before the federal government could take action the western provinces of B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba tripled and then quadrupled their tax levels. This was in the years 1973, 1974. In 1974 the federal government gave its answer. In the two notorious Turner budgets the federal government refused to make these tripled and quadrupled taxes of the provinces deductible. In effect, it said, "You fellows have gone too far; you are taxing too much, so we are going to bring in a budget which does not accept a tax on your own resources—a tax you have a perfect right to implement—we will make them non-deductible". So in effect, Mr. Speaker, there was double taxation. That is the second point I want to make.

As a result of this double taxation, average taxation across the four western provinces of resource industries, particularly mining, instead of being 30 per cent as it had been traditionally, and about which the NDP members and the CCF before them complained continually, was increased to 85 per cent. Just think, Mr. Speaker, an 85 per cent tax load because of this quarrel between the federal government and the provinces.

Then in 1974 the government brought in the petroleum administration bill wich provided, in spite of the strongest opposition of members on this side of the House, that the federal government was going to control the prices of resource products passing across provincial borders. This was an interference with the constitution but, supported by members of the government, that became the law of the land. The federal government said that if the provinces could not agree on the price to be set, the federal government would impose a price unilaterally. Hon. members should read the debates of 1974 and the warnings which were issued from this side about what this would mean to the resource industry.

Now we have the decision which was handed down today by the Supreme Court of Canada; I have it with me. This will be a decision that Canadians will remember. The case was turned down at the Queen's Bench court level; it was turned down by all the judges of the Appeal Court in Saskatchewan. It was then taken to the Supreme Court of Canada, and even though all of the provinces were against this particular type of case because it interfered with their constitutional rights, in 1974 the federal government decided to intervene on behalf of the oil companies and to say that a provincial government had not the constitutional right to tax products which were produced out of its resources and shipped across a provincial border.

This interference with a basic constitutional right of a province is a landmark in Canadian history. We have adopted the American system of letting our courts decide what is the constitution, instead of the legislatures and the people of this country. It is a momentous decision. And it was not very pleasant for me today, having asked this question of the minister of justice in 1974, and having asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about this case on Friday, when I finally got the floor today to deal with a matter so vital to the national unity of this nation, that the Prime Minister deliberately got up and walked out. Immaturity is a disease suffered by many people; it is too bad to see it among prime ministers.

In 1974 the federal government made the decision to press its intervention before the Supreme Court. It pressed the court into this new direction of constitution making without referring the matter to the country. These are causes which all add up to the fact that now on the backs of the miners, not only in Sudbury but in B.C. and all across the country, the load falls. The chickens have come home to roost.

Not only are mines closing and employment is down, Mr. Speaker, but as the minister rightly pointed out, when you take away any prospect of getting a return on capital with these exorbitant tax levels which average 85 per cent, you force shareholders to move their capital to a place where they can make some money. It is not Indonesia that we should be worrying about. The fact is that companies in Ontario such as Stelco, Dofasco and Algoma last year moved to Wisconsin and Minnesota to mine expensive taconite at an expenditure of around $500 million when we can produce the ore at $15 a ton in Canada.

Why will the people of Canada, who will eventually have to buy this steel, have to pay this high price? Because the law relating to return on capital says that you cannot get a person to spend money unless he is going to make money. Unless, of course, you want to be socialistic and do it at twice the cost.

Although the mining industry is in a serious mess, Mr. Speaker, the difficulties are not insoluble. The tax level is too high. The goose is almost dead. Everyone is trying to grab the gold out of the goose and the goose, before he dies, is trying to stagger out of the country and recuperate.

But we do need answers, and we need them fast. First of all, we must end this silly squabble between the federal government and the provincial governments over who is going to take the most out of the goose. Secondly, we need new methods of financing. This is the responsibility not only of this government but of the companies themselves. It is all right to have long payouts when you have low interest rates and capital is easy to get. But now that capital is expensive and costs are many times greater, interest accounts for 75 per cent of the cost of running a mine in the early period. We must have quick payouts.

I have spoken on this matter many times in the House over the last four or five years, and although this has been true for many years, it has now become very significant. Under this proposal which I have been putting forward, a proposal which applies to a person who buys a house in this city as well as to a big capital intensive mine costing $150 million, we must get this money paid back fast and reduce the share going to interest to a percentage we can handle, say 10 per cent or 15 per cent of the total cost.

Thirdly, we need a national development policy. There is only one party in Canada which has never deviated from one of its primary purposes, and that is the P.C. of this country and its policy on national development. We know that development has to have the activist leadership of a government, not to run business, not to own plants, but to get things moving, especially in view of our geography, the nature of our markets and, above all, our transportation difficulties.

Because we are a northern country, we have to keep in mind the quality of life factor which is very important in developing the mining industry. As I look ahead for my country, Mr. Speaker, I know we will have at least four new industrial complexes in this country, in addition to the big one which we now have in the eastern townships of Quebec running through to Sarnia and Windsor. These new additional industrial complexes will be the Atlantic provinces; the Quebec-Ontario border area right across the north and the clay belt; the Alberta-B.C. banana-shaped industrial area based on land, resources and markets; and also the Saskatchewan-Manitoba cordillera, the land base, the water and so on.

I am not here to give the House a lesson on how to do this planning, Mr. Speaker. I am simply giving my best evidence in the form of an example. I want to conclude my contribution to this debate not with a feeling of pessimism at miners being laid off; this is going to continue no matter what the government does. This is the government's own fault with this double taxation to which I referred.

A week or so ago I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) about this, and he said "I know it is pretty tough and the rates are too high, but we do not tax as much as the provinces do". He did not even answer my question, Mr. Speaker. Now, when you get nincompoop answers like that, what are we to think of the calibre of the administration which we have? All this is on the backs of the miners today. They are paying the price and are now like the farmers who found over the last 50 years who always pays. This time it is the miners.

In conclusion let me give you one example of how I see this coming. I will use iron as my example. Iron is used in making steel, and to produce steel you must have water and energy. We only have three rivals in this whole business; the U.S.S.R.,

Brazil, and Australia. These are three countries, plus Canada, that have large reserves of iron, and in each case they have good reserves of water. We have the advantage in respect of energy.

We talk about developing the Atlantic provinces. I suggest there is not anything they cannot do, because they know they sit very close to one of the largest and richest mining deposits in the world. They know that these Atlantic areas of Quebec and Baffin Island are all in part of the Labrador trough. They know that the only place they can market this area from the top half of the Arctic islands is not down south into Ontario but must be from the sea around Baffin Island to the ports of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

With the energy, with the water, with the iron, and particularly with the new direct reduction plants we are starting to build now in Canada, the future of the Atlantic provinces is not dull. To give you an idea of what I am talking about in volume, the United States economy with 220 million people has been built up on 13 billion tons of iron in the Masabi range in Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Do you know what the reserves are for Canada? They are not 13 billion tons. The official reserves, as I have it here, show 35 billion tons, not 13 billion. That is not the figure that the Japanese give for these reserves; it is not the figure the Russians give for our reserves, or what the Germans give for our reserves. They know what we have got as a potential. Under our figures we show 35 billion tons, and the whole U.S. economy is built on 13 billion.

Our steel industry has paid higher wages per hour in Canada since 1961 than our competitors in Buffalo, Cleveland and Gary, Indiana. Our steel industry in Canada is producing a higher quality of steel at a lower price than our competitors across the line, and that is the fact. There is no need for restrictions because of our prowess, productivity, capital well spent, and workers well employed and well directed. There is a good feeling between the labour unions in Hamilton and management. It is not as good in other places, but it is good, and our industry is competitive with our U.S. competitor. We are having a little bit of a problem in competition with the Japanese. I simply point out that the answer is not in respect of wage levels, it is in respect of a combination of those things that make up productivity.

I mentioned a moment ago that the use of direct reduction plants is a big step forward. We have three now, and I think nine or ten should be in place in the next two or three years if we are to take advantage of this technology and because of our large amounts of energy.

The third matter I should like to mention in relation to basic supply and processing, and where these things should be, is the matter of investment. The Gordon Royal Commission over 20 years ago recommended that we set up a development corporation to help get mining investment and industries started in Canada. We have the Canada Development Corporation in place, but I would like you to name me a new mine with Canadian geologists, Canadian prospectors and investors, struggling to get going that ever received any help from the Canada Development Corporation. That corporation only invests in proven operations. We do need an incentive for investment during the early risk period if we are to give Canadians ownership of these resources.

I differ from the NDP. I want Canadian mines and oil wells owned by Canadians as individuals. We cannot do that without a proper policy of taxation, which means that if they do invest in these things they will not be double taxed through personal income tax, and that the mining companies they invest in will not be double taxed by governments fighting over the revenues of these mines. I would like to see Canadians, as individuals, own this country, as opposed to governments owning it or directing it. That should be included in an industrial strategy.

Before concluding let me give this additional bit of free information. Tariffs today are an obsolete technique between nations. GATT is purely a rich man's club trying to decide how much of the wealth of the new nations it will allow into its protected area. I have proposed, and I repeat again, that the technique of bargaining over the pennies of the tariff is like trying to milk a dried out cow. Sure, you can squeeze the odd drop out, but we are sending our best brains away for four or five years trying to squeeze out that dried up cow. That is all GATT is.

Let us take advantage of our resources in the form of basic supplies of iron, water and energy, and deal with these blocs; the European Common Market, the United States, Japan and any other group or single nation, on our growth rate of exchange.

I end my remarks in support of this motion as amended, to make it clear that we respect the provinces and will work with them, with a feeling of optimism that we are a strong and healthy country, and there is no need to be pessimistic. I am sure I have the right to say that the PC's have demonstrated before, and will again, that this is the only party that has a coherent and logical program to have this development go forward in a free enterprise mode. Thank you very much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like to put the amendment of the hon. member before his time has expired. That is why I signalled to him just before he concluded. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) moves:

> That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the words "industrial strategy" and substituting therefor the following:
> "including a reformed resource taxation policy, to preserve and expand employment and to promote further resource exploration, processing, and related manufacturing in Canada."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order simply to say that we have no objection to the amendment, either procedurally or in terms of substance.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speeches that have been made on the motion of the New Democratic Party. I wish to commend that party for bringing up such an important matter. However I must say that I am surprised at how lightly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is taking that matter. He readily admits that there is a problem in the mining industry.

Yet, in 1974, 1975 and 1976, as he mentioned, the situation may have been better than today, but every year a gradual deterioration in the mining industry was noted. Every year some new restriction was added, there were lay-offs and suddenly in an industry like INCO in Sudbury, there is a massive loss of 3,000 to 4,000 jobs.

When the Minister of Finance argues that the bad situation now prevailing in Canada is due to outside conditions, I would say that it was brought about by the poor performance of the minister and his officials. In fact the minister, his officials and their plethora of highly paid civil servants, economists and statisticians were not able to understand the situation and prevent the problem we are facing now.

It was said in the Speech from the Throne that, and I quote once more: ". . . high rates of unemployment and inflation are clear signals of the inadequacy of the economic strategies appropriate to simpler times . . .". It was in the Speech from the Throne. We are aware of that situation and what is the minister's response to the present problem in the mining industry? Absolutely nothing! He is good at laughing at others and sneering at other parties, but he is unable to make a valid suggestion. He admits that tax reductions and subsidies have been granted to mining companies and multinational corporations but—as everybody knows—instead of expanding their operations and increasing their production in Canada by investing in secondary industries they invested the money and extra profits in other countries, which means they are competing with Canadian industries and contributing to the reduction and elimination of jobs in this country.

If the government had been a little smarter in the past or if, at least, it could smarten up right now, subsidies and tax credits granted to those companies should at least be made subject to reinvestment in the manufacturing sector in Canada so that we could use the primary industry to obtain minerals, process them in this country, develop our industrial production at home and create jobs.

The minister has advised miners to look for employment elsewhere, and accept the principle of job mobility. He is even cynical enough to suggest that miners divide their working hours, reduce their wages and distribute them on the basis of four working days a week. This government has created the problem and now they say to the workers: It is up to you to solve your problem, it is up to you to work out agreements between yourselves. I would like to see the miners split their time and salary with the Minister of Finance, to see if he would accept that kind of offer. If he did, let him say so and let him actually do it instead of merely suggesting it to them! Manpower mobility! When the emphasis is on decentralization so that people in outlying areas may have jobs. So I come back once more to the government's attitude. How come the government did not use the grants and tax cuts given to corporations to get them to create secondary industries in mining areas? Northwestern Quebec is no exception. Today Noranda Mines is not mining anymore in northwestern Quebec. They only have a smelter that depends on section Horne in Noranda and other mines throughout the country. Although that plant had to lay off people, it still has 1,000 employees or so, even though it is facing competition from foreign countries, not because of material or smelting costs, but because of transportation costs to bring the material to the smelter. There are mines in western Canada, but they find it cheaper to send the material to Japan where it is smelted, because shipping costs are lower. So Canadian material is smelted in Japan, and the government does nothing to stop that and allow our smelters to smelt our own material. The government remains idle.

Recently, I urged the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to see to it that our mines get, not grants but special transportation rates for the material going to our smelters, so that we may save jobs in Canada. We are still waiting for an answer. In such matters, the government is in no hurry to answer. Mines were and still are forced to absorb a 21 per cent cost increase because of fringe benefits, anti-pollution expenditures that did not exist before. Smelters had to absorb extra production costs as high as to 10 per cent to invest in the environment. Those are real costs absorbed by the mines, by the smelters. The government is forcing them indirectly, to get more involved in the environment, but it gives them nothing in return except tax controls, double tax controls. It prevents them from operating on a sound basis. If there is some money to be made, the government does not hesitate. It overtaxes, it double taxes in some cases, when obviously royalties should be at the provincial rather than at the federal level. Because under the Canadian constitution, direct taxation should be at the provincial rather than at the federal level.

We know that the federal government has taken over the power of taxation, which is causing great problems to these companies today. However, when we consider these problems as a whole, is Canada short of mineral ores? Absolutely not. The Minister has just said that everything depends on foreign markets, that other countries are producing nickel, copper and gold, and that those countries are our competitors. Does the fact that other countries are producing minerals warrant dividing or reducing the workload of our people, our work potential? Definitely not. Those two things are unrelated. The simple truth is that we, as Canadians, have not been able, through our government, to develop our secondary industries to the same level as some other countries like Japan or Germany, countries which, we are all aware, were destroyed during World War II. They set up for themselves financial and economic systems which are different from our own to ensure the recovery of their economies. What are we waiting for, in Canada to change our economic system in order to put our own economy on the road to recovery? We have the skills, we have the brains to do this. The only missing factor is always the same: the money factor, the economic factor, which is the very basis of the economy.

As I said earlier, the unemployment and inflation rates clearly demonstrate that the economic methods which were established in a less complex era have now become obsolete. What alternative does the minister suggest in the address he has just made, in his crying about the New Democratic Party and the other opposition parties, what solutions, what economic changes does he suggest? Absolutely nothing. He does not get off the beaten path. What does the government do to stimulate investment in small and medium-size business? Absolutely nothing. However, in the mini-budget we find for example that these companies are allowed to invest more money in underdeveloped countries without any restriction, and that the government intends to give them more benefits so that they can invest even more money in those other countries. I am in no way against investment in third world countries but I think that some areas in Canada bear much similarity to the third world.

In some areas, 15 per cent are unemployed according to statistics on unemployment. Finally, the labour force is only 60 or 61 per cent. I will give an example in the province of Quebec. In my constituency of northwest Quebec, there are 14.4 per cent of unemployed and 59.8 per cent of working people. However, when you add up both, you get 74.2 per cent of the people either working or receiving some unemployment insurance. The remaining 25.8 per cent are unemployed and are no longer entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. Why are those people who are no longer contributing to production in Canada, not mentioned?

Why are they not included? They are unemployed. This means that there are almost 40.2 per cent of unemployed in an area such as the northwest. For the whole of Canada, the figure practically reaches 40 per cent. Suggestions have been made with regard to financing but no way has been sought or found to finance any new production with new funds and not only with loans as is the case now. Taxes! The Prime Minister can answer. Who is willing to lend money without interest? The Bank of Canada can create such credits based on production, not on the activities of chartered banks, not on our neighbours, but based on the Canadian production of natural resources, on the development of our own resources. When the government understands that the Bank of Canada can issue new credits according to our new rate of production, it will be wonderful. I think most members in general admit willingly that in spite of our problems, our national production still increases yearly.

Our production has been considerably reduced in the last few years, but it still increases. In view of this increase, we could issue new credits which could be distributed to create or to help medium and small businesses and the secondary industry, which would effectively enable our primary sector to operate and to develop our resources, not to export them to other countries as is the case at the present time, but to refine and transform them into finished products in Canada. Afterwards, the surplus of finished products could be offered on the international market. We would have then guaranteed our workers that they will be able to work in Canada.

That is the essence of the problem, Mr. Speaker, and these are the most valid answers to the problems now facing our primary sector. But the same is true for the Americans. I was a member of a parliamentary delegation some time ago and I was told in the United States that in that country the same attitude prevailed. Our government, our marvellous Liberal government has the same attitude. I was told in the United States that it is impossible to exert too much pressure on multinationals and large companies because then they will close their doors and there will be 800,000 more unemployed. Then what shall we do? We may well say: What are we to do? Well we must find means to solve this economic problem instead of copying others, especially our American neighbours.

I heard that the Islamic Bank allowed interest-free loans to countries where it operates. But the government is not intelligent enough to realize that instead of choosing to increase its debts, it would be well advised to ask the Islamic Bank how the interest-free loan system works. This method should be used and applied in Canada, and this would solve our real problems.

We finally come to the conclusion that the government is not interested in solving that problem. The only thing it is preoccupied with in this dilemma is finding a way of taxing somebody and if the problem persists, as it does, to wash its hands off the whole thing and say to the people that it is their fault. As in the case of miners for instance, they say: Not our fault, yours; share your work week with others and that will do it.

Mr. Speaker, that sums up what I had to say in concluding I would add that in the view of the Social Credit party, rather than doing things the way they have been done for years such as in 1974, 1975, 1976 and again this year—granting tax exemptions to these multinationals—the government should hand out that money to small and middle size businesses which would know how to develop the secondary sector which would in turn stimulate production within the primary sector and thus solve the problem which is now facing the mining industry in Canada.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know we are dealing today with mining industry, but since the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) opened his speech with some remarks about the manufacturing industry, I would like to answer some of them. He referred to other countries like Japan and some European countries where the manufacturing industry is doing a lot better than over here. I agree. Then he said the only thing Canada needs to achieve the same success as those other countries is a better monetary policy. I challenge him to prove to us that the monetary policy in Japan and the European countries he has referred to is in any way related to the Social Credit policy. I do not think he could. What they could teach us, and from which we could no doubt benefit, has nothing to do with monetary policy.

We could look at the suggestions he made yesterday for a monetary policy which aims at preventing the outflow of Canadian money without government's approval and all kind of red tape. That is not the solution and would only make the problem worse.

Those of us on this side of the House know very well that things are not going well in the economy. The mining sector is an example of one area in which things are not going very well.

One comes to the House on an opposition day ready to hear the ideas that the opposition would implement if they were in power, but when one hears about a new monetary policy of the sort which the Social Credit members described yesterday, one's reaction is, "no, thanks." That is my reaction to that. As to some of the ideas that have been put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and by the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), I would like to turn to some of them in the limited amount of time I have. The conclusion I come to is that we are better off not taking the advice that they have put forward.

Some have suggested, in their questions and comments in the House in the days past, that we could keep the miners working at their present level in Sudbury at INCO if we were prepared to begin stockpiling. Maybe it was done in the past in some other sectors, so they say, "Let us do it in this sector." I do not see that as any kind of solution to the problems that INCO is facing right now. On the contrary, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) indicated, that is the kind of approach that you can run with for just several months. There is $1 billion worth of nickel lying on the ground already, taken out by INCO. That is no solution because there is a limit to what the present weak Canadian economy can put in to support one particular sector.

The idea they put forward that somehow or other the developments in which Canadians are involved offshore are responsible for the problems we face at INCO has no connection. The solution does not lie in continuing forced production in a world which temporarily does not have any demand for the amount of nickel which can be produced.

The solution lies in ideas like the one suggested by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), job sharing. On the subject of job sharing I want to extend that concept a little further than it has been extended in this House so far. Job sharing is not relevant just to workers who have been laid off from a particular industry. I suggest that we ought to be looking into job sharing for the benefit of young people who are coming into the labour force and finding—temporarily, I again insist—that they cannot get good well paying jobs because the labour force, growing at a rate of over 200,000 new jobs a year, is just not growing fast enough to take them in. They have a claim to job sharing in the same way workers who are being laid off have a claim to job sharing.

I would like to see a little less respect from the NDP for the vested interests which exist for existing jobs, and a little more willingness to explore the kinds of solutions which a regrettably slow growing economy has to face. We must face up to the kinds of solutions which will provide employment for young people in tough times and which will make it easier for people who are about to be laid off. Stockpiling certainly is not the solution.

Hon. members of the NDP indicate that the Canadian government should not have helped Canadian companies like INCO to find business opportunities offshore. Taking that further, they say we ought to remove incentives and that we ought in fact to have positive disincentives in order to force Canadian industry to remain in Canada and not to go looking offshore.

Let us first look at our motivation for going offshore. We are going offshore partly because that is a responsibility developed countries have to developing countries. Developed countries must assist developing countries to realize their potential. We are also going offshore to find jobs for Canadian workers and to find profits for Canadian companies. Canada benefits when Canadian enterprises find offshore opportunities.

I visited a nickel project in Guatemala. I went through the plant and met the workers there. I saw a lot of Canadian equipment in that operation. If that Guatemalan project had been developed by some other country—as it inevitably would have been because it is a very good project—we would not see Canadian engineers working there and we would not see Canadian equipment going to the project to the extent we do. When Canadian companies go offshore, Canada benefits. The companies get extra profits, there is more manufacturing output for Canadian enterprises, and extra jobs are created for Canadian engineers who direct, organize, and get these projects off the ground. That is all to the good.

There was also some objection to foreign ownership. INCO is not a case of that, but it was argued that we ought to do more to promote Canadian ownership in the mining sector. I want to say a word about that because I am very strongly in favour of Canadian ownership. As much as anyone I recognize the dangers of heavy foreign ownership of certain sectors of the Canadian economy; for example, in manufacturing where there is a truncation and a fragmentation which take place because of the extent of foreign ownership. However, I would like to make it very clear that, in my opinion, foreign ownership is not a negative feature when it comes to mining. The mines are here in Canada. The identity of their owners and their nationality are very much less important than in any other sector.

I would go so far as to say that as much as Guatemala is prepared to welcome Canadian investors who want to come and see opportunities developed for the benefit of both sides, Canada should be prepared and should continue to be prepared to welcome foreign investors who want to come and support Canadian mining opportunities and see them developed. I do not think there is any negative side to it. I do not think Canada loses anything when the development of our mines takes place through foreign owners. It is not that we should not encourage Canadian ownership in the mining field. I do not want to take the time to describe the tax benefits and the allowances which are available to encourage Canadians, and which are not available to foreigners. We do what we can, but I do not think we should be worried about the extent of foreign ownership in the mining sector.

I want, in the remaining time at my disposal, to talk about taxation issues. The NDP made a great deal of the amount of incentive and encouragement the tax system has given to mining in Canada. When the Conservatives speak, they will no doubt emphasize the other side of it, the enormous burden—referred to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain—we place on the mining sector which prevents it from doing the kind of job it wants to do and which our resources justify.

On the one hand, the NDP says we have imposed too little taxation, and on the other hand, the Conservatives say that taxation has been a very serious burden for the mining industry. I want to suggest—and refer to some statistics—that the level of taxes imposed by the federal government is very much in line with the taxation other countries impose on their mining sectors. After all, that is the important thing. Investment in mining is very mobile. It is ready to go to countries which are ready to encourage it to come to them. I think it is extremely important for us to have a taxation system in the mining field which is comparable to the taxation systems which exist in other countries. I want to suggest that we do have that kind of system.

Let me refer to some evidence which was put before the Senate banking committee by the president of Noranda. He came to the Senate to complain about the very high level of taxation in the mining industry. As far as the federal government is concerned, I think he was laying a bum rap on us. He used the example of Brenda Mines in British Columbia. He hypothetically translated its activities for the year 1975—I believe it was—into what would have happened in Ontario and Nevada if that exact mining operation had been conducted in those places. He found that the over-all burden of taxation on profits was discouraging and, as he said, devastating, in Canada. I agree with him. I think the over-all aggregate level of taxation in Canada on the mining sector is very much too high, and I think that explains why new mines have been opening at a very slow rate in the last few years.

The actual tax burden Brenda paid that year in British Columbia was 71 per cent of its profit. If the Brenda mining operation for that year had been conducted in Ontario the burden of taxation would have been 49 per cent, while in Nevada the rate would have been 28 per cent. So to repeat, to keep the figures before the House, in British Columbia it was 71 per cent in that year; in Ontario, it would have been 49 per cent; and in Nevada, it would have been only 28 per cent.

Then the president of Noranda Mines did a further calculation. He indicated what the difference would have been if the prices of the product sold by the mine had doubled, costs unchanged, but prices doubled. He showed the results would have been worse. In British Columbia, instead of paying 71 per cent in taxes the company would have had to pay 83 per cent. In Ontario, instead of paying 49 per cent it would be 56 per cent, and in Nevada, the company, instead of paying 28 per cent, it would be 31 per cent. The president of Noranda called this burden incredibly perverse. It is obvious, with tax levels of 83 per cent, you would not have any new mines encouraged or any mining encouraged at all.

I might note that the burden of taxation in British Columbia was introduced by the NDP government which was defeated subsequently. To the extent it is still in the province, it is a legacy, an NDP policy.

Here we have the NDP saying we need a new industrial mining policy.

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Kaplan: I am glad they were not more specific about what the policy would have been, because if they had recommended the policy their colleagues in British Columbia actually introduced, with companies having to pay a rate of tax of 71 per cent, and as high as 83 per cent in the hypothetical case introduced by Noranda, you can imagine what kind of mining operations we would have in this country.

A point the president of Noranda Mines did not emphasize in his testimony was a comparison of where the taxes were being paid, what proportion was going to the federal government, and what proportion was going to provincial governments. He presented several charts with his evidence, but he did not refer to them very specifically in giving his testimony. The charts showed Canadian federal tax compared to American federal tax was within 10 per cent. There was only a 10 per cent difference between Canadian tax and the American federal tax on the Brenda Mines' operations of that year. Although the aggregate burden was 71 per cent in Canada versus 28 per cent in the United States, nearly triple the total, the Canadian tax was within 10 per cent. In the operation of the higher profits example he gave, Canadian federal taxation would actually have been lower than in the United States.

An hon. Member: How come you are not specific in these numbers?

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member has asked for specific numbers. I could table the charts if the House would allow me to do so. The Canadian federal tax is not particularly out of line. As I have indicated in the higher price example, it is lower. In the B.C. higher profit case, if Ottawa took no tax at all the burden on the company would still have seen more than double in British Columbia than in Nevada. In other words, Canada's federal tax on mining—and this is a conclusion from these figures—is no worse, and it is usually more favourable than tax in the United States.

The mining companies of Canada when they come to Parliament complain tremendously about their tax burden. They are entitled to complain because the burden is too high but it is not a matter that the federal government can cure. In the case of new oil prices, a company, with profits, which does maximum exploration here in Canada, can reduce its federal tax rate to 4 per cent of its total taxable income.

An hon. Member: Nonsense. Where do you manufacture those prices?

Mr. Kaplan: Federal taxes on oil can be reduced to 4 per cent. On hard rock, as I have indicated, they are well within line of the level of taxation in the United States.

Members opposite, particularly the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, made a case out of the fact that the royalty deductibility was disallowed by the federal government. That sounds fairly serious. It did increase the tax burden they pay to the provinces. What has to be borne in mind is that natural resources are primarily provincial assets. The provinces are entitled to royalties from these assets. They are also national resources, and the federal taxpayers, as a whole, are as entitled to draw some federal revenue from those enterprises as they are from any other businesses that are conducted in this country.

Take the example of the province of Alberta, and the members opposite from Alberta can stand up to try to defend the Alberta government on this point. It tried to cut out the share to which the federal taxpayer is entitled from oil revenues. That just could not be accepted by the federal government representing federal taxpayers as a whole.

An hon. Member: We do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Kaplan: Hon. members say I do not know what I am talking about, but they can stand up when their turn comes and try to make their case.

I think there is a lot to be done to encourage the mining industry, particularly the hard rock mining industry. But, it is a bum rap to try to argue that the federal government has a disincentive tax policy, Mr. Speaker, because it does not.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am going to make some remarks on this motion which is very good indeed and which is further reinforced by the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I think it completes a motion which highlights a tremendously interesting subject, given the situation in which we are now.

Of course I read carefully the motion which:

. . . condemns the lack of action by the federal government to prevent the serious loss of jobs in Canada's mineral industry . . .

To be less severe, I would not say that the government did absolutely nothing but that what it did is far from being sufficient, and this was proved, I think. We on this side believe it would be a very good idea to call in the provinces and to cooperate with them, leaving them of course some responsibility in the establishment of the priorities which could be coordinated by the efforts of a federal government, through the establishment of an industrial strategy, of a long term policy which could only improve the situation.

I also listened carefully to the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who seems, as a matter of habit, to accept the situation. Making a series of comparisons he explained that in view of the efforts of the federal government, we should be satisfied with the present situation. Besides, by mentioning the reduction of the work week to four days, I feel that he has just given proof of his government's inability to get us out of the doldrums, as far as the mining industry is concerned. In fact I think that if we agree in principle that we should ask the labour unions and the workers for work sharing status, it automatically proves that the federal government is really determined to maintain the million of unemployed which we have now in this country.

To such comments, we say: No! An unequivocal no, and we believe that this government has failed in this area, as well as in many others. We share the government's desire to help other countries, but we believe that the Canadian worker and the Canadian industry are entitled to a reasonable degree of protection. We also share this idea of giving Canadians a chance to work abroad, to be better known outside Canada but that some leading Canadians ought not to be forced to go into exile to work, which is exactly what is happening at this time.

Under the present circumstances, I repeat that this motion is very timely and that it brings about our deep concern about the layoffs taking place in the mining sector. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) and the Minister of Finance have suggested that there could be more. We know perfectly well that in the province of Quebec and in other provinces, we must expect other layoffs which, once more, will increase the unemployment rate. Personally, I believe that there has been a failure which we, on this side of the House condemn: a lack of communication between the federal government and the business community, the employers, the workers and the provinces. In our system, there is no way out unless we can rely upon the collaboration and the understanding from business, labour and the provincial governments. I think this is the solution for a government which will decide to be more open and responsible in those very important fields of our economy in order to solve the present problems we are facing in the mining industry. But this lack of consultation and communication is the direct consequence of the situation which is now prevailing. We are concerned that our low productivity and our high wages may reduce our competitive power and leave us trailing behind other countries. What has this government done to make both industry and labour aware of the dangers which may occur if we do not reach a good level of communication and sincere co-operation in the most important fields, with regard to our long-term policies.

In the remarks he made earlier, the Minister of Finance recognized that we were in a very difficult situation, which seemed to surprise him. He tried to bring us to his viewpoint by telling us: "We are prepared to do something but, after all, a whole series of events took place and brought about this situation." And we, of course, in a spirit of fair play, could perhaps say to the Minister of Finance: we hold you to your word and we will forget the past, the faults, the failure, the weaknesses of your policies and particularly the lack of those, and we will start thinking as you do, that better days are ahead. I think that we should regret, deplore and condemn the government for this lack of market studies, for this failure to work together as I mentioned a while ago, and to co-operate with representatives of all sectors of the economy who could help the government bring about a recovery. A government that would be thinking otherwise certainly could not get the confidence of the members of this side of the House. It is impossible to have any confidence in this government, because of its regrettable attitude which is responsible for the situation we are experiencing now.

Somebody spoke about the drain of capital, there again, it would have been necessary to bring around to the same table investors and managers and explain to them the importance of reinvesting a percentage of their profits in a secondary or a processing industry. Once again there is a lack of contact with the business community, Mr. Speaker, and we easily realize the reluctance of the businessman today. He is waiting to see what will be the long-term policy of the government. The Minister of Finance replied to a question of mine concerning the advisability of holding a meeting of the Ministers of Finance more especially from the Maritimes and Quebec: "Well, I am always ready to welcome them." But he has made no effort to call a meeting to correct the economic conditions and imbalance in the Maritimes, Quebec and the rest of the country.

I feel that the government was wrong not to grant funds for research. As I said a few days ago, Senator Lamontagne recently blamed his government for failing to allot sufficient funds for research. Of course, some are always asking for further expenditures, but the lack of research is, in my opinion, responsible for the conditions which we are now experiencing.

I think that this lack of adequate funds has kept the government from drafting and presenting a long term policy. This lack of adequate funds has also prevented the government from urging certain basic or traditional industries in the mining sector and in others to modernize and improve the Canadian industry and to foresee the relevant markets and changes. This lack of research has also stopped the creation of new products which were increasingly required; research and new product designs were left to a neighbouring country and we were content to play second fiddle.

Again, this lack of research has made Canadians and businessmen unsure of the stability of our Canadian industry. The government is to be blamed for failing to come up with a prevention policy. Ministers one after the other since the opening of this session admit that we are in a difficult situation, they regret and deplore the present situation, they are seeking our confidence and they are asking us to regain public confidence, but this lack of prevention must be very severely condemned, Mr. Speaker, and I think we must remind the government that it is impossible to renew this confidence, which the government requests despite this incredible shortcoming, through a lack of foresight when it is very well known that to govern is to see ahead, Mr. Speaker. In these circumstances, the government has been seen making incredible efforts in the application of social legislation.

Everyone knows and all Canadians know that the government, through its public servants and experts, has been satisfied to invent social legislation to try to compensate for the lack of courageous or positive policies and initiatives for our Canadian industries. Of course, there has also been reference to the considerable sums distributed or approved by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. We are not saying that this department has not made any efforts, but once again, was its main objective not to eliminate regional disparities? What are the results, Mr. Speaker? We are still waiting for the beneficial effects of these expenditures and of this policy which had given us so much hope.

The minister today is talking about the essential issue, that is an industrial strategy. Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that in the last 20 or 25 years, and especially in the last 10 years, the present government has not deemed appropriate to develop the industrial strategy which has become essential today when the country is in an economic stagnation because of the lack of government responsibility over the last 10 years. This is where this government has brought us, Mr. Speaker. All the action which has been taken until now has caused major disappointments, and after 10 years we must recognize that we may have 10, 15 or 20 difficult years ahead of us before we can rectify the situation. And we are now told that Canada needs an industrial strategy. I believe that we have every reason to condemn the government for not having developed a prevention policy and for not providing the Canadian industry with a minimum of protection for the Canadian worker. This has been the case in the mines lately and we are now making tremendous efforts in this area.

I recently asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) to call a meeting with his provincial counterparts as soon as possible. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) told us that this meeting would probably take place within four days. Once again, the opposition had to insist on such a vital matter as to have him meet his provincial counterparts and together with the provinces to provide some assistance.

We hear about a national development policy. Earlier, my colleague made a fine statement and stressed the importance and necessity of a national development policy for the transportation of finished products. Regional development: at one point, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) emphasized that some sectors are sorely under-developed. It is obvious that the tax incentives that could be offered to those industries which really want to expand are important. We support all such solutions and proposals whereby the government helps those sectors facing problems. Some sectors, Mr. Speaker, as everybody knows, face problems, particularly in the field of transportation or in areas remote from the large centres. Yet the government did not see fit to consider drawing up a special transportation policy in order to help those industries to get their finished products to the large markets at competitive prices compared to other industries located closer to the large centres. But I think one has to remind the government of these proposals.

In conclusion, I stress once again, Mr. Speaker, the urgency of adopting such a policy, a long-term policy, an industrial strategy, a national development policy for the mining sector and many other sectors. We will surely have the opportunity to deal with other sectors. It is essential to restore an economic balance between the Maritimes, Quebec and the rest of the country. As shown by the last unemployment figures, Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that in the sectors facing the greatest hardships, the number of unemployed keeps increasing. Then, it seems obvious to me that the members on the other side should urge the government to realize how important it is to have a national development policy in those sectors that are especially hard hit.

I know my friends opposite from Quebec. They believe this is due to the political climate in Quebec, as if everything had started on November 15 of last year, Mr. Speaker, while they know very well that the Liberal premier of the time was just as concerned. I notice that the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) will not take part in this debate as usual, yet his region is affected by the motion now under consideration. When I think of this Quebec member, I believe he should express his disappointment at the lack of worthwhile measures by his own government. I am speaking of the hon. member for Frontenac who, as usual, will not say a word, like many others who are hiding behind the Prime Minister who, after all, is the one to blame for the problems we are facing now and will face for several years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my friends will finally take up the challenge, assume their responsibilities and promote the interests of a province which is suffering and facing unbelievable hardships because the federal government fails to understand provincial and regional aspirations. They must be listened to and the situation corrected through the efforts of a government respectful of the provinces. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I express the hope that our appeal will be heard.

Mr. Côté: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. member for Joliette. I want to make sure he is not misleading the House because I have some doubts in this regard.

The hon. member for Joliette referred to Senator Lamontagne and said he had blamed the government. Did he have a private conversation with Senator Lamontagne, since he mentioned his name, or was he simply quoting an interpretation from a paper? If it was a private conversation, I take it for granted that the hon. senator really blamed the government. But if this is an interpretation, I think that the member has misled this House as I have already heard him do.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the hon. member for Verchères right now.

An hon. Member: Not for Verchères but for Richelieu.

Mr. La Salle: Yes, for Richelieu. I apologize but as he does not often take the floor, I had forgotten the name of his riding. I will first tell him that I did read Senator Lamontagne's report in which he expresses concern for the lack of funds to research and I think that the hon. member for Richelieu had better read that report. He would become aware of and would support me when I blame the government for its paltry funding to research.

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has just said, I will refrain from rhetoric and stick to the point. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on the problems INCO mining is facing in Sudbury and Thompson. To start with, I would like to remind the House that the Minister of Employment and Immigration and his senior officials lost no time in making specific federal services and programs constantly available to the workers and the industry.

As soon as INCO corporation's difficulties were known, senior officials from the Employment and Immigration Commission attended a meeting in Toronto, on October 25 which was also attended by INCO management and union representatives to study the question of the impending lay-offs announced by INCO. That company had announced that it intended to lay off some 2,800 workers in Sudbury, Ontario and 650 others in Thompson, Manitoba. Later, on October 31, officials from the Employment and Immigration Commission of Canada met with representatives from that corporation and from the labour union in Winnipeg to conduct a specific study of the situation in Thompson. Officials from the Ontario government attended the Toronto meeting while officials from the Manitoba government attended the Winnipeg meeting.

The purpose of those meetings was two-fold. First it aimed at ascertaining whether those forthcoming lay-offs were of a temporary or permanent nature. The second was to find the best ways for the Canadian government and the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission in particular to help solve the problems arising out of the proposed lay-offs. The commission officers therefore outlined the various programs and services that could be used by the workers involved, which I will now review. In the first place we have employment services, and in this case special arrangements are made to increase the normal services, in order that offices in the communities faced with lay-offs are made aware of the jobs available in various mines throughout the country. More specifically, the manpower consultative service closely cooperates with industry to give as fast and efficient service as possible.

In cases where lay-offs are notified, special committees have been or can be set up through the MCS to launch joint employer-employee efforts to determine the most adequate solutions to the unemployment problem. In particular, this could determine the most appropriate ways to use and coordinate programs and other forms of department help to solve the current problems. In July 1977, Employment and Immigration Canada thusly found jobs for 1,400 miners.

Let us now turn, Mr. Speaker, to mobility grants. They can be given to jobless workers who need help to locate where employment opportunities exist. The mining industry has benefitted to a significant degree from the manpower mobility program. Some 34 per cent of workers who relocated under the program in 1974-75 found jobs in other mines. Only 4.4 per cent left mining, a significant gain to the mining industry.

We have also offered our training programs. They can be dispensed to unemployed miners wishing to acquire new skills in related or different jobs. In 1974-75, $2,100,000 or 5.7 per cent of the total help under the Manpower Canada industrial training program were granted to mines, quarries and oil well workers.

As the Minister of Employment and Immigration pointed out from the outset of his representations, we will also have our direct job creation programs. The usual type of projects provided by Canada Works could not be the best form of help for the highly skilled mine workers but could undoubtedly provide employment for certain less skilled workers. A much more substantial and important contribution could come from the job creation projects available to other people in the community whose incomes and stability of employment would be adversely affected by the reduced activity of the mining industry itself.

There is also unemployment insurance, Mr. Speaker, which is obviously the most direct and immediate way of dealing with the problem of the income of the unemployed. Nor should it be forgotten that the latest statistics for the second quarter of 1977 show that about 9,000 claimants had previously been employed in mines or related operations. During the meetings held in Toronto and Winnipeg, the management of INCO indicated its intention of co-operating fully in the help that could be provided so the relocated workers could find other jobs. As a matter of fact, since those meetings took place management representatives and labour union leaders continued their collective bargaining and employment and immigration senior officials were kept informed of the proceedings. For example, management made an inventory of available workers and their skills. It helped identify other businesses which would be interested in recruiting INCO workers. Similarly, it arranged interviews for that purpose and gave time off to the workers involved. Talks were also held to make training programs available to INCO workers which could use them to find new jobs.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the INCO management and the union representatives have studied the possibility of cutting down the number of lay-offs through early retirement. As everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission has introduced a new work-sharing program but the company and the union did not see fit to carry discussions any further, at least for the time being.

The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission is following up the situation at INCO, which includes conversations between company and union representatives and the action of the Ontario government. In fact, the Ontario legislature created a special committee to study the situation and report on actions to be taken to offset the numerous lay-offs which are contemplated by INCO. One can see, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government has been involved in a common effort with company, union and provincial government spokesmen to settle as quickly and as efficiently as possible all problems regarding the lay-offs considered by INCO. I must say that had the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) been ready to help the government, he should have taken this opportunity to be more positive.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in participating in this debate I first of all listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) outline the only solution which the government has come up with in regard to the lay-offs specifically in the mining industry and indeed in the entire resource sector. This proposal was reiterated by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). The proposal involved work-sharing.

It is very obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the ministers of this government do not even talk to each other, and needless to say their parliamentary secretaries are treated just like the back benchers on the government side of the House. They very well know that the proposal regarding work-sharing was immediately tossed out when it was proposed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) to INCO and Falconbridge. It was suggested that work-sharing be adopted by INCO and Falconbridge in connection with the lay-offs at Sudbury, Port Colborne, and at Thompson, but the whole concept of work sharing was thrown out. In effect, INCO and Falconbridge told the minister in no uncertain terms that these lay-offs are going to go beyond one year and that they do not know beyond one year whether the men would ever be recalled.

The hon. member for York Centre also talked about work-sharing as being the coming solution to our unemployment problem. I am waiting for the hon. member for York Centre to start sharing his job with an unemployed miner. Perhaps if we had enough unemployed miners sharing the jobs of Liberal members we would get some mineral policies in this country.

I had a very remarkable morning, Mr. Speaker. First of all I spoke to the Canadian Paperworkers Union's annual convention in the city of Toronto. Many members were there as delegates to that convention from the province of Quebec, Atlantic Canada, the west coast, and the province of Ontario. After speaking to that convention I had another meeting this morning which was rather significant. I had a meeting with the president of Falconbridge Nickel Mines, Mr. Marsh Cooper, with respect to the particular situation in the Sudbury basin vis-à-vis the employees at the Falconbridge operation.

As I flew back to Ottawa this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I thought about the resource industry of Canada, and what came to my mind immediately was a speech, which I thought I had seen somewhere before, by a Mr. Henry S. Wingate, who had been the Chairman of the Board of the International Nickel Company of Canada. He made a speech on February 18, 1971, and I should like to read a part of the speech to the House because I think it is very significant. If I may quote him, he said:

"The unusual capacity of the mining industry to create wealth for an economy, to literally turn what was once rock or dirt into a valuable metal, and in the process to generate jobs and a large number of supporting industries, needs to be more fully understood by the public generally and by government officials".

In other words, God created INCO and INCO created the nickel in Sudbury and Thompson.

Before I went north to the Nickel Belt in 1962, I was part of the great mass of the Canadian people who had always taken the resources of Canada for granted. I did not appreciate the implications of those resources, and in particular the non-renewable resources. It was only after living in the Nickel Belt for some time and seeing the miners at work and listening to them that I understood the nature of the mining industry.

Living in the Sudbury Basin almost at the confluence of two major railroads going east-west and north-south, we are always aware of the north-south traffic. We see the ore cars taking out iron ore, nickel and copper pellets on their journey south, and this same railway system bringing back into the north finished products to be sold to the residents of the northern communities. Those thoughts were with me as I contemplated our non-renewable resources.

One of the things we must keep in mind is that extracting resources from the ground is a very capital intensive operation. That was the first conclusion I came to after seeing it in operation in the Nickel Belt. Indeed, on checking with Statistics Canada I discovered that to create one job in the extractive process, in other words taking the ore out of the ground, it costs $200,000. It cost that much just to put one job in the extractive process into place.

On the other hand, to create one job in the manufacturing, secondary sector of the mining industry it costs $40,000. We immediately come to the conclusion, therefore, that when those resources are taken out, and I have said this in the House many times in the past, these resources are the key to unlocking other sources of wealth for not only this generation of Canadians, but for future generations.

In other words, if we are to get the benefit of these non-renewable resources we must take the capital generated from the sale of them and ensure that it is invested in establishing an infrastructure which will put into place secondary manufacturing industries related to the primary. I have asked myself, is that being done in the Sudbury Basin?

I was born and raised in a Third World country and saw Alcan exploit the bauxite resources of Guyana. Alcan then put the bauxite on ships and brought it to Arvida on the St. Lawrence where it was manufactured into aluminum. I lived with that, but I have come to one of the most progressive countries in the world, and I am very proud to be part of it, and lo and behold I find that in 1977, and this has been going on for nigh on 50 years, Falconbridge Nickel still ships out the nickel matte—that is the product after semi-processing—to Norway where the company has its refinery, and it is there refined into a finished product and presumably sold back to Canada.

I do not understand how a progressive government with any sort of policy in respect of the non-renewable mineral sector of this country would ever have permitted that situation to exist for so long. Indeed, it was surprising to hear the Minister of Finance say to my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), a few minutes ago that he agreed with us that we needed an industrial strategy. I would ask who has formed the government for the last 18 years? Indeed, which party has been the government for the last 40 years, or for the greater part of the last 50 years? I suggest it has been of the same political stripe as those sitting in those seats now.

How much longer must we wait for a strategy that makes the maximum use of the non-renewable resource sector? Indeed, the way those resources are being depleted it is shameful, an absolutely crying shame, to see INCO and Falconbridge at this point in time high-grading the ore, and that means taking out the highest quality ores now at the lowest labour cost because they bring the highest price. It is shameful on the part of this government that permits multi national corporations to rape us and carry on as though they had no responsibility whatsoever for the interests not only of this generation of Canadians but of future generations.

I can understand the reluctance of the Liberals and Conservatives to tackle the multinational mining corporations or to take them to task. I can understand how they can become the apologists, Mr. Speaker. The answer is very clear to anyone who has the time to dig out and read the information. This comes when we see the report of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada. We find, for example, that the International Nickel Company of Canada Limited donated in the last year $30,885, to be exact, to the Conservative Party of Canada. Noranda Mines gave the Liberals and the Conservatives equally—they back both horses in the race—$16,000 each. Algoma Steel and Denison Mines gave $15,000 to each of those parties. When we look at the entire resource sector we find that every major company has rewarded the two old line parties.

Mr. Paproski: What about the unions?

Mr. Rodriguez: I have become cynical in this House. I do not expect a thrust in the direction of establishing a policy regarding the exploitation and development of the non-renewable mineral sector of our country.

It is important that we put into context the importance of the market that Canada has and the part that Canada plays in respect of world minerals. Having regard to nickel, we are responsible for 33 per cent of the world's production. Just a few short years ago, to be exact in 1974, we were producing for the world 38 per cent of the world's share of nickel. That has now dropped to 33 per cent. It is not soft markets, of which the Minister of Finance spoke, that are creating our problem. It is fairly obvious we are losing our share of the world's market for nickel.

In terms of world production, in the area of zinc we produce 27.5 per cent, in asbestos it is 40.2 per cent, and in copper it is 10.8 per cent. It is also significant that while the government has made attempts at studying a mineral policy for Canada, I dug up a report that was issued by the federal and provincial resources ministers entitled "Towards a Mineral Policy for Canada." In this paper it states:

—mineral policy must maintain its general goal of obtaining the best benefits for Canadians from minerals.

My question would be, has the government set out the goals very clearly and are they known to the multinational mining companies? This brings me to my interview this morning with Mr. Marsh Cooper. One of my first questions was whether the government had approached Falconbridge in order to sit down and discuss what Falconbridge's plans are from here on in with respect to the nickel and copper industries in the Sudbury Basin? Mr. Cooper's answer was, "Not at all; not at all". There has been no communication between the senior level of government in this country and the Falconbridge Nickel Mines that could determine the future lives of so many of our people.

Furthermore, in discussing the matter with Mr. Cooper, he said exactly what the apologists for the mining companies have said, and what was said by the hon. member for York Centre, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), that if INCO did not go into Indonesia and Guatemala some other company would. Well, I have to put a question to the government. Maybe these are very good goals for INCO and Falconbridge. Market dominance in lateritic nickel ores is an excellent goal for the private sector, but I would ask what are the goals of Canada in respect of its mineral resources? Are INCO's Falconbridge's goals the goals for Canadians? Is what is good enough for INCO and Falconbridge good enough for us?

It should be pointed out that 1974 was a good year for INCO. Its net profit was $300 million. One would assume and expect that the Company recognizes the need for investment and diversification of industry in Canada, and would plough back the bulk of those profits into Canadian development. What did INCO do with $242 million of that profit? It bought a battery company, ESB. As a result of that INCO is before the courts in the United States for infringing the monopoly legislation there. That is a perfect example of money earned in Canada being used to diversify the company's base by buying out a company which already exists, and not investing that money in Canada in a new industry which would create employment.

I raised the following point with Mr. Cooper today: it has been indicated that Falconbridge is doing so poorly on the stock market and in the sale of nickel that it has to lay off workers in the Sudbury Basin, and yet Falconbridge Mines, McIntyre Mines, its parent company; Superior Oil of Texas, its grandparent company, along with Noranda Mines, have signed an agreement with the government of Chile to invest $1 billion over the next five years in the strip mining of copper in northern Chile. How does that help Canadian unemployment at this time when that investment is needed here so badly? We are saying that foreign investment should come into Canada, and yet we have Canadian investors using moneys earned from Canadian resources to invest in the southern United States, Chile, and all over the world.

In St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, Alcan has closed down an entire community. It was not because its fluorspar mine was not making profit, rather it was not making enough profit. They closed that mine down and intend to go to Mexico where they will purchase fluorspar from Noranda Mines which has a fluorspar mine there. Canadians are fed up with being used as a pawn in an international chess game which the multinational corporations play.

This morning I spoke to the convention of the Canadian Paperworkers Union. Prior to my speech I saw a film entitled "Tembec", for the umpteenth time. The International Paper Company was going to close down one of its operations resulting in the laying off of workers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity today to join in this debate on a very important topic. I commend the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) for putting the matter of the implementation of an effective mineral resource industrial strategy before the House for the purpose of having a day long debate.

Before getting into what I have to say, I should like to comment on one or two of the points made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). He is always a very provocative speaker, and for this reason one is tempted to react to some of the things he says. I do not want to argue for or against the concept of multinationals. However, he might well bear in mind the number of jobs that have been provided for Canadians over decades now as a result of capital that has been brought into this country, and as a result of developments that have been made in Canada by companies that perhaps have not been owned 100 per cent by Canadians, indeed where the majority of the ownership may have been outside the country. It may not be the best way for us to be doing business, but I think we must bear in mind that many Canadians today owe their livelihood to the fact that the multinationals have been here and have been established.

Whenever the hon. member for Nickel Belt quotes these large figures relating to the profits of multinational corporations, as do his colleagues in the NDP, he always refrains from talking about the returns on investment. Three hundred million dollars may be a great deal of money, but he does not tell us what percent of the capital it represents. Is the $300 million a 10 per cent, a 20 per cent or more profit on the money invested? These are the things that must be brought into play when one talks about profits, whether they are excessive or too little. The sum means nothing until you know what kind of money has been invested by the company in question.

An hon. Member: Perhaps you can tell us.

Mr. Martin: I was not the one to raise the point. I was merely saying members opposite have a responsibility, when they are talking about excessive profits, to relate the figures they quote to the capital that has been invested in the first place.

During the two year period when I was chairman of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works I found it regrettable that we were never able to undertake in the committee any kind of study of the mineral resource base in this country. I think it is the responsibility of that committee to get into this area at some point. The reason we were not able to do this is that we were preoccupied with matters relating to energy, and I am afraid the committee might continue to be preoccupied with these matters in the coming year. It has been pointed out by a number of Canadians interested in the activities of our committee that indeed we should be looking at matters relating to our mines and national resources other than those more typically associated directly wth the energy picture.

Again I welcome the opportunity of this debate on this subject and I hope we can find a mechanism in our parliamentary system to have far more discussion in this area since it is so fundamental to our over-all Canadian industrial strategy. This is a very complex issue and the implementation of a mineral resource industrial strategy for Canada involves not only the jurisdiction of the provinces over their mineral resources, as provided under the BNA Act, but also the federal government's jurisdiction in a number of joint federal and provincial areas.

The government recognizes that the Canadian minerals industry is indeed a strong and very basic industry, and it appreciates its responsibility in international trade as a secure and stable supplier of metals and minerals. The federal government, in acting in particular through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in co-operation with other departments, such as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Finance, the Department of External Affairs and, to some extent, the office of Federal-Provincial Relations, has been carrying out a great many studies in this area.

In addition to direct consultation with Canadian mining companies, the government's actions have involved numerous contacts with the provincial governments, the Mining Association of Canada, and the National Advisory Committee on the Mining Industry. At present there is an interdepartmental committee headed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, which has formed a task force with the Mining Association of Canada to study the problems of the mining industry in Canada and to make recommendations thereon.

Mineral development in Canada and throughout the world depends ultimately on market considerations. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) amplified on that this afternoon when he was discussing problems with relation to nickel and in particular, expectations respecting future market trends.

The cyclical nature of supply and demand in the international market place plays a very important part in the decision-making process as to whether to develop various ore deposits and the commitment of required investments into such developments. Similarly, the rate of consumption must determine the rate of production in any given market condition, and the situation today in many mineral commodities is indeed—as we are finding with regard to nickel—one of over-supply, with massive inventories overhanging world markets. This condition is further complicated by the continuation of high production rates by some developing countries which rely heavily on their exports of metals and minerals for foreign exchange earnings.

Mr. Rodriguez: Tell us about taxes and profits.

Mr. Martin: Until recently production in Canada has been maintained at fairly high levels in order to maintain employment in the communities which depend on it, and again I admit to the hon. member for Nickel Belt that the problem in Sudbury is serious, but he knows, as we all do, that 85 per cent of the work force up there is still very gainfully employed in the INCO project. I think it is important to look positively on what is going on, but we are at the same time concerned about the problems of those who are about to be laid off.

In the light of foreseeable consumption trends it has now become necessary to adjust production levels in line with the lower level of demand and to accomplish an orderly reduction of inventory. This has had a very hard impact on employment, not only in Canada but also in most countries which have been forced to take similar action. Some examples are Australia, the United States, and various countries in Europe.

The federal government has developed a number of trade policies which hopefully are benefiting the minerals industry. In this regard the government has directed that Canada participate with other interested countries, including producers and consumers, in an examination of the problems associated with commodities such as minerals, with a view to elaboration of appropriate mechanisms to stabilize markets. For this reason Canada has become a key participant in a number of forums such as the UNCTAD, the International Lead-Zinc Study Group, the Law of the Sea Conference, and the OECD, where the present and future health of the mineral industry will be advanced.

The federal government announced its policy on the further processing of resources prior to export, including mineral resources, in 1973. The objective of the policy is to process surplus natural resources prior to export wherever processing would be internationally competitive and compatible with the development of a sound industrial structure. This policy is still being actively pursued in consultations with the provinces and with industry through federal policies respecting trade and industrial development.

The foreign investment review process and regional economic expansion are two other areas where these consultations are going on, and there is active involvement in endeavouring to maintain and develop a sound industrial structure. Where processing is hindered by measures such as tariff and non-tariff measures of foreign countries which discriminate against Canadian further processed resource exports, we are seeking to negotiate substantial reductions or elimination of the effects of such measures, in both multilateral negotiations and in other appropriate ways.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has always recognized the tremendous importance of the metals and minerals sector to Canada's prosperity and export earnings, and has encouraged aggressive market activities on the part of Canadian producers and exporters, both by the mounting of trade missions to major marketing areas and through the services of the trade commissioners in posts around the world.

Recognizing that the present depressed state of world markets for most metallic mineral products will bring about further reductions in production levels, the government has made arrangements for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the federal-provincial relations office to initiate discussions with the provinces where, after all, control over mineral resources still remains in so many ways. The government is also concerned with the development of a code of practice as to lay-offs in areas of federal jurisdiction in Canada and, accordingly, has initiated action in this regard with appropriate departments.

Throughout the sharp recession and prolonged and incomplete recovery in world demand, Canadian industry has sustained a higher level of output and investment than most industrialized countries. But, in the last few years it has felt the stress of rising costs of energy, materials and labour. Overhead costs have climbed because of the underutilization of capacity. In this situation some of the structural weaknesses, inherent in any changing economy, have become more obvious and more serious.

Recognizing the debilitating effects of inflation on industrial performance, the government has led the nation through a period of restraint in prices, wages, profits, and government expenditures. In preparing for the post-control period the government has confirmed its reliance on market forces and co-operation in the declaration "The Way Ahead"—I am sure hon. members from all parties have read that closely—and elaborated these principles in "An Agenda for Co-operation". At the same time the government has set the stage for recovery and investment with its spring budget, initiating inventory allowances, and increasing investment credits and other incentives to invest, which it is to be hoped will be passed by parliament in the very near future.

Meanwhile there has been an intensive examination of the performance and potential of individual industry sectors. These are being developed in collaboration with consultative groups of businessmen and are leading to the identification of market opportunities and the potential for specialization and other avenues to increase efficiency and competitive capacity. At the same time the difficulties of adaptation to meet increasing international competition, for some products and industries, are being identified.

The examination of industry sectors has underlined the impact of the many other policies and programs of governments and private institutions on their efficiency and competitive ability. Not only specific industrial grants and incentives, but broader government policies relating to taxation, trade relations, transportation and resource development, have major effects on a wide range industrial operations. At the same time policies of both the federal and provincial governments, establishing standards for the private market place, and providing greater social equity, which I am sure the member for Nickel Belt is interested in, have a cumulative impact on the cost of business operations and investment.

In summary, the government has taken major steps to improve the environment for industrial operations and investment as international markets recover.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on a point of order.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman speaking permit a question, please.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Rodriguez: I recognize him as a very generous member, he being the representative of my parents in Scarborough West.

Would the hon. member agree, Mr. Speaker, that between 1962 and 1975 the return on capital on metal mining averaged 13.5 per cent, which compares to 10.8 per cent for all other industries in Canada?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to agree or disagree with that quotation. I will take it as read. However, when my colleague from Nickel Belt indicates a 13 per cent return on investment, he did not say whether it was before or after taxes. I am assuming that it is after taxes, and if he compares that with 10 per cent in other areas, if you consider the substantial risks and heavy capital investment before any returns arise at all in the mineral extraction industry, a 13 per cent return on investment may not, indeed, be at all out of line. I would not suggest that is an exorbitant figure at all.

● (1822)

To continue my concluding remarks, I indicated that the government had taken major steps to improve the environment for industrial operations and investment as international markets recover.

At the same time, an intensive assessment is under way of the opportunities and problems of specific sectors, leading to consultations with both provincial governments and the private sector. Only in this comprehensive framework can meaningful changes in our industrial and trade policies be developed.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) I was hoping I would have as much time as he had in order to engage in meaningful debate with him and to prick some of those fanciful balloons he was flying about here this afternoon, quoting figures, always frothing at the mouth, and waxing indignant. The mere mention of certain words such as multinational just raised his hackles. Frankly, I always consider it for cosmetic effect. It sounds good, but is meaningless.

Hon. members want to know whether the mineral industry is profitable or not. It is. However, there is a fantasy about the land that Canada sits on the richest motherlodes of almost all known metals. That is the farthest from the truth. As a result of good technology, we can develop a lot of resources. However, there are dozens of places in the world that have far richer deposits of iron ore, copper, zinc, nickel, and gold, and even oil.

Alberta oil is of a type of geological formation that is among the most expensive to get at because it is pinpoint drilling. It is a matter of finding the domes in the deposits of oil and gas. It is not like in Venezuela or Saudi Arabia, drilling a deep well and finding a huge lake or very large deposit. The drilling and other costs of production in Canada are much higher. We also see this in the drilling for natural gas on the eastern slopes of the Arctic, the cost of drilling wells 16,000 and 18,000 feet. Look at the fantastic cost of drilling wells in the Arctic.

Many people, particularly the New Democrats, dismiss the cost of development of our minerals and the high risk that is involved as something they should not even know about.

I am glad that my colleague has introduced an amendment so that this motion is meaningful. If there has been unprofitable development to this day in the minerals industry in Canada, not only the exploration and development of the raw ore beds or the finding of petroleum and natural gas but the further processing, it is because of the idiotic tax system that we had and still have.

Those of us who went through that nefarious white paper on taxation which the government produced in 1968, and saw the response from industry and from other governments, are aware that the basic premise for that so-called tax reform measure was astounding, a total misconception, fundamental ignorance of what is involved in the production and processing of minerals in this country. Fortunately, there were some changes, but not enough, and not soon enough.

When I first came to this House over 20 years ago I advocated getting rid of the so-called principal occupation rule, the rule which drove smaller investors among Canadians, as individuals or as corporate entities, out of the independent oil game. It was so much easier for our American counterparts to come in here. They had the advantage. We sat idly by and allowed the rule to stand and to drive Canadians out of the development of their own oil industry. Now the situation is different, but there is no more independent oil available; there is little or no freehold available which is likely to produce.

I have little time and I wish to turn, now, to another subject. First of all, I do not think there can be a national, unilateral mineral development strategy or industrial plan. Such a plan has to be developed with the provinces. We, as Conservatives, objected to the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) ramming down the throat of this House his scheme for petroleum development as far as the Government of Canada was concerned. It was an outright raid on provincial jurisdiction. And if the hon. member for Nickel Belt wants to know what governments can do, let him read the judgment which was pronounced today with regard to Saskatchewan's raid on the petroleum industry and what that is going to cost those people—and the cost of $500 million was likely taken off the backs of other Canadians who were consuming Saskatchewan petroleum products. That is where the payment and the cost are involved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58 proceedings on the motion have expired.

It being 6.30 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

ALLEGATION CABINET GIVES LOW PRIORITY TO INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the fact that the latest statistics clearly illustrate that Canadian farm income continues to decline, farm input costs continue to increase dramatically for the second consecutive year, and in addition farm borrowings have doubled to an all time high of $8 billion, while industry analysts forecast negative profit margins and reductions in future export sales, all of this, Mr. Speaker, in the complete absence of any corrective measures or legislation now before parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House unanimously endorse the statement made recently by Liberal Senator Hazen Argue to the effect that the present cabinet gives a low priority to the agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to the Standing Order, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OIL COMPANIES SHOULD BE DENIED WINDFALL PROFITS—GUARANTEE OF PROVINCIAL RIGHT TO DEVELOP RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the court decision by the Supreme Court of Canada regarding the constitutionality of the Saskatchewan legislation dealing with taxation on oil producers, and in view of the necessity that all provinces, including Saskatchewan, receive revenues for the resources owned by the people of those provinces, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the Government of Canada to co-operate fully with the government of Saskatchewan to develop means to ensure that the windfall profits obtained by the multinational oil companies as a result of the energy crisis remain with the people of that province and that the government of Canada take immediate steps, in co-operation with all provinces, to guarantee the constitutional right of the provinces to control their resources.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTION OFFSHORE BEEF IMPORTS BE CURTAILED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is allowing offshore beef into this country that does not comply with Canadian grading standards, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House direct the Minister of Agriculture to take immediate action to end this practice which is killing both the Canadian producer and consumer.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTION WORKERS MAY BUY SHARES IN COMPANY AND PARTICIPATE IN MANAGEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering the present depression and since workers have no control over the operation of the economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House immediately enjoin the government to introduce a bill granting workers the option to purchase shares in the business and exchange them later on for a retirement fund, and that those shares entitle them to take part in the management of the business.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POSITION ON GATT NEGOTIATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, that being the complete secrecy surrounding the present General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations in so far as agriculture is concerned. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) along with his pertinent officials appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture as early as next week to outline the government's thinking on this most important aspect of our international trade.

SEEKING CONSENT OF TWO FORMER SOLICITORS GENERAL TO TESTIFY BEFORE COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand), both former solicitors general, have knowledge on the question of ministerial responsibility on matters of security and irregularities pertaining to the same, it is hereby moved:

That the present Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) endeavour to obtain the consent of both the Minister of Supply and Services and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to appear before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the purpose of giving evidence in reference to the same and that he seek their consent to be questioned by the members of the said committee because of the serious cover-up.

SUGGESTION SALARY INCREASES BE PERMITTED TO LEVEL OF INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union in Saskatchewan find themselves limited by the anti-inflation rules to four per cent in wages and benefits for 1978, 6 per cent below the current inflation rate in the province. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House condemn the government's economic policy which has resulted in high levels of inflation and unemployment, and demand that the government permit wage and salary increases to at least the level of inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTION RUSSIAN BUYERS BE INVITED HERE AND ATTEMPT MADE TO MAKE SALE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering net farm income of western grain farmers has fallen 50 per cent in the last two years and that most of their grain is now committed for export at prices well below the cost of production, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt):

That this House instruct the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to invite the Russian grain buying mission presently in the United States to come to Canada immediately with a view to selling wheat at the world price, which is now $1 a bushel above sales made so far this year, so that western grain producers can see some hope of getting back their cost of production.

SUGGESTION CORPORATION SHOULD PURCHASE FOREIGN-CONTROLLED COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, I propose, seconded by the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker):

That the government intervene immediately to halt the offer of the Canada Development Corporation to purchase the Quebec based food product manufacturer Culinar Inc. and that the government insist that the corporation's objective to widen the investment opportunities open to Canadians be attained by offers to purchase foreign controlled companies which operate in Canada.

In view of recent statements of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat board arising out of negotiations for an international wheat agreement which he has indicated may provide for reserve stocks of grain to be held by producing countries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton):

That the Minister of Agriculture instruct his officials to carry out a study to determine whether or not the facilities of government inland terminals might be utilized in such a storage program.

In view of the report in today's Globe and Mail that a former senior officer of the RCMP has received a medical certificate that he has suffered loss of memory prior to his proposed testimony before both the Keable and McDonald inquiries, and in view of the real possibility that this disease may become contagious, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this House direct the Minister of National Health and Welfare to have the department immediately develop a suitable vaccine with sufficient supply to cover senior officials of at least two departments, two former solicitors general, the present Solicitor General and the Prime Minister so that this House will have some assurance that this disease may be brought under control.

STATEMENT BY MICHAEL PITFIELD CONCERNING ETHICAL QUESTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, that is a difficult motion to follow. My motion relates to the assertion this week by Michael Pitfield, the secretary to the cabinet, that the government has not done enough to train its officials to deal with a lot of ethical decisions. In view of the fact that past weeks have revealed that the inability of officials to deal with ethical decisions ought not to be isolated from their ministerial masters, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House endorses the principle laid down by the Clerk of the Privy Council, namely that "questions of ethics and values are not abstract exercises . . . but harshly practical issues of . . . responsibility and accountability", and requests that this motion be read at the next meeting of Cabinet.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO ATTEMPT TO EXPAND APPLICATION OF CIGOL DECISION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations I would direct my question to the Minister of Justice. It relates to the CIGOL decision handed down which has some momentous implications, particularly for the people of the province of Saskatchewan. In view of the intervention of the federal government on behalf of the oil companies in that case I should like to ask whether the government can give us the assurance now that it will in future not intervene or initiate action to expand upon the decision which has been handed down in relation to the natural resource ownership within provinces? Can he give us that assurance, that he will not try to expand the decision given by the Supreme Court?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the intervention by the Attorney General of Canada was not on behalf of the oil companies, it was made in an effort to give the court the benefit of the views of the Attorney General of Canada on the constitution. I am not prepared to give any undertaking as to what position we will take about some hypothetical case in the future.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MEETING OF RESOURCE MINISTERS—DISCUSSION OF OWNERSHIP AND TAXATION OF RESOURCES

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the minister will understand that this particular decision has far reaching implications as far as the ownership of mineral resources within provinces is concerned, and he will understand, therefore, its importance.

In the absence of the Prime Minister I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he will give us the assurance that at the forthcoming ministerial meeting of ministers of natural resources for the provinces and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, there will be an item on the agenda which will define and give more clear definition in respect of the ownership of mineral resources as far as the provinces are concerned, and will try to define the integrity of provincial taxation in regard to these resources? Will he give us the assurance that this item will be discussed and there will be an attempt to arrive at an agreement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the decision of the Supreme Court is now under consideration by the government. We have not yet reached any conclusions about the far reaching implications, as the hon. member mentioned, which stem from this decision.

With respect to consultation with the provinces, undoubtedly such opportunity will take place when the Prime Minister meets the premier of Saskatchewan early in December. I can assure the hon. member that the matter will not disappear, but it will be a matter of important consideration.

ACTION TO SAVE PEOPLE OF SASKATCHEWAN FROM EFFECT OF CIGOL DECISION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the financial burden on the people of Saskatchewan, caused by the gaffes and policies of the federal government and the provincial NDP government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —will mean a cost of approximately $500 per person in Saskatchewan, $2,000 per family, and the repayment potential is over half the annual budget of the province, will the Acting Prime Minister tell this House whether the government has any intention of taking any action to save the people of Saskatchewan from this position of turning the province into a have not province once again?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without accepting any of the unwarranted allegations in the hon. member's question, I have already stated that the implications of this decision will be considered by the government. It is much too early for me to make any judgment on the specific points which the hon. member has made, because they have not been considered in depth as yet.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In other words, you are doing nothing.

FINANCE

SUGGESTION HALF OF AMOUNT RECEIVED AS RESULT OF CIGOL DECISION BE RETURNED TO PEOPLE OF SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the Supreme Court's decision yesterday, the federal tax coffers will benefit to the extent of approximately half of the $580 million which the court has ordered to be returned to the oil companies. When the government is considering the implications of this decision, will it consider as an act of grace that the half of the $580 million the federal government will receive, which it did not expect, will be returned to the people of Saskatchewan.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am taking notice of the question of the hon. member.

PROPOSED GUARANTEE PROVINCES HAVE RIGHT TO IMPOSE TAXES ON RESOURCES

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my next question to the Acting Prime Minister, and it is along the same line as the question posed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. In view of the difficulties we now find ourselves in, not only in Saskatchewan, but all across the country, in the government's consideration would it consider emergency legislation by this parliament to guarantee to all provinces in the future that they will have first right under the constitution to impose direct taxes on all of their resources?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the representations made by the hon. member will be considered in our over-all review of this particular subject matter which arose yesterday and which has not yet been given the serious consideration by the government that it deserves.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED REDUCTION OF TRAINING FACILITIES AND RESULTANT LOSS TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES—REASON FOR POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Will the minister confirm that a recent policy document on manpower retraining programs has been approved by the cabinet? Specifically, will he confirm this policy will reduce manpower training facilities from the present regional allocations, which will mean in effect that the Atlantic provinces will lose approximately $292 million over the next ten years?

● (1422)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm such an allegation because it is not true.

Mr. Broadbent: I somehow expected the minister might say that. I have here a copy of the document which I will be glad to send to the minister later. It is entitled, "Canada Manpower Training Program—Policy Review, September, 1977".

My second question to the minister is the following. Since the implementation of this policy document will result in the rate of increase in manpower retraining programs in Atlantic Canada being lower than elsewhere in Canada, although unemployment levels in Atlantic Canada are forecast to be much higher, can he tell the House why the government is doing this instead of spending money the way the ministers from the Atlantic provinces have recently requested to create more jobs in that part of the country?

Mr. Cullen: When I denied the fact, I denied that the conclusion reached by the leader of the NDP was in fact correct. I also deny that the conclusion reached in the supplementary part of his question is correct. The funds in fact are available for retraining—they are not going to be reduced—and over the opposition of the NDP we have also made a provision for the developmental use of unemployment insurance funds so that we can give not less but more money to those particular provinces.

REQUEST FOR MORE FUNDS FOR LONG RANGE JOB CREATION PROGRAMS FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): When people have had a chance to look at the document and understand the basis of the fundamental change that the minister is making in the allocation of Manpower funds, they will see that what I have said is correct and that what the minister has said is incorrect. But that remains to be seen by those who look at the document.

Since the forecast made by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council and the forecast made recently by the four ministers representing all the four Atlantic governments, suggests that unemployment will grow in Atlantic Canada compared to the rest of the country, when will the government make a decision to allocate more funds for long range job creation instead of the make-work projects to which the minister has committed himself?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): We are moving precisely in that direction and that is why I have indicated that developmental use of UI funds and other uses of Canada Works funding will be directed precisely in that direction. I am surprised it has taken the hon. member this long to find out even though he has been in receipt apparently of goods or property stolen from my department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is an allegation.

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON AMOUNT OF GRANTS TO ANGLO-QUEBECERS AND FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Secretary of State.

In yesterday's issue of Le Droit of Ottawa there was an article which outlines the results of an education assistance program set up by the federal government in 1974. According to that report, an Anglo-Quebecker is worth twice as much as a Francophone outside Quebec. The paper goes on to say that for financial year 1976-1977, grants directed to Anglo-Quebeckers amounted to a total of $90 million—$113 per capita. These funds were supposed to be universal and unconditional. But Francophones outside Quebec for that same year received just about $52 million under the condition that their provincial governments agree to set up French schools. This being the case, would the Secretary of State explain such a difference between grants which seem to be a clear case of discrimination?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this is a financial assistance program for provinces to support education for minority groups and teaching of the second language. Figures quoted in Le Droit are inaccurate since they confuse two different things, that is assistance to secondary education in the second language and assistance to education for minority groups as if the whole was directed as assistance to education for minority groups. So those figures are inaccurate and the same thing goes for funds granted to provinces other than Quebec to support education in the French language and, in the province of Quebec to support education in the English language.

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF FUNDS DESIGNED TO FAVOUR STUDY OF SECOND LANGUAGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Secretary of State's answer to my question, but could he explain why the Association of Acadians of Nova Scotia made representations to the Pepin-Robarts Commission when they were in Halifax, about two months ago, because the federal government moneys were going to Anglophones who wanted to learn French while the Francophones of that province hardly benefited from them? Moreover could the Secretary of State tell us whether the federal government insists that the money be spent for the designated groups?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have often explained that those provincial allowances are based on formulaes. There is no provision indicating that the money must be spent for such and such a purpose. Therefore it is one of the reasons for which the federal government is very concerned about the program administration. Since January last, we have entered into negotiations with the provinces to determine more specifically what are the objectives and the criteria of valuation to ensure that funds will really be used to reach the main purposes of the program.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the federal government's concern about the attitude majorities are assuming towards minorities in a number of provinces, as well as the funds this government is spending, will the Secretary of State make a statement in the House shortly or will he make sure that these funds are properly spent and that the financial assistance to these minorities is not a source of greater frustration?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I think I have already replied to the question asked by the hon. member: We have already started negotiating a new agreement with the provinces which should be concluded in the spring of 1979. We should certainly adopt accounting procedures to make sure that the funds are really expended for the purposes designated by Parliament.

REQUEST FOR LEADERSHIP FROM MINISTER

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and is further to my motion proposed earlier today under Standing Order 43 which clearly reflects the complete incompetence of the minister. The facts are and the records show clearly that the minister has taken the industry in two directions at the same time, namely, inward and downward. I would like to ask the minister when we can expect to see some productive leadership from him and when the industry can expect to see at least some indication of a reversal in the trends which have occurred under his tenure of office.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member speaks of trends during my tenure of office. I wonder if he is talking about the dairy industry, the poultry industry or the horticultural industry. What part of the agriculture industry is he talking about?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: The main reduction has been in cereal grains, where we are dealing with world markets. With regard to other products the hon. member's remarks are just not factual. There has been no downward trend. We are using probably the most advanced pricing formulas in the world with the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, and if input costs would go down—the farmers agreed to that formula themselves—farmers would not have to have more money with which to operate. They could make a decent living, and that is what they are doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the minister's desire to avoid any reference to his record of performance. The facts are much different, and in the interest of the industry I wish the minister would pay some attention to them. It is absolutely shameful—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, would he put it forthwith.

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF MEAT IMPORT LAW

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): In view of the situation that exists—and we have no legislation before the House at the present time—when can we expect a long awaited meat import law? When can we expect measures to expand and strengthen the agricultural industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and other members of his party are great at pointing out some of the programs of other countries. Our agricultural programs surpass any programs for guaranteeing stability, et cetera.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: The former Secretary of Agriculture of the United States withdrew the program the Americans had while we were implanting ours, so we do have good programs at the present time. Our programs surpass those of any other country in the world. I have no intention of bringing in loads of paper showing that we are going to do things for farmers in the form of legislation, but we will be bringing in a bill. We have talked about that. I understand that the opposition concurs that we should deal with it speedily when it is presented to this House, and I hope that will be shortly.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the industry is very impressed by the minister's modesty. I would like to refer the minister to his own remarks which were made in a recent speech in Rome. The minister said that slogans and speeches are sterile without action.

● (1432)

Mr. Wise: Has it ever occurred to the minister that if he had a purpose to serve perhaps he has fulfilled that purpose, at least in the number of days in office, and that in the interests of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question to put to the minister it will have to be less argumentative than that.

Mr. Wise: Has the minister ever considered gracefully relinquishing his portfolio as Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, anything I do is graceful, that is for sure.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE INDUSTRY NOT SACRIFICED DURING GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture as well. Since in terms of trade, one of the fears of the agricultural community is the GATT negotiations going on at the present time in Geneva and also the possibility that agriculture could be, or may be, traded away for concessions in some other sectors of the economy, is the minister prepared to state unequivocally that agriculture will be dealt with as a separate entity and there will not be any tradeoffs between agriculture and other sectors of the economy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that agricultural trade in Canada is more free than in any other country in the world. People from the United States have been making statements around here about free trade, but if they were just as free in trade as we are in agricultural products, we would ask no more because that is a country we trade with most. We are making that kind of representation. I do not intend to sell agriculture down the river.

HORTICULTURAL INDUSTRY—ADOPTION OF TARIFF BOARD POSITION DURING GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, unless certain realistic trade measures are adopted, sectors of the horticultural industry in this country will be in danger of collapsing in the very near future if meaningful negotiations do not take place at Geneva. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Finance could tell the House whether Canada's negotiating team is putting its full support behind the recommendations of the tariff board in terms of the horticultural industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the tariff board report is and has been condoned by the horticulture industry. They have said they accept the report and practically every suggestion it makes. I agree with that. We do not intend to sell that report short either. As far as we are concerned it is something we have waited for a long time. It was over three years in the making. It is what we want and if we need the backing of the provinces, etc., I understand we have most of that backing that is necessary for us to proceed in making recommendations to the government. We will be meeting with them to discuss it in further detail. We already have some briefs and if members have some recommendations other than those submitted by the tariff board, I would appreciate receiving them.

SUGGESTION RUSSIAN BUYERS BE INVITED HERE IN ATTEMPT TO MAKE SALES

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the burgeoning demand in the world for grain will the minister invite the Russian grain mission presently in the United States to come to Canada with a view to negotiating some sales at prevailing world prices?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the relationship between the Russians and the Canadian Wheat Board is absolutely first rate. Almost invariably there is a first contact between them before the Russians make contact anywhere else. As a result of that, sales have already been completed for just under four million tons of wheat to the Soviet Union in the current year.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer but in order to recoup some of the below-cost-of-production sales we have already made, I would again ask the minister to invite this mission to Canada with a view to selling some grain at prevailing world prices which, as the minister knows, are now $1 above sales already made.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that the contact between the Soviet Union and the Wheat Board is constant. At every opportunity additional sales are made and one was made not very long ago as part of that nearly four million tons to which I referred. I think, unlike some other spokesmen for his party, the hon. member will join me in congratulating the Wheat Board on their ongoing, aggressive effort.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF CLOSING OF SUGAR BEET FACTORY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure we all remember that a few years ago the government allowed the sugar beet industry in southwestern Ontario to lapse and remember also this minister's attempt to revive it, which failed miserably. Shortly after that the price of sugar rose to $1 per pound. Now, we face the closure of another sugar beet factory in the riding of the hon. member for Lethbridge. I wonder if the minister can assure the House that the price of sugar will not rise to $1 per pound after that closure. This seems to be what happens when he fails to protect our primary producers.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is not trying to intimate that I was Minister of Agriculture when the sugar beet industry was closed in southwestern Ontario. I am sure he would not want to leave off the record that the province of Ontario saw fit to do the same thing, and did not take any part in it either at that time. I am sure he is also aware of the government that was in office at that time. I want to assure him that I will show him the reports that we have on the sugar beet plant at Taber and what they intend to do. They do not intend to curtail production but to run a more efficient operation and concentrate that operation in one of the more modern refineries. That is the report from the organization there. I must say that if sugar beet farmers in Alberta are discontinuing production it is not because they are getting a lower price than sugar beet farmers across the border in the United States because with our stabilization program they will be getting approximately $8 per ton more.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I think that excited the minister a little. If he believes what he is saying it seems to me that he has been more brainwashed by the sugar companies than I thought was ever possible.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CURTAIL SUGAR IMPORTS

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact that we only produce 11 per cent of domestic requirements of sugar, in light of the fact that beef importers have been asking for a meat import law for three years and that this is all it would take to save the sugar industry, would the minister assure the House that this situation will receive immediate attention?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that we never produced our total requirement of sugar in Canada and, in fact, produced only about 15 per cent of our total needs from sugar beet. I am sure he also knows that we can produce sugar today from maize or corn. Corn sweetener plants are producing a tremendous amount of sugar in the United States. We have had meetings with companies to consider doing that kind of thing. I am sure the hon. member for Huron is also aware of that, as are members of the government of Ontario, who are strong proponents of that kind of plan.

SPRUCE BUDWORM CONTROL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the soft spoken Minister of State (Environment). Beyond and above what has been announced in past months can the minister tell the House whether we can look forward to an even more aggressive federal policy next spring to wage total warfare against the spruce budworm by the use of environmentally acceptable methods and improved coordination of efforts between the various domestic and United States jurisdictions in order to destroy those prolific little monsters that have been chewing away at 130 million acres of eastern forest, causing irreparable economic loss?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I shall be issuing a press release in a few days relating to this particular subject. Essentially it will point out our continued support for spraying on a very limited and very strictly controlled basis. This is one of the most serious problems we have in the forest industry in this country. We are now concentrating a lot of our time and money on research in co-operation with the United States on a synthetic sex attractant which attracts—

Miss Bégin: What is it, Len?

Mr. Marchand: It is a synthetic attractant which affects the males so that they cannot find the females. Thus, the females would lay infertile eggs.

• (1442)

Mr. Speaker: With that kind of sneak preview I am sure the House can hardly wait for the minister's press release.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MANPOWER

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC REGION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as a celibate I find it hard to compete against the answer which has just been given by the minister. But since the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is not in his place today I wish to address a serious question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The recent special study by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council has confirmed the belief long held by many of us that long term unemployment in the Atlantic region is much higher than is indicated by the monthly figures of Statistics Canada. The study describes its findings as startling. Would the minister tell us what his department in co-operation with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, intends to do about this deepening crisis of unemployment in the Atlantic region?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I met with the four ministers from the Atlantic region to discuss, among other things, this very problem—long term employment and the possibility of improving the prospect through programs aimed—I hardly dare mention the word—at cleaning up of the spruce budworm and the Gull Island development, projects which might give an impetus to long term employment in the region.

RESOURCES

OPENING OF NEW COAL MINE IN CAPE BRETON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Since the minister did not mention the coal industry in Cape Breton I would direct my supplementary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. For more than a year and a half, now, the energy development branch of the hon. gentleman's department has had in its possession a special consultants' study which suggests that by opening a new coal mine the Cape Breton Development Corporation could provide between one and a half and two million tons of coal for heavy industries in southern Quebec. The study shows that this Cape Breton coal could displace between six million and eight million barrels of heavy oil now imported at an annual cost of some $800 million. Would the minister not agree that it is to the advantage of Canada, of Quebec and of the unemployed in Cape Breton to replace a portion of the oil we presently import with Cape Breton coal and to do so as quickly as possible?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with that objective. It is the objective of the government of Canada. I am impressed by the figures, as is the hon. member, and I will take the opportunity next week when I meet with the energy ministers of all provinces, including the provinces of Nova Scotia and Quebec, to bring those figures to their attention.

LAY-OFFS AT LABRADOR LINERBOARD MILL—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE EFFECTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is aware of the drastic effects of the closure of the Labrador linerboard mill in Newfoundland. Little or nothing has been done to find alternative employment for those who have been laid off. The minister told us a couple of months ago that his officials were dealing with the matter. Have they done so? What progress has been made? Has there been any consultation with the Province of Newfoundland with regard to the rehabilitation of the industry or finding alternative employment for those laid off?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As the hon. member knows, our officials were on the spot. We indicated that all the resources of the department were available to those affected, both the mobility grant and the retraining program, if that should prove beneficial. In addition, we indicated that the emergency response of the Canada Works program might be available—it is premature to talk about that yet because the company did agree to pay a certain salary up to a certain point so there has been no interruption of earnings. But should such a situation arise before individuals are able to find new employment we shall, in all probability, be able to take advantage of the emergency response feature of the Canada Works program as further assistance.

FISHERIES

PURPOSE OF MINISTER'S TRIP TO NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. The minister is planning to go to Halifax tomorrow and according to today's Halifax Chronicle-Herald he will not be discussing the international boundaries issue, he will not be discussing the provincial development plans for the fisheries, and he will not be meeting with his provincial counterpart, Dr. Reid. Is the minister planning to give up his portfolio? What will he be discussing if he will not be discussing any of the urgent problems which face our fishermen in Atlantic Canada today.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries): I shall not be meeting Dr. Reid because I had a very good meeting with him about three weeks ago and I do not think anything new has come up since then. International boundaries are the subject of negotiation now and everybody is quite familiar with the situation. In fact, Mr. Cadieux and his colleague, Dr. Shepard will be in Nova Scotia meeting with the provincial authorities to make sure we are all on the same wavelength. But I shall be concerning myself with the most important part of my portfolio which is the process of ongoing, effective consultation with the fishermen and working with them to solve the problem they have on a day to day basis. I have done this in other areas of the country and I intend to continue doing it.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

ALLEGATION ACTION IN ANTICIPATION OF PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION DAMAGING MORALE OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the fact that the morale of an existing legal organization called the National Harbours Board of Canada has been absolutely devastated by operations within the minister's department in the course of which officials are acting as though Bill C-6, the ports bill, was an act of this parliament rather than a presentation to it. I always thought that no one could anticipate that a law would be passed—that nothing could be done until all of us gave it our blessing. I ask the minister whether he will call a halt to an operation which is having a very serious effect on morale of those employed by the National Harbours Board.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Inevitably, a proposal for changing a structure as important as the National Harbours Board and replacing it by a ports commission causes difficulties for those who are engaged in the ongoing operation. We are not, of course, prejudging the will of parliament or acting on the basis of the new rules which are comtemplated, but we are trying to prepare the way to ensure that the transition, when it takes place, is made as easy as possible.

Under the existing statutory authority we are carrying out preplanning wherever possible and indicating to people employed by the National Harbours Board the employment opportunities available to them in the proposed ports commission. If we are to make progress toward the establishment of the new commission we need this kind of preplanning and we are trying to do it with the least possible effect on the morale of employees.

Mr. McCleave: Since these people are being asked, in effect, to compete against themselves for their own jobs, I propose to develop this subject further during the adjournment debate.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO FAVOUR CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF TANKERS FOR LIQUEFIED NATURAL GAS

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. According to one of the partners in the Arctic gas consortium, two methane tankers costing $360 million are to be bought abroad. Does the minister intend to use his good offices, through inciting measures, financial or otherwise, and in cooperation with other departments concerned, to ensure that those tankers will be built in our Canadian shipyards which need it so much?

● (1452)

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, a number of important, and I think very imaginative, proposals are coming forward regarding the use of ice-strengthened tankers or the use of Arctic marine locomotives, that kind of equipment. If the promoters of these particular projects are to receive federal government assistance, including such assistance as shipbuilding subsidies, those vessels, of course, will have to be built in Canadian yards.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED FRANCOPHONE COMMONWEALTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ATTITUDE OF FRANCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The statement by the government of France that it would not participate in a Francophone commonwealth that excludes Quebec raises the validity of a Francophone commonwealth in the first place. Is it the policy of the Canadian government that such a Francophone commonwealth is needed and will be proceeded with and, if so, on what grounds; and have consultations taken place with the government of France on this subject?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the concept of a summit of Francophone heads of government, as the hon. gentleman knows, is not a new one; it was advanced I think originally by the Canadian Prime Minister some years ago. It has, of course, also been discussed in various capitals and with visitors to Canada by a number of us in recent times.

In so far as the French government's statement is concerned, I think the proposal for a heads of government meeting, which is the basis on which this matter has always been advanced, would mean precisely what it says, namely that it would be heads of government, heads of state, who would meet. Therefore, the issue of provincial participation in that context does not arise.

PROPOSED ANNUAL MEETINGS BETWEEN FRANCE AND QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Supply and Services said this week that France is interfering in Canadian internal affairs with respect to Quebec participation in such a commonwealth. Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs yet consulted with the French government concerning the communiqué issued at the conclusion of the visit of Premier Lévesque to France a few weeks ago, which called for substantive annual meetings between Quebec and France; and, if so, will such meetings involve a review of the relationship between Canada and France?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): With respect, Mr. Speaker, the question is hypothetical. In so far as no such meetings are planned, to the best of my knowledge, in terms of any agenda or anything of that nature, I answered at the time the visit of Premier Lévesque took place that Canada had no objection to a meeting between, let us say in this case, the Prime Minister of France and the Premier of Quebec provided such meeting was held within the standard framework of such encounters. In other words, we certainly do not want to inhibit any exchange of views between premiers and prime ministers or any others. Since that time we have made inquiries of the government of France as to the framework within which they would contemplate such exchanges taking place, but to date no formal answer from France has been received.

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to put to the President of the Treasury Board respecting amendments to the Public Service Employment Act. In view of a letter from the chairman of the Public Service Commission over one year ago indicating that amendments would be forthcoming, and in view of the importance but lack of clarity of section 32 of that statute dealing with the right of public servants to engage in political activities, would the minister tell me, firstly, whether it is the intention of the government to make any changes to that section? If he could tell me what they were today I would be delighted, but if he would be affirmative in this respect, that would be sufficient. Secondly, could he also tell me if he knows when the amendments to this statute might be brought in, since they were promised over a year ago?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct; there have been considerable discussions on that particular area of the act and the more detailed amendments to the act itself. I cannot give him a specific answer as to what the changes might or might not be at this stage because we have not finalized those discussions. Nor can I give him the precise date when any amendments might be introduced to the House, except to say we hope to do so in the not too distant future.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF PAYMENT OF AGENT'S FEE BY ITALIMPIANTI—PROVISION OF INFORMATION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that the Prime Minister of Italy has graciously indicated that he will look further into the $2.5 million pay-off by AECL through an Italian firm, I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs would take the initiative in this matter by volunteering to the government of Italy all of the information on this matter which is in the hands of the government of Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As a preliminary, Mr. Speaker, may I say I agree that the Prime Minister of Italy was very gracious. It is too bad the hon. member did not learn a few lessons from him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I am not sure if there is anything further that we could make available to the government of Italy but I will look into that. If the hon. member has some suggestions as to other documentation we might supply I would be glad to hear from him, and to act on the recommendation of the public accounts committee, as I think I have up to now.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question in relation to that very gracious reply of the minister is simply to suggest to him that since I gather the RCMP investigation into this matter has also hit a brick wall, perhaps the minister would take it upon himself to find out if that information could be turned over to the government of Italy; and, by the way, perhaps it could also be turned over to the public accounts committee.

Mr. Jamieson: I will be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

ADOPTION OF TARIFF BOARD POSITION DURING GATT NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE INDUSTRY INTERESTS PROTECTED

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have some supplementary questions for the Minister of Agriculture arising out of his failure to respond to some questions asked by some of my colleagues earlier. I should make it clear that the questions are capable of a yes or no answer. We will have to see whether the minister is. I should like to ask the minister whether the tariff board recommendations on horticulture will be reflected in Canada's negotiations at GATT: yes or no?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes.

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We all recognize that brevity is as difficult for the minister as a direct answer. Let me try him with another question which is also capable of a yes or no answer. Will the minister now give the House of Commons a guarantee that Canadian agricultural interests will not be further traded off in the current round of GATT negotiations: yes or no?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, anyone who knows this Minister of Agriculture knows that he does not intend to trade off anything unless he gets proper compensation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the minister, would he answer my question yes or no. Would he give the House a guarantee that Canadian agricultural interests will not be further traded off in the current round of GATT negotiations: yes or no?

TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF FREIGHT RATES ON RAPESEED CRUSHING PLANTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport. In spite of the funds which he made available to the rapeseed crushing industry, the industry is losing substantial sums of money, mainly due to inequities and anomalies of the freight rates system and competition with foreign imported vegetable oils in the central Canadian market. Would the minister advise whether he is taking any immediate action to correct the very serious situation of those plants?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are constantly in touch with the rapeseed crushers in Canada. I think they very much appreciate the millions of dollars that we have been paying to make sure that they will not have to pay freight rates above the levels which were in effect at the time of the freeze in 1973. I think the statement of the hon. member regarding their all losing money is itself an error.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister does not know that the processing plants at Saskatoon and Lloydminster are reporting substantial losses, at least as of yesterday. Since the Hall Commission has made a thorough investigation of the problems and the opportunities facing western rapeseed crushers, and followed that with several specific recommendations including one concerning the matter of statutory grain rates applying to rapeseed and rapeseed products, will the minister now assure the House that he will in fact implement the recommendations of the Hall Royal Commission regarding rapeseed and rapeseed products?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member knows that we are acting very vigorously to work toward the objectives and to implement the recommendations of the Hall Commission. We have as a very first initiative, within months after that commission report, obtained $100 million of new money for the branch line rehabilitation program. We have added additional money to the rapeseed rate program, and this is very concrete evidence, at this time of fiscal restraint, of this government's attitude in favour of our grain farmers in the west, which they out there understand.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the regular business question of the government House leader. What are his intentions, from the point of view of government business, for the balance of this week and next week? Does he intend to answer today, or make some comment, in respect of the question of privilege I raised dealing with the judgment of Mr. Justice Evans? Could he, specifically, enlighten the House further regarding when the proposed legislation amending the Public Service Employment Act will be forthcoming? Finally, I would ask whether he would designate next Tuesday as an allotted day?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, it is possible for me to designate next Tuesday and, if agreeable, Friday as designated days for the opposition. It is not possible for me to say when the Public Service Employment Act amendments will be brought forward. The business for the next period will be, of course, the continuation of the bill respecting the Income Tax Act for second reading and committee stage.

I would re-establish the list of itemsmentioned last Thursday by my parliamentary secretary, except to say that it would be my wish, if possible, to call second reading and reference to the standing committee of Bill C-8, if that is agreeable, earlier than the other items.

In reply to the question of privilege mentioned by the hon. member, it is possible for me to make that response today, if that is the wish of the House. I had thought that because the income tax bill is under a time allocation, it might be the desire to wait until that was over. I could do that on Monday, if that was equally agreeable, or today.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think my friend put a queson to me. First, so I understand what he said about Friday as being an opposition day, let me make it clear that he intended that to be a week from tomorrow for the second designated day. On the matter involving the question of privilege, it is rather important and I think the House would be grateful if the hon. gentleman would make his submission or statement today in respect of that matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question of House business to the government House leader? As he knows, when he was away we on this side missed him and things on his side got a little out of hand. One item that went awry had to do with Heritage Day. As the minister knows, during the last session there was a government bill which would have provided for Heritage Day as well as for certain other holiday changes. We were led to believe, in response to many questions of mine, that this matter would be dealt with in time for Heritage Day to be celebrated in February, 1978. In view of an unfortunate statement that one of his colleagues made—namely, that the idea had been dropped—may I ask the minister whether reconsideration is being given to the establishment of Heritage Day in English, French and Gaelic?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first two parts is "no."

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROUSE—FISHERIES—REPLY OF MINISTER

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to a reply to me by the Minister of Fisheries who is planning to go to Nova Scotia tomorrow, as he stated, to discuss problems relating to our fishing industry. Yet, prior to his trip to Nova Scotia, the press has indicated that already his department plans to cut the haddock quota in southwestern Nova Scotia by 2,500 metric tons.

I submit to you, sir, that my question related to that statement, and I would simply like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as this is a matter which will vitally affect the income of many of our Atlantic province fishermen, especially those in Nova Scotia—and this comes under the purview of the minister in that his department is at the present time negotiating with the United States in respect of the ownership of the area where these fish are to be caught—whether he would look into this matter to see if some way could be achieved of obtaining joint sharing of the fisheries resources in that area so that cuts of this type, which have a disastrous economic effect upon our people, are not necessary? Would the minister look into that aspect of the entire fisheries problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course, it would be improper to permit any further discussion of that point. The hon. member for South Shore raises, by way of a question of privilege, the fact that he was entitled to ask only one question today. I think I should say, in respect of all members at this time, that they will have observed over the last few days that I have been admonishing members of the House to avoid lengthy preambles and lengthy answers in order to try to remedy the situation which developed in the early part of this session; that is, we have not been getting a very widespread sharing of the question period by hon. members. I have taken, in conjunction with that, a rather sterner line in respect of questions and supplementaries. In fact, over the last couple of days I have found it more normal to keep hon. members to one supplementary, and only on occasion—when it seemed fully warranted—to allow an extra supplementary. This seems to have achieved a greater sharing of the question period.

I would today, in fact, suggest to the hon. member that if his point really concerns the quotas he is talking about, involving the Secretary of State for External Affairs, it might be easier, or more direct, if instead of the preamble by way of talking about the Minister of Fisheries trip to the east coast, the hon. member had put it directly to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on that point. Then perhaps a supplementary question would have been warranted.

I think we have all had the tendency of feeling that perhaps a long build-up was necessary to a question to make it effective. I suggest that all hon. members might be wise to consider that we would do better in sharing the question period if we all tried to come to the point more quickly. I propose to do my part in that respect by continuing what I have done in the last few days, which is to take a harder line in regard to both questions and answers. I have been discouraging both lengthy preambles and long answers in the hope that exactly what has been achieved over the last couple of days would be achieved, and instead of having something in the region of a dozen members we have been hearing from, it would be closer to 20, which make for a more satisfactory question period.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF ITALO-CANADIAN SOCIAL SECURITY AGREEMENTS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a document.

Mr. Nowlan: In what capacity is the minister speaking—as the Secretary of State, or as the minister for external aid?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking as Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder what capacity the hon. member is in today—if not incapacitated!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House—

An hon. Member: What about the $6 million in aid?

Mr. Jamieson: With the consent of the House, and with the request that the hon. member shut his $6 million mouth, I would ask—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What about your $6 million ego?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not think the tabling of documents was so complicated.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the hon. member's mood today, he would make an argument on the Ten Commandments? With the consent of the House, I should like to table documents concerning the Italo-Canadian Social Security Agreements.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WALTER BAKER—JUDGMENT OF SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO ON RIGHTS OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise in response to the commitment made by my colleague, the hon. Minister of Justice, that I might make some comments on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. I should like to read the motion the hon. member said he would be prepared to move should a prima facie breach of privilege be found. The proposed motion reads as follows:

That the portions of the judgment of Chief Justice Evans of the Supreme Court of Ontario, given November 9, 1977, which appeared to restrict the rights of members of parliament to full and accurate reporting in the press, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Many important points were made in the discussion on this question, but the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has done the House a service by focusing what in his view is the essence of the question of privilege, namely, what may appear to restrict the rights of members of parliament to full and accurate reporting in the press.

I have read the judgment, and while I agree with the hon. member that concerns which have been raised are valid and ought to be kept to the forefront at all times, I can find nothing that suggests to me even a prima facie case for a breach of privilege. Chief Justice Evans seems to make it clear early in his judgment that no one, in fact, has been charged with any breach of any regulation. Therefore, it is merely an academic exercise to contemplate whether at some time in the future there may or may not be a breach of privilege. A prima facie case of privilege must exist, in reality, in a concrete instance and not in some potential event which may occur in the future. No one has alleged any specific instance in which the privileges of the House, or those of any member of the House, have been abridged or violated.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

With regard to the matters then before Chief Justice Evans, he states the following:

The role of the court is not to grant absolution before sinning nor to deal with academic issues.

If the court is unable to absolve before the committing of sin, and has no opportunity to deal with academic issues, certainly it is not for the House of Commons to deal with a matter that has not yet arisen. I should like to quote from page 42 of the judgment, where we find a paragraph that seems to capsulize the cause of concern of some hon. members. It reads as follows:

Following the authorities set out above, I have come to the conclusion that a member of parliament may utilize information proscribed by regulation 76-644 in parliament and may release that information to the media. However, I hold that the privileges of the member cannot be extended to protect the media if they choose to release the information to the public. Nor do I consider that the "real" and "essential" functions of a member include a duty or right to release information to constituents. The cases indicate that the privilege is finite and I would not be justified in extending the privilege to cover information released to constituents.

Perhaps we ought to consider what this paragraph means in light of our understanding of parliamentary privilege. Every authority—Erskine, May, Beauchesne and Bourinot—points out that privilege, as it applies to individual members, is ancillary to their role as a member of the house and not as individual persons. We, as individuals, have no privileges. We have these privileges because we are members of the House of Commons, and these privileges are ancillary to the roles we hold as members of the House of Commons. In other words, a breach of privilege occurs only when a member is impeded in the performance of his duty, not as a citizen or a politician but as a constituent part of the House. It is not the member who holds the privilege; it is the House. As a functional part of the House, the member enjoys certain rights and immunities. In his judgment, Chief Justice Evans recognizes this explicitly.

Part of the privileges of the House includes the requirement that any published report of its proceedings be faithful, balanced and accurate. In order to assist the media in meeting this standard, parliament long ago enacted sections 7, 8 and 9 of the Senate and House of Commons Act which extend to the media immunities enjoyed by members in the execution of their duties in parliament.

I draw to the attention of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and to the House that the possible danger of restricting the rights of members of parliament to full and accurate reporting in the media is already safeguarded by sections 7, 8 and 9 of the Senate and House of Commons Act, because these sections extend to the media the immunities which members enjoy in the execution of their duties in parliament.

Personally, I fail to see how—even in the realm of possibility—the transmission of what members say or, as the hon. member puts it, their right to full and accurate reporting in the press, could be abridged in any way in light of the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act, sections 7, 8 and 9. Of course, these immunities which the media enjoy have been supported by the courts and by parliament in the past. Certainly, in the case before us no reporter, no publisher and no broadcaster has been charged with any offence. No member of parliament has been able to say he certainly has been impeded in having himself fully and accurately reported in the press, which is the essence of the hon. member's question of privilege.

Mr. Stevens: That is not true.

Mr. MacEachen: While each House of parliament reserves for itself the right to adjudicate questions of privilege, the courts also regard parliamentary privilege as part of the law of the land. I should like to quote from Erskine May's nineteenth edition, page 201, which reads as follows:

On the other hand, the courts regard the privileges of parliament as part of the law of the land, of which they are bound to take judicial notice. They consider it their duty to decide any question of privilege arising directly or indirectly in a case which falls within their jurisdiction, and to decide it according to their own interpretation of the law.

The decisions of the courts are not accepted as binding by the House on matters of privilege, nor the decisions of the House by the courts.

● (1522)

This statement supports the age-old dichotomy that there are, at any given point in time, two doctrines of privilege, one held by the court and the other held by either House. Erskine May goes on to say:

In practice, however, there is a wide field of agreement on the nature and principles of privilege in spite of the apparent deadlock on the question of jurisdiction.

(1) It seems to be recognized that, for the purpose of adjudicating on questions of privilege, neither House is by itself entitled to claim the supremacy over the ordinary courts of justice which was enjoyed by the undivided high court of parliament.

I believe it is important to establish, if I may enter my own comment within the quotation, that a House undivided or parliament undivided is unable to claim supremacy in the field of privilege, according to Erskine May. I believe that what I am saying is relevant to what I may say later on. Erskine May goes on to say:

The supremacy of parliament, consisting of the sovereign and the two Houses, is a legislative supremacy which has nothing to do with the privilege jurisdiction of either House acting singly.

(2) It is admitted by both Houses that, since neither House can by itself add to the law, neither House can by its own declaration create a new privilege. This implies that privilege is objective and its extent ascertainable, and reinforces the doctrine that it is known by the courts.

I make the point, and draw upon Erskine May, to establish the fact that there can be a distinction between the privilege as seen by a court and privilege as seen by parliament in what I have described as an age-old dichotomy. But coming to this particular case, I argue that it is not the obligation of Mr. Speaker, nor is it the obligation of the House of Commons, to deal with academic or abstract issues—

Mr. Stevens: It is not academic, nor is it abstract.

Mr. MacEachen: —because in this case there is no evidence—

Mr. Stevens: You just were not here.

Mr. MacEachen: —that the privilege of any member of parliament has been abridged—

Mr. Stevens: Mine was.

Mr. MacEachen: Nor have charges or lawsuits of any kind occurred and, in my judgment, there is no prime facia case—

Mr. Stevens: What a cover-up.

Mr. MacEachen: —that the privileges of any hon. member have been abridged.

Mr. Stevens: Mine have.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member may have had his activities abridged, but I do not believe he has in any way been impeded in his performance as a member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Stevens: That is your opinion.

Mr. MacEachen: That is my opinion, and I have seen no evidence that any member has been impeded in the performance of his duties. But I should remind the hon. member that we have a specific motion before us. The House is asked to deal with the motion in which the hon. member says to us that there is a possibility that a restriction can occur on the accurate reporting of what a member of parliament says. That is what is in the motion that we are asked to deal with, the portions of the judgment of Chief Justice Evans of the Supreme Court of Ontario given in November of 1977 which appear to restrict the rights of members of parliament to full and accurate reporting in the press. That is the essence of the case put forward in the motion. I am not dealing with all the words that may have been said; I am dealing with the motion which says that there is an appearance that the right of members of parliament to full and accurate reporting in the press is restricted. Has anything of that nature occurred?

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. MacEachen: I say to the hon. member that he should look—

Mr. Stevens: Refer it to the committee, and we will tell you.

Mr. MacEachen: —at the relevant sections of the Senate and House of Commons Act which extend to the media the immunities that are enjoyed by members of parliament, provided the accounts are faithful, accurate and objective, so that the privilege which I enjoy of speaking in the House of Commons is extended to the media through the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Justice Evans says you are wrong.

Mr. MacEachen: I am not dealing with what Mr. Justice Evans has put forward; I am dealing with the motion which has been suggested as a basis for the question of privilege, because this is the particular motion that the hon. member has indicated to us he would move if a prime facia case of privilege was found.

If the motion were adopted, presumably the committee would be obliged to investigate what restrictions have occurred on the rights of members of parliament to full and accurate reporting in the press. That is what the committee would have to do. We have to establish that there is some basis to believe that a breach of privilege has occurred, namely, that in some way members have been denied full and accurate reporting in the press of what they have said in the House of Commons. That is the simple case as put in the motion—and I say there is no evidence whatsoever to support that any breach has occurred. I suggest that it is not the obligation of Mr. Speaker to deal with academic issues or with matters in the abstract which may occur as a result of some future development—

Mr. Stevens: That is the argument that got us into the present box.

Mr. MacEachen: —any more than it is the obligation of Mr. Chief Justice Evans to deal with matters in the abstract or academic issues.

So, basically, my argument is that we have no evidence of any breach of privilege in terms of the motion which the hon. member would put before the House for a vote if Mr. Speaker found a prime facia case of privilege—and I do not believe any evidence has been adduced to prove that any breach of privilege has occurred, because no member has been able to say that what I have said in the House has been prevented from being reported in the media.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question before he sits down?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I think we established clearly in the past that we can allow members only one opportunity to participate in these arguments, but I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is not seeking an opportunity to participate, but simply wishes a clarification. He has the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising is to seek clarification. Is the President of the Privy Council telling us that unless, or until, someone is interfered with we are to take it for granted that the privileges of this House stand—our privileges to discuss matters and to have our proceeding reported—and that we are therefore to ignore the obiter dictum of the Chief Justice?

● (1532)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am saying that in the past it has been the custom to demonstrate that a breach of some member's privilege has taken place, or that there is a prima facie case of that breach, and I do not find that in this case that has taken place. I am arguing within the terms of the motion which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton would move if a prima facie case of privilege were found, and I believe it is logical to infer that this is the basis for a prima facie case of privilege and this is what we would be investigating. I go on to say that the possibility of a restriction of the rights of members to full and accurate reporting in the media is protected already by the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Notwithstanding the Chief Justice?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, it is the law.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: That is my argument.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could also put a question to the President of the Privy Council following upon my colleague's question. We seem to have two laws to deal with. Does the government intend to appeal any portion of the judgment of Chief Justice Evans? Does the government intend to appeal any portion, or all of what his Lordship has held?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not want to be unco-operative with the hon. member. His question is a matter for the Minister of Justice. I have argued the question of privilege, and I have not discussed with the Minister of Justice whether he intends to take an appeal. I might add, if I may, that there is a possibility of an appeal. Presumably, the time for the expiration of launching an appeal has not yet come.

Mr. Stevens: Tomorrow is the last day.

Mr. MacEachen: If an appeal were launched, and if it were successful, we would indeed be dealing with an academic matter. It is a technical point, but an important point for a learned gentleman of the law such as Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I submit that what concerns the House is the law as we know it and of course, as the minister has stated, it is the Senate and House of Commons Act which protects the privileges and rights of this House. What is at issue here is the interpretation of that law by a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Which is also part of the law.

Mr. McGrath: —which is also, as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton interjects, part of the law. That is the issue here. I want to read, for the record again, that part of the judgment which says this:

> Nor do I consider that the "real" and "essential" functions of a member include a duty or right to release information to constituents. The cases indicate that the privilege is finite and would not be justified in extending the privilege to cover information released to constituents.

In previous rulings Your Honour has indicated, and rightly so, what is in fact a cherished and sacred tradition of this House, and that is the right of the press gallery to report to our constituents what goes on here. By the same token, a very important right of a member of this House is his right to deal with his constituents unencumbered and unrestricted. I submit that is what is at issue, and that is the substance of the motion moved by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton which I think should be read again for the record:

That the portions of the judgment of Chief Justice Evans of the Supreme Court of Ontario, given November 9, 1977, which appear to restrict the rights of members of parliament to full and accurate reporting in the press, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I submit that it is the duty of a committee of this House to determine whether the rights of members of parliament have, in fact, been restricted by an interpretation of the law by Chief Justice Evans, and I submit that Your Honour should accept the motion and refer this matter to a committee of the House.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, what I want to say has perhaps been said elaborately already by the President of the Privy Council. What I want to say is that I think judges have the right to make nonsensical obiter dictum—and this is precisely what this judge has done. I think what he says is clearly without any foundation: I think it is clearly wrong, and I propose that we disregard it entirely.

Mr. MacEachen: That is my argument.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did give a preliminary indication of my—

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will see the hon. member in a moment. I did give a preliminary indication of my reaction to the arguments which have been put forward in a very preliminary way to the relationship between this House and our power or right to determine the definition of our privileges in the given circumstances as opposed to that of the court. However, that was done only by way of a preliminary indication. I did indicate that after all the arguments were in, because of the importance of the matter and because I am sure that the House would want some clear and definitive statement as to where we stand in this matter, that I would reserve on the matter in an attempt to give my decisions on it on Monday.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is prompted by the comment made by the hon. member for Greenwood. I think it is grossly unfair for members of this House now to be reflecting on the judgment of the Chief Justice, bearing in mind that six members of this House went before the Chief Justice—because we felt we had no alternative because of certain rulings in this House—concerning our anxiety about the question we are now debating.

An hon. Member: You are reflecting on the Chair.

Mr. Stevens: I recall, for hon. members that the Prime Minister invited us to litigate this matter, which we did. We were faced with the type of reasoning the government House leader has indicated today, that it is all in the abstract, and we felt we had no alternative but to get a court adjudication as to what in fact are our privileges.

Frankly, I do not like the concept of trying something and, if it is found to be against the law, you are charged and you are on your own. Surely, the only prudent thing to do is to establish—and that is what Chief Justice Evans tried to do—what exactly are the privileges and rights of members of this House. To reflect now on that judgment is, I think, grossly unfair.

Mr. Speaker: Whether that may be or not, it certainly is not disorder for a member to comment on that judgment which has been brought into discussion. The Chief Justice is not a member of the House of Commons. No comment I know of could bring about disorder, unless perhaps it were to come from a minister outside the House. However, that is not the case here.

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few observations in this debate. The economic ills which have plagued Canada for a decade and have dissipated the faith of Canadians in their hope for a secure future have been sadly ignored, misunderstood and miscalculated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in presenting his mini-budget and the tax proposals presently before the House.

At a time when Canada desperately needs a strong and steady hand to guide our monetary and fiscal policies, and when we need a Minister of Finance with imagination and courage to restore confidence in Canada's future and to heal the malignancy destroying our economy, we are presented with a mini-budget and tax proposals that offer nothing but deficit, debt and despair. The Minister of Finance, in defending his position, adopted a well-known excuse, "I had no choice"—a phrase I must remind the House, which is commonly associated with individuals who know they have erred, who attempt to hide the truth and who offer no solutions.

Does no choice mean that workers in Sudbury, Ontario, or Thompson, Manitoba will have to drift aimlessly in a sea of economic uncertainty? Does it mean Ottawa will have to continue to borrow $23 of every $100 it spends? Does it mean the nearly one million unemployed, and in particular the youth of our country, have no hope for the future? Does it mean there is no hope for the declining dollar? Is the inference that we must sit idly by while it continues to deteriorate? Does it mean we are committed to a deficit of better than $8 billion this year, and similar deficits in the future? Does no choice imply the farmers in my area can expect to receive $1.50 a bushel for corn next year, or those on fixed incomes should prepare themselves for a further decrease in their standard of living because the Minister of Finance has conceded he cannot control inflation?

When the Minister of Finance indicated he had no choice, was he in fact stating government policy, namely, the government had erred, the government had attempted to conceal the truth from Canadians and had no solutions? Perhaps the gravity of the situation can best be summarized by quoting from an editorial appearing in the Toronto Star on November 9, 1977, which stated:

> Some strong medicine for Canada: Our economy is in grave trouble, one that finance minister Jean Chrétien's mini-budget of last month doesn't even begin to deal with. . . . It's not enough for Chrétien to call for confidence and rail that "the present wave of pessimism seems to have gone too far," as he did in his mini-budget last month. He can't talk the country back to prosperity; words won't create jobs.
> The problem for Canada, and the reason the country is in such an economic mess today, is that the country has lacked strong economic leadership in Ottawa for more than a decade. Economic policies have been based on wishful thinking, subordinated to the exigencies of election campaigns or, as in the case of an industrial strategy, simply allowed to flounder in the bowels of the bureaucracy.

Editorials on our economy are not confined within our geographical boundaries. Indeed, an article which appearing in the Wall Street Journal of October 3, 1977, entitled "The Canadian Dollar," stated in part:

> Canada isn't doing so well. It's economy has been tangled up by a government effort to apply compulsory wage and price controls for nearly two years. The experiment has been marked by strikes and a flagging growth in production. Foreign direct investment has dried up and inflation which those price and wage controls was supposed to cure, is currently at a higher level than in the United States.

[Mr. Holmes.]

It went on to say:

> While the nation's troubles are frequently attributed to the rise of the Quebec separatists, it would be more accurate to say that the rise of the Quebec separatists is closely related to the country's economic mismanagement.

The article created considerable excitement in Canada and uneasiness in Ottawa. However, the United States, the international community—and, unfortunately, many Canadians—have been slow in recognizing what many of us in Canada have known for several years. We have too much debt, too much unemployment, too much government spending, too much inflation, too little productivity, too little investment capital, too much talk, and too little action. When the Wall Street Journal editorialized that "it would be more accurate to say the rise of the Quebec separatists is closely related to the country's economic management," it was expressing a well-established truism, namely, that a weak economy stimulates division.

The breadwinners in Newfoundland, the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, the prairies, British Columbia and the north are equally concerned about their present and future security, and the program introduced by the Minister of Finance does not create jobs, does not place food on the table and does not pay for the utilities and rent.

On March 16 this year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated "Canadians are living beyond their means." Few in Canada can match the government's experience and record. In all but one of the last ten years, the federal government has run up a deficit on its accounts.

Federal debt obligations have nearly doubled, with a 99.7 per cent increase between 1966 and 1976, rising to a level of $42.2 billion, or approximately $1,800 for every man, woman and child in Canada. Since 1973 alone, federal securities outstanding have grown by 42 per cent. This excessive spending and living beyond our means has had two unfortunate effects. First, the burden of interest payments from this debt has created a large demand upon federal expenditures and, second, a significant proportion of this debt has been "monetized" by the Bank of Canada, thus increasing the supply of money—a major contributor to the cause of inflation.

Although federal debt outstanding has nearly doubled in the last ten years, the cost of servicing that debt has nearly quadrupled over the same period. Between 1966 and 1977 public debt charges have increased from $1.2 billion to $4.7 billion. Based on estimates of spending, public debt charges will total $5.4 billion in 1978, accounting for more than 13 per cent of federal budgetary expenditures. If Canadians are to live within their means, the example must be established by the federal government.

Canada's growing inability to compete with foreign countries and, in particular, our largest export market, the United States, has virtually produced a trade disaster. Our inability to price exports competitively has immediate consequences for our balance of payments. For example, the trade deficit in manufactured goods rose from less than $4 billion to more than $10 billion in the first half of the decade. The more serious consequences are the effects on Canadian living standards, jobs, and political independence. Some of the effects are obvious now, such as reduced surplus of merchandise trade, a weak and unstable dollar. Other effects that are just becoming apparent are unwillingness of Canadian exporters to expand production capacity and the movement of whole plants from Canada to the United States.

In recent years, Canada has been progressively shifting from a goods-producing economy to a society dominated by services. Although it would be incorrect to indicate all services do not create wealth, we cannot ignore the inescapable fact that innumerable programs depend on the tax dollars of the productive segment of society, or perhaps it would be more accurate to say those sectors which produce real wealth. Less than 3½ million of the 10 million Canadians who have jobs are employed in Canada's goods-producing sectors. Two million are employed in the manufacturing sector which is a smaller proportion of the work force than any of our major trading partners. There are 650,000 in construction, and about 800,000 in the primary resources industries. Canada's service sector now employs more than 6½ million Canadians. Of this number, approximately 2½ million work in government services, which is a higher proportion of the work force in government services than in Great Britain.

Let me emphasize that the growth in the service sector is a trend among industrialized countries which is accepted by the vast majority of people. I have no doubt those present in this chamber are sympathetic to programs which, for example, assist our senior citizens or those less fortunate individuals who are unable to provide for their own needs. The central issue, and the question that must be asked, is whether Canada can afford the innumerable services that are offered or contemplated. The evidence is quite clear—that Canada has and is attempting to support a higher level of services with a lower level of goods-producing activity than any of the major industrialized countries.

Not infrequently Sweden is used as the yardstick for comparative purposes when one is discussing social and economic problems, and one cannot escape the harsh reality that Sweden has a larger manufacturing sector and a smaller service sector than Canada. The effects of this imbalance are obvious. Canada has become less competitive. This imbalance has affected productivity, it has impaired our ability to provide capital for the creation of jobs in the private sector and, as I indicated earlier, it has affected our balance of trade, resulting in the largest trade deficit in our history. It has affected the confidence of Canadians with respect to future economic growth, as well as impairing our ability to control inflation.

Canada's emphasis on services of all kinds has meant not only that services have been absorbing a disproportionate share of investment capital that could be used more efficiently for productivity improvements, but the smaller, hard-pressed goods-producing sectors are not creating the wealth upon which present services can be maintained or upon which an expanded services sector must be based. The existing stagnation in the Canadian economy has prompted certain groups and individuals, depending on their perception or bias, to emphasize a particular symptom.

Excessive wage rates, decreased productivity, too many services, excessive government spending, corporate rip-offs, lack of business initiative, and a host of other factors have been espoused as the causes creating the present situation. However, it is apparent that Canada can no longer price its goods competitively for the international market and, in particular, for the United States. The anti-inflation program has not restored a competitive position. The federal government, by following an economic policy which can best be described as "good economics are bad politics, and good politics make poor economics", has no other strategy. Obviously, inflation must be brought under control, at least to a rate which is in line with our major competitors.

Mr. Speaker, if Canada is ever to become more than an exporter of raw resources, the manufacturers and processors must be able to price their goods to meet the requirements of our major trading partners. On February 20 of this year, Milton Friedman stated: "There is only one place inflation is made in Canada, and that's in Ottawa."

An hon. Member: Who is he?

Mr. Holmes: Although Mr. Friedman's remarks refer to his beliefs about the relationship—

An hon. Member: Who is he?

Mr. Holmes: I will answer the hon. member's question when I have finished. Although Mr. Friedman's remarks refer to his beliefs about the relationship between money and inflation, the statement is also appropriate for describing the lack of concern shown by the whole government sector over cost inflation within its own expenditures. When one indicates that a particular group within the economy is bearing the burden of inflation—the suggestion refers to a group which is either unwilling or unable to raise its own income to compensate for price increases of goods and services—then sir, if income does not grow as rapidly as prices, the amount purchased must decrease and in times of rapid and continuous price increases those living on fixed incomes bear the greatest burden of inflation. For example, someone who retired in 1970 with a fixed pension of, say, $6,000 would find in 1976 that that amount of money would purchase a 1970 equivalent of $3,917 in goods and services. If the $6,000, had been the sole source of income, that person's standard of living would have dropped by 35 per cent.

Many Canadians have suffered as a result of inflation and, at times, price increases have been resisted by consumers. For instance, a reduction in coffee consumption, the weak housing market in many cities, and the reduced sales of automobiles in 1975 all indicate that Canadians can be resistant to burdensome price increases. Superficially, government resembles Canadians in that they, too, are faced with higher costs. However, unlike Canadians, there is much less incentive for government to resist price increases, and its income is always growing more rapidly. There is even less incentive for government, as the prospect of the need to borrow is not seen to deter spending. During the period between the third quarter of 1970 and the third quarter of 1976, government spending increased by 148 per cent. Although several reasons are advanced for increased government spending, one obvious explanation is the propensity for a public service to proliferate, once established, and the difficulty to terminate such a service.

One example may serve as an illustration. During examination of the estimates of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, we calculated that between $50 million to $75 million had been mismanaged by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in its handling of one program, namely, the Indian economic development fund. No one questioned the merits of the program and the necessity to develop an economic base in the Indian community which would promote greater self-sufficiency and less dependence on welfare programs. However, sir, the government's insistence to embark on grandiose projects has left in its wake many multi-million dollar projects which have gone bankrupt and the public perception that the Indian community has failed.

At least one reserve, the Millbrook band in Nova Scotia, has called for a public inquiry into the Abenaki Inn to clear their name. I have asked the Auditor General, under the new powers of the auditor general's act, to investigate the entire program and report his findings to the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, this program is not an isolated finding, and I am convinced that if the various departments were forced to question and examine more carefully existing and future programs, millions of dollars would be saved or would be utilized far more effectively.

In the time remaining, I would like to briefly touch on two specfic issues. First of all, it will not surprise the minister or the government to learn that I have received considerable correspondence relating to the federal government's proposed changes for the taxation of life insurance. I have no doubt the minister's decision to withdraw the budget proposal which would have taxed a portion of life insurance proceeds payable at death was the direct result of the combined concern and effort of millions of policyholders across Canada. I know many of my constituents shared concern and voiced their objections to that particular part of the bill.

I was initially tempted to congratulate the minister for his announcement during the speech from the throne. However, at the risk of sounding ungrateful, I hesitated to do so for two reasons. First, I am persuaded to conclude that the minister's announcement was one of political expediency and he has yet to convince me, or the vast majority of policyholders in Canada, that the basic policy of this government, namely, the confiscation of the rights of a life insurance policyholder, has been altered.

There can be no doubt that the federal government, in deciding to tax policyholders to satisfy their insatiable needs and their appetite for additional monies, knew perfectly well they were confiscating the long-established rights of the individual policyholders. I would ask: Would the minister have withdrawn the budget proposal which would have taxed a portion of life insurance proceeds payable at death if public concern had not been voiced? I suggest the answer would have been "no". I ask again, sir, have the minister and the government altered their basic policy regarding the rights of the individual policyholder? Again, the answer is "no".

I would say to the minister, in all sincerity, that until such time as he rescinds the proposal to tax the policyholder at the time of taking out a policy loan, as well as rescinding his proposal to disallow the deduction of policy loan interest as an expense, he is infringing upon the rights of policyholders. As I indicated previously, the basic issue is that of the rights of individual policyholders who number approximately 12 million throughout Canada. If the minister recognizes those rights, his course of action is clear and the proposals will be rescinded. If the minister does not recognize this fundamental right and insists on retaining the proposals in the legislation, then he must be accountable, not only to my party but to the 12 million policyholders in Canada.

Finally, I wish to make a brief comment on the proposed $100 million for job creation. Even the most optimistic proponents of the plan recognize this will have a minuscule effect on the nation's unemployment rate, which is expected to top 10 per cent this winter.

It is not my intention to take issue with present government job-creation policy at this time which, on balance, has led to an ever-increasing demand for government supported social services and has done little to create permanent jobs. Rather I want briefly to refer to changes that should be promoted by Canada Manpower which would contribute immeasurably to increasing job opportunities.

During October of this year, James G. O'Neill, Jeannette Jackson, Cindy Merritt and Cheryl Stonefish, presented their findings on the status of skilled trades in Kent county, Ontario. The document was an in-depth study of skilled trades in Kent county, and despite a present unemployment rate which is fairly high they found there is an immediate need for over 300 skilled tradesmen and a projected need of approximately 2,700 for present and future vacancies. The implications of this are profound. Although a number of groups were mentioned as contributing to the problem, Canada Manpower was singled out. I quote from page 95 of that document, where it is stated:

The majority of respondents believe that Canada Manpower is a bureaucratic institution which is not in tune with small business and industry. Its effectiveness as a recruitment centre is diminishing and the agency is not promoting its programs or fulfilling its expectations. The numbers of young people looking for positions are not directed into apprenticeship programs which are available. Rather, it is the responsibility of the applicant to find his own position and then enrol in an apprenticeship. If Canada Manpower is to provide its anticipated function, it must become more responsive to the needs of its applicants and it must be aware of apprenticeship openings and make this information available. The services of Canada Manpower is supposed to be counselling and perhaps this aspect should be stressed. Too often an applicant must search out his own jobs and many applicants are unaware of available apprenticeships.

The point I wish to make is that the government should be giving top priority to imaginative, constructive studies such as proposed by the authors I have mentioned, and sponsored, incidentally, by Mr. Ronald F. Moon, president of Local 127, UAW. I have no doubt that a commitment to such a project would produce permanent jobs for a far more appreciable portion of the labour force in my area.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my remarks today will concern the whole topic of employment and unemployment, but first I should like to review three main points of a thesis I put forward in the debate on the speech from the throne which relate to unemployment but are more general in nature. I should like to place them in the context of the theme we are discussing today.

The points I made were these: There has been a quantum jump in the problems which governments throughout the world have been called upon to face in recent years. The inflation figure, at 1.5 per cent in the OECD countries over the last 100 years, has now risen to basically 5 per cent. Unemployment generally has become more acute. I referred to Sweden, where the rate would run at about 6 per cent if it were recorded in the same way as ours. Similar unemployment rates are faced by Japan and a number of other countries.

The second point I made was that economic and fiscal techniques usually employed Keynesian theories, and so on—are proving unsuccessful. Third, there is the new notion of shortages, particularly of energy shortages. I concluded we were probably at the end of an era dominated by the idea of growth, and that new ideas must be introduced. I did not say then, and I do not say now, that growth will not be a major concern in the economic sphere. But it will not be the only one. We shall have to take a fresh look at all the things we are doing. It is within this context, I believe that we must look at the whole issue of employment and unemployment.

