Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I have something to say in connection with the training of mechanics, but I do not want to go into the matter in detail at this time because the minister has given the assurance that the question will be taken up in greater detail on the second reading of the bill. For that reason I have not said very much about that matter, but I think there should be a definite plan for the training of men. The minister has referred to several plans which are now in operation, but in my estimation they are not up to the standard at all. I can see clearly that in the near future we are going to have a very much greater demand for trained mechanics. I had the privilege of studying some of these plans, and I want to tell the minister that such plans as I have studied are not at all adequate to meet the great necessities we are about to face. I should like to go into that in greater detail a little later on, but I think the minister would be well advised to consider the suggestion advanced by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Mayhew), who spoke a moment ago.

From what I have seen I am quite convinced that the sort of training which is being given is not conducive to the best results. It is entirely too elementary. I have been in contact with quite a few principals of technical schools, in this and in other provinces, and I have found that almost without exception those schools are prepared to go to any lengths to assist the government to train mechanics who will be able to step right into these munition plants, aeroplane factories and so on, and carry on efficiently. So far as I know, that is not being done at the present time. I think the government would be well advised to see what can be done in conjunction with these technical schools, in order that the graduates of these schools may give greater assistance to industry than is at present the case. I know from the communications I have had with the principals of these schools that they are only too anxious to cooperate with that end in view. When the bill is up for second reading, I shall want to go into this in more detail because I think there are certain matters that should be straightened out. I believe the minister would be well advised to see what could be done in connection with the further training of mechanics.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I was quite pleased to hear the statement of the hon. member who spoke for the manufacturers' association. Apparently we have made a great step forward, and I am quite sure we are going to get some action soon. The minister stated in September 1939 that not one contract offered by the war supply board was accepted with the five per cent limitation. Perhaps the hon. member should explain the reason for that, or would the minister make a statement?

Mr. HOWE: A good deal has been said about that limitation. It has been stated that the limitation of profit was five per cent of the cost of the product, but that was not the case. As my hon, friend knows, the limitation was five per cent of the capital employed in production. That is a very different matter. In practice that limitation proved to be so indefinite and complicated that no contract was accepted with the limitation. I may say that all the supplies the Department of Munitions and Supply have purchased since this war began have been produced at a profit which I am sure does not exceed five per cent.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Under the bill to be brought in, will the minister have the power to carry on the training of men should a shortage of labour occur? When the labour resolution was before us, I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty) to make a statement. Possibly the Minister of Munitions and Supply could tell us what cooperation there is between his department and the Department of Labour in connection with this matter.

Mr. HOWE: I thought I had taken all the powers there were, but if there is any power not in the bill I shall be glad to include it following the suggestion of my hon, friend.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 41, to amend the Department of Munitions and Supply Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR AGREEMENTS WITH COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS AND PROCESSORS

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 24, to amend the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Fournier (Hull) in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Cooperative association.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I move that paragraph (b) of scetion 2 of the bill be amended by deleting the words "delivered to it for sale" and substituting the words "produced by the aforesaid primary producers".

Mr. SENN: This puts the act back where it was before. There are certain objections to the bill as it stands at the present time. It seems to open up a large field and change the intention of the act. As I understood it, the act was intended to enable the primary producers to market their products by cooperative efforts, but this bill as it is would open up an entirely new field. Cooperative associations could be set up and take in and market any kind of goods, and they would be guaranteed against loss. I am glad to know that the minister has changed the wording back to the original form of the act. This act should be for the purpose of enabling the primary producers to market their own goods by cooperative efforts.

Mr. GARDINER: That is why I asked to have this paragraph amended.

Mr. SENN: What was the reason for the paragraph reading as it does?

Mr. GARDINER: The proposal came from officials of the department who are administering the act. They felt that certain of these organizations would like to bring in under the operations of the act certain products that might be delivered to them for sale. It was felt that those products could be handled under the same set-up as was provided for the handling of products delivered by producers who had organized. When this matter was brought before me later on, I pointed out just what has been pointed out now by the hon, member for Haldimand, and the result was that it was decided that the section should be changed back to its original form. The bill had already been printed and other changes would have been required in order to have the wording of this section apply to other following sections, so this method was thought to be the most simple.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The minister would say that this is a case of ill-digested legislation.

Mr. SENN: The minister has been wise in making that decision. The history of cooperative efforts in this country has not always been good. Cooperative organizations have been set up and have carried on successfully for a number of years. In some instances it was decided to broaden out and handle other products, and the result has always been that they got into deep water. I commend the minister for changing the bill back to the original form.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Could we be clear about the amendment? As we understand it, the words "delivered to it for sale" are being struck out and other words substituted.

Mr. GARDINER: "Produced by the aforesaid primary producers."

Mr. SENN: The same as it was before.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): The term is used "under a cooperative plan." Would it not be wise to define somewhere in the act what is meant by a cooperative plan? What is to prevent any line elevator company from taking delivery of goods from a group of producers and marketing those goods for them?

Mr. GARDINER: Paragraph (c) of section 2 of the original act defines "cooperative plan" as "an agreement or arrangement for the marketing of agricultural products which provides", and so forth, and then it goes on to define further.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I did not bring the act with me, and I do not recall the exact wording that follows. But a definition is provided?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, in the original act, but not in this amending act.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3-Cooperative plan.

Mr. SENN: A new principle is introduced in this clause as well; that is, allowing cooperative organizations of primary producers to set up reserves. What is the reason for such action? I doubt very much whether it is wise for cooperative oganizations, after having sold farm products, to set up reserves of any kind. It might very well be said that the total income of any cooperative organization should be divided among the producers. After all, the personnel of any cooperative organization changes from year to year, some of the members perhaps dying, some moving away and other new members coming into the organization. If these reserves are set up, those who drop out of the organization after having consigned their products to the cooperative for sale will not get a just return for those products consigned to the producers' organization. It seems to me there must be some motive behind it beyond what appears on the surface.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no other motive, as I understand it, except the one mentioned by the hon. member, namely, to give power to the organization to set up a reserve. As the act now reads, section 3 provides:

The minister may, with the approval of the governor in council, by agreement with a selling agency. . . .

Then it goes on to indicate what may be done, but it makes no provision for setting up a reserve. It has been thought wise in some organizations to set up a small reserve to take care of any possible loss that might occur if, say, two short term agreements are entered into in the one year, or if the cooperative decides to carry on into the second year and make a second agreement.

Mr. HOMUTH: It is rather a large reserve, is it not?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no particular amount set.

Mr. HOMUTH: It says "up to."

Mr. SENN: Will there be a limit set to the amount of reserve? Unless the minister has some jurisdiction over the cooperative organization, it might set up a very large reserve. I cannot yet see any reason why a reserve should be set up at all. It seems to me to be establishing the principle of putting this whole cooperative idea on a commercial basis, where it should not be.

Mr. GARDINER: Section 3 of the present act provides that the minister may "by agreement with a selling agency." That is, all these matters are contained in the agreement. Subsection 2 of section 3 of the present act provides:

No payment shall be made to primary producers subsequent to the initial payment unless such subsequent payment is first approved by the governor in council.

There is provision made for covering costs, and this additional provision is being made for setting up reserves. The maximum of these costs and reserves would be set in the agreement.

Mr. SENN: But the agreement provides that a certain amount up to 80 per cent of the average price for the past three years shall be guaranteed by the department or the minister at any time that a cooperative organization wants to organize and carry on. I point out that this is progressive. The average for the last three years may not be the average for the next three years, and if the organization continues to set up reserves from year to year, it will lower the average for the past three years, so that after the reserves have been accumulating for three years the average will be considerably lower. It seems to me, therefore, that it might work out finally to the disadvantage of the primary producer himself to have the average lowered by setting up these reserves.

Mr. GARDINER: When we were discussing the resolution in committee I put on Hansard the details of the different agreements entered into under this legislation, which illustrate the point better than I could do it otherwise. The first of these has to do with honey, and the initial payment is three cents a pound. Then processing, carrying and selling charges-that will be costs now instead of selling charges-were two cents a pound. That was before the reserve was provided for. It was set at two cents a pound right in the agreement. The initial payments and the processing, carrying and selling charges amounted to approximately 55 per cent of the average price during the preceding three years. It has been the desire both of the cooperatives entering into arrangements under this act and of the department to see that very little risk of loss is taken, and for that reason in most instances the liability involved in the initial payment, plus the costs allowed-in this case it will be plus reserves as well-would not exceed the percentage of 80 per cent.

Mr. WRIGHT: Paragraph (iii) of this section provides:

(iii) for an initial payment to primary producers of a percentage, not exceeding eighty per centum, approved by the governor in council on the recommendation of the minister, of the average price paid to producers according to grade and quality.

I think it would be difficult for the minister to determine the average price paid to the farmer according to grade and quality. In the alfalfa area in northern Saskatchewan there are a dozen different buyers buying alfalfa. How is the minister going to arrive at the average price paid to the producer? Why not retain the wording of the original clause and say the wholesale price? That could be obtained much more easily and it would be a higher price to the producer. Why was this change made?

Mr. GARDINER: It will be noted that section 6 of this bill retains that wording, "the average wholesale price", which is the important point my hon. friend raises.

Mr. WRIGHT: Why not retain those words in section 3? Why not say that "the average wholesale price" shall be used?

Mr. GARDINER: This is the same as it was in the original act, which provides by subsection 3 of section 3:

In the event of a difference arising as to the average sale price under an agreement made under this section, the decision of the minister shall be final.

We, of course, examine the records in the bureau of statistics and any other records available with regard to the average price for the three years, and finally determine what that price has been. The final decision rests with the minister after examining all these records.

Mr. WRIGHT: That does not answer my question. Why is the wholesale price not used in this clause?

Mr. GARDINER: The wholesale price would not be the proper term to use here. We are concerned that the producer should have advanced to him, not 80 per cent of what the wholesale price happened to be, but 80 per cent of what the producer himself received during those three years. We are trying to give him an initial payment which will assist him in carrying on until he receives the final payment, and we say that the initial payment should be a certain percentage of the average price that he himself obtained during the preceding three years. That may not be the wholesale price, which is generally interpreted to be the price at which a commodity is turned over to the retailer and sold to the consumer.

Mr. WRIGHT: If the word "wholesale" were left in there, it would mean that the producer would get a guarantee of the highest price for his product.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, he might.

Mr. WRIGHT: Therefore, I think, the word "wholesale" should be used.

Mr. SENN: I assume that the receipts from the different grades in any cooperative organization will be kept separate and distinct from each other, and settlements will be made on that basis. The minister has mentioned two or three times that the decision of the minister will be final. No doubt the minister is too busy to go into all these details himself. I should like to know what machinery has been or will be set up within the department to look into these matters, advise the minister and give him proper information.

Mr. GARDINER: The whole organization connected with the marketing branch of the department is available to deal with matters of this kind; and of course, as the hon. member has suggested, I must rest my decision on the information which they gather for me.

Mr. SENN: Has any particular person or persons been designated in that marketing branch to undertake this work?

Mr. GARDINER: In so far as contact with myself as minister is concerned, Mr. A. M. Shaw, the director, is the person who determines what the recommendations to the minister will be, and I act upon the recommendations.

Mr. SENN: What machinery is there for auditing the books of these different cooperative organizations so that a report may be made to Mr. Shaw to be carried by him to the minister?

Mr. GARDINER: All these companies are compelled, under the arrangements made with them, to have a proper audit by a reputable auditing concern. My information is that an audit of a properly constituted auditing firm is usually accepted. If we have any question about the matter, it would be checked by the government auditors themselves.

Mr. SENN: Who pays for the audit?

Mr. GARDINER: The cooperatives pay for the audit.

Section agreed to.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Payment to selling agency.

Mr. CASGRAIN moved:

That section 3 (1) of the act as amended by clause six of the bill be further amended by clause six of the bill be further amended by adding thereto the following proviso: provided further that the agreement may include a provision that the minister may on such notice as he deems fair and reasonable require that the delivery of an agricultural product to a cooperative association, processor or selling agency shall be discontinued with the result that the minister shall not be liable in respect of any agricultural product delivered in respect of any agricultural product delivered to the cooperative association, processor or selling agency after such requirement.

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister explain that?

Mr. GARDINER: The explanation is the fact that the clause "together with the actual processing, carrying and selling costs" was inadvertently omitted from section 3 (1) of the act, and the Department of Justice were obliged to rule that the agreements were invalid because they did not comply with the act. The fact is that the agreements were valid according to the intention of the act; it was the act itself which was in error. To anticipate possible losses, it might be as regards onions, furs, or any other products of these cooperative organizations, it was thought best to have this provision put in the bill this year in case there might be some payments to be made.

Mr. WRIGHT: With regard to section 6 of the bill, I take it to mean that if a grower delivers a No. 1 grade to a cooperative association, and it is sold at a profit, and a grower delivers a No. 3 grade article to the cooperative and it is sold at a loss, the profit made on the No. 1 grade may be used to make up the loss on the No. 3 grade. Is that correct?

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, my reading of the section would be the very opposite of that. It would be that each one of these different grades will form a separate deal, and if there is a loss in connection with any one of them, we are liable to pay.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is as it should be, but when I was reading the section I took it to mean the contrary.

Mr. GARDINER: Which part is the hon. member reading that meaning into?

Mr. WRIGHT: The latter part:

. . . the amount . . . by which the initial payment . . . exceeds the average wholesale price . . . computed on the amount of the agridelivered; provided that, in determining the average wholesale price of an agricultural product, the minister may . . . require that any excess over the initial payment and costs in the sales account of a particular grade or grades shall be applied against any deficit in the sales account of any other grade or grades of such product.

Mr. GARDINER: The proviso at the end does provide that; that is correct.

Mr. SENN: Then it seems to me that the minister, in his former statement in answer to a question I asked on section 3, must have been in error. I asked him distinctly if the income or proceeds from each grade were to be kept separate and distinct and if people who put in a No. 1 grade, for instance, would be paid on that basis. Now we find under this particular clause that, if there is any loss, if the goods sell for less than the guaranteed price, the person who puts in a No. 1 grade, although it may realize a substantial profit, will be penalized on the lower grades if they happen to make a loss. It seems to me that is an unfortunate situation, and the minister rather misled the committee in making that statement.

Mr. GARDINER: The statement is, I should say, partly correct, but in certain circumstances it might not be. If there is no loss in any of the grades that are provided for, of course they will all be pooled separately and carried right through and the initial payment will be made based on the different grades; then, when the final payments are made, they will all be made, again, on the basis of the grade. But if there should be a loss on one particular grade, and a profit in connection with another grade, under this proviso the minister has the right to determine that the loss in the one grade should be made up from the proceeds of the other grades before a distribution is made.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is entirely wrong, because it penalizes the man who is growing the No. 1 product, in favour of the man who may have a No. 3 product. The different grades should be separate all the way through the pool, so that the man who produces the No. 1 product shall receive what it is sold for; and if there is a loss on the sale of the product of the man who has a No. 3 grade, the department should take the loss, not the man who is growing the No. 1 grade.

Mr. SENN: We should have this matter straightened out in some way. I understand a guarantee is made that a certain percentage of the average price for the past three years will be given by the department. May I ask the minister if the percentage will vary for the different grades? Is it intended that the same percentage will be for the average price of all grades for the past three years, or will there be a guarantee of price for each separate grade?

Mr. GARDINER: The intention will be so to fix the variation as to provide against this situation arising. This bill does not cover wheat. Someone mentioned elevators in connection with it. Wheat is covered in the bill that came back from the senate to-day, but the principle has been fairly well established in the handling of wheat. Wheat has been graded over a long term of years. The board meet at the beginning of the season and determine the spread between the different grades. Sometimes they make mistakes, and in this instance it is possible that the departmental officials or others drawing up agreements with officials of the cooperative might make mistakes. The cooperative themselves may have a wrong idea as to what the spreads will be throughout the year, and at the end of the season it may be necessary to sit down again-or it may be in the middle of the season-and consider the situation, when it might be determined that there was too wide a spread between grades. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) will be familiar with the experience of last year in connection with wheat, and in setting the spread between No. 3 and No. 4 or, say, between No. 1 and No. 4. The spread was set wider this year on the basis of last year's experience, and that has turned out not to have been the proper thing to do. This makes provision whereby the minister may adjust matters towards the end of the season. It will not result in any particular hardship in the sense that in most instances persons will be delivering products of different grades, and where injustice has been done to those who are delivering, say, a higher grade product as compared with a lower, or vice versa, there is a possibility of correcting any mistakes made, although this is not compulsory-the minister "may" do it.

Mr. TUSTIN: That is one of the things about which the minister should be very careful, making it compulsory that every one of these articles is paid for according to grade. For the last number of years we have been spending large sums of money endeavouring to get agricultural producers to grade commodities; we are now reaching the stage where that is beginning to count, and if we go back in this particular case it will do much to disrupt the work already done in the grading of agricultural products.

[Mr. Wright.]

Mr. SENN: I do not think the minister has drawn a good parallel between wheat and these other products. After all, it is the average price over the past three years on which the guarantee is based, regardless of the spread there may have been in that time. That was the point I was trying to raise. If a guarantee of a certain percentage of the average price of grade No. 3 is made, the department should undertake to carry that out, and if a percentage of the average price of No. 1 is guaranteed, the government should be prepared to carry that out also without penalizing the man who is producing No. 1 quality goods by asking him to meet some of the losses sustained in connection with No. 3. However, I am not going to labour that

There is another matter in regard to which I should like to have some information. I refer to the words underlined in line 20 on page 2 of the bill. The minister moved an amendment to the definition of "cooperative association". The word "processor" opens the way again for the very thing he was trying to avoid in the definition of "cooperative association". "Processor" might mean any of the packing companies or any of the milling companies. I do not think the minister intends to guarantee the packing companies or the milling companies of the country that they will be paid a percentage of the initial price. I give this only as an instance. There are a great many processors throughout the dominion who might take advantage of this particular clause, and it would to a great extent nullify the original intention of the act, that only cooperative associations primary producers should enjoy the benefits of the act.

Mr. GARDINER: The original act contained the term "selling agency". We have had communications from quite a number of cooperative organizations that were already set up. They had their own selling agency, their whole organization built up, with the agency as part of it. The act was interpreted last year by legal authorities as meaning that anyone concerned, whether cooperative processing plants, or whatever it might be, entering into an agreement, had to go through the process of setting up a central selling agency; and in order to avoid that, power is given here to enter into an agreement with the one cooperative already set up under provincial legislation. We have not dealt with any cooperative except those that are set up under some form of organization which incorporates them. When we deal with that organization we can make an arrangement directly with that cooperative.

Take a processing plant such as a cheese factory. As I understand, cheese factories in Ontario are largely set up on what is to all intents and purposes a cooperative basis, and processing plants of that kind, one or more of them, could enter into agreements under this particular legislation. Then we have processing plants, such as the Barrie packing plant, which is a farmers' cooperative. We could enter into an agreement with that one plant as it now is; and if under the legislation as it now is, it were thought advisable for the packing plant, which itself may not be organized on a cooperative basis but which may be prepared to enter into an arrangement, to handle all the hogs of certain groups of farmers within a certain area, they might be allowed to make use of their plant for the purpose of processing and marketing the product on a pooling basis. In that event we might be prepared to enter into an agreement. Again, I would call attention to the fact that this legislation only gives us power to enter into agreements, and we enter only into agreements that carry out the spirit of the act as indicated in the defining clause.

Mr. SENN: I am not at all satisfied with the explanation. The minister just stated that it only gives the department power to enter into agreements in accordance with the defining clauses of the act. There is no defining clause of the word "processor" that I can find. It seems to me a dangerous experiment. If there were a packing plant in a locality, the minister suggests they could make an arrangement with a group of farmers to process and sell their product. No doubt that packing plant would be doing other business in goods purchased outright, and it seems to me it would be difficult to keep the records separate. I am afraid that the word "processor" as used there should be defined.

Mr. GARDINER: Paragraph (f) of section 2 of the act defines it.

Mr. SENN: In any event it seems to me a dangerous experiment.

I wanted to ask the minister a question about section 4, not for the sake of criticism, as he understands. The section reads:

(d) "initial payment" means the sum paid, or credited for merchandise delivered. . . .

That would lead me to believe that these cooperative corporations not only may be merchandizing their own product but will be purchasing agents for these same farmers who are members. I have always felt that the farmers should first learn to merchandise their own products successfully before they try to merchandise the production of others.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the intention, but some cooperatives that are operating want to enter into arrangements to follow the practice of furnishing certain supplies to their customers.

Mr. SENN: And the minister intends to allow that to continue. Is there any provision made for determining the value of the goods that are exchanged for the products intended to be sold?

Mr. GARDINER: None other than this, that before entering into an agreement with a company of that kind the department would satisfy itself that these producers are satisfied with the treatment they have received from that organization.

Mr. SENN: Is any provision made whereby there will be no compulsion exercised, that is, that a member of the organization delivering, say, a bunch of hogs or a quantity of honey would not be compelled to take goods in exchange? It seems to me it would be a dangerous thing for the government to guarantee prices under any such conditions.

Mr. GARDINER: I cannot conceive of an agreement being entered into where there was any complaint whatsoever by producers as to a clause of this kind. The provision for accepting credit would probably not be put in unless producers desired to have it that way.

Mr. SENN: If it were voluntary, there would be no objection.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Would the minister explain the term "wholesale"? The committee will notice that prior to this time the initial price was 80 per cent of the average sale price. Under this amendment it will be 80 per cent of the average price to the producer. That is, the payment will be made on the basis of the difference between the wholesale price and what the cooperative association has paid to the producer. I imagine the minister means by the wholesale price the price the association receives when it sells the producer's product.

Mr. GARDINER: That is right.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): There is no provision in section 2 for a definition of "wholesale price", although I notice the minister is to have power to determine what the wholesale price is. Would it be better to have a definition of "wholesale price" and say it is the price that the cooperative association will receive for the products of which it disposes?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think it would be possible to define the wholesale price for all the different products that might be dealt with. The act does, as suggested by the hon. [Mr. Senn.] member, give to the minister, which means on the recommendation of the officals of the department, the power to determine what the wholesale price is for any product dealt with. I think that is about as far as we could go.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): It will be equally difficult to determine what the average price paid to the producer will be. When we come to the next section, the minister might give some idea how that will be determined.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know whether the hon. member was in his seat a few minutes ago when I stated the method that has always been followed and that will have to be followed in determining the price the producer obtains. We have our bureau of statistics in Ottawa which is furnishing statistics all the time indicating what producers do receive for different types of products; that is where we would probably go for our information. In other cases where there is not a record here, there is likely to be a provincial record dealing with a product which might be produced entirely in one province. We would go to whatever government record we could find, whether federal, provincial or municipal, in connection with such a product.

Our main reason for retaining the price received by the consumer in the clause in that other section is twofold. In the first place we are paying the producer an initial advance as against the price he is eventually to receive. For that reason we think that is the proper basis to take when we are setting the initial payment to the producer. Then there is the further reason, that it renders the liability of the government less, which we always take care of in legislation of this kind.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I think the same argument would apply when it comes to determining the wholesale price. I suppose that in few instances would the wholesale price be less than the initial price. But there will be a problem of administration. If, instead of the wholesale price, the minister could set up the average price which the cooperative associations have received, and the payment if necessary that had to be paid would be the difference between that average price and the initial price.

Mr. GARDINER: The wholesale price stated here is determined after the facts; it is a matter of record in the books. We have access to those books, the actual wholesale price will appear in the books, and that is what will be taken.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8—Minister may prescribe with approval of governor in council.

Mr. GARDINER: There is an amendment to that.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I move:

That clause 8 of the bill be amended by striking out the words "the minister may make regulations prescribing," in the fifteenth line, and substituting therefor the words "the minister may prescribe".

Mr GARDINER: As originally drafted, the bill set out that the minister, with the approval of the governor in council, might make regulations in certain cases, set out under paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g). Some of those obviously were not matters of regulation; they were matters in which the minister might prescribe. Where the act states that with respect to any agreement under it the minister may with the approval of the governor in council prescribe, it sets out those cases in which it requires the approval of the governor in council. Under the act as we have it drafted, the minister may make regulations prescribing; but where the approval of the governor in council is not required, it is not felt necessary to say that the minister may prescribe only by regulations. He may prescribe by regulations, or he may prescribe without regulations.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I move that the section be further amended by striking out paragraph (d) of subsection 2.

Mr. GARDINER: That gives the minister the same power which was given previously to the minister with the consent of council; the power remains with the consent of the governor in council.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10—Payment of liabilities under the agreement.

Mr. SENN: Is there any provision for the winding up of the year? Is there any provision for surpluses that may accumulate; and what will be done in case there is a surplus at the close of any year? Will settlement be made only when everything is disposed of?

Mr. GARDINER: That is taken care of in the agreement which is entered into. In some instances the agreements are not for the full year. Some of the agreements entered into this year already have been paid out, final payments having been made. Mr. SENN: Supposing at the end of the term of the agreement there is a surplus on hand. What disposition will be made of that, or is there any provision for looking after a matter of that kind?

Mr. GARDINER: There is not supposed to be any surplus unless it is set up in the form of a reserve, as provided for earlier in this amending legislation. The whole amount obtained for the product is supposed to be paid out as a final payment.

Mr. SENN: Did I understand the minister to say that if any surplus is left over at the end of the agreement period, it will constitute the reserve that was provided for?

Mr. GARDINER: No, but there will be nothing carried from one year into another unless it is under the provision for a reserve. The end of the agreement will come at some particular time, and any of the product still on hand will be sold out and payment made to the individual producers. That is, I would not anticipate that this product would be carried into a further pool, but if it were, it would be covered by the second agreement.

Mr. SENN: Provision is made that no final payment can be made until the minister consents. Would the minister then say that if a surplus is carried over into the next year, no final payment can be made until that surplus is disposed of?

Mr. GARDINER: It might work out in that way. It would depend on what gave the best protection to the individual producers involved in the agreement. There is just the possibility that some products which may be sold on option are disposed of in that way, and the full value which the producer can obtain will be realized on the day the year winds up. If all the money can be obtained it can be distributed, but if the surplus product is to be carried for perhaps a month beyond the end of the year, I do not imagine that you could make a final payment until the product was all sold.

Mr. SENN: I do not want to carry on the discussion too long, but is there any provision for bad debts? Is there any provision for promissory notes which may not be due at the time of the final disposition? It seems to me many of these matters might interfere with the final payment, and I believe the situation should be clarified.

Mr. GARDINER: That would all be provided for in the agreement and in the audit. The minister would not give consent to final payment unless all those matters were cleaned up. That is the very reason why it is left with the minister to determine finally when that payment should be made.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I move that section 10 of the act, as contained in section 10 of this bill, be deleted.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the provision that the act comes into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation.

Mr. HOMUTH: Will it come into force on receiving royal assent?

Mr. GARDINER: The act is in force now.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, this morning while having a word with my hon, friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) I mentioned to him that, the situation in Europe being what it is at the moment, I should like to have my colleagues meet me this evening. If hon, members would not object, therefore, I would move that we now adjourn. We have had a strenuous week; I have no doubt that hon, members feel the intense anxiety of the moment, and probably they will be agreeable to adjourning now.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 6 p.m.

Monday, June 17, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

THE KING'S BIRTHDAY

PERSONAL MESSAGE OF THANKS FROM HIS MAJESTY FOR RESOLUTION OF JUNE 13

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following personal message from the king:

Buckingham Palace

Members of the House of Commons of Canada:

I am greatly touched by the terms of the resolution adopted yesterday by the members of the Houses of Parliament of Canada on the occasion of the official celebration of my birthday. Twelve months ago I left Canada convinced from my own personal experience that nowhere in the world were justice and freedom more truly appreciated, and neither in peace nor in war would the people of Canada in peace nor in war would the people of Canada ever suffer themselves to be deprived of their institutions grounded on those ideals. The dire events of the year that has passed have confirmed that conviction a hundredfold. Canada from the first elegally understand the from the first clearly understood the true import of this terrible struggle, and the immense issues that hang upon its outcome. She hesitated not at all, and the resolution with which she has thrown herself heart and soul into the conflict has been, I can assure you, an immeasurable strength to me and to all in the old world.

George R.I.

EUROPEAN WAR

STATEMENT AS TO RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN FRANCE

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister if he has anything to say to the house and the country at this time with respect to the situation on the other side, and if not to-day, when will he be in a position to make a statement?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend I would say that hon. members are of course aware of the extreme gravity of the situation in Europe. It is not yet possible to indicate the precise situation in France. Members know that following the break through at various points on the French front and penetration of the Maginot line the French army has not thus far been able to reorganize effective resistance; that upon the resignation of Premier Reynaud, a new cabinet was formed under Marshal Petain, and that it is seeking an armistice with the enemy. While not minimizing the seriousness of the blow to the cause of the allies, I can say with confidence that the fate of France will strengthen rather than weaken Canada's determination to intensify her war effort in the direction of increased measures of home defence, the necessity for which will be now apparent, and in the direction of further assistance to the United Kingdom.

It is my intention to-morrow to give the house all available information. I will, at the same time, make a statement as to the measures which have been adopted and which it is proposed to adopt to meet the emergent

Hon. members may have noticed that it has been announced that the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom will make an important statement to-morrow on the European situation. That statement will be made I assume before this house meets to-morrow afternoon. It is, I think, preferable that, in a matter of so grave importance as is the present situation, a statement concerning it as a whole should come from the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom before an attempt is made by the leader of the government in our house to appraise it at its full significance.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

I might add a word about the Canadian troops overseas. It is now possible for me to inform the house that, in conformity with the plans of the allied high command, preparations were made early this month for the early participation in action in France of the first division of the Canadian active service corps. Last week some of our troops were actually landed in France. The changed circumstances rendered their withdrawal imperative, and over the week-end effective steps were initiated to that end.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE OF PERSONNEL

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house has substituted the name of Mr. Dupuis for that of Mr. Cloutier to act on the part of the House of Commons as a member of the joint committee of both houses on printing.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS-SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 32, to incorporate Pool Insurance—Mr. McNiven.

Bill No. 33, to incorporate The Stanstead & Sherbrooke Insurance Company—Mr. Gingues.

Bill No. 36 for the relief of Elizabeth Pauline Tingley Kidd—Mr. Hazen.

Bill No. 37 for the relief of Nancy Patricia Lytle Rowat—Mr. Hill.

Bill No. 38 for the relief of Henry Carl Mayhew—Mr. McIlraith.

Bill No. 39 for the relief of Laura Lucrezia Green Stinson—Mr. McIlraith.

Bill No. 40 for the relief of Irene Nellie Kon Simpson—Mr. Hill.

OTTAWA ELECTRIC COMPANY AND OTTAWA GAS COMPANY

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Ottawa West) moved the first reading of Bill No. 34 (from the senate) respecting The Ottawa Electric Company and the Ottawa Gas Company.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I am not quite sure what the proper practice is with respect to the first reading of private bills which have been initiated in the senate. But it has occurred to me that perhaps in some cases, at all events, some brief explanation should be given by the sponsor, and I would invite the hon. junior member for Ottawa (Mr. McIlraith) to be good enough to do that on this occasion.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I think it is the hon. member's right to ask for it.

Mr. McILRAITH: The Ottawa Electric Company is a company incorporated by act of parliament, selling and distributing electricity in the city of Ottawa. The Ottawa Gas Company is a company incorporated by act of parliament, selling and distributing gas in the city of Ottawa. The Ottawa Light, Heat and Power Company is a company incorporated by letters patent, and is the parent company of the two previously mentioned companies—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): A holding company?

Mr. McILRAITH: —holding all the stock except the qualifying shares for the directors. The act enables the two companies, the electric company and the gas company, to sell their assets to the parent company, the parent company assuming all obligations and undertakings. In other words, the subsidiary companies will be permitted to wind up their business, after having sold their assets to the parent company, and having transferred their undertakings to the parent company; it will save the consequent duplication of services and returns.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DETROIT AND WINDSOR SUBWAY COMPANY

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Wood Mountain—for Mr. Martin) moved the first reading of Bill No. 35 (from the senate) respecting the Detroit and Windsor Subway Company.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): May we have an explanation?

Mr. DONNELLY: This bill has been already passed by the senate. All it does is to change the non-par stock to par stock.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BANK OF CANADA AND BANK OF INTERNATIONAL SETTLEMENTS

Mr. JAQUES:

Has the Bank of Canada any relations with the Bank of International Settlements, and, if so, what are they?

Mr. RALSTON: The Bank of Canada has no relationship with the Bank for International Settlements of the character authorized in section 22, subsection (b) of the Bank of Canada Act. Its relationship, if any, is therefore limited to business of the character authorized in section 21, subsection (1) (n) of the act.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

ALLEVIATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND AGRICUL-TURAL DISTRESS—UNDERTAKINGS IN GENERAL INTEREST AND FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES

The house resumed from Thursday, June 13, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. McLarty—Mr. Fournier (Hull) in the chair:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide assistance in the alleviation of unemployment and agricultural distress out of moneys appropriated by parliament, and for such purpose to supplement the measures taken by the provinces towards providing assistance to those in need, establishing unemployed persons in employment and training and fitting suitable persons for productive occupation, and also to provide financial assistance to the provinces by way of loan, advance or guarantees out of unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund, and for the appointment of necessary officers, clerks and employees.

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): When this matter was under discussion the other evening I was asking a question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty). I was drawing to his attention the fact that all over the province of Saskatchewan relief recipients were being informed by municipal officers that on instructions from the government of Saskatchewan it was necessary to reduce relief grants owing to information having been received from Ottawa to the effect that relief grants to the provinces would be reduced. Whatever the technicalities may be, the fact remains that relief grants have been reduced. I believe almost all hon members from Saskatchewan will bear me out in that statement. Relief grants have been cut.

Mr. McLARTY: I am sure my hon. friend does not suggest that we have cut, or placed on any different basis, the percentage of any grants we are making to the provinces.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I will come to that in a moment. I am pointing out first that the relief grants have been cut, that the relief recipients have had cuts in May varying from 20 to 331 per cent. It has been intimated to them that in June the cuts will be even larger. It is stated again and again that the reason for these reductions is that the grant to the province from the federal government will be reduced. Has any information been given by the federal government to the province of Saskatchewan that would warrant these reductions? Has anything been said; has there been any correspondence or intimation otherwise given that would lead the provincial government to believe that the federal government has in mind a reduction of this grant?

Mr. McLARTY: I hope to have an opportunity to make a statement in the course of the debate this afternoon. I wonder if it would be satisfactory to the hon, member for Weyburn if I dealt with the matter at that time

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Later this afternoon?

Mr. McLARTY: I hope so, if I get the opportunity.

Mr. KARL K. HOMUTH (Waterloo South): I had hoped that before this debate closed-because when the minister gets up to speak it means the closing of the debate-we should get some statement from him. He has had suggestions from all corners of the house as to what hon, members in all parties think should be done in regard to unemployment and farm relief. The hon, member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) suggested that relief should not be given unless some work were done in return. The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Graham), suggested that there are in Saskatchewan many unemployed mechanics who might be moved into the industrial sections of the country and employed in industry. A great number of suggestions have been made. This resolution has been discussed for hours and hours. Every hon, member in this committee feels that if we have unemployment and farm distress these people should be looked after, but we feel also that at a time like this we should be discussing not so much the question of relief as the question of getting people to work. In view of the crisis we are facing to-day, there should not be an unemployed man in the Dominion of Canada.

The bill is ready and when this resolution carries it will be introduced—undoubtedly the same old bill. Are we to travel again the same old trail that we have been travelling for years, or are we going to blaze a new trail, with new ideas, in the light of the knowledge of what has happened in the past? Has the minister any new suggestions as to what should be done? His should be the busiest department of this government, giving leadership from one end of this country to the other, but so far it has not done so.

I am saying this not in a spirit of criticism but because I know something of conditions in both the industrial and the rural areas of this country. The Prime Minister has a tremendous task. He has a big job to do. He cannot give leadership in every department of the government, but I do not hesitate to say that some of the members of his cabinet are not giving the leadership they ought to be giving at a time like this. The people look to the members of the cabinet for leadership in a great many of these matters. Is there to be a different policy from that which has been followed in the past? If the bill is the same, will the administration be any different, or just what will be the policy?

I feel that throughout this crisis, particularly, there has not been the cooperation between the various departments of government that there should have been. There has not been the coordination of effort that is necessary in peace time and particularly necessary in a time of war. For instance, here is the Minister of Trade and Commerce with hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat he does not know what to do with; yet the Minister of Agriculture and the rest of the cabinet permitted the importation of nearly 50,000,000 pounds of pork. What consumption of grain would be represented in the production of that quantity of pork? How much United States pork was used to feed our own armies while we were putting pork in cold storage in this country? Every time we buy a dollar's worth of luxuries in the United States we are sending money to that country that we should keep here for the purchase of war materials and for other war purposes. We should conserve every possible United States dollar.

It is necessary that these things be done, to enable us to put forward our maximum war effort and also to alleviate some of the distress that exists in this country. I believe, and I think others hold the same view, that the only way we can properly handle the labour situation in Canada is to have national registration. The Minister of Labour, of all the members of the government, ought to be pressing for national registration. We are recruiting men from all over the country. These men are not being asked what they were doing or what job they had. The mechanics who are sorely needed in our industry to-day, and who will be needed much more in the next few months, are enlisting in the army when as a matter of fact they would be far more valuable in industry. Does the minister know whether or not mechanics are enlisting? If he does not know he should. If he does not know is it because he does not care? Everything we do must be associated with our war effort. With a national registration we would know where to place to the best advantage the men who sign up for service. Do not be surprised if in a short time industry in this country is placed directly under the control of the government, together with everyone engaged in industry. Let us prepare for that to-day, not next week or next month or the month after that.

These things must be done. Much as I dislike the word I must say there has been too much complacency in connection with our war effort. I doubt if we are taking the measures or using the care required in this situation. There has been no organization of industry in Canada. Industry has not been given the opportunity of employing people and producing the things that will be of such vital importance before many weeks have gone by. Within the next few weeks tens of thousands of school children from fourteen to twenty years of age will begin their summer What are we going to do with them? They are all willing to do something if leadership is given. The Red Cross will require ten times or perhaps fifty times the supplies that they require to-day. Why cannot these girls coming out of school be organized under some leadership emanating from this government in order that they may play the part they want to play? Thousands of teachers are going to be free for the next two and a half months. In Ontario alone there are some six or eight thousand teachers. I spoke to a number of them over the weekend and asked, "Will you be willing to do something during your holidays?" They all replied that they would be only too glad to do something. They are trained to handle and organize children. Let us take advantage of their services; let us make use of these tremendous resources which as yet we have not touched. Let these school girls go out and do the work they should be doing so that we may be ready when we need bandages and the other things supplied by the Red Cross. Year after year during the depression we saw tons of fruit and vegetables rotting in the fields and on the trees, while at the same time we were bringing into this country millions of dollars' worth of fruits and vegetables, particularly citrus fruits. Why cannot the school boys from fourteen to twenty years of age be organized to go out on our farms and see that not one bit of food is wasted this year? We do not know how many refugees we may have to feed in this country, or to what extent we may have to help feed the people overseas.

I feel that we are losing an opportunity, that we are wasting time from day to day. We are not doing the things that ought to be done. The people have not become jittery because of the war news, bad though it may be. The trouble is that they stand helplessly by feeling that they are not being given an opportunity to help. They would feel much better if, under some leadership, they could be given a job to do, no matter how menial or how technical it might be. We can find men and women in this country able to do anything that requires to be done in Canada. They want leadership; they want to do their part. We speak of unemployables. I have checked over the list of unemployables in my district, and I say that eighty per cent of them could do something to further our war effort. Somewhere in industry they could relieve some one who might do a better job

I plead with the minister to give this leadership, because I know the temper of the people of this country; I know how anxious they are to do something, and I know how necessary it is going to be that we do these things. Let us get off the old trail; let us blaze a new trail and give some leadership so that the men and women of Canada may be able to do something worth while not only in the defence of Canada but also in the safeguarding of this empire. They want to do it. Give them the leadership, and they are prepared to do it. I hope the minister will be able to tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada that he has some new ideas and that he is going to do things differently from the way they have been done in the past. I am not blaming him about the past. The past is the past. We have got to look now to the future, and I hope the minister will be able to show us some way in which we may take advantage of the services of every man, woman and child in Canada who is fit to do something worth while in this war effort.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Chairman, this is my maiden speech in the House of Commons, and the occasion is unique in that I believe it is the first day hon. members have not read their speeches. I am not going to read mine, either; and if I am speaking out of turn it is because I do not want to fall into the practice of my Ontario friends who read every word they say.

I think I know something about unemployment. I am the reeve of a municipality in British Columbia, and I know something about the troubles of the unemployed. I am hoping the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty) the representative of the government in connection with the resolution now under consideration—a government, by the way, which I have supported and intend to support—will pay a slight bit of attention to what I have to say.

Possibly there are other hon. members in the house who happen to be reeves of municipalities, and they will understand my point of view when I speak as a reeve from British Columbia. I do know something about conditions prevailing in that province. I did not want to make a speech, and I am quite well aware of the fact that if all I wanted was to be elected four years from now I might have read a somewhat different speech, like hon. members from Ontario. But I am not worrying about being elected four years from now. My particular concern is what is going to happen now, to-morrow or the next day.

I am not the least bit worried about the observations of some of my hon. friends. I come from a province in which activities in war industries—I speak only of British Columbia—have not made the least impression on our relief rolls.

In British Columbia we have been proud to receive people from Saskatchewan who were driven out of the burned-out areas. We realize that these people had to leave the areas in which they had been living. We realize that they had to come into our district. We know that they had to be looked after, and that school and hospital accommodation had to be provided for them. Relief had to be handed out to them. As a supporter of this government—and I am proud to be a supporter of the government—I say that the urgency of relief conditions in Canada, and particularly in British Columbia, has not yet been realized. I make that statement sincerely, because I happen to know about relief conditions in British Columbia. I know that eighty per cent of the farms in British Columbia are heavily mortgaged. I happen to know that half the municipalities of that province are on the verge of bankruptcy. But apparently this government does not yet realize these facts. It must realize them sooner or later. It must realize that the old policy of sound money is not sufficient. When I say that I admit frankly that I know nothing about sound money. I know nothing about finance. I come from a dairy farm, and I ask any hon. member from Ontario or Quebec, how can a dairy farmer, who never had any money, know anything about finance?

If the government thinks it can continue with the old policy of sound finance and sound money, then I say the government has to wake up to the fact that there is a war on, that Hitler has already conquered France, and God knows what he will conquer next if we do not wake up to the fact that we are in danger.

Mr. MacNICOL: He won't conquer England, anyway.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have been a reeve in a municipality of British Columbia for the last ten years, and I believe I know what I am talking about. I say that we cannot hope to continue in western Canada, and particularly in British Columbia, unless we have an adjustment of taxation. The only source of adjustment we can have is with the dominion government, and I trust that the government will take that point into consideration.

I am a new member, and I may be speaking out of order, but all hon. members have spoken out of order long before now; they have been reading speeches somebody else wrote for them. Nobody wrote mine.

The farmers of the constituency of Fraser Valley, and those in other parts of British Columbia are in a similar position, are selling either at or below the cost of production. They have been doing that for the last eight years, and it is a condition which cannot be continued. A few days ago the estimates for the Department of Agriculture were before a committee of the house. I am sorry to say that only twenty-seven members of the party supporting the administration—I counted them—were present when the estimates for that Department were up for discussion.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Shame!

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Shame!

Mr. STIRLING: Shame!

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Chairman, we will not lose the war, but, win, lose or draw, Canada must be and always will be an exporting nation. Despite that fact, only twenty-seven members of the party to which I have the privilege of belonging were present when the estimates for the Department of Agriculture were before the committee. I was ashamed of my party and of the opposition, and I want to speak freely.

I know industrial Ontario. I did not intend to rise in my place and make a speech, but I have received letters of criticism from my constituency. I am going to take hon, members into my confidence because I have never been accused, like the leader of the opposition, of having nothing to say. In my own riding I have been accused of having too much to say. I joined the army on August 9, 1914, and went to the last war. When I returned I thought that as a returned soldier I could contribute something to the future of Canada, and as a farmer from a farming constituency I still believe that I have a contribution to make. I came back to Ottawa believing honestly that my contribution would be less if I talked too much than if I kept quiet. But then I began to discover that some hon. members wanted to talk; they wanted to read speeches into Hansard so that their constituents might see them.

I want to be elected four years from now, but I am prepared to go back to my constituency and say to my people, "If I cannot contribute something to the welfare of Canada, and in particular to the welfare of the people in the constituency of Fraser Valley, I would prefer to be left at home." I believe that in this house there have been too many cases of the pot calling the kettle black.

My experience as the reeve of a municipality has shown me much that may not have been disclosed to other people. I know that in municipalities throughout that province there are hungry women and children, yet we are given the old poppycock that we cannot find money. Of course we can have $700,000,000 to carry on a war; I believe we could find $1,700,000,000, and must do so, if necessary, to win the war. But hon members are not going to get away with it very long if they accept the old story about sound money, and the story that we cannot have money to put men and women to work, although there seems to be plenty of it to fight a war.

In British Columbia ten months ago they put boys into Okalla, a prison in our province, because they could not find work. I do not want to criticize my party, the government or anybody else, but I do want to contribute to winning this war. I ask the powers that be, what will be the good of sound money if we lose the war? Let us get on with the war and win it, and let us have less of this poppycock on each side of the house from hon. members trying to get on Hansard. Let us make a real record that we can look back on with pride four or five years from now.

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Victoria, B.C.): I realize that at the moment the most precious thing we have is time, and I feel I should apologize for rising to say anything on this resolution. I would apologize not to the members of this committee but to the men who are fighting our battles for us in other places and under much more difficult circumstances. Nevertheless the unemployment problem in this country is second only to the fighting in which we are now engaged; unemployment in Canada does affect those who are fighting our battles overseas and will probably affect them when they return. On that ground, and on that ground alone, are we justified in debating this resolution to the extent we have done so far.

I congratulate the government upon the efforts they made last year towards the relief of unemployment, or at least upon establishing a basis from which unemployment might be to some extent remedied. I am supporting the resolution because I believe the lack of definiteness in it is really its strength; it gives us scope to meet any emergency that may arise, and I am sure all hon. members will agree that in these days we are likely at any time to be confronted by emergencies.

I have referred to the foundation upon which the government based its unemployment relief. The youth training plan, for example, has been of great benefit to us, but it has not gone far enough. I suggest to the minister that this policy, together with some others that I shall mention, be continued. I do not know of anything that is more important to-day than the proper training of youth to fit them to take employment in Canada. I was surprised to hear the hon, member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Claxton) say in his address the other day that only about one hundred students had graduated from the technical school in Montreal. I am sure you could number in the thousands those who have graduated from the universities and colleges of that same city. These figures indicate to us the necessity of training men to use their hands so that they will be fit to take employment in the shops, in the industries and on the farms. It indicates also that the numbers qualified for this kind of work are away out of balance with the numbers of men trained in the classics and in the professions. Therefore I think this work of youth training should be carried on.

In my first speech in this house I suggested that young men who are unable to find suitable employment after leaving school might be given the opportunity of going into the army, the navy or the air force, or to farm training schools which might be established throughout Canada. Had that plan been adopted we would not be as short of trained mechanics as we are to-day to do the jobs that are needed to be done in Canada at this time, nor would we be hampered in our agricultural efforts for lack of trained and experienced men. But it is never too late to start, although valuable time may have been lost, and if our young men were trained in vocational work, in the army, the navy or the air force, and underwent the discipline they would get in those forces, provided enrolment was on a voluntary basis, the results would be beneficial to the youths themselves and ultimately to Canada as a whole.

May I suggest to the minister a plan that will help to some extent at least. Several afternoons I sat in recruiting offices in my own city and watched the boys come in to enlist. I found they had the necessary qualifications to pass the sergeant at the desk, but when they went up for examination by the doctor many of them were turned down as medically unfit—for the simple reason that during the past few years they had not had proper food or proper training, and most of them had had practically no work to do. Boys six feet and over, weighing 135 pounds, were turned down. I suggest to the minister that these boys be put in a camp where they would be under proper supervision, where they would be given exercise and work to do, and where above all they would be given adequate food so that they might be brought back to good physical condition. They might be given say twenty-five cents a day. If they are not made fit for the army, they will at least have received training and nourishment to enable them to take their part in industry and relieve others for the great task that is before us in this war.

There is another plan which the government followed and which I think should be continued. The government has spent money on mining trails opening up large territories and developing new wealth for this country.

I hope the home improvement plan and the national housing scheme will also be continued. These two plans have created work for men in the bush and in almost every industry in every part of Canada, and in addition they have contributed greatly to our home life, which is after all the cornerstone of this nation. The housing scheme fund has grown rapidly and has now reached the stage where it is practically a revolving loan requiring very little expenditure to carry it on. Let us hope that the minister will urge upon the Minister of Finance that this scheme be kept alive. I believe that it could be continued almost indefinitely to the great advantage of Canada. May I suggest also how the scheme might be extended?

It has often been stated in the house that Canada is an exporting country. There is only one way that we can avoid being an exporting country,-and we have not arrived at that stage yet,-namely, to bring in enough people from the old land who now stand in danger of being bombed to death, to eat our surplus wheat and fruit, to live in houses built with our surplus lumber, and to occupy our plains and our hills for the benefit of Canada and the perpetuation of the British At the moment, however, we must empire. regard Canada as it is to-day and face conditions as we see them at the present time. For years practically all the material we have sold to foreign countries has been transported in ships carrying foreign flags. There is one company with offices in Vancouver which has as many as eighty vessels under charter at one time, all of them flying foreign flags. We spend large sums of money each year for services of this nature. Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland built up large mercantile fleets during the last war, and the result of their operation was that the Scandinavian countries changed their standing from that of debtor to that of creditor nations.

We Canadians are largely responsible for that condition, because our lumber and wheat and manufactures have been carried very largely in their boats. I think this is the time when we might ask the government to build at least fifty merchant ships of approximately 10,000 tons each at a cost of about fifty million dollars. I would not suggest that we repeat the mistake we made during the last war, when the ships were operated by the government. But these ships could be, in my opinion, chartered to private concerns, and the money received from them would make the expenditure on the mercantile marine as much of a perpetual and revolving loan as is our national housing scheme. I am told that before the war, if not now, chartering ships cost Canada a million dollars a day. In asking the government to set aside about fifty million dollars to build these boats, I maintain that the result will be not only to increase our business, but to lay the cornerstone of a Canadian merchant marine. Our young men will be employed in building the ships in Canada and in manning them after they are built, so that our expenditures will be confined to our own people.

I do not know whether it is customary in this house to tell stories, but I am going to tell one to illustrate the point I am making, or rather to differentiate a little from the previous speaker. A darky was going down a street in Detroit. He was fairly well-dressed, at least his clothes looked pressed and clean. A friend of his came along and said, "Rastus, that's a nice suit of clothes." Rastus said, "Yes, they are nice clothes. It is very funny about them. The wool in these clothes was grown in Australia. It was brought over the Pacific and across Canada and taken to England, where it was made into cloth. The cloth went to Boston, and from Boston to my tailor in Chicago, who made this suit of clothes. The clothes are pretty well worn out; but the funny part of it all is, all them guys has made a living off it and I haven't paid for the suit yet." Well, we can build our boats in somewhat the same way, but I believe the boats will eventually pay for themselves.

I hope the minister will look carefully into the law relating to restraint of trade, something which in my opinion never accomplished and never can accomplish the purpose for which it was intended. Instead of protecting the public it is doing the exact opposite. I would ask the minister to find out how many companies in Canada were manufacturing, how many men they were employing, and what was the amount of their capital at the time the act came into force, and also what are the comparable figures at the present time. He will find, I believe, that in all these respects there has been a great shrinkage. As a result we have a large concentration of industry in one or two places, but very few industries scattered through other areas of Canada. From my experience in industry, things work this way. An ambitious young fellow will collect sufficient cash to start in a small way in an industry, and will put his merchandise on the market at the prevailing price, but the representative of a large industry will come along and say, "We do not wish to be disturbed. Our price on our product is now twenty per cent lower than it was." If that is not suffi-cient for the purpose, it will be reduced twenty-five or thirty per cent. Eventually the small man's enterprise is swallowed up by the big one; he has to capitulate and get out of the market. That sort of thing is going on the whole time. Its effect is not to protect the consumer but to discourage miscellaneous manufacture throughout Canada. This is not the place, nor do I wish to take the time to do more than make a reference to this matter. At some later time I shall hope to say more about it. But, as one who knows something about the making of at least some products, I hold that the condition to which I refer is a decided detriment to the small man who is trying to get into the manufacturing business; it tends to curtail employment or confine it to one or two districts, with the result that unemployment is likewise concentrated, and our slums are created.

Just one other thought in connection with industry. It seems to me that our great cities are altogether too grasping for their own good in trying to attract industries to their own localities. There is nothing to hinder these industries from scattering to the full extent of the railroad facilities which now span Canada from coast to coast. Factories could be erected out in the open where there is lots of room for men to work, on three or four or five acre plots, instead of twenty-five foot lots. Large industries might be encouraged to move into larger quarters, to the benefit of their employees, and, I believe, of industry as well.

Let me close with this thought, which is also a hope. I trust that from now on the Minister of Labour will have his task greatly enlarged. I should like to see millions of our British children coming to Canada right away. I know that such a scheme would involve some hardship, and some obligations, but let us not stop to find out the ways and means of financing it. Let us do it. Be human first, and in being so perpetuate the British empire.

Mr. J. K. BLAIR (Wellington North): I have enjoyed listening to my hon. friend (Mr. Mayhew). The urbanizing of our industries has been accomplished in many ways. They centralize too much. In the larger cities the companies have special privileges from the railways and the rates they enjoy are much lower than those to the smaller towns and villages, but the greatest factor in the urbanizing of the industries is the Patent Act. The former member for St. Lawrence-St. George, Mr. Cahan, has left me extremely indebted to him. Although he was a bitter Conservative I did want to see him returned to the house because one service he rendered the country was the speech he made in connection with that act. A former Liberal member, Mr. Charles Bothwell, also discussed that act. If you wish to do anything for agriculture, then I suggest that you should lift the burden of that act off the industry. If you could relieve farm implements from the burden of the Patent Act it would be a godsend to the farmers of Canada. [Mr. Mayhew.]

Western farmers have talked until I am tired of listening to them. They have maintained that the reduction in the price of farm implements could be brought about by a reduction in tariffs, but they seem to forget that our companies are simply the subsidiaries of United States concerns and the thing is all concocted. We hear members of the Conservative party talking about the seriousness of trade with the United States, but in what way would it help us if we cut off that trade? I do not blame those members who have come here recently. The hon, member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) cannot blamed, because he has not had the experience of old Conservatives who served under the Bennett government when they pretty nearly wrecked the country financially by cutting off imports. Surely they ought to see the folly of that old idea of no truck or trade with the Yankees.

Mr. MacNICOL: We are fighting a war now.

Mr. BLAIR: I know, and the way to fight a war if you are not a soldier is to attend to your duty at home. Your business is to do the duty that lies in your path. We must not cut off our trade, and if anyone says anything about trade with the United States at this particular time he is extremely indiscreet and foolish. The friendlier we are with the United States to-day the better it will be for us. I am a true Britisher, every drop of blood in me is British, and I have the instincts and spirit of the British; they are as strong in me as in any man in this house. Indeed, if it were not for my age I would be in this war. But while I am a Britisher I suggest that it behooves us to remain friendly with the United States.

I was discussing the Patent Act, and I suggested that it would be a great relief to the farmers if that burden were removed from agriculture. Western farmers, it seems to me, have two fundamental ideas; the first is that there should be a great reduction in taxation and the second is that there should be a great increase in relief. But these two ideas are irreconcilable. Who will fill in the gap if there is a great reduction in taxation and at the same time an increase in relief? They look at us, however, and suggest that this is the place where the Ontario farmers can step in. They can fill in the gap. Well, the Ontario farmer is tired of listening to that sort of speech, and I say to western farmers, "The time has come when, if you cannot live in the west, you had better get out. If you are dried out year after year, get out and go somewhere where you can live."

An hon. MEMBER: Go where?

Mr. BLAIR: The people are starved out year after year; well, they cannot get along there. We have some of them in our country. There is often necessity for a little introspection when you get these conditions. We are not in a position to do too much hoeing and gardening for the other fellow. In my constituency the farmers are reduced to such a state that they feel now that the burden of others should not be placed upon them. They are perfectly willing to carry their own burdens and would be ashamed to ask for relief or help in any way, and they resent too much charity being given to the other fellow. They deeply resent the urbanizing of industry. In our constituency we are trying to set up a few factories in different parts, but what happens? We try making binders in a place like Orangeville and the representative of some large factory in Toronto comes along and stops us because of the Patent Act. We have tried our enterprise in a dozen different ways recently but there is always some inspector, usually a lawyer, who comes and wants to see what we are making. We could not make a wheelbarrow in the county without an inspector coming to see what we are doing.

The sooner the Patent Act is abolished the better. I do not believe in fires, but I do wish there were a good fire in the Patent office in Ottawa. There are thousands of patents shoved away in pigeon holes-patents that were never intended to be used. If my friend who represents one of these companies were present I would name some of them, but owing to his absence I will not do so. But there are thousands of patents stuck in pigeon holes never intended to be used. We want someone to go there and pull them out. What are they there for? Simply to block industry. That is their sole purpose. One of the greatest disgraces in Canada was the Copyright Act. Why, at concerts we could not play tunes that our grandfathers played without paying a tariff to the company. We were fortunate in having a blind man to lead us. He told the truth about the matter. The Copyright Act is one of the worst things we have ever had to put up with, and it was a blessing that someone showed us the path to follow. He was a Conservative, but I am indebted to him nevertheless. We will forget that he was a Conservative, because there are some redeeming features in everything. There is the odd Conservative who is worth while and I must congratulate the leader of the opposition on his great common sense. I watched him years ago when, in his palmy days, he was not so quiet. He was more buoyant then. But I would not be surprised if he had a refining influence upon some of the fellows here. Certainly it is badly needed.

I must congratulate our own government upon doing extremely well. They can just ignore a lot of these speeches, ignore the cries of poverty, and try to get the different provinces to stand on their own feet and realize that this is not exclusively a federal problem. Surely the support of our own homes is first our own responsibility; then it might eventually come here; but what right have they to bring all those stages to this parliament? Why not go on to the British empire; why not go to London and ask them to finance us? But no; there is the absurd idea of coming to this parliament and saying: I must get the farmers of Ontario to hoe potatoes for me, to grow wheat for me, to sell cattle and send the money out west. We are getting a little tired of it, a little sick of it; our farmers are resenting it. They are good natured, but that has gone on year after year and the time has come when we do not want to hear too many speeches of that kind here. I hope the minister will pay very little attention to many of them.

I hope that anything that is said about interfering with trade and commerce with the United States or any other country will be entirely ignored. The money we have received from the United States for cattle shipped there has been a very substantial help to the farmers, yet hon. members talk about a few cabbages shipped in here or a few early onions or strawberries. These things do not count, considering the advantages we receive from our trade with the United States.

Mr. MacNICOL: What we want from them now is guns and bullets.

Mr. BLAIR: Their trade means much to Canada. I have always appreciated our friendly relations with the United States, but if ever there was a time when we needed them it is now, we should do all we can to maintain their friendship. I hope, therefore, that the minister will not listen too seriously to some of the speeches made here. It is extremely hard to sit in one's place at times and listen to some of them presenting fallacies.

