JOHN WISE,

Romole Gessi

He was born at Ravenna, and pursued his military studies at Neuwienerstadt, carried to his family, residing at Trieste. to reach home. But that hope was not Suez. Gessi was the friend of the negro race and the enemy of slavery. Appointed by the English Pasha Gordon who was then in the service of the Khedive, to subdue the rebel slave chief, Suleiman, his success in that enterprise was rewarded by his appointment to the was rewarded by his appointment to the governorship of Bahr-el-Ghazal. In "The day is dawning, and in thought I two years and a nalf he disciplined and armed his own oldiers, and in twenty battles destroyed the army of Suleiman, which consisted of nearly fifteen thousand men, with eight thousand in reserve. Suleiman, who was the chief negro dealer in Africa. -- Gessi calculating that he exported fifty thousand

"The trade has now become impossible," wrote Gessi to the Geographical armed all the negroes, and they can now defend themselves." In the decisive battle where he overthrew Suleiman he only one thousand men, many of them not in sympathy with him. But he succeeded in defeating Suleimaa and in LIBERATING ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND

He made roads, opened schools, regulated the tax on ivory and gum, and tried to reduce that distant African possession of Egypt to order. But the destruction of their trade in slaves, and they rendered his position so disagreeoffice Gessi also lost his and left Bahr-eldependence. Ghazal.

Worn out with fatigue and mental strong enough to force its way through settled there had the masses of aquatic plants which in-cumber that portion of the river, became tangled in them and remained there tangled in them and remained there an aquatic plant which grows in equaslaves were kept fastened to each other by a long chain. Gessi destroyed all these places of wickedness and let the efforts of Gessi, who set his man to work with hatchets and spaces to liberate the Safia and the four barges attached to it, were unavailing. To the horrors of his strange imprisonment were soon added intense sufferings by famine. About half of the people with Gessi died from vivors who were rescued by another vessel which went to their relief also about eighty thousand inhabitants, capital of the Egyptian Sudan.

The dead bodies of the women, the children, the weak, and the old, who first succumbed to these miseries, lay branches of the dreadful plants that held them in a giant embrace. Several themselves on the negroes who had asof the dead bodies were devoured by sisted him. He believed, however the survivors, and Gessi relates in his that with four or five stations directed Society that the moral effect of these scenes upon his own spirit was more dreadful than even his sufferings for want of food. The people, also, to which their effects were wrapped into strips, soaked them in water over night,

BOILED AND ROASTED THEM. The fruit of one of the plants near them, resembling the artichoke, was eaten, but could not be found in sufficiently large quantities. Added to the hunger and fatigue occasioned by working in the water to liberate the ship, was the their feet on the sleepers, when groans and screams and often fighting succeeded. At one time in the early part of this period of torment the Salia was within half a mile of open water, and within half a mile of open water, and was dangerous enough even for his bold their feet on the sleepers, when groans even from the masts.

The night before the rescuing vessel arrived, Gessi wrote: "I felt myselt aid of one thousand men hired by the dying; I felt languor and emptiness, and my strength was leaving me. I my mind that night. I had escaped thrity feet long and were manned by leighteen mariners and trade betrayals and conspiracies against my life, and I must die at last in the middle trepid Italian traveller—Carlo Piazza, of a river from the same cause that had —and although the season was unfavorkilled thousands and thousands in Niam able on account of heavy rains and the Niam or in the burning desert of natives were hostile, yet he succeeded SUGAR, FRUIT, ONIONS, &c. The strong man whom his friends had always compared to a lion, the brave soldier who feared neither enemies nor death, was as weak as a child. He was lifted on board the other vessel and was soon partly restored, but the sufferings had been too great, and a fever ensued, which ended his life sometimes the wind moves them as if soon after.

The journal kept by Gessi during his waters are continually changing their imprisonment among the barrazzi was sent to the Geographical Society of Rome after his liberation. The intrepid spirit of this Italian traveller faces death with calmness as he nightly keeps the record of his suffering. "We are constantly laboring," he says, "at one plant about

But on the 5th of January they hear guns and see the vapor from a steamer. "It is the Ismailia. Great slaves annually was killed, together with other slave dealers.

God be thanked!" Tears fall from all their ones and the lion hearted Gossi their eyes, and the lion-hearted Gessi himself weeps as all of these suffering creatures go up one after another to Society of Rome in 1879. "I have kiss his hands and feet. "God be thanked, We are safe!"

Home, and wife, and children, and friends seemed near again to the weary had two thousand well-armed rebels op-traveller, who, after three years of posed to him, while his own force was African life, longed for rest with them. But the strain had been too great even being also slaveholders, and therefore for his iron constitution, and he died without seeing them.

Thus perished one of the noblest martyrs of the crusade against slavery. Victim of the cupidity of the Arabs of Khartoum, who saw the destruction of a chief source of their wealth, he was recalled by their influence from his work of liberation in Bahr-el-Ghazal and Mussulmans there could not forgive the Darfur. He was accused of wishing to exclude the Arab element and make able that when Pasha Gorden lost his and of teaching them to assert their in-