A couple of weeks ago, on November 9 or 10, we are given the employment and unemployment figures for this country taken as of the week ending October 15. We saw, of course, that the adjusted rate of unemployment was 8.3 per cent and that the unadjusted rate was 7.3 per cent. One of the things we did not hear very much about was the fact that as of the end of that week there were 257,000 more Canadians working than had been working in the same week a year earlier. Little was said about the fact that in the month of August 10,260,000 Canadians were working—the largest work force in the history of this country.

A great deal of gloom has been cast on this whole employment question. Recognition is not being given to the fact that we are creating jobs in this country faster than in any of the OECD countries. The rate of job creation between October, 1976, and October, 1977, was 2.3 per cent, representing a significant achievement. The problem remains, of course, that in the same month 780,000 Canadians were shown as unemployed. Some would argue that the real figure is higher. It may be higher, or it may be lower, depending on how the question is phrased.

Two techniques have traditionally been used to deal with unemployment. The first is to offer increased incentives to business in an effort to encourage the creation of new jobs. This has been the method favoured by fairly right-wing Conservatives in the past. I do not label any of the parties in this House as such, because there are such wide swings in all our parties. Another method which is used—and it follows Keynesian theories closely—is to put more money into circulation by lowering income tax, or by other fiscal and monetary means, as a way of increasing demand. This has been, perhaps, the more progressive way of doing things and it is one which has worked, more or less, since the depression of the thirties.

In the budget introduced in the spring of this year, the government employed both methods. It laid out about $1.2 billion on incentives to business, and it laid out some money—not a very large amount—on the demand side. But in addition to the money laid out in the budget on the demand side, there was the income tax indexing provision which also has the effect of stimulating demand. In addition, there was the increase in old age pensions, and so on, bringing the total put into the demand side, as of January 1, to an amount in the neighbourhood of $2.2 billion. I am also including the effect of such programs as Canada Works. That sum is very close to the amount which the New Democratic Party feels should be spent on the demand side.

In the mini-budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) produced a month ago, there was provision of a further $800 million or $900 million, and if we consider the indexing which will occur as of January 1, 1978, we arrive at a figure of $1.5 billion. So, in slightly over 12 months a sum of between $4 billion and $4.5 billion has been put into the demand side. I do not know how anyone can sit on the opposite side and say we have not tried to do something on the demand side. Do not forget that this is in addition to $1.2 billion which we put on the business incentives side, yet we have unemployment figures of 8.3 per cent adjusted and 7.3 per cent unadjusted. These figures will likely get worse through the winter months.

Mind you, there are very strong reasons why we have such high unemployment. In addition, the economy has some sluggish qualities in it. One is the fact that this year we will have something in the order of 300,000 more people coming into the work force, which is about five times the number coming into the work force in the fifties. The work force is growing at a much faster rate than any other country, and this presents us with some problems.

I should like to look at the demand techniques because I am concerned about them. As I say, we will probably put something in the order of $4 billion to $4½ billion into demand techniques by January 2, 1978. However, I would like to indicate that I do not think these techniques are working, and I do not think the solutions proposed by the opposition, particularly by the NDP, will be effective in any really significant way. I do not think that an extra $2¼ billion, as suggested by the NDP will create anything in the order of 300,000 jobs. I just do not think this is a possibility, and I disagree with it entirely.

One reason I think it will not work is that the level of saving in this country has become very significant. We have had an unusual situation occurring over the last five years, where Canada leads the "Big Seven"—the summit group of members of the OECD countries, the United States, Great Britain, France, West Germany, Japan, Italy and Canada—with the largest increase in personal consumption expenditure of any of these nations namely, 6.5 per cent on average. At the same time, we have had the second largest increase in the household savings ration; the savings ratio has increased in only one other country, a very strange phenomenon.

The OECD group says the reason for this phenomenon is that we have created so many more jobs in this particular period, and therefore there is more income around to be distributed. I am concerned with the savings ratio itself, and I should like to give the House the definition of "personal savings" because I think it is important in terms of creating demand. According to Statistics Canada, personal savings are considered to be the residual amount after deducting personal expenditures on consumer goods and services and after deducting direct personal tax payments and other current transfers from total income.

It is interesting to note that in 1970 personal savings represented 5.3 per cent of personal disposable income in Canada. By 1976 that had grown to 9.5 per cent, close to double. As a matter of fact, in 1975 it did double—savings in 1976 were a little less. This presents a very serious problem when one seeks to use the demand method for increasing economic activity and creating jobs. The problem is that if you reduce personal income tax or other taxes, such as sales tax, one might be creating additional savings which, again, would be removed from the demand side, and we would not get the kind of results we expect.

There are other techniques which might be used to create employment. Certainly, direct work employment projects are being used by the government and there might very well be more of these projects. But I am not sure whether we can expect very much from these other areas. I hear a great deal particularly from all three opposition parties about industrial strategies, and I know there is a great deal of concern in the government about the whole notion of industrial strategy. But I do have some worry about this particular notion, especially since I see what is happening to Sweden, a country which has done a great deal in terms of industrial strategy. Sweden is one of those countries which has put its eggs into a few baskets, one of them being high quality steel and the bottom has more or less dropped out of the steel market. Thus, Sweden finds itself in great difficulty. I am not so sure at this particular point that the industrial strategy notion is going to be as effective as perhaps we hoped it might be. I do not say that we should not be considering it or that we should not look at other techniques alongside a new industrial strategy; but I do say that we should look at it with a great deal of care.

[Mr. McRae.]

I should like to talk about what I think will be one of the concerns for the future in terms of employment, given the fact that we will have continuing growth in the work force and that this country and most other countries are experiencing the same kind of problem. I think there will be much more interest in the future in the notion of work-sharing. What do I mean, Mr. Speaker, by work-sharing? I mean the simple technique of trying to adjust the number of jobs which are available, the useful work that needs to be done in this country, to the number of people available to do it. There seems to be a degree of equity in this kind of notion, in the sense that one group is not expected to do all the work, while the other group is never plugged-in to the job market but shares some of the benefits. In this way we have a degree of equity, and I think this is something we should look at very carefully.

I had an experience which I should like to relate to hon. members of the House in connection with work-sharing which I think illustrates the problem we are facing. As a former high school principal of a fairly medium-sized school of 1,200 students and 70 or 80 teachers during the early 1970's I had an experience which I think is worth relating. During the 1960s and up to about 1970 there was massive growth in the school systems of this country as a result of the great influx of young people coming into the schools. There was a great deal of upward mobility on the part of teachers because new schools were being opened. There were jobs for principals, vice-principals, department heads, and so on, and this led to a great dependence on upward mobility as a means of getting ahead, as a means of creating incentives.

Then all of a sudden, Mr. Speaker, within the space of about one year, all of this growth stopped. The number of young people coming into the schools was reduced considerably and the demand for teachers fell right off. We were left with a very frustrating situation, a situation of no growth which few other parts of society were experiencing—and, as I say, a great many frustrations flowed from this. I think one of the causes of a lot of stress in the academic field to the dissatisfaction of teachers in the last four or five years, certainly in high schools and elementary schools, stems from this lack of growth, this lack of upward mobility on the part of teachers. I lived through a year or so of this, and I was very concerned about the possible effect in this particular scene. Therefore, we looked at several ways in which we might ameliorate this situation. There are many techniques that could be used, and we tried a couple. There were some which we advocated but we were not very successful in the achieved results.

One technique involved early retirement. It seemed a reasonable proposition that at a certain point those who wanted to retire early should be allowed to do so, and some incentive could be added to encourage this kind of thing. The second technique was phased retirement, and in terms of the school system phased retirement refers to a person perhaps teaching half a day or assuming half a teaching load for three periods instead of six periods a day. There would be some kind of pairing with another person doing the same kind of thing.

The third technique had to do with pairing itself. In this case, you might possibly have two people on the staff who only wanted to work part-time. It might involve a married woman who wanted to be at home more and in this way she was able to pair with some other person doing the same kind of thing. It is very interesting to note that where this pairing has been done—and there are some statistics on this—the school, or wherever it was done, benefited considerably in that it received more than 50 per cent of the work from each of the individuals forming the pair. Therefore, this worked very successfully.

Another form of work-sharing is, of course, straight leave of absence. Another form, and one that interested me a great deal, was the notion of sabbatical leave. A teacher could go on a sabbatical leave. His salary would be reduced. If he was at the top of his salary range and his salary was reduced to two-thirds, it would be very easy to hire a new teacher at the bottom level of the salary range to replace him for the remainder of that year. These were some of the techniques we looked at in respect of schools.

When I first came to parliament these ideas were fresh in my mind. While we have had no discussions about work-sharing until the last month or two, I have always been concerned and interested in the possibilities of using these techniques. Having done a little research on the subject, I find there is a great deal being done in terms of work-sharing in Europe at the present time, particularly in West Germany as well as in countries such as Japan. Instead of laying people off in a given industry because of economic fluctuations, attempts are made to share the work with employees working a six-hour day, or whatever is involved in the amount of sharing required. I found, also, that there is a considerable amount of work-sharing in parts of the United States, particularly in California. In all these areas there has been a considerable amount of success. One of the points I mentioned earlier is that people working shorter days are not less productive, but probably are more productive. You have work-sharing in the form of pairing with increased productivity on the part of the two people involved.

I am very interested in the efforts the federal government is making at the present time in this connection, particularly in the project at Bathurst, New Brunswick, involving the notion of work-sharing using the unemployment insurance fund. This is something well worth looking at. When considering the scene at Sudbury and the lay-offs at INCO and Falconbridge, I can fully understand the views of the labour movement rejecting, at least in the beginning, the whole notion of work-sharing, because it is in their own interests and in the interests of the community that the number of people involved in work-sharing be reduced considerably. It is possible to create other kinds of jobs and move people to other places like Elliot Lake or to the Syncrude project. This should be done in the first instance, of course.

However, at some point I believe there will be people laid off at Sudbury. I hope these lay-offs do not occur in carte blanche fashion or just in respect of new employees but, rather, that there is an element of work-sharing. If the situation is handled this way, it would be a good step forward. We could use the unemployment insurance fund to compensate a whole group of employees whose work is reduced, rather than having some employees laid off completely and drawing unemployment insurance.

One of the advantages of work-sharing is that there is leisure time available. A miner who works only four days a week would have much more leisure time. This probably would be of great value to many people. In terms of the INCO situation, I would like to see the government at some later point, not right now, make an inquiry among those employees and, for that matter, employees all across the country, to determine how many would voluntarily choose some form of work sharing with a reduced work week or a reduced hourly day. I am sure we would find, as a result of a canvass that many people would accept this on a voluntary basis, thus creating many job openings in the country. I am sure that many people working five days a week or 40 hours a week would voluntarily accept a shorter work week or a shorter work day. In this way, we would have a number of jobs filled by other people.

This is a slight divergence, but I must say I am disturbed at the statements about the INCO situation in relation to EDC funds being used to create sales of mining equipment to update mines in other parts of the world. This is of my concern because I am sure that in my community of Thunder Bay the same attitude would not obtain. In the last two or three years, to my knowledge, we have had two very sizeable orders placed with Canada Car, both funded by EDC: one was for Poland and involved tree farmers for the woods industry in that country, and one involved Mexico and the purchase of rail cars. Each of these orders could in some way eventually create competition for Canadian industries, I suppose, but we will also find that as these countries become more industrialized, they will be in a position to purchase more of the sophisticated technology we are to produce. I think it is a great mistake to criticize this kind of thing. Somebody else would have done it, of course, but these particular orders which amounted to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $100 million have had a significant effect on our community.

The government should seriously consider this whole notion of work-sharing. It should undertake a study to determine how many people across the country would voluntarily accept this concept. Work-sharing should not be introduced on a compulsory basis, even at places like Sudbury where lay-offs are a fact, but should always be voluntary. The government would then know how many people would be willing to forgo some work time and some wages, because we are speaking basically in terms of the same hourly wage, but shorter hours or a shorter week, in favour of more leisure time in which to do the other things they would like.

There are many employees in various industries in this country, some of whom are blue-collar workers, who have a fair degree of savings. Perhaps some of these workers would welcome this leisure time in order to do something else with that time. Many people have things going on the side. Many people have small farms, and so on: they would welcome the same kind of leisure time. Many Canadians are working 40 hours a week, punching the clock, and so on, in our industries. Some of them are very valuable people to their communities. We should adopt the idea which I refer to as the guaranteed annual role. That would enable people, who have something to contribute to their communities, to find the time to do so. These are some of the things which can happen if we had a voluntary survey.

There seems to be a concern, because we are sharing the work, that we are not doing anything to increase demand. I am not sure that is true. If a person was on a four-day voluntary week, his savings would be somewhat less, and therefore probably he would spend a higher portion of his income than otherwise. Actually, that may generate more demand even though we are not creating more jobs.

In terms of work-sharing and the people who may look at it favourably, there is another area I should like to deal with. A Swedish economist and social scientist developed a thesis in a texbook known as "The Harried Leisure Class". The thesis was that those who are fairly affluent, earning $20,000 or more a year, are working more hours than those who are not so affluent, and their leisure time is reduced by their work time. I suppose most hon. members would fit into that category. Because of this affluence, they have a fair amount of money to spend. Therefore, their consumption time is fairly long: they spend a great deal of time in stores buying things, having things fixed, and so on. As people become more affluent and more busy, they have less leisure time. Leisure time is the time when people are not sleeping, consuming or working. When Canadians see themselves in a fairly affluent state, spending a great deal of time buying goods they may not need, they may look at leisure time as something which is much more valuable. Most hon. members would see leisure time as something which is valuable. This is another area where volunteers may be found for reduced days and reduced hours.

In conclusion, Canadians would do very well to look partially at one solution for some of our economic and unemployment problems, that is, work sharing. By that, I mean matching up the number of jobs available in this country with the number of people available for them. I am referring to useful jobs. Creating unuseful jobs does not work to the betterment of Canadians. If these things are looked at, I am sure one of the techniques of the future will most certainly be work sharing.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to take part in this debate even in its dying moments. One might say that because Bill C-11 reveals the major weaknesses of the government's economic policies. My constituents, as well as others, are entitled to know what I think about these matters. Basically, this is a bill which gives incentives to private industry in the hope that it will provide jobs. It has failed in this effort. To me and to many hundred thousand Canadians the present rate of unemployment is by far the most serious weakness in our economy. Improving the unemployment picture should be the first priority in all our policies.

It is one thing to quote statistics, which I propose to do, but it is quite another to grasp the actual meaning in the lives of people of large-scale unemployment. There is a serious danger that we will become insensitive to the facts underlying national statistics and will be unwilling to adopt an economic strategy which will end the mismanagement of the economy and make a serious impact on the matter of unemployment.

The most recently issued statistics indicate that the rate of unemployment across Canada is approximately 8 per cent. If adequate attention is paid to those unemployed but not on the lists, it is estimated the amount would be approximately 10 per cent, or over a million Canadians. This is the worst rate of unemployment since 1940, but it fails to indicate that in various parts of the country—and I am thinking of the Atlantic provinces in particular—there are serious depression levels of unemployment being inflicted on workers.

Behind these statistics is a picture of individual human suffering and pain. The hopes and lives of families, older workers and women workers, are shattered by unemployment. Of the unemployed, 421,000 were men and 414,000 were women. Of the total, 418,000 were workers under 25, and 128,000 were workers between 45 and 64. I hate to think what is happening to the younger people under 25 when nearly half a million of them are unemployed. The average duration of unemployment is said to be 14.5 weeks. There were 667,000 families hit by unemployment. Many of the Canadians who experienced unemployment were family men.

The myth frequently repeated about unemployment is that a lot of it is voluntary. The facts of life and the statistics show the contrary. During the second quarter of this year there were only 43,200 full-time vacant jobs in Canada, according to Statistics Canada. Therefore, for every 100 persons unemployed there were only five vacant jobs. This means if every job had been filled, 870,800 workers would still be out of work, or 77.6 per cent of the work force would still be jobless.

Another myth which is frequently accepted by the people is that when there is unemployment only the out of work are hurt. This is not true. Real economic losses occur for everyone from massive unemployment, affecting the standard of living of all Canadians. Estimates of some of these costs in 1976 show that every 1 per cent of 104,000 unemployed results in a loss of income and output of $2.1 billion, amounting to $20,000 for each unemployed worker. Every 1 per cent reduction in unemployment would have reduced unemployment insurance payments by about $5 million. The government itself lost about $412 billion in tax revenues because of lost income due to unemployment.

The Conference Board of Ottawa, which is a prestigious institution independent of the government, recently reported that Canadians lost $12 billion in income and output last year due to unemployment, amounting to $520 for every man, woman and child in the country. There are many other important costs of unemployment, such as reduced job security and the pressure to accept lower wages. Another myth frequently repeated is that Canada is pricing itself out of the world market. The truth of the matter is that we are selling more end products or manufactured goods than before. The rate has been increasing. What has been happening is that we are spending more on services such as interest, dividend payments and tourism. It does not make sense to say we are pricing ourselves out of world markets when in fact the volume in end product exports has grown steadily.

We are told that Canada-U.S. wage settlements indicate that our wage settlements are higher than in the U.S.A. These statistics are highly unreliable. United States figures are based on settlements in firms of 20 or more employees, and Canadian settlements on firms of 500 or more employees. Larger firms pay higher wages. It is quite wrong, and contrary to the facts, to blame the workers and say they do not work hard enough. This is simply an irresponsible effort to lay further blame on the workers for our economic problems. No one can dispute that we do have serious economic problems, but the fact remains that the top 20 per cent of Canadians receive 42.5 per cent of total income, and the bottom 20 per cent receive only 4 per cent of total income.

Let us get our priorities straight. The provision of jobs should be our first priority. Unfortunately, experience has shown the government's policy as revealed in the earlier budget and the present mini-budget failed to do this. The emphasis of these budgetary measures is to give incentives to industry, but it is certainly not the fact that these incentives necessarily produce jobs.

Others in this debate will have discussed the situation in the mining industry in northern Ontario in such places as Sudbury and Noranda. I wish to deal with a different sort of industry, but nevertheless an illustration of the same thing. I would like to refer to the situation in Northern Telecom Limited. This company is a subsidiary of Bell Telephone and, in effect, is a multinational corporation. The result of the reduction in income tax brought about by the former minister of finance was to produce an effective reduction for this company, in income tax, from 42.8 per cent to 40.6 per cent for the first half of 1977. One would have imagined that if the government's theory had anything to it, these tax concessions to corporations would have resulted in more employment—but the opposite is the truth.

Various unions throughout the country have been notified that Canadian employment by Northern Telecom will be dropped by approximately 2,000 people in the 18 months ending at the end of 1977. More lay-offs are promised after that. For example, a number of employees in the western region installation department will be reduced by about 400 in the last six months of 1977. Early in 1975 there were approximately 2,400 hourly-rated employees in the switching manufacturing plant in Bramalea. By the end of September, 1977, there will be less than 1,200, or half as many.

Other cutbacks have taken place in Montreal. There are quite a number of unions involved: the United Automobile Workers, with a total man-shift of about 3,450; the United Electrical Workers, with 1,200 members in Bramalea; the Communications Workers of Canada, with 1,811 members; the Canadian Union of Communications Workers, with 4,970 members; and the Canadian Office Employees Union, who represent 1,800 office workers in Montreal. All these people are threatened with being laid off.

Northern Telecom, which was formerly Northern Electric, has announced its intention to expand into larger foreign markets and to expand its research development capacity by spreading its operations into the United States. I do not have the details to show the obvious connection of the lay-offs in Canada to the expansion into southern parts of the United States, but it is very clear. Wages in the southern United States are lower, and unions are virtually non-existent.

One cannot say that this company has been unprofitable. In 1972, Northern had sales of $534 million, while in 1976 the figure was $1,112 million. Profits also expanded from $20.1 million to $77.1 million in the same period. Northern has not been without government assistance, although it is not easy to figure out exactly what that assistance was. Since 1970 Northern has had duty remissions of over $1 million. It had deferred taxes in 1976 of $41,321,000, up from $18,814,000 in 1970. It has prospered under a lucrative grants system. The industrial Research and Development Incentives Act prohibits disclosure of disbursements under section 13 of the act. I have not the slightest doubt that this company has benefited from this act. There is no doubt that the Export Development Corporation has been providing loan assistance and guarantees totalling $58 million to the company from 1968 to 1973.

In August of this year the corporation announced a $144.5 million loan to Northern to support the manufacture of telephone equipment for a new system in Turkey. So what, in effect, we are doing is subsidizing a large multinational corporation from government funds in various forms which then uses the money to shift employment out of Canada rather than to increase employment in Canada.

Mr. Milne: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is not my practice to interrupt speeches of my friends opposite, but I cannot help doing so at this time. I would be ready to defer until the end of the speech—or if the hon. member would accept a question at this time, perhaps I would be allowed to ask it now.

Mr. Brewin: I am very close to the end of my speech, so I think it would be better if the hon. member would defer his question. I was talking about the loan and saying that what is happening is that we are subsidizing corporations which are then spreading employment to other parts of the world for their own profit, which is reasonable from their point of view, instead of maintaining employment in Canada.

I think what is definitely needed is an increase in consumer demand. This could be done by reducing taxes for those earning under $15,000 a year by a one-month moratorium on personal income tax, a further personal income tax reduction and an increase in old age security of $50 a month. With this increased demand existing, savings would be transformed into productive investment.

The government itself must get busy on a job-creation program and a more equitable distribution of income. This is a short-term program of immediate steps. There are no easy solutions for the future well-being and prosperity of Canadians, but there is a necessity for planning in the economy and for the development of a national industrial strategy. We must recognize the right to employment at a living wage as the cornerstone of a productive and equitable society.

Our tax system must be directed at preventing inflation by taxing those who benefit from it. We are not proposing the nationalization of all industries. The private sector will remain, but there is a need for the public sector to act as a balance-wheel to ensure that we use our human and financial resources in a policy of full employment. There are many urgent needs such as housing, better research, day-care centres and recreational facilities. We can afford to have these if we are prepared to plan to use what we have intelligently, and particularly if we are not afraid to rely, at least in part, on the public sector and not solely on the private sector which has demonstrated its inability to maintain an economy of full employment.

Mr. Milne: Mr. Speaker, as the member of parliament for the Bramalea area, where I believe the largest Northern Telecom plant in Canada is located, I cannot sit here and let the hon. member's remarks go unchallenged. I would like to ask him whether he has read the material which was submitted to his colleague, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) and, if he has, if he does not believe these measures have been very important in keeping this company in business so it can deal internationally rather than forcing it completely out of international business?

Mr. Brewin: I have read that material and I seem to have made a deduction which is different from that made by the hon. parliamentary secretary. I have made the deduction that the result of all these various subsidies has been to assist the company in transferring its activities outside Canada rather than increasing its facilities in Canada. I am not saying that the subsidies did no good or perhaps did not help to maintain some employment in Canada, but I judge that their main purpose has failed.

Most of what I have said today has been based on information supplied to me by the workers in these various companies. I think I also read a communication from Northern Telecom itself. I have spoken to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) and I think what I have said represents my deductions from that material.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, what we are discussing today, and what we have been discussing for the past two weeks and more, purports to be simply a bill containing some amendments to the Income Tax Act. In fact, of course, it is nothing other than a mini-budget in disguised form. Why the masquerade, one might ask? The reasons are the same as those for calling the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in October an economic and fiscal statement. It, too, outlined a mini-budget, but the government does not admit it. That is because the government of Canada is reluctant to admit that once again it has been forced to patch up a previous budget which has proved to be inadequate and ill-conceived. In the not too distant future no doubt there will be more piecemeal measures brought in, in order to plug the holes and to correct the inadequacies in the provisions now before us.

If the government is downplaying the fact that this bill is actually budgetary in nature, it is surely because it is ashamed and embarrassed by the unco-ordinated, band-aid approach it has taken to Canada's economic problems—and I can hardly blame it.

Let us take, for example, the proposals regarding the tax treatment of life insurance policies. In the previous budget in March the government proposed to tax, among other things, the cash surrender value of a life insurance policy in excess of the premiums paid at the time of the owner's death. With a grim sense of logic, these proceeds payable at death which exceeded the amount paid into the policy at that point would be considered some sort of taxable gain to the bereaved spouse or children. However, in the face of massive protests, not only by the opposition but also by the public, the government next suggested a modification to this taxation scheme. Now it is proposed that a threshold of $10,000 be placed on the amount of the death benefits to be taxed.

Beside the fact that this in no way affected the unacceptable principle on which this particular tax was founded, it did little to mitigate the hardships it caused, for with the inflation with which we are living today, thanks in large part to the policies of this government over the last many years, this threshold will soon provide little protection. In any event, a threshold does not eliminate the fact that the tax was directed at money which was intended to be an emergency sum or an indemnity against the financial consequences of the premature death of the head of a family.

Now it appears that the government has finally bowed to pressure and proposes to drop this measure. It has taken eight months of outcry by the people of Canada, but it has been done. Yet I have to wonder if this provision was not intended to be withdrawn all along. By introducing an obviously unacceptable proposal such as this, was the government hoping that it would be the focus for protest and that it could then be withdrawn stage by stage as an apparent indication of the government's implied willingness to listen and to compromise? At the same time, however, its purpose would be fulfilled if it could draw attention from related tax proposals which are equally regressive, thus acting as a kind of legislative lightning-rod.

I wonder if I could call it five o'clock.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order! It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper. As there are no notices of motions (papers) listed, the House will proceed to private bills and resume debate on Bill C-1001.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

BELL CANADA

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. O'Connell that Bill C-1001, respecting Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Leggatt.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-1001 is legislation respecting Bell Canada introduced by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell). I think all of us should appreciate the hon. member because he was one of the whiz-kids, with Walter Gordon, back in the late sixties when Mr. Gordon ran into difficulties with his budget. Then the hon. member became an elected member in 1968, and from 1968 to 1972 he served as a member of the cabinet, in a very distinguished way, as minister of labour. In 1972 he was defeated.

From October, 1972, until 1974 he served as special adviser to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and was re-elected in 1974. The hon. member is an economist of note. He has made a contribution to Canada in that field. Therefore, we must look closely at Bill C-1001 to see what the hon. member is attempting to do on behalf of Bell Canada. He is attempting to take a private monopoly telephone company outside the control and supervision of parliament concerning changes in the company's objectives and powers. The intention is to make changes by letters patent which would be consistent with the terms of the Canada Corporations Act, the Canada Business Corporations Act and the Telesat Canada Act.

It means, therefore, that any public scrutiny regarding Bell Canada's capital formation, borrowing powers, lending powers, investment powers and ancillary powers will be outside the purview of parliament, and any effects of Bell's telephone restructure will be after the fact and not before the fact. This indicates the importance of Bill C-1001.

Clause 2(14) is the key clause in the bill. It provides, under proposed section 5.3, that Bell will in future be able to alter its objects, powers and capital stock by letters patent. This means that the company will apply to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for letters patent. If the minister rejects the application it is not appealable. However, if approved, the letters patent are tabled in the House of Commons, and 30 days thereafter they take effect. Members may petition the House objecting to the letters patent and procure a debate. Upon termination of the debate, there is no vote and the minister is not bound to any action on the matter. This is analogous to the Anti-Inflation Board provision whereby a member of parliament may, by petition, bring legislation before the House, have debate and then at the end of the debate no vote is taken. This provision drastically alters the ability of parliament to scrutinize Bell Canada, giving it a free hand to alter its powers and objects.

Under the same clause 2(14) the bill provides inclusion under section 16 of the Canada Corporations Act. This clause allows Bell, ancillary and incidental to its objects set out in letters patent, to exercise any or all of a list of powers, including investment in any business venture, and complete market freedom. This is a regressive step which will provide Bell an incentive to neglect basic telephone service.

Included in the bill is a provision to increase the capitalization from $1.75 billion to $5 million. We, in this House, have experience with banks, insurance companies, oil companies and finance companies and changes in their names, their objects, powers, and so on. The result has been legislation to remove changes in these fields from public scrutiny, and now we have little or no control over the financial and insurance institutions in Canada.

This brings into focus a very important philosophical question—that of public ownership versus private ownership of a public monopoly corporation. Bell Canada is not just another corporation, because only 7 cents of every revenue dollar from the competitive market is obtained from such activities as data transmission services which provide such a vital public service as telephone communication. In other words, out of every $1 earned, 93 cents is obtained from the public monopoly of telephone communication services, and a mere 7 cents from other investments.

We have to look at the philosophy of private and public monopolies, and in that discussion we have to bring into focus and under scrutiny the multinational corporations. Within the last 30 years we have had the public phenomenon of the multinational corporation in different sectors of the Canadian economy. I do not think it is necessary to go into detail about how private monopolies control the resources of Canada and, by doing so, control the production output and the price of services.

The income tax bill presently being debated by the House is ample proof of the benefits obtained from the government by these private monopolies. Need I mention the oil companies, the nickel companies, the aluminium companies who have control over our major resources and whose major thrust is to obtain the greatest profit for their shareholders? I imagine the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) and the hon. member for Scarborough East who sponsored the bill will ask what is wrong with the large corporations concentrating on profit for shareholders. If this were a private company operating in an ordinary way in a competitive market, that principle might be acceptable. This is a private monopoly of a public enterprise—namely, the telephone system in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and others whose sole concern is to obtain the greatest profit for its shareholders.

We in the New Democratic Party have joined issue with the philosophy of this bill and with members of the Liberal party and the Conservative party to determine whether a corporation that has a monopoly on telephone communications services should have the powers it is attempting to obtain. We feel that the profits they make should not merely be shared with the shareholders, but with the users and should be for the benefit of the general public. That is the very sharp difference between a private monopoly of a public enterprise and a public monopoly of a private enterprise.

We have heard different views expressed on this bill, but members of my party have been unanimous in saying that in a public monopoly of a public enterprise, the greatest benefits should obtain to users and the general public. The public monopoly is not new to members of this House. This is what public enterprise should be all about.

Mr. Speaker, I am interested in ownership, service, rates and the efficiency of a public enterprise. We have in Bell Canada a private company which has complete monopoly of the telephone communications system in the province of Ontario. They operate on the myth that the main shareholders of Bell Canada consist of widows and orphans. Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair that I bring to your attention just who does own the main shares of Bell Canada, because it is very important that the public know who they are. I wish I could present the tables which I have in front of me with regard to the capital structure of Bell Canada. They show Bell Canada has capital debts in the form of mortgages and bonds, and they have capital stock in the form of common stock and preferred shares—conversion A they are called—preferred shares, conversion C, preferred shares D and E, and so forth. This makes us all appreciate the complexity of corporate law in these operations.

Mr. Speaker, let me read the information on the main shareholders. This information was obtained from the best source possible, namely, the Financial Post survey of funds, 1976. It would take me a great deal of time to list them all, but I will give you a few examples of who, in the main, holds shares in Bell Canada. Principally, they are the insurance companies, the finance companies, the large corporations, Canada Trust RSP, 62,000 common shares, Eaton Commonwealth 50,000 common shares, Confederated Life (Canadian) 63,400 common shares, Great West Life 20,000 common shares, Investors Growth 169,087 common shares, and 320,000 preferred E shares. Then we have Investors Mutual, with 144,225 common shares, Manulife Diversified, 101,200 common shares. In the words of my colleague from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), "What orphans and widows own the shares of Bell Canada"? With regard to the bonds, they are in the names of the National Insurance Company, United Corporations, Provident Mutual Fund, and so forth.

Without doubt, the main ownership of these companies does not lie with widows and orphans; it lies with the large corporations throughout Canada. You have probably heard, Mr. Speaker, the clever advertising Bell Canada has on television. I wish I could sing it. It goes someing like this, "If your're feeling lonely, if you're feeling blue, just pick up the phone and call long distance." When I read the list of ownership of Bell Canada shares and bonds, I felt a little bit lonely and a little bit blue, because I realize that the ownership is not with the widows and the orphans, but with the large corporations.

An hon. Member: Who did you telephone?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I could not telephone anyone. This is the unfortunate part, because if you cannot telephone someone you have a duty to get up in the House to speak and tell the Canadian public that you have concern with regard to the widows and the orphans and you want to make sure that they are taken care of. I do not like to have that myth perpetrated by Bell Canada with respect to its ownership being in the hands of widows and orphans.

I have read the speeches of my colleagues with regard to the service and, more especially, the non-urban service. When I read the speeches of the members for Sault Ste. Marie and Nickel Belt, I realized people in the non-urban areas suffered greatly with regard to telephone service. Within 25 miles of Sault Ste. Marie, people cannot get service. Within a short distance of the Nickel Belt area, people, if they desire service, have to pay tremendous rates and tremendous service charges even to have the telephone installed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the main thrust of any public corporation should be that the profits are used for the benefit of the users and for the service of the community at large.

We have heard a great deal with regard to rates. I think it would be fair to say that the rates in Ontario, under a private corporation such as Bell Canada, are higher than Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia. The evidence by my colleagues has shown that the rates to private users have been much lower. So, too, have the commercial rates. I thought the member from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), had a point with respect to the difficulties corporations have concerning services in the large urban centres and the amounts of money that is required. That leads me to the simple proposition, if that is the case, that all the profits—or most of the profits—which are obtained should be put into the service of these people rather than into the pockets of the shareholders of these large corporations. If time permits, I would like to place on record a statement that a competitor of Bell Canada is accused of overcharging in the United States. It is an article by UPI, dated March 28 which says:

Bell Telephone may be overcharging home and business telephone users in the U.S. more than $2.2 billion yearly to finance a war on competition, a Bell competitor said Sunday.

Edwin Spievack, general counsel for the North American Telephone Association, which represents 400 independent telephone equipment manufacturers, said the overcharge averages about $20 a year for every main telephone subscriber in the nation.

I wish I had time to develop more of this, Mr. Speaker, but you can see why we, in the New Democratic Party, are opposed to this bill.

● (1722)

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-1001. According to the mover of the bill, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), Bill C-1001 has four objects. First, to increase the present limit of the authorized capital stock from $1,750,000 to $5 million; second, to give more financial flexibility to Bell Canada so that it may adjust itself to the changes which can occur in the economy and on the capital market; third, to modernize the administrative powers of the company; the purpose of this bill is to elucidate and broaden its real and ancillary powers; fourth, to give the company the authority to alter from now on by letters patent the company's objects, powers and capital stock.

The charter of Bell Canada was granted under a legislation of Parliament. Any change to that charter must be approved by the people's representatives, that is Parliament. This bill would practically remove any control of Parliament over that company. The letters patent process theoretically gives a power of decision to Parliament, but it really removes that power. The application of clause 16 of the Canada Corporations Act, as requested in clause 5(b) of Bill C-1001, would finally enable Bell Canada to launch all kinds of commercial ventures unrelated to communications, because we must remember that we have always been under the impression that Bell Canada was first and foremost a communication corporation, but Bill C-1001 would enable it to enter into all kinds of other fields, to establish other subsidiaries, in addition to those it has already set up.

Bell Canada is a private enterprise providing an essential service to Canadians because it is a monopoly. Parliament should not surrender its right to control the decisions made by this company. If this government allows and even promotes monopolies, it should at least retain the necessary powers to keep a very strict control over them. When we look at the profits they make, we are always astonished to find that the board regulating prices and incomes has not reduced by even one cent the super revenues of all these monopolies in Canada. All this board has done, as we have said in this House, is to control worker's wages, but never these large monopolies' profits.

The net revenues of Bell Canada for the first semester of 1977 over those of 1976 went down from $149 million to $129 million, that is 18 per cent. But this reduction stems from fewer long distance telephone calls due to the very high rates.

Furthermore, the last rate increases came into force only at the end of the first semester. Therefore revenues for the second semester should be higher due to the new rates.

As it is impossible to obtain figures concerning the profits of the subsidiaries, the true financial situation of these companies remain unknown. The umbrella under which they are hiding distorts realities, so that we can never—neither can the smartest accountant—state for sure what benefits Bell Canada made in any given year, especially because of its relationship with its subsidiaries. The rates of increase are reported to have been 7.8, 18.8, 12.2, 13.3 and 16.6 per cent in 1975, 1974, 1973 and 1972 respectively. But it is when we turn our attention to its subsidiaries that we are in for a big surprise, Mr. Speaker. The rate of increase in net benefits of Northern Telecom Ltd. was 5 per cent in 1976, but it reached 32 per cent in 1975, 62 per cent in 1974 and 60 per cent in 1973. Of course, the profits of the Northern Telecom Co. Ltd. will remain unknown because it is a subsidiary which is 69 per cent owned by Bell Canada.

Here are further statistical data and information, Mr. Speaker. Before 1971, Bell Canada was publishing its own directories. This activity was highly profitable, because of the publicity in the yellow pages. In 1971, Bell Canada created a new subsidiary, Tele Direct Ltd., in which it invested some $9 million to look after the publication of telephone directories. In 1976, this subsidiary's income reached $91 million. That is not too bad.

For an investment of $9 million, nice revenues of $91 million—an investment return of about 75 per cent. Maintenance, traffic and amortizing expenses go up 8 per cent a year. But other expenses have gone up 70 per cent during the last five years. What are those expenses, Mr. Speaker? Now that is an interesting question. Those expenses relate to senior management, legal advisers, public relations, consultant office, rent, various taxes and so on.

For instance, former board chairman Robert Scrivener was paid $201,000 in 1976. When he left Bell Canada to join Northern Telecom, a subsidiary of Bell, he was given a lump sum of $575,000 and he will draw a pension of $81,000 a year. That is more than the Prime Minister of Canada earns, Mr. Speaker.

This does not take into account the fact that Mr. Scrivener will earn $175,000 with Northern Telecom Limited, Mr. Speaker. I think that instead of appointing some of its friends to the Senate, the Liberal party should send them to this company. It pays more money. Moreover, Mr. Scrivener will receive a pension. A salary of $175,000 is not enough, he will receive a pension. As for the former chairman of Northern Telecom, the American John C. Lobb, he is assured of a pension of $147,000 for ten years. He will also receive $30,000 a year as adviser to the company.

In an interview given to the Ottawa Citizen on October 12, the chairman of Bell Northern Research, another Bell subsidiary, for there are many of them, said that his company was preparing to expand outside Canada rather than over here.

Mr. Speaker, this is the danger that I mentioned at the beginning, the danger that results from the change provided in this bill. Bell Canada, not satisfied with its income and after having made the largest profits in Canada, will take this money to do business in another country. We say that capital is leaving the country, but we are contributing to this with the bill that will be passed today. We are helping Bell Canada to invest in other countries.

In the United States, the Federal Communications Commission has forced American Telephone & Telegraph to stop the multiplication and incestuous union of its subsidiaries. In addition, AT&T will have to submit each year a detailed financial statement for each service it provides. This will provide information on the cost of services and on the returns of the company. The company will no longer be able to make across the board rate increases and will have to restrict increases to the areas where costs make this necessary, which is very vague, Mr. Speaker, and leaves the door wide open to the company. If its returns are too large for one service, it will even have to reduce the rates for this service.

Bell Northern Research has virtually forced into bankruptcy all Canadian manufacturers of coaxial cables, the type of cables which are used in cable TV distribution. Bell no longer manufactures this type of cable and Canadian users have to import them from the United States because Bell Northern got rid of all Canadian competitors. And now Northern Telecom is laying off 1,000 Canadian workers. The increased powers Bell is asking for would give it the power to invest in nearly every field and every country. We can rightfully wonder whether Canadian users, through their phone bills, would not be financing investments which finally would be of no use to them.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-1001, which is being sponsored by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), in my opinion is unacceptable on a number of grounds. My main objection to this bill lies in the fact that it will enable Bell Canada to be removed from the scrutiny of this parliament for many years to come. By asking this parliament to agree to increase their capitalization from $1¾ billion to $5 billion, it means that in all likelihood there is not a single member of this parliament who will ever see that bill come back for review.

One of the reasons for making provisions in these private bills with respect to capitalization was to ensure that when a company wanted to enlarge its capitalization it would be required to come back to parliament, and members of this House would be able to scrutinize whether or not that particular company operated in the public interest. However, if this House agrees to increase the capitalization from $1¾ billion to $5 billion, Bell Canada will go scot free for many, many years to come.

Someone may ask why should there be periodic scrutiny of the operations of Bell Canada. Mr. Speaker, I think it is abundantly clear we have to make a distinction between a company incorporated under the Canada Corporations Act which is in competition with other companies doing similar business in a similar area, and a company which is by its very nature monopolistic. If someone wanted to build a refinery, or a shoe factory, or a pulp mill, the public interest is protected to some extent by the fact that there is competition. Now, even competition does not always safeguard the public interest because we have had companies entering into arrangements for restraint of trade.

It is rather significant, in spite of anti-trust legislation in the United States and the Combines Investigation Act in Canada, we have still seen companies growing in size to the point where they virtually control the market, or two or three companies control the entire market in a country. However, where there is no competition at all then the public is completely at the mercy of that monopoly.

There are enterprises in which it is impossible to have competition. The generation of electric power, the transmission and distribution of natural gas, and telephones are all good examples. You cannot have two power utilities distributing power in the same town where you can buy from blue company, or red company, or yellow company. When a company is given a franchise to put in pipelines or distribute natural gas it automatically becomes a monopoly. And when a company is allowed the privilege of providing telephone service it is not possible to have competition so that you have two or three different companies from whom you can purchase telephone service. Bell Canada, by virtue of being a monopoly, ought to be subject to the scrutiny of parliament in the interests of the consumers. I do not see why members should be alarmed at the members of the New Democratic Party taking that position. In the province of Ontario at the turn of the century, Ontario Hydro, under the leadership of Sir Adam Beck, was set up, and it has provided probably the best electrical service at the lowest conceivable prices—certainly in Canada and probably on this continent.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is not what Stephen Lewis says. You better straighten him out.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The TVA—Tennessee Valley Authority—in the United States, set up under President Roosevelt, has provided the American people with cheap, accessible electric power. It has been of tremendous value to the people of America.

● (1742)

In the province of British Columbia governments there, which do fight elections against public ownership of electric utilities, took them over and operated them under public ownership. The government took over the ferry service, and the ferry service is operated by the government of British Columbia. This is not because the governments, which happened to be Social Credit governments, were wedded to socialism, but because they recognized that, in fairness to the consumer, services such as the generation and distribution of electric power, and ferry services, absolutely essential to the people who live on the coastal islands of British Columbia, had to be operated under public ownership in order to protect consumers. That is the danger of leaving a natural monopoly in the hands of a group of individuals who naturally seek to maximize their profit at the expense of consumers. There is no doubt that the consumer is victimized where there is no adequate public protection.

I know it will be argued that in the case of the telephone companies they must apply to the CRTC for increases in their rates. The fact of the matter is that such an application, originally to the CTC and later to the CRTC, has become a farce. These companies are able to hide a good bit of their profits. Bell Telephone, for instance, owns Northern Electric from which it buys its supplies. It can quite well afford to pay inflated prices for its supplies to its own subsidiary, which keeps the profits of the parent company down, and simply transfers them to the subsidiary, Northern Electric.

There are scores of ways by which it is possible for a monopoly such as Bell Telephone to come before a government board and demonstrate that their profit margin is not excessive and that, therefore, they are entitled to a further increase in rates. In fact they have obtained an increase in rates year after year after year.

The fact of the matter is that the services which they have provided in many cases have not warranted the kind of increases they have obtained. I have a letter on my desk right now from a man who complains that while the rates of the telephone company were increased on the grounds that it needed greater capitalization in order to improve the service, in his case, my correspondent claims, the service has not improved at all but has steadily deteriorated. He has sent me copies of the letters he has written to the telephone company complaining about the fact that his service has deteriorated in spite of increasing rates, and in spite of alleged increases in capitalization.

The consumer is being ripped off by virtue of the fact that he has no protection whatsoever against a natural monopoly. If the consumer could purchase goods or services on a competitive basis he could go to another firm, but you cannot go to another telephone company, you cannot go to another power company, and you cannot go to another gas distribution company. They are monopolies.

It is abundantly clear that the monopoly, in this case Bell Telephone Company, has taken advantage of its preferred position. One has only to look at a comparison of rates between the privately owned telephone companies and the rates charged by the publicly owned telephone companies in the three prairie provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta.

When we last discussed this the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) sought to make a case for these higher rates by Bell Telephone Company over the private telephone company rates on the ground that they were serving large cities such as Toronto and Montreal. His argument was that serving a city cost a great deal more money because a company has to put in switching operations with many people to service and, consequently, the rates ought to be higher in a large city. He suggested it was unfair to make the kind of comparison my colleagues have been making of rates charged by private telephone companies and those charged by public telephone companies.

Let me say to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that I had close association for some 17 years with the workings of the Saskatchewan Telephone Company, and I know that company was always much more pleased to get an increase in business in the cities than in the small towns and rural areas because it was much less costly to put in additional lines in the city than it was to take telephone lines out into the rural communities and to put up switch boards to serve only a few hundred customers. This is much more expensive than to put in switch boards to serve a more concentrated urban centre.

Even if we accept the argument of the hon. member, and this much of his argument is true, the people in large cities should pay higher rates than the people in small rural areas for the obvious reason that if you live in a city where there are a million telephones, there are a great many more people whom you can telephone from your own house than if you live in a community where there are only 500 telephones. In other words, you are getting a much greater service.

An hon. Member: How many of us would call 500 people?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Perhaps people would not make phone calls to 500 different locations in a large city, but the people in the city can make phone calls which would be long distance calls if they lived in a small community, and the hon. member should recognize that fact. That is elementary, even to one with the normal Liberal intellectual capacity.

Even if we accept the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, that it costs more to provide services in a large city, let us take a look to see what happens in comparable areas. For instance, in the city of Calgary, where the public telephone system operates, there are 200,650 telephones. The residential rate is $5.70 and the business rate is $14.70. Let us consider the city of Quebec, which is not very much larger, there being 245,806 telephones, and the rate is $6.55 for residential and $18.70 for a business phone. That is a difference of $4 a month or $48 a year more in Quebec than in Calgary. Let us consider the city of Winnipeg which has about the same number of phones as Quebec City, namely, 237,500. The residential rate there is $4.90, with the business rate being $11.65.

If you consider London, Ontario, which has only 119,483 telephones, by the logic of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre the service ought to cost much less than service to the people in the city of Calgary. However, we find that in London, Ontario, the residential rate is $6.20, which is 50 cents a month more or $6 a year more than in the larger city of Calgary. The business telephone rate is $17 or $2.30 a month more than the business telephone rate in the city of Calgary. A businessman in the city of London is paying $27.60 more each year, despite the fact the number of telephones there is a little more than half the number of telephones in the city of Calgary.

How can my friend argue that the reason the private telephone companies have to charge higher rates is because they serve larger centres of population? Even in London, Ontario, where the number of people served is only a little better than half what it is in Calgary, the people in Calgary are getting much lower rates for their residential and business telephones.

I should like to refer to two communities which are almost comparable. The city of Regina has 72,400 telephones, and the residential rate is $5 and the business rate is $11.85. The city of Moncton has 52,200 telephones or 20,000 less telephones. Its residential rate is $7.65 or $2.65 more per month. The rate for a business telephone in Moncton is $22.30 or almost twice what the people in Regina pay, even though there are 20,000 more telephones there.

The city of Edmonton has 207,700 telephones. The residential telephone rate is $5.80, and the business telephone rate is $17. The city of Victoria, which is smaller, has 192,796 telephones. The residential rate there is $6.65, and the business rate is $17.15. By the logic of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, subscribers in Victoria should be paying less, but they are paying more.

In Halifax with 96,249 telephones, the residential rate is $8.95 or $3.15 more than in Edmonton which has twice the population. The business telephone rate is $26, which is $9 more than in Edmonton.

Saint John, New Brunswick has 47,007 telephones. Their residential rate is $7.65, and their business rate is $22.30, which is $5 more than what is charged in the city of Edmonton where there are 2½ times as many telephones. Certainly that defeats the logic of the argument that the reason the private telephone companies are charging high rates is because they are serving larger centres. By any standard of comparison it is perfectly clear that the people served by these private companies are being ripped off. Not only are they paying more for their telephone service, they are getting a lower quality of service from these private companies.

I sum up by saying that the only way this parliament can protect the telephone users is by defeating this legislation, or so changing it that these companies will be required to come back periodically to parliament in order for parliament to have an opportunity to scrutinize their operations and ensure that Canadian consumers are protected.

I have other objections to some of the clauses in the bill, but perhaps I will have a chance to discuss them at a later date.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is two or three minutes before six o'clock, in a preliminary way I want to say I am happy to join my colleagues in opposition to this bill. This is not the first time we have been faced with this legislation, so our unanimous opposition to it is of no surprise to other members of the House. We do not feel lonely, because there are tens of thousands of Bell Canada subscribers across Canada who are cheering us on, and are happy that once in a blue moon their cause is put before the public and in parliament. The consumers' side must be heard, rather than just hearing about poor Mother Bell who needs another $3½ million for capitalization.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

The bill goes beyond the stated objective. It is an attempt to exempt Bell Canada from regulation. The telephone service, light, power and natural gas are just too essential to be left to the whims and the tender mercies of private corporations responsible to no one but their shareholders. The objective of these private corporations is to maximize the profits and returns to the shareholders. That is their primary objective. The top priority of private corporations is to make money and not to provide a service. With that lack of social conscience or moral treatment of the communities those companies serve, no one can blame their subscribers for protesting this kind of legislation.

Treating telephone service as a public utility is not only logical, it should be obvious to anyone. Because it is a public utility that is privately owned, minimum regulations apply to Bell Canada's rates of return, assets, and the price it can charge for its services. I would go further with respect to its accountability to the public and its customers by saying that there should be a full scrutiny of the methods of operation used by Bell Canada, their labour management relations, the way they spend their money, and how generous they are to the board of directors.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—POSSIBILITY OF PUBLIC HEARINGS ON PROPOSAL TO INCREASE TOLLS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the minister's answer to a question I asked last week in the House concerning the gross increase in Seaway tolls.

Canadian users have not been given the opportunity of public hearings that American users have been given to discuss these increases. This is particularly galling to Canadian users since they represent 70 per cent of the tonnage and pay about 63 per cent of the tolls. These Canadian users who are concerned, such as people in the grain industry, ship owners, unions dealing with grain handling, seamen, farmers, various business groups, chambers of commerce, and so on, are very concerned.

Certainly ship owners are not concerned for themselves particularly because they know they will be able to absorb the extra cost, but they are concerned about the loss in business which they believe could very well occur, and also the loss of jobs. Basically they are concerned with the size of the increase—the cost will be approximately doubled—and with the suddenness of the increase. They believe this could create some very bad psychological effects. For instance, it could create a diversion of ore from Sept-Îsles to Philadelphia or Baltimore. This would mean that the cost of moving grain would be considerably higher since grain from western ports moves east and the ore traditionally moves back. We could have an increase in cost for the movement of grain, if ships came back empty, of 4 cents or 5 cents a bushel.

They are also concerned about the diversion of grain to the Pacific coast. They are concerned, too, about unit trains which, given the increased tolls, might by-pass Thunder Bay and move grain to east coast ports. They are also concerned about loss of sales.

The Seaway Authority says the increase will cost only an extra cent a bushel, but when grain is sold in quarter cent quotes per bushel and quotes are made at $2.95¼, 1 cent is a large sum and, if a ship comes back empty, 4 cents or 5 cents is a sum which could result in serious losses.

The Seaway stands to gain something in the order of $22 million. The users, people working on the Seaway, are concerned they could lose $70 million to $100 million with an attendant loss of jobs.

One of the things that concerns me is whether or not the Authority actually needs the amount of money it says it needs. The deficit this year was $6.5 million, with depreciation added of $1.2 million, and with the new policy of the 1 per cent tax on the $625 million debt on the Seaway, the total amount would come to $14 million. If you add 7 per cent or 8 per cent for inflation, you are talking in terms of about $15 million. The Seaway authority is talking in terms of picking up between $20 million and $22 million.

If the minister were to take another look at this and allow for some public hearings, either through the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications or through some independent body, and think in terms of these increases over three to five years, spreading them over a longer period of time and not creating the psychological situation which may cause this diversion, the users, my constituents, and people who live along the Seaway would be a great deal happier.

I am opposed to this move because I am afraid we will lose considerable business, but I am also opposed to it on other grounds, namely, that this is a move in the direction of the user-pay concept. I think the user-pay policy is not a policy which will satisfy the needs of Canadians. It is a policy which tends to favour the inner core of the country, the Golden Horseshoe, but it certainly does nothing for people in the Atlantic provinces, northern Ontario, or in the west. The user-pay principle is one about which I am very concerned. I think it will bring disunity to the country. For these reasons I oppose both the size and the suddenness of these increases, and I hope the minister will reconsider his stand on this matter and allow open hearings to take place.

● (1807)

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the remarks the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) just made can easily be understood, and the member was of course making himself the spokesman for the St. Lawrence Seaway users who of course are not happy to face a toll increase. It is quite normal for any user of a service not to be fully happy when an increase is announced. However, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) does not intend to refer the question of higher tolls for transit in the St. Lawrence Seaway to the House Standing Committee on Transport nor to any other body.

The Seaway authorities have stated for several years the need for a toll increase to stop the accumulating and ever increasing yearly deficits in spite of the fact that tonnage is going up as well. I was nevertheless surprised to hear the hon. member say that this is a sudden increase. If my records are correct, I believe the succeeding governments have asked for and talked about an increase in the seaway tolls since 1964. The Minister of Transport himself has repeatedly and publicly announced that he intended to recommend higher tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway. All people directly concerned have closely followed the negotiations that have taken place between our government and that of the United States. Those people, on both sides of the border, have had the full opportunity to express their opinions and justify their objections and they have not missed the occasion to do so that the negotiations between the two countries provided them with. Public audiences would not have been more advantageous to them than the meetings they have had with the authorities of the St. Lawrence Seaway, the Marine Administration of the department or the minister himself.

As I was saying at the beginning of my reply, it is no surprise that the users of the seaway object to an increase in their transportation costs since people never welcome an increase in their costs. The fact remains that current tolls have not changed since 1959 and that the increases which the governments of the two countries associated in the St. Lawrence Seaway now propose will not even bring the tolls back to the level that had been deemed acceptable in 1959. I think this partially answers the objection that the rate of increase is too high. These tolls have not changed for nearly twenty years now and it seems reasonable to me that they be readjusted, given the increase that all other sectors of the economy have experienced.

ENERGY—URANIUM—REASON GOVERNMENT AQUIESCED IN CARTEL ARRANGEMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the matter which brings me into the adjournment debate this evening is the international uranium cartel, and particularly the effect this possibly illegal cartel will have on prices Canadians will pay in the future for electricity.

On Monday last I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) about a contract a cartel member, Gulf Minerals Canada Limited, signed with Ontario Hydro in 1974, apparently with the blessing of the federal government. Gulf's own records on this deal now reveal for the first time that Gulf charged the consumers of Ontario, prices which were in line—in fact, dead on—with cartel prices set by the Club of Five in Paris. These records of Gulf boast of the profit Gulf will make on the deal, some $50 million at least, on a contract valued by Gulf at $98 million.

These records point proudly to the fact that by virtue of its membership in the cartel, which was sponsored by the Canadian government, Gulf was charging Ontario Hydro prices far in excess of the going world market price. I would like to quote from a Gulf memo dated March 8, 1974, referring specifically to the Hydro contract to which I have just made reference. The memo states, and I quote:

The above prices are considerably higher than either the current world market price or the latest prices established by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources as being the minimum for export of Canadian uranium.

What is worse, Mr. Speaker, the government appears to have known of and even approved this contract which we now know to be based on prices rigged in Paris by the cartel. Again referring specifically to the Hydro contract the above cited memo says:

The EMR staff does however recognize that Canadian utilities must be prepared to pay the same prices that we could achieve from export sales.

In 1974, Mr. Speaker, export prices were one and the same as cartel prices.

Another document, dated February 26, 1976, raises even more serious questions. This memo hints darkly that the government even went so far as to offer Gulf "protection from government action," meaning, I suspect, protection from legal action. It says:

At the time the (Hydro) proposal was made $12.50 plus 90 per cent escalation plus protection from government action was at the top of the market.

When I asked the minister why his department—contrary to repeated public statements—allowed a cartel member to charge cartel prices in Canada, the minister hedged the question, suggesting I was an "agent for a foreign corporation."

Frankly, the real question is, who is the minister acting for in this matter? Is he acting on behalf of Canadian consumers who are going to be using electricity, or is he acting for certain rather secret interests, certain foreign corporations such as Gulf U.S. or Rio Algom. Incidentally, the Gulf operation is estimated by them to yield between $3 million and $3½ million per year after tax profits for as long as the deal continues.

The real question in my mind is whether the minister is more concerned with Ontario users of electricity or with saving members of his government from embarrassment.

Frankly, his answers look pretty fishy. When I asked the minister if he has reviewed the Hydro contract he said in effect, "Why should I? Ontario Hydro hasn't complained!" Mr. Speaker, that is just not true. I should like to read into the record a few comments Hydro made at the time the cartel was forcing Canadians, including Hydro, to pay rigged prices for uranium.

Minutes of a meeting of the Ontario Hydro finance committee on July 15, 1974, report:

Uranium suppliers have clearly indicated that uranium prices will be equated to the so-called "World Price" calculated at or near to the year of delivery.

"World price" was the term the cartel used to describe cartel prices in 1974. The report concludes that, under present circumstances, Hydro does not have a strong bargaining position and may have to pay world market prices even though they will lead to significantly high uranium costs.

I am sorry the minister is not with us tonight, Mr. Speaker. I hope he will stop stonewalling this whole cartel misadventure, particularly this contract with Hydro. I hope he will tell us why the government permitted the people of Ontario to be ripped off by a cartel member.

I think it is time the government started to answer a few questions on this entire affair. Certain blind or frozen trusts that have been reported at the time the cartel was established have to be opened up and explained. Do these blind trusts include members or former members of the Government of Canada, for example? These are questions that have to be asked. To use the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) expression, "It looks fishy." I think it is time questions were answered instead of being stonewalled as we were last Monday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[Translation]

Mr. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to repeat, for the benefit of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), the details concerning the marketing of uranium. From August 17, 1972 to March 6, 1974, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) issued five directives on price fixing to the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Control Board. Another one issued on March 27, 1975 invalidated all former directives. All relevant details are given in a press release dated October 14, 1977.

● (1817)

It had become clear by early 1974 that there had been a dramatic turn-around in the uranium market from a buyer's market to a seller's one. After many years of relative inactivity, Canadian uranium marketing personnel found themselves with far more inquiries than could be accommodated. Hence, during the first six months of 1974, the Canadian uranium industry contracted for sale into the export market, for future years, a total of 45,000 tons of uranium oxide, some ten times the then Canadian annual production rate.

The government, recognizing that the market had switched so positively, moved to ensure that domestic uranium consumers would not be caught in the position of not having enough future uranium supplies from domestic sources to satisfy their own nuclear power programs. This was a very real risk in mid 1974. As a result, on September 5, 1974, the government announced a uranium export policy which protects domestic utilities with long term assured supplies through the creation of a system to establish domestic reserve allocations. It is not surprising, therefore, that by March, 1975, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources felt that it was no longer necessary to specify a minimum price for uranium sales in order to protect against what had pertained in earlier years, namely, that uranium mines were being high-graded and sales were sometimes made at prices below operating costs in order to prevent mine shutdowns.

In the last pricing direction issued on March 6, 1974, the minimum price specified for sale of uranium from Canada was $8.20 per pound, for delivery in 1974; $9.05 in 1975; $10.00 in 1976; $11.05 in 1977, and $12.20 in 1978. For deliveries during the period 1979 through 1985 or, as an alternative to the minimum fixed price schedule just mentioned, escalated prices on a base price of $9.70 per pound could be offered. The escalation formula was to operate from 1974 at the stipulated base price, irrespective of the first delivery year in the contract. At least 80 per cent of the price was to be subject to escalation, and the labour and materials cost components of the escalation formula were to be at least 30 per cent each.

In the direction of March 6, 1974, as in all previous pricing directions, it was made clear that the Canadian market was to be excluded.

Mr. Stevens: It was not, and you know it.

Mr. Lamontagne: Canadian producers were also very much aware of this exclusion. Consequently, the federal government was not informed of the negotiations, if any, which were occurring between Canadian producers and domestic utilities. Even the Atomic Energy Control Board did not call for copies of domestic contracts until after the export policy of September 5, 1974, was issued. The purpose of calling for contracts then, by the way, was to ensure that domestic uranium producers were not offering uranium into the export market under more favourable conditions than they were into the domestic one. Given this background, it is not surprising that officials did not hear of the Gulf Minerals Canada Limited-Ontario Hydro contract until 1976 after the contract had been signed.

ENERGY—OIL—SUGGESTED SHORTAGE BY MID-1980's—REQUEST FOR INCREASED COAL PRODUCTION IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) has been repeating for the last few months that Canada faces the threat of a serious energy crisis in the mid 1980's. The minister recently, in early November, told a Toronto audience that even if people do not see it, it is like the iceberg that sank the Titanic. Again, in response to my question in the House today, he repeated his serious concern that Canada ceased to be self-sufficient in oil last year.

The minister has committed Canada to a target of imports of no more than 800,000 barrels a day by 1985, which would still cost over $4 billion a year. Paying for this imported oil is only one part of the problem, although an extremely difficult one. In addition, it is going to become increasingly difficult to ensure that there is enough oil to buy at any price, although experts disagree on timing. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology study, the Central Intelligence Agency study of supply and demand for world oil, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, as well as the leaders of the organization of petroleum exporting countries—which control most of the oil—all have warned that sometime in the 1980's there will not be enough oil in the world to go around, even if we use rigorous conservation practices.

The head of Petroleos de Venezuela recently said in Toronto:

> . . . in ten years the surplus oil production capacity of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) will gradually disappear as demand rises and additional supplies of oil from outside the OPEC area are not forthcoming in significant quantities . . . When this happens, international crude oil prices will again rise steeply, perhaps to as much as $20 a barrel in 1976 dollars.

The Cape Breton oil industry is now at a point at which it can make a contribution to the balance of payments problem of our country if the federal government will quickly start two new deep mines, as well as using some of the coal that can be stripped in that area for Nova Scotia's own power needs, such as at the new generating plant being built at Lingan, outside New Waterford, Nova Scotia.

Over and above what we can supply for ourselves in Nova Scotia, there is a market which was formerly held by the Cape Breton coal industry when it was under private ownership but which was lost during the era of cheap, imported oil, which has now come to an end. I refer to the heavy industries in the southern part of Quebec, such as cement, pulp and paper, iron and titanium, and many others which are now using the very expensive imported heavy oil. For example, last year in 1976 there were 41.3 million barrels of heavy oil imported into Quebec at 35 imperial gallons per barrel. The forest products industries use 24 per cent of this volume; cement and smaller industries use another 20 per cent; mining, smelting, and quarries use 12 per cent, and marine industries use 13 per cent.

The best targets for Cape Breton coal to substitute for some of the industrial users of heavy imported oil are the major pulp and paper and cement plants, etc. which are situated on or near St. Lawrence ports and can be readily reached by water shipment from Sydney Harbour. Practically all these industries used coal until the late 1950's and their steam plants or cement kilns can again use coal after reconversion to coal firing apparatus. Now it takes about four barrels of this heavy oil imported into Quebec to be equal in British thermal units of heat value to one ton of coal, so one can easily see that Government of Canada could, for an investment in a new coal mine in Cape Breton, help immensely these industries in Quebec to survive competitively and, as I mentioned before, this would in turn help Canada's balance of payments.

There is one major fly in the ointment, so to speak. The industries I have mentioned would have to reconvert their steam boiler plants, or cement kilns, from oil to coal firing at substantial capital cost. This involves not only the boilers but also the reconversion of their coal storage grounds. Given the concern in our day for pollution control, modern devices to reduce fly ash and noxious gases from their stacks would be needed.

It would appear to be economically beneficial for the Government of Canada and or Quebec to allow such companies a form of tax forgiveness or fast write-off for their coal conversion costs. On the Cape Breton side, from Devco's point of view, the corporation would have to reconstruct the customer contacts the former private owners of the Cape Breton coal mines had with these industries in Quebec and re-establish a coal flow marketing system in the St. Lawrence trade. None of this can be done overnight, but it is imperative that these problems be tackled as soon as possible.

It is obvious that the future supply of energy is a serious corporate concern to all these Quebec industries. Currently they depend almost entirely, as I said before, on imported oil. These industries, to repeat, are concerned not only with the sharply rising price of oil but also and, more significantly, with the future uncertainty of the supply itself. This is particularly true with respect to the additional supplies of oil required for normal industrial expansion. The uncertainty, unless corrected, will place a marked restriction on normal industrial growth in the province of Quebec.

There is a market opportunity for three to four million tons of thermal coal on the St. Lawrence waterway of Quebec province. The question is, can and will Cape Breton be prepared to supply that important profitable market? It is my opinion that the Cape Breton coal fields can, with expansion, provide at least a million tons of coal per year, and perhaps two million tons, which would be over and above Nova Scotia's own needs. What is required is a genuine co-operative effort by the federal government, Quebec industry, and Devco to establish a market development strategy conducted in orderly co-ordination with a mine expansion program in the Sydney coal fields. It is obvious that time is pressing, both for Cape Breton and Quebec, and serious planning must not suffer from procrastination from any quarter.

Mr. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) for his relevant question as it allows me to review some activities of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Those activities are undertaken in co-operation with Nova Scotia, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, Devco, the Treasury Board and they are aimed at reducing Canadian dependence on imported oil, particularly in the Maritimes.

[English]

These co-operative activities embrace all aspects of coal development and utilization.

As far as exploration is concerned, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is providing technical advice to DREE for the coal drilling program currently being conducted both onshore and offshore in Nova Scotia. The cumulative expenditure on this program amounts to about $8 million, of which 80 per cent, or $6.4 million, is contributed by DREE.

As far as mining is concerned, the Cape Breton Development Corporation, as a federal Crown corporation, has been completely modernized and now operates two new mines, one rehabilitated mine, and a new preparation plant. In addition to the capital requirements, Treasury Board approved a substantial grant of $28 million last year to cover the deficit in operations.

As for utilization, under the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement on oil substitution and conservation, which is administered federally by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, $9 million has been made available directly, and a further $15 million will be available through loans for, among other things, accelerating the construction of new coal-fired power plants and experiments in combustion of coal-oil slurries in existing oil fired plants.

However, the new mines can be established only when the results of the exploration have been evaluated, the economic effects of foreign oil substitution by national coal have been measured and experimental combustion has been made.

I hope that with this additional information all hon. members and all those who are listening to us will appreciate the efforts and the constructive and co-operative approach implemented by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to reduce the dependency of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia and the Maritimes as concerns imported oil. And this is the objective at which we continually aim in the interest of every Canadian.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 6.30 p.m. the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, before the dinner hour I was addressing a few remarks to the provisions of the bill before us as they relate to the treatment of insurance policies. Now I should like to examine the other proposals relating to insurance policies, one of which concerns loans taken by policyholders against their life insurance policies.

The Department of Revenue proposes to have the amount of the loan that exceeds the value of premiums paid, to be added to the borrower's income. In other words, the gain portion of the loan is to be treated as an advance or disposition, and is to be taxed as such. This suggestion attacks the concept of paid up insurance constituting tangible property. While money borrowed on the security of real estate is not taxable, these measures insist that borrowing on the security of the paid up portion of an insurance policy does not warrant similar consideration. This is clearly unjust. A policy loan should be regarded as just that, because the loan is ultimately repayable out of the insurance proceeds, if it has not been repaid earlier.

In introducing this measure the government is effectively eliminating a ready source of low interest loans, easily accessible to finance such projects as sending a child to college, paying uninsured medical expenses, or effecting household improvements.

Traditionally and historically, policy loan provisions have constituted well established and valuable features of life insurance programs in Canada. Changing the rules in mid-stream, as the minister proposes, will further erode the incentive to save and provide for one's own future, which at one time was a significant feature of the Canadian style of family life.

Many, if not all, current policy owners bought their policies in the expectation that in times of financial need or emergency they could borrow against their policies without being taxed. To change this provision is to undermine a basic feature of life insurance policies. In so far as this provision was simply intended to plug a possible loophole for avoiding the now defunct proposal for a tax at death, it is clearly pointless.

A third proposed measure regarding life insurance policy owners would disallow the deduction of interest on policy loans designed to be utilized in such a way as to increase the policy owner's income. An example of this might be a small businessman borrowing against his policy to improve his business. This proposal will serve only to further hamper access by small business to low cost financing, and place a further burden on the private sector of our economy. It should be recognized that life insurance policies are often the best, if not the only, source of ready cash for small business operators, since money can be obtained quickly at modest rates with no questions asked and no further collateral demanded.

In addition to the foregoing, the proposed measures regarding life insurance would have the effect of greatly increasing the administrative burden for insurers by the additional record keeping and reporting for ordinary policy loans, automatic premium loans, and payments of interest, thereby adding to the cost of insurance to the public. However, we should not be so surprised that the major effect of government tax amendments seems to be to raise prices, for the primary objective of these amendments appears to make the law, as it relates to income tax, even more tortuous and convoluted than it is already.

This bill that we are discussing today is nearly an inch thick, and all of 200 pages long. This is in addition to the 424 pages of the 1970 revised version of the Income Tax Act, and the hundreds of pages of amending acts between that date and this. Many of the amendments and obfuscations of income tax laws are the offspring of the "equity in taxation" hobbyhorse that is being ridden by senior advisers down the corridors of the Department of Finance. No one would claim the major inequities that existed in the tax system of days gone by should not have been eliminated, but we are at the point now where small and almost meaningless discrepancies in fairness are being operated upon to the over-all detriment of the system.

Let us consider one of the changes proposed in the bill—the provision to tax interest free loans to employees and shareholders. It is a purely equity based amendment. However, the consequence will be untold man-hours poured into revising compensation packages and looking for ways to circumvent the application of the rule, hours that undoubtedly could be put to more productive use.

This amendment will raise no revenue; will hurt, not help the economy; and will be nothing but trouble and aggravation to those who will have to enforce it. It is an amendment which will create enormous problems in order to clear up a minor source of inequity. On the corporate tax side it is well known that if the tax rates on dividends and capital gains were at the same level, the tax provisions relating to these could be simplified enormously. With this is mind, the tax gap between dividends and capital gains has been narrowed by increasing the dividend tax credit. This is fine as far as it goes, but it stops short of situations where there is non-arm's length dealing.

For example, in these cases where corporate control is being transferred among family members, or an estate plan is being set up, very complex rules have been introduced to ensure that no untoward tax benefit accrues. Again we find the concern about equity and fairness. However, all this does is create a situation where grossly inordinate amounts of time and effort, not to mention money, are spent to cope with the tax ramifications of every private corporate change, and the revenue in question is minute.

In short, major simplification is being held up on the corporate side because of relatively minor equity problems. The cost of refusing to simplify the corporate tax provisions, not to mention partnership, trust resource or insurance provisions, is simply staggering. All of this is not to suggest that fairness and equity in our tax system should be abandoned or ignored. On the contrary, the reform of Canada's tax laws to make them more equitable is an important task. A sense of proportion is required, and a realization that the cost to achieve perfect equity may very well far exceed the minor benefit derived. In these troubled times, the removal of minor inequities should not be the primary end toward which the tax amendments should point. Rather, our major objective must be the stimulation of the economy. The introduction of effective incentives for the expansion of the economy has to take precedence over all else.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has, to some degree, recognized the need for incentives. Perhaps he has not recognized the need for effective incentives. Nowhere is this more clear than in the case of the $100 tax cut for low and middle income earners, of which we have heard so much in this House. The minister has told us that the cut will be concentrated in January and February, that a married taxpayer with two children could receive maximum benefits at income levels of up to about $16,000, and that a total of $700 million in revenue is expected to be returned.

This rebate appears generous in its gross amount. However, to the individual taxpayer it will represent very little. A taxpayer with three dependants is going to derive very little benefit from the cut which averages out to $1.92 per week for the year. It will also do little to offset the gap between the rate recommended by the Anti-Inflation Board for wage increases and the projected rate of inflation for this year. The tax cut is supposed to spur consumer spending and confidence in the economy, but its inevitable failure will serve only to undermine whatever confidence is left. Even the Economic Council of Canada, normally a rather mild mannered and optimistic body, concurs with this diagnosis.

The measures outlined in the minister's speech were described by the Economic Council as being so inadequate as to "barely prevent the currently high unemployment from increasing further". It went on to say that incentives proposed by the minister "will not be sufficient to bring about the reductions in either youth or adult unemployment that are needed".

The response of the Minister of Finance to this critical report which proposed a variety of alternative solutions to Canada's economic woes, was to label it irresponsible. Before accepting this assertion regarding the Economic Council's forecasts, it might be instructive to examine the government's record in this department.

In the budget of May, 1976, the then finance minister forecast a decline in unemployment. It rose, instead. The government anticipated a fiscal 1977 cash requirement, excluding foreign exchange, of $4.5 billion. In fact 1977 cash requirements were $5.4 billion, in excess of the forecast by 20 per cent.

According to that budget there would be a significant decline in the 1978 cash requirements from the level first forecast for 1977. Latest estimates reveal 1977 cash requirements nearly double those originally projected for 1977.

Only last March the government forecast 4 per cent real growth, 6 per cent inflation, and a $6.4 billion cash requirement. Where are they now? Today we are confronted with real growth of 2 per cent, inflation pushing 9 per cent, and an $8.5 billion cash requirement. The Minister of Finance should re-identify the target of his allegations of irresponsibility in forecasting.

The plain truth is that there is simply not enough incentive being introduced to stimulate the private sector. It is this sector upon which we must depend for the creation of the jobs our unemployed so urgently need.

Some obvious indicators of the plight in which the private sector finds itself lie in Canada's balance of international payments. The biggest single item in the balance is merchandise trade. Although we have recovered from a deficit in 1975 and appear to be on our way to a healthy surplus for 1977, a closer examination of the figures will show that all is not well.

Most of Canada's exports are natural resources shipped in raw or semi-processed form, while imports are generally made up of manufactured goods. In 1976, raw and semi-processed goods composed 66 per cent of exports, worth $25 billion, while manufactured products composed 61 per cent of imports for a value of $23 billion.

The problem lies in the fact that these raw exports have a very low labour input, whereas the manufactured imports have a high labour component. In other words, our exports create very few jobs in Canada relative to the number of foreign jobs created by our imports.

In the years from 1970 to 1976 our trade deficit in manufactured goods alone grew from $2.5 billion to over $10 billion, and is currently projected to exceed $11 billion. Clearly the manufacturing sector is one to which the present bill might more effectively turn its attention.

Not only positive measures, in the form of incentives, are needed. The elimination of negative factors, whether in place or proposed in this bill, has to be examined. There is lack of co-ordination between the federal government and the governments of the provinces on matters concerning taxation.

A prime example of the disorganization that abounds is in the taxation of mining companies. In British Columbia and Saskatchewan, for example, the lack of co-operation and consultation between the two levels of government has led to a situation where the combination of provincial royalty payments, and the federal elimination of the income tax deduction for such payments, has effectively created a tax rate of more than 100 per cent of revenue. How can the government seriously talk about turning the economy around and attracting investment when it cannot even co-ordinate its taxes and those of the provinces to avoid placing companies in such an outrageous position? What confidence should a prospective investor have in such an administration? How the government can purport to be attracting investment on the one hand, while terrorizing business on the other, I do not know.

A further example of the double-edge sword of government programs can be seen in the Canadian home insulation program. Even ignoring the tremendous inroads that the federal conditions for the implementation of this program have made on the jurisdiction of the provinces, there are aspects which cry out for examination and change. The aspect that concerns us most with respect to this measure is that the grant will be added to the income of the spouse with the highest income. This makes a mockery of the entire program.

An insulation grant will only cover two thirds of the cost of materials involved, nothing is paid towards the actual installation. An applicant receiving the maximum grant of $350 would have to spend a minimum of $525 on materials. If added on to that were say $175 for installation, the minimum cost would be $750, against which the grant would be applied. But a homeowner with sufficient funds to be able to afford part of the cost of the insulating will find that the grant, when added to his taxable income, could easily be taxed at a rate of 40 per cent or more. He would then be left with a net grant of perhaps $200, which would cover barely one quarter of the total cost. In addition, the government has overlooked the fact that, in many cases, the insulating it has promoted will result in increased local taxes for the homeowner far in excess of his anticipated savings in energy costs. All this hardly represents an effective incentive program to encourage insulation.

The same label can be placed on this entire package of government proposals that we are discussing here today: ineffective. There are several reason why. First is the fact that not enough incentive is being given to stimulate the economy effectively. Those measures that are included are so weak as to be of doubtful use; our economy is not in so healthy a position that half hearted measures will improve it.

Connected with the lack of incentives is the continued and needless complexity of the income tax laws. Unconscionable amounts of time are spent by businessmen and their advisers trying to understand the provisions and then to apply them to their particular situations. This is bad enough for large companies which can afford to keep tax specialists on staff, but it is absolutely intolerable for small businessmen for whom this represents a major expense. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I wonder how many in this Chamber prepare their own income tax returns.

The government must make a commitment to streamline and simplify our tax laws and regulations. The major problem with this legislation, however, lies not so much in its content as in its style, for it is nothing more than another piece in the patchwork quilt that is the government's approach to the economy. We have here simply a few more palliative measures, designed to fix up the failures of the past, and destined to be replaced by the failures of the future.

The government is blindly slapping a few more band aids on the flagging economy in the hope that one of them might cover a wound. But the problem is far more complex than that, and so is the solution. Until the government realizes this, and takes a far-sighted and comprehensive approach to economic planning, we will continue to suffer the despair of unfulfilled potential that has been our lot for so many years.

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join this debate on Bill C-11 but I will not get into the specifics of the bill. I intend to raise several very pointed questions when the bill goes to committee of the whole, at which time the minister, who is not present tonight, will be in his place. My remarks tonight are of a general nature and are more directed to what is not in the bill than to what is there.

Before I really begin I must say I am somewhat bothered that by reason of courtesy to my colleagues I am unable to take the full time which would normally be allotted to me, because the government has decided to bring in closure. That restricts the right of the opposition to scrutinize this legislation. This Bill has some critically important aspects to it, and the omissions in some cases are also very critical.

Yesterday the government charged that we were obstructing parliament and holding up the bill—the word "filibustering" was not used—when in fact up until the time of the closure motion only about 28 hours had been spent debating this legislation. If that amount of time was divided by the number of members in this House, a grand total of six minutes and 18 seconds would have been allowed for each hon. member to contribute to what is a critical tax proposal.

Mr. Stevens: Shame!

Mr. Whiteway: The minister does not want to call it a budget, but if it is not a budget, it should be. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has been calling on the government to bring in a budget before Christmas.

I reject the notion of the government that restricting my right to speak on this legislation is proper. I feel almost professorial at this point because I want to lecture—if I can use that word—the government about the nature of parliamentary democracy. I do not deny for a moment the right of the government, which has a clear majority, to set fiscal and monetary policies. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has just walked in, and I will say very clearly to him that it is his prerogative, responsibility, and indeed his duty to set fiscal and monetary policies and to bring in a budget. It is his duty to set the rate of taxation and to get the economy in order.

It is the prerogative of the government to set foreign policy. It is the right of the government, which has a majority, in a parliamentary system to rule and govern absolutely. I do not debate that point, but what I do reject is any move by any government to deny my rights, privileges, responsibilities, and duties to all the citizens of Canada and in particular, of course, to the people of Selkirk. It is my responsibility to scrutinize, to oppose, and to offer alternatives, and the alternatives we have offered this government are endless.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe and my leader have been very specific point by point, particularly in the area of fiscal and monetary policies and in suggesting a new budget. If it is true—and I believe it is—that the government has the absolute right to govern, surely the opposition has the absolute right to oppose, to scrutinize, and to take our time, if that is what we deem responsible, to try to persuade the government with reasonable arguments based on sound judgment, however reluctant it is to do anything meaningful, that it ought to take a course of action which will mean something to the country. I do not take it at all lightly that I am forced to curtail my remarks because the government has brought in closure.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to remind the hon. member that the debate on C-75 ended yesterday. We are back on the second reading debate of Bill C-11.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Standing Order 75C.

Mr. Lumley: Sorry.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has once again demonstrated his astuteness. I am glad he raises the fact that we are debating Bill C-11. If he had his way, he would have muted the opposition and would not have allowed us even five hours. The government is so generous it gives us five hours, and hon. members opposite take half of it!

Mr. Daudlin: Give us five minutes of something original.

Mr. Whiteway: The hon. member wants something original. I can tell him there is nothing original on his side of the House because we are getting more of what we have had in past years, deficits. I must correct myself because there is something new this year. The deficit is larger than it was last year. We are facing a $9 billion deficit. Perhaps some of my hon. colleagues opposite do not really understand what $9 billion can buy. So that they might understand—because they spend money as if it were water, and they obviously do not understand the consequences of a $9 billion deficit—I will tell them how much $9 billion is.

[Mr. Whiteway.]

Let us take a 1978 Dodge Aspen sports sedan with a standard shift, and no options. That car sells for about $4,700. It is about 197 inches long, which is about 16.3 feet. Let us line Dodge Aspens up bumper to bumper along the Trans-Canada Highway beginning at Victoria. The line would stretch all the way across British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, that great keystone province of Manitoba which has a Tory government, all across Ontario, winding its way down around the Great Lakes, all through that great la belle province, which will remain in Confederation because a Canada without Quebec is no Canada at all, down through the maritimes to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—we could not get to Prince Edward Island on the Trans-Canada which, incidentally, is something else the government has balked on—then over to the capital of Newfoundland, St. John's, to a location in front of Joey's oratory. The total distance I have here is 4,860 miles. That is as of September 3, 1962. If we lined all those cars up bumper to bumper, an amount equal to our deficit would pay for every single car, and there would be $1.5828408 billion and a few pennies left over. That is what our deficit means, and yet this budget is the same as usual. That is obviously of no concern to the government.

Hon. members opposite smile with contentment about this mini-budget, economic statement, or whatever the minister chooses to call it. A million Canadians are unemployed, and hon. members opposite dare to ask me to be original. With unanimous consent I would yield the floor so that the hon. member for York-Simcoe, for the benefit of hon. members opposite who may not have heard him the first time, might again shed some light on what ought to be done and must be done to get the country working again.

This bill, this budget or this economic statement—whatever it is—says nothing about housing. My colleague, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), smiles, but I know it is a smile of great disappointment because this matter almost passes the point of seriousness. There is not a word in this bill about housing. There is not a penny for housing. I think it is important that I read what the deputy minister under the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has said about housing, while this bill or whatever it is is absolutely silent with reference to housing. In a speech made in Calgary in September, 1976, Mr. Teron said:

When 280,000 families in Canada pay more than 50 per cent of their family income for housing and 500,000 families in Canada pay more than 35 per cent, and 820,000 families pay more than 25 per cent, and when 2/3 of those Canadians in need of housing cannot afford to buy or rent a home without a government subsidy, we have a problem of fundamental proportions. We must take decisive action now or face unparalleled problems later.

One year and two months later there is no sign that the government has heeded the deputy minister of urban affairs.

I hope the Minister of Finance and hon. members opposite will not consider my remarks to be partisan or critical, which is the normal role of a member of the opposition, when as a member concerned about housing I plead with them to consider some of the concrete and constructive proposals put forward by the leader of my party, by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, and by other members of this party. We are not looking for glory or praise for the Conservative party, but are here because of an interest and a love for this country. Our suggestions are put forward in a spirit of co-operation.

There is nothing in this mini-budget to solve the critical problems Mr. Teron has referred to, nor is there anything to answer the problem of energy conservation as it applies to urban transportation. I have said in this Chamber before, and I think it is worth saying again, that at the moment three quarters of our population live in urban centres, and in another ten or 12 years 90 per cent will live in cities. Half of the energy consumed in this country is spent on intracity transportation. The larger cities like Toronto, Vancouver, and Montreal have modern energy saving mass transit systems that are efficient and energy saving. The Minister of Finance and this government, however, have reneged on a 1974 election promise of hundreds of millions of dollars for mass transportation within our urban centres.

To state the obvious, we must begin to do things, and right now. Of course hon. members opposite will ask the usual question—where are we going to get the money? They blame the Tories for asking them to spend money all the time, and claim we have more programs than can possibly be financed.

We reiterate almost to exhaustion the solution we have proposed. It is not what you spend, it is how you spend. Time and time again we have asked the government to get its priorities in order. We only have to go up to the sixth floor of this building and gaze across that great river to the great province of Quebec, the great city of Hull. Spread almost as far as the eye can see are those fortresses that house civil servants.

Let it not be said that we on this side criticize civil servants. We could point to almost any civil servant and say he works hard and conscientiously. The question is not whether he works hard, it is whether the work is necessary. As the Auditor General pointed out, the government cannot control its spending. We have asked over and over again that it set priorities, and certainly the most obvious areas of capital expenditure are office buildings and accommodation.

If time permitted, Mr. Speaker, I could give a list as long as an arm and a leg of ways the government could save money so that problems of energy conservation and urban transportation could be solved. Not only that, we could export the technology and finance our own urban transit systems through selling our knowledge abroad. We have the brain power and the technology; the only thing lacking is the initiative on the part of the government. I do not believe the government has that much vision, however. I believe its members are stale, worn out, tired. They offer the same old non-solutions to problems like one million people unemployed and deficits going up to $9 billion. The Canadian dollar was worth 90 cents yesterday, and for all I know it may only be worth 88 cents today.

We on this side plead with the government, even at this 11th hour, to show some sign of repentance by bringing in a budget. We would be overjoyed if that were done before Christmas and would co-operate so that this House might address the problems besetting the country.

At committee stage, Mr. Speaker, I shall be asking specific questions on specific parts of this bill. This party will do all it can in a responsible way to make Bill C-11 address, to some small degree, the problems of Canada. For the sake of the country we in the opposition can do no less.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate on Bill C-11 I should like to be rather positive tonight. This government needs some sincere suggestions from all sides to ensure that in the short time left at its disposal as a government it can start solving some of the problems facing us.

Mr. Chrétien: We need your help.

Mr. Stevens: As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) says, he needs our help, and I can assure him that he will have it tonight.

Many of my colleagues have pointed out deficiencies or aspects of Bill C-11 that should be clarified. Many of those points will be dealt with in committee of the whole when it starts later tonight or tomorrow. Mr. Speaker, I think in the dialogue that will then ensue on such things as the proposal to tax the insulation and a grant that was given by this government, as well as such things as the proposal to tax the insurance cash surrender values to some extent, which is proposed in this bill, the whole reference that is made in the bill to the turnover, roll-over provisions with regard to small businesses and farms are now in the hands of say, a father who wishes to turn the property over to his children, all of these matters raised by my colleagues hopefully will be dealt with fully during the committee of the whole session. There are other items, the $100 tax credit which many have referred to. We feel that while the concept was, I suppose, stolen from us, it is a good concept. There are certain clarifications that are very badly needed.

One thing I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, and I hope this time when we get to the committee of the whole, the Minister of Finance will be able to give us some insight of this, I feel there are a lot of questions to be asked, and hopefully answered, with respect to the $9 billion borrowing limit extension which the minister has included in this bill. $9 billion is a lot of money. It is a lot of money when you consider that it is almost as much as the total federal spending budget at the time when this Trudeau government took power ten years ago.

I said this evening I would like to be positive, and I mean that. What I hope to do tonight, in addition to dealing with Bill C-11, is to make certain suggestions to the House, to the government and to the Minister of Finance as to how we could handle more effectively this whole budgetary process, which this House has to grapple with periodically, and specifically this legislation before us tonight. In doing that, I think it will be helpful if we basically accept, that in any budget, there are two sides to it. There is a policy side, which is by far the most important, and there is also what might be regarded as an administrative or a structural side. It is this technical side we are dealing with tonight. Generally, because budgets have those two aspects to them, and realizing of necessity, they are relatively complicated documents, I feel there should be certain tactics or approaches taken in order to facilitate, not only our dialogue and discussion of the matter before us, but hopefully to facilitate better understanding by the Canadian public as to what this process is all about.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with four or five suggestions with respect to that question of structural change. How can we get a more effective approach in dealing with a bill touching on income tax, for instance, Bill C-11?

My suggestion would be that green papers should be used more widely by the government because I believe green papers are well received. For example, we had green papers on sales tax, on the charity areas, and they contributed to a meaningful debate and discussion with respect to the points raised in those green papers. I would hope, therefore, that the government would bring in more green papers with respect to matters they feel are suitable to that kind of discussion. The next point I would like to raise tonight is that I believe the time has come for less secrecy surrounding this whole question of budget-making and the type of debate taking place here. Let me just give you one example. It is widely known, although somehow it is kept secret, that the Department of Finance calls on various consulting firms for advice. For reasons not clear to me, the names of those consultants are not disclosed, we are not advised as to their terms of reference, and I think we should be. I cannot see anything wrong with the Department of Finance making it very clear that they have called on a certain accountant firm, a certain law firm, or have called on certain tax professionals for advice as to what they should do. I suggest we should have a little less secrecy. Let us open up and let us know who the government is relying on for that type of consultative information or advice.

When the minister says tonight he needs our help, I think he needs the help of others, and I would like to see the Minister of Finance surround himself with an advisory group of people well vested in tax matters so that the minister can get some fresh advice. I say that because there is a growing suspicion that the advice the minister is getting is warmed over, old advice, which is something the officials around him are attracted to, but you don't have that spark of ingenuity or freshness that might be conveyed in the policy thinking sessions a new independent advisory group drawn preferably from the private sector might bring into the general policy-making decision apparatus.

I would like to see draft legislation made available to the House, not only for our consideration but so that the general public can have a look at what the public has in mind. Sometimes I feel that we tend to get locked in here, the government will introduce a bill, it will go through first reading—which is only a formality—it comes to second reading and they suddenly feel they are locked into a position that if they alter or back away from, this is a loss of face. It then results in that impossible situation where we make a comment, or the public makes a comment with respect to changes and the government feels they cannot even meet those changes without appearing to be backing down from a position they got themselves into by introducing the bill in the first place. Why is it we cannot have draft legislation on the routine type of legislation, which is what Bill C-11 is mainly made up of? Let us take a look at it. Let us find out, without people taking definitive positions, what the general public might feel about draft legislation, and also have a free interchange within the House, both opposition and government members concerning their views on a draft put before us.

Tomorrow when we get to committee of the whole stage with Bill C-11, I think we will be uncomfortably surprised as to how little will be told as to why changes now proposed in Bill C-11 are needed. Why should that be so? For every change that is proposed in any bill, not only fiscal bills such as we have before us, why can't we have every change in legislation be given an in depth honest answer as to why the change is needed?

On a money matter, for instance, the first clause in Bill C-11 deals with capital gains. I think we should have an explanation from the minister on that. Why does he feel the $1,000 write-off or chargeable amount with regard to capital gains losses should be raised to $2,000? I think we should rightly expect the minister to tell us what revenues are involved, how many transactions are involved, why are all losses with respect to capital gains not in a position that they can be written off against capital gains. That type of thing I believe will be very meaningful, and I hope when I mention this item tonight, the minister will cooperate during the committee of the whole stage to give the answers which have rarely been given before as to why the changes are really needed. Let me touch on a bigger question, the concern of any minister of finance, the policy side of the budget.

We have touched on the structural aspect. Let us turn to the policy side of the budget. In this connection I think it would be extremely helpful if there were more references to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs concerning the economic condition of the country. This has often been discussed. Other Ministers of Finance have hinted that they might make such general references, but for reasons known only to themselves they draw back at the last moment when it comes to giving the committee a firm reference to enable it to consider, for example, what are the real alternatives for Canada today faced with inflation, lack of real growth, and mounting trade deficits. What, for instance, in such circumstances are the effects of tax cuts or reductions in sales taxes? Let us have more references to our standing committee so that we can consider policy matters under the heading of the economic climate in Canada.

I have touched on the policy questions which arise from every budget. Here is an example of the need for separation. Let there be two distinct parts of every budget with a clear distinction between the policy side and what one might refer to as the structural side.

Most of us eventually feel sorry for the poor Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Guay) over there.

Mr. Parent: He is a happy fellow.

Mr. Stevens: I should like to make him a little happier, then, by giving him a bit more to do. I am suggesting that more bills of a structural nature be introduced by the Minister of National Revenue. Why, for example, should he not bring in the various bills whose administration he has to supervise? This is a suggestion which might be considered in future as a step ahead in trying to get through the rather extensive procedure we now follow as far as budgets are concerned.

Another suggestion. It may be that to iron out hundreds, if not thousands of misunderstandings which arise with respect to the tax process and the position of the government with regard to income tax, some type of board ought to be established which could deal with this task in a prompt and effective way. I do not mean a board in the sense of an adjudication board, but a board which could address itself to difficulties and inequities which are inherent in our taxation system, and advise whether they should be altered in the next budget. This would, if you like, constitute a screening process to ensure a more effective, a more efficiency-oriented income tax approach.

These are only a few suggestions having to do with the process in which we are engaged tonight. I should like to turn now in a more general way to the whole question of the economic position in which the country finds itself. I should like to touch upon the incomparable incompetence of the government in dealing with economic matters. Many times I have heard the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of Finance speaking about restraint and suggesting that somehow or other they know how to cut down federal spending. Mr. Speaker, I feel this is just like asking a rabbit to carry lettuce. Neither of those two gentlemen knows how to restrain public expenditure.

Mr. Andras: Tell us what to cut.

Mr. Stevens: The President of the Treasury Board says. "Tell us what to cut." I hope he will remain in his place, because he will get an earful as I speak. In the past decade Canada's economic performance has deteriorated, with Ottawa giving little priority to measures which might arrest the trend. On balance, the measures taken by the government have aggravated rather than relieved the situation. Meanwhile, grizzly economic figures pile up.

Unemployment, running at more than 8 per cent—twice the level forecast by the Economic Council for this period—will likely result in more than one million jobless this winter. Inflation roars on at nearly 9 per cent, well above the government's target and three times the level anticipated by the Economic Council. Trade in the last quarter fell to a projected annual deficit of $6.5 billion, the highest in history, at a time when the administration actually anticipated a decrease. The government's budgetary deficits average over $5 billion a year. Next year it will be something like $11 billion. In the aggregate, government deficits in the past ten years have totalled more than the combined deficits of all federal governments in the previous 100 years.

The Canadian travel deficit reached over $400 million in the last quarter, a tenfold increase compared to four years ago, and it is anticipated this deficit will approach $2 billion for the year. Our dollar in relation to the United States dollar has slipped 13 cents since last November to its present 90 cents. Our foreign exchange reserves have slumped to their lowest level since 1971, and now represent only 1½ months of our imports. In this connection it is most disappointing to find in the Conference Board Report issued today that the effect of our 13-cent devaluation has simply been to restore the cost of inflation since 1975. I should like to quote exactly what the Conference Board said on this point:

> The effect of the recent devaluation has been, therefore, to offset the increase in relative labour earnings which has occurred since 1975.

In short, here we have a government which, through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), and to a lesser extent through certain other ministers, has tried to tell the Canadian people that the 90-cent dollar is something good. Well, the Conference Board tells us that the effect of devaluation has simply been to offset the rise in wages which has occurred on account of inflation in this country since the control program began.

Productivity among our workers continues to lag compared to productivity in other countries, making us relatively non-competitive internationally. Here again I should like to refer hon. members to the Conference Board study which came out today. It shows that in 83 industries reviewed by the Board, wages in Canada have been higher than comparable wages in the United States, yet productivity on the average has been only about 90 per cent of that of their United States counterparts. Investor confidence is at a low with stock exchange values crumbling year by year in real terms.

This economic morass is illustrated by our low real growth, that is, growth without inflation. For the past three years how many of us realize—certainly I do not believe the government realizes—that such annual real growth has been stalled on a per capita basis at one half of one per cent. In the past reported year the United States real growth on the other hand has been 4.6 per cent, nine times the actual real growth in the same one-year period in Canada.

I said at the beginning I intended to be positive, and I will be positive tonight. Those are the bald facts. That is the situation into which this government has put us. Now I would like to make some suggestions of a policy nature that I hope the government will accept in order to get us out of the problems we face. In making these points, Mr. Speaker, I would like to divide them into short term policies, middle term policies, and longer term policies. But first I would suggest that to restore public confidence in our economic momentum in Canada we need leadership in Ottawa which is willing to implement the three types of plans that I have indicated; that is, short term, middle term, and longer term plans. In short, an industrial strategy for the nation must be evolved.

With respect to short term policies we have said for some time that, faced with today's unemployment and sluggish economic growth, there should be substantial personal income tax cuts, with the greatest benefit being given to those earning less than $8,000 per year and with lesser benefits being extended to those earning between $8,000 and $16,000. The lower the income, the greater should be the benefit. The government in Bill C-11 has met the suggestion at least in part, but unfortunately it proposes that the $100 tax credit will be felt in 1978, not now.

Ministers have represented that the tax credit will be shared by Canadians in January or February, but there is no place in this bill that that is said to be the case. They plan to do that through new directives in an administrative way. I emphasize it is going to be an administrative matter, and we will be suggesting why it should not be left in that position. The burden of financing public expenditures has fallen increasingly on personal income taxpayers. This tax has essentially affected low and middle income taxpayers who receive the bulk of income in Canada.

How many of us realize that in 1975, the latest year for which data is available, over 60 per cent of the total income taxes paid in this country was paid by persons earning under $20,000 per year? I have said repeatedly, certainly for the last 18 months, the federal government should reduce the load that it is taking from the personal income taxpayers. Again, we believe the federal government should reduce its manufacturer sales tax as soon as possible. This would bring about a reduction in the consumer price index and would boost consumer and business confidence. It would also increase consumer purchasing power.

Although unemployment is national in scope, its greatest burden is borne by the five eastern provinces, and by young people entering the labour force. Companies willing to create employment in those regions, or for young people, must be given suitable added incentives. For example, tax credits or rebates could be made available to corporations willing to create jobs in regions with high unemployment. This would encourage, I would suggest, those companies to invest needed capital. But that is only half of the job.

In addition there should be unemployment tax credits for firms which qualify for such assistance by hiring additional workers. Such employment assistance ought to be oriented most heavily to our youth and to those securing jobs in high unemployment areas. The minister in his October 20 statement made reference to employment tax credits. He indicated that they would like to put a program in position, but I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, there has been no action. There is no legislation. Frankly, the government is not sure how it will implement that program. Mr. Speaker, we would like to tell it how to implement the program. I can assure you if we were the government in this House tonight, such a program would be on the statute books of Canada.

Mr. Kaplan: Tell us what you would do.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has asked that I give him some hints. I can assure him that if he can succeed in getting the Minister of Finance at least to attend the meetings of that committee we will start giving him some hints. So the ball is over to you, Mr. Speaker.

Wage and price controls, in our view, have a limited usefulness. Left in place, they become counter productive and a deterrent to economic expansion. Therefore the government should commence phasing out its present wage and price control program right now. An ongoing monitoring agency may be needed for a limited time, but it is the market place that should be left as much as possible to settle wage and price levels. Given fiscal and monetary restraint by government, the market place in the past has controlled inflation, and it can do so in the future.

Surely it is relevant to note that in the past three months the inflation level in the United States has been an average 3.8 per cent a year. Compare that to the level in Canada, over 8 per cent—twice the level that has been experienced in the last three months in the United States. That is not just a three month phenomenon. The fact is that since controls were put in place in Canada we have consistently had higher inflation levels than they have had in the United States where they have no controls. That is something the government loves to gloss over in its fascination with the controls program in Canada that has contributed to tens of thousands of Canadians being out of work on account of the counter productive nature of controls in undermining business confidence in the country. But, Mr. Speaker, I have touched on just a few of what I regard as short term policies.

Perhaps the more important policies are the medium term, longer term policies in which this government is so lacking. Let me touch on some medium term policies I would like them to consider. Governments, in particular the federal government, have increased their share of the economy in the past decade so that they now handle about 43 per cent of our total gross national product. This, I would suggest, has placed an unfair burden on our personal income taxpayers and has contributed to inflation, lower productivity, and in fact has ruined many small businessmen. For these reasons we believe it is imperative that government should reduce its gross national product take to a more manageable level.

In conjunction with other levels of government, a five-year target for reduced government spending in relation to our gross national product must be set and reached. The government likes to assure us that it is trying to control its spending so that it will not rise more quickly than the GNP. In short, it is saying that it will maintain its share of government spending at its present relative relationship to the GNP. Frankly, that is not good enough. What is the magic in all governments taking 43 per cent of the GNP? Clearly it has contributed to some of our problems. Governments must start retrenching to return to a lower share of the gross national product.

Zero budgeting is a concept which must be introduced to public administration. It would ensure that programs would have to be periodically reviewed and justified. The present assumption that once a program begins it continues indefinitely, which all socialists seem to assume, must be changed.

In addition, working with labour, business and consumer groups, the government should establish targets for future real growth, inflation, and employment levels within the country. With such guidelines, decision makers within the economy will be able to proceed with greater confidence in the future. As targets are reached, confidence will grow. If targets are not reached, reappraisals to determine the reasons will be beneficial.

We have not heard from the Minister of Finance in this respect. I think his predecessor shocked most members of this House, when asked why would he not set such targets for Canada, he said that it was because they might cause a lack of confidence in the government. That is one of the reasons for governments establishing targets. One wants to have a bench mark to judge them by in order to see if a reasonable target has been met; if not, why not; and if the government cannot do it, we will get another one.

Canada is the most over governed country in the world. Not only do we have four levels of government in most areas, but we find these levels duplicate activities and on occasion stalemate, or at least frustrate each other's actions. At the federal level we must question if it is necessary to have 25 different departments which are duplicated in the main at the provincial level. Is it really necessary to have a federal Department of the Environment concerned about pollution, or could it not be assumed that if each provincial environmental department enforced anti-pollution legislation there would be no dirty federal air in Canada?

Is it necessary for federal authorities to add to our already high housing prices through their needless regulations and requirements? There may be a role for the federal authority to play as banker in connection with housing, but the actual development and construction of such housing should be a provincial matter.

Traditionally, small businessmen have been Canada's main employers, yet today they are under heavier pressure than any other business group. Tax concessions help, but other steps are needed. Many smaller businessmen never reach a taxable earnings level before they are snuffed out. It is here that aid is needed. Less regulation by government would be a tonic for such entrepreneurs. Dealing with regulations is an added cost for big business, and it kills the small fellow.

At this point I should like to remind the Minister of Finance that at page 8 of "The Way Ahead" the government outlined eight crucial steps it was going to take during the anti-inflation program, which it indicated would help relieve the various problems I am touching upon tonight. Not one of the eight has been executed to date. I hope the Minister of Finance will be able to tell us why the government failed with respect to what it set out to do.

Consideration should be given to assisting smaller firms in the formation of consortia which would enable them to compete better with larger firms. Grouping smaller concerns by specialty would preserve the individual identity of each, while allowing the consortia to bid for large orders both domestically and internationally. An increase in subcontracting by large concerns to smaller businessmen would revitalize our economy. Government, which is the largest purchaser of goods, must ensure that small businessmen get a fair share of the orders.

Federal and provincial minimum wage laws have contributed to our lack of competitiveness in that Canadian minimum wages are now 20 per cent to 30 per cent higher than in the United States. Not only have they contributed on our cost side, but also they have contributed to our unemployment where many people who might hire, if it were not for the minimum wage structure, now simply do not hire. Is it better to have a person out of work on unemployment insurance, or at least working for a wage, as opposed to the present situation?

The federal minimum wage of $2.85 an hour compares to the United States minimum wage of $2.30. The American Congress recently boosted their minimum wage to $2.65 an hour effective next January, to $2.85 a year later, and to $3.05 in 1980. It would be wise for federal and provincial authorities to freeze any further increases in our minimum wages until the Americans at least catch up. In certain fields such as the tourist industry it may be necessary to make further minimum wage exemptions in order for them to regain some competitiveness. As minimum wage laws are a major cause of youth unemployment we should consider a short run subsidy, such as a six months' subsidy to youths just entering the private sector labour market who otherwise would be unemployed, if full minimum wages had to be paid.

One must consider the leverage one receives if a person's wage is subsidized. At $3 per hour, if the government were to subsidize that wage for $1 up to six months, and assuming the person works 40 hours a week—that is $120—of that amount approximately $30 comes back in taxes, and the net subsidy paid out of the federal treasury would be $10 per worker. On the other hand if he is put on unemployment insurance and if he receives $120 comparable to the $120 wage I am referring to, the government gets approximately $30 in income taxes. Thus, the total net cost to the federal treasury is $90. In short, it costs the treasury $90 to keep one person on unemployment insurance, compared to the $10 it would cost if that person were subsidized for working for a private employer in the way I am suggesting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue if he receives unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: No.

Mr. Paproski: Benjamin said no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I want to touch on some of the longer term policies I would like the government to consider.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I said no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, but I did not hear the hon. member. Now I hear him, so there is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Paproski: But the hon. member has carried on.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have carried on.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for York-Simcoe carried on after Your Honour had not heard a no. I believe the hon. member should be allowed to continue for a few minutes. From wherever the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) was—behind the curtain or some place—he yelled no. I think there was no proper "no" at that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Therefore the hon. member for York-Simcoe should still continue and have the floor.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I also want to submit, since the hon. member had continued and the Chair had not heard any objection, that he ought to be allowed to continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not think we should play games. I did not hear anything. I gave the floor to the hon. member for York-Simcoe, and then the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) stood up and said no, which is his right. Unless the hon. member withdraws his "no", he has not given his consent, and I do not think the hon. member can pursue it.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If Your Honour did not hear my "no", I fully accept that. Is there any rule of this House which would enable us not to listen to any more of this nonsense that we are hearing from the hon. member? However, if he wants to go on a few more minutes, he can.

• (2122)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their courtesy in allowing me to continue my remarks, but as I was saying I feel that I would like to make some long term policy suggestions to the government.

World technology is changing at a rapid rate. Canada has failed to keep abreast of these changes, and this has contributed to our $10 billion manufacturing trade deficit, a deficit that might grow to $11.5 billion this year.

The deterioration in our net export position in 1976—the deficit on trade in goods and services accounted for 2.7 per cent of the gross national product—is perhaps the most important shift that has taken place in the Canadian economy. We are simply consuming more than we are producing. We are living beyond our means and using borrowed foreign money to cover the difference.

While other nations have concentrated on encouraging and funding new technology breakthroughs, we have tended to fund existing industries which have grown uncompetitive. American government funding of research and development is twice as high as ours in relation to the respective GNPs.

The Japanese strategy is to increase the international sales effort for existing products and to develop new products through government sponsored research. The Japanese government spent $214 million over the past five years to help the computer industry compete with IBM's series 370. Canada has no similar programs, but on the other hand will spend this year two and a half times that amount on the CBC.

We no longer have a full time minister of science and technology in Canada. We should.

We believe there must be a massive effort to assist Canadian business to attain technology breakthroughs in fields in which we have an inherent advantage. These fields include agriculture, the resources of our three seas, our fresh water, and those industries related to our mineral and chemical wealth.

Historically we have been large exporters of pulp and paper products. Plantations in South America and Europe are now producing marketable trees in six to ten years, compared to our 40 or 50 years. Faced with this problem federal complacency is unforgiveable. The government's $100 million financing of overseas pulp and paper plants, which will compete with us, for example in Poland, is madness.

A more imaginative internatioenal sales effort at the federal level is overdue. Properly merchandized, Canadian produce could be sold more effectively. Cheese factories are closing down in this country, but at the same time Canadian Cheddar cheese is being rationed in England because it is in short supply. Can you believe it, Mr. Speaker?

Our export financing, which is in the billions, has become the private preserve of a few intimates of the Liberal party. It must be made available to all exporters, both small and large.

We have lost the balance in Canada between big corporations and those not so big. It must be regained so that the traditional ingenuity, inventiveness, and entrepreneurship of small businessmen can once again contribute to the growth of our productivity.

As the world is reshaped into new market pools we must also seek out partners to enlarge our trade areas. With our natural resources and our proximity to the wealthiest market in the world, we are in an excellent position to gain access to such markets. In the meantime the government must stop allowing important industries to be ravaged by foreign competition. There is no reason why Canada should become the freest of the free trade nations in the world. Through it all we need an industrial strategy to chart once again the course which will restore our economy to its real growth potential with full employment and stable prices.

When we have an opportunity to vote on Bill C-11, we will do so feeling that many of the measures in the bill are good. We are not against the $100 tax credit, but essentially we believe that the government must improve Bill C-11. We hope that it will improve it during committee of the whole stage and that we will be able to vote with it on third reading. Frankly, as it now stands, we cannot see how we can vote with the government at third reading if Bill C-11 remains in its present form.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I would not have spoken tonight if, while walking between the parliament buildings, I had not asked myself in terms of taxation, what is all this for? As I hear the government members speak about restraint and as I watch the government shove the crumbs off the table while crying for restraint, thus demonstrating its tremendous hypocrisy, I feel the need to rise tonight to speak on this Bill C-11 amending the Income Tax Act. I ask: taxation for what? Is it taxation to light another massive structure on the other side of the river? There are half empty offices in Ottawa and half empty offices in Hull.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wenman: I see that makes hon. members opposite a little concerned. They should be concerned, because if all Canadians could travel to Ottawa today and see the half empty offices in Hull and in Ottawa they too would be concerned and would not believe a word of the government's restraint program. They too would see that this taxation bill, these crumbs they are sweeping to the Canadian people in an attempt to buy them with their own money, is of little interest. It is indeed discouraging. Do we need this further taxation to turn the lights on in these buildings?

One government member talks about conservation, about cutting back on the lighting in these buildings, yet when you look across the river you see the lights in all the government buildings in Hull blazing away. Is that what we need taxation for? I think not. Perhaps we need more taxation for foreign affairs because, after all, the government has not been able to give away all the money it budgeted for foreign affairs. There is no increase in taxes, the hon. member says? I say there is a constant increase in taxes. You have an increase in taxes through inflation.

Mr. Andras: Better get your facts straight.

Mr. Wenman: Perhaps you do not need more taxes because you cannot spend all the money you have. You cannot give away the money fast enough. Right now in the Department of External Affairs officials in CIDA are furiously scrambling to try to spend the money quickly, because if they do not spend their full budget they know that next year they will be cut back. CIDA is spending $1 billion.

Mr. Kaplan: Go on to your next point.

Mr. Wenman: Yet the report comes in that we have budgeted that $1 billion and we can only spend $913 million. The government has given money for every single project. There is not a country in the whole world that has come to us and told us they need foreign aid and was turned away. The government met all the demands, and still has money left over.

The government is giving away capital at a time when Canada needs capital for its development. What will it do with the surpluses in the external aid program? What will it do with that extra money that comes back to revenue? Perhaps it will give it back in some form of tax rebate—I hope so. It is the great give-away program. If it is not going to be given away by CIDA, perhaps it will be given away by establishing another embassy in another underdeveloped nation, and we will be more successful in giving money away next year. However, then again we will probably exercise restraint in the Middle East. We will not establish a new embassy or an expanded embassy in the Middle East where, in Saudi Arabia, they have $23 billion for which they are trying to find a place in the world. That $23 billion could be tapped through technology exchange if the government would care enough just to go to that country and establish and expand relations there. In Iraq there is $7 billion. We could establish a minor embassy, but there is no thrust into real world markets where there is in fact potential for dollars and for Canadian industry and trade.

If we could get into these great markets of the Middle East, we would not require such a large taxation bill. We could perhaps be giving back more money than this token $100 tax deduction which is promised to us. Perhaps we could have more money to put out another green paper.

The government is very effective at putting out green papers. Green papers are another stall tactic while the athletes of Canada starve or live on welfare or unemployment insurance. The athletes of Canada who contributed to Canada in the Olympics live below subsistence, and the government puts out another green paper. To the government the green paper is the answer to everything.

Perhaps some of the tax dollars the government did not give back but could have, and should have, should have gone to a place like Wickaninnish, but the government wants to close down Wickaninnish. That is a revenue producing vehicle. There are only 22 rooms involved, but the government wants to cut this out and instead build some form of interpretative centre which will require more and more civil servants.

The government should cut back the number of civil servants. There would be a tremendous saving. There are 467,268 federal employees. That is far too many. Someone once mentioned to Milton Friedman that many government employees do not work hard at their jobs. He responded by saying, "That's good, they do less harm that way." There has been fantastic growth in the public service which is well reported and documented, and there is no doubt that Canadians are getting fed up with it.

This taxation policy is nothing new. It is a rehash. Why does the government not look at some new ideas? Why not a flat rate tax system where everyone would pay equally?

An hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Hogan: Would that help the poor?

Mr. Gilbert: Is that Tory policy?

Mr. Wenman: There are many basic economic policies which could be developed. Instead of getting more and more involved in the economy the government should adopt a policy which involves it less and less and which would move more and more toward a free economy. The government should interfere only in extreme cases, in order to maintain free enterprise. The government professes to believe in free enterprise, but 43 per cent of the gross national product goes in taxation. The government says it stands for competition, but its competition bill cannot get through the House and cannot establish any credibility in the country.

The government discourages price fixing while at the same time working on the international scene as a major price fixer itself.

A major reduction of taxation would come about with a reduction in the number of government employees. If the number of government employees were reduced, government spending would be reduced.

Mr. Benjamin: Keep that up and the voters will reduce you.

Mr. Wenman: In the past the automatic answer was "get rid of useless jobs, abolish them," but today the unemployed and their families have become a tax burden. It becomes more and more impossible to keep them from being charges on the government and to develop more productive capacity in the private sector. One suggestion would be to acknowledge openly the existence of this powerful political force and present a compromise solution, from which all parties would benefit. The aim should be to encourage the thousands now on government payrolls to transfer voluntarily to private industry by making it financially attractive for them to do so. To that end all government employees working on jobs which are found to be unneeded and so designated as permanently abolished should be placed on a leave of absence with a full pay guarantee until the normal time of retirement.

[Mr. Wenman.]

Even if unneeded employees stayed home, the government would net tremendous savings in the cost of working space, supplies, and other expenses. The proposed program also calls for 10 per cent awards of whatever the employees who go into private industry earn there. Thus if an employee making $10,000 at a government job goes into private industry and earns $10,000, the total income would be $11,000, and the government would save $9,000.

The government should develop new economic programs, with new imagination and new policy thrust. Instead of the constant attitude that the government can spend itself out of its problems by hiring more civil servants to create more spending programs, the government should concentrate on developing productive programs in the private sector.

Undoubtedly when the report of the Auditor General comes forward it will discuss the expenditure of $59 million by the Canada Council. Undoubtedly it will express some concern that there is no accountability by this government for the $59 million so spent. That $59 million was handed to the Canada Council, and no accountability is required. The Canada Council took the money and allocated it to many individual applicants. These people make applications, receive money, and no further accountability is required. It is time that all Canada Council money was treated like other government funds and a measure of accountability established. When a Canada Council grant or contribution is provided, a legal contract should be established, the budget submitted met, and the project as submitted finished, or the person receiving the money should be held liable for it and the money should be returned.

The list of Canada Council grants would cause concern for any Canadian, and it does. I wonder how many Canadians would accept spending $20,000 for a film record of Pashtoon pastoralists in Afghanistan. I wonder how many Canadians would like to see their hard earned tax dollars going into that kind of project. Looking over this list I wonder how Canada will benefit by an annotated edition of the complete letters of Benjamin Disraeli for $113,000. I wonder how many Canadians will benefit from a critical edition of the correspondance of Emile Zola for $30,000. I wonder how many backbench Liberals would stand up and defend these Canada Council grants. Who will accept the responsibility for levying taxes for this type of project?

There are many items which could be discussed with regard to waste in government. These are becoming well known to a very disillusioned Canadian public. Of every dollar we earn 43 cents is now being consumed by taxation. I wonder how the constituents of hon. members opposite feel when the average Canadian who goes to work at nine o'clock in the morning has to work until 1.30 in the afternoon just to pay his taxes. Only after that does he begin earning his take-home pay.

I wonder how many people realize that of the $15,000 average salary, $7,000 goes to taxes in one form or another. I wonder how many Canadians realize that the equalization these tax acts claim to represent means no equalization at all but rather an excessive burden on the taxpayers of Ontario, Alberta, and British Columbia. This taxation is not just reflected in grants and formats but is an equalization found throughout the structure of government from bill to bill.

In small craft harbours, boat owners in Vancouver pay $2 per foot for a berth whilst the cost in Quebec and the Maritimes is $1. That is hardly fair. Is it fair that a tax system sets up an equalization format which has western Canadians subsidizing the gasoline that eastern Canadians use in their cars whilst those cars cost westerners $500 or $600 more because of the freight rates?

This bill does not address any of the inequities in our taxation system. It is band aid legislation. Accountants and lawyers will have a heyday with it, yet they have hardly had time to adjust to the last tax bill. It is time the government brought in measures to deal effectively with the taxes it has already collected instead of throwing them away on CIDA programs, Canada Works programs, or Canada Council grants. The people of Canada are getting tired of this lack of accountability.

In the Standing Committee on External Affairs today, Mr. Speaker, some of the abuses in CIDA's spending came under discussion. A report before the committee showed concern for—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. At this point I have to inform the hon. member that in this House he cannot refer to proceedings taking place before a committee unless the Committee's report has been tabled in this House.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I will just mention that the North-South Study indicated concern that some Canadians are getting noisy about the wasted expenditures on CIDA and Canada Council grants and it fears that funds will be cut off. I should like to associate myself with those Canadians who are concerned about government expenditure and about taxation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Chrétien) which was agreed to on the following division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

[Translation]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, before calling it 10.30 I should like to remind hon. members that we on this side of the House indicated some time ago that the government would likely get second reading of Bill C-11 on Thursday. That is exactly what it got. There was obviously no need for closure.

Mr. Chairman, if I may call it 10.30 I have certain items I should like to raise with respect to Clause 1.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 10.30 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

CONDEMNATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS UNEMPLOYED IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I do so out of a sense of indignation. Mr. Speaker, we in this House have come to accept the arrogance of the Prime Minister in dealing with the economic problems facing this country today, but I do not think any of us, and especially the rest of the country, was quite prepared for the Prime Minister's performance in St. John's yesterday when confronted with an orderly and peaceful demonstration of the unemployed. As a Canadian, and not just as a Newfoundlander, I do not and cannot accept the Prime Minister's "Rich Man—Poor Man" concept of confederation, which would have the poorer provinces content with acceptance of the crumbs from the table of the richer provinces. I would move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Humbert St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That in the opinion of this House, the Prime Minister should try living in Newfoundland, the province with the highest per capita cost of living in the country, for a period of one month on $115 per week, which amount is the maximum payable under Canada Works, and should then be directed to report to this House on the adequacy of the government's make-work programs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43 presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs was created under the Government Administration Act by order in council, and, to quote the Prime Minister in a letter of May 16, 1971, that ministers of state will have "no direct program responsibilities", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs make a statement on motions today outlining whether the minister intends to refer this matter of reorganization to parliament and whether the minister has consulted his provincial counterparts regarding this intrusion into provincial rights.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSION FOR WIDOWS OF VETERANS WHOSE PENSIONS WERE LESS THAN 48 PER CENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I suppose this is a case of trying again, and I shall keep on trying until we win. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That this House notes the deep concern of all veteran's organizations with respect to the rule under which a veteran's widow receives no widow's pension unless the veteran was in receipt of a disability pension of 48 per cent or more, and this House calls on the government to correct this situation, without further delay, by providing pro rata pensions for widows of veterans in cases where the veteran's disability pension was less than 48 per cent, as recommended by the Woods Commission, the Hermann Commission and the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO COMMITTEE SO ORGANIZATIONS CAN PRESENT VIEWS ON LEVEL OF PENSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to move a motion similar to the one presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Briefs submitted by the National Council of Veterans Associations and the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans Association stress the widespread concerns of the majority of veterans over the reluctance of government to adjust the basic rate of disability pension on a parity level with the unskilled labour group in the Public Service of Canada. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the supplementary estimates on veterans affairs be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, rather than the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates so that ample time be provided to hear presentations from veterans' groups to indicate their concern.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion at this time requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

SUPPORT FOR SENSE OF NATIONAL UNITY ENGENDERED BY GREY CUP GAME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of the House this day, as I will not be in the Chamber on Monday, to move a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Grey Cup celebrations demonstrate national togetherness and good natured competition, captivating the Joneses, the Prefontaines and the Paproskis of Canada. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That this House go on record supporting the sense of national unity engendered by the Grey Cup game, celebrated between the Eastern Montreal Alouettes and the Western Edmonton Eskimos.

Although I know already which is the better team, in the interest of national unity, and modest as I am, I will continue to adopt my usual gracious attitude should the other team win.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—REASON FOR GIVING AID TO FOREIGN STATES IN VIEW OF SITUATION IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I should like to put my first question to the Minister of Finance who is the chief spokesman for the government on economic affairs in this country. My question arises out of the views expressed by the Prime Minister in St. John's, Newfoundland yesterday to the effect that the principle of Confederation is that there are some rich and some poor, and in effect, if they do not like it down there, that is just too bad.

Is the minister aware that tens of millions of dollars are being poured by the federal Export Development Corporation into the states of Texas, New Jersey and Minnesota to aid the construction of steel mills in those states, notwithstanding that the unemployment there is as low as 3.5 per cent and the average unemployment is one-third of that in Newfoundland? If he is aware of that type of financing going into the United States, would he indicate why it is the government's policy to help the citizens of Texas, and those other states, more than the citizens of Newfoundland who are crying for jobs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is asking a very, very mixed type of question. What the Prime Minister said is something that everyone in Canada pretty well understands. Unfortunately, all provinces of Canada are not equally rich in natural resources. In terms of history, some provinces become rich and then poor. It is the federal government's role to attempt to equalize opportunities in Canada, and that is why we have equalization programs and work programs for the less fortunate Canadians to benefit in Confederation.

With regard to the second part of the question, I do not know exactly to what the hon. member is referring. I will look into that and provide him with a reply.

• (1117)

UNEMPLOYMENT—POSSIBILITY OF AID TO REFURBISH FISHING FLEET IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, again to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that EDC has agreed to put out something over $100 million in the form of long term loans at low interest rates to Great Britain and various states in the United States for the construction of steel mills; in view of the fact that over $160 million has been lent to Poland to help build a pulp and paper mill in that country, and other money has gone to Iran; would the minister at least undertake to review this situation to see if this money could be used, for example, to help refurbish fishing fleets off the Atlantic coast and in that way give a few more jobs to Canadians?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): The hon. member's question puzzles me because we have an organisation that helps to export Canadian technology and Canadian materials abroad in order to create jobs in Canada, but members opposite are not happy with that. I am completely puzzled. If the hon. member is putting the proposition that we should not try to get into international markets and should have a completely closed internal economy, and if he thinks that is going to build prosperity in Canada, I hope Canadians will never accept such a policy with such a person to lead it.

Mr. Stevens: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister indicate whether the government has considered not only exporting the technology that we are talking about to help others in the world, but using that technology to help people such as those who are out of work in Newfoundland? You could do two things. You could create more work for those who have the technology, and secondly you could create the work right here in Canada within that area where you have 17.5 per cent unemployment, compared to 3.5 per cent unemployment in Minnesota.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised by the comments of the hon. member. In a modern society, should I explain to him, when we have reached a degree of sophistication which allows us to sell our technology it is normal to do so. I would like to tell him that if we do not sell Canadian machinery or technical services in Poland for the construction of a paper mill, if we did not sell those products and that technology, some other countries would willingly do so. In the competitive world in which we are living it is absolutely normal to sell abroad the products used to develop those industries. It is normal and it shows the degree of competitiveness that Canada has reached in fields in which we are specialized. I do not understand the hon. member who does not want us to use our assets to create jobs for Canadian workers manufacturing equipment, for Canadian engineers who can show abroad that Canadians have made great progress in the past few years.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ASSISTANCE TO DEVELOP NEWFOUNDLAND'S RESOURCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the unemployed of the Atlantic region will draw precious little consolation from the answer given by the Minister of Finance. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, in light of the observations and discussions of the Prime Minister yesterday with the ordinary people of Newfoundland, whether it is the view of the government that Confederation is to be a rich man-poor man affair, with the poor provinces expected to be content with the largesse of the central, richer provinces, or is this government prepared to assist provinces like Newfoundland to develop its vast resource potential which would provide employment, not only for its own people, but would contribute substantially to the Atlantic people as a whole?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would be well advised to talk with the premier of Newfoundland who was on TV yesterday, and who said that he had a very good understanding with the Prime Minister during the meeting and that he acted more responsibly than the hon. member who is trying to score petty political points. I just want to say that we are preoccupied with that. What the Prime Minister said is that we are in Confederation and those who happen to be richer this time are there to help those who are not so fortunate. In order to help the hon. member's province we have extended the fishing limit to 200 miles, and we are trying to develop some industry which will benefit Newfoundland workers. There is more unemployment in Newfoundland than in any other province. That is why we have some programs which are designed to help areas where there are high levels of unemployment, and that is why the highest contribution to any single riding through the Canada Works Program is going to the riding of the hon. member's friend who sits behind him.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the riding of my colleague is getting the highest rate because it has the highest rate of unemployment in the country, and that is a disgrace.

By way of a supplementary question I would like to tell the minister that my concern is for the unemployed of my province. The real rate there is now 27.6 per cent. My question stems from the statement made by his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he said in Newfoundland last July that there was a need for rethinking the sort of development process to pursue in Newfoundland and that DREE was not working.

In light of that admission—I agree with the minister wholeheartedly and I am glad he has come around to my way of thinking—I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what the government proposes to do about this crisis situation in a province which is blessed with resources, enough to satisfy not only its own needs but also the needs of the whole region. Is the minister prepared to treat this as an emergency situation, or is he prepared to condone the arrogance and contempt of his leader, the Prime Minister, when he said in Newfoundland yesterday, "Let them eat cake"?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member does not want to be aware, but I would like to tell him that yesterday the Prime Minister and the Premier of Newfoundland discussed two basic developments which could occur in Newfoundland, hydro electric development and the development of the fishing industry. Just to demonstrate that we have been concerned, in the program of decentralization the first thing we did was to decide to have a National Revenue data centre in St. John's, in the hon. member's own riding, and he never said thank you.

Mr. McGrath: Fifty jobs to St. John's and 1,500 to Sherbrooke.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO AID

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I would have directed my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but in his absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister, if I can get his attention for a moment. In July of this year representations by the shoe industry were made to the government outlining the serious difficulties facing the shoe industry and calling for immediate quotas to save jobs in the footwear industry. This week a telegram was received by members of this House asking us to press the government for a statement of policy on this matter. Would the Deputy Prime Minister now tell the House what decision the government has reached concerning the urgent matter put before it by the shoe industry?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am able to advise the hon. member that the government has had this matter under consideration. As recently as yesterday it was considered, and certain decisions have been reached. I am not in a position to give the details of the decisions reached, but I hope it will be possible to make an announcement with respect to the decisions which have been taken in response to the concerns of the industry and members of this House.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, in view of the long delay in reaching a decision would the Deputy Prime Minister reconsider what he has just told the House and the fact that urgent action is needed now before another selling season is lost? Plans have to be made by the footwear industry. Can the Deputy Prime Minister give the House a definite date on which this decision will be announced, or can the government explain why there is this delay in telling the House, in view of what the Deputy Prime Minister has just told us?

● (1127)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there will be no new delay. I would hope an announcement will be made very shortly. As I said, decisions were taken yesterday and just as soon as it is possible to put the material together I am sure an announcement will be made. There will be no delay that should cause concern to the hon. member.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF DEPUTY MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he could indicate whether the statement made yesterday by the deputy minister of industry, trade and commerce is government policy? Regarding the negotiations on tariff concessions, he said that there are going to be some winners and most assuredly some losers. Because of the concern that will be aroused by this kind of general statement can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House who the winners are, who the losers are and whether this is an accurate reflection of government policy?

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I may return to the original question I can tell the hon. member that it is the intention of the Minister of Finance to make an announcement on the footwear decision next week. Regarding the comments of the deputy minister of industry, trade and commerce, may I say that at the present time the Canadian government is preparing its negotiating stance. In fact, the major participants in the negotiations have not fully agreed upon a tariff plan that will be the subject of negotiations. It is obvious, however, that if any adjustments are to be made in the Canadian tariff it is the intention of the government to ensure that reciprocal benefits accrue to the Canadian economy. The objective is that the over-all wealth of the trading community be increased and accordingly the over-all prospects of Canada in the fields of employment and income will be improved as a result of the negotiations. We are looking at the negotiations as an opportunity to increase trade for Canada with a resultant increase in our over-all prosperity. I think in a narrow sense it may be possible to look at the situation in terms of particular industries that have tariff reductions, but over-all we hope it means growth in the prosperity of the country.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETINGS WITH QUEBEC ON MANUFACTURING

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. On November 13 last, the minister announced to the House a series of meetings between federal and Quebec officials, referring to them as thawing operations. Can the minister inform the House whether these meetings are going on as anticipated in a climate of understanding or whether they are going on in a climate of confrontation? Moreover, can he say in particular what is the status of files on housing, urban renewal and home insulation as well as those on manufacturing industry, including textile and footwear?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I say to the hon. member that these meetings are going on. Some have been held on November 15, 16 and 18 last. Another took palce yesterday, November 24, on regional economic development projects and the home insulation program. These issues will be considered next week during the meeting of Energy ministers. These discussions went very well and it is possible that agreements may be reached in several areas. A variety of measures should be announced very soon either by the Quebec government or the federal government, which will be evidence that these discussions were held in an extremely positive climate. I hope Quebecers will benefit from it all.

