Kind hands will deck thy tomb with flower. And raise a tribute stone ; But who, will charm our lonely hours,

And cheer us now thou'rt gone. We saw thy health decline each day,

And mourned its early blight, The creeping shadow of decay, Shed gloom o'er all t'was bright. Thy words which flowed like music sweet, Unto a whisper wane ; But those we'll cherish and repeat, Until we meet again.

O, it were death indeed, if all

Fled with the vanished breath &

But memory mocks the sable pall, And love lives after death.

And when thy lips no longer spoke

The bonds of Heaven grew strong

Unto a weeping throng, As earthly ties asunder broke,

The grassy roots will knit anew,

To shield thy tranquil sleep, The snows of Winter shroud thee too, * And Spring dews o'er thee weep.