Mr. F. C. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): It is with diffidence that I rise to speak for the first time in this house. This debate has been in progress since May 30. I have listened with intense interest to the suggestions which have come from all parts of the chamber. I try to imagine myself in the place of the Minister of Labour, try to judge what there may be of value to help him in his difficult task of framing legislation to deal with this urgent problem of unemployment. With all our war effort it is a problem which yet remains unsolved. But it will be of intense importance to this country once the war is won, the war industries fold up and the fighting men come back to their jobs. I hate to think of that time unless some progressive, sensible and earnest efforts are made to deal with this whole subject. I come from an entirely urban constituency, where unemployment is a matter of very considerable moment. I can appreciate the picture drawn by the hon, member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen), because we have in our city many people such as those of whom she spoke, people who were driven into the city because they could no longer endure the conditions prevailing in the country.

I was sent down here by my constituents for two purposes, as I conceive it, the first and foremost being to do all in my power to get on with this war and get it won. As one who took part in the last war, it goes against my grain to hear such remarks as that made by an hon. member who recently spoke of "win, lose or draw." I stand here to say that if I correctly interpret the spirit of the people of all parts of Canada in the light of the recent reverses there is no question with them of lose or draw; we are going to win this war, and I do not mean maybe. The news is bad, but the worse it gets the more the real bulldog spirit of the Anglo-Saxon and French races will rise-and I do not confine it to those two races; I pay tribute to the others within our borders. We are going to win this war, but it is going to be a long and tough struggle.

The second thing I was sent down here for, if I understand what my constituents meant in the last election, was to do all in my power to cure or improve the unbalanced economic conditions of which this matter of unemployment is the external evidence. To my mind unemployment is a cancer, and a very serious one, in our economic body. Unless we diagnose it correctly and apply the proper remedy it is going to be a very serious threat to our economic life, particularly after the war is won-I do not say "over", I say "won". To my mind those two things are very closely linked together, because in order to have a maximum war effort in this country the people must be in a position to contribute something. What can the unemployed contribute to the war? We must find some place for them to go to work.

My experience of the unemployment problem, as I see it in my own city, is this. The great central core of the unemployed are out of work because they are not trained for any particular job for which there is an opening. I support the suggestion, one of the few made in the course of this debate that I consider of any very great merit, of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol); he sits on the opposite side of the house, but I believe in giving credit where credit is due. His suggestion as I understood it, was to enlarge and broaden the plan already instituted in the youth training movement. I would have it go further than it has gone. One of the most useful things we could do in a practical way would be not to limit it to unemployed youth, but to extend it to include all employable people who happen to be on relief, to train them for some useful employment.

I know whereof I speak because in a humble way I have had something to do with this matter of youth training in my own province. I can testify to the splendid work that is being done in the schools where this training is being carried on. By all means let it be continued; and I believe it would be wise to vote more money and broaden it to take in all the unemployed who are employable and train them for something in which they can

I agree also with the statement of the honmember for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) that in return for relief we should get some honest labour from these people. The difficulty we find, however, as I imagine other municipalities have found, is that of providing the sort of work these people can do, without putting out of business some of our regular municipal employees already doing that very work. Parks, streets, roads and all that sort of thing are all very well; but if you do too much of that work with the unemployed, those regularly engaged in carrying on these services are out of business and go on relief, so what do we gain?

I deplore any suggestion tending to set one section against another. A British Columbia member suggested that the Ontario members were not all they should be in some regards; an Ontario member reciprocated by saying that the people in these dried-out areas—and I live very close to them—should get out if they cannot make a go of it. The hon, member was asked a very pertinent question which I noticed he did not answer. He was asked where they should go. I wonder if he would want those people to come into his constituency. Is he prepared to take care of them down here? I think that is a pertinent question which should have been answered.

Mr. BLAIR: I will answer your question; I did not hear it before. There is plenty of room in Ontario, with thousands of farms not being worked. Come down here and make a living.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): I did not ask the question; it was asked from across the chamber.

Mr. BLAIR: I did not hear it.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): There is one other matter I think should be dealt with at this time; that is the question of national registration, which seems to come definitely from one particular section of the house. I very much doubt whether that was put forward in good faith as a solution of the problem of unemployment. Possibly it was, but I rather suspect something else behind that suggestion.

Mr. HOMUTH: I do not think the hon. member should say that another hon. member making a suggestion in this chamber meant something other than what he said. The hon. gentleman should not impute motives.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): I am not imputing motives; I am dealing with the question of national registration as it has been presented by certain hon. members. I should like hon. gentlemen to use their common sense to visualize what would happen if that suggestion were adopted; and I am dealing with it only from the standpoint of its effect on unemployment. If hon. members putting forward that suggestion have in mind that we should use all our unemployed to undertake that national registration, then from the standpoint of unemployment I would see a good deal of merit in it. But I question very much whether the qualifications and ability of those people are such as to enable them to give the sort of service we would expect to get in a registration of that kind. Further I suggest that there is no necessity for a national registration. Applying my common sense again, I wonder what minister or what department would deal with all this information. It would have to be a tremendous department, able to analyze and make use of the diversified information that would be obtained.

The point I am trying to make is this. If you need workers in industry; if you need men on this or that job, judging from the letters I receive these men are available. But why not make use of the civil service I assume that would be a commission? proper job for them in the present scheme of things. It seems to me that in time of war we should relax some of our restrictions; pass an act of parliament if necessary, but for goodness sake let us do away with some of the red tape which seems to tie up that civil service commission. Let the commission receive all applications from the unemployed or those who think they can contribute something to this war. Let them tell the commission their qualifications, their experience and all the rest of the necessary information. Then when men were required for this or that job the civil service commission could look over the list of people qualified, pick out the best men and get them to work, instead of wasting two or three months with examinations and all that tommyrot at a time like this. I make that suggestion in all seriousness.

I criticized the previous speakers because they did not bring forward concrete suggestions that might lead to a real rather than a temporary solution of this problem of unemployment. Someone suggested that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Labour should get together, that by proper collaboration between these two a great deal might be done. It seems to me such collaboration should involve the whole cabinet, but I would like particularly to add the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance. I think we all know that the trade policy of the Liberal government from 1935 on did materially cut down unemployment. When there is plenty of trade back and forth between this and other countries there are plenty of jobs. But now many of our markets have been cut off and the Minister of Trade and Commerce has a serious job on his hands in trying to make up for those lost markets. I suggest to him that he should not overlook the large potential market in our own country, consisting of those who have nothing like ample purchasing power. That applies to a far greater proportion of our people than many hon. members may think.

I have two specific suggestions to offer which might help to reduce unemployment. If we could keep out more United States coal and make it possible for our cwn producers to have more of the Canadian coal market I think perhaps a great deal could be done. That is old stuff, of course; it has been threshed over many a time, but a great deal can still be done in that regard.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is good stuff, too.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): I think if we could do that the problem of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) who has 1,500 miners on relief, would be just about solved. We have the same problem among our miners in Alberta, and it would help us as well. Then there is the question of sugar beets. We do not grow nearly all the sugar we use in this country, though sugar beets are produced in Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. PERLEY: And soon in Saskatchewan.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): There may be other places but those are the ones of which I have knowledge. Is there any reason in the wide world why the growing of sugar beets should not be encouraged to a much greater extent, thus giving work to a great many more people? Why should not our agriculturists grow more and more sugar beets and less wheat, which they cannot sell except at ruinous prices? That may be only a small thing, but it is something; and a lot of these small things would go a long way toward relieving unemployment.

I said I wanted to have the Minister of Finance collaborate on this question, because he is the most important gentleman one can think of in connection with unemployment relief. I do not wish particularly to worry the minister at this time, because at the moment he has enough on his mind. I would point out, however, that without giving us anything definite the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) did express the thought which must be in our minds. He pointed out something of which we have to take notice, namely, the implications or results of our monetary policy.

I have no hesitation in saying that I am a monetary reformer. I have no use what-soever for "funny money," nor have I any use for vague or indefinite theories, with some of which I have been in close contact. Probably that condition applies more to me than it would to many hon, members from other provinces. In the past five years, after all my best endeavours to understand those theories I must confess that I am no nearer an understanding than I was at the beginning. I have no use for that kind of finance.

I should, however, like to pay tribute where tribute is due. When speaking a few days ago, the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) posed this question. What is the cause of unemployment? But I noticed that he did not suggest any solution, any more than did many other hon, members who filled the pages of Hansard. I do not care whether I have ten lines in Hansard, but I should like to have the committee give careful thought to this problem, and make an effort to get at the roots of it.

An hon. MEMBER: There are too many Liberals.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): I am a Liberal, and proud of the fact.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The hon, member is doing well.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): I shall describe a situation which developed in my own city, and one with which as a member of the city council and the health [Mr. Perley.]

board I was familiar. A short time ago, through the health board our medical officer condemned at least a hundred houses in Edmonton, most of which were in the eastern section of the city. His statement was that those houses were unfit for human habitation. Were they ordered to be destroyed or pulled No. Why? Because we had no down? other place to put the people who had been living in them. There was no other accommodation available at rentals they could afford to pay, or at rentals which relief moneys would meet. Yet, lying in the banks of our city-and not in Edmonton alone-there was in deposit accounts plenty of idle money which, if put to work, would be sufficient to construct many times a hundred houses, while at the same time the construction work would give employment to many of the unemployed, and the purchase of materials would help industry. My common sense tells me that in that situation we have a real picture of our troubles. We have too much idle money, money which is not working. The funny thing about it is that not only is the money idle, not only is it not paying anything under our present system, but it is drawing unemployment relief during the time of its unemployment, and that relief comes in the form of the one and a half per cent interest on savings accounts. Just imagine paying unemployment relief on unused money!

Surely our common sense revolts at that sort of thing. I do not wish to be accused of telling the government what it has not done and reviewing what other governments have not done, while at the same time offering no concrete suggestion into which hon. members can sink their teeth and to which they can apply their common sense. With that in mind I offer something which I suggest would get us somewhere. I say that the money to which I refer, in addition to offering great benefits in connection with the solution of our problem of unemployment, would go a long way towards helping us pay for this war. I wish the Minister of Finance were in his place so that he might hear what I have to say.

There is nothing of phoney money in the scheme I offer. There is nothing of theory, nor is there anything which any hon. member cannot understand. Two simple operations would be sufficient. First we would place a tax on all spendable money in the country. That tax might be levied once a year, and it might be placed at three per cent. At the same time the government would issue non-interest bearing bonds. If we put those two factors together and examine the implications involved in them, we shall have gone a long way towards relieving unemployment and towards financing as we go the cost of the war. That three per cent tax on all spendable money could be collected once a year on December 31, or at some other more favourable date. At the same time to those people who do not want to pay the tax we would make available the non-interest bearing government bonds. Those bonds could be secured through the banks, because I would not want to disturb or endanger our banking system in any way.

We must realize that we can borrow only from those people who have surplus funds, and it would be that group who to escape the tax would buy the bonds. That is, they would turn their money into special accounts in the banks, and those accounts would be under the direction of the federal government. From them the dominion government or the provincial or municipal governments could borrow, under proper conditions. In this way we would use the money which we must use, and would not pay interest on it.

It is an insult to the patriotism of our people to offer them interest on money so badly needed to finance our war activities. Goodness knows, we are getting plenty of illustrations, through our newspapers, of people who will have nothing to do with that type of patriotism, but who are making direct contributions with no thought of interest whatever. I am sure the government would find that there are hundreds of thousands of people in Canada who would be ready to do the same thing.

To-day the government gets its money from people or corporations that are saving it, and it pays interest on those moneys because the people say, "Well, you are going to keep my money ten, fifteen or twenty years, and naturally if I am not going to have the use of it in that time I ought to be paid interest." But, Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why those people could not be permitted to cash their bonds at any time they might wish to change their surplus back into cash.

We will suppose that a man has $5,000 in a deposit account. He does not wish to pay the tax of three per cent, and with that in mind he turns the money into government bonds. But next week he finds he needs a hundred dollars to meet ordinary expenditures. All right, under those circumstances he could turn in a bond and get his $100. He is not going to draw more than is necessary, because he knows he will have to pay a tax on the money placed in his account. For that reason he will keep his money down on deposit to the lowest possible requirements. Under the circumstances I have outlined, the government would have the use of the money interest free.

I would point out in conclusion that our financial structure has become extremely topheavy. In 1900 our public debt stood at about three-quarters of a billion dollars, while to-day it is almost eight billions of dollars. In passing may I observe that when I refer to the public debt I refer to the bonded indebtedness of the municipalities, the provinces and the dominion. This has been the increase in forty years. Let us picture this increase as pyramided on a very small base. Then let us turn the pyramid upside-down, and we see how from that small base it has spread out to its present enormous dimensions.

How did it get that way? It got that way because we have been paying interest we thought we had to pay. We have been paying in the orthodox manner, believing that there was no other way of doing it. I am suggesting that this was a vicious spiral, the incentive or the central base of which was interest. If we are going to get away from that we must reverse the process, unspiral and return to the point at which we were some years ago, when our public debt was very much less than it is to-day. We can do that by imposing a three per cent tax on all spendable money, and at the same time provide interest-free bonds.

I should like to discuss this matter with any hon. member or any committee that might be set up, and if I could not supply a reasonable answer to every question brought forward I should be very much surprised because this is not just some brain wave of my own; I have discussed it with fraternal societies, Kiwanis clubs, service organizations and business men of all kinds. I know all the questions that will be asked, and I think I have an answer that will appeal to the common sense of every member of this house if he is capable of using his common sense. Here I think will be found the answer not only to our problem of financing the war but to our problem of unemployment.

Mr. STIRLING: May I ask the hon. member what he means by spendable money?

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): I mean all the currency that is in existence plus all the bank accounts that are on deposit.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is the whole thing.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): Yes. The deputy minister of finance in the banking and commerce committee a year ago placed the amount at $2,735,424,000. That is all our money in Canada, and I mean all of it. A tax of three per cent is only a suggestion; it might not be enough or it might be too much. I am talking of the principle of putting a tax on money and at the same time providing interest-free bonds. The way it works is this: Men or corporations with money to put into a commercial enterprise, such as building houses, opening mines, cutting down timber and making lumber, can invest their money in such enterprises if they want to. That will provide work for the unemployed. I would not worry about the unemployed, however, because I do not think there will be many; but if there are, the tax collected could be used to provide unemployment relief, and more will be collected in taxes than will have to be paid for unemployment relief. On the other hand, a man may say: "I want to keep my money." All right, let him buy government bonds, realizing that he is not going to get interest on them but that he can withdraw his money at any time. Surely nobody would ask for interest if he could draw out his money when he wanted it. It is time that the Canadian people realized that the interest paid on all public debt is provided by the taxpayers of this country. I could go on at great length, Mr. Chairman, but I do not intend to take up more time this afternoon. I merely wanted to get the idea across and to have hon. gentlemen think about it, and I shall be prepared to discuss it at any later time, but I bring my suggestion earnestly to the attention of the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Finance for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Mr. Chairman, the hon, member who has just spoken (Mr. Casselman, Edmonton East), referred to the question which I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty) the other night and said that I had not myself, in asking the question, offered any solution for the problem. My question was put in an attempt to diagnose the disease of unemployment. My question was, what is the fundamental cause of unemployment? I explained that we could not solve the problem until we had properly diagnosed the case. I do not think we are incapable of offering any solution. We have been here now for four or five years, and we have claimed consistently that the proper solution is to be found in a money technique. My hon, friend has offered another money technique. I am not going to suggest that he has not offered a solution to the problem. I still believe however that my question deserves an answer and I trust that the minister will answer it before the debate eloses.

Further, may I point out to my hon. friend that I do not know it is the particular business of a member on the opposition side of the house to inform those on the government benches as to the solution of the problem.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Edmonton East): What are you here for then?

Mr. HANSELL: My friend says, "What are you here for then?" We are here to make suggestions, I know, but I would point out that when a member on the government side of the house asks a member on the opposition side what the solution of a problem is, it is a self-admission that he himself has no solution.

Mr. POULIOT: He wants to know what your solution is.

Mr. HANSELL: We have been discussing this matter here for about five years, and I am not going into it now. I did not rise to make that sort of speech. I rose to ask another question.

The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas) intimated a few minutes ago that the impression among relief recipients was that the relief grants were going to be cut. The Minister of Labour is going to explain whatever he has in mind on the subject, but it raises another question in my mind. I am wondering just how the relief rate of the recipient is arrived at, and just who initiates the process by which that rate is reached. I have talked the matter over with officials of one kind and another, and I have been under the impression that it is the municipalities that set the rate of the relief recipient. I wish the minister would enlighten us upon that point. Discussing the matter with one gentleman I was offered the suggestion that sometimes the relief rate is arrived at by stipulating a certain quantity of foodstuffs of different kinds; that university professors had been working out a scale of relief, discovering how many calories there were to so many cans of beans, how many calories to so many ounces of meat, and that a relief recipient should be able to live on so many calories. It is said that if he eats what is on this schedule of food in one month he will live. So the relief rate is struck accordingly. I do not know if that is the way in which it is generally done, and I wish the minister would enlighten us upon that point. If it is so, I would suggest that the relief rate should be increased instead of decreased because prices of foodstuffs have been rising all the time.

I would point out, further, that if the federal relief grant to the provinces is cut, then the provinces or the municipalities, in order to maintain the standard of relief given to recipients, would have their responsibilities increased. I think the minister should enlighten us upon all these matters.

May I make just a couple of other observations? The first is that sometimes a good deal of politics is played in connection with relief. If this government cuts relief grants to the provinces, and the provincial governments have to advise the municipalities accordingly, I venture to say the complaint will be heard from some municipalities, "There you are; what do you think of your provincial government?" although perhaps the provincial government is not at all to blame. I maintain that if the dominion government intends to cut grants to the provinces, the people of Canada from Halifax to Victoria should be told it is the dominion government that is doing it.

I have heard it said a good many times, "This relief business is becoming a racket", the inference invariably being that it is the relief recipient who is carrying on the racket. I do not begrudge to any relief recipient a few extra cents or a dollar or two more a month for food and clothing, and I suggest that if any racket is being carried on, it lies in the realm of the municipalities and towns.

An hon. MEMBER: Retailers.

Mr. HANSELL: Yes, and retailers, those who are supplying foodstuffs and clothing. I venture to suggest that an investigation would disclose that some municipalities and towns are benefiting considerably from the present method of relief. I am not making any accusations, but I will cite a possible case. A man who is on relief is receiving the regular rate, and the officials of the municipality or town say to him, "Of course, you will have to work this out at so much an hour." He does so, and one of his jobs is to dig a grave in the local cemetery. He is working out his allowance, and no more. But when the representative of the person who is buried there pays the bill, he pays good money to the municipality for the digging of that grave.

Mr. MacNICOL: "Good money!"

Mr. HANSELL: He does not pay the municipality at relief rates; he pays the municipality for digging the grave. But what has happened? The dominion government has paid forty per cent; the provincial government, forty per cent and the municipal government, twenty per cent for the digging of that grave. But the municipality has collected one hundred per cent. Such things happen.

An hon. member remarked this afternoon that a man should give some service for his relief allowance. I have no quarrel with that opinion, but let me point out that if he gives services in exchange for relief he is no longer on relief, he is employed at a given rate. If a city or municipality or town gets work done and pays only twenty per cent of the cost, it is not the individual but the city that is on relief. I believe that this should be understood from coast to coast.

I have pointed out these things because, while I suppose we shall have to vote for the resolution as being the best thing the government has to offer, it is not the proper way to tackle this job We have been going on in this way for five years; I believe this is the sixth session in which the same old thing has been presented to the house. I wonder if the minister is prepared to answer the question I put to him the other night. I believe it is important. Can he also tell us something about how the individual rate for the relief recipient is arrived at?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Before the minister replies, I have just one question I should like to ask him. No amount is mentioned in the resolution. I should like to know how much real, sound money he expects to spend this year?

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): I would be glad to give my hon. friend the exact figures of the amount which will be provided under the measure, when it is passed. I am afraid I do not have them with me to-day.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is good enough. I mean real money.

Mr. McLARTY: I thoroughly understood my hon, friend's question,

Mr. NICHOLSON: I wonder if the minister would answer the question I asked on June 5, with regard to the amount of money granted to Saskatchewan in May of this year compared with May of last year.

Mr. POULIOT: It is difficult to answer three questions at the same time.

Mr. MacINNIS: One after another.

Mr. McLARTY: I believe I have a reasonably good memory for figures, but those involved in this legislation are such that I am afraid I cannot extemporaneously accommodate my hon. friend. I shall be very glad to see that he gets the figures in due course. At this time, that is on June 17, ordinarily we would not have the May figures for the current year. Probably we have not the figures for later than March of this year, because the accounts are sent in to us by the provinces, and there is always some delay in connection with them.

I cannot possibly make a statement on this measure without observing to those hon, members on the committee who had the privilege over a number of years of hearing my predecessor, in this office which I now occupy, with his high ability and unquestionable sincerity debate this matter, that I believe every member will feel as I do, namely, that we shall sorely miss him and shall not forget him.

The debate, sir, has covered every possible field of human endeavour and governmental activity. I suppose it would be safe to say that no speech from the throne was debated with a wider variety of subjects than this resolution has been. It is quite proper that this should be so. After all, it is a vital problem. It is a problem which has baffled us; it is one for which every member of this committee, certainly including myself, would like, if possible, to find a panacea, a solution, a cure-all.

A great many excellent suggestions have been made. I refer, for instance, to those of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Jackman), the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Casselman), and the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Mayhew). From other groups in the house have come excellent suggestions as well; but they are based on so broad a monetary policy or involve to such a considerable degree the nationalization of industry that those hon. members will not expect me, I know, to deal at this particular time and in this debate with such vital and important problems of government policy.

As would naturally be expected, there have been some criticisms, and the first, in a broad way, is in regard to the way in which this act has been administered by the province under whose jurisdiction that administration lies. The hon, member for Macleod just now asked me-and I might deal with the matter now when it is fresh in my memory-how the amount was allotted to each individual recipient of welfare. That is done, in Alberta I believe, and certainly in Ontario, by joint consideration on the part of the municipality and of the provincial government. The federal government does not in any way fix the quantum of individual relief or determine what form the relief will take as to clothing, shelter and other necessities. That is purely the function of the province and of the municipality.

Might I point out in that connection that this is simply one other example of the criticism of administration which we have had in this house on so many occasions, namely where the dominion government is supplying a substantial percentage of funds and administration is not retained by the dominion government itself. We have heard that criticism time and time again.

Members of the committee are now aware that when the report of the dominion-provincial relations commission is implemented if that portion of the report dealing with unemployment relief is implemented—the dominion will then have not only the financial responsibility of maintaining employables but the additional responsibility of administering relief to them as well. It is true, the province will have other functions. The province will have those other functions in compensation to the dominion for undertaking that work. But I believe it will be a more satisfactory system when this is administered under the dominion government and the dominion government makes the whole contribution.

There were, too, criticisms from certain members from northern Saskatchewan to the effect that relief was not being properly administered in that particular section of the country. Some of the stories told were distressing and they could not help but be appealing to members of this committee. I asked that a report be obtained, and I have received it. The commissioner under the Unemployment and Agricultural Assistance Act has been in communication with relief administrator for Saskatchewan and is informed that no instructions have been given along the lines which have been suggested by Saskatchewan members, namely, that relief should be reduced or people cut off relief because of shortage of funds or because of any thought of reduction in federal contribution. The hon, member for North Battleford quoted a letter received from a local relief officer which appeared to suggest such lack of funds. The provincial relief administrator states that this letter was not based on any instructions which have gone to the district inspector and it appears that the inspector is in an area where he cannot be reached by telephone for explanation. The relief administrator also advised that he would have the matter investigated at once and stated that if we wished to have a representative present he would be only too glad to have him accompany the inspector.

Mr. COLDWELL: I actually saw a list of fifty-three municipalities which were being cut off the relief roll for May. The list was produced by the inspector at Biggar, Saskatchewan, late in April.

Mr. McLARTY: This particular memorandum deals with that part of northern Saskatchewan to which reference was made. I am not quoting it as an answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Weyburn and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. I shall come to that.

The second criticism of major importance has been that the dominion government is not making a sufficiently substantial contribution to relief. I recall to members that prior to 1934 the contribution made by the dominion government was one-third. From that time on it was a flat grant. In 1939 it was made on what is known as a forty-fortytwenty basis, and, where it was a matter of municipal improvements, on a fifty-fifty basis as far as direct labour costs were concerned. The hon. member for Weyburn, supported by the hon, member for Rosetown-Biggar, suggested that Saskatchewan had stated that we had advised them we had reduced our relief. The only thing I can deal with is what we did advise them. What the province of Saskatchewan may have advised, in a letter which was seen by the hon, member for Rosetown-Biggar, is naturally something beyond my knowledge, but I think I can explain it in this manner.

As I stated the other night, until this act is passed, the government of Canada has no right to make any commitments. The provinces indicated that on account of the municipalities having to arrange their budgets, they would like us for their convenience to assume that the act had been passed. Then, what would be our policy? I endeavoured to give that information, for the convenience of the provinces, and sent them all the same message. I stated that our policy, as far as contributing to direct relief expenditures was concerned, would be, and I had the approval of the government it would be, in the same ratio as in the last year, namely, on a fortyforty-twenty basis. But I added that the government was making huge war expenditures, that those expenditures should take up at least some of the unemployment, and that it might be necessary—I did not say it was—for us to fix a maximum amount. The commissioner advised Saskatchewan as well as the other provinces and did so rightly. But the thought we had in mind at that time, and still have, is that that maximum should be placed in those provinces which were receiving sufficient war orders to justify a maximum being established. I believe it does not apply to Saskatchewan. I doubt whether it applies to any of the four western provinces. Therefore I think I am safe in saying that, provided this act passes, we shall be prepared to make a contribution on the same basis as was made last year. What view the province takes of that advice is something which it would be presumptuous of me to deal with because I know only what we advised them.

A third question has been asked: Why in war time should there be unemployment at all? It is not the easiest question to answer. This afternoon the hon, member for Macleod asked me again to explain why there should be unemployment in war time. Frankly I was one of those who thought that the advent of war would so increase the tempo of industry that unemployment would fade like dew before the morning sun. But it has not been so. Before analyzing what I believe to be the reasons for this, I think I should place on Hansard definite figures. The other night the hon. leader of the opposition put on Hansard some figures for the month of March. The figures for that month have since been revised. The little difference there will be between the figures I give and those he gave is a result of this revision.

First let me say that March is probably the best month to take in considering the matter. March always shows the peak of those receiving unemployment and material aid. Consequently, when we look at March, we are looking not at the most favourable side of the picture, but at its worst.

May I add that I am not putting these figures on Hansard with any great pride of achievement; they are too large; I am first to recognize and realize that, and I state it quite frankly.

These are the revised figures. The total number in receipt of material aid in some form or another in March was 772,542. I know it is no answer to say that this figure is twenty-five per cent less than that for the same month last year. The question is why there should be any at all. It should be borne in mind that persons in receipt of direct relief include not only a large number of employables who are out of work, but also the dependants of those who are out of work, persons who are physically and mentally handicapped, and those who through age or other causes are unemployable, and, in addition, farmers and their families on direct relief because of crop failure. The latter number 123,673.

These figures on agricultural relief represent a reduction of 62 per cent over the same month last year, and 68.5 per cent from March, 1938.

The total on direct relief in urban areas, according to the revised March figures, was 648,869 persons. Again I point out that this figure should not be taken to represent the number of people unemployed. In addition to heads of families and individuals without dependants, it represents wives and minor children, aged people and those who are unemployable or only partly employable. To indicate the significance of this, I might explain that of the 138,961 heads of families or dependants of heads of families who are employable, 80.4 per cent were reported as being fully employable.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Before the minister leaves that point, that does not include people receiving relief under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act?

Mr. McLARTY: No, that is not included; these are only the figures under the Unemployment and Agricultural Assistance Act.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Has the minister the figures for the other group, which is part of the same problem?

Mr. McLARTY: My colleague the Minister of Agriculture will have to deal with that.

Mr. GARDINER: In round figures, 56,000 farmers.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That does not include anything for New Brunswick, where there is no registration.

Mr. McLARTY: That is quite true. There is no registration in New Brunswick and consequently it is not included.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Nor the wheat bonus. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture will give that.

Mr. GARDINER: Under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 56,000. That is the only group that would be comparable with this.

Mr. SENN: Does that include the wheat acreage bonus and all the rest?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. McLARTY: I was saying that to indicate the significance of this I might explain that of the 138,961 heads of families or dependants of heads of families, 80.4 per cent were reported as being wholly employable, while of the 48,076 individuals without dependants only about fifty per cent are reported as being fully employable. There is one circumstance which I think I might fairly point out in this connection. Prior to August of last year the province of Quebec took care of a very large number of employables by means of a works programme. In August of that year that works programme was discontinued. The result was that while in the intervening time employment in the province of Quebec has generally gone up, the number thrown on relief in March of this year as against March of last year was over seventy thousand. In other words, this change of provincial policy had something to do with the comparative relief figures.

The registration branch of the Department of Labour canvassed thirty-eight principal cities of Canada between April 1 and June 1. The composite figures secured in that time indicated a drop in that time of a further $24 \cdot 3$ per cent.

I might now deal with a few of the reasons for the necessary disappointment about the number on welfare in war time. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Roebuck) in an excellent address the other night referred to some of the circumstances and conditions accountable for our hopes that there would be no unemployment now being in part disappointed. In the first place he pointed to the dislocation of external trade. That is true not only of trade with enemy countries but also of trade with our allies and with neutrals. In addition there were certain industries, such for instance as the construction industry, which was not helped, but rather hindered, by the existence of a state of war. In the next place, in war time investment in all except war-time industry itself is largely curtailed. Then it is to be remembered that the number of unemployed on relief does not represent the total unemployed of Canada. Doubtless a great many who had in a general way a larger measure of skill were first taken These, while they were not on the unemployment relief rolls, were in fact unemployed. Then doubtless quite a number who were employed in part-time work received full-time work. The fact that this is so is borne out by a great reduction in the figures of unemployment in the trade unions.

I had intended to mention, and I will do so now, an analysis of the figures relating to skilled and unskilled labour on our relief rolls. It is surprising that in all the industries involving skilled labour less than ten per cent of these who were employable were on welfare. It would be natural to assume that the first industry to be affected by war so far as the relief rolls are concerned would be manufacturing. But when I say that there were only 2.9 per cent of skilled manufacturing workers on relief, hon. members can see why the direct effect was not felt in the reduction of the number of unemployed on relief. I think that indicates a clue which it might be useful to follow in finding some solution of the problem with which we are presented.

I might deal with the positive side of employment. It is an anomalous situation that while the number of unemployed on relief has decreased to some extent, it has not decreased at all in proportion to the increase in the percentage of those employed. In fact I think I would be safe in saying that for the month of May our index for employment is probably the highest it has been, certainly for the last ten years, and probably before that. In fact the figures show as great an increase in employment in the first four months of this year as the total increase for the five preceding years, but there has not been a corresponding drop in the number of those unemployed.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would that not be due partly to the natural increase in population?

Mr. McLARTY: No doubt to some extent that would be due to the number becoming of employable age each year.

Now I think it would be only fair to take a little time to deal with one or two other points. In his helpful address the other day the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Mac-Nicol) said he was not going to thresh old straw. I think it would be appreciated by this committee if I were to emulate his excellent example in that regard. But I should like to mention some of the things that have been done since the outbreak of the war in regard to the development of that supply of labour which is so necessary if we are going to have our industries carry on night and day, seven days a week.

In the first place, immediately after I was appointed to the portfolio I now hold, I called a conference of representatives of the various provinces throughout Canada having employment agencies. Representatives of these provinces met here for two days discussing methods by which we could secure an effective registration of skilled and semiskilled labour, and how we could develop a greater supply. In connection with the registration of skilled and semi-skilled labour it was decided that the best and most appropriate method of carrying that out was through the eighty employment offices in Canada. That work was started immediately. The departmental registration office at Ottawa was made a clearing house for all the figures. As may be imagined, a substantial list has been built up and catalogued, which is available at any time. These people are classified as to both occupation and the geographical districts in which they may be required. In the meantime, through the Engineering Institute of Canada, the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy and the Canadian Institute of Chemistry there has been carried on a registration of the technical men who would be available in the event of being called upon by industry. That work was taken over by the voluntary service registration bureau under the direction of Doctor Tory, and something over 8,000 names were collected of those who might be useful in war work.

This afternoon an hon, member said that without any inquiry, without any question being raised, we have allowed a great many skilled men to enlist in the army whereas they would have been more useful if employed in their own particular line of business. Since the beginning we have cooperated with the Department of National Defence in every possible way. If a highly skilled workman or technician enlisted, we would make inquiries to see whether his value might not be greater here.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I understand that when a skilled man or technician enlists, the officer commanding endeavours to utilize his services in the army, having regard to the fact that it is now, or should be, highly mechanized. In other words, the officer would assign that man to special duty. For instance, in connection with gas masks, I know of a young chemist who was brought from the ranks to the research council here at Ottawa to take up that particular line of work. So that matter is looked after to a certain extent.

Mr. McLARTY: I think that is quite correct. My hon. friend has mentioned the instance of a chemist. I had more in mind the skilled labourer. We have endeavoured to check up with the manufacturer to see just how valuable that man would be in industry, and we have weighed the pros and cons of his value before allowing him to become permanently enlisted.

Then some time ago a joint committee was formed in the Department of Labour and the Department of Munitions and Supply with the idea of making a definite check as to what skilled labour would be required, and where, in connection with the speeding up of our war industries. This committee held several meetings. Telegrams were sent to those industries engaged in making war equipment; replies were received from practically all, and that committee drew up a definite statement as to the amount of skilled labour that will be immediately required to carry out the order of the Department of Munitions and Supply to speed up all the war industries in Canada.

In addition we have been endeavouring, through the youth training movement, to speed up the training of air mechanics and mechanics who will be required in the production of aeroplanes. The number of air mechanics turned out last year was not so impressive. This year I believe it will be impressive. We are in the hands of the Royal Canadian Air Force. We work on the quota they give us. We are prepared to increase the number who will be employed under that quota. So far this year the quota has been 3,000, but we anticipate that ultimately it will be much larger than that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Those are air mechanics?

Mr. McLARTY: Yes; that does not include those engaged in the manufacture of aircraft. In that connection there are schools pretty well throughout Canada, at Vancouver, Calgary, Moose Jaw, Regina, Saskatoon, Brandon, Winnipeg, Galt, Saint John, Moncton, Edmundston, and Campbellton.

In addition we are rapidly developing a supply of skilled mechanics for the aeroplane manufacturing industry. We have arranged or are arranging through the cooperation of the provinces for the occupation of every technical school which has facilities to enable that work to be carried out, and in the present year we expect to develop a great many mechanics in that way.

There are several other points I might well develop, but I do not wish to add very much except this. I believe that at the present time the greatest single thing we can do to reduce unemployment and promote the happiness and prosperity of those who are unemployed is to develop in every possible way all the skill of their hands and heads. We can do much as a government, although not so much perhaps in the actual matter of training because we are limited to the thousands needed for such specialized work as the production and maintenance of aircraft and the metal trades. We can do a great deal to bring about peace in industry, as we have tried to do through the extension of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.

We can do a great deal in the stimulating of industry; but fundamentally the problem comes back to industry itself. If they are going to have to speed up; if they are going to work two or three shifts a day where they have been working only one; if they are going to work longer days than they have been working, then they must assume some responsibility for the training of their new employees. I am glad to say that in a great many instances that is being done. It has been done extensively for example in the aircraft business; it has been done extensively in the shipbuilding industry. In addition, for some little time many plants have been conducting their own apprenticeship and learnership classes. We realize, however, that this is not nearly large enough. A system of apprenticeships in normal times helps in a smaller way, but in these times when we want to speed up industry to its maximum, and when we want to develop workshops in Canada capable of producing supplies with which to aid the motherland and in our own defence, we must make a definite appeal to industry.

There are other measures with which we shall deal in the course of the debate; but to-day the greatest hope I see for reducing the number of employable unemployed is through the use of every effort at our command and the use of every possible assistance to train as many skilled workers as we can, for the benefit both of themselves and of their country, in order to enable us to maintain a steady flow of war supplies.

Mr. GREEN: I do not think the minister said anything about the possibility of setting up a national employment service in Canada. As he knows, a recommendation to that effect was made both by the Purvis commission and the Rowell-Sirois commission. To-day we have a great many more men in employment, and the centres at which the men are required are changing. There is the possibility of some shifting of employees, as the war effort develops. Would it not be of great value to set up national employment agencies under the direct control of the dominion government?

Mr. McLARTY: I regret not having dealt with that point, because I realize the extreme importance of the problem to which the hon. member has referred, namely the necessity for the transference of labour. It will be understood of course that a committee has been set up to deal with that subject. The hon. member is quite correct in his reference to the recommendation of the two commissions he mentioned, namely the recommendation that the employment service of Canada should be operated by the dominion government.

Mr. GREEN: It was very highly recommended.

Mr. McLARTY: I agree, without hesitation. One of the points which is to be legislated upon when the unemployment insurance legislation is brought down is the transfer of control of employment services to the dominion government. I am glad the hon member has brought the matter to my attention.

Mr. GREEN: Is that to be covered at this session?

Mr. McLARTY: As far as I know, the answer would be in the affirmative. It is the intention, of course, but as hon. members are aware, we shall have to have an amendment to the British North America Act. All I can say is that it is pointed out in the speech from the throne that we shall move as far as possible, and I am sincerely hopeful that we may get some distance in it. However I would not want to give any definite undertaking in the matter.

Mr. GREEN: But it is to be included in the unemployment insurance measure.

Mr. McLARTY: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the minister take care to see that in dealing with the question of apprenticeship, employers of labour are not permitted to keep down fair wages for skilled workmen. I have in mind an industry recently established in Canada. Although I have not the evidence at hand, I am informed that a large proportion of the employees in that industry are apprentices, and that the pay given to them is substantially lower than that which would be given to skilled workmen. Therefore the cost of production is decreased and there have been detrimental effects upon competitors. That is a point which the government ought to keep in mind. It should not permit an abuse of that kind to creep in, under the guise of turning out skilled workmen.

Mr. McLARTY: I am glad the leader of the opposition raised that point. It will be realized of course that our difficulty in many instances is that apprenticeship is a matter under provincial jurisdiction. Under ordinary circumstances we can deal with that situation only through cooperation with the provinces. However, in respect of war contracts I believe we would have power to act. As a matter of fact, a situation such as has been described by the leader of the opposition was called to my attention only a few days ago. Although I have not yet received a report, I have asked for investigation. If in private the leader of the opposition would be kind enough to give me the instance he has in mind, I should be glad to see that it is investigated.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): There is the boot and shoe industry generally, but particularly the Bata shoe company.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I believe the minister would be well advised to examine war contracts, because I have gone with greater care into the one I mentioned a few days ago, and I am more convinced than I was before that they are using apprentices in their production work, and are paying only twenty cents an hour when they should be paying much more. I believe this matter is connected closely with the training of mechanics, a subject which I thought was to be discussed in connection with another measure. As the leader of the opposition has said, however, there is great danger in connection with this matter.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have no doubt the minister is familiar with the legislation passed recently and now in operation in the United States. That legislation has to do with the training of apprentices, and deals particularly with the possibility of any reduction of wages. In the United States they have overcome the difficulty which has been pointed out by some hon. members, by appointing committees in all the cities throughout the United States where the federal government has labour offices. The act is under the joint administration of the Department of Labour at Washington and the state and municipal authorities. The committees are composed of three representatives from labour, three from the employers, and two selected at large. Then the state appoints a representative from the state department of labour to act as chairman. In this fashion they control the flow from the schools to production.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They have the appropriate legislation.

Mr. BLACKMORE: In connection with the production of armaments and other war equipment, has any shortage of skilled labour developed? The minister told us a few minutes ago that industry is coping with the situation through the process of apprentice-ships.

Mr. McLARTY: Would the hon. member be content if I gave the figures in the debate on second reading?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. McLarty thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 42, to assist in the alleviation of unemployment and agricultural distress.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

MILITIA PENSION ACT

PERMANENT FORCE NAVAL OFFICERS TO BENEFIT IN RESPECT OF ONE-HALF OF PREVIOUS NON-PERMANENT SERVICE—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Pensions and National Health, for the Minister of National Defence) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the senate to Bill No. 3, to amend the Militia Pension Act.

He said: If hon, members will look at page 76 of the Votes and Proceedings of June 4, they will find that the senate has made a purely clerical amendment, striking out the word "half" and substituting the words "onehalf of".

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is it just a question of English?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes, purely a clerical amendment.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

WHEAT COOPERATIVE MARKETING

ALCULATION OF INITIAL PAYMENTS TO SELLING AGENCIES—AUTHORITY FOR PAYMENT OF LIABILITIES AND ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 20, to amend the Wheat Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The first amendment is to strike out the short title?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. The changes that have been made by the senate are not important. They do not change the intent of the bill at all. The first amendment is simply to drop the short title, which they consider unnecessary. The second amendment substitutes "one only cooperative plan" for the words "a cooperative plan". The senate draughtsman considers the amendment better wording; it does not change the meaning at all.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I quite agree.

Mr. GARDINER: The same amendment is made in section 3, and sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 have been renumbered 1, 2, 3 and 4. Then in section 4 as it passed this house the senate have changed "a report of the proceedings taken under this act" to read "a report of all things approved by the governor in council under this act." That apparently is all that is necessary, in their opinion, to report to the house. The other amendment is to drop the section which we dropped in the other bill on Friday, "This act shall come into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation."

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is, an amending act should not come into effect by proclamation. The amendment to section 3—it was section 4 as it passed this house but the sections have been renumbered—makes a difference in substance. The words "a report of the proceedings taken [Mr. Ian Mackenzie.]

under this act" would, I suppose, cover a very much wider scope than "all things approved by the governor in council". We are not in committee, but I might ask the minister to state in a few words just what the effect of the difference is. The senate have apparently taken the view that only those things approved by the governor in council are necessary to be reported to parliament. The bill as drafted certainly included something more than that. Perhaps the minister has in mind just what the difference would be.

Mr. GARDINER: As it passed this house the section read:

The minister shall at the end of the fiscal year prepare a report of the proceedings, taken under this act and shall lay it before parliament forthwith, or if parliament be not then sitting, within fifteen days after the commencement of the next ensuing session.

I take that to mean that we should make a full report on the different proceedings, some of which might be approved by order in council and some merely given assent to by the minister; but the amendment made by the senate, substituting the words "all things approved by the governor in council" limits it somewhat. The department has no objection to the amendment as proposed although it may limit what would have to be reported on to the house.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Quite true.
Mr. COLDWELL: Does the minister know why this change was made? I believe the wider wording is preferable to the wording that has been substituted in another place.

Mr. GARDINER: I have no explanation why they desire the change. I was not at the meeting of the committee when the change was made. I can only explain the effect of the change.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The senate amendment limits it to what has been approved by the governor in council. I really do not know enough about the technique of all this to express an opinion, but there must be a reason for limiting it to "all things approved by the governor in council". But if it is agreeable to the department, I have no objection.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Speaker, I do not see any advantage in changing "a" to "one only." It looks to me as though that limits the effectiveness of the act; it limits too much the minister's power.

Mr. GARDINER: I am told by the legal authorities that it does not make any change in the meaning. My understanding from the explanatory note which I have from the other place is that the draftsman there thinks that it more nearly expresses what the amendment was intended to express. It is in these terms: "'Cooperative association' means an association of primary producers having for its object the marketing under a cooperative plan"—this is changed to read: "under one only cooperative plan—or agricultural products delivered to it for sale." I am informed by my own officials that this does not change the meaning, and we thought if it is more agreeable to those in the other place we would take no exception to the change.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Assuredly this would be more certain.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): May I draw the minister's attention to the fact that the other amendment, that is the one in section 4, does make a serious difference as has already been pointed out. The difference will be that the original draft proposes a report of the proceedings. That would really be an annual report of the proceedings under this act. What the amendment would provide would merely be a list of orders in council. I have not before me a copy of the whole act, but I believe the minister to have power under the act to issue regulations without an order in council. Would it be necessary to bring those down? It seems to me that not only does this limit the sphere, but it is a different thing altogether; it is a list of orders in council; whereas, as the minister had the section drawn originally, it would provide for an annual report upon this branch of his department. I do not want to be adamant about it, but would it not be wise for the minister to meet with a committee of the other place or make some inquiries or representations, and see if what they have in mind could not be clarified and some harmonious arrangement arrived at?

Mr. GARDINER: It went to the banking and commerce committee of the senate and was fully discussed there. An official of our department was there while it was being discussed, and we take no exception to the change which they suggested. I believe that the men who were suggesting or discussing it are eminent authorities in connection with draftsmanship and legal matters of this kind. They seem to feel that the amendment more correctly expresses what was desired. We in the department are prepared to accept that. I venture to say that so far as the bringing down of the report is concerned, it will make no difference; we intend to bring down a full report.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may point out that we are dealing with amendments to the bill, and what is now proceeding is what usually happens in committee.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY AND EXTEND POWERS OF MINISTER, ETC.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply) moved the second reading of Bill No. 41, to amend the Department of Munitions and Supply Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1—Definitions.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Chairman, on the second reading the minister did not have or did not take the opportunity of making a statement with regard to this amending bill, which is, apparently, going to produce extensive changes in the department. I wonder whether he would outline at this stage, or at a stage which he chooses to use, something with regard to the extent of and reasons for these great changes.

Mr. HOWE: This bill does not make extensive changes in the present authority of the department. However, it does make extensive changes in the Department of Munitions and Supply Act as passed in September, 1939. Since that time, due first to experience under a war supply board which was organized with powers very similar to those given to the department under the act, a number of important amendments have been made under the powers of the War Measures Act, and it is the purpose of this bill to consolidate the amendments which have been made by order in council and to include some new provisions as set out in the bill itself. The changes resulting from orders in council and the changes resulting from new measures introduced into the act at this time are so diverse that it is hard to cover them in a single statement, but I believe that if we follow the bill paragraph by paragraph, the changes will become evident from the text of the bill.

Mr. STIRLING: The very one that we are at now, if, Mr. Chairman, you are at paragraph (a), "defence projects"?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: That one, surely, is a considerable extension of the powers under the original act, in that the minister will now be in a position to carry out "construction, erection, repair, improvement, maintenance or extension of such defence projects."

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to draw attention to the fact that the only new part is that beginning "and shall include the construction...."

Mr. STIRLING: Those are the words that I was then reading. I am turning my attention to that very matter, that whereas previously the department's chief duty, shall I say, was that of preparing by contract to provide, now the department is taking on such matters as erection of buildings and extensions of projects.

Mr. HOWE: It is simply an extension of the definition. Formerly a "defence project" meant the buildings, aerodromes and so on, and it was vague as to just how far we could go. It is now made quite specific that "defence projects" includes construction of the defence projects—the erection, repair, improvement, maintenance or extension of defence projects. However, there is no great change in the work of the department in that regard. Ordinarily the plans and specifications are prepared by the Department of National Defence or by the Department of National Defence for Air; the contract is placed by the Department of Munitions and Supply, and the inspection work is carried on in most instances by officers of the defence department, but in some instances, by arrangement, by officers of the Department of Munitions and Supply. This has worked out as the most convenient and expeditious way of doing the work. Recently there has come up the matter of repair depots for the air training scheme and for aeroplanes generally, and in that case an arrangement has been made so that the Department of Munitions and Supply is itself designing and erecting these buildings, and then placing contracts for the buildings and supervising the buildings and installation of the equipment. This is worked out by arrangement, and this change in the definition makes it quite clear that we have the authority to do all these things.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am wondering whether the bill will include what I have in mind. The term "supplies" includes materials, and the underlined words are "equipment, ships, aircraft, automotive vehicles". In South Africa the government, having the same objective in view which I presume the minister has, namely, the manufacturing of any necessary equipment that can be made in the country for the purpose of winning the war, established an industrial development corporation, with wide powers which I believe the minister should be given under this bill. What is its purpose? To finance or to assist in financing the erection of plants for individuals or corporations who, through their experience, are qualified to manufacture whatever supplies the Department of Munitions and Supply might desire to have manufactured in Canada.

Will the minister have the power to deal [Mr. Chairman.]

properly with a matter of this kind? Suppose a group of men, known to have the necessary qualifications for producing such materials, approached his office, or whatever agency might be set up under the bill; would he or the corporation have the power to say to such a group of men, "Yes, what you desire to manufacture for the prosecution of the war seems good to us. We will undertake to erect buildings or to assist in the financing of the plant or to use a plant not now occupied". I should like to know whether the department under this bill would have the power to do that, as the industrial corporation set up by the government of South Africa has.

Second, will the minister have power under the bill to go further than that, back to the producers of the raw materials? Take iron, for instance. I am sure the minister is thoroughly acquainted with a large deposit of hematite iron which is now being developed some distance northwest of Fort William and Port Arthur. Would the department have the power to assist in financing the production of that ore or the ore of any other mine as material necessary for war purposes?

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out that the ministerial powers are dealt with under section 3 of the bill which introduces sections 5 and 6 of the act.

Mr. MacNICOL: I think the minister could answer the question at this point. I want to know whether the department is going to do anything to assist in the production of materials required for the prosecution of the war, and that I imagine would come under the head of equipment, ships, aircraft and automotive vehicles. Are his powers going to be wide enough to take care of all this?

Mr. HOWE: The department has ample powers to do all the things my hon. friend has mentioned. We have not actually undertaken the development of mines, although we have recently appointed a controller of metal production to investigate resources of that industry, to make sure that we get the output necessary for our requirements. We are every day building additions to plants, installing machinery that we shall own and continue to own, and doing all the things suggested by my hon. friend. Section 6 of the bill deals specifically with these powers, and when we come to that my hon. friend will be satisfied that we shall be able to do what he suggests.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The minister is asking us now in this section to crystallize into law, in the form of a statute, powers he has already acquired under an order in council of April 9. After a study of the bill, that appears clear to me. Under this term "defence projects", as incorporated in the order in council and in this bill, he can of his own initiative, without reference to any other department, proceed to the construction or erection and so on of any of these defence projects. The minister has given us the assurance that the modus operandi will not be changed; but if he wishes to, he can, under the amendment of April 9, proceed with these works.

Mr. HOWE: But there is one definite proviso. The Department of Munitions and Supply has no funds of its own.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course that is another matter altogether, as to who is to pay for the work. The people will pay for it in one form or another under a legal vote of parliament; but under this amendment to the act, incorporating as it does the provisions of the order in council passed last April, the minister can do any of these things himself without reference to the Department of National Defence, although if there is coordination between the two departments, he will carry on as heretofore. I am wondering what necessity has arisen. Did the department find itself in any way powerless to proceed with this construction, or did it have to go through some other department? What was the lack of power that gave rise to the amendment of April 9? That would be the concrete way of putting the question.

Mr. HOWE: The order in council of April 9 deals with many matters. I presume the principal new power taken at that time was the power to delegate work of the department to government owned corporations. We are discussing subsection 1 of section 1, and that has no real effect except to clarify the intent of the first section. I do not think there is any suggestion of change there. When we get further on, we come to new powers taken and the question could be more properly discussed at that time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If the minister were a lawyer, which unfortunately he is not—

Mr. HOWE: Fortunately.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury):—he would know that the inclusion of the words underlined is an extension of the power under the definition.

The CHAIRMAN: I would call attention to standing order 58 (2) which sets forth that speeches in committee of the whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration. This was introduced into the rules of the house for the purpose of avoiding duplication of pertinent arguments that arise under the clauses dealing with the subject. A great deal of latitude is generally given, provided it does not develop too far, in discussing a section of a bill which has some relation to another section of the bill. In section 1, now under study, there is no question of the powers of the minister. There is only a question of definition, that is to say, what does an expression in this bill mean? Under sections 5 and 6 we shall deal with the powers of the minister, as introduced by section 3 of this bill. Without being desirous of curtailing discussion, I would point out that we shall make more headway and the record will be more intelligible if we observe the rules and deal now with the appropriateness of the definitions set out in section 1.

Mr. CHURCH: Under paragraph (e) "supplies", I have one question relating to ships. In view of the widening of the Department of Munitions and Supply Act, I should like to find out what the policy of the government is in relation to shipbuilding. When the minister's estimates were up last year, I raised the same question. I pointed out that Great Britain had two thousand fewer ships to carry wheat than in 1914. Let us not forget that in 1937 there was an empire conference on shipping. What position did Canada take at that great empire shipping conference, knowing that the merchant marine is the back-bone of the empire's sea power? I am not particular as to when the question is answered but would prefer to have the answer now.

The CHAIRMAN: The question would be in order under section 3, but has nothing to do with definitions.

Mr. GREEN: This definition includes maintenance or extension of defence projects. Does that mean that the Department of Munitions and Supply will be in charge of the maintenance of fortifications?

Mr. HOWE: It does not mean that, but it means that we have the power to attend to the work if the Department of National Defence asks us to. This is an exceedingly busy time; the resources of the Department of National Defence are being strained to the utmost; our own work also is very heavy, but sometimes as a matter of convenience the Department of National Defence will ask us to undertake a certain project which is perhaps outside the ordinary arrangement. We have an arrangement that by the request of one minister and the consent of the other, work can be transferred. This simply authorizes us to do work of that kind if we are asked by the minister of another department.

Mr. GREEN: You are really only taking the power to help out the Department of National Defence?

Mr. HOWE: Exactly.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Application of Civil Service Act and Civil Service Superannuation Act.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): How much more of a load will this impose upon the public treasury? What is it going to cost?

Mr. HOWE: Does my hon, friend mean the administration cost?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No; I mean the matter of superannuation.

Mr. HOWE: This simply means that if an officer already in the service as a permanent civil servant is seconded from his own department to the Department of Munitions and Supply, he does not lose his superannuation rights. No employee taken on from outside the service into the Department of Munitions and Supply has any pension or other rights. He is simply a temporary for the duration of the war; his employment ceases at a certain time after the close of the war. No one can obtain new pension rights in this department, but if he has pension rights, those rights go with him to the department. That same provision is made in the National Harbours Board Act and a number of services outside the government which do not have any civil service rights.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But here is a transfer of a contributor, a civil servant, from one department to another. According to the explanatory note on the opposite page, this section preserves his rights as though there had been no break in the continuity of service and as if he had been retired in good standing from his original position. I understand that is the law now.

Mr. HOWE: I am doubtful if that is the case. If a man is taken out of a position he has in the department to what is in effect an outside service, I doubt whether his pension rights automatically follow him. We have been following the practice of keeping him an officer of the department he left, simply borrowing him. This permits him to be transferred and still retain his rights.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I agree that if he is transferred to an outside department where there is no superannuation provision, his rights ought to be preserved, but the Department of Munitions and Supply is a department of government and comes under the superannuation act. He is a permanent employee simply transferred from one department to another. However, I do not see that the provision does any harm.

Mr. HOWE: My legal adviser tells me that because ours is a department which dies automatically in three years, employment in our department does not count for civil service time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is a complete answer.

Mr. MacINNIS: To subsection 4 I have no objection at all; I think it is a perfectly proper provision, if the case would not be covered automatically. As to subsection 5, that in my opinion is quite different. I am wondering if appointments made to the Department of Munitions and Supply should be made through the civil service commission. Because of the nature of the department I assume they will not be. But this section seems to provide that when the Department of Munitions and Supply is disbanded, all employees can be transferred to other civil service positions without having to take a civil service examination, provided they are certified by the civil service commission as fit for some particular position. That seems to be giving an undue advantage to people who may possibly be in the service for only a few months, or for three years at the most. We should be very careful before we approve this section.

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps my hon, friend has overlooked the proviso at the bottom of the page:

Provided the said person obtains from the civil service commission a certificate to be given with or without examination as is determined by the regulations of the commission that he possesses the requisite knowledge and ability and is in other respects duly qualified for appointment to such position, and for the purposes of this subsection the regulations of the commission regarding layoffs shall apply mutatis mutandis.

As a matter of fact, the Department of Munitions and Supply does obtain its staff through the civil service commission. When the act expires, which it does automatically in three years unless extended, the staff is automatically out, but there is a provision that they can be taken into the service provided they meet the requirements of the commission for the job in question. That is, if it is a job requiring an examination, they must pass an examination; if it is not, they can get the job by showing that they have had the requisite experience.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Do I understand the minister to say that all this staff is appointed by the civil service commission?

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. HOWE: I think I can say that. Perhaps five or six top positions are not included, but any man who draws a full salary for his services is appointed by the civil service commission.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then may I ask if the civil service commission have been consulted with respect to this subsection?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And do they approve the principle?

Mr. HOWE: Yes: I am told they do.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then I am satisfied.

Mr. MacINNIS: If these appointments are to be made through the civil service commission, that takes away a great deal of the objection I would have to this section; but if the appointments are not made through the commission but are made by order in council, then because of the very nature of this act, under which the term of employment may be very short, I do not think it is dealing fairly with the general public to give these people the opportunity of going into the permanent civil service. I noticed the proviso which the minister has pointed out, and I mentioned it; but these appointments may be made with or without an examination. Really all that is needed is a certificate from the commission saying they are capable of doing the particular work to which they are being transferred, and that may be done regardless of age. A person may be taken in at sixty-four years of age; he may work for three years or longer, and then be entitled to a position in the civil service, despite his age, without an examination.

Mr. HOWE: A person merely becomes eligible for appointment. Whether the commission will appoint him or what regulations they may impose upon him are other matters. They may require him to take an examina-tion. He is simply on an eligible list. Of course the commission may certify him or not, as they may anyone on an eligible list, provided he has the necessary qualifications for the particular job. This will mean that the employee will not be penalized. If a stenographer is chosen by the civil service commission to work in the Department of Munitions and Supply, her employment will cease automatically when the department goes out of existence, and she has no pension benefits. The only benefit she obtains is to have her name on an eligible list, to be called upon in turn, I presume, or under whatever regulations the civil service commission may impose, as openings occur in the permanent service. Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course the minister will admit that it does give them some advantage over outsiders, although I am not objecting to that at all.

Mr. HOWE: Why should they not have that advantage? After all, in the first instance they were chosen by the civil service commission. They worked for the government during a tremendously strenuous period. It is my opinion that no great injustice is done to anyone if these people, having served during the war, are given the privilege of having their names placed on an eligible list.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am inclined to agree with that. While we are discussing stenographers, I understand that a large number have been put in the grade one category, under which they receive $57 a month. I am wondering if that is the standard wage, because I know some of them find it difficult under present conditions to live in Ottawa and be respectable on $57 a month. That is less than $15 a week; and by the time they pay their board, pay for their meals and dress themselves respectably, there is not very much left. It does seem to me that is a pretty small wage for a girl who has to pass the civil service examination. The competition is very keen, and a girl must be well equipped to pass. The minister has, perhaps, nothing to do with the question of salary, but I suggest that it is a pretty small wage, particularly for outsiders. The situation might be different if a girl is living at home,

Mr. HOWE: I agree absolutely with what my hon. friend has said, but we cannot have our cake and eat it too. I think it is some protection to have these appointments made by the civil service commission. Unfortunately, if we do that, we must accept the commission's valuation of their services. I must say that I protested vigorously, as I think all our senior officers have, at the salaries paid, having in mind the long hours the staff are required to work. We have been carrying on under crowded conditions for the last several months, and because of lack of space we have had to work these stenographers in two shifts. I feel very strongly, as my hon. friend does, that the salaries paid the stenographers and clerks are inadequate.