INQUIRY WHETHER RECENT AGREEMENT ON PENSIONS WITH ITALY APPLIES TO QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister advise the House whether the general agreement which the federal government signed recently with the Prime Minister of Italy applies to all Canadians, including those Quebecers who are entitled to Canadian pension plan benefits, or whether they are excluded from this agreement, Quebec not having signed this agreement with Italy as yet?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday how I deplore the statement by the Quebec premier that there had been no consultations between Quebec and Ottawa concerning the agreement signed by Canada and Italy. Yesterday, my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs tabled in the House the correspondence on this subject which clearly bears witness to the fact that the federal government has vainly tried over the past ten months to involve the Quebec government in these negotiations. I can assure the hon. member that the Canada-Italy agreement provides all Canadian citizens, including those residing in Quebec, with the relevant benefits of the old age security pension scheme, the family allowances plan, and of course the Canada Pension Plan for those Quebec residents who are covered by it; as the hon. member knows perfectly well, however, most Quebec residents are covered by the Quebec Pension Plan, not the Canada Pension Plan, and this situation will have to be dealt with under a special agreement between the Quebec Pension Board and its Italian counterpart, under the general agreement which Canada signed with Italy during Prime Minister Andreotti's visit to Ottawa. This general agreement contains a specific clause which allows provincial organizations to enter into such agreements, and we hope that the relevant agreement will be signed very shortly by the Quebec and Italian authorities.

URBAN AFFAIRS

REASON FOR ALLEGED EXPANSION OF DEPARTMENT'S MANDATE WITHOUT APPROVAL OF PARLIAMENT

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Will the minister explain to the House why recent moves to expand the mandate of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs were carried out without reference to parliament?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's question is based on an article which appeared recently in an Ottawa newspaper. I wish to inform her that the moves affecting personnel within the department have been grossly exaggerated and do not in any way imply a head to toe reorganization which would modify the department's vocation.

[English]

Mrs. Pigott: Even in light of that, I feel that head to toe there could be some parts of the anatomy which might be very interesting to know about.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. Pigott: Will the minister inform the House what he is doing, and whether legislation will be introduced to approve what is going on within that ministry?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: What is being done essentially, Mr. Speaker, is that the Canadian government has entrusted the Department of Urban Affairs with analyzing, developing and coordinating policies on urban matters while the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is responsible for housing assistance. So we have tried to integrate those two government sectors into a more rational structure to improve efficiency and eliminate duplication.

Obviously some people have lost their employment in the course of this operation. There has been a cut in the personnel when there was duplication. Therefore some of the laid off employees have criticized and made statements to the press which exaggerate the scope of these changes. Since the hon. member comes from the private sector, I am sure she knows very well that to improve efficiency one must undertake some adjustments to be more efficient and save money to the Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

DIRECTORATE GENERAL OF SPECIAL URBAN PROJECTS— REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same minister. Can the minister confirm to the House today whether there is a position called the Directorate General of Special Urban Projects, whether that specific position has a budget of $29 million whereas the entire ministry has a budget of only $22 million, and what the specific responsibilities of the Directorate General of Special Urban Projects are.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the changes which have been made are strictly administrative and were aimed at getting more efficiency in the operations. I will appear before the parliamentary committee next week and have the opportunity to explain in further detail the figures and allegations of the hon. member. I would not want to abuse the time of the House by explaining details on budgets and various department components.

[English]

HOUSING

SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF FUNDS FROM HOME INSULATION PROGRAM TO RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Fuel costs in the Atlantic region are higher than anywhere in Canada. Most families on low incomes cannot take advantage of the home insulation project. Because of the deterioration of their homes, they are not in a position to put in insulation. Will the minister consider transferring some of the home insulation money to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program in order to meet the needs of those people on low income?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is important that the hon. member understand there are in fact three programs. Because of the high price of fuel, we established the housing insulation program in two provinces, namely Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. That program is going very well. It is proceeding at great speed because of the tremendous response by the people there. More recently we introduced for all the other provinces of Canada the Canadian Home Insulation Program, referred to as CHIP. That program is proceeding at a normal pace. It is indeed a very useful program. I do not understand the hon. member's argument that these people cannot afford this program. In fact, it is a total subsidy of $350.

Mr. Marshall: Taxable.

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member is saying "taxable". It is applicable according to a person's income. He is referring to low income people. Obviously, these people do not pay income tax. Therefore, they receive the total amount.

Mr. Marshall: The minister did not say that in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia the grants are $500 tax free. In the province of Newfoundland it is taxable. A person must spend $500 in order to receive two thirds of that amount. I again point out to the minister that there are many people on low income who are wasting fuel because of the lack of insulation. They cannot put in the insulation. They could do it under RRAP. The minister could make some of the $1.4 billion which they are not spending available to the RRAP program. That would help many people in Newfoundland as well as providing employment.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be aware that we have tripled the amount allotted under the RRAP program in his province. Unfortunately, not all of the money available under the RRAP program has been used because, for one reason or another, the recipients have to put forward their own money. Under the CHIP program, they do not have to put forward any money. I suggest that the hon. member advertise the CHIP program. Many people could take advantage of this total subsidy that is being offered to them by the Canadian government.

GOVERNMENT VIEW OF STATISTICS RELEASED BY INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. Considering that 85 per cent of Canada's labour force falls under provincial jurisdiction, and in view of the fact that according to reports from the ILO in Geneva that Canada led the list of countries in strikes, averaging 2.27 days lost per worker in 1976, can the Minister of Labour explain this situation and state what new actions he is taking in concert with his provincial colleagues to halt this turmoil in the industrial relations scene?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the statistics revealed by the International Labour Organization are entirely erroneous as far as Canada is concerned. For one thing, the basis of comparison is faulty. The situation is this. They are comparing us with countries that do not count public service strikes, political strikes or even days lost unless the strike has been going on for more than two or three weeks. The fact is that Canada's strike record has improved by 200 per cent over what it was two years ago.

● (1142)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Probably our record in terms of man days lost to strike is superior to most of the countries with which we traditionally compare ourselves, in particular Japan which had some words of criticism toward Canada in this regard.

AGRICULTURE

VETERINARY COLLEGE—RECOMMENDATION BY DEAN HOWELL FOR ESTABLISHMENT IN MARITIMES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question, of which he has had notice, is for the Minister of Agriculture. Since a committee headed by Dean Howell of the Ontario Veterinary College, University of Guelph, was commissioned to determine whether there should be another veterinary college in Canada, which committee recommended that there should be and that it should be set up in one of the maritime provinces, does the minister approve of this recommendation and, if so, when does he anticipate that the government's financial commitment can be defined so that progress can be made on this very important matter?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is fully aware, but I gently remind him, that the committee recommended that the veterinary college be in Prince Edward Island. I am sure he is also aware, though I will gently remind him again, that all provinces have to agree, and the good province of Nova Scotia said that they did not want it in Prince Edward Island, they wanted it in Nova Scotia. I have no influence in this matter. This was an independent committee, one to which the educational commission of the Atlantic provinces agreed. It was supposed to be, and I believe it was, an independent report, and I accept that report.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for most of that answer and I should like to gently remind him that Dean Howell's report, as the minister well knows, was submitted on August 31, 1975. In view of the conflict of interest mentioned by the minister between the various provinces and serious questions which go to the heart of Dean Howell's report regarding the recommendation that the college be in P.E.I., and in the intent of having this matter ironed out and focussing public attention so that different points of view can be expressed, I would ask the minister if he would use his good offices, either in consultation with the maritime premiers or the House leader, having regard to the serious fundamental nature of veterinary science in Canada, let alone the particular interest of Atlantic Canada in the matter, to have this report referred to, say, the agricultural committee where interested parties, including some of the premiers and people who submitted briefs before Dean Howell, could come before a public body and have this matter at least get off dead centre where it is obviously at the present time due to these provincial conflicts?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the report is not solely a Dean Howell report. It was a report made by many learned people on the commission which was given the responsibility of deciding where the veterinary college should be located. They decided that it should be located in Charlottetown and I have no objection to that. I took it for granted that the report was made public, and I think it was. There is nothing in the report which I would dispute in any manner. If the hon. member has any facts he would like to put on the record or submit to me indicating that he thinks the commission was wrong, I would be pleased to consider them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SAFEGUARDS APPLICABLE TO EXPORT OF NUCLEAR REACTORS AND URANIUM—REQUEST FOR RESTATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On December 22, 1976 the minister announced in the House the policy of the government with respect to strengthening the safeguards requirements which apply to the export of Canadian reactors and uranium. May I just quote the relevant sentence in what he said, Mr. Speaker. He said: "Shipments to non-nuclear weapon states under future contracts will be restricted to those which satisfy the non-proliferation treaty or otherwise accept international safeguards on their entire nuclear program."

Last night in Brussels the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said that Canada is becoming less and less able to restrict the sales of its nuclear technology, and went on to give as a reason the possible commercial retaliation by West Germany. In view of this shocking departure from government policy by a minister who is reported to have made this statement with a laugh, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs now reaffirm his statement of last December and repudiate the statement of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I read the newspaper report, but I have not, of course, discussed this with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. From what I was able to deduce from it, he was in fact outlining what is a very serious problem, and I think all hon. members are aware of it, namely that it is getting to be extremely difficult to get international agreement on the whole question of nuclear controls. But that having been said, I am very happy to tell the hon. member that there has been no change in terms of the basic policy of the government. We are still of the view that we ought not to deal in nuclear supplies or technology with countries which do not sign the non-proliferation treaty or accept full scope safeguards.

REQUEST FOR LIFTING OF EMBARGO ON URANIUM SHIPMENTS TO EUROPEAN COMMUNITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): I thank the minister for that statement, which is tantamount to a repudiation of the statement of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I hope he will explain to his colleague that it is not his function to be outlining problems in formal gatherings in Europe in a field which is not in his domain.

May I put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did he receive a request this week from Dr. Guido Brunner of the energy commission of the European Economic Community for a relaxation of Canada's embargo on uranium shipments to European countries, and did the minister, in the conference which was held, reaffirm the Canadian policy of safeguard requirements including his statement of last December that "we are prepared to accept the commercial consequences of being clearly ahead of other suppliers. This is the price we are prepared to pay to curb the threat to mankind of nuclear proliferation"?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the request from the gentleman in question, Mr. Brunner, came many, many months ago. It is a fact, and I am very happy that it is so, that he is in Canada at the present time. I had a session with him yesterday afternoon and I will be having another with him immediately following the question period today. It is no secret that the European community wishes we would resume the shipment of uranium to member states of the European Economic Community. It is no secret either that I have said all along that I want to do my very best to accommodate ourselves to what are some very pressing needs of the European community, for a whole range of reasons not the least of which is that they are, of course, partners of ours in a variety of both defence and economic exercises.

But I repeat what I said, Mr. Speaker, a moment ago to the hon. member, that in terms of our relationship on nuclear matters, NPT and full scope safeguards are a sine qua non. I would call to the hon. member's attention, if he does not understand it already, that this is not the nature of the problem as it relates to the European Economic Community.

PENITENTIARIES

MILLHAVEN—REQUEST FOR TABLING AND REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REPORT ON HOSTAGE-TAKING INCIDENT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the hostage-taking incident at Millhaven penitentiary this week, the necessity to call in two professors to settle the incident and the indication by the professors that conditions were intolerable, has the minister received a report on this incident and, if so, would he table the report and circulate it to the members of the justice and legal affairs committee; and would he also set forth what he is going to do specifically in regard to this particular incident?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have had meetings with the Ontario regional director and the director of the Millhaven institution following the incident that took place in Millhaven last week in which a group of inmates took another inmate as hostage and proceeded to beat him quite violently. I am expecting a complete report on the incident and expect to have more to say next week when I appear before the parliamentary committee which is studying the estimates of my department, at which point I will be prepared to answer all questions on that incident. In the meantime, I am most interested in seeing to it that in all the special handling units in the country there are indeed decent conditions of incarceration. However, there is no way that the Canadian Penitentiary Service can tolerate the type of hostage-taking and violent beating which took place last week.

Mr. Gilbert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister either table the report he is about to receive or circulate it to members of the committee so that they may question him when he appears; and would he also bring the two professors for examination?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a look at the report before I decide whether or not I will circulate it, but I am having an in-depth look at the matter, and as I indicated previously will have more to say on the matter early next week.

POSSIBILITY OF ASSISTANCE FOR PROGRAMS FOR MENTALLY RETARDED

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). In view of the fact that we are at the present time in my town of Oakville, the riding of Halton, organizing a special Olympics for the mentally retarded next year, could the minister tell us whether she and her department have any intention of offering financial or other assistance in respect of sports for the mentally retarded.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker. To my knowledge I have received no such application. As you know, jurisdiction in respect of the handicapped does fall within the purview of the provinces.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Minister of Finance. Last evening the hon. member for Ottawa West made a statement in the course of a public speech in which he indicated that the policy of the minister and the government in respect of decentralization from the national capital to the province of Quebec was in fact not going to be carried out because of difficulties with the government of Quebec in negotiations dealing with bill 101. This was denied this morning by one of the officials of his department. Would the minister tell us what the situation is in respect of the matter?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in that regard we are presently negotiating with Quebec on this basis; we have said, and I want to repeat, if there is no agreement to permit English-speaking public servants who will be going into Quebec to send their children to English schools, there will be no move. So far in our discussions with the province of Quebec we have not come to any agreement to that effect. The policy is the same; if there is no agreement there will be no move. If there is an agreement that will permit the bureaucrats, who will be moving into different areas of Quebec because of decentralization, to send their children to English schools they will be moved, but up to now there is no such agreement. In these circumstances some are predicting there will not be such an agreement, but I do not want to make a final determination about it because negotiations are still going on.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated that negotiations are going on. Because of the great interest in this matter, particularly in the national capital area, would the minister indicate how the negotiations are progressing? Is he optimistic about these negotiations as they stand at the moment, or is the situation otherwise? Will he give us some indication as a result of the discussions he has had whether he is hopeful about these negotiations being concluded satisfactorily?

Mr. Chrétien: I would first like to add to my previous answer, Mr. Speaker. We are having negotiations of the same nature with all provinces before we make the move, and I am generally optimistic in respect of all provinces. Having regard to the situation in Quebec, I have talked with some ministers and there was some confusion on the other side about this; some said it was absolutely impossible and others were telling me there was some possibility. I cannot pass judgment at this moment. It is possible that in order to achieve a proper agreement what will be needed is an amendment to bill 101, which will not be easy to negotiate.

DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF PROCEEDING IN OTHER AREAS BUT NOT IN QUEBEC

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the minister indicated at one time that there would be no moves anywhere if there could not be a resolution in respect of the problem that exists, and we all know it exists in the province of Quebec. He seems to be indicating by his answer that all decentralization will take place except with regard to the province of Quebec in the event that the difficulty in relation to the province of Quebec is not resolved. Is that the position of the minister, and can he explain why that position has changed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have not changed our position at all. The same principles apply everywhere. If there is some decentralization in another province which does not provide for education in French for French-speaking people, there will be no decentralization unless—

An hon. Member: In that province.

Mr. Chrétien: —yes, in that province, unless in some cases where personnel for decentralized units could be hired locally, as it sometimes happens. This is what we did in some cases of decentralization which were determined previously. If we cannot reach agreement with the province of Quebec, there will be no decentralization toward that province, just as there will be none toward Saskatchewan, Alberta or some areas of Ontario if French-speaking civil servants, provided they are in sufficient numbers, of course, cannot be assured of receiving their education in French.

[English]

DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES IN QUEBEC'S BILL 101—POSSIBILITY CHANGES APPLICABLE TO PUBLIC SERVANTS ONLY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister has just said the government is seeking an amendment to bill 101.

Mr. Lalonde: That's not what he said.

Mr. Clark: Perhaps that is not what he said, but he told us that there would have to be an amendment to bill 101.

An hon. Member: He said "perhaps".

Mr. Lalonde: He didn't say that, again.

Mr. Clark: Now we are getting another version from the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations who is coaching, saying that is not what the minister said. Will the minister tell the House precisely what changes he is seeking to bill 101, if any, and will he tell the House of Commons whether he is now proposing a situation in which the provincial legislation of that province would apply to employees in the private sector but would not apply to federal public servants?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I used the word "perhaps" which in French is "peut-être".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: We are now discussing with the government of the province of Quebec. We want English-speaking federal employees who might be moved to Sherbrooke, Rigaud or Quebec City in the context of the decentralizations we announced recently, who might thus be called upon to go and work in Quebec, to be able to send their children to schools where they could be educated in their mother tongue, namely English. If the government of Quebec cannot give us this assurance, there will be no decentralization for the units I mentioned. Furthermore, I said earlier that in order to give us this assurance Quebec may have to amend bill 101. I did not say that they will have to amend it. Negotiations are presently going on of course; we shall make a progress report to the House.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, just so we can be clear, what the government of Canada is proposing in its negotiations with the government of Quebec is that there would be a special status; en Français "Statut particulaire", for the employees of the government of Canada that would not apply to the English speaking employees of the private sector in the province of Quebec? Is that what the minister is saying?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That must be what he is saying.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are negotiating on the decentralization policy I put forward two years ago, a long time before the coming into power of the Parti Québécois and before bill 101 was passed. We are negotiating on behalf of our employees as far as bill 101 is concerned but we do not have any jurisdiction in the private sector. The government of the province took the decision in this area and we are now discussing with the province of Quebec on behalf of the employees who are under the responsibility of the federal government.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell us whether he had similar negotiations with the Liberal government of Mr. Bourassa in Quebec relative to the application of bill 22?

An hon. Member: What difference does that make?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: There was no such problem at that time, Mr. Speaker.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES STORAGE ACTIVITIES

Question No. 117—Mr. Herbert:

Does the Department of Supply and Services purchase and store materials for other departments and, if so, are applicable storage costs charged to the ordering departments at time of or after delivery?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. See reply to Question No. 2,646 answered October 17, 1977 in Hansard, pages 8245-6.

2. In some cases, DSS purchases and stores material on the account of the customer department. In such cases, storage charges are normally billed monthly in arrears, however some departments are accommodated with less frequent billings at their request.

3. In other cases, DSS, under the Stocked Item Supply Service, purchases, stores and issues material to customer departments upon receipt of a requisition. In such cases, prices charged include all applicable costs including storage and these are billed to the customer after delivery.

NUMBER OF PERSONS UNDER CONTRACT TO BUREAU OF PENSIONS ADVOCATES

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, November 24, consideration in committee of Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the House adjourned last night, the committee was considering clause 1.

● (1202)

On clause 1.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 1, certain of my colleagues will deal with general matters but I should like to deal with some quite specific aspects of the clause. As the explanatory notes indicate, "This amendment, which substitutes the underlined amount for $1,000, would implement paragraph (1) of the ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act", so that the amount an individual may claim against capital gains will be increased from $1,000 to $2,000.

My first question to the Minister of Finance on clause 1 is this. Could he tell us why his department has recommended that this change be made?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it was to adjust the amount of money which was allocated in order to help the people or to give them more incentive to invest risk money so that they could be somewhat compensated for the losses incurred. There were a lot of representations made on that subject by various groups. Some would like the government to permit a deduction of all the losses, which we do not think is advisable. I think this scheme is a good one. Not only can a person deduct $2,000 from capital gains but he can also deduct it from general income. It is a good incentive for people to take some risk in order to develop the Canadian economy.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister has indicated that his departmental officials feel it would not be desirable to allow all of the capital losses to be deducted. Would the minister indicate why that is felt? Why cannot a person deduct all of his capital losses against all of his capital gains?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think the main reason is that it would be much too expensive for the treasury; moreover, it might result in some inequities in our tax system. For those reasons, I think it would not be advisable at this time.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I should like to explore that a little more. What would be the magnitude of the loss to the federal treasury if all capital losses were chargeable against all capital gains? I ask this because it has always been represented by the department that this is not really a big money winner. The last time we inquired, capital gains tax was yielding approximately $70 billion or $80 billion of tax revenue. I am somewhat startled to find the minister using the rationale that if capital losses were permitted to be applied against capital gains, it would be just too big a loss as far as the treasury is concerned. Could the minister indicate more specifically what the estimated loss would be?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, that is not exactly what I said. We are not permitting the losses to be deducted only against capital gains, as is the case in the United Kingdom and the United States. We will permit the losses to be deducted against other income. In terms of how costly it will be, I am informed that this deduction of another $1,000, in terms of losses from income, will cost the treasury $45 million. It is difficult to assess exactly, if we permitted all the losses to be deducted from income, the amount of money we would lose, but it could be in the hundreds of millions of dollars. That is why we think that should not be done, and it is not called for either.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister misunderstood my question. I am well aware of what he said earlier. What would be the cost to the treasury if the British or American approach was accepted, thus allowing capital losses to be claimed against capital gains without any limit? What would be the loss then? I am not talking about all capital losses being claimed against income generally. How much would the loss be to the treasury if it was restricted to losses made on capital items being chargeable against any gains?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that now they are deductible against capital gains fully, but not against income.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I will put my question another way. Is the minister able to indicate to us what actualy has been the capital gains tax revenue which the treasury has been able to pocket in the last year, or the last time-frame within his knowledge?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is thinking.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar should be smart by smiling across the chamber. I do not pretend to have all those figures in my head.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I was talking to your colleague.

Mr. Chrétien: When I am asked how many hundreds of millions have been gained out of a tax like that, those figures are not in my head. It is $165 million, and $90 million on the corporate tax act.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I should like to have more exact figures. Combined, how much total revenue has been gained, after all losses are accounted for and all deductions have been allowed, by the federal treasury in the last year for which the minister has information available?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in 1975 the total was $255 million.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I should like to be able to reconcile those figures with the figures shown in the taxation statistics, 1977 edition. Perhaps after two o'clock I will have an opportunity to compare the $255 million figure that the minister has given us to the figures set out by the Department of National Revenue in that booklet. I should like to explore a more general subject dealing with capital gains. We have had, now, a few years experience with capital gains tax. Many people feel it is a grossly unfair tax, in the sense that there is no allowance made for inflation on items regarded as capital items. I know the government's stock answer is that it only takes 50 per cent of the gain—that is rough justice—and that somehow or other the eventual tax payable is not really confiscation of a person's assets.

Before getting into that, I should like to ask the minister the following: We have had some experience now with respect to indexing of income tax. What is the minister's general observation with regard to indexing? Does he feel it has been a good idea? Is it something that he feels is a step in the right direction?

Mr. Chrétien: In some aspects, yes, and in other aspects, no. Those are my feelings. It is a good concept in the sense that in some ways it will cope, in terms of taxation, with the inflation problems that we face in this counry. That is a positive element. The negative element is that if you compare Canadian taxation with that of other nations, for example, because it is automatic nobody realizes there is a tax cut.

For example, if I combine in my economic statement the tax cut that you have proposed, plus indexation, I am told that it is, relatively speaking, as great a tax cut as that called for by the so-called liberal democrats in the United States at this time. The drawback is that automatic indexing of 7.2 per cent for the next year is not considered by the public to be a tax cut, in terms of the economic definition in other nations. This is a drawback because, in fact, rather than announcing a tax cut of $700 million, as I have, on personal income tax for the year of 1978, I would have one of $1.5 billion or $1.6 billion.

Psychologically, it would have a better impact if I were to do it the way it is done in the United States. I heard many speeches made in that context in the United States a few years ago. Relatively speaking, it is not more than we have done here, but because of the automatic indexing system we do not get the psychological impact we would have if it was announced as a new tax cut.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if I may continue, I take it from the minister's remarks that he has no intention of modifying the indexing as far as income tax is concerned. Could he tell us specifically what the department now feels will be the increment, if you like, of income tax as opposed to the increase in income itself? What leverage is there in the tax system as far as tax revenue is concerned in relation to the general growth of income in the country? At one time, before indexing, I believe it was estimated that federal government income tax went up somewhere between 1.7 per cent and 1.9 per cent in relation to the general increase in income. With indexing, what do they determine the federal tax increase to be in relation to rising income?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is a highly technical question, and I am not in a position to answer it right now. I will get the information and forward it to the hon. member later today.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would prefer the minister to give it to us this afternoon, because many people are interested and I think it should be in the record rather than just forwarded to me.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, my intention is to report to this House because I can see in which direction the hon. member is going. I would not want to impute any motives to him but in the speeches we heard on second reading, some members of the opposition mentioned on several occasions that Canada was the most heavily taxed country in the world or at least of the western world.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Chrétien: By the way, I want to say to the hon. member that he is wrong.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I cannot speak for all members of this House, but I can speak for myself. The Minister of Finance is quite wrong in accusing me of having made the statement that we are the highest taxed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it was not the hon. member whom I heard make that statement, but I have heard it a number of times from members of the opposition.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you for that clarification, Mr. Chairman. Could we shift, then, from the indexing of income tax to the question of inflation in relation to capital gains? It is a self-evident fact that if you have invested $10,000 in capital investment to keep up with inflation, at present you would need, at the end of 12 months, about $10,880 just to stand still as far as your capital assets are concerned. However, with capital gains tax, if you liquidate you are deemed to have made $880, which is simply an inflationary increment, and you are taxed with respect to 50 per cent of that. My question to the minister is whether the government has been giving any consideration to some type of an indexing formula which would ensure that gains on capital items which are offsetting inflationary gains should not, in fact, be taxed.

Mr. Chrétien: We have received many representations to that effect, and it is apparently an extremely difficult technical problem to resolve. You are talking about the capital gain of a person who is not, in fact, making that much of a capital gain because of inflation. He might have to pay as much as 25 per cent cent, for at least half of his rate. We are considering the problem, but we do not have any intention at this time of changing the present system.

Mr. Stevens: There are two points that I would like to raise, Mr. Chairman. The minister has been told by his officials, as I noticed, that it is very complicated. I ask the same officials to advise him why it is so complicated. You know what your purchase price is, and we have a consumer price index that could report what, in fact, is the CPI on that date. When you choose a date to sell, surely the index will still be as useful to determine what, in fact, has been the rate of inflation. In short, you simply index each property in accordance with when you purchased it and when you decided to sell. Perhaps I will give the minister an opportunity to reply to that question first.

Mr. Chrétien: If everything were to be done on a yearly basis and in a very clear fashion as you report your income tax each year, that would be fine. However, you can buy a piece of land and sell it some weeks later. You can buy a share on January 19 and decide to sell it a few days later and calculate the inflation in between, and so on. It is a difficult problem with many, many transactions, and there are millions of transactions.

If all transactions were made in a fixed period, it would be quite possible, and we can do that in terms of fixed income because the salaries are paid and you calculate your income at the end of the year. But there are a lot of transactions that are done in short periods of time, and it is extremely complicated, according to the experts who look into that. However, I have listened to the representations of the hon. member, and we have received other representations to that effect, but we have come to the conclusion that it would not be appropriate to do that at this time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, again to the minister. I am wondering if the minister would agree that, in the example I gave of a person who has bought capital items amounting to $10,000 a year ago and, sells them for $10,880, he is simply selling them, in constant dollars, at exactly the same price he paid for them initially. Would the minister not agree that any tax on that increment of $880 is confiscation of a man's capital goods? It does not matter if you tax 50 per cent of it, or 10 per cent; the fact is that in real dollars, expressed as 1976 dollars, the man has made no gain, yet the federal treasury is deeming a gain to have been made and is taxing him. Is that not confiscation?

Mr. Chrétien: If one wants to debate the principle of taxation, I have met people who claim that all taxes are confiscation. You can argue that forever. When income tax was first started, people could have argued that any taxes are confiscation. I feel taxes are a way to operate a modern economy, and all taxes are creating a burden on some people. In fact, rather than a gain, you would have a loss because you would know when you bought the shares that you needed to make enough money to cover the taxes on their sale. He knew, when he bought the shares, that he needed to make enough money because there was a tax to pay, and he had a loss rather than a gain; that is all.

Mr. Stevens: I would think the minister would agree that there is a very clear distinction between the example I am giving and the general feeling that any tax revenue you have to contribute is confiscation. In the example I have given, if we were to take it in a series the man, in fact, would have no money left after simply buying and selling an asset. He tried to keep up with inflation but constantly was taxed.

We could work it out, but certainly if you did for 15 or 20 years what I have indicated, buying $1,000 and selling it at a value just enough to equal your current inflation, and then rebuying but paying the tax in the meantime, you would virtually have no assets left. I think the insidious thing about this type of tax is the fact that it is confiscation of capital at the very time this nation needs huge capital investment in order to create the jobs we need for those who are out of work. In that sense, would the minister agree that there is a clear distinction when we are dealing with the possible confiscation of capital and the growth of capital compared with other taxation?

Mr. Chrétien: We could go into a long debate on the philosophical implications of taxation, and so forth. We decided to tax capital gains some years ago. It was somewhat controversial, but we decided that because it was a capital gain we would tax it at only half the rate because there is an element of risk. The hon. member knows that because of this risk we decided not to consider it normal income. The hon. member will remember the proposition in the Carter report that a buck is a buck whether it is earned by capital or as part of a salary.

However, we decided that because there was an element of risk we would tax at half the rate, and that is part of the gain. We know that in some cases a case can be made, just as the hon. member is making a case now. I explained earlier the complexity of trying to be just in every situation. So far we have not found the formula. There are some aspects of the argument of the hon. member which are valid; I have to concede that. There are some problems with these tax changes.

Every time we try to be nice to everybody, we make it so complicated that taxpayers do not understand how to deal with their tax forms, and in this case a problem which already exists will be further complicated. I recognize that there is a problem, but this matter involves risk. If people get just the equivalent of inflation, there has to be a reconciliation because of the tax system in Canada. In this situation, people did not break even; they suffered losses. That is why we made an allocation for losses in the tax system.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member has had more than 20 minutes of questions and answers. I must see another hon. member, but I will come back to the hon. member for York-Simcoe later.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I listened to this exchange with great interest. It is a very important exchange. I very much agreed with the hon. member for York-Simcoe when he talked about the danger of capital losses. Because I am always willing to be very helpful to both sides of this House—the minister has indicated how complex the whole thing is and that he is looking for a simplified and just way, which he has not found—I think there is a just and simple way. It is the way the Carter commission suggested.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe has a good argument about the effect of inflation on capital, and surely it should not be the purpose of a tax system, in our present philosophy, to wipe out the actual capital of a person. The answer should have been obvious. I think it is very simple, and I hope the hon. member for York-Simcoe will agree. Then we could go arm in arm to the Minister of Finance since he seems to be amenable to suggestions and to simplifying things. We might, in fact, get the taxation system changed along this line.

I would like to suggest to the hon. member for York-Simcoe that we agree to a full capital gains tax which is indexed for inflation. That is very, very simple. Capital gains could be taxed at the same rate as ordinary income, with indexation for inflation, which would retain the value of the capital. It seems to me that that would simplify the whole tax system. We could then go on from there.

I really need to hear from the hon. member for York-Simcoe whether he agrees with that kind of proposal. Justice would be done, because if we tax capital gains at their full value we get around this whole business of arguing whether it should be one-quarter, one-half or one-third, and then we assure those who do have capital that there will be no loss of their assets as a result of inflation.

I would be generous even to the point of saying that if it is bought and sold at different times of the year, it should be taken to the nearest year, allowing the benefit of that particular year's indexing, rather than the other way around. That seems to be a very simple proposition to which all of us might perhaps agree. That would restore the element of justice Carter was talking about in his report, that all income should be treated the same. I must say that my suggestion does not seem to be greeted with any wild enthusisasm. I thought it was a very good suggestion. I thought I was trying to be very helpful. Oh, I see I have the support of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Woolliams: First time he has ever agreed with you.

Mr. Saltsman: Not really. He has agreed with me on many occasions, and I value his judgment highly. I am glad to get endorsation from such an august authority.

Mr. Chairman, I do not expect we are going to get agreement on that, but since the question of indexing has been raised, I want to say something about that and leave it to the minister to comment. As the minister says, we can say good things and bad things about indexing. I just proposed one kind of indexing which I think is a very valid kind of indexing because it is a guarantee of indexing on capital. However, other kinds of indexing are equally valid. I certainly support the indexing of family allowances and old age pensions. I think that is important, particularly because we are dealing with people who do not have a way of recouping any losses from inflation in the way that most people who are in the labour market have some ability to do that. Because they are universal things, therefore everybody benefits to the same extent.

The minister has made some arguments for the indexing of income tax. He has also made some arguments against it. I have an argument which is very much against it, in the light of experience. I believe many of my colleagues supported the notion of indexing income tax as a way of ensuring some offset against inflation. I think the assumption was that our income tax system would be getting more and more progressive, and therefore indexing would not have the effect we now see it to have.

One of the consequences of indexing the minister has not dealt with is that it tends to help those in higher income brackets to a greater extent than those in lower income brackets, because of the percentage application that is made, which means that that element of social and economic policy is removed from debate. I think to that extent indexing has resulted in making our whole tax system more regressive than it need be. For that reason, I would be inclined to agree that indexing of the tax system has outlived its usefulness. The idea of visibility is terribly important, to this extent: we live in a society where there is hardly anyone who does not have a grievance. Everybody thinks he is hard done by. All these automatic benefits are built in, and while there is something to be said for them, they are not as visible as they should be.

It seems to me that if we are to understand our system somewhat better than we do now, more and more of the benefits that have been built in and taken for granted should be visible. This has certainly been the argument of my party on the tax system, and it will be the argument we put forward as this debate progresses. I am not putting this to the minister in the form of a question, because he has dealt with it—although, of course, if he cares to comment, he is free to do so. Instead, I intend to go into the clause by clause examination that we are prepared for.

Before doing that, however, I should like to bring to the attention of the minister something that I propose to use in the clause by clause examination. I was fortunate enough to receive a series of critiques of the clauses from Professor Neil Brooks of York University, prepared by his students at Osgoode Hall Law School. The letter states in part:

In particular, I would be very interested in your view on how such comments might be presented to be of more use to you and other MPs. I hope to have the students prepare comments on all future tax bills. Indeed in future semesters, we will be devoting more time to such a project. This semester we are doing as well another major project on tax reform.

It strikes me that this is an excellent idea. While these students may not be as expert as the minister's advisers, they are working in this field in a very serious manner. Because they can concentrate on each clause, they can provide some excellent advice and at least a different point of view. I have not answered the letter yet, but in a way I am answering it publicly. Not only do I feel that this critique will be of great help to me and other members, but I think the practice should continue. If any member would like a copy, it will be available. I do not intend to clutch it to my bosom or to keep it for my colleagues alone. I presume Professor Brooks intended it should be available to any member who chooses to use the information prepared in this way.

Not only will I be answering Professor Brooks by what I am doing, and stating my views on the critique, but the students will be able to see it in perhaps better from in Hansard. In that way, they will be able to see the extent to which their work has been used in this House. Personally, I am very grateful for the interest shown by this class at Osgoode Hall, and I intend to read into the record and base questions upon some of the studies conducted by the students. I use that as a preamble, Mr. Chairman, lest someone thinks this esoteric knowledge comes out of my own head and that the great and valuable research was done in my office.

Regarding clause 1, the paper notes as follows:

1. The policy reason for not allowing individuals to offset allowable capital losses against ordinary income is sound. Capital gains are only taxed when realized. Thus, it would be possible for an individual to time his capital gains and losses to minimize tax. For example, he could realize his gains in years of low income and his losses in years of high income. To prevent this timing of gains and losses, capital losses are generally only deductible from capital gains.

2. Two reasons can be suggested for the creation of the "$1,000 rule" which allows a partial offset of capital losses against other income.

(a) It tends to decrease the down-side risk when investing in capital property. The purchaser of stocks, for example, is afforded some relief from a loss because he can deduct it to some extent from other income.

(b) It provides some relief for taxpayers with little capital property; i.e. the person who might suffer a capital loss yet never incur a capital gains against which to offset the loss.

3. Do present conditions justify increasing the capital loss offset figure?

(a) Consonant with the proposed aims outlined in the budget speech (p. 12), the Liberal government is attempting to increase purchases in the equity market by offering the average Canadian investment incentives by way of a larger write-off of capital losses against ordinary income. Tables found in the budget supplementary papers (p. 4) show that $45 million will be lost by the government in the first year of the provision's enactment, with an additional $5 million forfeited in 1978.

While the government has calculated the costs of implementation, it has no idea of the increased investment which the measure is supposed to stimulate or the extent to which it will encourage people to further bunch their losses in order to gain the benefit of the write-off. If this be the justification for increasing the amount of the offset, the government should have determined whether a sufficient increase in equity investment would take place in order to justify a loss of $45 million.

(b) For the last few years, inflation has eaten away at the value of the dollar. Consequently, losses of $1,000 five years ago are losses of a greater amount today. The capital loss offset may have been doubled in order to combat inflation. A prudent and more logical alternative would have been simply to index the present sum by the present rate of inflation.

4. Even though it may appear arbitrary, the figure of $2,000 was not chosen at random. In increasing the amount permitted for capital loss offset, the Liberal government has followed the lead of the United States once more, having previously borrowed the "$1,000 rule" from the IRS Code. The Tax Reform Bill of 1976 provides for the increase of the capital loss offset figure to $2,000 in 1977 and $3,000 in 1978 and subsequent years. Based on the government's past method of choosing its figure for capital loss offset and its failure to conduct a cost-benefit analysis as to the merits of the proposal, it is surprising that the proposed changes do not advocate the institution of a "$3,000 rule" in 1978.

The question that arises is a very straightforward one of cost benefit. According to the best figures we have, it will result in a $45 million revenue loss to the government. In order to justify this kind of loss, we need to know if studies have been carried out and alternatives examined. For example, would $45 million be better invested directly in incentives to industry, in regional development, in direct job creation, or in public works, than in what has become a sort of traditional way when the government tries to stimulate employment by spreading money around without knowing the consequences of the spread?

If past experience is any guide, when incentives are offered to industry through the tax system and in other ways, increased investment in jobs will not necessarily result. My specific question to the minister, therefore, is whether studies have been made to determine alternate means of spending that $45 million to see if more jobs could be created or more equity created in some other way.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give a specific answer about particular studies, and so on. This is the collective judgment of the administration, and the money is needed in the economy at this time to stimulate risk investment. We must induce Canadians to put more money into risk ventures because we believe jobs cannot all be created by the public sector. The private sector is the one that creates the most jobs.

In giving that added incentive, we are very confident that a number of Canadians will want to channel their money into risk-buying rather than purchasing bonds, having a completely secure investment, which was the thing to do. We are confident of that. We have received many representations to the effect that we should give more incentive to the people so they can make that kind of investment, which is exactly the same proposition which my predecessor, the hon. member for Rosedale, made to the House of Commons.

Mr. Saltsman: A little while ago the minister made a statement outside of the House, saying that Canadians may be saving too much and the consequences of that may not be good for the economy. The minister agreed he made that statement and he is concerned about that matter. This need to grant additional benefits to investors in the stock market is bothersome and arises as a direct result of the government's policy to encourage savings and to provide benefits for those who put their money into bonds and into registered retirement savings plans—in the very sort of safe instruments he is now worried about.

Having now created the Frankenstein of encouraging savings in the safe sector, in the sector that has virtually no risk, he finds that by encouraging people to put money into the safe sector, then you have to find some way of giving them more if they go into the unsafe sector, the risky sector. Rather than recognizing where the problem is at its source, he has over-encouraged savings and money into the safe sector. He simply says we now have to offset it by giving more benefits than we perhaps wanted to give in order to encourage people to begin to take risks again.

I do not disagree with the minister, Mr. Chairman, that we are living in a society which, certainly for the foreseeable future, will be dependent on the private sector for providing jobs. Anything we can do which would be effective—I emphasize the word "effective"—to provide those jobs is something my colleagues would certainly agree to. This is the problem. Why, in the minister's view, is it—and I am not quarrelling with him—that those who take risks should in some way be somewhat encouraged to take risks; because even if we lived another kind of society, risk-taking would still be necessary.

If the private sector does not do it, governments have to do it. Governments have to take risks in the sense of the public works they engage in. There are no guarantees that even the public works are going to be free of risks. The question I would like the minister to answer is this. Instead of building on this silly superstructure which the government has created by encouraging safe savings to a point where savings have become, perhaps, the most serious problem in our society in terms of trying to get economic development which encourages consumption, why would the minister not back off from some of the safe savings proposals that he brought in? In that way he would not have to be faced with this business of giving away $45 million in order to hopefully, encourage people to take additional risks, and there is no evidence that it will in fact happen.

Mr. Chrétien: Would you kindly repeat the question for me, please?

Mr. Saltsman: I just want to make the point that we have demonstrated the utility of parliamentary assistants: they pay more attention to the debate than the minister does. I realize the minister is sitting with a most interesting former minister of finance who has heard my voice before and perhaps can anticipate some of the questions I am raising. My question is this: Rather than increase the benefits and lose the $45 million that is going to be lost in the tax system, through this particular measure in clause 1, to encourage people to take risks, why did he not reduce the incentive to save which, on his own analysis, is one of the problems?

Why did he not reduce those incentives? In that way the differential between the rewards for risk-taking and for those who do not take risks would have continued. Why did he not do it the other way, rather than give away this amount of money and still continue a system which has demonstrated that it is resulting in too much savings?

Mr. Chrétien: I am learning a little listening to the hon. member, but I am learning much more by listening to the former minister of finance, my good colleague from Eglinton who has been an extremely useful member of this House. I will not apologize, because he was giving me some good advice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: To answer your question, we are talking about two different things. It is a question of judgment. We have decided to go along with this system of changing the amount of money that can be deducted from income, from losses, in order to stimulate the economy. That is the direction we have chosen. The incentive for savings is a completely different problem. Some people are saving too much, but that does not mean that we should not save as a nation. We should not be confused there.

As I said the other day, some people should start to spend some of their money because savings have been very high for the last three years. For some people we have special programs of savings; for example, the people who are saving for retirement purposes. I think this is a natural thing to do. We have another scheme, the home ownership desired by the young people. They eventually want to own their own home. That is a form of savings to be kept. This is our judgment. I can see the frustration of the hon. member, because he is from the NDP and he knows that he will never have to make those judgments.

An hon. Member: You never know.

Mr. Woolliams: I heard that once in Saskatchewan.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must interupt the hon. member because he has had more than his allotted 20 minutes. I will return to him after I have recognized another member. The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: I am quite prepared to consent, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I have no objection. I saw the hon. member for Calgary North rise a few times and I was ready to recognize him, but nothing prevents me from allowing the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge to pursue his questioning if no other member rises in between each question.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the generosity of the hon. member. I was going to say that normally I appreciate the comments of the minister, but in this case I did not appreciate them at all. With respect to the comment about the NDP, I would rather be here in the opposition, without the opportunity he has, than be held responsible for the kind of mess that his government has got this country into.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It could be worse.

Mr. Saltsman: I do not see how it could be worse. You would have to stay up nights to try to figure out how to wreck an economy the way this government has. It is quite obvious what is happening. The minister talks about different problems. They are not different problems. He talks about it being our judgment. In face of the fact that your judgment has been pretty awful, is it not about time you changed your judgment or changed the people who are advising you? This really should be obvious to the minister, if it is not obvious to anyone else. I certainly think it is obvious to many people.

• (1252)

There are other comments I could make. I appreciate the generosity of the committee in giving me this time. I do not normally like to participate in this kind of personal banter. However, the minister does not have much of a stand from which he can point his finger at other people and be critical of their behaviour.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to engage in a political debate, but I cannot let that go. There are too many people who take pleasure in saying how bad things are in Canada. Of course, we have not been perfect as a government. We do not claim that. However, look at the programs which have been introduced in the past 15 years. Since I came to this House, many social programs have been put into effect in Canada, to the point that the hon. member sometimes claims—

Mr. Saltsman: It was the effectiveness of the NDP in the minority government.

Mr. Chrétien: Having served in this House for the past 15 years, I am proud of the progress that has been made in spite of the gloom and doom we have heard from the other side for all those years.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, we are sitting as a committee of the whole House, as was done under the former rules. This is done particularly on tax measures. I want to discuss capital gains, particularly as they affect small business people, smallholders in the cities, the farmers and the oil and gas industry. Before discussing capital gains, there is something else I have to say. The job of the tax collectors in the Department of National Revenue is very difficult. Very often these people are seeking information. They must take certain steps in order to keep their records in shape, and must ensure that taxpayers pay their proper and equitable share of tax.

Through my associations as a lawyer, I have dealt with many people in the Department of National Revenue. I wish to compliment them. They do not have an easy job. The personnel in the city of Calgary are always polite, courteous and helpful. If there is some difficulty or dispute as to the interpretation of the act or the value of a property, they will sit down with the taxpayer and work it out in a proper, compromising way. I want to pay that compliment because too often the personnel in the department are criticized. It is in the every day working with citizens that the goodwill has built up in my city. I can only speak of my home city.

I also want to discuss capital gains. I say this nicely, even to my good friends in the NDP. I know we take the same position when the government gets into serious economic trouble and there is unemployment. We were the government of this country in the thirties when there was a world depression. We also had difficulty during the years of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. It is not always easy to come to the right decision. When you hear people talk about raising more taxes for grandiose things, you should remember who brought in capital gains. Edgar Benson and Pat Mahoney of Calgary—and he was defeated for this reason—piloted through this House, for the first time, a capital gains tax. I raised my voice against it.

One of the causes of economic destruction and distress in this country is that 50 per cent of capital gains is added to the top of your income, like the icing on the cake. If you are in the 30 per cent or 40 per cent bracket, you are put into another bracket. Capital gains are treated like any other income. We heard in this morning's question period that there is a lot less unemployment in the United States. I have relatives living in that country. In fact, my sister lives in San Francisco. I figured out what my tax would have been last year had I lived in the United States. It would have been 30 per cent to 40 per cent less on capital gains. That is because in Canada it is added on the top of your income.

In the United States you can go to the department to find out what your tax will be. It is a set tax of 25 per cent, with some rules and regulations for different kinds of property. If we had a reasonable and equitable capital gains tax, it would help the businessmen, the factories, the farmers and the oil and gas industry. We would not have such a high rate of unemployment in Newfoundland. It would help the people there.

Mr. Ouellet: It would help the member from Calgary.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate your humour, but this is too serious a matter for nonsense. Coming back to capital gains, in addition to helping those people it would create jobs. There would be increased exploration and development in oil and gas. The farmer in Ontario would have more money to purchase machinery. More jobs would be available in the factories of Ontario. People could buy more consumer goods such as cars, refrigerators and farm machinery. By taking it off the top, you crush the capital flow. That is what has brought about economic collapse and chaos in this country. I refer to the bill brought in and piloted by Mr. Benson. The treasury benches today are reaping the sins of the Trudeau government of 1968, 1969 and 1970.

Supposing a person who owns a small plot of land wants to sell that land. He must go back to "V" day, valuation day. The difference between that and what the department determines to be the value on the day of the sale is the amount on which you pay tax. You go to the land titles office to get a certified copy of the transfer, to show the valuation. Along comes the department and says that their appraiser has a different figure. Therefore, you must hire an appraiser. I was told by one tax department official—I will not name the area—that the government spent $16,000 for an appraiser in order to try to collect $3,000 more tax.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

• (1402)

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at one o'clock, clause 1 of Bill C-11 was under consideration and the hon. member for Calgary North had the floor.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, just before the lunch hour I was dealing with capital gains. I want to bring to the attention of this committee that when the Income Tax Act was changed in the days of Benson and Pat Mahoney from Calgary South, my home city, who was defeated on the bill, I thought the government had acted with some wisdom in abolishing succession duties and death duties. But the government went on to implement a capital gains tax, and this tax differs from similar taxes in other western nations. Under our law, capital gains are treated in the same way as other income. So whatever one's salary or income is, if a small businessman, say, sells a little piece of property and there is a capital gain, 50 per cent of that gain is taxable at the same rate as his income is taxed.

I was saying before lunch that there is a capital gains tax in the United States, which we must remember is an older industrial nation than ours. At the time the government introduced the capital gains tax, I said it would stop exploration for gas and oil. I also said it would affect the small businessman and the farmer. If you add all that together, Mr. Chairman, the growth of the country itself is affected, and without growth you have unemployment. If you inhibit capital flow—income flow, as it were—how can small businessmen, farmers or manufacturers grow, and how can oil and gas corporations conduct exploration for gas and oil and develop their business? When you stop growth because of overtaxed enterprises on the part of government, you bring about no growth and, as I say, no growth creates unemployment.

On the day that this voluminous bill which changed the income tax structure of this nation received royal assent, growth in this nation, whether growth of industry, farming operations or oil and gas or mining companies, started to decline. With that decline in growth, unemployment increased. This is where I fall out with my good friends, the members of the New Democratic Party. They always say that we must have a high capital gains tax; but once we have a tax structure like the one we have today in Canada, we might as well go all the way and have the state own everything, because it really amounts to that.

I want to deal with how this tax affects the small businessman. Take the case of the little corner store. A businessman buys such a store, the lot, the stock and equipment, and so on. Then after spending 13 or 14 hours a day in that store for seven or eight years, with his wife assisting him, too, he feels that he should retire because he has worked hard. When he puts his business up for sale, the lot has increased in price and he has to pay tax on 50 per cent of the capital gain that he makes on the lot, in addition to his income tax. In other words, progressive tax is not only progressive with regard to income; it is also progressive with regard to capital gains.

In the United States, the tax is fixed at 25 per cent; it cannot go higher. In this country, you do not have to make much money to get into the 50 per cent to 60 per cent bracket. A 50 per cent to 60 per cent tax on a capital gain, with inflation today, takes away the savings of a small grocer. This is why we must have an increase in pensions. You cannot have it both ways.

Now let me talk about another factor I mentioned before lunch. The owner of a small store says that in January, 1972, his land was worth $10,000. Perhaps if he sells it now it will be worth $15,000. Perhaps he obtains the transfer of a similar property close by. This might happen in any part of the country. The department might very well not accept that valuation and will hire its own appraiser to appraise the property. The department can do this, because money is no obstacle. The department will often spend $16,000 in order to collect $4,000 in taxes. When the taxpayer goes to the tax department, he is told that the department has an appraiser's report which indicates a certain value. The taxpayer might not agree with that value, and is told by the department to hire his own appraiser. If he does, he may be stuck with the cost, perhaps amounting to $1,000 or $1,600. Even if he wins the battle, he has to pay that amount.

Let me now talk about the situation in which farmers on the prairies find themselves. If a farmer sells his land, or rolls it over to his son—and we can thank the hon. member for Halifax for this legislation which was brought in when he was the national leader of this party—the land passes from the father to the son, or even to the grandson, and that tax is deferred. However, it has to be paid some day, by the last survivor, when the land is sold.

However, when we changed the rules the situation became entirely different. Perhaps a farmer would form a small personal company or corporation which included his son and his wife. Following that, he might decide to retire or sell his shares. The situation would not be the same as selling the land to his son, and the rule of rolling over the land from father to son would not apply. The individual had set up a corporation before the tax law came in; but what the governments have done—and I am speaking of them in the plural—is change the rules in midstream, and they then wonder why business is disrupted and there is little growth. They ask why there is unemployment. I suggest this is one good reason for unemployment.

Let me put the point in another way. If the farmer formed a small personal corporation before the change, it would meet the rules, making it much easier to transfer shares in the land, and at a savings on the death of the farmer. That is the situation if the corporation was formed before the tax change. If he should now liquidate his corporation and pass the land on, he must pay the capital gains tax. What manner of nonsense is this? This is the government which brought that law into being. As the member for Calgary North, I spoke for days criticizing the action of this government, but they just laughed it off, said my criticism meant nothing and rammed the legislation through. That is why the hon. member for Edmonton Centre took the tax bill, tore it in half and threw it on the floor, saying, "This is what you have done to Canada". I remember the night when the tax measures were rammed through by closure. I wish the members of this government would cross the country and talk to the people at the grass roots, to find out what they think about our income tax laws and how they are treated as taxpayers.

Let me discuss another industry which is dear to the heart of all Calgarians and Edmontonians, because practically every job in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton is based directly or indirectly on agriculture or on oil and gas. It was not by accident that the government of Alberta discovered oil and gas there. Premier Manning had a fine government: I have always said that. He encouraged capital investment on the part of foreign companies, giving them a chance to make a dollar on their investment.

I think Imperial Oil drilled 90 dry holes in Alberta before striking oil. I wonder how many here know what it cost to drill a well even back in those days. I suggest it cost about $600,000 then and about $1.6 million now. While that was taking place, drilling rigs were pulling out of Saskatchewan from all over because of that province's tax structure. That government believed in socialism, whereas the Alberta government believed in business and enterprise. Therein lies the difference.

We are now facing a very serious situation when dealing with capital gains and business taxes. Let me refer to the judgment handed down recently in the case of Canadian Industrial Gas and Oil Limited v. The Government of Saskatchewan. When the world price of oil went up, the Saskatchewan government said the price had to be maintained at $4.50 per barrel. It demanded that any increase would go entirely to the government no matter what happened to the cost of production. I think this recent judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada is one of the most important to be handed down in recent years. It will affect not only that province but the province of Ontario, where nickel is exported, and any other province which exports products such as oil, gas, wheat, or what have you. Let me read a short extract from this judgment as follows:

It is contended that both the mineral income tax and the royalty surcharge constitute indirect taxation, and are therefore beyond the power of the province to impose, the provincial legislative powers being limited to direct taxation within the province under subs. 92(2) of the British North America Act.

It is contended that the legislation relates to the regulation of interprovincial and international trade and commerce, a matter over which the federal parliament has exclusive legislative power—

This legislation will have serious ramifications in eastern Canada because of exportation. With this kind of taxation and law, what will happen to growth in this vigorous nation? Because of the serious ramifications of this decision in respect of provincial control of resources, and particularly in view of the thin strings of confederation, I would ask the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister to bring the provinces together to discuss this matter and find a solution once and for all. Let me say to the people in the east that although they may think this only relates to oil and gas, it relates to all exported products.

Let us consider the nickel industry. This is a commodity that is exported. The tax will be applied in that case. People are wondering why mining companies are closing down and why there are so many lay-offs. They wonder why the companies are struggling to keep the mines open. My friends to the left have been talking about unemployment and lay-offs in the mines, and quite rightly so. I suggest that this situation is the result of the tax structure in this country. Because of this tax structure, these mines cannot make a profit. The government keeps trying to get the last dollar possible from these companies in the form of taxes, forcing the companies to close because they can no longer make a profit. This results in unemployment. It is a vicious circle.

This country's tax laws should be the subject of immediate review. It is almost impossible to think we can have so much unemployment in a country so rich in resources of all kinds. I suggest this is the only country in the world which until the last few years had problems only in relation to surpluses. Let us consider the situation in countries which have shortages. This country has a surplus of resources, many of them still waiting to be tapped and developed. As an hon. member from Newfoundland said today, that is a province with great resources waiting to be tapped, yet business is struggling to stay alive because of government taxes, including capital gains and high, progressive rates. Business just cannot be done in these circumstances and there is bound to be unemployment.

We have a monstrous tax structure in this country that is stifling growth, killing industry, creating unemployment, economic chaos and other problems which Canada faces today. This government should get together a strong committee made up of businessmen, union leaders and others across the nation to study the tax structure. I am sure such a committee would find that overtaxation is responsible for most of the economic ills of the nation. Let such a committee get on with the job of reviewing the tax structure, instead of the government always trying to figure out how to get the last dollar from the people of Canada. If the government continues with that approach, we will never have full growth or full employment. I see that my time has expired. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few moments to address myself to the consequences that flow from the tax policies of this government, whether by way of tax incentives, capital gains tax, industrial incentives or any other kind of incentive under the Regional Development Incentives Act. The fact of the matter is that we have to create a climate in this country to develop the vast undeveloped resources of Canada as a first priority toward tackling what has to be the first priority, namely, unemployment.

• (1422)

Today, in the Atlantic provinces, there is an unemployment rate which exceeds that which is faced by industrial states elsewhere in the western world. The figures speak for themselves. For October, 1977, the unemployment rate in Newfoundland was 17.4 per cent, which is a substantial increase from last year. Still referring to October, 1977, the unemployment rate in New Brunswick was 14.6 per cent; in Nova Scotia, 10.7 per cent; and in Prince Edward Island, 11.2 per cent. For the Atlantic region as a whole, the unemployment rate was 13.5 per cent. Those figures do not tell the true story. They are seasonally adjusted, which is the strange, indefinable, incomprehensible methodology of Statistics Canada for measuring unemployment.

To arrive at the real rate of unemployment one must look at the number of recipients who are drawing unemployment insurance. One of the first qualifications for unemployment benefits is that the recipient has to be unemployed and available for work. Using the unemployment insurance program, the welfare rolls and the real method of measurement, one can arrive at the real situation.

I should like to refer to some percentages which are underestimates, for the month of October. In the province of Newfoundland the real unemployment rate was 27.6 per cent, or 60,000 people; in the province of Prince Edward Island, it was 20 per cent, or 11,000 people; in the province of Nova Scotia it was 15.5 per cent, or 55,000 people; and in New Brunswick it was 20.7 per cent, or 61,000 people. The real unemployment total for the four provinces during the month of October was 187,000 people. Considering the loss of productivity to this country, the drain on the unemployment insurance fund and the drain on the already overburdened exchequers of those provinces, in terms of what it costs for unemployment insurance benefits, is enormous.

I am glad the Minister of Employment and Immigration is present in the chamber. According to Statistics Canada, 40 per cent of those looking for work in Atlantic Canada as of October, 1977, had been unemployed for longer than three months. I consider that to be monumental. Winter is coming, and the unemployed will be further aggravated. They will go into the winter only to have their unemployment benefits expire. Thus, unemployed workers drawing benefits at the present time will have no alternative but to go through the humiliation of a means test and apply for welfare through their provincial agencies. The greatest potential for social unrest in this country would be in my region.

In terms of youth unemployment, again there are startling statistics for the month of October, 1977. In the four Atlantic provinces it was 20.6 per cent, as opposed to 16.7 per cent of unemployed youth a year ago. What has happened in the way of job creation? Using StatCan's figures for October once again, there was last year a net increase in employment of 6,000. However, that 6,000 has to be shown in contrast to the growth in the labour force, which was some 20,000 in the same year. Thus, job creation has lagged behind in the Atlantic region, during the past year, by some 14,000 jobs. Let the Minister of Employment and Immigration reconcile his job creation programs to that fact, notwithstanding that these programs help to alleviate some of the hardships which accrue because of this disastrous situation.

The Prime Minister was in Newfoundland yesterday. It has the highest rate of unemployment in the country, and indeed any state in the western hemisphere. What was the Prime Minister's reaction when he was confronted by an orderly and peaceful demonstration of unemployed? It can only be likened to the petulance of Marie Antoinette when she was faced with a mob in Paris saying, "We have no bread", and she said, "Eat cake". That is what the Prime Minister said, "If you do not want the equalization grants, we will take them back". As one man said during that demonstration yesterday, "We do not want welfare; we want work". That is the case.

The province of Newfoundland has the potential to generate enough jobs for its people. Also, it has enough potential in the way of resources to assist the region and the country as a whole. That province has been blessed with an abundance of natural resources. It is the greatest producer of iron ore in Canada and has contributed substantially to Canada's balance of payments program. Also, Newfoundland is the greatest producer of hydropower, with a substantially undeveloped hydroelectric resource at Churchill Falls. It cannot be developed because the province does not have the financial capacity. Approximately 40 per cent of Quebec's power is generated from Newfoundland. There is enough undeveloped power to satisfy not only the needs of the province of Newfoundland in the foreseeable future but to satisfy the needs, to a large extent, of the energy-hungry Atlantic region as a whole.

What about the power going into Quebec? Today it is going in at approximately three mills. The market rate for that power is approximately 20 mills. If Newfoundland was receiving market prices, it would not have to go to the money markets of the world to cover its current account deficit at the present time.

From time to time we have appealed to the government to exercise its constitutional right, which is its authority under the British North America Act, to build transmission lines to make it possible for Newfoundland's power to get to the Ontario grid. What about the national grid we have heard about for years? It has been just talk. It would take approximately $2 billion to develop the lower Churchill, yet this government has not changed its attitude toward participating in that program over the last two or three years, notwithstanding the toll which has been taken by inflation. The offer of the federal government still stands at about $3 hundred million in terms of development capital to get that vast, undeveloped hydro resource on stream to help this energy-hungry country of ours.

What about the vast potential of our fisheries? Well, the Minister of Finance today, in response to my question, talked about one of the initiatives the government has undertaken with regard to the economy of Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces with the imposition of the 200-mile limit. Sir, they had to be dragged kicking and screaming to sign that unilateral declaration for a 200-mile limit, and it was only after a number of bilateral agreements had been signed with a number of the countries that have had traditional, historic and treaty rights to the great Pacific and Atlantic fishing grounds.

Sir, what have we been doing with that resource since we imposed a 200-mile limit? We have been bartering it away and allowing some of the countries of eastern Europe and the Caribbean, Cuba especially, to exploit quotas in certain species because we do not have the capacity at the present time to exploit all of our quotas within the 200-mile limit under our international agreement. So we barter away the unexploited quotas, and in the process we barter away future job opportunities for Canadians in that part of the country. It is done without reference to the province concerned. It is done unilaterally, as so many things are done by this government, without so much as a "by your leave", without so much as a consultation with the province that is to be affected. Of course, the province most affected in my area involving the fisheries near the Atlantic, obviously, is the province of Newfoundland where we are dependent on the fisheries, which is our first and prime resource.

Sir, I can go on to the timber resources in Newfoundland, second only to the vast timber resources of British Columbia, but which remain largely unexploited in the Labrador portion of the province. The potential is there for vast job creation possibilities, yet these timber resources are standing there rotting or being eaten away by various pests. We are a rich province, heavily endowed with mineral resources, hydroelectric resources, fishery resources, timber resources, resources of our people. In all, there are only 500,000 people in the province of Newfoundland.

I had my eyes opened a few years ago when I had occasion to visit Iceland, the independent republic of Iceland, with half the population of Newfoundland yet with so much in common with us. With half our population, they have an economy largely dependent on the same North Atlantic fishery that is so important to us. What have they been able to achieve with the proper exploitation and protection of that resource? Sir, they have been able to achieve full employment and have, probably, the fourth highest standard of living in the world.

Is it any wonder that our people are beginning to wonder about the approach to the concept of confederation by this government, this "rich man, poor man" approach so arrogantly expressed in St. John's yesterday by the Prime Minister?

We are not content to be looked upon as parasites in confederation. We will not be content to be the recipient of the crumbs off the table of the rich provinces, because we are a rich province. I realize, sir, that we cannot put a price tag on confederation because this country will not survive unless there is a spirit of nationalism within the country.

By the same token, neither will this country survive if any single province within the country is not given the right to develop its full potential, which is one of the essential roles of this government. I worry, Mr. Chairman, about the long-term consequences of unemployment, what it does to all our people, including our young people. The unproductivity represented by the disastrous unemployment figures that are released monthly by Statistics Canada shows no sign of improvement.

We wonder how it is possible for the government of Canada, through its Export Development Corporation, to finance offshore corrugated cardboard plants in the United States, when the Labrador linerboard mill in western Newfoundland is forced to close its doors, putting 2,100 Canadians out of work. And who cares? We wonder about the fluorspar mine in St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, forced to close after 40 years of production during which the Aluminum Company of Canada made vast profits. We do not deny them profits, but they just callously closed their doors and walked way. Why? Because they get the same fluorspar in Mexico, with cheaper labour.

We wonder where our federal government is while this is happening to us. We wonder how a government can boast of a relocation program that sends 50 jobs to Newfoundland, ignores what has happened there in the past two years of industrial lay-offs, and sends 1,500 jobs to Sherbrooke, Quebec. We are not even sure they are going to get there, because of Bill 101. We wonder about these things. That is why I say you cannot put a price tag on confederation. But I can say this, and I say it with certainty: this union will not survive unless each province is given the right to fully develop its own potential within confederation. That, sir, is being denied to us by policies pursued by this government.

I do not resent the billions of dollars that are used to develop the tarsands of Alberta. I could say that in 1932, were it not for the government of Canada, Alberta would have gone under as a bankrupt province. Today, of course, it is hard to concede that rich Alberta was once in a state of bankruptcy and would have gone bankrupt where it not for the Government of Canada—the same situation that happened in my part of the world. Yet they have been allowed the tax incentives, through a world shortage of oil, to develop the potential of fossil fuels which are there and you have the situation in Alberta that you have today.

If we were to have only a small portion of what is going into the development of the Alberta tarsands to develop the vast potential of the lower Churchill River to provide transmission lines in order to get that undeveloped hydroelectric power into energy-hungry Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—and, indeed, part of Ontario, not to mention the potential that exists in the upper New York state—surely that would make just as much sense. Sir, it would make a great deal more sense, because we have a renewable resource in hydroelectric energy as opposed to a definite resource with which we are dealing in the case of Alberta and the tarsands when we are talking about carbon or fossil fuels.

We wonder about these things, and we wonder how we could have arrived at a point in time when we have a government in this country that is conditioned—and, indeed, would condition the people of Canada—to accept as a fact of life an unemployment rate in one of its provinces that exceeds 27 per cent. This is an unprecedented situation in the history of our province. Long-term unemployment is disastrous in terms of its social consequences. It is disastrous in terms of its potential for unrest and, indeed, it is serving as a catalyst for our people to question whether or not we can afford to continue with the Prime Minister's brand of federalism.

Sir, it is not only Quebec that has a grievance with this government and its brand of federalism. We have only been in this union for 28 years. We brought into it these vast resources. Without us, the 200-mile limit off eastern Canada would be nothing, because 70 per cent of it was in the territorial waters of the Dominion of Newfoundland prior to 1949. We brought with us the rights to the offshore mineral resources because we had sovereignty in 1949.

Again that fact is being questioned by this government. It is a fact which ultimately the courts will have to decide. A country cannot continue with that kind of confrontation politics. A country which allows one of its parts which has great potential and great promise to go underdeveloped, without providing for tax incentives and the investment capital that is so essential to realize the maximum yields from this potentially wealthy province, cannot continue. My time is up, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to intervene until later in this debate, but I am prompted by the tremendous speech which has just been made by the hon. member for St. John's East to say a few words at this time and to support the plea he has made.

I represent a portion of the city of Winnipeg. I come from western Canada, where Newfoundland is a couple thousand miles away, but I want to devote these few words exclusively to support the plea that all parts of this country—and I think Newfoundland is the place to start—should share equally in the bounty and the possibilities of life in Canada.

In my view, the hon. member who has just resumed his seat has been talking about one of the most important issues which face this country. As he was speaking, I recalled an occasion quite a few years ago when I happened to be with M. J. Coldwell in the presence of Louis St. Laurent, who was commenting on what he had learned from a trip he had just made across Canada from coast to coast. It was in the early years of Mr. St. Laurent's prime ministership, and in those days, of course, trips from coast to coast were made by train.

I remember very well sitting in that small company and hearing the then prime minister say to the rest of us, "We have a great country. It is a wonderful Canada. But we will fail unless we get rid of the terrible regional inequalities." I happen to feel the same way about inequalities among individuals. I have spent most of my time in the years I have been here trying to correct those inequalities by pursuing social security measures, but parallel with that is the absolute necessity of getting over the notion expressed yesterday by the Prime Minister, and again today by the Minister of Finance, that we just have to take it for granted that some parts of the country are better off than others and that some have more natural resources than others.

The Prime Minister says that is what confederation is all about, the rich and the poor somehow getting along together. I think Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent was right when he said 25 years or more ago that we would have to do something about the regional inequalities in this country or Canada would not hold together.

Therefore, I want to give the endorsation of my voice, as that of a westerner, to the plea which has been made for a much better approach to the problems In Newfoundland than was demonstrated there yesterday by the Prime Minister and today by the Minister of Finance.

These issues are serious. National unity is an important issue, but it is not just between the rest of Canada and the province of Quebec. It is not over just language and those issues. It is primarily over economic issues. If we go on accepting, as a matter of course and as a matter of what we have to live with, forever these gross inequalities, the country will not be the one of which we could be so proud.

So I join with the previous speaker in calling for those policies in terms of taxation, employment, regional concerns and distribution of wealth which would give Canadians in all parts of Canada an equal opportunity. I congratulate the hon. member for St. John's East for the speech he has just made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I have a few more questions for the minister. I hope he is still with us somewhere. I come back to the line of questioning I was pursuing earlier. In answer to one of my questions, the minister made the point that there is an accrual, prices go up and the tax is on the capital gain portion of whatever the person has first of all bought and then sold.

I want to take the minister up on that comment. I wonder if he can indicate to what extent the imposition of the capital gains tax has, in itself, been inflationary. I am referring to the fact that people are now holding capital items—let us say a piece of real estate—and one of the things which is calculated is what the capital gains tax is gong to be if they sell. They automatically increase the price in anticipation of what they feel is a fair net to themselves, and the net result is that the tax revenue we are referring to as being something the federal government is very appreciative of is really being added to the value of real estate when it is sold, which in turn increases tremendously the inflation factor which we have experienced as far as real estate is concerned. Can the minister indicate to what extent any of his department's work has substantiated what I am saying?

Mr. Chrétien: I do not agree at all with the hon. member, because in a market economy the market decides. If a person values his land higher because he anticipates some capital gains tax, the market will not bear that just for the sake of that. If we were to accept the argument of the hon. member, we would not have any capital gains tax at all—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I don't think he said that.

Mr. Chrétien: —because if the capital gains tax causes inflation, we would not have any capital gains tax. We have decided to have a capital gains tax. I heard the hon. member for Calgary North arguing against it a few minutes ago. It is strange that we have not always had a capital gains tax in Canada, because if we want to have a fair tax system we must tax all kinds of gains and not exempt some aspects. I do not share the view of the hon. member that the capital gains tax is a cause of inflation. It is a contribution from citizens who make gains to the service programs we have at this time.

The hon. member could make the same argument about any tax. He could argue that because any tax is a tax, it is inflationary. I think taxation is a system of redistribution of income, and taxes have to come from capital gains just as taxes come from personal gains.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, may I just follow on what the minister is saying? Frankly, I am rather disturbed to hear his emphasis about revenue because, as I think we are going to bring out fairly clearly later, in terms of the nearly $50 billion of spending the minister is probably going to ask us to accept for fiscal 1979, the total amount of revenue the government gets from the capital gains tax is comparatively small.

However, the main point I want to readdress to the minister is that while the marketplace operates, there have to be buyers and sellers, and sellers today take as one of their considerations the fact that they have to pay a capital gains tax, before they fix prices for their properties. The net result, based on the figure the minister gave us of about $255 million in capital gains tax revenue both at the federal and provincial level, is that that probably means the price of property has been moved up $500 million to $600 million by sellers in anticipation of paying a tax.

I hope it is not lost on the minister that in many instances it is not, in truth, a gain that has been realized. In constant dollars, the so-called gain in the eyes of the federal tax man is simply inflation. I gave the example of someone making a $10,000 investment which is sold for $10,880 after 12 months. In constant dollars, nothing has been gained, yet the investor will be taxed on $440 at whatever his going rate is. This has contributed to inflation in real estate in that prior to selling, people adjust for the tax and ask a higher price. The government has put them in the position where if they hold on to the property, in effect they have a tax shelter. The tax is not levied until the property is disposed of, so it can be allowed to accrue.

Whereas an owner at one time would have been quite ready to sell, now he will not be as willing to sell quickly because of the federal or provincial capital gains tax he is liable for—and that, in effect, is confiscation of his property. Does the minister not realize what I have said?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, as I explained this morning, the capital gains tax is half the rate of normal taxes. The NDP said that the logical thing would have been to impose a 100 per cent tax, but we went for a 50 per cent tax. Now I understand the Tories advocate a policy of no capital gains tax at all. The hon. member said that next year the federal government will need perhaps $50 billion, and that capital gains is inflationary, at the same time arguing it is a very small amount of money, only $250 million. How can he claim that $250 million, out of a budget of $50 billion, puts great pressure on inflation?

There is no capital gains tax on homes. Does the hon. member argue that there has not been inflation in house property because the capital gains tax did not apply to home ownership? I do not understand his argument. When he says that a capital gain is not directly indexed, I should like to reply that it is taxed at half the rate of the income tax, and exemptions apply, so in fact there is a kind of indexation for capital gains because it is added to the revenue and taxed at half level after the deductions, which are increased every year according to inflation. We should not have double indexation for that income.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I have been attempting to have a meaningful dialogue with the minister about something that is of great concern to many Canadians, and that is the impact of capital gains tax. This is one of the first opportunities we have had to review the actual figures and to review the rhetoric advanced at the time the capital gains tax was introduced into this House. I wish the minister were less partisan when he feels he is under pressure. I am simply trying to get his view about some of the aspects of capital gains that Canadians are concerned about.

I have never suggested that there should be a capital gains tax on a personal home. I am saying that where there is a capital gains tax, it has had an adverse effect and that people who are considering selling their homes decide to either hold them because of the tax shelter or they bounce the price to a level that will cover the tax which the federal and provincial treasuries will collect. I take it the minister does not have a great deal of concern for that inflationary impact, be it small or large. I simply say that as we reassess the capital gains tax, surely we should at least consider that type of thing.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to have too long a dialogue on that. I should like to point out to the House, however, that if you compare the inflation rates in Canada and in the United States, in the long run, generally speaking, it is the same. The United States has had a capital gains tax since 1913, however, and it does not seem to have impaired their development over the last 64 years. One can argue there is an element of that which could cause a little bit of inflation, and that argument could be made for every tax.

Of course, if there were not to be any tax anywhere, there would perhaps be less inflation. If there is to be no tax at all, of course, then the consequence would be that we would go back to "les cavernes", and I am not ready to go that far back.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I find it interesting, the way the minister likes to use figures from the United States when it suits his purpose. He is not so quick to use the inflation figures of the United States in the question period when we point out to him that the current inflation rate there, on an annual basis, was 3.8 per cent in the last three months, compared to 8.8 per cent in this country.

The minister made reference to the point made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge which I think he took rather out of context. As I understand what our colleague was saying, it was to the effect that there may be more equity instead of this so-called rough justice plan of saying only half the gain will be taken for tax purposes. As I understood the hon. member, he was saying it might be a more equitable approach to say that capital gains would be fully indexed; that the entire capital gain would be taken after indexing. In that sense, the confiscation I spoke of could be avoided where there may be a gain in current dollars, but in constant dollars it is no gain at all. Did the minister fully understand the contrast made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will take note of that, but the implications are quite serious. If we carry the hon. member's logic to its conclusion, it means we should have 100 per cent capital gains and indexing just as we do with other incomes. In order to achieve that, we would have to raise the taxes on capital gains to 100 per cent and consider the gain just as ordinary income. From there, the system of indexing would apply. I hope the business community in Toronto will react to the suggestion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I will let the record speak for itself, but clearly I was not saying what the minister is trying to put into my mouth. It may be of some help to the minister to say that I hope there is no doubt in his mind, or that of any other member, that this party believes capital gains should be indexed before they are taxed. That is our firm policy and we do not have any hesitation in advancing it. We wish the government would accept that type of proposal without fudging the issue.

If I could go back to my questioning before lunch at which time I was interested in the tax revenue received in 1975 with respect to capital gains, both at the federal and the provincial level, perhaps the minister could give us some breakdown as to the over-all capital gain which has been experienced, also the capital losses—in short, a fairly clear picture of what in fact was the experience with regard to capital gains in 1975.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I would like to clarify the matter of government revenue arising from capital gains tax. In 1975 the total federal and provincial capital gains tax was $255 million; the total federal and provincial gains value was $1370 million; the total federal and provincial taxable capital gain, was $680 million. The ratio of total capital gains tax to total taxable capital gains was 37.5 per cent. The total taxable capital gains of individuals was $405 million; the total taxable capital gains of corporations was $275 million. The federal government share of the total capital gains tax revenue was $190 million, and that of the provinces was $65 million.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if we could get one or two further breakdowns. You have mentioned that $190 million was the total tax as far as federal coffers were concerned. Could you indicate how much of that came from the individual capital gains taxpayers and how much from the corporate taxpayers?

Mr. Chrétien: It is the federal section?

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. Chrétien: The federal share is $100 million for individuals and $90 million for corporations.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are right on.

Mr. Stevens: Previously I gave the minister's officials the relevant table 18 from taxation's statistics 1977 edition for the taxation year 1975. If I may ask the minister a few questions concerning those tables, which I believe his officials have been able to reconcile with their own figures, and the figures which we were just given, one of the things I would draw the minister's attention to as far as individual capital gains tax payers are concerned—he will note that the total amount of the gain is shown as $1,065 million, and the total amount of the loss is shown as $409 million. That is before we consider the taxable gains or the taxable losses. I am in the second last column. My question is this: if you net those two, it is clear there was roughly something over $600 million of total gains in all categories that are reviewed in the chart.

When we shift to the taxable amount, I find it rather odd that while the taxable gain stays at $476 million, which is a little under the 50 per cent of the billion figure I gave earlier, the loss figure falls off very dramatically to $71 million. The net result is that we find that the taxable capital gain loss position is extremely low compared to the gross loss that is shown, whereas the total capital gains position is relatively what you would expect.

Could the minister indicate what it is that is working within the tax system which allows people so little loss write-off as appears to be reflected in the statistics I have just given?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I am in a position to give that kind of an elaborate technical answer which the hon. member would like to receive from me. These are based on statistics tabled by the Department of National Revenue. I am not in a position, even with my officials here, to give that sort of an answer. If the hon. member will look into that, we will make sure the information will be given to him.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for York-Simcoe but his time has expired. The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, was I hearing properly during the debate, as carried on by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, and in the context of a speech made by the member for St. John's East to which I paid a great deal of attention, and to which I give a great deal of sympathy? I am astonished at what I am hearing from the member for York-Simcoe. Did he not say with respect to minimum wages, not that they should be indexed, but they should be frozen? They are too high! Did he not compare them with the United States' minimum wages and yet then charge the minister of using data comparable with the United States data when it suited his purposes?

With respect to the non-indexation of minimum wages, we are talking of poor people who need some help. He comes and says, if I am correct, with respect to those who have assets, which are making gains and are taxed at only half normal taxation, that this burden should be further eased by indexing their gains. I do not know if that is Tory doctrine; I suspect it is. It is good Tory doctrine to press down the poor even further and then to increase the wealth of the wealthy.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order—

The Chairman: The hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, and just before I direct a few more questions to the hon. minister, I want to assure all members who have been sitting in this committee of the whole session, I do not know where the hon. member has been hearing what he has referred to. We are discussing capital gains tax and the fact is—

The Chairman: Order!

Mr. Stevens: If I may finish.

Mr. O'Connell: I did not address my question to you, I addressed my question to the minister.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for York-Simcoe got up on a point of order. I believe I told him his time had expired.

Mr. Stevens: I am referring to my point of order. We are discussing clause 1 of Bill C-11. I have been addressing my remarks to the question of capital gains, the possible indexing of capital gains. Never in this discussion today have I referred to minimum wages or indexing minimum wages.

The Chairman: Order, please. I believe the same rules apply to committee as to the House. It is not a point of order. The hon. member posed a question. The hon. Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have no comment to make. I think that the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) is raising a matter of ideology on which he deeply disagrees with the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). Of course, I have always been inclined to side with the Liberals rather than with the Progressive Conservatives.

• (1512)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if we can come back to clause 1 of Bill C-11, it deals with this question of capital gains. Up until now persons could only claim $1,000 from capital gains loss against their income. Maybe, in the future, if clause 1 goes through, they will be able to claim $2,000 against their income. It is to that I would like to address my further comments, if I may.

We were dealing specifically with the question of what has been the impact of capital gains as far as tax revenue is concerned and, second, to what extent losses have been net-table against taxable gains. My question to the minister, you will recall, Mr. Chairman, was very simple. When we have the over-all gross figures, we find that the capital losses were $409 million against capital gains of $1,065 million. However, when we find the taxable losses, the losses, while not insignificant, are quite small in the sense that they fall from $409 million in the gross figure to only $71 million, whereas the capital gains that are taxable remain relatively high.

I will accept the minister's word that this is fairly technical to describe why there should be a relatively small loss which is chargeable against your taxable gains. However, I ask the minister if he agrees that this is further evidence of a certain inequity that presently exists in our capital gains process. It is one thing to tax the man who has the gain, but surely it should work that the losses that people are incurring are also to be quite readily chargeable against those gains.

On reflection, I wonder if the minister has any further suggestion as to why there seems to be this sharp fall off from the gross figures compared to the taxable figures with regard to tax losses.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think we can argue over this for a long time. Perhaps I can give the committee an explanation. We have, of course, received a number of representations on this. These representations have suggested that there should be no limit on the deductibility of capital losses. This will not only be costly in terms of revenue, but will permit the reduction of taxes by many taxpayers with a significant investment portfolio, those we call the rich.

Taxpayers could arrange to dispose of those securities on which losses are accrued in order to realize the losses and hold on to those securities which have increased in value. In these circumstances taxable income should be reduced by losses even if the accrued gain exceeds the loss. Therefore if there were no limit on this allowance for capital losses, only those losses in excess of accrued gains should be deducted. It is a question of tax.

[Translation]

It is necessary, Mr. Chairman, in a system such as ours to tax at a given time the income of all people, even their capital gains. It is a logical thing; otherwise, part of the population would actually be fully exempted from their social obligations as taxpayers, while their taxes allow us, to set up programs designed to effect equalization payments to the poorer provinces, payments which substantially help Newfoundland, for example, or Quebec or New Brunswick, and go to pay old age pensions and so on.

Should we exempt richer people from taxation because they claim that their losses in a specific year are greater than they would wish? Such is the market system and the capitalist system. One must either win or lose. If we were to allow tax deductions every year for losses incurred, I am sure that a great many rich people in this country would use this system to hide a lot of revenues and avoid paying taxes as ordinary people like us pay year in and year out. Therefore rich and poor Canadian alike must put part of their revenues at the service of their fellow citizens through a taxation system. This $2,000 exemption is providing an incentive to take risks but if somebody has taken such risks incurring great losses, it is because he took too many risks and he must therefore pay the consequences. That is why other revenues should not be tax exempt.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect—

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I have not finished.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has the floor.

Mr. Clermont: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has had a good part of the time—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York-Simcoe has had the floor a good part of the morning. Does another member not have the same rights?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) has his rights. He will have the floor when the opportunity arises. He has not been able to seize the opportunity after the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) closed his remarks. As nobody was rising, I gave the floor to the hon. member for York-Simcoe who is entitled to his twenty minutes.

Mr. Clermont: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, I rose. But a clerk was catching your attention.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I admit the hon. member rose, but he did so when the hon. member for York-Simcoe had the floor already. I will recognize the hon. member for Gatineau immediately after.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister has led me exactly into the next line of questioning that I want to put to him. He left the impression that somehow this is a tax of the wealthy. That is clearly a misunderstanding on the government side. It is perhaps why the hon. member for York-Scarborough was so anxious in the sense that his point was that he felt it was a tax on the poor. In that sense perhaps he has a much greater point than I had realized.

I direct the minister's attention to the final column of the tax statistics to which I have referred. He will notice that approximately 40 per cent of the capital gains is earned by those with earnings of less than $20,000. Quite a large portion of the gain we are considering here, and out of which they make their revenue, is not from the so-called fat cats but from the average hard working Canadians who are earning something below $20,000.

If you go into the next category, $20,000 to $25,000, you find another 10 per cent. If you go to the $25,000 income level, approximately 50 per cent of the total gain on people who are paying capital gains tax is paid by people who are earning less than $25,000 a year. Forty per cent is paid by those earning under $20,000.

I would like to put this further question to the minister. Is he aware of this? Does he agree that this is a tax that quite significantly falls on relatively low income people in this country?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the point we are making by increasing this to $2,000. I am told that, generally speaking, those earning less than $20,000 do not derive a great part of their income from investment. We are doubling the exemption for the losses so that these people can benefit from this tax measure that we are proposing. Either we have or do not have an equitable tax system in this country. In order to have an equitable tax system, we decided that we had to do what the United States did in 1913, namely, to have a capital gains tax in Canada.

I remind the committee that, when we introduced the capital gains tax, we got rid of the old system of succession duties at the federal level. We did this because we wanted to permit people at time of death to pass on to their descendants in some easier fashion what they had accumulated in terms of wealth.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, may I come back to my basic point. With indexing there would really be less of an inequity, bearing in mind that indexing would benefit, to the extent of 50 per cent of those who make a gain, people who earn $25,000 a year or less. The minister says this is why he is raising, to $2,000 instead of $1,000, the privilege to write off a loss against other income.

With all due respect, surely the minister is missing the point. This allows a person who has sustained a loss to write it off against other income, but there are very few people earning less than $20,000 a year who would welcome the prospect of writing off a $2,000 loss. My point is, what about the man who has not made a loss but a gain of the kind to which I have referred? While in terms of current dollars it appears to be a gain, because there is no indexing it is in fact a confiscation of his capital in the sense that he is being taxed on something which in constant dollars is in truth not a gain. It is not a question of allowing him to write off a loss. I am concerned about a person who has made a gain. Fifty per cent of the total gains that were made were made by people earning less than $25,000. What about that person?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to repeat what I have said many, many times, namely, that capital gains are taxed at half the rate of a person's normal income.

Mr. Stevens: It is still confiscation.

Mr. Chrétien: All of an individual's exemptions are indexed. If the hon. member is arguing the we should go back to the time of the dinosaurs, that is one thing. I know he is against capital gains, and so is the hon. member for Calgary North. Generally speaking, members of the NDP want us to tax them at 100 per cent. Like any other income, a buck is a buck. But typically we Liberals find a good compromise between these two extremes which, although it satisfies neither of the two extremes, satisfies the great majority of the Canadian people because they keep voting for us from year to year.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister makes reference to going back to the age of the dinosaurs. Let me assure hon. members that if this government is allowed to stay in power much longer we could well go back to the age of the dinosaurs. Let me explore this question a little more fully. According to statistics before me, one of the big group of capital gains taxpayers is farmers, also fishermen. Let us bear in mind that when this legislation was first introduced it was represented to be a great device for getting at those who are making gains in shareholdings.

I had a question for the minister but I see he has left. Is he coming back?

Mr. Lumley: Yes, he is.

Mr. Stevens: I am very anxious to hear what the hon. member for Gatineau will have to say, but perhaps I can put my question to the parliamentary secretary, who might like to comment on it. What does the minister say in regard to who was wrong when it was initially represented to this House that the main group which would be paying the capital gains tax was those who made gains from shares? We now find, for example, that in that category the amount of gains in 1975 was $38 million, whereas the gains of farmers and fishermen amount to $113 million. And I have other categories I can give. For example, employees are listed at $144 million.

I should like somebody from the department to indicate whether there was in fact a miscalculation here. Did they over-estimate the gains they were going to tax arising from shares, or was there some other rationalization for what seems to be such a small gain under the head of shares compared to gains, for example, from real estate?

I can break the figures down not only for farmers and fishermen but for gains on the sale of shares net, which is $38 million. The net gain on real estate is $661 million. Let there be no confusion from this point on. This is essentially a capital gains tax which has fallen mainly on those who made a gain from real estate which, as I have suggested, has perhaps aggravated inflation in that particular market.

Mr. Lumley: First of all, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member must realize that the figures he has referred to vary from year to year. He talks about real estate. Real estate prices have increased far more dramatically than shares. As the minister said in one of his earlier replies, there is no capital gains tax on an individual's residence, so in answer to his point about inflation caused by the capital gains tax, there is no evidence that the tax has influenced residential homes or land prices.

The share in capital gains of those earning less than $20,000 is 36 per cent. However, their share in total assessed income is 77 per cent, thus relative to their income they receive very little in capital gains. Their share in capital gains tax is 25 per cent, compared to their share in total tax of 61 per cent. Therefore I have a little difficulty trying to understand the relevance of what the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, talk about trying to confuse the issue! I have been very, very specific. This is the first time I have been able to get the actual capital gains tax figures. I was very specific. I said there has been a total net gains tax of $38 million from shares and $661 million from real estate. It has nothing to do with total income or anything else; these are the capital gains tax figures for those two categories. I thought my question was very simple.

It was represented to this House that the capital gain which was going to be taxed was the gain from shares. How is it that it has now shifted to real estate? Sometimes, Mr. Chairman, I despair at the lack of knowledge in the Department of Finance. The parliamentary secretary stands up and says that somehow or other home prices are not being affected. Is he totally ignorant of the fact that much of the gain the government is taxing is subdivision land, land on which eventually homes will be built? Is the government totally ignorant of the fact that this has been one of the most significant reasons for driving up Canadian home prices at least one third above the prices that we find in the United States?

Let me come back to my very specific point. Has the government any particular explanation why this tax is falling not only on people of relatively low income—which it was never represented would happen—but on the real estate market, not the share market which initially it was said would be the chief source of the capital gains tax?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, I answered that in my original reply to the hon. member. He is looking at the figures for one particular year, and the picture varies from year to year. In the figures the hon. member is alluding to, they are referring to capital gains on shares and real estate for that particular year. This is not constant from year to year.

● (1532)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I should like—

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for York-Simcoe but his allotted time in the second round has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, we have been discussing for quite a while about revenues that the tax on capital gains can generate for the treasury but I suggest that when this tax authorized by the House of Commons in December 1971, it was also a matter of justice and equity because the salaried—

[English]

Mr. Stevens: There is no justice from that government.

Mr. Clermont: Neither from you.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, the salaried worker always reports his full income on his return. I recognize that the amount deductible as expenses has been raised from $150 to $250 in the budget tabled by the former finance minister. In my opinion—I have said so to the former finance minister and I repeat it again—this is not enough.

When the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) referred to the increased cost of land, he forgot to say that a large percentage of these higher costs are due to speculation, something which had been anticipated when the tax on the capital gains was voted. During the first years, the Treasury Board did not expect any noticeable increase in revenues but the opposition contended at times that that would be the case and we all remember that the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Benson, had to table a letter before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in which he promised that if revenues from capital gains were to increase unduly, taxes in other areas would be lowered. I remember it quite well, Mr. Chairman, because I was then chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and so does the hon. member for York-Simcoe because he appeared many times before this very committee.

Mr. Chrétien: I would like to thank the hon. member for his remarks.

[English]

The hon. member for York-Simcoe made a comment because I was not in the Chamber for a few minutes. We have been in this House every day for the last three weeks, and in some instances for extended hours. I have responsibilities as Minister of Finance.

I left the Chamber for five minutes to go where every human being has to go once in a while.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Your responsibility is here.

Mr. Chrétien: I have been more than patient. Since the beginning of the afternoon, the hon. member for York-Simcoe has been on cloud nine. There are many people listening in the audience, and I am glad they will hear what I have to say. As yet we have not adopted the title of a bill with 160 clauses because we have had to listen to speeches like that of the hon. member, day in and day out, for the last three weeks.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think I should be entitled to go to "la toilette", as we say "en français". I am back now.

[Translation]

In answer to the hon. member, I would simply like to say that of course we shall never be able to agree with the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on this point. What can we do? The taxpayers, the workers have their taxes deducted from their pay cheque. They have no other choice. After many years we discovered that by speculating on the stock market some people could avoid contributing to the social needs of this country. We then decided to tax capital gains. The hon. member does not agree. As I was associated with the income tax reform, I remember very well that this was recommended. This is ironical since it was recommended by the Carter report, among others, and the Carter report was published by the Carter Commission. This commission was established by the Progressive Conservative government in 1961-62. The Conservatives are therefore refusing to recognize their offspring, but we are more human than that; we find it fair to tax capital gains. The most capitalistic of all countries, the United States, was taxing capital gains in 1913. I was not even born then. As a matter of fact, this was a long time before my birth.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) that it is very difficult in a society as complex as ours to give in to requests from all those who would like tax exemptions for something or other. There is only one clear problem, and I am not a Social Crediter like my friend from Roberval (Mr. Gauthier). I know that the money we spend is taken from the pockets of the taxpayers, and we try to be as fair as possible about it. And we, as well as everyone who has reflected for a moment on this matter, including the commission created by a Progressive Conservative government, the Carter Commission, have discovered that there should be a capital gains tax. Obviously I shall never be able to settle the issue of principle from which stem the diverging views of my friend from York-Simcoe and myself, but, Mr. Chairman, we are still on clause 1, which increases the loss exemption from $1,000 to $2,000 for capital gains.

There are 160 clauses to be studied in this committee. Since we have started the study of this clause at noontime, it has not progressed by an inch. It might be necessary to wait until Monday or Tuesday or even Wednesday before clause 1 which contains only three lines gets its approval. It is quite clear and it does not take a genius to understand that we are raising from $1,000 to $2,000 the tax exemption for people who claim capital losses. It is obvious that once again the opposition is trying to prolong the debate simply to delay the work of this House rather than passing this bill as soon as possible. There are thousands of decisions in the business community which cannot be taken at the present time. Given the attitude taken by the Progressive Conservatives, it may be that we will never succeed in passing this bill. However, we have been able to impose a time allocation on second reading, so I guess they want us to do the same thing at the committee stage. I have no objection to that. We might spend three or four days studying clause 1, then the other clauses will be studied much more rapidly.

[English]

Mr. Watson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance which relates to the statement made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe when he blamed the prices of housing in Ontario, and in Toronto in particular, on capital gains tax.

Would the hon. minister not agree the principal reason for the cost of housing in Toronto being higher than most parts of the country is because, even though the Government of Canada has had a law on its books since 1953 which allowed for federal funding of land acquisition and land banking, it was never used to any extent by the government of Ontario? Also, would he not agree that the government of Ontario land development policies have consistently favoured land speculation in the Toronto and Ottawa areas, the result of which has been that people have taken advantage of these federal grants that were, and are available, except for the last two or three years? This is the main reason for the cost of housing in Toronto being $20,000 more than other parts of the country. It has nothing to do with capital gains tax.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, capital gains tax on private residences does not exist because they are exempt. There has been a lot of land speculation. The hon. member for Laprairie blames it on the Ontario administration, but I do not want to comment too much about the provincial situation. Not long ago a very learned gentleman from Ontario, Walter Gordon, indicated in a speech that approximately 100 approvals are required to develop land in Ontario. Also he indicated that it requires many inquiries in order to do that. I do not know. I am not a resident of Ontario, so I cannot judge that. It is not due to capital gains at all.

Land speculation is not under federal jurisdiction. The permits for construction, the development of the land, and so on, are within provincial and municipal areas. To attempt to shift the burden on to capital gains is either stretching the argument a bit far, or the hon. member is simply stretching his speech in an attempt to use up the remaining time until four o'clock, and thus clause 1 will not be passed.

● (1542)

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief question I want to put to the minister, and it is mostly for the record. Until recently an argument has been put forward against the capital gains tax that it was really a tax for equity purposes, and that in fact it was not much of a revenue producer, and even from the viewpoint of equity there were objections to it. The figures that the minister has produced for us today indicate that it is more than just an equity measure—we are talking about relatively big money which is now coming in from capital gains. Does the minister have some figures to indicate whether the take from the capital gains is increasing or holding its own? My own personal recollection is that, when it first came in, the income from capital gains was a relatively small amount of around $40 million. That seems to be increasing substantially as the years go by.

Mr. Chrétien: The income from the tax is now $255 million. That is a good sum of money. Of course as the hon. member knows very well, capital gains before 1972 were not taxable, only the gains since 1974. Of course the amount is increasing every year. I do not know exactly by how much it is increasing. I have the figures for 1975 but not for 1976. The essential increase was from 1974 to 1975. I do not have the actual figures with me but I will provide them for the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I noticed this afternoon that in his answer to a question he was asked, the minister said that at a given time people were saving too much. I would like him to give us something precise as to what he meant because we are all well aware of the campaigns made by several financial institutions to incite people to save more. So I would like the minister to be more precise on what he meant by his remarks that people are saving too much.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, at the present time there is an insufficient demand in our economy. During the past three years, the level of savings has been rather constant and maintained at a very high level. I believe that Canadians are setting aside about 10 per cent of their income for savings.

This is excellent if it lasts for a year, but when it goes on for three years in a row problems begin to arise. I am urging people who have been putting money away for the last two or three years to spend part of it on consumer goods, particularly Canadian goods, to revitalize our economy and create jobs. Because it is very difficult to ask industry to expand when capacity utilization is only 80 per cent.

Of course there are programs to promote savings. We will always need savings, but within limits. I urge those who have enough savings to realize how worthwhile it would be to spend at this point. This does not mean by any stretch of the imagination that nobody must save. But those who have too much should spend at this point, to help revitalize our Canadian economy. This is what I meant, because during the last three years I understand the level of savings has been at least 100 per cent higher than during the three preceeding years. In the current economic context where consumer expenditures are lagging, it would help if people with a lot of savings started doing some spending, particularly if they toured Canada rather than going further down south. I for one will be doing so at Christmas time. I said so and I was embarrassed myself because I had planned to go down south, but I realized it is better for me as a citizen to remain here at Christmas time and go skiing instead of sunbathing. So, in view of our $2 billion deficit for this year on the tourist trade account alone, I hope this will be done and also that we buy Canadian goods as much as possible so that our Canadian production capacity utilization is increased.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: You should have told the Prime Minister to do that.

Before I get into some more questioning on clause 1 I must respond, at least in part, to some of the comments made by the minister in his impassioned plea after he returned. I wish to assure the minister that no one in this Chamber took any exception to his leaving.

Mr. Chrétien: You did.

Mr. Stevens: No. In fact we thought we were quite co-operative. I said that rather than having a delay I would put my questions to the parliamentary secretary, questions to which subsequently the parliamentary secretary, I thought, responded very effectively.

Mr. Chrétien: I am sorry, and I take the hon. members' word. Someone had told me the hon. member had given me hell because I was out of the Chamber. If he did not, then I withdraw what I said, but I cannot withdraw my need to get out.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, let me assure the minister that we realize he does have certain human sides.

There are other points on which perhaps I should comment. The minister has left the unfortunate impression that there has been an undue delay with regard to discussion of clause 1, and he referred to the fact that we had not even passed the title to the bill. As the minister knows, the title is one of the last things we pass, not one of the first. I would point out to the minister, who surely keeps the score, that there have been more people questioning him on clause 1 on the government side of the House then there have been members questioning him from this side. If he wants to put the usual governmental gag on his own followers, he had better talk to them.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, may I say that the hon. member, who had the floor for the third time now and used up 20 minutes, should recognize that members on my side are not as confused as hon. members opposite, so that they can put just one question and obtain satisfaction.

While I have the floor I would like to answer the question put by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge who asked me about the capital gains tax. There has been an increase since we introduced the capital gains tax. Taxable capital gains went up from $239 million in 1972 to $431 million in 1973, to $507 million in 1974, and $680 million in 1975. These are the capital gains reported; the tax on them is less because people pay only half the normal rate on them.

Mr. Stevens: I must assure the minister that if he keeps interrupting me, naturally time will keep running. I have a few questions I want to put to him, and surely the more he becomes impassioned and makes these various comments, the more he makes it impossible for me to do anything but correct the record.

What I was saying on clause 1 was that I feel it is pertinent to know that more questions have been directed to him from his own followers than there have been from this side. As the minister knows, clause 1 is generally the clause on which people make general comments on the bill. Comments on this clause are not solely restricted to a specific item.

Let us not forget that the minister left the impression that once the capital gains tax was written in stone into the law of the land there should be no question on it thereafter. Such are not the facts. What I have tried to make clear is that when we introduced the capital gains tax certain recommendations were made, and this is virtually the first opportunity we have had in the House to review the impact of the capital gains tax and to ask the Minister of Finance whether he feels that certain aspects of what has transpired are in truth equitable. One of those is our suggestion that there should be indexing of the capital gains tax rather than the so-called rough justice formula whereby we only take in half of the gain.

I do not think members of the House should be too impatient, because we must bear in mind that it was on this side of the House that the suggestion was first advocated for the indexing of the income tax. It took the government many years finally to catch on to what we were talking about and to realize that there was an inequity. Perhaps in the faint hope that it might win some votes the government said, "Fine, we are going to bring in indexing," because it realized that was an equitable thing and possibly even popular. Is there anything wrong with our at least exploring the possibility that indexing would also be a relevant thing for capital gains?

There was another reference made by one of the minister's colleagues to the fact that I referred to land prices going up in value, and that perhaps one of the things which had contributed to those prices going up was the fact that many speculators who are in the land development business have been using the system in a way they felt would at least compensate them for the tax they have had to pay with regard to capital gains. Somehow my simple pointing out that home prices in Canada are about one third higher than they are in the United States got twisted by the minister's colleague into some representation about Toronto prices.

I never referred to Toronto prices. The hon. member somehow wanted to twist it so that somehow it was the fault of the Ontario government after all. I am talking about prices from Nova Scotia right through to Victoria.

Mr. McGrath: Newfoundland.

Mr. Stevens: All right, St. John's. I hope the record is clear on that.

Let me put a different question now to the minister concerning capital gains. We have explored the impact, the revenue, who is actually paying and the fact that indexing is apparently not under any serious consideration as far as the department is concerned.

There is a second injustice with regard to capital gains. A person has the option either to liquidate every year and pay the tax payable at whatever his tax rate is for that year or, as many people are doing, bunching or holding their capital realization until a later time rather than paying the tax. Where the inequity comes in is when the person finally does sell his property.

Let us take my example of $10,000. Let us say that a person says he does not want to liquidate at possibly $10,800 because he just does not want to have to pay that tax. Let us say he holds it ten years. At the rate of inflation under this government it will probably be that he will have to sell that property for $20,000 in order to get the same buying power he could get last year with his $10,000. Under the present set-up—and I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong—the only thing this person can then do in 1986 would be to take his $20,000 and put it into some type of annuity for up to 15 years if he wants to dollar average the gain. In short, there is no provision allowing him to have a charge-back, say, for the previous ten years of $1,000 per year and to come into the lower tax bracket. The fact is he will have to pay whatever his tax rate is in the year 1986 on the whole $10,000 falling into his income that year and, as I have said, a high portion of that or, in my example all of it, will simply be an inflationary gain.

Is the minister aware of that bunching inequity which is occurring, and is there any consideration being given to relieving that situation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we are aware of that problem as well as of many other problems, including indexing in relation to capital gain. The provisions are not written in stone, as the hon. member said. We are constantly reviewing the tax system in every budget. We have a bill containing 160 clauses before the House at this time. We review the tax system every year, or every six months depending upon whether we are having two budgets in a year. The arguments of the hon. member will be looked into by the experts of my department, and we will see if we have to bring about some changes in the next budget.

Mr. Stevens: Realizing that there are rather technical and somewhat complicated aspects to the whole capital gains tax situation I wonder if the minister would indicate if he would be willing to make a special reference of this subject to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so that there can be an in depth appraisal carried out as to the success or failure of the capital gains tax system, so that indexing can be reviewed and so that we could perhaps call witnesses and receive briefs on what people now feel about it. Frankly, I feel that the minister is sincere, and I have no reason to doubt that.

The whole tax system is an ongoing and very volatile thing. It would be quite constructive between now and the time he brings in a budget to have the benefit of a committee review of the whole question of the capital gains tax in this country. My next question will come later.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am considering referring problems to the committee, but I have not decided to go along with this as yet. I will take into consideration the request of the hon. member, but I did not have such a thing in mind.

Mr. Stevens: My next question comes from a suggestion which was made as long ago as perhaps 1971 by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I felt he suggested a rather innovative approach, that as far as Canadians are concerned—and the hon. member restricted it to the question of investing in the resource industry; I perhaps might want to expand on that to include any Canadian investment, be it resource or manufacturing—there should be a formula worked out with regard to capital gains which would make them non-taxable depending on the number of years an investment is held. For example, I think the hon. member's thinking was that if an investment were held for five years, there would be no taxable gain on the basis that that is obviously a relatively long-term investment and should not be taxed as current income. However, for every year short of that, the suggestion was that a person should lose 20 per cent of his total 100 per cent non-taxable position, and if he bought and sold something within a year it would be fully taxable. Has any thought been given to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West?

Mr. Chrétien: We are aware of that suggestion. It has been looked into, but it has not been recommended to the minister.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being four o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall order No. 2, standing in the name of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), stand at the request of the government?

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there has been agreement to allow orders Nos. 2, 4, 8, 9 and 10 to stand at the request of the government, and to go ahead with order No. 11, standing in the name of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski). Shall orders Nos. 2, 4, 8, 9 and 10 stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Stand at the request of the government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AND CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO SHORTEN PERIOD WITHIN WHICH BY-ELECTIONS MUST BE CALLED

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved that Bill C-211, to amend the House of Commons Act and the Canada Elections Act (by-elections), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope, rather than talking this bill out today, that the subject matter will be allowed to go to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that this House can deal with the very important principle involved. At the committee any necessary amendments to lengthen or shorten the time period proposed in the bill could be made.

I should like to open the debate by saying the importance of the bill is underscored by the fact that there are now five seats in this House vacant, thus effectively denying representation to over 680,000 Canadians. Under our present laws which govern the holding of by-elections this is a situation which is unlikely to be soon corrected. It is not a new issue, however. Every government in the history of the country, whether Progressive Conservative of Liberal, has abused the present laws on by-elections to ensure they are held only at what is considered the most politically expedient moment. It is a record of which none of those governments or we as Canadians can be proud.

Quite apart from the intolerable situation where Canadians are denied a voice in government through their elected representatives, the issues surrounding any delay in the holding of a by-election reflect some very old and very basic concepts essential to our system of democratic government.

Any such delay openly flouts our belief in the importance of the participation of all Canadians in our political process. In the past ten years we have heard much of participatory democracy. It seems to me that the representation of all Canadians in this House should be the cornerstone of participatory democracy. It should also be restated here that a central issue to the development of our parliamentary institutions and traditions was the idea of "no taxation without representation". Over a period of hundreds of years thousands of people have gone to war, fought, died, in order to gain the right of elected representation. This is a principle which has been fought for long and hard.

Today we have in Canada "taxation without representation". Those people in the five constituencies of Burnaby-Richmond-Delta in British Columbia, Hamilton-Wentworth in Ontario, York-Scarborough in Ontario, Fundy-Royal in New Brunswick, and Lotbinière in Quebec, still pay taxes, yet have no elected representation. This bill also reflects a debate that has been going on in Canada for the past ten years—the role and importance of this House and of individual members in our political process.

I would suggest that a situation which allows unnecessary delays in filling a seat vacated through the death or resignation of a member is an insult to each and every member in this House, for it suggests that it is not important that some Canadians are not represented for unduly extended periods of time. It suggests that it is not important that all Canadians have a voice in this House of Commons. It suggests that an elected representative is not essential either to the people of a constituency or to the governing of this country. Worst of all it is a situation that suggests that political expediency take precedence over all other principles.

In Canada, under our present law, upon the death or resignation of a member, a writ for a by-election does not have to be issued until six months—approximately 180 days—after the Speaker is informed of the vacancy. At the end of that six months there is presently no provision that states a by-election must be called within a specific time frame. After the six months the writ could then be issued, setting the by-election date one month away, one year away, or even two or three years away.

I put forward this bill because quite simply the present situation is wrong. The present situation flouts the basic democratic principle of entitlement to elected representation. This bill would redress the situation by reducing the six months' period for the issuing of the writ to 60 days, and would require a by-election date to be set within 60 days after the writ is issued. This bill allows for a maximum total lapse of time, from when the Speaker is notified of a vacancy and the polling date, of 120 days.

I said before that our present law suggests that political expediency takes precedence. To verify that look at page 11,619 in Hansard of March 9, 1976. We have seen, quite recently, expediency at work. When the Hon. Gérard Pelletier resigned his seat to become Canada's ambassador to France, the government was able to bring about a by-election within 41 days. At the same time as Mr. Pelletier resigned, Walter Carter, the member for St. John's West, also resigned. The by-election in St. John's West took place 13 months—that is, one year and one month or over 390 days—after Mr. Carter's resignation. The situation in St. John's West was the longest vacancy in the 110-year history of our parliament. That was, incidentally, also at a time when the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada was appearing before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, making recommendations to shorten substantially the time of national election campaigns.

Let us consider other countries. How do we compare? I am afraid not very favourably.

The problem of filling vacated seats is not unique to Canada, but is common to all western democracies, and I would like now to outline how other democracies deal with it. In western European countries members are often not elected on a constituency basis, but on the basis of their position on lists of candidates provided by their political parties and the apportioning of seats according to the percentage of the popular vote their party receives in a general election. This is commonly referred to as proportional representation. As such, these countries do not have by-elections, but they do recognize the importance of filling every seat after a vacancy occurs, and have instituted mechanisms to achieve this.

In the Netherlands, for example, the political party concerned simply fills the seat with the first name appearing on the party list remaining from the previous election, effective immediately. There is no time delay here in filling a vacancy. In other countries, such as Sweden, every member has an alternate who immediately takes the seat should it be vacated.

In the United States, on the death or resignation of a senator or congressman, the governor of the affected state is empowered to appoint a replacement immediately. The U.S. system clearly recognizes, even though members of the House of Representatives face an election every two years, that full representation in the Congress is needed at all times.

In the United Kingdom, under the provisions of the Representation of the Peoples Act, 1948 and 1969, upon notice of a vacancy the Speaker issues a warrant to the Clerk of the Crown, who forthwith issues a writ for a by-election. Nomination papers must then be delivered no earlier than the fourth day, and no later than the ninth day after the writ is issued in the case of a county constituency; in the case of a borough or urban constituency no earlier than the third day, and no later than the seventh day after the writ is issued. The returning officer of the constituency then fixes a polling day no earlier than the seventh day, nor later than the ninth day after the last day for delivery of nomination papers. The minimum time before the holding of a by-election in the United Kingdom is, therefore, ten days after the Speaker has been notified; the absolute maximum is 18 days after issuance of the writ. There are no politically expedient delays in England. In the United Kingdom they recognize the democratic principle of filling a vacated seat with an elected representative quickly.

In Australia, under the Commonwealth Electoral Act of 1918 and 1973, section 33 of the act compels the Speaker to issue a writ for a by-election upon receiving notice of a vacancy. Nomination papers must then be filed no later than 21 days and no earlier than 7 days after the writ is issued according to section 62(10). Under section 63, a polling date is set no less than seven days and no more than 30 days after the last date for nomination. In Australia, therefore, the minimum time between the notification of a Speaker, the issuance of the writ and the holding of a by-election is 14 days. The absolute maximum is 51 days.

In New Zealand, under the New Zealand Electoral Act of 1956, and under Section 72(2) of that act, the Speaker as soon as he knows of the vacancy must immediately publish a notice in the Gazette and direct a warrant to the clerk of writs to issue a writ to fill the vacancy. Under section 74 the clerk then issues a writ no later than 21 days after receipt of the warrant or, in exceptional cases and only if an Order-in-Council requests postponement, the clerk issues a writ no later than 42 days after receipt of the warrant. Under section 76 of the New Zealand legislation, a by-election must be held within 50 days after issuance of the writ. In New Zealand the absolute maximum time between the Speaker being notified of a vacancy, the issuance of his warrant and the holding of a by-election is 92 days. The usual practice in New Zealand is only 71 days.

The countries of western Europe, where proportional representation is common, fill their vacancies automatically—in a matter of days after the vacancy has been created.

In comparison then to the three Commonwealth countries—Britain, Australia, and New Zealand, the maximum time lapse between when the Speaker is notified of a vacant seat and the holding of a by-election, is 92 days. Compare this to the appalling 13 months, or, if you like, one year and one month and in the case of the St. John's West by-election here in Canda it was over 390 days. However, legally in Canada it could be two or three years after the vacancy before a by-election is held. We should be ashamed of ourselves in this country.

Under this bill, which I propose today, Mr. Speaker, a maximum time lapse between notice of a vancancy and the holding of a by-election is 120 days, more than any other western democratic country. And yet this would surely give us more than enough time.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, there are presently five vacant seats in this House from four provinces, with a combined population of over 680,000 people. One of these seats, York-Scarborough, is by population the second largest constituency in Canada with over 248,000 constituents. On March 8th, 1976, as reported at page 11,572 of Hansard I asked our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the reason for the delay in calling a by-election in St. John's West. At that time he reaffirmed that he and the government believed that one of the fundamental rights in our democratic society is the right of a properly accredited electorate in any constituency in Canada to representation by elected officials in the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, I believe that all members on all sides of this House share that belief. I would ask them, then, to reaffirm that belief by allowing this bill to go to committee, by assisting in the passage of this bill for the sake of the over 680,000 Canadians who are presently not represented in this House, and for the sake of the high principles upon which our democratic system is based. We have a duty to make sure that we retain full representation in this House of Commons as much as possible. We must correct that which is wrong.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by commending the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton on the obvious concern he shows toward adequate representation, and for the constituents who, as a result of resignation or death of a member, find themselves without one. The fact that this bill is before us today is perhaps an indication of how strongly members feel about the administration of the Elections Act in general. Bill C-5, which is now before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, was the product of a great deal of consultation, but it has not included the amendment which the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) would like to see, and it does not include a number of amendments which I would like to see. This too is maybe an indication of the difficulty in reaching agreement as to the best way in which to achieve the end we all feel so strongly about.

Bill C-5, that cluster of amendments to the Canada Elections Act which is now before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, has three groups of amendments.

The first group came out of a working group which originally met on election expenses but as a result of their work brought forward some concerns about other parts of the act. That working group had representation on it from the four registered political parties in the House of Commons. There were three members from each party which made up the group that worked with the Chief Electoral Officer for about three years. Even at the end of all that extensive study they have not brought in amendments that meet the views of all of us.

The particular amendment before us in Bill C-211 would present some difficulties. I am not suggesting these difficulties are insuperable, but I suggest they need to be addressed, whether in committee or elsewhere. Section 6(1) and Section 10 of the House of Commons Act require the Speaker to address his warrant concerning a vacancy to the Chief Electoral Officer "forthwith". Subsection 13(1) of the House of Commons Act requires that a writ shall be issued within six months after the receipt by the Chief Electoral Officer of the warrant.

Section 22(1) of the Canada Elections Act requires that the governor in council shall fix the day upon which the poll shall be held at an election. The effect of this is that while the writ of election at a by-election must be issued within six months of the vacancy occurring in the House, the governor in council can set polling day in the writ for any day subsequent to the six months. There is, in effect, no fixed time within which a by-election must be called except with regard to the dissolution of parliament or the expiration of the maximum five year term of parliament.

The bill before us would stipulate a maximum period of 120 days from the occurrence of the vacancy until polling day. The hon. member who presented the bill has certainly amassed a very impressive array of precedents as used in other countries. As I listened to him, however, I thought of our particular geography and our climatic conditions.

Mr. Dick: How about Sweden, Norway or Australia?

Miss Nicholson: For example, if a vacancy occurred in October, what would be the effect of a winter election with polling day about Christmas or New Year's Day, particularly in a constituency such as the Yukon? Alternatively, if campaigning and polling day occurred in the summer months, it would certainly not be well received in our urban centres. Hon. members will recall the complaints we received recently when people were at their cottages on enumeration day.

Mr. Dick: Surely flexibility of four months would cover two months of summer.

Miss Nicholson: In a case where a general election is being considered a few months after the vacancy arises, if we were locked into a rigid time frame as the bill proposes with no flexibility whatever, one could then have a situation where a successful candidate might only hold office for a month or two prior to dissolution for a general election.

Mr. Dick: Mackenzie King had somebody sit for two hours.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could complete my remarks and then accept questions at the end. The by-election writs are only superseded and withdrawn where parliament is dissolved after the issuance of the new by-election writ. There are obvious complications one could see resulting from that. I am sorry the hon. member becomes so angry at having his ideas questioned because I am not opposed to the principle of the bill, and I was hoping that some of these matters could be addressed in committee or on a further occasion. Also, I said at the beginning that while I see these difficulties, I am not suggesting they are insuperable.

The cost of by-elections is something that has to be taken into consideration because they are extremely expensive. If the bill before us were accepted and we were locked into a fixed time with no flexibility or options, and if we had a by-election followed almost immediately by a general election, one would have to consider very carefully the effect of this.

The cost of a by-election will vary from constituency to constituency. However, according to the figures given by the Chief Electoral Officer in committee last week, the recent general election cost $29½ million, of which $10½ million went into enumeration. About $4½ million went into printing the lists. Obviously that was a general election where there may well have been some economies of scale. I expect a by-election figure would be proportionately more expensive.

The recent amendments to the Election Expenses Act added payment of some of the candidates' expenses. This is an additional expense factor which needs to be taken into consideration. The hon. member's point about the need for constituencies to be consistently represented is very valid. However, the total lack of flexibility in this bill concerns me.

The other question that I have is the idea of referring to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections amendments to the Canada Elections Act on a piecemeal basis. Bill C-5 which is now before the standing committee is based in part on the recommendations which came from the all-party working committee that worked for three years, primarily on election expenses, as well as other aspects of the act. Also included in the present Bill C-5 are some of the recommendations which the Chief Electoral Officer made and which were studied by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections last year. There is also the subject matter of three private members' bills.

Even with this amount of co-ordination, we still have a bill which does not meet everybody's requirements. I am not sure that the way to solve this problem is by adding yet another bill to deal with one specific aspect. I suggest there is more work to be done in committee by amending Bill C-5 and by enlarging it before we can proceed to further amendments to the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate very strong support of the bill that has been introduced by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). I hope that the portions of the speech just made by my friend, the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), which indicated support will be the portions that will be implemented rather than her concern about certain difficulties.

It is interesting the number of myths and practices that have grown up around this business of the holding of by-elections. I recall not many weeks ago, when His Honour the Speaker announced the issuing of certain writs, my friend, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), asking me why it was that the writ had not yet been issued for the constituency formerly represented by the late André Fortin. I explained to him that although we had spent time on the floor of the House expressing regret at the loss of our colleague, and although Mr. Speaker had sent our expressions of sympathy to the widow and the family, Mr. Speaker still had not been officially notified, so nothing had been done. Therefore my hon. friends had to give the official notice so that that writ could be issued.

A number of other events have occurred in my memory. Reference has been made to the fact that although the government must set the date and must do the setting within six months after the notice has been given by the Speaker, the actual date can be put off indefinitely. I remember in particular, in the parliament of 1940 to 1945, that as we got close to the end of that parliament there was at least one vacancy, the seat of Kenora-Rainy River, and in fact there may have been two. The setting of the date for that election or for the two of them was put off until finally, when the six months had expired, Mr. King announced that the date had been set; but of course the date was in August or September of 1945, and everybody knew that because of the lapse of five years there would have to be a general election not later than June. So there has been a lot of fun playing around with this question.

I was also interested, if I may be pardoned for a personal reference, in the remarks just made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services (Miss Nicholson) to the effect that a four month limit such as suggested by my hon. friend could throw a by-election into the middle of winter. In my own case my predecessor, the late J. S. Woodsworth, died on March 21, 1942. The by-election could easily have been held that summer or fall, but it was delayed until November 30, which in Winnipeg is in the middle of winter. So as I say, Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of manoeuvring with respect to this matter.

I believe the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton is right in asking that we lay down some specific rules such as are suggested in his bill. As he has just pointed out, there could be a change; the period could be lengthened or shortened, or we could provide that the rule not apply if a parliament had been in existence, say, for four and a half years. But in general I think that this idea should be adopted. The right of a government to be able to play around with this kind of thing and hold by-elections off to suit its convenience is totally inconsistent, I think with the democratic process.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services expressed a view that we often hear from that side, that she does not like things like this being dealt with on a piecemeal basis. Well, Mr. Speaker, there are two sides to that argument. If you go one way, you get one side; if you go the other way, you get the other. If a private member brings in a bill with three or four proposals in it, the answer is, "There is too much there; if there were only one point we could deal with it". But if you bring in only one proposition, it is said it is piecemeal. It seems to me that the crucial and important point here is the right of our people to be represented in the parliament of the day, and so I think that the principle of this bill deserves support.

If it is not possible for the bill as such to be given second reading and sent to standing committee, I hope that at five o'clock there will at least be agreement to send its subject matter, for it is one that is very important.

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak on this bill because I have rather recent experience on this subject. I reserve the right to call myself the last elected Conservative on this side. I am the youngest—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mrs. Pigott: —but please do not look at the colour of my hair. But since the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was elected in Newfoundland time, he is half an hour older than I am.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): An hour and a half.

Mrs. Pigott: That makes him very ancient then.

One of the things which I think we forget is how deeply the people feel about not being represented. As I walked from door to door in the constituency of Ottawa-Carleton that wonderful summer, the capital punishment bill had only recently gone through the House and there were so many persons who spoke to me about the fact that they did not have someone in the House representing them at that point so the House could hear what they felt about the bill, whether they were for or against it. There was a deep anger in people's hearts at the fact they had not had someone here to whom they could talk, to whom they could write or telephone. I see the hon. member from Sarnia has left. I know he tried to pinch-hit and take care of Sarnia, his ministry, and Ottawa-Carleton, but the people did not feel that he really belonged there, that it was just a draftee arrangement.

I think the people are intelligent. They are wise and they really want to participate. With the advent of TV in the House I find—I do not know whether other members are experiencing this—that I cannot move out of this Chamber without meeting people on the street, at meetings and events, who are saying, "We are delighted to have TV in the House; we feel more a part of the action and you are going to hear from us on certain aspects". I think TV is bringing this Chamber closer to the average person. You simply cannot go on with this poor show of putting over by-elections for longer periods of time. I think the people will rise up in anger. I just happen to think, Mr. Speaker, that my election and some of the majority I got was because the people were angry that they had been left one year without adequate representation.

I should like to move, Mr. Speaker:

That the bill be not now read a second time but that it be discharged and the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There has been a formal amendment moved by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton, which is as follows:

That the bill be not now read a second time but that it be discharged and the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I can hear the great chorus over on the other side, but as Chairman of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. For the record I must have a seconder of the amendment.

Mr. Dinsdale: I second it with pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I feel like a jack-in-the-box, bobbing up and down, but as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections I am quite prepared to have the subject matter referred to the standing committee.

I welcome, first of all, the opportunity to speak to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott), as well as to the bill of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). When the bill does get to committee I will not have the advantage of speaking to it, so I hope hon. members on the other side will allow me to agree with the sentiments expressed by my colleague, the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Mr. Dick: Don't talk it out.

Mr. Collenette: That is not my intention, though the best way to have a member talk a bill out is to interrupt him continually so that he has to extend his remarks. I think the hon. member should be commended, though I do have some reservations. I have reservations along the line of those expressed by the hon. member for Trinity. But notwithstanding those reservations, I am prepared to see the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

● (1642)

There is an inflexibility in the period proposed by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton in Bill C-211. It provides for a period of 120 days for the calling of a by-election. Notwithstanding his arguments concerning other countries such as Australia, Canada has some particular weather conditions and physical features which make it difficult to hold by-elections within set periods of time.

The hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith), who has one of the larger ridings, will agree with me that time is needed, especially in large constituencies, not only to organize the mechanics of the election but for the parties to select the proper candidates. In far flung ridings and those without principal centres, perhaps it would be difficult for parties to arrive at selecting an appropriate candidate within a period of four months.

I am not sure whether this particular comment is in order, but I would prefer to see the setting of elections to coincide with the summer. I am not sure how this would fit into our traditional British parliamentary system where there are minority governments. When I was elected, the election was as a result of the defeat of the government in the House. It occurred in May, but it could have occurred at any time during the year. Of course the New Democratic Party wanted to support the government at the time and prevented an election in the winter months.

When I was campaign manager for the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) there was the fall election of 1972. I received lots of complaints during that election campaign indicating that October was an inappropriate time to conduct an election. This was in a constituency in metropolitan Toronto where people are close together and communications are good. In the fall many activities start, such as meetings of social groups, community affairs organizations and so on. The nights draw in, and the weather gets colder. Of course the weather does not get as cold in metropolitan Toronto as it does in Churchill; but older people are less likely to go out and vote on cold, dark, sombre days. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would agree with this.

The timing of an election could deny the benefits of a democratic election to all elements in society. One advantage of the present system, which allows the government to call by-elections in a group, is that it affords the government and the opposition parties an opportunity to sound out public opinion in a number of constituencies. The by-elections this year were helpful to the government, because we happened to win five out of six by-elections. I am sure it was helpful to the official opposition to know their candidates were severely rejected in those by-elections, because that party had not felt the pulse of public opinion. As a result of those by-elections, I am sure the official opposition has taken into account the feeling of the electors as expressed in those results. Perhaps that caused the Conservatives to amend some of their party policies. It is not a bad idea to allow clusters of by-elections or mini-campaigns. There is a lot to be said for this kind of campaigning.

The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton referred to the problems constituents have in not being served. This was a legitimate argument. It is unacceptable that ridings go for long periods of time without representatives. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre mentioned a lenghty spell in the parliament of 1940 to 1945. If it continues for more than a year, as was the case with St. John's West, it is unacceptable; although there were good reasons for that particular aberration in the case of St. John's West.

One of the largest ridings in Canada, that of the former hon. member for York-Scarborough, is in the position of having no representative at the present time. Mr. Stanbury had control over his resignation. Perhaps he expected a fall election and that there would be no vacancy. But of course there was no election. He had an opportunity in private life, which he felt he must take, and therefore he left. Likely there is to be an election in 1978. To call an election for York-Scarborough, a riding which will disappear after redistribution, because it is being divided up into five or six other ridings, would be a waste of taxpayers' money.

Before Mr. Stanbury resigned he made arrangements with the surrounding Liberal members—the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), myself, and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson)—to help in any emergency. Of course we cannot provide the same quality of representation he provided, because we have our own large ridings, but any person in the present York-Scarborough riding can call up one of these other members. This was mentioned by Mr. Stanbury in his final newsletter to his constituents. In fact tomorrow morning in my constituency office I will deal with two cases that have been referred to me from that riding. Perhaps that is possible in large metropolitan areas where there are numbers of constituencies, but in the rural areas that is not the case. Therefore I would accept the arguments made by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Another question concerns cost. The hon. member for Trinity mentioned that it is expensive to conduct by-election campaigns continually, especially in the case of York-Scarborough.

This bill was introduced a year ago, but it never got to committee. This is the first time it has been read. It is unfortunate the Chief Electoral Officer did not bring in amendments, or perhaps attempt to talk about the subject matter of some of the amendments before committee at the moment in Bill C-5.

I am not sure whether I should be talking about the costs of running an election. The hon. member for Trinity mentioned that it is quite expensive to run elections in Canada. I should like to remind hon. members that it is very expensive for parties to conduct elections, whether they be by-elections or general elections. The expenditure allotment is inadequate. I hope the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton will address himself to that particular issue when debating the bill now before committee.

I believe that with the increase in postal rates in the last two or three years—I think it will be 6 cents by April 14—it is quite obvious that while the reimbursement from the government will be increased, the expenditure limit will be held. I am not sure how members of the Conservative party feel. I know the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) feels quite strongly, as do other members of his party, that there should be some increase in the expenditure limit for elections. I just wanted to mention a point by way of concluding my remarks on this bill, that there will be some agreement in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections that there be some increase in the expenditure limit, although perhaps not that expressed by the government in Bill C-5.

I would like to say in conclusion, because I do not wish to be the one who holds this bill up—I would send the bill to committee—that I support the principle, the thrust, the sentiments behind the bill, but the provision about the 120 days concerns me and I do not think all the questions have been answered. Nevertheless, the committee is probably the proper place for discussing all those reservations.

Mr. C. Douglas (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member on bringing this bill forward. I wish, however, that the bill had been put forward later in this session when debate on Bill C-5, which is now in committee, had either come to a conclusion or reached some form of decision because I feel, in the words of some lawyers, that there is some duplicity here in that we have been asked today to send to the committee a reference having regard to the Elections Act at a time when amendments to the act are before the committee. I hope that the hon. member will bring his concern and grievances to that committee and perhaps suggest amendments, and make an application to have the matter included in the discussion that is already under way in the committee on Bill C-5. He may have done this.

[Mr. Collenette.]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Each of the members on the government side who wish to talk this bill out have referred to Bill C-5 which is in the committee. They are not talking about this bill. If the hon. member who has the floor is serious about what he wants, he will allow the subject matter of this bill to be referred to the committee where it will join Bill C-5. He will then have what he wants, and we will have the subject matter referred. Please do not talk out the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. This is not a point of order, it is a point of debate.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): The hon. member has put forth his views, and I think I have the right to put my views forward so far as this bill is concerned. He referred in his summation to the motion put forward by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott), for whom I have the greatest respect since her election. She has provided those services to the people of her constituency which all of us feel should be provided to the people whom we represent. What this bill does is to change the length of time—

Mr. Gillies: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to interrupt my friend but I wonder if he realizes that the chairman of the committee has already said that, from his point of view, he would like to see the subject matter of this bill referred to the committee. I am very concerned that he will talk the bill out by mistake.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Perhaps the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) wishes to accuse me of something, but I have every right to make a few points about the bill before us.

One point that has certainly not been made is that the bill refers to 120 days. It is stated in the bill:

> In the event of a vacancy occuring, a writ shall be issued within 60 days after the receipt by the Chief Electoral Officer of the warrant for the issue of a new writ for the election of a member of the House of Commons.

Then it states:

> At a by-election, the day upon which the poll is held shall be not later than 60 days—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is wrong with that?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I am not saying anything is wrong with it, but it ties it down pretty well to 120 days from the time Mr. Speaker announces that a vacancy has occurred. I will give you an example right now of what would happen if the bill were in effect. As you may or may not be aware, if a vacancy had been announced by Mr. Speaker today, November 25, the election would have to take place 120 days from today, which falls on Sunday, March 26. Is the hon. member saying we should have elections on Sundays, on civic holidays, or on Christmas Day?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It says "within 60 days".

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): It also says 120 days. The Elections Act states a date, but this amends the Elections Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Elections Act states it must be held on a Monday.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Yes, but the bill states 120 days, 60 days after the receipt by the Chief Electoral Officer of the warrant for a new writ, and also for a by-election, 60 days after the day on which the writ is issued. I object to such a specific date. I believe that if the bill were forwarded to the committee, then we might be confronted with the possibility of an election being held on a Sunday or a civic holiday, and we would have no way of getting around that. We have spoken about political expediency. I admit that at least three opposition members have arrived in the House as a result of by-elections—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock—

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I say, since you have called it five o'clock, that it is regrettable that the Liberal party wants to talk this bill out and play down the role of free, democratic elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next, at 2 o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO SAFETY OF OPERATIONS IN NORTHERN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of this morning's report on the study compiled by MOT into the violations of aviation rules in Canada, and in particular northwestern Ontario; and in light of the statements made by the minister that after conducting an internal inquiry into flying procedures in northern Ontario he would launch a public inquiry, if warranted, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House urge the Minister of Transport to honour his commitment and immediately call a public inquiry into the conditions under which aircraft operate in Canada in general and in northwestern Ontario in particular.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent of the House pursuant to Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SUGGESTION SOLICITOR GENERAL BE RESPONSIBLE FOR OPERATING POLICY OF SECURITY SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Last week the Solicitor General announced a number of administrative changes within the upper echelons of the security service force to ensure greater control over security activities. This new administrative structure is seriously deficient, however, in that it makes no specific provision for the Solicitor General to provide policy direction or input into the operational policy committee. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House requests that the Solicitor General consider revising or enlarging the structure of the operational policy committee to provide direct consultation between the committee and the Solicitor General; and that this House further directs that this committee hold frequent and meaningful meetings so that the Solicitor General is made both responsible and accountable for the operating policy of the security service.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSAL THAT SAFETY REGULATIONS BE MORE STRICTLY ENFORCED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the allegations made by two investigators for the Department of Transport that aviation safety across Canada, and particularly in northwestern Ontario, is being jeopardized by the department's failure to adequately enforce air regulations and take action against companies and individuals routinely engaged in illegal and dangerous air practice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the Minister of Transport to immediately stop the situation in which senior officials of his department are effectively stopping attempts of regional safety officers from applying disciplinary action in order to enforce safety regulations; and furthermore, urges the minister to stop the current practice in which aviation firms and individuals in the north break the law and endanger the lives of employees and passengers.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INCOME TAX

REASON FOR FAILURE TO COLLECT TAXES OWED BY JOHN DOYLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the fact that one John Christopher Doyle, a fugitive from justice in the United States of America and in Canada, who lately became a citizen of Panama, was reassessed for large amounts of income tax relating to the 1950 and 1954 taxation years, owing the government as at December 31, 1976, $3,483,412; and in view of the fact that he was not obliged by the government to pay the tax and interest before launching appeals to the Income Tax Appeal Board, the federal court of Canada and the Supreme Court of Canada, or even required to provide bank guarantees, bonds or proper security to cover the amounts claimed, while ordinary honest Canadians must pay up before they can even enter appeals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That the Minister of National Revenue make a statement on motions detailing the reasons for the tender tax treatment and lax Liberal treatment given John Christopher Doyle from 1950 to the present date, as compared to the hard treatment given the ordinary honest Canadian taxpayer, and explain the reason for failure to act against John Christopher Doyle while he was a resident of Canada from 1950 to 1974.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion at this time pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST THAT ICEBREAKER BE BERTHED IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The persistent perennial ice conditions will again face Newfoundland fishermen and shipping to northern Newfoundland in the months from December to March, and past experience shows clearly that icebreaker vessels in Halifax are too distant to provide the service required, causing hindrance and loss of income to fishermen. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That the government give immediate consideration to the deployment of icebreaking vessels to Newfoundland during the months indicated, and further, that any new vessels in work be designated for that province.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

CONGRATULATIONS TO TWO GREY CUP TEAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important question of pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That this House congratulate the two Grey Cup finalists for the exceptional entertainment they provided yesterday at the Olympic Stadium, especially the Montreal Alouettes who have shown without the shadow of a doubt that the Canadian metropolis has the best football team in the country.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SUGGESTED PROHIBITION OF PROPOSED ELIMINATION OF EXPRESS SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas it is the intention of the CNR to gradually eliminate its express service as demonstrated by the lay-off of 360 employees in that department in the next few weeks, and the probable lay-off of hundreds more in the next couple of years, and whereas this decision will mean not only unemployment but that the goods which until now had been moved by the fuel efficient railways, will in the future be moved by air or truck which will use substantially more of our scarce oil and gas I therefore move:

That this House urges the CNR to stop its planned elimination of its express department.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DIRECTORATE-GENERAL OF SPECIAL URBAN PROJECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of recent changes which have occurred within the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs, changes carried out without any reference to parliament, and in light of uncertainties which still exist after questioning of the minister on November 25, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs make an immediate statement on motions to confirm whether there is a branch called the directorate-general of Special Urban Projects, and whether that specific directorate has a budget of $29 million, and what the specific responsibilities of that directorate are.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT OBJECTING TO FORMER OFFICERS BRUNET AND McCLEARY GIVING EVIDENCE TO KEABLE COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose it was the game yesterday that prevented the Solicitor General from being here today, but in his absence I would like to direct a question to the Acting Solicitor General, namely, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and ask him a question concerning the judgment handed down a couple of days ago by the Associate Chief Justice of the province of Quebec which indicates that truth cannot be kept in cold storage for long. Among other things, it states:

In a democratic society, public interest demands that the citizen be informed of activities and functions of his government. Only serious reasons can justify an exception to this rule; the security of the state can be one but the law must be respected.

Then it goes on to say:

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I realize that these gentlemen have not read the judgment, or they may have read it and are afraid of what is coming. It goes on to say:

... I am not disposed to paralyze, even temporarily, the functioning of a commission of inquiry whose object is to enlighten the public.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think there is a limit to how much of the judgment the right hon. member can read. I would suggest he put his question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, do you feel it has been identified sufficiently for hon. members opposite. Now that the court has decided that security is not in issue, and in view of the fact that two officers who allegedly committed offences, namely McCleary and Brunet, are about to give evidence today before the commission, as acting minister will the minister raise any objection to the giving of evidence, however embarrassing it might be to the government?

● (1417)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is up to the commission to determine who it calls as witnesses. It is not up to the government to determine that. If called, these officers will answer questions, subject to their own inclinations as to oaths or any applications or actions the Solicitor General may take before the commission or before the courts.

POSSIBILITY OF OBJECTION TO FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL GIVING EVIDENCE TO KEABLE COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice was one of the two applicants, along with the Solicitor General, who did everything he could to prevent the Keable Commission from hearing witnesses for a period of ten days. Under all the circumstances, and he being the custodian of the Queen's conscience, if the Solicitor General, the former Solicitor General who is now the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the further penultimate one, the Minister of Supply and Services, are called to give evidence before that commission, will they give evidence, or will they endeavour to hide the truth by not saying anything?

Hon Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, neither of them has been called as witnesses as far as I know, so that is a hypothetical question. As to the latter part of the question, of course that is not the intention of the government or any of the ministers in it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, as the government seems to regard truth in this connection as unfit for human consumption, I am just wondering whether the government or the Minister of Justice is going to take a decision, or has, that these witnesses shall not give evidence. Further, I would like to ask the minister whether in launching these proceedings before the Associate Chief Justice of the province of Quebec it was done because of the fact that these two witnesses whose names I have already mentioned would be giving evidence today or tomorrow. Was it to keep their mouths shut that the motion in question was made?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker. The writ of revocation makes it clear that it relates to a number of subpoenas that were issued by the commission relating to a number of documents which in our view do not relate to criminal activities in the province of Quebec but to the operation of a federal institution within the province and sometimes without the provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So the witnesses will give evidence.

KEABLE COMMISSION—POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER ACTION TO PREVENT HEARINGS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the acting minister who, according to the Journals branch, is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. However, I suppose pro tem it is the Minister of Justice. Is it the intention of the government to appeal the decision of Mr. Justice Hugessen, or in the alternative is the government contemplating any further action, be it legal or political, in an attempt to inhibit the operation of the Keable Inquiry and, if so, what is the nature of that contemplated action?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to answer that at the moment because we are consulting with counsel.

OPERATIONAL POLICY COMMITTEE—REASON FOR LACK OF DIRECTION BY MINISTER

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I will move on to something with which perhaps the minister is more familiar. In a statement last week the Solicitor General indicated what he considered to be some very important operational changes within the security service, one of which was called, I believe, a policy advisory committee to be chaired by the commissioner and to be composed of the commissioner, deputy commissioners and the director general of the security service. Can the acting minister explain why in creating this new policy structure there appears to be no input whatsoever from the Solicitor General? Is it the position of the Solicitor General that that committee should operate in a vacuum without direct input from his office?

● (1422)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. It has been made clear by the statement of the Solicitor General, and in the evidence placed before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, that such a committee is to assist the commissioner in exercising his functions under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. Obviously, as has also been made clear by the Solicitor General and the Prime Minister, from time to time policy directions and mandates are issued by the government to the commissioner of the RCMP but the changes announced by the Solicitor General last week relate to administrative changes within the RCMP to assist the commissioner in carrying out his functions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, a point of order with respect to question period.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will hear the hon. member at three o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a question that he feels I must deal with now?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I will not take up too much of the time of the House. I raise it now because the government has designated acting ministers to answer on behalf of ministers who are not present in the House. The names have been tabled with the Journals branch of the House of Commons, they have been approved by Cabinet and designated as such. The designated acting minister, in the absence of the Solicitor General, is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. From what has happened today we may take it that anyone in the Cabinet can answer questions and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs can avoid his responsibility to answer questions with respect to matters within the purview of the Solicitor General. I will be glad to present this matter to Your Honour for consideration. The fact is, however, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who is acting Solicitor General sits mute and refuses to answer questions that we want to put to him as Acting Solicitor General.

I think this is a valid point of order. If the minister has something to hide I should like to know what it is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can perhaps give this matter consideration at another time. I am not aware of a rigid requirement that a list be published designating acting ministers.

An hon. Member: It has been, for years.

Mr. Speaker: In the first place the practice involved in designating an acting minister is one that might change from day to day and is probably one which may in any event be beyond the purview of pure procedure and be one of Cabinet.

In any case, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has raised the point and I shall extend the question period by the two or three minutes he took then I can deal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that if the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar had a serious point of order to argue it was proper that he raise it before questions were put to the minister involved. I do not think there is aything untoward in the hon. member raising the point at this time. If it has any validity it should be dealt with before further questions are put. On the face of it, however, I do not think the matter has sufficient validity for me to rule on it at the present time. I shall be glad to look at the list, examine the practices, and see if there are any guidelines I can set down for future practice.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO SAFETY OF OPERATIONS IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The study of aircraft safety in northwestern Ontario as reported in today's Globe and Mail appears to warrant a royal commission to study aviation safety in all areas outside the metropolitan area, and in particular northwestern Ontario. In light of the fact that of 33 per cent of commercial aircraft accidents in Ontario, 20 per cent of the total occur in northwestern Ontario which contains less than 10 per cent of the aircraft in the province and only 3 per cent of the population, is it the minister's intention to establish a royal commission without delay?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I intend to look at the report very carefully to see which areas require further action. Some action has already been taken regarding the enforcement of regulations but it may well be that broader questions arise which should be pursued and I will be trying to reach a decision on that as soon as possible.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON SAFETY OF OPERATION AND CRASH OF DC-3 AT PICKEL CROW

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): As a result of the report by William Slaughter and Andrew Carswell indicating that the policing of air regulations was so inadequate that numerous illegal and dangerous practices are common enough to be accepted as normal by pilots and company managers, is the minister now prepared to release the findings of a departmental inquiry into the death last May of a pilot whose DC-3 crashed on takeoff at Pickel Crow and precipitated this general investigation of air safety in northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, those are two quite separate questions. It had already been apparent to us that additional inspection officers are indeed required in this area and in other parts of the country. We will be taking steps to acquire those officers, in that way meeting some of the allegations in the most recent report that we are unable at the present time to enforce adequately. We will clearly want to respond to that in the most effective way, that is by obtaining additional staff and enforcing the regulations.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER CURTAILED INVESTIGATION INTO SAFETY OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Was it at the minister's direction that H. R. Finlay, the Acting Deputy Director General of Civil Aviation, instructed the two investigators to maintain an open and visible profile and to curtail the investigation by 30 days, an investigation brought about by James Snow, the Ontario minister of transport, who believed that air safety was being totally neglected by the departmental officials in that area?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. It was not my instruction. I should make clear to the hon. member that the request for an inquiry came from many quarters in the north, including members of parliament on this side of the House from that area. I responded to them by asking for this investigation which has obviously brought a lot of facts forward.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO HOLD PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO SAFETY OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. On July 20, page 7825 of Hansard, in response to a question about the investigation we are talking about, the minister replied:

I am willing to say that if that investigation reveals the need for a more formal inquiry, I will be happy to see that that is undertaken as well.

We on this side would like to see a public inquiry into this matter. What are the reasons the minister is giving for not holding an inquiry?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not giving any reasons for not holding the inquiry. I said to the hon. member for Timiskaming that the obvious course for me to follow is to read the report, which I have not done, and then form a judgment on the matters that may require further inquiry.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON SAFETY OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Given the event that there may be a public inquiry, and hopefully there will be, will the minister after reading the investigator's report table it in the House of Commons so that all parties may be privy to the information?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly see how I can make as much information as possible available to hon. members. I am sure hon. members appreciate that there may be certain allegations in the report referring to individuals which may not be adequately based in a way which protects the rights of those individuals, but that will indeed be my main consideration in determining what should be made public.

GRAIN

MEASURES TO PROTECT QUEBEC PRODUCERS FROM EFFECTS OF REMOVAL OF FEED GRAIN SUBSIDY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Subsequent to the removal of the grain transport subsidy in Quebec, the federal government will be saving a total of $30 million. Could the minister tell the House whether any other measures favourable to farm producers will be taken so that they will not be penalized by the removal of that transport subsidy?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are studying ways and means of making the payments direct to the producers and users of feed grains who are concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the House whether he has been in touch with his Quebec counterpart to see if it would be possible to adopt replacement measures following a federal-provincial agreement? In the affirmative, did Quebec refuse any agreement or did the federal government find the proposal unsuitable?

● (1432)

[English]

Mr. Whelan: We made a similar proposal to the one we made to the Province of Ontario which has been in effect for several months. The administration is mostly looked after by the province of Ontario. We submit the cheques to the farmers who are participating in the program. We have made practically the same proposition to Quebec but they have refused to accept it.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this matter, could the minister say exactly to whom these proposals have been made in Quebec? Did he receive an answer? Will eastern Quebec producers receive in the near future at least the equivalent of transportation subsidies they used to get?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: The earlier discussions were held between the minister of agriculture from Quebec and myself at the provincial minister's meetings which took place in Victoria in July. Since that time proposals have been made at the deputy ministers level in Ottawa and in Quebec. For the life of me, I cannot understand why they will not accept a program which is practically the same as the one accepted by Ontario which is working very well. If our efforts continue to meet with no success, we intend to proceed with this program, as I said, by dealing directly with the farmers in some way.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REASON FOR ELIMINATING FRAUD SQUAD—POSSIBILITY OF REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the closing down of the special unemployment insurance commission fraud squad, an organization which under a personal mandate from the Prime Minister had by 1975 achieved an excellent record of discovering UIC rip-offs resulting from a wide range of criminal behaviour. Will the minister tell us exactly why his predecessor, now President of the Treasury Board, closed down this program, particularly in the light of the strong support it had from the Solicitor General of the day and from the RCMP?

[Mr. Whelan.]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with this area of the operation. I will look into the matter and get an answer for the hon. member. I would say we have been very effective in this particular area. Perhaps it was a question of administering this operation from a central point with the idea of doing a more effective job than we have been doing. I might add that the amount of fraud in connection with that fund is negligible.

Mr. McKenzie: Would the minister care to refute charges made to me by officials that the program was shut down because it was becoming a political embarrassment to the government and, in particular, to the minister responsible? Would he also tell the House whether he plans to reinstate the program, especially having regard to evidence by the Auditor General that $158 million of the $4 billion the taxpayer spends on UIC is being chiselled by those who have no right to the money?

Mr. Cullen: First of all, as to that being the reason, it is absolute claptrap and there is no truth in it at all. As to the second part of the question, I think the hon. member does a disservice to those collecting unemployment insurance. In point of fact, the Auditor General did not say what the hon. member has attributed to him. He indicated that the figure was somewhere around $95 million—he thought it was possible that such a figure might be involved. We have worked very closely with the Auditor General. He has done an absolutely first class job; he intends to monitor the improvements we have made in developing an even more effective administrative force, and to see that not only do we get the funds out to those who are entitled to them but that we check off those who are receiving money when they should not be. Again, I believe the hon. member does a disservice to those who are receiving unemployment insurance by suggesting there is a massive rip-off when there is not.

Mr. McKenzie: Inasmuch as the fraud squad did an excellent job by exposing the UIC gouging and criminal activity, which the Auditor General noted nearly two years after the squad had been disbanded, will the minister, if he wants to be of real service, now reinstate the special investigation division immediately?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO AID

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It follows the line of questioning we were putting to him last Friday concerning the unfortunate level of unemployment we have been experiencing lately, certainly in particular regions of Canada. My question today has to do with unemployment in the construction industry which, nationally, is 18 per cent at the present time, ranging as high as 30 per cent in provinces such as New Brunswick and Newfoundland. Is the minister aware of the plight of the construction industry and does he have in mind any specific measures to help the construction industry out of the difficulties in which it finds itself?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation which is rather difficult not only in that area but also in other realms of the Canadian economy. Of course, one month ago we made in the House of Commons an economic statement establishing economic policies for Canada, and we have no change to bring to this policy at the present time.

[English]

MINISTER'S VIEW OF PROGRESS NEXT YEAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): The minister has referred to his economic statement of October 20. At that time he indicated he was counting on a real growth in the value of exports and a real business investment growth in order to give us better results in 1978. As current figures released today show, there has been a decline in each of these fields, that there is less economic growth in both exports and business investment than in the first quarter of 1976, would the minister tell us whether now, a month later, he is still confident about economic progress next year?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are positive factors in the economy. For example, this year we shall have a considerable trade surplus of $2.5 billion in our balance of payments, which is an improvement over the level of $1 billion we had last year. In the third quarter of this year we had an increase in the gross national income, which we did not see in the second quarter. I think we are on the way to an economic recovery which will come later, and that of course is the lot of several world economies at this time.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, only the present Minister of Finance could take any comfort out of a figure of 2.5 per cent real growth on an annual basis. Is the minister aware of the survey done this fall by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which indicates there will be less business investment next year than this year and, if so, why does his department continue its optimistic tone?

Mr. Chrétien: I think the increase in investment would be greater if we could pass Bill C-11 which would give incentives to the private sector of the economy and which is stalled by the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

PROPOSAL FOR MORE CONSULTATION PRIOR TO MASSIVE LAY-OFFS BY INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour? In view of the announcement this fall by INCO and other large companies of massive lay-offs without prior consultation with the unions or the governments concerned, does the hon. gentleman plan to require companies to furnish more adequate notification and carry out consultation with the unions and governments involved before decisions on mass lay-offs are taken?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Under the Labour Code there are ways in which we can examine with business and labour what is needed in the way of information and we are looking into this to see whether this type of situation could be alleviated and could be prevented from recurring to the extent it did in connection with INCO.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF PENSIONS FOR PERSONS IN NEED BETWEEN AGES 60 AND 65

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have delayed asking this question for a few weeks in order that the minister could get used to administering her department. I hope she is now ready. In view of the growing number of persons between 60 and 65 years of age, most of them spinsters and widows, who express utter disbelief that there is an allowance for spouses but nothing for persons of single status, will the minister take the necessary steps to see that an equivalent allowance is made available to all persons between the ages of 60 and 65 who need it, regardless of their marital status?

● (1442)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In view of the current state of our economy and the restraints the government wants to place on public spending, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel it would be fair on my part to lead people to hope for the introduction in the near future of a universal benefit program for persons between 60 and 65 years of age. As other hon. members, however, I feel that some guaranteed income arrangement should be implemented on a selective basis to take care of this group of people, but, I repeat, it would be only on a selective basis.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the minister that I did not ask for universal benefits between ages 60 and 65, but simply for those who need it regardless of their marital status. In view of the fact that she is talking about a guaranteed income arrangement for persons between ages 50 and 65, and in view of the fact it will take some time before she gets around to implementing that, could she not now make a beginning by providing such benefits for persons between 60 and 65, as I say, regardless of marital status?

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: I beg the hon. member to forgive my error of interpretation, and I thank him for his clarification. In the studies which we have already made public, we have identified three groups which are particularly vulnerable to economic conditions, and one of them is the age group of people between ages 55 and 64. We have not yet completed the studies concerning the priorities which exist amongst those people, such as the people between ages 60 and 65 mentioned by the hon. member who are not entitled to the allowance for a spouse which Parliament has adopted, as well as, for instance, single parent families or workers who draw the minimum income.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Please do something soon.

DENIAL OF PENSIONS TO WIDOWS UNDER AGE 65—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that spouses of old age pensioners between ages 60 and 65 are being discriminated against when the husband dies at over age 65, is it the minister's intention now to overcome that inequity which exists, and what action is she going to take to overcome this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when I was first appointed to the department, I was briefed on that question of a retired person's spouse, aged between 60 and 64, which originates from an improvement which the whole House, after lengthy debates, passed in favour of a retired person's spouse who has reached retirement age when the spouse is between the ages of 60 and 64. No doubt an injustice is being done to single persons or persons living alone or those who are widowers or widows between ages 60 to 64. But we have set priorities on the various social expenses throughout the country. I am working on this question of this at least practical problem which exists when a person having received pension benefits for at least one or two years loses his or her companion. We are considering the first results which have come out after two or three years of application of that legislation. I cannot answer the question for the time being.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF PROVISION DISCRIMINATING AGAINST HOUSEWIVES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, given the commendable objectives of the minister, is she now prepared to take this discriminatory provision out of the Canada Pension Plan; that is the discrimination against housewives and those who stay at home to look after families? Is she now prepared to give them equal rights under the Canada Pension Plan.

Miss Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must have been absent from this House a few months ago when this parliament passed the Canada Pension Plan provisions eliminating discrimination of housewives while raising children.

FEDERAL PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DATE ON WHICH ECONOMIC CONFERENCE WILL BE CONVENED

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to either the acting Prime Minister or the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. Given the worsening economic situation in the country which is highlighted by cruel unemployment figures, and given the fact that this government on its own has done little to alleviate the situation, how quickly does the government intend to convene a federal-provincial economic summit to which the Prime Minister referred on Friday? Will it take place before the end of this current calendar year or in the first few weeks of 1978?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister has already indicated that such a conference was being considered. I would like to point out to the hon. member that she must have been absent from the House on many occasions in recent months because she would know that we have proposed a number of economic measures to assist the unemployed and stimulate our economy.

As to the meeting, it will not likely be held before Christmas because the Prime Minister must complete his consultations with his provincial counterparts early in December, but it will probably take place during the first months of 1978.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister could be a little more specific as to dates, because surely the government must know at this point whether such a conference is to take place within the next two months, or is it really the government's intention to postpone any such action until late spring or early summer when the brutal unemployment picture of the present winter is fully upon us?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member is so concerned about the late spring or early summer.

Miss MacDonald: Because we have a winter to go through.

Mr. Lalonde: I would like to tell her that consultations are taking place at the present time between the Prime Minister and the premiers of the various provinces. In addition, there likely will be additional consultations required among other ministers, such as the ministers of finance, before such meetings can take place.

Miss MacDonald: It sounds like next summer.

Mr. Lalonde: We are planning these meetings in a very serious way, and if they are to be productive, we want them to take place in a productive atmosphere. In this way we hope to make sure they produce results and not just play up to the gallery, as the hon. member would like to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MULTICULTURALISM

POSSIBLE PHASING OUT OF PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Multiculturalism). In view of the fact there have been drastic cuts in grants and contributions to multicultural groups, from a sum of $8.02 million in 1975-76 to $3.94 million in 1976-77, with an anticipated further reduction for this fiscal year, can the minister tell the House whether his government is really sincere in carrying on a program of multiculturalism, or has the government somehow bowed to pressure to curtail and finally phase out the multiculturalism program?

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt at all as to the government's firm commitment to the policy of multiculturalism in Canada. Secondly, the figures the hon. member uses in terms of alleged decline in funding, in my view, do not reflect the facts. In addition, there is a great deal more to be done for multicultural communities in this country than simply the spending of money. We have a need for a tremendous impact right across this nation of an over-all government policy, and that is equally important as funding, per se.

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's reply, that the government is supposedly still sincere about a multicultural policy and its importance, could he explain why the minister is not devoting his full time to the portfolio instead of serving as well as deputy house leader?

POTATOES—REPRESENTATIONS FROM PRODUCERS CONCERNING PRICE

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Agriculture inform this House whether he has received representations from either the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island or the potato producers in respect of federal support for that industry in view of the very low price producers are now receiving for their potatoes?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I have or have not received such representation. I can inform the hon. member that the stabilization board has been keeping an accurate account of the prices received by the potato producers in the Maritimes as well as in the rest of Canada. We are very much concerned that they receive at least the cost of production, and we know that in some instances they are not. It appears that the stabilization board will have to adopt some formula for government assistance to meet this obligation to the producers.

FINANCE

PROPOSAL TO ALLOW COMPANIES TO WRITE OFF CAPITAL AND CURRENT EXPENDITURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This country has now become the world's largest per capita importer of manufactured products, the ones that produce jobs. It is obvious there must be a great deal more industrial research in this country if we are to make our products more competitive in price, quality and design, and if we are to be capable of selling in larger quantities and producing the needed jobs. I should like to ask the minister if he will give serious consideration to allowing companies to write off 200 per cent of all current and capital expenditures made in excess of those of the previous year, as a means of inducing the additional industrial research which this country so badly needs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I take notice of the hon. member's representation. Of course, the budget which has been brought before the House, that is Bill C-11, contains incentives for research and development which it would be useful to adopt without delay.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Considering that for some months now unemployed people have been satisfactorily completing their cards, specially in northeastern Quebec where the unemployment rate is as high as 14.5 per cent, and since those cards are directed towards the Montreal data center which rejects satisfactorily completed cards, thus causing a two or three month delay before payment, is the minister aware of that and is he contemplating taking a corrective measure, and when?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his suggestion. We have to examine the situation and if it is necessary to improve the situation, we will act accordingly.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us when he will be ready to consider this problem and try to solve it? As I mentioned earlier, some people have been waiting for two or three months; the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission tell them that their forms were indeed filled in properly, yet nothing happens. Will the minister also take two or three months to look into and rectify the situation or is he willing to do so this week?

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCIAL ATTORNEYS GENERAL ON EFFECTS OF CIGOL JUDGMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice to whom I gave notice. It concerns the Canadian Industrial Gas and Oil Company and the government of Saskatchewan, a case which is in the Supreme Court of Canada. In view of the fact that it has great ramifications affecting interprovincial trade and the golden thread of unity in the country, I wonder if the Minister of Justice would be prepared to bring together the attorneys general of the various provinces, particularly when the case held "it is contended that both the mineral income tax and the royalty surcharge constitute indirect tax," and therefore falls within the jurisdiction of the federal government and not the provinces? I ask this question in light of the anxiety in provinces like Alberta with its oil and gas; the British Columbia mines; Ontario and its nickel; and whatever province one wants to mention. It is a great concern in reference to provincial relations.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is somewhat premature for me to initiate such meetings at the present time. The government of Saskatchewan obviously is considering this case and the ramifications of it very carefully, and I take it from press reports, it will make a decision very shortly.

The Prime Minister will meet with the premier of Saskatchewan next week, and undoubtedly this will be a matter of discussion. Some time ago I met with the attorney general of Saskatchewan relative to this case; but at that point there was no decision and, therefore, we were unable to resolve what should be done.

As I said, it would be premature at this time, until the government of Saskatchewan has determined its position. However, I want to emphasize, while the case and the decision is a very important one, it deals essentially with the question and difference between direct and indirect taxation. In my view it does not affect the provincial ownership or management of resources. Those parts of the decision upholding conservation measures which Saskatchewan implemented clearly indicate that.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, this decision affects legislation relating to regulations in interprovincial trade. The minister said that any discussion may be premature at this time, but trade is still going on between the provinces. Therefore, I put this question very seriously to the Minister of Justice. This is one of the problems in reference to holding this country together. In light of the anxiety in provinces like British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario and Quebec, will he now bring together the attorneys general of the various provinces and discuss this case in light of its ramifications affecting confederation?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, again I think that would be premature, until the government of Saskatchewan has first had an opportunity to consider the judgment and to consider its position in determining what action it is going to take.

The hon. member referred to anxiety in other provinces. In the last week I have not heard from one provincial attorney general on this decision. Currently, the Prime Minister is meeting with provincial premiers and will meet with the premier of Saskatchewan, as I have indicated, next week and the discussions will include this subject.

POSSIBILITY OF APPEALING DECISION IN CASE OF PATRICK HAUSER AND TERRY STEINKE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice which concerns the legal and constitutional conflicts in the administration of justice. Can he indicate whether his department has decided to appeal the case of Patrick Hauser and Terry Steinke that was dealt with by the Alberta court of appeal last month, which had as its main ratio that the Attorney General of Canada cannot embark on prosecutions or preferred indictments in a province without the written consent of the provincial attorney general? I wonder if his department will appeal this very important judgment?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yes, we are. It is an important judgment. However, it appears to us that it varies with similar judgments such as Regina and Pelletier in the Ontario court of appeal. Therefore, we will be appealing it. In the meantime, we have made interim arrangements with the attorney general of Alberta to initiate prosecutions under the Narcotics Control Act.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would indicate whether he sees any jurisdictional problems with regard to this precedent, assuming the appeal is upheld? With regard to the Official Secrets Act, does he see any jurisdictional problems based upon this precedent?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, not at the moment.

GRAIN

WHEAT—POSSIBILITY OF FINAL PAYMENT IN JANUARY—EFFECT OF DEPRECIATION OF DOLLAR ON PAYMENTS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the statement of Mr. Demers of the Wheat Board, as reported in the press, that all the wheat Canada has available has been sold at approximately $2.20 a bushel, a price that was below the cost of production, can the minister indicate if there is any possibility of a final payment this January? More importantly, will there be anything available in January of 1979 for this present crop year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is too early to talk about a final payment for a crop year a year away. That quoted statement has no real bearing in relation to the facts. On the other hand, in regard to this crop year, while we expect to announce the actual figures within the next few weeks, there will be definitely a final payment for CW spring wheats as well as for Durum wheat.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, in view of the depreciation of the Canadian dollar against foreign currencies such as the yen at 33 per cent and the mark at something the same, will producers benefit for wheat already contracted for in this present crop year; or will they not receive the benefit of this depreciation?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, many of our sales are made in terms of United States dollars. The depreciation of the American dollar compared to our dollar obviously increases the number of Canadian dollars being received for that wheat. Each case depends upon the contractual situation. However, in the course of the last five or six months the price of wheat has risen from its low point at $2.86 to the present level of around $3.70.

WHEAT—DATE OF DECISION ON INCREASE IN DOMESTIC PRICE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same minister. It arises out of the government position with respect to a decision it is taking with respect to the increase in the level of prices under the provisions of the two-price wheat act. Having regard to the fact that on July 14 the minister, in response to a question which I posed to him in the House, indicated that extensive discussions had been taking place with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and other producer groups about the proposals to increase the price of wheat for domestic consumption, and in light of the fact that input costs have risen between 30 per cent and 35 per cent, which is provided for under the two-price legislation, can the minister tell the House when the government intends to make a decision with respect to an increase in the two-price wheat system and, if so, how great will that increase be?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Following discussions with producer organizations, the matter has been before the government for a considerable length of time. I am now hoping we can bring our analysis to a conclusion and then make an announcement which would include details as to amount.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister indicate whether that decision will be taken before the end of this year?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that should happen.

PRIVILEGE

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar wishes to raise a point of order, and I have notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton on the same subject.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to reiterate the point I made during the question period. I think it is a matter of some importance and urgency on which a decision should be made. The fact is that we have a situation where the Solicitor General is not present in the chamber today. He is in Ottawa. I telephoned his office and spoke to his executive assistant three times to tell him that we had questions to put to the Solicitor General which were of substantial importance. I also said that since the minister was in Ottawa, it seemed to me he could well take a few minutes of his time to come to the House. After all, this is one of his primary responsibilities during the course of the parliamentary session. I was met with a negative response, and as a result I checked with the Journals branch and found, to my surprise, that the acting minister designated by order in council is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

It seems to me that when questioners on our side of the House want to put questions within the ambit of departmental responsibility, clearly, by your ruling, we must direct our questions to the minister in charge of the department. But certainly when that minister is absent for whatever reason he deems appropriate, we have the right to expect and demand that the acting minister as shown in the order in council be in his place to answer questions with respect to departmental responsibility. The reason this becomes even more of a pressing issue in this case is that the acting minister designated by order in council has been going around, outside the House of Commons, making statements which have the effect of smearing the RCMP and every officer and constable in that force.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is not merely a member of the cabinet; he is the Acting Solicitor General who makes such statements, and when the opportunity arises for us to ask him questions with respect to his statements outside the House which create damage to the force and to which we take particular exception, he refuses to answer. And now he is walking out of the House when we are raising this matter.

An hon. Member: Arrogance.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, and I will now hear the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton on whether there is any obligation attached to the arrangement respecting acting ministers. That is the point at issue. In any event, we may as well disabuse ourselves of one argument. If the acting minister today, or on any day, had been a former minister in the same department, that would not alter the requirement that questions should be confined to the minister's present capacity, which in that instance would be his acting capacity only. But that is not the argument at issue.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, particularly with respect to that last point, I would ask you to reflect on it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The reason I ask you to reflect on it is that I do not believe it was intended as a ruling, and if it was—I say this with respect—then it was a regrettable ruling.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): But I do not think it was a ruling. On November 18 you determined, again, that we cannot ask ministers questions on matters which are not within their present responsibilities. In the same decision you indicated, in answer to the specific point I had raised, that not only were we bound by the first statement that I have repeated, but we could not even ask a minister whether or not he would be prepared to answer questions with respect to a certain matter unless it was within his present responsibilities.

Now, sir, the questions today were put to the Acting Solicitor General within his existing responsibilities as Acting Solicitor General—not to any other member on the front bench designated by any whim or last-minute decision, but in accordance with order in council No. 1977-2865 passed on October 6, 1977. Just so you will understand the situation, Mr. Speaker—I do not know whether you have had a chance to see it—let me say that under the section dealing with the Solicitor General we see that the minister is shown as being Francis Fox, and the acting minister is shown as being Warren Allmand. The second acting minister, I presume to act in the absence of the first acting minister, is shown as being Stanley Ronald Basford.

What happened in the House of Commons today was that questions were put by two members of the House, the right hon. member for Prince Albert and the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot, to the Acting Solicitor General. In his present capacity, under the order in council of Acting Solicitor General, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—without looking up—made a gesture, pointing to the Minister of Justice. I do not care what he does with his finger, Mr. Speaker, but it is quite important what happens in terms of the responsibility of ministers of the Crown to answer questions. The fact is that the designation of the minister on any day is not whimsical; there has been a studied effort by the government to designate acting ministers to be accountable, to use your words, Mr. Speaker, for their present capacity.

By that order in council, the present capacity of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is with respect to the work of his particular department and also with respect to the functions of the Solicitor General in the absence of the Solicitor General. So we put questions to the Acting Solicitor General in his capacity as Acting Solicitor General. Quite frankly, I think that if the question period is to mean anything, we cannot be prevented from asking the Acting Solicitor General questions relating to his capacity as Acting Solicitor General—and if we are, this would be the third line drawn on our privileges. That point seems to be important.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is misstating what I said. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar indicated that had the questions been answered today, or had the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs answered questions in his capacity as Acting Solicitor General today, he could have been asked questions about his capacity as a former solicitor general. That is the distinction I make.

When he rises to answer in his capacity as Acting Solicitor General he is responsible, equally with the present Solicitor General, for actions in that department for all time, and questions which would have been proper to ask the present Solicitor General about events under previous solicitors general would have been quite proper, but they would have been faced with precisely the same conditions and limitations. None differ. Any minister in an acting minister's capacity represents that minister as fully as he possibly can in the circumstances. There is no distinction there. But the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar was attempting, it seems to me, to indicate that he might have been able to ask questions which were otherwise prohibited, and I think that would not be the case.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I gather the situation is that, even though a minister of the Crown who just happened to be solicitor general at one point and who is now filling in for the Solicitor General could answer all kinds of questions about a prior solicitor general, the person who is the Acting Solicitor General today is limited with respect to his powers and the responsibility he has in an acting capacity, and therefore is not bound to answer. Just so that we understand completely what Your Honour is saying, by juggling acting ministers the ministry has effectively limited the right of the opposition to ask questions about the capacity of a minister who was a full minister in a former capacity and who is now only an acting minister in that capacity.

Mr. Speaker: Let me put it in a positive way so that the record will be clear. Questions which are proper to be put to a minister are the same questions which are proper to be put under all the same conditions to a minister who is acting in that person's stead. It is as simple as that. There is no problem with that. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar put forward a proposition that questions which would have been improper on a previous occasion might have been proper. In any case, whether that was his argument or not, he raised questions about that matter.

To clarify that aspect, questions which would be proper to the present Solicitor General would be proper to another minister acting in his stead. What I am not persuaded of is the basis of the point of order and the question of privilege, which is that there is some binding validity, in a procedural sense, on the Chair with respect to the designation of acting ministers. It is a new point: I have never heard it argued before, and I am prepared to examine the precedents and hear arguments from both sides on it. But that is the basis of the point of order and the question of privilege as I understand it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief comment to make on the very narrow point of order which has been raised. Hon. members are acting under the assumption that the Minister of Justice answered those questions in the capacity of Acting Solicitor General. It is my view that the minister answered those questions pertaining to a lawsuit to which he is a party, in his capacity as Minister of Justice, and he is fully entitled to do so. Therefore, the point of order at this point is without foundation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am still a little confused on one point. If I had put the question to the present Solicitor General, "Will you get the consent of the two former solicitors general to come before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs?", surely that would have been a proper question. If I had put a question to the Acting Solicitor General, he would have been in a dual capacity but he would have been acting as the Solicitor General. It is true he would have had knowledge of the past, but as I could ask questions about the past of the Solicitor General, I do not think we should be denied the right to ask the Acting Solicitor General. That is the point I am making. Surely, if the Solicitor General was asked a simple question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North is pursuing an argument which has been raised by two other members previously. I also participated. However, let us bear in mind that I have attempted to put it as clearly as I possibly can. The conditions under which questions can be put to ministers are precisely the same conditions under which questions can be put to their acting ministers. I do not think I can make it any clearer than that.

Besides that, any argument about what questions could or could not be put to an acting minister are academic to the point raised, because they were never put. The point raised today is whether there is a requirement upon the ministry to put forward the acting minister who is designated by some order as the person to answer questions if a question is directed to the Acting Solicitor General, as was the case today. That is the point at issue. That is the point on which there has been argument from the government side, that questions were not answered in that capacity. More central to the argument, it seems to me, is that if there is no obligation on a minister to answer a question at any time, how can there be an obligation on an acting minister? It seems to me that that is the point I have to sort out: that is the point which is basic.

The other argument is one in which we were involved. Perhaps the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and I were talking at cross-purposes, but it remains an academic problem because it did not take place.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could make one other point. When the Deputy Prime Minister said that the questions were asked of the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Minister of Justice, it is true he was involved in that lawsuit; it is true he was involved in the motion. But the questions were put by distinguished and honourable members to the Acting Solicitor General. That was the minister we wanted to ask, that is the minister we wanted to answer, and the argument put forward by the Deputy Prime Minister was another red herring to hide the truth.

Mr. Speaker: I say, again, that the point has two fundamental aspects. First, is there, by virtue of an order designating acting ministers, an obligation which binds us, in the sense of our procedures, to carry that through the question period in the sense which was argued today? Second, if there cannot be an obligation upon a minister to answer a question during the question period, can I find one on an acting minister? I do not know. I have to examine those aspects to see whether I can give any validity to the arguments put forward.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word further on the narrow point of order as you have so described it? I do so to express the hope that Your Honour will come back with a ruling. If a minister is in the House, none of us would be permitted to ask the acting minister a question; we would be told that the minister is here. I think that, by the same token, if the first acting minister is here and the minister is not, it should not be possible to jump down to the second acting minister. The ex post facto explanation the President of the Privy Council has given us is a very interesting one which is worth studying, but I think on the main point raised there should be a ruling that if a minister is present, he is asked the questions—

Mr. Lalonde: What about his parliamentary secretary?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —but if the first acting minister is here, he should be asked the questions, not the second acting minister.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if I may, occasionally through inadvertence members misdirect questions and the minister who exercises responsibility for the subject matter rises even though the questions are addressed to another minister. That happens occasionally.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is not the case here.

Mr. MacEachen: However, in this case it seems to me that the onus is on the other side. Perhaps hon. members opposite think they ought to decide who should answer for the government in every particular case, regardless of responsibility; but the fact of the matter is that in reply to the question put by the right hon. gentleman, the Minister of Justice answered, in my view, within his capacity as Minister of Justice—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why didn't you say so at the time?

Mr. MacEachen: —because both ministers are parties to the lawsuit. And who is to say—unless it be by some fiat from the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton—that it must be the Solicitor General? Or does he argue that there ought to be a duet and both ought to answer simultaneously? Unless he argues that, either minister is free to answer. I argue that the point of order is really quite theological and more appropriate for theologians than politicians.

● (1522)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I always knew that the hon. Deputy Prime Minister brought great dignity to our proceedings, but dignity beyond ours is new. I will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar as I allowed the Deputy Prime Minister a second intervention.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself briefly to two points. The Deputy Prime Minister entered this debate and indicated that the questions were directed to the government and could be answered by the Minister of Justice. I think Your Honour should bear in mind that there is a real problem to face here. The questions put by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot dealt with the structure of the overview committee on security services, and I would be very surprised if the Minister of Justice could weasle his way into that answer. It was, clearly, a question specifically about the structure announced by the Solicitor General and had nothing to do with the Minister of Justice, even in the broadest theological debate that I could think of.

After dismissing that specious argument on the part of the Deputy Minister, I want to make it abundantly clear—and we may have been at cross-purposes here—that it was not my intention to suggest that a question that otherwise might have been improper could have been asked of an acting minister. I am sorry if I was not as clear as I should have been. The point I was making was that when we have an acting minister, he is the person from whom we ought to hear on questions dealing with departmental responsibility, particularly when they deal with events which happened in that department while he was minister.

When he subsequently appears outside the House and smears the RCMP by suggesting that they have been misleading him, or were coming forward with false information or withholding information, then it becomes particularly important for us to deal with the acting minister, because he not only has the responsibility by order in council but has particular and peculiar knowledge which would enlighten the people of Canada on his reasons for taking the rather unfortunate step of smearing the RCMP.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, on this point of order, the people of this country know who has been smearing the RCMP over the last few weeks. It has been members on the other side of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the frivolous observation of the hon. gentleman who just sat down was made without regard to the facts and is quite in keeping with his usual course of inventing situations and then pretending they are facts. With respect to the argument of the Deputy Prime Minister, I have been here a long while and that is the first time I ever heard a Deputy Prime Minister enunciating theological things,

The devil sick: The devil a saint would be. The devil well: The devil a saint was he.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not in the House. She, either deliberately or unwittingly—and I suspect the latter—misled the House today in reply to a supplementary question which I directed to her. During the course of my question I commended what I call, and I support, the commendable objectives of the minister in broadening the scope of a floor income for Canadians by having a limited sector of those who are drawing certain benefits rationalized into some form of guaranteed annual income.

In the course of the question I asked the minister if she was now prepared to eliminate the discriminatory provisions of the Canada Pension Plan which discriminate against housewives or those who stay at home to look after families. They do not enjoy equal rights under the Canada Pension Plan, which does not recognize the occupation of homemaker for contributions or benefits. In her reply, the minister tried to convey to the House the view that this matter had been dealt with by legislation during the latter part of the last session. It is a fact that some amendments to the Canada Pension Plan were brought in during the latter part of the last session, but this was not one of them. They did not deal with this discriminatory provision of the Canada Pension Plan, and I believe the minister should correct that misleading statement at the first opportunity.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare, may I point out to the hon. member that there is no discrimination in those provisions. What the law provides for at the present time is that every citizen is in the same situation before the Canada Pension Plan—exactly the same.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Lalonde: You have to earn a salary, wages or income in order to be eligible to pay contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. As a matter of fact, it is not an option; you are obliged to contribute. Whether it is a housewife who stays at home, or someone who is not earning wages or a salary, such people are not recipients of Canada Pension Plan benefits. Regarding my hon. colleague's answer to the hon. member, she pointed out that some amendments were made least year to provide for the splitting of credit between spouses at the time of divorce or marriage breakdown. I am sure that is what she meant when she referred to this particular situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. minister did not intentionally mislead the House. There seems to be a variety of interpretations of what she said or intended to say, and I am sure the minister will take the first opportunity to clarify what she said.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—or perhaps it is a question of privilege—I should like to draw to your attention that as I heard the comments of the hon. member for St. John's East, he stated that the minister had either deliberately misled the House or unwittingly misled the House. I do not believe it is possible for any of us to suggest of another hon. member, even as an alternative, that we deliberately mislead the House. I just want to draw that to the hon. member's attention, because I know that was not his purpose.

Miss MacDonald: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. While the Minister of National Health and Welfare may be able to set the record straight on her own part, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations has compounded the situation by stating that the terms of the Canada Pension Plan are not discriminatory; but to many people across this country who contribute to the gross national product—namely, those who work in the home—they are indeed discriminatory—because these people do not have the opportunity to pay into the plan.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure no hon. member wants to precipitate an argument on the merits of the Canada Pension Plan. On the point of order now raised, I am sure the minister will take the first opportunity to clarify the confusion that may have arisen from her reply.

LRPA—PROGRESS PAYMENT

Question No. 138—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was Lockheed Aircraft Corporation paid the progress payment on the LRPA contract of (a) $5,154,000 due on April 30, 1977 (b) $5,585,000 due on May 31, 1977 (c) $5,841,000 due on June 30, 1977 (d) $4,047,000 due on July 31, 1977 (e) $3,907,000 due on August 31, 1977 (f) $7,258,000 due on September 30, 1977?

2. Was Lockheed paid under the contract the (a) third Accomplishment Milestone Payment of $1,487,000 (b) fourth Accomplishment Milestone Payment of $1,274,000?

3. Were any adjustments made to the LRPA contract price at the end of the first, second or third quarters of 1977 in accordance with the formula and conditions set out in Articles 8.1, 8.2, 8.3 and 8.4 of the contract and, if so, what were they?

Order Paper Questions

4. Have the specifications and capabilities of the Comox Data Interpretation and Analysis Centre set out in Article 1.1(1) of the contract been defined and, if so, what is its estimated cost (a) in dollars (b) as a percentage of the cost of the DIAC at Greenwood?

5. Have any modifications been made to the contract, including Progress and Accomplishment Milestone Payments schedules, to accommodate the purchase of the Comox DIAC and, if so, in what manner?

6. Is the purchase of the DIAC being handled separately and, if so, in what manner?

7. Did the contracting authority make changes in the work and specifications, or in the place or time of delivery, of the LRPA System under Article 37 of the contract and, if so, what are they?

8. Did the contractor submit engineering change proposals in accordance with Article 37.2 and, if so, were adjustments made to the contract price in accordance with Article 37.3 and, if so, what were they?

9. Did the Minister arrange with the U.S. Government to make a payment to the U.S. Government for the recovery of non-recurring costs on the P-3C or S-3A and, if so, in what amount?

10. What will be the increase in Canadian dollars required to fulfill Canada's obligations under the terms of the contract at the present Canadian dollar rate of 90 cents US?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. (a) Yes; (b) yes; (c) yes; (d) yes; (e) $4,247,000 paid on August 31, 1977; (f) $7,730,000 paid on September 30, 1977 the payments for August and September reflect increases for changes in the time of delivery of certain work.

2. (a) Yes; (b) yes.

3. Economic price adjustments as follows: (a) third quarter 1976, $70,075 U.S. reduction; (b) fourth quarter 1976, $273,985 U.S. reduction; (c) first quarter 1977, $323,719 U.S. reduction; (d) second quarter 1977, $422,666 U.S. reduction; labour and material indices are not yet available to determine adjustment applicable for third quarter 1977.

4. Yes. (a) To be determined; (b) to be determined.

5. No.

6. To be determined.

7. Yes. Pursuant to Article 37.1 the time of delivery of certain work has been advanced, the Government Supplied Material list has been updated, the Data and Interpretation and Analysis Centre for Greenwood has been re-configured.

8. Yes. Pursuant to Article 37.2 the Contractor has submitted 46 engineering change proposals of which five have been rejected and 33 authorized by the Contracting Authority. Thirty-two of the changes were minor modifications to the specifications causing no increase or decrease in the cost of the work or the time required for its performance. The one remaining authorized change requires an adjustment to the contract price to be determined in accordance with Article 37.3.

9. Yes. $400,000 U.S. per aircraft.

10. Estimated at $71 million.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

NUMBER OF PERSONNEL UNDER CONTRACT TO METRIC COMMISSION

Question No. 227—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the Metric Commission and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): 1. Two persons under contract, no retired public servants under contract.

2. (a) 1975 total amount paid $13,200. (b) 1976 total amount paid $28,781. Nothing paid to retired public servants.

CANADIAN ARSENALS LTD.—PERSONNEL OBTAINED FROM PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 262—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has Canadian Arsenals Ltd. obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by Canadian Arsenals Ltd. in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. (a) No. (b) Yes, (vi) Quebec: one.

2. Main estimates.

3. (i) Not applicable. (ii) (a) $6.40 an hour. (b) Not available. (c) $2,219.19.

ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL—PERSONNEL OBTAINED FROM PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 265—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has the Anti-Dumping Tribunal obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: 1. (a) (i) nil; (ii) nil; (iii) nil; (iv) nil; (iv) nil; (v) 1975: average four to five employees per month. 1976: average three to four employees per month. (vi) nil; (vii) nil; (viii) nil; (ix) nil; (x) nil; (b) (i) nil; (ii) nil; (iii) nil; (iv) nil; (v) nil; (vi) nil; (vii) nil; (viii) nil; (ix) nil; (x) nil.

2. Main estimates.

3. (a) (i) nil; (ii) nil; (iii) nil; (iv) nil; (v) 1975: $7 per hour. 1976: $7 per hour. (vi) nil; (vii) nil; (viii) nil; (ix) nil; (x) nil.

(b) Information not available. (c) (i) 1975: $47,267. (ii) 1976: $15,665.

INTEREST ON NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 348—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. What are the top ten institutions to which interest on the national debt is paid and, in each case, what is the amount?

2. Has interest on the national debt increased since January 1, 1976 and, if so (a) by what amount (b) how much of the increase has gone to the top ten institutions holding Canadian securities?

Mr. Ed. Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Records of interest payments to particular individuals or individual institutions are not maintained. Furthermore, many investors hold their bonds in bearer form. These bonds carry interest coupons which can be clipped and redeemed by the holder on due dates and at any time thereafter. Another factor making the keeping of records of interest payments impractical is that interest is normally due semi-annually while Government of Canada bonds trade continually. When a trade is made the purchaser must pay the vendor the price of the bond plus accrued interest. The following table shows the distribution of holdings of Government of Canada securities as at the end of 1976. The percentage distribution gives a general indication of the share of interest payments received by the various sectors at that time.

Government of Canada Direct and Guaranteed Securities: Distribution of Holdings As at the End of 1976

	Amount	%
Bank of Canada	8,452	20.1
Chartered Banks	8,643	20.5
Government Accounts	852	2.0
Other Canadian Residents Holdings of Market Issues	5,414	12.8
Canada Savings Bonds	16,590	39.4
Non-Residents	2,201	5.2
TOTAL	42,152	100.0

2. (a) On an accrual basis, interest charges on the public debt from January 1, 1976 to September 30, 1977 have amounted to $8,416,165,000. Interest charged on outstanding public debt for the month of December 1975 was $315,383,000 and for the month of September 1977 was $436,069,000. (b) As explained in the answer to question 1, such information is not available.

FOREIGN STAMP DEALERS

Question No. 364—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Do foreign dealers receive commission rates for selling Canadian stamps and, if so (a) what are they (b) on what date were they effective (c) is there a sliding scale based on volume?

2. For each fiscal year since the policy was started, how much money has the Post Office Department (a) received from (b) paid in commission to such dealers?

3. Has the Department taken any measures to monitor such sales to ensure that stamps sold to foreign dealers do not re-enter Canada at less than face value and, if so, what are they?

4. Are there any customs regulations which would prevent their re-entry?

5. (a) For the November 19, 1976 ship stamp issue, how many were sold to foreign dealers (b) taking into account the commissions paid, at how much below face value were the stamps sold?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): 1. Selected foreign distributors receive a commission on the sale of Canadian stamps to foreign dealers and collectors. (a) The commissions range from 10 per cent to 35 per cent. (b) These commissions became effective when the related agreements were first signed in December, 1974. (c) The commissions are paid on a sliding scale based on volume of sales in each fiscal year.

2. (a) and (b)

Fiscal Year	Received	Paid
1974-75	$ 45,480.99	$ 4,548.10
1975-76	462,771.29	68,972.01

3. Yes, independent audits are performed of the sales records of foreign distributors.

4. No.

5. (a) For the November 19, 1976 Ships stamp issue, 211,700 stamps were shipped to our foreign distributors. (b) Stamps are not sold below face value. Moreover, since commissions are based on sales of all postage stamps in a fiscal year, commissions were not, and will not be, payable on the sale of the Ships stamp issue as such.

LEOPARD I TANK

Question No. 556—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Is the Leopard I Tank which Canada has ordered from Germany known as the A3 or A4 model or is it some other model?

2. How many of the Tanks will be equipped with Low Light Television (LLLTV)?

3. What is the horsepower rating of the (a) Leopard I Tank which was ordered (b) Leopard II prototype (c) American AMXI prototype gas turbine motor?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The model is a modified A-3 Model, termed Leopard Tank Canadian 1, abbreviated to Leopard C-1.

2. Ninety-three.

3. (a) 830 horsepower. (b) 1,500 horsepower. (c) 1,500 horsepower.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure whether this is the appropriate time to raise this question, but I would like to ask when certain notices of motions for production of papers will be dealt with. I realize it is not a written question I am referring to, and perhaps you could indicate to me when I can make reference to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: When notices of motions for production of papers are called at this time on Wednesday afternoon, it would be the appropriate time to hear the hon. member.

Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before going into committee of the whole for further deliberation on Bill C-11, I should inform the House at this time that the questions to be raised on the adjournment motion at 6 p.m. are as follows: the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Publishing—Protection of Canadian authors from reproductions of their works imported from United States; the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Social Services—Consultation with provinces on funding—Possibility of legislation this session; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Energy—Newfoundland's offshore oil and gas regulation—Possibility of agreement on question to be put to Supreme Court.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Friday, November 25, consideration in committee of Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Turner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-11, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds. When the committee rose on Friday last, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 1.

● (1536)

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I ask the consent of the House to introduce a series of amendments to Bill C-11. These are amendments of a purely technical nature related to some misprints, translation errors and in some cases to marginal technical errors. I would like to table them immediately to allow hon. members to take notice of these changes before we consider each clause of the bill.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We will take those amendments as notice, and as the clause comes up, we will introduce the motion. Is that agreed?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I do not object to it being done the way it is suggested, that it be taken as notice. But if that is the case, if it is not printed in Hansard could a complete set of them all be supplied to all members? The simpler way would be to put them in Hansard at this point?

Mr. Chrétien: I have absolutely no objection. It is probably the fastest way, and the most appropriate, to have the amendments in the hands of members of the House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Agreed, and so ordered.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for York-Simcoe, on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, when we were dealing with clause 1 on Friday I raised the question of what, in fact, was the relative increase with and without indexing in income tax in relation to the general increase of income itself. At that time the minister stated, as reported at page 1257 of Hansard:

—this is a highly technical question, and I am not in a position to answer it right now. I will get the information and forward it to the hon. member later today.

Subsequently, the minister indicated that he would put on the record of this House exactly what is that relative ratio between income tax and the general increase of personal income both before and after indexing. I was just wondering if the Minister of Finance could be given a chance now to put it on the record.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have here a technical answer to a technical problem, so perhaps I could try to read it. However, it is not in the form of a reply and I will have to adjust accordingly. I am advised by my officials that the same question has been put to my predecessor, as well, on numerous occasions. The hon. member for York-Simcoe has been made aware on these occasions that it is difficult to summarize the responsiveness of federal revenues in terms of one single number, sometimes called "elasticity". For his benefit, let me explain the technical aspects of this concept one more time.

The total growth in income in any given year is composed of three components. These are the growth in the number of taxpayers, the growth in productivity or real per capita income, and the growth in prices. The response of revenues to each of these factors is different. The growth in the number of tax filers has approximately proportional effect on revenues. A 1 per cent growth in real per capita income increases revenues by approximately 1.7 per cent to 1.8 per cent. In the absence of indexing, a 1 per cent growth in prices has the same effect as a 1 per cent growth in real income. However, indexing ensures that the inflation-related growth in income has a proportional effect on revenues. In other words, with indexing, if prices increase by 1 per cent, nominal revenues also increase by the same 1 per cent, thereby leaving the real value of taxes unchanged.

The over-all response of the personal income tax revenues to growth in income is a weighted average of the three factors I have just identified. I indicated in my fiscal statement of October 20 that in a typical year, with 2 per cent growth in productivity, the over-all elasticity of revenues would be about 1.3. This is, of course, variable over time and sensitive to the cyclical state of the economy. Moreover, this elasticity is affected by any new tax changes proposed in a given year.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of clarification, Mr. Chairman, the minister has indicated, or at least created the impression, that this point has been raised several times and he will answer it once again—or has been given a written statement from his officials with a view to answering it. Is it not true that this is the first time this question has ever been asked? Any other time it has been raised, it has not been raised in this House but in an in camera session.

Mr. Chrétien: I am not in a position to give any more explanation. I was not the minister at that time. The hon. member said this question was debated before. I do not know whether it was here, or elsewhere, in camera. With the new minister, he is right in the open.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, in connection with this bill which is now in committee, it is, of course, to collect income tax from the long-suffering taxpayers of Canada. I believe, if my figures are correct, that in 1975 there were 12,200,000 returns filed of personal income tax, of which 8.5 million were taxable returns, and that the amount collected in income tax excluded Canada pension and unemployment insurance; premium payments that year were $15.69 billion. I might be out a billion or two, but what is a billion or two to the Minister of Finance? He would not even miss a billion. Mr. Howe said, "What's a million?" and this Minister of Finance will say, "What's a billion?". But I will let him speak for himself.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Minister of Finance on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I object to the remarks of the hon. member. I never said: What's a billion! He is the one who said that and it is obviously a very arrogant attitude from a former finance minister of Newfoundland who did not have very often the opportunity of seeing $1 billion during the time he was in office.

● (1542)

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance is becoming very sensitive. I can understand why. He has already made thousands of mistakes in his short tenure as Minister of Finance. He cannot make too many more that will not be recognized. I agree he did not say, "What's a billion". He positively did not. In 1976, the figures would be roughly the same. There were 8.8 million taxable returns filed, and $17½ billion collected in personal income tax. Therefore, we are dealing with serious business.

I suggest to this committee that this bill should not pass until the Canadian public is assured on three matters. The first deals with the matter of the confidentiality of income tax returns that are filed. That is a matter that came up in the House about a week ago. We still do not have any report from the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Finance as to whether income tax returns are privileged and confidential information, or whether we can phone the Ministry of National Revenue and get the information. As far as we know now, income tax returns are not confidential. Anyone with an inquiring mind who wants to know what our returns are can telephone the department and get the information or press a computer button to get it. In any event, they get the information.

There has been no statement since this information came out a week ago. The Minister of National Revenue should be here before the committee ready to answer for his responsibility to the 8.8 million taxpayers of Canada as to whether that information is available to the public, or not, or what he is doing to prevent that situation. That is one area, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is not related to clause 1. We have been extremely generous in the interpretation of the rules, but the hon. member is making all sorts of statements that are not related to the bill. The Minister of National Revenue has handled very well the question of the sabotage problem in National Revenue whereby one person got access to information. The RCMP have been working on this. The system has been tightened. When there are 8.8 million tax returns analysed every year, there can be some errors. Generally speaking, however, we are very proud of the way, under any administration, the people of the Department of National Revenue and, for that matter, the provincial civil servants have been extremely careful to ensure there is no such development.

At this time I have to report that the matter is under investigation by the RCMP. Apparently, there was one individual who had a way of obtaining information he should not have had. As soon as the inquiry is completed, he will be penalized according to the laws of the land, because the taxpayers of Canada are to be protected in the confidentiality of their returns.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member for St. John's West keep his remarks quite general. As these clauses come up, he can put his arguments.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I submit that was not a point of order. The time should not come out of the time that I have before the committee. This clause deals with collecting tax from the people of Canada. I am speaking on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada who are going to suffer or gain under this clause. Their suffering or gain may become public knowledge if the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance do not take the steps necessary to stop the leaking of confidential information to anyone who might want it. That must be clarified before the bill leaves the committee.

The second point that must also be made clear relates as well, to income tax. That is the reports of violations of the law in connection with income tax collection, secret tax information given by National Revenue to the RCMP and municipal police forces across Canada, as reported in the press in recent weeks. In fact, employees of the Department of National Revenue who collected the income tax we are dealing with now have perjured themselves before the courts in that connection. I refer in particular to the matter that came before the Laycraft inquiry and the listening devices, interception of telephone messages, wiretaps and the like. That kind of procedure has been used to gather information on income tax. It is forbidden to be done in that manner by collusion and co-operation between the RCMP and the Department of National Revenue. Before this committee authorizes the government to collect any income tax under the provisions of this bill, that situation should be clarified. It is the Income Tax Act that we are now amending.

Is it correct, as Mr. Morris Bradshaw told the Laycraft inquiry, that the practice of releasing tax information on certain Canadians preceded the 1972 agreement between the Department of the MNR and the RCMP which formalized that procedure, and that confidential tax information is released to police departments across Canada on anyone the Department of National Revenue wants investigated. That is the evidence that has been given to the Laycraft inquiry by officials of the Department of National Revenue. Is it correct? The agreement of 1972 was only supposed to relate to information dealing with organized crime. However, this MNR official said that this kind of information goes to police departments all across Canada whenever the Department of National Revenue wants to let it out. It is given out routinely.

If the members of this committee are to take their duty seriously, we have to get some explanation as to whether this is so, or not, as reported in the daily press. It has been made quite clear that the Department of National Revenue and the municipal police forces—and I am referring to the Globe and Mail who quoted Mr. Bradshaw and his evidence at the inquiry—worked outside the agreement. Mr. Bradshaw was asked, "It has nothing to do with organized crime?" He answered, "Correct".

The RCMP have already given evidence that they are co-operating with National Revenue, that they use wiretap devices under the procedure of subterfuge, and that they exchange information gathered by wiretap with the Department of National Revenue although it is illegal to use wiretaps during an investigation into tax violations. An official of the minister's department, one Edmund Swartzack, was given transcripts of conversations by the RCMP. This was admitted. Inspector Graham George said that when the RCMP know they cannot wiretap under the Income Tax Act, they look for a Criminal Code violation and the information gathered is used for income tax purposes. That is complete and utter disregard for the laws of this country.

Are we supposed to sit in this committee and pass a bill which gives the crowd opposite the power to borrow $9 billion to continue to allow illegal activity in the collection of income tax across Canada? I say "no". Before the committee passes this bill there should be some satisfactory reply by ministers to these statements, and sworn evidence before inquiries.

Apparently, Mr. Edmund Swartzack—I do not know the gentleman—testified before the Federal Court and denied that the RCMP and the Department of National Revenue were working together in the summer of 1975 investigating the Royal American Shows. He told the court under oath that they were not working together. He denied the RCMP had given him information to help him in his investigation into income tax offences. He denied that before the end of May, 1975, he met RCMP officers engaged in investigating the company. In September he told the Laycraft inquiry that those answers had been untrue. He said he had not properly understood the question put to him and that his memory had failed him. Imagine an official saying that, when he was asked those simple questions, he had not understood them! Therefore, he admitted that he gave false testimony before the Federal Court in that area.

When are we going to get an explanation from the Minister of National Revenue as to what is going on in his department? Are his officials allowed to give evidence before the Federal Court in one direction, and before a royal commission to the contrary with such a weak and feeble excuse? Are the RCMP and his department working together contrary to the statutes of this country in these matters? That is the second area where I submit we need to have a full explanation and full disclosure by the government before we pass this bill.

The third area is whether the Income Tax Act is being administered impartially or whether certain taxpayers, one in particular, have been favoured ahead of all other taxpayers in this country. This is a question which should be answered. I am about to suggest that we need an immediate royal commission of inquiry into the favourable tax treatment accorded to a certain individual whom I shall be mentioning in a few moments.

If more than eight million Canadians are obliged by law to pay income tax, if they are obliged to pay it on time, and if, should they dispute the amount of this tax, they are required to pay the amount of the tax first or else put up security in the form of bank guarantees and bonds—in most cases securities are not accepted; they have to pay up—why should the law be different in the case of one of them? This is something I want to have cleared up before this legislation leaves the committee.

I am referring to the case of one, John Christopher Doyle. If I was dealing with the case of a loyal Canadian, a man we could all admire and seek to emulate, I would concede there might be some reason to overlook the situation. But when one realizes that a certain Canadian taxpayer has been allowed to owe the government millions of dollars since 1950, that he still has not paid one cent of the money he owes, and that he has received preferential treatment beyond the belief of anybody in this chamber, it is an entirely different matter and one which demands explanation.

On June 11, 1959, John Christopher Doyle, the man who has been in control of Canadian Javelin Limited since its inception, was reassessed for income tax owing for 1950 and 1954. The reassessment involved a total of something like $900,000 for those two years, and was dated June 11, 1959. The gentleman in question appealed to the Income Tax Appeal Board. Here is the first area which demands explanation. The appeal was not heard until eight years later. Remember, the gentleman in question was not forced to pay his income tax. He was not forced to pay interest. As far as I can learn, he was not forced to put up any security. It was not until 1967 that the Income Tax Appeal Board heard his appeal. The board heard his appeal in each case, dismissed them and confirmed that he had been properly reassessed, with small adjustments, in relation to those two tax years 1950 and 1954.

Surely, the normal amount of time which elapses between an assessment and the hearing of appeal is not eight years. That is one matter which calls for investigation. Following that, the decision of the Income Tax Appeal Board was taken before the Exchequer Court of Canada. It took three years for that case to be heard. Because of the way in which the courts are run, perhaps three years' delay is not unknown. Anyway, in 1970 the case was heard before Mr. Justice Gibson in the Exchequer Court and he gave a judgment in June, 1970, reconfirming the reassessments for the tax years 1950 and 1954. That was in 1970, 20 years after the first tax year in question; that is, 1950, and 16 years after the second. So it is obvious the Crown was not pushing this matter forward; it was not doing everything possible to get the issue settled. One might have thought that 20 years after the reassessment the Crown would have said, "By gosh, it is time we got our hands on these millions which are owed to us by this taxpayer—particularly in view of the fact that he is a character who is not desirable in any event."

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was entered by Mr. Doyle in October, 1970. Was the case heard in 1971? It was not. Was the case heard in 1972? It was not. Was the case heard in 1973? No. Was the case heard in 1974? No. Was the case heard in 1975? No. Was the case heard in 1976? No. Finally, one of the appeals was heard in October, 1977, and then only because I had raised the matter in the House on two or three occasions and complained—and I intend to bring it up on every occasion I can until the whole thing has been settled or some satisfactory explanation is given.

Seven years after those judgments were handed down by the Exchequer Court of Canada, one of the cases came before the Supreme Court—the case relating to the year 1950. The court dismissed the appeal from the bench; the judges did not even reserve judgment so that they could hand it down in writing. It was clear that the taxpayer had no case. Yet it took the Canadian government 27 years to get the matter before the Supreme Court. What does this mean? What is the explanation? I shall come to the explanation a little later in my remarks. It is a tawdry one, a political one, a scandalous one. I might add that the other case, the case involving 1954, has not yet been heard by the Supreme Court, but the Minister of Justice has assured me it will be heard this winter. The present Minister of Justice has been pushing this matter since I got on his tail, and he has promised me he will expedite it; it is getting some attention now. Anyway, it has taken 27 years to get the matter to its present stage.

If the taxpayer had been obliged to pay his tax, with interest—as is the normal course of events— it might be easier to look upon this 27-year process with a kinder eye. But he has not been required to pay the tax, and in the meantime he has become a fugitive from Justice in Canada. He has not lived here since the beginning of 1974, though he lived here from 1950 until that year. He became a fugitive from justice in the United States in 1965. He left that country because he had been sentenced in connection with a mail fraud—sending stock certificates through the mail—and he was ordered to serve three months of a three-year sentence. In addition, a fine was imposed. He left the United States and did not go back. He has been a fugitive from justice down there since 1965. The government knew this, yet it persisted in its negligence.

In December of 1973 he was charged in Canada with acts of criminal fraud and breach of trust in Newfoundland. Since then, 406 counts have been brought against him involving wash-trading. And where is he? He is down in Panama, Mr. Speaker. He got out on bail in December of 1973 and disappeared to Panama where he is now living very happily, continuing his operations, taking all the revenue out of Canadian Javelin Limited, a Canadian company incorporated under the federal Canada Corporations Act, so that the shareholders in that company are receiving nothing—nil, zero, zilch! Not a cent! They get no dividends. Nothing! It all goes out in various ways to Mr. John C. Doyle and his companions.

That is the kind of gentleman who was given this tender treatment, Mr. Speaker. What is the explanation? I put a question on the order paper, and the answer I received reveals massive negligence on the part of the government of Canada, malfeasance, non-feasance—is that the right term to describe the process of deliberately doing nothing? There is non-feasance as well as malfeasance, procrastination and political pollution involved in this situation.

An hon. Member: How about Pickersgill?

Mr. Crosbie: In answer to my question No. 1749 of last year, the government admitted it had received no moneys from Mr. John C. Doyle as a result of these judgments related to his appeals from assessment. However, the Crown states that it did take action to secure its claim. Then the answer goes on to say, and I quote:

It should be noted that as a result of a decline in the market value of the security held, the Crown's claim is now only partly secured.

The Crown has a lien on shares owned by John C. Doyle in Canadian Javelin Limited. As far as I know, they do not have the shares. They claim they have 125,000 of them, but they have a lien. If the shares are ever transferred, presumably the transfer agent has to deliver the shares to the Crown.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired, and I allowed a couple of extra minutes because of the intervention by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Crosbie: I will come back to this, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this matter. I would agree with the increase from $1,000 to $2,000, but this really is only recognition of the fact that inflation is a serious problem which we are not taking into account when we are putting together our accounting figures. This will not be too onerous for the government, and it is not going to lose too much money. It is almost impossible for it to lose money now on the capital account, with the inflation we are experiencing. In effect, it is giving something that is not going to cost anything, or very little. I would ask the minister, when he has the opportunity to reply, why there will be no deductions if the taxpayer is a corporation. It seems to me that for small corporations such as a family farm or similar corporation there is situation here that is being overlooked. I would like to know whether, when the taxpayer is a corporation, small or large, he is entitled to make a deduction for capital loss.

In our accounting and tax practices we are not taking into account the enormous inflationary times we are experiencing. Profit and loss calculated according to accepted accounting principles are now so inaccurate as to be misleading. The present rules are hopelessly obsolete. This is very important because business in Canada, knowing that real profit is too low, slows down investment and thus employment. Labour, on the other hand, seeing reported profit as being too high, demands non-competitive wages, and consumers, believing profit to be the main factor in price rises, demand arbitrary controls imposed by politicians seeking re-election. All I am saying is that profit is often badly overstated and the true corporate income tax rate is far higher than the stated rate, as well as corporate losses. This creates in the tax structure an imbalance we are only now recognizing.

It is interesting to note that the Ontario government created a committee to study and report on inflation accounting. It reported something quite interesting in that net return on investment in 1975 was 8.5 per cent, whereas in 1971 it was 5.75 per cent. When adjustment was made for inflation, the net return on investment was 2 per cent for 1975 and 2.5 per cent for 1971. So, in fact, while there was more profit in dollars in 1975 than in 1971, when the adjustment for inflation is made there is actually less return on investment. In fact, financial statements on certified professional accountants as presenting a true and accurate review of financial results are often so inaccurate as to be totally misleading. The importance of this is that our economic decisions have to be based on true competitive values exchanged or expected to be exchanged. It is of crucial importance, if financial data is to be used in investment, wages, buying or taxing decisions, that it be expressed in terms of real values.

The increase from $1,000 to $2,000 is, I suppose, a very crude way of assessing inflation, but it really does not get at the problem in relation to true inflation accounting. This presents a difficulty. But if we do not adjust financial data to reflect the real effect of inflation, all sectors will inevitably make wrong economic decisions. It is this situation that has forced Canada into the impending economic crisis.

I support this clause, but I might add that it is not going to cost the government very much. It is very difficult to have capital losses, given the inflation rate that is on paper. I believe this is only a beginning of what we have to study much more carefully in order to bring something to the tax system that recognizes the difficulty, and I have in mind inflation accounting.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: On clause 2, the hon. member for Churchill.

On clause 2—Amount in respect of interest on employee, etc. loans.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In rising to speak on clause 2, I am concerned about one aspect in particular, and that is dealing with housing loans. Of course, coming from an area of Canada that is fairly—

Mr. Crosbie: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, what clause are we on now?

An hon. Member: Clause 2.

Mr. Crosbie: Clause 1, is it?

The Deputy Chairman: We are on clause 2.

Mr. Crosbie: I haven't finished on clause 1, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: You are a bit late.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When I called for clause 1, it was carried and we are now on clause 2.

Mr. Crosbie: With all due deference, Mr. Chairman, I certainly didn't hear it carried and I heard you recognize the hon. member for Churchill.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West will be recognized when other clauses come along.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I have not heard the "yeas" or "nays" for a few days around here. There is no doubt that something must have happened. Perhaps I was asleep at the switch.

An hon. Member: Sure you were.

The Deputy Chairman: I would like to suggest to the hon. member for Hamilton West that I called clause 1 two of three times and nobody got up, so I went to clause 2.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: With all due respect, sir, I know that hon. members on the other side like to hear the statement you just made, but when the member rose for this party he was speaking in respect of clause 1. This is the misunderstanding. Therefore, with all due respect, sir, Mr. Smith was speaking on clause 2.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I do not know why government members continue to get so exercised simply because we are trying to bring to your attention an inequity or an injustice that has happened. I am not blaming you, sir; I am just saying that when the hon. member stood,—

Mr. Lalonde: Is that a reflection on the Chair?

Mr. Alexander: I never reflect on the Chair, as the hon. minister does continually. What I am stating is that when the hon. member for this party stood, he was under the impression—and is still under the impression—that he was directing his remarks to clause 1.

An hon. Member: He said clause 2, and I heard him.

Mr. Alexander: I just want to register our objection. Knowing the Chair is always fair and always ready to see that an inequity is corrected, or a problem which ensues is remedied in terms of a solution, I would respectfully ask that you accept the argument I present; that is, that the hon. member who was speaking on behalf of our party stood and directed his remarks to clause 1.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, if members of the official opposition fell asleep on clause 1, it is not the fault of the Chairman. It was very distinct, and we heard clause 1 carried by hon. members on both sides of this House.

An hon. Member: It wasn't carried.

Mr. Lumley: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, you delayed calling clause 2 a little longer, to ensure that the hon. member for Churchill came in to speak on clause 2. He distinctly said, "On clause 2", so it is obvious that this was passed by both sides of the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the dilemma Your Honour has on different occasions in being able to focus on people coming into the chamber, rising and attempting to be recognized, especially at the committee stage because the normal seating and other arrangements are not as they are in the normal course of debate. The reason I convey this to Your Honour is so you may judge whether this is an appropriate time to carry on with clause 1. I had my back turned, and when the hon. member for St. John's West realized the committee was going to deal with clause 2, he entered the chamber and attempted to get Your Honour's attention in order to deal with this. Your Honour recognized the hon. member for Churchill who wanted to direct his remarks to another clause, apparently.

• (1612)

The fact of the matter is that the hon. member for St. John's West was entering the chamber at that time with the express purpose he was indicating when Your Honour informed him that his time had expired. In no uncertain terms, the hon. member indicated that he would return to this point at the next opportunity he had to address himself to clause 1. I realize Your Honour would not want to deprive the hon. member for St. John's West. He feels very strongly about some of the things which can be done and wants to put forward suggestions for the government to take into consideration with respect to clause 1. I am sure Your Honour would not want to deprive the hon. member for St. John's West from carrying on his very excellent address.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, I was waiting for the Minister of Finance to return to the chamber because I had a question for him on clause 1. As a matter of fact, Your Honour's call was so fast that I just had time to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I should like to suggest to the hon. member that I called clause 1 two or three times. Then I called clause 2, and I believe the hon. member for Churchill stood up and said, "Clause 2".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Chairman: If that is not correct, I would be willing to move back to clause 1 on behalf of the hon. member for Churchill; but he distinctly said, "Clause 2". Is it the understanding of the hon. member for Churchill that we are on clause 2?

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I was behind the curtain; I was making an important telephone call concerning clause 1. When I returned to the chamber, someone was calling clause 1 and I heard clause 2 called at approximately the same time. I stood and said, "Is this on clause 2?", and Your Honour indicated that it was on clause 2.

Mr. Lalonde: That is right.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, my position is similar to that of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth. We on this side are at a disadvantage. I have questions I should like to pose to the Minister of Finance. Unfortunately, the minister does not consider the discussion of clause 1 to be of sufficient importance for him to be present.

Mr. Lalonde: He was here.

Mr. Beatty: The minister was not here when Your Honour moved on to clause 2. I cannot pose my question to other members, even though the hon. Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations would like to get involved.

Mr. Lalonde: The minister has a first rate parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Beatty: I cannot fully deal with clause 1 if the minister is not present. Surely the minister should be here for this.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, I should like to remind hon. members opposite that we have dealt with clause 1 for almost four hours. The hon. minister was here for almost those four hours. There was ample opportunity on Friday afternoon for the hon. member to ask questions of the minister; in fact, he was present at the start of the debate this afternoon. When the hon. member for St. John's West rose to speak, he did not confine his remarks to clause 1. He was dealing with everything but clause 1, and there was no reason for the hon. minister to remain and listen to the hon. member's rhetoric.

The Deputy Chairman: The argument is whether clause 1 carried. Definitely, I called clause 1 twice. It was carried, and we then moved on to clause 2.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I did not realize we were participating in some kind of a game. I thought we were here to consider seriously some amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Crosbie: I am going to be heard. You jackals can howl all you like. I was outside the curtains, and I heard Your Honour attempting to call clause 1. I came rushing in, at which time Your Honour recognized the hon. member for Churchill, or I would have risen on a point of order. When I spoke a few minutes ago, I indicated that I would return to this because I had used up my 20 minutes. This is just a patent device to stop me from continuing on this subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Therefore, I ask the committee to revert to clause 1 in order for me to continue with that subject.

The Deputy Chairman: I should like to indicate to the hon. member for St. John's West that when this House goes into committee of the whole all members are supposed to be in the chamber because there could be votes at any time and the bell does not ring. Definitely, I called clause 1 twice and it was carried. Therefore, we are now on clause 2.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, as all members are aware, the House of Commons is a forum where members on this side attempt as much as possible to operate on a co-operative and consultative basis. We want to deal with these matters in an expeditious manner.

Mr. Lalonde: Don't smile.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The hon. Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations can smirk and smile at the House of Commons, but some of us take things seriously. The fact of the matter is that we believe a certain amount of co-operation is necessary. If the government side thinks it is smart to stand on a technicality because Your Honour may or may not have seen something, and if they think that is the way to deal with this type of legislation, this will not get them any further ahead. If government members want to approach this matter with a certain spirit of co-operation to allow members on this side to be heard on legitimate matters, then matters can be dealt with expeditiously. Opposition members will not sit in this House worrying about whether a person is inadvertently not recognized and then have the door slammed on us.

Clause 1 is an important matter, notwithstanding what the parliamentary secretary may think. It is an opportunity to look at the principles behind the various clauses of the bill. It is the broadest possible interpretation of the approach we take to this legislation. Already government members have imposed closure on this legislation. If they persist in this attitude, they will not continue to receive the co-operation we are so famous for on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we can receive agreement from members opposite to have an extra five minutes on clause 1. If there is the unanimous consent of the House, we on this side have no disagreement with that.

Mr. Beatty: Not just five minutes; we want the minister as well.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Chairman, I do not feel it is necessary for Your Honour to take the abuse which is being put forth this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harquail: The opposition refers to its co-operation. The delaying tactics which are being used on this particular point are very clear. Hansard will clearly indicate that Your Honour called twice regarding whether we were ready for the vote on clause 1. We had the vote and then went on to clause 2, at which point the hon. member for Churchill stood up and definitely indicated that he was speaking on clause 2. That is where we are right now, on clause 2.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry there is some confusion with respect to the passage of clause 1. Certainly, my position is that I spoke to the minister concerning clause 1. I have certain questions I want to put to the minister on clause 1. Of course, he has been out of the House and in all fairness I felt if others wished to speak in a general sense on clause 1 there was no point pressing for the minister to return to the House.

Various amendments were tabled by the minister with respect to this bill. Frankly, I took those amendments and gave them to one of our research assistants in order for him to commence working on where those amendments actually fit into the bill and what the repercussions are, if any, with respect to the bill. To come back and find that someone, in a rather devious way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: That is a reflection on the Chair.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, is it not strange that government members feel there is absolutely nothing wrong with the passage of clause 1, in spite of the fact the Minister of Finance is not in his seat to indicate that he is ready to have that clause passed?

An hon. Member: Already we have had four hours on clause 1.

Mr. Stevens: When we are dealing with a bill which touches on Canadians paying $15 billion to $16 billion in income tax, there should not be the slightest suggestion that a member of this House is being stifled in consideration of this bill. I feel something must be put on the record, and the best time to do so is during my point of order. The government is constantly trying to create the impression that this bill is being held up. This is totally incorrect.

Mr. Stevens: As we know, and certainly as you yourself know, Mr. Chairman, the March 31 budget resulted in a bill which is substantially the one now before us, somewhat amended. The income tax bill which arose out of the March 31 budget was given first reading in the House, but then was not seen again until November of this year. Literally, from April to November the government allowed the bill to simply lie there without bringing it before the House, in spite of the fact that members on this side often implored the government to bring it in and to let us deal with it.

Once it suits the government's purpose to bring in the bill, for it to suggest now that it should be passed quickly without due consideration is an affront to the people of Canada, and I think it is time we started to call it the way it is. This government has lost control of public spending in Canada and now, when we try to have a meaningful examination of it or of the ways that they intend to bring in their revenue, we are prevented from having a meaningful debate in the House.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will revert to clause 1.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would like to suggest to the hon. member that I definitely called clause 1 twice and nobody stood up in the House to continue the debate. Therefore, we went on to clause 2. The Chair is in the hands of members of the committee, and if they wish to change the rules they can argue the point right now. I am prepared to hear them.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the Newfoundland House of Assembly and I can go back ten years in time, and never once have I seen such a scurvy piece of work in the Newfoundland House of Assembly as I see in this committee of the whole. If a member wishes to revert to a clause, he is automatically allowed to do so. Members of this committee knew that I had not finished my comments and that I had more to say on the point which I first brought up. The Chairman saw me rushing in as he called clause 1, yet I was not allowed to revert to it. I say, sir, this is a scurvy piece of work unworthy of this parliament.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Chairman, I rise with a brief intervention. One point that is clear in the House orders, namely, in Standing Order 55(4), is that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole shall maintain order in the committee. The order goes on to say that no debate shall be permitted on any decision. I think it is totally unfair for hon. members to involve the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: There may well be a disposition on one side to move more quickly, and on the other side not to do so; but the fact is that we, as members on either side of the House, are under the disposition of the Chairman, and the Chairman has indicated that we have moved on to clause 2. I think all hon. members realize that under clause 2 and under every subsequent clause in the bill they are entitled to debate each one of those clauses. Surely they can organize their minds and their interventions in such a way as to participate meaningfully on each clause.

Mr. Kempling: As usual, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism speaks with many tongues, most of them forked. The point I was trying to make earlier, before you allowed someone else to interject, Mr. Chairman, was that we had questions we wanted to put to the Minister of Finance. He was not in his place, for reasons of his own: he left the chamber and I do not dispute his right to do so. Our questions were not put because he was not here. Secondly, the minister has tabled several amendments to this bill of which we do not have the text and we do not know what clauses they amend. Therefore, I think it is only proper that we should revert to clause 1.

The Deputy Chairman: With regard to the complaints which are made about the Chair, I would like to suggest to the hon. member that the texts of the amendments were issued and that members should have made their complaints at the time the clause was called, not after it was carried.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Last Friday I sat in the House the entire day because I wished to speak on clause 2. The Chairman was present at that time, and today I inquired of him as to the approximate time when clause 2 might be reached. The Chairman told me that several members of my party were to speak on clause 1, but that I should be available, in the event clause 2 was called, before eight o'clock tonight. That is the reason I was not in the House and that when you called clause 1 I did not say I was in favour of it being carried, because I was standing right here behind the curtain.

I did not speak up, because at that time I was not in my place. But had I been, I would have said "No", for the simple reason I knew some of my colleagues wished to speak on clause 1. Therefore, I feel that now that the minister is back in the House, you should call clause 1 so as to let my colleagues ask questions of the minister which they wish to ask.

The Deputy Chairman: I suggest to the hon. member that when I called clause 1, nobody stood up in the House. Therefore, we went on to clause 2. I called clause 1 twice before it was carried.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might say a quiet word at this point. It is pretty obvious that we cannot reach agreement on this matter by arguing the point of order. I fully agree with the record of what was done as you have indicated it. I was here and I heard you call clause 1 twice, but to my surprise no one stood up. Then you said "Carried". It is equally obvious that there were members who wanted to speak but who were taken by surprise. So we are in this difficult situation, and we will not solve it by arguing back and forth. I wonder if we cannot have agreement to do one of two things, either to agree by unanimous consent to revert to clause 1 or, if that is not acceptable, to agree that on clause 2 the minister will accept the questions that were put to him on clause 1 and give his answers to them. Is there not some way that we can reach a modus vivendi and carry on?

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree with the suggestions of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. Alexander: I think the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, who is the deputy House leader, has approached the chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs with the suggestion for a solution and is now exploring it. If I am interpreting correctly the concern registered on the face of the parliamentary secretary as well as that of the Minister of Finance, it is acceptable. All we are trying to say is that we have one or two speakers who wish to speak on clause 1.

It has been suggested by the deputy House leader that he would be prepared to go to the Minister of Finance and propose that another half-hour on clause 1 would be acceptable. That is the position he brought here, unless I misunderstood him. I hope that suggestion, which we on this side accept, is now acceptable to the government which, in my view, has always been fair and compassionate and prepared to bring about a solution to a very sticky situation. I know that my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, would go along with the suggestion which was brought to this side of the House by the deputy House leader. It is now up to the government to show there is justice in the House, a fact which sometimes escapes me.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member for Hamilton West makes me cry. I accept the compromise with great pleasure because, after all, we have been in the House for only four weeks and we have not yet passed clause 1, so another half-hour will not make that much difference.

The Deputy Chairman: I suggest to the hon. member for Hamilton West that the Chair is not supposed to read minds, and that if members wish to be on the other side of the curtain there is no way I can know when they want to speak on a clause. If one wants to speak on this clause, he should be in the House at all times.

• (1632)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that we adopt the idea of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and revert to clause 1 for 30 minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, the suggestions which were made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre were made without notice. What I brought to the attention of the Chair and to hon. members was a suggestion which was made by the deputy government House leader. He approached this side of the House. The Minister of Finance states that we are unduly holding up his bill. I resent that. All I am stating is that we have one or two more speakers. The deputy House leader is prepared to allow another half-hour. Therefore, let us deal with the suggestion I brought forward, which is only the suggestion the deputy House leader brought to the Minister of Finance and the parliamentary secretary. I thought it was acceptable.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Chairman, it may be a little unfortunate—but certainly not deliberate—that my approach to hon. members opposite was on a "one to one" basis. It was not an official approach, and although I totally understand the anxiety of the hon. member with regard to embodying that in a motion of this House, I felt it was inappropriate for it to be brought forward until something had been worked out. However, hon. members on this side agree to doing that, so let us proceed.

Mr. Alexander: I am very sorry that I have touched a sensitive nerve of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, and I extend to him my deepest apologies.

Mr. Cafik: Accepted.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I gather we are on clause 2 now.

An hon. Member: No, clause 1.

Mr. Alexander: Clause 1.

Mr. Nystrom: It does not matter to me. What I want to say can apply either to clause 1 or to clause 2. I would like to speak for about half an hour, but I gather I am limited to 20 minutes. What I want to talk about is an issue that the Conservative party—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has indicated that his remarks would be equally suitable to be made on clause 1 or clause 2. In view of the restricted time of 30 minutes which we have for clause 1, and the fact that we have two or three who are wanting to speak on clause 1, I wonder if the hon. member would hold back and make his remarks on clause 2?

The Deputy Chairman: Will the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville withhold his remarks for 30 minutes?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, it would be hard to believe, after all that build-up, but I actually have only two very short questions for the minister relating to clause 1 which is the general clause of the bill. I hope to be able to ask those questions before the minister leaves the House. They relate to the use by the government of social insurance numbers. There is growing resentment in the country about the fact that the directive coming from the Department of Finance requires that Canadians cashing in Canada Savings Bonds coupons take out social insurance numbers if they are to collect their coupon payments without having to forfeit 25 per cent.

I would like to ask the minister, in view of the fact that this particular problem results in many Canadians, some of them senior citizens over the age of 80 or 90, and some parents having to take out social insurance numbers for young children three and four years old who have Canada Savings Bonds in their names, is the minister prepared to consider withdrawing that directive requiring the use of social insurance numbers for cashing Canada Savings Bonds interest coupons?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the government has no such intention to withdraw this requirement which was imposed by legislation last year.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask one further question. There is growing concern in the country because of the threat of misuse of social insurance numbers. In 1972, the government's very excellent study on privacy and computers recommended that the social insurance number not be used either in a legislative sense or in a de facto sense as a single identification number for citizens, but the increasing use of the social insurance number in various government programs as an identification number and as a computing coding number causes considerable problems.

This causes problems not just from a psychological point of view but also from the point of view of privacy, because if it is possible to get one's hands on a person's social insurance number that increases the possibility of getting access to information held in government files about that person. I refer the minister particularly to incidents which took place a couple of weeks ago when the disclosure was made that it was possible to get from the tax department information about the confidential and personal tax returns of individual Canadians.

I am wondering whether the minister would be prepared to consider amending Bill C-11 at the present time or to bring in amendments at another time which would disallow the use of social insurance numbers on tax forms. As the minister knows, it is possible to file an income tax form using either a tax filing number or a social insurance number, and I wonder whether to confine the use of the social insurance number strictly to the purpose for which it was designed the minister would be prepared to amend the act to remove the use of it on income tax forms?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is a controversy which is taking place at this time. I am informed that since 1966 taxpayers have been asked to put their social insurance number on their income tax returns, and that producing a social insurance number when cashing coupons is a new requirement brought about last summer after introduction by my predecessor, the hon. member for Rosedale. This is not the first time.

I was quite taken by the argument made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and the hon. member for Edmonton West who said there was a commitment that social insurance numbers would never be used for this purpose. In checking the records, I found that since 1966 the tax returns of citizens have required social insurance numbers. If the requirement has been there since 1966, this is nothing new. However, the requirement to produce a social security number when cashing coupons is new. I have much sympathy for older and younger people, but according to the studies of my department there is a certain number of people cashing coupons. The system was a bit slack and my department found that some people were cheating—I do not know if that is the proper term—the tax collector that way. This is why we ask for this requirement. I was quite sensitive to the argument made previously, but when I learned that social insurance numbers were being required on income tax returns since 1966, I felt I was being asked to do a little more than should be expected.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, I would like to return to this for one moment. The concern I have is twofold. I am concerned about the decision to require the use of social insurance numbers when cashing interest coupons. I wonder whether the minister can indicate whether he is actively making inquiries at the present time as to whether there are other alternatives available which can prevent tax cheats wanting to circumvent paying taxes which they should be paying, and whether there would be some better way of doing this other than requiring the use of social insurance numbers. I understand that the government has a backlog of social insurance number applications because of the flood of applications from thousands of Canadians who have never have to have them before.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, could I reply to the first concern? Another method is being contemplated in the United States, but I do not think it will be satisfactory to everybody. It is that when cashing coupons in any institution, the tax will be collected there and then. In this country we only impose this obligation on people who do not have a social insurance number. People who have a number do not pay the tax then, and the problem of collecting and repaying the tax is avoided. I am preoccupied with the problem of people who do not have a social insurance number, and am looking for alternatives. I would like to explore any suggestions that hon. members may make.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Chairman, the minister should also be aware that there are some religious groups in the country whose convictions forbid them taking out social insurance numbers. Parliament has passed legislation amending the Canada Pension Plan Act exempting certain religious groups from having to take social insurance numbers for conscientious reasons. My other point is to stress to the minister that while I recognize the social insurance number has been used on income tax files since 1966, it is being used more widely so that almost from the day a citizen is born until the day he dies various programs require the social insurance number and it is becoming de facto an identification number. This poses very serious problems in protecting the privacy of citizens, and this parliament enacted legislation on the subject in the last session.

More and more government programs use the social insurance number as a coding number for filing information about individuals, and once it is possible to obtain that social insurance number it is easy to violate privacy and the security surrounding confidential personal information held in government data banks. Despite the fact that the social insurance number has been used by the government for some years, I wouls ask the minister if he would consider withdrawing its use on income tax forms in order to restrict the threat posed to personal privacy?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reply to the two questions, first to the problem of the religious groups who refuse to have a social insurance number. There is no penalty. They pay the tax when they cash the coupons, and they will get this money back. It is not a penalty. The money is taken as a guarantee that the tax will be paid, and is returned when the tax return is filed. There is no injustice in this.

Like other hon. members, I am concerned because of the incident that came to light on a Toronto radio program where someone found a way to get four different tax returns from different parts of the country. I have had discussions with the Minister of National Revenue and his deputy minister about this. Apparently, the police think they have found the method used in doing this and instructions have been given to correct the weakness in the system. I do not want to jeopardize the inquiry, but apparently someone used the name and code of another person in order to get the information. This cannot always be prevented. There is a dilemma because very often taxpayers communicate with the department and ask for fast information before making a transaction, and it is possible for them, through the deputy minister perhaps, to get quick information. If we impose an even tighter system, the penalty will be a less responsive system when inquiries are being made.

In light of that, I was extremely preoccupied and impressed by the arguments made by hon. members who have raised this in the House. I realize it has been used since 1966, but I am still willing to see if the question of the danger created by using those numbers too often and the problem created by this can be resolved. I have asked my officials to look into it, and if some change has to be brought about it can be done at a later date, but in the short time at my disposition—I have been in the House these last three weeks and I do not have much time in the department to look into administrative problems—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, we are under a time limitation. I will not forget this piece of business, and I will not be caught again by hon. gentlemen opposite in this matter. I bring before this committee a matter of the utmost seriousness.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. member says he has been caught by hon. members opposite. I would remind the hon. member that he has been reflecting on the Chair. There were plenty of his colleagues in the House, and the decision to call Clause 1 was made by the Chair and supported by members on both sides of the House. His allegation is without foundation, and he should not be allowed to make such statements unchallenged.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I should like to say that argument is now over and the problem—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations is not going to tell me what to think or what to say. It was a scurrilous piece of business, and that is my opinion.

Mr. Chairman, I raise a matter of considerable seriousness. It shows 27 years of negligence on the part of hon. members opposite, particularly for the last 14 years. I have asked many questions in the last year, none of which has been answered so I ask these questions again. The government admits that John C. Doyle owes it $3,483,412 as of December 31, 1976, on the two judgments I mentioned earlier. It has taken no steps to collect the money. The interest for a further year should be added to that in order to see what is really owed.

Why does the government not have adequate security for this amount and why has it not collected the money, the tax or the interest. The government issued a writ of extent against Canadian Javelin Limited in 1963, and a writ of attachment in 1965. The company was directed not to pay moneys to John C. Dolye but to hold the moneys, in the event the government is successful in the tax actions, for payment to the government. Since 1965, the government has allowed Canadian Javelin Limited to pay $1 million to John C. Doyle without taking any action to enforce the writ of attachment placed on the company. Every aspect of this affair that I mention today should be investigated by a royal commission. This committee should be delighted to examine this matter in detail. It is not fair that one taxpayer should be treated this way. In a report I have here, Canadian Javelin has admitted paying in excess of $1 million to John C. Doyle, in defiance of a writ of attachment placed on the company in 1965. In a letter to me about a week ago, the Minister of Justice said that he is taking action in the Federal Court—after 12 years of defiance. Only after I repeatedly brought this matter to the attention of the government is he taking action.

This government has permitted John C. Doyle and Canadian Javelin Limited to set up a tax avoidance scheme. Because of this writ of attachment, John C. Doyle set up a company in the Bahamas known as Javelin Export Limited. He owns and controls it. Javelin Export Limited entered into a contract with Canadian Javelin Limited for a ten-year period under which Doyle is to be paid $100,000 per year, tax-free, in the Bahamas. Canadian Javelin Limited is incorporated under federal law, so over $100,000 per year goes to Javelin Export in the Bahamas which pays it over to John C. Doyle who does not pay any Canadian income tax on it. This is open defiance of the laws of Canada, yet the government has done nothing about it.

It is tax avoidance in two ways. He is not paying a cent of tax now, nor in recent years, on the income he receives from Canadian Javelin Limited. It is in defiance, it is an indirect way of getting around this writ of attachment that the government placed with the company in 1965.

[The Deputy Chairma.]

• (1652)

Why has this been allowed to happen? This is what I ask the minister. In fact, this Minister of Finance was minister of national revenue from January, 1968, to July, 1968. He did not do a thing about this for six months. There have been ten ministers of national revenue who have done nothing about this situation. Since 1963 there have been the following: Mr. Garland, Mr. Benson, the present Minister of Finance, Mr. Côté, the hon. member for Windsor West, Mr. Stanbury, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare—and now we have the present minister. We can only hope that the Minister of National Revenue now, the member from Manitoba, will take some action. Ten ministers of national revenue have stood by and done nothing—

An hon. Member: Sponged.

Mr. Crosbie: —during those years. We have had seven ministers of finance, Walter Gordon, the hon. member for Eglinton, Mr. Benson, Mr. Turner—the sound of their names is enough to turn your stomach—the hon. member for Westmount, the hon. member for Rosedale, and now we have the present Minister of Finance. They have done nothing. They are responsible to the 8,800,000 taxpayers, and they have done nothing. You people opposite don't care. All you want to do is cover it up.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations on a point of order.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member should name the ministers of finance and ministers of national revenue between 1956 and 1963.

Mr. Crosbie: During the period the hon. member mentions, the Progressive Conservative administration of Canada brought this to the Income Tax Appeal Board and made some progress.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: And if that government had been re-elected in 1963, this would have been finished by 1965. Here is a gentleman who is going to give you the answer as to why you have been so negligent all those years—it is because of the Liberal politics in Quebec. The minister of federal and provincial affairs should know that. It is because of the Liberal politics in Quebec that this situation has been allowed to occur, Mr. Chairman.

We have also had ministers of justice—Mr. Chevrier, Mr. Favreau, Mr. McIlraith, Mr. Cardin, and the Prime Minister himself was minister of justice from 1967 to 1968 and he did nothing. He allowed this to continue. He is culpable. He is involved in this negligence, this malfeasance and malfeasance of office—Mr. Turner, the Minister of Transport and the present Minister of Justice who is now taking some action after I have written to him and brought this up in the House on four or five occasions. This is a scandal, Mr. Chairman.

This is a worse scandal than anything that has been suggested with respect to the RCMP or security services. It is far worse. The people of this country have the right to expect that every taxpayer will be treated in a similar manner. But one taxpayer, and a most unsavoury one—just because of his Liberal connections—has been allowed to get away with this for all these years.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Crosbie: A typical Grit trick. What is the connection? We get the answer as to why Mr. Doyle is being treated in this singularly favourable manner, this lax manner, this scandalous manner, in the right hon. member for Prince Albert's book, his latest volume, "The Tumultuous Years 1962 to 1967", volume III, at page 192:

Pierre Sévigny has stated that he was approached by John Doyle on election night (Sévigny had been defeated as an Independent in his Montreal riding)—

By the way, it is stated in the book that Mr. Sévigny had received a healthy campaign contribution from John Doyle to run as an independent.

—for the names of any Conservative members who, for an appropriate consideration, might switch to the Liberals. Sévigny, to his credit, refused to be a party to this plan. Thus, Doyle and his associates turned elsewhere.

The facts did not become public until the middle of the 1965 election campaign. On 13 October, 1965, at a press conference in Quebec City, Dr. Guy Marcoux, Social Credit member for Quebec-Montmorency in the last parliament, said that Liberal front-bencher J. W. Pickersgill and mining promoter John Doyle took part in negotiations which led six Social Credit members of Parliament to pledge their support to the Liberal party after the 1963 federal election. He had released that day a 24-page pamphlet entitled "Dans le Même Sac," in which he described "the affair of the six" as the shadiest usurpation of political power in Canada's history.

Mr. Chairman, this gives us a little hint as to the reason for the tender treatment of Mr. John C. Doyle, because he has been on the grimier fringes of Quebec Liberal politics for many years. In 1963 he took part in convincing six Social Credit MPs in declaring they were not going to support the government, that they would support the Liberal party, so there was a change in government in 1963. That is the suggestion in volume III of "The Tumultuous Years".

There has to be some reason why year after year since 1963, which is 14 years, all this time has passed before these matters were ever brought up and brought to a conclusion in the Supreme Court of Canada. In fact, one of these cases still waits to be heard before the Supreme Court of Canada. Why is it that men of the calibre of the names I have given here today, a lot of able men among them, various ministers of justice, various ministers of national revenue and the various ministers of finance, have allowed that situation to go on since 1963? Surely we cannot assume that the civil servants in the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Justice are that negligent and that slothful. We know that if they have the necessary instructions they will act. They will not be waiting 24 or 27 years to collect income tax owed by anyone. Surely we should have a royal commission to call these ministers and the civil servants before it to find out why, in this case, Mr. John C. Doyle, now a fugitive from justice, now a Panamanian citizen, is allowed to owe this government in excess of $3.5 million in taxes—and God knows how much more he owes for other tax years.

Why has he never been forced to pay up? Why has he had treatment that no other Canadian taxpayer in the history of Canada has ever had? There should be a royal commission to look into that, and to ask the civil servants which minister instructed them to leave those files alone. Which minister instructed them to allow an appeal to lie dormant before the Supreme Court of Canada for seven years without ever moving it forward. Was it their fault, or did some minister tell them to leave it alone, because ministers had to tell them?

In the normal course of events, these things would have gone on, been heard and disposed of 10 to 15 years ago. Who told them not to get bank guarantees, bonds, sureties or their cash and interest, as everybody else has to do? When the income tax people come slithering in to me, Mr. Chairman, and say that I have to pay up something, you can bet your life I am going to tell them where to go until they show me why they have treated John Christopher Doyle in this manner. There are 8,800,000 Canadian taxpayers out there who are going to get the message: Don't bother paying your taxes, gentlemen. Put in an appeal.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: The parliamentary secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Late this afternoon I was told by our Deputy Speaker, who was supposed to be in the chair at five o'clock for private members' hour, that he would not be here because of a snowstorm in Montreal. He was supposed to be in the chair during private members' hour, concerning a debate on a point of order raised by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). I have talked to the House leaders of the various parties, and I ask for the unanimous consent of the House in order that government business may go on until six o'clock. Resuming the debate on Bill C-11 until six o'clock, private members' hour could be held tonight from 9.30 till 10.30 o'clock. I ask this because the Deputy Speaker is very much interested in the debate on procedure which was to be held at five o'clock this afternoon.

• (1702)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary was kind enough to speak to us, and we are agreeable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Same here, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): We are in agreement, Mr. Speaker. This is better than wasting a whole hour.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am pleased that the House has been able to arrive at this arrangement, because I know that the hon. Deputy Speaker was making every effort to be here at five o'clock. He has been seized of this argument and is the one who ought to hear it and proceed with it. Therefore, it is agreed and ordered that government business will continue until the six o'clock adjournment, and then from 8 o'clock until 9.30 this evening. At 9.30 this evening, private members' hour that would ordinarily have been proceeded with now will be taken for the balance of the sitting day. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered. I therefore leave the chair for the House to return to committee of the whole on Bill C-11.

The Deputy Chairman: House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-11, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we have been extremely patient with the hon. member for St. John's West. His speech has absolutely no relevance to the bill. He has been dealing with all sorts of problems with John Doyle and his former politics in Newfoundland. He made a lot of remarks concerning a file on one citizen and the Minister of National Revenue. He is doing this at the same time as members opposite are complaining that these matters must be as confidential as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: If he has a grievance against John Doyle, we should not have to suffer for the—I will not use the word because I am not sure that it is parliamentary. There was a big argument. Some questions were to be asked of me for half an hour on clause 1. We have listened to a speech that has absolutely no relevance to the debate we are now having.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: It is an abuse of the good faith of this House of Commons. He has sucked into that position a member of his party who seems to be extremely avaricious. You, Mr. Chairman, have called for a decision, gracefully, after a very sincere plea by the hon. member for Hamilton West, that I be permitted to answer some questions. The half-hour has been lost on something completely irrelevant to what we have been debating in the House at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. A few minutes before this short adjournment, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) levelled serious accusations against a number of people, accusations which he had apparently found in a book. He reiterated accusations which Dr. Guy Marcoux had made and later included in a book to the effect that at some time six Social Credit members had had acquaintances with members of the Liberal party. It may be true, Mr. Chairman, that Dr. Guy Marcoux has written a book, but what he says in his book has never been demonstrated and it is as far from the truth as what the hon. member for St. John's West has just quoted. Without knowing whether the hon. member indicated the origin of the book he quoted from a while ago, I want to give this clarification so that whoever reads the official report for today may not believe what the hon. member for St. John's West has just said.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I wish to point out to the hon. member that there are six minutes remaining on clause 1.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member, I quoted from the book, the third volume of "One Canada", by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I know there is little time left. There should be a lot of time. Certain manoeuvres have resulted in little time being left.

I am asking the Minister of Finance questions on a very serious matter which he just wants to brush aside. He got up on a spurious point of order, stating that this was not relevant to Income Tax amendments before us. What could be more relevant to the Income Tax Act than the impartial, just administration of the income tax law, a law that takes from Canadians every year something like $17½ million? What could be more serious than my accusations and the facts I have put on record as to this treatment of a certain person? He has been given favourable treatment, while eight million other Canadians have not received this treatment.

Is there anything that should more occupy the time of this House than this kind of scandalous situation and the unequal and partial administration of the laws of Canada? Is that not what this parliament should be concerned about? If the members of this House are not concerned about this kind of malfeasance or non-feasance, if we are not to be concerned with the equal treatment of all Canadian citizens in the payment of their income tax, then I am wrong and apologize to the members of this House. However, I do not think I am wrong. I do not think there is anything more serious than this. I do not apologize for taking the time of the House on this matter—not for one minute.

I have a report here from Canadian Javelin Limited, 1977, which bears out what I have said. It points out that Mr. Doyle was credited with $125,000 a year from Javelin Export Limited under a ten-year contract with the company, and also noting the writ of attachments that I mentioned. It points out that he has received something over $1 million. The company said:

> On or about July 22, 1965, the Department of National Revenue of Canada served a demand on Canadian Javelin Limited requiring it to pay to the Receiver General of Canada any moneys due or to become due to Mr. John C. Doyle pending adjudication as to whether or not taxes are properly due by Mr. Doyle . . . During the past 11-year period, the company and/or Javelin Export Limited, have paid non-business related expenses and/or reimbursed Mr. Doyle for such expenses in the aggregate amount of approximately $1,000,000 which amount offset amounts payable to Mr. Doyle. As a result the company may be contingently liable for an aggregate of approximately $1,000,000, and may become contingently liable for any additional amounts paid.

In other words, this company, in defiance of a writ issued by the government of Canada, and to the detriment of its shareholders, by its board of directors—controlled by Mr. John C. Doyle—paid out $1 million in defiance of the writs of the minister and the government. The minister tells me this is not a matter that should be considered by this committee. He does not want to be bothered by such foolish little things as this. He is only concerned with the great big things—the big, billion dollar things. That is what is wrong with this government. They do not care what you bring to their attention with regard to negligence or corruption. They ignore it all. They are not concerned. They drive the little people out of the country, if they try to get something off their income tax, into a tax haven in the Bahamas.

John C. Doyle can do what he likes. He can defy writs of extent, writs of attachment, defy the laws of Canada in every manner, shape or form. We are only touching the surface. We know about the 1950 and 1954 fiscal years. What about the other 25 fiscal years that that gentleman has been diddling around with the government of Canada, and the tender tax treatment, the lax Liberal treatment of Liberal friends of the government and Liberal friends of the former premier of Newfoundland? I make no apologies for raising this matter. I tell hon. members in advance that I will bring it up at every opportunity I have until this government gives an adequate explanation as to why this has been allowed to happen, or until there is an impartial royal commission. I suggest the McDonald commission should be asked to investigate this case.

I remind the committee that the crime commission in Quebec had a lot to say about Mr. Doyle. They suggested that the government of Canada extradite him, bringing him back from Panama. However, he has now become a Panamanian citizen, so the government cannot do that. Any respectable government would resign. There are not enough cabinet ministers here to have a good resignation. The Minister of Finance should resign in disgust and disgrace as a result of what is being put before us.

With regard to the little hassle we had, Mr. Chairman, I have every confidence in you. If you say it was carried, it was carried. I am just sorry it happened so quickly. I will be more alert in the future—you can depend upon it. I have every confidence in you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to lay this before the committee.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Justice are in the House every day. There have been all sorts of accusations with regard to a precise file. It is absolutely ludicrous to suggest that I should know what is in every file from 1953 and 1954. The hon. member has just wasted half an hour. If he were fair, he would have debated this matter in another forum, rather than taking the time of the committee when dealing with clause 1 of this bill. If he wants to make accusations, there are other means of doing that. To say that I should resign, I can only say that his act has been one of the funniest acts I have seen in the House of Commons for some time.

• (1712)

The Chairman: Order. The period of 30 minutes provided for the debate—with extra time on clause 1—has expired. The clause is now carried, and we shall move on to clause 2.

On clause 2—Amount in respect of interest on employee, etc., loans.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment on clause 2 which concerns housing, especially in the more remote regions of Canada. In many areas of the north, corporations and mining companies in particular provide mortgage-free loans to enable their employees to acquire houses. I notice that the intent of certain clauses in the bill is to impose a tax burden on employees who receive interest-free loans from their companies. The bill would authorize the imputation of a prescribed interest rate in the case of an employee who pays less than the prescribed rate of interest on a loan from his company and the difference, less $500, will become taxable to the employee concerned. I should like to call attention to the difficulty which this would create in some of our northern mining communities where it is far from easy to retain personnel—

Mr. Chrétien: Might I point out to the hon. member that in a mining community such as the hon. member has mentioned it is permitted to make such loans up to $50,000 without incurring a tax penalty? Below $50,000 there is no problem; it is only on amounts higher than $50,000 that income would be imputed for tax purposes. Clause 2 should perhaps be dealt with in relation to clause 35, but I have no objection to debating the matter now because both clauses are of substantially the same nature.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I thank the minister for his intervention. I should like to continue, however, because there is one aspect with which the hon. gentleman has failed to deal. I realize that an exemption for housing loans is provided up to $50,000, but the term "housing loan" is very restrictive in its meaning since it covers only such situations as are set out in another clause which prescribes that to qualify for this exemption an employee must move more than 25 miles to the place of business. At a certain point, many of these mining communities experience a period of expansion and it has been the practice of a great many companies to provide mortgage-free loans to their employees to enable them to buy homes. It appears that to take advantage of this assistance, employees must move 25 miles, a proviso which discriminates against people who are already living in the community perhaps in rented accommodation or in some other form of dwelling.

This 25 mile proviso might be applicable in an urban area, but not in a remote community. Why is it not possible to make special arrangements to suit the needs of these isolated communities whose nearest urban neighbour might well be 200 miles away? This is an issue which closely affects a lot of people. The present system encourages workers to buy homes in the community. It is really of no benefit to the companies directly except as it enables them to retain employees in the north.

Mr. Chrétien: This matter has been discussed thoroughly with the mining companies. It is one which closely involves the mobility of manpower, and the companies have agreed that this is a satisfactory compromise. We are satisfied it would lead to abuse if we were, say, to permit someone to sell a house he owned and get a loan from his company at an advantageous interest rate in order to buy another house down the street, or perhaps a bigger one. The program is not designed to do that; it is intended to encourage mobility.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I understand what the minister is saying. But again I call attention to the fact that under this proposal an individual already living in a mining town, perhaps in rented quarters or in an apartment block owned by the company, would not be entitled to take advantage of an opportunity to purchase a house under this arrangement. On the other hand, a person who moved into the town from goodness knows where could immediately qualify for this benefit. This is an argument which will be forthcoming again and again from individuals concerned, especially in light of the expansion which is presently taking place around some of our mining communities.

Mr. Chrétien: I can certainly look into that aspect. I know an argument can be put up in specific cases but, generally speaking, it was felt that extreme care was necessary in order to avoid abuses. But we shall be looking into the point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I feel that the 25-mile limit might, in itself, be a cause of concern to people who live, say, on the fringe—those who would be a mile or two short of the qualifying distance. I wonder whether the legislation would be sufficiently flexible to accommodate people in that position.

When the legislation was drawn up, I do not think remote areas of the country were given serious consideration. We have to depend to a great extent on the remote sections of Canada, because they are the real producer areas. Every consideration must be given in respect of housing for those people in the resource, mining and other industries in the north. After all, we have to look at the north as the breadbasket of Canada because of the existence there of untapped natural resources. Naturally, we want to retain in the north the people who will harvest those resources for us. We must retain those who have the knowledge to do so.

Perhaps the minister would consider that the definition of a "housing loan" should be broadened to cover any loan to an employee to enable him, or assist him, to acquire a dwelling-house for his own occupation. I am referring in particular to remote areas. Housing has always represented a problem in remote areas, and I would like some consideration given to a change in order that the clause would refer to a loan to enable an employee or to assist an employee to acquire a dwelling-house for his own occupation. Have you any comment on that whatsoever?

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think I explained to the hon. member some of the problems. I cannot backtrack, because if we are to go too far in the direction the hon. member is suggesting, we might discredit this scheme which is, in fact, designed to induce people to move in some areas. If it looks as though it will create abuses throughout the land, the program will lose its credibility and might backfire rather than being helpful.

As far as the 25-mile limit is concerned, it was taken from the Income Tax Act in relation to deductions for moving expenses. This figure is already accepted as part of the system, and I do not see why I should confuse the tax laws even more by having different types of deductions for one thing and another. I think these figures are always arbitrary. We had to go with the 25-mile figure as it was judged by one of my predecessors as being a fair distance for that kind of deduction or expense.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I was not aware of where the 25-mile figure came from, and that was to be the subject of my next question. When you suggest you cannot have special circumstances, let me remind you that there are special circumstances in existence for federal government people who live in the north. Government employees in the north received special northern allowances. A number of mining companies regard interest-free mortgage loans on houses as special northern allowances for their employees. That is how they look at these and, as I mentioned before, if you take away that particular aspect you will create difficulty in keeping these people in the industry. Governments recognize that there are extra costs associated with working and living in the north. For instance, you must heat your home for ten months a year, and your hydro bill is much higher because of shorter days. Transportation out of the area is very expensive. For this reason, the companies provide interest-free mortgages to their employees. I suppose they could be paying a northern allowance of some sort, but the concern here is in respect of an individual being able to own a dwelling and realizing a tax break in that regard. This is not a break for the company, it is for the employee of a particular company. The mining industry, for example, is in tough shape at this time and we should encourage these companies to be optimistic and continue developing the north.

Let me refer to the minister another concern I have. This has regard to the possibility of increasing the amount to $50,000. I suppose that $50,000 could be considered as a reasonable exemption, under the circumstances in the north, because that amount would cover the cost of most residences in northern areas. It would be insufficient in one of the larger urban centres. Let us use Toronto as an example, where a decent, three-bedroom house would run in the neighbourhood of $80,000. I am wondering if there is any resistance to increasing this limit. I feel a good case can be made on that basis for making it higher than $50,000.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we discussed this matter with the mining industry because we knew it would be affected by this legislation. It was agreed that the $50,000 limit was pretty generous in terms of the problems they are having. The hon. member is asking me why we should not increase the amount. When you are dealing with tax breaks for a certain class of citizens, you always experience difficulty, mostly because it is never enough. I do not blame the hon. member for defending forcefully the interests of the northern part of Canada, with which I have been associated for quite some time as the minister of Indian affairs; however, $50,000 is considered by the industry and by the government as fair.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, let me give the minister an example of what is going to happen in one of the mining communities of the north, and this will affect several employees of this particular community. The company will very shortly be offering for sale houses that were built this year, at a price of $45,000. The terms of sale will be 10 per cent down, with the balance payable without interest over a 15-year period. The effect of the amendment to the act as it is presently worded will mean that if an employee who has been living in another home or apartment building, as I stipulated, decides to buy one of the homes in this community, he will be deemed to have received in the years following 1978 a taxable benefit equal to the interest calculated at a rate determined by the government on a mortgage balance at the rate of approximately $40,000. If we assume that the prescribed rate is 8 per cent, the taxable benefit to the individual in this particular community is $2,700, being $3,200 at the prescribed rate of interest less the $500 exclusion. The $2,700 will be taxable at the same rate and as if it were wages.

However, if the bill were changed to exempt all housing loans—I would like the minister to pay particular attention to this—then because of the $50,000 exemption there would be no taxable benefit. Does the minister have any comment on that particular aspect?

● (1732)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this move was made because there were a lot of abuses of that scheme before the Department of National Revenue passed regulations which eliminated them. I am establishing a system which will permit the using of the interest free loan system in order to assist the mobility of manpower in some areas. Law officials were advising National Revenue on the previous system as it has developed. In fact we plugged a loophole. We saw some of the consequences of the move, and I am changing the law in order to permit the mobility of people. If we have to permit interest free loans for people anywhere in Canada for the purchase of a new house, people would create corporations and allow themselves loans. There were a lot of abuses. That is why the Department of National Revenue had to move in; we are just trying to establish a fair system. The hon. member can indicate that it should be even more generous, but I do not think it would be advisable.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I should like to point out to the hon. member for Churchill that he has time for one short question.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Would the minister say there is no difference between the remote areas of northern Canada and the eastern and southern parts of the country? Would no consideration be given to any special status for people within that 25-mile limit? There has been no consideration given to a tax break for these people.

Mr. Chrétien: I can appreciate the preoccupation and the representation of the hon. member. So far we have avoided two different tax systems in Canada: one for Canadians in the southern parts of Canada, and one for the others. It would be difficult to determine which municipalities should be included and which should be excluded. This is not the first time the idea has been put to me. When I was travelling in northern Manitoba, northern Saskatchewan, northern Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, this idea was put forward quite frequently but was not entertained by the government.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to ask one short question?

The Deputy Chairman: This is the last one.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Seeing that I was involved in the clause 1 and clause 2 confusion, I should like to ask the minister one short question. In his earlier remarks the minister indicated that some thought should be given to a clarification concerning my earlier remarks. Will he give me an undertaking that some consideration will be given to the possibility of changing the 25 mile limit?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, earlier I said that the representation of the hon. member will be looked into by my officials and myself. I have listened carefully to the hon. member, but I am not in a position to give him any specific answer. His remarks and representations will be studied carefully.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, clause 2 which is before us is one of the many clauses of the bill in which the corporate sector receives the bigger break.

Mr. Stevens: We are not on clause 2.

Mr. Chrétien: The blue collar workers who move to the north.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps I should defer my comments to later. My understanding was that clause 2, along with clauses 35 and 16, would give a better break to corporations under such items as employee loans, stock options, capital gains and so on.

Mr. Chrétien: Go ahead.

Mr. Lumley: You are right.

Mr. Nystrom: Because of what has been referred to in clauses 2, 16 and 35, $120 million per annum would be the amount of the benefit to people.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that too much money is being given to the corporate sector and to those who are very wealthy. In this bill alone $1,245 million is being given to the corporate sector. This is not the way to stimulate the economy. There has been a lot of evidence in the last few years which indicates that providing money to corporations does not stimulate the economy. Most of the plants in this country are operating at approximately an 80 per cent capacity, and yet there are huge handouts to these corporations in order for them to speed up their capacity. That does not make sense.

My party is arguing for the $1.2 billion to be given to low and middle income people in order for their demand to be increased. They will purchase goods, and the goods will be produced. The problem is how to get our plants up to 90 per cent or 100 per cent capacity. The best way to do that is to stimulate demand. That can be done by giving ordinary people more purchasing power. I should like to have the comments of the Minister of Finance on those specific items some time in the future.

When the minister gave his mini-budget in the House a few weeks ago, it was ironic that INCO received grants from the federal government and it was in the process of laying off workers.One of the initial arguments of the Liberal party was: if a gift were given to a company, it would expand and hire more people.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member will permit an explanation. According to the tax incentive program in front of the House, if there is no new investment there is no tax break. I read the letter sent by Northern Telecom to the CBC and the hon. member's colleague on that issue. The position taken by the New Democratic Party is extremely misleading, because if there is no new investment there is no tax break.

There is only one item which could be considered a tax break. I am referring to the three person inventory break, if I can use that expression. This is for people who have inventory because the cost of inventory is high. The fact that this exists permitted INCO to stockpile their production for seven months. Thus, that is a tax break which allowed INCO to keep their strength. In fact it was a tax break which helped employees to keep their jobs. If that tax break was not existent, perhaps some employees would have lost their jobs before today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Over the years, the federal government has given a lot of money to INCO. Despite that, it is still laying off workers. INCO owes approximately $378 million in deferred taxes. Why does the government not start collecting some of the deferred taxes? Those deferred taxes are nothing but interest free loans. It does not seem right for that much money to be owed by corporations, when ordinary people could use it to purchase things. One could give many, many examples of corporations owing a lot of money in deferred taxes. The economy would be in better shape if the government started to collect those moneys.

I have a fundamental disagreement with the minister that the so-called triple down theory will work. In my speech on second reading I mentioned various examples where money was given to corporations to create jobs. Those jobs have not been created. In fact there are fewer jobs. Many corporations in the resource sector have received handouts over the past few years, and jobs are not being created. Many more jobs will be lost between now and next spring. It seems to me we are doing the wrong thing. What we should be doing is making sure that the resources that are being mined in Canada are processed and refined in this country. In accordance with the economic policy of C. D. Howe of some 20 or 30 years ago, however, we have been processing fewer and fewer of our raw materials. We should be going in the other direction.

Those were some of the comments that I wanted to make at this stage and I will be making several more on the corporate sector as we reach other clauses of the bill.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, my questions are for the minister. I take it, he will be back shortly. I see he is back. I wonder if he could quantify for us what we are talking about in clause 2. How much in revenue, does he feel, might be yielded to the federal Treasury if this new approach to tax the so called deemed interest is brought into effect?

Mr. Chrétien: We do not know, and it seems that it is not possible to guess. This is a loophole we are plugging and it is difficult to know how many cases there were. We realized there were some abuses, so we installed a new system on the report from National Revenue.

Mr. Stevens: It amazes me constantly that bureaucracy may deem something to be a loophole and, with no concrete evidence of how big the loophole is in the sense of how much revenue was being lost, they have no hesitation in bringing before us today clause 2 which, I suggest, will have a very serious repercussion on employees, especially employees who are being relocated in an area such as Thompson to which my colleague, the hon. member for Churchill has just referred, and other employees who might be required to shift from, say, Calgary to some other city. It amazes me how bureaucracy can say arbitrarily, "We deem that you should not have this privilege and we will tax you". I think the time has come when we in the House should tell the Minister of Finance, who is displaying such arrogance, that if he does not know how much money he is talking about, how big the loophole is, he should go back to the drafting board and bring back this clause, if he thinks it is necessary, and then tell us a few of the facts that I think we in House are entitled to know.

I have a second question for the minister. How many people does he believe will be caught in this new provision that he is so dutifully trying to make us accept on behalf of his bureaucracy?

Mr. Chrétien: It is not on behalf of the bureaucracy. The Department of National Revenue has informed the Minister of Finance of the nature of the loophole. Some people were collecting up to $150,000 in interest free loans to buy a house. When we saw there were abuses, we decided to plug the loophole because we tried to establish a tax system which applies as equitably as possible to all the citizens of this land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: It is impossible to have all the figures. We have 8,800,000 tax forms which have to be analysed. We saw a loophole which was detrimental to the interests of the average citizen. I did not ask my officials how many there were because, if there is only one too many, it is too much.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, later this evening I will take the minister through other so-called inequitable situations which this government is condoning, and if they wish to have this ultimate inequity I will be very interested to find out why they are turning a blind eye on some other inequities and some other loopholes which, presumably, could be plugged if the government followed the philosophy of its bureaucrats.

An hon. Member: John Doyle, for instance.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, John Doyle. I noticed that the minister was very embarrassed when my colleague pointed out the fact that there are over $3.5 million—

Mr. Chrétien: It was you who were embarrassed, not me.

Mr. Stevens: —of unrecovered tax revenue from one former Liberal alone. You will notice that the minister did not attempt to quantify either the amount we are talking about or the numbers, so let me put it a little more simply for the minister. After all, he has two officials sitting in front of him. Presumably they have these figures at their fingertips. Can the minister give us a rough estimate of how many employees he thinks he will catch with clause 2?

Mr. Chrétien: I will not venture to shoot from the hip on that. Abuses have been reported to us by the Department of National Revenue. We realized some people were abusing the system, so we decided to plug the loophole. I do not know whether the numbers amount to dozens or tens of thousands. I say it is not fair and it must be changed. That is all.

Mr. Stevens: The minister said they had been notified by the Department of National Revenue of these recorded abuses. How many have they notified you of?

Mr. Chrétien: I do not have the figures but there was a sufficient number to cause us to change the law.

Mr. Stevens: I think it is very important that we get a little more detail before we start passing new clauses because some bureaucrat thinks it is a good idea. If the minister does not have the figures, after having told us that he is acting on this clause on the advice of National Revenue, and he does not know how many reported instances there have been that have led the department to feel that this clause is necessary, would the minister at least give us a ballpark figure?. Is it 1, is it 10, or is it 1,000 that he feels will be caught?

Mr. Chrétien: I think that if I were to go along with the idea of the hon. member, his friend who was arguing that it is a good program would be completely embarrassed. The Department of National Revenue notified us that something illegal was going on and they wanted to close it off completely. If we were not to pass the clause, it would mean that no one would have any breaks, whether they were moving in northern Manitoba or anywhere else. The hon. member would be well advised to look at what he is talking about before making such a silly proposal.

Mr. Stevens: I have asked four questions and I have not made any proposal to the minister as yet. I have simply been trying to get some information from him.

Mr. Chrétien: Louder.

Mr. Stevens: I will put my question again. Presumably, if he has been so dependent on the Department of National Revenue he can answer this question easily. How many reported cases have they drawn to his attention that have caused his bureaucracy to say that obviously clause 2 is necessary?

Mr. Chrétien: The answer is, enough.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Stevens: Is it reasonable for any minister to come to the House on an important subject such as this and simply tell us out of hand that, in his opinion, there have been enough so called abuses of so-called tax loopholes to justify the clause that is now before us? Let us bear in mind the concerns people across this country have with respect to this type of thing, and the concerns outlined by the hon. member for Churchill. After discussing my earlier question with his officials, perhaps the minister could shed a little more light on what we are talking about.

• (1752)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I said, and I want to repeat, it was becoming more and more part of executive compensation the way that this scheme was used to give an interest free loan to build a house, and it had become a tax shelter for many people. National Revenue ruled that it was a tax shelter and that it was unfair, and it made recommendations to us. We have looked into the problem. We have recognized that there were some abuses. I do not want to quantify them. I know they existed, and the fact that they did was enough to convince me. This is not the result of a bureaucratic conviction. As a responsible minister I accepted it. I know of some cases in which people were receiving loans of $150,000 and $200,000 without any interest at all. It was part of a scheme for some executives to avoid taxes.