Mr. MacINNIS: So far as this applies to appointments made through the civil service commission, I will withdraw any objection I have.

Mr. McIVOR: How does this minimum salary compare with what we pay the man who enlists and receives $1.30 a day. I think these stenographers are just about as well paid as our soldiers, and they have very little risk as compared with the man who is prepared to give his life.

Section agreed to.

On section 3-Ministerial powers.

Mr. HOMUTH: This section gives the minister tremendous powers. I should like to make some observations with regard to the mobilization of industry, and I should like the minister to realize that this is not being said in a critical way.

I consider it important that in his organization the minister should have men with practical knowledge of the various industries with which he has to deal. I know he is gradually getting men of that kind, but for a long time he did not have them and as a result production was held up. We produce certain articles at a cost higher than it should be because of the specifications that are set out. I suppose certain of these specifications were drawn up by members of the ordnance department or members of the civil service who had no practical knowledge of the goods or of the particular industry producing those goods.

I might give two or three instances of what I mean. Shortly after the outbreak of war, our group of industries was called in to discuss a certain matter with a representative of the wool board. At that meeting it was stated that 2,000,000 pounds of a certain product would be required for the manufacture of blankets. I was chairman of our committee, and I said it was impossible to do that because we had not that much stock in this country. Then I pointed out that they were insisting on a gray blanket, and I asked about the necessity for gray. I wondered why they could not have a blanket of a heather shade, but the military authorities wanted gray blankets. At any rate we submitted samples, first to the wool controller, then to another department and then to another department, and after six months of deliberation they finally decided that a heather blanket would be all right. In the meantime large orders of gray had been shipped. They finally got a heather blanket, just as good as the gray, for several cents a pound less. That shows the necessity of having practical men in the department.

A week ago to-day a large order was given for munitions of a certain type. A great many industries that made munitions in the last war tendered for the contract or for part of it. They were told to bid on a specified number of these articles, and those tenders were sent in. The firm submitting the lowest tender got the contract. The minister said several times, "if any industry is set up or able to make these commodities, let them come in and we will give them every opportunity." The difficulty in this instance was that the other industries which had tendered on this particular job were not set up, and in their first tender they had to include tooling up, the setting up of their plant and operations of that kind in preparation for production.

I have in mind two firms, one of which got the contract and the other did not. There was a considerable difference between their tenders. The manufacturer who was high in his bid had to include in it a large sum of money for tooling up, preparing his cupola and reorganizing his factory for the purpose of making that type of munition. The cost of tooling up represented the difference in the two tenders.

While I realize that we must conserve every cent possible in the giving of contracts, yet I believe the time has come when our industries have to be put on a basis where they can produce these articles. I do not think the public would object to the government saying, "Very well; you go ahead and set up; get ready to produce this particular kind of goods. We are prepared to give you a little more on your first tender, until such time as you are in a position to produce." That has been done in connection with other contracts, and if it were done more often it would mean that we would have a large number of industries in a position to produce munitions of war which we are going to need. I am not so sure but that before this war is over, instead of one or two hundreds of thousands of this particular type, we will need millions of them. If we do, then I say we shall have to have the industries tooled up to do this.

The same is true of shell contracts. Many firms which manufactured shells at the time of the last war are not in a position to make them to-day, in so far as the set up of their factories is concerned. They will have to be placed in a position to do so. I believe the minister will agree with me—and I say this in no critical way—when I say that the experience they are having in the production of shells under a contract given in Montreal has not been pleasant. The reason has been that the men who have that contract knew nothing about producing shells.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Originally.

Mr. HOMUTH: Yes, originally. And the men placed at the head of that concern knew nothing about it. In fact I believe one man was an automobile salesman. There are hundreds of small factories throughout Canada in a position to make shells, if given an opportunity. They cannot come to the minister and say, "We are in a position to produce these shells; our plants are tooled up, and we have spent money to place them in that position."

Frankly I should like to see the formation of a munitions board, or a board which would have the power to give out contracts without first having to pass them through cabinet council, or having to go through the various phases through which they now have to pass. I should like to see the minister clothed with authority whereby he or his board could say to those firms, "Go ahead; set up and produce these shells." I believe that power should be given to him. I would point out, however, that our smaller industries are not in a position to go out and spend $15,000, $25,000 or $30,000 to set up to produce these various kinds of munitions of war, on the off chance that they might secure a contract.

We know from experience that they are able to produce, because they did produce in the last war, and they have the mechanics who can do these jobs.

Another point I would bring to the attention of the minister is this: In the construction of new industries I think it would be wise to see that they are spread across the country, if this is at all feasible. I realize that perhaps certain industries could not be developed in Alberta or Saskatchewan, because of the long haulage of materials. But in connection with the manufacture of certain articles-explosives, chemicals or whatever it may be-I believe we would be very wise to establish in western Canada as many industries as we possibly can. I say that for more than one reason. Not only are they out there and comparatively safe-perhaps much safer than they would be in other parts of the countrybut we would help the industrial development of the west, a factor which I believe is very necessary. It is not many years ago since we looked upon Winnipeg as only a trading centre. To-day Winnipeg is a manufacturing centre, and an important one at that. In addition, it is a great market for the farmers in the adjoining country.

I suggest that the minister should do everything possible to send industries to western Canada. In Alberta we find gas and oil, and the very finest of manufacturing conditions, and manufacturing could be set up out there if the cost of hauling raw materials or shipping out the finished products were not too high. Regardless of the powers conferred by the measure before us, this is such a tremendous task that I believe the minister should be placed at the head of a munitions board and given full power to mobilize industry, to give contracts and to assist firms in getting contracts and in setting up, without first having to go through any of the red tape of submitting these matters to cabinet council. We are at war now, and under that condition I say we must do things to which in peace time the people might object. However, they would never object to what I have suggested.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, there is a matter I should like to place before the minister while we are discussing this section, namely, the matter of a national shipbuilding policy for Canada. Last year during the discussion on the minister's estimates I referred to the deadly submarine menace of the last war, when of four ships going out only one would come back.

May I remind hon. members that Canada stands fifth among the trading nations of the world. The fact is, however, that to-day there are the most modern of submarines in the hands of Italy and Japan capable of crossing the Atlantic and Pacific oceans without refueling. The minister must not be unmindful of the fact that at the last imperial conference the empire shipping scheme was discussed, and a report made thereon. That report of two years ago is in the hands of hon. members, and last year when the minister's estimates were under discussion I called his attention to it. It was pointed out in the report that at the time of the conference Great Britain had 2,000 fewer ships to carry food than she had in 1914. Great Britain imports over 85 per cent of her food and 90 per cent of her raw materials, and to-day she is involved in the most deadly of all wars.

In the great war our enemies kept the whole world at bay for four and a half years. As a country which stands fifth among the trading nations I ask, how are we going to take care of our export trade unless we build ships and guard our merchant marine? understand the minister sent a committee to Washington with authority to obtain charters there for ships, but I would point out to him that at that time the Canada Steamship lines had sixty-four ships tied up, doing nothing. During the great war the federal government built twelve or fourteen ships at the foot of Bathurst street, Toronto. At that time I came to Ottawa to see the late Sir Douglas Hazen, then Minister of Marine, who did very good work in that connection. Those were ships of from 8,000 to 10,000 tons, and they carried food to the old country. Their construction involved the employment of skilled mechanics, artisans, steel workers, carpenters and tradesmen of all kinds. As a matter of fact, I believe about seventeen different classes of skilled workmen, some of whom had been suffering from lack of employment, were then given work to do.

During the war some ships were built at the foot of Bathurst street, and other ships of the Canadian National Railways were taken over. These merchant ships, some of which cost a million and a half or a million and three-quarters, were sold three or four years ago for about $30,000 or $50,000 each.

I should like to give the government a constructive suggestion, and having done so I shall have concluded my observations at this point. We had what were known as the Ottawa agreements. This empire trade agreement cannot exist without sea-borne commerce. After all is said and done, we should support empire trade because that is the basis upon which the trade of Canada and the empire was built. Under the Ottawa agreements Canadian grain was being carried on British ships to the British market with a six cent preference. The three year trade treaty between Canada and the United States expires at the end of this month, and what is the policy of the government going to be if there is a scarcity of shipping? There was a scarcity of shipping when war broke out, and agents of the government went down to Washington trying to lease or charter some United States ships for the merchant marine.

Further, what protection is going to be given our shipping from the deadly submarine menace? I read a report in this house last session in connection with the dreadful disaster that nearly overtook the empire and nearly lost us the war in 1917, when the submarine menace became acute in the Atlantic. Due to the policy of the pacifists ten years ago, Great Britain has reduced her capital ships from seventy to fifty, and these twenty capital ships are needed to-day on the Atlantic and the Mediterranean. What is going to take the place of these twenty capital ships to protect our trade on the high seas when the Atlantic squadron is withdrawn to home waters? The merchant marine has been the very backbone of our commerce in peace time and a considerable help to the royal navy in war. But Canada has been lagging behind in building a merchant marine. Members have been given a report of the shipping conference. What Canada said in effect at that conference in 1937 was that we were not ready for any such scheme, and so it was laid over by Canada's vote. Ottawa agreements increased Canada's trade with Great Britain by 46 per cent, and Great Britain's trade with Canada by 41 per cent, according to figures which Mr. Chamberlain gave to the British house last session.

I urge upon the minister that we should have a national war shipbuilding policy for the building of a merchant marine. Our merchant marine during the past four or five years has been carrying pig iron, scrapiron, copper and nickel to our enemies, Italy, Germany and Russia. I received a return the other day on that very subject. What is the government going to do if we run out of ships for our now acute export trade, in view of the very serious trouble in which we find ourselves in addition to the submarine menace? The government should launch a shipbuilding programme on the great lakes, as was done in the great war. We should not be dependent on United States shipping, because the coastal laws are here to-day and gone to-morrow. We want to use Canadian ships, built by Canadian workmen, to carry our trade overseas under the British empire agreements. All shipping crossing the Atlantic will have to meet the deadly submarine menace, and I am sure the minister would have the support of the whole house and the country if he came forward with a large national shipbuilding programme for Canada. Merchant ships of from 8,000 to 10,000 tonnage are a desirable type for carrying food and merchandise on the high seas. Such a programme would redound abundantly to Canada's benefit and would be a great aid to Great Britain.

I urged upon the Minister of Agriculture last session and the session before, in view of the war which everybody saw was coming, to build food reservoirs in England. I urged that as far back as 1937, but nothing was done about it, and the merchant marine has been going down and down. Look at the Welland canal in the riding represented by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lockhart). Boats have been tied up there for from three to five and ten years with no business. If we had had a national shipbuilding policy, a policy of carrying Canada's trade on Canadian ships, we might have been better ready for the war and to play our part in empire shipping and to take care of our export trade. Great Britain was nearly starved out in 1917; we had not the ships that were required then, and the submarine menace is going to become more acute in the days to come. I do hope that the government and the munitions board will give this matter very careful consideration, as the board did in 1916 and 1917, and come down to the house with a forward shipbuilding policy for Canada.

Mr. COLDWELL: This clause confers very, very wide powers upon the minister. He is given the power to "mobilize and conserve the resources of Canada contributory to, and the sources of supply of munitions of war and supplies and the agencies and facilities available for the supply of the same, and for the construction and carrying out of defence projects," and so forth. Those are very wide powers indeed, and I would ask the minister why he is seeking them. The reason why I ask the question is that I think the time has come when such powers should be exercised. I believe the shadow of a great disaster falls across Canada and the world; and if we are going to render the maximum aid, I am of the opinion that we should mobilize our industrial and economic resources to the fullest extent. have heard numerous suggestions for the registration of man-power, largely for military purposes, but I think the lesson of the last month has been that we do not require soldiers as much as we require industrial ability to provide the munitions of war to carry on the great struggle which now faces us.

It seems to me that this clause gives the minister practically all the power he requires to do anything that may be necessary in the mobilization and organization of our economic resources, and I should like to hear the minister tell the committee to-night why he seeks these powers. Does he intend to use them? Is it the intention of the government to mobilize the economic life of this country, industry and finance, and in a non-military sense as well as in a military sense, labour and our other resources, in order that this country may render what I have always thought to be the best assistance she could possibly render, namely, the bringing of economic aid to the allied cause?

At the moment there is no question of requiring large contingents of men for service on the continent of Europe. France has capitulated or is apparently about to capitulate. and the consequent loss of material to the allied cause places upon us the responsibility which we ought to bear to a greater degree than we have done since the outbreak of the war, of furnishing munitions and the mechanical equipment of war. I should like to see the government come before this house soon, or the minister to tell us to-night, that they intend to mobilize our resources even as they are mobilizing them in Great Britain. New Zealand and Australia. All these countries are organizing their resources under public control, and planning efficiently.

Only the other evening I heard a broadcast from the other side by the minister in charge of economic organization in Great Britain. He made the statement that when the new government of Britain took over a short time ago, industry and the manufacture of munitions were in a chaotic condition; that private enterprise had not been able to cope with the present demands of the nation. Tonight we heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) that perhaps the minister might enter into a certain kind of agreement with private industrial organizations and even with mining interests to assist in their financing and in the provision of equipment, supplies and so forth for these private interests. Perhaps the government is considering that kind of thing. Let me say that this seems to me the very antithesis of that rugged individualism of which we have heard so much. If we are going to dispense with rugged individualism, I think we should go in for more in the nature of collectivism during this period of war. I believe that whether or not we adopt a policy of this sort to-day, it will be thrust upon us if this war should last twelve months; and it seems to me that we should organize now to meet present and future needs in order that we may cope with the situation which confronts us. It does not matter what we have thought in past days. To-day we face probably the most desperate situation that the British empire or the world has ever been in, and I believe that if we are to develop our maximum strength in this great struggle, we must organize intelligently our economic, industrial and financial resources and our labour power as well.

May I say in passing that I believe, if industry and finance were organized, labour power also would be willing to cooperate in a similar manner. But I should like the minister to-night to tell the committee why he seeks these powers and if he intends to use them. If he does not intend to use them, we should know it, and if it is the intention of the government to mobilize Canadian industry as it should be mobilized, I think the committee should be taken into its confidence, in order that we, as members of parliament from all over Canada, can go back to our own constituencies and our own people and support this effort fully and with full knowledge.

I ask the minister to explain to the committee this evening why he seeks these powers, and whether, and to what extent he intends to use them.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, the powers are taken to mobilize industry fully for the prosecution of the war. The extent to which they are used is a progressive matter. We have already availed ourselves of these powers to a considerable extent. In some instances we have built government plants to manufacture munitions of war of types which have no peace-time counterpart.

Mr. MacNICOL: May we ask where these plants are located?

Mr. HOWE: As I said before, I do not care to give the locations. I do not think it is advisable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They might be blown up.

Mr. HOWE: There is one in northern Ontario and there are two in Quebec. In fact, we have several smaller plants in various locations. They are explosives plants, filling plants, chemical plants—all of a kind required purely for war purposes. Where a peace-time operation can efficiently carry on war-time work, we believe it is in the best interests of the country to develop that peace-time industry for the purposes of the war rather than start a new enterprise, government-owned, for the same purpose.

We have used the powers indicated in the bill to dictate the prices at which people shall undertake work. We have gone into a plant and said, "We want this article. The price is so much. You must manufacture that article. If you are not satisfied with that price you can take your case to the exchequer court." We have done that on a few occasions; as the need grows more urgent, we will use this power very extensively. We are getting to the point where, if a manufacturer has a thing which the government needs, we preempt it; we pay him what we think is a fair price, and if he does not think so he has, as I have said, an appeal to the courts. In many instances we have imposed our price.

In the last week, of course, the situation has reached proportions which none of us could reasonably have been expected to contemplate as likely to come so soon. With this in view, our whole plans are being reorganized, and reorganized very rapidly. I do not think, circumstances being what they are, I care to state what we may be doing next week or next month, but I do say that the powers we have taken under this act were put there because we believed they were necessary. We believe they will be sufficient for all time, I cannot say at this moment.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I ask the minister whether "resources" in this section means, all the resources of Canada? It says now, "conserve the resources of Canada." Does that mean all the resources?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am very glad to hear the minister say that. This parliament must, sooner or later, and the sooner the better, face the fact that we must not be bound by the principles of orthodox finance.

[Mr. MacNicol]

All over the British empire and the United States at the present time and during the last five months, there is and has been a hand of blight which has been equivalent to paralysis, and that hand is lying over the Canadian economy to-day. People in every direction are wondering what is the matter. The matter is our financial system. Now we hear people rise and make slighting, silly remarks about "sound money" and "funny money" and indulge in a great deal of other nonsense. So long as people continue to make remarks like that in this chamber, they are standing in the way of the greatest efficiency of the Dominion of Canada. We must face this situation sooner or later. Unless we face it soon, it will be far the worse for us.

In this connection may I point out the reason why I am very glad the minister has said that this power covers all resources, and why I trust he will use this power to the limit. I am going to recall to those who were in the banking and commerce committee last year certain quotations from its proceedings. The question was asked:

... so far as war is concerned, to defend the integrity of the nation there will be no difficulty in raising the means of financing whatever those requirements may be?

Did the questioner mean exactly what he said? I say he did. Was Mr. Towers wise enough to tell what he meant? I say he was. He knew every word that was used, and what the significance was, and with that full realization he made the following reply:

The limit of the possibilities depends on men and materials.

There is hardly a piece of land on the face of the earth which has greater possibilities as far as materials are concerned than has Canada. We have everything necessary to build up armaments which, in my opinion, would probably be adequate successfully to face Germany herself. In this age of machines, when men are not so important, we can raise the men, small as our population is, to man those machines. The significance of what Mr. Towers said becomes, then, more impressive. Now notice the next question:

... and where you have an abundance of men and materials you have no difficulty, under our present banking system, in putting forth the medium of exchange that is necessary to put the men and materials to work in defence of the realm?

Mr. Towers: That is right.

In the face of that, let any hon. member tell me why the manhood of Canada is not now at work? Yet on every hand, from one coast of this country to the other, there are tens of thousands of men and women who are not at work and who are eagerly pleading for the privilege of being put to work. Yet in the presence of this threatening enemy, which is likely to destroy the very British race, we are not putting these people to work nor are we adequately using the resources of all kinds which providence has put within the confines of the country. I propose to have more to say about this in the future, but I have said enough now. I wish to make it clear to the minister that I am taking his words at their face value, that he is being given under this act the power to insist that there shall be put at his disposal sufficient financial means to put the men and material of this country to work producing the kind of fighting machine which the minister well knows Canada can become and which the exigencies of the moment demand she shall become.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In response to a question put on the order paper by the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin), the answer was given to-day, from the deputy minister of the department, that the services of Mr. S. W. Fairweather, chief of research and development of the Canadian National Railways, had been lent by the railway management to the Department of Munitions and Supply to assist in the organization of the bureau of economics in connection with that department. While he is so engaged, the department will be responsible for his out-ofpocket expenses only. If we have this big battery of dollar a year men, some of the biggest executives in Canada, and a number of other very able men on salary-I happen to know some of them, and some are able men indeed-why is it necessary to organize a bureau of economics? I know this gentleman. I have had some experience with him in days gone by. He is in the Canadian National Railways, and he was good enough some years ago to offer to write a report for the railway committee. He had been in the habit of doing that for the previous administration. Of course, we know that the report was always very favourable. I am at a loss to know just why this is necessary. I realize it is not costing the government anything, but it is costing the country something. Will the minister tell us why it is necessary to have a bureau of economics in this war department?

Mr. HOWE: The bureau of economics has many uses, one of which is to determine, for example, ways and means of using the capacity of the Alberta oil resources to the maximum extent.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have been interested in that myself, but I have been writing to another department.

Mr. HOWE: I think we have that worked out as a result of the bureau of economics. 95826—54 Another thing is the curtailment of unnecessary imports. We import so many millions of a certain commodity. Is this necessary? Can we not step up production in Canada?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Coal and fuel oil.

Mr. HOWE: I was thinking particularly of structural steel or steel products. Last year $160,000,000 was spent in imports of steel products. Cannot our own industries be geared up to the maximum extent to supply the consumption necessary to the war-time economy of Canada? I could mention innumerable subjects on which I have asked for studies. The bureau, in the short time it has been in existence, has been tremendously helpful to myself, to the Bank of Canada and to the Minister of Finance. The work has only started, and of the work of the Department of Munitions and Supply not by any means the least important is that of its bureau of economics.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I understood the minister to say that there were some publicly owned munition plants and explosives factories in various places in Canada. I should like to ask two questions: First, how many of such establishments are there? Second, are they publicly owned in the sense that the arsenals at Valcartier and Lindsay are?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. I can count four, and I believe perhaps there are one or two other plants that are publicly owned and operated in exactly the same way as the arsenal at Lindsay, except that whereas the arsenal at Lindsay is operated directly by officers of the crown, we propose to operate these government owned projects through specialized firms. In the management of them, instead of an individual reporting to the minister, a corporation will be organized for the purpose, having expert talent which is not available for direct hire.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In sections 5 and 7(b) which are being repealed, the minister had only such powers as may be conferred upon him by the governor in council. The section under discussion mentions nothing of that kind. It seems to me that the powers are almost dictatorial here. This may be necessary in time of war, but there should be some time limitation. In regard to the valuation of these industries which the minister is commandeering or taking over, will the department simply set a valuation, at what it considers to be a fair price? Will the paying for them come under this or another department?

Mr. HOWE: The Department of Munitions and Supply have taken over no industries.

We have expropriated land in the ordinary way. In commandeering an industry you go and say, "We want a certain type of production and the price of your product is so much. Go ahead and produce, and if you think you are not being equitably treated you have recourse to the exchequer court. In the meantime, however, we want you to produce and to produce at this price." But we have not actually taken ownership of industrial property. We have not yet anyway.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What about the powers previously given under the governor in council?

Mr. HOWE: We previously had such powers as the governor in council gave us. We have taken now all the powers there are so that there is not much use in asking for more.

Mr. HOMUTH: I realize that the minister is building up a group of men round him for certain specific purposes. Would it be possible for him to put on Hansard or send to members of the house a list of the men for the various departments? There are members of the house who have received certain suggestions at various times. I realize that we are going to face what may be a very serious wool shortage in Canada. If anything happens on the eastern seas and our imports of wool were to be cut off from Australia and New Zealand, it would be a serious matter for the dominion in our war effort, because we produce only about one-fifth of the amount of wool we need in Canada, and some of that is exported. That is, aside from importations of cloth and so on. Something will have to be done about that. I understand that the minister's department is working on the question at the present time to see whether certain substitutes cannot be used. But there are those of us who are associated with certain industries, or we have certain suggestions brought to us; we can see something in the letting of contracts or tenders which has a tendency to slow up production.

I have in mind for instance the package in which the Bren gun is packed. The only thing provided for was an English box or case lined with a woven felt. A woven felt of that type is not made in Canada; we make only a pressed felt. Because the specification called for that felt, it was five or six weeks before the officers could decide that a pressed felt was as good as the woven. Eventually they had to take the pressed felt, but the time taken to reach a decision caused a long delay. Would it be possible for hon. members to have a list of the men responsible in the various sections of the minister's department, so that when matters such as this come up we may know to whom to go? At the present time a man goes from pillar to post until he gets so dizzy that he almost gives up.

Mr. HOWE: I shall be very glad to table the names of the men in the key positions. Really to have the whole organization, the list should include not only the officers of the Department of Munitions and Supply but also of the war-time prices and trade board, which is closely allied, the line of demarcation being that the latter board deals chiefly with peace-time articles whereas the Department of Munitions and Supply deals with war supplies. However, the two work together closely, Perhaps I could have a list of the officers of both organizations tabled and get permission to have it put in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Also where we can find these officers. They are scattered from Dan to Beersheba.

Mr. HOWE: I do not think I can tell hon. members that because there are some I myself have difficulty in finding; they move so frequently.

Mr. HOMUTH: I have one more sug-New industries springing up for the manufacture of munitions or whatever it may be, have a tendency to go to establishments that for some months have been working on similar contracts and offer exceptionally large wages or salaries to key men in these plants. The result is to disorganize the whole labour market. As I have said before in this chamber, I do not care how much a man gets; I like to see him get all he can; nevertheless we have to see that industry is not disorganized. I am not sure but that the minister should have some power to say to an industry, "You must not by the offer of an excessive salary, take a man from another plant, which is working on something equally important and thereby disorganize that plant. I realize this is a drastic suggestion, but I believe something like it should be done even by way of warning.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): A moment ago I asked a question in reference to publicly owned plants. I am not clear as to the latter part of the minister's explanation. He said that these were something the same as the Valcartier or Lindsay arsenals, except that a company of specialists not available by direct hire were operating them. Would the minister elaborate that? If the government erects a plant and a group of specialists is in charge, what is their relation to the minister? Are they paid by salary? What is the relation between such a plant and the Department of Munitions and Supply?

Mr. Howe.]

Mr. HOWE: Suppose we build a plant for the production of nitro-cellulose, a highly technical product. The only people in Can-ada who know how to make it are Canadian Industries Limited. We therefore make a management arrangement with Canadian Industries Limited to produce nitro-cellulose at this plant. The payment to them is worked put on the basis of a fraction of a cent a pound produced. That rate is arrived at, having regard to the overhead, that is the service that Canadian Industries Limited must provide to operate the plant. In other words, it is a management fee, and is paid them because they happen to be experts in the technique of that operation. Similarly, if we are making a complicated acid, we may make a management arrangement with someone who is expert in the making of acids and is in a position to handle the job as we could not possibly do by drawing on the technical resources of Canada.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Do I understand that the government pay all the costs and then pay a fraction of a cent on each pound of product?

Mr. HOWE: The government owns the plant. It pays a management fee. When I say so much a pound, it sounds a great deal, but it is almost an infinitesimal rate. We buy certain services of a corporation which is able to render those services, but I assure my hon. friend that it is a very reasonable fee.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Does the government hire the labour?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Has the department any branch which looks after the placing of skilled labour? For instance, some time ago I understand the minister made the statement that it would not be long before we ran short of skilled labour. I have men coming to see me wanting to know how they can get a job. One man, a mining prospector, a man of brains, says he will do anything. Is there some place that these men can go with a chance of success?

Further, in connection with tenders, deposits are required as evidence of good faith, also bonds are deposited as security for the performance of the contract. One man told me it was not fair that there should be delay in returning these cheques when the contract was let. He said there did not seem to be any finality; they would be kept waiting a month or two after they were pretty sure someone else had the contract, to get the cheque back. He did not want to take on any more work than he could do; he had that money outstanding, and just waited until he got it back.

Mr. HOWE: A certified cheque is not always necessary. On the more important contracts a deposit in the way of a bond or certified cheque is required with the tender. Tenders are dealt with as expeditiously as possible, and of course when a tender is accepted, all other cheques are returned. The cheque of the successful tenderers is kept as a surety. But there have been instances where it took some time to close the matter. Often we buy for another government, and the tender has to be referred to that government for There have been delays, confirmation. although they are getting fewer all the time. The department does make a real effort to deal expeditiously with tenders and returns the cheques as soon as possible.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): And what about the skilled labour?

Mr. HOWE: I think the Department of Labour has elaborate machinery for dealing with the placement of labour, through employment offices located at key points throughout the country. I understand most employers use that service. Of course we in Canada have always felt, as I still feel, that labour is a free agent and that no coercion should be used upon it. In connection with moving from one employer to another, I realize that some dislocation is caused by one firm stealing the employees of another, but there again I say it has always been my view that labour should be free to work where it will.

Mr. LOCKHART: I do not want to bring hypothetical cases to the attention of the minister. I want to refer to actual matters with which I believe the minister can deal under the great latitude he is given in this bill. I have in mind certain mechanical equipment largely manufactured in Canada by plants established here before the beginning of the war, in connection with which it has been found necessary to secure certain parts outside Canada. For instance, we hope to be manufacturing large quantities of tanks in this country at an early date. A question has arisen with regard to the painting of these tanks. When you paint a tank with the idea of reducing the visibility, you cannot use two kinds of paint, and some difficulty may arise in that connection.

In the light of the statement made by the Minister of Labour to-day, in which he expressed disappointment because less employment had developed than was expected, it seems to me that under the powers given the Minister of Munitions and Supply, he might very easily arrange to have certain small equipment produced rapidly in Canada rather than go out of Canada to obtain it.

There is another plant of which I have knowledge, producing mechanical equipment for which there is dire need, being held up by a lack of certain small bearings. I appreciate that this also involves the British supply ministry; but the equipment is being manufactured in our factories, and I hope under this measure the minister will have sufficient power to deal with little questions of this kind so that equipment urgently needed may not be held up for three weeks or more. I trust the minister will utilize every available industry, under the powers he is given here, so that I may not again hear a report such as the one that reached me this week-end, of a thriving industry which laid off fifty men last week. I am sure if the minister would allow his men to go into such little details, a great deal could be done to expedite the manufacture of these essential supplies. These are small matters, perhaps, but they all mean employment. I hope the minister will keep these things in mind, and I should be very glad to give him full details of these matters if he would care to have them.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to say just a word or two in reference to the minister's reply to the hon. member for Weyburn with regard to the management of these publicly owned plants. I realize that under the circumstances such technical skill as is required in many of these plants may be very difficult to locate in this country, and that possibly the minister had no alternative than to follow the policy which he adopted. However, it seems to me it may ultimately be a dangerous policy. The government build the plant, put in the machinery and pay for everything. Then they ask another organization, another company producing the same article, to come in and run that plant. Obviously then the country is at the mercy of this company; and when the war is over, we shall have an agitation to turn over a great deal of property to private interests. That is exactly what happened in Great Britain after the last war. The government there muddled along for nine or ten months, I think from August to May, before even forming a ministry of munitions. Then they formed that ministry, and got munition factories operating on a scale that could never be approached by private companies. But when the war was over, the whole thing was turned over to a private organization, and when the present war began they were in just about the same mess as that in which they found themselves in 1914.

Undoubtedly it is difficult to get experienced men for these positions, but I do not think it is impossible. While we may have to accept management of this kind, I think the government should lose no opportunity of finding suitable men to take over, who would be in the employ of the government itself, who would have no other outside interest. In that way we would hold for the country its plants and their equipment.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Perhaps the thing we lack most in our war production is skilled labour, and I believe that is one of the matters which will have to be gone into thoroughly before very long or, at the end of another nine months, we may find ourselves in the same position as we are in to-day. In my opinion our production of war materials is not satisfactory. Undoubtedly several factors may enter into that, but with the exception of raw materials I think one of the principal factors is the lack of skilled labour.

The Department of Labour has initiated a plan to encourage the training of skilled men. I have before me a schedule of labour conditions applicable to contracts for aircraft manufacture and overhaul awarded by the war supply board. Class "C" comprises workpeople of not less than eighteen years of age, inexperienced in aircraft manufacture, engaged in training for class "A" or class "B" production workers, the period of training not to exceed three months. These workers are paid 35 cents an hour. Class "D" comprises boys under eighteen years of age engaged in training for class "A", class "B" or class "C" production workers, the period of training to be for not less than three months or more than nine months. During the first three months' period these boys receive 20 cents an hour. During the second three months they receive 25 cents an hour, and during the third three months they receive 30 cents an hour. Labourers are paid 40 cents an hour. After that they may be promoted to the apprentice class, described as follows:

Apprentices (indentured, between the ages of 16 and 21 years) may be employed in the proportion of one apprentice to each five journeymen in the following trades: Fitters, machinists and sheet metal workers:

													Cent
First y	ear												20
Second	year.												25
Third y	ear												35
Fourth	year.												45

That is fairly good pay in the fourth year, but this is a long range plan covering a four year period, and I am quite satisfied that this is entirely the wrong technique to use. We have technical schools which will guarantee to turn out in four years people with not only mechanical skill but secondary education as well. They give them cultural education along with mechanical training. However, in this great time of rush and hurry, I do not think it is necessarily desirable to turn out skilled mechanics in all the crafts, because in these days of mass production a man has to be skilled in only one particular. I can see great dangers in this method of training, because some of the boys who go into what are known as the learner classes come right out of technical school, and after three or four years of training in those technical schools they are supposed to have some elementary knowledge of mechanics, and some information respecting the different crafts. When they come out of the technical schools, after the period of three or four years, they go into learner classes, with a schedule of from five cents to twenty cents.

A few days ago I understood the minister to say that none of those boys was on production. I believe he is wrong in that statement, because I have had the experience of going through one of the plants in questionand I should like to have it understood that I am not criticizing it particularly. I am offering suggestions in an endeavour to see if we cannot get a greater number of skilled workers in a less time, because we know the need is urgent. Some of those boys in the learner classes had worked only three or four months, and while they were in those classes they received the required wage, according to the schedule drawn up by the government. That is, they received ten cents or twelve cents an hour, and then they went into the apprentice class, their pay then jumping to twenty cents an hour.

The other night when I referred to these people I understood the minister to say that they were not on production. I believe he is in error when he makes that statement. Some of the boys in the apprentice classes are under the supervision of other skilled workers. All that is true, but in the other class into which they go they are absolutely working on parts which are used in the production of aeroplanes. They may be welding or fastening gasoline tanks, or fastening some part of an engine. The fact is, however, that the units they manufacture go into the production of the finished article.

I do not care who the manufacturer may be; when there is a manufacturer who has labour to which he does not pay more than twenty cents an hour, despite the fact that he is receiving a good price for his contract, I do not think the worker is being given fair treatment. There is no inducement under those circumstances to encourage other mechanics to come in.

Then, in connection with most of these classes of apprentices and learners I believe the age is too low. Over a long range plan it might be an excellent idea to start them between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years, but I am quite confident that there are hundreds of garagemen in Canada with a good working knowledge of mechanics who could go into those learner classes and who in two or three months would be skilled sufficiently in one particular operation to take an active part in the production of aeroplanes.

A few days ago I received from the principal of a technical school a letter in which he states, in part:

To become a skilled worker in my opinion a four-year apprenticeship course is still necessary.

He is speaking there of both cultural and mechanical training. He continues:

It is true that a short course of a few months will teach an individual one particular skill, and in an emergency case such can be done. However under the present existing emergency students from technical schools can and are being trained for particular lines in the apprenticeship scheme in two months to fit themselves for production of aeroplane parts.

I believe the plan outlined by the government is a long range plan. But it certainly does not take one year, two years, or three or four years for these men to become efficient in one particular skill. When they become efficient in that one particular skill and are working on aeroplanes or any other machinery of war, and become sufficiently qualified to work on production, they should be paid decent. wages. I say that because I believe the lowest. wage of a production worker on government scale is fifty-five cents, in any class. That is the lowest rate, and I understand it goes higher than that. When a workman reaches the stage where he is working on production. he should get fifty-five cents an hour.

I am not casting any reflection upon manufacturers, because I suppose they are in private industry to make profit. That is no doubt why they put these young chaps, who are receiving the apprenticeship wage of twenty cents an hour, to work in the manufacture of parts for aeroplanes or war machinery. They should be paying more, because they are getting a proper price for their product. I believe, if we are going to train mechanics, we could do it in a different way. We could have the assistance of technical schools throughout Canada. If it is necessary to start boys between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years—and it may be—then the instructors in the technical schools can give the necessary training for a period of one or two years. In the meantime the government should be availing itself of those mechanics now available in garages and factories not connected with war production. Those mechanics could be trained in one or two months, so that they would be in a position to play their part in the production of armaments.

One feature in connection with the apprentices who work at twenty cents an hour does not seem fair to me. So far as cost is concerned, the manufacturer enters into an agreement with the government. After consultation, prices for certain units are agreed upon. We will say that the price of a unit may be two dollars. If the company can cut the cost of that unit from two dollars to one dollar, then the government gives a bonus of from twenty-five cents to fifty cents. Therefore, instead of a cost of one dollar, the manufacturer may raise the cost to as high as one dollar and a half. It seems to me that this is a factor which induces the manufacturer to use as cheap labour as he can get so that he may cut the cost of manufacture of that unit, and receive his bonus.

I believe that is a wrong system. In fact I am very much in favour of one hundred per cent government control of those industries, and I feel confident that if in this great emergency the government would take control, it could double its output, and do it at a lesser cost. The time has come when we must get down to business. After all, we have been in the war for nine months, and have had a long range plan in view. Unfortunately, however, Hitler is not waiting for any long range plan; the longer we wait, the more he has us at a disadvantage. The longer we endeavour to carry on a long range scheme of training skilled mechanics, the more inefficient and ineffective we are going to become. The longer we fiddle along with the private manufacture of war materials, the worse off we shall be. Profit is the incentive of the manufacturer. I am not going to say there is no patriotism in their efforts; certainly I would not go so far as to say that; but I do say the chief motive of any manufacturer is profit. That is the point from which private industry operates, and I say the sooner the government takes over one hundred per cent control of such industry, the better off we shall be, and the more safe the people of Canada will become.

Mr. GILLIS: Mr. Chairman, I consider this section as pretty much the meat of the whole proposed amendment, and in this connection I have attempted on at least two occasions to discuss the right of workers in industry to organize. The other day I cited a specific case of discrimination in the newly created war industry of the John Inglis company, and I said that I was pleased to see the minister seeking a clarification and extension of his powers because I believed the proposed amendment would give him the necessary power to organize and carry on the job to its logical conclusion.

His answer to the question raised by the hon, member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas) puts the operator in a newly created war industry in the position of merely acting as agent for the government, and the government themselves are really the operators. May I ask what is the attitude of the minister and of the department with respect to seeking the cooperation of the employees in these industries through bargaining with them with a view to carrying on the industry in the best interests of the country? I am convinced that one of the most necessary things to the successful operation of industry is the cooperation of the workers themselves. I know that in basic industries in Canada workers are practically at war with the operators in eastern Canada, and in fact from one end of the country to the other. That of course comes within the province of the Department of Labour. But under this proposed amendment, the Minister of Munitions and Supply, in those industries that are created under his department, will be able to operate from the angle of both the operator and the employee, and

I would ask the minister what his attitude is in connection with the workers in those industries.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, I took the remarks which my hon, friend made the other day very seriously indeed. I investigated every allegation he made, and I find that the statements he made in that case have no foundation in fact, if I can believe the facts as stated to me by responsible officers of the government. I am told by our own mennot by the Inglis company men-that the John Inglis company has a good many trade unionists working in that plant. I am told that the company have stated publicly to our own officers that they had no objection whatever to their workers being organized by responsible union leaders, and I do not think they intend that word "responsible" to be restrictive, particularly. They did say that they did not consider it their business to organize the workers, but they had no objection to the workers organizing if they cared to do so.

I looked into the particular case my hon. friend mentioned in the house. I think it is very unfair to mention a man's name or a firm's in the house, but I can say that the reason why the man was not employed at this plant and is not employed to-day is not the reason that was given in this house. If I did not think it was necessary to protect the man himself, I would be very glad to give the committee the reason why he is not employed with the company to-day and why he was relieved of his employment there.

I want to say this: It seems to me a popular sport in this house, particularly among hon, gentlemen immediately opposite, to rise in their places and slander the John Inglis company. Let me say that the John Inglis company is playing a part in this war second to none. At the present time they are producing Bren guns some six months ahead of schedule. At the end of the calendar year there is every indication that they will be as far ahead as they would normally have been in the second year under their contract. So much for the Bren gun operations.

The John Inglis company happened to be low bidders on boilers for certain boats. There again they are ahead of their contracts on deliveries. I was told by our inspector that of all the equipment plants he visited, as far as boilers were concerned, this particular plant was the only one that was ahead of schedule.

Again, in munitions plants I have seen special heavy machinery, specially designed for the purpose, with the name "John Inglis Company" on it, and I suggest to every hon. member in every part of the house that this practice of ridiculing, deriding and attempting to injure the standing of the John Inglis Company should cease. It is not in the interests of the prosecution of Canada's war effort.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister is imputing motives when he says there is an endeavour to injure this plant.

Mr. DONNELLY: What are you doing?

Mr. COLDWELL: I think I have the floor, if the hon. gentleman understands ordinary procedure. When a case as well authenticated as the one in question was brought to the notice of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), who took no part in the Bren gun controversy, he brought it into the house in good faith. He was not taking pot shots at the John Inglis Company or trying to undermine its war effort. He was simply carrying out his duty as a member of parliament, representing as he does organized labour. I might add that the same story that he recounted here was given to me by one of the union officials as far back as last February, and I am surprised to learn that the minister has found that there is nothing in the allegations made. Why then, if there is nothing in the allegations, do they require a man to state on his signed application form whether or not he is a member of an organized labour union? They have, so far as I know, recognized no union in their plant. It seems to me the minister might make a further investigation into this matter before coming to such a definite conclusion regarding it.

Mr. HOWE: This government has labour officers and a Department of Labour, and I would ask the hon. member for Cape Breton South if he ever asked the labour officers of this government as to the situation in the Inglis plant.

Mr. GILLIS: This case was handed to me and I made that clear when I spoke. Hansard of last Friday will show that I never mentioned the war effort of the John Inglis Company. I know absolutely nothing about that, and I did not attempt to discuss it. What I attempted to discuss was their attitude with respect to permitting their employees to carry out the laws of this country and engage in collective bargaining. That was the only angle I attempted to discuss, and all the information I have on that question I am absolutely sure of. If the Minister of Munitions and Supply gets in touch with the Department of Labour, he will find that this question was taken up as far as it could be with the Department of Labour, and they could not do anything about it. Accompanied by a responsible union official from Ontario I discussed the matter with the deputy minister of labour, and I am absolutely certain that the matter has gone as far as it could go in that direction. As the Minister of Munitions was asking the clarification and extension of his powers, I thought I would bring the matter to his attention to see if something could not be done under his administration. I repeat, I am absolutely sure of the statement I made. I made no attempt to discuss the company's war effort, but from the information I had, the company had absolutely ignored the laws of collective bargaining. There has been a great deal of correspondence between the Department of Labour and recognized union officials in Ontario with regard to the fact that there has been absolute discrimination.

As to the case I cited here, we did not know why the man was dismissed, and the company absolutely refused to say why he was dismissed. My information is that the Department of Labour have been refused an explanation as to why he was dismissed. If the matter is confidential, the union officials, at least, should have been informed. This union official made the statement in my presence to an official of the Department of Labour that if the company are prepared to divulge the reason why this man cannot be employed, and the explanation is a reasonable one, so far as the union are concerned the matter is at an end. But at the present time the man is under a cloud; he has a family, and they have the right to an answer of some kind from people who are carrying out government contracts. There was absolutely no intention on my part to scandalize anyone or to discuss things of which I knew nothing. I was pretty sure of my ground when I attempted to discuss the other angle, and I am satisfied that as regards that question I was right.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have not mentioned the John Inglis company during this session—

Mr. HOWE: I was referring to a popular sport in this house.

Mr. MacINNIS: -so I cannot be accused of trying to injure the company or to retard the productive effort of the company in connection with the war. But the answer which the minister gave to the hon, member for Cape Breton South is a mere quibble. I do not say that the minister is quibbling, but I know, however, that every employer of labour who refuses to recognize trades unions professes that he is perfectly satisfied to have his employees belong to a union. belong to a union in the same way as one belongs to the Lions or the Elks or the Buffaloes or any of the animal tribes that men belong to; but you must not bring your union into questions of employment of any kind, and without that right the mere recognition of a union is worth nothing.

There is only one kind of recognition which is of any value, and that is where the employer bargains collectively with the union through its accredited and elected representatives. That is what we mean by recognition of the union. That is what we mean when we ask, does this company recognize the trades unions? Without that form of recognition we would not have any effective trades unionism at Without it, there is not a shred of democracy in industry; for the boss says "Go" and you go; he announces what is the cause of your discharge; he lays down the amount of pay and the rules of discipline. That is the kind of thing which should not be allowed in a country which is supposed to be fighting for altogether different principles. Unless we see to it that those principles apply to the lowest, the poorest, the most helpless in the community, they are not worth much. People in authority are able to help themselves. It is for the helpless we ought to provide safeguards because they need our help. I am convinced that the government should not award a contract to any firm or individual without a proviso that in all matters pertaining to wages and conditions that firm must deal with the recognized union of the trade.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I want to make it abundantly clear that I am not to be included in the observation of the minister when he said that it was a pet sport, particularly of the opposition, to take pot shots at the John Inglis company. This is the first time that I have mentioned the name of that firm. In rising to make two or three observations before the section is carried, my motive is not to harass the minister or in any way to slow down the war effort, which I am anxious to expedite in every way possible. I desire only that one or two observations may be on record, so that officials of the minister's department, who no doubt go carefully over the record of our proceedings, will be a little more cautious in their work and be enabled, perhaps, to avoid the recurrence of certain incidents.

I have in mind one specific case which I wish to bring to the attention of the minister, and which probably comes under section 6, paragraph (d) of the bill:

. . . to purchase or otherwise acquire and to sell, exchange or otherwise dispose of, any real or personal property. . . .

And so on. I may say that I have yet to make any request of the Department of Munitions and Supply. I do not purpose to advise them in any way unless it be to help them to expedite the work they are doing. I have even hesitated to take up the minister's time with regard to the case I am going to recite. I am not criticizing the minister in any way or, in making the following recital, am I criticizing the department, but I am asking those charged with the responsibility of the different branches to be very careful in awarding contracts.

In the case I have in mind, tenders were called for the erection of a depot in the city of Toronto for the storage of supplies. A price of $130,000 was put in by the H. A. Wickett company. It was rumoured that they were the successful tenderers. This was of course unofficial, but I mention it because, in the Daily Commercial News under date June 12 it was reported that the H. A. Wickett company was said to be the lowest tenderer for this particular building. This company has been established in Toronto for some sixty years. They are the contractors who built. for example, the Ford hotel, the Windsor Arms hotel, and a small village for the Ontario hydro electric commission; in fact they have done a great deal of work, running into many millions of dollars, in that area. It so happens that the place where they carry on business is within three or four hundred yards from where this depot is to be built. My information is that they were the low tenderers, that they are quite capable of doing a real job, and indeed that they are peculiarly well equipped for this particular kind of work, as it has been their forte for over fifty years. Nevertheless, I am given to understand, a concern with its head office in Winnipeg has got this particular job. There may be reasons for that, but the transaction does not inspire confidence in our Department of Munitions and Supply; and if the reasons are valid and the disclosure will not embarrass this company, I believe they ought to be given. I raise this point because it will be readily understood how embarrassing it is for an old-established company that in the Daily Commercial News it is reported, unofficially of course, to have got a certain contract, and two or three days later it appears that another firm has received the contract. Such things are detrimental to the interests of the particular concern.

I do not say that improper influence was exerted upon the department, but may I remark to hon. members of this committee that no member, on whichever side of the house he sits, should bring any influence to bear in order to switch a contract from one firm to another. For members of parliament to race down to the Department of Munitions and Supply to try to get work for particular firms in their districts is, to my mind, not fair to Canada's war effort. It is quite all right to vouch for firms, to say they are reliable people, that they are well-equipped and can do a real job. It is our duty to pass on such information to the government to assist it in every possible way. But it is certainly not the duty of hon. members to influence the switching of contracts in any particular direction.

While I am on my feet I will make one other observation, although it might come more properly under section three:

The minister shall have authority to engage or make use of the services of any person, firm, corporation . . .

And so on. It is in regard to the loading up of the civil service with staff of all kinds. I do not want to bother the minister so much as the organization looking after personnel in cooperation with the civil service commission. I suggest that we do not load the civil service commission for generations to come with hundreds of employees. This year the employees in the Department of Agriculture have increased from 1.952 to 1.995: auditor general's department the same; civil service commission, from 160 to 178; external affairs, from 156 to 175; finance, from 1,124 to 1,128; fisheries the same; insurance, from 50 to 51; justice, from 966 to 1,157; the next half dozen about the same; a small increase in the post office from 10,790 to 10,975; Prime Minister's office, from 16 to 18; privy council, from 19 to 20; public works, from 1,754 to 1,771, and so on. I can understand some of these departments requiring extra personnel, but I cannot understand the Department of Public Works, of all departments, having an increase in civil service personnel. The personnel of the public works department, the architects branch and all the other branches looking after public buildings could be switched over to look after buildings required for the munitions and supply branch, including airports, aerodromes all across the country, and so on. Putting more personnel into these departments and making provision for them under the Civil Service Act, at the same time leaving the Department of Public Works with an increase this year, is something that should be given consideration by those charged with the engaging of personnel in the branch known as munitions and supply.

Mr. ROEBUCK: I wish to make one observation with regard to the John Inglis company. That firm is located in my constituency. Their office is within a few blocks of my own law office. I live in the same town. I have come into touch with the company a good deal owing to the fact that so many people ask me to try to get them on the staff, and the real objection I hear against the John Inglis company is that they do not employ more men rather than that they should employ less, because they have had a very large number of applications-some 12,000 a few months ago. In view of the criticism of the company, I think it is only fair to say that I am in a position to know of any objections made against the company, and I have heard none. I do not profess to know the details of the incident to which my hon. friend has referred, nor am I omniscient in the way of information concerning objections, but it is worthy of note, in considering the attitude of the company, that the management do protest violently against any charge that they are opposed to unions. I take them at their word, and I do know that, situated as I am close to them, their factory being in my riding, I have never yet heard an objection against their employment practices.

Mr. MacNICOL: I feel that the minister should withdraw the remark he made a moment ago when he referred to "hon. members directly opposite" and accused them of taking pot shots at some company. The "hon. members directly opposite" the minister have cooperated this session with the government and with ministers on every possible occasion, and I do not know of any attack made by any member of the group directly opposite the minister upon any company in Toronto or anywhere else during this session.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): The old section says that the minister shall have authority to control or supervise and, if authorized by the governor in council, to procure, purchase and acquire and enter into contracts and so on. That is provided in paragraph (b). In the new section the minister shall have authority to buy or otherwise acquire, manufacture or produce or otherwise dispose of, and so on. Under the old section the approval of the governor in council was necessary before the minister could make purchases, but that has been left out. In section 8, if the minister enters into contracts of over $5,000 he must have the approval of the governor in council, but I understand that would apply only to munitions. What about the purchasing of land? That would not come under this section, and since the clause requiring the consent of the governor in council has been taken out, anything not having to with a contract such as I have mentioned would not come under this section and therefore the minister himself would be the final authority. Is that correct?

Mr. HOWE: I am not sure whether it is in the bill, but by regulation any transaction involving the expenditure of $5,000 or more requires an order in council.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Even if the minister were disposing of something rather than buying?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: In section 6 giving the minister authority "to buy or otherwise acquire", does that authorize him to take property which the owner might wish to withhold? Does it give the power of expropriation?

Mr. HOWE: He might buy or rent or perhaps exchange.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Or expropriate?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. It is the ordinary term— "buy or otherwise acquire."

Mr. MacNICOL: Will the minister set up some branch under him to do that sort of work, as I suggested had been done in South Africa, or is the department going to try to carry on that activity itself?

Mr. HOWE: The department does the best it can. It is decentralizing the work as much as it can, delegating it to corporations [Mr. MacNicol.]

where the work is adapted to management by a company; but all activities of the department are carried on through the department.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): The minister might be kind enough to answer the question I raised touching the policy with regard to contracts.

Mr. HOWE: I happen to know about the Wickett contract. The matter was referred to me for personal decision. The particular depot was urgently required on a certain date and the tenders were very close. There was a little doubt about the ability of the firm mentioned to carry the contract through on time. There was no doubt about the next bidder who happened to be one of the largest contractors in Canada. It was given to that contractor because we felt certain he would carry it through on time. Mr. Wickett called on me and duly protested, and as one old builder to another I said. "You have lost contracts before and so have I; there are more coming; you will get your share." We just did not care to take a chance on a contractor whose capabilities we did not know when there was another whose capabilities we knew very well, for a rush job urgently required for military purposes.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I appreciate the minister's answer. When he says "we" I suppose he means the officers of his department. But if the officers had been a little more diligent in their research, they would have learned that this company was quite capable of doing a rush job on time. I think the minister himself, after having met the party concerned, is of the same opinion now. We will let it go at that, but I would not want to see any reflection on this particular company, and I do not think the minister means any reflection; it is just one of those things that happens in doing a big job. I put these observations on record so that the department will know that even though we are not worrying them, at the same time we are observing what is going on.

Mr. HOWE: I want to make it quite clear that I met Mr. Wickett for the first time in this connection. I had quite a chat with him; I know more about his capabilities now than I did then, but at the time I exercised what I thought was reasonable judgment.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Subsection 3 on page 4 of the bill gives the minister power to incorporate companies or corporations under the Companies Act. Has anything of that kind already been done? What would be the set-up, and the purpose of this type of procedure?

Mr. HOWE: As I have stated we have organized companies for certain purposes. We have a corporation established for the purpose of ensuring a supply of certain raw materials which come from abroad, from sources liable to interruption. It is the duty of this company to keep a sufficient amount of those supplies on hand so that if the source is cut off, we would still be able to carry on war activities which depend on that product. The company is composed of three or four business men of wide experience and high integrity; I think they would all commend themselves to the committee. The company has an experienced manager and has certain capital allocated to it by the government; it makes periodical reports to the government of its operations. It understands its job and does it.

We have another company which is purchasing machine tools, which are the bottleneck of most of the war supply industries. This company buys machine tools from Canadian sources as far as it can, from United States sources as it can. As it takes delivery of these tools, it has them installed in plants that are most suitable, the intention being to anticipate needs and shorten the time required to tool up when a certain type of production is called for. It has performed a very useful service. It is managed by first-class business men who understand that particular work.

Recently we have incorporated a third company, as I have mentioned several times, to be responsible for the management and coordination of the government owned and operated plants that are making munitions and to be responsible for the business management of those plants.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Do I understand that the government brought these companies into existence, or did they exist prior to the war?

Mr. HOWE: No; they are incorporated and wholly owned by the government, and the president and directors are appointed by the government.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): And are responsible to the minister, and make annual reports to him; is that the idea?

Mr. HOWE: Quite.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Has the government stopped the export of iron, steel and scrap iron?

Mr. HOWE: We have appointed a steel controller who has complete charge of the import and export of any iron or steel product, and he is now in control of the situation.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Are we exporting any scrap iron?

Mr. HOWE: Not in the last few days anyway.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Have we exported any recently?

Mr. HOWE: I could not say; perhaps we exported a little and imported a little, but from now on Canadian scrap is very carefully controlled, and will be. The import or export of any steel scrap or steel finished product will be by permit of the controller, and I think we have the situation well in hand.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Will any more scrapiron be allowed to go to a foreign country?

Mr. HOWE: I think I can confidently say that it will not be allowed. We have cut down the export as much as possible; it is felt that scrap is something we need in Canada at the moment.

Mr. MacNICOL: That expression is something like, "Yes, we have no bananas."

Mr. COCKERAM: Would that include nickel to every country except the United States, and Great Britain of course?

Mr. HOWE: Nickel is regulated by customs export permits. The Department of Munitions and Supply has not attempted to regulate nickel.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Will copper be allowed to be exported to any country unfriendly to the British empire?

Mr. HOWE: That again is regulated by export permits. There are certain regulations covering the export of copper and any base metal. They are administered by the Department of National Revenue. I think none of it is exported to an unfriendly country.

Mr. COLDWELL: What about the exports from the Granby mine? The agreement was renewed recently whereby Japan takes practically all the product of that mine for the next three years. Has that not just gone ahead in the normal way after the government gave permission? And Japan is hardly a friendly country.

Mr. HOWE: Does my hon, friend say it is an unfriendly country? I hope not.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course the truth of the matter is that in days gone by and immediately prior to the war we permitted this sort of thing to go on. Now, when war is on us, we are endeavouring to, shall I say, cover up the evil by locking the door after the horse has been stolen.

Mr. COLDWELL: But we have not locked the door.

Mr. COCKERAM: I understand the minister stated lately that a controller of minerals has been appointed. Who has been appointed?

Mr. HOWE: It is Mr. Bateman; I think he is president of the Canadian mining institute.

Mr. GREEN: Why is the export of copper and nickel controlled by the Department of National Revenue, while the export of scrapiron is under the Department of Munitions and Supply?

Mr. HOWE: Scrapiron has been brought under the munitions and supply department recently because it is essential in the manufacture of war materials. There is only a limited amount produced here, and it is necessary to use pig-iron to make up the deficiency; pig-iron depends to some extent on imported ores, hence the desire not to use any more than is necessary.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is the minister taking any steps to organize the collection and shipment of scrapiron? As he knows, there are large quantities of scrap in the prairie provinces. Of course the trouble has been that prices have not warranted shipment of this material to the mills. I was wondering if anything had been done to organize that collection. I believe a real effort could be made in that way, since large quantities of excellent scrap steel remain on the prairies in spite of the fact that a good deal of it was exported prior to the commencement of the war.

Mr. HOWE: My hon, friend is quite correct. It has been drawn to my attention by an adviser on steel that it would be very helpful to the economy of Canada if a blast furnace could be put into operation in the prairie provinces, because there are these stores of scrap on the prairies. Unfortunately that has not been done. I am hopeful that it may be possible to do that at some time in the future, but in the meantime prices of scrap are fairly good and I imagine much of it is now moving to market.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Paragraph (e) of section 6 reads:

The minister shall have authority-

(e) to mobilize, control, restrict or regulate to such extent as the minister may, in his absolute discretion, deem necessary, any branch of trade or industry in Canada or any munitions of war or supplies;

Would it not be advisable to give this department complete control and authority over the export of copper, nickel and all other metals?

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Mr. HOWE: We think it is our duty to produce munitions of war. If control over these metals were necessary to permit us to produce those munitions, I would say that would be a desirable function of the department, but of course the production of those metals is far in excess of any use this department has for them. So I think the present practice of allowing the Department of National Revenue to control exports is the proper procedure. They have information that we could not possibly obtain.

Mr. MacNICOL: I presume section 7 can be discussed now. I really have very little to say about it, but I am glad to note that under this section the minister has practically all inclusive power. The section reads:

The minister shall have exclusive authority to buy or otherwise acquire, manufacture or otherwise produce, munitions of war or supplies and to construct or carry out defence projects—

And so on. I want to say that among manufacturers generally I hear favourable comments with respect to the minister; and I am happy to say that my own experience with him, merely by way of conversation with him, convinces me that he has many of the qualifications required to really do a great big job in putting Canada on a production basis to win this war. I am glad to say I have confidence in the minister. He has had a great deal of experience as an active engineer and builder, and in his experience he must have come in contact with many manufacturers and manufacturing plants. Because of that the country will now look to him, as it looks to no other member of the government, really to do something to put Canada in the forefront in the production of materials with which to win this war. We have all the natural resources necessary; throughout the country we have excellent plants that can be speeded up to do much more than they are doing now; we have the men, and now if the minister will take full authority under this section, Canada will do something it has not yet done since war broke out, that is, make available munitions and supplies not only to Canada but also to our allies in Europe.

Section agreed to.

Sections 4 to 15 inclusive agreed to.

On section 16—Power of governor in council under War Measures Act not restricted.

Mr. HOMUTH: Mr. Chairman, we can hardly turn the pages quickly enough to keep up with you.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I am a new member here, but this is a very important matter, particularly to British Columbia. I cannot turn the pages quickly enough to follow what is being done. We do not know what it is all about. After all, there is a war on.

Section agreed to.

On section 17—Coming into force.

Mr. NICHOLSON: May I ask why April 9 is mentioned in this section?