I felt that, executives or not, they have to pay their taxes, and we decided to have a new scheme to help those who are moving from one mining town to another—or whatever it is—to help them because of this necessary mobility, but it was certainly not to give a tax break to people who were abusing the system. Through a ruling National Revenue decided that this was unfair, and we come up with a proposition at this time which is more just and which takes into account some of the needs without having to cope with abuses.

Mr. Stevens: I would like to take the minister up on what he has just said. Did the minister first go to the bureaucracy and say, "I would like clause 2"—or something along that line—"because I am really disturbed by what I understand is a real abuse", or did the bureaucracy come to him? Whose idea was it initially?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member's questioning is amazing. It is very evident that he wants to waste time. Has the hon. member heard a minister of finance anywhere in the world saying, "Will you please let me have clause 92, 93 or 94" and so forth?

We have very good civil servants who are experts and who make recommendations. It is up to the minister to decide. I think this was proposed by my predecessor, the hon. member for Rosedale. I was not even the minister when the proposal was put on the table, so it is absolutely crazy for the hon. member to ask how I decided on a proposal which was made by my predecessor. I do not want to waste much time on that. I just said there were some abuses. The Department of National Revenue brought it to the attention of my department, and I am bringing in a sensible proposition which will help to cope with some of the problems raised by the hon. member for Churchill. The hon. member raised some very valid questions. I am satisfied there was a loophole. It is our duty as guardians of a fair tax system to plug that loophole. If others make suggestions which make sense, we will make amendments in the next budget.

Mr. Stevens: I hope it is well established that this obviously originated with the bureaucracy and was presented to the minister's predecessor and then to him. They both bit on it, and I think the record should be clear. It is a bureaucratic idea. The bureaucracy feels there is a loophole, and for reasons I am going to bring out after eight o'clock I think it is very pertinent that we identify exactly who has said that this clause should be brought into our tax system.

I would like to go to this specific phrase in the clause: "interest for the year computed that a prescribed rate on loans". I wonder if the minister can indicate how it is proposed to set this prescribed rate. How often is it going to be set? What will be taken into account with regard to the prescribed rate? Is it going to be a national rate or a regional rate? Exactly what does the department have in mind for the prescribed rate?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: It is related to the prime rate.

Mr. Stevens: I wonder if the minister could be a little more precise. In what way is it related to the prime rate? Is it going to be changed every time the prime rate is changed?

Mr. Chrétien: It is calculated once a year based on the prime rate at the end of the summer, to be used for the next year.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, let us get that correctly. In bureaucratic jargon what is the end of the summer?

Mr. Chrétien: Before the fall.

Mr. Stevens: The minister does not seem to get clear instructions from his own officials. I wonder if he would go back to them and find out what date they have in mind which is between the end of summer and before the fall. What do bureaucrats consider that date to be?

Mr. Chrétien: The average of June, July and August; before the fall.

Mr. Stevens: I presume they are thinking of August 31.

Mr. Chrétien: It is the average of three months, June, July and August.

Mr. Kempling: Why didn't you say so?

Mr. Chrétien: That is what I said before.

Mr. Stevens: If the minister had known that, he could have said that at the beginning. It has been established how the prime rate will be identified for the year following. What will be done with the prime rate? Is the prescribed rate referred to in clause 2 to be one point above that rate, two points or five points? Exactly what will be done with the prime rate, now that we have identified how the bureaucrats intend to find it?

Mr. Chrétien: It is the prime rate rounded according to the formula I just gave to the hon. member.

Mr. Stevens: It is going to be rounded to the prime rate.

Mr. Chrétien: Let us call it six o'clock.

Mr. Stevens: Don't worry about the clock.

Mr. Chrétien: You are wasting time anyway.

Mr. Stevens: Is there going to be any particular ratio given on a regional basis, bearing in mind that mortgages in this country have fairly different interest rates?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, there is one single rate for all taxpayers throughout Canada.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again later this day. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLISHING—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN AUTHORS FROM REPRODUCTIONS OF THEIR WORKS IMPORTED FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to return today to a question I raised on November 18 with respect to a recent meeting between the Writers' Union of Canada with the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) on November 15. This concerns the very serious matter, as they said in their brief, of the possible collapse of the Canadian publishing industry, indicative of the very heavy loss of income both to Canadian writers and publishers that has occurred in recent years because of the selling at below-cost prices of the works of Canadian authors by American publishers and remaindered or wholesaled in Canada.

● (1802)

The meeting that took place a few days ago was the third that has occurred between the Writers' Union of Canada and the government since 1975. The core of the problem is that American publishers who have printed far too many copies of Canadian authors sell these leftover or remaindered copies to middlemen or book jobbers at dirt cheap prices. In recent years these middlemen have been selling specifically to three Canadian book chains which make up a large part of the Canadian market. I refer to Coles, W. H. Smith, and Classic. Coles was the first to sell remainders on a widespread basis. The three chains have been able to sell at one half the price of the Canadian edition. As a result, the Canadian edition immediately stops being printed. Canadian authors receive no royalties on the remaindered copies. In 1975 only Coles was doing this, but by 1977 the three major book chains are participating.

This at present affects some 26 major Canadian authors, but time does not permit me to run down the list. As far back as 1975 it was suggested that action should be taken to provide that well-known publications by Canadian authors being published in the United States should be put on a prohibited list. The problem is that the prohibited list has not been satisfactory because at the moment it takes about six months to become operative. I understand a meeting has taken place in the last few days which hopes to reduce the time from six months to one month. This would be a step in the right direction but would not come close to meeting the type of commitment to the Canadian publishing industry and the Writers' Union that they have requested of the government.

It seems to me that at the very least there should be some kind of top-level co-ordination between the departments basically concerned with this problem. I think of the Department of the Secretary of State, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of Justice, and the Department of National Revenue as being able to take some effective action.

I think it is the traditional Canadian dilemma, and something striking and unique, that this is the only English-speaking nation I am aware of that does not have strong protection for its writers and its publishing industry. The United States and Great Britain for sometime have had clear laws which prohibit the sale in those countries of the works of their authors published abroad, particularly at prices that would totally undermine the payment of royalties to the authors or publishers.

The most recent change of copyright law in the United States which is about to go into effect states that when foreign publishers of American authors wish to bring remaindered copies into the United States, the United States publisher must be notified in advance of this potential competition and has veto power over the importation.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been considering revisions to the Copyright Act for over a year, but the earliest that legislation might be forthcoming is 1980, and more likely it will be later.

What the Writers' Union has asked for is two possible courses of action. They seek amendment to the Copyright Act to forbid not just the importation but also the sale of remaindered copies. That would concern Sections 27 and 28 of the Copyright Act, and especially the elimination of Section 28(3).

The second route that could be taken, and should be taken, is that the Crown undertake costs of prosecution in test cases. Present serious ambiguities in the act have meant that previous challenges have faced legal setbacks, indicating that any court case will drag on for a long time and obviously involve higher courts.

What have we heard from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and from the Secretary of State? They promised to examine the Copyright Act again, but there has been no promise of an interdepartmental committee from the Department of Justice and the Department of National Revenue. They have promised to meet with bookstore owners to use moral suasion and not to carry remaindered editions. I say to that "fat chance!". We know how far moral suasion goes in the world of business, particularly the very competitive world of book sales. Further they have asked for a meeting which has now taken place. As I said a few moments ago they shortened up the time but it certainly will not achieve the effect desired. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that for the past two years, as I said on the day I originally put the question, it is a sort of constant fobbing off of Canadian authors and publishers.

I would hope, that while the Secretary of State himself is not with us this evening, his parliamentary secretary will give us a much more clear cut answer in terms of action that will be taken to make an effective attack on this very serious problem. I believe both the authors and publishers when they state that we are involved in a crisis situation. What has developed very rapidly in the last two years, if it will last for another year or two means a considerable collapse and certainly a very great loss to Canada in both revenue as well as to the authors and publishers themselves, who will obviously resort to foreign publication. It will certainly be a greater hole in our own situation with respect to an effective Canadian industry in the publishing field.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the problem of the importation and the sale of foreign editions of works by Canadian authors in Canada, for which there exists a Canadian edition, is a very serious question and one to which the minister attaches extreme importance. Above all, it is a question of principle: can we accept that a right, which has been clearly set out and recognized by parliament through the Copyright Act, rest ineffective and inoperative? The question has another side as well, one based on the realities, with strong implications for the freedom of our writers to pursue creative activity and further for the survival and development of the Canadian book publishing industry.

I can appreciate the hon. member wishing some clarity could be shed on the actions about to be, or indeed will be at some future date, taken by the government. I can only suggest to the hon. member that the meeting he suggests would be an alternative answer to the publishers and authors. And although he would seek the kind of formality of interdepartmental committees, those committees or a committee of that type has not been set up. However, it may be small solace to him to know that indeed there is actively being pursued at this time by the various ministries which he has recited, Revenue, Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Secretary of State that meetings are taking place between the officials and various ministries with a view to examining solutions, such as that put by the authors and publishers.

Might I point out to the hon. member, and for the record indicate, that when he was suggesting that the royal commission on book publishing had indicated the criticism, that in fact he did not quite complete the citation, and perhaps I could indicate that the citation should read:

> The procedure under section 27 (of the Copyright Act) . . . has been applied in a way that makes it unworkable in practice, and we think that this should be revised and clarified.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

These procedures were revised and clarified in 1975 and new discussions are now under way between authors and publishers on one hand and officials from National Revenue on the other, in order to eliminate the final obstacles for the most efficient implementation of "List C" of the tariff and customs law. I might indicate to the hon. member that in addition to the various solutions that might be sought and expected in this instance the one solution of examination mentioned by the hon. member, is being held at this very time as to whether or not action should be supported.

SOCIAL SERVICES—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON FUNDING—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday a series of questions was directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) with respect to the long anticipated legislation on social services. The reply of the minister indicated that she was not really in touch with the recent developments. This is the reason, why, again this afternoon I have chosen to bring the subject to the attention of the House and to the hon. lady, and I suppose in this case it will be the parliamentary secretary.

● (1812)

I know the problem is the rotation of ministers, which is one of the regular features of the present government. Ministers are changed so rapidly and so frequently that it is hard to know who has the responsibility for what. Therefore I cannot really fault the hon. lady who has the portfolio at the present time for not being aware of the situation.

The dialogue in connection with the new social services legislation has been going on for some four years, ever since the last minister tabled the orange paper. The main problem, of course, in areas of joint jurisdiction and joint responsibility such as health and welfare, is getting a consensus from the provincial governments. This was achieved last June and the bill went on the order paper with the assurance that there would be debate on it at the earliest possible moment. Unfortunately, last September 16, just before parliament resumed, the former minister as one of his last acts issued a press release which said as follows:

> Health and Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde today announced that he has proposed a major change in the federal financing of social services.
> In letters sent yesterday to provincial welfare ministers and to territorial commissioners, Mr. Lalonde called for a switch to block financing from the current cost-sharing approach.

This simply means that the whole matter was scuttled because the consensus that had been so carefully achieved over a long period of negotiations went down the drain.

As anticipated, there was an immediate response from the provincial ministers who met a short time later in the city of Edmonton. A Canadian Press despatch at that time indicated the point of view of the provincial ministers. I quote:

> Provincial social services ministers are united against a federal social services funding proposal after a two-day meeting.

They reject "tactics used by the former federal minister of health and welfare (Marc Lalonde) in making a unilateral proposal regarding funding arrangements for social services in Canada without consultation with the provinces," conference chairman Helen Hunley said yesterday.

The minister should have known the results of his arbitrary actions because he has now gone to new responsibilities with regard to federal-provincial relationships. I am sure that the confrontation tactics such as I have indicated are not going to help him very well in his new ministerial responsibilities.

Unfortunately, in the question period the other day, the new minister indicated that she is not aware of the problem she is facing. In response to questions she stated the provinces said in a press release that they did not appreciate the way the counterproposal had been made. She said they did not reject the proposal but the way the offer had been made. I have quoted their release to indicate that that is not so. They reject the whole new idea of block funding to replace the proposed cost sharing which had been agreed after long consultation and deliberation.

More important in this regard is the attitude of the voluntary associations which have been anticipating a major breakthrough in social services legislation, particularly for the most needy groups, the handicapped, the chronically ill, and the geriatric population of Canada. Some of the speeches made by the former minister have given them reason to hope for immediate action. I quote:

● (1817)

The handicapped have the right to be as independent as possible, the right to live like everyone in the community, and the services they need to bring this about should be provided.

The minister referred to the "removal of legislative disincentives" and "acceptance of the handicapped within the community". Here is another quotation:

In every area, the message was clear. They "wanted in"—into employment, into community living, into maximum participation in community life, into the planning of systems and services designed to help them. At the same time, they "wanted out"—out of institutions, out of dead-end sheltered workshops, out of welfare, out of being pitied, out of being thrust on to the sidelines with a pension and a shrug.

There has been, I am sure, a strong wave of criticism reaching the minister from voluntary agencies, particularly from the Canadian Paraplegic Association. This is understandable having regard to the failure to live up to promises of immediate action which have been repeated, now, for four years, especially as the legislation is not even reappearing on the order paper at the present time.

It has been suggested that delay has been caused as a result of the change of government in Manitoba. I assured the hon. lady last Wednesday, and I assure her today, that Manitoba is one of the most enthusiastic provinces. We shall be hosts to the International Rehabilitation Congress in 1980 and it is essential we have this legislation, much in its original state, if that Congress is to be a success.

I come back, finally, to my main point: will the minister at the earliest moment bring the provincial ministers together so that we can get on with this urgently-needed legislation?

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the minister dealt with this subject fully on November 23 and I have very little to add to her reply. I would refer hon. members to pages 1160-1167 of Hansard for that date. The minister made it abundantly clear that it is the intention of the federal government to consult with the provinces once it has been ascertained that there is general agreement on the principle of block financing of the social services. I believe it is the intention of the minister to communicate officially with her provincial colleagues on this important subject within the next two weeks.

ENERGY—NEWFOUNDLAND'S OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS REGULATION—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT ON QUESTION TO BE PUT TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in connection with an unsatisfactory reply I received to a question I directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) on November 21. As is usually the case he showed he did not know what the subject was about. He was not briefed. In short, the reply was most unsatisfactory.

There was a dispute between Newfoundland and the Government of Canada as to the ownership of the oil, gas and minerals that lie under the sea on the continental shelf off Newfoundland and Labrador. Newfoundland will not surrender its claims to the ownership of these resources to the Government of Canada.

The Government of Canada is basing its position on a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in a British Columbia case. But the Newfoundland case is entirely different. Mr. Speaker, every member will be getting a copy of this document, "Heritage of the Sea," and every member of every legislative assembly in Canada will also be getting a copy of the document. And every branch of the media will be getting copies of this document which sets out Newfoundland's case and the importance of that case.

Since 1967, 54 wells have been drilled off the coast, eight of them in the east Newfoundland basin, and 12 off Labrador. Of the 12 off Labrador, three have resulted in significant gas discoveries, so we know there is tremendous potential there.

The position of Newfoundland is not similar to that of British Columbia. We came into Confederation in 1949. Minerals rights in each province were determined by the rights each held before coming into Confederation. When Newfoundland entered Confederation our rights to offshore oil and gas were not the same as those of British Columbia in 1871 when it was a colony. The rights of Newfoundland are based on the rights of a twentieth Century self-governing British dominion, and we do not intend to relinquish our claim. But because they are centralists, the Government of Canada and its political supporters claim they own these resources and wish to exercise full control over them, leaving to Newfoundland a few crumbs from the table that they might deign to give.

The Progressive Conservative policy is to recognize the provinces as being the owners of those resources. We will recognize Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and British Columbia as provinces owning the resources off their shores when the Conservative party takes office in 1978.

This is the biggest land grab since the Yukon gold rush. It is a frenzied example of Kung Fu federalism: the great government in Ottawa must have all the control and all the power. It is greedy-guts centralization of all the power and revenue. Those who have the most will have even more. It is an example of creeping colonialism because the federal land grabbers, epitomized by the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, treat us as a colony. I am glad to see that minister is going to be bounced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), according to the Ottawa Journal of November 23. That is because of his unwillingness to make firm decisions about anything and because of his refusal to be brief by indicating that he does not know the answer to the question posed.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is firm about one thing: that Newfoundland will be crushed and its offshore resources will be taken by Ottawa. In the unlikely event that the Liberal government stays in power after the next election, then this is a matter which will have to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. Newfoundland will not surrender. The Liberal government wants to take it all.

Newfoundland will go to the Supreme Court of Canada on two conditions: first, that this government permit the 30-year rule to be set aside in order for Newfoundland to have access to all the documents surrounding the 1949 period. If we go back 30 years from 1977, we arrive at 1947; and if we go back from 1978, we will arrive at 1948. Newfoundland must have access to those documents in order to support its case. The 30-year rule has to be set aside to permit that. Second, the government must agree that Newfoundland and Ottawa agree on the questions which go to the Supreme Court of Canada. There can be no loaded question set up by Ottawa to favour Ottawa. That is what happened in the case of British Columbia. That was one of the reasons for the court deciding in favour of British Columbia in the 1967 reference: Canada unilaterally decided the form and the wording of the question. Newfoundland will not accept that. No unilaterally decided question will go to the Supreme Court of Canada as far as that province is concerned. If necessary, other methods can be taken.

I ask the minister: does Canada agree that Newfoundland will have access to all the documents, despite the 30-year rule? I am referring to documents in Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States. These documents will prove what the law was on March 31, 1949, that Newfoundland came into Confederation owning its resources, and therefore under the British North America Act still owns them. Does Ottawa agree that the questions are to be decided by both sides? Does Ottawa agree that it will be a bilateral reference and both will agree on the exact wording of the question on which the court will be asked to adjudicate?

The minister's answer shows that he must be removed by the Prime Minister. He said, "As far as I know, there was a favourable decision taken in principle on these matters some months ago". That is not correct. Also he said, "I do not understand why the Newfoundland government has not been able to move more expeditiously." That is nonsense. It has nothing to do with Newfoundland moving more expeditiously. For five years Newfoundland has prepared its case. If the Conservative party does not win the election next year, Newfoundland wants the assurance that the Liberal government will agree to waive the 30 year rule and will agree to a joint wording of the questions on which the Supreme Court of Canada will be asked to rule. The simple answer is either yes or no.

At the present time there are two sets of regulations: there are the oil and gas regulations of Newfoundland, which Newfoundland indicates are valid; and there are the oil and gas regulations of Canada, which Canada indicates are valid. Newfoundland wants exploration to continue in these areas while this dispute is being settled. The minister from Newfoundland, Mr. Brian Peckford, has suggested an interim offshore management committee in order for the two governments to have a forum to deal with the oil companies jointly while this matter is sub judice. They should receive some reassurance that they will go on exploring in that area while this matter goes to court. The minister said it was an interesting and constructive suggestion, and I hope that when he meets the Newfoundland minister in December this can be agreed to so that exploration may continue next year.

● (1827)

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased, on behalf of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), to reply to the statement made by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

With respect to the Newfoundland situation, discussions are continuing between the Department of Justice and Newfoundland officials respecting the agreed upon reference to the Supreme Court on mineral resource ownership and jurisdiction in areas offshore that province.

There was a meeting of federal and Newfoundland officials on March 16 of this year to discuss the memorandum of understanding signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the premiers of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island on February 1, to explore the possibilities for a similar political settlement of the offshore Newfoundland situation. As a follow-up to this meeting, the Newfoundland minister of mines and energy sent up a list of questions, some 58 in all, ostensibly relating to a possible federal-Newfoundland arrangement along the lines of the proposed federal-Maritime provinces arrangement. A comprehensive reply to this Newfoundland questionnaire was sent on June 21, but no response has been made by Newfoundland authorities.

Until recently the only information that we had received at the federal level as regards a possible Newfoundland initiative on administrative arrangements has been by way of newspaper articles and the questions posed by the hon. member for St. John's West. No submission had been received by Department of Energy, Mines and Resources from any Newfoundland authority to the effect:

that the two governments set up an interim offshore management committee so that there will be a forum for discussion and co-ordination and so that the industry will know where to go to get answers in this matter of disputed jurisdiction.

In conclusion, it was not until November 21 that we received a letter, dated November 3, from the minister of mines and energy for Newfoundland enclosing a copy of the Newfoundland offshore regulations and requesting that officials meet at an early date to discuss the mandate, membership, and operational procedures of an interim committee. The envelope in which this letter was received was post marked St. John's, Newfoundland, November 16. Officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources have been instructed to follow up this request.

In view of the unwillingness of Newfoundland to consult meaningfully with us in the past, we welcome this new initiative and hope that it will improve the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn. I do now leave the chair for the House to go into committee of the whole to consider Bill C-11.

Motion withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: It being 6.30 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee took recess clause 2 of the bill was under consideration.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, now that the minister has had a chance to have his dinner and to consult, presumably, with some of his officials, I wonder if he can give us any better estimates as to what we are talking about in clause 2. What is the nature of the so-called loophole we are trying to fill? How many people are involved? How much money is involved?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing else to add.

Mr. Stevens: I believe the minister said he has no further information to give us on that.

Mr. Alexander: What is he doing over there?

Mr. Stevens: The minister said he has said what he has to say. Let me put another question to him. I really find it surprising that a minister would bring a bill to us and have the gall to suggest that it is not passing fast enough, yet when we get to clause 2 the minister does not even know what clause 2 is all about.

Mr. Lumley: He has already explained it.

Mr. Stevens: If the minister wants speedy passage of the bill it is certainly not our intention to delay it, but on behalf of the Canadian public we think it is our responsibility to ask a few pertinent questions as to why the government wants some of these amendments and why the minister thinks it is necessary to make the changes he has in mind. In short, I would think a minister of finance would almost welcome being able to explain exactly why he feels members of this House should support him on various aspects of a bill.

I have a copy of a letter which was sent to the minister's predecessor by a chap from Winnipeg. I would like to get the minister's reaction to what this man is pointing out. He says he lived in Calgary and his company required him to move to Edmonton. As an inducement the company agreed to give him what would now be looked upon by the minister—or at least by his staff—as a relatively low interest loan. The reason the company agreed to give him a low interest loan was that the mortgage he had in Calgary was at 5¾ per cent. My question to the minister on behalf of this chap from Winnipeg is: how is he going to handle a situation where someone has the benefit of a 5¾ per cent mortgage and his company wants him to move to another city? When a company realizes an employee has favoured financing on the home he is leaving and gives him comparable financing for the home to which he is moving, how is the minister going to handle that situation?

In his letter this man points out that there is going to be a deemed income, deemed by the National Revenue people, if this clause passes, to the extent of whatever the difference is between, for example, a 5 per cent rate on the mortgage he has compared with what will be looked upon as the prescribed rate, to use the minister's terminology, if this clause should go through. Clearly this chap is going to be penalized as a result of his move, notwithstanding the fact that all his employer is attempting to do is put him back in the same relatively favourable position he was in when he had a mortgage in Calgary.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, he will be entitled to a maximum loan of $50,000 without interest. If the company accepts an interest of 5½ per cent, he could probably borrow up to about $120,000 at that rate without having to pay the difference between the prescribed rate and the rate paid on income tax.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I did not get all of that, but as I understand it the minister is saying that once you subtract the $500 from the deemed difference, the man who has a new mortgage at the 5 per cent rate will not be taxed provided his mortgage is not greater than $120,000. Was that what the minister was saying?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I just said he could obtain a maximum of $50,000 if he moved and for more than $25,000 without interest. It means that he could have a $50,000 loan without interest. If the interest rate is 5½ per cent and the rate agreed for the current year was say 8 per cent, he could then have more than double at 5½ per cent, which means that he could secure more than $100,000, maybe $120,000 because the preferential rate he would obtain would be 5½ per cent. It is quite simple to calculate: he is entitled to the equivalent to a $50,000 loan without interest if it is a loan of $100,000 at half the current interest. It is the same thing as a $50,000 loan without interest.

● (2012)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: In order to allow someone to do this, is the minister indicating there would have to be two mortages, or can this be wrapped up in the one mortgage document? Does there have to be a $50,000 mortgage with zero interest, and some other interest rate for the balance?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, he can take the total benefit regardless of the kind of mortgage he has.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if I could come back to the other point, based on what the minister has indicated this man who writes to us from Winnipeg will still be caught with a tax.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I never said that. Mr. Chairman, may I explain that he is entitled to the equivalent of a $50,000 loan without interest. If the interest rate is 8 per cent and he gets a loan at 4 per cent, he can have up to $100,000. And on the benefit of 4 per cent on $100,000, he would not have to pay income tax. Beyond that, he would have to pay income tax. I think it is quite simple. I have been explaining it for one hour now, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Stevens.]

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I realize the minister must be getting quite tired, Mr. Chairman, but surely I do not have to remind him that we started questioning on the broad point with which I am now dealing, about seven minutes ago. It may seem like an hour to him, but I wish he would quit misrepresenting the facts.

I should like to go to the next question raised by this correspondent, which I thought was interesting. If it is true that there are loopholes, that there are somehow inequities in our tax system, I wonder why the minister feels it necessary to plug those so-called loopholes but presumably leaves others wide open. What about the free travel passes for Air Canada employees? Should they not be deemed some type of advantage to those employees and be added to their incomes? We understand it is government policy that they are not so deemed.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is something which has nothing to do with clause 2 and which concerns all sorts of services. People may obtain them from the corporations they are working for. Of course, some are CNR, CPR or Air Canada employees. Others may travel on buses free of charge, for instance transport commission employees in either Winnipeg or Toronto. There are people who can use their bosses' cars once in a while without paying. This raises, of course, the problem of this type of benefits, but we feel at this time that the costs of administering and monitoring these benefits would considerably exceed the money taxpayers would get by depriving these people of these benefits. The list of these benefits is quite extensive. As a matter of fact, if I could use a few minutes of the hon. member's time, I could name quite a few others which I know, but I feel under these circumstances that we must demonstrate judgment. Maybe in the next budget we could amend a number of provisions, but I do not intend to do so while we are debating this bill.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I take it from the minister's answer that he feels the people he deems to be using this loophole of so-called relatively low interest loans so far as their company is concerned, are like sitting ducks. From an administrative standpoint it is easy to nail them with this deemed income in clause 2. There are some others, such as subsidization of civil servants who might have free travel on Air Canada but it is tougher to police them, although I would have thought with civil servants being paid out of the treasury, they would have been one of the easiest to police regarding deemed income. I should like to ask the minister what yardstick is used. As I understand it, a subsidy is paid to help people move from one town to another if they happen to be in public employment, yet there is not suggestion of deemed income in such a case. I wonder why that is distinguished from the other situation where an employee who works for a private company is moved and is given a relatively low interest loan. If we pass clause 2, that is going to be partly deemed to be income.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have just stated in an elaborate fashion that there are many of these benefits. I could mention others. For instance, a number of corporations allow their employees to buy consumer goods. The people who are working for Simpsons-Sears can buy goods at prices which are cheaper that those paid by other consumers. We should normally step in, and there are all sorts of situations. The hon. member has asked on what basis we decide. The basis we are using is something which is called "judgment".

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister has now come to the letter I am referring to because the example he gave is exactly another example that this taxpayer gives. He says that if he worked for Simpsons-Sears or Eaton's he would get 15 or 20 per cent discount on his purchases. Is the government suggesting that this is going to be deemed income in future in order to remove whatever inequity it thinks exists in that situation?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the federal government does not intend to introduce such a measure.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I have one short question. I should like to refer the minister to the explanatory notes. On deemed income there is an explanation which includes the following words:

> . . . the Act be amended to require an employee, shareholder . . .

These are the words I am concerned about, where it says:

> . . . or related person to include in his income the amount by which
> (a) interest for the year computed at a prescribed rate on loans from an employer or a corporation . . .

The governing words in the initial paragraph "or related person" are left out in the explanatory note where it speaks of "interest for the year computed".

Does the minister understand my point, which I think is very significant?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the substance of that measure is in the clause. If the clause were read by the hon. member he would see the problem does not exist in the actual reading of the act.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I have read the act and I am reading the explanatory notes. I can only gather information from what is given by the minister by way of explanatory notes. In one instance it talks about "employee, shareholder or related person" and then refers to the "interest for the year computed at a prescribed rate on loans from an employer or a corporation" but leaves out the phrase "or related person." I want to know why that is left out. I have read the act and I did not find the answer. Perhaps the minister could give an explanation.

Mr. Chrétien: If the hon. member would look at Clause 35.(1) where it refers to 80.4 of the act he would find the explanation. Clause 2 and clause 35 are related.

● (2022)

Mr. Kempling: Following along with these questions on clause 2, I wonder if the minister would clarify several points with respect to expenses involved in moving, and whether or not these items are covered. As you know, mobility of people is very important to industry today. We are transferring people around particularly in industry perhaps in difficulty and placing management people in there. Aside from the allowances made on houses, what about moving expenses generally? Is moving expense going to be considered a deemed income?

Mr. Chrétien: There is an amendment later regarding moving allowances, I will give you the number in the bill.

Mr. Kempling: Will it cover also such things as broadloom allowance, drapery allowance, underwriting a loss on real estate, differential of upgrading of residence, bonus for moving, education allowance—are all those things covered in that section?

Mr. Chrétien: The moving allowances are found in clause 27 in this present bill. We are amending those regulations in clause 27. With respect to education, it is not included.

Mr. Kempling: Did you say that education is not included in here?

Mr. Chrétien: The tuition problem which the hon. member is referring to is not a moving expense.

Mr. Kempling: That is a matter of interpretation. What about the other items I have mentioned? In corporations where an executive is moved around and they move into a new home, there are decorating, broadloom and drapery allowances given and that sort of thing. Is that considered deemed income?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, clause 27 includes a definition of what is allowable as moving expenses, namely draperies and things like that, a certain number of items which have long been defined as moving expenses and are included in the Income Tax Act to be amended under clause 27.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, it must be understood that I cannot act as the lawyer of the department and give every definition of each thing which can be included. We are now considering the amendments to the bill and when it is passed, the taxpayers will know what to expect. In this case, there is a series of moving expenses allowable under the Income Tax Act.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: I have now found section 35 and I would like some information. I would like to know how close this relationship must be between the individual getting the loan and his relationship to the officer and employee. Is there a definition of the word "relationship" within the act now so we will know how far removed a person can be before the provision of this particular section can apply, and if so where is it?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, there is such a definition in the act.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I have one or two further questions concerning housing referred to in clause 2. I have heard here in the House the government accuse the mining industry of not creating enough jobs and not doing enough for their employees. In the case of a person who moves to an isolated community, or moves to a community and qualifies for the allowance, how long is he allowed to reside in that community prior to his purchasing a house? Would he qualify for the refund or qualify for the rebate on his tax if he purchased a house, providing he moved further than 25 miles—could he live in that community for five years, or three months prior to meeting this criteria, or does he have to meet that as soon as he moves to that community.

Mr. Chrétien: There is no time limit to that provision, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): In other words, the person that now lives in that particular community, does not qualify because he is not under the 25 mile restriction. You are discriminating against the person who lives in the community at the particular time because he does not come under the 25 mile restriction—that he must move from further than 25 miles; is that right?

Mr. Chrétien: That is an allocation relating to mobility. If he is a resident, this provision does not apply.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I say you are definitely discriminating against the person who lives in that particular community, and that is just what I have referred to. You are talking about mining companies not providing or doing enough for their employees. Here is a case where the mining industry is wanting to do something for their employees, the employees right on site. In order to qualify for this, could I in fact quit the company, move out of the community, and move back in and qualify?

Mr. Chrétien: According to the provisions of the act, yes.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Could I apply for a relocation grant to the government to do that?

Mr. Chrétien: We don't have a relocation grant under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): The minister talked about the reason this clause 2 was put in there, he talked about people ripping the government off to the tune of $150,000. Does the minister have any idea whatsoever, or any of his officials as to the number that would be involved here, say, under $50,000?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, such figures are not available.

[Mr. Alexander.]

[English]

Mr. Smith (Churchill): In other words, Mr. Chairman, this clause may affect only a very small number of people in the isolated parts of the country especially—the problem that the mining companies have trying to encourage people to come into that part of the country and of trying to keep the personnel they have now. I just want to be very clear that if someone left one of those communities, quit his job, went out and was rehired, then he could come back to the community, qualify in buying a home and then qualify under this amendment, could he then qualify for the income tax rebate?

Mr. Chrétien: With respect to the particular problem raised by the hon. member, perhaps technically he can claim that he is entitled to this interest free loan, but then he will obviously be acting against the spirit of the law. I do not know how the lawyers will interpret that, but of course, just a move of say 24 hours and coming back, will just be a technique that normally will not be acceptable because it will be evident that he is trying to circumvent the act as it is written.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I am still not perfectly clear on the one aspect of this. Where the minister said that there was no time limit on a person going into a particular community, and I am talking about isolated communities in this case, that he can live there for five years and could still apply for a housing loan—can he still qualify for the exemption under the income tax even if he was there for five or ten years?

● (2032)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it is in relation to a move by an employee from one community to another. The employee has to be involved in a move of a distance of 25 miles. We do not make any distinction between an isolated area or a move from Montreal to Toronto. The same benefit applies to a person who is moving from Winnipeg to Churchill. There is no distinction between isolated and not isolated, mining and not mining. It is an interest free loan a company can make to an employee if he is forced to move to another city in the execution of his duties.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I cannot agree that you can have just one set of rules for isolated and non isolated areas in the country. The government recognizes that it is more costly to live in isolated areas. Civil servants who live in those areas are paid a northern allowance to live there because the cost of living is higher.

Here is industry giving an interest free mortgage to its employees, a benefit to the employees, and still this is not recognized by this government. I do not see any difference between this and the situation that was raised by my colleague. He stated that Air Canada employees receive travel allowances and so on. What is the difference between that situation and a mining company putting up a tax free mortgage for its employees to encourage them to stay in that part of the country in the mining industry to take advantage of harvesting resources rather than having to beg people to come into the north? It is the same as Air Canada allowing its employees to travel free of charge. I do not see any difference. I cannot understand why an employee who now lives in that particular community in rented quarters could not qualify for this tax exemption if he purchased a house.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, if we were not to introduce this legislation as it is, nobody would be entitled to any sort of interest free loan from his employer. What we are doing now is making it possible to give an interest free loan. The interest will not be taxable as long as the loan is not more than $50,000 to someone who is moving. For other reasons we do not want to give such a benefit. It is for people who are forced to move. We do not intend to give the same benefit to someone residing in that locality, whether it is in the north or anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, does it apply also to the person newly hired by a company, or does it just concern the person moving from one employ to another?

Mr. Chrétien: If it is a new employee and he moves, but if it is a new employee who is not moving, he is not entitled to it.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I am talking about a new employee who is hired outside of that community, more than 25 miles away.

Mr. Chrétien: It applies to a new employee moving more than 25 miles in order to get established in a new community. This benefit will apply to that person.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I finally have it clear. It applies to the new employee who has no stake in the community whatsoever. He can come into that community, stay there for five years and qualify to make application for housing. That person can get that tax exemption, even if he has been there for five years.

Mr. Chrétien: It has to be in relation to a move. If five years later he makes application, he would not qualify. It is in relation to moving from one city to another. If an employee does not get that kind of loan from his employer when he arrives and his employer decides to give it five years later, obviously that would not be because of a move. It would be for another reason the employer is giving the employee this benefit.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Referring to the minister's remarks earlier this day, he said that they were not concerned about people from the south or people from the north and that it had to be the same for everyone. I say that if it has to be the same for everyone, the person who lives in that particular community should qualify because he has spent his life in the north. He is there because there is a bit of an incentive. However, now that person will not be able to qualify. He will be penalized for staying in the north. The new person who comes in can qualify for the exemption. I just cannot buy that thinking.

Unless I am not interpreting this properly, the person who now lives in the north is being discriminated against and everything is being done for the new employee who moves in. Perhaps that new employee arrives there because he is on a relocation grant at the same time.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we are not discriminating against anybody. There is no such provision now. Revenue Canada has ruled that these interest free loans that are given by a corporation for all sorts of reasons are a loophole that has to be plugged. We looked at the problem and, in our judgment, we feel it is a legitimate reason when it involves the movement of an employee from one town to another. We are saying in this case the corporation can make a $50,000 loan without interest. The fact that the employee does not pay interest will not be considered as a benefit.

If we were not to pass this, there would not be any discrimination because an interest free loan by an employer to an employee is not taxable at this time. Revenue Canada realized that a lot of people used this as a way to get some benefit from their employer that was not taxable. That is why we were forced to move. If we had not discovered there were some abuses, the idea for what we are proposing today would be good. In some instances an employee was offered a job and the employer would say he would give him so much money, plus an interest free loan of $150,000. The employee would not be taxed on the benefit received from not paying the interest. We felt that was a loophole that had to be plugged.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, there are more questions on clause 2. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance referred to certain questions that my colleague from Ottawa-Carleton raised concerning clause 2. I would like on her behalf, and on behalf of other members, to raise some of these questions.

The hon. member is very concerned about the impact the passage of clause 2 and the related clauses in this bill may have on small business. She makes the point that many small businesses are finding it difficult to woo executives to get them to agree to come to their companies. One of the tools that has been used to try to woo executives, especially from the bigger concerns, is this type of loan facility. They offer a relatively favoured interest rate on a mortgage that the person might have if he comes to work for the small company. To reverse it, in order to try to keep an employee, the first company may make this offer so that the employee will not be wooed away by somebody else. Has the minister given any consideration to this point, the effect that the passage of these provisions might have on small businessmen in relation to their relatively senior executives?

Mr. Chrétien: If a business concern is trying to attract an executive from another city, it can make that $50,000 interest free loan to a new employee. The hon. member will realize that there is a break for the person who has been attracted by a Canadian company. Stock options will be taxed at a different level than they are right now, as long as it is a Canadian private company and not a public company. To keep it with no limit was felt to be exceedingly generous.

● (2042)

Mr. Stevens: What happens to the person who is not being relocated? I am referring to a person who lives within that 25 miles. I take it from this section that he will not be exempt?

Mr. Chrétien: Not for buying a new house with an interest free loan of $50,000.

Mr. Stevens: Does the minister not feel that this may be a problem which smaller businessmen will have to live with, in that with the resources of large corporations they can very quickly woo away employees from smaller concerns? Let us assume there is an employee who has a relatively low interest rate loan at the present time, which is one of the advantages he has with his small business employer. Does the minister now intend to have that man taxed on the deemed benefit which will come if this clause and the other relevant clauses in Bill C-11 are passed?

Mr. Chrétien: If he is in the same city, he cannot benefit from this allocation in terms of interest free loans for a house. It would not apply to him. There are other provisions which would help in this bill. If small or medium sized corporations want to attract an employee, they could provide incentive in terms of employee stock options.

Mr. Stevens: This clause will mean people who have been working with smaller companies, who are not being relocated and who have had the advantage of low interest loans, will now lose that advantage. Bearing that in mind, has the minister given any thought to what the salary implication will be if the employer attempts somehow to compensate the employee for the fact that he will have to pay tax on what has been determined by the minister to be income, in the sense that he will have to make up whatever that deemed amount is by a multiple of the tax he will have to pay to the federal treasury? Has the minister given any thought as to what the impact of this will be?

Mr. Chrétien: This is not starting before 1979. If some people receive interest free loans after 1979, they will be required to pay tax on the benefit they are deriving from those loans. That was a benefit which was not taxable, and it should be considered as income, just like an increase in pay. Of course employers will have to give pay increases. If employees receive pay increases, they will be required to pay taxes accordingly. It was a mechanism many people used to avoid paying taxes, and it was not fair for other taxpayers in the land. I have no difficulty in living with that change. It has developed as a loophole which has to be closed.

Mr. Stevens: I have no doubt the minister will have no difficulty living with this change. In this House we are concerned about hundreds and perhaps thousands of Canadians who will find it considerably difficult to live with the proposed change.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Bearing in mind that the $50,000 exemption would be open to employees working for smaller companies, if it was not for the words "on the relocation of an employee", would the minister indicate why it is so essential that this $50,000 be only an exemption on relocation, as opposed to those who would be otherwise entitled to such a lower interest loan?

Mr. Chrétien: We have decided to make it in terms of relocation because of a decision by the Department of National Revenue indicating that a lot of people were abusing that loophole which existed. Any sum of money could have been lent by a corporation to an employee and the benefit from the interest free loan was not taxable. Certainly there were abuses there. When National Revenue discovered that practice and judged that it was not acceptable, we received a lot of representations by corporations on the ground that it would affect mostly people who were forced to move. The determination of the $50,000 was discussed with the mining industry. That industry felt it was a reasonable level. Interest free loans by corporations under certain circumstances will be acceptable under clause 35. It is up to a real benefit of $500 in terms of not having to pay interest.

Mr. Stevens: Since the last time I had an opportunity to question the minister, I have gone through the figures he provided with respect to calculating the interest a man may be deemed to have earned as a result of this low interest loan. I have read clause 35 as it relates to clause 2. I am not sure whether I understood the minister accurately. Do I understand him to say that notwithstanding how many loans an individual may receive from his employer, he may take the $50,000 and get a zero rate of interest on that, and on another $50,000 get a 10 per cent rate of interest? The average rate would be 5 per cent, and if the prime rate is maintained at around 9 per cent, no tax would be payable.

Mr. Chrétien: That is exactly what could happen, yes. If the calculations and the figures of the hon. member are used, that will be the situation. Other than that $50,000 interest free, he could have $100,000 at 4.5 per cent if the prime rate is 9 per cent.

Mr. Stevens: In order to keep my figures as simple as possible, assuming the prime rate is 9 per cent and assuming a man receives two loans, the first one at zero per cent for $50,000 and the second $50,000 at 10 per cent, giving him an over-all 5 per cent rate, do I understand the minister correctly that in spite of the fact the prime rate may be 9 per cent, which would appear to be a 4 per cent deemed difference, there would still be no tax payable?

Mr. Chrétien: He would have to pay tax on 1 per cent of the totality of the interest because it is 9 per cent and 10 per cent. He can have a $50,000 interest free loan. He can have the double of that amount at half the rate. If the rate is 9 per cent, it will be 4.5 per cent. If he has anything above that, he will have to pay tax on that benefit.

Mr. Stevens: I am wondering if the minister has an opinion from the Department of Justice that clause 35, along with clause 2, in fact will be interpreted that way?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: The legislation as introduced and now under study in the House has been approved by the Department of Justice.

● (2052)

[English]

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I have a further question for the minister. If a person qualifies for a tax-free loan of $50,000 to purchase a house, how long does he have to retain that capital before he can dispose of it?

Mr. Chrétien: There is no time limit.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps the minister misunderstood my question. I do not doubt there has been some cursory examination by the Department of Justice of the bill as to form, but I was wondering whether the minister ever put the matter to the Department of Justice and whether he received an opinion as to the impact of clause 35 as far as dollar amounts are concerned.

Mr. Chrétien: I did not need to ask the Department of Justice for a legal opinion about that. They drafted that clause themselves. They say you can get the benefit equivalent of a $50,000 loan interest free. So if it is half the rate, evidently you are entitled to double that amount of money.

I am surprised the hon. member did not understand that. I got it right away and I have never been closely associated with the banking system.

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope those who get rudely shocked in 1979 or thereafter will be able to get back to the Minister of Finance—

An hon. Member: He won't be here!

Mr. Stevens: —and ask him to produce an opinion he seems so casually to offer us tonight as though it were written in stone.

Dealing with this question of mortgage interest rates, can the minister tell us whether any consideration has been given to allowing mortgage interest rates on personal residences to be offset at least partially against income before taxation?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the government does not intend to introduce such a measure at this time.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Stevens: No!

The Deputy Chairman: All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Chrétien: Aren't the NDP going to vote for this?

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Stevens: No, no! Come!

Mr. Alexander: I think the NDP are abstaining.

Clause 2 agreed to: Yeas, 32; nays, 16.

On clause 3.

Mr. Stevens: Before we proceed further, would the minister tell the House the main reason for which he presents clause 3?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, these special rules apply only to an employee who holds shares for a minimum of two years. Without such a minimum and reasonable period, there could be an important tax benefit, because instead of paying a salary a company could choose to issue preferred shares which would immediately be bought back. We have included this clause so as to enable small Canadian businesses to give inducements to their employees to stay on or to make it possible for some businesses to enter into competition with other companies to obtain competent personnel.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Can the minister go further and indicate the magnitude of what he is doing here? Does the department expect that many small businesses would use this clause if we pass it? Or is it something he feels would be rarely used?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we have received many representations concerning this proposal from small and medium businesses, and we believe that they will help those businesses obtain the administrative support that they need to develop. We also believe that this option that the employees will have to own shares will be favourably received by small and medium businesses. We have received many representations on this subject, and we believe that this will be well received by small and medium businesses.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Why does the minister feel it necessary that the shares be owned for at least two years? What is the magic about two years?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I said this briefly in French earlier, but I can repeat it now, Mr. Chairman. These special rules apply only to cases where the employee has owned shares for a minimum of two years. Without such a minimum and reasonable period, this could constitute an important tax loophole since instead of paying wages a company could decide to issue preferred shares which it would immediately buy back, and we believe that we must give a certain stability to this system so that there will not be any abuses on the part of certain companies to prevent the employees concerned from paying the taxes that they would normally pay.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I guess the minister did not understand the whole purport of my question. I heard what he said about the two years but I am asking why the period of two years should have been chosen. No one is suggesting they should cash them in the day after, but why two years? Why not three, for instance? Have there been any studies which suggest that two years is the appropriate period?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: In this case like in others, we had to use our judgment. We decided that a period of two years was reasonable. This was the judgment of officials in my department and it was accepted by my predecessor and myself.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: What happens, then, when we face a situation of two years less one day? Suppose an employee gets turfed out, or for some other reason is not in the service of an employer on the date of the expiry of the two-year period?

Mr. Chrétien: He would not qualify for the benefit.

Mr. Stevens: That is what I presumed. Would the minister tell us why, in the judgment of the civil service, it was not considered desirable to work on a pro rata system whereby, in the case I have mentioned, an employee would get virtually 100 per cent of his benefit—if he were to leave after a year and a half he would receive a corresponding amount, and so on? Can the minister give us the reason for that two year provision without any type of give on a pro rata basis?

● (2102)

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we believe it would make the legislation much too complex if we were to apply this benefit on a pro rata basis. We believe that the best way to do this is to proceed clearly and specifically. The employee and the employer will know the conditions applicable to this benefit and will know how to exercise this option of owning shares in the company, that is that an employee must have worked for this company for two years. Why did we make it two years? Because we did not make it three, that is all.

[English]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, my question is on the wording of the clause. It refers to a Canadian controlled private corporation. What would be the objection to applying the same privilege to, say, a foreign privately controlled corporation?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we decided to give this benefit to Canadian business because we think that this problem is generally not encountered among foreign companies which come to Canada. We believe that in general, because of their nature, foreign companies do not need this benefit and we want to give it to Canadian businesses.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: I would like to ask the minister whether or not a limit will be put on this, or is it an open ended proposition where someone who has a lot of money can take advantage of the provision and it becomes a loophole for wealthy people since only one half of the share income is counted as income?

Mr. Chrétien: It is applied only to employees, not to anybody who controls the company. We think that is the way to limit possible abuse, because if one person controls the company that person cannot do so in terms of stock options. This provision applies to employees and we think that in view of the nature of corporations which will benefit from it there would be no problem with cutting off the quantitative benefit, if I may use that expression.

Mr. Nystrom: I wonder if the minister can clarify that a little more. Who is excluded, just the directors of the corporation or the president? Can the management personnel purchase the share or who does the minister really mean when he speaks of employees?

Mr. Chrétien: The provision does not apply either to a controlling shareholder or to a member of the group that controls the company. It has to be at arm's length.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I would like to get the definition of the last words which the minister just used. It is found quite frequently in the bill. What is the meaning of this financial legaleese jargon "at arm's length"?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, section 251 of the Income Tax Act gives a very detailed definition of this expression "at arm's length" from the legal jargon.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: If that is true, and bearing in mind that the minister stated that what was hoped to be achieved was that there be some kind of an inducement to help people whom companies are willing to help, would the minister say why there is no provision for at least some indexing, bearing in mind that since valuation day on December 31, 1971, there has been a 61.4 per cent inflation in this country? If that type of inflation keeps up—and if this government were to stay in power, it would undoubtedly keep up—surely the government would be doing nothing for this person if it deems him to have made a gain on which it is going to tax him 50 per cent if the government does not give him at least an indexing provision to offset the loss of benefit through rising prices which has occurred from the time the option was granted to the time he sells his shares.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we had a lengthy discussion on the possibility of indexing capital gains tax in a previous debate in the House, and I explained to the hon. member why we did not want this indexing. I would refer him to my explanation which applies to the present situation. I think this would be a far too complicated system which could not be administered in a fair way in the present situation. Inflation is part of our modern economy, and we have to live with it. When I explained earlier in the debate the matter of the $2,000 exemption instead of $1,000, I discussed this problem at length.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I think that what I am getting at would perhaps be clearer if we go through the effect of clause 3. As I read clause 2, a man might be given an option and the minister is saying that he will deem it as if it were a capital gain if, after he exercises the opition, he holds the shares for a minimum of two years. Let us assume the man holds them for five years, roughly the time since the last valuation day, and, as I have said, there is a 61 per cent inflation in the country since that time. If the man has taken his $10,000 investment—let us assume he made that investment—he needs $16,100 to break even in buying power five years later.

All the government is saying to the employee is that if he qualifies, he only has to take $3,050 in his income which will be taxed, which means that he will end up losing about $1,000 of his buying power based on the $10,000 cost of living figures.

My question has nothing to do with the earlier discussion which was a broader discussion as to why there was no indexing with regard to all capital gains. Here we are narrowed down to a very precise case. The man has bought his shares, the value can be established, he has to hold them for at least two years, so we are talking of a relatively long term. All I am asking is why can indexing not be taken into account to ensure that the federal government's greed for tax revenue will not result in that employee taking a loss in his capital buying power as opposed to an increase.

Mr. Chrétien: I would like to say to the hon. member that, according to the law as it stood before, the man was paying a full tax on the gain on the stock option. He would pay only half of it with this new scheme. We have gone a long way, but it is very difficult to satisfy the hon. member completely.

● (2112)

Mr. Stevens: Before we pass clause 3 would the minister give us an indication as to whether he will at least consider in his next budget, which hopefully will be very soon, giving some attention to capital gains with respect to these very specific things? He is trying to create the impression that he is improving the situation when in fact there is little improvement.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the matter of indexing is constantly under review by the government.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, many income tax ideas which may seem good turn out not to be very good because the gain is assumed to come in one year only. By the time people pay their income tax, particularly in a period of inflation, as suggested by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the situation is worse than if they did not get the money in the first place. When shares are sold can they be put into five-year annuities? Are there provisions for some spinning out of the tax?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, a person can buy income averaging annuities in order to spread out his income tax payable as a result of a gain.

Mr. Ritchie: It can be done?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, can the minister give us an indication of what he feels the passage of this clause will mean in terms of lost federal revenue? How much are we talking about here?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we will be in a position to tell the hon. member when we know how many small and medium sized corporations take advantage of this measure. We do not have any specific forecast.

Mr. Stevens: I am not necessarily looking for a specific forecast, but I presume in the great in-depth studies which go on in the Department of Finance in preparation for the 1979 fiscal year budget and in the intensive study there is for the next five years there must be some estimate as to what will be the impact of this amendment and other amendments we are going to deal with in this bill. The minister cannot tell me he is proposing these amendments totally in the dark.

Mr. Chrétien: We have estimates on many measures, but I am informed that on this one we do not have an estimate because we do not think this measure will have a big impact on the revenue of the government.

Mr. Stevens: There has been a lot of rhetoric tonight from the minister about how desirable this clause is, but in actual fact it is not going to mean much to most Canadians.

Mr. Chrétien: It will mean a lot to small businesses, but in terms of the totality of the revenue of the federal government it will not mean much. I am not giving rhetoric; it is information I am very dutifully giving to the House of Commons.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On Clause 4.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, the amount is increased in clause 4. Here is the amendment as described in clause 4:

"(3) That for the 1977 and subsequent taxation years, the employment expense deduction be raised to a maximum amount of $250."

Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the same percentage increase was not used for employment expenses as was used for losses on capital gains. For capital gains the deduction is increased from $1,000 to $2,000, 100 per cent, but for employment expenses the increase is only 66 per cent. As you know, Mr. Speaker, people have been able to claim a maximum of $150 since the taxation year of 1972. Starting with 1977, it will be $250. As I suggested to the former Minister of Finance when I rose in the budget debate I would have thought that the deduction might be higher than $250 because since 1972, Mr. Chairman, for a person using public transport fares went up a few times and for a person using his car to go to work, the cost of registration as well as car insurance, fuel and repairs have gone up. For tradesmen, the purchase of tools costs a lot more in 1977 then it did in 1972. The same goes for the purchase of books for professionals employed by the federal government, the provinces or municipalities or in the private sector. These cost more. But for the businessman, for the self-employed professional, if I may put it that way, he may claim those amounts at present cost. So my recommendation to the minister is as follows: I hope if the minister cannot increase the deduction immediately, when he introduces his next budget he will use a heavier pencil and the amount of $250 will be increased.

For instance, Mr. Chairman, any Quebecer may get up to $500. I hope the Minister of Finance will consider my remarks when preparing his next budget.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I certainly will consider as always the remarks made by my good friend the hon. member for Gatineau, who has been serving us with such loyalty, and for such a number of years on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I would simply point out to the hon. member that this item will cost the treasury an extra $115 million for this year alone, and that in addition, employees have been granted by the spring budget and in the mini budget of this fall an extra $50 for each child; we also established automatic indexing of income tax, with exemptions being automatically increased 7.2 per cent. For the months of January and February next, we will be giving small and medium income earners an extra $100 tax reduction. I appreciate my hon. friend's generosity, but the treasury has its limitations.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, this has nothing to do with generosity. It is only a matter of fairness, not only to small and medium income earners, but also to all wage and salary earners. So to me it is a question of being fair rather than generous.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, when preparing a budget we attempt to remember the kinds of measures to be used, and I know that the hon. member in his assessment keeps in mind the other tax exemption proposals made in other areas in the spring budget and the mini budget of this fall. Moreover, I would point out that this increase from $150 to $250 exceeds the inflation growth for the period referred to by the hon. member. This is costing $115 million.

[Mr. Clermont.]

Mr. Clermont: If this is the case, Mr. Chairman, the same percentage should have been used for capital losses. Instead of 100 per cent, you should have proposed 66 per cent.

[English]

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address my remarks and questions to the Minister of Finance. My questions are in a similar vein to those asked by the hon. member for Gatineau.

● (2122)

I want to relate a specific incident which I have mentioned to the minister's predecessor as well as to former ministers of national revenue. I do not believe the $250 is adequate as an employment expense deduction. For example, there are people working on the TransCanada Pipeline where it goes through a provincial park in which a pumping station is located, but because of the regulation that employees cannot reside in the provincial park they are forced to commute to work from outside. With increasing transportation costs I feel the $250 is not adequate, and I have written to the minister to this effect. I know this is a specific case, but I should like to know if there is any inclination on the part of the minister or the department to consider that where a pump station is located in a provincial park, employees should be allowed for the increased expense of commuting to the job. I believe, at best, the situation is unfair and, at worst, it militates against people taking such employment.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am sympathetic to the hon. member's request, but I think if we go into special personal problems like that under the Income Tax Act we will become involved in very complicated control problems. Many of those expenses are controlled by the individual, but we decided on a blanket exemption. Of course some people benefit more than others, but it would be an administrative nightmare to become involved in specific cases. As hon. members know, we deal with more than 10 million individual taxpayers so it would be extremely difficult to control. I am aware of this kind of problem in other circumstances but I do not think we can give more accommodation than in the present format.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I recognize the minister's answer because it is almost a carbon copy of what he writes. The provincial parks and national parks encompass large areas and I hope the minister will re-examine the question in the next budget. It is not a specific case, as the minister might want to imply this evening.

I should now like to ask the minister what provision there is for the cost of purchase of metric tools.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think metric tools will have to come within that allowance. There is no specific allowance that I know of. I am told there is exemption from sales tax but not according to this clause.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, on that point I might say I believe there is a separate program. As I recall it came up when we were discussing it as it referred to farmers and people on the prairies.

I want to raise two questions that concern me about clause 4. First, why did the minister not consider a tax credit instead of just increasing the exemption? I think he understands the tax credit very well. To increase the exemption from $150 to $250 obviously means more for people on high income, but the tax credit would mean more for people on low income. The government has already introduced a tax credit under the Election Expenses Act. If anybody contributes $100, regardless of income, $75 is refunded. That seems to me a much more equitable system. If I, as a member of parliament, or if the minister contributed $100 to a political party we would receive $75 back. If a person who only earns $4,000 contributed $100 he would also receive $75 back. That is a much more fair system and should be extended throughout the tax system.

Under this clause, for example, a worker in a 30 per cent tax bracket would only save an additional $30 per year, so I should like to ask the minister why he does not go to a tax credit system.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with an expense allowance. The hon. member's proposition is interesting but would involve a fundamental change to the Income Tax Act from tax exemption to tax credit. I do not say I am not in favour of that, and I find it interesting as a concept. I am looking at it, but it would mean a complete overhaul of the tax system to go from a tax exemption to a tax credit. I will take the usual representations on that subject by the hon. member and his friend in front of him, who is a friend of mine as well.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, the most significant words the minister uttered were to the effect that this would be a fundamental change. That is the reason we are argue for it.

I will give one or two examples of a tax credit. Take a tax credit of $400. A family of four making under $2,000 would get back the full $400. A family earning between $10,000 and $12,000 would get back $200 instead of $400, while a family earning between $17,000 and $20,000 would get only $50 back instead of $400. Under a tax credit system the more money one makes the less one gets back. It seems to me that increases equity in the country. Later I want to put on record some statistics that show that even though we have tax reform in this country the gap between the rich and the poor in terms of taxes is widening rather than narrowing.

The second point I want to ask the minister—

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. It being 9:30 p.m., according to the order adopted earlier today, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again later today, or at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business according to an earlier decision made today.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

[English]

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN CALLING OF ORDERS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have received advance notice that we will take the present hour to debate a point of order that was raised on November 7 by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) concerning the programming of private members' business.

● (2132)

For the benefit of hon. members, maybe I should put the point of order in perspective and try to give direction to the procedural debate in such a way that it will benefit not only the Chair and hon. members, and it might help us to come to a constructive conclusion. I feel precedents of the past would have a tendency to be more restrictive than positive, and I am not sure that this is the wish of the House. This is the reason why I did give advance notice, particularly to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and House leaders of the different parties, along with the hon. member for Vaudreuil, in the hope that they would do enough research to bring along constructive suggestions.

Previously on November 7 at the call of private members' business the hon. member for Vaudreuil raised a point of order, as he has been doing on different occasions in the past, and when he did raise a point of order the Chair had a feeling it could make a decision quickly on the question raised by the hon. member. But, upon a specific request from the member who expressed a wish that the Chair would look at the matter and make a decision the next time on private members' hour where motions would be called, I did then postpone any definite decision until November 4.

When we came to private members' business on November 14 I had to notify the House that the hon. member for Vaudreuil had gone beyond the point of order of November 7. He had written a letter to the Speaker in which he had specifically raised different points that went beyond the point of order which he had previously put to the Chair, thus making the scope very much wider and a little difficult for the Chair to at least prevent full consideration of the different points raised by the hon. member, which would result in the House coming to a positive decision, if not a ruling that would more or less regulate the operations of the private members' hour.

Before I do invite hon. members to participate in what I consider a very important procedural debate on private members' business, I might try to sum up the different main points on which, in my opinion, the intervention of hon. members should be directed. I believe the main question raised by the hon. member for Vaudreuil was: does the government have a right to select business for private members' hour as it has done in recent times? Also, does Standing Order 19(1) give an outright privilege to the government to stand any question or order without the consent of the House?

Hon. members know, on every day, Mr. Speaker at the call of written questions, after those questions are enumerated, he seems in the practice in the wording of the question, to ask permission of the House to stand the other questions. Is this something that has been developed inadvertently, or is it something that indicates a procedure that has to be followed when the government requests? Does this represent a request from the government to stand the questions that are not enumerated? If it does, how much application does it have to Standing Order 19(1)? Also, in the wording of Standing Order 19(1) is there a difference between an order called and an order called from the Chair, as mentioned in Standing Order 49(1)? Also what is the calling of an order? Is it when it is read by the Clerk or when it is put by the Chair?

Does the wording "twice called from the Chair" mean that the order is not, or irrespective of not, having been stood by the government, is it only considered as being called twice from the Chair if there have been no requests from the government to stand the order?

I must say that, looking at the precedents, they have not been very helpful, although they might support a more restrictive practice toward the number of times a motion could be stood by the government. But is it the hon. member's wish, or is it the practice that we should apply strictly? The hon. member will find in Beauchesne's citation 88 an indication that the government has a responsibility toward the programming of the business of the House, but it is very general and it is not clear if it was meant to apply to all procedure in the House.

In Standing Order 18(1) we can read:

> All items standing on the Orders of the Day, except Government Orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the Order Paper.

But, when we read Standing Order 18(2), we see:

> Government Orders shall be called and considered in such sequence as the government determines.

So, if 18(2) specifies the power of the government to determine the order of business for government business, does this mean it does not have the same power for the programming or consideration of private members' business? These are the two questions I have on my mind and these are the questions that I want to put before the hon. members.

Of course we have supplemented our recent practices with the request, on some occasions, for the protection of hon. members that were absent or have not been witnesses to these arguments, we had at the beginning of different private members' hours the unanimous consent procedure, but I think as we went along this has developed into a confused practice. I feel as witness to the proceedings of private members' hour that this new followed practice of advance notice of private members' hour, has made it easier for the workings of the House and I think it has brought about better preparation in presentations made by hon. members. If any hon. member can prove to the Chair that it is the wrong practice, that the Standing Orders do not authorize such practice, we have two courses to follow—either the course of applying strictly in any order and the course of modifying them or looking some alternate solution until we do modify them.

• (2142)

I invite hon. members to comment on the points I have raised. I will first call upon the hon. member for Vaudreuil, then the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the hon. member for—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Timiskaming. He is our expert tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), and any other hon. members interested in the question. I will not render a decision tonight. I will listen to the remarks of hon. members. I will then reserve judgment. I might make some further comment after I hear the various interventions.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I think your remarks have been of assistance to us in setting the record straight. May I just mention that the dispute does not arise from the selection of the business which is going to be debated during private members' hour, but with the disposition of the items which precede the matter to be discussed in that hour.

Your Honour raised the matter of Standing Order 18.May I just re-emphasize that when members decide to propose motions or submit bills, they are presumably governed by Standing Order 18, recognizing that these orders shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to them on the Order Paper. Presumably when an hon. member puts a motion on the Order Paper, he is aware of that particular Standing Order. To assist the House, agreement is reached at the start of the session that there shall be a draw and the order shall be established by that draw.

We must assume, if we are looking at the business which is to be called, that we are going to be following the order of the listing. If a member, for good reason, is not able to proceed, he may be sick or called away for other reasons, and we have been advised of that—as we used to do for quite a few years—we would almost automatically give unanimous consent to allow that member's motion to remain on that Order Paper until he returns to the House.

When I raised this point before, I was objecting to the fact that many of these motions and many of these bills were remaining on the Order Paper for many, many months. They were being called, and the member was either not ready or not willing to proceed. I suggest that under those circumstances the item should be dropped.

Quite recently we changed our procedure and called upon the government to make the request, which Your Honour referred to in Standing Order 19(1). May I underline two or three words which I think are of consequence. It says:

Questions put by Members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may . . . be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the Order Paper. They may, however, be renewed.

In other words, there is an option. The option, in brackets, is "upon the request of the government". At that point it is assumed that if there is good reason, and sometimes a member might be difficult and we do not get the required unanimous consent, we have a tool in Standing Order 19(1) for the government to make this request for the benefit of the member who might be absent for quite legitimate reasons.

Hon. members are aware of Standing Order 49(1) which reads:

When a Private Member's Notice of Motion shall have been twice called from the Chair and not proceeded with, it shall be dropped, provided that it may be placed at the foot of the list on the Order Paper upon motion made after due notice.

Paragraph 2 reads:

If the notice of motion thus restored is again called from the Chair and not proceeded with, it shall be withdrawn from the Order Paper.

There is no option there. Surely under those circumstances there is no question that it may, upon the request of the government, be allowed to stand.

What concerns me at this stage with respect to private members' business is that if we could interpret Standing Order 19(1) as giving the government the power to retain items on the order paper, we also give the government the power to make the selection of what item is to be called and debated in private members' hour. I believe that use of the words "request of the government" does not give it the right to control what goes on in private members' hour.

The government may make the request and, if it conforms to Standing Order 49(1) and has not been called twice, presumably at that time we do not need to have unanimous consent. However, if the order has been called two or three times and at that point, even with the request of the government, unanimous consent from the House is not forthcoming, I suggest the item should then be dropped from the order paper. Obviously it could be resurrected by the hon. member and placed on the order paper if he so wished. The point is not to interfere with the items that are going to be discussed. There is usually agreement. It is working out very well except in unusual circumstances.

May I point out an unusual circumstance a short time ago at the end of the last session when, unfortunately, a member was not ready to proceed? We had to go to the next motion on the order paper, which happened to be one of mine. The government did not want it discussed so the House was adjourned. There was a call for the bells and the adjournment motion carried. Once again the government was deciding what items were going to be discussed in private members' hour. I suggest that was not the intention of the Standing Orders.

Although I am happy that agreement is made on the items that are to be discussed, I do not think there is anything in the Standing Orders that requires us, the members, to accept that items may remain on the order paper for more than the two times they are called, unless we, the members, give unanimous consent for those items to remain. That is the basis of my argument, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I was happy to hear the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) say at the beginning of his intervention that in his opinion the problem did not lie in the choice of discussion matters, but I am somewhat confused by his ulterior observations because he used the word "control" in describing the part played by the government in choosing discussion subjects.

I would like to tell the House that the practice these last few years shows no evidence of government control in the choice of bills to be studied, far from it. The government simply helps the members of parliament to act in a rational manner during the private members' hour. This is also helpful to the members because the government has the administrative facilities to help them, through simple courtesy and also to conform to the provisions of Standing Order 18 which states that each item will be taken up according to its precedence on the order paper. This practice is well known and I do not want to go over it again. At this stage of my argument, Mr. Speaker, I shall simply refer to comments made by one of my predecessors in the position of parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council on May 11, 1976. These comments are reported on page 13410 of Hansard as follows:

All I want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, is that we attempt to provide to hon. members as soon as practicable those items which will be dealt with in the next session, first contacting the individual members who have priority in order to determine whether they will be available and whether they wish to proceed with a particular item of business. Having ensured that a member will be here to debate the item of business, we communicate with the interested parties, including the government. Then we set the matter down and advise all hon. members of the matter that is going to be debated on a given day.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the answer to the interesting problem raised by the hon. member for Vaudreuil resides in an intelligent reading of relevant Standing Orders of the House, and not only in a reading of these Standing Orders, but also in an examination of the moment when those rules were passed and the reasons behind them. The relevant rules are Standing Orders Nos. 18, 19 and 49. Now, Standing Order 18 establishes the generai rule, and I quote:

(1) All items standing on the Orders of the Day, except Government Orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the Order Paper.

Then, this is the general principle which covers the matters relating to private members' business. This relates to notices of motions as well as to orders or bills. We then come to Standing Order 19 which is relevant. Now, Standing Order 19 was amended in 1906 as appears in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms to read as it reads today. Therefore, the present provisions of Standing Order 19 are similar to those which existed in 1906. This appears obviously on page 74 of Beauchesne where we find Standing Order 19 as amended on July 10, 1906. I quote the important parts of this standing order for discussion. Standing Order 19(1) reads as follows, and I quote:

19. (1) Questions put by Members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the Order Paper. They may, however, be renewed.

And subsection (2) says and I quote:

(2) Orders not proceeded with when called, upon the like request, may be allowed to stand retaining their precedence; otherwise they shall be dropped and be placed on the Order Paper for the next sitting after those of the same class at a similar stage.

Mr. Speaker, what strikes me on reading Standing Order 19 as modified in 1906 is that subsection (1) concerns questions on the order paper and notices of motions while subsection (2) concerns orders and this is not very clear to me as orders may also mean public bills from private members. At this stage it is obvious that Standing Orders makes a distinction: subsection (1) concerns notices of motions and questions while subsection (2) concerns orders. It seems to me quite important to point out this distinction because further on, Standing Order (49) only refers to notices of motions, and does not mention at all private members' questions nor does it mention orders or bills. Section 49 is very restrictive. It is worthy of vote that when Standing Order 19 existed under the form which I just mentioned, back in 1906, Standing Order 49 did not exist as we know it today. Standing Order 49 was then very short and contained none of the present sections. In those days, Standing Order 49 read as it appears on page 166 of the manual of parliamentary procedure by Beauchesne which reads as follows:

49. A member who has made a motion may withdraw the same only by the unanimous consent of the House.

That is all Standing Order 49 said in 1906, while Standing Order 19 existed in its present form. I think that we will find the answer to our problem by asking ourselves why has Standing Order 49 been modified so as to become what it is today? When was it modified and why?

Then, Mr. Speaker, I did some research and found out that Standing Order 49 was modified during the 1926-27 session so as to read the way it appears today in the standing orders. This shows in the journals of the House of Commons of Canada for the 1926-27 session, more precisely on page 340 and 341 of the issue of Tuesday the 22nd of March. On page 340 we find a draft of the new section 49 as we know it today and which reads as follows:

(1) When a Private Member's Notice of Motion shall have been twice called from the chair and not proceeded with, it shall be dropped, provided that it may be placed at the foot of the list on the Order Paper upon motion made after due notice.

(2) If the Notice of Motion thus restored is again called from the chair and not proceeded with, it shall be withdrawn from the Order Paper.

(3)No member shall have more than one Notice of Motion at a time on the Order Paper.

(4) This Rule shall not apply to Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers.

[Mr. Pinard.]

• (2202)

This is what we have today, the same provision as Standing Order 49 we have today. So that new Standing Order was inserted in 1926-27, that is 20 years after Standing Order 19. It is interesting to read on page 341 of the Journals of the House of Commons, the rationale for the amendment to Standing Order 49. In order that my colleagues may also take part in the debate, I will abstain from quoting the relevant part where the reasons for the amendment are given in detail. I will simply summarize it having given the reference so Mr. Speaker can check for himself.

At that time, only 11 days were provided for private members' business. It was felt there were abuses, hon. members should have no more than one notice of motion. Some hon. members had up to four or five notices of motions, as is indicated here. There is no reference to orders or legislation, but to notices of motions only, and Standing Order 49 refers to notices of motions only. Because at that time, that is 1926-27, it was felt that with 11 days provided for private members there were abuses in allowing members to have more than one notice of motion, it was decided to allow for one notice only, and opportunity was taken to insert Standing Order 49(1) providing as follows: When a private member's notice of motion shall have been twice called from the Chair and not proceeded with implying there had been a call from the government side it shall be dropped.

This very brief summary of the history of the pertinent standing orders, the insertion of the now Standing Order 49 as opposed to Standing Order 19 as we know it, brings me to the following suggestion, resulting as I said from an intelligent reading in context of the standing orders referred to, keeping in mind the times of their passing and the reasons for doing so. I would suggest, first that a distinction must be made between orders, legislation and notices of motions. I respectfully submit that, in respect of questions on the order paper, orders or bills, Standing Order 19 alone applies, keeping in mind at all times the principle stated in Standing Order 18. In my opinion, Standing Orders 19 and 49 are exceptions to the principle governing Standing Order 18. Now Standing Order 10 alone affects questions appearing on the order paper, orders and bills, without consideration for Standing Order 49 which deals only with notices of motions. On the other hand, as far as notices of motions are concerned, the new Standing Order 49 dating from 1926-27 is applied in correlation with Standing Order 19 and this is where I partly agree with the argumentation of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). I am inclined to agree with him only as far as notices of motions are concerned. In other words, when notices of motions are called twice and reserved at the request of the government under Standing Order 19(1), Standing Order 49 which is more recent than Standing Order 19 takes effect and clearly states that they must be withdrawn. Now if we refer to Standing Order 18, Mr. Speaker, paragraph (1) states the following:

Questions put by Members and notices of motions not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence . . .

This means that when a notice of motion is called on a given day and the government asks that this notice of motion be allowed to retain its precedence, the government's right pursuant to Standing Order 19 is limited by Standing Order 49 to make this request only on two occasions. On the third, Standing Order 49 is automatically applied and the notice of motion cannot be called a third time, even upon the request of the government. Such notice is dropped pursuant to Standing Order 49 (1). But, once more, I want to be clear on that for my argument, this rule applies only to notices of motions and not to bills introduced by hon. members, which are governed by Standing Order 19, because Standing Order 49 does not provide anything for orders, bills and so on. Standing Order 49 is very restrictive. It came twenty years after Standing Order 19. Standing Order 49 does not provide anything for bills, orders or questions on the Order Paper. It deals only with notices of motions. Therefore, it is very important, I think, Mr. Speaker, to make this distinction.

Now, it is well and good to say it is procedure, it is a matter of principles. It is easy to say just read clauses in an intelligent way, concentrate on the wordings and look at the context in which they have been brought about and passed and you will come to some practical conclusion but that does not resolve the problem. That is procedural matter.

Since the private members' hour is designed to deal with matters concerning members, I suggest that if they want it to operate rationally, because all this goes back quite far, they will have to help the government help them. In other words, the unanimous consent of the House will be required for notices of motions to be called more than twice. There is no problem with bills. I said so on several occasions already. The government will probably intervene and ask that they stand. And I forgot to mention that the reason for government's intervention is simply that it is its responsibility to determine the order of the business of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I listened closely to your remarks and I was amazed when you referred to Beauchesne's comments No. 88 on the bottom of page 88, if I understood you well. I quote:

> The Government being largely interested in the progress of the business of the House is responsible for allowing a question or motion to stand, if the member is absent or does not proceed when it is called.

It seems to me very clear, Mr. Speaker, that that citation in Beauchesne is directly related to the content of Standing Order 19. It is so true that that citation is found at page 81 among the citations discussing a dozen of the standing orders, i.e. Standing Orders 15 to 27. We all know how Beauchesne's work is divided. He refers to some standing orders, then sets forth citations, and then proceeds to another series of standing orders followed by citations. Now, that citation I just read is not found after Standing Order 90, but follows a dozen of standing orders, including Standing Order 19. Therefore there is a clear relation between that reference by Beauchesne to the government's responsibility to ensure orderly progress of the business of the House and Standing Order 19. And this explains why Standing Order 19 says that: upon the request of the government, notices of motions, questions on the Order Paper and also orders of the government and bills can be allowed to stand. As I have said earlier, Standing Order 49 simply limits notices of motions to two calls by the Chair.

The reason for the government's intervention is to ensure that the proceedings of the House will take place in the proper manner. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, until these Standing Orders are changed, I think we will have to rely upon the courtesy and sincerity of all members of parliament. Without the unanimous consent of the members of the House, notices of motion will never be called more than twice, from now on, in spite of the government's request, or may be withdrawn from the Order Paper. On the other hand, bills will be allowed to stand at our request. This is all respectfully submitted.

● (2207)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to ask the hon. parliamentary secretary a question. When he referred to Standing Order 49(1), he said, if I understood him correctly, that once a notice of motion has been called twice, it shall be dropped from the Order Paper, but in his remarks he said more than twice.

I should like him to tell me how he interprets Standing Order 49(1) which, at least to the Chair, seems to mean that the notice of motion should be dropped from the order paper the second time, even when it is called. This matter is of great concern to the Chair, because even if the hon. parliamentary secretary has seemed to agree with the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on this point, he adds in his interpretation of Standing Order 49(1) a second time, which is not what, in my opinion, Standing Order 49(1) means.

Mr. Pinard: I am grateful to the Chair for asking me this question, which will permit me to provide the necessary clarification. In my opinion, the Chair is absolutely right. This, however, does not change anything at all to the basis of my point, whether the notice of motion should be dropped after it has been called once or twice, Standing Order 49 dealing only with notices of motions, and not with orders, contrary to what you have just stated. But I agree with you that, as provided by Standing Order 49, when a notice of motion has been called twice from the Chair and not proceeded with, it shall be dropped. This means that it may be called once and that if the second time it is not proceeded with, it should be dropped. Therefore, if I said the contrary a moment ago, and I think I said it could be called twice with the consent of the government and that it was only on the third call that it was to be dropped, I withdraw what I said on this point. I think a close study of Standing Order 49 shows that there should not be a third time; the notice of motion is called twice and if it is not proceeded with on the second call, from a logical point of view, it should be dropped. But once again this applies only to notices of motions. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for having brought my attention to this point.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Vaudreuil

(Mr. Herbert) and to the parliamentary secretary, and I think I followed the argument of the parliamentary secretary to the point where he began to deal specifically with Standing Order 49 which has caused me some concern. As the hon. member has indicated, that Standing Order deals with a situation where a private member's notice of motion has been called twice from the Chair and not proceeded with, in which event it should be dropped. The parliamentary secretary is indicating that, in his judgment, that is the definitive word. I would have to agree with him, except that Standing Order 19(1) states:

Questions put by members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand . . .

I think there is a conflict there. In one case there is a direction in Standing Order 49 which is made less powerful by an exception in Standing Order 19(1). It seems to me that it may be academically historic, but it could very well be that in the course of the changes that were being made, changes were made in one section without considering that they might have had an effect on another one. So I must say that I disagree in that respect with the parliamentary secretary.

If Your Honour agrees with me that there is some doubt cast as a result of the differences, I think you will have to consider what course we ought to follow, and in that event if we were to go in any direction we ought to go in the direction of preserving to the greatest possible degree the rights of private members with respect to notices of motions and matters of private members' business.

I do not want it ever to be held that I am arguing that the provisions of our Standing Orders, rules and customs are perfect with respect to private members' business, and I say that for the benefit of the parliamentary secretary. There are some changes we have advocated from time to time, but having regard to the system in operation at the moment it seems to me that if this House operates at all, it operates on the basis of some reasonable consultation, and the consultation which has existed between the government House leader and the opposition with respect to private members' business has been reasonably sound.

While it may be that the unvarnished meaning of the words "upon the request of the government" in terms of allowing matters to stand should be interpreted as giving the government power and control over these matters, I think our experience in the House, at least thus far, indicates that the government has interpreted this as a vehicle for maintaining rather than abusing private members' interests. Having regard to the nature of the consultation which has gone on, I think it would be very unfortunate if we suddenly began to apply what some might call the strict letter of the law.

We do have certain customs, and one of those customs is consultation in order to facilitate the work of members who may have something standing in their names but who, because of sickness or a snowstorm—as you yourself experienced today, Mr. Speaker—may find some difficulty in coming to Ottawa at the particular time when their particular items of business are being called. They would otherwise lose their right to advance something about which they felt strongly enough to go to the trouble of consulting the parliamentary counsel in preparing a bill or a motion to deal with a particular matter.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

I think that by strictly interpreting the rules we would not be contending with the realities of this country. The business of members takes them across the country from time to time, and certainly to their own constituencies. There is much more to Canada than just the National Capital area. The business of members also includes international meetings and conferences. I think we would be taking far too rigid a stance if we adopted even the parliamentary secretary's interpretation of Standing Order 49, which I think is far too strict, having regard to the exception which would appear to apply in Standing Order 19(1).

Mr. Speaker has dealt with this in the past. Dealing with a matter of custom he said, as reported at page 5421 of Hansard for May 2, 1975:

. . . the procedures which have been adopted are matters of convenience. They are a departure from the strict interpretation of the rules which would require calling, seriatim, at every private members' hour, all such items on the order paper. Initially, the very filing of private members' bills and their selection for consideration is a departure from the strict interpretation of the rules.

We do that now as a matter of custom.

● (2217)

Those departures are a matter of custom and are for the convenience of members so that we can operate with reasonable smoothness and not waste too much time on a number of technical interpretations of the rules.

If there were doubt in my mind with respect to the interpretation placed on Standing Order 49 I hope it would be resolved in favour of the continuation of the use of that phrase which has proved so useful in this House and which appears in Standing Order 19, "upon the request of the government." If the government acted with respect to private members' hour in a way that was restrictive of members' rights, it would soon become apparent to all. If there has been difficulty with a particular matter, whether it occurred because of the inability of a spokesman or a member of the government to answer—the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) and I have had such negotiations from time to time—or because of the position of a member of the opposition who brought a matter forward and was inconvenienced, we were always able to come to some reasonable agreement. I do not recall anything coming out of those negotiations other than an attempt to assist the member who found himself caught short, because he was away, or because a proper answer could not be made.

I think it essential that private members' hour be considered a very important part of the parliamentary day. There are few opportunities for members in their personal capacity to advance points of view or matters of particular concern, and we ought to preserve that right to the greatest extent. I think the only way we can preserve it reasonably and honestly is by not adopting an inflexible attitude but rather by continuing in the direction we are headed.

Lawyers could argue over the Standing Orders endlessly. What we are trying to preserve is the opportunity for members to prepare to make the best case they can on a matter that means enough to them that they have put down a motion or a bill with respect to it, and on the other hand to allow the government time to prepare for the necessary argument.

I am amongst those who wish more private members' bills could be referred to committees, but even though that does not happen it does not mean there is not proper consultation regarding the advancement of business. Thus far the House of Commons is the better for that element of interpretation and consultation. I hope, in considering the point made by the hon. member for Vaudreuil, Your Honour will interpret on the side of generosity rather than on restriction.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have always been interested in private members' hour, and I probably use and abuse it more than any other member. We have been able to use the rules on occasion to do that, but I think the previous speaker is right in his indication of the desire to maintain private members' hour. It serves a number of functions, one of which is to give a member the opportunity to make a case for something that he feels strongly is in the interest of the constituents he represents. In my opinion this has worked very well.

If you go back over the private members' hour during the past 20 years you will find very few pieces of legislation, particularly in the social fields, that have not been pioneered in the private members' hour. I have been surprised at the government recently trying to take control of the operation of the private members' hour.

It was not very long ago, certainly since my time, or the private members' hour, particularly in the section under Public Bills that there were eight or 10, not more than 12 when I came here, and every one who placed one of those bills on the order paper knew exactly why they put them there and they were very interested at the drop of a hat to discuss them. The government, on the other hand, was very often just about as interested to see that they did not get any further than the discussion position, and when they went to the bottom, that was an accomplishment. The same was true with notices of motion, Mr. Speaker, when they were put down, they were put down because they were sincerely believed in, they were interested in putting them down, and it worked on a different basis than it does now.

The old timers, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has been around for some time, had those bills prepared probably before the election took place. Thy were all ready and as soon as the election took place, at the earliest possible moment, they were filed. They were all listed on the basis of which one was received at one o'clock, two o'clock or whenever it was received. That is how the decision was made.

During my period, Mr. Speaker, and my interest in the private members' hour, we were able to help increase the number of private bills from roughly 10 or 12 to where they are now, 205. As a matter of fact in about two years we raised it from 10 or 12 to over 100, and it is now 205. I venture to guess there are some people that have not decided why they put those bills in in the first place, and secondly, they really did not decide whether they were going to be discussed or not. That is decided now because of the number by a lottery. You may have a bill at the top which you did not want and you may have a bill on the order paper you wanted very badly. For a little while we were allowed to switch them. If you had one on the top, you were allowed to decide which one went to the top. I think it is done more fairly now, if it is drawn, it is at the top.

What is happening is that the government is making the decision that they do not want to talk in these private members' hours on a specified subject. They are laid out very carefully, it is not like government business. On certain days, certain items are called and it must be that item, or by consent you can go on to something else. For a long time, Mr. Speaker, if a member was sick someone in his party speaking on his behalf, and he had to say at the time "with the permission of the hon. member I request of the House Bill so and so stand." I remember one case where it was requested, and because of the difficulties that member had, it was dropped. With one exception, I cannot remember any time when there was not an agreement when someone said—on the request of the member—the bill stood.

Then we got parliamentary secretaries and they really did not have very much to do. They started puttering around in the private members' hour. They did it conscientiously and with good intent. They did it not to stand at the request of the government but to find out whether there was going to be any requests to stand, and what bill was going to be taken. They were able to ascertain that, and they were able then to say that we understand there is an agreement, and we should proceed to bill so and so or motion so and so. However, it was by agreement.

All of a sudden the rules were changed. I sat in on some of the meetings which discussed rule changes. I do not remember agreeing to anything about "upon the request of the government." Maybe that is why it is in brackets. Maybe no one agreed to it.

● (2227)

Hon. members will recall that when we changed the rules, the fight was over Standing Order 75. The Standing Orders were temporary for some time. It worked very well.

If the government is going to control this hour, it will be able to stand the first ten bills because it wants to get to a particular one further on. As I understand it, that request cannot be refused. I agree the government does not request a member to do that if he is ready to proceed with his bill. To date it has not made such a request. However, there is no reason why it cannot make that request if it does not want to take the bill that is at the top of the list. It can just request that it be stood.

The other day the parliamentary secretary said the government was not ready to proceed with the particular bill that was called. What is the reason for putting a bill on the order paper? It is to discuss it. The government decided it would be better not to discuss that bill at that time. I do not think that was the intention of the changes that were made to private members' hour.

I suggest when we left in that motions would only be allowed to stand twice, that was for the purpose of not allowing the government or anyone else to stand motions. If they were there, they were to be taken without delay. If not, they would be taken off the order paper.

There can be a number of abuses if the government decides it is going to organize private members' hour. We have been lax for some time in not demanding that all orders be called. It is sometimes agreed that we will not take the motions on the order paper for this week or the Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers or Public Bills, but go on to something else. If someone interjects, we must go through the whole list calling every item. We go to each succeeding one as the Standing Orders provide, and call them all individually. That has not been done all the time simply because it would be foolish. Unless you have an interest in something that is somewhere in the middle, you would not request that. I have done it a number of times, but for a different purpose. It was not for the purpose of having them all called. However, it does protect those who have an interest somewhere in the list.

If the government is going to have the power to stand them, a government member will be able to exert considerable pressure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will hon. members agree that I do not see the clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: It is not impossible for the government to put pressure on members on the other side of the House. It can do that fairly easily by saying it needs some time to look at an item or to check all the ramifications of it. It may say it will agree to send either the bill or its subject matter to committee or, in the alternative, make it a government bill.

There are many ways in which the government can influence private members' hour. It can restrict the right of the individual to make his point. Often a member puts down an item only to get a subject discussed, not necessarily to have a bill passed.

I strongly urge that Your Honour give very serious consideration to this question of allowing matters to stand at the request of the government. If a matter is to stand, it should be at the request of the member who placed it on the order paper, not at the request of the government. It will not then be quite as neat and orderly. The government will not be able to tell a member beforehand that it is all arranged. It will keep the spirit of the private members' hour, which is to allow backbenchers to put forth ideas.

[Mr. Peters.]

• (2232)

Mr. Pinard: Would the hon. member permit a question? He said a few moments ago that a parliamentary secretary had told him the government was not ready for a private members' bill. It was not I. I should like the hon. member to be more precise and tell us what bill was involved when that happened, and what parliamentary secretary said such a thing.

Mr. Peters: It has happened many times. I am sure it happens often in the course of the negotiations which take place. I understood the hon. gentleman to say the other day, when discussing the orders of the day, that there were a number of members on his side who were interested in speaking on a certain matter but who were not ready. That is fairly honest. There is nothing wrong about it. But I think the person who should make such a decision is the person in whose name the bill stands.

Mr. Pinard: I just want to say for the record that I have never talked with the hon. member about private members' business except this afternoon when I asked that the hour be postponed until tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, are we going to continue or do we adjourn the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think it was quite difficult to put aside the hour tonight and that all hon. members know that I have asked leave of the House not to see the clock for a while.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. Many times I have wondered about the way we dispose of certain motions. Of course, we always agree, we always succeed in agreeing. That was not always all right with the hon. member who was frustrated in his hopes to comment on a motion. However, Mr. Speaker, I think that Standing Orders 19 and 49 are there to protect hon. members' rights, especially those who sit to your left because on the other side they have a majority and they can arrive at decisions whatever we are prepared to accept, because the majority always win in the end. I think it will be a good thing to keep those standing orders however difficult they are to interpret. Every hon. member reads them as he sees them, everybody thinks in his way. But Standing Order 19 has been read many times tonight and I think it should be considered very carefully. It reads as follows:

> . . . notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; . . .

The government decides. Does the government leave the decision entirely up to the parliamentary secretary, or does it decide after consultation with the hon. member concerned? If it is after consultation, then that automatically becomes something quite normal because for reasons that were mentioned tonight and do not need repeating sometimes a member, as has happened in my own case in the past, will not be present at the time a motion is called.

But then it says further on that if the motion is not called by the government it may, however, be renewed, but renewed, as I understand it, losing its rank, renewed but dropping to the bottom of the list. So, of course, the hon. member may have it renewed but he cannot hope to have it discussed because the standing orders say that private members' business will be taken up between 5:00 p.m. and 6:00 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, and 4:00 p.m. and 5:00 p.m. on Fridays. The consideration of private members' business is suspended on Tuesdays and Mondays when it has reached a total of 40 times in a session. This means that if the list contains more than 40 items then there are many motions on the order paper which do not have any chance of being discussed. This is limited by a standing order.

Mr. Speaker, the interpretation of Standing Order 18 that you quoted earlier is something extremely important. The meaning of that Standing Order 18 must be looked into. All items standing on the orders of the day, except government orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the order paper. Government orders shall be called and considered in such a sequence as the government determines. When the government stands a motion does it become a government order afterwards which could be called at its will? It is a matter of interpretation. I would surely like to be enlightened on that. If the government then has the privilege to call this motion as if it were a government motion, any protection that we have comes too late because it is certain that the government will eventually want to dispose of the motion.

In any case, to summarize, I consider that this matter should be examined more closely. We have a Committee on Procedure and Organization. It should be asked to deal with those matters instead of waiting for two or three years before presenting its report. We should go really to the bottom of things so that, when we have a sensitive situation like the one we had last week, we should truly know where to go. There are quite enough unclear issues for us to at least put things in perspective when we can do so.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if you had really wanted to apply our standing orders to the letter last week, there would have been some embarrassment because the parliamentary secretary had not made the reservation on behalf of the government in time. Such a distraction can happen to anyone. I do not want to single out the parliamentary secretary who is now sitting in his place. This is not at all what I want to do, but I want to say that our procedure should be more specific. This is why I suggest that the Committee on Procedure and Organization be asked to consider this matter carefully so as to protect the rights of members of parliament because this is why we are elected, to represent the people. Many motions and private bills have been put on the order paper at the request of the voters, of the people.

As a matter of fact, in my mail this afternoon I had a long letter from a Quebec City resident who asked me to make arrangements to have a motion for setting a specific date for elections discussed in the House. In his opinion, this can be done any time without any problem. But we who sit in this House know that it is not so easy to have the House of Commons discuss such a question. However he is right to say that this is a very important matter. Quite recently the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) proposed a very important motion about which questions are asked nearly every day. It concerns pensions at the age of 60. The people are concerned about it.

● (2242)

And if hon. members were not allowed to deal with these motions, the people who have elected us to represent them would not be satisfied with us and could certainly wonder what we are doing in the House. So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that since our debates are being televised, maybe the law clerk could explain to the viewers some of the finer points of our procedure. That is something which was asked of me last weekend. People wonder why this, why that, why such and such adjournment motion. People are asking us a great many questions. Therefore, if we want to keep the Canadian public interested, we shall have to shed light on these matters, make sure that they understand better and, what is more, co-operate more effectively in the administration of our country.

Having enunciated my suggestion, I need not repeat it, but I feel that in the meantime, we should as well keep our old rule book.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I thank all hon. members for their constructive remarks. If I begin by the last remark by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), I think that indeed the matter will have to be deferred, at some time or other, to the Committee on Procedure and Organization possibly to come to a review of the standing orders, and perhaps to some clarification. But before arriving at this point and perhaps before correcting the few contradictions which are to be read in the present standing orders, we should perhaps know what hon. members want.

[English]

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has questioned, I think, the intervention of the government in the standing of business, and he went as far as to suggest giving some right to the individual hon. member concerned for him alone to make a request to have his order stood. I do not think this is covered by the rule as it is now, but I think, if I understand the hon. member well, his concern is that when the government—and I suppose the same thing applies to the remarks of the hon. member for Bellechasse—makes a request to stand a motion, no hon. member has a guarantee that the member presenting the motion, or in whose name it stands, has been consulted or has given his authorization. This is one of the considerations.

When the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) first raised his point of order, his main concern was the fact that, on the other hand, some hon. members were abusing the possibility of having their orders stood. We have two extremes in this case, and I suppose the solution must be somewhere in between.

I think the point raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is very valid, in the sense that what has developed over recent years has been for the convenience of members, and it would be regrettable if we were to apply the Standing Orders strictly, although there seems to be some contradiction between Standing Order 49(1) and Standing Order 19(1). I am not sure that the remarks of hon. members have brought a clear perspective to the Chair.

I am still very concerned about Standing Order 19(1) and its possible limitation. I am still asking myself about the phrase "at the request of the government". Is it a request to the House by the government, or is it a right of the government to stand any kind of order, or even a motion?

I am concerned about these questions. I will do some reading. I might have to invite the House leaders of the parties into my office, where we might have a further discussion on this question before I make a decision.

I have some alternatives in mind which could be considered. Is the fact that the government has been co-ordinating this recent procedure which has developed, bringing about some suspicion? Would there be a valid objective in suggesting that such programming of private members' business ought to come under the Deputy Speakership or the Chair in general? Should there be some kind of co-ordination by the Chair or Deputy Speaker who officiates at the drawing of the order of business for private members at the beginning of the session? I shall keep all these concerns in mind, and I am sure that tonight's discussion will help all of us find a long-term solution to the problem.

● (2247)

In the meantime I shall look at the Standing Orders and precedents, and may arrive at a ruling that would not limit the operation of private members' hour and would satisfy hon. members in giving some interpretation of these contradictions, if I can use these words.

I thank hon. members, and I feel that by this time the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' hour has expired. This House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow.

At 10.49 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT CONCERNING ALLEGATIONS AGAINST MEMBER FOR BONAVISTA-TRINITY-CONCEPTION

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before calling motions pursuant to Standing Order 43, I am sure hon. members would be concerned about allegations published since the House rose last evening of improper practices by the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Rooney), and since these allegations relate to administrative procedures which fall under my area of responsibility I am sure hon. members would want to be informed of any actions which I propose to take.

On the general question of the supervision of the staff of members of the House of Commons, both here in Ottawa and in the constituency office, I think hon. members are aware that over the last some two years, almost since the inception of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, I have been greatly aided by that committee and in turn by consultation with the commissioners of internal economy in attempting to supervise in an orderly way the utilization by members of the House of Commons of the various allowances that are available to them in order to enable them to carry out their responsibility to the electorate.

In some cases we have found that we have been able to improve some of the practices, or at least alter them, we hope, in an approved way, and in other cases where suggestions have been made for relaxation of practices we have resisted them and maintained a vigilance which we feel is our obligation in attempting to strike the very delicate balance that is so elusive to us between, on the one hand, the vigilance that we owe to the public since we are spending taxpayers' money, and, on the other hand, the freedom that has to be exercised in view of the extraordinary duties placed on all members of parliament which require a regime here which asks of members of the House of Commons that they report on a monthly basis that they are conforming to the requirements both in respect of their own actions and in respect of personnel, and, of course, the long established practice that when that word is given by any elected member of the House of Commons it is accepted by the administration.

So I say that in attempting to find that proper balance between our vigilance with regard to the taxpayer and the extraordinary requirements in respect of the 264 members of the House, we feel we have been able to achieve something very close to the ideal, but of course we will continue the review. My point is that the review has been ongoing, in the hope that we have both come close to the ideal and established a regime which will enable us to maintain our vigilance.

In respect of the individual case in these particular circumstances, it is not for me nor, I am sure, for any other member of the House or of the public, to make a judgment in advance, and I do not do so. On the other hand, I feel sure that all hon. members would consider it my obligation in the circumstances, faced with the allegations contained in the article in the Globe and Mail this morning and made over the airwaves since the House rose last evening—I would consider it to be my minimum obligation—to ensure that a proper investigation is carried out. Therefore, after informing representatives of all parties this morning and the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Rooney) of my intention to do so, I have authorized an immediate investigation by the RCMP into the allegations which were contained and published in various journals and over the radio and television in the last 24 hours. In my advice to the hon. member, of course, I have indicated that both before and after the announcement—I was attempting to reach his office but was unable to do so because of busy telephone lines over an extended period, so I have sent a note to him—if the hon. member wanted to discuss the matter with me, I would be available for him to do so.

INFORMATION

REQUEST FOR MEASURE TO ENSURE FREEDOM OF ACCESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have knowledge of a fact of urgent and pressing necessity which drives me to make a motion under Standing Order 43. Given the fact that it is almost two years since this House unanimously approved freedom of information legislation: and that since then, there has been an epidemic of concealment and deception indicating this has been a way of life of the government, much of it based on false claims of security, I move:

That this House requests the government to abandon any attempt to appeal the decision of Associate Chief Justice Hugessen in connection with the Keable inquiry and instead to immediately introduce into parliament, legislation providing for access to government information including a proper definition of "security', and "ministerial responsibility" in order to restore public confidence.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TOURISM

PROPOSAL TO CREATE SEPARATE DEPARTMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. Because of the great importance of tourism to the economy of this country, and the urgent need to take constructive steps to overcome our large tourist trade deficit, which is increasing rapidly each year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the government create a separate department of tourism, with the powers which are necessary to restore the tourist industry to a healthy, profitable condition.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INCOME TAX

REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROCEED WITH BILL C-56 OF LAST SESSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As the Minister of Finance appears to be embarrassed by the fact that Bill C-11 has not been passed by the House while at the same time in an interview reported in the Financial Times he stated that reference to the bill not passing is a very unreal statement because "when the Minister of Finance proposes a tax change, it is law, effective the night of the budget", I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That the government House leader be asked to make a statement on motions as to why Bill C-11's father, Bill C-56, was not advanced for debate after its first reading on June 15 in the last session of this parliament and as a result seven months of debating time were lost since the March 31 budget which has resulted in the present Minister of Finance continually having to suck and blow as an apologist for the government's tardiness.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

SUGGESTED AWARD TO SIR WILLIAM STEPHENSON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 and I urge all members opposite to listen before shouting "no". Its urgency is due to the ailing health of the individual who is some 83 years old and who is the subject of this motion. My motion concerns a most singular and outstanding Canadian, Sir William Stephenson, who has been honoured by almost every western nation in the world save his own country, Canada.

Because he sought anonymity, held no military rank and wore no uniform after 1918—he never publicly displayed the decorations and medals awarded to him—and because he holds the British Military Cross, the 1914-1915 Star, the General Service Medal, the World War I Victory Medal, the French Commander of the Legion of Honour—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The standing order gives an opportunity to hon. members to explain the urgency of the matter. I think the hon. member might get to his motion.

Mr. Nielsen: —the Belgium Croix de Guerre with Palms, the U.S. Presidential Medal for Merit—Sir William was the first non-American to receive this decoration—and the British Badge of Knighthood, I move:

That this House urges the government to consider the award to William Stephenson of an appropriately high Canadian honour, perhaps a Companion of the Order of Canada or an honorary membership, in belated recognition of the singular and significant contribution made by this outstanding Canadian to the cause of the western world during the Second World War.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 provides that such a motion can be presented for debate only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF McDONALD INQUIRY TO INCLUDE ESPIONAGE ACTIVITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Because by far the largest threat to our nation's security is subversive activities within our country by foreign interests and not the activities of the RCMP, and because it is believed by many, including members of that force as well as Igor Gouzenko, former Soviet cipher clerk, that espionage activities dangerous to our national security continue to run rampant, particularly out of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa where nearly 700 special travel permits in one year alone were granted by this government to so-called soviet diplomats and military attachés, a number of whom have since been expelled by the government for "activities which were incompatible with their status", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt):

That this House instruct the Solicitor General to have the terms of reference of the McDonald Commission extended to include such subversive elements as the contents of the Featherbed file as well as related information which has been compiled over the years by the security forces dealing with any or all espionage activities in Canada by foreign interests which may be damaging to the security of our nation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

COMMENDATION OF MANAGEMENT PRACTICES FOR THE SEAL FISHERY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Figures released by the Department of Fisheries and the Environment supporting increases on seal quotas for Canadians should lay to rest claims by the nattering nabobs of negativism who predict the extinction of the seal herd. Since a non-partisan amendment to the sealing regulations presented by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) and myself will now insure the seal fishery will be free from harassment by those who try to prevent the seal hunt, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House commends management practices of all those connected with the seal fishery who have demonstrated sound knowledge of conservation and harvesting practices.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE LATE TOMMY PRINCE

PROPOSAL TO HONOUR BY CREATION OF SUITABLE MEMORIAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, regarding one of this country's greatest war heroes, whose death on November 26 in obscurity and apparent poverty, epitomizes the lack of appreciation given to military people in time of peace. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That Tommy Prince, who achieved ten major military medals fighting for his country, be honoured by the creation of a suitable memorial, details or arrangements to be the responsibility of the Minister of National Defence after consultation with all those concerned, to commemorate the memory of this great soldier whose contribution ought to have the same national significance in Canada as that of his American counterpart, Ira Hayes, who will always be remembered by Americans for his part in raising the American flag over Mount Surabachi when the American marines captured Iwo Jima in World War II.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have indicated in the past that motions of a congratulatory nature give the House a great deal of difficulty, not because they do not contain merit in themselves but because they are an open invitation for the use of motions under Standing Order 43 on matters of this kind which are hard for the House to deal with in a short period of time. I wonder about the wisdom of using that practice. I have let one go today and I do not think I should allow a second.

I think in view of the circumstances in which I had to delay the beginning of the question period by five minutes in order to make an announcement which affected some motions pursuant to Standing Order 43 and obviously some questions, that I ought to conclude the question period at five minutes past three. Oral questions.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON FOR CONTINUING HIGH LEVEL OF INFLATION—DATE WHEN LEVEL WILL REACH FOUR PER CENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who was in his seat. Perhaps we could just give him a minute to come back. Here he comes.

An hon. Member: Just like inflation; he is back again.

Mr. Stevens: My question to the minister is very short. As inflation in Canada in the past three months has been running at an annualized rate of more than 8 per cent, more than twice the level in the United States, would the minister indicate why our inflation levels continue to be so high compared to those experienced by our main trading partner?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed that question on several occasions in committee as well as in the House. Of course our inflation rate is unsatisfactory and should be lower than it is at present. On the other hand, one of the factors of that inflation phenomenon is perhaps the value of the Canadian dollar which has reduced so quickly that the inflation rate has become somewhat unexpected. I would like to point out to the hon. member that the economic indicators published yesterday show a very real increase for the third quarter. I am surprised that the hon. member has not mentioned that fact.

● (1422)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: In furtherance of his answer, will the minister confirm or otherwise the statement in the Financial Times of this week for which he apparently was interviewed in the comfort of his office. He stated that he anticipated we will not achieve an inflation level of four per cent until 1980. If that in truth is his department's view, why has there been a postponement of two to three years for reaching that target in that this current year was when we were supposed to get down to the four per cent inflation level.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I made a prediction that I hoped the inflation rate next year would be six per cent. It would be desirable to have an inflation rate of four per cent, but I never put a specific date on that. I know it will not happen next year unless we are luckier than we expect.

Mr. Stevens: In the same article to which I have referred, the Minister of Finance is quoted as saying:

> And in ten years time, the people will say: "Oh, gee, 1977—it was great."

Would the minister care to expand upon that statement? What does he think they will find great, the inflation rate of 8.8 per cent, unemployment of 8.3 per cent, the fiscal deficit of $8.2 billion, the trade deficit of $5 billion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will agree that question has some argumentive elements in it.

DROP IN LEVEL OF EMPLOYMENT IN MANUFACTURING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Manufacturing employment in Canada is roughly six per cent lower now than it was three years ago. Can the minister tell the House whether in his view that decline is attributable to the loss of our competitive position, a loss that will likely be $11 billion this year in our trade and manufactured products. Can he tell the House how he proposes to stop this trend which seems to indicate we are going to be de-industrialized if it continues?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will point out to the hon. member that during the third quarter, the annual rate has increased by 5.2 per cent which is very satisfactory. At present, since Canadians are receiving earnings which are closer to those received by Americans and since the Canadian dollar is at a more realistic level, we have reached, in my opinion, a more competitive position. This is why we have for 1977, contrarily to 1975 and 1976, a large surplus in our trade balance in relation with other countries.

TRADE

TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS AT GENEVA—REQUEST FOR BRIEFING OF MEMBERS ON PROGRESS AND POSITION OF NEGOTIATORS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My supplementary question is to the President of the Privy Council, the Acting Prime Minister, who is also the head of a cabinet committee to whom Mr. Jake Warren and our trade negotiators report at Geneva. There is a great deal of fear among our industrial sector that our negotiators at Geneva have free trade in their opinions and views and will not listen to the problems of industry. Will the President of Privy Council tell us whether the government negotiators are going to be instructed to hang tough in their bargaining to protect manufacturing and jobs at Geneva. Will he tell us whether opposition critics will be given a full briefing on our posture at Geneva, what our objectives are and how the negotiations go as the year proceeds in 1978?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that it will be the intention of the Canadian negotiators to be tough at Geneva and to secure the best possible advantages for Canada. As the hon. member knows, there is under consideration at the present time, especially in the field of industrial products, an overall tariff plan which anticipates reductions in the levels of tariffs. It will be our intention obviously where such changes take place to ensure that they do take place with reciprocal advantage to Canada. Of course, the long term objective of the trade negotiations is to provide growth in general employment and in incomes, not only in Canada but among the trading countries. I believe the final point made by the hon. member is a good one. It would be useful to have the opposition critics briefed on the developing situation in Geneva and I will attempt to arrange to bring that about at a suitable time.

● (1427)

TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS AT GENEVA—SUGGESTION INDUSTRY BE INFORMED ON PROGRESS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Is the President of Privy Council aware that those engaged in the manufacturing industry in Canada have a common complaint—they feel there is not sufficient feedback from the government about what is to happen in Geneva; there is no mechanism set up for this process during the negotiations. Would the hon. gentleman look into that aspect and arrange a mechanism so that these people can get some feedback from the government negotiators as the discussions go on?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is a concern of mine and of other members of the government. As the hon. member knows, an opportunity has been given to the representatives of industry to advise with regard to what changes beneficial to their operations ought to take place and a very large number of briefs has been submitted to the Canadian Tariff Committee which is the contact point. We are now at the stage of providing the type of feedback industry has been requesting. Consultations are under way, and will continue, to ensure that there is the type of feedback the hon. member has in mind.

ENERGY

NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE—MEASURES TO ENSURE CANADIANS GET SHARE OF MATERIAL AND LABOUR INVOLVED IN CONSTRUCTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as chief Canadian negotiator of the Alcan pipeline agreement. On September 9 the minister stated the agreement would result in direct expenditures in Canada of $4 billion and the creation of nearly 100,000 man-years of employment. That assumption is based on Canada getting 98 per cent of the pipe construction contracts and furnishing 88 per cent of the goods associated with the pipeline such as valves and compressors. In view of statements by some of the minister's colleagues with respect to open, competitive bidding, how does the government propose to ensure that Canada will get the share of the processing of the steel pipe and of the goods associated with the pipeline which was anticipated by him?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): The hon. member is correct in saying that the pipeline agreement provides for general, competitive contracts with respect to the provision of goods. But there is also provision in the agreement which states that the construction and operation of the pipeline should be carried out in such a way as to optimize the industrial benefits to each country. I can assure the hon. member that there is no disagreement with respect to that objective, one which is underscored in the agreement itself. I would underline an important point. The National Energy Board laid down as one of the conditions of its approval of the application of the Foothills Pipeline Company the optimization of Canadian production. The Board has an opportunity to monitor the ongoing procurement plans of the company and this, it seems to me, is an additional assurance to Canadians that the benefits which I indicated will be realized; it is an additional assurance quite apart from the pipeline agreement itself in which the principle has been enshrined.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Last Friday the Vancouver Sun claimed to have in its possession a document prepared by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which allegedly submitted a brief to the negotiating team prior to the negotiation of the agreement pointing out that unless adequate controls were exercised there was every likelihood that instead of getting 98 per cent of the pipe manufactured in Canada it would only be around 67 per cent. This would involve a loss of some $600 million. In light of that, can the minister be more specific about what are the preferential terms which will give Canadians the major share, or almost all, of the pipe to be processed in this country if at the same time we are to follow the suggestions which have been made by his colleagues that competitive bidding by other countries will be allowed?

● (1432)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the negotiations with the United States were conducted on the clear belief, which I still believe is well founded, that Canadian industry is fully competitive and able to take advantage of the opportunities provided by this pipeline. That is a fundamental fact. The phrase in the agreement "generally competitive" was meant to provide for occasions when what one might call unfair competitive practices might be brought into play by other suppliers. There is a provision in the pipeline agreement by which one country or the other may have the tenders looked at or examined. There is no doubt about that.

However, it seems to me that the most important additional assurance is the monitoring of the procurement policies of the pipeline by the National Energy Board itself, and this will be continued. It may be that the introduction of the legislation itself will overtake the provisions of the National Energy Board and that it will be possible to consider putting in that legislation a system of monitoring the procurement plans of the pipeline company.

With respect to the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The subject of the question is a very important one but questions and answers have now consumed almost 10 minutes. I wonder whether I might permit the hon. member a brief supplementary and then a brief reply.

NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE—DATE OF DECISION ON SIZE OF PIPE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Just a brief supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Has a decision yet been reached as to the specifications for the pipe? As is known, Canadian authorities have been asking for a 54 inch pipeline with thinner pipe; the Americans have been pressing for a 48 inch pipe. Has a decision yet been reached as to what will be the specifications for the pipe which is going to be used in the Alcan pipeline?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to be brief and to tell the hon. member that the first meeting of the technical group took place on November 16, and to my knowledge no decision has yet been reached.

Oral Questions

PERSON INFORMING MINISTER OF BREAK-IN AT PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS BUILDING—POSSIBILITY OTHER INFORMATION SUPPLIED

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and relates to the break-in at the premises where the Parti Québécois held their membership lists. Was the Solicitor General first informed of this break-in by individuals other than senior officials of his department or the security service?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I made a complete statement on the subject in the House of Commons and I believe I dealt with the matter at that time.

Mr. Jarvis: That is exactly why we are asking the question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Solicitor General confirm that the individuals who first advised him of this break-in were former or serving officers of lower rank in the security service; and such being the case, will the Solicitor General explain why this information did not come up to him through the normal chain of command, particularly in view of the fact that he had made a specific request for reports on any incidents where the security service was operating outside their mandate?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I would have to go over the statement that I made in the House. My own recollection at this stage is that it was brought to my attention by senior members of the force.

Mr. Jarvis: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Solicitor General will remember this. Will he tell the House whether the individuals who informed him of the PQ break-in also informed him of any other incidents, such as the "Operation Cathedral" or "Source 300"? If they informed him of any other incidents, would he explain why, having told the House about the PQ break-in, he did not tell the House about any other incidents of which he was informed by those same individuals?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, as I told the House earlier, the PQ incident was to the best of my recollection brought to my attention by senior members of the force. I did indicate to the House a number of times that, following the statement I made in the House on June 17 last, evidence of possible illegal actions had been brought to my attention. These matters were investigated by the force and the conclusion was come to that these matters warranted further investigation. That was the basis upon which the government decided to initiate a federal royal commission of inquiry into the procedures and practices of the RCMP.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES BE REDUCED TO SIX PER CENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Considering that our economy is still staggering, that the Canadian dollar keeps falling down and that inflation is still rampant, would the minister recommend that the interest rate be brought down to 6 per cent as it was in the 40's in order to allow and support at the same time a policy of expansion in low cost housing so as to satisfy the needs of numerous low income workers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the suggestion of the hon. member would be a very practical way of stimulating the housing sector for the time being because interest rates are not dictated only by the domestic situation in Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY CONSUMER MINISTER REFLECTING ON COMMITTEE SYSTEM

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of Privy Council in his capacity as Deputy Prime Minister. In light of the fact that yesterday the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said he had misgivings about giving evidence at the committee level and that "Commons committees are politically inspired bodies . . . less interested in rights and wrongs than in making political points", will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether the minister, who yesterday showed that he lacked the courage to fulfil his responsibilities as Acting Solicitor General, spoke for the government when he degraded the committee system of this institution?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made any statements that would be repugnant to any hon. member who is an active politician. We all know that committees of the House are political institutions and that politics occurs there. I am sure that is not new to the hon. member for Calgary North.

ALLEGATION CONSUMER MINISTER HAS SOMETHING TO HIDE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it may not be new to the hon. member for Calgary North but I am certain it is not new to the Deputy Prime Minister. May I put this supplementary question to him. In light of the fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has refused consent to come before the committee to give any evidence, has the minister told the Deputy Prime Minister as acting head of the government, or does the Deputy Prime Minister know, that the minister in question has something to hide and cover up?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that minister has indicated his willingness to appear before the McDonald commission and the Keable inquiry. He is quite prepared to give evidence before these bodies which are attempting to get at the truth. With respect to the statement by the hon. member, it is my understanding that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did not express a refusal to attend the committee; he expressed some doubt or misgiving. In fact, the press reports as to what was said are rather contradictory.

REASON FOR ATTEMPTING TO STOP KEABLE COMMISSION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Deputy Prime Minister now tell the House, in light of his last answer, why it was that the government, with all its sources and resources, tried to stop the commission from finding out the true facts, so that a cover-up is still existing with reference to the same?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has already made very clear the reasons behind the government's intervention with respect to the Keable inquiry.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REASON DEPARTMENT DOES NOT USE CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION FOR PUBLICITY

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Through the various private news media, whether it be on TV, on radio or in the papers, Montreal residents have been exposed for some time to an advertising campaign which his department is sponsoring to inform the public of its eagerness to help Montreal which is the economic core of the province and, through it, the province as a whole. My question is this: I find it strange that this advertising campaign is carried only over the private networks of the news media. I wonder why his department is not having its message aired over our state-owned network which is the CBC.

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that we are carrying out this campaign to promote the assistance program which we have especially designed for the Montreal area. We have offered the CBC to participate in this advertising campaign, but for reasons which we find hard to accept, the CBC has unfortunately decided to turn down our offer; this is why the great advertising tool the CBC is is not broadcasting our message over its radio or TV networks. It is fortunate, however, that privately-owned news media have deemed this program useful and decided to publicize it not only over their radio and TV networks, but also in the press.

POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY INTO LABOUR-MANAGEMENT MATTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Labour. Over the weekend there was at least one radio broadcast which indicated the government was considering the establishment of a commission or an inquiry into management-labour matters generally in the country. Can the minister confirm or deny that report, or amplify it if need be?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker. Because of the notice the hon. member gave my office, I have some idea of the radio broadcast to which he is referring. There was reference to the possibility of an industrial commission under the labour code to look into certain questions regarding lay-offs in federal jurisdictions. It was based on a statement made by someone in the Department of Labour. Actually, that is the case. Many of the railway unions have been anxious for some investigation into the question of lay-offs. We have decided to look into that, more pertinent to the information which may be available from corporations in that regard. It is in the process of active consideration now.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. Minister for his answer. Could he tell the House if it is now possible for him to advise us as to when this inquiry will take place? Is this something which is to be delayed for some months, or is this a matter of almost immediate attention so far as his department is concerned?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No, Mr. Speaker. It is a subject of immediate attention.

ENERGY

NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE—ALLEGED LACK OF GUARANTEE TO PROTECT CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the President of Privy Council regarding the pipeline. When I listened to the minister, I heard him use the following words: "We believe we are protected", "optimized" and "There will be a bill brought in eventually for monitoring purposes". I have looked at the agreement and there are no guarantees in the agreement signed by the President of Privy Council on behalf of the government and his

United States counterpart which would protect Canadian interests. That is one word which was left out. Are there no guarantees in that agreement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the terms of the agreement deals with the common objective of both countries to optimize industrial benefits. As the hon. member is aware, that is an assurance which can be carried forward through the operation of the agreement itself, and through the monitoring of the National Energy Board. Possibly it will be provided for in legislation which will come before the House, if necessary.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, it appears the minister has answered my question unknowingly. My conclusion is that there are no guarantees within that agreement which would protect Canadian interests. We have heard that possibly we will be assured some content, and this and that will be optimized. During the time of negotiations, did the minister bring up the question of guarantees and/or preferential treatment with his American counterparts? I have information which indicates that the minister brought this up. If so, what were the answers given?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the hon. member seems to be advocating that we ought to have entered into an agreement with the United States guaranteeing markets, regardless of the price put forward by Canadian industry, when we were assured Canadian industry was fully competitive and all that was required was a provision which would preclude unfair competitive practices. I know perfectly well that the steel industry is rather satisfied, as is industry generally, with the results of the pipeline negotiations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I do not need a lecture from the minister. I am asking him a very simple question. I am trying to find out whether he acted responsibly when he entered into the negotiations to bring about this agreement. Did the thought cross his mind that he should put before his American counterparts the concern we have in this country in terms of guarantees or preferential treatment? I am not saying they will both work. All I want to know is: did the minister have enough common sense to ask those questions, and what were the answers?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that in the negotiations between the officials of the two governments, Secretary Shlesinger and myself, the question of optimizing and maximizing Canadian industrial benefits were discussed. The concerns raised by the hon. member were considered. They were enshrined in the agreement which has been signed by both governments. I want to relieve the anxiety of the hon. member by telling him that he can be assured Canadian industry will participate fully in this rather immense energy project.

Mr. Alexander: I am more anxious than that.

[Mr. Alexander.]

LOCKOUT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It concerns the lockout of some 10,000 B. C. Tel workers in British Columbia during the past week. In that particular dispute, which is within the minister's jurisdiction, the report of the sole arbitrator, Dr. Noel Hall, was accepted completely by the union. The only matter which remains unresolved is the question of contracting out the companies attempting to remove a clause in the old contract. The result has been a fairly bitter dispute between the B. C. Tel workers and the company. Can the minister advise the House as to what he has done in order to resolve that dispute? Can he also advise why he has not as yet appointed an industrial inquiry commissioner under the Canada Labour Act?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the latter part of the hon. member's question first, it is not appropriate to appoint an industrial inquiry commissioner when there is a strike. That is not part of the dispute settlement process. It will not assist in getting an early settlement.

The hon. member is quite right. Dr. Noel Hall recommended a formula for settlement which was rejected by the company and accepted by the union. The union has used its right legally to indulge in a strike. My officers in Vancouver have indicated that they are available to both sides to mediate, which is the role required now, in an effort to effect a settlement. Both partics are aware that our officers are there and are experienced. Those officers can assist if the parties concerned want that assistance. If the officers are not wanted, they will not be of much assistance. I hope that assistance will be sought as soon as possible.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that in this case the union has offered to settle the one matter in dispute, which is the contracting out provision by setting out over an 18 month period a study of that particular clause to determine what is in dispute; and given the fact that up to now the company has continued to reject even the idea of a study of the clause contained in the old contract, can the minister advise whether he has interceded with the company in terms of its local management or in terms of the owners of the company who happen to reside in New York under General Tel & Tel?

Has he interceded at either level to find out why this dispute is continuing over such a minor section of the old contract?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The company is well aware of my reaction and that of my department to Dr. Noel Hall. We studied the report and we thought it was fair. We urged the company to accept it. They did not accept it. They advanced their reasons for not doing so, but that did not change our opinion with respect to what we perceived to be a fair and reasonable report on the part of Dr. Hall. That being the case, the free collective bargaining system—a system that both parties support—has resulted in a strike. I still hope we will find an early resolution to this dispute. I have no other recourse but to entertain that hope.

POSSIBILITY OF RESUMPTION OF URANIUM SHIPMENTS TO EUROPE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Because of the great damage that is being done to Canadian-European relations by the suspension of uranium shipments, can he assure us that these questions, which have been under discussion when Mr. Brunner was here from the European Economic Community, are now settled and that we are on the path to a solution?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that we are on the path to a solution. That means that the matter is not wholly settled. During the talks with Mr. Brunner I was able to eliminate a number of the issues that have been preventing a resumption of shipments, but there are a number, some of which are of a technical nature but one or two which are substantive, on which Mr. Brunner could not give answers without consulting with his colleagues. He is now in the process of doing that. I will be meeting him in Brussels next week and I am hopeful that at that time some mutually satisfactory conclusion can be arrived at that will permit us to resume shipments.

ALLEGED OVERCHARGING FOR BULK PURCHASES OF GASOLINE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. For some time now farmers have been charged up to 12 cents a gallon more for gas that they get in bulk tanks to use in tractors and combines than other customers who get their gas in bulk tanks and by that I do not necessarily mean service station operators. I want to ask the minister if he has made representations on behalf of the farmers in this regard and what answer he received or, if he has not made representations, why he has not.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, some representations have been made to me over a period of time by farmers who have pointed out, as did the hon. member, that they can buy gas cheaper from a service station than by having it delivered in a bulk tank on their farm. It is an unfair marketing system that gas companies have. We have made representations to them. There does not seem to be anything we can do to make them change their minds.

An hon. Member: Yes there is.

An hon. Member: Nationalize them?

Mr. McKinley: In view of the fact that last year and this year agricultural income will be down probably by nearly 50 per cent, I think the minister should try a little harder to look after the people whom he has been appointed to look after.

AVAILABILITY TO PUBLIC OF TASCHEREAU PAPERS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Prime Minister, and it is put to him also in his capacity as President of Privy Council. I would like to ask him, if members opposite would give me a moment to speak, a question which arises from the fact that the Taschereau papers on national security were not made public as scheduled within the last few months and instead were taken to the Privy Council and the Prime Minister's Office from the Public Archives. Is the government now prepared to follow the democratic process by allowing these papers in their entirety to be made available to the public and news media for scrutiny and, if so, when and, if not, what are the reasons for not doing so?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): I can assure the hon. member that the government follows democratic processes in all its activities.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. MacEachen: I am not up to date on the papers to which the hon. member refers. I will take the question as notice and answer it as soon as possible.

FISHERIES

DATE GROUNDFISH FISHERIES MANAGEMENT PLAN AVAILABLE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the interest in Atlantic Canada, both among inshore and offshore fishermen, in fishing quotas for 1978, would the minister indicate whether he has yet finalized the Atlantic coast groundfish fisheries management plan and whether our quotas for next year will be decreased, will remain the same, or will be increased, and when we may expect the groundfish fisheries plan to be made available in the House.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, firm recommendations have not yet been made to me. However, the plan should be available in a matter of days. I might tell the hon. member that in some cases a decrease will take place for conservation reasons and in other cases there will be an increase.

May I say in relation to the comment from the hon. member for St. John's East, that we have traded away nothing.

Mr. McGrath: You have given it away.

Mr. Crouse: I have one brief supplementary question for the minister. In view of the fact that in the near future representatives of the fishing industry will be meeting in Ottawa with the minister and with a panel of cabinet ministers to discuss a food strategy for Canada, at which time there will most likely be a discussion on the underutilized species and stocks presently being caught by foreign fleets within our 200 mile zone, will the minister indicate whether he has any plan for the Canadian industry to harvest these stocks, thereby providing employment opportunities for Canadians at sea and in processing plants offshore?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have plans. Not only do we have plans but we have realized them. This year we supported industry ventures into this area. In fact, we were associated with the most successful, the one that has discovered shrimp stocks in northern Newfoundland waters, and we are assessing the size of this stock. We also went into a joint arrangement with Canadian and foreign companies' vessels to take and to market some of the squid products off our shore. But I might remind the hon. member that if we want to have access to some of the markets to which we presently do not have access, surely we should not completely close the zone to foreign fishing fleets.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

URANIUM EXPORTS—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT ON SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs in relation to the answer he gave a few moments ago. I am sure the minister is aware that he worries some members of the House when he talks about some provisions of Canada's safeguards being eliminated in respect of these discussions with ECC which have not yet been finalized. I am not asking him now about the proposals still under negotiation. I am asking him to indicate to the House as briefly as he can which items have been eliminated in respect of Canada's safeguards.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Perhaps I used the word "eliminated" inadvertently. What I meant was that they had been resolved satisfactorily between the two parties. We had come to an agreement with regard to such questions as technological transfers and some others of an immensely complex technical nature which I would not be able to articulate meaningfully—I do not know about the hon. member—without the paper in front of me. Those were the matters which, when I used the word "eliminated" I meant we narrowed down to areas of continuing discussions while others have been agreed upon. I can tell the hon. member that the fundamental question which still remains to be resolved regards the conditions under which we would resume shipments for an interim period while INFCEP studies are going into full fuel cycle evaluation.

• (1502)

This is the issue. As I think the hon. member knows, the Europeans are asking for an interim arrangement of limited duration, and we are seeking to find a means through which we might be able to do that without closing the door to the outcome of the INFCEP negotiations or indeed backing off from the fundamental principles of our nuclear export policy.

ISRAEL—POSSIBLE CHANGE OF POSITION ON RIGHT TO OCCUPIED TERRITORY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the honourable and lucid Secretary of State for External Affairs. Noting that at the United Nations General Assembly last week Canada voted with Israel, the United States, El Salvador and no one else against a motion condemning continued Israeli occupation of the territory of other sovereign states and considering that we voted with the vast majority on October 28 opposing Israeli settlements in occupied lands, can the minister advise if this latest vote represents a change in Canadian policy and, if so, why such a change occurred and if it is now the view of the Canadian government that we should legitimize the right of military conquest?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no change of policy. In so far as the vote against the resolution was concerned it was done basically on two premises, the first being that the resolution called for withdrawal from all occupied territories. We have always taken the position that the English text referring to occupied territory was the appropriate one in this case. Second, of course, it called for recognition in a certain context of the Palestine Liberation Organization which, once again, we have not as Canadian policy designated or acknowledged as being the so-called rightful spokesman for the Palestinians. There has been no change of policy, but there has been a growing irritation, quite frankly, on my part at what I regard as these rather senseless United Nations resolutions at this time which are doing nothing to advance the goal and the main objective which is, of course, to get the parties to Geneva.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GUARANTEES FOR PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN LABOUR IN CONSTRUCTION OF NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour with respect to the pipeline. Some questions about this have been asked already. Can the minister put to rest the assertion which was made by the leader of the Teamsters in Alaska who said he had been assured by the international president who in turn had said he had been assured by U.S. politicians that 2,500 jobs on the Canadian section of the pipeline would be going to United States Teamsters, thus depriving Canadians of those jobs? What guarantees are in place to assure Canadian labour content, and how are those guarantees going to be controlled so that Canadian labour will be assured of the work?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am aware of the stories the hon. member has heard. I checked them out through our officers in Vancouver who contacted the appropriate people to find out how valid the stories were. They said there was no validity at all to the suggestions to which the hon. member is referring in terms of protestations that Alaska Teamsters are going to take the jobs.

ENERGY

NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE—DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT OF SINGLE CONTROL AGENCY

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour did not reply to the question about how this is going to be controlled but I will direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister and ask him about the labour provisions in the pipeline agreement and the other provisions. He has mentioned already that there were meetings held last November 16, I think he said, with respect to specifications of the pipe. When is the single regulatory control agency, which is part of the government's plans, going to be set up? It seems to me that that control agency should be participating in that kind of discussion.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a valid point. We are presently working on the legislation, and we hope to introduce it into the House of Commons as soon as possible. It was my hope that it would be introduced prior to the Christmas adjournment, but I am not sure we can make that deadline. However, we will have legislation brought forward just as soon as possible.

Point of Order

PRIVILEGE

MR. WALTER BAKER—ALLEGATIONS RESPECTING MR. ROONEY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I filed with you a notice with respect to a question of privilege concerning the matters to which you alluded earlier involving the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception. Subsequent to that we had a House leaders' meeting, to which Your Honour referred and at which you announced your decision, on which there was agreement to call in authorities for an investigation. In view of that matter having been dealt with at this time in the way in which Your Honour described earlier, I wonder if my question of privilege might be held in abeyance for a time.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the action by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to protect his right to rise at a future time on a question of privilege. The matter will stand in abeyance pending the investigation.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With deepest respect, I do not question a ruling of the Chair but I seek clarification on a certain point. A while ago I asked a question of the Deputy Prime Minister and he agreed to look into the matter, and in due course, I presume, make a report—in view of the fact that he was apparently not aware of the circumstances or the full details. I did have a supplementary question concerning a very important fact which I thought should go along with it, and I felt the Deputy Prime Minister should also be prepared to look into it, namely, that Gouzenko—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I was one of two members who was denied a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Leeds will recognize that several of his colleagues were not recognized for questions today, and that some did have supplementaries which they wished to pursue. The Chair is in the difficult position of attempting, on the one hand, to distribute the sharing of the question period as widely as possible and, on the other hand, to permit hon. members the opportunity to pursue subjects with some diligence. In some cases, particularly cases where the answer is that the minister has not been briefed on a matter but will provide information at a later date, certainly that seems to be one case in which it would be inopportune to proceed with supplementaries.