Mr. HOWE: That was the date of the order in council under the War Measures Act which gave the department authority. That is why the date is mentioned here.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

HON. T. A. CRERAR

BIRTH-DAY GREETINGS TO THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I understand this is the sixty-fourth birthday of my hon. friend the Minister of Mines and Resources. I should like to take this opportunity on behalf of every hon. member to wish him many happy returns of the day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Speaker, I cordially thank the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) for his remarks. I think the information he has given the house is correct. The years seem to pass with increasing rapidity. I should like to thank the house for the very kindly manner in which they have received the remarks of the leader of the opposition.

On motion of Mr. Crerar the house adjourned at 10.52 p.m.

Tuesday, June 18, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

EUROPEAN WAR

REQUEST OF FRANCE FOR TERMS—EMERGENCY MEASURES FOR ASSISTANCE OF BRITAIN AND DEFENCE OF CANADA

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this moment the German and Italian dictators are together considering the request of France for a definition of the terms of an honourable peace. Whatever is the outcome of the conference and the consideration of the inquiries of Marshal Pétain, it appears that effective French resistance on land will soon come to an end. Conditions are obscure. The eventual disposition of the French fleet and air force is at present unknown. The unprecedented offer of Great Britain to form a national union with France, with all the implications of common citizenship, common representation, common defence, and common economic control, has apparently met with a divided reception. The suggestion that Britain and France become the Canada of Europe must strike the imagination of this country. Whether or not it proves a peaceful solution for the present distress of France, it may yet contain the future hope of a peaceful Europe. To-day Mr. Churchill, with his usual thoroughness and blunt sincerity, reviewed the state of the war. Whatever may be the present fate of France, Britain will fight on. That decision is not only Britain's decision, it is also the decision of Canada.

No word of criticism will be found upon the lips or in the heart of any man who surveys with understanding the situation in which France found herself. With her original defences broken, the Maginot line outflanked, her industrial areas and her factories in the hands of the enemy, her troops without adequate food and munitions of war, the streets of her proud capital overrun by the legions of the invader, effective resistance by soldiers whose endurance and fortitude have added new glories to the French name was no longer possible.

We who know the spirit of France know also that, if her soldiers have surrendered to the inevitable, no soldiers in the world could have continued any longer to face the overwhelming odds against which she had battled with such courage. France will arise with a new strength and a new glory from the bloodstained soil on which, three times during the last seventy years, she has fought so gallantly. Her sufferings have been our sufferings. The hallowed French earth where our dead are buried and our proud memorial stands is a part of Canada. In a very real sense she is ours and we are hers. Her romance, her chivalry, her language and her ancient faith are an imperishable part of the Canadian heritage.

If she signifies these intimate and beloved things to a large portion of our people, to the world, to the world of free men she has always personified the eternal truths of democracy and all that belongs to the enfranchisement of the human spirit. A new dawn will follow the shadows of the night. The legions of freedom will yet march again through the Arch of Triumph to the strains of La Marseillaise.

It is for us at this time to consider the new situation in which we find ourselves. I have tried from time to time to forecast the new phases of the war which were obvious, perhaps, to any student of the march of events. To-day it is still necessary, indeed it is more imperative than ever, to examine the situation in its true perspective and to assess anew what may be necessary on Canada's part to meet the new demands.

The plain facts are that the defeat of France has brought the war much nearer home to Canada. The British isles are threatened with invasion not as a remote possibility but as an impending actuality. It is now wholly apparent that additional measures both for the assistance of Britain and for the defence of Canada are an essential.

The policy which the government announced at the outset of the war of assisting Britain by relieving her of the duty of protecting certain areas in this hemisphere, has been greatly extended in recent weeks. I pointed out in this house on September 8 last that-. . by contributing as far as we are able to the defence of Newfoundland and the other British and French territories in this hemisphere, we will not only be defending Canada but we will also be assisting Great Britain and France by enabling them to concentrate their own energies more in that part of the world in which their own immediate security is at in which their own immediate security is at stake.

Immediate measures were taken at that time to assist in the naval defence of Newfoundland. In the light of recent events additional responsibility has been assumed for the military defence of strategic areas there. I am pleased to be able to announce that Canadian armed forces are now on duty in Newfoundland. The house has already been informed of the contribution which Canada is making in the West Indies by replacing British troops with Canadian troops on garrison duty and thus relieving British forces for other duties. The government agreed some weeks ago to a request of the United Kingdom government that Canadian troops should assist in the defence of Iceland. The first contingent of a Canadian expeditionary force have already landed in Iceland. Further units have been detailed and will follow shortly. I need hardly point out the strategic importance not only to the security of the north Atlantic sea lanes but to the defence of this continent of maintaining control of Iceland.

The increased seriousness of the military situation abroad, and the marked expansion of all three branches of our armed services in Canada have served to arouse widespread interest and concern throughout the country regarding the raising and training of recruits. At the conclusion of my remarks the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power) will make a statement on what is now being done and what additional measures are proposed in connection with the recruitment of Canada's armed forces. A bill will be introduced in the house at once to confer upon the government special emergency powers to mobilize all our human and material resources for the defence of Canada. Although the purpose of this measure will be explained in detail on the second reading, I should like to make one or two brief observations regarding it.

So far as man-power is concerned, it will relate solely and exclusively to the defence of Canada on our own soil and in our own territorial waters. It will enable the government to make the most efficient use of our man-power for the varied needs of modern machine warfare. It is of the utmost importance to realize that success in war to-day depends upon the use of men for the kind of work for which they are best fitted. The armed forces are only a part of the essential equipment of war. The skilled worker in the factory, the transport worker and the farmer, to mention only a few, are as essential to the effective prosecution of war as the soldier, the sailor and the airmen. The mobilization of our resources will not, however, be confined to requiring the services of men and women. The government will have power under the provisions of the bill equally to call property and wealth, material resources and industry to the defence of Canada.

The bill is intended to remove any doubt as to the power of the government and the will of parliament that the whole material resources of the country should be available whenever they are required to meet the needs of the war. The operation of the measure will be confined to the period of the war.

Recruitment for service overseas will be maintained on a voluntary basis. No difficulty has been experienced and no difficulty is anticipated in raising by the voluntary system all the men required for service outside Canada. The bill to be introduced to-day in no way affects the raising of men to serve in the armed forces overseas. Once again I wish to repeat my undertaking, frequently given, that no measure for the conscription of men for overseas service will be introduced by the present administration.

A complete inventory of Canada's manpower and other resources, properly classified, affords a necessary basis for some of the further essential measures of home security and defence, which I have announced. A national registration of Canada's man-power will accordingly be instituted at once. Let me emphasize the fact that this registration will have nothing whatever to do with the recruitment of men for overseas service.

Among others, a national registration of Canada's man-power will have the following immediate advantages:

The national registration will constitute an additional precaution against "fifth column" activities such as sabotage and espionage which conceivably might become more menacing as external threats grow more serious. In this way, it will add to our internal security.

National registration will also provide the government with an inventory of the mechanical and industrial skill of our population. Such an inventory will prove valuable in affording additional information on the extent of our resources of skilled labour which can be drawn upon to meet the needs of essential wartime industries. It will also show the directions in which intensive industrial and technical training is most urgently needed to provide an adequate supply of labour to meet the growing demands of our war industries and other essential services.

I should like here to express the warm appreciation of the government of the valuable work already accomplished through the voluntary registration of women undertaken as a spontaneous contribution to the development of Canadian efficiency in wartime. The fullest use will be made of the results of the register now being completed.

It is the intention of the government also to establish without delay a new department of government to be known as the Department of National War Services, to be presided over by a minister of the crown. Since the war began, thousands of patriotic citizens have expressed a desire to engage in some voluntary war work. As the crisis has developed and will develop, there have come new obligations upon our citizens. The care and housing of evacuated children and of refugees, the provision of comforts for soldiers, economical use of food supplies, the launching of campaigns for war loans and contributions, agricultural developments, the attraction of tourists-these and many other matters demand organization and direction.

The purpose of the new department is not merely to coordinate the activities of existing voluntary war services. It will be entrusted with the duty of directing and mobilizing the activities of thousands of our citizens who are seeking practical and useful outlets for their enthusiasm and patriotism. Women's organizations, patriotic organizations, commercial organizations, and many other groups of men and women banded together in the national interest offer a vast field of activity for spontaneous service. The object of the new department is to help Canadians to help Canada by their free-will offerings, which have been so generously made and will be so generously continued. The minister charged with the duties of this department will be expected immediately to establish a dominion-wide organization of voluntary service, which will be assisted by branch committees in all parts of the country.

Finally, I wish to announce that for some time past I have been giving careful consideration to means whereby there might be included in the government additional ministers to assist in the direction of Canada's war effort, and whose presence in the ministry might serve to give still further assurance of the power of the government adequately to meet the increased responsibilities with which it is faced. Hon. members will realize that there are many considerations of which account has to be taken in any matter which concerns the personnel of a cabinet.

I might mention as not the least important of these considerations what is required of a minister of the crown in the way of a manysided experience in the conduct and management of public affairs.

An equally important consideration is whether the talents of leading executives and business men may not be used to greater advantage in high administrative posts, and in an advisory capacity with relation to particular services, than in the ministry and in parliament.

As the house is aware, my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) expects to bring down the budget before the close of the present week, and thereafter will assume his new responsibilities as Minister of National Defence. At the time that this transfer of portfolios is made, I expect to be in a position to announce the governmental changes and additions at present contemplated.

The situation which I have described, and the measures which I have indicated to meet it, require no further elaboration. The times are the most serious in our history. They hold in their keeping the destiny of Canada as a free nation. I do not doubt the ultimate result, but I realize how arduous and full of suffering may be the via dolorosa along which we must pass before the agony is ended. It is our manifest duty, as it is our unshaken determination, to use all our advantages, geographic. strategic and economic, to preserve liberty for ourselves and to help to preserve it for the British commonwealth and the other nations that yet are free. We must use them to help regain liberty for the victims of bloodthirsty tyranny. The British peoples, who taught the world the meaning of freedom, will defend it to the last. They have become the symbol, the hope and the guarantee of its continuance, and its restoration throughout the world. Endowed by the heritage of Britain and France, with pride in the strength of her youth and the righteousness of the cause, Canada faces what fate may bring with resolute confidence and unyielding determinathe leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) was kind enough to come with his colleague the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) who shares his seat, to my office to discuss the very critical situation which had developed over the weekend. My hon, friend came in a spirit of helpfulness to discuss measures which he thought ought to be brought into force immediately. He spoke particularly of the desirability of stating that an emergent condition exists at the present time which, to deal with effectively, required further action on the part of the government. He spoke to me about the desirability of complete mobilization of man-power and resources, and also made mention of the desirability of adding to the ministry some gentlemen whose names and ability and capacity, along with those who are in the administration at the present time, would help further to inspire general confidence throughout this country.

Before I take my seat may I mention to the house that yesterday my hon. friend

I mentioned to my hon, friends that I was not prepared to make a statement yesterday, because I had not the information with respect to the situation in Europe on which I would wish to base what I had to say; that I thought, as I mentioned to the house yesterday, it would be well to wait until the Prime Minister of Great Britain made his statement on the European situation before I should make a statement myself. I told my hon. friends, however, that all the measures to which they had made reference were matters that the government had had under consideration for some time. I said to them, what I have frequently said in the house, that there are times and seasons for all things; some matters can be dealt with in a manner which will be most helpful to the maintenance of national unity and security at one time which, were an effort made to precipitate them unduly, might defeat the very ends that we all have in common. I stated, however, that I would to-day without fail make a statement to the house of the measures which the government proposes to take to meet the emergent situation which has developed. What I have said this afternoon has been by way of carrying out that promise and the intention which I had at the beginning of the week.

I should like to express to my hon. friend, in the presence of hon. members of the house, my appreciation of the helpful and cooperative manner in which he and his deskmate met me yesterday in the discussion of these matters of great common concern.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to a notable statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). So far as I was able to follow him I take it he is determined that Canada, in common with the mother country, shall fight on. With that purpose I tell him that we, his majesty's loyal opposition, are in the most hearty accord.

As to our gallant ally, France, I could not find words as eloquent as those he used in which to express my sentiments with respect to the position in which France finds herself at this moment. Our hearts are all bleeding for her, and we hope the day will come, as he has prophesied, when she will rise again to take her place as a great nation among the civilized nations of the world.

With respect to the other subjects to which the Prime Minister has alluded, perhaps I may be permitted to refer to them at a later stage in the remarks which I now propose to make.

On Sunday night last there came through the air and over the wires news of the disastrous situation in Europe. On Monday morning we were informed by the press that the French had ceased fighting, and that the new French government was seeking terms of capitulation and surrender. I was impressed with the desirability, yea the necessity, of Canada doing something. Two courses I judged were open to me; either that I should on the opening of the house yesterday move the adjournment of the house to debate the matter as being one of urgent public importance; or that I should seek an interview with the Prime Minister, lay certain suggestions before him and ask him to adopt them. I want this house and the country to believe and appreciate that whether I had adopted the one course or the other, I was deeply moved by the tragic trend of events, that it had not been suggested to me by anyone, but that I was actuated solely by a deeprooted patriotic desire that Canada should rise to this supreme occasion. I had little time for conference with anyone. I did have the counsel of my friend and colleague who sits beside me, and I did consult with one or two others in the house, and with a friend who is a national figure in Canada but who is not affiliated with any political party. It was the consensus of all that I should not await the opening of the house and then move the adjournment to debate the matter. I myself thought that such a course would savour of party politics and partisanship, which is the last consideration in the world that would move me at this time.

Having regard to that decision I decided to seek and did seek an interview with the Prime Minister, in company with my colleague. We were unable to reach him until 12.30 yesterday. In approaching him I made it abundantly clear, first, that my action in seeking an interview with him was dictated not in any sense by political or party considerations but only by the terrible situation which had arisen; second, that the controlling thought and motive was that we should have immediate, concerted and extraordinary action for the defence of Canada and for the furnishing of maximum aid to the mother country in this her hour of travail. I also made it quite clear that I was recommending principles rather than details of concerted action.

Specifically I recommended three things: first, that the government should declare that a state of national emergency exists in Canada—I shall allude to that again later; second, that this government propose now to take authority to mobilize all the man-power and all the material resources of this nation for the aid of the mother country and for the defence of Canada; third, that steps should be taken at once to strengthen the government by the immediate inclusion of some of the best brains, intelligence and ability in this country, not on the basis of a truly national government.

I told the Prime Minister in conclusion that if these things were not done, if they were rejected, I reserved the right to appeal to the house and to the nation so that the reaction of public opinion, about which I had no manner of doubt in the world, might be brought to bear on the government to adopt these principles and do the things I had indicated, having regard to the extremely critical situation which had arisen.

At the moment the Prime Minister did not accept my proposal. We debated the matter at some length. He advised me that he had no official news or confirmation of the position in France, as he has to-day indicated; that Mr. Churchill, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, would speak in the British House of Commons this morning; that it was hoped that in twenty-four hours the exact position with respect to France would be clarified and that Mr. Churchill's statement to-day would clarify the position of Great Britain. The Prime Minister then and there requested me to delay the whole matter for twenty-four hours, and that he would make a statement in the house to-day. We left him at 1.05 p.m., promising to consult our colleagues. We did so before the house met at three o'clock, and the consensus of my colleagues in this group was that we had done the right thing in seeking the interview with the Prime Minister, and further that we should wait the twentyfour hours asked for.

The result is known. The house met yesterday and I contented myself with merely asking the Prime Minister if he had any statement to make to the house and the country at that time. You heard his reply. I hope that what I did will meet with the approval of the house and the country; I think I could do no less.

Now, what did I propose? First I proposed a declaration of the existence of a state of national emergency. In our War Measures Act we have no corresponding phrase. They have it in England, and it is coupled with supreme power vested by statute in the government to do anything and everything necessary for the safety of the state. We may have given the government that power now by the War Measures Act, but I doubt it; and if there is any doubt it can be removed by this parliament, on the initiative of this government, in two hours' time. I hold in my hand an abstract from the British Emergency Powers Act, passed May 22, 1940. I propose to read only one paragraph:

1.—(1) The powers conferred on His Majesty by the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939 (hereinafter referred to as the "principal act") shall, notwithstanding anything in that act, include power by order in council to make such defence regulations making provision for requiring persons to place themselves, their services, and their property at the disposal of His Majesty, as appear to him to be necessary or expedient for securing the public safety, the defence of the realm, the maintenance of public order, or the efficient prosecution of any war in which His Majesty may be engaged, or for maintaining supplies or services essential to the life of the community.

A declaration of a state of national emergency means much more than just a question of the powers of the government. It has a psychological significance as well, in my opinion, and a meaning that I would impress upon the government, the house and the country. Among other things it means that this government would realize to the full the responsibilities resting upon it to do its utmost for the safety and preservation of the state and for the aid of the mother country, but it means far more than that. It means that the country, the people of Canada-more particularly those of our citizens who have not a full appreciation of the serious situation confronting us-shall be shaken out of their inertness and complacency and shall be made to feel that this country, this empire and especially our beloved mother country are facing the supreme test for our and her existence and all that it stands for, I venture to think that there is still a large element in our population who are not yet impressed with this serious position, and I would bring it home to them by such a declaration on the part of the government. Their number, I am sure, is rapidly diminishing, yet I feel certain that such a declaration would serve a useful and a patriotic purpose. I suggest that the government should do this: warn the country, warn the complacent elements in this country, that there must and shall be concentrated national service.

My second proposal followed naturally from the first, advocating that the government ask parliament at once for authority, enabling legislation to mobilize the man-power and all the material resources of the nation for the safety of the state, for the defence of Canada and for the utmost aid to our mother country. We can do no less. We all love Canada. Irrespective of race, class, religion or political proclivities there is not one of us who would not lay down his life, give his last dollar or perform any service for the state at this time of national peril. This country may be invaded by a ruthless enemy within a short time. What position are we in to defend ourselves? None whatever. Without the British navy we are helpless. The responsibility is the government's and the government's alone. It has not the power to-day effectively to defend Canada. I hope it will have that power when this bill is introduced and passes this house. Has the government the will to defend Canada? I believe that now it has. Then let the government arm itself with all the authority necessary, which to-day at least it does not possess. It is true that we have the Militia Act, section 8 of which provides for liability to military service, while section 64 provides that the government may place the militia on active service in Canada and elsewhere. In my view as a legal man that is not quite sufficient. Apparently the government have arrived at the same conclusion, hence the bill which is to be introduced. It is true that the Militia Act goes a long way, and I have heard it argued that the powers contained therein are quite sufficient for every purpose because they provide for the sending of the militia outside of Canada. But nowhere does the law provide for the mobilization of the material resources of the country, the wealth, the industry and the resources of Canada. The government's duty is to ensure the defence of this country. In doing that in some degree at least it will be aiding the mother country.

What is Canada's war effort after more than nine months as a belligerent? For eight months it was pitiful. Since the house met the force of tragic events overseas, the voice of public opinion, the efforts of this party within this house, all have combined to urge the government to greater action. Some progress has been made. In terms of dollars and cents it is made to look impressive, but it is all in the future. I make no recriminations, beyond that, over the lack of action during the first eight months of the war. That is past. It is the immediate future that demands our attention. The government must give leadership, and to give leadership it must be armed with authority which in my view it does not at present possess. To-day it is taking authority in large measure in regard to the particular matters to which I referred, and we shall help the government. We all rejoice that they have gone as far as they have. The responsibility is theirs alone. We offer our wholehearted cooperation, but the lead must come from the government.

On the third point I desire to make it clear that in my opinion the ministry must be strengthened. There are vacancies now existing which must be filled. I cannot accept the view that because of the recent election we have a national government. We have a party government, moved by party considerations, motivated by the party spirit. The result has been that while one-half of the nation is to be called upon to pay, to fight, and, it may be, to die, that half has nothing to say about how our defence shall be carried on. That is not national unity. It is quite the reverse, and in a time of national peril should not continue.

I am not advocating a union government as we had it in the last war; I am advocating a truly national government, to be formed by this administration, with representation from among the best in this house and in the country, and for concerted national effort, so that this nation may present a united front to the common enemy. It was necessary in Britain. It was necessary in two other great sister dominions. It is necessary here. If it does not come, if this government does not move to accomplish this end, this country will not function as it should if we are to present a common front, if we are successfully to defend ourselves. What an electrifying effect such an action would have on the Canadian public, on our neighbours to the south, who are so sympathetic-indeed anxious; and what an effect it would have on Britain!

I beg the Prime Minister, I beg the members of the government, to unite this country under a truly national government. He and they alone can do it. Theirs is the responsibility. Theirs is the power. We can but indicate our readiness to cooperate, as I have done many times. But if they will not give heed, then I appeal to the great voice of public opinion in this house and in the country.

The hour has struck, the time is here. Let us be, in fact and in deed, a united country, banded together for a common purpose,—the defence of our homes, our loved ones, our nation, and our mother country. Anything else will not do.

Before taking my seat I should like to say a word with respect to the Prime Minister's proposals. He was good enough to send me a summary of the announcements he has made to-day. Of some of them we were already aware, and to-day I believe we are to have a further detailed report from the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power) respecting the raising and training of recruits for the three armed services.

The Prime Minister has announced that a bill will be introduced to-day to empower the government to mobilize all the resources of the nation, human and material, for the defence of Canada. That is good; everybody will applaud it. Material aid to the mother country will come from it; that result cannot help following. The trend of events in Canada and in the struggle will indicate how much farther the government should go.

I am pleased to note that recruitment for overseas services will be continued. I hope the enforcement of national service in Canada will in no degree retard our contribution for overseas service. If the war is to cease on continental Europe I can quite understand that we shall not require to send as much manpower overseas. But there will still be great need for material things being sent over—there will be the need for food, clothing, and shelter for the aid and comfort of our people. There will be the need for munitions, and then more munitions, and then more munitions, from Canada.

The registration for national service is all right, but I am afraid it is three months too late. This cannot be done in a minute; it cannot be organized in the twinkling of an eye. It should have been undertaken before the house met in May last.

I am pleased to note that the Prime Minister proposes to set up a new department of government to be known as the Department of National War Services. May I suggest to him that there should be set up an inner war cabinet from among the best of the members of his government, a cabinet which will not be charged with the responsibility of administering departments, a war cabinet whose functions it will be to examine all the facts and to initiate policies on the part of the government, a war cabinet that will not be trammelled by the burdensome and onerous duties of administering important departments of government. I have in mind the position in which the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) is placed to-day. He is overburdened with the work of the greatest department this country has ever known. How can he possibly give attention to any question of war policy, when he sits as a member of the general cabinet? I submit this recommendation to the Prime Minister, in addition to those I have already made. I hope he will take it into earnest consideration, and that as a result there shall be set up in Canada a war cabinet similar to that which has been instituted in the old country, the members of which would be free from the trammels of departmental administration.

I suggest also that the government appoint a minister for overseas who will coordinate our activities over there with the activities of the mother country. We had such a minister in the last war. The provision did not immediately become operative, but it was effective in the later stages of the war, and should have been adopted at an earlier stage.

I am thankful to the Prime Minister, on behalf of the people I represent, for the measures he has already taken. Time, and the trend of events, will compel further action.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, we have felt for some time that the trend of events overseas-and particularly does this apply to the grave news which has reached us in recent hours-required more than general statements from the government regarding Canada's support and participation in the great struggle. We welcome, therefore, the pronouncements made this afternoon by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) the suggestions which have been placed before the house. The most important announcement, it seems to me, was that measures would be introduced for the immediate mobilization of our resources and our man-power in order that we may conduct more efficiently the war effort. I shall reserve my opinion of the proposed measures until I see them, because I believe the Canadian people ought to expect a guarantee from the government not only that the power will be taken to mobilize property and wealth, but that the power so taken will be used.

Listening to the discussion which took place last night in the house respecting the munitions and supply bill, I must say I was not satisfied with the answers to many of the questions which were put. They seemed to indicate that the government was engaged in the mobilization of certain industries in a form which would place certain private interests in a preferred position. We do not want that to occur, and any support we may give to the mobilization of our man power for economic and military purposes must be predicated upon the determination of the government to demand equality of sacrifice from those controlling large blocks of property and wealth. We have in our midst vast surpluses of wealth owned by various corporations under new forms of corporate ownership and control. That wealth has already been asked to contribute, at a rate of interest. I submit that if we are going to ask young Canadians to lay down their lives in the defence of our country, we should predicate that request upon a demand that owners of large volumes of wealth and of property should first place that wealth and property on the altar of Canadian sacrifice. That, Mr. Speaker, is the principal point I wish to make in that connection.

I wish also to say to the Prime Minister that in the minds of members on all sides of the house there are to-day many questions which we have refrained from asking on the floor of parliament because we did not wish to invite answers or to leave unanswered questions which might give aid and comfort to the enemy. But we are anxious, in view of the situation that has developed overseas, to know what in the event of certain eventualities this government and this parliament and this country would be prepared to do for the welfare of Canada. Those questions it seems to me ought to be answered. I have heard discussions in the city of Ottawa among newspaper men who seemed to know far more about the views of the government than we who are members of this house. Their views may be the result of rumours that are not well founded, but in any event the time has arrived when, in view of the situation overseas, this house should be taken wholly into the confidence of the government. I admit that certain information cannot be spread across the country through the public press, but at the risk of being misunderstood I repeat that the government should have a private sitting of the house in which many of the questions that are in our minds can be asked and answered so that we may know precisely where we stand.

The other matter that comes to my mind can be discussed better, I think, on the bill. Let me say this, however, before I take my seat. There is no group in this house which, our political and economic opinions being what they are, realizes better than we do the danger of a fascist victory. We know perfeetly well that the first victims of fascist aggression in every country have been the men holding the views that we of this group hold, and we can assure the Prime Minister that just as we have in past days viewed with alarm the desertion of collective security and the gradual drift towards war, so to-day we will cooperate with hon, members in all parts of this house to preserve freedom of thought, freedom to worship God as we will, freedom of association and freedom of expression—these freedoms upon which the civilization in which we live has been founded.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, in the special session held in September the group I represent was the only group in this country with courage and vision enough to come forward with the policy which is now advocated. We came forward with that policy definitely and unequivocally, although we suspected that the other parties would endeavour to use it to beat us to death—which they did. It will be realized therefore, sir, that we are prepared now to support this proposal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). But there are one or two matters which need to be pointed out with definiteness and emphasis at this stage of the game.

When we advocated this policy last year we specifically declared that we stood for the conscription of finance, industry and manpower, and we took pains to point out that the first of these must be finance. It is a most interesting thing that thus far finance has not figured prominently in the speech of the Prime Minister. Last year I pointed this out, that finance, industry and man-power are a three-legged stool, and if you bring in any one of them without the other two. you are bound to meet with disaster. That statement is as true to-day as it was when I made it last fall. Let us be forewarned-I say this not in any spirit of criticism or pessimism or defeatism—that the all-important thing with which to fight this war is money. It will do no good for the government to mobilize mines, shoe factories, sugar factories, munitions factories or any other factories unless the government knows where it is going to find the money with which to run them. It will do very little good to enlist hundreds of thousands of men unless the government knows where it is going to get the money with which to train and support and maintain those men.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member's speech, but he is dealing with what may come up later in the form of a resolution preceding a bill, and his remarks might more appropriately be made then.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I was going entirely, Mr. Speaker, by what the two previous speakers were permitted to say, but I shall comply with your request. I have said what I wish to say, with the exception of one statement which it is highly important should be made at this time. Unless this government discovers a source of money which is very large indeed, so that the money can run as freely as the goods and services of this country may run, and so that the money will not create a debt upon this country or an interest burden which future generations cannot carry, then all the measures which are proposed by the government to-day will be futile and will cause us more embarrassment than they will do us good.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, to support the government in the conduct of the war. Above all things we must win this war, but to win the war takes more than talk.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must point out to hon. members that there can be no further discussion on this subject because at the moment there is nothing before the chair. I therefore ask that the discussion now cease, and the house will proceed to the order for motions.

STATEMENT OF POSITION WITH REGARD TO ENLIST-MENTS AND RECRUITING IN CANADA

Hon. C. G. POWER (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement to the house as to the position with regard to enlistments and recruiting in Canada.

Canada has now approximately 110,000 men actually under arms and in uniform. These are divided broadly as follows:

 Outside of Canada, including Great Britain, army.
 26,087

 26,087

 Canada, army.
 64,656

 Navy.
 7,256

ing in all to about 30,000 men.

Recruits are now being enlisted at the rate of approximately 800 per day. The whole situation with regard to recruiting these troops has been reviewed over the week-end and instructions issued to intensify activity. I am able to say on the authority of the department of supply that we can at the present moment provide clothing, personal equipment and rifles for 1,200 men per day. As a matter of fact yesterday 1,463 men were enlisted and looked after.

In addition to the 30,000 men the raising of whom was authorized by the late Mr. Rogers, a survey of the field in the light of the war situation, recently developed and still developing, clearly indicates the need of a call for further Canadian active service force recruiting to replace troops taken and to be taken for special duties in Canada and elsewhere, and for forestry and railway troops, as well as corps troops for reinforcements.

Whilst it is impossible to forecast what these requirements will be, authorization was given over the week-end to provide equipment for an additional 40,000 men in addition to the 30,000 men now coming in.

It will be remembered that the veterans home guard has been formed as a corps of the non-permanent active militia, and numbers of that guard can be readily increased as circumstances may justify. The veterans' home guard reserve is also, it will be remembered, part of the non-permanent active militia, and in fact the non-permanent active militia units are made responsible for its discipline and training.

Meanwhile, authority has been given for all the infantry non-permanent active militia units which have not been mobilized to carry on their training in the local headquarters and to recruit to their respective establishments, subject only to the limitation of training facilities.

Similar steps are being taken with respect to certain non-permanent active militia units other than infantry.

Training accommodation and instructional staff will obviously be limited in some cases, but the districts are being instructed to assist in improvising training accommodation and augmenting instruction staff as far as that may be found possible.

From the beginning of the war our militia units have been recognized and dealt with as being the backbone of Canada's defence organization and, as is known, the units of the first, second and third and fourth divisions are all being mobilized, based on existing non-permanent active militia units.

The government intends to follow that policy and has been gratified by the response and by the support which has been given by the officers and other ranks of these militia units.

As has already been stated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the government is taking full authority to mobilize the man power of Canada for the defence of Canada. Every ablebodied man in Canada will be given an opportunity of training in the use of arms, so as to come to the defence of the homeland if necessary. The procedure will be that men will in due course be called up for a period of training so as to be prepared for the active defence of this dominion. The training, after due consideration for the requirements of the naval and air forces, will be entrusted to units of the non-permanent active militia which will be recruited voluntarily or filled under the powers of the new legislation according as the facilities for training and accommodation permit.

The length of the period of training will be determined by regulation. Whether this will be for a continuous period of three months or for a lesser time depends: (a) on the advice of the technical officers of the department; (b) on the requirements of industrial and productive man-power as shown by a survey to be immediately undertaken.

The government has received many suggestions with regard to further training of civilians. It feels that enlistment in and cooperation with the non-permanent active militia units across this country will make for simplicity and effective administration and avoid the duplication and confusion of various units under various independent bodies with varying degrees of efficiency due to lack of uniformity in regulations and discipline.

It should be said that anyone who is physically fit and is below the age of forty-five years may and in fact will have not only the opportunity but the obligation to join the militia service of Canada.

The government welcomes suggestions and is at all times ready to consider them, but it believes that citizens will recognize that the responsibility for military direction rests with the federal authorities and their service advisers.

Speaking for the Department of National Defence we feel that all our energies should be first devoted to:

1. The task of recruiting men for service in the Canadian active service force;

2. The immediate training of certain nonpermanent active militia units and home guard reserve:

3. The training of men who will be called up under the legislation to which the Prime Minister has referred.

The Department of National Defence is concerned with military matters. Its responsibility is military. The police authorities of this country are concerned with police matters. Their responsibility is restricted to police matters. There is no martial law in Canada, and no need for martial law. Soldiers will continue to be soldiers, and policemen will continue to be policemen. Any attempt to confuse these two functions can have only one result. It will interrupt and impede the most necessary work of the Department of National Defence.

I make a special appeal to ex-soldiers. Discipline and restraint and patience were amongst the qualities that brought us victory in the last war, and will win it for us in this war. No body of men possessed those qualities in higher degree, or learned the lessons which underlie them more abundantly, than the veterans of the war of 1914. The militia service of Canada and the enlarged scope which new legislation will bring, will offer plenty of opportunities to those who are anxious to assist in the defence of Canada.

I may say that the opinions which I have expressed and the appeal which I have made are supported and shared by my hon, friend the minister-designate of national defence and all the technical officers of the department.

Now a word with respect to equipment. The plain facts must be stated to the house. The situation has altered within the past few weeks, even days. Our immediate requirements will be infinitely greater; our sources of supply are not the same. We must discard even well-founded and carefully-conceived plans based on the best technical advice that above all uniformity of design and interchangeability were essential. We must now procure what we can, when we can, where we can.

With regard to personal equipment and clothing our own factory production should suffice. It will be continuous. But even here, I must warn the house not to expect perfection. There will be delays on account of these extra demands. The clothing may not all be of such appearance and design as would gratify the heart of a sergeant-major of the household guards. It is intended to provide covering and a moderate degree of comfort for a citizen army being hastily mobilized.

With regard to rifles, the situation is in hand for the moment, but procurement and production must be provided for the future. Here again there will be sure to be complaint. But let me say this. As recently as ten days ago a very large shipment from Canada to overseas of the much criticized Ross rifle was gratefully acknowledged.

With regard to most types of mechanical transport, our automotive industry has responded nobly and we anticipate no difficulty either present or future.

With regard to other armament-guns, machine guns, tanks, instruments-there will be a scarcity for training, on account of the large number of men with whom we shall have to deal. These articles must be produced or procured. I will not say when, how or where, but I will say this. We are fully alive to the abrupt cessation of our anticipated major sources of supply and we are also fully alive to the greatly increased requirements which we have to meet, and we are taking all steps to remedy the situation. In a word, the present situation is a challenge to the initiative, the energy and the intelligence of the Canadian people. We will meet it and overcome it by the goodwill, by the sacrifice, by the discipline and by the united, concerted effort of the whole nation.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the senate to acquaint their honours that Messrs. Black (Yukon), Dupuis, Edwards, Farquhar, Furniss, Goulet, Howden, Jaques, Laflamme, Lafontaine, MacInnis, McGregor, McIvor, Mayhew, Pinard, Purdy, Rhéaume, Thauvette, Tucker and Tustin, have been appointed to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the restaurant, as far as the interests of the Commons are concerned, and to act as members of a joint committee of both houses on the restaurant.

Motion agreed to.

EMERGENCY POWERS

PROVISION FOR MOBILIZATION OF HUMAN AND MATERIAL RESOURCES IN THE PRESENT WAR

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I would ask the permission of the house to present a resolution which will enable me to introduce the bill with respect to conferring certain powers upon the governor in council for mobilization of national resources in the present war. If the house would allow me to do so, I should like to move, seconded by Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East):

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to confer special emergency powers upon the governor in council to admit of the mobilization of all the effective resources of the nation, both human and material, for the purpose of the defence and security of Canada during the continuation of the state of war now existing.

His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Most hon. members are aware that the bill which is to be based on this resolution is similar to one passed in the British parliament quite recently. Hon. members may recall that when that bill was passed by the British parliament it received its three readings in the House of Commons and three readings in the House of Lords in one day. This of course placed immediately in the hands of the government the powers desired. I hope that in view of the situation which hon. members are all aware of, a similar practice may perhaps be followed in our parliament to-day.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I am quite in agreement about putting it through, but I should like to have a chance to read the bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The bill will be printed and distributed at four thirty.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): We could not hear the Prime Minister. Do I understand that he wishes to have just the resolution put through to-day or the resolution and the bill?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to have the resolution passed. I will then introduce a bill based upon the resolution. The bill is being printed and, I am told, will be available for distribution about half past four. I would not ask the house to proceed with the second reading until the bill had been distributed among hon. members, but after they have perused its provisions—they are not lengthy; I believe they are covered in a page—if the house will give its consent to proceed with the second and third readings to-day the government will be greatly obliged.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I would remind the Prime Minister that while, as he has said, the bill in the British house conscripting material resources was passed in a single afternoon, this bill provides also for the conscription of human resources. In Great Britain an act of that sort was already on the statute books. This bill might require some further consideration and we should have at least sufficient time to peruse it before going into committee on it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The bill is the same.

Mr. CHURCH: Under these special powers this additional recruiting will be for the defence of Canada and to protect Canada's neutrality, and I cannot see how registration of that sort will help the mother country. I do not understand how these special powers will help the mother country, because France has practically failed and if Britain falls there is no such thing as defence of Canada. It will be all over as far as we are concerned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When the hon. member sees the provisions of the bill he will see that the question is answered. He will see how applicable it is to the situation which he is anxious to have met.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mackenzie King thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 43, to confer certain powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of national resources in the present war.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION FOR COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER POST-WAR PROBLEMS

On the order:

Government notices of motion. The Prime Minister:

That a select committee of the house be appointed to study and report upon the general problems of reconstruction and reestablishment which may arise at the termination of the present war, and all questions pertaining thereto; with power to such select committee to appoint, from among the members of the committee, such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable or necessary, to deal with specific phases of the problems aforementioned, with power to said select committee and to such subcommittees as may be formed therefrom, to call for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath, and for such select committee to report from time to time to the house; and that the said committee shall consist of the following members:-

and that the provision of standing order 65 limiting the number of members on special committees be suspended in relation thereto.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): This notice of motion was prepared prior to the opening of parliament. It was thought at that time that it would be desirable to have a committee at the present session make a study of post-war problems. However, I am inclined to feel that just at present there would hardly be the interest in that phase of the war situation, important as it is, that the government would wish to have on the part of hon. members who might be considering a matter of the kind, and that, everything considered, it would be preferable to have the motion withdrawn for the present. If before the session is over it appears advisable to have it reappear on the order paper it could be placed there anew. But I am a little concerned as to whether some misunderstanding might arise if the government at this stage were to ask for a special committee to deal with post-war problems. Some word to that effect I recall was expressed at the early part of the session. Therefore if the house will permit I would ask that this notice be deleted for the present, with the possibility of its being restored later on.

Mr. CHURCH: The wreckage will be so great that there will be nothing to salvage or reconstruct.

Motion withdrawn.
[Mr Mackenzie Eing.]

WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION FOR COMMITTEE TO CON-SIDER LENGTH OF PERIOD BETWEEN ISSUANCE OF WRITS AND POLLING DAY

On the order:

Government notices of motion. The Postmaster General:

That a special committee be appointed to consider and report:

Ways and means whereby the period that must elanse, under the provisions of the Dominion Elections Act, 1938, between the date of the issue of the writ of election and polling day, may be shortened, and such amendments to the said act as they may deem advisable to effect such purpose.

That the members of the said committee be appointed at a later date, that standing order 65 be suspended in relation to the limited number of members of special committees and that the said committee shall have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath, and to report from time to time.

Mr. HOMUTH: Why not delete this one too?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend either was reading my mind or getting away ahead of it. I rose for the purpose, to say that yesterday I had a word with my colleague the Postmaster General about the special committee referred to in the resolution appearing under his name, and it was his view, as it was mine, that this resolution might also be deleted for the present, possibly also making its reappearance later on.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I agree with that. And while we are on the subject of elections may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has given consideration to ordering the issue of writs for the vacancies that have occurred in the representation in this House of Commons?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I have said to my hon. friend so often, there are times and seasons for all things.

Mr. SPEAKER: Notice withdrawn.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL—WITHDRAWAL OF BILL TO AMEND THE TRANSPORT ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) whether it is the intention of the government to proceed with the unemployment insurance bill this session, and the Minister of Transport whether it is the intention to proceed with the Transport Act amendment bill.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It is most desirable that the unemployment insurance bill should be proceeded with this session, and it is the intention of the government to have it proceeded with.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): In view of the developments of the last few days I have informed the officers of my department that I think the transport bill might very well be held over for another session. I would ask consent to have item No. 5 on the order paper, second reading of Bill No. 14, to amend the Transport Act, 1938, dropped from the order paper.

Bill withdrawn.

Mr. NEILL: May I infer from the remark of the Prime Minister regarding the unemployment insurance bill that it is his intention not only to take whatever steps may be necessary by way of application to the British parliament, but also to introduce the bill in all its details into this house and pass it this session?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, that is the purpose. May I also say that I am happy to be able to announce that all the provinces without exception, so far as their interest is desirable or necessary, have agreed to the introduction of this bill.

CANADIAN ACTIVE SERVICE FORCE

QUESTION AS TO SUPPLY OF BINOCULARS FOR ARMY USE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. O'NEILL (Kamloops): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe). Ever since an urgent appeal was sent out for binoculars the question has arisen in the minds of the people to such an extent that in my home town it has been made the subject of an editorial. Why it is that the government cannot supply these binoculars to the Canadian active service force?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): The government has had outstanding for many months large orders for optical glasses for army use. There is only one source of supply of these goods in this country, that is the Bausch & Lomb Optical company. It has been suggested, and I think with some reason, that this firm has not been too eager to supply the army needs. Court action was taken against them in the United States some time ago. Our order is still standing, but deliveries as called for in the contract and as promised are not being made.

We have a certain stock of glasses, but to supplement present stocks we have made an urgent appeal to all the people of Canada to turn in their glasses to the government either as a gift or to have them valued and paid for, as the owner of the glasses may wish.

Mr. ADAMSON: Has the Minister of Munitions and Supply seen an advertisement in the United States press of the Bausch & Lomb Optical company saying that they have a surplus supply of army binoculars? This advertisement appeared over the week-end, advertising the sale.

Mr. HOWE: I did not see the advertisement in question, but if the type of binoculars advertised is the type we have on order there is a place ready for Bausch & Lomb to dispose of their supply. We have very large orders outstanding.

DEFENCE OF CANADA REGULATIONS

MUNICIPAL AND CIVILIAN CORPS GUARDS—SUBVERSIVE ARTICLES IN WEEKLY PUBLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): should like to ask the government a question, to which I referred last week. Will the select committee to consider the defence of Canada regulations passed under the War Measures Act have power to deal with two matters which I mentioned two weeks ago and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said he had considered, namely: (1) Giving some recognition to municipal guards and civilian corps guards formed to aid the federal authority, either by amending the criminal code or the Militia Act or the War Measures Act; (2) Will this committee have power to deal with the offensive subversive articles—the word "subversive" is not in the resolutioncontinuing to appear in some weekly United States papers which are still allowed to circulate in Canada?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The powers given the committee were set out in the resolution. I think they are comprehensive. If in the course of its proceedings the committee should find that it wishes to have its powers enlarged in any way so as to take in other matters, including possibly those to which my hon. friend has just referred, if they are not already included, the committee will be free to consider the matter and report its wishes to the house. I think that would be the best way to meet my hon. friend's desires.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY AND EXTEND POWERS OF MINISTER, ETC.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply) moved the third reading of Bill No. 41, to amend the Department of Munitions and Supply Act.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, before this bill is given third reading-from across the floor I have just heard the remark, "Oh, sit down". I thought Canada was fighting a war for democracy. This parliament is the outward manifestation of that form of society. In my opinion certain people here are in the wrong place. They ought to go some place where they will find institutions more to their liking, where only one person speaks and the rest listen. I want to say thank God we have not come to that state in this country as yet.

I should like to say a few words in connection with this bill before it is given third reading. During the discussion last evening the question of the relation of certain organizations, particularly the John Inglis company, doing government work, and the trade union movement, was referred to. The Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) referred to a discussion which took place in this house I think on Friday last. He made this statement, which appears on page 846 of Hansard:

I am told by our own men—not by the Inglis company men—that the John Inglis company has a good many trade unionists working in that plant. I am told that the company have stated publicly to our own officers that they had no objection whatever officers that they had no objection whatever to their workers being organized by responsible union leaders, and I do not think they intend that word "responsible" to be restrictive, particularly. They did say that they did not consider it their business to organize the workers, but they had no objection to the workers organizing if they cared to do so.

Last week I had a conversation with Charles H. Millard, director of the steel workers' organization committee for the province of Ontario, and he told me that it was quite impossible to get any union recognition from the John Inglis company. Last night, after the conclusion of the sitting of this house, I wired John W. Buckley, general secretary of the Toronto trades and labour council, as follows:

What is the attitude of the John Inglis Company to union recognition? Have any of the American Federation of Labour unions a working agreement with this company? Please wire particulars. . . .

I asked in regard to the American Federation of Labour unions because I had already satisfied myself in regard to the Committee for Industrial Organization. To-day I received a wire signed by John Higgins, boilermakers' representative, dated to-day, as follows:

Angus MacInnis, M.P.

There is no union recognition in the John Inglis plant. Arbitration board applied for by boilermakers on the 15th of May last. No action yet taken on the request. Until the middle of May last the forty-four hour week was the accented condition in the plant. The was the accepted condition in the plant. The change is explained by a quotation from letter received this day from Gerald H. Brown-

I believe that is the assistant deputy minister of labour. The quotation is as follows:

"As you know the hours approved in the original contract for the Bren gun were fortyfour per week, but were extended in the month of November past to forty-eight per week, under government approval." This quotation is the only information the boilermakers had that the change had been made six months later.

In other words the hours of labour in that plant were changed from forty-four to fortyeight, and the men concerned, the men doing the work, the men who had to work four more hours per week than they had worked formerly, were not informed until they inquired of the Department of Labour here some six months later, as to when and why the change was made. I should like to put this on record, because this company has received a substantial and important contract from the government at a favourable rate of profit. Not only do they manufacture Bren guns under that contract, but because of the contract they have the capacity for manufacturing many other articles required by the government of Canada. According to the reply given on May 30 last to a question asked by the hon. member for Melfort, this company already has been paid $1,882,997 and there still remains to be paid on the contract $3,725,826. This means a contract worth some $5,500,000 in all. We should certainly be able to ask a company that has received a contract of that magnitude to give recognition to the workers of this dominion as organized in their trade unions.

As I mentioned last evening, Mr. Speaker, the mere fact that the company allows a man who carries a union card to work in the plant is not union recognition at all. There is no union recognition until such time as the union, through its elected representatives, sits around the table with the company's representatives and decides the wages, hours and conditions under which their work shall be done-in other words the basis on which they will sell their labour.

From this wire and the conversation to which I referred at the outset it is quite clear that the John Inglis company refuses to recognize collective bargaining in its plant. A few moments ago we heard a statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in which he told this house that the government was taking steps to assure the whole effort of the people of Canada for a single purpose. I hold the view that you cannot get the whole effort of a people so long as the position is such that only one class shall decide questions of policy; that one class shall give the orders and the other class shall take them. We cannot mobilize the efforts of the people of Canada on that basis. It may be all right in Germany, where trade unions have been destroyed. It may be all right in Italy, where trade unions have been destroyed; but it is not now and should not be all right in the Dominion of Canada.

About a month ago the British cabinet was reorganized, and some twelve members of the labour party were included. Mr. Churchill, who became Prime Minister, went outside members of parliament for his minister of labour, and took for that portfolio a man who understood the labour movement, a man who had lived his life among the working class. He selected Mr. Ernest Bevin, the secretary of the transport and general workers' union, the secretary of an organization of the unskilled workers in Great Britain.

I was interested to read in one of the Ottawa papers of June 7 a statement made by Ernest Bevin, made not to the board of trade, not to the British manufacturers' association, or whatever they may be called over there, but to the London building workers' organization. Mr. Bevin said that all his present steps were being taken both to win the war and with an eye to their possible value when the war is over. He continued with this statement:

The system based on monopoly and big business failed to deliver the goods in our hour of trial. One thing we are producing; we are producing order out of chaos; and chaos it was, when we went in.

I submit that we in Canada could benefit from what is being done and has been done in Great Britain. The working class in Canada is no less intelligent than the working class of the United Kingdom. They will be the people who will build the tanks, the aeroplanes, the shells, the rifles and every other article used in the war. It will be their intelligence, their muscles, their brain and their brawn which will shape and perfect these things, and it will be the working class, largely, who will use them in the field. I said yester-day and I repeat to-day that this government should make it a matter of policy to see that no firm, no individual, no corporation shall secure a government contract who does not recognize the trade unions and deal with them in all matters affecting hours, wages and working conditions.

It is not enough to tell the House of Commons that there are trade unionists in the John Inglis company. As I said last night, if there were not it would be definite discrimination against trade unionists. People in unions throughout Canada would be placed in the position where instead of their trade union membership being a benefit it would be a decided detriment.

I am not going to move an amendment, nor shall I say anything further except to suggest to the Prime Minister that he continue along the line of the course he pursued the other day when he called in representatives of labour and discussed matters with them. I suggest that he continue that policy by insisting that wherever the government gives a contract the firm or firms involved shall negotiate and bargain collectively with the trade unions concerned.

Mr. HOMUTH: Last night the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) said that he would place on the votes and proceedings a list of men in key positions. When may we have that list?

Mr. HOWE: I asked last night that the list be prepared. There is a good deal of work involved in the preparation of it, but just as soon as it is placed in my hands by my officers I will table it, and ask that it be printed in the votes and proceedings.

Mr. O'NEILL: I rise to a question of privilege. Just as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) got up to speak, an hon. member from this corner of the house said, "Sit down." I noticed that the hon. member who was about to speak looked at me, and I take this opportunity to assure him that I was not the guilty party.

Mr. MacINNIS: I want to assure the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. O'Neill) that I knew it was not he.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

ALLEVIATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND AGRICUL-TURAL DISTRESS—UNDERTAKINGS IN GENERAL INTEREST AND FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of Bill No. 42, to assist in the alleviation of unemployment and agricultural distress.

Mr. KARL K. HOMUTH (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, before the house gives second reading to the bill I would point out that on two or three occasions I have brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty) the fact that some firms are working on cost-plus contracts. Now being asked to speed up and told to rush production of the articles they are manufacturing, in certain instances they have gone out to other firms and tried to hire their workmen. In some instances they have been successful, and have hired the men at greatly increased wages. They have been able to do that because of operating on a cost-plus basis. The other firms which have been working on production of munitions and other supplies for the government, articles just as important as those supplied by the firms of which I complain, obtained contracts by tender. They are now placed at a disadvantage, and I am wondering if some regulation could not be made in connection with the giving of contracts. We are told that we are to have a mobilization of industry and a registration of labour, and I am wondering if something could not be done whereby the rights of labour would be protected, and the workmen would receive proper and adequate wages. It seems to me we could do the same as they did in England at the time of the last war; I believe they are doing the same to-day. No man can be taken from a firm engaged in the production of munition or any other war material purchased by the government unless he obtains a release from his original employer. Wages in such localities are set at an adequate level.

Something will have to be done in this connection, because a serious situation has arisen. I do not wish to name the firms involved, because I believe it would be unfair to do so. The minister may take my word, however, that what I have described is being done, and in fact is prevalent in industry in Canada. Steps should be taken to see to it that the condition does not continue.

Mr. McLARTY: Mr. Speaker, in speaking in answer to the question of the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) I have no intention of closing the debate but would like to take the opportunity of answering the question immediately. I am advised that at the present time only one cost-plus contract is in existence and is being carried on by the Department of Munitions and Supply.

The difficulty which presents itself in connection with the point raised by the hon. member is that there is inserted in all contracts either one of two clauses, namely: the specifying of appropriate rates for each trade in the particular plant or the application of what is known as clause B requiring compliance with local wage rates and working conditions. These both apply to the minimum wages paid. It would be very difficult, as I know my hon. friend will appreciate, to overcome the difficulty he suggests unless we fix the absolute wage rate.

Certain manufacturers I believe among themselves are entering into an agreement whereby they require a certificate that the employee is not working for another firm before they will take him on their payroll, but it does seem to me that it is more a matter of voluntary action among the manufacturers themselves rather than the government establishing a maximum as well as a minimum wage rate.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1-Short title.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman-

Mr. McLARTY: If the hon, member for Temiscouata will allow me, I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, if the house will give its consent, we might now proceed with the second reading of the bill to confer certain powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of our national resources. The bill has been distributed and I think hon members are already familiar with its provisions.

EMERGENCY POWERS

PROVISION FOR MOBILIZATION OF HUMAN AND MATERIAL RESOURCES IN THE PRESENT WAR

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 43, to confer certain powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of national resources in the present war.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to discuss the bill now, but I wish to ask that it be left over until after the dinner recess so that we may have an opportunity of looking it over. So far as this group is concerned we have no lengthy discussion to make on the bill, and I do not think we shall hold it up after dinner, but we should like to have the opportunity of examining it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that if he presses his point strongly, of course I will accede to his wishes, but the government is most anxious to have the bill passed and sent over to the senate after the dinner recess, and if possible passed by the other house so that it may become law immediately. The government had thought of having His Excellency the Administrator come to parliament to-night to give his assent to the bill. What I should like to suggest to my hon, friend is that we pass the second reading now and go into committee, and then if he finds when we are in committee that there is any difficulty about any clause we can postpone the discussion until a little later. The clauses are so simple that I hope my hon. friend and his group will be prepared to see their way to facilitate the passing of the measure this afternoon.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): It is not only a matter of the bill being simple; it is a question whether the bill covers all the aspects of the situation that we have in mind. We have had no opportunity to read it over. Parliament has been sitting for a month and we have not had such a bill before us during that whole time. Two hours' postponement cannot possibly make any difference. I think in all fairness to the house we should be given an opportunity to read the bill and to make suggestions and suggest additions if we feel the bill is not complete. While I would be glad to see the bill given its second reading this afternoon, it should not go through the committee of the whole until it has been thoroughly considered.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would suggest if it is agreeable that we pass the second reading now and then discuss the bill in committee with the understanding that we will not report it from committee until this evening. Any further matters hon. members might wish to discuss could be gone on with after eight o'clock, and the bill given its third reading to-night.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the principle of the bill is involved in the second reading, and therefore I should like to take two or three minutes to call the attention of the house to what this bill means.

With all due respect to the proposed bill, I believe that the defence of Canada is not going to be decided here in Ottawa or in Vancouver or Quebec or Montreal. The defence of Canada is going to be decided over in Great Britain, in the English channel, in France, in the Mediterranean—over there. Glorious France has done its best but unfortunately it has failed of its objective. If Britain falls, what have we in this country? We have not even had a national registration, which I have urged in this house for three years. We have home conscription, but what that means nobody knows. Nobody knows what this bill means so far as man-power is concerned.

Ever since September there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction in Canada over what the government and parliament have done about side-stepping man-power. The country has one division overseas.

But the point is this: The government's whole defence policy is based on two cardinal principles. One is home defence. There is no such thing as home defence. If they fall over there, it is all over as far as we are concerned. The second cardinal principle is to protect our neutrality. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the late Minister of National Defence, Mr. Rogers, told us in the special war session that Britain wanted, not men but munitions; and in the regular session last year and this year they said that there are two cardinal principles involved in the defence policy of Canada within the empire.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, it is going to take two years to train any men who are to be recruited under this bill. It is going to take nearly two years to get them equipped or to secure their equipment for training. True, you may be able to equip them as they do in France and England with dummy weapons while they are in training here, if they have no rifles, and mufti if they have no uniforms. Is this Canada's contribution by this bill to cooperation and coordination with Great Britain? Britain is now left to go it alone against these two dictators, opposed by Germany's six million soldiers and Italy. All we have is the British fleet to protect our shores, and if they fail also, Canada is through. Many people feel that this bill for partial conscription and a compulsory national register in the present war will not go far enough. Every country in Europe has conscription. Everybody knows that all law is compulsion, that one out of three parents would not send their children to school if education were not compulsory. All health laws are compulsion. As I say, we and the United States at present are the only courtries without conscription

I doubt if the people of Canada will be satisfied with this meaningless bill. If the government of the day had encouraged recruiting, we could by now have raised and equipped from coast to coast an army of 600,000 under the voluntary system since war broke out. Who would have thought that France would collapse in nine months? In the Franco-Prussian war of 1870 the Germans were in Paris in six weeks. In this war the Germans have reached Paris in nine months. If Canada does not bestir itself in man-power, food, munitions and all these other vital matters I do not know to whom this country is going to belong next summer or next fall, if Britain fails in the meantime, surrounded now as she is and left to fight the battles of the whole civilized world.

On the second reading of a bill the house adopts the principle of the bill. This bill confers certain special, drastic powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of national resources of various kinds in the present war. Last fall the late respected Minister of National Defence announced in this house, as did the Prime Minister, that Britain did not want men, that what she mostly required then was food, equipment and so forth. But we find, with war breaking out on many other fronts, that this was not so, and that there is a shortage of trained men and of all kinds of equipment. France could not hold the line against these hordes of barbarians, four or five millions of them. No Maginot fortifications could endure forever. France tried to hold the enemy at bay until Britain and the dominions could come to her support with an adequate army, but she waited in vain for sufficient troops or equipment or support to enable her to hold the line, and the United States failed her also.

As I said at the last session, are we going to wait until Hitler comes to Canada? There is only one course which will stop him now. France, that great and glorious nation which has borne the main brunt of the land attack, has failed, and if Britain fails on the sea, the so-called defence of Canada will be all over, as we have it in this bill which will do little to beat Hitler. Three years ago, two years ago, a year ago in the war session, then when this house met on the twentyfifth of January, and again on the sixteenth of May last, I proposed the policy of a compulsory national registration all along the line, of man-power, food, industrial and economic power, and a survey of all, large and small, industrial plants. I do not believe that this bill will satisfy our people that they are secure, because we know how weak are our defences, notwithstanding the statute of Westminster, under which we undertook to look after our own protection on the land, the sea and in the air. Our territory extends nearly four thousand miles; yet so far as our home army and home guard are concerned, they could not begin to take care of one or two miles, let alone four or five thousand. Nevertheless any number of volunteers in this war from coast to coast would have been available to make up a force as large as 600,000 if the government had acted during the past nine months and opened up the recruiting offices daily since then. I have seen them recently in Toronto open only four days a week and closed at the week-end, so that young people cannot enlist at all at times, with this "on again, off again, on again" policy.

In my opinion the bill does not go far enough. It is a very inadequate answer to the demand I made the other day in this house, when Italy came in, for compulsory national service, a national register, the calling out of the militia, the creation of armed forces, on land, sea and in the air, commensurate with what we owe to the mother country, and the reenactment of section 98. The principle of the bill is all wrong. If you are going to have an army, only for home defence, what foe are you going to use it against? You say it is for home defence. You say it is also to protect your neutrality—that was the statement made at the last session; it was to protect our neutrality and to help the United States to guard their coasts if their territory was attacked by a foreign foe. We were to protect the neutrality of the North American continent.

I can only say to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) that it would have been well had he taken last year the stand he takes to-day, instead of decrying then all forms of military effort and depending on shams like the League of Nations and "collective security." For our own security and defence the principle he now supports on behalf of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation would have commended itself to the wisdom and judgment of the country two or three years ago, but previously the members of that group upheld a different point of view; they depended on Washington, the illusion of "collective security," the league and pacifism.

I repeat that it is doubtful whether the principle of this bill will entirely commend itself to the wisdom and judgment of the country, or if it goes far enough. In my opinion it will carry very little comfort to the people over in England, that glorious country which all alone is now upholding the cause of freedom, liberty and civilization, while waiting for those on this continent, the people of the United States included, to come to their support, and the dominions to render further aid. If the British fleet should fail, no one can foretell the day or the hour when Canada will find the enemy at her gates, and all our home defence will mean little and come too late.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, if a bill of this kind is worth passing at all, it must provide the means of attaining Canada's maximum war effort. The principle of this bill is not such as to achieve that purpose; consequently it is wrong.

Let me point out that, unless I am completely mistaken, all this bill calls for is that people shall place themselves, their services and their property at the disposal of his majesty in the right of Canada. Now, their property means, I take it, either their money, in whatever form that happens to be, or their substantial property such as farms, factories, forests, oil wells, mines, et cetera. As I pointed out a few minutes ago, merely to take the money which the Canadian people possess is not going to provide the government with enough money to run the industry of this country if it assumes control of industry. All one needs to do is to turn to any dependable bank report, and he will see that all the money we have in Canada at the present time, both currency and credit, will not be sufficient to put the country in a sound, productive condition. We must have such financial means as will stimulate production of consumers' goods to sufficiency. That is, we must have means of stimulating the production of wheat and other primary products and of shoes, sugar and other secondary products to the maximum desirable, and we must have also such an amount of financial means as will enable us to provide such fair prices and purchasing power that those goods may be distributed to the maximum desirable extent; which means that a high standard of living will be attained in this country of abundance. In addition to that, we must have enough money to provide for the production of such goods of war and destruction-tanks, aeroplanes, explosives and the like—as we desire.

I maintain that all one needs to do is to consider the facts as they are. Take every dollar which is in the banks to-day belonging to every person, corporation and group of people in the dominion, and you have not nearly enough money to accomplish these desirable things which I have mentioned. Therefore, I say, inasmuch as this bill apparently does not provide for the creation of new money, money which does not now belong to anybody, it falls short of what Canada should be aiming at, will be only a disappointment, and before long will be looked upon as a delusion of the Canadian people. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the principle of this bill.

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length on the second reading of the bill but, over the week-end, I visited my county with a view to seeking the opinion of my electors and I deemed it my duty yesterday to make to one of the members of the government a report concerning the views held by my constituents on this important question. I think we should avoid undue haste in the discussion of so important a subject. We should take our time. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are passing legislation similar to that enacted at Westminster does not prove that our legislation is excellent. The measure should be considered on its own merits, and as each one of us here represents a certain group of electors it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that I should be failing in my duty were I not to communicate to the house the views of the good people of my county.

This is the letter which I wrote, with some slight alterations intended to ensure the anonymity of the addressee:

Ottawa, June 17, 1940.

I consider it my duty to tell you of my trip of last Saturday to Rivière du Loup where I met several of my electors who gave me their opinion regarding the war. All realize the gravity of the hour and consider that all our war effort should converge upon the defence of Canada.

Some of those I met went so far as to say that they were favourable to the idea of conscription, provided it were only for the defence of Canada.

On this point, I congratulate the government on the restriction they placed in the bill with regard to compulsory military service.

Others are in favour of recruitment on a voluntary basis for the defence of the country, and such is also the opinion of the entire rural population where there exists a strong sentiment in favour of annexation to the United States or at least of a formal alliance with our powerful neighbours. The latest events, particularly the offer of capitulation made by France, are not likely to change this sentiment.

Here, Mr. Speaker, may I say how sorry I feel about what has just happened in France.

During the last election I said in each parish that under your government anyone would be free to enlist if he chose, but that no one would be forced to do so, whereas with Mr. Manion in power we would inevitably have compulsory military service. Such was also the position taken by the party in the province of Quebec, as well as, with a few exceptions, outside the province.

Allow me to say that after the victory obtained by our party following that campaign the majority of the people are not yet in favour of the idea of conscription. It may, therefore, be dangerous to impose it at present.

On the other hand, the Canadian sentiment is so deeply rooted in the hearts of our compatriots that they are more ready than ever to make sacrifices for the defence of Canada.

Enlistments have been numerous in our province in spite of two obstacles: first, those who wish to enlist are obliged to pay their travelling expenses when their medical examination proves unfavourable;

May I say here that young men have come to my office Saturday to ask me to pay the expenses of their trip to Quebec to enlist, because if they failed to pass the medical examination they would be obliged to pay their travelling expenses themselves. It seems to me that the government would greatly facilitate voluntary enlistment by doing away with red tape.

-secondly, in order to be accepted, those who seek to enlist have to agree to fight overseas.

This also is an obstacle to voluntary enlistment. Large numbers of young men were ready to enlist for the defence of Canada but did not care to sign an engagement to fight outside the country. I am convinced that without this clause voluntary enlistments would have been far more numerous.

That policy is a wise one to the extent that our soldiers are sent overseas; it is also consistent with the promise of recruitment on a voluntary basis made by our leaders and by all the Liberal candidates during the last election campaign; but, in view of recent events, do you not think that it is more than ever time to organize the military defence of Canada in Canada and to keep here our best men and to train and equip them properly for our own defence?

With the obstacle of red tape removed from voluntary enlistment there would be a very large number of enlistments providing the government's policy were clearly defined as being a policy for the defence of Canada. Our people have been deceived so often in the past that they have maintained a central degree of this they have maintained a certain degree of mistrust, as you know very well.

If we say to the French-Canadians that henceforth recruiting will be solely for the defence of Canada, in Canada, and if we remove all obstacles to voluntary enlistment, you will be surprised to see the number of French-Canadians ready to enlist, providing they are well equipped and well trained and that they be given competent commanding officers.

The speed with which event is following upon event is making everyone reflect very seriously.

Public opinion is changing day by day.

I have summarized the conversations I have had with a large number of good Canadians. Since then, I have had occasion to converse Since then, I have had occasion to converse with English-speaking members who told me quite openly that war was too serious a matter to be considered from the point of view of sentiment and that our policy should be guided by reason. They added that in their counties there is an awakening of Canadian sentiment for the organization on a solid basis of the defence of Canada against any aggressor. By a strange revulsion of feeling, it is on the solid basis of Canadianism that national unity will be established.

Yours very truly.

Jean François Pouliot.

Mr. GAUTHIER: Very well.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I am sorry that we have not had a longer period to look over the bill before the second reading came. I should have preferred to have the second reading after the supper recess. I regret also that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has not given us a fuller explanation of the extent to which the powers granted under this emergency bill are to be used by the government. Perhaps the most important words in the bill are to be found in section 2, "requiring persons to place themselves, their services and their property at the disposal of his majesty in the right of Canada". When a similar bill was introduced into the British parliament on May 22, Mr. Attlee, the former leader of the Labour party, who introduced the measure, went fully into the government's intentions under that bill, and I have in front of me a fairly complete report of what he said on that occasion. He pointed out, of course, the situation that faced the allied powers, and he said:

It is necessary that the government should be given complete control over persons and property, not just some persons of some particular class of the community, but over all persons, rich or poor, employer or worker, man or woman, and all property.

Then he went on to show that the government intended to use this power. Recent dispatches from Great Britain have shown that the British government has already taken over something like 15,000 plants to be operated entirely under public control. At the same time he assured the ordinary people of Great Britain that the excess profits tax would be raised to 100 per cent, wiping out all excess profits.

It seems to me that if we are going to ask our young Canadians-and I believe that under the threat of invasion we have the right to ask young Canadians-to defend the soil of this country, then we ought at the same time to give these young men the absolute assurance that no one will make any profit out of this great struggle.

I should be glad if the government, either now or later, would give the house an assurance that this will be done. In order to bring this matter before the Prime Minister and the government, I might refer to a carefully prepared statement I have here showing the operation of our excess profits tax under the act which was passed last year. In 1939, for example, the Aluminum Company of Canada, Limited, made profits of $15,799,927, and if they elected the plan under which they would pay excess profits tax, they would of course elect the one under which they would pay the lower tax, which in this case would be under the A plan, which would involve a tax of $1,803,000 or thereabouts. The complete statement is as follows:

Excess Profits Tax on basis of 1939 earnings (approximate)
ent. Aluminum Limited

24 per cent. Aluminum Limited profits: $15,799,927.

Leaving $10,836,923, or over 16 per cent on capital as defined in the act.

As the table shows, this leaves $10,836,923, or over 16 per cent profit after paying all the taxes on the capital employed as defined in our act of last September.

Next I take Canadian Industries, Limited, which is to operate certain of our new munition plants. Their profit on capital involved is 36 per cent. They would choose the B plan and would pay no tax whatsoever. They will pay corporation income tax of $1,246,429, leaving a profit of $4,985,714, or over 28 per cent on capital involved as defined under our own act.

If we take next the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, on profits of $9,339,586, being 48 per cent, under plan B which they would elect they would pay no excess profits tax. The corporation income tax would amount to $1,867,917, leaving a profit for distribution of $7,471,669, or over 38 per cent on capital employed as defined in the act.

International Nickel Company, on profits of $36,847,466, or 26 per cent, under plan B would pay no excess profits tax. The corporation income tax would be $7,369,493, leaving $29,477,973, or 20.8 per cent profit on the capital as defined by the act.

I bring these figures to the attention of the house. I have more. I bring these at the present time because I and the group with which I am associated believe that if we are passing a bill to conscript the young men of this country for the defence of Canada and the territory adjacent thereto, then we have a right to ask that the government at the same time assure these young people that the excess profits tax will be instituted as in Great Britain, and will be one hundred per cent. And we ask that prior to giving our support to this bill.

At the same time it was announced in the British house that the entire banking system of Great Britain would be taken over in order that they might use the institutions properly to finance the war. That I understand has been done. In Canada we have none of these assurances. Without them the bill seems to me simply one for the mobilization of manpower, and while we are prepared to support the mobilization of all our resources, including man-power, for the defence of Canada and for our industrial effort, none the less we feel that before we do so we should have assurances of the kind to which I have referred.

Then there are other matters which have come under discussion in this house during the past few days. A little earlier this afternoon I referred to the discussion on the munitions and supply bill, which revealed that new industries established under government ownership are to be operated by persons who are in the employ of one of the great corporations whose profits I have stated. We believe that these industries should not be given a preferred position in the industrial life of this country at this time.

Also involved in this is the right of the worker in industry to have some say concerning the conditions under which he works. As the hon, member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) pointed out the other night, there should be an undertaking that all the war work in which we are now engaged or are likely to be engaged should be governed by mutual agreements between the workers' organizations and the industry engaged in the manufacture of munitions. That I believe is something the government should provide for; if we are going to mobilize for industrial effort, labour should be adequately protected.

We believe that the mobilization of industry and property and wealth involves also the condition of the great agricultural industry. Some hon, members come from areas where agriculture is the main industry and means of life. At the moment the prices of farm products are exceedingly low. There is no demand. But when the war ends, it is altogether likely that an impoverished Europe will require every available food commodity that we can send across the sea. Meantime the people who produce these commodities should not be expected to carry the whole burden. In the mobilization of our resources they should be guaranteed a fair and reasonable return so that they may live.

In the same manner if we are going to mobilize labour and industry and all resources, there will have to be some control of the price level, in order that the producer may get a square deal and the consumer pay a fair and reasonable price. I am not going into all the implications of this bill, but in my opinion we should have a full statement as to what the government intends to do in such particulars as I have mentioned before we are asked to vote for the measure. In Great Britain care was taken by the government to see that the measure introduced there was properly explained and fully understood. We have this bill before us, and so far we do not know the extent to which these powers will be used, except that it is quite obvious that some recruiting of men will be instituted and proceeded with.

Then there is another matter to which the government has probably already given consideration, and concerning which the Prime Minister may be able to give a satisfactory answer almost immediately. There are certain religious organizations, the members of which I believe are already exempted by law because they are averse by reason of their religious beliefs to bearing arms under any circumstances. I assume that Quakers, Mennonites and such groups will receive similar consideration when the government institutes this measure.

When the bill is in committee we can go into the various phases of it more thoroughly, but I wish to impress upon the government the need to tell the house and the country the extent to which this legislation will be used immediately. As I said, before we can give our support to this measure we want to be assured that there will be equality of sacrifice. We ask from the government a statement definitely assuring the country of this. We realize that Canada to-day is threatened as never before. But our young men, as well as those engaged in industry, have a right to know that they alone will not pay the whole price which will be lemanded.

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I should be remiss in my duty if I failed to protest at once against the plan for mobilizing our man-power and wealth announced by the right honourable the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). This new policy is in glaring opposition to the electoral platform of the relected government. There was to be nothing but a moderate, voluntary and free war effort, we were told. I referred to that platform in this house on May 23 last. I was then speaking in defence of the prime minister who was being harassed on all sides by the opposition. At that time, the shores of the British Isles had been bombed by the enemy. Then came a cessation of attacks against British territory and the whole might of the enemy was turned against France. While that noble and heroic country was being trampled upon by the Germans, those same members who had been clamouring for conscription became strangely silent. Why? That is their secret and I would rather not delve into the matter, preferring to ignore it in the interest of the spirit of harmony which should prevail in Canada. This parliament has no right to order the mobilization of man-power and wealth because it lacks the necessary mandate. The Canadian people, whom we represent in parliament, never endorsed such a mobilization. On the contrary, they voted on March 26 for a moderate, voluntary and free war policy. Consequently, I am strongly opposed to such a mobilization so long as the Canadian people have not endorsed it. Besides, has it been shown that voluntary enlistment is not sufficient for the defence of the country? Until such time as proof to the contrary has been adduced to the people, I shall have the feeling of discharging a sacred duty toward my electors and my country in opposing that policy with the utmost vigour. I foresaw the very serious events that are happening to-day when, on September 9, 1939, I stated in this house my principles and beliefs upon the grievous mistakes of the past and of the future. The future has become the present and the very things that I had anticipated are now happening. In so speaking, I am voicing the views of a great majority of the people in my constituency who kindly gave me their confidence some weeks ago. I have never betrayed my electors. In these troubled times I am continuing to defend their freedom in the parliament of my country.

Mr. STIRLING: Would you, Mr. Speaker, be good enough to read the amendment in English?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have not the official translation as yet, but I might give a free translation for the benefit of hon. members of the house:

That all the words after the word "that" in the bill be struck out and replaced by the following words:

... "the war policy of the Canadian government must remain free, voluntary and moderate."

Mr. CHURCH: I rise to a point of order. I ask for a ruling as to whether or not the amendment is in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is always in order to move an amendment to a motion for the second reading of a bill.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. WILFRID LACROIX (Quebec-Montmorency) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is my duty, as member for Quebec-Montmorency constituency, to express my opinion on this bill and to state that I positively do not hold the same view as some of my fellow members in the house who favour unlimited participation by Canada without any thought for what the post-war period has in store for us.

On September 9 last I voted against declaring war and I then gave my reasons for taking that stand. The majority decided otherwise. I must perforce submit and abide by the consequences. Since that time, however, an election has taken place in this country and the people of Canada have clearly declared themselves in favour of a moderate and voluntary participation as against participation to the utmost of our ability. For should we reach such a limit, it will mean, once the war is over, eventual bankruptcy, extreme devaluation of the currency and above all an almost certain lack of adequate means to cope with post-war problems.

And why, indeed, should we extend ourselves to such an extreme limit of our capacity when there was a minimum of representations and expressions of opinion at the time there was question of adopting a policy of financing Germany so that she might rearm and attain that stability which allowed her to rise from the prone position we had left her in at the close of the Great War and to unleash once again her barbaric hordes upon civilization and democracy.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, however splendid the role of those who have fallen recently on Vimy Ridge in defense of right, liberty and justice, and to whose anonymous heroism I whole-heartedly pay tribute, I need must blame the stand taken by those statesmen who boast of proficiency in matters of diplomacy and who are responsible for the fact that once again our own have fallen in great numbers right by the monument which symbolizes their predecessors' heroic effort that democracy might endure; and that, 25 years after had been written one of the most glorious pages in our history telling of the fallen's struggle for justice!

The dead of Vimy and Courcelette, resting all about the great monument erected to their memory, must be wondering to themselves in the Great Beyond: "Why did we sacrifice so much when it has availed so little?"

Mr. Speaker, France has indeed staunchly defended her territory and I trust that victory will crown her struggle for her very existence; for France, remember, cannot vanish from this earth; as a flaming torch she brightens the world with all that is beautiful and generous in the realm of thought, art and science.

France has fought for her existence, England for her empire and as for ourselves, while doing our share for a cause admittedly just, I entreat you, let us also fight to preserve this great Dominion of Canada in America in which we take such pride. If we wish to maintain the integrity of this dominion and preserve the pact of confederation, designed to protect the liberty of each of its ethnical groups, then, sir, let us not make the mistake of wreaking our own destruction by leaving the country, after the war, without any possible means of material and economic reintegration. Any other course would throw the country into the hands of an element which would prove fatal to its very existence, namely, communism.

What is Russia doing? She stands aloof in order to be in a better position to spread her propaganda through those countries which will have been shattered by war, whatever its result may be, because I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that war will bring about such an economic chaos that it will be impossible for anyone to tell victors from vanquished.

I say, therefore, that we ought to limit our participation to what we can actually do instead of making it a maximum war effort. This would be the wise thing to do and moreover this would be in harmony with the policy advocated during the last general elections by the right honourable Mackenzie King and the right honourable Ernest Lapointe.

If we wish to maintain the integrity of this Dominion, Canada's war effort must remain voluntary, free and reasonable. While earnestly hoping that liberty, right and justice may triumph in Europe; while paying tribute to the heroic patriotism of the French and English people who are now fighting, regardless of social rank, in a sublime effort to maintain the freedom of their respective countries, I hope that our Canadian political leaders will use discretion and avoid making mistakes which might prove irretrievable.

After having heard certain extremists, who are dissatisfied with our participation, speak the way they have in this house since the opening of the session, I feel justified in wondering whether they are not lacking in loyalty to Canada.

If we wish our war effort to remain free and voluntary, let us not, for pity's sake, make the mistake of stopping public works.

I further wish, Mr. Speaker, to reiterate a request already made by the premier of the province of Quebec, the honourable Adélard Godbout, to the effect that farmers' sons should not be enlisted in the army, for if there is a class of people which is needed to increase war time agricultural production in keeping with allied requirements, surely it is the farming population. Moreover, should we make the mistake of recruiting in rural communities and, worse still, of imposing compulsory service to these people, I doubt very much whether after demobilization, the majority of these men would return to the land. They would inevitably add to the congestion of the cities where unemployment resulting from commercial, military and industrial demobilization will create a serious problem for the government and where they would fall an easy prey to communistic propaganda.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge that we abide by the policy advocated by the right honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King during the last elections, namely a voluntary and reasonable measure of participation, without resorting in any way to conscription of man-power. In view of the fact that we are at war, as a result of the decision taken by a majority of the members of this house, this would afford everyone an excellent opportunity of serving his country well and of insuring a future for the country after the war.

Not long ago, Mr. Speaker, the American Senate at its sitting of yesterday, I believe, adopted by a vote of seventy to nothing a resolution to the effect that the Monroe doctrine was considered to apply to all of North America and all of South America. By so doing, the United States have agreed, so to speak, totally to exclude any European power which might attempt to invade our territory or any other American territory. Why not continue with our voluntary participation and wait at least until the United States enact conscription of men?

A bill is before us now, and I am looking at section 3 of that bill. I shall read it in English, because I have no French copy. The bill was distributed this afternoon, but unfortunately my French Canadian colleagues and myself did not get a French copy. Taken by surprise, they are obliged to consult the English copy for the study of this bill. In section 3 of the bill introduced this afternoon to establish conscription of men in Canada, we read the following:

The powers conferred by the next preceding section may not be exercised for the purpose of requiring persons to serve in the military, naval or air forces outside of Canada and the territorial waters thereof.

If my understanding of English is correct, the words "may not" mean "the government may" and they should be replaced by at least the words "shall not"...

be exercised for the purpose of requiring persons to serve in the military, naval or air forces outside of Canada.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have but the English copy of the bill and we are using [Mr. Wilfrid Lacroix.] it. Since it has been introduced this afternoon, I would ask the government to put off the second reading of the bill, until at least after six o'clock, so that the French members may take note of the French copy which is essential in studying a bill of such importance.

The Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the amendment that has been moved states that this bill should not be read a second time but that there should be substituted therefor a statement to the effect that Canada's participation must remain free, voluntary and moderate. I am convinced that my honourable friends the mover and the seconder of that amendment do not wish to suggest that Canada's participation in her own defence, were she invaded, attacked or imperilled, ought to be moderate, free and voluntary. If my hon. friends will read the bill that is before them they will notice that it is introduced in this house on account of the tragical circumstances with which we are confronted to-day and which are threatening the very existence of our country.

My hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lacroix) referred to France which, he said, had fought for her existence. She did not fight with moderation or with freedom, she just fought. If this bill is, as I claim it to be, a bill for the purpose of putting Canada in a position to defend herself in a tragic emergency, I assert that we have no right to say that we must defend ourselves only in a moderate, free or voluntary way.

Mr. Chairman, the first duty of a citizen is to defend his country and if it be true, as I believe, along with all those who are considering the present situation, and as, I feel sure, my hon. friends themselves believe, that we are threatened even though the danger might not be probable, its very possibility compels us to take those precautions which worthy sons of a country must take to defend their mothers, their parents, their families and their territory.

Those who have to shoulder the responsibility of governing the country in such a situation have a most difficult task to perform. It is a duty fraught with responsibilities. But they would not be worthy of the mandate entrusted to them by the people were they unable to discharge their duty fully and to take whatever steps are necessary for the protection of their country. We cannot shirk such a duty.

If I believe—and my friends know that I believe it sincerely—that my country is threatened, can I stand back and refuse to do what is essential for her defence and protection, and compel and request every one, all Canadians from every part of the country, to come forward in order to defend with their blood the national heritage and everything they are so anxious to preserve?

Canada is a land of freedom. Our wish is that she may continue to be a land of freedom. The monsters who at this time want to destroy civilization and who are drawing nearer to us, must not expect that we are going to repel their attacks with moderation. We are going to defend ourselves with all the strength we can find in our hearts and souls and to the utmost of our capacity.

Mr. Chairman, I feel perfectly at ease to explain my attitude on this question. Somebody speaks of the pledges given. I invite all my friends to read the observations I made in this house when war was declared; I invite them to read my speech of the preceding session on the subject of Canada's neutrality. I then said to my fellow-countrymen that the province, one of whose representatives I have the honour to be, was opposed to compulsory military service overseas, and that we would fight it—

Mr. LACROIX (Beauce): Write it down in the bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): —and that I would fight it; that if it were proposed by my government I would resign from that government.

Mr. LACROIX (Beauce): Write it down in the bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is what I said, and that is what I repeat to-day. But for the defence of my country, for the defence of Canada, no! The defence of the fatherland is the duty of every citizen, and it is an obligation for every one to defend Canada. This bill provides that its powers may not be exercised, in so far as the question of compulsion is concerned, in connection with service overseas.

My hon. friend wants the word "shall" instead of the word "may." I have not the least objection to that word being changed to "shall." The only reason it was not used is to be found in legal phraseology. As Minister of Justice drafting an act of parliament, I would use the word "may," but to satisfy those who want to read a different meaning in the word—the word "may" is imperative when applied to the crown or the government—but to please my hon. friend I will myself move that it be replaced by the word "shall." There is another aspect of this bill that I submit to the sympathetic consideration of the mover and seconder of the amendment and of my other friends in this house. That act for the defence of Canada provides for the contribution not only of the lives of our young men in the defence of the fatherland, but also of the money, who have any, to help us in the defence of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, we often read in the newspapers appeals in favour of conscription. But they always call for the conscription of manpower. The newspapers, which represent the financial interests of the country, take care not to mention conscription of their property and of their wealth. This bill aims at equalizing sacrifices. The government will have the right to ask sacrifices not only from our young people who have to run personal risks for the defence of the country, it will also force those who are in possession of capital, those who are the most able to help in the defence of Canada, to contribute their share should they not come forward voluntarily.

I think I have said all I wanted to say. I respect the opinions of my friends who have moved and seconded this amendment. I think I have said enough to convince them of the sincerity of my opinions and of my sentiments.

I think I am acting in the interest of my country, and in the interest of my province. I would be unfaithful to the trust which has been placed in me if I acted otherwise for fear of shouldering the responsibilities which I must assume and which I shall always assume with courage when necessary and when conscientiously convinced that it is in the interest of my country.

Mr. LACOMBE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I understand that your ruling is based on the fact that there is no such word as "that"; however, the bill has the word "whereas".

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to read the amendment. I was not in the chamber when it was moved.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The motion is:

That all the words after the word "that" in the bill be struck out and replaced by the following:

... "the war policy of the Canadian government must remain free, voluntary and moderate."

I declare this motion out of order because there is no such word as "que" in the bill, and, further, because on motion for second reading the amendment should be to the motion and not to the bill. Third, a bill can be amended only after second reading and in the committee of the whole (Standing Order 75).

Mr. LACOMBE: Mr. Speaker-

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: My ruling has been given, and the only course now would be for the hon. member to appeal from my decision to the house.

Mr. LACOMBE: Mr. Speaker-

Some hon. MEMBERS: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, the bill which is now before the house has been presented with considerable dispatch. I confess I am amazed at the Prime Minister's haste. This country went into war on the third of September last. We indulged in a general election which lasted from January until March 26. This house was not called immediately after the election. Instead of that, there was a period of recess while some of the cabinet ministers went on holiday. We met here on May 16, and we have been in session for over a month. Constantly requests have come from all parts of the house for legislation of this kind, and now, when it does come before us, it is being rushed through in the course of a few hours.

I believe we have a right to ask, since the government has taken such a long time to bring down this measure, that first of all we should know the exact meaning of the powers contained in the bill, and second, the use that the government intends to make of these powers. Personally I had expected to see the Prime Minister make a statement. In the British House of Commons when a similar bill was presented, a full statement was made by the Right Hon. Clement Attlee, the gentleman who on that day was leader of the government, outlining the government's policy, and explaining what the powers were which were demanded, their extent, and the manner in which they would be used. We have had no such statement this afternoon. It is true that the Prime Minister made a statement on the general European situation and intimated that this bill would be brought down, but the government's policy with regard to the whole programme of conscripting man-power and property has not been outlined in any detail.

As far as I am concerned—and I believe the group with which I am associated feel the same way—we are prepared to support what the bill purports to stand for, namely, the conscription of the human and material resources of Canada for the defence of Canada. But what we want to know and what we have a right to know is whether the bill is to be used for what it purports to be. May I point out, for instance, that this bill says that it is, as the preamble puts it, "for the purpose of the defence and security of Canada." There is no doubt that the bill will be used to mobilize the human resources, but to what extent will it be used to mobilize the material resources? For example, what steps will be taken by the government to deal with large accumulations of wealth which have been made by certain concerns during the years of the depression and during the period this country has been at war?

This afternoon my colleague, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) drew the attention of the house to some of the concerns which have been making exorbitant profits in the past few months. I have before me a statement which was put out with regard to the excess profits tax by Messrs. McLeod, Young, Weir & Company, Limited, Metropolitan building, Toronto, pointing out that some of the outstanding firms in Canada, who have been making large profits by virtue of the fact that there are two schemes or two plans under the Excess Profits Tax Act, will be exempt from paying any profits tax at all.

Here, for instance, is the Canada Wire and Cable company, making 13·1 per cent, a profit of $690,806, but under plan B, namely, the profit over 5 per cent, nil. Corporation income tax absorbed $138,161, leaving $552,645, or 10·4 per cent. Here is the case of the Imperial Tobacco company, which made last year 29·1 per cent, or a profit of $6,500,338. Under plan B, it paid no excess profits tax; it paid corporation income tax, $1,300,068, leaving $5,200,270, or 17·5 per cent.

This synopsis shows that, for instance, in 1938 the International Nickel company showed earnings of 20·17 per cent on its capital. Since the company, however, showed average earnings for the past four years amounting to $32,934,789, and since this four-year average was greater than its 1938 earnings, it would, therefore, choose plan B under which it would not have to pay an excess profits tax. I have before me a report from the Montreal Gazette of June 5, showing that the Dominion Textile company actually doubled its profit during the past year.

I cite these few figures—I have several pages of them, but I shall not weary the house—merely because I want to point out that there are firms in Canada who during the four or five years prior to the outbreak of the war and in the nine months since the outbreak of war have made substantial profits.

What step does the government propose to take under this measure to deal with those people? When the Right Hon. Clement Attlee introduced his bill in the British house a few days ago, before he asked the members to vote for this bill he assured them, and he brought down a resolution saying, that there would be a one hundred per cent excess profits tax. Is the government prepared to give us that assurance? Is the government prepared to give us the assurance that the conscription of material resources will be just as farreaching as the conscription of human resources?

I notice, for instance, that there is nothing in the bill about financial resources. It says, "the mobilization of all of the effective resources of the nation, both human and material," but not financial. What about the banks? Are the banks to continue to operate as at present? Are the banks and other lending institutions to continue to lend money to the government at 3½ per cent or higher at the same time that we are conscripting human life? We should know what the government intends to do with reference to the banks.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Surely "financial" is part of "material" resources.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Oh, yes, but there has been no statement from the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) on what the government proposes to do with reference to the banks.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We cannot say in the bill that "two and two are four."

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Mr. Attlee made it clear when he introduced the bill in the British house that steps would be taken to bring the financial institutions of Great Britain directly under government control. Never in the history of Canada was there a better time for the Prime Minister to bring about his suggestion to "issue credit and currency in terms of public need" than under this bill and during this present war. We have the right to know what this clause about mobilization of material resources means with reference to those who are using the natural resources of this country, those who get the minerals and the oil out of the ground. We know how they have been using them. I say it is to the everlasting disgrace of this dominion that they were used, not very long ago, to arm the nations with which to-day we are at war.

Mr. MacNICOL: We shall not be at war very long unless we get along with it.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): We shall not get on any better with it by passing a bill that is to be purely a conscription of poor men and not a conscription also of rich men.

An hon. MEMBER: Read the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Augur writes in the New York Times and in the Montreal Gazette on June 13—and he is a fairly reliable authority—that when the war broke out last September, Mussolini had enough oil on hand for only a fortnight and that he has been allowed during the last nine months to accumulate such resources of oil that to-day he has enough for many months.

Mr. CRERAR: What is the hon, gentleman's authority for that?

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I have quoted my authority, Mr. Augur in the New York Times and in the Montreal Gazette. He is a correspondent of some repute who writes also for the London Spectator.

But I will come to something that cannot be disputed. The export figures for minerals from Canada, starting January 1, 1939, show that every month from January up to August inclusive, until a few days before the war, we allowed the men who are using the natural resources of this country to send scrapiron, copper, nickel and aluminum—to whom? More than half our nickel went to Japan, copper to Germany, copper and aluminum to Italy, right up until the last few days of August, 1939.

What do we propose to do with these men? Do we propose to allow the International Nickel company and other mining concerns to continue to send this material outside the country without control? I made the suggestion once before to the Prime Minister and I repeat it now. Somewhere in one of the departments there should be set up a branch which would do the work that would be equivalent to what is being done in Great Britain by the Minister of Economic Warfare, to make absolutely sure that in the war effort which is going on in Canada (a) war material shall not find its way from Canada into the hands of our enemies, and (b) certain men in this country are not making money out of our natural resources and assisting our foes at the same time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, before this house is asked to vote on this bill, to vote on the principle, I do not think it is too much to ask the Prime Minister to make a very clear statement, first, as to what forms of wealth will come within the term, "mobilization of material resources"; as to whether or not this government is prepared to bring in a one hundred per cent excess profits tax; as to whether or not large corporations are going to be allowed to continue to make money while at the same time we propose to take boys off the farm, from the workshop and off the streets and put them in uniform to go out to defend another group of men who, unless the government take drastic steps, are not making their fair contribution to the defence of Canada.

Mr. REID: What about a boy defending his own home?

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Yes, but at the same time as he is defending his own home, the International Nickel company ought to be making some contributions to the country out of which it is getting this tremendous return. Moreover, many of the boys have not any homes; yet some of them have been much more willing to go and defend Canada than some who are making money out of the country. All we ask is that this bill shall be what it purports to be: that it shall really mean the mobilization of human and material resources; that the phrase, "material resources" shall not be merely a sugar-coating to get people to swallow the other rather unpleasant half of the bill; that this shall be a real conscription bill, not a poor man's conscription measure but a measure that shall endeavour to marshal all the resources of Canada and to spread, as far as it is humanly possible to do so, the responsibility for defending the country over all classes of the Canadian people.

An hon. MEMBER: Who says it does not?

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): The hon. member who asked that question knows that this is an enabling bill. He knows that we have had no statement yet from the Prime Minister as to how these powers will be used. I am not saying that they will not be used this way or that. I am asking that the Prime Minister shall give us a statement. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that all over Canada to-night there are thousands upon thousands of men, and women too, who are prepared to devote all their energies and, if needs be, to risk their lives in the defence of the country. I think we all are. Last fall, when this country entered the war, I offered my services to the government opposite, and on November 17 last I was paraded before the commander of military district No. 13. I am prepared to risk my life, as thousands of other Canadian citizens to-night are prepared to risk theirs. If needs be, there are thousands to-night who are prepared to risk their lives in the defence of everything that is at stake in the war.

In 1936 I saw something of what Hitlerism has meant to some people in Germany. I saw men who had come out of concentration camps; I saw women whose sons and husbands were in concentration camps. I saw people whose spirits had been broken, bodies mutilated, because they chose to serve their conscience rather than a neurotic megalomaniac. I doubt if there is a man in this house who is not prepared, as thousands of people across Canada are prepared, to shed his blood, if needs be, in order that we in this country, the people of the British commonwealth of nations and the other democracies, do not have to live under a regime in which such things as I have described are possible.

Mr. CLEAVER: Will the hon. member permit a question? He saw these things in 1936. Why did he oppose the defence estimates of 1937?

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I will answer the hon, member willingly. What we opposed in 1937, if he will read Hansard—

Mr. CLEAVER: I have read it.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): We were prepared to support any expenditures that were to be used for a system of collective security. We were convinced that they were not being so used.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DONNELLY: Give us another.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I make this plea: If men and women in Canada are prepared to serve the state, if they are prepared to offer their lives and to place their services at the disposal of the country, we should get some assurance from the government to-night that the material, financial and economic resources of the nation will be taken on the same basis as human service is taken, namely, without profit but for the service of the state and for the duration of the war.

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Selkirk): This is surely no time for recriminations of any kind. I entirely agree with the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) this afternoon that to-day, when we are witnessing the tragic events taking place in Europe, is not the time for recriminations, whether they come from the other side of the house or from this side. Views that may have been expressed years ago were honestly held and honestly expressed.

Mr. BROOKS: Not so many years ago.

Mr. THORSON: This is no time for seeking to cast blame. We are witnessing a tragic turn of events in Europe, and the safety of Canada is involved. As a Canadian whose origin is neither British nor French, I give my whole-hearted support to this measure. In giving that support I speak as a Canadian whose undivided loyalty is to Canada. When I entered this house first in 1926, my main motive was that in all I should do as a member of the House of Commons I should further the destiny of Canada as a great nation. And when I speak as I do, I believe that I voice the sentiments of many Canadians, over two million of them, whose origin is neither British nor French but who know no other country than Canada. Canada has their undivided loyalty.

I am opposed to conscription for overseas service. We on this side of the house are pledged to resist conscription for overseas service, and I stand by that pledge. I listened this afternoon to the impassioned plea of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) when he said more eloquently than any other man in this house could say it, that in the defence of Canada, our own land, there could be no limitations, There can be no limitations to the defence of Canada. I stand with the Minister of Justice and with his leader the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in this attitude expressed in this bill, that all the forces of Canada, man-power and material resources must be devoted to the aid of Canada, for the defence of Canada.

I say also that in this extremity we must have faith. This is an enabling bill, giving to the government of the day wide and extensive powers to deal with a dire emergency. We must have faith that the government will use those powers in the best interests of Canada. I, for one, have that faith, and I support this measure.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): In rising to speak on the second reading of this bill, I feel it necessary to make some statements. Prefacing my remarks, I should like to remind the house of the most noble stand that this group made in the special war session of last September. The leader of our group, the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) to-day reiterated that stand. He pointed out that in that stand we were particularly anxious and careful to see that finance should be conscripted first. The stand that we made last September I think I can sav was one of the most noble stands that could have been made at that time. I think I can add that this group foresaw certain probabilities which have come to pass, perhaps a little faster than we expected, nevertheless they have taken place. Since we took that stand last September, there has been an election. I am not going to dwell upon that event; that is history but during that election certain speakers in Alberta misrepresented our stand. They portrayed us as conscriptionists of the first order. That misrepresentation perhaps cost this group several seats. On the other hand, perhaps one reason why the government now sits with its huge majority may be the promise that conscription would not be sponsored by them. That misrepresentation necessitated our correcting the false impression that was left. The reason why I speak along this line at the moment is to give to the house the same thoughts that I had to give to my constituents. I believe I speak for all the members of this group in saying that what we told our constituents was that while we reiterated our stand of last September, we would demand of the government that before they brought in a measure of conscription of man-power they must first conscript finance.

I said a little while ago that this was a noble stand. I know that between last September and now many things have happened; I know the exigencies of the hour, and that we must put our utmost efforts into winning this war. But we are not so certain—and in that we agree with the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas)—that this bill expresses all that it is desirable that it should express. In our view it seems somewhat evasive, and we believe that on second reading of the bill the Prime Minister should be willing to make some amendments to clarify the meaning of the bill and to set forth in it what things are to be mobilized for the successful prosecution of the war. We believe that the bill should go further than it does in its present form. Of course we shall discuss this in more detail in committee. The second section reads:

Subject to the provisions of section 3 hereof, the governor in council may do and authorize such acts and things, and make from time to time such orders and regulations, requiring persons to place themselves, their services and their property at the disposal of his majesty.

There are three things; persons, their services, and their property; while this financial system as it is now set up still rides in the saddle. That is what we are against. We say that finance must be conscripted. It is not enough to say that the people's savings must be taken; the banking system, the financial system, must be taken and made to make financially possible that which is physically possible. I say we want to go further than this legislation goes. I have no desire to seek sympathy, but I say this for the benefit of those in the press gallery; I ask them to be fair in dealing with the stand we take on this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HANSELL: That is all right. I am appealing to the press gallery to be fair in reporting anything that is said during this debate. I am quite certain our Quebec members want them to be fair. I believe they will be, but sometimes things can be coloured a little. It may be that it is not our desire to support the bill as it is now worded, and the report may go out that we are not in favour of the conscription of these things. What we are in favour of is something more than this bill gives us. I said I was not seeking sympathy, but let me tell this house that my own father and mother are living in England to-day, right in the line of attack. In addition to that, I have three boys, one nineteen and the other two, seventeen years of age. So after the stand we made in this house last September, a stand which I believe to have been a noble one, if I am now to vote for a bill which may send my boys to war, I say that if they are to march in battle, finance must march with them.

We could say a great deal about these matters. The leader of our group has referred to the evidence which was given before the banking and commerce committee a year ago, and in which the governor of the Bank of Canada declared that that which was physically possible was financially possible. But I have a very, very strong feeling that the reason why we have not advanced as far as we should, in the entire British empire, is because of the restrictions placed upon us by reason of the present financial set-up. One gets worked up a little about such measures as this. This is perhaps the most important bill we shall be asked to vote upon this session. Some time ago I read in the press that in a speech the governor of the Bank of Canada had told the people what they should do, and later I saw the report of another speech by the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada, also telling the people what they should do. Well, if I were the man on the street, believing in democracy as I do, I would say, "Who is this Graham Towers, anyway; what right has he to tell the people what to do?"

Mr. THORSON: He is a very able man.

Mr. HANSELL: I admit that he is an able man; I am not questioning that. I say, however, that the government, whose responsibility it is to bring this nation to the greatest possible efficiency in the prosecution of the war, is the body that should tell the governor of the Bank of Canada what to do, and that in no uncertain terms. If that which is physically possible can be made financially possible, why has it not been done? That is the question.

A week or so ago I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) how he was going to finance the present war policy of the government. His reply was that it would be done as it was in the last war. Perhaps the situation has changed in the last couple of weeks; but I say that if the policy of financing this war from now on is to be the same as that followed in the last war, then this bill falls far short of what it should be. That is not the conscription of finance.

I should like to refer to the new democracy platform that was issued during the election campaign, in order to state our position once more:

We believe that Canada should finance her share in this war by the creation of the necessary debt-free credit and currency, with definite price regulations to prevent any inflationary rise in prices, thereby enabling the dominion to give the most effective support without the nation incurring huge debts by borrowing or resorting to exhorbitant taxation.

I am reading a paragraph from the division entitled "Preservation of the Empire." The next paragraph reads:

We strongly support the just demands of Canadians for the greatest possible equalization of sacrifice, including adequate measures to ensure the present and future economic security of all our people. We affirm that the conscription of finance, without expropriation of individual's property or money, should precede the conscription of man-power.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say to you that it is our desire that when this bill is in committee, the Prime Minister should so word its sections as to state very clearly that the banking institutions, the financial institutions, the industries and the corporations of this country will be conscripted before we have any conscription of man-power.

Mr. PIERRE GAUTHIER (Portneuf) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I hope that participation by hon members in the debate on this all important measure will not lead this house or the Canadian people—English or French speaking—to believe that they are afraid to defend their country or that they are devoid of bravery or courage.

We have recently been elected mainly on that time-worn subject of conscription. If 10,035 out of 14,200 electors registered in my constituency elected me as their representative, it was because I had been, like themselves, opposed to the enforcement of conscription in this country. Let me explain. In 1937, some fellow-members and I initiated in this house a struggle in the course of which we have opposed the dispatch of contingents overseas. We have stood against participation in external wars and on several occasions we have asked for a reduction of money votes because we believed that a contribution in the form of munitions, foodstuffs and clothing would be more useful to the allies and would better answer the needs of our country than a contribution in manpower. At each session we have risen in debate against the dispatch of troops overseas. We were unsuccessful. However, during the provincial electoral campaign held in 1939, which we waged and won in supporting Liberal candidates on the assurance that there would be no conscription, we did accept the dispatch of troops overseas because we were sure that there would be no conscription. During the last federal campaign, this conscription act was discussed. I did not ask my electors the plain question: "Are you in favour of conscription in this country?" and if I have risen to-night in this house, if I ask the government not to be too hasty in having this act passed by the house, it is because of my wish to be consistently honest toward my electors and to have the opportunity of asking them what they think of the enforcement of conscription in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am told that the people are in favour of the establishment of conscription in this country. I shall await the opportunity of consulting them before expressing an opinion on that point. I can assume my responsibilities as well as any one in this house or outside, and my purpose in rising to-night is not merely to embarrass or criticize the government. I have no such wish, but, as a representative of the people, I am entitled to ask the government to avoid hasty decisions. The system of voluntary enlistment is still giving results; we can only accept 1,200 or 1,400 volunteers a day according to the honourable the Minister for Air (Mr. Power), and we could raise 400,000 soldiers through voluntary enlistment just as easily as if we resorted to conscription. If we were to enforce conscription in this country while continuing to dispatch forces overseas, would this not, Mr. Speaker, lead the people to believe that volunteers are no longer coming forward? I do not say that because of any lack of confidence in the Liberal government simply because outside of the cabinet, outside of the house, there are over-zealous officials. I have been visited by people who wanted to enlist and who had complaints to make in that regard. One man who wanted to enlist as a dentist was unsuccessful, and why? Because preference was being given to men who could speak both languages more fluently, mainly the English language. I do not say that this was done with the knowledge of the authorities; it may very well have happened without government officials being aware of it.

It may also happen that men who enlisted exclusively for military service in Canada will be sent overseas against their will. That has already happened-in the 1914-1918 war. And I know that certain recruiting agents used more or less commendable methods to persuade men-their fellow-citizens-to enlist. Some of these men went to bed at night unconscripted, unenlisted, to awaken the following morning as enlisted soldiers without knowing how it had been done. That must not happen this time. Why not exhaust the voluntary system before resorting to conscription. Why go so fast? I am ready to admit that the news from Europe is not good; I am ready to admit that what is told us is the truth: I admit that we are heart-broken at seeing France forced to yield to the enemy; but at this time I look at the matter in my own way from the purely Canadian point of view. I do not claim to be infallible, but I claim the same right as others have to express my opinion and to discuss this question without being considered as lacking in courage when the defence of the country is involved. I shall not be the last man to offer his services for the defence of Canada, but I consider that we are going too fast in imposing conscription upon the country before having exhausted the voluntary system. That is my view, and I cannot declare myself in the matter without having at least slightly consulted those who gave me their confidence at the last election, when conscription was one of the issues. I cannot vote on the question without ascertaining their views. I have an account to render to those who sent me here to represent them, and, if I want to be honest, I have to ascertain their opinion before casting my vote for a measure of the vital importance of this one. I believe that we could continue with the voluntary system even for the defence of Canada and that the question of conscription could very well be postponed until we have an opportunity of consulting our electors. But, Mr. Speaker, there is one other thing that grieves me, as a Liberal. There are within and without this house men who have for years pinned the label of conscription to their party and who with a broad smile and very comprehensible satisfaction can now say that they have pinned the label of conscription to the Liberal party. They are already exulting. That makes me sick at heart, Mr. Speaker. I say so in this house and I know that I am telling the truth.

Mr. Speaker, I have said what I had to say, and may I add in closing that I believe that if errors have been made, unpardonable errors have been committed by other countries; it seems to me that Canada has played her part in paying the way she has:

she has done her share, has she not, in the way of munitions, food and supplies. Canada is ready to do her part in order to assure her people that she is doing everything in her power for the protection and maintenance of the British empire and of Canada, but, after all there is a limit to paying. I hear someone saying in this house that this is not the time to speak of past errors. If never a word is said about these errors, they will be committed again, as it has happened in the past when, before and during the war, supplies were sent to the enemy and our soldiers killed and wounded by shells made of Canadian metal or of ore extracted from the soil of the Allies.

Mr. J. SASSEVILLE ROY (Gaspé) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister of Canada evoked in moving terms this afternoon the sorrow of France, that unfortunate country which has fallen a prey to aggression, and when he promised England once more in most forceful terms all that Canada could do to help her even to the utmost of our capacity, this house might have thought that the government, realizing the full gravity of the situation, was now leading us on from a stage of amateurish war, which we had declared upon Germany, to a stage of serious and definite action, and that the comedy was over.

Unfortunately, it was not quite that yet. The Prime Minister stated, if I understood him correctly, after announcing compulsory mobilization in Canada—you will observe immediately the play on words, fearing the use of the term "conscription", (and the honourable member who just spoke gave the reason for this)-after announcing, as I said, general mobilization of wealth, resources and men in this country, immediately added "not for service overseas but for the defence of Canada and only on our own soil, for the present government is opposed to the conscription of men for service overseas." These are contradictory statements, Mr. Speaker. How can we promise to help France rise from the ruins scattered over her blood soaked land, how can we promise England to come to her aid to the utmost of our resources if we state at the same time that we will not send over there the men we are about to conscript?

There is something there that we do not understand. As a matter of principle, I am not opposed to the mobilization of all of the resources of Canada, both human and natural and financial for the purpose of defending our country in case of attack, which is after all possible. For that reason, I would not object to the principle of the bill. If I could only place confidence in those who are now running the country. In declaring war on Germany in September last, we laid the country open to dangers which we rightly seek to avert to-day. If France is compelled to surrender her navy and whatever arms she may still possess, I can easily see the danger that lies ahead for Great Britain. And if, in turn, Great Britain which we wanted to defend and which we are now defending were to be conquered by Germany, I believe that Canada would be in much greater danger because of all the armaments which Germany and Italy already possess, and which are superior to those of the democratic powers, and which would be further strengthened by the addition of the conquered navies. Like all other French Canadians, I am in no way opposed to making provision for the defence of Canada and I am glad to endorse the statement which the honourable member-whom I do not know as yet—has just made. I shall congratulate him later on his speech. I gladly agree with him when he says that the French Canadians, anything to the contrary notwithstanding, will be ready to do their duty if Canada is attacked, even if we have been drawn into the conflict for failing to mind our own business.

Tre right hon, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) has said over and over again in the province of Quebec during the last twenty-five years that participation in the empire's wars was no concern of ours. Only a few years ago, he said in this house: "I am opposed to any participation in external wars on the part of Canada." This he repeated in the constituency of Lotbinière last summer. He said in this house and repeated afterwards: "I am opposed to the dispatch of expeditionary forces overseas." During the electoral campaign in the province of Quebec last fall, he spoke along the same lines. He said that the war we had declared on Germany was a moderate, an amateurish war and that if the electors voted for the Hon. Mr. Duplessis, conscription would be enforced and he, the Minister of Justice, would retire and leave his post. He said: "I am the bulwark that protects you. Follow my advice. Vote for us in this election. Vote for the Hon. Mr. Godbout; otherwise, you will have conscription and Mr. Duplessis will forsake you."

Cartoons published in le Soleil, the official organ of the liberal party in the province of Quebec, during the campaign led by the Hon. Mr. Patenaude in 1925, showed side by side Mr. Patenaude and the Hon. Arthur Meighen, then leader of the Conservative party with the legend, printed in heavy type: "A vote for these men is a vote for war, for participation in England's wars to the last man and the last cent." Near them could be seen the Right Hon. Mr. Lapointe and the Right Hon. Mr. William Lyon Mackenzie King, the minister of justice and the prime minister-I mention Mr. Lapointe and Mr. King by name because they are so indicated in the newspaper. The cartoon bore the legend "Not one man, not one cent for the empire." It is as a result of such propaganda that the province of Quebec is opposed to participation in wars overseas. As was said by the hon. member who has just spoken, the province accepted, for want of better, to participate in the European war on the strength of the assurance or promise that there would be no conscription for overseas service. We accepted participation but we never ceased to be opposed to conscription.

On June 12 last, to mention a more recent date, the right hon the Minister of Justice, was reported by French language newspapers, and particularly by La Presse, of Montreal, as having said in a radio address to the province of Quebec that our participation—I am quoting from that paper-was to be voluntary and unsolicited. Let me ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether it is voluntary to-day. For the defence of our country, as I said before, I am not opposed to the mobilization of all our resources. French-Canadians will discharge their duty like all others. That is what I was saying in this house some time ago. We have an opportunity of proving our sincerity, our loyalty to England, and I shall repeat the words of Sir Etienne-Pascal Taché, who said: "If this country ever ceases to be British, the last shot for the preservation of British sovereignty in America will be fired by a French-Canadian."

I believe that we would all repeat these words to-night for the defence of the Crown, on Canadian soil. The question of conscription is now before us with the assurance that it is intended for the defence of Canada alone. As far as I am concerned, I do not believe this statement. The Right Hon. Prime Minister contradicted himself this afternoon. He promised to help England to the extreme limit of our capacities, then a few minutes later he said he was opposed to conscription for overseas service. Those two statements are contradictory. Moreover, I refer to the whole of this party's past, who has so often deceived us during the last twenty-five years. In order to triumph in the province of Quebec, this party declared during March last: "Participation must be on a voluntary basis. We are opposed to the raising of expeditionary forces for overseas service." Our soldiers are already on foreign soil. "We are against any form of participation in wars," did they say in time of peace, in Lotbinière county. And in this house, when the budget of the Department of National Defence was being voted, they continued to repeat: "We are against any participation in the wars of the empire." This was in time of peace, always.

To-day, we are in time of war. The hour is very grave, they say. Everybody agrees that it is. Surely we are serious enough to admit that when we are at war, we cannot command the enemy to wage war against us in an easy-going and pleasant manner. A war is always serious and dangerous.

But in peace time, those people have sought to develop among us a certain mentality by leading us to believe that we did not have to participate in external wars or that if we did participate in them, it should be in a moderate

To-day, inconvenienced as they are by having made so many thoughtless election promises, they loudly proclaim that we are in dire peril and they do not hesitate to disavow their former statements in adopting a policy which they have so strongly opposed.

That is why I am wondering, along with several members on the government side of the house, why the government are showing so much haste, and why they no longer stand by their statements and promises. They are beginning to gild the pill by introducing a conscription bill supposedly for the defence of Canada on her own territory. Having been deceived so many times, we have every reason to believe that this conscription will eventually result in the dispatch of our sons overseas if the European war goes on for a long time. That is why we cannot trust them.

Furthermore, I am opposed to this bill to-day because I believe that it is the seed from which will sprout conscription which they denounced only a short time ago. I realize, however, that the situation is serious in Europe and, that being the case, let us seriously consider that situation. Let us, according to the advice given by our English or French language newspapers, avoid falling a prey to hysterics or losing our heads. In so doing we shall probably be better able to uphold our cause. And there are numerous means, which are imperative, more pressing even and more necessary than conscription for which there is no immediate necessity. I believe that a careful analysis of the dangers involved in such a bill will show that it can quite possibly bring more trouble than good results in our war effort.

An understanding is quite possible without resorting to petty politics, without accusing one another and without seeking political advantage. If we keep on making mistakes, if the government persists in playing politics, as they have done in the past, politics may be greatly discredited thereby. It is time for our leaders to take their duties seriously and to seek the best means of assisting France and England and of warding off the dangers that threaten us and that we have brought upon purselves.

The hon, member who just spoke stated that we did not need men. That is a fact. The Minister for Air told us this afternoon that we can only equip between 800 and 1,200 men a day. Why then conscript manpower, when we are unable to accept the large numbers who besiege our recruiting offices? I have repeatedly brought to the attention of the military authorities that a certain Major de Gruchy, living in my constituency, who was a recruiting officer from 1914 to 1918, has been offering his services since September last. Recently, he informed me in a letter which I transmitted to the Department of National Defence that a great number of young men were going to offer him their services to help France and England. He replied that he had no official authority and that they must apply elsewhere. These young men did not have enough money to go to other recruiting camps. Therefore, in the Gaspé peninsula, there are a number of valiant young men offering their services, but unable to enlist. A man of experience like Major de Gruchy is not accepted either, though he is offering his services since almost eight months. The services of Captain Louis-Phillippe Côté who is in this house tonight, are not accepted, though he is offering his services since August 29. He is a qualified instructor, 43 years of age and in perfect health. Two or three weeks ago I met in Quebec two or three returned army officers willing to serve in the Canadian army and who have not the chance. Since all the generous offers of voluntary enlistment cannot be accepted why must we have recourse to conscription? We have no rifles, as some hon. members have just stated, we have no finished products and no raw material for use in this war, and we are going to send more men to be crushed by the German tanks while armed only with bayonets or hay forks. This is nonsense. We should commence at home; we should make use of all our undeveloped natural resources. Let us fit our ports, particularly that of Gaspé which is the key-port of the gulf of St. Lawrence, to accommodate the British and French navies in case of emergency. Let us develop the vast Gaspé oilfields covering from 700 to 800 square miles on the surface of which runs a valuable fuel oil. It is a war factor to-day and to-morrow it will bring us victory. Let us organize those primary resources. In that way we will be able to carry on the fight against the dangerous enemy who is at our doors. Let us mobilize our man-power for the production of what we lack, because there lies our shortcoming in the present war.

There is no urgent need for conscription. We are unable to equip the conscripts, we cannot provide arms for a greater number of soldiers. Let us accept those who generously offer their services and their blood. We might possibly enlist as many as half a million men, as stated a moment ago by the hon. member.

I wish to call attention to another danger, that of trouble in the province of Quebec. We will be told that those who have distorted the mentality of the Quebec people in dealing with conscription for electoral purposes will appease them. Only a few days ago, the Quebec French papers were condemning most bitterly the speeches made by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate because he had called for a more active participation and also for conscription. How is it possible to enforce conscription without stirring up trouble? Those who anticipate disturbances are wise and responsible men. Careless handling of such a dangerous subject cannot go without risk for conscription has been the hue and cry among the people ever since 1917. The leaders of the government are themselves worried over the consequences of their utterances. That is the reason why the expression "conscription of men" is not used. It is stated that this measure applies only for service in this country, for if there were question of service overseas, every one knows what would happen. The danger is quite real. Why should there be such haste, then, in running the risk of causing so much trouble?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I am not in principle against such a measure which may yet prove necessary. Should we find our country in danger, we would defend it as bravely as any one in the land. As for conscription for service overseas, I repeat that in view of the mentality developed in Quebec by the very people who are now in power, the best advice I can give to the government and to all those who have expressed a desire to serve their country well, to protect it against all danger, is to admit that such a measure providing for conscription under another guise may do us more harm than good.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): The reason why we who support the government are not making speeches is, not that we have not anything to say, but because of the splendid statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the clear statement by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson). I think we should swallow our speeches and express our sentiments in a vote, send this measure to the upper chamber at once, and get action. Hitler is ready. Let us tell him we are ready.

ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I fully agree with the wise remark made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson) when, speaking earlier this evening he said that there should be no recriminations. In the past we may all have made mistakes. We of this group do not claim for ourselves infallibility, any more, I suppose, than do other groups in the house. I do not believe that it is really a matter for shame that this country did not make greater military preparations between the end of the last war and 1937 or 1938. I really think, on the contrary, it is a matter for pride. It indicates that this is a peace-loving country; that we are not a warlike people; that we do not want from other people something that we have to take by force.

Mr. BROOKS: How about protecting ourselves?

Mr. MacINNIS: Our lack of preparation did not cause this war. What caused this war was the stupid international policy followed not only by Canada but by most of the other democracies during the last ten or twelve years. On other occasions statements have been made by all parties in the house that we did not intend to take part in European wars; that we would defend Canada; that we could live in isolation. But we cannot live in isolation, and this is beginning to dawn upon us at this time. If anyone shouts, "Why did you do this or that in 1937?" let his shout.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): I will tell you. You have always been wrong.

Mr. MacINNIS: No, I have not always been wrong, and even if I were I do not think you are the one to tell me.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): I told you three years ago.

Mr. MacINNIS: Do not glower at me; you will not scare me.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): I am not glowering; I am smiling.

Mr. MacINNIS: We are going to put our position before the house and we are going to do so in very few words, so that hon. members will know where we stand. As far as I am concerned, I favoured Canada's participation in this war. I favoured it regardless of the past policies either of this government or of the British government, because I was not unconcerned as to who would win this war; and because I was not unconcerned as to who would win the war I could not say, let the other fellow win it, we will keep out. I felt it affected me; it was my concern, and consequently I favoured Canadian participation in the war.

In Canada we have a country that is wonderfully rich—a country with great wealth and also great poverty. We want to see Canada's participation in the war carried on so that when it is over, the rich will not be richer and the poor poorer as they were after the last war. As soon as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) gives us that assurance, as soon as he assures us that the government will take effective measures to see that such a thing will not happen again, we will vote for this bill. In the bill that has been put before the house, however, there is nothing to indicate that it will not happen. As a matter of fact, as far as I can see, there is nothing in the bill introduced to-day that is not contained in the bill we passed yesterday evening, except the conscription of man-power. The government took every power in the bill that was before the house last night to do all of the things provided for in this bill except the conscription of man-power, so that this bill is put before us to-day for the conscription of manpower and nothing else. But we want to see other things conscripted so that, as I said a few moments ago, we shall not end this war with the rich richer and the poor poorer. We want a certain amount of assurance. I have in my hand the British House of Commons debates of May 22, 1940, when a similar bill was introduced there. Mr. Attlee, who was piloting that bill, said:

This is an enabling bill under which regulations can be made.

The bill before us is an enabling bill under which regulations can be made. He went on:

I want to give an indication as to the sort of regulations and the kind of control that may have to be exercised.

The Prime Minister to-day did not give any indication of the kind of control that would be exercised.

Let me say that I do not want anyone to jump to the conclusion that all of a sudden everybody is going to be ordered to do something different from what he is doing now.