There were other questions. I think particularly of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham who sought to pursue a matter by way of a supplementary question. I could think of others if I thought about it for a minute. The fact of the matter is that several members were permitted only one question today. That is a decision I have to make. If we were to permit members second and third supplementaries at all times as a matter of course, we would find that only eight or nine members could participate in the question period. That seems to be more undesirable than the difficulty we now face.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order similar to that raised by the hon. member for Leeds. For two days I have been attempting, under Standing Order 43—which is a Standing Order providing for the discussion of matters of urgent and pressing necessity—to get Your Honour's eye. I also attempted throughout the question period to ask a question.

I understand the difficulty which Your Honour faces in recognizing all hon. members who wish to question the ministry on matters which are all important. However, it appears to me that when a member seeks the floor to raise a question of urgent and pressing necessity, and Your Honour does not recognize him for that purpose, it would be acceptable to recognize the hon. member during the question period because some of us do want to refer matters of urgent and pressing necessity to ministers, to this House and to the public. In this particular case it is a matter which urgently requires the attention of the ministry because it affects the lives and safety of Canadians throughout this country with regard to air traffic.

Mr. Speaker: I can help the hon. member to resolve that problem if he can help me to resolve the corollary problem, which is that when members put Standing Order 43 motions, and when they are not recognized later in the question period, many hon. members have felt they have been discriminated against in the past. It is a very difficult decision to make.

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by the National Capital Commission in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. Since April 1, 1977 the National Capital Commission has obtained temporary help from private employment agencies in Ontario to the following extent: (a) Thirty-four persons have been used on a part-time basis. (b) Four persons have been used on a full-time basis for periods longer than six months.

2. The costs involved are paid from the Commission's annual budget.

3. (a) The average hourly rate paid to employment agencies was:

	Ontario	Quebec
(i) 1975-76	$5.30	Nil
(ii) 1976-77	$5.81	$6.10

(b) Not known by N.C.C.

	Ontario	Quebec
(c) (i) 1975-76	$139,895	Nil
(ii) 1976-77	$112,882	$458

DIAND—REGIONAL DIRECTOR GENERAL, YUKON

Question No. 370—Mr. Epp:

1. (a) What is the annual salary of Mr. Phil Fontaine, the newly appointed Regional Director-General for the Yukon (b) what is the length of his tenure in office?

2. (a) As Regional Director-General, how many programmes will he be in charge of administrating (b) what amount of government funds are being administered by each programme?

3. What programmes will Mr. Fontaine be in charge of administrating for the Atline Band in Northern British Columbia and what amount of government funds are to be administered in each programme?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) $27,900—$34,900. (b) Indeterminate.

2. (a) Five. (b) Local Government, $2,055,000; Economic Development, $779,700; Social Development, $2,184,400; Education, $1,500,000; Finance and Administration, $372,-100.

3. Local Government, $89,800; Economic Development, $20,000; Social Development, $17,000; Education, $5,000.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MARITIME FORCES, REFITTING OF DESTROYERS

Question No. 468—Mr. Jones:

Are four destroyers being towed to Quebec for refitting and are they to be taken back to the Maritimes to be put into service and, if so (a) for what reason (b) could the destroyers be refitted in one of the four major ports in the Maritimes and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b) No Canadian Forces destroyers are being towed to Quebec for refitting. However, a contract for refitting four destroyers was awarded to Canadian Vickers Ltd., Montreal over the period December, 1976 through April, 1978 after competitive tendering to the following shipyards: Halifax Shipyard, Halifax, N.S; Saint John Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. Ltd., Saint John, N.B.; Davie Shipbuilding Ltd., Lauzon, Que.; Marine Industries Ltd., Sorel, Que.; Canadian Vickers Ltd., Montreal, Que.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps this is an opportune time to advise the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 40, three questions will be raised at six o'clock this afternoon as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—National Harbours Board; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Labour Conditions; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Transport.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58(11)—ALLEGED MISMANAGEMENT OF THE ECONOMY

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski) moved:

That this House deplores (a) that the government has shown a lack of foresight and leadership in respect of the flooding of the Canadian market with foreign goods, particularly in the areas of footwear, textiles, clothing and furniture, which has contributed a great deal in weakening Canadian industries and resulted in a number of layoffs;

(b) that the votes allocated by the government to the Canada Works programs are not sufficient to create enough jobs to overcome the massive and persistent unemployment which is especially severe among the 18 to 30 age group seeking permanent employment, regardless of the fact that a relatively large number of projects have been approved;

(c) that no serious action has been taken to reduce interest rates which are the major cause of unjustified price increases and to fight effectively against inflation; and

(d) that in spite of the fact that the present administration has very candidly acknowledged that the economic methods now in use are no longer suitable, the government, because of its weakness in the face of economic and financial dictatorship, persists in applying the same obsolete economic methods which leave the Canadian population to contend with the same economic problems.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for having read this very elaborate motion. I believe this automatically saves me the trouble of reading it myself.

Mr. Speaker, for the last five years I have had the great honour of representing one of the most beautiful constituencies of the country, that of Rimouski—

Mr. Pelletier: Sherbrooke!

Mr. Corbin: Madawaska-Victoria!

Mr. Allard: —It is much better than either of those! Also, for five years, I have heard this government use all sorts of diversions to mislead the population of Canada into forgetting its inability to keep its promises of a fair and appropriate well being for all citizens. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the December 24, 1970 issue of the Globe and Mail quoted the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as telling Canadians that inflation no longer existed in Canada. This was in 1970. In the fall of 1975, former finance minister John Turner said the following: Canada must meet two great economic challenges: to fight against the persistent and well rooted inflation while maintaining a satisfactory level of production and employment. On October 20 of this year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) said this in his economic and fiscal statement:

> We must realize that these are difficult times for Canada both economically and politically. But these are also challenging times because Canadians must rededicate themselves to the building of a stronger, more prosperous and more united country.

In the December 9, 1974 issue of the magazine Les Affaires, Bank of Canada Governor Gerald Bouey suggested that inflation is caused by a rapid growth of external and internal demand and that our country was beginning to reach the limit of its production capacity.

Mr. Speaker, this statement is quite ridiculous and to claim that demand is higher than production is a real nonsense since for many years, in almost every area, we have known production surpluses which we cannot distribute because consumers do not have a sufficient purchasing power to be able to buy Canadian manufactured products.

The March 3, 1975 issue of Business Week—and as you all know, it is a very esteemed magazine—reported that the real problem arose rather from the fact that inventories of unsold products were reaching unprecedented sizes. As a result, they mentioned that this mini crisis, or rather the terrible crisis we are still facing at present would get worse. When one considers statistics, one readily realizes that those statements were quite justified, which brings us to the evidence, Mr. Speaker, that the problem was not as the governor of the Bank of Canada described it on December 9, 1974 when he said the demand was too strong for our lagging production.

As I said, he was completely off the track because the real problem is not to produce but to consume. As a matter of evidence, with a percentage of 10 to 15 per cent of unemployed all year long, our warehouses are full of all kinds of products. Faced with such a production, the consumer can only buy these products with his eyes because his desire to consume depends essentially upon his ability to pay.

It is undeniable that faced with this situation which commands that action be taken as soon as possible by the government, the only attitude to be taken by members of this famous House is to make frank joint efforts without any spite or any partisanship with a view to finding a solution as soon as possible. Besides, those problems we are facing are very important and they would be easily solved if the government and Parliament members would take their responsibilities.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the measures put forward by the government to fight inflation and unemployment and to stimulate the economy are not good enough considering the present state of our economy.

[Mr. Allard.]

As a matter of fact, Canada has never found itself in such a dramatic situation since the great depression of the thirties. Statistics show that since 1933 the consumer price index has only dropped twice, in 1939 and in 1953. Consumer prices have steadily increased for more than 20 years.

As for our dollar, it is only worth half the value it had barely 20 years ago. What about consumer prices? A little example, Mr. Speaker: last September, the consumer price index increased by more than 0.6 per cent and reached a record level of 163.4 per cent compared to the 1971 level, or an increase of 8.4 per cent since last year. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is useless to say that in the past six years the cost of living has increased inordinately.

For the information of hon. members I will say that I have here a few percentage figures which I will spare you because everyone is pretty well aware of them. However, I would like to mention a couple: the overall index to December 6 for the last six years registered increases of 1 per cent, 2 per cent and even 3 per cent a year. So it can readily be seen that the necessities of life have reached unbelievable prices compared with what they were a few years ago and, in addition, how small wage earners are being crushed by inflation. Since price increases are mainly—I stress mainly—being felt in vital products it is impossible to escape that devastation. Unfortunately, low income people are of course once again the ones most affected because they must spend nearly all their income on consumer products, food for one thing.

The people of Canada, Mr. Speaker, are wondering whether the government of Canada will one day be able to bring inflation down with the economic methods it is now using. Personally, I doubt it. People are really wondering now whether it seems to want to go that way. Prices are going up at a staggering pace and salaries generally remain at the same levels. Small wage earners are most affected and they are anxiously wondering when that terrible situation will end.

Mr. Speaker, you will agree that patience has its limits. Frankly I doubt that workers can tolerate such a situation much longer. I feel it is high time the government really got down to doing something if it wants to avoid the major problem which could disrupt the whole economic structure of this country. Indeed, old people, the disabled and unemployed are concerned to see the cost of living go up steadily without being able to get a similar increase in their pensions and incomes.

On behalf of the old people of my riding and the Gaspé area I ask the government to take immediate steps to ensure the security and freedom of workers, farmers and all families, and more stable jobs for our outstanding youth who wants nothing more than being able to partake in the development of this beautiful and great country of ours.

Mr. Speaker, given the measures announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) on October 20, I find that the government has missed a good opportunity to take a well defined position in relation to the unemployed aged from 18 to 30 and those from 45 to 65 who find themselves between two ages—too old to find a job and too young to get old age security pension. What about farmers' sons who want to take their turn after having seen the difficulties and troubles caused to their fathers by the government's adverse policy? What about the public debt now? For the 1977-78 fiscal year alone we will have to pay $2 billion in interests only. Can someone really tell me what the federal government is doing to stop that heavy drain on taxpayer money?

● (1532)

When will the collapse happen? When can we expect aid policies for municipalities at grips with impossible issues because they have no money to build sewer and water systems? When will we have pensions at 60 for workers willing to retire? When will we have the guaranteed minimum income promised during the 1974 election campaign? Judging from the mini budget of last October 20, this government has no solution except a flood of words which get lost in a bottomless ocean. We are always told the same story, that there is no magic solution or magic wand.

Mr. Speaker, I can recall quite vividly the 30s when people throughout the world, except in Germany perhaps, had to tighten their belts. At that time, I worked for five cents an hour, 10 hours a day, that is fifty cents a day. I can recall that a full day's work would hardly buy a gallon and a half of gasoline.

Many people ate only soup, fish and potato peels. Suddenly war broke out. Overnight the federal government found its magic wand and produced billions of dollars to defend the so-called liberties against people elsewhere in the world who were made to believe they were fighting for the same liberties. Suddenly, after a few years, the major battles came to an end and we had only sporadic skirmishes. Gradually our leaders put away their tricks and magic wands and they tightened a few holes in the Canadian taxpayer's belt. Because they are always tightening the same belt, very soon there will be nothing left on which to tighten that belt. That is where we are, Mr. Speaker, and yet for many years the Social Credit Party has been proposing solutions to slacken the belt instead of tightening it.

Mr. Speaker, the present government pretends not to hear and hypnotized by high finance, it prefers to tighten our belts instead of loosening them, and soon its stubborn refusal to use the magic wand of 1939 will lead it and the people of Canada to an impending bankruptcy, unless events similar to those of 1939 restore its magic touch, its motivation to provide the economic lifeblood essential to the normal growth and development of a people that is anxiously waiting for the magician and his magic wand.

Mr. Speaker, on several occasions, and pursuant to Standing Order 43, I made several representations on behalf of industry, namely the Quebec furniture industry, which has simply been taken over by foreign interests. Indeed, last year, furniture imports in Quebec increased by 26.3 per cent which resulted in the lay off of 3,000 Canadian furniture workers.

As regards colour television sets, on January 29, 1976, I moved a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 asking for stricter controls on such imports. Indeed, at that time, almost half of all colour TV sets sold in Canada, or 46 per cent, were imported, mostly from Japan and the United States. Then, I remember very well, the Fleetwood Company, the only colour TV manufacturer in Quebec, had just announced the layoff of 150 workers. Then, Mr. Speaker, why is the government waiting until the last minute to act? As regards the footwear industry, last May 19, I moved in the House of Commons a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 asking the government to restrict shoe imports. In fact, statistics show that in the last 12 months, 21 shoe factories have closed down in Canada, resulting in the loss of 2,500 jobs, when we have the highest unemployment rate in 37 years. As a result of the lack of foresight and leadership of the present government, imports have monopolized 56 per cent of the market, with only 44 per cent being left to the Canadian industry.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to make a quotation. We are often told here that it would require a magic wand to change our natural resources into the money required for the development of our country. I have here, Mr. Speaker, an excerpt from an article entitled "The Issues as I see them" published in the Maclean's issue of September 15, 1935, by the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, and I quote:

> Let me protest once again, as I did in Parliament, against handing over to a private institution the control over the nation's currency and credit. Once a nation parts with the control of its currency and credit, it matters not who makes the nation's laws. Usury, once in control, will wreck any nation. Until the control of the issue of currency and credit is restored to government and recognized as its most conspicuous and sacred responsibility, all talk of the sovereignty of parliament and democracy is idle and futile. To give back to the nation what it has lost will be the goal relentlessly pursued by the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker, this was more than 40 years ago. Apparently, the Liberals have lost, have forgotten what their famous predecessor had told them so well. And as he said, 40 years later, we are on road to ruin. And yet, we, Social Crediters, have never been in power.

In a speech made before the Union commerciale mauricienne on November 1959, the former minister of finance Donald Fleming said this:

> I want to emphasize that the Canadian government has no control whatsoever over the money supply. It may not increase nor reduce it.

Mr. Speaker, why does the federal government, with its power to create money, surrender its powers to a private monopoly and then go and borrow what Parliament can create itself while paying interests so high as to cause the country to go bankrupt? As a matter of fact, between the end of the Second World War and 1975, or in the last thirty years, the federal government has had a deficit for seventeen years in a row. This year, the deficit is estimated at around $8 billion. At the same time, those who have the privilege to create credit, the private organizations, will have net assets of $25 billion. Therefore, if I know how to count, a $25 billion deficit plus $8 billion makes a $33 billion deficit, that is we are short $33 billion.

● (1542)

Mr. Speaker, Canada's debt in 1964 was $25,750 million and in 1967 it had reached $30,034,801,000. By the end of 1976, the direct public debt had risen to $96 billion, that is $60 billion for the federal government, $25 billion for the provincial governments and $11 billion for the municipalities. And these figures do not include the $24 billion guaranteed by the various levels of government for the funding of public corporations. Besides, last November 16, an item in Le Devoir read, and I quote:

Wood Gundy statistics showed that the financing of the public debt had reached in August 1977 the level of $1,450 million, or $875 million for the federal government, $333 million for the provincial governments, $4 million for Ontario municipalities and $80 for Quebec municipalities.

And it goes on to say:

In the first eight months of this year, the Canadian public debt has increased by nearly $13 billion.

Meanwhile, our 11 chartered banks expect to increase their assets by more than $25 billion by the end of December. From all that, one may readily infer that the direct public debt charges have increased. As a matter of fact, in the last five years, they have increased by 120 per cent, that is 135 per cent at the federal level and 100 per cent at the provincial and municipal levels. The share borne by every Canadian worker has gone from $444.44 for the 1971-72 fiscal year to $822.92 for the current fiscal year. Besides, for last year alone, those charges reached $7.9 billion.

Mr. Speaker, we, of the Social Credit Party of Canada, have claimed for years that the creation of new liquidities does not necessarily create inflation. We say that if Parliament wishes to change the way our banking system works, it is surely empowered to do so. Besides, did the speech from the throne not say the following, and I quote:

High rates of unemployment and inflation are clear signals of the inadequacy of economic strategies appropriate to simpler times.

Those are the very words found in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the session. While implying that problems cannot be solved by present procedures, the federal government seems to be delighted in staying on the beaten path. It is blind and deaf, I imagine, for it is indifferent to appeals from everywhere, for satisfying needs and desires of the Canadian people, in an enormously rich country. Nevertheless, the Canadian government runs into debt because of its weakness in the face of financial and economic dictatorship—it reminds me of a big hooked fish which cannot fight back, it is drowning, it will eventually be drowned—in using these same economic procedures, which of course have been obsolete for several years.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that the financial system is no longer adequate. It has to be changed, even though those who are opposed to any change in the present system call "inflation money" any new money issued by the Bank of Canada, which is a property of the state. As is undoubtedly known, the value of money is related to its quantity and its circulation velocity, compared to the needs felt by the population. During the war there was no problem in raising the financial resources to protect the integrity of the nation. I sincerely think that if the country is teeming with workers and well stocked in materials—and Canada is—we should not experience the current difficulties—workers and materials should be put to use.

For us Socreds, anything that is physically possible and desirable can be made available financially. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the motion we have brought forward is right on the dot, because apparently our governments are getting increasingly caught in the current economic quagmire and can find no way out. I would like to quote a few figures on the present unemployment situation. From 1953 to 1970, employment remained relatively stable except in the 1958-61 period, where unemployment soared. Since 1975 however, unemployment has been of astronomical proportions. From 8.4 per cent in 1975 it went up to a record 8.7 per cent. In August 1977, there were 838,000 people looking for work, and we have not yet gone through the worst months of the year.

Turning to inflation, we have recently seen unexplainable increases in food costs. Fortunately, price increases had levelled off during 1975 and 1976, so we were given some kind of a break, but they have been increasing again, sharply, since the beginning of 1977. To my knowledge, food accounts for the biggest price increase in 1977. As I said, this is partly due to higher costs of such items as vegetables, fresh fruit, coffee, some dairy products like milk and butter, pork and so on.

Mr. Speaker, although the rate of unemployment among workers below 25 decreased slightly from 14.8 per cent in August to 14.5 per cent in September, the proportion of employed in that age group—young people out from university and students aged 18 to 26—is really disappointing. As I said, the rate of unemployment is much higher this year than at any time since world war II. For workers over 25, there was a deseasonalized rate of 5 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful also to my hon. colleagues. I shall try to conclude as soon as possible so that other hon. members may also make a contribution.

As I was saying, unemployment is especially hard on our young people who are between 18 and 25 years of age. This is an unfortunate situation, for these young people are ready to contribute a lot of services to the public. They have the necessary training to do their part in developing our country, and they are those who in the future will look after the training of our young people. As for unemployed women in the labour force, the rate edged up from 7.3 per cent in August to 7.5 per cent in September.

Mr. Speaker, the statistics show this to be an all time high for September 1977. In fact, the rate for September of this year was 7.5 per cent compared with 6.5 per cent in September 1976.

● (1552)

Statistics Canada estimates for the week ending on October 15, 1977, indicate an unadjusted level of employment of 9,844,000, for an increase of 19,000 over September. The increase was 24,000 for men 25 years of age and over, but there was a 5,000 drop for those between fifteen and twenty-four. It remains practically unchanged for women in these two age groups.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you once more for your attention, and I hope that the representations that have been or will be made from this side of the House will be welcomed by members on the government side who have a majority, and that action will be taken.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to give an official answer to the opposition motion by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) who has delivered a long speech about the Canadian economic situation and the solutions that his party has been proposing for a long time to solve the economic problems that all modern economies are facing.

Obviously, it is very useful to have such debates. We had a very long one, which lasted eight consecutive days, in October when the House resumed its proceedings and, as we know, Mr. Chairman, all that debate turned around purely economic matters. I, as Minister of Finance, being the main spokesman for the Canadian government on economic matters, insisted on speaking early in the fall on the economic situation and giving my own assessment as new Minister of Finance of the state of the Canadian economy in my budget speech, with due consideration for the new circumstances now prevailing, as the economy was not performing according to the predictions of my predecessor, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). Obviously, we have problems of long standing and an unemployment rate which is unfortunately too high. We also have an inflation rate which is disappointingly high but can be accounted for. At the time when I spoke on the budget, on October 21st of this year, we were in a very difficult situation. The second quarter of the year, as far as economic growth is concerned, had been negative. And that is why at that time, Mr. Speaker, I presented that budget.

Economic problems are complex. When the hon. member for Rosedale presented his budget early this year, he predicted some decrease in the unemployment rate as, in his view, 250,000 new jobs should have put a curb on the unemployment rate. Now, looking over the present situation, we find that the Canadian economy for the year 1977, according to the latest figures, has generated not 250,000 new jobs, but 292,000 which is a tremendous performance, some 20 per cent over what the hon. member for Rosedale had predicted.

Although the Canadian economy has created more than 292,000 new jobs since the beginning of this year the unemployment rate is a little higher than we expected. This is due to a situation which is not within our control. In fact it is quite normal in a modern society, that the participation of Canadians in the labour force should increase at a much faster rate. Nowadays it is common occurrence in our Canadian economy that two or even three salaries accrue to the same family, while generally speaking women traditionally used to stay home. Now, as soon as the children go off to school, most of them try to join the labour force.

This is why we are finding ourselves in this situation of having created 292,000 new jobs since the beginning of the year, and still having a higher rate of unemployment.

What is interesting for example in the October statistics in comparison with those of September is the fact that although the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was 8.3 per cent, for the heads of family's category, that is the breadwinners, the unemployment rate went down from 5.1 to 4.8, a significant drop which changes the general notion we have about the unemployed being the man in the family. For this specifie category of unemployed there is a slight decrease. Of course 4.8 per cent is already too much, but this means that 4.8 per cent of heads of families are jobless. While the usual interpretation generally given to the unemployed refers to that section of the unemployed labour force, very often today the unemployed is the second or third person in a family to earn a salary. We must admit that, with the provisions which have been adopted in the last ten years, the economic impact of unemployment in Canadian families has been somewhat reduced by a raise in unemployment insurance benefits for example and other social benefits which have been sometimes highly criticized by certain sectors of the economy on the basis that it is too expensive for the country. But on the other hand this insures a certain level of income in families, even if one of its members has unemployment problems.

Obviously, in the province of Quebec, which is represented by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) and myself, the situation gives us serious concern. Last October there was a substantial drop in the unemployment level in Ontario and while traditionally the gap between the two provinces has always remained fairly stable, last October, it widened in an alarming way, a fact which is not altogether foreign to the unstable political situation which prevails in Quebec at this time. I would like to say again to the House that in such circumstances, we had better hold a referendum as early as possible in the province of Quebec so that in any case this matter is settled in the near future.

The thing which surprised me greatly and I would like to mention it, Mr. Speaker, is that when CBC reported on the first anniversary of the P.Q. election they produced all sorts of statistics. But in that same poll, the people of Quebec had the question put to them—unfortunately CBC did not see it fit to mention it in its broadcast. It seems that they have made that information public but not in that program. Quebecers were asked the following question: would you like the referendum to be held within six months, a year, two years or later? 67 per cent of respondents would rather have it within six months or before the end of this year. I think that survey was taken in October this year. This proves that if we really wanted to carry out the wishes of the Quebec people who were told during the election campaign a year ago that there would be a referendum within two years after the election of the Parti Québécois, we should hold the referendum as soon as possible in order to settle this matter.

● (1602)

Personally I have nothing against asking the question. I hope it will be put to the people as soon as possible. I am happy to see that when I mentioned the problem earlier Socred members supported me, and I see that the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has decided to help me make the French-speaking representation here unanimous in its desire to have a referendum held as early as possible in order to solve this problem. I thank the hon. members who supported me in this regard. Personally I think this would make quite a difference. Why? Because in such circumstances, it is quite difficult for the people who plan to invest to make a decision when they do not know exactly how big or small the market will be. I have said it over and over again, there is nothing more nervous than a million dollars. It has no colour and is speechless. Investors want to know where they can make profits, and should they fear a loss, they will go elsewhere where the prospects, in their opinion, are better. Now we would make great strides if we could solve that problem.

Very often a matter comes up—and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) will soon participate in this discussion and will probably raise it—the question of the federal contribution to the Quebec economy. I would therefore like to take this opportunity to refer to the response of the Canadian government during the last year. Faced with the election of a party devoted to the separation of Quebec, on November 15 of last year, we decided and we took the position that we would continue to operate as a Canadian government and do everything within our power to improve the economic situation in Quebec, notwithstanding this rather negative new factor.

In the last months, we have often heard of soft sectors in Quebec. I would like to take a few minutes of the time of the House to talk about it and deal first of all with the footwear industry. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), I see him now in the House, made representations to me a number of times in this respect. Other members from both sides of the House also made representations to me, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier), the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) and the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard). All these hon. members are concerned with those problems and I wish I had been in a position to make a statement on this matter this afternoon. However, since this is a very complicated problem which also involves communications with foreign governments whose exports enter Canada, I do not think I will be able to make that statement before Thursday. However, a decision has been made and the policy will be known no later than this coming Thursday.

By the way, I would like to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Loiselle) who has spent long hours working on this problem. As for the textile industry, much has been said about the situation in Quebec. Unfortunately, the Quebec government has consistently tried to give the impression that any development in that area resulted from their coming to power. I would like to keep the record straight. I was appointed Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in September of last year, and I announced a new textile policy around November 20, I think, which was two or three days after the Quebec election. Anybody who knows something about governmental administration is aware that this kind of decision cannot be taken within three days. I have worked a lot on that. I did it in a new way, following the creation of a committee with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce made up of members of labour unions, and industries and representatives of the three provinces involved; Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba. Last November we decided to restrict textile imports to their 1975 level.

I have been blamed on several occasions by members of the opposition in this House, because some importing firms were not happy, but we have done this in keeping with such measures we were allowed to take pursuant to international legislation and we have extended these quotas to the end of June 1978. Moreover, a few weeks ago, the new Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), and myself, made a joint announcement to the effect that we had taken the necessary steps to extend the protection given to the Quebec textile and clothing industry for a three-year period.

And all that in accordance with the international laws regulating international trade. We did it at the request of the industry, in co-operation with the labor unions and governments involved, and we had taken the initiative long before the Parti Québécois came to power. Indeed, in that respect may I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to mention the excellent work of several members who never stopped pressing me about that, particularly the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier), the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard), the hon. member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance), and many more, who constantly came back charging in defence of the textile industry. And now for the first time in the history of the textile and clothing industry in Canada their industry will benefit for a period of four and half years, from a policy of stabilisation.

Of course, those industries will have to modernize—they have already started to do so—to be able also to increase their competitiveness. But what really pleased me—I see the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Bussières) who also made many representations to me; I apologize for forgetting him—what pleased me is the fact that they told me every time that they were prepared to accept the competition from European countries and the United States but they were unable to compete with countries like Taiwan, Hong Hong, Singapore, the Philippines, where wage levels are absolutely non-competitive. I am not saying that we should not let in imports from those countries but what we have tried to do is to strike a balance between imports and exports because imports are necessary to maintain pressure on prices and keep inflation down, and imports are often a good discipline factor in that area.

On the other hand, if you destroy entirely the local industry one day you become entirely dependent on imports and then our efforts are hamstrung. We must maintain a balance between the two, and we hope to do pretty well the same thing for the shoe industry but in a different way because the problem is different.

And I would like to remind hon. members of other actions we took concerning the economy in the province of Quebec because in spite of the many efforts of the federal government there was a deterioration of the situation and the provincial government in Quebec is not generally well disposed towards the federal government these days.

Let us consider the shipyards: it is one of the most difficult industries to maintain in any modern economy nowadays. That is easy to understand. Since there has not been any significant growth in the international economy in the last four or five years, the need to build new ships is not so great, and the Japanese shipyards succeeded last year in capturing about 85 per cent of the market. I quote from memory and may be a little off, but not by much.

Faced with that situation and aware that shipyards were in trouble, we managed last spring to increase shipbuilding grants from 12 to 20 per cent, which made it possible to maintain a certain level of employment in shipyards across Canada and also in Quebec. Furthermore, there is in Sorel a provincially owned corporation. We were able to negotiate with the Polish government the building of several ships, which ensures employment for two years. Such construction is completely financed by the Canadian government. All that was done to maintain a provincial Crown corporation, and, Mr. Speaker, those are all the thanks we got for that. When the Canadian ambassador to Poland, who had negotiated the contract, accompanied the Polish Minister of External Trade and Navy to Quebec City, he was told that he was not welcome. This was a very nice way to thank a faithful servant of the state who had worked in the interest of Quebec workers. However, I was very happy, since the hon. member for Joliette and myself come from the same general area, that at least, in spite of the lack of courtesy of the provincial government, because of the circumstances, the union leader was kind enough to apologize to the Canadian ambassador to Poland.

I would also like to talk about Canadair, another activity of the Canadian government which is extremely profitable to Quebec, but we do not hear about it very often unfortunately. As soon as I was appointed to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I was given a file about which no decision had been made and which was on the whole rather ticklish and dangerous since it was designed to give Canadair a credit margin which would allow it to start building a plane called The Challenger, formerly known as the LearStar, which is a long distance executive jet. This was a dangerous proposal, and to make a decision, I admit in all humility that it took some daring, but we did make it. Because of that decision, Canadair has now increased its employment level from 1,600 to 3,200. These jobs are highly technological. Canadair got at least 125 orders, which guarantees an order book of $600 million.

In the world of aviation, this is considered an almost incredible success, since we have sold 125 units even before the prototype is completed, which proves that our decision concerning Canadair has greatly benefited the Montreal area and, most important, that with the help of the federal government, Canadians can show some initiative, and they are now in the forefront of a market which is becoming increasingly interesting. We have outdistanced all our competitors in this field. I was as at the Paris Air Show and I noted some bitterness among our competitors about our achievement. In fact, I believe that we sold 19 of those planes to one customer at the Air Show. This airplane costs about $5.5 million, which is a rather large amount.

Mr. Speaker, those were the points that I wanted to raise, but I would like to go on and deal with the general economic situation in Canada. Yesterday, Statistics Canada announced that in spite of a weak second quarter, a regression compared to the first quarter of the year, there was quite an interesting recovery during the third quarter, with a 1.3 per cent increase in the gross national product for that period, which represents a 5.3 percent increase in the gross national revenue at the same annual rate. This is encouraging. Our problems are not over but this is very encouraging at this time. While in my comments on the economic situation I expected a 2 per cent growth for the present year, with that unexpected recovery in the third quarter, Statistics Canada predicted a possible 3 per cent increase, which means that I had been somewhat conservative in my predictions last month.

Now I wish to refer to the measures we have taken to stimulate the economy. We now have before the House Bill C-11 providing investment incentives in the private sector that was introduced in the House early in January and has not yet been passed. I find it absolutely incredible, all the more as the opposition, especially the Progressive Conservative Party, has been extending the debate on that bill for the last four weeks and will vote for it, while hundreds of decisions by businessmen throughout the country are still pending because the opposition refuses to pass the bill.

● (1612)

[English]

I think it is unacceptable that hon. members opposite should vote for a measure at second reading and then drag their feet. I am told that this week my office has received at least 50 phone calls from businessmen inquiring about when Bill C-11 will be passed. I would like to tell them today that it has not passed because the official opposition has been dragging its feet. We have been debating this bill for four weeks and we have managed to pass only three clauses in a bill with a total of 116 clauses. Is that the way the people of Canada want the business of this nation to be transacted? Not at all. It is because of the opposition that we are not moving ahead.

In Bill C-11 we propose other exemptions. Yesterday, the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) was not completely satisfied because we are increasing the allowable expenses of employees from $150 to $250. However, that is another incentive for employees. We will be increasing exemptions for every taxpayer by 7.2 per cent on January 1. That is included in Bill C-11. In January and February, seven million taxpayers in this land will be allowed a tax cut of $100—and the opposition is dragging its feet.

Mr. Crosbie: You are giving Doyle $3.5 million.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is dragging in the old political problems he had in his province. He could not stand the heat of being minister of finance there, so he quit. I do not want to be distracted by the hon. member's nonsense, so I will carry on. I would like to speak about the performance of our economy. The post-controls period will be extremely difficult; the results of controls will not be perfect—but we can see that the Canadian position is improving substantially.

Mr. Crosbie: You double-crossed the Canadian public.

Mr. Chrétien: Two years ago our trade balance was nil. Last year we had a favourable trade balance of $1 billion. This year we have a favourable $2.4 billon trade balance.

Mr. Crosbie: We have no problems at all?

Mr. Chrétien: We have problems.

Mr. Crosbie: You are one of them.

Mr. Chrétien: There are some people like the hon. member for St. John's West who had to quit their jobs. The hon. member knew he could not stand the heat as minister of finance in his province. The hon. member tried to replace the leader of the Liberal party in Newfoundland. He could not do that, so he tried to replace the leader of the provincial Tory party. He could not do that either, so he gave up.

We have some problems, but I think it is important that we stop the "gloom and doom" mentality. I think we have to speak about the positive elements. I am not running away from our problems. I have said that there are too many unemployed in the land, and we are trying to do whatever we can. The hon. member from St. John's thinks he has all the solutions, but he had no solutions when he was minister of finance in his province.

I think we have to be realistic about the economic situation. There are some positive elements. The controls have reduced the pressure of the compensation factor. Canadian people now realize the folly of trying to take too much out of the economy. The result of taking too much is that price increases are too high. The present voluntary settlements are very much in line with settlements in the United States. That is extremely positive, because in 1974, 1975 and 1976 settlements were too high and we were losing our competitive position. The fact that the Canadian dollar is at a more realistic level at this time is another positive element.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue, however, with unanimous consent. Does the minister have unanimouss consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of agreeing to allow the hon. gentleman to carry on, because the last five times I have spoken in this House hon. gentlemen opposite have not done me that courtesy. I have no intention whatsoever of allowing the minister to carry on.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: You are not a gentleman.

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is leaving now. He does not want to hear the hard truth. When I watch the Minister of Finance, I ask myself how many ministers of finance can dance on the head of a pin. The present minister is the seventh minister of finance since 1963. We have averaged one every two years since 1963—and the seventh minister is a shambles, just as the other six were. The economy of Canada is in a shamble as a result of their policies. They are a group of shamblers. The best description for the Minister of Finance—who has come back into the chamber—is that he is the sanguine Minister of Finance: nothing bothers him. An 8.3 per cent rate of unemployment does not bother him. An unemployment rate in Newfoundland of over 17 per cent does not bother our friend from Shawinigan: he is sanguine. He is like the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau): he is unperturbed; he is positively not disturbed by the unemployment and economic conditions in Canada and the shambles his government has created. People in Shawiningan may be satisfied, but they are not satisfied anywhere else in Canada.

● (1622)

As we have learned from the remarks of the Minister of Finance, he is unaware and unworried about the country. He is positively uxorious with respect to members of the opposition and people in Canada who dare to be critical of his fumbling way with the economy and of where this government has led us. As an illustration of the government's policy, I should like to refer to a speech made by the Minister of Finance in Calgary on September 13, an excerpt from which was quoted by George Bain in Ottawa Today on October 20 as follows:

> They (foreigners) know that Canada is riding through the current world economic difficulties in comparatively high fashion.

The people of Canada will be glad to know we are riding along in high fashion. The 29,000 unemployed in Newfoundland, and the hundreds of thousands of other unemployed in Canada, will be glad to know they are going along in high style, according to the minister. The quote continues:

> But Canadians do not have the same buoyant feeling . . . Instead we bitch.

That is, any Canadian who dares to feel disgruntled about the state of the economy, about unemployment or rising prices and the state of our industries, is a bitcher. Anyone who dares to criticize this sacrosanct government, this sanguine and satisfied minister from Shawinigan, is a bitcher. There is a lot to bitch about, Mr. Speaker. The minister devoted 20 or 25 minutes of his 30-minute speech to Quebec. I thought this was a debate on our national economy, not just Quebec. It was a pump-priming speech, a backwoods speech that dealt with Quebec, for the most part, and not with the rest of the country. The minister is not concerned enough to answer this resolution which deals with Canada as a whole, not just the province of Quebec.

The minister said that when he succeeded the Secretary of State for External Affairs as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, he came across a file that had not been dealt with. I though it was going to be the Featherbed file, but it was the Canadair file. A decision had not been made, and the minister criticized his predecessor, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) for not making a decision on Canadair when they held that portfolio. They did not have the intelligence, the nerve, the guts nor the gumption of the minister, he implies. When he saw the file, he dealt with it. If he dealt with it then, his predecessors left him a shambles to deal with—but it is very unfair of him to criticize his colleagues in that manner.

Let me now deal with the income tax amendments which are before the House. A budget was brought down in March, but the government did not introduce income tax amendments until three or four weeks ago. The House has not spent three or four weeks debating those income tax amendments. They do not relate only to the budget of March, 1977, but also to the mini-budget that the minister was afraid to bring in properly. Instead, he introduced it in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne in the middle of October. The minister is stretching the truth. He is a flexible Minister of Finance—flexible with the truth. There have not been four weeks of discussion on the income tax measures, but they will get a lot of discussion. In any event the income tax legislation is not the solution to the problems of Canada. That is recognized by the Canadian people.

In concluding his speech, the minister made a final, telling comment. He said he was delighted, positively overjoyed, frantic in his feverish delight because the Candian people are now recognizing the folly of getting too much out of the economy. Again it is the fault of the Canadian people, not the fault of the federal government. He did not say that the government has now recognized the folly of trying to get too much out of the economy. Apparently it is not the government with its huge, swollen deficits—not the government that is asking us to approve their borrowing of $9 billion; rather, it is the poor Canadian people who are trying to get too much out of the economy. That epitomizes the policy of this government. We are in this trouble because the government has attempted to get too much out of the economy and has not left enough for the private sector to give it some incentive. I can leave the remnants of the minister's speech, Mr. Speaker, and pass to a few remarks of my own dealing with the resolution before the House.

Before getting into more general matters, I should like to deal with the question of imports. I discussed this last night with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). The government of France has passed a law or regulation to prevent the importation of seal pelts into France. Apparently, Brigitte Bardot is such a powerful figure in France that in the twinkling of an eye—and I will not say what else she might have twinkled—they are going to bar seal pelts from France. If this government has any guts or gumption, Mr. Speaker, they will bar the importation of French champagne, because they brutalize the grapes by pounding them with their feet when they make it. It does not matter what the reason is, we should not allow the French to stop the importation of our seal pelts without taking action. I am referring to the French in France. I do not want anyone to think I am referring to the French Canadians of Quebec. If the French in France stop the importation of our seal pelts, let us stop importing their champagne. I am sure we can make our own in the Niagara peninsula that is just as good. In any event, I never liked that bubbly stuff.

We know that Canadian industry is entering an extremely difficult period. Canadian manufacturers and Canadian industry are nervous about what is going to happen in Geneva because they have no confidence in this government. I do not know if they will maintain this opinion through 1978 because the Prime Minister and his ministers will be chucking them under the chin, giving them a pat on the back and rubbing them behind the ears for the next few months to get them past the election, hoping they will forget how they were treated in the last few years. Canadian industry is worried about what is happening at Geneva because they know the negotiations are in the hands of professional free traders. Although they have put in briefs to the Canadian Trade and Tariffs Committee, they know they have been treated casually. The people doing the negotiations believe in free trade and are not worried about what will happen to the Canadian manufacturing sector. They know the negotiators are civil servants who say that we must have adjustments and must rationalize.

I laughed when I saw hon. members opposite pound the tables when they heard of the announcement on footwear and leatherwear that is to be made on Thursday. They had better be vigilant, because the people representing us at Geneva are free traders. The manufacturing sector in this country is not getting any feedback from the government. We have a nervous Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) at Geneva. This is no time to have a nervous minister. A report in the Globe and Mail of November 25 begins as follows:

> It was a nervous Jack Horner who opened a two-day seminar—

We do not want a "nervous Nellie" riding up to the EEC with a lot of apologies. Further on, the article reports:

> On footwear, Mr. Davignon volunteered to try to think of ways in which Canada could attack excessive imports from the Far East without attacking traditional European imports—

Do we need someone from the EEC to tell us how to protect our imports? The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was delighted that a member of the EEC volunteered information on how to do it. Then he made two invidious comments which show how much he thinks of the manufacturing sector of this country. The article reports him as follows:

I think if Canadians could get over the market distribution systems, they would find themselves competitive and able to do business in this market.

That is a piece of wampum, Mr. Speaker; it means nothing. To say, "If Canadians could get over the market distribution system" is just as portentous as some of the statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has just as much meaning. Later in the article, he is quoted as saying:

The Canadian businessman perhaps isn't as aware of the changing world market patterns as, say, the Europeans.

He patronizes our industry. Even with the pitiful record of his ministry in regard to doing anything to develop the industrial sector or an industrial strategy for Canada, he patronizes our businessmen. The article goes on to say:

Nor is he much worried about dislocations in Canadian industry that might be caused by freer trade.

Hon. members opposite who were pounding the tables today had better keep their eyes on the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He is not worried about dislocation in Canadian industry that "might be caused by freer trade." If the minister is not worried, a lot of people in Canada are. One of the people now getting worried is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He said in Charlottetown that he was going to call a federal-provincial conference on the economy. Well, he has to call something. He realizes that it is not just the national unity issue; the economic crisis is now the major issue. For the next couple of months we can all talk about the fact that there will be a conference on the economy. For the next couple of months after that we can talk about the fact that there was a conference. By that time he hopes we will have forgotten the problem and we will be in the middle of an election.

● (1632)

What is the conference going to discuss? The Prime Minister said:

—not one industrial strategy for all of Canada, but a series of strategies.

This government has laboured for ten years to come forward with an industrial strategy for Canada. It has not done so yet. Now the Prime Minister is going to pluck a series of strategies out of his head. How pitiful! Who is going to swallow that bunkum? I again quote:

He said structural changes in the economy will be needed because "there can be no immediate turnaround of our fortunes." . . . In the maritimes for example, fundamental changes are needed in fisheries administration.

He is an instant expert on that because of his infrequent visits to the maritimes.

Campbell said in an interview later that the top priority at the conference should be an attempt to get a consensus on whether Canada should be a free trader or a protectionist instead of having the current "hodgepodge."

If this conference is going to decide whether Canada should be free trade or protectionist, my God, it should have been held months ago. The negotiations are under way now at Geneva, and 1978 is the year of decision. The Prime Minister patted Premier Campbell on the back and said what a fine fellow he was and what fine suggestions he had made. Now Premier Campbell says that the conference is going to get a consensus. Are we free trade, or are we protectionist, rather than the current hodgepodge? That means this conference is going to be useless. If that is what it decides, it will be too late. Our free traders and our academics are going to be in Geneva and reporting back to this free trade of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. They will be making decisions about which Canadian industry will not be advised. That is one of the main problems our industry is complaining about.

The Prime Minister is a year or two late with his conference. He is going to change the structure, now, of the Canadian economy. Why did he not do it when he had the wage and price controls? He did not do it during the last two years. However, with an election coming he wants us to believe he is going to cure it all and change the structural efficiencies he has done nothing to change over the last nine years. The Prime Minister made a statement over television at the beginning of 1976. He mused about whether Canada was going to have a state society and state socialism. He was critical of the business community. That fanciful musing of his cost Canada at least 1 per cent of our gross national product. By indicating what he believed, he scared off business investment in Canada. Economists estimate this cost a $4 billion increase in the gross national product in Canada in that year alone.

This is the gentleman who is going to be so friendly and so nice to business in the next few months. He is going to put the bureaucrats down while he tries to lull them, getting ready for the next election. There is no industrial strategy, and none is being developed. There are no plans. There is no mechanism for consultation with industry while these negotiations go on in 1978. They have been given a chance to put in their brief to the Canadian Trade and Tariffs Committee. They have been patted on the head and told not to worry that they are too protectionist, that there has to be some rationalization and there has to be this and there has to be that. It means a loss of industry and a loss of jobs, but they are told not to worry. There is nothing set up now to keep them in tune as 1978 proceeds. No wonder they are worried!

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is chairman of a cabinet committee to deal with these negotiations. Mr. Jake Warren reports to him. God help Canada if he does the kind of job on these trade negotiations that he did on the pipeline. He left Canada naked and defenceless in the pipeline negotiations. There is nothing in that agreement which states that Canadian materials and Canadian pipe are to have the advantage. There is nothing like that. In fact, the exact opposite is true. Therefore, the President of the Privy Council will have to pull up his socks and do a lot better job or we will be left naked in the GATT negotiations at Geneva. Today he did promise that he is going to arrange for some briefings for the opposition.

A month ago I wrote to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce asking him a simple question. He is just as slothful as someone who has been a minister for 20 years, yet he has been a minister for just six months. He is as worn out and vacuous as if he had been there since 1963. He cannot even answer a letter from the official opposition critic of industry, trade and commerce saying whether briefings will be arranged or not. He cannot even reply and say I can have permission to see a brief which the Newfoundland government submitted. The hon. minister is too busy travelling. His boots were made for walking. Maybe his boots were made for crossing; I do not know what it was. He is not around enough to even do me the courtesy of answering a letter that was sent to him on October 25.

Mr. Pelletier: You get exactly what you deserve.

Mr. Crosbie: Go ahead and caterwaul.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Tell us about the crossing he has done.

Mr. Crosbie: I have not the time to tell this group what I would like to tell them. There is another problem which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce should look at. I have here a letter from R. A. Beamish Stores, of Ottawa, dated November 21, and another letter dated November 3 from Woolworth's and the Retail Council. They ask the minister to make a decision on what the import situation is going to be in 1978 and the last half of 1978 with regard to textiles and clothing. The letter of November 3 points out that their buyers are already completing their buying for the fall of 1978 in textiles, hosiery and shirts. They are awaiting a decision by the minister's department that was promised them for the end of August. They are now told that the decision on these import quotas for next year will not be made at the end of 1977. The letter explains the problems it puts the whole retail clothing industry in because they do their buying nine months or a year ahead. Instead of giving them a decision on that, the minister is cavorting around Brussels, Geneva, or the fleshpots of Europe, wherever they might be.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Fleshpots?

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know if Geneva and Brussels are the fleshpots, but they are pots, anyway, in Europe. The November 21 letter from R. A. Beamish Stores states that commitments by retailers are made on many classifications of merchandises 9 to 12 months ahead of the required delivery, particularly with regard to offshore resources. They need to know what the rules are that are going to govern 1978.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Crosbie: Is there unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: Are you sure?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: Are you positive?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you get up on your feet and talk yourself?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't you like a good show?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I hate to interrupt the citizen participation group. However, I am very pleased to get the floor and to say a few words about the motion before us. It is very easy for members on this side, certainly those in my party, to support the opening paragraphs of this Creditiste motion, although the last paragraphs pose some difficulty. On the whole, it is an important motion for our consideration. One thing that strikes me about this particular motion is the extent to which it reflects a problem in Canada generally and in Quebec in particular. Over the years I have been impressed by hon. friends to my left. In many ways, they reflect a grassroots sentiment in the province of Quebec. I tend to listen very carefully to the kinds of grievances they raise in this House, for that reason.

It is an indication of how serious the situation is in Quebec, in terms of employment, and how important it is for us to deal with it within a national context. If we do not find some way of creating jobs in Quebec and dealing with this question of the labour-intensive industries, the clothing industry, the shoe industry, the furniture industry, then Quebec itself will find a way. It may not be language which is the chief grievance of the point on which confederation hinges. Rather, it may be the extent to which those who guide the national economy are able to create jobs, not only in the rest of Canada but in the province of Quebec, particularly at this time. If we fail to do that in this assembly, the Parti Québécois will promise it in Quebec.

What the Parti Québécois has to do is to make the case that unemployment in the province of Quebec arises because of the failure of the federal government. It may be noticed, that I am not as partisan as I usually try to be in terms of condemning the government for its failures, because the issue is more important than that. It is not the government which will be held responsible; it is the Parliament of Canada which will be blamed for failing to find ways of alleviating the unemployment being experienced in the province of Quebec.

A lot of that unemployment arises from the competition of imports. If we do not find some way of dealing with this matter here, we are, in effect, handing the Péquistes the kind of instrument they need when they go to the people of Quebec with their referendum. What they will say is, "The federal government cannot help you. You have nothing to lose, so you might as well vote for us. If we had the powers the federal government possesses, we would solve your problems for you." The powers I am referring to are the powers to regulate the economy and decide on the level of imports, tariff protection and many other things such as money supply. That is what they want out of sovereignty, and that is the kind of case which will be made in favour of separation.

What this all means, then, is that to a very large extent our country will have to become more protectionist than it has been in the past, at least until we solve our unemployment problem. Most people do not care for the word "protectionist". When I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) during a committee meeting recently to give the committe an indication of the direction in which our negotiators in Geneva were going, whether toward freer trade or more protectionism, he replied that they were "going for fair trade"—whatever "fair trade" means.

In the party to which I belong, which I think has favoured free trade rather than protectionism, we have come to the conclusion that given the present unacceptable levels of unemployment in this country, our society must take a more protectionist stance. In fact, we must protect our industries. Some members to my right have talked about Canadians being hewers of wood and drawers of water, but even that option is not open to us. We have traditionally sold off our raw materials to the disadvantage of our manufacturing industry. But our raw materials are no longer finding ready sales on world markets.

At one time we used to pride ourselves that when nickel was required, buyers would have to come to Canada—there would always be a demand for nickel. But today people do not need as much nickel, and when they do need it, they are not obliged to come to Canada for it. At one time we could pride ourselves on unlimited oil supplies and gas supplies. That is no longer the case; we import more than we export. One could go through a whole range of materials which encouraged us to say: We have all these natural resources, and since that is the case we need not worry about creating jobs in the manufacturing industry. We can sell them off. There is an unlimited demand.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no longer an unlimited world demand for these resources, and the consequence of our policies in the past involving the export of our natural resources has been to deplete a great many of those resources. More over, the depletion of such resources has forced us to locate them in places which involve greater cost, making them less competitive with other areas of the world. Even that option, then, of being hewers of wood and drawers of water is not open to us.

It is fine to talk about free trade, and if there was genuine free trade in the world perhaps it would be an option. The problem is that in many ways we have been the most open society of all. I do not wish to say we have been the most foolish society, but in some ways we have been foolish. We have entered into trade agreements and to a large extent have honoured our commitment to free trade only to find that other countries have hidden behind what they have called non-tariff barriers. There are all kinds of institutional structures in virtually every country of the world which inhibit free trade. Yet many of these countries pretend that they favour free trade.

I listened with great interest to a presentation by the Electrical and Electronics Manufacturers Association. It was pointed out that virtually every country in the world protects its electrical manufacturers. The industry is seen as an instrument of national development and protection is accorded in many ways. Contracts or specifications are written in such a way that no offshore bidder can succeed. Often it is the government which is the buyer. Delays take place. Experience has shown that even when Canadian bids are competitive in quality and price, foreign markets are not open to them, while we, on the other hand, are not opening our market to them domestically. So we are playing the game by saying that everybody can bid, but other countries are not playing that game; they are saying that everybody can bid, but their own industry gets the contracts. Many countries protect their basic industries, and there is no free trade in those particular industries. There are still countries which say: We let your raw materials in. We do not put any tariff on them. That is because they need those raw materials. But when it comes to manufactured goods, they are not letting them in.

However, that is not the only problem facing our manufacturing industry. I am simply saying that we are living in some kind of fools' paradise if we think we can go to these conferences and negotiate areas of free trade, making concession in the belief we will get free trade. The history of our experiments in free trade in this country does not lead one to be very hopeful about the prospects. Let us consider a number of things which have happened. Years ago—I am sorry I do not have the exact date, but it was some 30 or 40 years ago now—under pressure from the agricultural community in Canada we went to free trade in agricultural implements. That was the pressure governments were under in those days. The idea was that, as Canada had a very efficient agricultural implement capacity, we would get a share of the North American market and there would be enormous benefits not only for the farmers but for the manufacturers.

If one considers a company like Massey-Ferguson, probably one of the largest in its field, we see there is a pattern under free trade. What they did was to leave their labour-intensive, non-technological production here in Canada. As new ideas were developed and greater sophistication was involved in the production of farm machinery, the necessary development took place in the United States. The argument was that production centres should be located closer to the agricultural market in the American mid-west. Why could it not have been one of our western cities if southern Ontario was not a good location from the viewpoint of transportation.

Surely, if there had been any kind of national planning at all or any idea how industry should be developed in this country, we could have established that machinery industry in the west.

The west was perfectly capable of undertaking that kind of work. In fact, it is doing some of that work at the present time. We would have had substantial manufacturing facilities in the west and it would have made sense in terms of the product and its ultimate use. We failed to do that. The consequence is that we are importing far more machinery than we export. To my knowledge, there is not a large tractor manufactured in Canada any longer, though at one time there used to be.

Consider the auto agreement, another agreement we made with the United States involving limited free trade. The point of this agreement was that we were to get our share of the North American market to the extent we purchase automobiles in Canada. That would roughly be the measure of our share. When I raised questions about this, as did others, in the early days of the agreement, successive ministers of industry, trade and commerce would pooh-pooh us. As a matter of fact, the very man who wrote the report outlining how serious our deficit has become was one of those who supported the minister, though I guess that is his job. It was pointed out at the time that the Canada-U.S. auto agreement was benefiting Canada; that in fact we were getting more than our share of new investment and production. As they said at the time, the facts were there to demonstrate that that was so.

I went on to argue that it was inevitable in the initial stages of an agreement that investment would be lumpy. In other words, you cannot erect half a factory, or half a rolling mill, or half an assembly line; there would be a big spurt in investment which would make it look as though we were getting more than our share. The real question to be asked was: What happens on the second round of investment when the market grows and expansion is required? Where will that expansion take place? Will it take place in Canada, or will it take place in the United States? In those days, the unemployment rate was pretty low, so another question which I raised was this: If both countries were to get into difficulty economically and had high unemployment, since the automotive corporations were almost entirely foreign-owned—essentially American-owned—where would they invest? Would they create employment in Canada, or would it be in the United States? Would the United States government sit by—though, why should they?—and allow their corporations to create employment opportunities outside of the United States rather than inside? Obviously, the American government could not do that; no popular, responsible government could.

That is exactly what has happened, Mr. Speaker. Over-all, our deficit has increased and the situation does not look as though it will get much better. It may have to be sweetened a little because the deficit is too much now, but in the long run we are not going to benefit. We had an alternative in those days, as we did for all these industries. The alternative was to create a Canadian automobile industry. This was one of the threats which we used to negotiate a Canada-U.S. auto agreement, that we might go it alone. But we decided to take the other option, and now we are paying the cost. We still have to create a Canadian automobile industry if we want to be sure that we will get our fair share of automobile production in North America. There are problems within this. For example, we may not have the variety of choice which we have now. But do we really need a variety of choice? After all, how many models of a car must we choose from in order to satisfy the consumer?

The Canadian economy has had very little attention paid to it by government. I think no other government in the world has abdicated its responsibility to manage the economy and to plan for the future as much as the governments of this country. They simply said that the private Canadian owner should do this job. Or, as more often has been the case, that the foreign owner should do it. We have no complaints to make—at least, we should not have—about the Americans. They did not come rushing in here and force us to do things. It was the policy of the Canadian government to invite them in and to pin our hopes on foreign ownership doing something for our economy.

As a consequence of this, we have an industrial structure which is one of the most unproductive in the world. But it is not the output of people working in our plants which is down; it is the way our industry is structured that makes it so unproductive. This is the problem with which we must deal, and is why we need to go through a period of protection.

I hope that any period of protection will not become permanent, something we will have forever. Rather, we should use this period to restructure our industry, make it stronger and then discontinue protection. The unfortunate case of Canada has been that although protective measures have been brought in in the past from time to time, no one really worried about using that period of grace to restructure Canadian industry. Instead, everyone got nice and fat, lazy and complacent, and then we had to face another crisis. Therefore, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that those who have some responsibility to work out a national economic policy have very difficult choices to face. As the minister said to me in committee, we should not talk here about being fair. "Fair" is a very nice word and I like it as much as anybody else, but what does it mean? I think we must face the harsh reality that, as a result of the mismanagement of the past, Canadian industries which provide many of our jobs will have to be protected for some time to come.

In a speech the other day, my leader said that when we go into the next election the main plank of this party will be to create one million jobs in the immediate future. I know it is very easy to say that, but it is not an easy thing to do. How do you create one million jobs? Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things you can do. You can encourage industry in certain ways. You will not create jobs in the mining industry. Neither will you create many jobs in the resource industries. You must create the bulk of these jobs in the labour-intensive industries. Or if you do not create jobs, Mr. Speaker, you will have to save jobs. If we had saved some of these jobs, we would not be in our present troubles. We must create jobs in industries like textiles, shoes, furniture manufacture and electronics. Trying to go through the drill of saying that our negotiators in Geneva will attempt to work out a package it seems to me is unrealistic.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is obviously some element of truth in the motion put forward by hon. members from the Social Credit Party of Canada. However, recognizing the situation is not in itself a proposal for economic recovery, let alone bringing it about. As could be expected, we heard hon. members opposite indicate they had doubts as to the results our negotiators in Geneva could obtain in terms of economic recovery or the industrial restructuring in Canada. We heard members opposite complaining or wondering whether we should be free traders or protectionists. We heard the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) use harsh words, but he gave no worth-while data to support his suggestions. He criticized the Prime Minister for stating last week in Nova Scotia he intended to propose a series of industrial strategies rather than a single strategy for industrial development in Canada. That in my view is the only avenue open to us, because at a time when it is increasingly clear that no industrialized country will make an unqualified commitment to free trade, each nation should favour a sectorial approach.

When the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) speaks of fair trade, I do not believe this is a meek, senseless phrase, quite the opposite. I believe we must first make an assessment of our individual industries, to identify the areas where our manpower is centered. And after an in-depth study in co-operation with labour and management, the government should decide whether there is a future for such or such an industry.

As I stated recently, to the amazement of some businessmen in Sherbrooke, we must ask ourselves such questions as whether in 1990 we should have 250,000 or 150,000 jobs in the Canadian textile industry. And if the conclusion was the textile industry could not be expanded in terms of manpower, we should honestly face the situation and tell ourselves: Well, what do we do now with the workers who would normally be directed toward this industry, and in the event where it would become necessary to reduce the number of employees already engaged in the industrial sector, what will we do with those who will be forced out of this sector? But, I was not saying that the textile industry must be done away with, on the contrary, and the government committed itself through measures announced more than a year ago to support this industry so that being protected by tariff measures, it will be able in three or four years to restructure itself in such a way as to become efficient, competitive and productive. We will announce on Thursday a policy concerning the footwear industry involving new tariff barriers and new protection for our local industry. However, both industry and unions must not conclude that they will be protected indefinitely and need not concern themselves about productivity within their own industrial sector.

In my view, the three parties, government, industry and labour will have to agree on the best way to make that industry more efficient. Now, I have mentioned two industrial sectors, Mr. Speaker, as we must realize in putting those basic questions, we, as a responsible government, have adopted a sectorial approach. My minister talks about "fair trade", because later it will be possible for us to appoint and set the terms of reference of our negotiators in Geneva in keeping with that sectorial evaluation we are now dealing with.

In spite of that, we must not overlook the fact that there are shortcomings. We have talked about the textile and shoe industries, but I think we should also determine to what extent it is possible in Canada to further process our raw materials, as in the case of the autopact which the hon. member on the other side mentioned before, and I think that our only differences lie in the data on which his assertions are based. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) recently commented on Broadbent-type figures and I think that he was rather right, because I have been wondering myself about those figures and data put forward by the leader of the New Democratic Party, and nowhere, even not among people in the business, were his assertions confirmed. People will rather rely on figures used by the government. So I think we should at least start from the same data if we are to seek an appropriate solution.

Mr. Speaker, there is another industry which is now declining in Canada. I refer to tourism. At least we have good news, following negotiation and interventions of various ministers of our federal government. We are allowed to believe that the American government will amend their law which deters Americans from holding conventions in Canada. The tax exemption will apply throughout the whole North American continent, and there will be no more restrictions for us, in the sense that Americans will be allowed, like before, to hold conventions in our country, which will contribute to job creation in Canada.

In spite of that good news, we also have to wonder how we should assist our tourist industry. Some statistics show that in areas where "inputs" in the industrial sector are the least expensive, Canadian hourly salary is still 70 cents higher; and in the tourism industry the work "input", in areas of Canada where the "input" is the least costly, is still 70 cents an hour higher than in the cheapest areas of the United States. How could we be competitive? We have this question of minimum wages. I am the first to want and to wish that Canadian workers could get higher salaries but we have to accept the rules of the game. If our tourist industry is to follow the minimum wage rules, how can we justify the tips and money made on the side by the people involved in this very sector, which they do not declare although it is for them a source of income. I believe that in this area, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which has jurisdiction over tourism announced the appointment of an advisory committee made up of representatives from various groups, of people involved in the tourist industry, and of people from all across Canada, which will be responsible for making an in-depth study aimed at strengthening this industry. Besides, we believe that transportation costs in Canada have had a negative effect on the development of tourism in our country. This is why our department has recently made representations to the Canadian Transport Commission asking them to accept charters in Canada in order to open up all of our regions to Canadian tourists. It is unbelievable and unacceptable that it should be less expensive now to go to Europe, either London or Paris, than to go from Montreal to Vancouver. Now I feel it is absolutely necessary that we act in this direction and some measures have already been taken.

As concerns tourism infrastructure, it comes under provincial jurisdiction. But already, through our department and that of Regional Economic Expansion, the federal government, through special agreements, has made large sums of money available to the provinces for tourism development. I hope that the Quebec government will soon be able to sign such an agreement with the federal government so that the province will benefit from the moneys available.

This is very important because when we speak about tourism, we must keep in mind the sophistication of that industry. In Europe or in some areas of the United States, there are well organized routes. Unfortunately, here in Canada, because of the enormous distances, there are no such routes where a tourist can spend perhaps two or at least one week, while seeing attractions and enjoying various activities.

Mr. Speaker, if you consider the situation in the province of Quebec, I think that most criticism about the inaction of the federal government comes from the provincial government. I think this is quite untrue. I shall prove it by giving another example of federal intervention through its policy in the petrochemical field. This industry is highly concentrated in my area and were it not for the one-price policy in Canada, the petrochemical industry in Quebec would not only be in the doldrums but on the way out. Thanks to the one-price policy that enables us to benefit from the natural resources of Alberta, of the Northwest Territories and Saskatchewan, we can not only hope to maintain that industry but also to see it prosper. This is a good example.

Now let us consider our shipbuilding policies. Recently, the government stated in that respect that it would soon announce a series of measures in favour of our shipyards. This is again a labour intensive industry. I think that this is another example, where we have decided to consider a particular area and tried to put forth a series of measures which will be announced later in order to help already existing industries and perhaps also promote the creation of subsectors in this industry.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it may be all to easy to say that everything is going badly, but you only need to compare our unemployment figures with those of other countries to see that things may not be any brighter elsewhere and that in Canada we might after all have suffered less from what may be called the economic recession of the years 1973, 1974, 1975 and 1976. We still hope that there will be a recovery starting this year and that it will go on into 1979.

What I am asking the hon. members of this House is precisely to support the government in its efforts. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) mentioned earlier that we are still debating Bill C-11 relating to income tax in Canada which contains a series of measures to give Canadian consumers a higher purchasing power and our industries an incentive to reinvest at home. Finally, as I think it must be said, if we want a real economic recovery to take place, when dealing with industrial structures, Mr. Speaker, I think all this can be achieved only in a good climate which we must entirely create ourselves. The first people who should have the responsibility to create this climate of trust are members of this House. When there are worthwhile proposals in bills presented by the government, and the proof of it is that this government has been in power for a long time, members of the opposition should consider it as their duty to support them and not let the debate drag on as they have done for several weeks in the case of Bill C-11.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the notorious issue of interest rates which is often used as the bone of contention by our Socreds colleagues. I will not elaborate on this subject but I should like to say that it sounds a little oversimplified. I will just remind you of our right hon. Prime Minister's remarks that when the government lends money, it has to do just like everybody else, just as any Socred member who borrows from a bank: namely to pay an interest rate to the institution from which it borrows.

Whether under a Liberal, Conservative or Social Credit administration, I do not believe that donations will appear in Canada or that people will agree to grant free loans to governments either federal or provincial and I suggest that paragraph (c) of the motion put forward by the Social Credit party is not specific enough at least from an economic point of view.

After dealing with negative points, let us come now to the good ones. I share a bit more the views of Social Credit party members when they speak of the Canada Works programs. Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should reconsider them. It is true we spend a lot of money and we approve a great number of good projects and I wonder whether we could not obtain even more lasting results through these programs and in turn, give more support to municipalities even though these programs come under the provincial jurisdiction. Perhaps with the consent of the provinces we could help municipalities ease the tax burden on taxpayers, thus giving them a better purchasing power.

Having said that, I urge Social Crediters to carry on and it must be remembered that in my caucus I am among those who are working to that end. In conclusion Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government to which I belong has certainly done many other things to help most disadvantaged areas through the Regional Economic Expansion program. Under this program which has been implemented a few years ago and amended in order to better meet the sectorial approach we wish to take, recently the Montreal region has become a designated area in some specific areas in labour intensive sectors, which will ensure in the long run a strong and basic structure to the Montreal region and to my own region, of course. I do not think one can discuss at length the work of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion but I believe it is always to our credit as a government to point out the very positive action this Department has taken.

Finally, if we are to help regions and create employment in industrially weak sectors, we should consider the ongoing decentralization program of the provincial government. The federal government will decentralize many jobs which we will move from Ottawa to areas such as Sherbrooke, Shawinigan, or Quebec City. I think that shows the federal government has a clear intention which means: Look, we are participating where there are needs, where there is a lack of jobs and steady jobs.

Of course, if jobs are created through sending civil servants to such areas, there is a multiplicating effect. If 150 jobs are moved to the Sherbrooke area, this number can easily be multiplied by four, because of the services created by these jobs. I think today's Social Credit motion related to important points. This motion illustrates, of course, that they are willing to participate and I encourage them in making efforts to make propositions, as they certainly have this capacity, and if they meet difficulties in doing it all by themselves, I invite them to consult us and we shall encourage them.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, as the other speakers who preceded me, I would also like to make some remarks on this motion which certainly lends itself to many observations. When we read at the very beginning of this motion, and I quote:

> That this House deplores (a) that the government has shown a lack of foresight and leadership in respect of the flooding of the Canadian market with foreign goods, particularly in the areas of footwear, textiles, clothing and furniture, which has contributed a great deal in weakening Canadian industries and resulted in a number of layoffs;

I think, Mr. Speaker, that comments made by other members of this House all have some value.

● (1722)

I noticed also that the Minister of Finance, who was speaking on behalf of the federal government, attempted by a series of statistics to justify the present situation and, of course, he had to admit that there were still unsolved problems. Yet, he tried to tell the House that considering the rate of unemployment, the percentage in relation to heads of families was not all that bad after all.

I would have hoped, for example, that the Minister of Finance had talked about that rather impressive percentage of young people among the one million unemployed in this country, and I would have liked him to echo the same concerns that we and others express, that is the concern of the young people who get discouraged, the discouragement of that youth just out of university or school and still waiting for a Canada Works project. Indeed, the motion calls for increased votes. I deeply appreciate in the present context the moneys approved for those projects under which young and not so young people are hired for a given period. But we are not going to build the future of this country with such projects.

The government has no industrial strategy after being in power for 13 years. They talk of implementing a series of industrial strategy measures area by area or province by province. But why did the government wait until it had been in power for 13 years before talking about this today? I read in the papers that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) might call an economic summit or conference next February. The Premier of Ontario pointed out that he has been calling for such a conference since last October, but it does seem that after the meetings with the provincial premiers, an economic summit will probably take place. But they had to wait until the difficulties facing the Canadian people day after day were such that they had to come up with new measures, and they tell us that we are not going to solve the problem by criticizing the federal government, but there is always a minimum of decency. I believe that we, in the opposition, must prove that this government has failed in many areas, and I think it is our duty to prove it with all the comments we can make and we will certainly not have a hard time proving such a fantastic failure.

The Minister of Finance also spoke rapidly about the prices and wages commission, or rather about anti-inflation measures. I would like to recall for a few minutes that anti-inflation measures certainly did not bring about the anticipated success. I would like to demonstrate how these measures upset many people because of the lack of good preparation right from the start. We remember very well how far the federal government deliberately misled the provinces, the unions, the employers and the Canadian people as a whole; we remember that the government—

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): This is not true!

Mr. La Salle: I am told that this is not true. I think we were promised that no such measures would be implemented. The government was elected on a false representation in 1974. The measures were implemented a few months after the federal election but the 90-day preparatory freeze had been skipped. Such a proposal which was in our program was offhandedly rejected. With this the government would have obtained the cooperation of the unions, the provinces, the businessmen, the business world and of all the important sectors in our economy to establish together some criteria and consequently to apply restrictions which would have enabled the government, with the cooperation of these essential sectors, to meet its objective, namely to slow down inflation.

As a result of that failure, the board had to make discretionary decisions, and operate on a day by day basis. Mr. Speaker, the best way to demonstrate the ineffectiveness of those measures and the serious problems they caused to many workers is to mention Abex Industries Ltd. in my own riding's main urban centre, Joliette. In July 1976, the union had signed an agreement with the employer providing increases of 17 per cent for the first year and 11 per cent for the second year, and the company was ready to take into account some adjustments in various departments of that industry.

In July 1977, the board made known its decision and reduced from 17 to 15 per cent and from 11 to 6 per cent the increments agreed to between the union and the company. As a result, with Christmas fast approaching, those workers have to pay back to the company about $800 on average, that is a 42 cents an hour reduction. I realize the board has many cases to review but in this one the decision comes a year later. Mr. Speaker, here we have workers who certainly need their money as much as everybody else on the eve of the holiday season, yet they are forced to repay anywhere between $600 and $1,000—an average of about $800. What will happen there?

Certainly the union is not ready to accept the board's ruling lying down and it is even considering work stoppage in that industry, in my own riding, and God knows we cannot afford to lose working hours in that area. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the board has failed to pave the way by seeking the acceptance and cooperation of various departments and only succeeded in upsetting everybody and falling far short of its objective which is to alleviate inflation.

And on top of that, we have such problems. This is only one example out of hundreds and maybe thousands across the country where the workers are not satisfied and where the company has a definite edge. It can say: We are not refusing the salary increase you asked for. The company agrees and the board must bear the odium of the refusal. Now I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the lack of preparation, of planning and of essential co-operation, where the government could not possibly have cared less about getting that essential cooperation, has created a problem—among thousands—that I single out today because it concerns people who came to see me to tell me their troubles. In that case, how can we, Mr. Speaker, accept that invitation to support the government's efforts that was again extended to us a moment ago. Of course, the government has made some efforts, but because of this lack of badly needed planning and those proposals or projections which proved utterly wrong, do not ask us to extend our support of this government or ask the people to trust it. In the present circumstances, we would not think of accepting this invitation.

This motion also deals with the government's lack of foresight and leadership. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it deals also with the government's intention to develop an industrial strategy, to initiate new measures, to try to remedy all the setbacks that we have met. But how can be explained the lack of effective measures to safeguard the industries mentioned here today. Also, I can give you some evidence of that in my own constituency. A couple of days ago, I received a letter from a shoe factory in L'Assomption stating that for the coming year, the situation was disastrous and the order book so thin, that they were operating at a 50 per cent capacity. Production would have to be stopped in the spring if things do not change.

This is another case of an industry which employs a certain number of people and which is facing enormous difficulties. The minister tells us there will be a statement on Thursday, something like the one made a year ago about the textile industry, and that it will improve the situation in the footwear industry. But, Mr. Speaker, we have to ask one question of the government: Why has the government waited until these industries—be it the textile industry, the footwear industry, the furniture industry or the mining industry—are in trouble; why did the government not decide 10 or 12 years ago to implement the industrial strategies that it is talking about today? How is it that the government did not feel the need earlier to call on the provinces and all the economic sectors in the country to help it establish long-term policies for the protection of our Canadian industries?

Some will also say that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, with its great generosity, invests money every day. But these efforts aim only at correcting a failure caused by the lack of an industrial strategy. Social legislation has even been mentioned. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has talked about employment insurance arrangements, but, Mr. Speaker, it is not with such arrangements that we shall be able to build a strong, united and well organized Canada. All this forces us to deplore in this House the lack of initiative, foresight and planning on the part of this government.

Of course, the Minister of Finance says that the referendum in Quebec should be held as soon as possible, but how can this have any relation with the lack of action and the present economic situation? I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should not hear any more, and I do not wish to have to repeat this again, that it is not only since November 15 of last year that the Canadian industry has been in difficulty, but that the situation has existed for many years. At least four or five years ago, our former leader, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), travelled throughout Canada to warn Canadians about the danger facing us because of inflation and unemployment, and he was called a pessimist, Mr. Speaker.

Never did the government see any necessity or justification to seek the views of that hon. member who had proven his competency in economics. No, it would rather reject that solution for political reasons and now we are forced to have our Prime Minister travel about the country. I do not say he is wrong in doing so but this obligation brings him today to meet the ten provincial premiers and to consider an economic summit which should have been held several years ago. Had the government had the shrewdness that all governments should have, we would not be discussing today difficulties which are confronting Canadians and which generate also many sufferings for the population which has long since been waiting for corrective action.

They will say also that we need to discuss a renewed federalism. Saturday night I was listening to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde). He was committing himself to something knew. Recently I also heard the Prime Minister rejecting such an approach and saying: beware lest you let yourself be carried away in a third way or option. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the Pepin-Robarts Commission makes no bones about this third option which is becoming essential between the status quo, the centralizing approach we have on this side in Ottawa, and the proposal put forward by Quebec. It seems obvious that we must choose between those two extremes. So in the hearings it is holding throughout Canada, the Pepin-Robarts Commission feels the need to mention the decentralization of some powers or some jurisdictions to interest the provinces, have them participate in the setting up of a major policy for the future, a long term policy. Provinces of course have resented being left aside.

And some were wondering earlier why they are talking about a referendum in Quebec. We might wonder why Quebecers feel they should ask that question again. There are reasons to that; it could as well be because of the lack of measures. My hon. friends opposite will no doubt recognize that during the last provincial election in Quebec, the mismanagement, poor planning and lack of security in the dairy industry have cost the provincial Liberal party a countless number of rural ridings.

Yet that had nothing to do with the provincial government. It was a federal policy which was going to cost dearly to the Liberals. I recall hearing some provincial Liberals mention that that policy was going to cost them dearly, be it in the textile or the shoe industry. Layoffs did not start to decrease right after November 15, Mr. Speaker. In the mining industry, as was mentioned recently its's the same. So, Mr. Speaker, that situation irked the people in Quebec very much, so that they are asking themselves again: Can the federal government help us? Can it give us a good place in which to live in this country? I would like to answer: Why, sure! It is not too late yet, but with some changes and an entirely new flexibility within the federalist system.

I think that if the federal government really wants to do something in that direction, Mr. Speaker, they should stop saying in this House that the Quebec government is making fun of the federal government. They should be above that. Of course, the federal government has been and will always be at loggerheads with the provincial governments, but this is nothing new. One only has to go back to the Duplessis era, or recall the battles fought under the administration of Messrs. Johnson, Bertrand, Bourassa, Lesage. So this is nothing new.

Besides, the first ministers of other provinces have been very critical of the federal government's performance. This is a further reason, Mr. Speaker, to hope that the government will bring together not only the provinces but also the unions and the businessmen so that they may all seek answers to our economic problems. To be sure, the government alone cannot find those answers and cannot devise those measures. On that basis, I dare hope that our impartial representations will be considered, and I also hope that the government will seek the required talents in every economic sector to develop long-term policies and give back to the Canadian people the jobs which will restore their dignity. I hope so for our young people as well as for those who are not so young.

Mr. Speaker, I almost forgot to mention that sometimes we are told that we have no solutions to offer. I think that with one million unemployed, it would be very interesting to consider the possibility of allowing people of 60 to get the old age security pension without making it compulsory. We would enable at the same time younger people to enter the labour market and those who need a well deserved rest to withdraw from the labour market and be replaced by the young people who are going to the bad through lack of job opportunities. I am not saying that the government has not made any efforts, but I repeat that such efforts have been entirely inadequate. Therefore we urge the government to respond in accordance with our requirements.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I readily support the motion introduced today by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) on behalf of the Social Credit Party of Canada.

I support it with eagerness because, at the risk of repeating myself, the economic situation is disastrous. Why? I feel that both opposition and government members know the answer. I feel it in a very obvious way. It is worse than an economic tragedy, unemployment is a social disaster. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) can say as often as he likes that the economic situation is not desperate, he minimizes the facts of life. What kind of government have we at the present time? A government that uses the constitutional issue as its stock argument.

● (1742)

We see from time to time the minister pointing his finger at the wicked Quebecers. The hon. minister says that our situation is not desperate, that is what he said no later than last Saturday, during an oyster dinner arranged by the Liberal Association of the Hull district, not "dull" district. According to the Ottawa newspaper Le Droit on November 21 1977, the minister said, I quote:

Our situation is not yet desperate.

I truly hope it is not desperate but maybe it is time to start thinking about it. And the minister goes on saying that he had been to Israel and that, according to him, in the mind of the Israelians:

Canada was really the Promised Land.

I would like to remind the minister that Israel is still at war in spite of President Sadat's visit. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that here in Canada, in a totally different context, the situation is nearly as desperate as in that part of the world, maybe not in the same way, but for some people who have been unemployed for a year now the situation seems as hopless as in those countries. While some people are eating oysters, thousands of workers lose their jobs in the footwear textile, clothing and furniture industries. If the minister could at least send his oysters to the unemployed, this would enable them to eat their fill and care for themselves a little.

Unfortunately, the government is too busy with those who took power in Quebec, it is too busy with the official opposition which is after the RCMP. All this witch hunt is ridiculous and it does not solve in any way our economic problems. The motion which has been put forward today by the Social Credit Party of Canada through my hon. colleague from Rimouski (Mr. Allard) and which is under study criticizes the present government, which has been here since 1968, for their lack of foresight and leadership. The economic situation has steadily deteriorated since 1968. According to the final report of the Prices and Incomes Commission published in 1972, the unemployment level in 1969 was at 4.6 per cent for the whole country.

In Quebec, it was 7.2 per cent in the Maritimes, Atlantic provinces, 7.8 per cent. In 1971, while Canada had a 6.4 per cent unemployment rate, this was 8.2 per cent in Quebec and 9 per cent in the Maritimes. In October 1977, there was 15 per cent unemployment in Newfoundland, almost 11 per cent in Quebec and more than 8 per cent in Canada as a whole.

These figures show unemployment has been on the increase for the last ten years. In other words, we have been plagued with the signs of a recession for the last ten years.

What has this government been doing? In 1969-70, it let Canadian banks raise their prime rate to a prohibitive level, increasing the cost of living, the cost of homes, automobiles, tractors, heavy equipment, inventories of every description. In 1971 that same government introduced the capital gains tax, which significantly hinders short term investment.

Its regional development investments did not bring about the anticipated results, nor did its Anti-Inflation Act. All this shows that the economic techniques used no longer work. The Keynesian intervention techniques used by the major capitalist countries are no longer working.

Before turning to possible solutions, let me recall the unhappy situation we are now in. First of all the situation in the footwear industry, because the minister stated in his speech he would make an announcement Thursday next in terms of improving the Canadian footwear industry. I commend him and thank him for that. In the constituency of Richmond, we were very much concerned about this, and I believe the Minister of Finance and the new minister from the Conservative party, my hon. friend from Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), can solve the problem.

Because governments could not foresee the massive imports of footwear, textiles and clothing earlier this year, the former industry, trade and commerce minister, the now Minister of Finance, reduced textile imports to the 1975 level. But in 1975, those imports had already increased more than 40 per cent relative to former years. Adding the quotas for this year to those of 1975, the minister only prevented further deteriorations from happening in future years, although we cannot even be sure of this.

This government has never tackled the problem at its origin, it only tried to deal with it superficially. Is the government afraid to assume its responsibilities? Is it afraid of big finance barons who control everything including the political system? Its behaviour might make us think so. We do not ask the government to perform miracles but only to assume its responsibilities in the system from which it feeds itself and not continue to perturbate our economy. What should we say of the government in a situation where textile product manufactures must close down? Not only the footwear industry cannot compete on foreign markets but its Canadian market is invaded by foreign exporters whose products are nowhere near as good as Canadian products. In several cases shoes imported into Canada from low wage and developing countries are synthetic products and leather imitations.

According to a report presented to the Anti-Dumping Tribunal by the Shoe Manufacturers Association in July 1977, the production volume for the first quarter of 1977 has decreased by 19.1 per cent, which means that 19.1 per cent fewer jobs are needed in that industry. Orders for the coming months were decreasing by 40 per cent, and it is fortunate that the minister announced this afternoon that he would do something, because according to the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, if orders decrease by 40 per cent every six months we shall wonder who is going to work in that industry!

The government also mentioned that salaries paid make it hard to compete with foreign countries. I mean salaries paid in Canada make it hard to compete with foreign products. Salaries paid in Canada are certainly higher than in Taiwan, Korea or other developing countries.

Mr. Tessier: Or even the United States!

Mr. Beaudoin: My colleague from Compton said even the United States and I thank him. It might be true in some cases.

I point out to the government that salaries paid in the footwear and textile industry are not higher than the Canadian average. We cannot expect Canadians to work for $1 an hour. Wages paid in Canada can have an influence on foreign markets but that does not prevent our industries from selling on the Canadian market. The American government does not hesitate to set important quotas on the exportation of their products to our country and even on products they import from developing countries and which they dump on Canadian markets. I think the government should look after that immediately.

The Canadian economy, particularly in Quebec and in the Maritimes, is facing other difficulties. A paper entitled "Le Québec contemporain" published by the Union régionale des Caisses populaires de Montréal indicates that the disparities between eastern Canada and the other provinces are getting ever more serious. From that paper we can conclude that the weakness of the economy is not due to the lack of production by workers or lack of interest by small businesses, but to a major structural deficiency in the economy of eastern Canada.

Other facts demonstrate the short-sightedness of this government, because the money spent by the government for programs such as Canada Works and Young Canada Works, as mentioned in our motion today, is not sufficient and in many cases will favour laziness and encourage people to depend year after year on unemployment insurance.

Many of those people are being raised on unemployment insurance handouts. We will get nowhere with such stupid programs. I think that those amounts are inadequate and are only band-aids applied on a dying person. They cannot change the situation. We are giving money. The central government with money borrowed at 9¼ and 10 per cent, 9¾, 8⅜, the last loan of the federal government was at 8⅜, the government is doubling its debt every 7½ or eight years. That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, there are solutions since some people find them. Why is the federal government unable to find any? The constitutional crisis and the consequent economic uncertainties are not conducive to the recovery. The election of the Parti Québécois government has certainly put off many investors. All hon. members will have to take part some day in the development of a new legislation on national unity. If we could bring about more political stability, it would really help the economy but the reverse is truer still. Economic weakness automatically leads to political instability.

Let us consider for a moment how the Parti Québécois took office on November 15, 1976. It seems very simple to me. Medium and small investors in the province of Quebec had already lost confidence in the Bourassa government and they expressed their lack of faith at the polls. When we see our governments accuse each other, we have reasons for feeling hopeless! I believe the PQ would like the situation to grow even worse in the province of Quebec, with more unemployment. The worse the situation gets in Quebec, the more likely the pre-referendum campaign is to succeed. This will mean more problems calling for more solutions. A change of attitude on the part of governments will therefore be necessary and co-operation will be a must.

In addition to political reasons, credits for emergency programs are not sufficient. What about interest rates which are among the main causes of inflation? Interest rates are too high and they deter manufacturers from investing more in their own plants to increase their production. The federal government does not lend enough money to our industries to enable them to be more competitive on the marketplace. They prefer to grant interest-free loans to other countries without any guarantee this money will benefit Canadian industries. Why not give the Canadian people substantial sums of money in the form of a guaranteed annual income in order to increase the consumer's purchasing power on the home market? We really are in a slump. We should avail ourselves of the opportunity provided by this motion introduced by the Social Credit Party of Canada to ask ourselves what should be done from now on to make as many Quebecers and Canadians as happy as possible.

Certains ministers of the Lévesque cabinet expressed some interest in the restructuration of the economy. The federal government must take its responsibilities and co-operate with the other levels of government. The Canadian Constitution must be rewritten and dispel any uncertainty. The banking system must also be reconsidered and any useless confrontation between provincial and federal governments must cease. Let us put an end to those useless constitutional fights, let us stop wasting our time on scrutinizing the RCMP. The House of Commons wasted three weeks to find out what has been happening with the RCMP since 1970. I am not trying to be malicious but I think the official opposition of the Progressive Conservative Party has a lot of responsibility in this area—

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): It does not put any bread on the table.

Mr. Beaudoin: —and talking about the RCMP does not put any bread or butter on the table and it greatly helps the Parti Québécois prove that the federal government is wrong and it greatly helps those who want to split Canada in two. I think we should take a candid look at ourselves, particularly my friends on my right, and stop that witch hunt that leads us nowhere, and only sets people against our system of justice.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, where were those people who criticize the RCMP when we had crackpots in Quebec putting bombs everywhere, when we were picking up victims at night or in the morning because those bombs had gone off? Where were those self righteous people who say that is because of the RCMP? The papers in Quebec are full of it. You only have to read La Tribune or some other papers. They think the RCMP is making all that noise. The culprits are forgotten and the responsibility is shifted on those who want to have that carnage stopped. I believe this foolishness has been going on for too long. All sorts of pilgrimages are being made to Quebec. Political parties go to Quebec City to prove how well they understand Quebeckers. You just have no idea how well they understand them. However, when it is time to vote or to hold an electoral campaign, they blame the present government for having implemented bilingualism across Canada through the public servants who are supposed to be bilingual to serve people in both official languages. They point the finger at the government, Mr. Speaker.

I went to Edmonton with the Committee on the Constitution. I met an old lady of 71 or 72 and wanted to talk to her in French as she had an earphone. The chairman of the committee told her: "Mr. Beaudoin is a Francophone and he will speak to you in French." She said simply: "He represents the French Canadian race and he is the greatest bandit that I have ever met." Can you imagine that? Then another witness said that Trudeau is a dangerous man. He had implemented bilingualism in Canada and this was dangerous. I believe that we should start talking to each other calmly. If we want to have a working federalism, we shall have to think about what we say and think carefully before asking any questions.

There are many left wingers at the present time. I do not have to prove this, we are starting to see it in the newspapers. I am not talking about members of the Parti Québécois, I am talking about left wingers who are infiltrating the Parti Québécois or the Quebec government and the federal government and who try to cause all sorts of problems. They cause one problem after another.

For our part, when we ask questions in the House about the RCMP without any proof, we are cooperating with those who are trying to divide Canada, and then, a large number of people, of which 60 per cent cannot speak one word of French, make a little trip to Quebec and choose a president. I have nothing against choosing a president. Mr. Speaker, this is all related to the economy. The greater the concern about the future of this great country called Canada, the more investments will go down and unemployment will go up. As I said earlier, the government cannot work any miracles. So, a president was elected and his last words to the Quebeckers, to the province of Quebec, to Quebec Canadians were: As far as I am concerned, I don't speak French and I am not interested in learning it. For him, it is not an official language. Then, we come here and we should all behave like saints and the RCMP should never go astray. I think that the RCMP should be above the law in some cases relating to the country's security, but it should especially be above the representatives of the people in some cases, because if justice does not prevail over politics, we are going to the dogs, Mr. Speaker.

This comment applies also to our Quebec colleagues. As the federal government, the Lévesque government has set up an inquiry commission into the RCMP activities and all the while, the real economic and politic problems are forgotten. Let us be serious. Let us sit down together, representatives of the provinces and of the federal government, and if our meeting must last three months, so be it, but let's do something positive.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say this: my wife and I have ten children, and it is in our interest, I think, that Canada should grow, just as it has done in recent years, and I think that as soon as we start showing a greater sense of responsibility in our statements, things will turn out better. Now the time has come to do away with frivolities, with opposition for the sake of opposition, with opposition for political gain. I think that the situation is too serious for that. Discontent has reached a critical point, especially between the two founding races of Canada, between French Canadians and English Canadians. I think that this thing has been carried far enough and that we must stop destroying each other, even here in this House. We must cooperate more with the provinces if we want good results.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—ALLEGATION ACTION IN ANTICIPATION OF PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION DAMAGING MORALE OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, the other day in the House of Commons I followed up a question I had originally addressed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) with regard to Bill C-6 which would transform a Crown agency, the National Harbours Board, into a ports authority. I had an answer, and then I had a debate with the parliamentary secretary, and I must tell the hon. gentleman that he outshone me. He did extraordinarily well and I did extraordinarily badly the last time we hooked up. Nevertheless, I shall try his mettle again. At any rate, the minister, his boss, said he was not pre-judging the will of parliament and that the department was merely carrying out pre-planning as far as possible and indicating to people in the employ of the National Harbours Board the opportunities which would be available to them under the proposed ports commission.

Following the exchange that evening I had calls from various people and visits from various other people, and I am now in a position to know that what I thought was happening is much more serious than I had imagined. It is serious, at least from the standpoint of those who are employed by the National Harbours Board and some of those who have been brought in from private industry to fill positions of extraordinary responsibility.

For example, I heard of one case where, under the screening process now being adopted, a man was found inadequate to occupy the position that he held formerly if he were to be transferred sideways to the new ports structure. On the other hand, he was asked to stay around for a while so that he could instruct his gifted successor on how to carry out his responsibilities. When things like that happen, Mr. Speaker, you have to wonder if the world is upside down, cockaloop or what.

In any event, I said I would return to this question and perhaps this is my last chance to speak on the subject, but I speak on it because we are dealing with a human issue. Once the decision was made to disband the National Harbours Board and appoint a ports commission and instead of having a Crown corporation, to have a body which was under the wing of the minister, I am still wondering why this could not have been done by some sideways transfer rather than putting all of these people, as I said the other day in my question to the minister, in the position of competing against themselves and others for their own jobs.

● (1802)

I do not think the minister wants to downgrade parliament or to denigrate the role of this place, but I think the procedure being used goes beyond the "pre-planning wherever possible" phrase which the minister used, and gets into a new operation, and in that sense I think the minister is outside the law. As a result I have no hesitation in bringing his gifted parliamentary secretary into the House this evening.

The other point is: Who set up the deciding group in what really becomes a competing faction within the Public Service of Canada? I did not say the "civil service" but Public Service in the sense that the National Harbours Board group is being pitted against the ports group within the Department of Transport. I do not know what assurance can be given that people can be guaranteed that they do not get shafted, to the favour of some other group.

Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker, if I have one minute left. Years ago I wrote an exam on marine law, believe it or not, which is rather close to this particular topic. I walked out of Dalhousie Law School on that afternoon more bloodied than bowed, or perhaps I should say both bloodied and bowed, and decided I would never write an exam for a job again. So far I have stuck very religiously to this. I know people both in the National Harbours Board and in the marine division of the Department of Transport who would share exactly that philosophy. They went through this job writing business about 30 years ago and they just do not want to get themselves mixed up in it now. Unfortunately, I think they are being mixed up in it.

I think it would have been much simpler if we had had some act of parliament which would have transferred, melded or wedded these groups together, rather than putting them in the position of fighting with each other for positions, I gather fighting very bitterly and to the detriment of a great Crown agency which is still in existence.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is with renewed pleasure that I find myself again sizing myself up to the rhetorical talent of the hon. member opposite and I will concede that I will not dare compare my listener's ratings with his! Surely, with this new equipment monitoring us, Hollywood contracts will have to go to my colleague on the other side.

Coming back to serious matters such as this issue of hiring for the future Canadian Harbours Commission, I will endeavour, Mr. Speaker, to try and explain to the hon. member what exact procedure is being followed. The hon. member must certainly recall that last November 24, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) whom I am honored to represent, informed this House that he had asked the employees of the central administration of the National Harbours Board and the personnel of the Harbours and Piers Division of Transport Canada to apply for the new positions created in the Canadian Harbours Commission so that Transport Canada may confirm their new assignments when Bill C-6 is passed.

What the hon. member is now saying, Mr. Speaker, is that those people, some of whom are not legally part of the Public Service, except when it comes to restricted competitions, are asked to compete with each other for their own jobs. So if the hon. member thinks these employees apply for competitions to fill in their own positions, such is certainly not the case.

Most of the positions and services of the Canadian Harbours Commission are new, since most of their attributions and responsibilities will be transferred to 20 autonomous harbours commissions once this bill is passed. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, the attributions and responsibilities of these new positions put them at different levels and classifications for which it is necessary to recruit candidates through competitions so that the employees of the central administration of the National Harbours Board may be eligible and also to abide by the principle of promotion based on merit within the civil service.

[English]

Also, I should like to point out that the Public Service Commission has the exclusive right to appoint personnel to these new positions, a right it does not have for personnel currently employed by the National Harbours Board under the current legislation. Yet, the Public Service Commission and the Department of Transport have agreed to open the initial area of closed competition for these new Canadian ports commission positions to only those employees of the National Harbours Board, and ports and harbours personnel of the headquarters division and its regional components, in order to give them every possible advantage in qualifying for these new positions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS—LAY-OFFS BY CANADIAN NATIONAL—UNION REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, a week ago I directed a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I asked him whether he would give favourable consideration to the proposal by the Canadian Brotherhood of Transport and Railway Workers and appoint a commission to look into the effect of the Canadian National Railways laying off 6,000 of its employees in recent months. The minister replied by indicating that he had talked to representatives of the railway workers and decided not to appoint a commission to look into that question, but was considering a commission which would look into the lay-off of employees everywhere. Such an inquiry is necessary, but it will do little to help the large number of workers laid off by the CNR.

It is not an accident that the CNR has laid off people. It is part of a new policy, for which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is responsible to some extent. He believes in a policy of user pay and profit first, and service to the customer and the welfare of the railway employees last.

• (1812)

In the not too distant past, in the last year or so, workers represented by the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport Workers have lost 2,600 jobs, and other union workers employed by CNR have lost 3,400 jobs. Four out of five of the jobs lost have not been lost because of loss of business but rather because of the arbitrary decision of the CNR to show profits at each of its five profit centres, and to cut back on service wherever they cannot show a profit. Each of its profit centres must show profit, and the way that will be accomplished is to cut the service which has been traditionally supplied by the express service, to cut back or to cut out telecommunications, and to let maintenance go to hell.

The railways are moving more merchandise than they ever have moved before; freight movements have increased every year, and yet the number of employees has been reduced each year from a high in the 1950's of 160,000 employees, down to less than 100,000, about 95,000 people now, 25 years later.

The cutback in express service means that the users, people who want to move merchandise in less than carload lots, will be forced to use the alternative of either trucks or air. I do not have to tell members of the House that both trucks and aircraft use much larger amounts of fuel, of oil and gasoline, to move merchandise than do the railways. So the CNR, in order to be penny wise is being pound foolish in terms of the country as a whole.

What this desire to show a profit means is that the CNR will concentrate on providing service in such high density areas as Ontario and western Canada, but in the Maritimes or in eastern Quebec the service will be poor, to say the least. There is evidence that because merchandise will not move until a freight car is completely filled, it will wait anywhere from 15 to 30 days.

Another feature of the CNR cutback in service, which has led to the reduction in staff, is the complete failure of the CNR and CPR to give thought to safety. Investigations made by the Canadian Transport Commission in 1970 and 1972 demonstrated that completely. There has been an alarming rise in accidents caused by poor track conditions. In 1972 the number of derailments was three times that in 1959 and nearly double that in 1969, according to studies done by the Canadian Transport Commission.

In comparison to modern railways systems, Canadian railways show an unusually high rate of accidents and casualties. In 1972 Canadian railways, that is, the CNR and CPR, experienced 12 times the number of derailments, three times the number of collisions, and six times the number of collisions and derailments that occurred on French railways per train-kilometer. The losses in life injuries were also heavy; 15 times higher than in France among railway personnel, and 70 per cent higher among passengers. The same trend prevailed in 1971 and 1973.

● (1817)

I believe it is the responsibility of the Minister of Transport to see that the railways operate efficiently, that they provide service to the people of Canada, and that they take time and effort and spend money to see that the kind of accident experience we have had in recent years stops. They have not done that, and I call on the Minister of Transport to exercise his responsibility and see that the CNR does the job it should be doing.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for his question. Initially, the question asked was about the advisability of appointing a commission of inquiry to look into the 6,000 lay-offs of Canadian National Railways employees.

The problem was submitted to us after discussions with the representatives of the Canadian National Railways union and it was decided that we had better deal with the general question of lay-offs in Canada.

I think the hon. member is concerned with one specific union or one specific industry. What we want is an over-all view of the present lay-off situation.

I will give a very specific example: Recently INCO decided on drastic and immediate lay-offs. Another example is that of Northern Telecom which has reduced its payroll recently.

I think the department had rather make a general study of lay-off procedure, and appoint an industrial commission of inquiry to provide ways and means to protect industry and labour unions from situations such as those which have developed lately.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind you that as far as we are concerned the issue is not only our Canadian National Railways, it is a far more general one. What we want in the final analysis is to deal with the problem which the CN people and many other Canadians have been facing, and carefully examine all specific cases before adopting a general policy which will enable us, in the future, to cope with situations such as the one which confronts us now.

TRANSPORT—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FEDERAL SHARE OF COST OF IMPROVING TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, after many approaches to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on the drastic need for a highway strengthening program in Newfoundland I want to attempt again to elaborate on my question of November 22.

In his reply the minister again refused to consider the provision of a more generous cost-sharing arrangement than the original 50-50 offer. I wonder why he is so adamant in his decision when he is so aware of the basic facts of Newfoundland's needs and if he believes in the objective of providing for the development of Newfoundland through a basic transportation system to gain social and economic benefits. Developing our rich resources would benefit not just the province of Newfoundland but Canada as a whole.

What has happened in Newfoundland? The basic facts show that we are now at a critical stage of our domestic transportation system. We are at a point in time when a fundamental decision has to be made as to the basic requirements of the transportation infrastructure for the benefit of the province.

In Newfoundland we had a rail passenger service which was taken away. This was justified by serious losses. The federal government built a fourth-standard Trans-Canada Highway, with false political fanfare. There was then provided a bus passenger transportation service, which is now losing more money than the original train service. Our rail freight service is deteriorating to the point where even CN has forsaken its own rail service and is increasing its use of road transportation. At present 20 per cent of the trailer-truck service is supplied by CN or its charters because it is more profitable for CN to operate by truck over the Trans-Canada Highway since it is absolved of the maintenance burden. The CN is abandoning its own rail system. What we have now is an inefficient passenger service, an inefficient freight service, and a fast deteriorating rail system.

Let us look at the rationalization of DREE support under highways agreements. The department is supposed to help develop our have-not provinces, but it emphasizes un-co-ordinated policies. DREE is providing new secondary roads in my district and in others on a 90-10 basis, for which we are grateful. I admit that it is helping to provide infrastructure to support the development of our energy potential, our fishing industry, our national park and other industries which we hope will come on-stream. But we are neglecting, hypocritically, the important link between Port-aux-Basques and Corner Brook, Deer Lake and Stephenville triangle which is so basic in the over-all development of our province and which forms the most vital part of the trans-Newfoundland corridor.

● (1822)

The cost of bringing the Trans-Canada Highway to Newfoundland is $240 million, a cost which the minister knows Newfoundland cannot afford on a 50-50 basis. Under the general development agreements of DREE, a province and the federal government can enter a contract to do almost anything. I cannot therefore accept that this vital and critical need cannot be fulfilled under such an agreement on a 90-10 or 75-25 basis.

Our deteriorating transportation system, both by rail and road, is causing serious effects on the viability of our main industries, pulp and paper and others, which are being hurt because of our distance from off-shore markets.

I would not be so adamant about this if we had a decent rail service, Mr. Speaker. Rather than improving one or the other, however, we are abandoning both. Jobs are continually lost because CN is abandoning rail for rubber, with the result there is a creeping paralysis of both modes.

I can only ask the minister, through his parliamentary secretary, to look at the problem realistically. In order to achieve results from our rich resources in Newfoundland we must have a rationalized, common sense appreciation of what we need to develop, and in Newfoundland we can develop in the Canadian interest. I can only plead with the minister to reconsider his position and to provide the funding commensurate with Newfoundland's requirements and, for the purposes of this exercise, to agree to Newfoundland's request, either through his department or DREE, to finance a highway strengthening program for the province and the country on a more equitable basis.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, even though I am aware of the serious problems affecting the Maritimes, especially in the transport area, and even though I agree with the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) that quite often in the Maritimes it is faster to hitchhike than to take the train, I do not entirely agree that everything is inadequate in that part of Canada.

I do not see how one can say that everything is inadequate and wrong in the transport area, which, by the way, is not very kind for the provincial ministers of transport, and say for example that the DREE agreements with the provinces, under which federal and provincial investments in transport are financed on a basis of 90 and 10 per cent, are fine. I do not see how one can say that this is good and everything else is bad and wrong.

I should like to remind the hon. member what the Minister of Transport stated in reply to his question on the operating and the maintenance of highways in the Maritime provinces. I should like to remind him that this, under the Canadian constitution, is clearly a provincial responsibility. The federal government has indicated its willingness to extend financial assistance if necessary to provincial governments directly or indirectly, in order to improve their highway systems, provided this assistance is in line with a number of national objectives.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, and the federal government recognizes this, that the standardization of minimum weights for trucks and the related regulations would represent a very significant benefit to the federal government and the provincial governments concerned. The hon. member is certainly aware that the government accepted in May of this year to spend up to $125 million over the next three years to improve transportation services in the Maritime provinces. Of course, a large share of these funds, some $100 million, will be spent on a main road upgrading program, under a 50-50 cost-sharing agreement between the federal and the provincial governments, something which is not to the hon. member's liking.

● (1827)

[English]

Upon receipt of a joint request from the responsible maritime provincial ministers this summer, the minister reviewed program proposals and could find no new factors to alter the original view that a 50 per cent federal share of the eligible costs is appropriate in reflecting the extent of "national" interests in the program.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, it is to the mutual benefit of all concerned that the provinces finally accept the government's offer, in this time of fiscal restraint, and that program proposals for improving major highways get under way immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 6:29 p.m. the House took recess.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58(11)—ALLEGED MISMANAGEMENT OF THE ECONOMY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allard:

That this House deplores (a) that the government has shown a lack of foresight and leadership in respect of the flooding of the Canadian market with foreign goods, particularly in the areas of footwear, textiles, clothing and furniture, which has contributed a great deal in weakening Canadian industries and resulted in a number of layoffs;

(b) that the votes allocated by the government to the Canada Works programs are not sufficient to create enough jobs to overcome the massive and persistant unemployment which is especially severe among the 18 to 30 age group seeking permanent employment, regardless of the fact that a relatively large number of projects have been approved;

(c) that no serious action has been taken to reduce interest rates which are the major cause of unjustified price increases and to fight effectively against inflation; and

(d) that in spite of the fact that the present administration has very candidly acknowledged that the economic methods now in use are no longer suitable, the government, because of its weakness in the face of economic and financial dictatorship, persists in applying the same obsolete economic methods which leave the Canadian population to contend with the same economic problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. At six o'clock the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had the floor.

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I was approached just prior to the supper hour with the suggestion that I might join in this debate today on this opposition motion I thought to myself, not another debate on a subject relating to the economy! It seems to me that we in this parliament have been spending an inordinate amount of time, on opposition days and in the middle of a very prolonged debate on the income tax measures sponsored by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) which are currently before the House, in playing the game of navel gazing. One of the problems of being a parliamentarian is that, all too often, we get lost in the trees of our existence here in the House of Commons and do not stand back enough and take a good look at what is going on in the country, at the positive things which are happening.

The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) is a member for whom I have a very high regard. I know he has been a very successful entrepreneur in years gone by and that he has always maintained a very positive outlook in terms of his business abilities. But having looked at the motion he has put forward, I thought it would be in order to review just where we stand today and what the leaders of this country are saying about our economy. Therefore, over the supper hour, I took a little time to dig through some current files, the latest news reports and so on.

It must be rather disappointing for the opposition, particularly for the official opposition, to find that the news today is becoming increasingly brighter. Because if there is one thing, Mr. Speaker, that they do not want, it is for the news to be brighter. They flourish on bad news. Wherever they go they seem to dwell on bad news. If they are not climbing on to the backs of the RCMP, they are talking about the bad state of the economy. Because respected public figures such as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) continue to take this sort of approach, eventually people begin to believe that there are a great number of problems in existence. People start to look at these problems as though they were spelt in capital letters and the positive aspects were spelt in small letters.

I suppose to some extent the media also become involved in this game. Good news is never really news as such. What is of interest and what perhaps sells newspapers is the kind of news that is negative news. Bad news is more exciting than good news.

I should like to put on the record a few of the positive things that are happening in Canada today. I do not need to go very much further back than yesterday when none other than the Governor of the Bank of Canada, speaking to the Canadian Club in Toronto, said that in his view the pessimistic expressions we continue to hear from the media are simply out of date. This ties in with what people are thinking and saying.

I have talked to a number of ordinary workers and business people in the last few weeks in my riding and have found that the mood is very much one of optimism, that a positive outlook is being taken. It seems to me the fact that the Governor of the Bank of Canada, in an important speech, emphasized the positive aspects of our economy and the prospects for the coming year or so, is something we should not ignore. The opposition will ignore it, of course, because it is not in the opposition's interest to talk about good news. Politically speaking, I suppose the only two occasions in this century when they have managed to convince Canadians they should give them more seats in the House of Commons than the Liberal party, were, first, in the midst of the depression. I suppose the bad economic news of the time encouraged Canadians to look for an alternative to the government in power in 1930. It did not last very long—some five years. Unless we on this side talk about the good news it will not be talked about because it is not in the interest of the opposition parties to promote it.

● (2012)

The Governor of the Bank of Canada has indicated that, in his view, the Canadian economy is adjusting. He is saying, even from the conservative position he occupies, that inflation could move to a level below that which prevails in the United States, with the proviso, in his words, that Canadians must act sensibly. There is a message here which all segments of our society should learn whether they are responsible for setting prices or wage rates. I have in mind particularly the period after April, 1978, when controls are dismantled.

The important thing is that the outlook is positive. In the opinion of the governor of the bank we have come back a long way from where we were. Inflation is down, increases in labour costs are more in line with those occurring in other countries, and governments generally are beginning to exercise firmer control over their expenditures. The governor has also indicated that the rate of monetary expansion is being reduced. He emphasized, too, the benefits which Canada has derived in terms of the export trade from the decline in the value of the dollar. Here is one important Canadian who has been prepared to state publicly that he sees a solid basis for a more satisfactory rate of growth and output in the coming year.

All Canadians realize that unemployment rates are high, and there is no indication that they will decline substantially in the next while. This is an area to which governments will need to address themselves constantly. There are no magic solutions. Increased productivity will have a bearing on this situation. We ought to be talking more about employment rather than unemployment, and recognize that more and more Canadians are entering the work force. In considering the INCO situation, for example, great emphasis has been placed upon the fact that the current jobless figure may move as high as 15 per cent of the work force in Sudbury. But very little has been said about the 85 per cent of INCO workers who will continue to be employed in that important industry.

Consumer confidence is essential. Hopefully, this is one area in which Canadians have bottomed out, in lack of confidence. The signs are that they are looking to the future with a greater degree of optimism. There are indications that auto sales will rise substantially in the next six months. The outlook for home buying and appliance sales is good. Fewer people intend to travel outside Canada, a trend which will have an important bearing on our tourist deficit. Canadians seem to be responding to the situation and making plans to travel more in this country.

The trade balance is now favourable. I was looking at some figures for the United States where there is a serious imbalance. The separatism issue in Quebec will present a problem for some time to come. It has already adversely affected investment in the province and has a bearing on the over-all investment picture in the country. We shall have to live with this situation and work our way through it; there are no overnight solutions.

This country has been given praise internationally for the way in which inflation has been controlled over the past few years. The impact of price and wage controls has been regarded by the majority of Canadians as an important foundation upon which we shall be able to move ahead in the years to come.

Recently some people have been concerned about an article which appeared in a very reputable financial paper, The Economist, predicting all kinds of bad things for Canada in the coming decade. As against this, there appeared an article in the equally reputable Financial Times, probably the leading financial paper in the U.K., expressing great optimism with regard to Canada's future and potential. In it the separatist threat is minimized. On the other hand The Economist magnifies that threat. The Financial Times is positive about our energy prospects, an area into which 44 per cent of future capital investment in this country will go.

This morning there appeared before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works representatives of Atomic Energy of Canada. Their replies to questions put to them by the revered member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) gave us some idea of the extensive plans which are being prepared for future nuclear generating stations in Ontario. We can say what we like about the use of nuclear power to meet our energy requirements, but each of these generating stations represents a tremendous capital investment leading to the employment of many thousands of Canadians. The same can be said of the northwestern natural gas pipeline, construction of which will begin in the eighties—the largest project ever undertaken by private capital on the North American continent.

These are positive aspects of our economy, and our young people in particular ought to know about them. Today all forms of the media are emphasizing the negative aspects far too strongly. Unfortunately, they are taking up the approach being made by the opposition parties in whose political interest it is to push this type of news in order to grasp headlines for themselves.

A week or so ago the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) was in my riding speaking to a group of about 80 people at one of our town hall meetings. Normally the people of Scarborough West do not give standing ovations to anyone, but they gave the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a standing ovation that evening after his off-the-cuff delivery and his answering of questions.

• (2022)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin: The main reason for that standing ovation was the positive news he was conveying about where this country was going and its potential for the future.

Opposition parties indicate that the government is doing nothing or very little in an attempt to bolster the economy where it is weak. The Export Development Corporation is an incredible organization, to use as an example, to defeat this argument. In one year alone it has assisted Canadian exporters to gain contracts in 29 countries. In the 15 year period from 1961 to 1976, it helped finance export contracts in 66 countries. All these individual contracts and sales involved jobs for many Canadians.

There has been a suggestion that INCO is exporting work to other countries. In the case of the project in Indonesia, that equipment was produced in this country and financed by the Export Development Corporation. It was responsible for 3,000 man-years of work in Canada. How can that be interpreted as exporting jobs? It was exporting products manufactured here. In the case of Guatemala, the equivalent number of man-years was 1,037. Surely the opposition parties are not against that type of employment. That is not being said directly, but there has been an indication that it should not be done. There has been an indication that rather than manufacturing equipment and selling it in Indonesia and Guatemala, we should be producing and stockpiling nickel in Canada that cannot be sold.

At the present time there is a problem in Sudbury, but at the same time tremendous work is being generated as a result of the export of equipment to INCO projects internationally. The New Democratic Party almost condemned INCO the other day in this House. That company raised over $900 million in five years in private capital markets. This capital was raised in six countries, and involved dealing with 27 banks. Surely Canadians should be proud of this kind of thing, rather than looking upon it as something evil and generating bad news. The average young Canadian will have to look on business and the generation of profits as something which is healthy.

Business must do a better job of selling itself in the coming years. I believe that business is finally realizing that Canadians need to be told about the benefits of profits. When money is made in a company, people will continue to work and products will be sold. When money is lost and products cannot be sold, people are put out of work.

There are problems in the manufacturing sector. Various industrial strategies must be developed. The current move of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in travelling around the country in order to have private conferences with the individual provincial premiers makes a great deal of sense. The leaders of the two levels of government can sit down quietly and discuss basic issues. The Prime Minister has indicated that there may follow a major conference of first ministers to explore further the current problems relating to the economy.

An hon. Member: It is a little late.

Mr. Martin: It is not a little late. The Export Development Corporation will assist in financing $2 billion worth of export contracts next year, as against $50 million only eight years ago. Is that a little late?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin: There are no positive suggestions emanating from that side of the House. If hon. members opposite cannot run the RCMP out of the country, they will work on something else.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin: They are desperate for an issue, and in their desperation they spend three hours every morning huddled like the members of a football team which has not yet won a game, in order to figure out what to ask in question period in order to grab the next headline.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have no problem in agreeing with those parts of the motion before us which criticize the inadequacy of the government's program to overcome the massive and persistent unemployment which is especially severe among the 18 to 30 years age group. In the course of my remarks I am going to make some suggestions as to how the government can improve its performance in my constituency, my province, and particularly in Atlantic Canada.

Clearly our objective must be to recover and maintain the real economic growth potential of our Canadian economy while achieving full employment and stable prices. This is a most worthy objective. It is an extremely good goal, and even if it is not achieved, by moving in that direction we can greatly improve our economic performance.

For the past decade our economic performance has deteriorated. There may be more than one million Canadians out of work this winter, and inflation continues to sap our economic strength.

One of the most disturbing bits of news has been the drop in productivity and our competitive international trading position. Our $10 billion deficit on trade in manufactured products has been caused in part, although not totally, by Canada's failure to keep abreast of technological improvements.

A deterioration in our trade position is perhaps the most important shift which has taken place in our economy. We are consuming more than we are producing, and we are borrowing foreign money to make up the difference. I feel there must be a massive effort to assist Canadian business through tax incentives to attain technological breakthroughs in fields where we have an inherent advantage. Clearly, with the resources of people and money available to us, there is a need for selectivity in this program. There is a need to concentrate on areas where we have an inherent advantage. These fields include agriculture, our fresh water supply, the resources of our three seas, and those industries drawing upon our mineral, chemical, and forest wealth. Farm machinery and mining equipment are examples.

An imaginative taxation policy can do much to induce small and large businesses to improve their technology, and its application to industry, to increase our gross national product and, through planning, to enable Canadian products to re-enter and expand in the trading markets of the world. It is essential Canada restores its technological advantage in the production of goods for export if we are to maintain our present standard of living and create good jobs for Canadians without serious social disruption.

The federal government programs of Canada Works, Young Canada Works, and Local Initiatives, have been important weapons in the attack on unemployment. I want to give them full credit for the jobs created and the achievements made.

So far the federal goverment's programs in New Brunswick have helped to keep the situation from getting worse, but they have done very little to identify the real causes of unemployment and to remedy them. One of the basic causes of chronic unemployment in New Brunswick is the transportation system. Another is the failure to focus the attention of all departments of government on the same problem. For example, a retrenchment in air passenger travel and cargo capacity was announced by our national airline last spring, without prior consultation with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard). In fact the concept of using air transportation as a development tool in the Atlantic provinces was never discussed by our national airline with DREE. I pressed this matter with the president of Air Canada at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in June and I invite the minister to read the minutes. Bus transportation is also cut back in New Brunswick.

The main feature of rail-passenger equipment is its age. In rural areas surrounding our cities there is a great need for a form of public transportation moving people to and from work and to buy goods and services. I would like to see a feasibility study done to determine the viability of a rural-urban bus service to perform this function and to identify possible routes in New Brunswick.

If I had to put my finger on one thing in which the government of Canada could invest to improve employment opportunities in New Brunswick and the other Maritime provinces, I would put my finger on transportation. I would recommend to the government that transportation be regarded as a development tool in all the Atlantic provinces. I suggest that in applying this principle it look at air transportation, rail transportation, bus transportation, water transportation, and all weather highways as a comprehensive modern transportation system that should be put in place in the Atlantic provinces by the Government of Canada as an investment in the economic development of that region. Vast improvements in the quality, scope, and performance of public transportation are essential in all parts of New Brunswick.

The programs of LIP, Canada Works and Young Canada Works have their functions as labour absorbents for a short term application. They do not and are not intended to go to the root of our economic problems. I suggest, however, that the Department of Employment might play a greater role in identifying—as I have attempted to do in my remarks—the root causes of unemployment and in recommending to appropriate branches of government at all levels the necessary strategy to deal with these problems. In my view the proper vehicle for mounting a meaningful attack on the disparities that exist in the Atlantic provinces is a federal-provincial conference convened by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and the premiers of the respective provinces. If we are to carry out this strategy and focus the attention of all departments of government on the problem, the ultimate answer will require the personal direction and dedication of the Prime Minister of Canada.

[Mr. Howie.]

At the same time, I believe we can make some real progress in identifying areas within each department of government which can and should provide a service for other departments of government, and avoid costly duplication, the tremendous expense of hiring outside professional and other services, and consulting with experts outside departments of government.

The ability of all departments of government to focus on any one problem in our economy, like that of regional disparity, leaves much to be desired. For example, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has expended millions of dollars in Atlantic Canada with some degree of success in building the economy of that area. But as DREE takes one step forward in establishing new industries, the lack of a cohesive and progressive transportation policy erodes its effect.

We know that at this time there is much evidence that the government proceeds like a whole series of separate empires. These empires often compete with each other. Sometimes they even conflict with each other. For example, the user pay concept for transportation is in direct opposition to the use of transportation as a developmental tool envisaged by the Canadian premiers at their meeting this year in St. Andrews, New Brunswick.

The government seems to lack an over-all strategy in approaching the problems of Atlantic Canada. It has announced financing for studies of some renewable energy forms, which is quite commendable. But what about other energy forms and what about indigenous energy sources in Atlantic Canada? There is no over-all strategy. The government cannot or will not come to grips with the total problem and, in concert with the Atlantic provinces, develop a strategy designed to solve the problems. There are no easy answers, but there should be a commitment and a dedication on the part of the federal government to finding the answers.

I believe the government should co-operate with the governments of the Atlantic provinces in giving priority to the economic supply and distribution of electrical energy in the region. The areas of co-operation I contemplate would include the development of a full Maritime power pool with strong interconnections with adjacent areas of Canada and the United States, in order that all the benefits of power pool operations may be optimized. This, in my view, would be a major step in the direction of integrating other provinces and other power pools into an eventual national power grid.

Canada should encourage the study and development of unused hydro electric sites—especially the large remote sites in northern areas of Canada—which could supply renewable energy into a Canadian electrical energy distribution system. The untapped hydro resources of 20 rivers in Labrador, the most dramatic being the Gull Island and Muskrat Falls sites, are the most attractive untapped hydro electric sites in north America.

The government should encourage development of those tidal power generation sites in the Bay of Fundy which show a beneficial energy supply to Canadian energy requirements. Since 1969, lack of foresight and the complete absence of government policy have seen Fundy tidal power studies move forward at a snail's pace. Even considering this continent's energy needs in the 1990's and projecting the dwindling supplies and increasing prices of fossil fuels, Fundy looms as an attractive opportunity with tremendous socio-economic benefits for all of eastern Canada.

And what about Fundy? Can a huge source of renewable energy attract chemical and metal based industries to locate near the power source? Is there a good labour source, good transportation facilities, a sea port, and other infrastructures? In such heavy industries there is a considerable lead time from the inception of planning to the commencement of construction. The ommission of DREE from involvement in the Fundy studies is regrettable and is another example of the failure of government to focus the efforts of all departments on the problem of regional disparity. The involvement of DREE now to maximize the employment potential of a possible and, I hope, impending Fundy development is imperative.

Canada needs national economic development policies and regional development policies related to the national purpose.

In eastern Canada we have a tremendous potential, but we need national leadership to realize it. With Saint John and Halifax—two deepwater year round ports—we can sell a transportation facility to the whole Atlantic seaboard, which, for the most part, lacks deepwater ports. With relaxed tariff and quota regulations and active federal support, these ports can be gateways of commerce and, if connected to a modern transportation system in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, they can enable other communities to become staging areas for growth centre developments.

The federal government should not simply content itself with giving a department such as DREE a limited degree of authority. It should establish machinery which would produce co-ordinated results and which would, in terms of regional economic development, co-ordinate the policies of all departments, particularly transport, finance, and trade with the policies being followed by DREE.

I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of co-ordinating efforts within departments of the federal government. It is also necessary to co-ordinate the efforts of the federal and provincial governments, especially in the Atlantic region. The three Maritime provinces have improved their machinery for inter-provincial co-operation. But we are still a long way from a plan of development for the region in which each provincial government and the federal government would play a co-ordinated role.

DREE should get away from the idea that its only responsibility is to promote a series of ad hoc development agreements and provide industrial incentives to entrepreneurs who wish to move into the Atlantic area, or to local businessmen who want to expand their present operations. DREE should be doing far more than that. It should be looking hard at the big jobs crying to be tackled. For example, what has DREE done about the Fundy tidal power project which is linked with the building of the Chignecto Canal? I would wager, nothing. It has been very convenient for the government, whenever Fundy was seriously mentioned, to be able to pass it off to a study, or a commission, or a committee which it knows full well can stall the project another year or another decade. Why is DREE not brought into these discussions? Why is DREE not handed the responsibility of correlating these studies? Why is DREE not given the job to do?

DREE was created to lead the attack on regional disparity. Like Uriah the Hittite, it was to be thrust into the forefront of battle, there to do or die. But DREE stayed in the background when the big conflicts raged. It handed out its grants and loans to justify its existence and failed miserably to take hold of the big projects which the Atlantic provinces have needed for generations. In short, it avoided the massive development undertakings without which the Atlantic provinces will always remain what they are today—the most neglected part of Canada.

Infrastructures are the only hope of getting Atlantic Canada into a position of parity with the rest of the country, a position from which it can stay caught up. Millions of dollars in piecemeal grants over the years have done nothing but keep us from sliding farther behind. The dole has failed. Now it is time to get back to the bold and imaginative policy of regionalism pioneered by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the principle of special aid to the Atlantic provinces on a massive scale. Where mere millions have been parcelled out to keep the wolf from the door, billions are needed, not in spending but investment in permanent and lasting projects which will bring the Atlantic provinces to equal partner status with the other six, and which will dispose of the need, once and for all, of the subsidies and handouts which have always been associated with us as a backward area.

DREE was launched with great fanfare as the answer to all our economic problems. It did not take very long, however, for the Atlantic provinces to realize exactly what DREE was: just another federal agency handing out grants, loans and doles, and shirking its responsibility for getting to the fundamental problems of the area and for spearheading the mighty projects which common sense tells us must be the cornerstones of Atlantic prosperity.

These projects are the Fundy Tidal project, development of the ports of Saint John and Halifax, and an Atlantic transportation policy which would include a corridor road with United States co-operation and a modern highway and rail system to transport agricultural products, parts for manufacturing industries, and other goods to world markets via the ports of Saint John and Halifax.

I believe that new policies should show a willingness to get to the basics of Atlantic economics and to put first things first. There has to be a new set of priorities, and the projects I have mentioned have to be in the top echelons of those priorities.

I am not asking for the moon. I am asking for fair treatment of an area whose problems no amount of subsidies and grants can solve if a solid base is not laid down.

Give us the Fundy tidal project, and the maritimes will become the powerhouse of the continent, with both Canadian and American—yes, and British, French and Japanese—interests clamouring to invest in us.

Give us the corridor road and, by means of a straight super highway linking Vanceboro in Maine with Sherbrooke in Quebec, shippers, travellers and tourists will be five hours and 150 miles closer to the markets and attractions of central Canada, and vice-versa.

Give us port development, and the great tankers and container ships of the world will come to us in armadas of profit.

In short, give us infrastructures, and let them form the foundation. Then the rest of Canada can forget the subsidies, grants and handouts which they have been forced to provide us, often against their will, for the simple reason that no one has ever had the common sense, foresight and resolution to face facts squarely and to give us the tools with which we can put our own house in order.

My immediate suggestion is that the government direct its attention to the infrastructures I have mentioned, and focus the attention of all government departments on the problems of regional disparity.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulte the sponsor of the motion now before us. Of course, this motion opens the door to the discussion of the most serious problems now facing Canada, that is inflation and unemployment. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a few aspects of the speech made this afternoon by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

First, Mr. Speaker, the minister agreed with us, the opposition, that we now have serious economic problems in our country in spite of all its wealth. But, Mr. Speaker, what have the former minister of finance and the present minister, since his appointment, succeeded in doing to try to solve the problems of unemployment and inflation? This afternoon, the Minister of Finance made fun once again of the people when he said that the government has stated, especially since November 15 of last year, that if we have economic problems throughout Canada and especially in Quebec—and I ask government members to mark my words, so that they will not suggest tomorrow that I am speaking in favour of the Parti Québécois, because this is not true. On the contrary, I am not for the Parti Québécois, and even though I sit in the House of Commons as a federalist, because that is what I am, I am not too blind to see that our country has economic problems.

The minister said that unemployment has increased because women have suddenly decided to join the labour force, which has resulted in more unemployment among young people between 18 and 30. The Minister of Finance agrees with us that to solve this problem, housewives should be paid to stay home and help their family as they would like to do. But because of the economic problems now facing the country, women have to help their husbands support the family.

We would also like to provide pensions at 60 for the people who decide to leave the labour market when they reach the age of 60. This would give an opportunity to young people between 18 and 30, to the same young people who are now waiting to enter the labour market.

As a member from Ottawa said last week about the death penalty, there should be a trial period so that we may see the results brought about by the abolition of the death penalty.

● (2052)

Today I invite the federal government to do the same thing, namely to stop the Trudeau-Lévesque or the Lévesque-Trudeau confrontation because this government has been elected precisely to replace a lousy administration represented by the Bourassa government. We saw then Premier Bourassa being compelled by the right hon. Canadian Prime Minister to eat hot dogs. What did he do: He knelt down and ate those hot dogs. Today, Quebec has a government that stands on its feet and attempts are being made to provoke a show-down with the federal government.

So I invite the present government to stop engaging in confrontation tactics with these people and try to give Canadian citizens a decent standard of living. For many years, we in the Social Credit Party of Canada, have listened to the economic proposals made by the federal government and some of them have turned out to be good but others left much to be desired. We shall keep on making recommendations so that the government may put them into practice. However the time has come also to analyze the political performance of this government, namely this Liberal government which has not succeeded in solving the serious problems plaguing the Canadian economy, namely inflation and a high rate of unemployment. Such is the attitude which the Social Credit Party of Canada has been advocating for several years.

I would like to debate the four interesting points raised in the motion in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard). Since 1974, the federal government has tried to solve both the problems of inflation and those of unemployment. We have witnessed the various tactics used by this government which actually have always been in the traditional style. First, there were the price and wage control system, the job creation programs, the rate reduction and selective grants in a given sector of the economy. If we scrutinize the budgets of the years 1974 to 1977, we can see the changes in the policies of the government. One of these budgets mentions regional development and another aims at controlling government spending. In all these budgets, traditional measures have been used, changes in tariff and rate structures increases and decreases or even both of these measures combined, job creation programs, adjustment of interest rates and dividends. Every year the federal government has been assuring us that it will solve all the problems of our economy. Despite the variations in the economic strategy of this government, inflation is still rising and the rate of unemployment is growing very quickly every year.

Mr. Speaker, the economy is getting weaker and weaker and in spite of each new budget, the result is increasingly deplorable. The government should realize that the time has come to change our economic policy. It is not good enough to hope that the difficulties will disappear by themselves without any action on the part of the government. They will certainly not disappear if the control of the economy remains in the hands of banks and large corporations. The government should think about the individuals, the consumers, the small and medium businesses and the small investors. Those are the people who need jobs and who must work and benefit from lower prices. The government should assume its responsibilities by introducing a policy for lower income groups and for banks, and not for banks and large corporations.

The government welcomed foreign goods on the Canadian market, firstly by making them accessible to the Canadian buyer. This was done by reducing tariffs, seemingly to fight inflation. What has this brought to Canadians as a whole? First, it has made it impossible for Canadian producers to compete. It has resulted in a number of plants closing down across the country, thereby increasing unemployment. This afternoon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) commended the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Loiselle) for his marvelous work. We shall see the result of this Thursday next, when the Minister will announce his policy proposals for the shoe industry or the textile industry.

Mr. Speaker, it will be my pleasure to commend the hon. member for Chambly, and also the Minister of Finance, if the latter decides once and for all to give an edge to Canadian industry and Canadian corporations rather than foreign producers, so that our manufacturers might some day make a come back and give jobs to our Canadian workers.

We have a very low productivity level compared to our neighbours to the South. But if the government increases tariffs, the Canadian profit margin will be significantly increased and our manufacturers will be able in the future to supply our Canadian markets. Of course Canadians must accept inflationary measures, but unemployment is a much more serious problem than prices and this would certainly solve serious problems. But if the inflow of foreign goods continues, we will lose our Canadian industries that used to have a potential for innovation and development.

Mr. Speaker, the Globe and Mail of 21 March, 1977 had this to say, and I quote:

> Canada is now faced with the highest foreign debt in the Western world. Average wages and salaries in the industrial sector are now the highest in the world, and our exports are declining. We now hold a world record for the number of hours lost per thousand employees because of strikes and labour disputes: we are losing five times more man-hours per thousand employees than Britain. In Canada, average wages and salaries increased 14 per cent last year, almost double the rate in the United States. In Canada, the cost of labour per unit of production has increased more than 50 per cent since 1972, compared to 20 per cent only in the United States. This was reflected in our productivity. We had a $10 billion trade deficit in the manufacturing sector last year. Last month's increase in the money supply, a major cause of inflation, represented an annual growth of 22.8 per cent.

● (2102)

Mr. Speaker, you will agree that this administration makes us wonder seriously about the future.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, on March 29 last, the same daily published some very revealing figures in an editorial concerning Canada's public debt. Indeed, it said, and again I quote:

> As at present, as far as getting the economy going again, one can say that our governments did not make things easy. The direct public debt servicing charges increased by 120 per cent in the last five years—135 per cent at the federal level and 100 per cent at the provincial and municipal levels. The annual load supported by every Canadian worker increased from $444.44 for the fiscal year 1971-72 to $822.92 for the fiscal year ending—

—for the month of March.

> The total cost last year stood at $7.9 million; so much money for debt servicing alone.

—for the year 1976.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time the government, when it reads such things, adopted or at least tried to use the system the Social Credit Party of Canada has been advocating for several years. For several years we have been calling for a guaranteed minimum income for all Canadians. When the concept of a guaranteed mimimum income was proposed by the Social Credit Party of Canada, it was often thought that the government had the right to accept or reject the proposals made by the Social Credit Party of Canada but once again, and now more than ever, because the government is trying to accept those proposals, the guaranteed minimum income is fundametal. The payment to every member of our society of an adequate income to meet fundamental needs is not a government favour that can be given or taken away according to the decisions of a few individuals in power. In fact, the guaranteed minimum income is an individual right, and in any healthy, modern economy, that right is irrevocable.

We must admit that the philosophy behind the income distribution methods now in use is fundamentally barbaric compared with the attitude that existed in civilized societies. From 1974 to 1976, Mr. Speaker, we saw such job creation programs as the Local Initiatives Program, Young Canada Works and just recently Canada Works. At the same time, the rate of unemployment went from 5 per cent to nearly 8 per cent. The rate of unemployment among those between 18 and 24 was about 8.2 per cent in 1974. At the end of 1976, it was more than 14 per cent. Each year, more and more people enter the labour market at a time when this government can offer them either social welfare or temporary jobs.

It is the small businessmen and manufacturers in Canada who must increase their production to create jobs for our young people. However, Mr. Speaker, two things are necessary before Canadian industries can expand. First of all, the Canadian government must protect our market for our producers by raising, as I was saying a while ago, the customs tariff, thus protecting our producers against the entry of foreign goods. It must also lower the interest rate of the Bank of Canada which fluctuates now around 9 or 10 per cent. Now more than ever before, Mr. Speaker, and I intend to conclude with this remark tonight, I feel—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, in the motion he introduced this afternoon, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) states in section (b), and I quote:

(b) that the votes allocated by the government to the Canada Works programs are not sufficient to create enough jobs to overcome the massive and persistent unemployment which is especially severe among the 18 to 30 age group . . .

Mr. Speaker, this is true. I entirely agree. The Canada Works programs have not been designed to solve the problems of the unemployed in the 18 to 30 age group. I think that part of the motion of the hon. member for Rimouski is true, but there is also an extremely important matter which the government should consider as soon possible.

Last Sunday a program on the CBC French network gave us an indication of the enormous problems met by young people seeking employment in several countries of the world. For example, we were shown that France as well as Italy, Germany, the United States and most industrialized countries have not succeeded in finding sufficient jobs for the young people 18 to 30 age group graduating from colleges, universities, technical schools and so forth. And what can we say about those in some countries in the world who do not have the privilege to be educated or to further their education? Therefore it becomes very hard for that group of young people to find openings in the labour force.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is a catastrophic, disastrous and dramatic situation because I have the privilege and the honour to represent in the House a riding which has many young people. There are two universities, two junior colleges, ten-odd education establishments which produce bachelors, masters and doctors every year, as well as graduates from technical schools who have countless difficulties finding employment in this region. Too often they have to leave the Sherbrooke area to seek work on large markets such as Montreal, Quebec City or Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, it is ever more difficult to accept that situation for the simple reason that those who are born in a given region and who have roots there do not want to work elsewhere. So, we can hardly accept the fact that they must leave their region after having obtained a bachelor or a master degree for the simple reason that many of them, having taken up studies paid for by their parents or even the state, find themselves without work after some fifteen or twenty years.

Mr. Speaker, even against that background I would like to bring a glimmer of hope which has recently come to us from the government. As everyone knows, nearly five years ago the Canadian government decided to decentralize some federal departments and transfer them to other regions of the country where the economy was at a low ebb. One of these decentralizations was announced in October; following Moncton, Matane, Bathurst in New Brunswick and two or three places in western Canada, it has been decided to move the mapping section of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to Sherbrooke.

Needless to say, the people of Estrie and Sherbrooke in particular greeted with joy this government decision because it is a section that requires advanced skills and, accordingly, the fact that we have in this Quebec area, in Sherbrooke, two universities, one English and one French, two junior colleges and several institutions of learning, makes it a well designated place for this type of decentralization. It will enable many of our future graduates to look forward to finding in our region the type of jobs tailored to their skills.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that the government's decision provided that between 750 and 1,000 jobs would be decentralized. It means that nearly 1,000 public servants now in Ottawa, of which 75 per cent are English-speaking and 25 per cent French-speaking, would move into our region. But within a decade or a dozen years, the linguistic breakdown of that decentralization would nearly reflect the breakdown we now find in the region and which is the opposite of what it will be at the beginning, that is about 25 per cent English-speaking and about 75 per cent French-speaking.

Mr. Speaker, members opposite as well as government members and people in several corners of the country have often asked the government to decentralize several federal departments in order to bring them a little closer to people and not to centralize all the government operations in Ottawa.

We know that a number of countries with a federal structure have already undertaken this kind of decentralization. In the United States for example, they do not get all cartographic material from Washington but from Denver, Colorado, and a number of other federal departments and agencies are not necessarily centralized in the federal capital.

Mr. Speaker, due to these circumstances, the young people of our district who graduated from our two universities or our two junior colleges or from other private or public institutions had in the past to go into exile, to go to larger centres. I find encouraging to see that this decentralization program will give a bigger number of qualified young people the opportunity to stay in the Eastern Townships area.

There is also another point which has been raised by several hon. members today. I am referring to the fact that, apart from a few very fragmental and too often temporary programs, there are no specific programs for young people. Consequently, what happens too often is that they work for a few months and after that they have to pass from a Canada Works program to a Young Canada Works Program, a LIP program or an Opportunities for Youth Program, as has been the case during the last few years.

Of course, these initiatives are very commendable but I humbly suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the federal and provincial governments must concentrate more and more on the problem of unemployment among the 18 to 30 age group because unless they find some lasting and not temporary measures to correct this situation, I believe it might bring about some disruption in our society, as in several European societies and in particular in developing countries.

Mr. Speaker, paragraph (a) of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) deals with the areas of footwear and textiles which have not been sufficiently protected in recent years. One must say that the federal government has intervened at least 22 times since 1970 in an attempt to correct or solve some problems which have arisen in the textile area. Of course, I for one feel there were too many interventions and if more specific and long range measures had been taken in some cases it seems to me they would not have had to intervene so many times. But I think one must render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and recognize that some government interventions were beneficial to textiles as well as to those areas which are often designated as soft sectors.

In the past year, for instance, there were proposals made by the Minister of Finance who was then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. They had some success. Even today I was talking to some textile labour leaders and they told me all their problems were not solved but that the arrangements and measures taken last year by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had brought about some positive results. And the new minister announced less than three weeks ago that the measures which had been taken in the fall would be applied for some time so that the textile industry will be more protected.

However, Mr. Speaker, I had many occasions to rise in the House on this textile issue. At least five years ago, I had the privilege to deliver in the House my first speech which incidentally dealt with the textile industry and I feel some of the proposals I had advocated at that time are still worth considering.

I proposed, then, that the Canadian Textile and Clothing Commission become a permanent commission. All textile workers agree that the Canadian Textile and Clothing Commission, when asked to table reports concerning certain problems brought to its attention, has tabled very good reports indeed. Immediate action has been taken.

However, we must also admit that the Commission is not a permanent one and is too often asked to inquire into this or that particular problem. The Commission complies, prepares a report and hands it in to the government. This means that when we think there is a problem the Commission simply agrees. Therefore, it takes action much too late; it is a little bit like a coroner who only comes in to state someone is dead.

I submit very humbly that if the Canadian Textile and Clothing Commission were a permanent commission, it could very easily monitor the general orientation of the market and make proposals to the government which would make it possible to solve some of the problems in the textile industry without frequent government interventions.

At that time, I suggested that the Textile and Clothing Board should be permanent. In my humble opinion, it is a suggestion which should be seriously considered. The second suggestion derives from the first one, it is that no textile import licence should be granted unless the Textile and Clothing Board can discuss that import licence, that is whether the licence is directly competing with some fabrics made in this country and that in granting the licence, the Canadian textile industry could be hurt badly. So I think that the Canadian Textile and Clothing Board would give great assistance to all Canadian textile industries if it could advise the federal government that the import licence requested by such or such company would likely hurt Canadian industry. That was the second suggestion I made.

The third suggestion—brought forward on many occasions by labour leaders, particularly by the CSD last year—is that we should guarantee a place on the Canadian market to Canadian producers. At the present time, there are so many statistics issued by the Canadian Textile and Clothing Board as well as by unions and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that we wonder whether it is 40, 50 or 60 per cent of the Canadian market which belongs to Canadian manufacturers. In my humble opinion, we should be a little clearer with statistics, whether Canadian manufacturers could take 75 per cent, let us say 75 per cent or maybe 85 per cent, because I do not know any developed country which does not produce at least 85 per cent of all its textiles for domestic consumption. So it seems to me that 75 per cent of the Canadian market would allow Canadian manufacturers to stabilize the textile industry.

Mr. La Salle: I agree with you.

Mr. Pelletier: I see the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) agrees with me. Those are three recommendations concerning the textile industry which could be discussed by the government because in my opinion the textile sector is very difficult. In the area that I am pleased to represent in this House, that sector has faced many difficulties in the past, but it has been there for about a century and it will not disappear overnight. To take this troubled sector out of its present problems, it should be guaranteed at least 75 per cent of the market.

Mr. La Salle: Come on, give him support; he is the only one to defend himself!

Mr. Pelletier: For the information of the hon. member for Joliette, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I am not the only one; there are other members who wanted to speak, in particular the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier), and deal with this problem today. There are at least ten members, a committee within our caucus, who made a serious study of this question and have often presented their recommendations.

Mr. La Salle: At long last!

Mr. Pelletier: As I said earlier some twenty measures have been adopted following the representations made by members within our caucus. I am not saying that the opposition has not contributed to that study—but I have to conclude these few remarks: I believe that the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Rimouski will give some of the members the opportunity to realize some of the economic problems of our regions. To sum up, I must say that the decision of the government to decentralize some departments in our region has very important consequences, and is a matter of urgency, for the simple reason that we will need eventually to recruit young people, and as there is high unemployment among those aged from 18 to 30, this decentralization will allow us to absorb some of these qualified young people who will not have to go to other Canadian cities or other regions to work.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to seriously consider, especially in connection with the textile, footwear and clothing industries, the possible transformation of the Textile and Clothing Board into a permanent commission; also, before issuing an import permit for textile and clothing, the Textile and Clothing Board should advise the government of the possible consequences such permit might have, and finally, some formula should be devised to ensure our manufacturers at least a 75 per cent share of the Canadian market.

Mr. La Salle: That would be fine!

Mr. Pelletier: I am not a financial expert, Mr. Speaker, but I humbly submit that only a very small number of businessmen will be interested in investing in this sector if the government must constantly step in to prevent this or that country from dumping its textiles on the Canadian market, because when businessmen are not quite sure where they stand from a financial point of view, and when they cannot be assured in advance of a market, they find it very difficult to decide whether to invest or not.

[English]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I thank you for giving me an opportunity to take a small part in this debate. I begin by saying, without any hesitation or equivocation whatsoever, that this country is in a mess. Page 20 of today's Citizen carries the headline: "Effigy of Trudeau Burned by Unemployed Workers". That is the message which the people of Canada are bringing home to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

I want to congratulate the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) for moving this motion which does make sense, notwithstanding what the parliamentary secretary from Scarborough West has said. Let me summarize what the four paragraphs of the motion have to say. First, it says "this House deplores that the government", etc. It continues "that the votes allocated by the government to the Canada Works programs are not sufficient"; thirdly, "that no serious action has been taken to reduce interest rates"; and lastly, "that the economic methods now in use are no longer suitable".

The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) must be looking for promotion because he says we are spending an inordinate amount of time on the economy. Mr. Speaker, this is what this nation is all about—a viable, healthy economy, which has been destroyed by the policies of the government. That is what we are talking about here. As long as the government proceeds in the direction it has been taking, we will be getting up every other day to strike home.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), who is sitting opposite, is part and parcel of the agreement whereby the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) almost sold the steel industry down the river. Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker. It is not a question of spending an inordinate amount of time on anything; this is a very important subject affecting the lives of millions of people.

The parliamentary secretary said that the news was brighter. That is a typical reply from a parliamentary secretary who is looking for promotion. But he did go on to say that there was some little problem with the manufacturing industry. The manufacturing industry is about $10 billion going on $11 billion in the hole, and some 200,000 workers are adversely affected. I know the parliamentary secretary would not deliberately mislead the House, and I would not use any such language, but after saying that the manufacturing industry was in trouble, he forgot to point out, as the motion says, that the textile industry is in trouble, that the shoe industry is in trouble, that the clothing industry is in trouble, that the furniture industry is in trouble. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but the mining industry, the construction industry, the fishing industry, the forest industry, and the tourist industry are all in trouble.

Then the parliamentary secretary had the gall to talk about the Export Development Corporation, in connection with which questions are being raised concerning their pumping money into Venezuela and the United States of America in order to undermine our steel industry.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Nonsense!

Mr. Alexander: The Minister of Labour says "nonsense", but my time is limited, Mr. Speaker. I hear that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is very concerned about what is happening in the nation. Like the great Messiah, he is on his way to look into the problems of the nation and to find solutions. Today's issue of the Journal has this headline: "Much Further Ahead; Economic Solution Is Closer—Trudeau". Having been away for two or three days talking to a few premiers, the last being Premier Regan—incidentally, the report blasts him too—all of a sudden the Prime Minister says that an economic solution is closer. The report goes on to say we are going to have a first ministers' conference some time in February.

On July 12 of this year, Mr. Speaker, I thought the need for a first ministers' conference was of such importance that I should bring it home to the Prime Minister. Let me read the first motion on the order paper of that day, to be found at page 7567 of Hansard. I said:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity related to the unacceptable, frightening and shocking figures on unemployment released this date. Given the fact that, including the hidden jobless, this country now faces an actual unemployment rate of 11.5 per cent, or in other words over 1.3 million Canadians are out of work which in effect costs this country $17 million a day in lost GNP and $6 million a day in unemployment insurance, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

● (2132)

That the Prime Minister immediately take steps to convene a first ministers' conference to deal with the critical problems of high unemployment and unsatisfactory real growth, hopefully to reverse the banana republic-like image this country presently enjoys.

Mr. Breau: What happened to that motion?

Mr. Alexander: An hon. member opposite is asking me what happened to that motion. The Liberals voted it down. The Liberals said no. The Liberals indicated that they did not want a first ministers' conference. I should not get carried away with the remarks of a backbencher.

I should like to refer to what the Prime Minister said. He said that the federal government is taking its responsibilities and so are the provinces. Also he indicated that at this stage the bringing together of the two would have no effect beyond that of satisfying me.

Back in July we on this side were telling the Prime Minister to get off his what-you-may-call-it.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Now we are hearing from the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): What about industrial peace?

Mr. Alexander: Industrial peace is something this country requires, desires, and should have. The Minister of Labour should get on the ball and bring about some meaningful solutions for the problems besetting industry and labour. If that were done, perhaps the problem with the Japanese would be non existent. No matter what the minister says about the number of days lost because of strikes, the question remains that there is no confidence in this country. The Minister of Labour should get on a Lear jet, or any other form of transportation, and go to Japan to give them the same message he is giving Canadians about days lost because of strikes.

When I think of the problems Canada has faced in the past nine or ten years, I wonder why so many Canadian people want this government to continue in office. The government has destroyed the country and its initiative, and our image is at an all-time low. Farmers are alienated, senior citizens are alienated, and youth are alienated. Labour people are mad at the Minister of Labour because he was less than honest with them in terms of wage and price controls. Industry has been hamstrung by the introduction of wage and price controls without notice. This has destroyed initiative and does not allow industry to be more productive.

What is happenning to my country? Where are we going? What is in the future? Suddenly the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) realized that the March, 1977 budget was a disaster. Members on this side of the House kept telling the government that. It replied by asking us to wait until the new measures took effect. That was its usual answer, and the government is still waiting for that to happen. In the meantime the present Minister of Finance, the supposed new messiah, bootlegged in a new budget. It was not called a budget, but it was a budget in any event. People are looking for something. They want to know what a budget really means. In my humble opinion, a budget should set a course of positive direction in terms of hope for the future. Is there any hope in this country as a result of his speech? I see a Liberal member laughing behind the curtains. He is aware that no one has any hope in terms of that speech.

When a budget is brought in, or when a speech that can be called a budget is brought in, people want to believe it will bring about a feeling of confidence in the economy. Is there any confidence in the economy as a result of that speech? No, there is none whatsoever.

Mr. Breau: Five point two per cent.

Mr. Alexander: Now that hon. Liberal member is talking about the 5.2 per cent. That is what is known as the manipulation of figures dishonestly.

Mr. Breau: What do you call 292,000 jobs?

Mr. Alexander: It was hoped the budget would create a climate for confidence in the government. What kind of confidence is evident when one picks up the Ottawa Citizen and sees in half inch print: "Effigy of Trudeau Burned by Unemployed Workers"? That is indicative of the confidence present in Canada.

One would expect this type of budgetary action to address itself to the needs of Canadians. Is Your Honour aware of what was in that speech? The former minister of finance made a mistake in terms of taking away the proceeds of insurance policies on the deaths of the owners. Is that what is called looking after the needs of Canadians? That provision attacked widows and the children of deceased until all hell broke loose. Suddenly the new minister, as is usually the case, realized a boo-boo had been made, and withdrew it.

This government attacks those who cannot help themselves. I remember when the senior citizens were told to get out of the work force. They were not allowed unemployment insurance benefits. They were sent out to pasture and told to do whatever they could, because the government was through with them. That is what the government does for people.

Mr. Breau: Not me.

Mr. Alexander: I hear the Liberal member saying, "Not me". I will give him credit. He had guts enough to vote against the bill. The government brought in a monstrous policy known as spouse's allowance. I see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is interested in what I am saying. The government gave some poor spouse some money, as long as the husband or the wife was 65 years of age. The moment the husband or wife died, that money was taken back. Is that looking after the needs of Canadians?

I referred to these few illustrations in order to have the record show that there is something wrong with the thinking of Canadians when they still believe the Prime Minister is the saviour of this country. That is the biggest mistake that has ever been made. Trudeau Liberals have destroyed the country, and now the Prime Minister is walking around looking for solutions to problems created by his party and no one else. These problems were created during the past eight or nine years this inept government has been in power.

What did we get out of the minister's speech? There was a clear admission that the last March budget was a complete disaster. Up until October 20 we were told to wait until the budgetary pronouncements came into effect, but that never came about. Now we have a new mini-budget. The former minister of finance, who has now gone to pasture—

An hon. Member: They shed them every two years.

Mr. Alexander: Yes, ministers of finance are shed every two years. We heard the constructive criticisms of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) during the past few days.

An hon. Member: Why don't you get your own TV show?

Mr. Alexander: Don't get carried away. The present Minister of Finance has indicated that the former minister of finance was wrong in computing the rate of inflation, the effects of wage and price controls, the rate of unemployment, the revenues to be taken in, and the staggering deficit. What did his speech really indicate? In my humble opinion it indicated a few things. It indicated that the government is bankrupt of ideas. Here is a government that is reluctant to accept the advice of economic experts such as the Economic Council of Canada, the Conference Board in Canada, and the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, all respected bodies which have been giving the government advice for years, advice which has been thrown out the window and disregarded by the government.

● (2142)

What else does that speech indicate? It gave us further evidence that the government has outlived its usefulness. I do not say that lightly, Mr. Speaker; I am very serious because I know what this business is all about. I have been around here for eight or nine years and I think it is time that we got rid of those rascals. They are nothing but rascals who have been misleading the people. I cannot forget the time when they went into the 1974 election and the Minister of Labour, who is my buddy, my friend—but I must say that—was less than honest. They went into that election and said that wage and price controls did not work in the United States and did not work in Great Britain, that the Tories were going to freeze people's wages and that they would have none of that. That is what they did to me in Hamilton. That is what they did to all of us around the country.

You know what happened, Mr. Speaker? I was elected because the people did not fall for it completely. They will not forget that election. The thing is that you can only fool the people once, not twice, although I might be mistaken. Those rascals are still over there, but time moves on. All we can say is that through inequities and mismanagement of the economy the government has brought this country to its knees. As I said earlier, those who can least afford to fight back are the hardest hit, and I am talking in particular about the unemployed.

Mr. Parent: What will you do with the 292,000 jobs?

M. Alexander: I do not know what the hon. member means when he refers to the 292,000 jobs, but the fact is that those very people who have met the Prime Minister have told him they do not want welfare, they want jobs. The government is not creating enough jobs. Here we have a report on the effigy of the Prime Minister being burned by the unemployed workers. That is the message. Never mind what the Liberal backbencher is saying. What the government has said in effect to the unemployed, is "I'm O.K., Jack; look after yourself".

An hon. Member: Not so.

Mr. Alexander: There he goes again. The Minister of Labour is interjecting again. I do not know why he does that; perhaps he is jealous of my success. He is trying to destroy a good speech. He does not like it because I pointed my finger at him and said he was less than honest with the Canadian people in the 1974 election. All I know is that we have had ample evidence of callous disregard for the plight of the unemployed. Do not take only my word for it, Mr. Speaker.

I want to put on the record some of the musings of our beloved Prime Minister, and I will head it "Trudeau on Unemployment". I have to do it that way because that is how it is written. I know my time is running out, Mr. Speaker, but I will read it so quickly it will make you blanch. On March 25, 1977, he said:

If it's just a job you want, my heart does not bleed for you.

Also on the same date he said:

If they don't like it here, let them find another country where they could use university graduates.

On March 11, 1972, he said:

We can be obsessed with unemployment.

Mrs. Campagnolo: They are all one-liners.

Mr. Alexander: They are all facts. They are one-liners but they are devastating. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mrs. Campagnolo) is talking about one-liners. That is all that is needed to destroy you people—one-liners. Let me give you the last one-liner. The Prime Minister said on October 8, 1977:

Unemployment is not as bad as some people out there want to pretend it is.

Thank you for you patience, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allowed the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this has been a very good debate and I think we owe a vote of thanks to the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) for bringing this motion forward. We have been listening for some time to the jibes of the previous speaker in reference to statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about unemployment not being bad. A member across the way referred to 285,000 jobs. Yes, there are that many jobs for 1,300,000 people.

Mr. Lefebvre: You have it all wrong.

Mr. Peters: It is very hard to sort it out, but if there are that many new jobs, there are still 1,300,000 people looking for work. It is true that the population grows. In very few places is there zero growth in population. The member brought this out.

This has been a very interesting debate because for the first time many members have admitted that there are problems in the country. It was the first time I have heard members on the other side say they have problems. I was interested to hear some members say they have problems with the footwear industry and the textile industry, and that there were problems in Quebec. It was also interesting to hear the Conservatives say that these problems will not be solved by another handout to the corporations, to big business, in the form either of tax concessions or outright grants. This seems odd, because tomorrow in the debate which takes place here in the House we will be hearing the government saying that there is nothing wrong with the economy and that there is no unemployment, these problems do not exist.

The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), as I understood it, said that it was an excellent thing that we should give money away through the Export Development Corporation so as to create jobs in Canada.

Mr. Martin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member referred to a comment I made. I did not make any reference whatsoever to the fact that the Export Development Corporation was giving money away which, of course, is a ridiculous comment.

Mr. Peters: Then they lend it instead of giving it away. What the hon. member said was that this has created 3,000 manufacturing jobs for the money we have expended in Indonesia, and 1,100 jobs for the money that we lent Guatemala. Then he said that this was considerably more advantageous than the situation in Sudbury where 3,000 people were laid off because of what happened in Indonesia and Guatemala. It was interesting to hear the minister speak in the Standing Committee on Agriculture this morning. I will paraphrase him because he is fairly long winded, and what he says has to be boiled down somehow.

Mrs. Campagnolo: There are some others I know who are also long winded.

Mr. Peters: Unquestionably there are some others. What he said this morning was that they could not regulate tariffs and they were having great difficulty in Geneva at the tariff conference because there were not only tariffs to deal with. Although the tariffs were published in the United States, there were so many other kinds of assistance that it was not possible to keep up with those to the same extent you can with simple matters like tariffs. I gathered that that also was the real complaint about the textile industry.

If we play under certain rules with other countries which do not play under the same rules, we will be at a great disadvantage. We have been fairly stupid in our negotiations with other countries. We must have been fairly stupid in negotiating the pipeline agreement which was recently arrived at with the United States. The Prime Minister now says that we will be able to produce the pipe in Canada if we can compete. If we put that together with what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was implying this morning, we come to the conclusion that we are not going to be able to compete and that we will not have jobs in the steel industry, in the textile industry, or even in some segments of the agricultural industry.

It is time we really looked at what is happening. That is why I say we owe a vote of thanks to the hon. member for Rimouski for bringing this motion forward. This is the first time I have heard Liberal backbenchers say that there are problems which should be discussed. I was pleased to hear them say that there is a committee composed of Liberal members studying the problems of the textile industry in the province of Quebec. However, I am sure their votes on Bill C-11 will not indicate that they have any concern or that they see anything wrong in what is happening. I think that is part of the reason we have a major problem in the province of Quebec.

Hon. members to my left—in a philosophical sense I would say they are probably on my right—to a large extent represent rural segments of Quebec. To me they are the only honest representatives of the province of Quebec because they speak for the people of Quebec and their problems. The problems are very simple.

There are really only three or four segments of our population which produce wealth. They are not in the manufacturing industry. They are in the primary industries. They are in the mining industry, which is being hit very hard. It is not being helped by the financial institutions of this country. Financial stability is not being brought to their problems to allow them to raise capital for investment.

Numerous bankruptcies are taking place every month in the forest industry. It is very difficult to maintain a stable market for the primary producer. That is happening in our fisheries as well as in agriculture.

The rest of the people of Canada are parasites on the 500,000 workers in primary industries, and if we do not examine the problems of basic producers and study how to help them, we will have a great deal of difficulty developing our manufacturing industry and all the other industries which have to compete with the rest of the world. We do not appear to be doing very well at all.

The Minister of Labour is here tonight. I understand he received a brief the other day from communications workers

Mr. Alexander: And he ignored it.

Mr. Peters: He may have ignored it, but I am not really sure there is anything he could do about it. It will take all the minister's cabinet colleagues to do something for these 30,000 workers. These workers pointed out problems to the minister about which I have known for some time. When you allow a corporation to automate and when you give it more money than it can spend, it is going to automate, and that will mean fewer jobs. When a company automates, much of its production can be farmed out, so it goes into the business of contracting.

Bill C-11 would provide another $1.2 billion to help companies expand. Many of these companies already have profits which allow them to do any expansion necessary, and they now find themselves in a position where they can expand not only in this country but in other countries as well. We are providing them with other moneys from the Export Development Corporation to allow them to buy production from Canada, and that production is only production machinery to use in other operations. That will cut the throats of workers in this country. If there were not a potential for developing nickel in Guatemala or Indonesia, we would not be lending those countries the moneys we are lending them so that they can buy production machinery for properties which are owned and controlled by Canadian multinational corporations, and so that they can cut our throats and lay off workers in primary industries here.

There must be a dozen secondary workers for every primary worker in this country. Perhaps there are more, and when we lose 3,000 jobs in Sudbury we are not only losing those 3,000 jobs but we are also losing all the ancillary jobs which are connected with primary production.

The telecommunications workers told the minister the other day that the effect of the changes which have taken place is bad for them. Canadian employment in Northern Telecom will have declined by approximately 4,000 people in the three year period from the end of 1974 to the end of 1977. The telecommunications workers estimate the total reduction in Canadian employees in 1977 alone will be almost 1,200 people. There will be a cut-back in the installation forces of over 400 more people before the end of 1977.

Office staff of Northern Telecom in Quebec, represented by the COEU, fell from 2,600 in 1971 to 1,412 in 1977. They informed the minister that because of high Canadian productivity Northern Telecom increased its profits by 71 per cent from 1970 to 1976, compared with the national average of 20.8 per cent. These profits, they indicate, have been used to establish factories in other countries. In the United States those plants are usually in low wage, non-union areas, and they find the situation now where the company brings in telephone housings from Northern Telecom plants in Ireland and Tennessee, cross-bar frames from Turkey, and fuses from Malaysia.

During the same period Northern Telecom received substantial assistance from Canadian governments. In the last five years Northern Telecom has received approximately $11 million in duty remissions and grants for such things as research and development. It also received over $200 million in loan assistance and guarantees from the Export Development Corporation. The tax cuts for corporations in the last federal budget will result in about another $4 million gift to this multinational in 1977.

Does the Minister of Labour not talk to his colleagues? It might be a good idea to have people doing menial work, but if we automate to the point where there are no people working, what will we do? Will we put them on welfare or some other dole, or will we provide them with other jobs in other industries? We can pick up any newspaper and read that Canadian National or Canadian Pacific have run out of tracks. We all know how much profit they make. They are huge multinational corporations. One is government-owned and one is privately owned, but they are huge corporations with many subsidiaries now operating not only in Canada but in other countries as well. They need rails from coast to coast, and if we were to re-establish railroads and put in rails we would have people working in steel factories, in mines, and in all the ancillary industries which are involved in the process of replacing rails. That is one example, but if we allow automation to create huge profits for development in other countries which can then be used against us, our difficulties will continue.

● (2202)

The members on the government side who spoke today dealt with the textile industry. Mr. Speaker, you can go into a store here and buy a shirt for $7 or $8 which could be made in Taiwan, Malaysia, Korea or Hong Kong. You can also go to some of the major stores and buy a labelled shirt, and if you look at it closely you will find it also was made in one of those countries but probably costs $25. It is the same shirt. It is much better for Simpson's, say, to buy their shirts in Korea than in Canada because they can make more profit on them. There is something wrong with a system that allows this to happen.

An hon. Member: They don't pay their workers.

Mr. Peters: Our Canadian workers are well paid, it is true, but it is a myth that they are not well paid in other countries. I was in Japan and found that a worker there gets 15 cents an hour, but was told that he has the use of a car, has a coloured television and all the things that workers have here. In some cases he has even more because his hospitalization is paid, so is his holiday, and children's education. It is a myth to say they are only paid 15 cents an hour. If that is so it must be equivalent to our $15 or $20 per day, because they have the same standard of living. Members should travel to those countries and then would be able to compare conditions.

Many of these countries have trading companies, and they trade in a totally different way from us. I think it is time the government looked at their methods. Jean-Luc Pépin, a former cabinet minister who has been seconded to several other menial tasks since he left here, when he was minister of industry, trade and commerce tried to persuade the government to set up a trading bloc on behalf of Canadian industries and workers. Members who can hear and see and think should consider the small seeds in the chaff of the speeches of the Minister of Agriculture, and the one today in which he indicated there is no point in playing around in Geneva with GATT and tariff arrangements because the countries we deal with have much more sophisticated ways of subsidizing the products we import and do not run into the difficulties into which Canadian exporters run.

I think this has been a good debate, Mr. Speaker. It is one of the few occasions when Liberal members have had guts enough to speak for their constituents and point out some of our problems. I hope that in debate on Bill C-11 they will continue on the course they have embarked upon today, and that they will recommend to the government some of the changes proposed today which, I believe, would result in a lessening of the unemployment and misery it is causing to all segments of this country.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is with some pleasure that I rise to join in the debate this evening. It affords me the opportunity to deal with comments made by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) who got all fired up a few minutes ago. He presented a lot of information to the House that he wanted to pass off as the truth, while at the same time chastising members on this side for allegedly telling half-truths. I shall try to put the record straight or at least present the opposite side of the coin that the hon. member would not have exposed.

Mr. Alexander: When he says something I will listen.

Mr. Daudlin: My hon. friend interjects that when I say something he will listen. I did him the courtesy of trying to listen to what he was trying to tell the House, and found he had nothing to say. I must have heard five or ten times, and the record will show this tomorrow, that this government, in his view, destroyed the economy. My friend tried to save him from his own problem. He tried to indicate to him on a number of occasions that since January of this year the government had created 292,000 jobs. But he did not want to be confused by the facts. He said "Quiet. Leave me alone. I do not want to know that."

● (2207)

The hon. member said this government had destroyed the economy, forgetting that we had reduced the rate of unemployment in his own province. He did not want that kind of information on the record. The hon. member conveniently forgot what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) had to say in terms of heads of households and what happened to the rate of employment vis-à-vis that particular sector of our economy.

That hon. member is a prime example of what speakers on this side of the House, particularly the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), had indicated, in that all he could speak about was what was going wrong with the economy, what terrible things were happening, creating the impression for the entire country that everything was wrong. If the hon. member ever acknowledges that something is right, I will be so surprised as to go over and congratulate him. However, I do not expect him ever to say anything is right. I suppose he in turn will never expect me to say anything is wrong.

I invite the hon. member to stay with me a few moments because I want to mention a few things that are not quite right, but they are not all bad. My friend and others this evening talked about the Export Development Corporation, saying it is a terrible thing. They do not seem to be able to comprehend that 3,000 man-years is a good thing and, if that had not been done, those 3,000 man-years would have been lost to the Canadian economy.

My friend is indicating that he is going to leave, still not wanting to know what is good in what is happening. Unfortunately for him, that will be his loss.

Mr. Alexander: I will read it in Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Daudlin: The hon. member for Hamilton West stated that when he tried to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on July 12, 1977, the members on this side of the House said no and did not allow him to proceed with the motion. It is about time that those in the audience in our galleries and beyond the television cameras heard somebody tell what is happening with motions under Standing Order 43. They are an attempt by members opposite to put aside the debate of the day in order to bring up particular subjects or particular things that they believe, individually or as a party, should pre-empt everything going on in this House. They want to take charge of what is going on here.

It is time that people recognized we are acting responsibly when we say no, that we believe what is before the House is important and must be proceeded with. It is about time somebody stood up and said that, and here I am to do it.

My friend went on to say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in June or July, said it would have no effect to have discussions with the premiers of the provinces save to satisfy the hon. member on the other side. He then said the Prime Minister is now advising us that in fact we are going to have these meetings. Of course we are going to have these meetings. The premiers have now indicated they are prepared to do something constructive. They have agreed that something substantial is ready to happen. I guess my friend has never heard of timing. He has never heard that there is a time to strike and a time to sit down, to stand away and wait for the proper time. Until he learns that, he will continue to be on the side of the House opposite from which I now stand.

The hon. member indicated as well that farmers are alienated and the aged are alienated. I do not know what farmers he talked with. He certainly did not talk to the farmers in southern Ontario, who argue that in fact the prices for corn and soybean are low, that they should indeed be higher. But they also say that things are not bad, that things are adequate, that they are paying their bills, that they are able to sell, that they can find markets for what they are producing. They are saying that but for substantially increased yields this year there might have been difficulties. But they are not saying that it is because of the economic policies of the government that prices are so low. There are other reasons.

The hon. member is saying the aged are alienated. The aged in my riding are saying, "We are now putting money away." They say, "Some of us are embarrassed that we cannot spend all the money we get from our pensions and the supplementary amount given us." They are saying that for the first time in their lives they have savings accounts. They are also saying that some members of the opposition should realize that old age pensions are not there to give them the only payment from which they make their living. They are saying to me, "We intended to put money aside and we did put money aside, and what we are getting is supplemental to what we have put away for our old age." We are thankful that these things are happening. Let us not forget that it was this government that put this program in place, and not some other.

This hon. member went on to say that the budget of last spring was a disaster. He chose to ignore the fact that there had been a 5.2 per cent real growth in the economy notwithstanding the difficulty we had in prevailing upon the opposition to assist us in passing those budget measures—we had to push, cajole and prod them into bringing the matter to a vote. The hon. member preferred to forget all that and pretend it did not happen.

He talked of hope. He said it was lost. He said the Canadian people no longer had any. Is that why he could not contest the statement by one of my hon. friends that the auto industry is looking forward to a better year? Is that why he could not say my hon. friend was wrong when he told us that the housing industry and the appliance industry were also expecting an increase in sales next year? The fact that we are looking forward to increased activity in those areas demonstrates that there is hope. I know that in my part of the country there is substantial hope, substantial recognition of the fact that this country is moving ahead and that the picture of abject destruction which the hon. member drew is not the correct one.

I found it interesting that the hon. member who spoke just before me, and who referred to the "stupidity" of making available the kind of assistance which the Economic Development Corporation provides, should be a member of a party which in 1974, as I recall, adopted, as a sort of watchword, the phrase "people first". I wonder why he now believes that assistance to Third World countries, while at the same time helping ourselves through the provision of some 4,100 man-years of employment in just two years, is stupid. Why is it stupid that we should assist ourselves and at the same time help Third World countries and recognize a social obligation beyond our own boundaries? I do not believe that sharing some of the wealth of this country in those circumstances is stupid. On the contrary, I think it is responsible. He also spoke about what went on in the agricultural committee hearing this morning.

I come now to the point I mentioned to my hon. friends. I should like to relate to hon. members an experience which occurred in my area this year. Hon. members know that among other things which are produced in my riding are cantaloupes. Highway 401 also crosses my constituency and along it moves a lot of the produce of southern Ontario on its way to Toronto and Montreal markets. Along this highway also moves products imported from the United States. I have been asking the government to consider taking the same action vis-à-vis the agricultural industry as it took for textiles and other products. Because this summer, when prices on the wholesale market in Toronto for cantaloupe were $14.75 for a basket of 20 quarts, producers of the same product in my riding were prepared to sell it for $4.25 per basket. But the Toronto market was listing products from Arizona, Texas and California only.

Why was this so, Mr. Speaker? It was not because the product was not available in Canada; it was because wholesale buyers, wanting some kind of guarantee of a 12 month supply, were telling the Canadian industry that unless they can produce cantaloupe 12 months in the year they did not want it. Thus the consumers of Toronto and Montreal had to pay a high price while the $4.25 product lay rotting in the fields of southwestern Ontario.

I think it is time consumers' associations picked up things like that and agreed with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that agriculture needs some kind of protection, be it by way of increased tariff, as recommended by the Tariff Board, or, as I have suggested on occasion, by guaranteeing a percentage of the Canadian market to Canadian growers before any kind of import licence is granted. This does not mean that an unrealistic price should be set for the Canadian product so that suddenly Canadian producers make an exorbitant amount of money. But if the Canadian producers of that simple little muskmelon could have been guaranteed this summer access to even 10 per cent of the Canadian market, these producers would have had the opportunity of selling all of the product in their fields. Not only that, but consumers would have benefited by paying one third the price they were forced to pay for the out of country product, and extra work would have been provided for pickers in the fields of southern Ontario at a decent wage. In other words, all parties on all sides of the equation would have benefited.

Unlike my hon. friends on the other side of the House, I am not so sure that my pleas are going to go unheeded. I am satisfied there is going to be a response. I am also looking for the same kind of response to the pleas of the tomato paste industry which, if it were given the protection being offered by the recommendations of the Tariff Board, could produce as many as 1,000 jobs for southwestern Ontario.

One of the reasons hon. members on the opposite side get so exercised when members on this side appear to chastise the government is that hon. members opposite never get the opportunity to listen to members on this side talking to government ministers outside the Chamber. Hon. members opposite never get to see their suggestions come to fruition in the form of legislation They cry, call out, and cajole, negatively, except for one hon. member opposite who made a few positive recommendations tonight. Opposition members cry about our destroyed country and claim there is no hope, both of which are demonstrated to be without foundation. As long as the government is prepared to act responsibly, as it has done in the textile industry, I do not have to make false accusations.

● (2222)

The government has protected the producers of things like mushrooms, tomatoes as a raw product and canned tomatoes. It has acted responsibly in regard to the shoe industry, the bicycle industry and a host of others I could name. If the government continues to be prepared to respond in terms similar to the ones I raised tonight, I do not have to stand and make false accusations indicating the country's economy is destroyed. I can go to bed tonight assured that the producers are protected, a lot of new jobs will be created, and the problems will be dealt with. Come the next election we will find more hope in this country than hon. members opposite would like to think.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly have liked to have the floor for about twenty minutes. I thought it was understood right from the start that I would have about twenty minutes to close the debate. Unfortunately, I barely have six minutes left. However, the purpose of the motion which was put forward today was to call the attention of the general public and of the hon. members of the House to some specific aspects of our economy.

As the hon. member who spoke before me has just indicated, everything is for the best in the best of worlds, the government created 292,000 jobs, there is no problem but in his constituency, the agricultural production of last summer has not been bought because it was cheaper to buy from California. Furthermore, in spite of this day of debate, in spite of the speeches which have been made, I am forced to note that there are still some hon. members on the government side who, like the one who has just spoken before me, have not yet understood that our problems are a creation of the government. Today, we have to try to find solutions to those problems.

We hear about imports into our country, about massive imports, and the hon. member who spoke before me had that problem in his constituency, but has yet to realize that he and his government threw our doors wide open to import without setting any effective control over them. And that is why the motion we have presented today was directed against that government approach which led them to say: It is not our fault, but we are seeking solutions. The only hon. member on the other side of the House who has spoken intelligently is the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) when he recognized that we really face problems in the field of textiles.

He even admitted that just like the hon. members of the opposition, some members of his party had to make studies and urge the government to curb imports. He even proposed that 75 per cent of the overall production should be made in Canada before allowing imports. His speech was a little bit more intelligent than some others, but even then, as I told him while he was speaking, unhappily the cabinet of this government has yet to understand that sometimes ministers have to listen to members of the opposition or to hon. members on the other side of the House who dare stand up and ask the government: Where are the problems?

As we have indicated in the four sections of our motion today on the issue of imports, it is the government leaders themselves who have allowed those imports to enter our country without restriction, and today the Minister of Finance stated that next Thursday he will make a speech to announce certain restrictions. What he forgot to say is that he himself has allowed those imports to flood our markets. The second paragraph refers to Canada Works, which is simply a band-aid program. Money is used to try to reduce unemployment. There are over one million unemployed. In my constituency, the rate of unemployment has reached 14.5 percent. On the other hand, according to statistics, 58 percent of the manpower is working. That means that 42 percent is not. Since 14 percent are on unemployment, this means that 28 percent are starving to death.

I have already talked about the milk problem. I asked a question of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture and he told me: "We, the government members, have solved the problem." I suggest that they are also the ones who created the problem for farmers by setting quotas and allowing massive imports: 46 million pounds of cheese were imported in Canada last year. The same government, the same liberal members, like the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, allowed this to happen last year. Today, they say: "We are trying to solve the problems, we are looking for answers."

This is what we are trying to convince government members to do, to stop playing politics and saying they are solving problems when in fact they are creating them. It is about time that they accept the solutions proposed by the Social Credit, such as the one that we make in the third paragraph of the motion when we talk about interest-free loans to finance governments.

I received yesterday an answer to a question I asked concerning the interest rate paid by our country since January 1, 1976 because we are still one year behind on September 30, 1977, for nine months. The country paid $8,416,165 in interests alone. Mr. Speaker, if we realized what is suggested by Social Crediters, the financing of governments by interest free loans, under the present taxation system all that money could be reinvested in the Canadian economy. Mr. Speaker, those were the few comments I could make in six minutes. However I should like to continue as I have more to say. Briefly I wish to say that it is time that ministers recognize, as some backbenchers did today, that there are problems and that they must be solved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please! It being 10:30 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ST. ANDREW'S DAY

SUGGESTION THAT TARTAN BE WORN AND GAELIC GIVEN SPECIAL RECOGNITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of great importance. Whereas it is a known historical fact that more of the fathers of confederation had Gaelic as their mother tongue than either French or English and whereas it is important that Canadians retain the language, culture and traditions of their forefathers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) and the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie):

That on November 30, the feast day of St. Andrew, the patron saint of Scotland, special recognition be given to the Gaelic tongue and that the tartan be worn by all Scots and would-be Scots.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT CONCERNING REMOVAL OF PROGRAMS FROM THOSE NOT IN NEED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. On November 23, last week, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) struck fear into the hearts of many people with young families and into the hearts of many old age pensioners with her statement that she would take away old age pensions or family allowances from those who do not need universal programs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the minister take the first opportunity to make a statement on motions in order to explain specifically who in her view are the people who do not need universal programs and thereby allay the fears of those who do.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS TO SIX PER CENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

Whereas the assets of Canadian banks increased in the year ending October 31, 1977 by more than 20 per cent over the previous year, and whereas after tax profits of Canadian banks increased by substantially more than the six per cent increase being allowed in wages and salaries by the government's anti-inflation program, be it therefore resolved that this parliament urges the government and the Anti-Inflation Board to take steps to restrict the profits of Canadian banks to the same six per cent increase permitted to wage salary earners.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED STUDY OF MARKETING PULPWOOD IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that a great many farm producers derive part of their revenue from the production of pulpwood; that thousands of cords of pulpwood have been cut a year and even two years ago and have yet to be sold on account of the diminution of paper production, thus causing tremendous damage to producers as well as to the economy of this country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House recommend to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to consider seriously the marketing of this product to find the best ways and means to activate this sector of our economy.

Potatoes

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE MINISTRY

SUGGESTED CREATION OF CABINET COMMITTEE TO REPRESENT FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion.

Considering the growing concern among Francophones outside Quebec about a genuine federal program which would guarantee their cultural survival; considering that last October 27 the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) announced that he would soon introduce a global policy on minorities; and considering that the participation of the Federation of Francophones outside Quebec in drafting such a policy is essential, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House unanimously invite the minister in charge to create now a permanent commission within the Privy Council on which the Federation of Francophones outside Quebec would be officially represented.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED PROGRAM TO PROMOTE CONSUMPTION OF POTATOES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In view of the decreasing per capita consumption of potatoes in Canada in recent years to an average of 154 pounds during 1971-74 from 166 pounds during 1966-70 and considering that the humble potato, the world's most important vegetable—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbin: —and by far the most important vegetable crop, dollar-wise, grown in Canada and for many, many other valid reasons which would test your patience, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Wood):

That this House urges the Government of Canada to launch with the potato producing provinces a wide scale attack on the diet fadists and assorted calorie quacks who have been downgrading the nutritional value of the spud and that the governments take immediate steps to promote the natural round potato, which is without any doubt whatsoever the best priced ingredient in today's consumer basket.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BAN ON IMPORTATION OF SEAL PELTS BY FRANCE—SUGGESTED BAN ON IMPORTATION OF CHAMPAGNE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the government of France, influenced by the qualities for which Brigitte Bardot is famed, has banned the importation into France of harp seal pelts thus damaging the interests of honest and hardworking Canadians in Newfoundland, Quebec and the northern territories who earn part of their living from the seal hunt, and in view of the fact that Canada should show some backbone in dealing with France on both seals and separatism, and since there are substitutes of better taste and quality for French champagne, a product made from grapes brutalized by human feet and other means in the production process, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe:

That Canada ban the importation of French champagne until such time as the French ban on the importation of seal pelts into France is revoked and that members of the House of Commons affirm their conviction that the interests of Canadian seal hunters far outweigh the palates of French champagne guzzlers in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Presentation of such a motion for discussion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO REASONS FOR LACK OF ENFORCEMENT OF SAFETY REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move an urgent motion. In view of the violation of air safety regulations in northwestern Ontario and the revelation that air inspectors were told by their Ottawa superior not to suspend licences of airlines violating these regulations until "you fully consider the possibility of embarrassment to the minister and any other potential political implications", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to institute a public inquiry into the state of air safety in northwestern Ontario and the reasons air safety regulations have not been adequately enforced.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF SALARY OF POSTMASTER GENERAL UNTIL SERVICE PROFITABLE—MOTION UNDER S. O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the Postmaster General's recent announcement that first-class letter rates would be increased to 14 cents, and in view of the fact that wicket service on Saturday mornings is to end in rural Manitoba on December 1, all in the name of making the post office profitable once again, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the salary of the Postmaster General be reduced to $1 annually till such a time as his regular salary can be paid from post office profits.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

INCOME TAX

BREACH OF CONFIDENTIALITY OF TAX RETURNS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Two weeks have past since the disclosure that it was possible to violate the personal privacy of individual Canadian taxpayers by telephoning the Department of National Revenue and asking for information. Serious questions about what the minister has done to plug the leaks in the two weeks since the revelation remain unanswered. Has the minister made investigations within his department independent of those being made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police? If he has, can he tell the House today if he has discovered the method used to get unauthorized access to personal tax information on individual Canadians, how extensive this practice was and on how many Canadians has tax information been given to unauthorized individuals?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to say I did answer the question put by the hon. member and the allegations he made about giving out information. I do not have the date of his question but I sent a letter to him yesterday in answer to the question suggesting the allegations made in this House were not true. He has a letter from me on that subject. In regard to the investigations that have taken place very successfully since the allegation of the leak, the RCMP provided an interim report today. I am not in a position to reveal the contents. It would not help the situation if I were to make a report at this time on the progress that has been made. I would rather wait until the final outcome of the RCMP investigation. Departmental officials are also looking into the matter.

No doubt members of parliament will receive many complaints about the difficulty in getting an answer or information over the telephone because in future things will not be done that way. I should like to advise members that if they write to us for information about anyone in their constituency they will need a letter from the constituent authorizing them to get the information. It will also be necessary to have a letter from the member before any answers will be given.

● (1417)

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, apparently the minister does not understand what was in the letter that he sent to me. It in no way related to the allegations which were made by Mr. Templeton and Mr. Berton about the availability of personal tax data over the telephone. It is not good enough for the minister to hide behind the RCMP investigation. I want to know what he, as minister, has done to investigate this. How extensive have these leaks been in the past? Does he have the names of Canadians whose personal tax information has been given out to unauthorized individuals over the telephone? What steps is he taking as minister to inform these Canadians that their rights are being violated so that they can take the appropriate action?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I want to say again that these allegations and comments are not factual. This is not the case. Contrary to what the hon. member is saying in this House, there have been very few leaks out of my department. I told him that we are making an investigation on our own within the department. I am not in a position to give a report on that at this time. Neither am I in a position to give a report on how successful the RCMP have been this far.

Mr. Beatty: Over the course of the last two weeks the minister has made a number of statements which he is not willing to back up. He has claimed that it is impossible for this information to be leaked over the telephone. If it is in fact the case that these leaks have been very limited, will the minister tell the House today how many instances he has been able to turn up in which this information has been given out over the telephone. How many instances has he found? Surely, that would not jeopardize any police investigation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the only one I have found so far is the case brought to the attention of this House pertaining to the Templeton affair and that of the other gentleman. I have not found any other case so far.

ALLEGATION TAX INFORMATION GIVEN TO POLICE ON ROUTINE BASIS AND FALSE TESTIMONY GIVEN BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the confidentiality of tax information, I would like to put another question to the Minister of National Revenue. An agreement was entered into in 1972 under which it has been stated his department released certain information to the RCMP if it had to do with an organized crime matter. An official in the minister's department, and I want to know whether this is correct, told the Laycraft inquiry that tax information is given to the RCMP and police forces across Canada as a matter of routine, was given to them before the 1972 agreement and is still being given to them, not on the basis of organized crime but as a routine matter. Will the minister tell us whether the evidence of his official is correct? If it is correct, is he putting a stop to the practice? What is the situation now?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister of National Revenue): I will give that consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to ask a supplementary of a minister who says he is only going to give it consideration. Will the minister check into a situation that has been reported in evidence given to the Laycraft inquiry where an official of his department admitted that he gave false information and false testimony to a judge of the Federal Court of Canada in connection with the investigation of the Royal American Shows matter. He gave two different versions of their cooperation with the RCMP, one to the Federal Court and another to Mr. Justice Laycraft. Has the minister investigated that? Can he or will he report to the House because, if this is true, it should not be tolerated.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the inquiry is still going on. I am certainly keeping abreast of it. I am not in a position to say whether a particular employee told the truth to the inquiry. We are certainly looking into it.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

Mr. Crosbie: If the Minister of National Revenue is not in a position to answer these questions, who is? Who is responsible for the department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES OF REMOVAL OF SOME BENEFICIARIES—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATORY PROGRAMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The government announced yesterday that the changes in unemployment insurance eligibility rules would take effect on December 4. Considering that these changes will remove 226,000 Canadians from eligibility for benefits next year and considering that all the provinces in Atlantic Canada strongly opposed those changes because they will lead to an increase in the welfare cost burden on the cities and on the provinces, may I ask whether the minister has calculated the additional impact these changes will have on welfare costs, particularly in Atlantic Canada, and tell us whether the government proposes to introduce any compensatory programs for the benefit of provinces adversely affected?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Despite the hyperbole and despite the accusations made by the hon. member and by members in his party, the impact on the welfare rolls of the provinces mentioned will be insignificant—we have indicated the particular figures. We have also indicated that the Canada Works program and other programs will fill in the gap and ensure that those provinces are not unduly affected by this change in the eligibility requirement from eight weeks to 12 weeks—we dropped the figure originally proposed primarily because of representations made by Liberal members of the House from the Atlantic provinces to ten weeks—and given the initiative which people in that part of the country are known to possess I believe they will find little difficulty in getting the extra two weeks employment; they are not primarily interested in getting unemployment benefits but in getting work, and that is the main objective.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister has moved from hyperbole to baloney.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MANPOWER

UNEMPLOYMENT—REASON FOR DELAY OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE TO DEAL WITH PROBLEM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): He has admitted that the change will result in increased welfare costs—I think he said there would be a slight increase. I should like the hon. gentleman to give the House the figures because that part of Canada is already worse off than the rest. Since the unemployment figures to be announced next week are likely to show for the first time the number of employed as being in excess of one million, can the minister tell us, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, why we shall have to wait until the end of February for a first ministers conference to deal with the problems facing the Canadian economy?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I think the Prime Minister and the leaders of the various provinces would be more interested in results than in pretending to put on some kind of show. They have an abiding interest in helping the unemployed of this country and to hold a meeting just for the sake of holding a meeting would not help the unemployed.

Mr. Broadbent: I could not agree more. The unemployed want action, not meetings. In the light of the implication of the minister's answer which is that the provinces are somehow holding back—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question to ask, would he please put it?

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that the premier of Ontario as well as the former premier of Manitoba requested such a meeting many months ago, would the minister confirm that the real reason the government intends to wait until the end of February is related more closely to the election plans of the Liberal Party than to the economy?

Some hon. Members: Order!

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED BROADCAST BY RADIO CANADA THAT JEOPARDIZES SECURITY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

In order to safeguard and protect national security, can the Solicitor General tell me whether the law can at a given time force the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to withhold some information? If so, who orders the CBC not to broadcast a news item at a given time?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, like any other Canadian citizen, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation must comply with the legislation governing the activities of Canadians. If we had information to the effect that a corporation is about to issue information which is not of public interest but which would indeed affect the security of the nation, the attorney general would then have to take the necessary procedures to prevent it from broadcasting this information.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I would like to ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Solicitor General of Canada indicate to me whether he instructed the CBC last night, because of national security, not to broadcast over the French network news about the opposition day initiated yesterday by the Social Credit Party, whereas opposition days initiated by other opposition parties are always mentioned? Would the Solicitor General not have instructed the CBC not to mention the opposition day held yesterday?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, it could be said for once that there has been no leak about what has been going on in this assembly.

INQUIRY AS TO FATE OF ANNOUNCED EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the "minister of unemployment and immigration". Given the fact that the so-called economic summit conference of the Prime Minister and the first ministers will not take place till the end of February, and given the fact that we are now into a disastrous situation which is going to get worse, I ask the minister what became of the employment strategy which the government promised to the House before the end of the year. I hope that the minister will not try and duck behind the Canada Works program and the FLIP program.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in replying as Minister of Employment and Immigration to the hon. member for doom and gloom, my I say one of the things which the hon. member seems to forget is that since January the economy of Canada has created some 290,000 new jobs, or one million new jobs in the last five years. However, we cannot rest on that particular laurel because there are a lot of people out of work who want work. This is why we embark on programs like Young Canada Works and Canada Works, creating 116,000 jobs over seven months of a one year period. If we sat back like the hon. member simply wringing our hands, nothing would be accomplished in this country.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that the five eastern provinces representing 37 per cent of the population account for over 48 per cent of the unemployed persons in this country, we have enough to be gloomy about, God knows. What new initiatives can we expect from the government, given the fact that 57.4 per cent of the new unemployment is in these five eastern provinces, which will be further burdened by additions to their welfare rolls? I ask the minister, who is responsible for co-ordinating government programs, what new initiatives he is able to announce to the House, or is he going to wait for the staging of the first ministers' conference in February, with the unemployment rolls growing by leaps and bounds in the meantime?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. member, instead of waiting until the very last minute, in October 1976 we announced a five year program of job creation both for the young and for adult individuals in Canada. I have indicated that one phase of this particular program created 116,000 jobs. If we could move forward the finance bill from clause 4 to clause 116, the opposition would have an opportunity to play a part in creating jobs in this country.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED CONFERENCE WITH PROVINCES ON NEW INITIATIVES TO SOLVE PROBLEM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I remind the minister, as he well knows, that job creation is lagging far behind the increase in unemployment. That is a serious problem which we are facing in this country which the minister does not seem to appreciate. Given the facts that this critically high level of unemployment is concentrated in the five eastern provinces, one being the province of the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations whom I hear interjecting, can we expect from him and his colleagues any new initiatives? Will they at least sit down now with the manpower ministers of these five provinces and offer something a little more positive than he offered the four manpower ministers from the Atlantic provinces, whom he offered nothing earlier this month?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Here again, Mr. Speaker, we deal with these problems on a full day, full week basis, not in five or ten seconds during the question period. This is an on-going problem that we recognize and live with on a day-to-day basis, and why we are bringing in programs to help the very people the hon. member says we should be helping. We met with the Manpower offices, and this particular meeting was taken on the initiative of provincial ministers to indicate some of the areas that they would like to see changed.

● (1432)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member is not interested in the answer, he is only making a noise.

KEABLE INQUIRY—MINISTER'S VIEW OF MANDATE

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General and relates to statements attributed to his counsel at the Keable inquiry yesterday. Is it the Solicitor General's decision that the mandate of that inquiry only includes acts that may be considered illegal, and that it would be operating outside its mandate if it considered "unauthorized activities that may be immoral or questionable"; is that the Solicitor General's position in respect of the operation of the Keable inquiry?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is not my responsibility to determine which kind of authority has been given to the Keable inquiry. I think an order of the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec establishes clearly the limitations of the jurisdiction of this commission. The Lieutenant-Governor's order in council says that the mandate of the Keable Commission covers four very specific criminal acts, namely the APLQ break-in, the arson of a barn, the theft of dynamite and the obtaining of lists of members of the Parti Québécois. I think that the order in council also refers to other activities of a similar nature. Obviously our position is that the commission has full authority to investigate the specific illegal acts which are mentioned in the Quebec Lieutenant Governor's order in council but our position is also very clear that the terms of reference of this commission should certainly not include investigation of the day-to-day operations of the RCMP.

[English]

KEABLE INQUIRY—POSSIBLE FURTHER ACTION TO INHIBIT OPERATIONS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, last Monday in the absence of the Solicitor General I asked his colleague, the Minister of Justice, what further action, be it legal or political, was being considered with regard to inhibiting the operations of that inquiry, and he replied he could not answer because counsel was being consulted. Has that consultation been completed, and what action, be it legal or political, is being considered by the Solicitor General and his colleagues?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the consultation with our counsels is now over. It was a consultation with our legal advisers about the decision given in Montreal last week by Mr. Justice Hugessen. The consultations dealt with whether or not we should appeal that decision. As hon. members will recall, the decision was simply not to grant the deferment we had required from the Superior Court of Montreal until the study of the merits of our request in evocation on December 6. We have decided not to appeal against the refusal of the deferment pronounced by Mr. Justice Hugessen, but naturally we intend to pursue this affair before the Superior Court of Montreal on December 6 so that the audition on the merits will take place.

INFORMATION

NEED FOR LEGISLATION TO GUARANTEE FREEDOM OF ACCESS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the sorry litany of revelations of irregularities and improprieties which we have witnessed over the last few months, and what from this side of the House, in the immortal words of the Prime Minister, appears to be a "fishy attempt to cover up", I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the policy of the government is still that as enunciated by the Prime Minister, that the people of Canada do not need the same protection as the people of the United States in attempts to have legislation to penetrate government secrecy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I can penetrate the verbiage of the hon. member's question, I should like to advise him that the government has produced, as he knows, a proposed paper on freedom of information in conformity with the open government which we are operating here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: It is our intention to have the proposals contained in that document considered as well as the recommendations received from such hon. members as my friend, the hon. member for Peace River, who has established quite a reputation for himself in this field.

Mr. Baldwin: We will forgive the hon. gentleman quite a bit because we know what day this is and we are giving him quite a bit of latitude, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, in connection with these long-delayed reforms for which the people and parliament have been waiting, whether the government is giving some consideration to adjusting section 41(2) of the Federal Courts Act, an act which was passed by this government about the same time as South Africa passed a similar act to permit attempts by the government to coverup through the use of a certificate? I believe Canada and South Africa are the only two countries which at the same time passed such legislation. Is it this government's intention to reform and adjust this particular act?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member is casting reflections on a government which stands in such high esteem in the mind of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North who is president of this association. When a change is proposed to that particular section the House will be advised.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. After his longwinded answer I would just like to ask if the Prime Minister is unable to attend here in the House today in his kilt because of the secrecy and non-disclosure practices of his government?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Curiosity killed the cat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That's an internal mystery.

LOTTERIES

EFFECT ON FINANCING OF VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. The report of the National Advisory Council on voluntary action, prepared for the federal government, states that voluntary organizations are now getting less revenue than in the past and that government lotteries could be the reason. Will the minister assure the House that the government will study the possible negative effects of various government lotteries on the financial health of the voluntary community?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did have a very useful meeting with voluntary associations a month ago, at which time this matter was brought to our attention. I shall certainly consider very carefully the representation made by the hon. member.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED REDUCTION IN FUNDS FOR LANGUAGE TRAINING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Could he explain why the manpower training policy review of September, 1977 for his department indicates that language training funds for immigrants will be cut back since the technical report on which the policy review is based does not provide any justification for cutting back on language training.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first of all the review to which the hon. member refers is specifically that of an idea put to particular provinces. Similarly, if we are able to co-operate with Quebec to the extent that we can increase Francophone immigration to that province and the immigrants are efficient in the French language then there would not be that necessity to train that many people in the other language. This is the idea and concept expressed in the review for consideration by the various provinces.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I still do not have the assurance from the minister that he will not follow through with the cutback in the allotments. I would ask him whether this reasoning has been taken into consideration, that the data shows that language trainees have lower unemployment rates after graduation than basic skill graduates, and that the participation rate of women trainees in the labour force is much higher than normal? In light of that, will the minister review that recommendation to cut back funds so we can proceed with the finding of jobs for immigrants in this country rather than forcing them on welfare?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the funding used for this particular purpose now is very heavily weighted in favour of immigrants, frankly discriminating against Canadian citizens. It may be that rather than cutting back there should be a change in emphasis so that some of that money would be used for Francophones, from whatever part of the country, who have to work in English, or for English speaking Canadians who have to work in French. It may involve simply a shifting in priorities, but we want to look at the whole picture.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORT OF CRTC INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. It is now a little over four months since the CRTC inquiry into the national broadcasting system was submitted to the Prime Minister and made public. I wonder if the minister has had time to study the recommendations and implications of this report, and would he be prepared to indicate what follow up measures he has initiated or recommended?

● (1442)

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I have studied the recommendations and I am reflecting on what our response to them should be.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I wonder if the minister can be a little more informative in view of the fact that the president of CBC submitted the "touchstone" document prior to the time the actual CRTC report was made and that it dealt with a number of issues raised in the CRTC report. Has the minister communicated with the CBC management concerning three of the critical areas raised in the CRTC report in which the CBC has fallen short of its mandate, namely, the area of overcentralization, heavy dependence on U.S. television programming, and the isolation between the French and English services?

Mr. Roberts: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the people of the CBC about the recommendations of CRTC.

[Mr. Cullen.]

CRTC REPORT—POSSIBILITY OF PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO BROADCASTING

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, during the Prime Minister's press conference on July 21 last he indicated he might overrule the CRTC recommendation that no royal commission into broadcasting be held at this time, and indeed he indicated that he would ask the Secretary of State to report on the advisability of such a commission within a month. Since some time has passed since then, I wonder if the Secretary of State has yet reported on this and does the government in fact tend to go against the recommendation of CRTC and set up a royal commission into broadcasting, and in particular how does it propose to deal with the critical issue raised by the CRTC of the accountability of CBC and the whole issue of having autonomy without accountability, and particularly its relationship to parliament and the priority that was called for by the CRTC on this issue?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): When the government comes to a decision as to whether or not there should be an inquiry or a commission it will be announced in the normal way.

GRAIN

WHEAT—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN GRADING SYSTEM TO GIVE RELIEF TO PRODUCERS HOLDING NO. 3 UTILITY GRADE

Mr. Bert Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and I gave him notice of it. Can the minister tell the House whether there has been any change in the grading system to give relief to farmers holding about 100 million bushels of No. 3 utility wheat this year to give a fairer price to the farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I received notice of the question from the hon. member yesterday but I returned to the city late today and I have not had time to check if there has been any real change. I know there have been discussions with the grain trade and farm representatives about this and I hope I will have an answer for the hon. member shortly.

Mr. Cadieu: Is the minister aware that Australia from time to time makes allowances for weather deteriorated wheat by establishing temporary export grades? Why can Canada not do the same thing which would give a better price for the wheat? The fact is that this wheat is of poorer quality with a very small percentage of sprouting. I do not think the producer should have to take 40 cents to 50 cents a bushel less.

Mr. Whelan: One reason for the delay in even making a proposal for a grade change was the testing of protein content. What the hon. member says is true according to our findings that for livestock feed, and in some cases for human consumption, it is practically as good. Its only disadvantage is that it does not look quite as good. We are aware of the system that Australia uses for grading wheat.

WHEAT—PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH PROTEIN PREMIUM FOR UTILITY GRADE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who is responsible for the Board of Grain commissioners. Would he take up with the Board of Grain commissioners the possibility of using a protein premium for this vast amount of utility wheat which weighs out just as well and is just as good for the consumers as every other type of wheat but is graded down because of the odd kernels which are sprouting? Would they consider the technique of using a premium grade based on the protein content?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this has been considered but in many parts of the world when you put the protein content first, that is what makes the buyer back off. We have found this because we have stressed the high quality of wheat. The protein content is generally higher than any other wheat in the world. Some of the other grain traders in the world perhaps would rather buy a lower protein wheat and then sell it in the market because they seem to be able to manage their markets in a better way and have better sales when selling a lower grade wheat. At least, that is the argument that has been presented to me.

FISHERIES

SEALS—EFFORTS TO DEVELOP MARKET FOR PELTS IN EUROPE

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries or for his parliamentary secretary. In view of the increase in seal quotas this year, for which the government is to be commended, in spite of the adverse publicity and opposition from groups such as Greenpeace and by Mr. Brian Davies, and in view of the fact that the price of seal pelts in Europe in particular has gone down, can the minister or the parliamentary secretary tell us about the efforts which the department will make through the industrial development branch or other branches of the department to give support to the sale of seal pelts in Europe because of the importance of this issue to fishermen in Atlantic Canada and Quebec?

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me say that I think it is not only the minister and the government but all hon. members who should try to convince people not only in France but also in Canada and in other parts of the world, that we are dealing with a renewable resource and that the government is protecting the species from becoming extinct. The minister has no control over the actions of the French government, but I assure the hon. member that the minister will do all in his power to support the seal hunting industry in Canada and he will also do all in his power to counteract the injustice caused this industry by the tiddly-tinkers from France.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HIGH COST OF FOOD—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On June 17 I asked the former minister questions regarding the high cost of food in the north and I referred specifically to the deplorable situation of alcohol, which because it is subsidized, costs less than milk. Following that question the former minister, in a letter dated June 17, indicated that his department would consult the Territorial Council, native organizations and other departments of the federal government regarding this serious matter. I would like to ask the minister if these consultations have been completed and if he is now in a position to make recommendations to the House?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I am not sure that those consultations are completed but I will check into it and report back to the hon. member.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORT ON DIFFICULTIES FACING HANDICAPPED ENTERING SERVICE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT AND EARLY ACTION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board concerning difficulties facing handicapped people within the public service and those who are handicapped and trying to enter the Public Service of Canada. The minister has in his department a very extensive report prepared by the Public Service Commission which cries out for no more reports but for some action. When will action be taken on that report?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): As quickly as possible, Mr. Speaker. I assure the hon. member of my definite and personal interest in this area of which, I think he knows from my involvement in my previous portfolio. I join him and others to encourage our public service to act on this.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the answer. As part of that encouragement, would the minister agree to table that report in the House of Commons so there can be some public involvement in the decisions that will be made and the action which we hope will be taken by the government in this area. Tabling might help to publicize that excellent report.

Mr. Andras: This is a good suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and I will personally give it every consideration as soon as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPORT OF URANIUM—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO CHANGE IN POSITION ON SAFEGUARDS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it concerns his replies in the House yesterday, also contained in the transcript of the committee hearings yesterday afternoon, none of which reassured me. I would like to ask the minister if he can confirm that his position in the discussion next in Brussels with regard to the possible resumption of uranium shipments to West Germany has not changed since the position he stated in the House on April 5, as reported at page 4640 of Hansard when he said:

> Unless the agreements bilaterally are of the nature which prevents the transfer to other member countries within the European community, we will not sign that agreement and those supplies will be held up.

Is that still the position of the government?

● (1452)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would like to read the statement, but having heard it from the hon. member I think I can give her the assurance that on technological transfers that is a requirement of the policy, and there has not been any change.

Miss MacDonald: Just so that we will be absolutely clear on this, the reference was to the unrestricted flow of nuclear materials, including uranium, to other countries, and the reference was to the fact that these shipments of uranium could possibly be trans-shipped to another country, France, which has not signed the non-proliferation treaty. Does it refer in that matter to a refusal to sign the agreement until that loophole has been closed?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. lady will appreciate that it is difficult to give a detailed and comprehensive answer. I do want to reassure her, however, to the extent that I as a layman have had the matter explained to me, that I believe we are still in the same position as was outlined in my answer at that time.

There are further technical negotiations going on at this point which I outlined recently, and so that I do not delude or give an erroneous answer to the hon. member, I would like to reserve my answer in specifics on the technical matter until tomorrow, and I will be glad to answer at that time.

URANIUM EXPORTS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT IN POSITION ON SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. Bearing what he has said in mind, I think the House and the public deserve to have a very full ministerial statement on such an important matter as this. Why can the minister not make a statement tomorrow in the normal way, if he is afraid of some of the technical terms? It is important enough that the House and the country deserve that type of thing.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to make a statement at the appropriate time, but I do not think the House or the hon. member would want me at this particular stage to reveal all the details of the negotiations which are under way because there are certain aspects which clearly are going to depend to some degree at least on our ability to reach an agreement and a consensus. I do not feel it would be appropriate for me to indicate the total decision we are taking.

I refer the hon. member to what was, after all, a good hour's discussion on this matter in the committee yesterday. It is in the record. I think I went quite far there in seeking to explain, and let me say that if the hon. member or any other interested member would wish to talk with me privately in the initial stage to determine what is the nature of the circumstances, I would be glad to do that and then subsequently to indicate fully what the conclusions are. However, I want to assure the House that there is no effort on our part in this case to move in any way which does not have the maximum possible degree of support, and if it is possible to achieve that by indicating privately what the nature of the situation is, I would be most happy to do that.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REASON CORPORATION REFUSED TO BROADCAST CERTAIN PUBLICITY

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

Given the reply of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion yesterday to the member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) that the CBC had refused to broadcast publicity material whose purpose was to promote the Montreal economy and thus create employment, does the Secretary of State intend to inquire to determine the motives of such a procedure which will not surely help reduce the yearly deficit of the CBC?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I spoke with an official of the CBC and they indicated that the regulations are such that a difference is made between information and promotion. This difference concerned me so I raised the question and was told that the president of the CBC will discuss the problem with the directors of the corporation.

MANPOWER

AREAS TO BENEFIT FROM $150 MILLION JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act which I am sure the minister realizes will create more difficulties in the Atlantic provinces, can the minister give a little more information regarding the announcement made by the Prime Minister and reiterated by the Minister of Finance about the $150 million for job creation? That will be of great benefit, but I wonder if the minister would elaborate a little more as to what parts of the country that money will be going to and how much will be going to each area?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the specifics the hon. member is calling for because that is at the initiative of the Minister of Finance. As Minister of Employment and Immigration, I have made my representations as to the manner in which I think that money could best be utilized in conjunction with tax benefits. Whether my suggestions will be followed I do not know. It is my view that the representations I make would be heavily weighted in favour of areas of high unemployment.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for his answer. In light of the fact that at the moment there are between 3,000 and 4,000 applicants for employment at the Cape Breton Development Corporation—one place alone on Cape Breton Island—and in view of the fact that this minister has worked underground and has gone through the rigours of mining, would he educate the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and ask him not to make derogatory remarks about Cape Breton miners and their work ethics?

HEALTH

SUGAR CONTENT OF BREAKFAST CEREALS—PROPOSED LABELLING REQUIREMENT—POSITION OF MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In August in a joint communique the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs revealed that some of the leading breakfast cereals in the country were over half sugar. They also revealed that they had instructed the manufacturers of the cereals to indicate the percentage of sugar on the labels of their products. I would now like to ask the minister whether a reply has been received from the manufacturers and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not have an answer right now. I would prefer to have 24 hours and give one in the House tomorrow.

POSSIBILITY OF LABELLING ALL PRODUCTS WITH HIGH SUGAR CONTENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that several government studies, such as the diet and cardiovascular study here in Canada and several studies in the United States, have recommended drastic reductions of the intake of sugar in our diets I would like to know whether the minister is considering extending this policy she has advocated regarding cereals to other foods which are heavily laden with sugar.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It is a matter which I have not yet considered and I ask leave to reply only tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY MINISTER RECEIVED LETTER OF PROTEST FROM SENEGAL

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of External Affairs. The CBC reported last week that the Quebec premier has never received a letter which had been sent to him in May by Mr. Léopold Senghor, President of the Republic of Senegal. The CBC added that this letter is said to have been delivered to the Canadian embassy in Dakar, and the government of Senegal would have raised a strong protest because of this. Could the minister indicate whether he has indeed received a letter of protest?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot give the details on that. It is not something which has recently been brought to my attention. I will be glad to look into it and let the hon. member know. I feel quite certain, however, that if we were asked to transmit a message from one of our embassies to whoever the party was we would have done so, but I will look into it.

SPORTS

COST OF HALF-TIME SHOW AT GREY CUP GAME—SUGGESTED USE OF MARCHING BAND TO REDUCE COST

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). In light of the fact that the Edmonton Eskimos made a great contribution to national unity last Saturday—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1502)

Mr. Hurlburt: —and in light of the fact that constituents of mine are interested in finding out the cost of the half-time show during the Grey Cup game, would the minister confirm that those half-time festivities cost approximately $100,000?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm that they cost $100,000 but I will give the precise cost. The cost was $60,000, $10,000 paid by the CFL. We had an audience of seven million people on television and 70,000 people in the stadium in order to show the people of Canada the rich diversity of amateur sports that there is to share.

Mr. Hurlburt: A short supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that this country is in the worst financial position of its history and in light of the fact that many marching bands were available to put on a half-time show at 10 per cent of the cost, may I ask the minister if she checked with some of the greatest marching bands in Canada who could have put on the show for one-quarter the cost?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope the hon. member recalls the amount of money that was put into Lethbridge for the Canada games. I think I do not have to remind him that the budget was set in the estimates last year and he had full access to the committee hearings. I believe he will have the same opportunity this year. From the letters I am getting I am sure that most Canadians feel the same way.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

PROCEDURAL REGULARITY OF LEGISLATIVE ITEMS IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps hon. members will recall that in March of this year I made a ruling in respect of the procedural regularity of legislative items contained in the estimates. In the course of that ruling I pointed out that in future I should like to find a regime for avoiding some of the difficulties we face when these points are argued.

In the past, we have been faced with these arguments as part of the supply bill only when the supply bill was introduced. It seemed to me at the time that this presented us with some grave difficulties in that the arguments themselves could be prepared in advance. However, there was no machinery by which defences could be prepared and, therefore, no prepared argument on both sides of the question which could be of assistance to the Chair in attempting to make a decision. In fact, in making a decision in that sort of eleventh-hour atmosphere the Chair never had any assurance that the arguments had in any way been brought to the attention of the ministers concerned. Often, ministers do not address themselves to that particular moment of our procedures and may have no way of knowing that matters had been called into question.

I extended a general invitation to the House to suggest procedures by which we might experiment to find a remedy for this difficulty. Some supplementary estimates are coming up again for finalization. I want to indicate to the House that I am not doing this in order to invite objections. I have had indications in an informal way that there is a desire to argue some of these matters. I think it is incumbent upon me to suggest to the House a procedure which I hope will be found to be a little more equitable and will at least serve as a useful experiment.

Since Friday of this week has been designated as an allotted day, a supply day, the second last in this trimester, it would seem appropriate to me that arguments on this matter ought to take place at that time. This would have the advantage of giving the Chair an opportunity to consider the arguments sometime prior to or on the last supply day, and making a decision before the introduction of a supply bill. It seems to me that I ought to make this suggestion to the House today in order to ask members who wish to take issue with any such item to please give me notice so that I can indicate it to the House by three o'clock tomorrow afternoon. This will give both sides of the House the opportunity to examine these contested items and to prepare argument on one side or the other. It will also give the Chair the advantage of prepared argument on both sides which can be considered before I try to make a ruling at the time the supply bill comes down.

I should like to indicate to the House that my purpose is simply to try to introduce some intelligence into our discussion or dispute on these matters, and avoid the obvious difficulty of doing it in the last-minute atmosphere of the supply bill itself. On the other hand, I am not attempting to enforce a rigid regime on the House. Certainly, if after trying this method of dealing with these items there are suggestions which might improve that procedure or, on the contrary, objections to it, I would be pleased to hear them.

For the moment, I am asking the co-operation of the House in advising me by two o'clock tomorrow which items might be under dispute so that I can announce them to the House at three o'clock. It seems to me that, in fairness, I ought to hear that argument on a supply day and therefore it ought to be done on Friday, which would be the second last day and the last day prior to the day when the supply bill will be introduced.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one comment with respect to this matter. As I understand the situation, there are grave doubts about dollar items in the estimates which have been placed there because the government has not followed, generally, the practice that Your Honour dealt with extensively the last time. There is a questionable practice on the part of the government. I am not arguing that it is a questionable practice, but it is questionable. The point is, it is not there because the opposition has engaged in questionable practices.

If we are going to have that kind of argument in the House, I would respectfully suggest it is inappropriate for Your Honour to use one of our allotted days for the purpose. We would be quite prepared to co-operate and argue the matter tomorrow, which would allow us to settle the matter well in advance and still leave the allotted day. There is some work involved in preparation for an allotted day, so we should not have an allotted day for discussion of the subject. I do not argue with your procedure, sir, but I am a little concerned—indeed, worried—that you should choose an allotted day to deal with a matter that involves questionable practices on the part of the government. We would be quite prepared to proceed tomorrow on the matter, which happens to be a full parliamentary day and not part of a day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The difficulty about proceeding tomorrow is that no advance notice could be provided. Part of the regime which I am trying to set in motion is one which would give participants advance notice so that arguments could be prepared. One of the disadvantages we faced the last time was that some items were raised on the floor of the House and were not defended or disputed. I had no way of knowing if the minister had ever been advised that those items were going to be called into dispute. That is part of the procedure that should be clarified.

I hope the arguments will not be very lengthy and that no injustice will be done. Since the matter is related to the supply process, however, it seems appropriate that it be done on a supply day. That is why I am doing it now, instead of doing it on the final supply day which is when it would ordinarily take place. It seems to me that if I do not do anything about it, then it will use up part of the supply day, being the last supply day. Instead of that, I am using up part of the second last supply day. After we have tried this, if there are representations further to that made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton I shall certainly take them into account.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the procedure which you have proposed is quite acceptable to us. I would say, in respect of the view expressed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to the effect that the government is engaging in questionable practices, that in preparation of the supplementary estimates we have been very careful to examine the rulings made by the Chair. We have attempted to take these into account and adjust the supplementary estimates accordingly. To my knowledge, quite a number of items are brought forward by various departments as a matter of urgency which I refuse to have included in the supplementary estimates in order to conform as fully as possible with Your Honour's previous rulings. There may be a debate as to the implementation of those rulings, and if so we will attempt to defend what we believe is in conformity with them.

● (1512)

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, if it is of any aid in facilitating the proceedings of the House, I am prepared to indicate now that the two votes which give us some concern in terms of being proper are 31a, under Regional Economic Expansion dealing with the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and L56a of the Department of Transport dealing with the surface transportation program. These two, we feel, contradict the judgment made by the Speaker in March when commenting on using supplementary estimates to, in fact, amend legislation.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I gave notice that I want to draw to your attention and the attention of the parliamentary secretary the fact that notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 7 through to 43 have been on the order paper since last August. They go right back into last session. These papers deal with the cartel that the government helped organize among uranium producers of the world. The government has maintained there is nothing secret about what they did, yet they seem to wish to conceal the facts and continue a cover-up by not responding to these notices which have been on the order paper since last August. I hope the government will try to clear the air on this subject by at least producing, or giving an explanation why they do not produce, the papers to which I am referring.

Mr. Pinard: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have noted that two thirds of all the notices of motions which appear on the order paper are in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). Two thirds of the notices of motions have therefore been referred to the department concerned and the hon. member will be advised of the replies as soon as we have received them from the the department.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, November 28, consideration in committee of Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Ethier in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-11, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds. When the committee rose on Monday last, clause 4 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 4—Employment expense deduction.

Income Tax

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, at the close of the session on Monday I was starting to make a few comments on clause 4. I had asked the Minister of Finance a couple of questions about the clause. Just to review for hon. members who might not have been here on Monday, this clause will increase the allowance that will go to workers for employment expenses from $150 to $250. In 1972 the government provided employees with a blanket deduction for expenses incurred in their work of 3 per cent of their total income from their office or their other employment up to $150, whichever was the lesser. What is happening here is that the $150 allowance is going to be increased to $250 for the subsequent taxation year.

The argument I made to the Minister of Finance on Monday was that I agreed it was a good idea for workers to get an employment allowance—we all agree on that—however, I stated that a much more equitable way of doing this would be to get away from the allowance and give workers a tax credit. If you have a tax credit, it will be redistributive. The minister said he found it a good idea, but it would be a fundamental change in our tax system. It was very significant when he said "fundamental change".

The other point I made is that a tax credit would not be something new in this country. We already have a tax credit with regard to contributions to election campaigns. If somebody contributes $100 to a political party, he does not get a $100 exemption on his income tax; he gets a tax credit. That tax credit is 75 per cent, or $75. Any member who contributes $100 to an election campaign gets back $75 regardless of his work. If this were to be made an exemption of $100, it would be worth a lot more to a member of parliament or someone making a lot of money compared to someone who does not make much money. Therefore, it would redistribute income in this country. That is the argument I made, which I hope the government will take seriously.

I can give a couple of examples of tax credits in this country. One hypothetical example is a $400 credit for a family of four. If the income is under $2,000, they receive back the $400. If the income is between $10,000 and $12,000, they only get back half, $200. If the income is over $20,000, they do not get any of it back. That is the way a tax credit works. Therefore, there is a redistribution of income when you give this benefit. A $400 exemption would be worth much more to a high income earner than a low income earner. That is why we make the argument for a tax credit.

There is another argument one can make about the increase in the employment deduction. An across-the-board deduction can be very inequitable. For example, there could be two employees both earning $15,000. They both get the same deduction. Those two employees could have totally different expenses. One employee could walk to work and get a great deal of exercise, while the other employee has to drive several miles. He has a legitimately higher expense than $250, although he receives the same benefit. Another example is one employee earning $15,000 and another earning $5,000. The employee earning $15,000 may not have very high expenses. He may walk to work and have no personal expenses whatever.

The employee earning $5,000 may have to take a bus or the subway or drive his car to work every day, which can be very expensive. In that case it is inequitable because both employees get the same deduction. The response of the government to this argument is that if we were to have all the flexibility required to have an equitable system, you would achieve your credit. I can understand the argument they are putting up. I should like to suggest to the government—I see there are no ministers in the House—

● (1522)

Mr. Drury: There are.

Mr. Nystrom: The Solicitor General is here, but he is at the back. There is another, but he is dancing around, so he is hard to see. Anyway, I am sure they do not know much about finance so I will direct my questions to the parliamentary secretary, who is much more knowledgeable. Why does not the government consider, for example, if administering a really fair system is likely to be too costly, starting with a $250 floor? I think that would cover most of the workers in the first place; their expenses would be less than $250. But there are many people whose expenses are higher than that and who are treated very unfairly by this law. I suspect this concerns a small minority of workers.

Why cannot everyone have the benefit of a $250 law and, after that, if it can be proved to the taxation people that expenses are higher, why cannot the whole amount be claimed as a legitimate expense? I think it is fair on another ground. People engaged in business in this country are allowed to deduct their legitimate business expenses. Why should there be one rule for those who are in business and another for those who are not in business? The only reason I have been given so far is the bureaucratic complexity involved in rectifying the situation. I have made my suggestion, now, to the parliamentary secretary.

While I am on my feet, I want to take advantage of the occasion of this discussion on clause 4 to call attention to something which I do not think many people realize. That is, since tax reform in Canada in 1971, the inequities in the taxation system have not decreased; they have become greater. One way of closing the gap is to take a clause like the one before us and change it so that workers and low income people are treated a little better. I want to put a few statistics on record to prove the point I am making. The figures I have in mind relate to income prior to taxes. They are taken from the thirteenth annual review of the Economic Council and show the distribution of income. The population is divided into five groups and 20 per cent of the population is in each group. In 1965, before taxes, the worst off 20 per cent of the population was receiving 4.44 per cent of the national income. In 1974, nine years later, they were getting only 4.02 per cent of the national income. So the lowest 20 per cent saw their incomes, as a percentage of national income, drop during that period.

Now I move to the other extreme, to the group which was best off. In 1965 they received 41.35 per cent of the national income. By 1974, the figure was 42.52 per cent. In other words, their share of the national income was increasing. That is before taxes. One might say the purpose of a taxation system, among other things such as collecting revenue for all our programs, is to redistribute wealth. People should pay for programs on the basis of their ability to do so. I knew that this was not the case prior to tax reform. The system was not effective in redistributing income or, at least, not as significant as we in this party think it should be in that regard. But I worked on the assumption that since tax reform in 1974 some of the loopholes had been blocked and that we had a fair taxation system.

Once again I wish to put on record some tables from the source I have just used, showing that the gap is widening. I turn to the redistribution impact of income tax in 1971 and 1974. The population is again divided into five groups. The percentage change in share resulting from income taxes in 1971 before the impact of tax reform was this: when taxes were taken into account in calculating income the lowest group, which received only 3.65 per cent of the national income, saw its share of the national income go up by 0.6 per cent. By 1974, after tax reform had been in effect for a while, their share of the percentage of the national income increased by the same figure—0.6 per cent. In other words, the percentage increase, after tax reform, was zero. So the tax bill which was brought before the House had no impact at all on lower income people in terms of giving them a greater share of the national income. I think that is very sad indeed.

Take the second group. Before tax reform, in 1971, the taxation system had raised their share of the national income from 10.6 per cent by an additional 0.9 per cent. In other words, after taxes were considered, their incomes rose by almost 1 per cent. After the tax reform changes in 1974, their percentage of the national income, following taxes, went up by 0.9 per cent, which means they were worse off after tax reform than they were before. The net change was a drop of 0.1 per cent; their income declined by one-tenth of 1 per cent.

I will analyse very quickly the third, fourth and fifth groups to see what happened. In 1971, the third group saw its share of the national income go up by 0.6 per cent. In 1974 it did not go up by as much; it went up by 0.5 per cent, a net drop of one-tenth of 1 per cent. The fourth highest group includes people receiving significantly higher incomes. In 1971 their income went up by 0.1 per cent and by 1974, after tax reform, their increase was zero. The change amounted to 0.1 per cent.

I see this as satisfactory, because after tax reform those who are at the higher end of the system should be getting less money. When one comes to the highest group, though, containing those who receive more than 40 per cent of the national income, they received 42.9 per cent of the national income in 1971, after taxes had been paid, and in 1974 their income declined by 2.7 per cent. After tax reform, however, their income dropped by only 1.9 per cent, so tax reform gave them an additional three-tenths of 1 per cent of the national income. I do not think that is right. I think the taxation system should help to redistribute income. The point I am making to the parliamentary secretary, in the absence of the minister, is that tax reform has not redistributed income in this country as many of us believed it would.

One of the objectives of any sane parliament in 1977 is, surely, to attempt to improve the conditions of those people in this country who are poor, those who do not have enough money to buy colour television sets and new cars, paint their houses or take vacations, and the like. One way of making conditions better for them is by giving them tax breaks, and one of the ways of doing this is by amending clause 4 which is before the committee. We should make provision for a tax credit in place of the exemption which the minister has already rejected.

● (1532)

I suspect that the minister personally sympathizes with the idea of a tax credit, but that he feels the problem lies with the bureaucrats in the department who do not want to change the old, conservative way in which they have been doing things. If this is unacceptable, then my other suggestion is that we give workers with legitimately high employment expenses a tax break by way of a deduction similar to that allowed businessmen who legitimately incur high expenses. If both these suggestions involve too much bureaucratic difficulty, then why not establish a floor of, say, $250? If that is unrealistic, then perhaps it should be $300 or $200. I will leave that to the statisticians of the Department of Finance. Then workers with legitimately high expenses can be compensated. I would ask the parliamentary secretary to respond to my suggestion and tell me why this cannot be done.

May I make one other point before the parliamentary secretary replies. As a result of our research, we have found that Canada is probably the most rigid industrialized country in the world so far as not allowing workers to deduct legitimate expenses is concerned. If other countries in the European Common Market and the United States can do it, Mr. Chairman, why not us?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, as my minister related to the hon. member the other day, the hon. member is advocating a basic structural change to the tax system. What he is saying is that our tax system is not progressive enough. Some may agree with him, and others do not totally agree. However, I am sure the hon. member will agree that there must still be a method of defining exactly what is taxable income. The employment expense deduction is a method of trying to determine what is taxable income.

The hon. member referred to the royal commission on taxation. During the arguments presented to the royal commission, the commission looked very favourably on an employment expense deduction and came to the conclusion that the most fair way to implement a deduction of that nature was to apply it on a flat-rate basis. There will always be differences of opinion as to what the base figure should be. A few years ago it was $150. It is now $250. I am sure the hon. member appreciates that we receive representations from people in all walks of life. Special categories are set up to meet individual cases. Moving expenses apply to all categories.

If I may reiterate what my minister said to the hon. member the other day, although his opinion on a more progressive tax system may be valid, I am sure he will agree that we still must have a method of defining what is taxable income, which is why we use the employment expense deduction.

Mr. Nystrom: Once again, Mr. Chairman, I understand the argument of the parliamentary secretary. In response to a question which I put to the Minister of Finance on Monday, the minister said that if we were to account for all the legitimate expenses of workers the task would be an absolute nightmare and it could not be done. I agree that it would be a bureaucratic nightmare if every worker was dealt with individually. But would the parliamentary secretary deal with my specific point about establishing a floor of, say, $250 which everyone could claim? Then if people submitted additional vouchers claiming higher expenses, they could be given a credit. I said that perhaps my figure of $250 should be $300, or more or less, but only a small number of workers would be involved and there would be more equity. I am thinking primarily of people who live in rural areas and who travel some distance to work, such as people in Newfoundland and places like that. Their expense of getting to work is higher than those who live and work in large metropolitan areas.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, as the minister told the hon. member two days ago, it would be an administrative nightmare—in fact, virtually impossible—to have a voucher system for each individual who wants to claim an expense of this nature. I am no expert on the implementation of a system of this nature, but our officials say that it is almost impossible.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I would also like to make a few remarks on the amendment in clause 4 of Bill C-11. There we find that a taxpayer will be allowed to ask for a deduction, not exceeding $250, equal to 3 per cent of the income from an employment or an office.

We are all aware that the cost is tremendous for any worker who has to travel to go to work. We all know that inflation has a direct bearing on people's income and that travelling by car, especially in cities where traffic is heavy, requires more highways and so on.

On March 28, I suggested to the House, through a motion under Standing Order 43, that any worker using public transport to go to work be allowed to deduct all such travelling expenses from his income tax. This would naturally have the effect of stimulating Canadian workers to use public transport.

This would allow for the deduction of expenses incurred to go to work. Obviously, if there are 50 workers who use public transport, who take the bus, there will be that many drivers off the roads. This would also save a very great quantity of energy, particularly at a time when it is a source of concern because of its high cost; thus, this would have the effect of saving energy. At the same time, there would be some savings on the many grants the government must give for the construction of roads, etc.

To that end, Mr. Chairman, I should like to move an amendment to subclause 4(1) of Bill C-11, on page 3, which reads as follows:

That subclause 4(1) of Bill C-11 be amended by striking out lines 17 and 18 on page 3 thereof and substituting the following:

"er, equal to the lesser of $400 and 3 per cent of the aggregate of"

And adding thereto:

"or a deduction is allowed for all costs incurred while travelling to and from work by wage-earners using public transportation, on submission of receipts and vouchers."

In other words, the workers who can produce evidence that they used public transportation will be entitled to deduct the expenses incurred even up to $600. I think that at present the amount is too low and, as I said a while ago, this would certainly relieve the congestion in cities and result in a saving of energy and subsidies.

[English]

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, while we understand the well-intentioned motive behind the hon. member's motion, he must realize that you cannot use the tax system to solve basic problems in respect of urban transit. Some of these problems are individually controlled—do I drive a large car, a small car, do I live close to my work, or far away from it? The final point in respect of the hon. member's suggestion is that, again, it would be a bureaucratic nightmare, involving reams of paper and vouchers, which obviously would not facilitate the easy implementation of a measure of this nature.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, this is not what I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley). It is quite simple, it is merely a matter of producing receipts to the effect that a person has used public transport during working hours. It is somewhat the same as when someone files his income tax return and produces receipts to obtain certain deductions allowed by the act, it is as simple as that. That is all I am asking for in this amendment; that the government increase to at least $400 the expenses incurred by those who use public transport to go to work.

[English]

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, there is discrimination involved inasmuch as there are many people who do not have access to urban transit and would not be in a position to benefit from the hon. members' suggestion.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I could not help but be struck by the comment of the parliamentary secretary in answer to questions put by my colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, regarding business deductions. The parliamentary secretary said, as the minister has said on earlier occasions, that an attempt to get workers to account for actual expenses in order to obtain deductions would involve an administrative nightmare. I think those are the words he used. I suppose it would, as it is the workers who are concerned, but apparently it is not for—

[Mr. Allard.]

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I understand that you have asked hon. members to take part in the debate concerning the amendment moved by the hon. member from the Social Credit party. I am wondering whether the hon. member is dealing with the amendment or rather with a matter that has already been raised by one of his colleagues.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I understand that he is speaking on the amendment. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I was speaking on clause 4. If you want to deal with the amendment first—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I referred the hon. member to the amendment. If he wishes to discuss the clause, he may do so at a later time; but we should dispose of the amendment first.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I would like to give my support to the amendment of my colleague from Rimouski (Mr. Allard) and give some explanations about that amendment. I do not know whether the parliamentary secretary to the minister did understand the amendment which the hon. member for Rimouski just read out and which you read yourself immediately afterwards but I feel hon. members may not fully appreciate the purport of that amendment. The original version of the clause of the legislation before us simply proposes to increase the present exemption from $150 to $250 a year.

We found that $150 was definitely not enough and the additional $100, considering the sharp increase in the cost of gasoline, auto parts and so on, cannot offset the expenses incurred by workers who have to commute to work. My colleague from Rimouski has moved an amendment to increase the basic amount to at least $400 or 3 per cent of all expenses incurred. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing excessive in that basic part. The amendment goes on:

or a deduction is allowed for all costs incurred while travelling to and from work by wage-earners using public transportation, on submission of receipts and vouchers.

This means that the person who prefers to use a public transit system to get to work, when such a system is available, may choose to do so and obtain the deduction of the true expenses he or she has incurred, upon submission of the necessary vouchers. It does not take a wizard to understand that. I feel that the employees of the Department of National Revenue are quite capable of holding the accounts. They have the accountants they need, and if they need more, we can supply some who can hold the accounts and check what expenses have really been incurred. In my opinion, my colleague the hon. member for Rimouski has introduced an amendment which has a lot of merit and which should deal more fairly with the Canadian workers and employees who must travel to get to work.

Mr. Pinard: Would the hon. member allow a question on the amendment?

Mr. Laprise: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member indicate whether his amendment entails an extra appropriation under Bill C-11? If so, did he obtain the Governor General's recommendation, as provided under Standing Order 62?

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, it is not for me to seek such a recommendation. If the minister accepted the amendment, it would be up to him to apply for such recommendation if required, although I am not sure it is required in the first place. There is no problem.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that this amendment ought to be rejected because it is out of order. Since the hon. member said he does not need to apply himself for the Governor General's recommendation, I assume he recognized he was seeking an extra appropriation. And since there is no recommendation, it seems the amendment is out of order. I would ask the Chair to reject it as such.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might say a word or two on the point of order just raised by the parliamentary secretary. If I understand the amendment correctly, it does not request that more money be paid to someone. This is not a money bill of the kind to which there is attached a Governor General's recommendation. This is a tax bill. We have been over this matter scores of times. It has been ruled that an effort by means of an amendment to reduce the amount of tax payable is in order. All the hon. member is seeking to do is reduce the amount of tax payable by increasing the amount of these deductions.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I do not believe we need go any further into that. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) just explained this very well, in the same terms I would have used myself. Specifically, the amendment does not seek any extra appropriation, it simply changes the tax structure. Therefore, the hon. member's amendment is valid, and we are now discussing it.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, when dealing with this amendment, I hope the hon. member will correct me if I misinterpret what he has proposed. I understood he would like to have the maximum amount that may be deducted as an expense allowance raised from $250 to $400.

● (1552)

The minister spoke yesterday on this amendment, and I am very sorry he is not able to be with us today, because his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, seemed to be quite testy today because the bill was not receiving hasty passage.

I suggest the ministers get their act together. If they want legislation passed through the House, they should try to be present here. However, I will come back to that later. On Monday, the Minister of Finance, in dealing with the amendment now before us—that is, the government amendment which proposes to raise the expense allowance from $150 to $250—said that it would cost an estimated $115 million so far as federal loss of revenue is concerned. Can the parliamentary secretary give us a breakdown of that figure? How many employees are involved, and what do they assume the rate of taxation to be?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have difficulty understanding the relevance of the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe to the amendment before us.

Mr. Stevens: Of course my comments are relevant, Mr. Chairman. They are relevant to clause 4. I was saying that on Monday the minister told us that the total cost of raising the tax by $100, so far as the expense allowance was concerned, was $115 million. I ask the parliamentary secretary to give us a breakdown of that figure, following which I will ask him for an estimate, based on that reasoning, of the cost of raising the exemption as suggested in our amendment from $250 to $400.

Mr. Lumley: The $115 million to which the minister referred a couple of days ago will affect approximately 6.5 million taxpayers in Canada.

Mr. Stevens: I do not have a calculator with me, Mr. Chairman. Can the parliamentary secretary tell us what he assumes will be the average tax the 6.5 million people will be paying, and the average percentage the government will be losing by raising the limit by the extra $100?

Mr. Lumley: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I do not have an answer to that specific question. I will try to obtain that information.

Mr. Stevens: If they are able to calculate the cost of the increase of $100 to which I have just referred, can the parliamentary secretary give us an estimate of the cost if our colleague's amendment is carried; that is, to raise it from $250 to $400, which is a further $150?

Mr. Lumley: As the hon. member knows, that is a very complex calculation and we certainly cannot do it right now. But if the hon. member insists, we can take the time to do it and will report back the answer.

Mr. Stevens: I think it is quite relevant if we are to vote on this amendment. I think one of the important things we have to know is how much money we are talking about. I believe all of us would love to give a $1,000 exemption, but if we are to be responsible we should try to get an estimate of how much revenue we are talking about. I take it from the parliamentary secretary's response that we cannot simply multiply by 150 per cent the estimate of moving up by $100. In other words, to move up from $150 to $250 is not to go up by 40 per cent, which it would be if we went up from $150 to $400.

Mr. Lumley: According to a rough calculation, it would be approximately $175 million in addition to the $115 million.

Mr. Stevens: I take it, then, that the parliamentary secretary is using the arithmetic of simply going up 1.5 times what was originally calculated. When the hon. member for Gatineau spoke on this subject on Monday, he stated that in Quebec the allowance was already $500. I take it he was referring to the provincial allowance. Can the parliamentary secretary tell us if that is so. Is there a $500 maximum allowance in Quebec? I would also be interested in knowing what are some typical provincial exemptions. If Quebec allows $500, does Ontario allow less than that?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have great difficulty in finding the relevance of the hon. member's questions to the amendment before us. The hon. member is referring to provincial matters, and I see no relevance to the amendment before us.

Mr. Stevens: I will explain the relevance of my remarks, Mr. Chairman. We are saying that those who work at present are entitled, before they pay income tax, to an exemption of $150. The government proposed that that amount be raised to $250. A member of the Social Credit party has said that $250 is not enough, that it should be $400. What I want to establish, first, is how much money we are talking about. The government says that $100 will cost $115 million in lost revenue. Then we were told that another $150 would likely cost approximately 150 per cent more; that is, $170 million.

The other point is that if people are already enjoying a higher expense allowance in a province such as Quebec than we are willing to give them, it is relevant to consider what the federal authorities should be doing. What I would like identified is whether the hon. member was correct when he said on Monday that the expense allowance in Quebec is $500. If it is, I think it is relevant in that the $250 appears to me to be rather low, so far as the federal government is concerned, if Quebec feels the exemption should be as high as $500. I would like to know what is the situation province by province.

Mr. Lumley: The figure with respect to Quebec is accurate, but I would like to remind the hon. member that our taxation system is entirely different. For example, Quebec does not have indexation, nor does it have deductibility for dependants.

Mr. Stevens: Did the parliamentary secretary say there is a $500 employee exemption?

Mr. Lumley: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stevens: Does he know, for example, what it is in Ontario?

Mr. Lumley: All provinces, with the exception of Quebec, have the same tax collection agreement with the federal government, so far as I know—but I will check it out.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would like to ask a question about the estimate the parliamentary secretary gave us. Frankly, I think a more relevant comparison would be between what it would cost to support this amendment and some of the concessions we are making to corporations in this tax bill. But with respect to the figure of $170 million, compared with $115 million, that is obviously some arithmetical stepping up. I remind the parliamentary secretary that there is a 3 per cent ceiling, and if we do raise the maximum to $400 but leave the 3 per cent in, many workers earning $10,000 or $11,000 a year will not get the full $400. So I suggest that the cost of changing that figure from $250 to $400 is not in the same proportion as changing it from $150 to $250. In other words, I think the figure would be a lot less. But in any case, we think it is a good idea.

• (1602)

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, just a slight correction, in case the hon. member misunderstood me. It is an extra $170 million over and above the $115 million. Obviously, I am not a mathematician. This was a very fast calculation we made, but we will try to get that figure verified.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is exactly the point. The $115 million was what the cost would be to go from $150 to $250. Now the parliamentary secretary is saying it will take another $170 million to go from $250 to $400. That is in the same proportion. That would be the case if everyone was going to get it. My point is that many workers will not get the $400 because of the 3 per cent ceiling. Therefore, the actual extra cost would be a lot less than $170 million. I hope the parliamentary secretary's nodding will get on the record.

Mr. Lumley: As I stated earlier, we have not done a precise calculation. The hon. member could very well be right. We will try to verify this figure for him at a later time.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I have a question on this clause, and if we cannot get the answer I suggest we stand this clause and go on to deal with some of the others so that we can make some progress. It is not our fault that we are being delayed on this. I have a question in connection with this clause. This clause which the government is proposing is going to apply to the nine provinces which have the federal government collecting their income tax for them. Is this clause proposed without permission from the nine provinces involved, or without consultation? Quebec collects its own tax, and the taxes of the other provinces are collected by the government of Canada. This clause will cause a loss of revenue for the nine provinces whose taxes are collected by the federal government. Did the federal government seek the consent of those nine provinces for this clause, as well as for the other changes in the income tax system?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, this is not different from any other changes in the bill or in any other previous budget. The federal government examines the system as well as individual situations. For example, the government found that the $150 deduction is totally inadequate in view of the inflation we have experienced in the past couple of years. We do not discuss every single aspect of a tax bill with every single province.

Mr. Crosbie: That is just the point I wanted to bring out. I am glad the parliamentary secretary verifies that. I am not talking about federal income tax imposed by the federal government for its own coffers; I am talking about taxes imposed by nine provincial governments to raise moneys for provincial purposes which are collected by the government of Canada as a convenient administrative method, so that we do not have 10 or 11 governments collecting income and corporate taxes. The government of Canada collects it as an administrative mechanism to avoid a complete nightmare, but then when it makes changes in its own tax—the point I am getting to—it also makes changes unilaterally for the nine provinces whose taxes it collects. That is the situation, is it not?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member is aware that the nine provinces voluntarily entered into tax collecting agreements with the federal government. The provinces still have the prerogative to have their own individual taxation systems over and above anything the federal government does.

Mr. Crosbie: Then that is what they will have to do.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member from the Social Credit party that the tax exemption be raised to $400, but I want to say that I am less than enthusiastic about any system which gives automatic exemptions to people. Whether it is the $150 exemption we had last year, the $250 exemption which is proposed by the government for this year, or the $400 exemption proposed by the Social Credit party, we are not taking into account all the actual expenses an employee incurs. These expenses include those incurred in getting to and from work, having to buy tools, or whatever. When the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville was suggesting changes, the parliamentary secretary repeated something the minister said a few days ago; that is, that it would be an administrative nightmare to have to get the accounting done in a more detailed way.

I am struck by the attitude of the minister and his department about the difference between how to treat working people and how to treat self-employed and business people. For the latter group we permit a host of exemptions—it would take me all day to list them—and there is very little accounting. I am going to put some of these exemptions on the record. I am sure many working people in this country will say, "By golly, we are getting an extra $100 exemption, and that is good", but the only reason they say that is that they do not know the kinds of tax breaks this country gives to self-employed and business people. I am not saying that is necessarily wrong. I am saying, however, that there ought to be the same approach to working people as there is to business people.

I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that what I am suggesting is not very radical. During the election campaign which took place prior to his election, President Carter said: "When a business executive can charge off a $55 luncheon on a tax return and truck driver can't deduct a $1.50 sandwich, then we need basic tax reform". Is the situation in Canada the same as it is in the United States? If the parliamentary secretary consults his officials I think he will find that that is precisely the case. A businessman can deduct $55 or $250 for a dinner if he has it with some of his prospective customers. The tax department will not question that at all. That would be a legitimate expense. He can take his customers to a golf club and pay the green fees, or he can buy a wedding present for the daughter of a customer or prospective customer and charge that off as business expense. He can take a business trip.

A former minister of finance, Mr. Turner, spoke to a convention of Canadian business people a couple of months ago; I think it was the Institute of Financial Analysts, although I may be wrong about the specific organization. Where were they having their convention? In Bermuda or the Bahamas, and the expenses are considered business expenses. The delegates can deduct the expense of going to that convention and they do not have to pay taxes on the cost of that trip. A doctor, lawyer or businessman can deduct the expenses for his automobile. That can be a very substantial amount of money. For example, he can deduct the expenses for gasoline, oil, automobile insurance and even for the depreciation of his car. If he has a $15,000 car, he can depreciate it in the first year at 30 per cent. For car expenses alone, a businessman can charge off expenses of between $4,000 and $5,000. If he is in the 40 per cent to 50 per cent tax bracket, as many business people are, he will pay about $2,000 less income tax. I am not saying that is wrong, but I am saying the working man does not have that opportunity. A man who can walk to work will be able to deduct the $250 which the government is proposing, but if he has to drive 50 miles each way every day he will not be able to deduct the costs involved or depreciation on his car. On the one hand, very generous treatment is given to self-employed and business people, but the treatment of working people is very tough.

I quoted from a speech made by President Carter on the subject of tax deductions. He proposed some very tough tax laws which are being considered by the House of Representatives and the Senate in the United States. He suggests that the government monitor very closely the kind of business expense I have spoken of—for example, the business lunch. A spokesman for the American Hotel and Motel Association is quoted in the Toronto Star of November 12 as saying:

> It doesn't take a lame-brain to figure out this could really hurt these people. You walk into any Washington hotel, restaurant or dining room and look around at the way people pay. You can tell they're on expense accounts.
> If they pass this thing, you'd be able to shoot a cannon in those restaurants and not hit anybody.

Is the situation any different in Canada? If I were to go to the Chateau Laurier, the Skyline Hotel, the Inn of the Provinces or any good restaurant in Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg or Montreal, I am sure the bulk of the people eating those expensive luncheons would be putting them on expense accounts, paid to a large extent by the taxpayers of this country. Meanwhile, if we pass this bill, the working man can only deduct the niggardly amount of $250 for the whole year. That is probably less than some business people can deduct in one day for business expenses.

When he spoke last week, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge mentioned an analysis of this bill made by law students at Osgoode Hall in Toronto. I should like to put on record some of their observations about this particular clause which will permit employees to deduct either $250, or 3 per cent of their income. I commend these comments to the parliamentary secretary because they come from a group of people who in future will be in the business or self-employed category and will take advantage of the exemptions proposed in the bill. Referring to clause 4, the report reads:

1. This piecemeal deduction will do little to increase the disposable income of working Canadians. Assume a worker is in a 30 per cent tax bracket. If the government allows him an extra $100 per year by way of the deduction, his tax savings are $30 annually, or about $1.60 a week, with which additional consumer spending is to be done.

2. The employee expense deduction is highly inequitable. It violates both the principles of horizontal and vertical equity.

(a) Two employees who both earn $15,000 will get the same deduction even though each may be incurring for different expenses in earning that income.

(b) Vertical equity is violated since a person earning $15,000 may incur far fewer expenses than a person earning $4,000. Nonetheless, the former will be able to claim a far greater deduction than the other.

3. The employee expense deduction, present or proposed, discriminates against the working poor. A large percentage of Canadians earn under $8,000. To award these people an arbitrary sum which they are to deduct to cover their expenses is highly insulting. They are not able to claim a full deduction of $250, when perhaps incurring similar if not greater expenses than a higher salaried employee. This is so since all Canadians earning less than $8,333 are restricted to claiming 3 per cent of their income as their expense deduction. Not only has the government failed to raise the 3 per cent minimum ceiling in order to help this income class, but it has failed to realize that this mode of calculation might only be justifiable if expenses incurred were a function of earning income. However, as has been stated, many people in higher income brackets spend less in earning income than the persons in lower income groups.

4. The employee expense deduction, with or without the proposed increase, does not provide a reasonable deduction for expenses incurred when earning income. Rather, it is the product of political compromise. The government has chosen a sum arbitrarily without the aid of statistical data. It merely retreated from the compromise suggested by the authors of the Carter report, i.e. to give employees a maximum deduction of $500. However, such a figure was felt to be too generous.

5. Therefore, if required to justify the present figure of the deduction, the government should complete and publish a study of its costs and benefits which it promised to undertake long ago.

6. Ideally and practically speaking, all employees should be able to deduct the reasonable costs of earning income. Were the government so sensitive to the fact that "all Canadians face expenses of employment" (p. 19, budget supplementary papers) it would meet the problem of employee expenses head-on by eliminating the distinction between business and employment income.

That is precisely what I have suggested, Mr. Chairman. There should be no difference between expenses incurred by employees and expenses incurred by business people. It has been argued that this would make the administration and collection of taxes very difficult; in fact, the parliamentary secretary said it would be an administrative nightmare. I do not believe that the working people of Canada, those who are employees, are less entitled to expenses incurred in the course of their work than are business people and those who are self-employed. I shall support the motion of the Social Credit party, Mr. Chairman, and I should like the parliamentary secretary to tell the House why the government continues this approach to the calculation of expenses that affects working people differently from those who are self-employed or in business.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, I cannot state specifically whether expense deductions are the same in Canada as in the United States. We think we have one of the best taxation systems in the world. Just to take one aspect of that, we have the highest threshold of income before taxes in the world. The hon. member's example was an individual making $8,333, with two dependants, who does not pay any income tax whatsoever. I am not aware of how many countries have that particular tax provision. When you talk about businesses, those expenses are restricted to legitimate expenses.

● (1622)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: If there are some allowances that are not correct, then they should be brought to the Department of National Revenue. That is exactly what National Revenue does and is there for. As far as taxation goes, only legimate expenses are to be allowed on tax forms.

Mr. Chairman, the bureaucratic nightmare which I referred to earlier is not just a question of the amount of paperwork involved; it is also a question of determining what are legitimate expenses, if you want to use his example with regard to individuals. For instance, the motion on the floor at the moment with respect to cars, does that mean the individual who drives a big, gas-consuming vehicle has a larger expense deduction than the individual who drives a smaller car and conserves energy? Does that mean the individual who buys expensive suits gets a larger expense deduction than the individual who wears Levis? If he talks about equity, Mr. Chairman, I do not see where this suggestion would solve the equitable situation that they advocate.

Mr. Orlikow: I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary a question. He says we have a very equitable tax system. Would the parliamentary secretary explain, and tell me if I am correct in my statement that a businessman, doctor, lawyer or architect can deduct a substantial percentage of the expense of running his car which he uses for business, including the cost of gas, oil, automobile insurance and depreciation on the car? If he confirms one can do that, will he explain to me why a working man living, for example, in Gimli, Manitoba, who has a job in Winnipeg, 50 miles away, and drives to and from work every day to keep his job cannot deduct a percentage of his car expenses the same way a businessman can? In the examples I have just recited, if they do not have the same rights, where is the equity?

Mr. Lumley: Not only the doctor, to which the hon. member refers, has that, but so has every salesman—anybody who has to use a car for business. The doctor or salesman cannot claim expenses travelling to and from work in that deduction: absolutely nothing for personal use.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on this subject. I might say I am inclined to agree that we should look at the increase to $400 or some amount. In the United States they are having a violent argument over this so-called "one martini" lunch.

An hon. Member: A three martini lunch!

Mr. Ritchie: A three martini lunch. From what I read, it looks as if the three martini lunch is going to stay. Maybe a few other things will go—for example, stadium box seats—which will hurt the Grey Cup equivalent in the United States, or the hunting lodges. In addition, the clamp the United States put on large conventions outside the country has been a very great boon for the hotels, and so on, in that country. That is something we should think about. This is a very difficult topic to be fair about. I think there is one aspect I have not heard discussed in this House today, although I have not been here for the whole day. But it is the fact that for tradesmen there has been the problem of tools with the changeover to metric. Generally speaking, from what I have heard, a tradesman who requires tools needs somewhere between $400 to $500 to buy them.

An hon. Member: At least.

Mr. Ritchie: For instance, I was on the aeroplane the other day and an individual who is not a tradesman mentioned to me that his two daughters had two bicycles, and he could not do anything with them—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps it would be helpful to the members if I reread the amendment. It is in French. We have an amendment to clause 4 which reads as follows:

[Translation]

That subclause 4(1) of Bill C-11 be amended by striking out lines 17 and 18 on page 3 thereof and substituting the following;

"er, equal to the lesser of $400 and 3 per cent of the aggregate of"

And by adding thereto:

"or a deduction is allowed for all costs incurred while travelling to and from work by wage-earners using public transportation, on submission of receipts and vouchers."

[English]

I would ask hon. members to limit their remarks to the amendment. Once we dispose of the amendment, we can return to clause 4.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I was merely trying to point out to you that the $400 limit for a tradesman to buy a new set of tools to cope with the metric system, which we in our wisdom brought in and which was the worst possible thing at this time because it will increase inflation and cause expense to our working people, is certainly too little. Generally speaking, I believe within this year and the next year all tradesmen who buy their own tools are going to be required to buy them because this is the time of change. I would suggest, as has the hon. member for Winnipeg North, that it may be wise to look at this $250 or $400 and attempt to assess more carefully what the actual expenses are of individuals, so we can be fair in this regard. I did not feel it would be such an administrative nightmare as that which the parliamentary secretary has suggested.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Some hon. Members: Take the two at once.

Mr. Peters: With one of us coming from Ontario, and the other from Quebec, with exactly the same problems, we will probably make the same remarks and support the amendment which is on the order paper. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised the parliamentary secretary indicates there is some fairness in this provision. It is not fair, and everyone knows it is not fair. The doctor in the course of his duties has to drive to his office, to the hospital, he has to drive between the office and the hospital and maybe to a patient's house—although not too many doctors are making house calls these days—but they all have big cars and they all write off a portion of that expense. This is true with anybody in any particular job, except a straight worker—the guy carrying the lunch pail: he does not have the right to write anything off. We have allowed him, over the years, to get to the stage where he can write off $150. You can call it what you like—for clothes, for tools or transportation. But in the other Témiscamingue riding, and also in mine, many of the mines have closed and to get a job the guy has to drive another 40 or 50 miles. When he drives, it lessens the amount of income he receives from the wages that he earns. If it happened to anyone else in any other category except the workers, he would be allowed to write off a portion of that expense. Before I entered this House I had a job where I had a car provided to me—and you were not allowed to drive it to church.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Peters: You were not allowed to drive it for groceries. That did not bother me, because my wife had a car and she could do those things.

An hon. Member: Could she go to church for you?

Mr. Peters: Yes, she could go to church for me if she wanted. They said you had to declare. This is one of the stupid things. There was a court case at that time over the amount you had to write off. It was suggested that you had to deduct 25 per cent of your car expense for personal use. I had two cars. I drove 50,000 or 60,000 miles a year. Certainly not much of that was for pleasure. When I filed my income tax return, I deducted 10 per cent for personal use, rather than 25 per cent. There was no argument; the department does not argue about such things.

What about the person who has to drive 50 miles to work? Everyone says there should be a pool with four or five people riding in the car. That is fine. But what about shift work? In some places of employment the people come from eight or ten different towns. It is not possible to arrange for a carload. There is certainly no public transportation. What about the man who has to work overtime? A worker in my part of the country may have no lunch left in his lunchpail. This means someone has to drive into the community to obtain a meal for him. No allowance is made for that. If you were a businessman and owned a factory, sawmill or mine, and took the board of directors downtown and treated them to a $100 meal, plus all the booze they wanted to drink, you could write off that amount. However, the poor worker cannot write off the expense of his meal.

Your Honour will be familiar with the complicated system for railroaders. After so many miles or so many hours they were allowed to write off expenses if they lived away from home. This applied only to railroaders. It was very limited, specific and difficult to administer. There are people in northern Ontario and northern Quebec who have to travel long distances for their livelihood. They are willing to do that rather than live off welfare. However, they cannot write off anything. The minister says it would be hard to administer. Mine workers in my area travel from New Liskeard and Temagami, a distance of 45 miles. The mining company must fill out hundreds of forms a day for the government. That is one of the major complaints of industry of all types. It would be much easier if once or twice a year the company could declare, on behalf of the employee, that it is necessary for him to use private or public transportation to get to his place of employment. The Ontario government does not allow you to build a house on the edge of that mining property; you must live in one of the municipalities.

It is about time this government quit cheating the workers of this country and allowed them some of the benefits that are given to other segments of society. If the government is not willing to give these benefits to them, they should cut them off for others. If a worker goes to a restaurant on a Saturday night, he must pay $10 for a meal. That is because every meal served for the rest of the week is to someone on an expense account. Today I take you to dinner, tomorrow you take me. If we both represent business agencies, I can write off your meal and you can write off mine. The department does not even consider the free meal you got while writing off mine. The parliamentary secretary says it is fair. It is not fair. Surely he has been talking to workers in his constituency. He must know that even in the city a worker must use transportation to get to work. That is the cost of him doing business, getting to the plant to do his job in order to earn money to pay taxes to this government. If we are going to be fair, let us do it with no b.s. The parliamentary secretary is all b.s. if he thinks he can sell the idea that there is equality.

Mr. Pelletier: What is all b.s.?

Mr. Peters: You are a master of it. You have a Ph. D. in it for higher and deeper. If anyone can get elected on b.s., it is that member, because he has a Ph. D. in it. We will support the amendment of the hon. member for Rimouski to increase the $150 deduction to $400. However, even $400 is not right. The worker should be allowed the same type of exemption that others receive. It should be fair and equitable. The worker who must work five days a week should receive exactly the same benefits as the businessman whom this government favours. He should be allowed the same exemptions as the high-priced employees are allowed. They can deduct everything from gifts to their girlfriends, to southern trips to attend conventions. If the minister is going to be fair, he will allow the same benefits to the workers of Canada as are allowed to the fatcats.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few comments in support of this amendment. As a representative of a rural constituency, I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Timiskaming. A great many people in my area must drive a considerable number of miles to their employment. It is nothing out of the way to drive 40 or 50 miles. As the previous speaker mentioned, they are not allowed to deduct the expense for that. At income tax time I receive many letters from constituents asking why they cannot deduct certain expenses. The Department of National Revenue does allow certain expenses for certain types of work. The hon. member for Timiskaming mentioned one example with which Your Honour is familiar. After a certain time, railroaders are allowed certain expenses. In some instances, truckers are allowed expenses. Several construction workers contacted me. They informed me that two years ago they deducted certain expenses and these were allowed. When they did this another year, the expenses were not allowed. I feel there should be some fair way of handling it.

Those who work in rural areas and have only their car as transportation should be allowed more than the government is prepared to allow them. The amount of $400 is certainly a step in the right direction. If the parliamentary secretary recommends that this $400 should be allowed, I am sure it will be across-the-board. That will mean someone living in an apartment who walks across the street to his place of employment will receive the same benefit as the person who must drive 50 or 100 miles to work five days a week. I hope the government will consider this for these workers who, rather than go on welfare or unemployment insurance, are prepared to drive long distances to get to their jobs.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I again want to say a few words on the amendment before us. How can the parliamentary secretary justify a businessman in a place like Cornwall being able to deduct his champagne and caviar while a worker in Cornwall is not able to deduct his beer and salami sandwich?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, I will reiterate what I said earlier. It is important that hon. members understand this. I have been on both sides of the fence; I have been a labourer and also in the business community. I do not necessarily agree with the presentation made by members opposite.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are still on both sides of the fence.

Mr. Lumley: The hon. member for Timiskaming said it all in his original remarks when he said "not for personal use." The exemptions write off only the business portion. Consequently, any expenditures made by individuals for their personal use are not written off. The allowance is restricted to genuine expenses. The royal commission on taxation studied this matter very thoroughly and concluded that the most equitable way of dealing with it was by way of a flat rate.

● (1642)

Mr. Nystrom: Suppose a businessman in Cornwall is buying the champagne and caviar and entertaining a business friend: he will consume some of that personally; he is not going to watch while his business friends eat and drink alone. If he can write off the whole bill, why cannot the working man write off the cost of his beer and salami sandwich?

Mr. Lumley: If any of those expenses are for personal benefit, there is no way in which they can be deducted.

Mr. Nystrom: It is obvious that what the parliamentary secretary is saying is not the case. When a businessman takes out four friends and buys lunch and entertainment for them, he benefits from the entertainment and consumes a portion of the lunch. He does not submit a voucher to the department for only 80 per cent of the bill on the grounds that the other 20 per cent benefited him personally. His portion is considered part of the expense. Why cannot the worker do the same? Perhaps a worker has to meet a fellow worker over a salami sandwich about something which is very important to the job, maybe a technical innovation or a proposal to exchange shifts for a legitimate purpose. The cost of the meal may not be much greater than $1.25. But why cannot a worker deduct that amount? Why is there a double standard? A lot of workers are asking me that question.

Mr. Lumley: That is exactly what the $250 deduction is intended to cover; it is intended to cover expenses such as that. The hon. member spoke of a businessman taking out his friends. He is not allowed to deduct in respect of taking out friends, only for legitimate business expenses. Legitimate business expenses are one thing, but when you take friends out you pay the bill from your own pocket.

Mr. Nystrom: The parliamentary secretary tells us the worker gets $250 allowed for these purposes. Why does the businessman not get an allowance of $250, and no more? Or, if the deduction is for legitimate business purposes, why is it not higher?

Mr. Lumley: Let us take the hon. member's case and extend it one step further. For example, union dues paid by workers go to a national union. When the officials of that union take people out to dinner for a legitimate business reason, those expenses are deductible, too, in the same way as in the case of a private company.

Mr. Nystrom: I am not talking about unions; I am talking about the ordinary worker in a plant or factory who may or may not be a member of a union. Why should not the same rules apply to him as apply to the businessman? The businessman can go into a very expensive restaurant to entertain people for business purposes—I will grant that—and he can buy a dinner for those who are with him. But his portion of that expensive dinner is also written off as a tax deduction. An ordinary worker could well be meeting associates for business purposes to discuss matters connected with his job, but he cannot write off an expense so incurred. Why is there a double standard?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that the bill introduced by the member of the New Democratic Party to change the name of the riding from Témiscamingue to Réal Caouette should come into force as soon as possible if we want eventually to understand each other. It is clear, Mr. Chairman, that I give my full support to the motion proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard). This motion is simply an act of justice towards the working people. A number of members of this House among whom my colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), from Ontario, mentioned a moment ago that we are living in vast regions where people have to travel 25, 30, 50 miles, every morning and every evening to go to work. Commuting is neither a game nor a pleasure trip for these individuals; it is a part of their personal expenses in terms of time as well as in terms of money.

They even go as far as depriving individuals from unemployment insurance benefits because they will say they have no means of transportation to go and look for a job 25 miles from their home. If somebody agrees to that wage reduction, because they will have to spend $2, $3 or $4 for gas every day, which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley) does not seem to understand, I believe it is too much and I wonder whether he really is as naive as that.

The fact remains that those people must spend much more than $250 a year to go to work. It would be simply fair to grant them $500 like the province of Quebec is doing. The hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) said last Monday that the province of Quebec granted up to $500. He said to the Minister: "I hope the Minister of Finance, in his next budget, will consider the remarks I have just made". The Minister of Finance answered him he was always pleased to do it and he said: "I certainly will consider as always the remarks made by my good friend, the hon. member for Gatineau". The amendment put forward today enables the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance to consider those requests which are genuine given the expenses people incur to travel.

It is also said in the amendment that all costs incurred for public transportation in main centres could be deducted. There are young people in Montreal who have to commute by train or by bus and who spend tens of dollars every week and when I say tens of dollars, that is not much. By the end of the year, over 50 weeks, it means $500 just to go to work. Coming back to the argument which was often raised, namely, the costs incurred by a doctor who is going to work or who must go see his patients, these costs are deductible. It is true he is not travelling very frequently these days but anyway, these costs are deductible.

When the parliamentary secretary indicated earlier that we should not give this opportunity to those who have large cars, this is precisely what the government is doing now. Doctors and professionals driving big cars, even if they shortened the Cadillac, are the ones who drive around in Cadillacs while the worker has to buy a Toyota or some other American or European compact car to make both ends meet. At the same time, the same government allows the price of gas to go up in an area such as the northwestern part of Quebec where gas is as high as $1.10 a gallon; once again this hits the small worker who must travel 15, 20, 25 miles every day to go to work. All that because of bad government administration.

So what we are asking for today—and I think it is quite logical—is to give for once a chance to the worker, to reduce this increase in expenses, this reduction in salary, because when you spend $20 a week on gas, repairs on your car, whether you like it or not, this results in a direct reduction of your salary.

In concluding, I will say that unemployment insurance penalizes those who cannot accept work 20 or 25 miles from home because this is not profitable to them, because in many cases what would the guy earn staying at home? He would earn $140 a week staying at home. If he goes to work for $140, plus $20 or $25 of travelling expenses, then he reduces his salary and because he refuses the UIC penalizes him, when the other guy in spite of all is willing to go and work even for that reduced salary. This amendment is intended precisely to bring relief to those people who pay, who are willing to go to work. Some professionals go to work knowing that their expenses are deductible but the worker still goes to work knowing that his expenses are not deductible. That is precisely the adjustment sought in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard).

● (1652)

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few comments on this amendment which, I think, is very important. Some of my colleagues on this side of the House expressed their intention to support this amendment. I think they are only seeking the justice that we have always wanted for workers in general. The parliamentary secretary to the minister will certainly reflect on the remarks made regarding this justice required for workers.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

I am not one of those wishing that the minister reconsiders the benefits granted to businessmen as it might often be difficult to compare businessmen's responsibilities with those of workers. It is certainly not difficult to feel responsible concerning the needs of workers. I think we must give them a minimum of benefits. Obviously for those who must go to work outside, it is not always a matter of choice. Of course you will tell me that they should find a job close to home. We know very well that it is not always easy to find a job in one's own community these days.

So I think we should give some benefits on that respect to those who succeed in finding a job. And again when we talk about $400 I do not think it is excessive as we know perfectly well that in some cases their travel and employment expenses largely exceed $400.