Now, we do not expect that, if this bill is passed to-day and the Prime Minister said that certain industries were going to be nationalized, therefore to-morrow all the industries in Canada would be nationalized. We do not expect that, nor do we ask it. But we ask that an indication be given of what is going to be done with our industries. We were talking to-day about the position of the trade union movement. Will this bill be used to break down labour conditions that have already been won? We have no indication of what may happen in that regard. Mr. Attlee continues:

With regard to conditions and pay, it is proposed that we should carry out, wherever they exist, industrial agreements which have been arrived at, and, wherever such agreements have not been arrived at, observe the rates normally paid by good employers. If there are cases, in which people are asked to shift from one district to another, there should be payment to deal with things of that kind. . . Let me deal with a few points about control over property. Some establishments will be controlled altogether right away.

We have no indication that such will be the case here. Mr. Attlee continues:

Others may be controlled later. They will in effect be working on government account. Wages and profits will be under government control. The excess profits tax will be at the rate of 100 per cent.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): On a point of order, may I ask what the hon. member is reading from.

Mr. COLDWELL: Why do you not listen?

Mr. MacINNIS: Before I began reading from this report I said what I was reading from. The hon. gentleman was writing and did not hear me and so he had to rise to a point of order.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): Thanks very much for the information.

Mr. MacINNIS: You will see it in Hansard to-morrow. The excess profits tax will be at the rate of 100 per cent, Mr. Attlee said. He went on:

There will be no profit out of the national emergency.

Can the Prime Minister of Canada rise in also place to-night and say that there will be no profit to Canadian employers out of the present emergency?

Mr. DUPUIS: There has been none since the war began.

Mr. MacINNIS: I gave up believing in fairy tales many years ago. Mr. Attlee continues:

Other establishments may be ordered to carry on and they may perhaps be ordered to carry on at a loss, but there must be power to carry on essential services, and if people are put in a position where they are making a loss, they must have adequate remuneration in order to do their job effectively. The essential thing is that over a wide field—how wide one cannot [Mr. MacInnis.]

say at the moment—industry will be carried on for the community in fact, and not for private profit.

If the Prime Minister or any member of the government on his behalf will make such a statement to this house, then much as we dislike conscription of man-power, we shall be willing to vote for the conscription of man-power. But until such a statement is made, we are not going to vote for conscription of man-power because we know the long distance between the promises of this government and their fulfilment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my hon. friend, in view of what he has just said, what value would attach to anything I might say, if what he has said is true?

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, I believe there is room for the position I have taken in regard to the Prime Minister's past promises. But after all—possibly due to this war of nerves—we are willing to rely once more on another promise in order to get something done. However, the Prime Minister can go much further than a promise. He can put it in the bill, and then there will be no doubt about it. And in order that we may get ahead with the bill as quickly as possible, I move the following amendment:

That in the opinion of this house the governor in council shall not authorize the compulsory enlistment of man-power for military service until he has authorized the conscription by nationalization of essential war industries and financial institutions.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is not an amendment to the motion for second reading. It is a resolution.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is an expression of opinion in the form of another resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid the amendment is out of order. It is not an amendment but is rather a substantive motion.

Mr. MacINNIS: Before Your Honour makes any definite ruling may I draw to your attention—

Mr. SPEAKER: My ruling is not debatable.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am raising a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am quite willing to obey the ruling of the Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The ruling is not debatable.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not debating your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I want to refer you to the rule on which we base our amendment, paragraph 755, under standing order 75.

Hanson (Skeena)

McNevin

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry; I have already made my ruling. Any statement to be made should have been made before I made my ruling.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am very sorry that I have to appeal against your ruling. I would much rather explain my position, but if I may not, I appeal against your ruling.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

Mr. Mackenzie King moves that the bill, an act to confer certain powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of national resources in the present war, be now read a second time.

To this Mr. MacInnis moves an amendment:

That in the opinion of this house the governor in council shall not authorize the compulsory enlistment of man-power for military service until he has authorized the conscription by nationalization of essential war industries and financial institutions.

I have ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that it is a substantive motion and does not amend the original motion. The question now before the house is, shall the Speaker's ruling be sustained?

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss in my duty at this time and delinquent as a member of the House of Commons of Canada if I did not take advantage of the opportunity of addressing to you, sir, a few words in connection with the measure at present before the house.

But before proceeding, in order that there may be no misunderstanding with regard to the attitude of certain members and of certain groups of members in sessions which have passed, I should like to read one sentence of a speech delivered in the House of Commons on February 19, 1937, by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas). In part, the hon. member said:

I say most categorically that we are opposed to the increases in the defence estimates.

That expresses the sentiments not only of the hon. member, because he distinctly stated that he was speaking on behalf of the group to which he belonged.

I think it is my duty as a humble member of the House of Commons to do what I can at this time, in the debate on second reading of the bill, to ask every hon. member in the house to be a realist. If it were possible for me, then as a humble Canadian citizen my voice would ring across the Dominion of Canada, to the total population of our country, urging them to realize that Hitler is pounding upon the heart of the empire.

Not only do I consider that this bill should be accepted—and accepted by a unanimous vote of the House of Commons—but I believe it is a bill which should have been placed before the House of Commons weeks ago. I believe the only sound which should be heard across the Dominion of Canada to-day is the sound of the production line. We should not have to delay on technicalities; we should not have to hide behind the red tape of orthodox finance. The red tape of departmental administration and the red tape of orthodox finance and of every individual and collective interest should be submerged for one purpose, namely, the prosecution of the war based on the total man-power and resources of the Dominion of Canada, before it is too late.

I say—and I say this as earnestly as any sentence could be uttered—that there is no "moderate" participation on behalf of Canada in this struggle. This is a time when every man and woman in Canada must realize that we are dealing with an international gangster, an international murderer. We should view with common sense what we hear over the radio, what we read in the press and what we learn from every bit of information coming into Canada to-day, so that we may have a total realization that not only the life of the empire but the future of the Dominion of Canada depend on the action taken by the government, the members of the House of Commons and people throughout the country.

I believe no time should be lost; nothing should be permitted to stand as an obstacle in our way. No delay should be tolerated. No group of persons should be considered, nothing should stand in the way of our objective, namely, the carrying on to a successful termination of a mobilization of all the forces of Canada.

That is where I stand to-night. That is where I have stood for many months, for a number of years. If by my pronouncements in the House of Commons to-night I can make even the most infinitesimal impression upon the convictions of hon. members or those of people throughout Canada, then I feel I have served my purpose in the emergency with which we are confronted. I suggest that the government of Canada, representing a dominion in the commonwealth of nations, should intimate today to Great Britain that she should mobilize her women and children; that she should mobilize her old men and her old women; that she should fill every ship leaving Plymouth, Liverpool, Glasgow or any other port of the British isles, and get those women and children on to the shores of Canada. I believe, sir, that we, the citizens of the Dominion of Canada—not only the members of parliament should open our doors and our hearts to every child, every woman, every person who can be removed from the shores of Great Britain to-day.

I have not been one who has been under any misapprehension as to the position of Canada in the empire. I am not one who has listened to sob sisters. I am not one who has listened to psalm singers. I have been a realist from the beginning. I have seen the clear evidence from day to day of what has been happening in a world gone mad, in a Europe where the lights have gone out, and while this war has been spreading from the arctic circle to Assuan on the Nile. I am one who believes that right now, starting to-night, the government, through its departments, should get rid of every man, whether he be a civil servant, an officer in the army, in the air force or in the navy, or a contractor who, it can be proved, has placed one obstacle or one impediment in the way of the successful prosecution of the war by this country. I say to the Prime Minister and the members of the government that their primary obligation is to eliminate everything and everyone that stand in the way of the successful prosecution of the war. To my fellow members I say, let you and me take the lead. This is not merely a war of machines but a war of finance. I am not one of those who slavishly believe in the orthodox principles of high finance, whether in England or here, in time of war. I say, let us bring together men and materials to fight the Hun in Europe before we have to fight him on the shores of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. CHURCH: You are right. But Hitler had better stay away from the bay of Quinte.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): May I say to my French Canadian colleagues from the loyal province of Quebec who have spoken in this debate to-day—and I regret exceedingly that I was not able to follow their remarks very closely—that as citizens of this dominion their homes, their families, and their lives are in jeopardy just as surely as we are sitting here, and we shall share the fate of Mother France if we do not wake up to the necessity of every citizen, you and me and every one of us, doing his utmost to win this war.

Let me make this suggestion to my fellow members of this house: Let us say to the government of Canada that we as members will devote 10 per cent of our sessional indemnity to helping the Minister of Finance prosecute this war. If we are not prepared to give our all, we shall have nothing to give eventually, and we shall not be debating here on the floor of this house or quibbling over the rules. If we lose the war we shall do what we are told, and we shall do it at the point of a bayonet. So let us members of this house as a body say to the Minister of Finance, take 10 or 20 per cent of our indemnities to help in financing the war. Let us fling everything we have into the struggle, and then we shall find out who is loyal.

I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, for taking up the time of the house, and perhaps a word of apology is due to my fellow members, but I live and breathe this very thing. Standing in my place in this house three years ago, on February 19, 1937, I asked for $100,000,000 to be placed in the estimates for defence, and it was opposed by every member of that group in the far corner. But we all realize to-day that the only way to fight Hitler is with bombers, machine guns, destroyers, tanks and every other kind of war machinery that we can mass together.

In conclusion I say earnestly, from my very heart and soul, let the government take heed, let the members take heed, and let the people of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific take heed, for the hearts and homes and lives of every one of us and of our loved ones in this dominion are threatened to-day by Hitler and his ally.

Mr. MAXIME RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that we have been asked to take a decision on such short notice concerning a matter of so grave an importance, and notwithstanding the circumstances stated in the preamble, I believe that a twenty-four hours notice would not only have proven unprejudicial to the cause of the defence of Canada but would have enabled us more fully to appraise the significance of this measure.

I have already made clear in this house on more than one occasion, notably in the course of debates on military estimates and the external policy of Canada as well as during the special session of 1939, that I stood opposed to the participation of Canada, a free and sovereign nation, in any external war. Each time, however, I did state that I was ready to vote any amount and support any measure thought necessary for the defence of Canada in Canada.

The present bill empowers the governor general in council to mobilize the human and material resources of this country to ensure its security.

And the Prime Minister has assured the house at the same time that the government would not impose conscription for overseas service and I wish to give him credit for this statement.

I regret that the government and parliament, in decreeing our participation in this war have placed themselves in a position where they are now obliged to resort to the mobilization of the entire human and material resources of this country in order to provide for its defence. Such is the result of our participation. By declaring war on Germany, we assumed the risk of having to defend ourselves some day against her onslaught and that is precisely what I opposed. The Canadian Militia Act already authorizes the governor general in council to mobilize all our man-power up to the age of sixty for service in the defence of Canada, both inside and outside the country. Now the measure at present before the house has in view the mobilization of human and material resources for the defence of Canada. Why have provided for the mobilization of our man-power in this bill when such a step could have been taken under the Militia Act?

Has the government exhausted every means of recruiting at its disposal? Has there been any appeal for volunteers to defend Canada before resorting to this measure? These are all questions that spring to my mind and which I find myself unable to answer at the moment.

I am prepared, as I have always been, to ensure the defence of Canada, but before supporting any conscription measure I would have to be sure that all other means have been exhausted.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) and the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) have outlined the general policy of our group on this question, and I shall therefore make just a few observations further to clarify our attitude.

I think we are all agreed that our major objective is to win the war and that every endeavour must be made to that end. Therefore we in this group maintain that it is necessary to mobilize first of all the financial resources of the nation, second, our industrial resources, and lastly, our man-power. To suggest for one minute that we can make a major contribution towards winning the war without first of all mobilizing the financial resources of the nation shows, I think, a deplorable lack of understanding of the economic system.

I find to-day that people all over the country are asking this question: How is it that a nation like Germany, which in 1932 was bankrupt, without capital and at the same time with over seven million people unemployed. is to-day in a position where she has conquered one nation after another? Of course we know that it was possible for Germany to do that only by first of all making her financial policy subservient to her national policy. In the past six years, ever since Hitler's rise to power, it has been quite apparent that Britain would probably be embroiled in a European war, in which event Canada as a member of the commonwealth of nations would also probably stand by her side. Yet, knowing these things, having them constantly before it, this government during the past five years has continually maintained a policy of laissezfaire. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has tried to make the excuse that public opinion would not have allowed an increase in expenditures for war purposes. Why was that so? It may have been true, but there was a definite reason; it was because the Minister of Finance dared to tell the house that there was only so much money available; that if more money were used for the purpose of defending the country, there would be that much money less to meet the needs of the people, and that the people were not prepared to have their social services cut down on that score.

We have heard a great deal about subversive elements, but I would say the greatest subversive element which has been at work in Canada during the past five years is the financial policy of this government. When the hon, member for Parry Sound (Mr. Slaght) talks about hanging those guilty of sabotage I would say, if we are going to do any hanging let us hang the really great saboteurs of this country, those people who by their policy have forced this country into the condition in which it is to-day, a condition whereunder we are not able to make an effective contribution towards defeating Hitlerism.

Time and again in this house this group has urged a more energetic development of our resources by a carefully controlled policy of monetary expansion, but always we were met by an hysterical outburst of the then Minister of Finance that such a proposal would be inflation. I suggest it might be a very good thing for the former Minister of Finance to go over to France to-day; let him stand up in front of the onward-rushing tanks, hold up his hands to them as he did to this house, and tell those tanks they are not sound because they were built as a result of monetary expansion. Then let him see how quickly he will be deflated, as his policy has deflated this country; let him see how soon he will be wrecked, as his policy has wrecked the health and well-being of thousands of the people of Canada during the past few years.

I believe the minister will agree that the real cost of the war must be met during the war. I know the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) has said that he has not made that statement this session, but I would point out that on September 12, 1939, in this very house, the acting Minister of Finance made that statement; and in view of the fact that the present Minister of Finance was the Minister of Finance at that time, surely he would not suggest that the acting Minister of Finance in September last made a statement with which he did not agree. I should like to read to the house a statement which was then made by the acting Minister of Finance:

The real costs of a war must come out of current production.

The Minister of Finance, replying the other day to the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell), said he never made that statement. I would again point out that this statement was made by the acting Minister of Finance on behalf of the minister. I will read further down:

Taking it by and large, the fact is that the shells that are fired and the other goods and services that are used up in the course of a war must be produced during the period of the war. This being the case, it follows that, and

I repeat it again, in real terms, namely, in terms of the loss to the nation of this production, a war is paid for substantially during its duration.

If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, I would ask, what possible excuse can there be for leaving a great debt at the end of the war? The minister will agree that it is possible greatly to increase the production of the country to-day. The minister will also agree that anything which is physically possible and desirable can be made financially possible. That statement was agreed to by the governor of the Bank of Canada. If then it is possible greatly to increase the production of the country, and if the real cost of the war is incurred during the war, what possible excuse can there be for piling up a great debt against the country? It will result in a condition whereby the people of Canada will be in debt to, comparatively speaking, a small number of people as a result of the profits and savings which they acquire during the war. If the real cost is incurred during the war, what possible excuse can there be for such a condition? What justification can there be for placing a levy against the people of this nation for time everlasting in order to pay for a war which will have been already paid for in human lives, in blood and sweat, and in material? Yet the government have the nerve and audacity to say that they are going to insist upon equality of service and sacrifice. How much equality is there when, while men are sacrificing their lives to the winning of the war, we allow individuals in this country to pile up profits by which they will be able to exact tribute from the people of this nation for all time?

I maintain that any man who can go through this period and be no worse off at the end of the war than he was in the beginning should consider himself lucky. When one thinks of all the men who will be slaughtered, when one reflects that many of the survivors will reach the end in a maimed condition, it is natural to ask, is it a desirable condition that there shall be men in this dominion piling up profits and savings from that blood money? How can the government pretend that they are going to insist on equality of service and of sacrifice? No attempt has been made by them to bring about any such equality. How can they say they have a pay-as-you-go policy when they are continually piling up debt? Within a few weeks of the outbreak of the war we borrowed $200,000,000 from the chartered banks. Not long afterwards we borrowed another $200,000,000. They are merely creating a smoke-screen by trying to persuade the people that they are paying for the war with twenty-five cent stamps. We know that practically the whole cost of the war is being paid by borrowings from financial corporations and banks. While it is true that a considerable number of people are subscribing small amounts, when the history of this war is written and the financial accounts are rendered we shall find that only a very small number of people and financial institutions have really financed the cost of this war.

So, Mr. Speaker, this group maintains that if we are to make a really maximum contribution; if we are to pursue a pay-as-you-go policy; if we are to assure equality of service and sacrifice, we must use that bank which was nationalized by the government, the bank which, the Prime Minister stated, would issue currency and credit in terms of public need to meet the domestic and social requirements of the Canadian people. I ask why that is not being done to-day? Why should we have to borrow from financial corporations; why should we have to go to the private banks, when to-day we have a bank of our own? If the resources of the Bank of Canada are used as they should be, we can truthfully say that we are following a financial policy which is based on the pay-as-you-go principle. Let us finance this war through the Bank of Canada, taking what money we need from that bank, increasing taxation in the most equitable way possible, and introducing price control so that there will be no danger of inflation. Then the Prime Minister will truly be able to say that we have adopted a pay-as-you-go policy and have insisted on an equality of service and sacrifice.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Public Works) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my very humble contribution to the debate in French to which we had the advantage of listening this afternoon. The speeches which were then made against the bill now under consideration recalled to my mind the oft stated truth that there is actually little difference between men as regards their ideas and principles, and that the sole difficulty lies in their method of approaching a problem. Generally, everything depends on setting the problem correctly.

As I listened to those speeches, I asked myself, in good faith and with due respect to those who have spoken before me, whether the hon. members had read the bill they were criticizing. Reading it over and over again, I can find nothing in its provisions that would justify the attitude of the hon. members who are opposed to the principle of this bill.

Judging by the remarks addressed to you, Mr. Speaker, one might feel that the house were considering the adoption of a conscription measure intended to go immediately into force and to empower the military authorities to draft every child, boy and able-bodied man in the country. This is not at all the spirit of the act nor is it the meaning of the bill at present under consideration. The government merely seeks, through this measure, the authority to take, according to circumstances and to our needs, adequate steps for the defence of Canada. That is the whole meaning of the bill.

Now why frighten the youth of our province and our country, why frighten ourselves by raising in every mind the nightmares or the dreams of tired men? The government is merely seeking the authority, in an hour of danger the gravity of which is realized by every well-thinking person throughout the world, the government merely seeks the power to adopt, in this grave situation, at its own discretion and according to circumstances, the means required to safeguard the very lives of those who oppose the bill.

It may be, perhaps, that they have not had ime to read the bill. As a matter of fact, it was given to us only a short time ago. But the gravity of the present situation and of the danger which threatens us all increases hourly. No one should criticize the government for not adhering strictly to the time limits set by parliamentary procedure and for being slightly late at times with urgent measures such as the one we are now considering. This bill, however, is very brief and could have been read, well digested and understood in a few minutes.

This power which the government may have, if the bill is passed, to draft the ablebodied men of the nation into the service of their country, is limited in its application—one cannot repeat or stress it too much—this power is limited in its application by the statement, repeated four times in the bill, that military service shall be limited to Canada. There is no need to be a brilliant thinker nor a great legislator to understand the provisions of this bill. In the first paragraph of the preamble, we note the following:

Whereas by reason of developments since the outbreak of the present war a special emergency has arisen and the national safety of Canada has become endangered;

Let us consider next the second paragraph of the preamble where we find:

Whereas it is, therefore, expedient to confer upon the governor in council special emergency powers to permit of the mobilization of all of the effective resources of the nation, both human and material, for the purpose of the defence and security of Canada.

[Mr. Cardin.]

And you come now to section 3:

The powers conferred by the next preceding section may not be exercised for the purpose of requiring persons to serve in the military, naval or air forces outside of Canada and the territorial waters thereof.

Is it plain enough, is it clear enough?

Now, proceeding in logical order, we find that section 2 which is the pith and substance of this bill, begins with the following words:

Subject to the provisions of section three hereof, the governor in council may do such and such a thing. . . .

So it is clear that these powers are being taken, so far as military service is concerned, only for the defence of Canada.

Can anyone find serious objection, I ask you, against a bill such as this?

I have heard one hon, member state in the course of his remarks: "It is all very well to empower the government to enlist men and to control the wealth of this country, but we must remember that within the past few years and even within the last few months, the government has allowed the exportation of raw materials and goods which may be used for war purposes." Arguments such as this do not amount to anything. What is the use of criticizing to-day what has happened last year or a few months ago? What we have to keep in mind to-day is the situation in which Canada finds itself but we should not trouble about the past. Mr. Speaker, it is the present that matters, and particularly the future, fraught with dangers and so ominous for the whole of our population, irrespective of race or creed. Such is the responsibility that lies with the government and with all those who are bent on doing their share for the defence of liberty and the safeguard of democratic institutions in this Canada of ours, even if they will not take any interest in what is going on overseas. Such is our duty, if we see it clearly, rather than to stir up prejudices and revive old quarrels which come from a lack of information or of a proper understanding of the real situation which the country has to face.

There has also been a question of the conscription of wealth. It is claimed that this bill does not go far enough and that while provision is made for the conscription of ablebodied men the same attention is not given to the conscription of wealth and material goods. I contend that the bill now before the house, Mr. Speaker, goes further than any similar measure taken in the whole British empire and even in Britain herself. This bill confers on the government unlimited powers over Canadian citizens and Canadian property. Whenever the present government or any other government shall decide to apply this measure, they will have power to take every action that is now being taken in Britain with regard to conscription of men, wealth, finance and economic resources.

Every possible authority is given there in comprehensive terms and this bill covers conscription of wealth just as much as that of man-power. And when it is suggested that finance should be enlisted to fight along with the soldiers, I wish to state that under the bill now before the house the government is authorized to request finance to keep step with the soldiers in their fight for our liberty. The bill now being submitted to the house could not be worded in more general terms. This bill covers everything.

In any event, what the government is being given under this measure is the broadest blank cheque, ever given to its executive by any parliament for the administration of public affairs and the safety of the sacred interests

It has been stated just now that if we are now called upon to vote on a measure of this kind it is because we have made the mistake, in the past year, of taking part in the European conflict. I cannot understand anyone expressing such an opinion and I cannot understand how, when attempting to voice the opinion of the province of Quebec, one can so give the lie to the vote given during the recent provincial elections and during the last federal election, elections during which my old and intelligent province of Quebec gave its approval to Canada's participation in the war and returned the very government which had decided to participate in the defence of liberty and democracy in the world. The people of my province possessed enough vision, enough intelligence to realize that by restricting their participation to the defence of the Canadian soil only, their participation should prove of no avail, that it would prove fruitless whenever Britain and France were crushed. At such a time, rhetorical, high sounding speeches and empty words concerning the defence of Canada shall partake only of the theatrical and shall be devoid of any quality of true patriotism to be found among men whose main preoccupation is to forestall possible threatening dangers and to prepare, as intelligent men, for the defence of the country.

I am not afraid to return to my province and to my county, to support the bill which the Government is now submitting to Parliament for approval.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec City): Hear, hear.

Mr. CARDIN: I have too much confidence in the understanding of my electors and in their true patriotism to hesitate for one moment to meet them or to set forth before them our point of view and the present situation.

Moreover, we would only be repeating what we have been telling them at two memorable elections in the province of Quebec. With all due respect for those who do not agree with me, I say that when they speak as they have they do not represent the views of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, an hon. member said: "I am in favour of the principle of the bill, but I am going to vote against it." He did not have faith in the government because, said he: "You have not been logical and the Prime minister himself is not logical in his statement." I wonder how logical the hon, member is when he says: "I am in favour of the principle of the bill, but I will vote against it because I have no confidence in the government." Such arguments are worthless in opposition to this measure.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, although the bill is a government measure, it will when passed by the house no longer be the bill of the government, but a law enacted by the Parliament of Canada. It will be the law of the land and not an act of the government for the time being in charge of the affairs of

The arguments brought forward have no foundation. In spite of all efforts to quote statements made by someone or other in various circumstances by detaching phrases from the general context of speeches, the clear and explicit terms of this bill remain. The bill must be taken as it is and interpreted according to its terms, without taking into consideration so-called reproaches heaped upon the government or some of its members concerning the consistency of their position or of their statements.

Mr. Speaker, one of my good friends said to us in the course of his remarks: "With this act, with this extravagant war effort on the part of our country, we are going to bankrupt Canada, and to jeopardize our financial stability, we shall run into considerable difficulties and perhaps put ourselves in the position of being unable to provide for the reestablishment of our soldiers after the war." I have much respect for the honourable member, but I cannot have much respect for such an argument. What will be the value of our petty chattels and even of our great assets, what will become of our accumulated wealth if Germany succeeds in crushing under her blood-stained boot the combined strength of France and England? What will become of our savings, and of the money deposited in the banks or invested in industrial plants if the military power of France and England is annihilated? Our so-called wealth will be worth as much as that of Poland, of Czechoslovakia, our so-called assets will have just the value that those of Holland, Norway and Belgium have to-day.

That is how the problem should be faced. During the last election I stated many times, in the province of Quebec something which I am not afraid to maintain before the people, before every one of my fellow-citizens: Money is of no importance when the freedom of a nation is at stake.

I cherish highly the liberties I enjoy in Canada, the right to speak my mother tongue as I am doing at present in this parliament, where the majority are English-speaking; I appreciate this freedom, as well as that of practising my own religion, so highly that I would not trade them for all the money in the world. I place above every financial consideration the rights and liberties I have enjoyed, with my people, on this American continent, under the British flag.

No doubt there have been clashes at times, and we have encountered difficulties; there have undoubtedly been moments of friction between ourselves and our English-speaking fellow citizens, and we have perhaps certain claims that are worthy of more serious consideration than has been given to them up till now, but I say that this is no longer of moment, that it is a thing of the past. I am only concerned with knowing to-day if I shall continue to enjoy liberties which I cherish and if I shall continue to live as a free citizen on this Canadian soil, which was formerly called the New France.

Mr. Speaker, some hon, members say that they cannot come to a decision without consulting their electors or the province of Quebec. There is no need of consulting the province of Quebec. The electors of Quebec were consulted twice in the space of a few months and they rendered an unanswerable verdict. Quebec said what she thought; she expressed her approval in a most striking manner of the policy of Canadian participation in the war. When she declared herself opposed to enforced registration and to conscription, she was thinking of conscription for overseas service. But I am unable to believe, such is the pride which I entertain for my race, that any of my compatriots can not appreciate the liberties we enjoy, or has no interest in the future of liberty and democracy in the world. I am unable to believe, Mr. Speaker, that my compatriots would be so lacking in courage, in vision and in patriotism to refuse participation in the defence of Canada whose noble soil covers the ashes of our forefathers, who reclaimed it from barbarism for civilization and Christianity.

No, Mr. Speaker, there is no need of consulting the province of Quebec. Such an action would perhaps provide a few agitators with an opportunity to make some noise. An hon. member has told us: "There will perhaps be some agitation in Quebec." Let me re-assure you as to that, Mr. Speaker. The right-thinking people of Quebec are with the government; they are in favour of our participating in the war to the extent of our ability and they are ready to defend Canada with the greatest energy. That is the view of the people of Quebec and it is well known. To consult them on that subject would be to express a doubt, to entertain fears as to their state of mind. No, I do not wish thus to insult the good and wise province of Quebec, in thinking that it does not understand the situation and is afraid of responsibilities. My compatriots are too attached to tradition, they are too grateful for the noble deeds of their ancestors to refuse to defend the soil of Canada, their fatherland. I say to my good friends: "You are mistaken. Should you consult them they would tell you that you did wrong to question their patriotism, that you misjudged the people who elected you to represent them in the House of Commons."

Mr. Speaker, everyone seems to admit that there is danger or, at least, that there may be danger. But those who oppose this measure say: "Let us wait a little longer; it may be dangerous to do so, but let us wait to prepare ourselves until the danger is at our gates." It will then be too late to defend ourselves.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Hear, hear.

Mr. CARDIN: A handful of men, ten or eleven million of a population on an immense territory like that of Canada, we would be unable to defend our country when the might of England and of France have gone under. It would be too late. The time to act is now, before the enemy seeking to invade our territory appears at our gates.

We should wait, say some hon. members. With what would we defend ourselves? At this moment, Mr. Speaker, we do not even know what is to happen to the French navy following the treaty to be signed between Germany and unfortunate France. Let us suppose for a moment that France's navy were to be handed over to Germany and Italy. What would be the position of England, at whose side we are fighting to-day?

There is every reason to fear the surrender of the French navy to Italy. What might happen if together with whatever German fleet there may be, they undertook to fight the British fleet? Who would be able to quietly fall asleep at night and indulge in pleasant and amusing dreams? Our soul would be torn by fear and anxiety because we would not know what would be the fate of the world the following morning.

The time for action is not to-morrow; the time for action is to-day. Together we must make use of all those forces which Canada is able to mobilize in order to prepare ourselves for the defence of Canada. If it does not become necessary to defend ourselves, so much the better; but if it does, it will at least be a consolation for us to think that we have seen to it in time and that we have made preparations when it was still time to do so, instead of waiting until the last minute to put up a stage fight. Mr. Speaker, reference was made a while ago to great and noble France. In his speech, the hon. member who seconded the amendment, which you have ruled out of order, drew a fine picture of the intellectual, moral and military glory of the old country whence came the forefathers of us, French Canadians. He pitied the fate of unfortunate France. Allow me to tell him, Mr. Speaker, that France, poor France, is agonizing at the present time. She has always stood, down the course of history, as a shining beacon illuminating the progress of ideas and principles throughout the world, and has spared neither sacrifice nor the life of her sons in the defence of freedom, in protecting the weak and the humble. She has ever been in the forefront of spiritual progress, of intellectual development and of liberty. Poor France, she has suffered down through the ages because of her principles and of her noble feelings of humanity. She has just put up such a valiant struggle as to prove even the humblest soldier of her powerful army a hero. One after the other, by the hundreds and by the thousands, they have fallen on the battlefields and have been crushed by the barbarian Hitler's powerful war machine. They have fallen in defence of humanity. in defence of human liberties, yours and mine, my friends. They have fallen together with other noble allies to save democracy and fight slavery. Let us bless their memory but, in heaven's name, let us respect their sacrifice. Let us not use it to justify our inaction in the presence of danger.

Anyone who refuses Canada the right to control all its human and material resources in order to ensure the defence of our territory, has no right to invoke the name of France, it is a sacrilege.

I trust you will forgive, Mr. Speaker, if I have expressed myself somewhat heatedly, and I am sure my good friends who do not share my opinions will do the same. They know me too well not to do so. They are aware that I am not a good politician, that I am far from being a good parliamentarian. I would be a poor diplomat. I can only play the game when all the cards are on the table. I have no way of hiding my feelings or my thoughts and when I deal with matters such as these I am forced, by nature, to follow the dictates of my soul and all my feelings. That is why I have perhaps injected too much heat into these remarks. I therefore beg your forgiveness, Mr. Speaker, pleading my sincerity and good intentions.

I have endeavoured, to the best of my ability and according to my modest lights, to explain my point of view and convince, if possible, some of my compatriots of the value of the bill at present before the house, as well as to request them to show confidence once again in this administration, to show confidence in the present prime minister who has introduced in this parliament a bill consistent with the policy he stated during the entire recent electoral campaign, and which we ourselves have stated in Quebec during the last two elections we contested in that province.

I do not want to resume my seat without dissociating myself from those who always place their reliance in the Monroe doctrine. I have had occasion, at the two last elections in the province of Quebec, to discuss the argument based on the protection provided by the United States. I say that it would be a mistake to place our sole trust in the application of the Monroe doctrine for the protection of the liberties of Canada and of the rights and privileges enjoyed by the province of Quebec. Moreover, it is unworthy of a citizen of Canada, which we are pleased to call a great country, to shift our responsibilities on our great neighbours.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Hear, hear.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no use for that kind of patriotism which would limit itself to selling produce, materials and arms, in short, to making money without accepting the responsibilities of a free and independent people.

Doubtless we can help the cause of liberty and democracy by supplying arms to England and her allies; doubtless we can help them by sending them as much as possible in the way of munitions and foodstuffs; but I ask those who bring forward this argument: Do you not in your heart feel a bit ashamed of thinking only in terms of money while abandoning to your neighbours the protection of your life, of your possessions and of your rights!

Mr. Speaker, I spurn that theory. I do not want it to be said in the country that we are trying to hide behind the Monroe doctrine.

Right Hon, W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that this afternoon, after making a brief reference to the very critical condition in Europe, I proceeded to set forth certain measures the government had decided to introduce immediately, in order to meet the emergent conditions with which our country is now faced. In the statement I made at the time I gave a very full outline of the measure before the house to-night. If at the beginning of the debate on second reading I failed to speak again, it is because I thought that in my preliminary statement I had set forth all the essential features of the measure. I had thought, too, that the measure itself was so clear in its limited number of sections that there would be no difficulty on the part of any hon. member to understand fully what was meant. More than that, I realized that many hon. members had a very full knowledge of a similar measure passed by the British parliament. I had thought, indeed, that most hon. members were familiar with that measure; in fact, several hon, members who have questioned my not speaking on the second reading have quoted from it this afternoon.

For those reasons I thought it unnecessary to take up the time of the house with a second statement of the principle involved in the measure, particularly because the extreme need for immediate action must be apparent to all who are concerned about the present position of our dominion, in view of the appalling changes which have taken place in other parts of the world. I mention these points because some hon, members have rather called in question the fact that I did not speak at the outset of the debate on second reading.

May I at once refer to the situation which occasioned the British government to introduce the measure which is very similar to the one now before this House of Commons, and on which indeed the present measure is based.

Hon. members will recall that when in September last war began, the British government immediately adopted the defence of the realm regulations. We in Canada followed a similar course. We gave ourselves virtually the same powers as the British government had taken in dealing with the situation at that time. It was not until May 22 of this year that the government of the United Kingdom felt it necessary to supplement the powers which had been given to them by parliament in September by introducing a further measure in the nature of an amendment to the previous act, and giving additional powers to meet a very emergent situation.

What was the emergent situation which developed on May 22 which had not existed before? In a word it was this, that for the first time the United Kingdom found there was no longer a single country standing between her and the enemy. Since the beginning of the war Germany had not merely extended her power over Poland, which she invaded at the outset, but swept into Norway, and she had swept through Denmark, subjugating that country. She had gone into Holland and into Belgium and conquered those countries, and at that time she was invading France. The result was that for the first time in the history of Europe the British isles found themselves with only the North sea and the English channel separating them from a German foe. That is a condition which has never existed heretofore.

May I point out, with respect to Canada, that the parallel is very striking, if we but stop to think of the situation which exists to-day. At this very time France lies under the iron heel of Germany. And with what result? With the result that also between ourselves and the enemy there is no longer a single country. There are the waters of the English channel, and the waters of the Atlantic, but that is all there is between Germany and the British isles and ourselves.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is the British navy.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am speaking geographically just now; I am not speaking of measures of defence.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Do not forget the British navy.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope my hon. friend will not assume that I am not trying to give all honour and credit to the United Kingdom and its forces that can possibly be given. My hon, friend knows I am doing that. Perhaps my hon. friend will see that he would have been wiser not to have said what he has said, in view of what I am about to say now. At this very moment we do not know what disposition, if any, has been made of the French fleet. We do not know what disposition is going to be made of that fleet. I have been receiving dispatches this evening, as I have sat here, with respect to that very matter, and up to this hour we do not know what disposition has been made of the French fleet.

Now may I ask this question? Suppose the French fleet has already passed, or should-pass into the hands of Germany to-morrow. What is there that stands between the enemy and our country other than, as the leader of the opposition has said, the British fleet? That is all. What about the French possessions off our coast, St. Pierre and Miquelon? Might not Germany feel, as part of her subjugation of France-we do not yet know what the terms of any armistice may be-that the next step must be the immediate possession by Germany of the outlying possessions of France? Who will say, who can say to-night, that there may not already be crossing the Atlantic part of a fleet that Germany may have seized in order immediately to carry the war into other parts of the world in addition to Europe to which continent fighting has been mostly confined up to the present. That is one of the reasons why we as a government felt that it was necessary to ask this house to give us additional powers, powers in addition to those which we have under the defence of Canada regulations, powers if not greater, at any rate as large as those-and this may be a surprise to some—that we already have under the Militia Act.

I want to say a word about the powers which this country has under the Militia Act if the government chose to exercise an authority which the government of Canada has had ever since 1868. The point I wish to bring home at the moment is this: It is essential that we should let this country know that there is an emergent condition of very grave character, and that not an hour nor a moment should be lost in giving the government all the enabling powers that it may need to deal with this new situation.

Some hon, members have referred a great deal to the statement made by Mr. Attlee at the time he introduced the corresponding British measure. May I draw to the attention of hon, members how long it took to put that measure through the British parliament? Debate on the bill commenced shortly before 3.33 in the afternoon of May 24. The resolution had been passed, the bill introduced, three readings and committee stage passed, and the whole was completed by 5.22 in the afternoon—less than two hours. And here we are, with imminent danger facing this country, and it looks now as if we are probably going to be two days instead of two hours upon this bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I had rather expected, when I presented the existing circumstances to the house at the outset, that hon. members would be so concerned about the well-being of their own country that they 95826—571 would be ready to see this measure for its more adequate protection put through the two houses in Canada as speedily as it was put through both houses of parliament in Great Britain. I did not think, Mr. Speaker, that when dealing with a situation such as confronts us, time would be lost by this house in an appeal from your ruling on a point which was at best a very trivial one in the light of the circumstances of the moment.

May I now cite what Mr. Attlee said. My hon, friends particularly of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation group have referred to him frequently. Let me read what he said in introducing the measure, and then I will come to the paragraph which has been so frequently quoted. Mr. Attlee began by saying:

I have to inform the house that the present situation is so critical that the government are compelled to seek special powers from the house by a bill to be passed through all its stages in both houses of parliament to-day.

I can repeat those words literatim et verbatim in regard to the position of Canada as we see it as a government at the moment. Mr. Attlee went on—I shall leave out a few sentences:

A great battle is now proceeding. . . . The result of that battle we cannot know, but it must be clear to all that the next few weeks will be critical. Our ruthless enemy, who is restrained by no considerations of international law, of justice or humanity, is throwing everything into the scale to force a decision. We are resolved that he shall not succeed. The government are convinced that now is the time when we must mobilize to the full the whole resources of this country.

That is the position that we have taken, that the time has come when we must mobilize to the full the whole resources of this country. Mr. Attlee went on:

We must throw all our weight into the struggle. Every private interest must give way to the urgent needs of the community. We cannot know what the next few weeks or even days may bring forth, but whatever may come we shall meet it as the British people in the past have met dangers and overcome them.

Has not the situation become identical so far as Canada is concerned? Mr. Attlee was speaking of the position in the United Kingdom as it was at that time. For Canada the situation is identical as it exists to-day. The situation has become one of Canada being directly faced by an enemy which now possesses the whole or at all events the greater part of western Europe. And do not let us forget that, instead of just one enemy, there are now two, because Italy is in this war as well as Germany and this country is at war with Italy as she is with Germany. Do not let us forget that.

But let us realize this. We have been watching Germany as she has pursued her conquests in different parts of Europe, and we have been saying that after she is finished with France she will immediately make an attack upon the British isles. But are you sure it is going to be the British isles only, or that the British isles will first be attacked, and that only then other parts of the British empire will be attacked? I do not like to speak in words of defeat because I do not think any member of this house has that thought in his mind, just as I have not. I believe in ultimate victory; but I also believe, as I said this afternoon, that it is going to be a very long and a very sorrowful path before that end is reached.

But to-day the position is this. Germany and Italy combined are fighting the British empire, the British commonwealth of nations that makes up our empire. They are going to pick and choose as to which particular part they will attack first. They know the part that Canada has taken and is taking in this war. They know to what extent Britain is dependent, and will become increasingly dependent once they seek to surround her shores, upon the men, the food, munitions and other aid that flow from Canada across the Atlantic, and it is as certain as night follows day that they are going to use every effort in their power to see that aid from this dominion and from the other dominions is stopped as rapidly as possible. In such circumstances are the hands of the government to be tied and is the government to be prevented from exercising the authority under this measure that we are seeking and consider necessary? I am amazed that it should not have been possible for us to have concluded this debate this evening. I see it is now eleven o'clock.

If the house will allow me to conclude my remarks I shall not take much longer, but I should like to answer some of the questions that have been asked by some hon. gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am grateful to hon. members for having given permission for the bill to be passed through its various stages to-day, and I should like to show my appreciation by seeking to answer, before I conclude, some of the questions which have been asked.

One of the questions that was put was: Would the government indicate what it intends to do with the powers that are being given to it under this bill? But before I answer that, in case I should overlook it, may I refer to the other matter to which I alluded a moment ago, namely, the powers we already have under the Militia Act. Under the War Measures Act we have powers to go very far in what we may wish to do, but under the Militia Act we have also powers, and they relate to the conscription of men, not to the conscription of wealth or to the conscription of property, or materials or whatever other entity you may wish to designate, but to the conscription of men in Canada. Here is the law as it stands to-day. I quote section 8, subsection 1 of the Militia Act. It makes provision for the conscription of man-power in the following terms:

All the male inhabitants of Canada, of the age of eighteen years and upwards, and under sixty, not exempt or disqualified by law, and being British subjects, shall be liable to service in the militia: Provided that the governor general may require all the male inhabitants of Canada, capable of bearing arms, to serve in the case of a levée en masse.

That is part of the law to-day. One or two of my hon. friends who have spoken this afternoon and have been talking about conscription, as if we were introducing something new, forget altogether that when it comes to the defence of Canada the law of this country has given the government that authority by statute ever since the first year after confederation. There is one difference between our law as also the power we are seeking in the present bill, and the authority as it exists under the British law. It is a difference which limits rather than extends our power. Under British law conscription of man-power is conscription for service anywhere. As in the Militia Act we have in the present bill purposely by a special clause in this measure kept a pledge which we on this side of the house made before and at the beginning of the war, that we would not, while this administration was in office, enact a law for the conscription of men to be sent overseas. We have kept that promise by a clause which is specifically set forth in the bill that is before the house to-day. In other words, we have in this particular measure gone no further in the right of mobilizing man-power than we had authority to go under the law of this country as it has been since 1868.

I may be asked, "Why, if you have that law, do you find it necessary to introduce this?" I will give you one reason. The law as it now stands, provides that when selecting men by compulsion, they are to be chosen by ballot, which means that, no matter how well-fitted a man may be for one calling and how unfit for another, he may be chosen by ballot to render a service which he is less well-qualified than is some other to render. Under the power we are asking to-day we seek to remedy that state of things, by giving the government the power to decide what particular work is to be performed by particular individuals should the occasion arise to make a selection. From the beginning of this war up to the present moment, if one thing more than another has been impressed upon the administration by those who have counselled us from other quarters, it has been, that the outcome of this war is going to depend upon the output of the resources of the country in the form of food, of munitions, of aircraft and other armaments, quite as much as upon the men who serve in the active forces, and that so long as sufficient men can be found for combatant duty, no greater mistake can be made than to take a valuable mechanic, highly skilled and trained, out of some industry where he is capable of making, say, aircraft and put him into a regiment where he will have to serve instead of some other person far better qualified as a soldier than he may be. Now, under the measure we are introducing to-day, we have the power to make that kind of selection if it is necessary, and I think it is a very wise discretion to give to the administration.

I come now to the inquiry as to how we are going to exercise this power. I would say, in a word, that we shall continue to exercise all the powers we have or may be given, just as we have from the beginning of the war when exceptional powers were first given to us. We are not going to exercise all these powers—put into effect the provisions in their entirety-within the next twenty-four hours. We need enabling legislation—for that is what it is-to enable the government to meet each situation as it arises in the most effective way it can possibly be met. The need to-morrow may be for one thing in one place; the need the day after may be for something else in another place. We do not know how the situation will develop in the next little while, but we want to be in a position to take the most effective action in the shortest possible time.

Under the defence of Canada regulations, what was the criticism that was made against us by hon, gentlemen who this evening have been again expressing their doubts about us? Their criticism was along the line that we had gone too far in our defence of Canada regulations. To-day, from one end of the country to the other, if there is any criticism at all, it is that those regulations do not go far enough. We have proceeded step by step, adopting the courses which we felt were necessary, and seeking to avoid a step which would make the last condition worse than the condition we were trying to remedy.

Here I come to the wisdom of exercising judgment in the matter of the time within which some measures are to be put into effect. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) remarked this afternoon that perhaps we were a little late in the time we were introducing a system of registration now required to enable us to carry out more effectively some of the measures mentioned to-day. May I remind my hon. friend-I do not do this except to illustrate my pointthat it was three years before the government which was in office at the time of the last war introduced registration. It took the administration of that day all of three years to arrive at the time when they believed that they might with wisdom take that particular

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That does not prove anything with relation to the present government's effort.

Mr. ROWE: At that time there were already 400,000 men "over there".

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will find, when three years have gone by, that the number of men in this country's active service will not be surpassed by anything done in the last war.

Mr. MacNICOL: Overseas, or here?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Please allow me to go on for a moment. I hope that I have not introduced a note which will be controversial. I was simply illustrating the point that another administration in previous years had to wrestle with exactly the same kind of problems with which we have to deal, namely, the best or the right time at which to do certain things. The debate we have had in this house this afternoon and evening is sufficient to illustrate that, if a measure making provision for registration had been introduced before to-day, it would most certainly have been regarded or construed as a measure intended for the conscription of men for service overseas. We would then have had a division of feeling in this country the like of which fortunately we have not had for many years. As I said the other day, we considered this matter in the past; we here consider it in the present, and we would continue to consider it. When the situation became what it has now become, when France had been defeated by Germany, and the whole picture had changed, when it was only too apparent that we were in another phase of the war, where measures of a different character would be immediately required, we felt we could rely upon the understanding of the people of this country as to why a system of registration should be introduced at this particular time. I venture to say that, having waited until this moment, instead of having created dissension, confusion, unrest, and what not, we shall find that in the way of opposition, the adoption of a system of registration will now meet with general acceptance from all parts of Canada.

Another point raised by some hon, members was expressed by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas), in the following words: "We support what the bill purports to stand for, but we would like to know if it will be used for what it purports to be?" Well, I must say that that is a singularly odd question to ask at this particular moment. If my hon, friends support what the bill purports to stand for and will vote in that way, they will be doing what will be expected of them as members of parliament. What is the sense of introducing any legislation in this parliament if what appears in black and white and in type as a statute of Canada does not mean that the government intends to give effect to what appears in the statute? I tell my hon, friend that so far as the government is concerned, we have put in this bill what we think is necessary, and we intend to administer it in accordance with what we think is necessary. It must be apparent that the bill will be carried out in accordance with the purport of its provisions; that has surely been evidenced by the practice of the government in carrying out its war measures up to the present time.

Then some hon, gentlemen speak about human and material resources and they wish to know whether "material" covers "financial." Well, in what category would you put finance unless you put it among material things? It is not spiritual, nor is it human. It is material, and probably if my hon. friends were expressing their minds to the full they would say it is the most material of all things. Surely finance is covered by material, and the reason why these two words are used-material and human-is that so far as possible they cover all aspects of life, life itself and the means of sustenance of life. The measure is intended to cover every resource that the country has, human and material. But may I ask my hon, friends this question: What justification is there for assuming that it is only going to be the provisions of the measure related to the human that will be invoked and not the material? Is not any fair-minded man entitled to say that there is just as much reason to assume that this bill is introduced solely for the purpose of applying it to material things?

Mr. COLDWELL: Experience of the past.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not experience of the past. I absolutely deny that statement. Does my hon. friend mean to say to me he believes that I place more value in material things than I do on human life?

Mr. COLDWELL: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what it comes to.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not mean that at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad my hon. friend does not, and on behalf of every member of the house I make this statement: Every hon. member, irrespective of party or group, is primarily concerned with preserving the human, and if there is any sacrifice to be made in a material way to help to save the human, that will be the first sacrifice made. But I do not know that you will in any way help to preserve the human if by one stroke of the pen you wipe out the whole of the material. Some of my hon, friends say, "Will you wipe out all the banks and take all the credit, the little savings of people which they have put in the banks? Will you wipe out everything?"

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They say they are not asking that, but they are insinuating that that is what we ought to do before we do anything else. All I ask is that hon. members take this bill at its face value. It seeks to give the government enabling powers to deal with human and material resources according to its best judgment, and according to its best judgment the government is prepared to deal with these resources.

This specific question is also asked: Are you going to take 100 per cent of excess profits in the manufacturing of war munitions? Let me read a statement which I made in this house at the beginning of the war with reference to excess profit. Before I quote that statement, however, I should like to make this observation. When Mr. Attlee spoke in the British House of Commons the budget had already been brought down, and the country knew from the budget what was being proposed with respect to excess profits as they stood at that time. His statement was in the nature of a supplementary announcement to the country with respect to excess profits and occasioned for reasons which I think are now pretty generally known throughout the English-speaking world.

My colleague the Minister of Finance is bringing down his budget on Friday of this week. I doubt if I would be justified in saying at this moment anything with respect to what is certain to be one of the features of the budget he will introduce. May I say this, however-and I apply it not to that particular matter but to everything in the nature of what is proposed under this measure. Everything that is done by this government under the enabling powers given it here, or anything that is left undone, will, while parliament is in session, be subject to the review of this parliament from day to day. If we do not go far enough, hon. members will have plenty of opportunity to tell us how much further we should go; if we go too far, they will have equal opportunity. It must be kept in mind that we shall be administering this legislation not as a body of dictators, free from any kind of control, but as a responsible government, responsible to the House of Commons and, through the House of Commons, to the people. If we bear this all important fact in mind, then I think it will be found that there is ample security as to the way in which the government may exercise the powers given it under the legislation.

With reference to the statement on excess profits I made last year, I see that it was made, not after the war commenced, but some time before. It was when the government was making it clear that the shadow of war was at the time overhanging the world and seeking to indicate how it would meet the situation if war came. I used the following words on March 30, 1939, more than five months before the outbreak of war. I was outlining the policy which would be followed in the event of hostilities arising:

Planning and coordination would be essential, but the necessary coordination could be made, and if this government were in power it would be made, without sacrificing those vital ends and conditions of our existence. Profits could and would be rigidly controlled, and profiteering suppressed. Men's lives and men's wills cannot be put on the same basis as goods and profits.

The government stands by that declaration to-day. The fact that that is our policy is one of the reasons why this measure has been introduced. One of its purposes is to ensure that there will, as far as possible, be equality of sacrifice in Canada's effort in prosecuting this war.

Mr. Attlee in the British House of Commons made this statement:

It is necessary that the government should be given complete control over persons and property, not just some persons of some particular class of the community, but of all persons, rich and poor, employer and workman, man or woman, and all property. It is these powers for which I am asking the house this afternoon.

May I say that these are the identical powers which to-day, in the name of the government, I am asking from this house. It is not powers to be exercised against the poor man to the exclusion of others. That sort of argument is hardly worthy of the hon. member who uttered it, and I say that sincerely. At a time like this anyone who tries to raise in the country divisions between class and class, rich and poor, employer and employee, deserves censure, and I say most sincerely that my hon. friend did not do himself justice in that remark. Let us not think that there is still a general election on and that we are trying to win our seats by all kinds of oratory. Let us remember that this country and the world to-day are faced with a calamity such as mankind has never known in the whole of its history.

Another question has been asked-what about the relations between employer and employee? We are told that we are to make a condition first or the bill will not receive support in certain quarters. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) said that it would be a condition of his support of this legislation that the government give an undertaking that labour's rights would be protected from now on. Now is my friend going to make conditions before he supports this measure? If he is, I am prepared to give him that opportunity by stopping my speech right away, in order that we may see where he really stands in relation to the purpose intended to be served by the bill. But I do not believe that in his heart he intends to make any condition. I believe he and his group intend to support this measure to a

Having said that, I shall now answer his question about labour and employers-not meeting a condition, but stating what I think he already knows. On Thursday last, following a previous meeting which the government had with employers, and at which there was a very free and frank discussion, some of my colleagues and myself had a meeting with a representative gathering of officers of labour organizations in Canada. The chairman of that group was Mr. Tom Moore, president of the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress, who I think enjoys second to none the confidence of labour in this country. During the course of that conference there was a very free and frank discussion as to the conditions that should exist between employer and employee during the period of this war. An undertaking was given at that time by myself that these conditions would not merely be put in the form of a declaration by the government made to a representative group of labour organizations, but be drafted in a form which would find its expression in an order in council of the government, and that that order in council would be published in the Canada Gazette and would be laid on the table of parliament. In order that an arrangement satisfactory to labour in that particular might be worked out, not by the government alone but in conference with labour, I asked my colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty) if he would, as he had been doing in the past, meet not merely a few labour advisers but that particular group of gentle-men or those of their number whom they wished to have represent them, and work out together what would be from their point of view a satisfactory basis for the relations that should exist between capital and labour, employer and employee, during the period of

As I said, we had had before us representations of the employers; we were now having the representations of labour, and we had also before us what was done by the previous government during the period of the last war. As a result of the conferences held, and the government's previous consideration of the subject, a declaration of the principles that should govern employers and employed, regulations that should be put into effect were prepared and framed in the form of an order in council. That order was brought to the cabinet by my colleague the Minister of Labour as soon after the conference between these gentlemen and himself as was possible. Had it been possible for me to be present for any length of time at the cabinet meeting yesterday, the order would have gone through then. Had it been possible for me to give any substantial time to-day to the proceedings of the cabinet, that order would have gone through to-day. I hope it is going to be possible for me to have time to attend a meeting of the cabinet to-morrow; if it is, that order will go through to-morrow. It will set out conditions that should govern between employer and employee, conditions which I believe will be regarded as fair and which will I believe meet with the full acceptance of those concerned in the relations of industry. I hope that answers what my hon, friend may have had in mind on that subject.

There is one other matter, the only one to which I shall refer in conclusion. It is the question asked as to the exemption of certain religious groups in the matter of military service. I wish solemnly to assure the house and the country that the government have no desire and no intention to disturb the existing rights of exemption from the bearing of arms which are enjoyed by the members of certain religious groups in Canada, as for example the Mennonites. We are determined to respect these rights to the full. My hon. friend said he believed that the government would certainly have considered that aspect, and we certainly have.

Now I must thank hon. members for allowing me to take up this additional time. May I say this further word in conclusion: it is not possible at such a time as the present, or indeed at any time for the government to do everything that everybody wants the government to do. We have a very heavy obligation to meet, and a part of that obligation is to see that whatever we do is done in the light of what appears to be wisest and best at the time. We shall be held responsible if we are too precipitate in our action, just as we have been held responsible by some who have thought that we have not been precipitate enough. When the story of this war is written, or rather when the communications and documents are produced which have passed between the different governments, and the full record of Canada's part in the war up to the present is known, I think there will not be a man in Canada but will be proud of that record and the manner in which these very serious matters have been carried on by the present administration. However, that relates to the past. To-day we stand at a place different from any at which we have stood thus far, in relation to the world situation. To-day we, along with the United Kingdom and other British countries, are on a front line, facing an enemy which has shown his power to dominate an entire continent, and whose forces are supplemented now by another enemy that is seeking to dominate another continent nearby. Let us keep as united as we can in our thoughts, in our words and in our deeds.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is rather late—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carry on.

Mr. SPEAKER: I was just going to ask whether it is the wish of the house that the present sitting be continued now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I have no objection at all to the bill obtaining second reading to-night, but I certainly shall object to the house going into committee at this late hour and on to third reading to-night. I had no idea that this debate would extend to the length that it has. I would not have objected if there had been any possibility that the bill might be enacted into law at this sitting, as the Prime Minister expressed the hope that it would when he introduced it.

There is a further reason for my position. Unfortunately I am not familiar with the French language. That is my misfortune. I understand that two very important speeches were made here to-day, one by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and one by the very eloquent Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin). These speeches were made in French. I desire to read these speeches before this bill passes this chamber.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that I think my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is quite right in the position he takes. Indeed he was courteous enough to mention to me earlier in the evening that it had been a pretty heavy day and he thought that we should not seek to press this bill through all its stages to-night. I feel with him that if we can have an understanding that we shall go on with its consideration immediately to-morrow, and that its passage may then be expedited, we should not seek to press the matter any further to-night.

May I make this clear, the one and only reason why the government desired to press this measure through in one day if possible is, as I have said, the sense of responsibility we have as to the use we may have to make of the powers thereby given. There is, however, one other consideration, and it is equally important, that is the situation as it will appear in other parts of the world. The action of this parliament in dealing with this measure quickly would make an impression on the hearts of the people of the United Kingdom and also make an impression in other parts of the world much deeper and more effective than anything else in connection with the measure possibly could.

Perhaps the discussion to-day has been sufficiently comprehensive to enable us to proceed with rapidity to-morrow. If we can do that, I believe it will serve to meet in large measure both the situations to which I have referred. The second reading of course will

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should like to make one other observation which I had intended to make when I was on my feet. The house will realize that as far as this party is concerned there has been absolutely no delay in the passage of this bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is right.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1-Short title.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

Wednesday, June 19, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE OF CANADA REGULATIONS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of National Revenue) presented the first report of the special committee on the defence of Canada regulations, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I rise not for the purpose of opposing the motion, but to ask the minister a question: Did the committee consider the question of what witnesses would be called, and by what method? And would the minister and the committee be good enough to consider suggestions from me as to one or two witnesses whom I should like to have called? Frankly I have in mind the young man to whom I referred when discussing the defence of Canada regulations the other day. He might be of some service to the committee.

Mr. ILSLEY: Consideration was given to the matter of what witnesses should be called, and a subcommittee was appointed to take that matter into consideration. That subcommittee will meet to-morrow. If the hon. leader of the opposition would let me have the name of the gentleman to whom he refers, it will be placed before the subcommittee.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING ORDERS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. W. H. GOLDING (Huron-Perth) presented the first report of the standing committee on standing orders, and moved the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NIAGARA RIVER POWER—NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Are any negotiations pending or being renewed with the United States government for the further development and generation of additional power from the Niagara river of 10,000 horse-power or more to be allotted to each country to meet increased power demands?

2. Will a copy of any additional papers be tabled relating to this and the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara falls, since the last return was made to an order of this house herein.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

- 1. Discussions are continuing with the United States regarding all aspects of the St. Lawrence and great lakes development, including the question of additional power from the Niagara river.
- 2. Additional papers will be tabled at the conclusion of the negotiations.

OIL PRODUCTION IN CANADA—PIPE LINE CON-STRUCTION FROM ALBERTA FIELDS

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River):

1. What steps are being taken by the government to increase the production of oil in Alberta and other parts of Canada?

2. Is anything being done by this government to construct a pipe line from Alberta to the Pacific coast or the head of the great lakes?

3. How much additional survey and exploration work will be carried on in Alberta and other parts of Canada in an earnest endeavour to increase our oil output?

Mr. CRERAR:

- 1. Production of oil can be increased only by drilling and by finding new oil fields or extensions of old oil fields. The finding of new fields and the extension of old fields is in large measure a geological problem, and field parties of the bureau of geology and topography are attacking this problem in the two main producing regions.
- 2. Officers of the department have conducted an investigation into the economic feasibility of the pipeline movement of Turner valley oil to Ontario, and this is now being studied.
- 3. The increase of effort this year has been made in Alberta and bordering parts of Saskatchewan where the geological and topographical field parties have been increased from 6 to 17.