I think that the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) pointed out that this measure would encourage those who often would prefer drawing unemployment insurance rather than accept a $150 job when they know full well that they will lose money if they accept it. God knows if we have problems! The industry and businessmen have problems with unemployment insurance. However, we recognize their usefulness. We also recognize that they cause many difficulties to those looking for employees. Today, through an amendment which is commendable and which we shall support without hesitation, we are trying to offer a compensation that would be, at the same time, a work incentive.

I could perhaps ask: What about when the officials of the minister, for instance, must travel on official business, and I imagine they often have to do so. They probably have such advantages or tax deductions. In view of the present circumstances, why should the workers not be entitled to those same advantages? I hope that our friends opposite understand the importance of this. I think it is important to note that it was judged appropriate for members of parliament to be entitled to deduct certain expenses in view of their obligations. In my opinion, it would be difficult to justify our position to the workers if we refused this deduction of $400 when I am convinced that everyone is well aware of the deductions allowed in the case of members of this House, which are certainly quite justified. How then could we refuse to support this amendment which, in my opinion, corresponds—

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would allow a question.

Mr. La Salle: Yes, Mr. Chairman, if it is an intelligent question.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, in spite of the arrogance of the hon. member who suggests that my question could perhaps not be an intelligent one, I would like to ask him if he could, intelligently, explain to the House how this amendment would be an incentive to work because, in fact, I cannot understand how increasing a deduction from $250 to $400 can be a determining factor in motivating someone to go to work. Then could he explain to the committee, if this is the basis of the stance taken by his party, how this amendment could motivate people to work?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I was just saying that in many cases, for instance, the worker has to look for work outside and given the amount of his unemployment insurance benefits and the fact that he is unable to benefit from this $400 deduction on additional expenses that he must incur to go to work, he would normally react by saying: I am better off collecting my unemployment insurance benefits than going out finding work for a total pay that is nearly equal to these supplementary expenses. It is true that often he will earn even less than his unemployment insurance benefits provide him with. We have here a possibility of increasing this expenses deduction and I think that this way we could at least give him some motivation since he would be assured to get the same benefits he is getting from unemployment insurance thanks to the protection provided by this amendment.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to the vote on this amendment put forward by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) I would like to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley). I would like to know if he has received representations from the labour unions in Canada to the effect that this amount, raised from $150 to $200, was insufficient?

[English]

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, we continually receive representations from workers from all sectors of Canadian society with respect to this particular tax deduction. This is one of the reasons the amount was increased from $150 to $250.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

● (1702)

The Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Allard) negatived: Yeas, 24; nays, 33.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is now on clause 4.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, in dealing with clause 4, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would indicate the rationale for the increase from $150 to $250 in the expense allowance? This appears simply to be an adjustment for inflation from the commencement of the $150 employee deduction and today. Is that correct?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, it involves a little more than just an allowance for inflation. It is basically a response to the number of representations we have had from a number of sectors throughout the country.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would like the parliamentary secretary to be a little more specific than that. What has the inflation level been since 1971? My recollection is that the increase has been 61.4 per cent, and what we have in this increase before us is 66 per cent. Therefore, I would think this basically is an allowance for inflation.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, I have not the figures before me, but using the hon. member's percentages, this increase is greater than the inflation rate increase which he quoted.

Mr. Stevens: The point I want to make is that the government is grossly unfair in what it is doing here. It is simply allowing retroactively for inflation in this proposal but is allowing nothing for the future. This means that if inflation continues as it has in the past—that is, 8.8 per cent in the last 12 months—and the Minister of Finance has indicated he thinks it will be at least 6 per cent next year, the $250 allowance will steadily decrease in buying power and somebody will have to come forward and amend this legislation again. If the government wishes to allow some meaningful increase in this expense allowance, why does it not agree to at least a compromise figure? If it thinks $400 is too high, will it allow something like $350? This would not tax the treasury too much but, on the other hand, it would give the workers some assurance that they are getting a little better deal than simply catching up with inflation.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will look at other clauses, he will see there are many substantial tax cuts for Canadians across the country.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, we are constantly being interrupted by people suggesting we are not speaking to this clause. I want to expedite the passage of this bill, but here we have the parliamentary secretary referring to other clauses.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is very touchy. I did not insinuate that he was slowing down the passage of this clause, which obviously is true on the basis of what has taken place today. What I said was that if he looks at all the clauses of this bill, he will see there are many tax cuts for Canadians all across the country.

Mr. Stevens: Let me direct the parliamentary secretary to some comments by his minister on Monday in response to the hon. member for Gatineau who said, very frankly, that he felt $250 was too low. The minister gave every indication he would consider an increase. Can the parliamentary secretary tell us, as a matter of policy, whether his department is willing to increase the level from $250, an increase which was certainly requested by the hon. member for Gatineau and supported by hon. members on this side, as demonstrated by the recent vote on the amendment?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, as my minister stated to the hon. member for Gatineau, he is very sympathetic to any kind of representation for assistance to individuals in this country. However, in respect of this particular clause I have difficulty understanding the hon. member's position. During the second reading debate we heard the opposition refer again and again to government restraint, yet now we hear the finance critic of the opposition suggesting we should spend another $175 million. I have some difficulty in reconciling his points of view.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the parliamentary secretary has his terms a little twisted. There is no spending involved in what we are proposing. It may result in a loss of revenue, that is quite correct, but if the parliamentary secretary has been following our remarks he will know we have consistently been asking for meaningful personal income tax cuts. One way in which the government could make a meaningful personal income tax cut is by increasing this expense allowance. What we are saying is that it is not good enough to simply increase the amount to compensate for the inflation this government has allowed to exist in this country; therefore, the increase should be something over $250 to be meaningful. I have been trying to find out from the parliamentary secretary whether he has had any instruction from his minister in respect of a meaningful increase of $300, $350 or $400, and instead we have been getting a lot of rhetoric.

Mr. Lumley: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that $150 million is very respectable. If one considers, in addition, the $500 million in tax cuts in 1977-78 and $1.2 billion in 1978-79, he will realize that these are also reasonable figures.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, let me come back to the so-called equity about which the parliamentary secretary talks; that is, the equity between wage and salary earners as opposed to business people and the self-employed. The hon. member suggested that business suggested that business people could only deduct expenses incurred in doing business to earn income. Let me give two illustrations of the different treatment. The parliamentary secretary talks about a salesman incurring expenses in making his sales. I am sure there must be salesmen based in Cornwall who have territories running from Cornwall to Ottawa. Such a salesman would make his calls between his home base and Ottawa in order to make sales to earn an income. In such case he can deduct his expenses for gas and oil for his car, but not similar expenses for pleasure driving on the weekend. He can certainly deduct expenses incurred in driving from Cornwall to those places on his way to Ottawa.

I presume that if he has to stay overnight in Ottawa in order to see customers the next day, he could deduct those expenses. In comparison with that illustration of the salesman, let us consider the construction worker in Cornwall. There is no construction going on in Cornwall, but he was able to get a job on one of the buildings which the government of Canada is erecting in Hull.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Under the rules now, he could not.

Mr. Orlikow: Let us assume for a moment that he could. In order to earn his living, he has to drive four days a week from Cornwall to Hull. If he drives every day from Cornwall to Hull and returns, why can he not deduct his expenses for the operation of his car which he must drive in order to earn his wages? If he decides it is too far to drive, and finds a place to stay for four nights a week in order to do his work, why can he not deduct the expense of lodgings in order to keep the job? I am not suggesting there is anything wrong with the salesman who makes deductions from his income tax for the expenses he incurs as a salesman, but I am asking the parliamentary secretary why the construction worker who lives in Cornwall is not entitled to the same treatment as the salesman.

Mr. Lumley: I do not know how many times I have had to repeat the same thing this afternoon. Let me reiterate: The Income Tax Act has never allowed expenses for personal use. They are restricted to legitimate expenses, regardless of the employment of the individual.

Mr. Orlikow: I would like the parliamentary secretary to explain to me why the Income Tax Act proposed by this government and voted and supported by this parliament which has a majority of members from his party, the Liberal party, does not allow such deductions. Where is the rationale behind the sections in the Income Tax Act which permit a businessman, such as the salesman in my illustration, to deduct his expenses, but not a construction worker? I am not saying the construction worker's expenses are not legitimate. I am talking about the legitimate expenses of the worker in Cornwall who has to drive to work to another city or has to stay overnight or stay a few nights in another city to earn his living. Why does the Income Tax Act not permit him to make the same kind of deduction, using the same principle applied to the salesman?

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Stevens: I would like to have the response of the parliamentary secretary to certain concerns that have been expressed by municipal officials in Ontario and possibly other areas in Canada who have written to the minister drawing his attention to resolutions which they have passed at their respective council meetings asking that the $150 which is now the employee exemption be raised to $250, if the government has its wish, be clearly applied to them, without any suggestion that they are not entitled to that allowance because of other provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Can the parliamentary secretary tell us what the government's response is to that request, which seems to be a very legitimate request in that those who are on the councils of these various municipalities feel their remuneration is extremely low and they have certain expenses going to and from meetings, and yet are not given the unqualified employee allowance that most people have? I ask this of the parliamentary secretary, bearing in mind that it is the same taxpayer in the country, whether he is paying through the federal treasury or the municipality. It seems too bad that this exemption cannot apply to them.

Mr. Lumley: I am not aware of the representations mentioned by the hon. member, but if I recall my days in municipal government, as do other hon. members, perhaps, one-third of my remuneration as a municipal elected official was tax-free, or deemed to be expenses.

Mr. Stevens: The minister responded to these representations. I have a copy of a letter of October 26. This is one of the obvious difficulties we have in trying to deal with the various clauses of the bill when the minister is not here. In a two-page letter the minister explained certain views that he believes are pertinent to the subject. I wanted to be updated on the matter. I would like to know whether further thought has been given by the department to making it clear that the $250, notwithstanding the one-third which is deemed to be an expense allowance, be clearly applicable to council representatives who, after all, are being paid for by the same taxpayers as are contributing to the federal treasury. I take it from the parliamentary secretary's response that no further consideration has been given to this matter.

Mr. Lumley: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: I am interested in the phrase which the parliamentary secretary keeps repeating, namely, "personal use". People who have to get up early to drive 45 miles to work are not applying for exemption for personal use. It is not their personal inclination to incur these expenses. They are for the purpose of getting to work, which is part of their job. They cannot get there without driving. I do not think that should be considered as personal use.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North spoke about a worker's job involving living away from home. I would like to recount a case to the parliamentary secretary of a diamond drilling company in the north, where distances are considerable. The diamond drillers go out into the bush and have to stay there for two or three weeks. They can either look after themselves in the bush, or the boss looks after them. If the boss looks after them, that is considered company business and the company can write off the cost of meals and other expenses. There is a set amount for room and board which may be deducted, which they have to pay anyway because there is no alternative. If the company did not provide that, they would have to find lodgings in a tent, sleep in a sleeping-bag and cook their own grub, all of which is not considered as a legitimate expense.

It seems to me that the parliamentary secretary speaks with tongue in cheek, as do some other members on his side of the House who have spoken this afternoon and who represent large ridings and have some of the problems that we know about. They believe that anything over $250 would be of disadvantage to them—they would not know what to do with such a saving, so they cannot support it.

● (1722)

In line with something mentioned by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether the government has given any thought to the game it appears to be playing with the workers of this country. Farm boys will understand this. The government occasionally sets the screw on the separator and allows the workers of the country to get a little more cream than skim milk. But frankly, as I see it, this exemption is for the business community and the white-collar workers as opposed to blue-collar workers. Blue-collar workers are still getting skim milk.

Is there any consideration being given to indexing? If the kind of adjustment referred to by the hon. member for York-Simcoe is to be made, perhaps it should be made on an indexed basis. Perhaps adjustments should be made quarterly. That would certainly make things difficult for civil servants who are playing around with computers, but it would make things fair and equitable. The minister's officials do not know anything about work. They do not know anything about jobs. They do not know anything except the city of Ottawa where there is no unemployment.

They will likely be in Ottawa until they are old men and retire with very good pensions. They do not have to drive to work except by choice. Some may live in Manotick, but that is because they want to. The people I am talking about do not have a choice. They drive to work out of absolute necessity. Getting to work is part of the job. Nobody wants to do that on his own time. Most of the workers in this country will be surprised to learn that driving to work at temperatures of 40 below zero on slippery unplowed highways in cold cars is for their own personal advantage. Some of the people of my area will be very surprised. I do not expect civil servants to understand, but some of us who represent workers should understand. Is it not time we represented the people we are supposed to represent, in order that they get some equity?

If a person has to buy a car, pay for public transportation, or make large expenditures to get to work—or to stay at work because it is not economic to drive home—is that not in the interests of the nation? Some people have to do that. In my area it is absolutely necessary to make these large expenditures, because if people do not do so, they will be unemployed. Many hon. members here do not live in metropolitan areas. The hon. member across from me lives in a remote part of British Columbia. He could tell us that some of the people he has worked with and some of the people he has employed have to take boats to get to work, let alone just driving cars. If they do not, they have to sleep in the mill. Perhaps they are paid for that. But I am not talking about people who are given those allowances. If they are, that is fine. I want people to be able to write off some of these costs when they are not paid for them. Hon. members know that this provision is just a sop. The government has just tightened the cream screw a little bit, and some of the people we represent get skim milk.

I do not represent very many fatcats. Civil servants are fatcats, but most of them live in Ottawa or Hull. They certainly do not live in Timiskaming. They have not thought of doing anything about the 25 per cent unemployment in my area. The government moved a Liberal from a riding south of mine into the cabinet. The people in his riding do not have the problems of the people in my riding, but they have been stupid enough to vote Liberal for a long time, and they will probably continue to do so. I represent workers, and many of them are disadvantaged because of distance. Every time they go into a restaurant they find fatcats sitting around buying meals for each other. They are fatcats, whether they be civil servants or salesmen from some company.

I once went to an eating place in Ottawa. I saw a man there who was a salesman employed by Simpsons at the time. I knew he was not too well off, because I had had some dealings with him. I did not really think he could afford to eat there. When I saw the menu, I did not think I could either. I thought it was a very expensive place. I told him I thought it was an expensive place for him to be eating at. He pointed out that his supplier was buying. His supplier took all the salesmen in his department to that restaurant. The supplier did not sell to the salesmen. Not one of them was buying a thing from the supplier's company. They were being taken out for good will. I had to pay for my meal. That was why I was asking those questions. Most members of parliament have to buy their own meals, unless they have some outside interest.

An hon. Member: I thought I saw you at the Chateau.

Mr. Peters: The only time I go to the Chateau is when somebody invites me for dinner.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: In most cases I am invited by a manufacturing association, a mining association or any of a number of other agencies. In each case the expense is written off, and I pay part of it. So does the hon. member opposite, and he does not eat the meal. We all pay for that, and we all know that. That is what I am complaining about. If it is good for the fatcats, it is good for everyone.

I remember, 20 years ago, members from rural ridings asking for some relief for workers so that they could pay for lodgings which were necessary if they were to get jobs. I remember hon. members—and I was one of them—fighting for allowances for tools and other benefits for workers. We thought we were lucky when workers did get benefits. The deduction went to $150. Now, in its generosity, the government is going to make it $250. Under no circumstances can the parliamentary secretary stand before his peers in this House and say that that is equitable. It is a sop; it has nothing to do with fairness or equality.

We will continue to have this problem under this government. All we are pleading for is equality. If a company says a man has to drive to work or he cannot get a job, then that man should be given a certificate. We do not give certificates to company officials; they are just given charge cards and everyone assumes they are company employees. The manager of a company can give a charge card to his wife and she can take the ladies out to dinner and write off the cost. Many women do that. Perhaps they might invite a gentleman on occasion. Let the company make a declaration that a worker incurs certain expenses in the course of his work. We would certainly support that.

Why does the parliamentary secretary stand up and say it is equitable? It is dishonest, and everyone knows it is not equitable. We are cheating those who work and who cannot write off expenses. If the minister says again that it is equitable, I would like him to tell me how expense accounts in this country are checked. Many abuses in this country which are normal procedure in the business community are just not allowed in the United States. It would not hurt to allow workers in this country to write off the expenses incurred in the course of their employment, any more than it hurts to allow the business community to write off legitimate expenses incurred in the course of business. Of course the business community has abused their exemptions on many occasions, but I do not think we would encounter the same abuse by the workers. This $250 allowance will be of assistance to the workers, but in no way should we call it equity.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member and his colleagues are talking about the elimination of abuses in terms of expenses, we on this side are 100 per cent in agreement. He referred to cases of tax evasion, and I hope he has reported them to the Minister of National Revenue who will take very prompt action to investigate them. Like many members on both sides of this House, I represent the public servants whom the hon. member calls non-workers and claims they do not have the same problems as people in his riding. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that a lot of us take exception to that. Public servants have the problems the hon. member alludes to. Because of the decentralization program this government has undertaken, a lot of public servants do not live in strictly urban centres but are scattered from coast to coast.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, every time the Income Tax Act comes before the House I get so ugly, so temperamental, because I have seen so many people whipped by this act. I really mean "whipped." Reference was made today to municipal officials. Certainly they get one-third, but there is nothing in this legislation to say they are entitled to it. I say it should be contained in the legislation and not authorized by a letter from the Minister of National Revenue or from a district taxation office. That exemption should be included in the bill.

I do not know how many members are lawyers, accountants or businessmen, but I know that very few can interpret this bill. It is beyond interpretation, Mr. Chairman. It is the craziest, most stupid, ridiculous piece of ambiguity and verbosity to appear in the Statutes of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jones: The minister, his parliamentary secretary and all members of cabinet have a responsibility to the people of Canada in presenting this legislation. The bill is not honest. Neither businessmen nor the man on the street can understand it. Lawyers, judges and even accountants cannot understand it. The people who write it do not understand it and cannot give the parliamentary secretary the answers he needs today. Perhaps he cannot interpret their language. Mr. Chairman, the Income Tax Act should be abolished and a 10-page or 15-page act substituted so that everybody in this House would know what they were voting on, and so that the ordinary man in the street could understand it. We sit here year after year trying to interpret something that cannot be interpreted.

The people of Canada have criticized the Income Tax Act in their homes and on the street. When they consult an accountant, he tells them one thing and then a lawyer tells them something else. Even the so-called experts in the department tell them different things. Eventually, when the matter comes before the courts, there is another interpretation. This is a serious business, Mr. Chairman. We should not be applying band-aid amendments to the Income Tax Act year after year. We should do away with it and start over again with an act more appropriate for our country and one that the man on the street could understand. Any piece of legislation that is as ridiculous, ambiguous and as stupid as this does not deserve to be debated. Every member should vote against it so that we get rid of it. Band-aid improvements are no good; they mean nothing.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Royalties, etc., to be included in income.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could indicate to the House why this clause is retroactive to May 6, 1974.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, when a company enters into a joint venture with the Crown corporation in resource development, the present rules technically forbid the company from avoiding not only any royalties paid to the government or the government agency but also in share profits within the Crown corporation. The purpose of the amendment is to rectify that situation, because it certainly was not intended to separate the profit side from the royalty side. The amendment provides that payments made to a government pursuant to an obligation imposed by statute, as opposed to a contractual obligation such as the royalty legislation of a province, would be disallowed as a deduction. It is an endeavour to facilitate joint action between Crown corporations, government and the private sector.

Mr. Stevens: I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could tell the House the significance of the date May 6, 1974?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, if I am not mistaken, this amendment just clarifies actions taken at that time with respect to royalties.

Mr. Stevens: Could the parliamentary secretary be more specific? What action was taken, and with whom, on May 6, 1974, that would be clarified by this amendment?

Mr. Lumley: Basically, it was with respect to the non-deductibility of royalties, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stevens: Could the parliamentary secretary be more specific? What arose on May 6, 1974, that we are referring to on this section? I should like a little more than "basically it is with respect to the non-deductibility of royalties", or some such answer. Specifically, what are we trying to achieve?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member knows the answer to the question before he puts it. I would refer him to the budget of May 6, 1974, where he can see the details with respect to the royalties.

Mr. Stevens: I do not want to delay passage of this clause, Mr. Chairman, but I notice it relates also to page 18 where we find a further reference to the same type of thing. I wonder if we could pass this clause, and by the time we get to page 18 perhaps the minister or the parliamentary secretary will be able to give a more complete explanation of what is covered in this subsection.

● (1742)

Mr. Lumley: This amendment, as well as the one similar to paragraph 18(1), if I am not mistaken, subclause 11 makes it clear the rules governing oil and gas and mineral royalties do not apply to other payments made to governments or Crown corporations.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Exchanges of property.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, we have an amendment to move to clause 6. This amendment is required to the French version of clause 6, paragraph 9, paragraph (13)(21) of the act which defines "total depreciation" allowed. This amendment corrects a translation error in the definition.

The Deputy Chairman: Mr. Lumley moves:

That subclause 6(9) of the French version of Bill C-11 be amended by striking out lines 31 and 32 on page 8 thereof and substituting the following:

[Translation]

"of all amounts deducted by the taxpayer and allowed to him in respect of property of that class under"

[English]

Amendment (Mr. Lumley) agreed to.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to speak with particular reference to clause 5 and the amendment. There are so many subclauses in this bill that it is pretty hard to keep track of them, but it implements paragraph 20 of the income tax motion which provides that for the 1977 and subsequent taxation years, a grant received under the Canadian home insulation program be included in the income of the recipient, or in the case of a married individual residing with his spouse and the income of the spouse is a higher income—in other words, this section deals with the so-called home insulation program that is in effect in six provinces of Canada—New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Those are the six provinces that accepted the home insulation program of the government of Canada which was announced with such great pride by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on June 27, 1977. That program, Mr. Chairman, is discriminatory.

I believe this is the first time, that I know of, that a piece of legislation has been passed by this House which discriminates and attacks residents of six of the provinces of Canada, grants a benefit to the residents of two provinces of the country and does nothing for or against with respect to the citizens of two other provinces. The province of Alberta and the province of Quebec—quite properly, in my opinion—refused to enter into the so-called home insulation program of the government of Canada. They said they were not going to submit to certain conditions the government laid down for that program. Six provinces did enter the program. Two provinces, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, already have a special home insulation program offered to them by the government of Canada, which differs substantially from the program offered to citizens who live in the rest of Canada.

The program I am talking about is the one implemented in provinces other than Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, in other words, the non-Liberal government provinces. It offers a program less than is offered in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. Not only does the program offer less, but this legislation is to ratify the decision of the government of Canada that taxpayers who take advantage of this program in the six provinces I have mentioned have the amount added to their taxable incomes, while people in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island who take advantage of the program do not have one cent added to their taxable income from the grant.

Taxpayers that hon. members of this House represent—there are representatives here from all provinces, Ontario, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Manitoba are also represented in cabinet, and they are permitting their people who take advantage of the home insulation grant program of the government in those provinces to be taxed on the amount of the grant they receive. I am delighted that they do not have it added to their taxable income in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, but I say that is a benefit that should be made available to everyone who lives in Canada and takes advantage of the program, not just those who live in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

The program commenced on September 1, 1977, for six provinces—not Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island—only if the provinces agreed to certain conditions. They had to agree to adopt and implement new building codes, change the speed limit on their highways, remove the sales tax on insulation materials, and prohibit the bulk metering of electricity—if their residents were to be allowed to enter into this program and have the advantage of it from the government of Canada. Two provinces, Alberta and Quebec, refused to be bullied and refused to have conditions laid down to them. They refused to participate. I say we have to thank the government of those provinces for demonstrating that they were not going to be coerced by the federal government in this respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The program is in effect in six provinces. Let us compare the program in those six provinces with the program in effect in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. In the six provinces I have mentioned—where the program is not very popular; there have been very few applications—the subsidy is available in the first year only for houses built before 1941, if you live in Manitoba and Newfoundland and certain other areas, and if your house was built before 1921 in Ontario and certain other areas. That is further discrimination. But if you live in Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, you are eligible no matter when your house was built. That is another aspect of discrimination. I do not know whether this bill is even constitutional. If we had any kind of a constitution, you could go to the courts and have it thrown out on the ground of rank, base discrimination.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: If you live in Ontario, you have to have a pretty old house, it has to be 56 years old to take advantage of this insulation grant. Imagine, in northern Ontario, where it is colder than Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, you have to have a house that is 56 years old before you are eligible for the grant! If you live in an old house, say a 150-year old house, and it might be pretty rickety by now, you apply and you receive a grant of $350. It is then added to your income and you are taxed on it. However, if you live in Nova Scotia in a house built last year or this year, brand, spanking new, well insulated, it does not matter when it was built, you receive a grant. Incidentally, the grant down there is up to $500, which is more than if you live in northern Ontario, and it is not added to your income.

Why is that? Should not the residents of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Newfoundland and New Brunswick, Alberta and Quebec and the other provinces be upset about this? I do not know whether they are upset or not. The ones in Newfoundland that I have talked to are upset. I say that the duty of this House is to defeat this clause. This clause should not pass this House. There is no way I am going to vote for it. I do not care what the rest of my colleagues on this side do. However, I feel sure they are all going to vote against it. I am voting against it. I am not voting for something that is going to see people taxed more in the six provinces I have mentioned than they are going to be taxed in two other provinces. Not on your life!

The first discrimination is the age of the house. If you live in Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia, age does not matter. If you live in Ontario, your house has to be built before 1921, and if you live in Newfoundland it has to be built before 1941. In Newfoundland, only 25 per cent of the houses are eligible, apparently, in the pre-1941 category. Second, if you want to get a grant you have to apply to Montreal. The province of Quebec is not even in this scheme. Even though they refused to be in the scheme, it is administered by CMHC from Montreal. You have to call the CMHC office in Quebec and deal with them, if you want to participate in this program. That is not a convenient or proper centre to have it administered from, particularly in view of the fact that Quebec is not even in the program.

● (1752)

Third, and this is another major discrimination, the program lays down that in six provinces, not Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, only two-thirds of the expenditure on insulation materials is refundable, up to a maximum of $350. The maximum you can get if you want to better insulate your home and you do not live in Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island is $350 maximum or two-thirds of what you spend, up to $350.

In addition, only certain specified insulating materials may be purchased. You cannot just purchase whatever you want in the way of materials. However, if you look at the Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, scheme number one, as I said, the subsidy is not taxable. Number two, it can be spent on any insulating material. You are not restricted, in Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, as to the kind of insulating material you buy. You are only restricted if you live in the non-Liberal provinces. If the people in your province had the audacity to vote against the Liberals provincially, then you can only spend on certain insulating materials. If you live in Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island you can be covered for any insulation materials, including windows and storm doors. You can get up to $500 if you have the work done by a contractor, or up to $350 if you do the work yourself. However, if you live in Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario or British Columbia, you only get $350. If you go to an outside contractor, tough luck: you will get $150 less if you spend the maximum than if you are lucky enough to live in the Liberal provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Has legislation of this type ever been introduced into the House before? I do not think so. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been 35 years in parliament today, or some fantastic number of years like that. I hope he is here another 35.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I think he will have a little celebration later. When I conclude my remarks, I would be interested in hearing from him whether he ever came across this kind of discriminatory legislation before, in his long experience in the House. His province of Manitoba is one of the provinces being discriminated against.

There is another area of discrimination. In Newfoundland, for example, a house owner has to spend $525 to get a federal grant of $350, and then he has the $350 added to his taxable income. However, if he lives in Nova Scotia he only has to spend $350 to get $350, and he has nothing added to his taxable income. The President of the Treasury Board is here now. He looks as if this is the first time he has heard about it. I do not think the minister understood that such a discriminatory program against the interests of the people of northern Ontario went through the cabinet. He could not have been there that day. I am sure he will strike a blow for the people of northern Ontario and his district and have this discrimination taken out of the bill. If not, the people of Port Arthur might ask him: How are you representing our interests in the House of Commons, in cabinet and in government, when you permit this to be done to us?

What are some of the other areas of discrimination? I have given some of the worst. The Newfoundland government accepted the program. Do hon. members remember the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources telling us how enthusiastically this program was received by the eight provinces? I do not say it was deliberate. I do not think the hon. gentleman knows what he is doing, in any event. In fact, there was a report in the Ottawa Journal the other day to the effect that he does not like to be briefed because he does not want to know what it is all about when asked questions. He is like the Minister of National Revenue; I will not say he deliberately misled the House, but he got up in this House and said—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member get back to clause 6 which is under discussion.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources introduced this program with which we are now dealing. That gentleman has, as a feature of his program, that the grant should be taxable in the eight provinces of Canada outside of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. He is the same minister who said that the eight provincial governments were overjoyed with this new program. We now know that Alberta and Quebec did not even accept it. Premiers and ministers from every other province are now protesting against this program. This is something we should vote against. It is tax legislation that is not equitable. It is not fair. It discriminates against every resident of Ontario, Quebec, Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. It discriminates against them in favour of residents of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

I support the program being non-taxable in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. That is right and proper. What is the point of trying to help people, presumably of below average income, insulate their homes in order to have better energy conservation, if you are going to give them a grant on one hand and make it taxable on the other? The program in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island is a proper one. However, that means we should not be taxing those who get grants in the eight other provinces of Canada. Why should they be treated differently from someone who lives in Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island?

When the program was introduced, the minister tried to give us the excuse that there was a special program for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island because the people in those two provinces had to pay very high electricity costs. He forgot to point out—

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Crosbie: No, it is not carried. It is not going to carry for a considerable time yet. Is there a gentleman in this House who wants to carry this clause after I have pointed out the discriminatory provisions in it? Not at all. It is never going to carry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, have they no conscience? Of course, the answer is they have not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Listen to the cacophony. Originally, a special program was justified for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island on the ground that they had to pay higher electricity costs than those in the rest of Canada. The minister forgot to point out that in Nova Scotia over 90 per cent of the homes are heated by oil-fired furnaces, and in Prince Edward Island it is 98 per cent. Electricity did not have anything to do with heating their homes. There is no connection between the high cost of electricity and this program. It will reduce the consumption of oil in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, which is good. That is just what it would do in the rest of the provinces of Canada. However, it has no connection whatever with electricity costs. The people in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island do not have electric heating for their homes; they use oil or coal.

Premier Regan of Nova Scotia put the boots to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He came to Ottawa and assaulted the minister and the government. He forced them to bring in a special program for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. We are forcing the government to bring in a program for the rest of Canada. They are trying to hold back on the rest of Canada, saying that it would be too costly. They say they cannot put the Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island program in effect for the rest of Canada. If they have not got the "spondulix", if they have not got the dollars to put it in effect all across Canada, they do not have to put it in effect all at once. They could start in certain areas of the country which are economically damaged because of high unemployment. Over the next three or four years it could be extended throughout the whole country. The Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island program should be extended to the high unemployment areas and northern areas with their colder climate. It should start there and progress to other areas over the next few years. The money does not all have to be spent in the one year.

I have not uttered a word in the last 20 minutes that is not of the utmost sense, that is not a good and valid reason for the members of this committee to do the people they represent justice and justify why they were sent here. For members in the party opposite to sit there, because they are afraid they might get a tap on the hand, and accept that their citizens are second-class compared to Nova Scotians and people from Prince Edward Island, is inexcusable. I hope I am not going to see that. I hope I shall see the members representing New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Quebec, British Columbia, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories turn thumbs down on clause 6. Let it be taken out. Let us strike a blow for fairness and justice.

• (1802)

Mr. Breau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Crosbie: If the hon. member asks a question, I will take another 20 minutes.

Mr. Breau: He may need more than 20 minutes to make sense. Talking about party discipline encouraging votes, does the hon. member recall that on the unemployment insurance legislation not very long ago, while members on this side stayed here to vote, he did not have the guts to stay here and vote against his party?

Mr. Crosbie: I will not bother to answer that.

Mr. Andras: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is an appropriate moment to do what we not infrequently do in this House, that is to say, abandon partisan politics and honour one among us for whom we all have the greatest respect. I am speaking about the thirty-fifth anniversary of the first election of our very distinguished and well-liked friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who was elected 35 years ago in a by-election to succeed another distinguished Canadian, Mr. J. S. Woodsworth. I think all of us would like to take this opportunity to extend to him our best wishes for continued good health and exemplary service to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, as one who has had to serve with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and to suffer the indignity of having his English continually corrected, just as the House has had its direction continually modulated by the hon. member, I should like to move that you rise, report progress and ask leave to sit later this day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At the next sitting.

Mr. Peters: At the next sitting of the House, or whenever it may be, for the purpose of enabling his many friends to fete him in Room 200.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I join with representatives of all parties in paying our respects and offering best wishes to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He has been well described by the hon. member for Timiskaming as being the conscience of the House—and its schoolteacher, too, if I may say so. My maiden speech was delivered over 20 years ago and I was not allowed to complete it because I had used the expression "b.s." The hon. member we are now honouring rose and reminded the Speaker that "b.s." was not a parliamentary word. I was green enough in those days to accept this as good, sound truth and withdrew the term. Two or three years later, of course, with a little more experience, I would have responded that in the part of the country I came from, "b.s." was indeed a parliamentary expression. In those days he used to keep young ministers in line.

I think the House does well to honour a member who has served in this chamber for as long as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He came here 35 years ago, and with the exception of the period from 1958 to 1962 he has been here constantly. When you get the number of years behind you that he has, I think we should recognize what it means in service to this country.

● (1807)

I have another thought that I want to put forward along the same line, Mr. Chairman, and it is this. Of all the members of this House, in my experience, very few follow the non-union attitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He does not follow any 40-hour work week rule. I find him here on Saturdays and Sundays. He is one of the few members of parliament who tries to answer all his mail, at least until recently. Any member who looks after not only his own constituents but all the people in this country who write to him for help, and tries as manfully as he can to get all his work done and still keep a watchful eye on the conduct of this House and his fellow MPs, deserves the appreciation of us all. I hope we can adjourn the House and join in this little celebration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, there is a motion before us for adjournment, and the other parties have indicated their agreement. As much as we want to expedite passage of this very important bill and to move it along quickly, in the spirit of recognition of the hon. member and the opportunity to join him in another form of celebration, we would agree to the adjournment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, with a motion before the committee that we rise and report progress so that the House can adjourn a little early, I would be in character if I were to stand up and refuse unanimous consent. But I can hardly do that. I simply want to thank most warmly those who spoke their very generous words just now. It has been a pleasure to be here these first few years of a parliamentary career. I hope to stay around for a long while yet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it 6.30?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: It being 6.30 o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being 6.30 o'clock, this House stands adjourned till tomorrow at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF ALLEGED POLITICAL INTERFERENCE WITH ENFORCEMENT OF AIR SAFETY REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of quoted statements from a report prepared by two investigators for the Department of Transport alleging that enforcement of air regulations is at times subject to political pressure and also, in light of the fact that the Director of the Aeronautical Licensing and Inspection Branch of Transport Canada has made reference to the possibility of embarrassment to the minister and other political implications as a result of enforcing air regulations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That this House urge the Minister of Transport to refer this matter of political interference and its impact on air safety in Canada to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and furthermore, that William Slaughter, Andrew Carswell and R. L. Bolduc be allowed to testify and elaborate on their statements.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST MINISTER MEET WITH NATIONAL FARMERS UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bert Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing importance. Can the Minister of Transport explain to the House why he failed to invite the National Farmers Union and other interested parties to the meeting held yesterday in Saskatoon? These groups are very much concerned with the development of the Port of Churchill and the rail authority because of abandonment of certain rail lines, and should not have been excluded. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the minister arrange to meet with these groups of concerned people.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN DOMESTIC PRICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It is several months since the government promised an increase in the price of domestic wheat, an increase which has become crucial because of rising production costs. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the government to move immediately to raise the floor price of wheat sold for domestic consumption to $4 per bushel from the existing $3.25 per bushel.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CONFLICTING STATEMENTS ON FRAUD SQUAD—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing necessity pertaining to a statement made outside the House to an Ottawa newspaper by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, with reference to a question asked in the House by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) on the subject of the so-called Unemployment Insurance Commission internal fraud squad, namely, that it had not been disbanded but "merely reorganized and it is ever vigilant". I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the minister explain to the House, in view of this statement on Tuesday, why he answered question number 2765 in my name on the order paper on August 4, 1977, by categorically denying that the Unemployment Insurance Commission has a fraud squad and that he also advise whether Mr. Hi Pong No, a former South Korean intelligence agent, is a member of this squad particularly active in the Toronto area.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF TARIFF BOARD REPORT TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Minister of Agriculture refuses to give any firm commitment that Canada's agricultural interest will not be traded off at the present GATT negotiations and consequently the real threat and possibility of further erosion remains not only to the primary producers but also to the food processors in the form of reduced revenue and the loss of jobs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That the government House leader give immediate approval to a reference of the Tariff Board report to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, thus giving industry people an opportunity for further consultation and input, bearing in mind that the Standing Committee on Agriculture has absolutely no legislation or order of business to consider.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

PROPOSAL FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ASSUME RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROTECTING PUBLIC FROM HIGH RADIATION LEVELS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move an urgent motion. In view of the footdragging by the Ontario and federal governments to acknowledge any responsibility for undertaking remedial action to protect residents in March township near Ottawa from high radiation levels, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That in the interest of public health and safety, the federal government assume full responsibility for remedial action.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS BE DESIGNATED CARRIER FOR HALIFAX-MONTREAL SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43 and because it requires only the goodwill of this chamber with respect to air travellers from Atlantic Canada I feel certain it will have the support of the chamber.

I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House encourage the Minister of Transport to move expeditiously in turning over to Eastern Provincial Airways the "designated" carrier rights now held by Air Canada for service from Halifax to Montreal through points in the state of Maine in the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

RESCINDING OF ORDER REMOVING EMERGENCY LOCATOR TRANSMITTERS FROM AIRCRAFT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Having regard to a directive issued by the Air Transport Commission earlier this year ordering the removal of emergency transmitters and crash site locators from both private and commercial aircraft, and having regard to at least two air crashes which occurred recently in central British Columbia involving both a rotary and a fixed wing aircraft resulting in extensive air rescue operations at monumental cost to the taxpayers, but more importantly respecting the fact that possible survivors of aircraft accidents frequently perish from exposure to the elements after the crash, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

● (1412)

That the Ministry of Transport rescind the removal order immediately requiring all types of aircraft to carry the ELT equipment and that serious efforts be undertaken by the government to develop a power source for these transmitters which will not endanger the operation of the aircraft while in flight.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AUDITOR GENERAL

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT FOR YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1977

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay upon the Table the Annual Report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977.

May I remind hon. members that, pursuant to Standing Order 65(1)(q), this report is deemed permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DATE OF NEXT CONFERENCE OF FIRST MINISTERS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to ask him whether he intends to call soon a conference of first ministers and, if so, on what date?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is a matter which I am now discussing with the premiers during my visit in each of the provinces. I have undertaken to see them all before announcing a date or even confirming that indeed there will be a conference and what will be the agenda for such conference.

SUGGESTED INCREASED PROVINCIAL POWERS OVER CABLEVISION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. In view of the judgment delivered yesterday by the Supreme Court, if there is such a conference of first ministers, does the Prime Minister intend to take this opportunity to make concrete proposals to the provinces giving them more powers over cablevision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at first sight this item on the agenda would seem far removed from the concerns of the premiers whom I met. To begin with, it would be an economic conference; we are all very concerned over the high rate of unemployment. We intend to prevent another upward thrust of inflation and it would essentially be the matter under consideration. I do not think it would be advisable to introduce the matter mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition. Moreover, he knows that we have already reached agreement with other provinces which would allow administrative arrangements or which would indicate the great flexibility of the federal government in the matter.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications has suggested, I believe, a meeting of all ministers of communications to discuss matters of jurisdiction and administrative arrangements in the field of cable television generally. Can the Prime Minister confirm that such a meeting of ministers of communications will take place and can he say whether the government intends to make individual arrangements with each province or to take a common approach for all provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications has made the same proposals to all provinces with a view to greater administrative decentralization. Up to now, the province of Manitoba has given its approval to such arrangements. I believe that discussions are going on in Saskatchewan and Ontario. However, I cannot talk as yet about the attitude of other provinces. But, again, our proposals apply to all provinces and seek to solve the constitutional problem. Since the courts have now pronounced judgment on the constitutional problem, we are coming back to our former position which was to try and find flexible administrative arrangements. I simply wish to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that when we called such a conference about a year ago, the Quebec Minister of Communications had ostentiously announced that he would not attend.

INQUIRY AS TO THE GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS ABOUT CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is it the government's position that there will not be constitutional change now in the area of communications, but only administrative changes? Is that the federal government's final position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, not at all, Mr. Speaker. I said to the Leader of the Opposition that the courts have decided on the constitution as it stands. But as far as constitutional changes are concerned, the Leader of the Opposition is well aware that I have indicated several times, from 1968 to 1971 and from 1975 to 1977, and again in recent statements, that we were ready to consider any constitutional changes necessary to provide the country with a better constitution.

COMMUNICATIONS

POSSIBILITY OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON JURISDICTION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): The Minister of Communications being absent, Mr. Speaker, I shall direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could he tell the House whether the government has changed its policy and become involved with all provinces in a real negotiation process and given up at the same time the bilateral approach it had maintained up to now in its dealings with the provinces in the area of communications?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member is ill informed. In fact, not only have we been doing for a year what he is suggesting we should do, but we started doing it under the mandate of the previous Minister of Communications. We have therefore proposed flexible administrative arrangements with all provinces. Some have agreed to discuss this matter with us and have signed agreements. In this case, of course, these are bilateral agreements, but these arrangements, as I have just explained to the leader of the opposition, result from a proposition which was made to the provinces as a whole.

POSSIBILITY OF MEETING WITH QUEBEC MINISTER

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Communications made known outside the House her intention to call a federal-provincial conference on communications, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether the federal Minister of Communications will soon meet the Quebec Minister of Communications, Mr. O'Neil, before a federal-provincial conference on communications is held?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if a minister of communications, either Mr. O'Neil or someone else, wants to talk with the minister, there is always the phone, the mail and the choo-choos, I reminded the Leader of the Opposition a moment ago that Mr. O'Neil was the one who refused to attend the conference on communications we had called last year in Edmonton.

EXPANSION OF NORTHERN TELECOM IN UNITED STATES IN SPITE OF TAX CONCESSIONS TO CREATE JOBS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The minister is aware that Northern Telecom is currently reducing its Canadian labour force by some 1,000 and he is also aware that through the budget measures the House is currently debating the same corporation will get about $2 million in special tax concessions, ostensibly to create jobs in Canada. Is the hon. gentleman aware of a report in today's press which indicates that Northern Telecom is planning to spend $15 million on new expansion, not here in Canada but in the United States, moving for the first time to computer systems in that country? If the minister is aware of this situation, what course of action does he propose to take?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): I am not aware of the article to which the hon. member has referred. I will look into it. But I would point out that under Bill C-11 companies are entitled to a tax break only if they invest in Canada. If they invest in the United States they will not benefit from the provisions of the bill.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Mr. Broadbent: The minister should take a more careful look at his legislation. There is a whole series of tax benefits to which corporations are entitled and these are not dependent upon the proviso the hon. gentleman has made. Will he look into this situation? There is no doubt about the accuracy of the report to which I have referred; the corporation is expanding into the United States and investing some $15 million there. They are getting some $2 million in special tax measures which are presently being debated in this House. If the corporation is doing this, will the hon. gentleman ensure that it does not get the money from the Canadian taxpayer?

Mr. Chrétien: These are two different matters. One involves a reduction of taxes in relation to new investment. If they have no new investment in Canada, they will not get any tax break. The other is the three per cent allowance for inventory purposes, and of course this applies to any corporation with inventories in hand. This is one provision of the tax bill designed to try to help industry keep some inventory in hand and, in doing so, keep some labour working.

● (1422)

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister trying to convince the House that the $2 million which they are going to get, whether for inventory purposes or for related purposes, will create the same number of jobs as if the money were spent directly in the economy?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I fully understand the argument of the hon. member. The 3 per cent production for inventory applies to all companies with inventories. One of the reasons why we have proposed this legislation is that we believe it is important to help industries carry their inventories because when they have inventories they can have longer production lines. This has nothing to do with investments. These companies will benefit from tax incentives if they invest in Canada; otherwise they will get no incentives.

HOUSING

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC CAN BENEFIT FROM HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Last weekend the wild northerly winds reminded us that insulation is always useful. On October 31 there was a meeting in Quebec City between the officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the minister himself and several hon. members and on that occasion the main subject of the discussions was housing and insulation. At that time, the minister informed us that there was a possibility, in the near future perhaps, that Quebec might endorse the Canadian Home Insulation Program and that the residents could take advantage of this federal legislation. Is the minister in a position to tell us today whether there were any developments in this area and, if so, how people will have to proceed to benefit from this program?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was an important development this morning at the federal-provincial conference of the energy ministers. Energy ministers for Quebec and Alberta stated that they entirely subscribed to the objectives of the government of Canada in the area of energy conservation. They also indicated their desire to implement in their respective provinces energy conservation programs, which enabled my hon. colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to declare that he could consider the possibility of having all provinces benefit from the Home Insulation Program. Therefore I think that as soon as we have finalized the administrative measures to make the program applicable to all the provinces, we will be in a position to announce officially very soon that Quebec and Alberta will also take advantage of this program.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Quebec government's delay in making that program available to Quebecers, could the minister tell the House whether some changes will be made to the program so that more home owners may benefit from it?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it must be kept in mind that this program will be spread over a period of seven years so that the market will not become congested, and particularly in order to prevent too large an increase in the cost of products if demand is unduly high at the outset. This program was spread over a number of years so that in the first months or the first year, older houses in Canada will be eligible. But nobody, wherever he lives in Canada, should feel discriminated against under this program. If his house is not eligible immediately, it will be as the program moves ahead. It appeared to us initially that it was more important to deal first with older houses, precisely those which needed to be insulated more urgently and promptly. But because the two provinces did not join the program immediately, some citizens in those two provinces who would normally be eligible and may have already purchased material could be left out. So we will determine in the next few days whether the program can be made retroactive in those two provinces for those who would normally have been eligible when it came into effect.

SUGGESTED RE-EXAMINATION OF FORECASTS FOR 1978 AND CONVENING OF MEETING OF LEADING FORECASTERS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it arises from the report by the Industrial Conference Board that 17 forecasters who were reviewed across this nation have all made forecasts about the economy different from that of the Department of Finance. Given this circumstance, I should like to ask the minister whether he has instructed his officials to re-examine the forecasts they have made that deal with the economy in terms of inflation, economic growth and so on for 1978?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are constantly reviewing forecasts that we make, but we have no reason at this time to change them. We have forecast an economic growth of 5 per cent for next year and a 6 per cent growth in inflation. We have mentioned those forecasts, but sometimes the forecasting game is quite difficult. For example, on October 20 I said the growth for 1977 was to be 2 per cent, and now I am proven wrong as it is going to be close to 3 per cent.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that 17 independent forecasters have made forecasts that are different from those of the Department of Finance, would the minister not consider that reason for re-examination of his position? I would ask the minister whether he would be willing to do two things; first of all, would he table or make public the assumptions on which his forecasts were made to parliament so that they can be re-examined and, secondly, would he consider, given the importance of forecasts in the formulation of economic policy, and given the wide divergence between public and private forecasts, convening a meeting of leading forecasters of economic activity in Canada with members of the Department of Finance so there can be a close examination of what is really going to happen in the economy next year so our policies can perhaps be more accurate than they have been in the past?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not really see the advantage of that. I have talked to some people who agree with our figures. I do not think, because there are 17 forecasters with 17 different results that this calls for me to change our position. I suggest that we have good advisers who can make some errors just as others can. This has happened in the past because forecasting is extremely difficult. Last year the OECD and the World Bank predicted 5 per cent growth around the world and it is going to be around 2 per cent. Sometimes forecasters cannot agree among themselves. You just gave an example of 17 who cannot agree among themselves. I do not see what I would gain by having them all around the same table. We could have a good discussion but it would not change the situation.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the Minister of Finance misunderstood what I said. The reality is that 17 principal economic forecasters from leading Canadian banks and leading Canadian trade associations—every single one of them—differed from the forecasts of the government, not among themselves. Given the importance of economic forecasting for policy making, and surely the minister would agree that we could not have a worse economic performance than we have in this country in the past few years, would he not do the sensible thing and bring this group together to try to find out if they can improve economic operations? Surely, he must want to do this?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: According to my experience, Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to get two economists to agree completely. Very often, opposition members themselves are not in agreement on a number of areas. I took my responsibilities. I announced that, to the best of my knowledge and after talking with government advisors, the Bank of Canada and others, our forecast for next year was 5 per cent growth. I have no reason at this point to change that, especially since we had 5.2 per cent growth in the third quarter of 1976, one of the best performances among developed countries at this time.

THE MINISTRY

POSSIBLE FORMATION OF CABINET COMMITTEE TO REPRESENT FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State, I would address my question to the Prime Minister.

Since some months ago, in a brief to the government—and I understand the Prime Minister met them on this—the Federation of Francophones Outside Quebec urged the establishment of a permanent committee of Privy Council, on which the federation would be officially represented, to prepare with the government that over-all policy for minorities. Could the Prime Minister state whether such a committee will be established?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Acting Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Secretary of State, I would like to indicate to the hon. member that consultations are now going on, and an announcement will be made officially in due time.

Mr. La Salle: The Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations knows very well the importance that the establishment of such a commission represents for the federation. In view of a forthcoming announcement, will the minister tell the House if his government intends to approve the establishment of this commission which seems so important to the association.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered the question of the hon. member in my earlier reply.

Mr. La Salle: I have a last supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I know and everybody else knows that the federation is very concerned and is expecting an answer. My question is very serious, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister give the House his assurance that the federation will really be involved in the development of the overall policy that the Secretary of State intends to introduce?

Mr. Lalonde: For the second time in a row, Mr. Speaker, I must repeat to the hon. member that there will be an announcement in due course by the Secretary of State, after the consultations now in progress.

[Mr. Gillies.]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO CHANGE DECENTRALIZATION POLICY

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the popular Minister of Finance. Considering that the decentralization policy of the federal government affects several federal employees on the Quebec side of the national capital region and that, since the election of the new Quebec government made of idealists and middle class pseudo-proletarians, the real estate market on the Quebec side of the Ottawa river is almost at a standstill and the vacancy rate has reached 30 per cent in some sectors, does the minister intend to postpone his decision concerning decentralization at least, until the "Lévesque referendum", to avoid the risk of personal bankruptcy for those many devoted civil servants?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to change our decentralization policy.

HARBOURS

REQUESTS FOR GRANTS FOR CONTAINER PIERS AT HALIFAX AND MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can he confirm or deny the report, while making a very substantial grant toward the container pier in Montreal, that the Treasury Board has turned down the request of the government of the province of Nova Scotia for a grant for a second container pier in Halifax, Nova Scotia?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is not true. Both matters are still under consideration by the government.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago the minister could not recall what the timing would be for the container pier in Halifax. Has he had a chance to refresh his memory? Can he give the House a firm date on which the department is prepared to recommend a second container pier for Halifax?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it is increasingly evident to us the timing for increased activity in Halifax is such that construction for a new container facility would be about right to begin now.

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON CONTAINER PIER FOR MONTREAL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Is the government about to announce that it has decided to support the expansion of a new public container facility for the port of Montreal, and other related works, to the extent of approximately $85 million? Can the minister now tell the House whether that decision has been taken and will be publicly announced in the next few days?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that decision has not been taken. Our analysis, that is the Department of Transport with the National Harbours Board, does agree that the need for the facility is now becoming timely. There is a time for it. The consideration of the government involves other things, including our total financial position at this time to do a variety of things that we would like to do. Therefore, the issue is still under consideration.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, is the miniser indicating to the House that the government has not decided to fund, up to approximately $85 million, the cost of developing and upgrading the contained facilities for the port of Montreal, together with some other related work? Is that what the minister is telling us?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what I am saying. As I indicated to the hon. member for Halifax earlier, both of these matters are under consideration.

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTION HIGHER PROPORTION OF RAW MATERIALS BE PROCESSED AND TAX INCENTIVES TO INDUCE CONSTRUCTION OF PLANTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Because of the great need for producing more jobs in this country, and since one of the best ways of doing this is to process a far higher proportion of our raw materials to their finished state in this country, will the government give serious consideration to requiring those who export our raw materials to process a far higher proportion here in this country, and to also make available generous tax incentives, in addition to the DREE grants which have proved to be inadequate, to induce the construction of the additional factories which will be needed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that we have made a clear statement of policy to that effect. We were encouraging as much processing to be done in this country as possible. As the Minister of Finance reminded the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party a few moments ago, we have given tax incentives for investment in Canada in order for these processing operations to be established in Canada with the hope that it would create more jobs.

I have explained this so often to the hon. member that I am convinced that he does not have a clear grasp of the facts. I wish he would read some of my previous answers which reflect on this, and perhaps he will understand a little bit of what is involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have gone through the intense boredom of reading the Prime Minister's answers, and there has been nothing forthcoming regarding the answer I want today. Does he not realize the tax incentives offered in the past—the DREE grants and the rest—have not done the job and will not do the job? Is the Prime Minister not familiar with the fact that many countries require those that export their raw materials to process a far higher proportion of their raw materials to their finished state than we do in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am coming to the question. If the Prime Minister has got that through his thick head, will he get on with the job, instead of playing the fool in this chamber?

MANPOWER

CANADA WESTINGHOUSE ADVERTISING IN BRITAIN FOR WORKERS—INQUIRY AS TO AUTHORIZATION—ADEQUACY OF TRAINING PROGRAMS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the present unemployment rate in Canada, which is indicated to be one million Canadians unemployed, would the minister explain how Canada Westinghouse is authorized to advertise for workers in British newspapers, and whether or not those applications have Canada Manpower approval?

• (1442)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, being a member of the Conservative Party and a strong supporter of business, I doubt if the hon. member would want us to interfere and tell that company not to advertise.

An hon. Member: That is a cheap shot.

Mr. Cullen: However, I can say that this does not have the backing of Manpower, and anyone that company would attempt to bring in under those circumstances would have to have skills Canadians do not have. Otherwise, they just would not be allowed into the country. They can spend all the money they want on advertising.

Mr. Epp: The cheap shot of the minister does not need any rebuttal. The point is that we are dealing with people's lives, and one million Canadians are looking for work. Why is it we are authorizing these advertisements in foreign newspapers for skilled tradesmen and turbine fitters when we are spending a great deal of money on manpower training programs which are obviously not providing Canadians skills so that they can take those jobs? The program is not working.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about a cheap shot and comes out with misleading information. I indicated that these advertisements are not authorized by the government. They can spend whatever money they want, but these workers still have to clear our department. They will not clear the department if Canadians have these skills and if Canadians can fill the jobs.

I disagree with the hon. member. The training program is excellent. We buy the courses because education comes under provincial jurisdiction. The provincial governments make the determination of the kinds of skills they would like to see and the people they would like to see trained. On that basis, we buy these courses under our adult occupational training program.

SOCIAL SERVICES

PROPOSED STUDY OF SOCIAL COST OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank hon. members for that expression. I gather they are trying to give me a good send-off for my second 35 years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: To the Senate, Stan.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought I had friends here.

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of statistics out of Toronto—which I suspect would be found to be parallel to those in other parts of the country—concerning the increasing number of suicides, a large portion of them being due to unemployment or other forms of economic distress, will the minister have her department undertake a study of the social cost of unemployment with particular reference to suicides, mental illness, physical illness, family disorders and criminal tendencies so that the government, members of parliament and the people at large can be aware of how urgent it is to cope with the problem of unemployment?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have mixed feelings about my reply to the hon. gentleman. I wanted to join with my hon. colleagues in this House in congratulating him on his long tenure of office and the work he has done on many government programs, but he just made an assumption which is so serious—and I am tempted to say almost bearing on irresponsibility—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Cullen.]

Miss Bégin: —that I feel obliged to emphasize that there are no facts to justify relating unemployment to the rate of suicides. My department is monitoring this, and this was one of the first dossiers on which I asked for a briefing. We are monitoring and following the work of agencies in the private and para-public sector which are particularly good at analyzing social factors and other factors leading to suicide. The group of people which preoccupies me most is the one comprised of young people. I do not have at this moment a report on that, but before answering other questions on this topic I would like to verify exactly what the hon. member is referring to by talking with him later on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister will permit me to send over to her reports which show that these statistics come from responsible social agencies and also a document showing that in at least one other western country a serious study has been made which does show such a correlation between unemployment and social problems, including suicides. In the meantime, in view of the minister's responsibility for the health of Canadians will she use all the clout she has in the cabinet to push for programs which will minimize unemployment?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious that we are all committed to such programs.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUGGESTION DEPARTMENT WILL BE ABANDONED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering that newspapers report again that the government intends to eliminate the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and other departments, could the leader of the government tell us if there is some truth in that information which was published again yesterday to the effect that the government intends to eliminate the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the minister himself indicated that those rumours were false. I shall simply add that they might originate from the fact that, more and more, we hear the premiers, their ministers and newspapers congratulating the government for its initiative, recapitulating the amounts spent during the eight or nine years of existence of that department and asking the federal government to continue that beautiful enterprise. I can say to the hon. member that we are satisfied that those rumours give to those who were against it, including hon. members of the party opposite, the opportunity to realize the great utility of that department.

CANADA COUNCIL

ADEQUACY OF DOCUMENTATION FOR FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS—APPLICABILITY OF DIRECTIVES REGARDING ACCOUNTABILITY FOR GRANTS

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Do all Canada Council contributions have adequate financial documentation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will look at each document and give the hon. member a detailed answer. Generally speaking, I presume the arrangements are acceptable, but there have been sone queries, and I believe the Auditor General has looked at that.

Mr. Wenman: Do recent Treasury Board directives regarding government grant and contribution accountability apply to the Canada Council and, if not, why not?

Mr. Andras: I will be glad to go into that in detail with the hon. member when I appear before the committee.

Mr. Clark: Why not now?

USE OF CONFIDENTIAL MEDICAL RECORDS—CO-OPERATION WITH ONTARIO INQUIRY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. It relates to the Ontario government's inquiry into the availability and use of confidential medical reports obtained from the Ontario Health Insurance Program. Is it the policy of the Solicitor General and the government to co-operate fully in assisting this Ontario inquiry?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is always our policy to co-operate fully with any provincial commissions of inquiry when they are referring to matters within their jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: I welcome this good news about a change of policy. What seems to be at issue in the Ontario inquiry are the procedures used by security units representing various levels of government to obtain this confidential medical information. I therefore ask the Solicitor General if he intends to be forthcoming and open in providing the Ontario inquiry with the procedures and methods used by any security unit under his direction or control.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, there is only one security service under the aegis of the RCMP, and the hon. member knows full well which one it is. I can only relate that it is our intention as usual to co-operate fully with the legitimate demands of any provincial commission of inquiry, as we have done in the past and will continue to do in the future.

Mr. Clark: Until you can get them thrown out of court.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSED PROMOTION OF PROGRAM OF EMPLOYMENT RATHER THAN INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Some years ago at a time of high unemployment a program was initiated in Moncton entitled "Do it Now". Subsequently there was a national program to encourage local citizens as well as business and all levels of government, to undertake necessary projects at home, in the office, in plants and in government, positively supporting the need for employment in areas such as the Moncton constituency and others in the Atlantic provinces. Would the minister now consider putting an immediate halt to the Unemployment Insurance Commission's promotion of UIC benefits and start promoting a program of employment to encourage citizens, corporations, governments, Crown agencies, Crown corporations to endorse work and employment projects by "doing it now" while men and materials are available?

● (1452)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first of all with respect to the preamble, I would indicate that the advertisements being placed now are for the information of those who might qualify or who are presently qualifying and is the kind of factual information that I think they need. I agree with the hon. member that the particular program he mentions seemed to catch attention at that time and was quite imaginative. I am prepared to look at it. The insulation program and others indicate that the government is in fact "doing it now" and not waiting for spring.

EXTERNAL AFAIRS

REFUSAL OF REPUBLIC OF CHINA TO EXTEND VISA OF JOURNALIST ROSS MUNRO—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the decision of the People's Republic of China to refuse readmission to China of the Globe and Mail correspondent Mr. Ross Munro upon completion of his current assignment—the similarity in the name is purely coincidental. In light of the fact that no substantive reasons have been given so far for this action by the Chinese authorities, and as it is my understanding that the Canadian authorities are generous and understanding with respect to the movement of Chinese correspondents in this country, will any action be taken by this government to protest this infringement of the rights of journalists in that country?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am, of course, familiar with the case the hon. member mentioned. He used words such as "infringement". I am not sure if in the truly legalistic sense there is any infringement. As I understand the matter, a limited extension was being sought and the Chinese authorities did not choose to renew or extend. Therefore, whether there is a basis upon which to lodge a formal protest in diplomatic terms, is not clear. In so far as the gentleman himself is concerned, the last information I had was that there had been no request to us by him personally or by his employers to take any action. As I believe the hon. member is aware, that is normally the basis of such action. We are continuing to keep the matter under review but at the moment in any event it does not appear that any useful purpose would be served. I might say that I have also had discussions with the Chinese authorities with a view to opening considerably the access by Canadian journalists within China in a general way.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the word should have been "curtailment" of the activities. It is my understanding that the Canadian embassy in Peking has protested on a number of occasions, two at least to my knowledge, about the freedom of movement within that country. Despite what the minister said about steps he has taken, I wonder whether he can indicate to the House any positive steps he is taking to ensure that western journalists will be able to report freely on things going on in China, as they see fit, for Canadian and western readers.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, to elaborate on the latter part of my previous answer, during a visit of the foreign minister of the People's Republic of China, I made a general representation to him about greater access by Canadian journalists. In addition and subsequent to his visit, at least two representations have been made specifically on behalf of Canadian journalists to my knowledge so in that sense we are indeed urging them to provide more access to Canadians. I have not seen the results of those representations yet, but the general reaction appears to be encouraging.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT DENYING PROGRAMS TO THOSE NOT IN NEED

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week in response to questions the minister said that in order to finance the guaranteed annual income she would, to quote her exact words, "take away from those who do not need universal programs" in reference to family allowances and old age pensions. In view of the stir this has caused among old age pensioners in particular, would the minister explain what in her view constitutes the people who do not need universal programs with reference to the family allowance and old age pension.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the hon. member was present at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs which I attended yesterday afternoon for the second time, when the estimates of my department were reviewed and when I clearly explained that our programs—which reflect the position of the government and obviously has my full support—to which he is referring are universal and that there is no way they are going to be modified.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is appropriate for the minister to say I was not at the committee meeting when she came in only for the last 20 minutes of it herself. In dealing with this question she did not clarify it but simply waffled on it. I should like the minister to tell the House what she meant when she said she would take away from those who did not need the universal programs. She has not explained that in committee, has not explained it in the House and I think she owes the country an explanation.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, we are talking here of social security and the objective of the government as well as that of my department—and I have stated it repeatedly—is to detect the weakest groups in our society, those which are the most in need, so as to grant them additional help.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REASON FOR GRANT TO ITALIAN COMPANY TO MANUFACTURE REFRIGERATORS IN QUEBEC

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that his department recently announced a $2,657,500 incentive grant to the Merloni Finanzaria group of Italy to establish a factory in Quebec to manufacture small refrigerators and freezers, and in view of the fact that other Canadian manufacturers in this market, specifically, the Canadian Manufacturing Appliance Company Limited of London, Ontario, has already told its work force that the small appliances market is soft and all indications are for continuing soft markets and future lay-offs may result, can the minister tell this House why his department is using the taxes of Canadian workers to subsidize a foreign corporation in Canada and create unemployment in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that an offer has been made to this company which will establish itself in Quebec in the near future and I should also tell the hon. member that last week we again made an offer to another business concern, which will open in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, and which will also manufacture small refrigerators. These two firms are going to be of a highly specialized character. They are going to satisfy the needs of the Canadian market and also those of an export market.

In the case of the firm to which the hon. member is referring, its production will be exported mainly to the United States to replace products that are already being exported there from Italy by a similar firm. We then expect to conquer this American market with products manufactured in Canada, and the result of which will naturally be the creation of jobs in our country.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. The minister says that the Merloni group will be aimed at the export market. In view of information given to me by his department to the effect that only 50 per cent of their production will be in the export field and in view of the fact that markets in Canada are soft at the moment, can the minister tell the House what steps he has taken to guarantee that the company will not be taking Canadian money and then making sales in an already soft Canadian market which can only exacerbate employment conditions in Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: There is indeed a guarantee which has been required from this firm. It is that it will not manufacture refrigerators of nine cubic feet or more already being produced in Canada or which were manufactured here till recently. This firm will specialize in small refrigerators and it has given us assurances that it will restrict its production, at least for a given number of years, to these small refrigerators. The market it is seeking as a target is largely American, and it naturally entails possible access to part of the Canadian market.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONTRIBUTION OF FEED GRAIN TO WORLD FOOD BANK—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has Canada agreed or offered to supply some 50,000 tons of feed grain to the proposed emergency world food bank that was in the news some months ago? If so, is the minister prepared to say when that emergency food bank will be in operation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. As a result, I can tell him that the 50,000 tons, costing about $7½ million, which I announced at the United Nations is part of a total amount in the emergency food reserve of the 500,000 tons. Therefore, our percentage is 10 per cent. This is only about one per cent of the total of nearly 50 million tons of wheat and flour which went into world export trade last year. In terms of any impact it is likely to have on pricing, it is generally regarded by all concerned as being minimal or insignificant.

With regard to the timing, I am not clear as to whether this will be put in at one particular time or how it is going to be drawn from the overall worldwide fund. However, the agency acting for Canada in this regard will be CIDA.

Mr. Murta: The important aspect of the minister's answer is who pays for the grain. This is what the western grain farmer wants to know. Can the minister advise whether that money will go from the federal government to the wheat board to be paid to the Canadian farmer or will it come from CIDA? What method does the government intend to follow in terms of payment?

Mr. Jamieson: If I understood the hon. member, the situation is as he described it, namely CIDA is the purchasing agent. It is a purchase from the wheat board in the normal fashion.

PRIVILEGE

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question of privilege and a point of order was taken a few days ago. I was asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar to find disorder, and by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to find privilege as a result of events which took place during the question period on November 28. I would like to try briefly to deal with that matter now. It arose out of questions put initially by the right hon. member for Prince Albert to the Solicitor General, but in his absence, and I quote:

—I would like to direct a question to the Acting Solicitor General, namely, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—

Subsequently, when that first question was answered by the Minister of Justice, a supplementary question was asked. He said, "The Minister of Justice was one of the two applicants along with the Solicitor General and being the custodian of the Queen's conscience, if the Solicitor General was asked to appear, what would happen?" The third question by the right hon. member was whether the government or the Minister of Justice was going to take a decision. The first supplementary by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot was in the following terms:

Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the acting minister who, according to the Journals branch, is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. However, I suppose pro tem it is the Minister of Justice.

The points of order and question of privilege ask me to find that that is against our procedures. I bring to the attention of

hon. members the exact wording of Standing Order 39(5) which is as follows:

Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, questions on matters of urgency may be addressed orally to ministers of the Crown—

I stress the word "ministers"; it is plural.

—provided however that—

The rule goes on to cite other aspects which are not relative to this particular argument. The fact that the plural is used in that Standing Order has always been interpreted in such a way as to permit questions to be put to the ministry in general. The question is whether the Chair can direct or require that those questions be put to an individual minister and in turn require that minister and no other to make an answer.

Our practice is based on the authority of the Chair to regulate the question period largely through disallowance of questions or answers which are out of order. Thus, questions which do not relate to the administrative responsibility of the government in general are disallowed, as are those which do not relate to a minister's administrative responsibility but, rather, relate to the minister's personal views or political or geographic responsibility.

Just as the Chair has the authority to prohibit questions, it equally has the authority to disallow attempts to answer which would equally constitute offences against those well-established practices. However, no authority exists in the Chair or in the House, for that matter, to compel an answer or to pass judgment on the quality of an answer if one is given. There are obvious sanctions in the political sphere, but none in our procedures for the obvious reason that it would be impossible to determine when any such requirement had been properly complied with. It is clear therefore, that when a question is put to an acting minister, no disorder or privilege can be found if that specific acting minister does not answer the question. Therefore, I must set aside the point of order and question of privilege on those grounds.

Can I find disorder or privilege in the fact that answers were given by another minister? Our practice in the absence of ministers has included a variety of responses, sometimes by the Prime Minister or his deputy, sometimes by acting ministers or by parliamentary secretaries, and on other occasions by other ministers who share responsibility for the particular jurisdiction or perhaps share a special responsibility for the particular subject matter of the question. In the case at hand, the subject concerned the Keable inquiry and, more specifically, an application to the courts to which the Minister of Justice was or is a party. There is no authority which I can discover which would have enabled me to prevent the minister from answering that question, provided his answers were in other ways in conformity with the procedures I set out earlier. They were in conformity with such procedural requirements and this is so regardless of which of those several capacities the minister is drawing upon to present an answer.

In various circumstances, hon. members who have put questions in the absence of ministers have expressed a preference that the question be answered in one of the ways I have set out, that is, by an acting minister, the parliamentary secretary, the Prime Minister, his deputy, or by another minister. In other circumstances, when an attempt has been made to answer the questions in that way, members have objected. Sometimes even in the presence of the minister to whom the question is directed, that minister will refer all or part of the response to another minister with whom he may share responsibility or who may, in the particular circumstances, be more knowledgeable about the particular subject matter.

However, I think in the final analysis it reduces itself to this. If any of these practices of sharing or referring questions in any way raises complaint, there is no action the Chair can take because, reduced to the final criterion, if no answer is offered by any minister in any capacity, none can be compelled by the Chair. Accordingly, I am unable to find, in the given circumstances, any matter of disorder or privilege.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I notice, but it may have been an omission, that in the course of your reasons for judgment today, you ignored any reference to the order in council that had been filed with the appropriate office of the Journals branch by the government of the day indicating to us the acting minister in each capacity as well as the second acting minister. Your Honour ignored that for the purposes of your reasons. You may want to comment on it. I presume the government did not file that order in council with the Journals branch of this House of Commons for nothing. They must have meant this to apply somewhere. This is something Your Honour may wish to comment on after I resume my seat. One begins to wonder what orders in council can be believed when the government openly files one to direct us to something and we suddenly find that in the course of answering questions in the House the government ignores its own order in council or the reasons behind it. There is that question as well.

That is not a question for the Chair. Quite frankly, it is a question of credibility. In any event, Your Honour did not deal with it from the point of view of the order in council, and that was part of my question of privilege. If Your Honour does not wish to deal with it today, that is all right with me, but I should like to have a ruling on the question of the order in council because I feel it is an important one.

● (1512)

Mr. Speaker: I think that upon reflection the hon. member will find that the pronouncement I just made does have application to the matter. It comes down to the point the hon. gentleman has made. It may touch on matters of credibility or of courtesy, but in the final analysis even if I accept that the Acting Solicitor General on the day the complaint was made was, in fact, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—which may or may not have been the case—it seems to me impossible for the Chair to question the capacity in which a minister enters a discussion and attempts to make an answer, as long as the procedure is otherwise correct. If he were out of order, I would, of course, have to stop him whether or not an acting minister had been designated and was seated beside him at the time. Whether this touches other considerations may be a matter for discussion, but there does not seem to be any procedural sanction for that practice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader the usual business question? I am particularly interested in the matter of the designation of the last allotted day. There have been discussions, and the date December 6 was mentioned, but when the matter was subsequently raised the spokesman for the party opposite stated it would be agreeable to set it for Thursday, December 8. Would the hon. gentleman confirm this? Also, I have received some inquiries about the possibility of a recess over the Christmas period. Could the House leader tell us the plans of the government with respect to that?

Mr. MacEachen: The date of the final allotted day will be December 8. I understand that this date would be more convenient for hon. members opposite, and it is designated accordingly. As to the other question, it is my intention to suggest that the House adjourn for the Christmas break on December 21 and resume on January 23, 1978. That is the objective; it has not been put into a motion yet.

Mr. Speaker: It might be appropriate for me to indicate now, in relation to the business of supply, that the only indication I have had of dispute over legislative items or argument about items contained in the estimates and supplementary estimates was that given yesterday by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). So I am informing the House that those items to which he referred are the two items which will be argued tomorrow before orders of the day.

MANAGEMENT AND MEMBERS' SERVICES

Second report of Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services—Mr. Coates.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

References to Standing Committees

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

REFERENCES TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to seek the consent of the House to have references made to two standing committees. I would hope consent to these motions could be given without debate, otherwise I would not proceed with them at this time. One motion has to do with referring the document entitled "The Management of Canada's Nuclear Wastes" to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: There has been a request that this be done, and if there is no objection I would proceed at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Deputy Prime Minister have leave to move that motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move:

That the document entitled "The Management of Canada's Nuclear Wastes", tabled November 22, 1977, be referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): With respect to the tabling just now of this report—

An hon. Member: It was tabled long ago.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It was tabled, then, and it has now been referred to the committee. Would this preclude consideration of the report by the Standing Committee on Fisheries, Forestry and the Environment? The report is one which has important environmental implications, and I am wondering whether it might not be referred at the same time to the standing committee I have just mentioned.

Mr. MacEachen: It would be difficult, I think, to have two committees seized with the same report. Nevertheless, it might be possible to give consideration to accommodating the hon. member's interests. The Standing Committee on National Resources would certainly co-operate to achieve that objective.

The second motion has to do with the reactivation of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the national capital region. The motion is somewhat lengthy. It has been circulated, I understand, to hon. members opposite.

Mr. Paproski: No.

Mr. MacEachen: I understood it was circulated some days ago. However, it might have been mislaid in the delivery system. Perhaps what I should do, Mr. Speaker, is read the motion and if hon. members have any objection or question, or if they wish for further consultation, I would defer moving it until a later date.

References to Standing Committees

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could do that first, and then we could see whether there is an objection.

Mr. MacEachen: The proposed motion would read:

That a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be established to consider and report upon matters bearing upon the development of the national capital region, including the programs and operations of the National Capital Commission;

That 15 Members of the House of Commons to be designated by the House at a later date be the members on the part of this House of the special joint committee;

That the said committee have the power to send for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House; to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable; and to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the said committee present a final report within 90 days of the adoption of this resolution taking into account the evidence given before the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region established in June, 1975, and the evidence given before the newly established joint committee;

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed special joint committee;

That the quorum of the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region be fixed at eleven (11) members, provided that both Houses are represented, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings to receive and authorize the printing of evidence, when a quorum is not present, so long as five (5) members are present, provided that both Houses are represented; and

That the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region be authorized to retain the services of advisers and such additional professional, stenographic and clerical staff as is required during the committee's consideration and review of matters bearing upon the development of the national capital region.

● (1522)

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have the consent of the House to propose that motion at this time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, despite my permanent caveat against joint committees, I will not object to the putting of this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a remark. I would very much have liked to receive the text of this motion in the two languages, because I feel more comfortable with the French language. So I thank the gentleman who just brought it to me and I might add that I agree with this resolution.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House has given its consent to the motion proposed by the minister.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 66, 178 and 457.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE POSTS LOCATED IN BRITAIN AND FRANCE

Question No. 66—Mr. Jones:

Are any Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce posts located in (a) England (b) France and, if so, in each case, how many?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): There are two posts located in Britain, namely, London and Glasgow and one in France, Paris.

BUREAU OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY

Question No. 178—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the Bureau of Intellectual Property and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. As at October 3, 1977 eight, of which none is a retired public servant.

2. (a) 1975-76, $2,140.70. No retired public servants were contracted during this period. (b) 1976-77, $25,886.91. No retired public servants were contracted during this period.

EXPENDITURES BY DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Question No. 457—Mr. Leggatt:

In each fiscal year since 1970, what amount was spent in the Constituency of New Westminster by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and those agencies that report to it?

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada does not record expenditures by constituency. Therefore, exact amounts spent in the constituency of New Westminster are not available.

[English]

Mr. Dick: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did want to put a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council. In the first session of this parliament I put a question on the order paper on June 15, 1976, No. 5,752. This was moved forward to the second session, where on Monday, June 6, 1977, it was question No. 1,380. It has now been moved forward into this third session, and on Monday, November 28, appeared as question No. 29. I am wondering whether the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council would indicate when the government is going to answer this question, which deals with Consolidated Computer Incorporated and the government's involvement with that company.

Another matter which concerns me, and in connection with which I may have been losing certain rights, is that prior to this session I put a series of questions on the order paper during the second session of this parliament which dealt with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and in particular the Pembroke-Renfrew designated area. These were questions Nos. 2,559 and 2,623 in the second session of the thirtieth parliament.

On October 14, before the third session commenced, I received a telephone call from the office of the deputy minister of the department in which he suggested that the answers to these questions be made orders for return, on the understanding that the answers had already been prepared and that they could be tabled on October 20 or 21. On October 17 the questions were made orders for return, but they have not yet been tabled. I did not put my questions back on the order paper, in view of the undertaking given on the government side of the House, because I did not want to confuse the situation and have to wait another three months for a reply.

On October 27 I wrote to the office of the President of Privy Council, and on November 10 received a reply from his parliamentary secretary in which he indicated that those questions were not yet ready for tabling, in spite of the fact that I had been told by the Department on October 14 that they were. He indicated there was a translation problem; they had not been translated. We are now a long time past that date, and I am wondering when I might expect these answers. I have tried to co-operate by not confusing the order paper by placing the questions on again.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we will look into it.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 30, consideration in committee of Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Turner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-11, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds. When the committee rose yesterday, clause 6 of the bill was under consideration. Shall clause 6 carry?

On clause 6—Exchanges of property.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I spoke on this clause yesterday, so I will not take too much time provided we get answers to the points we are making. The minister was not here yesterday, but I imagine that this morning he read Hansard and knows the points which were raised. I want to put a few questions to the minister about the home insulation program. A provision in this clause makes taxable grants to people under the home insulation program in six of the provinces of Canada, namely, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. These provinces have entered into an agreement with the federal government. I understand that today the energy ministers are meeting at a conference in Ottawa. The provinces other than Nova Scotia and P.E.I. are very upset at the program, in view of its discriminatory features, and they are proposing changes or perhaps a new program of their own. I further understand that Quebec and Alberta may now join the program. This means that eight provinces will be discriminated against, instead of six.

The point I am making is that under the program people in these six—or it may be eight—provinces who receive a grant to insulate their homes better, to a maximum amount of $350, must add that to their taxable income. This is only one aspect of the discrimination of the program in the six provinces compared with the program in Nova Scotia and P.E.I. where the amounts are not taxable.

I am sure that the minister is not a minister of finance who wants to bring into this House discriminatory legislation. I do not think the minister wants to see taxpayers in Quebec, Ontario, Newfoundland New Brunswick and so on, treated differently from the taxpayers of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. I am, therefore, asking the minister if he will agree to remove this particular provision from clause 6, namely, subclause (5) which permits the government to carry out its announced intention of making the grants taxable.

I should like to see the home insulation program changed entirely, but I am not going to speak at length now because members from other provinces may want to speak on it. However, I do have a number of questions to ask, and the first is whether he will withdraw this discriminatory provision. I suggest it makes no sense. I cannot see any reason for the government of Canada telling recipients of grants in these provinces that they must add the amount to their taxable income and pay tax on it. Taxpayers of P.E.I. and Nova Scotia do not have to add their grants to their taxable income. I say it is an outrage. It takes my breath away. I find it so dumbfounding I can hardly speak. Indeed, I wish I knew another language to speak, such as Afrikaans or something, because I find this so repugnant and it is why the Canadian public must know about it.

Secondly, how much do the officials estimate they will get from this tax, in terms of revenue? For example, the program has been extremely unpopular. It started last January in the two provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. The new program in the other six provinces started on September 1. They all accepted with great reluctance. My information is—and the minister can confirm this—that as of November 25 of this year, just six or seven days ago, there were only 5,096 applications received by CMHC for grants under this program, rather than the several thousand a day they were expecting from six of the ten provinces of Canada. I understand 2,270 cheques had been mailed out, for a total of $508,000.

It appears that this program is not popular with the public which has realized its tremendous inadequacies. The public is not very keen on it. I compare that to the situation in P.E.I. and Nova Scotia, Mr. Chairman. In those two provinces, up to June 9, and I only give the figures to June 9 because that is all I have, because of the improved nature of their program—a much better program they have been given—there were 28,106 applications received, just from these two small provinces, with 15,845 approved, with 4,717 grants paid up to that date. That is just in those two small provinces. The amounts that have been spent in respect of the ones that have been received and approved is $5,749,000. We can see that this is a very popular program in Nova Scotia and P.E.I., and justly so. It is a good program there. It is a better program. They get a better grant. They do not have the same restrictions, and the people down there are applying for it, whereas in the other provinces it definitely is not very popular.

I should like to ask the minister whether he can give us what his people calculate he is going to get in tax revenue by making these grants taxable in the other provinces? The estimate given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of what the program would cost across Canada in the other eight provinces, had they all gone into the program, not including Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, for the seven-year duration from September 1 to September 31, 1984, was potentially $1.4 billion. It was estimated that this year the program is going to cover 133,000 units, at a cost of $45 million. That forecast certainly seems wildly out, Mr. Chairman, if my information is correct that there are only some 5,000 applications, with only $500,000 spent to date. We are now at the beginning of December and we have this month, January, February and March—four months left in the fiscal year—and it seems very unlikely that the program is going to cost $45 million in this year or that it is going to cover 133,000 units. The estimate given for next year, 1978-79, is that it would cover 462,000 units, at a cost of $145 million. There is no indication, from the acceptance of the program to date, that this will be so at all.

I want to start with two questions. I have a lot of other questions and a lot of other observations too, but I am sure other members have so I will start with these two questions, Mr. Chairman. Will the minister tell us why he is discriminating against eight provinces in favour of two? Secondly, would the minister tell us what revenue he thinks he is going to pick up from that provision this year? In addition, what are the new figures in respect of what it is going to cost? It certainly is not going to cost $45 million.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could save some argument if I explained now that there are two different programs. One was introduced because of a particular situation in Nova Scotia and P.E.I. Those provinces are almost completely dependent for their power on the importation of oil. Prince Edward Island is 100 per cent dependent on oil for its power. As you know, the cost of this energy has increased at the fastest rate anywhere, and faster than all other alternatives available. In terms of Nova Scotia, it is 84 per cent dependent on imported oil.

When we introduced that first program it was because we realized we needed some flexible policy. This is why we have some policies that apply under regional economic expansion, and so on, in different regions of Canada depending on their problems. The Canada Works program does not provide the same amount of money to everybody, and nobody claims that it is discriminatory because the situation is different in some areas than in others. We started that program with $500 in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. After that we realized that this was a good means of saving some energy, perhaps other types of energy, and we decided to introduce a new program for the rest of Canada in the amount of $350. This was introduced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It was decided that, rather than give $250 to everyone, it was better to give $350 with a tax on it. In this way the benefit to the rich from the program would be less than to a person who does not pay tax at all. This is another form of equalization. If we followed the other route with the money available to the government we would have given $250 to everyone, whatever their income. We decided to make the amount higher, but some will have to reimburse part of it if they are making greater revenues. I believe there is some element of justice there between the rich and the poor provinces.

There are two different programs. The one for P.E.I. and Nova Scotia had been established for the reason that these were the only two provinces so dependent on oil imports—100 per cent in P.E.I., 83 per cent in Nova Scotia, 32.5 per cent in New Brunswick, 1.7 per cent in Newfoundland and only 0.3 per cent in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Crosbie: What are your figures?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I just explained that we decided on this program because of the added cost of oil in the Canadian economy to those provinces dependent on imported oil for the development of electricity rather than other forms of energy. We started that way, and expanded the program to cover other provinces with a different type of scheme. I just wanted to give that explanation. It is not my program, it is the program of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He decided to go with the $350 on a taxable basis rather than $250, not taxable, because we did not want to give exactly the same subsidy to each of the provinces, rich and poor.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks on this program which is likely to improve the homes built before 1921. At first, this program was not available in the province of Quebec because of the reluctance of the provincial government. However, according to the reply given today by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), it seems that the negotiations are making good progress and that Quebecers will finally be able to avail themselves of this program. But the Minister of Finance should not take away with one hand what a department is giving with the other.

It is unthinkable that this grant, which is not very large but will nevertheless prove useful, should be taxable. For instance, in the case of a wage-earner with an income of some $10,000, the taxation rate is, let us say, 15 per cent; so he is then very likely to have to pay out the $350 he may have received as an insulation grant. That is why I feel that the Minister of Finance should reconsider his position and look very seriously into the purpose of that isolation program. It is not designed to help millionaires who live in well-insulated residences, but it is aimed at low wage-earners who live in houses which, while comfortable, are not adequately insulated. Heating costs are higher and there is less comfort. Such are the conditions in most houses built before 1921.

I do not want my comments to be considered as being against the program, on the contrary. I would like it to be extended. That is why I asked the Minister of Urban Affairs today whether it would be possible to make up for lost time. He held out some hope saying that he would do his utmost to make the program and the applications filed in Quebec and Alberta retroactive under the regulations.

I realize that the Minister of Finance has a very heavy responsibility and that he must find funds to cover the administrative costs of all departments. However, it should not be merely an accounting procedure. If the Department of Urban Affairs or the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce gives $350 to an individual, a home owner will have to refund $275 in his income tax return. It is no longer a $350 grant. This must be watched closely. I ask the Minister of Finance to reconsider seriously whether it would be possible for him to find some other sources of income and to remove from Bill C-11 the clause which will specifically make taxable as income a grant which will surely become less effective if Bill C-11 remains in its present form. I always consider that this will particularly apply to low and middle income people. Considering that the purpose of this program is precisely to help those people, I think we should not trick them, we should not give them the cards to take them back immediately after; of course, they shall never win if we take the cards back after giving them. I ask very seriously to the Minister of Finance to introduce an amendment to Bill C-11, and I think that all Canadians will be very thankful for this.

● (1542)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, to answer the hon. member, I think that the purpose of taxation in an area such as this one is to make the subsidy more useful to low income people than to people who pay a lot of taxes. This was considered the most favourable way to enable people in the lower income brackets to have $350, because probably they do not pay much tax or they pay no tax at all. Those people will not be taxed. The higher the income, the higher the tax to be paid on this amount.

Of course, we always have a difficult choice to make in public administration. What is the best method to spend the available funds? We thought we should use this method and that it was preferable to give $350 to the poorest people than to give $250 to both rich and poor people.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief references to the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's West and the response of the minister thereto. I was astounded when I heard the minister's rationale for making a distinction between Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia on the one hand, and the other six provinces on the other hand that are coming in under this program for the $350 taxable grant. It makes no sense and it does not stand up to scrutiny and analysis. Surely the minister must realize that.

We are not dealing with the cost of electricity. It is the cost of heating homes that we are dealing with. Surely that was the rationale behind the grants in the first instance. If it is looked at from that basis, then the minister's arguments do not hold at all. In Newfoundland, over 70 per cent of the homes are heated by oil, the same offshore oil which has to be imported into Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. In Prince Edward Island, approximately 98 per cent of the homes are heated by oil. In Nova Scotia, approximately 90 per cent of the homes are heated by oil. Thus, why make a distinction? It really defies logic and it makes no sense.

The only reasonable rationale one can arrive at is that there was election fever in this country last summer. Presumably the word went out from the Prime Minister to all ministers to put together whatever programs could be used as part of an election platform. In this regard, the government had the program implemented in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. It was designed to come to the rescue of Gerry Regan and his Liberal cabinet in Prince Edward Island which was in trouble at the time. This program was generous and adequate, but certainly not overly generous. Each householder could receive $500 tax free for the purpose of insulating a home or helping toward the cost of insulation. Quebec and Alberta refused to go along with the program because there was no adequate consultation with the provinces.

The government decided this would look good on an election platform—$350 to every Canadian householder for the purpose of insulating homes. One can get away with that in election rhetoric and on an election platform. My colleague has indicated that one would be required to spend over $500 in order to receive the $350 which was taxable; so this hastily conceived and hastily executed program came into existence. Now it is a total flop and a failure. There is no way in which the minister can rationalize or justify the inequality of a $500 tax free allowance to householders in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and a $350 taxable allowance in the rest of the country. This program has been perceived by Canadians as a bad one, hence the very disappointing response to date from the people of the six provinces qualifying for the program.

I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Why was a new bureaucracy established outside the existing establishment of CMHC? Why was it established in the city of Montreal, in a province that is not participating? There is only one logical explanation for that, and that is because Montreal is the constituency of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, and the Prime Minister. Why could the government not use the existing offices of CMHC? These offices are already established right across the country, and have adequate personnel. Why did the minister not use the provisions of the Income Tax Act, which would require no additional establishment? An amendment to the Income Tax Act could be made for the tax deductible allowance up to a certain amount for insulating homes. Surely that would have been the simple way to do it. It would have been the fair and equitable way, as well.

Mr. Chrétien: And expensive.

Mr. McGrath: As a result of a partisan response to a political situation last summer, we are faced with this hodge-podge that the minister cannot justify in any sense. What we are being asked to approve is a program which discriminates against the people of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia. The fact these provinces do not have Liberal governments does not have very much to do with it, although I am suspicious. One can only conclude that the government moved in the case of Nova Scotia in order to get Gerry Regan out of a tight jam. The government had no response to the energy crisis in terms of a national energy conservation program, but it took a step in the right direction. I concede that this was a step in the right direction. But instead of applying the program to the rest of the country, we have to pay a penalty. In Newfoundland and New Brunswick we have to pay the same price for offshore oil as they do in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. We are talking about the price of oil in terms of heating a home and in terms of conserving consumption in order to do our part in this energy crisis.

● (1552)

I ask the minister to reconsider the answer he gave to the hon. member for St. John's West, and to tell us where he gets those misleading statistics with respect to the amount of electricity which is generated by oil in Newfoundland as opposed to the amount of electricity generated by oil in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. That really has nothing to do with it.

An hon. Member: Certainly it has.

Mr. McGrath: We are talking about the price of home heating oil and about the price of heating a home. There is a small percentage of homes in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island heated by electricity. However, the vast majority of them, as is the case in the rest of Canada, are heated by oil, so why not have the same program apply to all of Canada, instead of this discriminatory program which we are now asked to support?

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, this particular clause of the bill is obviously the most disturbing. It reminds me of a cliché which, reworded, would go something like this, "The government giveth and the government taketh away, but sometimes the government taketh away before it giveth". I think that is what has happened in this situation.

This clause not only discriminates against some parts of this country and their citizens, but it is also based on a double standard. If we must have taxation and taxation statutes, they should be fair, equitable and just. This particular clause is not just or equitable. It is certainly unjust and discriminatory. It is not even good legislation. I do not know who drafted this clause or who caused it to be drafted, but I suggest that the minister should use his good common sense and legal background. Let us not hold this legislation up any further. There is nothing to be gained if we have to have a few more mandarins going over a few more forms.

The minister should withdraw this clause. Is the clause an indication of some things which are to come in the future? Are all government grants, subsidies, forgivenesses, reduced interest rates and benefits given to people under, for example, NIP and other programs to be taxable in future under the Income Tax Act? I would like the minister to answer that question. It is a fair question, and if he is fair he will answer it. If he is utterly fair and true to the people of Canada and this parliament, he will not only answer it but he will withdraw this clause.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take the occasion to raise two points. First, of course, that grant, which is not a real one, and that lack of consultation which should have been considered necessary. I feel that Quebec, perhaps like one or two other provinces, could probably have benefitted from those grants at the same time as some other provinces did. The responsible minister will probably understand that it is likely that such lack of consultation with the provinces results from the fact that the provinces have not all accepted the program.

In my opinion, the fact that the provinces are not allowed to participate in drafting a policy is a typical example of lack of consultation. This is unbelievable, Mr. Speaker. I feel that if the minister wanted to be generous at that level of $1 billion, it would have been possible for him to meet with the officials of the provinces, to talk with them about these objectives, about the importance, of course, for the federal government to see that energy is conserved and, therefore, I believe the provinces could have made excellent proposals, and, at the same time, it would have been possible, I think, to come to an agreement and allow every province, according to its own needs and ways, to benefit from that grant and also allow all the citizens in every province to benefit from it. But that was not my point yet.

The federal government submitted a program they had drawn up by themselves, and they told the provinces: Take it or leave it. Today we realize that with a new conference the provinces will probably be forced to participate. That is a kind of blackmail I want to denounce. When some people talk about a new federalism, like the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde) did last Saturday, they do not mean that kind of approach. I have to blame our colleagues from Quebec, who also sit on the other side of the House, for not having urged the minister to invite the provinces to discuss those matters. Some of my colleagues on this side of the House have expressed the same concerns like I did.

It seems to me that if the federal government had been honest when talking of true consultation with its provincial counterparts, it would have been possible for any Canadian to get this subsidy wherever he comes from. That is what I wanted to point out and I regret once again that we, the people of Quebec, did not manage to get it. Of course, they will bring forward other arguments, that the government of Quebec is so particular and so on. There has been a lack of consultation and the absence at the negotiation table of provinces which, in the present context as well as in the future, should be participating in the elaboration of a national policy.

So long as this government will keep the kind of attitude it has shown for so many years, we will keep on experiencing difficulties regarding objectives which are intrinsically good, I repeat, but which are often unpracticable for certain provinces and for certain reasons.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, the minister responsible for this legislation is trying to justify it by saying that it is not his program after all. That is a fact, we acknowledge that this is not his program. However, he exercises a responsibility today. If the minister responsible for such a program has made a mistake, I think he has the responsibility and the duty to correct such shortcomings and injustices that may be found in this legislation. Once again, we may be told that we are taking perhaps too much time in this House to argue over these things. I think that those people who are likely to benefit from these grants are quite interested in learning today that there are still members who understand this injustice and who want and ask in a very democratic way that the minister correct a situation or an injustice which is quite obvious.

Of course the minister says the grant could have been only $250; he now offers $350 to get back part of the money. This reminds me of today's statement on family allowances. In 1977, the government spent more than $175 million a month in family allowances but it does not tell us how many millions it got back by taxation. I call this false representation. It is dishonest on the part of the government to present such measures to the public. It tries to fool the public by telling it it is getting $350, knowing full well that in certain cases this does not amount to $350. The member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) has already talked about this subject as well as other members before me.

Why don't we clearly establish the true amount of the grant which a particular citizen will get? Most of these homeowners are not people with tremendous revenues, and even if only $15, $25 or $50 are taken off this grant, it is unfair on the part of the minister to present us this subsidy as a $350 grant. Once it is made taxable, it can no longer be called a $350 grant. In those circumstances, I dare believe that the Minister who admitted earlier that it was not his program, although this is hardly an argument, must assume his responsibility and be fair towards the legislation which he is bringing forward. If he wants to be fair, I believe that he cannot avoid his responsibilities. In consequence the tax on this subsidy must be immediately removed.

If the government were to do it, I would be ready to trust them. In other words, the way this legislation has been presented is highly hypocritical. We will not accept that Canadians be misled in this fashion. Clause 5, page 7, must be withdrawn so that this subsidy be totally left to those who meet the criteria and I believe that in these conditions it will meet its purpose as the main purpose of the legislation is fundamentally worth while. In view of the circumstances I hope the minister is going to reconsider the presentation of this bill and tell the House immediately that this subsidy is not taxable.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: I want to make one or two short points in support of my colleagues. The minister indicated that by taxing the insulation grants the program was equal to both the rich and the poor. I want to tell the minister that there are people at the lower end of the income scale, on welfare, who do not even care about tax. They cannot even find the $500 they have to spend to get the $350. So they will not benefit, and they need it more than anybody.

There are people with homes that are not worth insulating. They are spending millions and millions of dollars of government money through welfare, through low and fixed incomes, and they cannot afford oil at $70 or $80 a month which they are paying now in Newfoundland. There are widows on welfare getting $131, and they are paying $60 and $70 of it for fuel because they can only afford an oil stove. What is insulation going to do for them? This has to do with thousands of people not only in Newfoundland but right across Canada. To indicate how quickly this program was put together, to qualify in Newfoundland homes must have been built before 1941. The same with regard to insulation; it has to comply with CMHC standards. Mr. Speaker, we were not even a province of Canada in 1941, we did not join confederation until 1949, so how can we comply with CMHC standards which were never there?

An hon. Member: Were there houses there in 1941?

Mr. McGrath: Answer that one.

Mr. Marshall: Yes. I just say that the government are wasting millions and millions of dollars because they give 50-50 under the Canada Pension Plan to the province and most of that money of the low and meagre income earners is going toward trying to keep a home heated. They are paying too large a percentage of their low incomes for heating, when they cannot even afford food. I ask the minister, is there any humaneness in his body or in his soul? He should recognize the hardship that is being caused. While this program will help a number of people in Canada, it is not going to do anything for the poor who need it most.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McRae: I am rather appalled, Mr. Chairman, by some of the comments that I hear from the other side, particularly on this clause, section (5) of clause 6. It seems to me that when one talks about discrimination as between provinces, certainly when we are dealing with energy and oil, we have vast discrimination in terms of the subsidies paid to the eastern half of the country, the area receiving oil from offshore, the area east of the Ottawa Valley line. That kind of discimination is extremely important. I would be the last person in the world to say that policy should be changed. I believed it was the right policy when we brought it in, and I support it.

Two provinces, just because they happen to have Liberal governments, are under fire. I find it rather interesting that with respect to the opposition, which has nine or ten seats in the province of Nova Scotia and at least two seats in the province of Prince Edward Island, none of those members is presently involved in this debate. I would like to point out that when we brought in this program—and, many people who have seats in this House and are not here today raised the question at the time—these two provinces had a vast dependency on oil for the production of power. At that time it was roughly 100 per cent in terms of Prince Edward Island, and 65 per cent or 70 per cent—I am not sure of the figure, but it was in that order—for Nova Scotia. The price of oil was something like $1.75 a barrel.

When the world price of oil went to $12 a barrel, and $8 or $8.50 a barrel in terms of what it was costing after the subsidy in those areas, they were in a very precarious situation. The provinces themselves asked for an extra subsidy with respect to that oil, and the federal government, in its wisdom, said, "No. If we give you an extra subsidy on oil it will be a subsidy year in and year out. Since heating and electrical needs depend a great deal on oil—not all heating needs, of course, but certainly electrical needs depend totally on oil—we want to do something that will put you in a better position so you will not consume as much oil." That is precisely why we set up this program in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. Those provinces wanted to move in this direction, and we assisted them. No other province has a dependency of greater than than 30 per cent for oil and hydro.

I think this is important. We responded to a need in an intelligent way. One of the ways of responding was to grant a permanent subsidy to those two provinces to help them pay for the oil, but we said no, that was not the intelligent way to go about it; the best way was to support them in terms of developing an insulation program, which is being used, which means they will be using a great deal less oil. I cannot too highly stress the importance of this insulation program. I would like to see a much better program for the rest of the country. I am one of those who fought very hard for the program. However, I realize that a government which is $8.5 billion in deficit cannot afford to do everything it wants to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McRae: I believe the $1.4 billion for the program for all the ten provinces—actually, eight of them will be using it—is a rather important step. It seems to me that we should be encouraging this program and the whole notion of insulation. One of the hon. members from Newfoundland is concerned, and rightly so. He has shown that concern constantly in this House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The purpose of being in committee of the whole is to ask specific questions relating to clauses of the bill before us. We are now dealing with clause 6 and its various subclauses. The present comments are merely a defence, as I understand it, of the provisions and are not directed toward asking questions.

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would ask the hon. member, if he has questions, to ask them so that the rest of us can put some questions.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I suggest that the decision of last week was that an hon. member could speak for 20 minutes and then ask questions.

● (1612)

Mr. McRae: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a point. Three members spoke for their full time dealing with this particular problem, condemning the program in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McRae: I am going to ask a question. I am also going to try to put the whole problem in perspective. I believe very strongly the most important thing we have to do in the next ten years is develop a conserver society.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McRae: I sat and listened when you did your bit. Now you listen.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McRae: I have 20 minutes. I will get to the question. I will not take any longer than is necessary. In another six or seven years we will have a serious problem in this country. By 1985 there will be a world oil supply problem. There must be a lot more conservation. I would like to see a lot more money put into this program, but the government's position at this time is very difficult. In any event, $1.4 billion is a good start. I cannot see a more fair way of doing this than by giving the most you can, taking more from those who can afford it and less from those who cannot. Otherwise, the money would be much less. Those who cannot afford it will not be able to do it. They will be stuck with higher fuel bills. While this clause is not desirable, it is necessary and the government has to be supported in this situation.

I would like to hear some comments from members from the two provinces that have been mentioned with regard to how they feel about the necessity of the program put into effect in December of last year and February of this year. It was an absolute necessity. Those two provinces would have been bankrupt if something like this had not been done. I do not think the other provinces of this country have the same need. I agree they do have need. We do not discriminate against any province; we try to help each province with its special needs. This was a special need; therefore I will support what has been done under this program. I will give all the support I can to it.

Has the minister or the parliamentary secretary any indication whether the provinces of Quebec and Alberta are still considering coming into the program? I ask this because it would have some bearing on the cost to the federal government.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that discussions are taking place even at the present time with regard to those two provinces.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that the previous speaker mentioned the number of the subclause which we are discussing. One of the comments I made in my earlier intervention in the debate on second reading was related to the complexity of the bill and the difficulty of finding, in this 225-page document, the matters of concern to my constituents. I was unable to be here during the past couple of days when this bill was being discussed. I came back to learn that clause 6 was under consideration. I then learned that the home insulation program was the particular matter under discussion. I had been raising matters under clause 6 which had to do with exchanges of property, the roll-over of family properties. I may be wrong in having considered that that is a matter treated in this section. However, in clause 6(2) there are certain definitions which have a bearing on the matter of the roll-over of properties, not necessarily corporate properties but family properties, farm properties in particular.

When I intervened on November 16 I asked a couple of questions. I would now like to get specific answers to those questions. I do not know whether the parliamentary secretary is in a position to answer or whether some of the advisers might be able to help him on this matter. Is any thought being given to providing an index or glossary for bills of this complexity so that anyone who has to go through it, whether it be a member of parliament or a tax adviser, could find their way much more easily than at present, knowing exactly what elements are being covered? That is my first question. I have four more I would like to ask.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I shall certainly look into the hon. member's suggestion. If I can help the hon. members of the opposition to understand the bill better, I shall be happy to do so. I personally find a legislative measure like this one very complicated and very difficult.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I find it difficult to follow the minister. There are some factors grouped together in one clause or in another. An index would certainly be very useful to all members.

[English]

The second question has to do with the specific matter of the taxation year. I am not sure whether it would be here, or whether I would have to look into the Interpretation Act, or where, but whose taxation year is at issue when we are talking about the exchange of a farm property? I am looking at page 4 of the bill, subclause (2) and the amendments under 13(4) which have been changed. Is this the taxation year of the government or of the individual who is making the return?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it is the fiscal year of the individual, not the government.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I thank the minister for that answer. It does clarify it. At about line 25 or so it is stated:

—in his return of income under this part for the year in which he acquires, as a replacement for the former property, a property (in this subsection referred to as a "replacement property")—

There is a time element involved here. We are talking about a change of property from one that is now being used to one that will be used, the existing property and the replacement property. Is the time measured from the acquisition of the new property or is it measured from the time of sale of the old property? This is very important because there is a two-year averaging possibility in determination of the capital gain.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it is in the income tax return after he bought his property.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Therefore, the sale of the previous property can be made, for determination of the capital gain, within the two-year period following the acquisition of the replacement property?

Mr. Chrétien: To qualify, the property must be real property and the replacement must be acquired before the end of the year following the year of the sale.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, but this prejudges the issue of a change of property, that the sale must take place first and the acquisition follows, if I follow the logic of that statement. It is not always possible to do this. Sometimes the acquisition has to precede the sale. I do not think one has to go to a bank in order to carry out such a transaction. A piece of property may go on the market and it may have to be bought before the sale of the property already owned.

● (1622)

Mr. Chrétien: In order to qualify, the properties must be real property and replacement must be effected before the end of the year following the year of the sale. So the purchaser has to acquire in the year after he made the sale.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is the minister saying that the period is not two years, as I understood at one time, but only 12 months?

An hon. Member: It could be nearly two years.

Mr. Chrétien: Under the present rule regarding roll-over treatment, the replacement assets are to be acquired within two years.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Then if it is a matter of a sale and an acquisition, does it matter which operation takes place first?

Mr. Chrétien: I understand that a person could buy before selling. Obviously, it would be before the sale, so it would be even better for him than if he had to wait. So he has one year after acquisition.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): One year after the acquisition in order to determine the amount which might be considered as the capital gain?

Mr. Peters: That is not true.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): There seems to be some doubt about that aspect of the operation. I am not trying to cause puzzlement; I am trying to clear things up for an accountant who is advising a client in my riding as to the best way of dealing with this matter, so that he may determine whether he should proceed now with either a sale or an acquisition. There is one further cloudy issue in my mind along with these others. I do hope I am clarifying these issues.

Mr. Chrétien: Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to read a statement which I have before me. It will probably clarify this complex question. I can understand that it is difficult for everybody, even for me, to understand this complex question clearly. This is an important change. It expands the tax deferral, commonly called the roll-over, on certain dispositions of appreciable property. When a depreciable asset is disposed of for proceeds which exceed its unappreciated capital cost, the recapture of the depreciation allowed in previous years may occur. The special roll-over rule eliminates its recapture to the extent that the proceeds are reinvested in a replacement property. Under a roll-over, the property is not exempted; the tax is simply deferred until the replacement property is disposed of.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I thank the minister for that clarification. It is on the record now and I leave it to the accountant to interpret it. The first of my final two questions in this area is this. Suppose by some chance the farmer in question should decide to obtain a property which will cost him more than the property he now holds, as a replacement property, because he needs more pasturage or a greater extent of hay meadows than he holds on his current property. He can get it, say, because it is in an area where the unit land cost is less expensive than his existing land. Suppose he obtains his larger property at a smaller unit cost than he sells the old property. In that case his apparent capital gain could be large. Is it, then, a legitimate capital gain? Does he have to make a capital gain on the basis of acre for acre, or is the capital gain just the difference in what he nets from the proceeds of the total sale as against the acquisition of the new property?

Mr. Chrétien: There is another clause which deals with capital gains. We are talking about a completely different problem here. When we get to clause 13(4)(1) the hon. member probably will get the explanation he wants. We will be coming to that clause later on.

Mr. Peters: Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Moncton made the very true statement that maybe members of parliament should give consideration to scrapping the whole act, starting over again with language that the minister, the officials and others can understand. If we are here to make laws just for the lawyers, then we have done a great job. Most of the discussion which has taken place on the clause we are considering does not refer to anything which is in the bill. The bill does not even mention the insulation program. There is a clause which says that the provisions of another program outside the bill will be allowed to be taxed and outlines the manner in which it is to be taxed.

If the minister were smart, and he is, and if he were interested, which he may be, then he would consider scrapping the kind of legislation before us and would be concerned with writing simple legislation which says exactly what it means. I think it would do a great service to the country and it would certainly save people a lot of legal fees. It would save us trying to understand a lot of jargon, and it would save us having to ask a lot of questions, if the legislation were in language which you could read and understand.

I was interested in the argument which took place about the insulation program. That is dealt with in clause 6. The arguments which took place were mainly over two points. For the first time, the present minister has done a very good job in relating the grant to income tax. He said that a flat amount would not be given, but that the amount allowed would be taxed. This would result in equality between the low end and the high end. Normally, when we give tax exemptions under the heading of personal income tax we provide a big benefit to the high income earners and very little benefit to those in the low income range. Often this goes further than meets the eye. It may result in a substantial reduction of the total tax the taxpayer is paying. It may place him in another category and the savings may be in the hundreds, or even thousands of dollars. It all depends on the category in which the taxpayer concerned is already placed.

I agree with the minister, although I recognize there is some argument from those to my right that there may be a measure of inequality here. In my opinion, that is the way the income tax structure should be rewritten and it should be done in such a way as to take out a lot of the junk now in it. I could read some paragraphs to you, Mr. Chairman. It would defy Shakespeare to tell you what they meant. There is one right here:

(a) Property, the proceeds of disposition which were proceeds referred to in the subparagraph—

Then it gives about four places where you can look it up. It all means absolutely nothing except to a lawyer who is going to take a case involving, say, the selling of a property where the proceeds are used for a purpose related to something else altogether. No wonder people just pay their income taxes without ever knowing what for. It is like receiving a parking ticket or speeding ticket; you never go to court to fight it because you know you will not win the argument anyway.

● (1632)

Some bright professor at Osgoode Hall had his students examine this bill and write a critique on it. I gather each student dealt with a different section of the bill. I should like to read part of what was said about this clause. I think the minister may be interested in it since he believes in national unity. The conclusion is this:

Unfortunately the changes are proposed at a time when they might inadvertently help the separatist cause in Quebec. Many firms are already leaving that province and setting up business elsewhere. These tax changes will make it even easier for them to make such a move.

He is referring there to the roll-over provisions. In talking about the present law, he comments:

When a taxpayer disposes of capital property he must pay tax on any capital gain or recapture of capital cost allowance that arises from the sale. There are provisions for exceptions with respect to involuntary replacements such as those that occur when property is destroyed by fire and replaced or rebuilt with insurance proceeds. If the replacement occurs within the time specified by the act the taxpayer can defer capital gain or recapture to the extent that the proceeds of disposition are used to acquire a replacement property.

All very simple, I presume.

There are no provisions for a deferral for any other reason; for example if a farmer sells his farm in order to buy a larger one he will have to pay tax on any capital gain arising from the sale.

Hon. members will be aware that there are cases where even a different use of a property results in an involuntary sale, and capital gains tax has to be paid. These comments are by a young person at Osgoode Hall who one day will be one of the legal beagles of our society. Some of these young students will find their way into provincial legislatures, and some into the federal parliament. Others will end up as the civil servants who make these stupid laws and hon. members will be surprised to find that, even though they are broad-minded today, five years from now they will be as narrow-minded as the rest of their colleagues in that particular field. He then commented as follows:

According to the budget document "The existing tax treatment of voluntary replacements is an impediment to desirable relocations by businessmen and farmers." In this respect the change should increase the mobility of capital and encourage the expansion of small farms and businesses into larger more economical units.

The previous speaker was inquiring about that.

(2) Presumably, since the provisions are not confined to small businesses and farmers, the largest benefits will flow to large business relocations. A major merchandiser might close a downtown store, relocate in a plaza and defer capital gains tax on the sale of the downtown location, or a business may take advantage of local subsidies encouraging relocations in another community. While there may be good social arguments in each case that the relocation is not "desirable" the companies will still benefit.

(3) A "replacement for a former property" is defined in the proposed bill as property which" . . . was acquired by the taxpayer for the same use as the use to which he put the former property". This will undoubtedly cause problems of interpretation. How "same" must the use be? Could, for example, a businessman sell land and buildings in the city and purchase unimproved land in the suburbs with the intention of building on it and be eligible for the tax deferral?

Here is a young lawyer asking the lawyers whom the minister has at his command how much sameness there must be. I presume he is asking these questions rhetorically of his students, but be that as it may, it would be nice if a young student, before getting his degree, found out what "sameness" was. How should this clause be interpreted? As for a businessman selling land and buildings in the city and purchasing unimproved land in the suburbs, my guess is he would be eligible for a tax deferral. This is how all developers make their money. They pretend to be farmers although they are not competent to farm, but they defer taking a decision on their property and in that way get a deferral. If I can give a non-legal opinion, I would say they could get a deferral here. This professor continues:

Such interpretation problems can be resolved by litigation—

Which will make his job interesting and very rewarding.

—but in the meantime there will be a degree of uncertainty that is not conducive to good business planning.

This is why you need lawyers, Mr. Chairman, one who is certain and one who is uncertain. Then you have that little man with the odd hat and gown down at the front who judges which one is more uncertain about the question than the other. Almost every word in this legislation requires a legal definition and leaves a great deal of uncertainty. I continue:

(4) The gain deferred in effect provides an interest free loan to the business. The benefit gained from such relocation may or may not justify this form of tax subsidy.

I should have liked him in his tender, developing years to say whether he thought it did or did not, but I suppose the fact that he raises the question is an indication that he questions whether or not this is good practice.

(5) There may be problems with anticipatory conversion. Can an ongoing business purchase new premises and move into them gradually, then sell the old location and still claim the tax relief? This would seem to be a legitimate and often necessary step and on principle would comply with the intent of the provisions. However the act does not specifically provide for such transactions and on a literal reading such deductions probably would not be allowed.

Then he adds his last comment, which I quoted first, that allowing roll-overs of this kind and transfers from one province to another will help the separatist cause, and that many businesses are moving out of Quebec now probably because of the tax structure of the federal government. I should also like to refer to the inability of the federal government to assist unity in this country. Mr. Chairman, why did the federal government decide not to pay the same subsidy for insulation of a house right across Canada? Why did we not decide to do that? Why do we not say to every person in Canada who wants to insulate his house which is of a certain type and of a certain age that we will give a subsidy? We could write it off under the income tax, or do whatever we liked. But we did not do that.

● (1642)

Instead, the people in P.E.I. and Nova Scotia are in very bad shape, so we say that we will give them a special subsidy of $500. If any other provinces want to participate, we will give them a different kind of program. This is why we have all the problems of disunity in this country. The federal government has no guts. The federal government does not provide anything. We did not even build the Trans-Canada Highway across this country. The only thing we ever did in the way of unity in this country was at the initial stage of confederation by putting a railway across the country. We did not put the Trans-Canada Highway across the country; we joined up a bunch of provincial highways and called them the Trans-Canada Highway.

We now have the opportunity to help people with respect to insulation. The Liberal member for Fort William said he supported this program because he thought it was a good one. For whom did he think it was a good program? Is it a good program for all Canadians? Why has the federal government not got the guts to put in a program of its own and say it will use the income tax to pay for it, but it will be a federal government program? Then if somebody in Quebec wanted to insulate his house, we could give him the same benefit as somebody in Nova Scotia. No bloody way; that is not the way we do it!

We made one concession to Quebec. We put all our head offices down there. This is very interesting, because I cannot phone the minister of energy or the minister of the environment and get a copy of the regulations. I have to send a letter to Montreal. You cannot phone, because they will not answer the telephone in Montreal. You have to write a letter to Montreal before you can even get a bulletin. Isn't it really time that we put in a federal program? The minister is a federalist. How can he agree with the crackpot programs we work out on an individual basis, with one province played against another—and they are played one against the other? If Newfoundland wanted this program, it would be different than the one for P.E.I. and Nova Scotia. British Columbia is to have a different one. The one you are working out today with Quebec will be different again. They are all different. Why are they not Canadian? It is just as cold in Ville Marie as it is in Haileybury, but they are just across the river, one in Quebec and one in Ontario. Why should two citizens, one in each place, not be treated in the same way? No wonder there is disunity in this country.

[Mr. Peters.]

Even a simple little thing like the federal government making money available, not very much but some, for insulation is done on a different basis in different provinces. The money should be available to everybody. These people pay the same money for their postage stamps. There are many things they must buy for which they pay the same, so why is there not equality when we have a program like this? I am having difficulty with another program that is in another part of this bill.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member would permit me to ask him a question. Is he advocating that the programs under DREE should not apply in northern Ontario?

Mr. Peters: I am suggesting that the programs under DREE should apply the same in northern Ontario as they do in other parts of Canada, but they do not.

An hon. Member: They are the same.

Mr. Peters: No, I am sure they do not apply in the same way, because we have to get approval from Toronto. Where do we in Northern Ontario find our worst enemy, but in Toronto?

An hon. Member: There is an office in Sudbury.

Mr. Peters: There is a master agreement you are renegotiating now. I talked to the Ontario minister and he said you were pretty tough negotiators. He was blaming you. But it is my opinion that you have to go to him to get your master agreement, and you can only do what you agree to do. Another province will agree to do something different, so it is different in Quebec than it is in Ontario. Anyone from northern Ontario or northern Quebec knows our provincial capitals may not be our best friends on most occasions.

I am making a plea to the minister. This minister sincerely believes in unity. I am sure he does. He would have gone as provincial leader of the Liberal party in Quebec if he did not believe that. He believes his role is here, and he is going to make this his role. Will he explain why we are playing around with this kind of clause. Why do we not just put it into the other act and put in here that all people can take advantage of it? I congratulate him on the way he has written it in, and I congratulate him for the fact that he is giving greater benefit to the little guy than to the rich one. I congratulate him on the system he is using. This is a system we have used for a long time. I would like to see him talk to his colleagues, because he has to supply the money for any plan they have. He is now in a position to do this. He should provide some equality for the various programs in the provinces. This young student will be interested in your answer, because it is his charge that this roll-over program is going to be divisive and will do nothing for unity.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in reply I would like to say that this roll-over program is intended to help people who want to expand their businesses. This will give them the opportunity of having the necessary liquidity to progress. I think it should be looked at in that light, but it has no relationship whatever to national unity. You can stretch the discussion very far in this House if you want. For example, on the question of a subsidy for the insulation program, that is in this bill because when the program was announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in collaboration with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, they said the program would involve $250, untaxable.

This is not really my program, but I am ready to defend it. I am defending the position of the government, but it is stretching the rules of this House a bit when we get involved in a debate in which I am not really the minister responsible for a program. It so happens that when the program was debated in the House of Commons, it was known that it was in the package; but the time to debate it was at the time the program was presented to the House of Commons, and not at this time. We started with a program that had relationship to the cost of oil in the maritimes. The production of electricity in P.E.I. is 100 per cent dependent on imported oil, and in Nova Scotia it is dependent on oil to the extent of 83 per cent. This program was well received there. We have tried to find a way that would extend the program somehow across the land with the resources we have available.

I do not blame the hon. member for suggesting that we should make it equal across the land whatever the cost is. This is the policy of his party, the NDP, to spend as much as you can; the public sector should do everything. I do not agree with that policy, but I accept it. What puzzles me in a debate like this is the position adopted by the official opposition. They are always criticizing us in this House because of the level of government expenditures. They say we are terrible about spending and we could not care less about it. However, his colleagues here are asking us to extend this program without putting a tax on, which would cost the taxpayers $500 million over a period of seven years. The same people are telling me not to spend so much money. The hon. member should talk to his friends, because it would cost $500 million more to adopt what he is suggesting this afternoon. Members of that party are always suggesting that we spend more and more, and then they get up and complain because of the level of government expenditures. I hope that hon. member will talk to the hon. member for St. John's East.

Perhaps I should point out that the financial critic for the opposition party, the hon. member for York-Simcoe, has chosen to absent himself from the House today. Perhaps that is because he knew his colleagues were going to put pressure on me—

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. Our financial critic will be here this evening. He was delayed because of flying conditions in this area. I do not think the minister should make that kind of statement at this time. He should withdraw that statement.

Mr. Chrétien: I am very pleased that the hon. member has raised that question of privilege, because yesterday I was in Toronto talking with the executive of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Your friends.

Mr. Chrétien: I did not happen to be here. I am always caught in the middle. Because I was not here yesterday, I have to excuse myself. I would have preferred to be here in order to listen to the remarks of the hon. member for Joliette, the hon. member for St. John's East, the hon. member for St. John's West and the other Tory members from Newfoundland. The hon. member for Provencher indicated that this was a bad policy. Things would be worse if the Conservatives were in power.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the erudite remarks of the hon. Minister of Finance. He understands the economic background of the requests made by various parties. My party believes in universal benefits for everyone. The minister has indicated that he is willing to negotiate those contracts up to $1.4 million with any of the provinces. Perhaps that would mean one would not receive $250—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has referred to $1.4 million. I should like to point out that the figure is $1.4 billion. Apparently there are 1,000 million in a billion.

Mr. Peters: I thank the hon. minister for correcting the figure I referred to.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I should like to return to the subject raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich concerning the principle of the roll-over. All of us agree that this concept of rolling over from one type of property to another is now being recognized to a limited degree in this legislation. Some 15 years ago I recall the hon. member for Edmonton West spoke about this question at a tax foundation meeting. It has taken that long to get into the tax records of this country.

As the minister is aware, my party voted in favour of this legislation on second reading but we wanted to make proposals in order to improve it. I am concerned about the use of the words "Canadian privately-owned corporations". The original budget motion referred to the disposition of capital property after March 31, 1977, and contained provisions relating to involuntary dispositions being modified. It is the word "involuntary" which caught my attention. Surely this deserves some thought before any amendment to this legislation can be made.

The Minister of Finance and other government members have travelled to various countries of the world. They proposed to the newly-developing nations the setting up of joint enterprises with Canadian subjects on one hand and national subjects on the other. This was in an attempt to get certain enterprises started. The Minister of Finance made that proposal on a trip when he was the minister of industry, trade and commerce.

Young Canadians have put their technical know-how and managerial experience into the joint enterprises with the newly-developing nations. Lately, nations have demanded that half of the shares of the joint enterprise be owned by nationalists, which is only natural. That would leave 50 per cent of the shares in the joint enterprise to be shared among those who provide the capital, the administration or management and those who worked on the idea. More and more Canadians are receiving incomes because of their technical know-how.

Since these nations do not have the money to pay big salaries, Canadians have received their returns in the form of shares in these joint enterprises. The minute a joint enterprise becomes successful, the majority of the shareholders want to buy out the shares. Usually because it is provided in the bylaws of the company, suddenly these Canadians are informed that their shares will be bought by the majority of the other shareholders. When they return to Canada with those shares, they can be treated as income or capital gains even if the shares were not paid for in the beginning. I hoped this type of property would be considered under this legislation.

On Monday I asked what the objection was to non-Canadian, privately-owned corporations having the same advantage under clause 3. I should like to ask the minister the same question under this clause. In this concept of property and the transferring of it, it should be equitable to the young Canadians who have attempted to establish these joint enterprises around the world. What would be the objection to giving those Canadians the same roll-over privilege for using their expertise and know-how to help the joint enterprises in newly-developing nations?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I have a few comments I should like to direct to the Minister of Finance in regard to the insulation program that we are discussing at this time. As a general rule, I agree with the minister that Canadians are asking for too much from the government. This government has shown the lead by spending 43 per cent of the gross national product, which is too high. We have moved the area of fair taxation to the area of confiscation.

Referring to the remarks of the Minister of Finance in reply to the opposition asking for more funds, surely there is a difference with regard to an energy conservation program which would have long-term effects on Canada's balance of payments.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again later this day. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have made some progress, but I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the House to continue with Bill C-11 for the next hour.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Mr. Kaplan: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Why not? We are trying to help the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Even with the request of the hon. member, there is nothing to prevent the Chair from going through the normal procedure. What is being suggested is that the committee sit beyond five o'clock, so I will ask whether hon. members are ready to return to consideration of Bill C-11 in committee of the whole. When shall the committee have leave to sit again? Later this day?

• (1702)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) to come back to the committee of the whole House to consider Bill C-11.

[English]

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) suggests that we return to the consideration of Bill C-11 in committee of the whole.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, instead of giving up this important private members' hour, perhaps we should sit between six o'clock and eight o'clock.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I think all of us are aware that the party represented by the hon. member making this suggestion is conducting a filibuster against Bill C-1001, and it is just another form of that filibuster to suggest that we not discuss it now but, instead, discuss Bill C-11. I think it would be more conducive to the proper order of our business if the hon. member and his colleagues would agree to send Bill C-1001 to committee. Then we would be pleased to discuss Bill C-11.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have not yet reached private members' hour and consideration of the bill to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am really hurt and annoyed by the reaction of the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), who has accused my colleagues of filibustering some private member's bill which is being smuggled into the House by him. The hon. member accuses us of filibustering. I resent that, and my hon. colleagues and I demand that he withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must say that the Chair cannot go as far as accepting the request of the hon. member. The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) has expressed an opinion. I do not think he went as far as imputing motives which are unparliamentary, so I cannot accept the question of privilege of the hon. member. It is the impression of the Chair that there is not unanimous consent to suspend private members' hour.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would like to withdraw the request I made. I had the impression that the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) had remained in Toronto due to travel difficulties. I was surprised when I saw him after I made the request. I did not expect the hon. member would be here to sponsor Bill C-1001, so I assumed we could go ahead with Bill C-11.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the hon. member and I am pleased that he will withdraw his suggestion, but I have been in the House this afternoon.

Mr. Peters: I am sorry; I did not see the hon. member.

Mr. Symes: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope it is not related to the point we have just disposed of.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) accused hon. members in my party of conducting a filibuster. I dispute that. That has a negative overtone which Your Honour said was not there. My definition of the word "filibuster" is "deliberate delay". We are examining the bill and bringing out our criticisms of it. I do not think that should be complained about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the hon. member's remarks demonstrate that the Chair was right. The hon. member is disputing the point of view of another hon. member. What I said was that although the remarks of the hon. member for Scarborough East might have been interpreted as a reflection upon hon. members, in my judgment it was not a reflection imputing motives. In my mind, and I am sure in the minds of hon. members, words used in debate blaming other hon. members of delaying legislation have been used very regularly in this House. Perhaps using the word "filibuster" might not be pleasant—

Mr. Rodriguez: Terrible; absolutely shameful.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —or one of the best of our parliamentary practices, but I feel that the point raised by the hon. member does not represent a question of privilege.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment at 10 p.m. are as follows: the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack)—Penitentiaries—Millhaven—Reason for withholding names of inmates involved in hostage-taking; the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth)—Public Service—Delay in contract negotiations with nurses in Inuvik area—Request for report; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Industry—Pulp and paper—Effect on Canadian industry of loans to foreign countries to establish plants.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper. As there are no notices of motions (papers) listed, the House will proceed to the consideration of private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

BELL CANADA

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. O'Connell that Bill C-1001, respecting Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Leggatt.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had just commenced my remarks prior to six o'clock last week and I wish to complete them in the time allotted to me.

At the outset I would like to say that I never thought I would live long enough to see the feelings of my colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), hurt so much.

An hon. Member: That ought to go down in Hansard as the joke of the century.

Mr. Benjamin: If the hon. member's feelings are hurt and he feels wounded by the remarks of my good friend, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), hon. members can imagine how I must feel.

An hon. Member: You are grinning from ear to ear.

Mr. Benjamin: I really do not care what the hon. member for Scarborough East wants to call our participation in the debate on Bill C-1001. If he chooses to call it a filibuster, there really is not much the hon. member for Nickel Belt can do about that. If the hon. member wants to call our exercising what we consider to be our duty and responsibility a filibuster, that is up to him. It is not the way I and many other members, of parliament look upon that kind of participation in debate.

● (1712)

The bill presented to us has in it matters that are nothing new as it pertains to some of its provisions: they have come forward in this House concerning other corporations and entities in our country. I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, that Bell Canada would have the nerve to want to make these kinds of changes in view of their protestations with respect to their desire to provide great public service, telephone communication service. One would think that they would be anxious and available for full public scrutiny, that they would have no objection to coming before the parliament of Canada.

The provisions in this legislation allow them to evade that kind of examination, scrutiny and accountability. I do not think any self-respecting company which provides a public utility would want to do that, and since it is in fact a public utility is all the more reason it must be subjected to the maximum public scrutiny and accountability. Something like a telephone line, a sewer line or water line is a natural monopoly. It is a monopoly because it is so impractical and economically stupid. You do not have to be a socialist to agree to this. You can be a good free enterpriser having competing telephone lines running down a street side by side, or two competing water or sewer lines. So it is, in fact, a monopoly and it is providing a public utility.

If Bell Canada needs more capitalization for the operation of telephone communications systems, they are quite welcome to come to parliament at any time to ask for that increased capitalization authority and explain how they would use the increased capital to improve the telephone and other communication facilities they are now providing to the public. But no, Mr. Speaker, I have not sensed much of that. I believe the passage of this bill means they will then be able to branch out; they will be able to venture into other kinds of enterprises, other kinds of businesses. We know, in this country, from bitter experience what has happened when a public service or utility has been allowed to go beyond its original purpose. One has only to look at the CPR which for many years siphoned off millions in profits or used the value of assets or their borrowing capacity to pile up capital investments in enterprises other than the provision of a railroad transportation system.

An hon. Member: Then get the subsidy.

Mr. Benjamin: They were able to move into profitable areas other than the provision of a railroad transportation system, and made excellent profits. One has only to look at CP Investments Limited, Marathon Realty, Canadian Pacific Oil and Gas—you name it, Mr. Speaker—Cominco, CP trucks: what the hell that has to do with the railroad I have not been able to figure out. As a result of that, their rail transportation suffered, and still does. I, for one, have no faith whatsoever that in allowing Bell Canada to have a few billion dollars more of capitalization ability is going to mean a substantially improved telephone service to people in the parts of Canada which Bell Canada serves. Bell Canada will be into a lot of other things and will become a monopoly in other fields.

My colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) last week effectively pointed out, and I need not repeat his figures, and threw into a cocked hat the arguments of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), because Bell Canada is serving larger cities that cost more when the opposite is the case and always has been. I am happy that no one else has tried to sell that kind of silly economic argument.

The treating of a telephone system as a public utility in our law is logical, because that is what it is, a public utility; and, of course, we have always said and believed it should be publicly owned. But if it is going to be privately owned, it is all the more reason why it should remain under the aegis of the parliament of Canada, answerable and accountable to its customers, shareholders and to the people of Canada through this parliament. It is all the more urgent that the matter of public control and accountability be retained. This bill weakens, if not destroys that principle. One would think that would be pretty straightforward, Mr. Speaker. This is not socialist dogma that I am putting forward.