WAR EQUIPMENT PURCHASES FROM MOTOR CAR COMPANIES

Mr. FAIR:

What is the value of war equipment purchased from (a) Ford Motor Company; (b) General Motors Corporation; (c) Chrysler Corporation, between September 20, 1939, and April 10, 1940?

Mr. HOWE: (a) Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd., Windsor, Ontario, $765,562.65; (b) General Motors Products of Canada, Ltd., Oshawa, Ontario, $272,572.92; General Motor Sales Corporation, Cleveland, Ohio, U.S.A., $766.52; (c) Chrysler Corporation of Canada, Ltd., Windsor, Ontario, $41,045.41. Total, $1,079,947.50.

NATIONAL FUEL SUPPLY—RECOMMENDATIONS OF TORY COMMISSION

Mr. CHURCH:

- 1. What recommendations were made by the Tory commission on national fuel supply?
 - 2. What was the cost of it?
- 3. Have any recommendations been carried out, and, if so, by whom?
- 4. Did the report recommend a national fuel policy as this house recommended in 1923?
- 5. Did the report deal with importations of Russian and German coal?
- 6. What is being done to guard Canada against a fuel famine during next winter?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West):

- 1. The commission recommended as follows:
- "1. At the present moment in so far as the fixing of export prices of anthracite in the countries of origin permit, there is freedom in competition in the importation of anthracite coal. Your commission recommends that every effort should be made to maintain that position. Some of the competition comes from new sources of supply and through new exporting agencies, the permanence of which have not yet been demonstrated. In seeking to maintain a wholesome competitive market it should be recognized in so far as Canada's needs are concerned anthracite with a low ash fusion point is in a special position, and that in this field neither Scotch nor United States anthracite is competitive. greater freedom of purchase of this particular type of coal from Wales is made available to importers other than the Webster group, it is very important that the channels of trade with other countries producing low ash fusion point anthracite should be kept open. It is of equal importance that importations should come directly from the country of origin and not as in the past through agencies already controlling competitive supplies in another country.
- -"2. To this end the continued enforcement of the Combines Investigation Act is recommended. Your commission believes that under the existing conditions of production and trade the surest way to protect the consumer is to maintain open competition.
- "3. It is recommended that encouragement should be given to every effort to establish cooperative organizations now recognized in many countries. Without question great advantages would accrue to the less favoured class of citizen in Montreal if a scheme along the lines suggested by Alderman Biggar of Montreal was put into operation. In this connection attention is called to the fact that there are joint stock companies using the name 'cooperative' which are not in any sense cooperative institutions and, in the opinion of your commission, they should not be permitted to use the name.

- "4. It is recommended that the work done under the Combines Investigation Act in maintaining competition and preventing price fixing be supplemented by a more vigorous use on the part of the municipalities of their power to eliminate frauds and other abuses. The licensing of dealers, the prevention of short-weighting, the suppressing of fraudulent advertising, the requirement of an adequate and correct description of the coal on delivery slips, are within their authority. This authority vigorously exercised on the lines suggested above would go a long way toward removing many of the consumer's complaints.
- "5. It is recommended that all anthracite coal entering Canada be classified as follows:
- (a) That anthracite coal should be sold in Canada under its own name, i.e., Welsh anthracite should be sold as Welsh, American as American, German as German, Russian as Russian, etc.;
- (b) That if any of these coals are mixed, the mixture should be sold in Canada as mixed coal under the name of the mixture, viz., Welsh and German, Welsh and Russian, etc.:
- (c) That the fuel ratio of coals classified as anthracite for customs purposes based on their condition as received at the ports of entry, as distinct from those semi-anthracites referred to in (d) below, also other coals including those mixed with non-anthracite, for sale in Canada, shall not be less than 8.0 and shall not possess caking quality;
- (d) That all other coals, heretofore graded as anthracite or semi-anthracite, having a ratio of fixed carbon to volatile of not less than 6 and without caking quality, shall be classed as semi-anthracite coal and so sold on the Canadian market;
- (e) That Welsh anthracite be sold in Canada as grade A or grade B, the former complying with the above specifications but being the coal known in Wales as Big Vein anthracite, the latter also complying with the above specifications but being the coal known in Wales as Red Vein anthracite, and that if these two coals are sold in Canada as a mixture the proportion of each should be stated:

(Note: The distinction involved in this classification is not difficult as it can be determined by the coal being invoiced by the mine in Wales from which it comes. It is a classification known to every importer of Welsh coal. The difference between the Red Vein and the Big Vein is not so much a matter

- of the content in B.T.U.'s, as of the physical quality of the coal, the Red Vein being much more friable and hence subject to greater degradation.)
- (f) That in all sales slips and invoices and in all advertisements the coal be described in accordance with the specifications suggested above.
- "6. It is recommended that continuous and systematic analyses of anthracites entering Canada be made. Your commission was surprised to find so little information available as to the quality of imported anthracite. The right to sample and analyse for public use should be given to persons responsible for the work of classification suggested above. The costs of such systematic analyses of imported anthracite coal and of the work of classification should be covered by a special levy of 2 cents a ton on all imported anthracite."
 - 2. $23.878.64.
- 3. Recommendation 1, carried out. Recommendations 2, carried out. Recommendations 3 and 4, for provincial and municipal authorities. Recommendation 5, not carried out. Recommendation 6, not carried out.
 - 4. No.
 - 5. Yes.
- A coal administrator has been appointed under the wartime prices and trade board.

As a war measure the licensing of all producers, dealers, and distributors of coal and coke has been carried out by the coal administrator.

Direct representations and meetings have been arranged with importers and distributors of British coal in order to determine what quantities may be available for the Canadian market.

Similar arrangements were carried out with American producers and distributors of American coals. Assurance has been received that ample supplies are and will be available. Steps have also been taken to augment the supply of British blowercoal by the use of special quality of U.S. and Canadian coals and coke.

Every endeavour is being made to increase the supply of a suitably prepared quality of Alberta coal for domestic consumption in Ontario.

Householders have been advised through the press and other channels to obtain their fuel supplies at as early a date as possible. By so doing they will ease the burden imposed on transportation facilities due to the exigencies of war.

It is not anticipated that there will be any shortage of coal.

QUEENS-LUNENBURG DREDGING CONTRACTS

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland):

- 1. Has the government employed the dredging outfit in which Merril D. Rawding is interested on work in Queens-Lunenburg since 1935?
- 2. If so, at what places was said outfit used, and was the work done after tenders were called and contracts let or on unit costs basis?
- 3. How much was paid at each such place in each fiscal year since 1935, what were the contract prices or unit prices, and total payment for each job?
- 4. Has the above outfit been authorized to do any work in 1940, and, if so, what are the particulars of locations, quantities and prices?

Mr. CARDIN:

- 1. Yes.
- 2. (a) Port Medway.
 - (b) Cahoon's island.
 - (c) Coffin's island.
 - (d) East Port Medway.

SAINT JOHN DRY DOCK COMPANY

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth):

1. Was a contract awarded the Saint John Drydock Company, or a subsidiary of this company for fortifications or works of a similar nature on Partridge island, Saint John, New Brunswick, this year?

2. If so, what was the contract price?

3. Was such contract awarded after public tenders had been called for?

4. If not, were any firms asked to tender, and, if so, what were the names of these firms, and what were their respective tenders?

5. If such a contract was awarded to the Saint John Drydock Company or a subsidiary of this company, did this company sub-let this contract or any part of it? If so, what was the name of the contractor and, if only part of the contract was sub-let, how much of it was sub-let?

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I suggest that in the national interest this question be dropped.

Question dropped.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY—WAR SUPPLY BOARD—MEMBERSHIP

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn):

1. Who were the members of the War Supply Board, what was their previous business connection, and what remuneration did they receive in the form of (a) salary, (b) expenses?

2. Which of the above named are associated with the Department of Munitions and Supply, and in what capacity?

Mr. HOWE:

BRITISH CHILDREN

EXTENDING OF HOSPITALITY OF CANADA FOR DURATION OF WAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I desire to ask a question or two of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) with respect to the evacuation of British children. On May 27 the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce) asked the Prime Minister if it was the intention of the Canadian government to offer immediately the hospitality of Canada to evacuated British children. The Prime Minister replied to the effect that the answer concerns itself in the main with transportation.

As England has control of shipping, this will present no difficulty to this government. In a Canadian Press dispatch it is stated that thousands of British mothers anxiously await the statement of Geoffrey Shakespeare, parliamentary under-secretary of state for dominion affairs, regarding the evacuation of children to Canada and other dominions. Mr. Shakespeare stated that the plan, on a huge scale, would be rushed into operation as soon as the dominions' agreements are obtained. Has the Prime Minister offered Canadian hospitality for these children? Surely we could immediately absorb a very large number.

Then I should like to say a word with respect to a more detailed matter. I had been informed that immigration officials in London will not issue a permit to allow children to come to Canada unless they have received an invitation from a responsible Canadian who will give them a home. In my opinion this would virtually amount to a prohibition of the issue of permits unless there is assurance that these British children will not become a public charge. I had intended to ask what was the position in regard to this matter: I had been in communication with Doctor Skelton and also with Mr. Blair of the Department of Immigration. I am glad to say that in some degree at least Mr. Blair has removed my anxiety by sending me a letter which I received just after I had drafted this interrogatory and just before I came into the house. I think this letter may be of great interest to those concerned in this matter, and I would crave the privilege of reading it into the record so that those interested may be informed as to the present attitude with regard to individual cases.

The letter is dated June 19, 1940, and reads as follows:

In reply to your telephone inquiry of date about the admission of British people who want to find homes here during the war, I may say that every encouragement that we can offer is being given to people of this sort. We have had many inquiries from residents of Canada who can offer homes to relatives or friends from overseas and these are all being advised that relatives or friends may come freely and without any delay or "red tape", when they can pay their own passage and are joining relatives or friends here or are coming with sufficient funds to look after themselves.

Our London office has been advised to facilitate this movement in every way possible. We do not ask for any bonds or other guarantee from residents of Canada nor do we waste time in unnecessary investigations as that might prevent people getting out while sailing is possible.

Yours very truly,

F. C. Blair, Director.

Therefore I would really confine myself to the first question with regard to the general scheme, and I should like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation of the position of the immigration officials and of the government in respect to this matter of individual children or persons desiring to come to Canada for the duration of the war, to escape what may be bloody slaughter over there.

Right Hon, W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I must confess that I am at a loss to know whether my hon. friend asked me a question or was making a speech of his own.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would not take it that way, if I were you. I did ask a very serious question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am quite sincere in what I say. As I listened to my hon, friend's first question it seemed to me at the outset he was questioning my veracity with respect to the answer I made some time ago as to the welcome Canada was prepared to extend to evacuated children from Britain. Subsequently my hon. friend went on to read something from an official of the government which evidently verified what I had said. My first thought was to reply to my hon. friend by saying that I was very glad he had been able to receive a statement from an official of the government which had confirmed in his mind what had been said by the Prime Minister. That is what I should like to say now. Apart from that I must confess that I do not understand the purpose of reading the statements made in the form he did.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Quite true; the Prime Minister gave the word but he gave no details.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I gave the word and I had hoped and expected that my word would have been accepted. I said there would be difficulties with respect to transportation. My hon, friend has just said the British government handles transportation, and therefore there are no difficulties.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In that regard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then may I say to my hon. friend that one of the greatest difficulties this government has had in respect to many matters overseas has been in regard to getting shipping facilities; and I was quite thoroughly informed on that matter when I answered my hon. friend. However, I wish to thank him for his words of appreciation to the government on our readiness to accept children. We have always been ready to accept them, but all these matters have to be taken up as the opportunity arises. If there is any doubt in the mind of the hon. member who is whispering with his neighbour in regard to this matter—because I think it is from him that these questions come—I would say that everything I have said in this house with respect to the readiness, willingness and anxiety of this government to receive evacuated children from the old country is perfectly true. There has been no hesitation with respect to our readiness to handle the matter to the fullest extent possible.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): At the risk of delaying the house I must say that in the parlance of the street I am afraid we have our wires crossed. I had no intention of provoking anything of a recriminatory nature this afternoon. However, some of us do feel very keenly about this matter. What I really wanted to ask the Prime Minister was if there had been a general offer of Canadian hospitality for these children.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The answer is ves.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Very well, then; that is the answer.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources): Perhaps I may supplement what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has said by saying that an offer has been made to receive children between the ages of five and sixteen years, and in some cases children of less than five years of age. I may add that we have been informed that no children will be sent to Canada except with the permission of the parents or guardians, and that is the position to-day. There is perfect freedom of movement for any others who wish to come; and for the information of the house I may say that there are either on the way, or shortly will be on the way, quite a substantial number of boys from a school, who are coming to Canada to resume their education. It takes a little time to work out all the problems associated with these matters; but when the record is placed before this country I have not the slightest doubt that the Canadian people will approve what the government has done in the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Now that this subject of evacuated children has come up, and with it the related question of transportation facilities, I think I had better give to the house a few facts which have not been given thus far, and which may help to explain the government's position, on what might be considered as delays in arranging for and announcing the numbers of evacuated children to be taken.

It is quite true that the British government made representations with regard to our accepting evacuated children. They also made very strong representations to us about their desire to have us accept interned aliens and German war prisoners. There has been considerable communication back and forth in the matter with the British government, and—

Mr. HOMUTH: Let them keep them there.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend wish us to cooperate with the British government, or does he wish us to go contrary to their wishes?

An hon. MEMBER: Go ahead.

Mr. BROOKS: It is not what he wishes; it is what the government wishes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does he not wish us to do what the British government wishes to have done?

Mr. BROOKS: What our government would wish.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does he wish us to cooperate with the British government?

Mr. HOMUTH: Is the Prime Minister asking me the question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. HOMUTH: I certainly do, and I wish this government had cooperated with the British government in the last eight months.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as the record of cooperation in the last eight months is concerned, I know we have been cooperating to the utmost of our ability, and I am certain the British government would be only too prepared to say the same. I am glad the hon. member in particular agrees that in this matter we should seek to meet the wishes of the British government.

The wishes of the British government are these: In the matter of preference they are anxious that we should take first of all interned aliens, secondly, that we should take German prisoners in Britain, and thirdly that we should then consider the matter of evacuated children. The reasons they give in this connection are that the interned aliens in Great Britain may be in a position to help to direct parachutists in the event of a bombardment of the British Isles, which they are expecting hourly. They also feel that the German prisoners they have there require a great deal by way of protection, and that the men protecting them should be available for the protection of the British Isles themselves. There is great congestion, because of the numbers of refugees which have been coming there, and they feel that it would be in the interest of safety and security in every way to have alien internees and German prisoners brought to this country, and placed in different parts of the country under protective measures here. We have realized how the matter would likely be viewed. We have been conscious of the fact that regardless of what we did there would be some exception taken. The course we have had in view, and which we believe expresses that of the country generally, is that which has been expressed by the hon. member who has just spoken, namely that it would be desirable that we should at this particularly critical time seek to our utmost to meet the wishes of the British government in this as in other matters. We have agreed to receive here interned aliens from the United Kingdom, also German prisoners from the United Kingdom, and for some time past we have been making arrangements to see that they will be properly concentrated and controlled, when they are brought to Canada.

If there has been any delay, may I say that that delay is due to the circumstances which I have mentioned. But there has not been any delay. I must say that there has been no delay particularly in regard to this matter of receiving evacuated children. With regard to this matter, and others of the kind, I say that if a minister of the crown is asked a question and makes a definite reply, hon members are expected to accept that reply in good faith, and not to be continually calling it in question.

I could not disclose the facts I have mentioned some time ago, and I did not wish to disclose them at the present time. But I do not purpose to permit the government to be put into a false position by any failure to place the whole reasons before the House of Commons. Those who ask questions must become responsible for the consequences of questions they have asked.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I just say a word with respect to the last remarks of the Prime Minister. If any questions are asked from this side of the house which in the public interest should not now be answered, all my right hon. friend has to do is to intimate that to me and it will be taken care of. I want to give him an illustration. Some time ago the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) asked a question about a contract at Saint John. An answer was given which clearly indicated that apparently the department was mistaken in what it believed to be the object of the question. A subsequent question was put on the order paper. Officials in the responsible department communicated with my hon. friend with respect to that question stating that it was not in the public interest that it be answered. Immediately we decided to drop it, and it was dropped to-day. That is the kind of cooperation I should like to give to the Prime Minister, and I hope he will not go round with, shall I say, a chip on his shoulder, looking for trouble. Apparently we have started out in the wrong atmosphere to-day—quite different from yesterday. If I have been the cause of this change of atmosphere, then I will apologize; but I am not conscious of having made any error.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend knows me well enough to know that I am the last person in the world who is likely to have a chip on his shoulder. But I am to a certain degree sensitive in matters which affect my honour, and when questions are asked in a manner meant to reflect upon replies which have been made by myself I probably cannot restrain a word with regard to them, more particularly when I happen to know a good deal about where some of those questions are coming from, and why they are being asked.

With regard to what my hon. friend has just said about being prepared to withdraw questions, if on his part, before asking a question publicly in the house which he has reason to know is likely to be embarrassing, he would be kind enough to show it to me and ask me if there is anything embarrassing in it, I should feel that that would be cooperating, too.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would not like to go that far. But I would be prepared to cooperate with my right hon, friend.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Very well then. We will cooperate, and I shall go on giving my cooperation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Let us drop it.

Hon. H. A. BRUCE (Parkdale): May I say a word on a question of privilege? I think the Prime Minister referred to me a moment ago in connection with—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I mentioned no name.

Mr. BRUCE: In connection with the question the leader of the opposition had asked the Prime Minister. I have had a great many letters from my constituents about bringing British children to Canada.

Some hon, MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ROWE: It is a question of privilege; the hon, member has a right to speak.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Do I understand that the hon. member is speaking on a question of privilege?

Mr. BRUCE: Yes, on a question of privilege.

An hon. MEMBER: Then say so.

Mr. BRUCE: I feel it necessary to say that in consequence of representations that have been made to me I pursued the question of bringing to this country British children evacuees. I was told at first that there were difficulties in connection with shipping. As shipping is under the control of the British government I assumed that this matter was no longer a difficulty. Only two days ago I received a cable respecting three children who were coming to Canada, and asking me if I would invite them here, because otherwise they would not be able to obtain a permit in London. As a consequence of that I cabled, inviting them to our home.

Mr. POULIOT: There is no question of privilege in that.

TIMBER CONTROLLER

INQUIRY AS TO DUTIES AND CONTACT WITH SIMILAR OFFICER IN UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. O'BRIEN (Northumberland, N.B.): In view of a question I addressed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston), who was then leading the house, which appears at page 263 of Hansard for May 27, in which I suggested the advisability of some plan of closer cooperation with the timber controller of the United Kingdom; and further in view of the reply by the Minister of Finance at page 290 of Hansard for May 28; and considering the press announcement that Mr. H. R. MacMillan of Vancouver has been appointed as controller of timber, I should like to address the following questions to the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe):

- (a) Precisely what are the duties of the new controller of timber?
- (b) Is he established at Ottawa and if so in which office?
- (c) Does he maintain a close contact with the timber controller of the United Kingdom government, and if so is the arrangement of an advisory or executive nature?

In view of the extreme importance of timber from eastern Canada in the war effort, any information regarding the foregoing would be appreciated.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): I received notice of this question only a few moments ago, and I regret to say that I have not been able to read in Hansard the references mentioned. Briefly, however, I may say that it will be the duty of the controller of timber to administer the timber resources of Canada on behalf of the government in the manner best calculated to assist the war effort. The timber controller is at present established at Vancouver, because his immediate problem was in that locality; but he will have offices in other centres across Canada. The appointment was made only last week. As to contact with the United Kingdom timber controller, of course he is working very closely with him in order to see that the requirements of the British government, as well as our own requirements, are filled.

EMERGENCY POWERS

PROVISION FOR MOBILIZATION OF HUMAN AND MATERIAL RESOURCES IN THE PRESENT WAR

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 18, consideration in committee of Bill No. 43, to confer certain powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of national resources in the present war—Mr. Mackenzie King—Mr. Vien in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Special powers of the governor in council.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman, the remarks which I have to make on this bill I thought could be more appropriately made in the committee stage than on the second reading because, as is quite apparent to everybody, we have not objected to its principle—

An hon. MEMBER: Louder.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If we could have a little order in the house hon, members might be able to hear. I am not blaming the chairman,

The CHAIRMAN: May I draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that there is far too much conversation in the house.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The preamble recites in effect that a state of national emergency exists and is the measure's fulfilment of the first suggestion which I made to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on Monday. I should like to emphasize the fact that the bill is purely and simply enabling legislation, and while it falls short of what many people in this dominion think is necessary and have been demanding, yet on balance and on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread at all, we on this side of the house are prepared to accept the principle of the bill and to accept the measure for what it is worth. We therefore did not debate, let alone controvert, the principle of the bill on the second reading, and we do not propose now to raise any question in that regard. Time and the course of events will prove its wisdom or lack of wisdom, its strength and its weaknesses, and whether or not the government have gone far enough or could have gone farther or not so far as they have gone. Personally I am thankful for having obtained from the government at least this measure in support of the safety of Canada, a measure which in my judgment should have been introduced weeks ago.

Section 2 of the bill provides for authority to the government to mobilize all the effective resources of the nation, both human and material, for the purpose of the defence and security of Canada. It will be observed at once that the section is in nowise mandatory. The government may or may not do anything under the bill. But having regard to the observations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in his statement which preceded the introduction of the bill, and his further statement when closing the debate last evening, that effective action would be taken as speedily as possible looking to the defence of Canada at least, if not the defence of the empire, and speeches to the like effect by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) which I have had the pleasure of reading, I am prepared to think that their pledges will be implemented at least in part.

May I be permitted here to interject this one reference to the address delivered last evening by the Minister of Public Works. I have read that address with great care. I do not agree with all he said. I am afraid that he attempted to minimize the importance of the bill. But with one part of his address I am in full accord, and I am glad that he mentioned this. On page 14 of the translation he made this statement:

I do not want to resume my seat without dissociating myself from those who always place their reliance in the Monroe doctrine. I have had occasion, at the two last elections in the province of Quebec, to discuss the argument based on the protection provided by the United States. I say that it would be a mistake to place our sole trust in the application of the Monroe doctrine for the protection of the liberties of Canada and of the rights and privileges enjoyed by the province of Quebec.

And this is the part I want to accentuate, as I believe he accentuated it himself:

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Moreover, it is unworthy of a citizen of Canada, which we are pleased to call a great country, to shift our responsibilities on our great neighbours.

Let me reecho those words. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am not concerned with respect to the principle established by this bill, but I am concerned about the method of operation under the bill. The powers conferred by section 2 of the bill being wholly enabling and not mandatory, absolute authority and discretion is left with the governor in council with respect not only to what is to be done thereunder but to the whole question of method and how any given step is to be taken, and to the method of enforcement of any proposed action—

Mr. THORSON: How could it be otherwise?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think I can show my hon. friend a little later, if he will just possess himself in patience and not interrupt. And all this is to be left to the government while parliament is in session! After thoughtful consideration I have come to the conclusion that this is a most extraordinary position for the ministry to take at Parliament is in session. The this time. Prime Minister from his place in this house has affirmed and reaffirmed and reiterated the principle to which I am now giving expression. This whole question of the mobilization of the man-power and material resources of the country is so important that authority ought not to be lightly and without careful thought delegated to any minister. If parliament were not in session there might be some justification for such delegation of authority. Even then the principles and questions involved are so important and so far-reaching in their implications, involving as they do the sending of men to fight, that in such event, namely, parliament not being in session, the government would be justified in calling parliament together. But happily that is not the case to-day: parliament is in session, and it can be kept in session indefinitely to deal with just such questions as I have indicated, namely, the method by which the government shall exercise the extraordinary powers which by this bill they are asking parliament to confer upon them.

To clothe the government by order in council with power to say who shall be called to fight and who shall be exempt, how those called are to be called, and kindred matters, is an extraordinary step. It is an extraordinary power which the ministry should not ask for while parliament is in session. That seems to be fundamental. The complete lack of any machinery whatsoever with respect of the mobilization or conscription of either the man-power or the material resources of the country indicates clearly to me that the measure was hastily conceived and brought down to this house in an attempt to appease the rising storm of public opinion.

Let us examine together the present position in relation to this matter. I hold in my hand what is commonly cited as the Militia Act. I find on page 6, sections 23, 24 and 25, which deal with the question of the mobilization of the militia under the authority given by section 8 and section 64. The Prime Minister alluded to this act in the course of his address last evening. I do not know when these specific sections were enacted. We were told last evening that the act itself was passed in 1868. That was a long time ago. I had the idea, though I have not had time to verify it, that the Militia Act has been amended from time to time and that it went back at least sixty or seventy years, but I did not know that it had been passed in 1868. However that may be, the provisions of section 23 provide that the governor in council-—shall from time to time make all regulations necessary for the enrolment of persons liable to military service, and of cadets, and for all procedure in connection therewith and for determining, subject to the provisions of this act, the order for which the persons in the classes fixed by this act shall serve.

If I properly interpret this provision, it means that the governor in council shall, with respect to the persons authorized to be called by the act, have the power of enrolling those persons, collecting together the names. That of course is a necessary preliminary, but when it comes to the question of organization or completing a corps, as provided in section 24, and when men are required to organize or complete a corps at any time either for training or emergency, and enough men do not volunteer to complete the quota required, the men liable to be called shall be drafted by ballot.

If this provision was passed as long ago as 1868 it would appear to me that it would probably have followed the provisions enacted in the neighbouring republic during the time of the war between the states, where they had the draft and the ballot. Anyone familiar with the history of those times will remember, shall I say, the difficulties experienced by the authorities of the union on that occasion by reason of the question of bounty, the question of evasions, and other questions of the kind that arose at the time.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to section 25, which provides that the governor in council may from time to time make regulations; and it specifies (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e)—specific subjects with respect to which regulations may be made. This is all done under the authority contained in sections 23 and 24, which provide a method of calling by ballot. Subsection (a) of section 25 provides for the enrolment and fixing of the day on which the taking of the enrolment shall be commenced in each of the several military districts—

(b) for notifying the men liable to be taken, or those balloted for service in any quota;

(c) for finally deciding claims of applicants for exemption and for the administration of oaths before a commissioned officer of a corps;

(d) for ascertaining the facts in reference to claims for exemption, for medical examinations and for the discharge of such men as are unfit to serve;

And finally and generally-

(e) relating to every other matter and thing not inconsistent with the act and necessary for the enrolling, balloting, warning and bringing into service of such number of men as are required at any time.

Subsection 2 of section 25 is reminiscent of civil war days. It provides for substitutes. It is provided still in our law, under this act, that any man balloted and notified for service may at any time be exempt until again required in his turn to serve, by furnishing an acceptable substitute on or before the date fixed for his appearance, provided that if during any period of service any man who is serving in the active militia as a substitute for another becomes liable to service in his own person, he shall be taken for such service, and his place as substitute shall be supplied by the man in whose stead he served.

Section 26 provides for full period for service to be completed.

I do not advocate this method, nor does the government, as I assume from the remarks of the Prime Minister last night. In my judgment, it is antique. From its language, as I have stated, it would appear to have been copied from the laws of the United States passed during the struggle between the states. I object to the method not on account of its age but because it does not appeal to me as being sound. Indeed, I could enumerate many objections to the method. The chief is that by the ballot method the choice is left to mere chance. There is no element of selectivity about it, which appears to me to be so essential. A skilled mechanic or highly skilled technical officer might be chosen by ballot, and to take him from his position might be a distinct detriment to the safety of the state. And so I am not advocating this method. The point is one of procedure, and that is a matter laid down by parliament; and the principle has been adhered to in that legislation.

Now what was the position when the Military Service Act of 1917 was enacted? Parliament was in session then as it is to-day. The government of the day did not ask parliament to delegate to it the procedure and the method. On the contrary the government took meticulous care to consult parliament in every detail. Anyone who cares to do so may read the debates of the 1917 session and examine for himself what the position was and how carefully the whole question was considered by parliament itself. The government did not ask parliament for the sweeping powers asked for in this bill. The opposition of the day would have raised the roof at any such proposition, and properly so. I am not seeking to raise the roof to-day, but I am asserting that, with parliament in session, before this act is put into effect the regulations, procedure and methods should be submitted to and sanctioned by parliament.

What was the position under the Military Service Act of 1917? The act itself recited the conscriptive provisions of the Militia Act and stated that the balloting procedure therein provided for was not satisfactory and that it was expedient to replace it by a selective Section 2 provided that "every male British subject who comes within one of the classes described in section 3 of the act, and:

(a) is ordinarily resident in Canada; or

(b) has been at any time since the 4th of August 1914 resident in Canada shall be liable to be called out on active service in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces for the defence of Canada either in or beyond Canada.

That was the principle laid down in section 2. Section 3 set forth those classes of persons liable to be called out, in the order in which they would be called:

Class 1: 20 to 34, unmarried men or widowers without children.

Class 2: 20 to 34, married men or widowers with children.

Class 3: 35 to 41, unmarried men or widowers without children.

Class 4: 35 to 41, married men or widowers with children.

Class 5: 42 to 45, unmarried men or widowers without children.

Class 6: 42 to 45, married men or widowers

Section 4, subsection 1 of the act provided:

The governor in council may from time to time by proclamation call out on active service as aforesaid for the defence of Canada, either in Canada or beyond Canada, any class or sub-class of men described in section 3, and all men within the class or subclass so called out shall, from the date of such proclamation, be deemed to be soldiers enlisted in the military forces of Canada and subject to military law for the duration of the present war and of demobilization to the present war and of demobilization to the present war and of demobilization of the present war and of demobilization than the present war and of the present war and o tion thereafter, save as hereinafter provided.

The act provided for the establishment of local tribunals, appeal tribunals, a central appeal judge to determine the right to exemption of persons falling within the class called out. I do not know whether the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) was here at that time-I think not-but he himself must have been familiar with this statute.

Under this act the Minister of Justice was empowered to establish local tribunals at such places as he deemed necessary, and an elaborate procedure was specified to safeguard against the possibility of political appointments to these tribunals. The chief justice of the court of last resort in each province was required to establish a sufficient numberof appeal tribunals and to assign to each such tribunal one judge of any court in such province. The governor in council was empowered to appoint a judge of the Supreme Court, of Canada to be the central appeal judge. Mr. Justice Duff, now Sir Lyman Duff, was so designated.

These tribunals determined whether any persons in the classes called out were entitled to exemption on any of the following grounds:

(a) That in the national interest a man, instead of being employed in military service should be engaged in other work in which he was habitually employed.

(b) That in the national interest a man, instead of being in military service, should be engaged in work in which he wishes to engage and for which he has special qualifications.

(c) That in the national interest the man so called up should continue to be educated or trained.

(e) Ill health or infirmity of the man so called out.

(f) If the man had conscientious objections. to combatant service and was prohibited from such service by the tenets and articles of faith of any organized religious denominational body.

Under the statute application might be made. to a local tribunal on behalf of any man whobelieved himself to fall within the aboveclasses of exemption; and if it were so found by the tribunal, certificates of exemption would be issued. Conscientious objecters were given certificates of exemption from combatant service only, and in addition to persons obtaining certificates under this act for the above reasons, the act made the following exemptions:

- 1. Persons already in the armed forces either of Canada or of one of her allies.
 - 2. The clergy.
- 3. Those persons exempted from military service by order in council of August 13, 1873-

I understand this refers to a sect known as Mennonites.

-and by order in council of December 6, 1898.

I am informed that this refers to a sect known as Doukhobors.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Section 13, subsection 4 of the act provided that unless further authorized by parliament, the reinforcements provided under this act were not to exceed 100,000 men. The act made specific provisions for penalties for persons failing to report, falsely obtaining certificates of exemption and in any other way contravening the provisions of the act.

The point I want to emphasize is that these provisions were enacted by parliament while in session and not by order in council as we are asked to do to-day. I suggest to the Prime Minister and to the government that this is still possible and should be done. I am satisfied that with two or three good officers in the department, accompanied by two or three good draftsmen-and I should be glad to lend my services to the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power), because I believe that he and I could do this with the assistance of the proper officers of his department if necessary-regulations with respect to the selection of men for military service under this statute could be drawn up and brought back to the house at next Monday afternoon's session. I do not think, however, that would be necessary because the minister has competent assistants in his department; and I have so much confidence in the minister that I believe he could do it alone with the assistance of his officers, without any high-priced draftsmen or any assistance that I could lend him. Indeed, I am satisfied he could do it. The point I urge on the government is that while parliament is in session this ought to be done so that we can examine these things.

Mr. POWER: Does my hon. friend suggest that the regulations should be passed under the bill or that we should bring them down in a statute?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have not given much consideration to that. I am not concerned about the procedure; it is the object that I have in mind. I think it could be done either way. The form is not important; it is the principle, the substance, that I am standing for. It can be done, and there is no immediate necessity for having this bill put through to-day, having regard to the fact that, after all, we who support the principle of the bill on every side of the house have to go to the country and justify it. And we cannot justify a regulation that we have not had any hand in framing.

I am not voicing a vote of want of confidence in the ministry with respect to the regulations. Some people may; at the moment I am not. I do not want anybody to get the impression that I am. I say, however, that while parliament is in session, with respect to so important a matter as the conscription of men to fight and perhaps to die, we who are responsible for embalming that principle in the legislation of the country ought to have something to say about the method of their selection, and we ought to control if we can the question of exemption.

I can recall on one occasion during the election of 1917, when I was not a candidate but when I had to do most of the campaigning for the man who stood in my constituency, going to a rural municipality where there was a substantial vote, and when I got out there I found that every young man in that parish except the minister's son had been exempted by the local tribunal. I want to tell you, sir, I had a warm time from the boy's mother. She wanted to know why, of all the young men in that community, her son had not been exempted from military service. Of course, the fact was that one could not have uniformity in so wide-flung a jurisdiction, composed of different groups of men all over the country. In New Brunswick the jurisdiction was set up on the basis of counties. At any rate, every young man but one in the community to which I refer had been exempted because he was a farmer's son. Boys in families of three, four or five sons were all exempted. I am glad to think that most of these young men voluntarily enlisted before the clause was put into effect. That is one of the evils which might occur under a system such as the old one. Now I am going to leave that question with the Prime Minister.

Parliament is in session. Those of us who support the principle of this bill have a responsibility. I tell the Prime Minister it has not been easy to support the principle of this bill, having regard to the volume of representations I had received beforehand in favour of something more far-reaching, and the protests I have been receiving this morning that we should still have something greater. But as I said before, for the defence of Canada if for nothing else I am willing to support the principle of this bill; because half a loaf is better than no bread.

I have a word to say about the other aspect of the question—the Prime Minister himself referred to it last night, and it is important—the mobilization of the wealth and material resources of this country. What is to be done in regard to that? I am no demagogue. I am not saying that as a result of this war the rich will become richer and the poor poorer. I believe the time has come for universal sacrifice according to ability to pay. I am prepared to do my share, although I have not any too much of this world's wealth.

This question, along with that of the mobilization of man-power, is of fundamental importance. What is the intention of the government? I can understand in England, where the danger was so much more imminent than it is here, the necessity for taking the authority that they did on May 22, when invasion was actually threatened. They were unanimously willing to leave it to the government of the country to say what the regulations should be, not only with respect to man-power-they already had the principle of conscription on the statute books-but with respect to conscription of wealth and material resources. We are not in that position to-day. I put it to the Prime Minister and hon. members of this house as an important problem upon which we should have some discussion: What does the ministry propose with respect to the mobilization of wealth? I am not suggesting, and I would not support, the nationalization of the banks. I believe in individual effort. In peace time or in war time I am opposed to the government of this country setting up industrial plants which will compete with private industry. But I want to know what the government has in mind with respect to this important matter. The other day an hon. member from one of the western provinces advocated taxation of all the "spendable money" in the country, and the issue of interest-free bonds. I had it on the tip of my tongue to ask him what he would do about my bank overdraft. I do not want to inject any humour or comedy into this question; the matter is serious. But I have a bank overdraft of some thousands of dollars, upon which I am paying five per cent to the bank. That is "spendable money" in some form. Am I to be taxed the 3½ per cent that he would impose on that "spendable money," in addition to the carrying charges?

Mr. POULIOT: That is not spendable money; that is spent money.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not think I need pause for an answer to that question. What is to be done by the government with respect to this important problem? We ought to know. If it is possible, the regulations should be drafted and submitted to parliament, and hon. members be given an opportunity to pass their opinion upon them. I am ready to sit in on any committee, and if I have had any business experience that is worth anything I might be useful on such an occasion. At all events I am willing to give gratis to this country and the government the benefit of any experience I have with respect to matters of this kind. But I do not think the government need my experience;

I think they will find it readily available at their hand. But I am "from Missouri"; I want to be shown. I want to know what the government's proposals are. Last night, in his speech upon which I have already congratulated him, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) used the following words; very truthful words I thought. They are found on page 895 of Hansard, and with these words I agree:

In any event, what the government is being given under this measure is the broadest blank cheque ever given to its executive by any parliament for the administration of public affairs and the safety of the sacred interests of the nation.

That is a true statement. And because it is the greatest commitment that has ever been given to a government, I say the responsibility of the government is just so much the greater. I have a right to query the administration with respect to this matter. What are their proposals? Let them take the people and the country into their confidence. I do not mind telling the house that I have already had repercussions from this very angle. This morning I received a telegram from an old friend who asked, what about hoarding, after the announcement of yesterday? He urges that unless something is done immediately against hoarding, the mobilization of wealth will drive money from circulation and from the banks into the old sock. That may well happen. I do not think there is any great danger of a flight of capital out of Canada at this time by reason of this legislation. I am glad to think that the foreign exchange control board will take care of that to the best of its ability. I believe it is doing good work. There are leaks, of course; but from all I can learn, every leak is being plugged as quickly as it is discovered. But there is the question of hoarding. I think it will be found among those who are timid, and some reassuring word might be given. There are people who have fear complexes, fear for the little nest-egg that they have. I am sure they will be found among those thrifty people in the province of Quebec. Some reassuring word ought to be given to them. I do not mean the rich and well-to-do; they need no reassurance, and their duty in the circumstances is plain.

Whatever flight of capital there has been from this country was before the declaration of war; I believe there was a substantial flight of capital from Canada before the war. But it was a considerable period before the war, and not because of the fear of war; it was due in large part to the rapidly mounting taxation, especially by provincial governments, and especially the taxation of estates of deceased persons. That principle has been in our law for a long time; it will always be there. I hope that when the report of the Sirois commission comes before us for consideration earnest consideration will be given to the recommendation of one succession duty for the whole country. I have had many a headache over the question of multiplicity of succession duties. The executors of many an estate who have been extremely anxious to be honest and honourable have found themselves penalized not merely once but twice or thrice, having to pay double or triple taxation. There seems to be no reciprocity at all between the provinces in this regard.

I should like to observe in passing that it may be popular in some quarters to open up estates which were settled fifteen or twenty years ago, and there may be justification for it in some instances—I should think there would be justification where fraud was shown—but I should like to suggest to hon, gentlemen that this course has had an extremely bad effect in other directions. It has had the immediate effect of driving out of this country large sums of capital which is needed for the development of Canada and which would come in very handy to aid in our war effort.

It has had another bad effect. In the old days in the maritime provinces fairly substantial fortunes were made, both in commercial ventures and by the exercise of the old-fashioned virtue of thrift. Many of these fortunes, modest in most instances as compared with present day fortunes, upon the death of their owners were distributed among the educational and charitable institutions of our country. Many hospitals were the recipients of large sums of money accumulated during a lifetime of saving. To-day taxation has taken that all away, with the result that in my community at least, we are supporting our hospitals through direct taxation upon the people of the city, and we are glad to contribute to that cause. In other days well disposed people would have assumed a much larger share of the burden upon the community. That day has gone, just because of the principle to which I have referred. I must add that the blame in that regard, if any there be, does not lie within this jurisdiction.

I know the Prime Minister is anxious for this bill to become law. I suspect not expressly because of the necessities of the defence of Canada at this moment, but because in my opinion he wants to ferestall criticism. By that I do not mean criticism of the principles involved, which criticism I think he is prepared to meet, but rather criticism of the methods to be adopted in enforcing this measure. As I have already stated, in my opinion competent officials now in the employ of the government, with the assistance of one or two first-class legal draughtsmen, could whip these regulations into shape between now and Monday. Let the government do this; let them produce the regulations next Monday and then let parliament know what the procedure and the regulations will be, because that is its proper function. Let us at least know what they are to be. I would not limit this in any degree to the mobilization of manpower which, because it involves the human element, is the most important. I would apply it also, as far as that may be possible, to the mobilization of material resources. This is not so important as the Prime Minister suggested last night, but it is important.

I have not said one word with respect to taxation. The budget will be brought down this week, and then we will know what are the proposals of the government. Then we can examine those proposals in the light of the necessities of the occasion and the capabilities of the nation.

Now I invite the Prime Minister to take the house into his confidence and tell us just what procedure he has in mind under this section. If he has the principles in mind I have no doubt in the world that those principles can be reduced to writing and examined in this house, where they should be examined and to which it is the duty of the government to submit them, instead of taking the greatest blank cheque parliament has ever given to any government, even in an extreme emergency such as we are now facing. In the past I have heard about blank cheques. That was a day of economic warfare, and objections were raised then. Now we are up against something a great deal more difficult; I admit that, but the principle involved is the same.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I doubt if I am able to recall the several points mentioned by my hon. friend, but I think I got the general drift of his remarks. As I listened to him it seemed to me that all of them might pretty well be answered by saying that what he regards as applicable to the present government is equally applicable to the British government with respect to the measure which was enacted at Westminster, on which our measure is based. When Mr. Attlee introduced the bill giving emergency powers to the British government, in addition to the great powers the government already had, the British parliament was in session. It was expected that parliament would be in session from day to day from then on; that fact was known to all hon. members. Notwithstanding that fact Mr. Attlee asked on behalf of the government of the United Kingdom that they be given powers of mobilizing human and material resources which would be as extensive as, in fact almost identical with those set forth in the present bill. There was no suggestion in the British house that any regulation made under that enabling measure should be discussed in the House of Commons or the House of Lords before it was taken, and the reason is wholly apparent. The reason is that any action that will have to be taken under this measure will of necessity be of such an emergent character that it might defeat the whole purpose of the legislation if the government were obliged to wait for a discussion on a particular regulation before it was passed. Moreover it would disclose in advance the means being taken to cope with a critical situation, to meet which might require the utmost secrecy. This house adjourns on Friday night until Monday. What may transpire between any Friday and any Monday no one in this house can say, any more than they could have anticipated what has happened between a Friday and a Monday in Great Britain. But the length of time the British legislation has been on the statutes has shown, I think, the wisdom of giving to the government in London the opportunity of taking immediate action with respect to any situation that might arise at any time, and of placing thereafter before parliament at the earliest opportunity the regulation that was made.

The bill now before the committee itself contains a provision that at the earliest possible moment parliament shall be informed of the regulations that may be passed under it. Section 5 of the bill states:

Every order or regulation passed under the authority of this act shall be tabled in parliament forthwith if parliament is in session and, if parliament is not in session, within two weeks of the opening of the session next following the making of such order or regulation.

What is the procedure that would be followed? If a regulation were passed under this measure to-day that regulation could be tabled at the next sitting of the house, to-morrow. In the action it might wish to take the government would be well aware that any regulation passed might become immediately the subject of discussion, and would not be tempted to pass any regulation unless it thought there was full justification for it. If parliament adjourned on Friday night the regulation if passed on Saturday would be tabled on Monday. But I venture to say that if the situation on either of our coasts should become anything like it has become on the coasts of some countries in the old world, there may be need for the passing of a good many regulations between a Friday night and a Monday, which I submit it would be impossible for parliament to discuss before they were enacted.

In this matter it is very easy to say, "Oh, yes; parliament should deal with all these things." Every time I have asserted the authority of parliament as being supreme over the ministry; every time I have expressed the desire to keep parliament informed in all particulars, I have based what I have said on my belief in the wisdom of the British system and methods of government. No parliament in the world is more zealous of preserving the liberties of the individual citizen than is the parliament at Westminster. But if the parliament at Westminster has found it necessary to ask for special powers to meet an emergent situation in a time of war it has done so, not with a view to destroying in any way the liberties of the individual, but rather to seek to preserve them in the most effective way possible.

And it is exactly on the same basis that the government of to-day is asking that these powers be given to it. It is for exactly the same reason that we are asking that this enabling power be given to us to deal with an emergent situation.

I believe my hon, friend has over emphasized one particular aspect of this measure. Anyone coming into the house and listening to the discussion would have thought that we had before us a bill with respect to conscription, and conscription only. My hon, friend dwelt at some length upon a comparison between this measure and the military act passed in 1917. That act had to do only with the conscription of men, and, moreover, conscription for overseas service.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Both.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it had to do with both. But the references my hon. friend has made to tribunals and the like all had their particular bearing on the matter of overseas service. Nobody had in mind at that time the necessity of the young men of this country having to defend their own country on the soil of Canada itself. Parliament was discussing what was essential in connection with sending of more men overseas -conscripting them to send them overseas to do service in Europe. This bill does not touch conscription overseas, beyond setting forth that its provisions shall not be applicable to conscription for overseas service. That is a most important distinction to be kept in mind in any comparison which may be made between legislation with respect to conscription passed during the last war, and the measure before us. It is altogether a mistake to designate this measure as primarily a conscription measure. It is a measure with respect to the mobilization of human and material resources.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You can skate over that thin ice all you like, but this is for conscription of men and materials.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I repeat that it has reference to the mobilization of human and material resources—in other words is applicable to the entire resources of Canada. It does not relate to men only. It relates to every phase of the economic, financial and social life of the Dominion of Canada.

In that particular may I say that here again it follows exactly along the lines of the British measure. And in this connection, since there has been frequent reference to Mr. Attlee, I have gone to the trouble of preparing a brief statement which sets forth essential features of the British measure, as Mr. Attlee saw and presented them to the British House of Commons. I refer to Mr. Attlee's remarks at this point in order to make clear that it is exactly the same sort of thing that is contemplated under this measure. Speaking on May 22 Mr. Attlee said he did not want anyone to jump to the conclusion that all of a sudden everybody was going to be ordered to do something different from what he was doing now. The essential thing in an emergency was that everybody should continue at his job until he was ordered to do otherwise. What was proposed was that there should be control over persons and over property. The Minister of Labour would be given power to direct any person to perform any services required of him-to prescribe the terms of remuneration, the hours of labour and the conditions of service. With regard to conditions and pay, it was proposed to carry out wherever they existed industrial agreements which had been arrived at already, and wherever such agreements had not been arrived at to observe the rates normally paid by good employers. If people were required to shift from one district to another, there would be payment for that, et cetera.

Dealing with control over property, Mr. Attlee said that some establishments would be controlled altogether right away. Others might be controlled later. They would, in effect, be working on government account. Other establishments might be ordered to carry on, perhaps at a loss—for which apparently remuneration would be given. There might be cases where firms would have to close down with interim compensation.

There would be control of the finance of the country and of the banks. It might be done centrally, or through regional commissioners and financial advisers.

The Minister of Labour had been given the responsibility of supplying the labour required for the programmes of the various departments. He proposed to set up a production council consisting of representatives of the chief government departments concerned with munition supplies. A director of labour supply would be set up, training facilities would be established, et cetera. What I have set forth illustrates the scope of the measure as it was put through. It gave the government power to deal with any and every situation which might arise at a moment of great crisis or emergency.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is it the intention of the government to do what has been done under the bill in Great Britain? If so, then it removes a great many of our objections.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In reply may I say to the hon, member that already the British government has done certain things under this act, and I have no doubt it will do many more things under it. What they have done under their authority has been what they deemed to be necessary in view of particular situations at the time they arose. It is precisely the same sort of thing that this government purposes doing. When my hon, friend the leader of the opposition asks me to tell him all the government purports to do under the measure he knows very well I cannot begin to give an encyclopaedic reply to that question, because the powers which will be exercised will be so exercised as occasions arise. One day there may be something which affects labour, from the point of view of observation of its standards. It may be that on another day there may be something with respect to the manufacturing of particular commodities. Another day there may be something with respect to matters of finance. The action taken would be dependent upon what situation may arise, and how it may be most effectively met. In order to have the powers as broad as possible they have been made all-inclusive, to include the mobilization of human and material resources. Thus far in Great Britain, although they have had a situation with which fortunately thus far we have not been faced, they have not found it necessary to exercise many of the additional powers granted. But from day to day new situations arise, and the government is able to meet those situations by having the necessary powers to do so already in its hands.

By way of illustration we may find that within a few days some attack may be made upon our own coast. We might wish to direct a branch of industry of this country to perform a function which would necessitate helping to meet that situation in an extremely rapid manner. In trying to deal with a situation of the kind on a moment's notice we might be confronted with some employers who would be wholly loyal and anxious to do all they could, and we might meet with others who would wish to bargain, to learn what particular profits were to accrue before any step could be taken. Under the provision of this measure an individual could be told by the government of the day that he is to serve the state, not merely from the standpoint of profit. There would be authority here, were it necessary, to make him do what we are asking.

As I said yesterday we will exercise our powers in the light of our responsibility to parliament. The country will know that whatever we do will have to be done with the full knowledge that on the afternoon of the day on which it has been done, if parliament is sitting on that day, the whole question may be reviewed publicly in the house. I believe under those circumstances there is every reason for feeling that whatever powers may be exercised will be exercised with due regard to the preservation of the liberties of the individual, so far as they can possibly be preserved in a crisis.

May I add these words: I feel that already through headlines in the press, and I would say the same of the speech of the leader of the opposition this afternoon, the impression has been left that the measure is in reality little else than the old-fashioned measure of military conscription. I say it is nothing of the kind. I wish to make it perfectly clear that the mobilization is intended to provide men for all kinds of war work, of which service in the military forces is only one. As is natural at this early stage of the discussion, there seems to have arisen a different impression in many quarters. It is important therefore that I should make it quite clear that the essence of the measure is that the government is to be empowered to direct the men and the material equipment of this country into the work most urgently needed in the present crisis. That, I believe, may just as well require that some men go into the factories, farms and training centres as into the armed forces.

An hon, member on this side of the house made the statement publicly this morning that he felt he could go into his constituency and, by making it known to his constituents that this measure had to do with the protection of Canada and our own Canadian soil, bring forward in a very short time men from the forests, from the fields and from the factories, all prepared immediately to join the Canadian forces to resist any possible invasion, and that he would be prepared to guarantee that that could be done in constituency after constituency throughout the country, once it was understood that there was the necessity of defending our own Canadian shores. I pointed out to him that in doing that he might be making the greatest mistake possible with respect to the national interest; that, to win this war, we might wish to keep at work in the forests the men who are now working in the forests, to provide the timber which will be required for docks and wharves and required immediately; that the men who are working in the factories may be a thousand times more useful to the government of this country in giving their skilled labour to the manufacture of aircraft, munitions, or other weapons of war than they could possibly be in lining up and presenting themselves for military service; equally that on the farms, if we are to perform what will be expected of us, we shall need all the production that can be effectively and rapidly carried out on the farms of our country.

As the situation has developed, it will be necessary for the British isles to look more than ever to Canada for supplies of many kinds, for food, for munitions, for aircraft, and a great variety of other things. No longer can Great Britain hope to get some of these supplies from any other country of Europe, nor indeed can she hope to receive them, via the Mediterranean, from Australia, New Zealand and elsewhere. The one route above any route in the world which will have to be kept open is that which runs from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to the ports on the western coast of Great Britain. efforts of Germany will be directed more and more to blocking that route, to cutting it off, in order that Britain may be starved of food, munitions, equipment and much else. Does not that raise a problem which this government will have to face, as to how we are to get men to do, in the way they should be done, the things which are required before all others and will give the greatest immediate service? I contend that that cannot be done unless the administration has enabling powers which will put us in a position where, if we see that a certain course of action rather than some other is urgently necessary, that particular course will be taken.

This measure does not mean that the manhood of Canada as a whole is to be conscripted at once, that every man in the country is immediately to be put into uniform and shoulder a rifle. The moment may come when it will be necessary to call out the young manhood of the country to help save our soil because of invasion. We pray that that day may not come. On the other hand it may come, and we want to be sure that, if anything of the kind ever happens, those who will be called upon to serve will be properly trained and will know how to perform their duties as soldiers defending their own country. This measure gives us the opportunity to call out, in such numbers and at such times and places as may seem wise, the men between certain ages for the purpose of training, so that when, later on, it may become necessary to put them into active service, they will know how to perform at least the elementary duties of men in arms.

I submit that, if all this is clearly understood, there should be a disposition to allow the government the discretionary power which is absolutely essential when measures have to be taken in very quick order with respect to situations which an hour before were not known, and that there should not be any effort to limit the government's power in that particular by placing any false emphasis upon the exceptional powers which this bill will give to the administration.

Mr. LACOMBE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, since the amendment I moved to the bill at present under discussion has been ruled out of order, I have decided to move the adoption of another now that the house is sitting in committee on the same legislation.

Before proceeding with this motion, I believe it my duty to draw the committee's attention to the fact that the Militia and Defence Act remains the same. Section 64 of this Act has not been amended. That section reads as follows:

The Governor in Council may place the Militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency.

In view of this Act and for the reasons I have already mentioned, I wish to restate my opposition to this bill.

I am not doing this because I derive pleasure from it, Mr. Chairman, but because it is my duty to do so. No one, no matter what high position he occupies, can prevent me from freely speaking my mind. No one in this house, no matter how powerful he may be, can force me to betray the mandate I hold from my constituents. This mandate from a free and honest people rises way above the insinuations and insults directed last night at those members whose only crime has been the fulfilment of their duty, their whole duty—

Mr. JEAN: Your whole duty?

Mr. LACOMBE: —as they understand it. I would like to point out to the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Jean) that I am speaking for myself, and that I respect his own opinions.

We shall not cease, notwithstanding anyone, to glorify the heroic resistance of our old motherland, France, nor to proclaim her valour, her pride and her nobleness, for France, in whose soul lives an ideal of justice, of beauty and of courage, will see her sublime sacrifice magnified in history.

Mr. DUPUIS: Will she stand alone?

Mr. LACOMBE: We shall never cease admiring and deploring at the same time the glorious martyrdom of France. We shall do so freely and without restraint as the worthy sons of a heroic mother.

I wish to state that the Canadian people were odiously deceived during the federal election of March 26 last. The matter of conscription, even for the defence of the country, was at no time submitted to them. Neither was it submitted to their representatives, except on extremely short notice. The members, like the people, were caught by surprise and unprepared. Why this attitude worthy of the dictators against whose policies the democracies are now embattled?

Moreover, I am convinced that if the government had made an urgent appeal for volunteers to defend Canada, there would have been no need to introduce this execrable and loathsome conscription measure.

"Let us forget the past" was the appeal made last night by a member of the cabinet. No, a thousand times no! The past is the entire sacred history of a people. To lay it aside would be a betrayal. We are not prepared to consummate such a felony. In spite of the insults and inept remarks of certain persons, we shall pursue without faltering our difficult course. We shall no more give way to threats than did the constituents of Laval-Two Mountains and their member before a band of hoodlums and criminals who tried to steal the ballot boxes on March 26 last. I leave it to the house to judge this disloyalty toward an opponent who was not really one. I leave it to the hon. members to judge this disloyalty toward one of their most undaunted defenders during the last twenty years.

It will be stated, as it has been said over and over again, that we are opposed to the defence of Canada. That is absolutely false. What we cannot support, however, is the obvious contradiction between this bill and section 64 of the Militia Act. What we cannot support is this sudden reversal of the government's policy and its failure to appeal first to the people for volunteers to defend Canada. What we cannot support is the government's failure to submit the present measure to the approval of the Canadian people during the recent election campaign.

No, we are not opposed to the defence of Canada, but we claim that full advantage should first be taken of the possibilities of the voluntary enlistment system. We also claim on behalf of the people the opportunity and the sacred right to express their opinion on this measure through a plebiscite. Moreover, we demand that the Militia Act be amended so as to apply solely to the protection of our territory. Those who blamed us in this parliament a few hours ago, forget that the man who voices these views served in the army during the last war. Some people quickly forget the sacrifices and the distress of others. Whatever happens, we will stand our ground and continue to defend at all times and everywhere freedom, justice and right.

The right honourable the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) said that the first duty of a citizen is to defend his country. I agree with that. For four years I have opposed any increase in the military estimates because the government persisted in refusing to amend the Militia and Defence Act; such was, besides, the gist of every objection I raised before.

That money was to be used solely for the defence of Canada. I need not recall what has happened.

Mr. DUPUIS: That is true.

Mr. LACOMBE: As the hon, member who is my desk-mate says, that is true. It is evidenced by the facts. Let us study the history of these later times. I shall not state facts known to everyone; it would be a loss of time. But I wish to say that as long as the government persist in refusing to amend the Militia and Defence Act, my attitude shall remain unchanged.

At a time when the United States are enforcing the Monroe Doctrine, is it fitting that the Canadian Parliament should enforce conscription in Canada even for the defence of her territory? Has anything been done to ascertain what response the Canadian people would make to the authorities if the Government appealed for a greater number of voluntary enlistments? I am asking that question because this measure is exceedingly serious. Consequently, I have the honour to move, seconded by the honourable member for Quebee-Montmorency (Mr. Wilfred Lacroix):

[Mr. Lacombe.]

Mr. LACROIX (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Chairman, I have the honour to second the motion moved by the hon member who has just resumed his seat.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved by the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Lacombe), and seconded by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lacroix):

That all the words after "whereas" in the preamble of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "the government's war policy must be free and voluntary."

I call the hon. member's attention to standing order No. 76 which says:

In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

Standing order No. 58, paragraph 2, says: Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

The committee is presently on a section of the bill, and I must declare out of order an amendment to the preamble of the bill at this stage of the proceedings.

The committee would no doubt like to know what has been done. The hon, member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Lacombe) has proposed, seconded by the hon, member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lacroix)—there is no necessity, I might point out, for a seconder of amendments in committee—that all the words after the word "whereas" in the preamble of the bill be struck out and replaced by the following words: "the war policy of the government must remain free and voluntary." I have drawn the attention of the hon, member to standing order 76, wherein it is provided:

In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first post-poned, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

The proposed amendment being to the preamble, it is out of order, because the committee is on section 2 of the bill.

Mr. PICARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the hour is grave, the international situation is deteriorating rapidly. I do not wish to prolong the debate and to delay the passing of the bill, but it is such an extraordinary measure that I feel it is my duty to explain my position.

Mr. LACOMBE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have to challenge your ruling.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

Henderson

Maybank

When the committee was considering section two of Bill No. 43, an act to confer certain powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of national resources in the present war, Mr. Lacombe moved an amendment: "That all the words after 'whereas' in the preamble of the bill and in the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: 'the and the following substituted therefor: the government's war policy must be free and voluntary'." The chairman ruled the proposed amendment out of order, on the ground that it could not be moved when section two of the bill was under consideration, and that under standing order No. 76 the preamble is first postponed and considered after every clause has been passed on Whereynon Mr. Lacombe has been passed on. Whereupon Mr. Lacombe appealed from the ruling of the chairman.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question before the house is: shall the decision of the chairman be confirmed? Those in favour will please say aye, those opposed will please say no. In my opinion the ayes have it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Have a vote.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

And the house having resumed in committee:

On section 2-Special powers of the governor in council.

Mr. PICARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, words are rather useless at the present moment. The vote just registered proves better than all that could be said the national unity on this subject. It is not my intention to speak at length. I only want to say a word on this government bill. We have said throughout the country that we were opposed to conscription for service overseas. But the bill presently before the house is for the mobilization of capital and man-power for service in Canada. The vote just taken shows that the people of all Canada will approve of the government's decision to mobilize the forces of the nation for the defence of the country, without distinction of race, classes or provinces.

Mr. CHURCH: I shall not detain the house for more than a few moments, but I should like to find out the principles upon which this bill is based. The leader of the opposition read the sections of the Militia Act in which there is a form of conscription, providing that the militia may be called out for service in or beyond Canada—I refer to sections 63, 64 and 66 of chapter 132 of the revised statutes of Canada. Under section 66 the governor in council may place the militia on active service, if parliament should be adjourned, and parliament must be summoned within fifteen days thereafter.

This matter was discussed in the special war session. Those who went to enlist at the Toronto armouries did not know what they were enlisting for. There was a good deal of confusion. They could not learn whether they were enlisting for home defence or for service overseas, because the government of the day had not asked for any contingents. I brought the matter up in the house last September and it was clarified then.

There is a great deal of dissatisfaction among the young people who want to serve their country. They do not feel it sufficient to fight a war for democracy or to fight a war to end wars, but they are willing to fight for freedom, for religion, for the mother country in her hour of peril from invasion. I contend the principle of the bill has never been explained properly. The governor in council is being given very wide powers, powers which in fact have never been given before anywhere. They are virtually taking all the powers exercised by the House of Commons; the executive can do as they please, over the heads of parliament and the people.

The governor in council would have absolute control of the press, despite the fact that we know that one of Hitler's proudest achievements in Germany has been the suppression of the press. In the dictatorships there is no such thing as a free press. That is a very dangerous situation. Much difficulty was experienced at the time of the great war in connection with defence regulations drafted by the governor in council. And yet, under sections 2 and 3 of the bill we are to have in Canada the principle of conscription of military, naval and air forces for home defence, whatever that is or means, and the governor in council will have arbitrary power to impose penalties, as any dictator would do, without trial, for the violation of any of these provisions. I contend that no such power as that, in the present situation, should be given to the governor in council, until the people of Canada know the meaning of this bill.

Let us remember that the principle of this measure aims at home defence, and that is exactly what Hitler was depending upon. In a speech he made some time ago at Berchtesgaden, quoted last fall by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), he said he believed the dominions would not come to the support of the mother country. He believed they would insist upon their status, upon separation, and things of that kind. And so I say that the war is not going to be decided because of the passing of this bill. Its passage will not stop Hitler in his march to world hegemony. The defence of Canada will not be decided at Vancouver, at Quebec, at Montreal or Three Rivers. It will be decided in England, and on the English channel. Great Britain is now left all alone to carry on the fight. She is surrounded, because, as in the days of Napoleon, southern Ireland may be a back door through which Germany may attack Britain.

Even the most enthusiastic supporters of this measure cannot say that it will do one iota of good, so far as stopping Hitler is concerned. In my opinion this war will be decided in the next three or four weeks, long before a man can be trained under this act; and if Great Britain fails now, then civilization is at an end, and we can have nothing but darkness in Canada and in the world; life will not be worth living.

Everything we have in Canada we owe to the motherland. Everything we have by way of freedom, civilization and liberty we can thank Britain for. In matters of defence on land and sea and in the air we have looked to her. I do not believe the young people of Canada want to fight for home defence or act as policemen or home guards. It hurts recruiting a great deal to have it said that a contingent went to Iceland or is to go to Greenland's icy mountains. One contingent went to Siberia in the last war, and it was the recruiting for that contingent which helped to kill conscription and to kill voluntary recruiting. Our young people will not give up their jobs for nothing. They want to take on Hitler and his vassals at the gates of Britain. They want to fight Hitler and the other dictator in foreign fields. They do not want to stay at home and act as guards, and all that kind of thing. We realize that home defence is important, but it is not nearly as important as service in the old country. We know that in England they are only twenty miles away from the guns. When I hear the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Lacombe) and other hon, members criticizing what Great Britain has done, when I hear them say that Great Britain has let France down, I answer them in this way: it is one of the most outstanding events in all British history the splendid way in which Mr. Chamberlain gave able and inspiring leadership over a period of two years. And consider Britain's wonderful record so far in the great war; consider all that has been accomplished which it took so long to accomplish in the last war-unity of command on the western front: the instant action of the royal navy in taking command of the seas and of the royal air force in taking command of the air; the heroism of these forces, unparalleled in history; the close economic alliance with France; the swift mobilization of our man-power, all achieved quietly, smoothly and efficiently. Consider also the gigantic and difficult problems of home defence, the organization of supply, the suppression of profiteering, the control and equitable distribution of foodstuffs, the evacuation of civil populations. Is it any wonder that the whole civilized world has been thrilled by it? I say that this record has no parallel in history.

The mobilization of man-power has been mishandled by the government. All voluntary recruiting—on again, off again—is a half measure. As was urged last September by some of us on this side of the house, this measure of aid to Britain should have been brought down at that time. We are always too late in everything. The government have acted only after pressure to do their plain duty, that of executing their war trust. That should have been done without any urging on the part of the public or soldier organizations. But since parliament they have been forced to act, through weight of public opinion. Their policy in the last year has been nothing but one of following the line of least resistance. In fact, that seems to be the parliamentary religion in this House of Commons all the time. But after matters are stirred up, the government goes to work, and of course it will claim credit for stopping Hitler, if that can be done.

With regard to this meaningless bill, how are we going to stop Hitler with measures of this kind, or bills or blue books or orders in council? Hitler does not give a snap of his finger for any home defence measures like this we may take. We have four thousand miles of border, and no army, air force or navy of any kind to defend it properly. We seek to defend Iceland, but cannot even defend Canada or her cities or towns.

May I at this point offer a tribute to the glorious manhood which has enlisted in our army, our air force and our naval force. They have done glorious work, and history will so record it and have written a new page in courage and chivalry. But in its present defensive position Canada cannot protect its own territory, or its shores, as it is supposed to do under the useless statute of Westminster. In my opinion the government has been too late, not ten times, as I said the other day, but nearer twenty times too late in everything from recruiting an overseas force to the empire air scheme or equipment or trying to stop Hitler.

If the government intended that its policy should be one of home defence, then the country should have been informed of that policy last September. If Hitler comes up the St. Lawrence, or appears here in the city of Ottawa-and I may say the Germans are not very far from our shores now-and if Great Britain fails, what will our home defence amount to? Where are our barracks to come from? Where are we to get our uniforms, our equipment, our tanks, our rifles, our instructors to train this army or home guard? Where are our defences? How are we to drill this home army? Why, it will take two years to train it. We will require two years to get ammunition, clothing and equipment to make any pretence at defending our own shores, let alone that of the United States or Iceland. We talk of home defence only. That is what we seem to be doing, despite the fact that this war is going to be decided in the next sixty days over in the English channel and the mother country where our only home defence is.

Even if this bill is passed, we do not know to whom this country will belong at the end of the summer, or in a few weeks if Britain fails like France. I am surprised no proper steps were taken by the government until the house met and the matter was forced upon them in the house and by public opinion as a result of the fall of France. Too late again! Undoubtedly first of all the government will have to make a survey. No doubt that will be the basis on which the army will be formed. I protest against a condition whereby young people who want to fight, and who do not want to stay home all summer, or enlist for home defence, must wait around until this survey is made and then be conscripted for a meaningless, useless thing called home defence. They want to go overseas. They want to help Great Britain, the mother country. They want to fight the enemy at Britain's gates, not here. As I view it, this bill is based on home defence and neutrality, the cardinal principles of our defence policy as given out last year. I believe it is closely involved with the policy of protecting north American neutrality, and we have an indication of that in the government's Iceland policy and their well known pan-American states' policies. How does it come about that our expeditionary force which enlisted to fight Hitler, has been sent up to the icy mountains of Iceland, and possibly to Greenland's icy mountains, when we have not enough men to protect the province of Ontario or, in particular, the Niagara district, if an invasion were attempted?

Our young people are not going to fight for any policy like that. I believe in conscription as a principle, if we are going to have conscription for all the people, not just some people while others are exempted. As a matter of fact, we would not have needed it, if the government had done its duty a year ago and since the war began. Under a voluntary system of enlistment we could have had 600,000 men from coast to coast, clothed and equipped for overseas service. But that was not done. This is a limited liability war, a secret war, and the government has been too late every time in what it has done. Delays are dangerous.

During the last election campaign ministers of the government from Quebec were saying, "We will never belong to an administration which brings about conscription for overseas service or conscription." Yet they do. In answer to me the Prime Minister himself said in the House of Commons that Canada never again would send an expeditionary force, and that any dictator or foreign danger to Canada from Europe was only minor in degree, and secondary in origin, and that we had enough domestic problems of our own first to settle. We heard the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Public Works say that so far as they were concerned they would resign and would not belong to a government which enforced conscription. Well, the very principle of conscription is in this bill here and now. All law is conscription. Probably not one-third of the population would send their children to school if the law were on a voluntary, and not a compulsory education basis. All public health laws and, in fact, all law constitutes compulsion. Every country in the world has conscription of man-power to-day except little Luxemburg, with its small number of two hundred and fifty men to meet the Hun at the gate, and Canada and the United States.

Hitler is not going to be beaten or destroyed by any stay-at-home force of home guards. It will take more than home guards to defeat him, or Mussolini, or Stalin. There are now six million men under arms in Germany, and if Britain fails overseas, no government in Europe or on the American continent will be able to withstand him any longer and home defence here will be at an end. Hitler is looking for world hegemony and domination. If Britain is defeated the next German demands will be made on Ottawa and Washington. And what are we doing here? We are sitting here debating a bill which, when section 2 is passed, will be of no effect whatever to stop the dictators, because section 3 makes section 2 inoperative, and man-power is only conscription for home defence, whatever that is.

Canada has not been pulling its weight in the boat, and Britain, to her sorrow, knows it. To-day Britain is surrounded and fighting this battle all by herself, with no proper help from those who have been so far only offering ringside advice, while it is the truth that others act the part of the Levite, passing by on the other side and refusing to assist France or any other small country except on a cash-and-carry basis. France failed because any help came too late.

The policy announced by the government at the last two sessions here has been one of isolation, status, and dependence on the Monroe doctrine and on pan-Americanism, but Washington appears now to be unable to do much at once to help, and the United States cannot protect even its own shores, let alone Canada, and stands idly by, while France is destroyed and the very existence of Britain threatened. Yet we have been told over and over again in this house that the United States would protect us from the dictators.

The young red-blooded Canadians I know are turning out in large numbers to join the air force. They are not going to enlist, conscription or no conscription, for home guard and policeman's or other stay-at-home duties when these dictators are at Britain's gate, when these barbarians who have destroyed France are preparing to destroy the mother country—the richest prize for which Hitler has been contending, the objective sought before him by the kaiser, by Bismarck, and three generations of Germans in the past seventy years: the despoiling of Britain forever and what she stands for—religion, freedom and liberty.

This bill does not commend itself to the wisdom and judgment of the country. The last three years have seen nothing but a series of wasted opportunities all along the line. We have been too late on many occasions; we were too late with the aid force plan; we are too late as regards the purposes of this bill, or munitions, or food, or clothing, or recruiting. The bill provides no more than a mere semblance of conscription; it is a useless, meaningless thing. We have discussed this matter before, and I have asked the government what is their plan. Apparently one part of it is a censorship of the press of this country which will prevent them doing their duty in this great emergency. When all is said and done, the press is the protector of the rights of the citizen. The acid test of the effectiveness of a newspaper is how it reports the House of Commons. We find this session that the chamber might as well have met in secret except for the treatises which have been read here daily regarding the principle of the war. It is a fundamental tenet of democracy that the press has a status in this country, and that in a double sense: it is an intermediary between the government of the day and the people, and it provides a channel whereby the people may know what is going on with regard to the war effort of the government. The press is the only means whereby the man in the street can have his grievances remedied, and the only place where people can learn what are the policies of the government and the opposition. I protest against giving the government power by order in council to abolish the freedom of the press, to impose a censorship on all the editors in the country, and to limit their usefulness. Criticism is a tonic. Our newspapers did great work during the last war, not least in upholding the morale of the people. Few of them did not help the government and fulfil their trust

The government of the day has been given wider powers by section 2 of this bill than any of its predecessors. I do not believe that the people are at all satisfied with the bill, and I again protest against giving the governor in council such powers. If the house is not to rise to go to another place I should like to add a few other remarks. Is the committee now to rise?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope we shall be able to get through with this bill before six o'clock—if that is what my hon. friend means. If we cannot do so, I would ask that the house consider sitting after six, because we shall not be meeting to-night. I think we ought to get through with this bill to-day.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 2 carry?

Mr. CHURCH: If it is the desire of hon. members to rise, I am satisfied. I want to help all I can. I have some real objections, though, to this procedure by order in council. I saw the result of it all in the last great war. It hurt recruiting, it hurt Canada's effort, it led to conscription. The censorship which was laid on the press was not in the best interests of the country or of the conduct of the war. I believe that had the government of the day properly carried out a campaign of voluntary recruitment, they would have had no occasion in 1914-18 to force anybody to do his duty.

The menace of the dictators has been with us for a long time. Could the government not have foreseen nine months ago what might happen to France? They have been getting advice continuously from the British government. They knew that Hitler had five or six million men in arms. They knew that France was holding the Maginot line almost alone, and they should have known that neither the Maginot line nor any other fortification will last forever. Yet what did they do? They would not pursue a policy of adequate recruiting, although, as soldiers' organizations have shown, they could have enlisted five or six hundred thousand men.

There is no desire on anyone's part to do other than encourage and help the government. Probably other speakers wish to contribute to this discussion, and I will only repeat my protest against this way of doing business, by giving to the governor in council such wide powers to impose rules and penalties and all that kind of thing.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to add to the remarks I made yesterday evening. I had asked to be granted a short delay, a few hours in which to consult my constituents and I have done so with the kind assistance of my wife. Their reply was as follows: Provided the wording of the bill were such as to give positive assurance that it granted powers to be exercised solely in Canada, I should vote in favour of the measure. I am happy to have been able to consult my electors. I owed them that much because, if I consider them intelligent at election time, I still think them intelligent enough to have faith in them and to consult them while I represent them in this house.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would it be in order to suggest to the Prime Minister that we adjourn at the regular time, meet again at eight o'clock and carry on to-night, instead of continuing after six o'clock? We of this group have not counted upon having the Prime Minister keep the committee in session after six o'clock in order to finish this debate.

An hon. MEMBER: Let us carry the bill now.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There are several things I wish to say about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to crowd the committee in any way, but may I say to my hon. friends that this evening, when we get through with the house, the cabinet will meet and will be in session because of the matters we have to consider, probably from eight o'clock or eight-thirty until eleven or twelve o'clock to-night. That was why I hoped the house might see its way to get through the measure by continuing after six o'clock. If, however, hon. members feel that they have things which they must say I think we ought to adjourn at six o'clock and go on to-morrow. I should, however, very much like to have this measure go through to-day, for reasons that must be fairly evident.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think probably it would be wise in the circumstances to adjourn and go on to-morrow.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot be responsible for what may happen to-morrow or for the need there may be for this measure to-morrow. I say to the house at the moment that I wish very much I had some powers under this measure now with respect to some action that I should like to take this very afternoon. However if my hon, friend wishes to wait until to-morrow that is his privilege.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think this debate should be concluded as soon as possible but after what the minister said over the air last night in French to his compatriots in the province of Quebec there does not appear to be very much necessity for this bill being put through to-day. I have just seen the translation of what he said. You cannot ride two horses at the same time.

Mr. POWER: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is not here, but I have some knowledge of what he said. 'As I recollect it, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) made a statement over the radio which he hoped would prevent the country from being unduly alarmed, and as I understand it the Minister of Justice gave a translation of the same statement in French.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The translation I saw—

Mr. CLEAVER: Withdraw.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Who said withdraw?

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. CLEAVER: I did.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Keep your seat. You are not in this.

Mr. POWER: I think my hon. friend would be the first to appreciate the motive of both ministers in saying that they hoped the country would not imagine all sorts of things were going to happen immediately upon the passing of this measure. They tried to give the country a note of assurance, which I think was very much needed in view of the rumours that were started about what was to be done under this measure.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am bound to say that the piece I saw was taken out of its context, and I know how dangerous that may be.

Mr. POWER: Has the hon. member got it there?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No; but the inference was that the minister was making one statement in this house and a statement of an entirely different kind outside, and I wondered about that.

Mr. POWER: In the minister's absence I undertake to deny anything of the kind, no matter what my hon. friend saw.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not in a position to enter into a controversy about it, but that was the impression left on my mind. I repeat that I think this bill should go through and I am willing to expedite its passage. Nobody can say to the contrary. What I said this afternoon I thought I was in duty bound to say, and I am not retracting any part of it. This bill ought to go through and the government should give evidence of its bona fides by acting under it. I have no desire to delay the passage of the bill, but I should not like to shut out discussion.

Mr. ROY: I should be pleased to give in English a translation of what was said on the radio last night by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MacNICOL: Let us have it.

Mr. ROY: I will give the translation.

To appease all uneasiness and apprehension it only needs, I am sure, to give the assurance that these new powers, if granted to the government, will only be exercised if in the interest of the national security of Canada it becomes necessary to do so. This assurance, ladies and gentlemen, I give to you in the most emphatic way, and do not listen to rumours to the contrary as anyone who spreads these rumours is harming the national cause.

It is evident that my hon, friend's intention was to give his hearers the impression that this law might not be enforced. Mr. POWER: That is your comment. That is not the translation.

Mr. ROY: I have it in French and I will read it to the house in French. I have quoted from the text.

Mr. POWER: I do not deny the text because I wrote it myself. I helped to write the text in English for the Minister of Finance to deliver over the radio in order to reassure people who might otherwise make a run on the banks. The statement had no connection whatsoever with the mobilization of man-power.

Mr. ROY: It was presented by the Minister of Justice over the radio in such a way as to tell the Quebec people that conscription may not be enforced in Canada if the need is not apparent. We understood it very well. The Minister of Justice was still gambling with words, and in such grave times as these I find it very strange that the men in whom this country should have confidence are still going out to make such statements—

Mr. POWER: On a point or order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is imputing motives to my colleague, the Minister of Justice, who happens to be absent from the chamber. I have told him on my responsibility as a minister of the crown that I had something to do with the writing of that speech and the words quoted by my hon. friend. It was a speech delivered by the Minister of Finance in the English language and a translation was made for the Minister of Justice in the French language. The statement referred only to matters relating to the financial provisions of the bill and was intended to quiet the uneasiness of persons who might have thought that their savings in the banks were to be taken by the government immediately. I will say more. If my hon, friend will go to the broadcasting corporation and get the text delivered by the Minister of Finance in English, he will find that it was identically the same statement as was delivered in French by the Minister of Justice. That ought to clear it up.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It will with me.

Mr. ROY: Why was not the statement made in the House of Commons by the Minister of Justice last night?

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the point of order. The rules of the house are well known. I cite paragraph 297 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

The imputation of bad motives, or motives different from those acknowledged, misrepresenting the language of another, or accusing 95826-59½ him, in his turn, of misrepresentation, charging him with falsehood or deceit——is out of order. The hon, member should withdraw his statement.

Mr. ROY: No.

The CHAIRMAN: At any rate the statements made by the hon, member were out of order. It being six o'clock, I must necessarily report progress unless by unanimous consent the committee desires to carry on and pass the bill.

Mr. BLACKMORE: My opinion is that there is so much to be discussed it would be inadvisable to try to carry on past six o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report progress? Some hon. MEMBERS: Carry on.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If one hon. member objects, the committee cannot carry on.

The CHAIRMAN: Unless there is unanimous consent the rule is imperative.

Mr. COLDWELL: I have no objection to carrying on to-night and getting the business through, but last night, and in the press to-day, we were castigated for having called a recorded vote and so delayed the passing of the bill. This afternoon the Prime Minister and his colleagues on the government side called for a recorded vote, which delayed the proceedings by exactly the same length of time as the recorded vote did last night. But there is this difference, that last night eighteen voted for the point of view we took and to-day two voted in the opposite direction to the Prime Minister. I resent the remarks of the Prime Minister directed at this group last night because of our having asked for a recorded vote yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN: I am afraid the hongentleman is out of order. Unless the leader of the social credit group withdraws his opposition I have not the unanimous consent of the committee. Does the hongentleman withdraw his opposition?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Chairman, I certainly would not delay the proceedings of the house. We could go on until nine o'clock, but I can assure the house that what our group has to say will take but little more than three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I be allowed to say a word in reply to my hon. friend with respect to the vote this afternoon? I thought, and I still think, that the time has come when the country should know exactly where some men stand on all-important measures such as this. For the best of reasons I was not prepared to leave the impression that there were any members other than one or two who would support the amendment and who were not prepared to support the bill. For that reason I asked that the vote be taken.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report progress? Mr. ADAMSON: Why not carry on for another hour?

Progress reported.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

ARRIVAL AT HALIFAX OF THE EARL AND COUNTESS OF ATHLONE-ARRANGEMENTS FOR CEREMONY OF INSTALLATION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with your permission and that of the house, I should like to make an announcement to the house in respect to a matter in which all hon. members are interested.

I am happy to be in a position to inform the house that the Governor General designate, the Right Honourable the Earl of Athlone, and Her Royal Highness the Princess Alice, Countess of Athlone, have arrived in Halifax this afternoon.

The Earl and Countess of Athlone were accompanied from England by the secretary to the Governor General, Sir Shuldham Redfern, the Honourable Ariel Baird, lady-inwaiting to her royal highness, and Captain

T. R. C. Goff, aide-de-camp.

Upon arrival in Halifax this afternoon, the Earl of Athlone and the Princess Alice were met by the Under-Secretary of State, and by members of the staff of government house. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, the premier of the province, and representatives of the defence services and of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, were also present.

The Earl of Athlone and her royal highness and their party are proceeding by special train to Ottawa. It is expected they will arrive on Friday morning at 11.30 o'clock, daylight saving time.

Upon the arrival of the special train at the station in Ottawa, the Governor General designate and her royal highness will be met by His Excellency the Administrator and members of the government. The ministers of foreign powers accredited to Canada, the commonwealth representatives, the mayor of Ottawa and the members and associate members of the defence council will also be present.

In view of the gravity of the international situation it has been thought appropriate that [Mr. Mackenzie King.]

the ceremonial features in more normal times associated with the installation of governors general should be reduced to a minimum. Accordingly, arrangements have been made for the installation and swearing-in of the Earl of Athlone to take place immediately following arrival in the capital. The official party will proceed direct from the railway station to the senate chamber where the ceremony will take place at twelve o'clock noon.

Hon. members and others who are to be invited to the ceremony of installation, will shortly receive printed copies of an official programme which has been prepared for the occasion.

The reason that I have made no special mention of hon. members being present at the station is that, as the installation ceremony is to take place in the senate chamber, probably most hon, members will prefer to remain at the parliament buildings and have their places in the senate when the governor general designate arrives.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, June 20, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS AND ESTIMATES OF GOVERNMENT OWNED TRANS-PORTATION LINES

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport)

That standing order 63 of the House of Commons, relating to the appointment of standing committees of the house, be amended by adding to the standing committees of the house for the present session a standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, to which will be controlled by the government, to which will be referred accounts and estimates and bills relating thereto of the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, and Trans-Canada Air Lines for the present session, for consideration and report to the house; provided however that nothing in the resolution shall be construed to curtail in any way the full right of discussion in committee of supply; and that the said committee consist of Messrs. Bercovitch, Black (Cumberland), Bradette, Diefenbaker, Donnelly, Dubuc, Ferland, Gray, Hansell, Hanson (Skeena), Harris (Danforth), Hill, Howden, Howe, Lapointe (Lotbinière), Lockhart, MacInnis, McCulloch, Maybank, Parent, Ross (Middlesex East), Sanderson, Sissons.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the estimates on railways and shipping included in the main estimates for 1940-41, tabled in the house, be referred to the standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Motion agreed to.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY

TABLING OF LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL HEADS AND KEY MEN

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): As requested by the hon.

member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) I wish to table a list of the officers of the Department of Munitions and Supply charged with the purchase of materials, together with their telephone numbers, the location of their offices and their positions prior to entering the service of the department. I should like to ask the privilege of having this statement published in Hansard.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REGULATION DURING PERIOD OF WAR FOR AVOID-ANCE OF INDUSTRIAL STRIFE AND ACCELERATION OF ESSENTIAL PRODUCTION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I desire to table copy of order in council P.C. 2685, approved by His Excellency the Administrator on the 19th June, 1940, containing a declaration by the government of Canada of principles for the avoidance of labour unrest and for the regulation of labour conditions during the war. This is a copy of the order which I mentioned on Tuesday last. It would have been passed on Monday had it been possible for me to be in council for a sufficient length of time that day; or on Tuesday, had it been possible to take up this matter then. It was passed yesterday.

Mr. MacINNIS: Would the Prime Minister have any objection to having that appear in the votes and proceedings to-morrow?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should be very glad to have that done, though I may say to my hon. friend that it will appear in the Canada Gazette in any case. That may meet his wish, but it might as well appear in the votes and proceedings also.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would second the suggestion of the hon. gentleman. I can imagine no place more innocuous than the Canada Gazette from which to obtain information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I had an eye to economy in the matter of extra printing. The press already have complete copies, and I have no doubt the contents of the minute of council will appear in the newspapers this afternoon or in any case to-morrow morning.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*government arsenals, quebec and lindsay
Mr. BRUCE:

1. Are the government arsenals at Quebec and Lindsay being used to full capacity?

[Mr. Howe.]

2. If not, what use is being made of them?

3. How many hands are employed?

Mr. POWER:

- 1. Quebec arsenal is being utilized to full capacity. Lindsay arsenal is being developed as a shell factory and as a rolling mill and foundry for the production of brass for small arm ammunition production. The rolling mill and foundry are operating to full capacity and additional equipment, it is expected, will be added. The machines and equipment for the shell plant are now being installed and a complete plant will be in operation by the middle of July.
 - 2. Answered by 1.
- 3. Not in the public interest to give this information.

NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK COAL SUBVENTIONS

Mr. BROOKS:

- 1. What amount of money has been paid by way of subventions in assisting the coal industry in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick during the past fiscal year?
- 2. Has further assistance been given this industry since the beginning of the war by payment of insurance on ships and cargoes taking coal up the St. Lawrence river?
- 3. If so, how much has been paid on account of coal shipped (a) from Nova Scotia, (b) from New Brunswick?

Mr. CRERAR:

- 1. Nova Scotia, $3,229,223.83; New Brunswick, $46,218.93.
 - 2. No.
 - 3. Answered by 2.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS-ST. MALO SHOPS

- Mr. PARENT (Quebec West and South):
 1. How many years have the St. Malo shops in Quebec city been operating?
- 2. How many men have been employed each year?
- 3. What is the amount of salaries paid each year since the opening of the shops?
- 4. What is the original cost of the St. Malo shops?

5. At what price are the buildings listed on the books of the Canadian National?

6. At what valuation is the land carried on the books of the Canadian National?

Mr. HOWE:

- 1. Twenty years.
- 2. Average number of employees from earliest year readily available: Year—1924, 510; 1925, 473; 1926, 483; 1927, 470; 1928, 482; 1929, 490; 1930, 479; 1931, 463; 1932, 357; 1933, 350; 1934, 342; 1935, 344; 1936, 352; 1937, 399; 1938, 366; 1939, 352.
- 3. Total salaries paid from earliest year readily available: Year—1924, $685,527; 1925, $655,676; 1926, $667,832; 1927, $660,852; 1928, $704,264; 1929, $769, 092; 1930, $729,063; 1931, $657,182; 1932, $390,844; 1933, $362,524; 1934, $366,620; 1935, $405,531; 1936, $436,032; 1937, $535,023; 1938, $513,551; 1939, $526,594.
- 4. Original cost as of March 31, 1917, $1,872,-780.32; cost as of December 31, 1939, $2,793,-471.56, as follows: (a) Land, $225,141.32; (b) Buildings, $1,380,218.22; (c) Trackage, sundries, etc., $255,352.24; (d) Machinery, equipment and tools, $932,759.78; total, $2,793,-471.56.
 - 5. See answer No. 4, item (b).
 - 6. See answer No. 4, item (a).

Note: St. Malo shops are the property of the crown, but vested in the Canadian National management for purposes of operation.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

ARMY, NAVY AND AIR FORCE-CHAPLAINS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. How many chaplains are there, by provinces, and of what religious denominations?

2. What are the religious denominations by provinces, of enlisted soldiers?

3. Who are the chaplains of the Royal Canadian Air Force, by provinces?

4. Will consideration be given to separate chaplains for the Royal Canadian Air Force?

5. How many officers and men have enlisted in the Royal Canadian Air Force, by provinces?

6. How many officers and men have enlisted so far, and what are the number of chaplains and their religious denominations, in Canada, for the army, navy, and air force of Canada?

THE BUDGET

ANNOUNCEMENT AS TO PRESENTATION ON MONDAY NEXT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance): A few days ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) announced that the budget would be delivered on Friday. I regret very much that because of important and imperative matters which have intervened that has been found impracticable; but I can assure the house positively that the budget will be presented on Monday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT SOLDIERS BE GIVEN LEAVE TO ATTEND CERTAIN CELEBRATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the acting Minister of National Defence (Mr. Power). I have received letters from some of the camps in which it is pointed out that during the last war soldiers in camp were allowed to return home for two or three days to attend and take part in certain celebrations such as the twelfth of July and the seventeenth of March. I would ask the minister if that policy could be continued, because I believe it aided recruiting in the last war, and I think it is in the public interest.

Hon. C. G. POWER (Acting Minister of National Defence): My hon. friend was good enough to give me notice of this question. I have referred it to the officers of the department but as yet have not received a definite reply. I would suggest to my hon. friend, however, that when men are in training in Halifax, for example, it is a pretty large order to allow them to return to Vancouver for the celebration of the twelfth of July or the seventeenth of March. If my hon. friend will reconsider his question and put it in another form it might be more acceptable to the technical officers of the department.

THE MINISTRY

SUGGESTION AS TO FORMATION OF NATIONAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Within the hour it has been announced that the President of the United States has called into his cabinet Mr. Stimson and Mr. Knox, two pronounced Republicans of the country. Having regard to the action taken by this great man and this great nation I suggest to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that this might be an additional incentive to him to form a truly national government in Canada.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am always pleased to receive suggestions from my hon. friend. I intimated the other day that I had this matter under consideration and a little later would make an announcement to the house as to any changes or additions in the personnel of the cabinet. That undertaking will be carried out.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL AND AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Some days ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) told me that I would be given the orders in council, classified with amendments to date, respecting the foreign exchange control board. Will the minister be good enough to let me have these before he leaves the department?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance): I can assure my hon. friend that that will be done. As a matter of fact I gave instructions at the time, and they were in process of consolidation then. I shall be glad to see that my hon. friend is furnished with them. It may be that they will not be completely consolidated, but I shall give him the amendments, even if they are not all placed together.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you.

EMERGENCY POWERS

PROVISION FOR MOBILIZATION OF HUMAN AND MATERIAL RESOURCES IN THE PRESENT WAR

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 19, consideration in committee of Bill No. 43, to confer certain powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of national resources in the present war—Mr. Mackenzie King—Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 2—Special powers of the governor in council.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Chairman, last night after bringing to the attention of the house my desire to speak on the measure it was my misfortune to have it become necessary to delay the passage of the bill one day. May I apologize for this, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and to hon. members. It was a matter over which I had no control at the time. May I draw the attention of hon, members to the fact that yesterday members of the social credit group said nothing respecting this bill, and consequently they used no time of the committee. On the other hand the leaders of the two larger parties in the house occupied the time somewhat freely. I believed it was only fair that other parties should be permitted to express their opinions, and that their voices should be heard. That must be my explanation for the unfortunate occurrence which led to the delay for one day of the passage of the bill.

Mr. POULIOT: Say it with a smile. [Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am not sure all hon. members realize that a bill such as the one before us is in fact a contract. This measure is a contract, and when hon. members vote for the bill they are in effect affixing to a contract the signatures of the people of Canada. Any one who signs a contract without first having read it through carefully, and without having weighed the meaning of the various clauses therein, may with justice be accused of rashness. Let us not be rash in dealing with this contract.

In this instance the Canadian people are asked to agree to give everything, now and hereafter. They are asked to give all their resources, financial, industrial and human, and they are asked to give a mortgage on their future. What are they promised in return? Victory?—perhaps. Yes, a chance at victory. Security now?—not by any means. Peace?—not at all. Surely it is becoming that we should change the wording of this contract, so that so far as possible we may guarantee to the people of Canada that they will get something out of it. Let us read and weigh these clauses before we sign.

The group to which I belong is eager to have this measure passed. They are eager to go on with the war. They are eager to win the war. They are determined to win the war. As evidence of the fact that this group did not develop its ideas about winning the war within the last few days, may I have the indulgence of hon. members while I read a short quotation from an editorial which appeared in the Edmonton Journal some time before we came to Ottawa. This editorial, dated January 18, 1936, contains the following short paragraph:

Mr. Blackmore stated that his group favoured "such steps on Canada's part as will render her powerful enough in all respects to plan an effective part in any world crisis with which the league of nations might be called upon to deal." That was why expenditures on military, air and naval forces were urged. "Is it right or just" the social credit leader asked, "that we should depend on Great Britain to defend us, or on the United States?" Surely there can be only one answer to his question.

I believe that is sufficient evidence that this group is sincere in its desire to prosecute the war with all possible expedition and effectiveness. If then we delayed the passage of this measure, a procedure which in some quarters was looked upon as being of such tremendous importance, I suggest we must have had good and sufficient reason for our action, and that that reason must have had to do with the carrying on of the war. Precipitate action is always likely to be dangerous. Impetuosity is no guarantee of infallibility. Time and again we have heard hon, members on the other side of the house shout, "Let us get on with the war; let us get on with the war!" Very well, let us get on with the war, but let us make sure that we are prepared to go on with the war, and that we are going to attack in the right direction, so that in getting on with the war we shall have a chance of getting on with a possibility of victory.

Mr. POULIOT: You cannot blame them for saying what you now repeat.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Canada must take care not to create a set of circumstances which will weaken her for the future. We must have human strength, physically and morally. We must have financial strength. We must have the real wealth of resources and of industry. If this measure is not best designed to guarantee that those conditions shall obtain in Canada, then I say this is not a suitable measure.

In my opinion there are too many of us who hold the view that we are going to win or lose the war within the next two or three months. We may be committed to a war which will last ten or fifteen years, and we must govern ourselves as if that were so. A slight delay under such conditions is not going to be serious.

Why the breathless haste? Does the government want money? Is it anxious to be able to conscript financial wealth, so that it may get money? May I remind hon. members of the fact that within the last two or three weeks we have passed resolutions giving the government a billion and a half dollars. I should think that surely that would last them for a few days, at any rate, while we pass this measure. There should be no great necessity on that score.

Have the industries, have the mines, have the factories, have the farms of this country refused to cooperate in the production of the means of strength in this conflict? I have no evidence that that is so. Why, then, the breathless necessity to conscript them within an hour, or a day or two, and before we have had time to consider the bill?

Is the man-power of Canada failing to come forward in this hour of crisis? There is no evidence that such is the condition. So far as I know, recruiting has been reasonably good. I am informed that in the great province of Alberta, which extends over a distance of eight hundred miles, there are only six recruiting stations. Does that look as though the government had been very eager to get men, especially when during all these months it has stipulated that men pay their way to and from recruiting depots, even though they may have come long distances to enlist? I am told that there are only five recruiting stations in the great province of Manitoba, and only seven in the great province of Nova Scotia. During the last war recruiting sergeants were placed in every community. We really wanted men then, yet it was not deemed necessary to pass conscription at that time. Why the tremendous haste now?

The government already has tremendous power. Hon. members have held forth with great earnestness; I appreciate their zeal, but I wonder why this additional power is wanted now. It has been mentioned already that we have the War Measures Act, and I should like to read from paragraphs 4 and 5 of the terms of reference of Defence of Canada regulations, as follows:

It is clear, therefore, that this statute confers upon the executive ample authority to take pretty well whatever action might be found to be necessary to meet the exigencies of war or other emergency. There is, however, one specific exception to this general rule, namely, finance, exception to this general rule, namely, finance. It seems clear that the defensive measures which would require to be taken in the event of an outbreak of war would immediately give rise to a need for specific legislation of a financial nature. We understand that the Department of Finance is examining this aspect of the question.

That particular passage in the War Measures Act which is referred to in the passage quoted is one of the reasons for our anxiety over the wording of this bill. Every other power, except that over finance, is guaranteed to the administration by the War Measures Act, which act no one has challenged. The other evening, with great anxiety of heart on the part of many of us, we solemnly passed a bill to amend the Department of Munitions and Supply Act. Section 3 of that bill reads:

The minister shall examine into, organize, mobilize and conserve the resources of Canada contributory to, and the sources of supply of, munitions of war and supplies and the agencies and facilities available for the supply of the same and for the construction and carrying out of defence projects and shall explore, estimate and provide for the fulfilment of the needs, present and prospective, of the government and the community in respect thereto and generally shall take steps to mobilize, conserve and coordinate all economic and industrial facilities in respect of munitions of war and supplies and defence projects and the supply thereof.

How the administration could be given greater power than that is beyond me. Yet that power was given uncomplainingly. But we are told to-day that the country is in danger of going to wrack unless this bill is passed within a given length of time. Anyone who dares to rise in his place on the floor of this house and suggest that the passage of this bill be deferred is of course immediately looked upon as being something in the nature of an enemy of his country. I do not see any particular reason for that. I am not impressed. Do we want men? I am informed on reliable authority that under the Militia Act the government can conscript men for home defence. Yet the Prime Minister and at least one of his ministers have pointed out that this bill is to provide for the conscription of men, not to go overseas but for the defence of the home territory. Why all this haste to pass a measure which gives the government power which it possesses already under the Militia Act? We are told that should this bill not go through we will be running the risk of the Germans coming over and seizing the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and probably doing a great many other things. I will agree that there is danger of that happening, but I ask in all seriousness if the passing of this bill a few hours earlier will put one man more, one rifle more, one tank more, one aeroplane more, or one ship more into action than would be put into action if its passage were deferred a day or two? I fail to see that it would, and I must say I have exercised myself with all care. People all over the country are asking: Why this bill? Is it to give the government power which it does not now possess? If that is the case, then the bill should point directly at the power which the government does not now possess, namely, the power over finance. As was clearly indicated in the passage from the defence of Canada regulations which I read, there is no specific mention in the War Measures Act of

What did the governments do in the last war? What were the first measures put through? Here is one of the first actions that Great Britain took after the last war was declared. On August 6, 1914, the British government authorized the issue of currency notes, commonly known as Bradburys, which were nothing more or less than government money which had been created debt free. With that money Great Britain fought the war and was making splendid progress toward winning the peace when she was deluded into abandoning it. So freely did that money go into circulation and so splendidly did it work that in 1920, two years after the war was over, there were £354,000,000 of Bradburys in circulation in Great Britain. This money was working admirably and functioning as perfectly as any other pound note in any part of the British empire. That was the measure which Great Britain adopted at the beginning of the last passed the Dominion Notes Act. Hon. members can find details concerning this measure by turning to page 759 of the Canada Year Book for 1932. I shall not read the quotation which is most impressive and shows the vision and adherence to facts which existed among the men who began to fight the last war for us. In brief, the Dominion Notes Act gave the government power to create debt- and interestfree money without gold backing. Certain restrictions were enforced upon the amount which could be created. The astounding thing today is that there has been no permission to create any debt-free, interest-free money. In my judgment we should have been called upon to deal with a financial measure of that kind long ago.

Why have we not had similar measures in this country? What did Canada do at the beginning of the last war? In 1914 this country

Was the power used? I refer hon. members to the report of the royal commission on banking and currency in Canada. At page 22, paragraph 47, they will find that between 1914 and 1917 a total of $26,000,000 of money was printed without any gold backing or gold guarantee. That money was used for the discharge of government obligations. In other words, it was used by the government. That financial measure is a matter of record. The government thereby gained, free of debt, $26,000,000. What measure have we to-day which in any way compares with that measure? And if we have no such measure why should we not have such a measure? That has to do with finance.

Was the money sound money? Assuredly it was sound money. Did it cause inflation? There are a good many people in the Dominion of Canada who will maintain that it did cause inflation. They will say: In the last war prices of everything we had to buy went sky-high. Yes, and prices would have gone sky-high in this war without any printing of government debt-free money had not the War-time Prices and Trade Board been set up as a guardian to prevent just such a rise in prices. No one, therefore, has the right to attribute rises in prices in the last war to the fact that Canada printed $26,000,000 of debt-free money, or the fact that Britain used the Bradburys which were also debt-free government money.

What was the meaning of that $26,000,000 of debt-free money to the Canadian people? At the rate of three per cent, from the time it was issued right down to 1939, the interest on $26,000,000 would have amounted to around $17,160,000. That is the amount of money which was saved to the Canadian people by the financial measure which the government took in the first stages of the last war. Now when I ask for a specific mention in the bill of financial power to be given to the government, I mean some such power as was exercised by the Canadian parliament and by the British parliament during the last war.

Some people will say: But that would cause inflation. Not to take up too much time I shall quote briefly the words of one whom I think we must all accept as an authority on finance, the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, chairman of the Midland bank of England. Speaking to his directors at the beginning of the present year, with all the experience of the past war, of the post war period, and some experience of this war behind him, he used these words:

Inflation, if it comes, will be due to the growth of consumption, civil and military together, beyond our capacity to produce.

Does that indicate, Mr. Chairman, that the printing of a government one dollar bill has a tendency towards inflation? This authority states distinctly that the only cause of inflation is the rise in prices which will result from having more purchasing power coming into the hands of the people with which to buy goods than there are goods to buy. In our country to-day there are numerous commodities of which we have so great an abundance that the people are unable to buy. Is it not clear that a great deal of money could be circulated among the people before there would be any danger of a rise in prices? Therefore, sir, we are not asking the government to do anything rash or unwise when we urge that something be inserted in the bill which will indicate that the government is to be given effective power over finance and will use that power for the people.

To-day our power to produce in Canada is almost limitless, and to the extent that it is not sufficient it could easily be made almost limitless. State money is safer to-day than ever it was before in history. Not only is state money safe to-day but I say to the Prime Minister, as the chief executive of this country, in all sincerity as one whom I believe he will feel free to consider his friend, that he will never be able to enable the country to reach its maximum war effort until he adopts the method of creating money debt free to the extent which the productive and consumptive power of this country will justify. We are not advocating any inflationary method, but we are advocating such a measure as will enable this country to produce to its capacity and to build up a machine such as it was designed by providence to be able to build up.

Mr. POULIOT: It cannot be built up with debt-free money which is not redeemable and is worth nothing.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If the hon, gentleman will come around to my office afterwards I shall be glad to give him some lessons. He has not even got into the primary on money matters. I would have to give him a whole lot of kindergarten lessons before he would understand anything about it.

Mr. POULIOT: That is why it all goes under my feet, not over my head.

Mr. BLACKMORE: To undertake to talk to my hon, friend about money would be as absurd as to try to teach grade 12 algebra to a pupil who had not passed grade 5 arithmetic.

Mr. POULIOT: Let us pass an act of parliament declaring that my hon. friend is a god.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We are asking the government, if it really intends to take more power over finance than is given to it under the War Measures Act, to tell us so to-day, and we offer this suggestion in all sincerity to the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The only answer I could make to my hon, friend is that we will take the matter under consideration.

Mr. MacNICOL: You have got a lot under consideration.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If we were asked to sign a contract with a machine company or any other kind of company, and we asked the person who was trying to get us to sign the contract to specify the meaning of a certain provision in the terms of the contract and he told us "that is under consideration", I am sure none of us would sign the contract. We should want it plainly stipulated in the contract what was meant so that when we affixed our signature to the contract and the salesman affixed his, we should have a contract that made plain the intent both of the one who signed and of the one who sold. We are not satisfied with the Prime Minister's explanation. He may have reasons for being vague, but we have our reasons for asking that he be specific.

If the Prime Minister is willing to accept a suggestion from me I would submit that the bill be amended. This may seem presumptuous but it will not seem so in the course of twenty years when people have learned to look upon things in a little more realistic fashion; and perhaps long before twenty years have passed it will seem a very sound thing to do. The amendment which we should like to see the Prime Minister make to this bill would be something like this:

That section 2 be amended by inserting the following words after the word "requiring" in line 4 of the section: "the Bank of Canada to finance all war effort, and requiring all corporations, industries, financial institutions and all," and then continue with the words of the section. If the Prime Minister would accept such an amendment we believe that the bill would not be in any way out of harmony with the impression which he endeavoured to give the country. The Prime Minister, I believe, and his ministers have endeavoured to give the people of this country the impression, and I think honestly and sincerely, that they do intend to use to the full the financial strength of Canada. If that is really so, and if this measure is intended to confer upon the Prime Minister power to do so, there can be no incongruity and no disharmony in his so amending the measure as to specify in the contract itself just what the contract means. Would the Prime Minister be willing to entertain a suggestion like that from us?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has my hon. friend finished his speech?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Well, I should like the Prime Minister to make an announcement in this connection. I shall have something more to say in case the Prime Minister—

The CHAIRMAN: It is not in order for an hon. member to ask by way of cross-examination what the government intends to do, or in the course of his speech to put a question to another hon. member. The hon. gentleman should conclude his speech, and other hon. members will then make remarks if they deem it advisable; but it is not in order to interrupt one's speech to put a question to another hon. member, and particularly to a member of the government.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a point of order. I do not find it fair to the committee—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I have given a ruling, and it is not debatable.

Mr. POULIOT: There is no question of a ruling being given. You, sir, have not given a ruling, you have expressed an opinion, and I stand for the practice of the house.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: You cannot change it.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. POULIOT: All right, all right.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon, member should not say it is "all right." It is most unseemly for a gentleman of the parliamentary experience of the hon, member for Témiscouata to reply to the chair in the way he has just done. The hon, member for Lethbridge has the floor.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I apologize if I was out of order. I thought I had noticed that in committee, where there was a free discussion, hon. members were at liberty to ask a minister if he were willing to amend a resolution, rather than themselves to move an amendment. If I am out of order and if the Prime Minister would be out of order in answering, then I must take the next step, because I shall have to move an amendment unless something is done about this. I do not believe that as the contract stands it is sufficiently specific in its guarantee to the people who must sign it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot be bargained with upon the stand which hon. members will take concerning this measure. I regard this bill as the most important one which has been brought down in the present session. I believe that before many days have passed my hon. friend also will have reason so to regard it. If he wishes to withhold his support because the government is not prepared to bargain with him with respect to social credit, of course that is his privilege, but I hope he will see his way to give his support on the merits of the bill as it is, apart from anything else.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There is no desire on the part of any one of my group or of the hundreds of thousands in Canada whom we in this parliament represent to bargain with the Prime Minister. But there is a desire to come to an explicit understanding so that unfortunate recriminations and disappointments in the future will be avoided, so that we may be specific. We are not trying to bargain with the Prime Minister, and we are not saying that we will not support the bill as it stands to-day. We are simply taking the precaution to see to it that the contract is specific before we affix to it the seal of the hundreds of thousands of Canadian people whom we represent. That is our only object. If the Prime Minister desires not to say any more on it, I am going to move an amendment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is my hon. friend's right to move any amendment he wishes. All I would say to him is that the bill is almost literatum et verbatim in the language of the provisions of the corresponding act passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom. I have read the entire debate which took place in the British House of Commons. It was not thought advisable or necessary on the part of anyone at Westminster to suggest that conditions should be attached to the general powers which were being given to the government. The measure sets forth certain enabling powers. These powers are broad enough to cover virtually anything which the government believes may be feasible and necessary under emergent conditions. My hon, friend says that under the bill as it stands we have no power to deal with finance. Surely finance is part of "the effective resources of the nation." This bill gives the government power to deal with finance as it deems it necessary and desirable, and to exercise its powers in relation thereto at any time. Surely nothing can be more comprehensive than that. But if my hon. friend asks me, as a condition of giving his approval to the bill, to insert some specific condition, and to say in advance whether it may be necessary or advisable to do the thing he suggests, I cannot accept that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The mere fact that this bill is modelled upon an act of Great Britain does not greatly impress me. Somewhere in the British empire, somewhere among the Anglo-Saxon nations, the people must discover how they are to get around the difficulty which has paralyzed up to the present time the war effort of the whole Anglo-Saxon race and enabled Hitler to make us look like-I hesitate to express a comparison. We know that the war has cost us no end of treasure, a huge number of lives, and the greatest amount of anxiety we have had in our race's history. We feel the greatest apprehension for fear we shall not be able to come through; and there is a reason somewhere. That reason has paralyzed Great Britain as it is paralyzing

Mr. POULIOT: The hon, member should make his case.

Mr. BLACKMORE: This country of Canada, as one of the sister nations of the British empire, is best able to lead the way with a sane and realistic system of finance which will enable the empire to cope with the terrible foe which is standing over us like a colossus. I simply ask that we shall be realistic in our outook. I do not believe that up to the present time the British have been realistic.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I be sure that I understand my hon. friend's reference to Hitler? Is he implying in what he is saying that Hitler, by the adoption of some particular financial system, has been able to do what he has done and make the rest of us look in the direction which he is indicating? That is what I would naturally assume from the hon. member's remarks although I hesitate to believe it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I would rather suppose that the Prime Minister's well-known political acumen would naturally fit him to draw that conclusion and to make that implication and to use it. But all I chose to imply and to draw to the attention of the committee is, that Hitler has used some measure whereby he has enabled a nation, relatively small and weak in financial and other resources as compared with Canada, almost to dominate the world.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend suggest that we should adopt Hitler's methods?

Mr. BLACKMORE: No, "my hon. friend" does not suggest any such thing. But I do suggest that we become realistic and adopt a measure which will enable us to deal with Hitler before Hitler blows us off the earth. Manifestly the measures which have been used up to the present time are not adequate, because throughout Canada to-day one finds paralysis and anxiety, insecurity and fear. All we are promised is limitless taxes, limitless, debt. The greater our war effort the larger our debt, with crippling interest and taxation for all generations. We are not promised that we are going to be able to produce freely of food and clothing and shelter and everything which makes a strong nation. We are not promised that we are going to be able even to produce human beings strong and manly and courageous and equal to such tests as we had in the last war. From one end of the country to the other we have poor wrecks where we should have splendid men and women. Why? Because of the inefficiency of an outworn and outmoded financial system.

And now this government is undertaking to fight this war, at the greatest crisis in the history of our nation and empire, with the same outmoded financial system which has proved so woefully inadequate to maintain the peace. All we are asking is that some effective and efficient financial method shall be employed which will enable this country to step out and gird herself for the conflict, with assurance that she is going to be able to use every man and every woman, every resource of every kind, to build up such a war machine as will enable her successfully to discharge her responsibility not only to her brothers and sisters throughout the Anglo-Saxon world to-day, but to the children yet unborn. We want such a financial system to be adopted. And we suggest, as a possible means of ensuring the adoption of such a system, this amendment.

I therefore move:

That section 2 be amended by inserting the following words after the word "requiring" in line 4: . . . the Bank of Canada to finance all war effort, and requiring all corporations, industries, financial institutions and all . . .

Mr. A. J. LAPOINTE (Matapédia-Matane) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, in these dark and tragic days I fully realize that action is needed rather than words. However, I should be failing in my duty and recreant to my trust were I not, during so important a debate as this one, to offer a few brief observations. Ever since the Great War I have held the view that Canada should no longer participate in European conflicts unless her own future were directly involved. This. view I expressed in this house on March 31st, 1939, in the course of a full-dress debate on Canada's foreign policy. A few months, later, however, Europe was at war and Parliament, assembled in special session, decided almost unanimously Canada's entry into the conflict.

In order to avoid endangering Canadian unity and especially after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) had solemnly stated that so long as his government remained in power there would not be conscription for overseas service, I kept silent. I had confidence in him, because he had never deceived us. That is why, even to-day, he retains my confidence. In spite of the pressure of a few out-and-out imperialists who are more loyal to England than to Canada, in spite of the bitter insults and reproaches of those who found that he never did enough for the Empire, the Prime Minister has pursued our war effort, considerable as it has been, without the least harm to Canadian unity.

Mr. POULIOT: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Matapédia-Matane): I, for one, consider that he deserves the gratitude of the whole country for the wonderful work he has accomplished. Had our conservative opponents been in power, we would already have conscription for overseas service and instead of our country being united and strong, there would be civil war in Canada to-day. Our country would now be an easy prey for the enemy.

During the last few months and especially the last few weeks war operations have been enormously extended and they have taken a turn which no one could have foreseen. Events have successively occurred with lightning speed. Our people are already worried and they are wondering what the future has in store for them. A good many of those who not long ago criticized us because we were bringing down large estimates for our defence now complain that we are not proceeding speedily enough.

In view of the gravity of the present situation, the government have decided to mobilize the entire man-power and material resources of the nation for the defence of our territory.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

At the same time, they wish to maintain the voluntary system as regards enlistment for overseas service. May I be permitted, Mr. Chairman, to express my views on this subject? I feel that while permitting the enlistment of volunteers for overseas service, we should not further extend that system. Besides, as has been said on many occasions, what is needed overseas at this time is not men but war equipment matching that of the enemy. We should consequently direct our efforts toward the production of such modern equipment, and as speedily as possible, if we want to make a truly useful contribution to the allied cause overseas.

I consider, therefore, that our first duty at this time is to provide for our own defence. Preparedness is essential. Let us not forget that it was on account of unpreparedness that countries like Norway, Denmark, Holland and Belgium were engulfed. If France has been taken by surprise, it is because she has too long heeded the advice of some of her politicians who opposed her rearmament. She was unprepared to face the motorized and mechanized army of Germany. That is why, in spite of the indomitable gallantry and courage of her sons, we see her nearly dying to-day. In these tragic times we are perhaps liable to forget the heavy responsibilities that weigh upon every member of this house. It is no longer a matter of indulging in politics but of saving our country.

Mr. Chairman, I remember that when I was twenty years old the world was, as it is to-day, going through a most tragic period. The Great War was raging; Canada was calling upon her sons to defend democracy and suppress all wars. Like so many others, I donned the uniform and sailed because I believed I was helping a noble cause as well as serving my country. For over three years, I wore a uniform and for nearly fifteen months I served in the trenches as a private. Then came the day when a bugle call announced the armistice that ended the dreadful butchery. During that whole period we have been martyrs to a cause and we came back after having gone through an inferno. We were happy, nevertheless, for we had won the war. But the war that we had won at the cost of such sacrifices, politicians and statesmen have lost it and we are no better off than we were To-morrow, in recounting those before. events, historians will have the duty of allotting to each one his share of responsibility. For my part, I am still ready to serve, but above all for the defence of my country this time. That is why, at the beginning of the week, even before I knew that the government were planning general mobilization, I offered once more my services, but this time, as I said, solely for the defence of my country. In a few days I shall have donned the uniform, and my greatest comfort will be the satisfaction of being once more useful to my country in her time of need.

Mr. RAYMOND (Translation): Before the bill is finally disposed of, I wish to add a few brief observations to those which I have already made, in order to define my position clearly.

The bill contains two important provisions. One of them confers upon the governor in council power to mobilize all material resources solely for the defence of Canada—this is a new power—while the other provision relates to the mobilization of men, for service in Canada only—a power which the government already possessed under the Militia Act.

With respect to the first category of powers, I have no objection in principle; there remains to be seen, however, how they will be exercised.

I have already advocated that the mobilization of material resources should precede the mobilization of man-power, and I was glad to hear the Prime Minister say that his primary preoccupation was to protect human life and that the first resources to be sacrificed should be the material ones.

The war of 1914 afforded the sad spectacle of numerous citizens eager to ask of those who had only their lives to offer to make the supreme sacrifice on the battle-fields of Europe, while they themselves, exempted from military service on account of their age, built up colossal fortunes which they took good care to invest in tax-free dominion bonds. Such a thing must not happen again

The second category of powers relate to the mobilization of human resources. These powers, as I have just stated, and even greater ones, are already contained in the Militia Act of Canada, and I have asked the government to state the reason for this provision. The Prime Minister replied that this bill makes it possible to allot to each citizen the task for which he is best fitted and in which he would be most useful to the country, having regard to the needs of production and of our national economy. This answer satisfies me. It is an improvement upon the Militia Act. Moreover, he emphasized the fact that this bill restricts the powers conferred upon the government with regard to mobilization of man-power, to the extent that such mobilization is not to be for service outside Canada.

Need I add that, opposed to voluntary participation outside the country, I stand all the more against compulsory participation. I am therefore pleased that the Prime Minister has specifically mentioned in a statute that this mobilization would be limited to service in Canadian territory. That was the object of the amendment I supported, last September, at the outbreak of war.

Now is such a mobilization necessary, as regards military service? I believe that we should have been furnished with more ample evidence of the fact that the voluntary enlistment system was no longer sufficient to ensure the safety of Canada.

I would like to affirm, however, if I may be permitted to do so, that compulsory mobilization for the defence of this country is not required, in my opinion which is based on history, because of the people of Quebec.

During the debate on the external policy of Canada, while voicing my opposition to Canada's participation in a war fought on foreign soil, I made the following statement:

The Canadians of French origin are Canadians first; they are strongly bound to Canada, their mother country, and their only desire is to strive for her development in harmony and peace, with the protection of two mighty oceans and of the great American nation. They hate war but do not fear it when it is a matter of defending their own soil, as history will bear witness. Every Canadian citizen has the military obligation of defending the soil of his motherland, and those of the province of Quebec have never shirked that duty, nor shall they ever do so.

I would like to add that they shall discharge this duty without being compelled to by law.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, although I am opposed to Canada's participation in external wars, I wish to state that in view of the fact that this bill is exclusively concerned with the defence of Canada, on Canadian soil, I remain, as I have always been, a strong supporter of home defence in Canada, and that although I regret that this legislation is the result of our participation in a European war, which I objected to, I cannot assume the risk of refusing to the government the powers it deems necessary to ensure the safety of my country, to which I am more devoted than anyone. On the other hand, I would urge the government to show prudence and judgment in the exercise of these powers and, as regards military service, to exhaust all the possibilities of the voluntary enlistment system before resorting to compulsory mobilization.

Mr. LIZOTTE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief as I do not intend uselessly to waste this house's time in circumstances as tragic as these.

This is a war session and, were we apt to forget it, the gloom and tension which are everywhere evident in this chamber would soon recall us to harsh reality. The people may be unaware of it, but the hon. members who follow the progress of our debates have necessarily witnessed what has happened here since the opening of the session.

Some hon, members were intent on preserving national unity while others desired the formation of a national government. At the last election, the people of Canada, like my constituents, voted in favour of national unity; but they rejected the idea, submitted by our opponents, of a national government. And they were right, for national government would to-day be synonymous with the conscription of all our resources and man-power for the war overseas, a step we have always vigorously opposed.

To my mind, we cannot now avoid the mobilization of our entire resources, either for overseas service, either for the defence of our own territory. I choose the latter alternative as a lesser evil, and I know that in so doing I shall have the support of the great majority of the electorate in my constituency.

Mrs. DORISE W. NIELSEN (North Battleford): Mr. Chairman, it is quite possible that to-day a great number of Canadians are asking themselves very sincerely and very earnestly where lies their duty and where their loyalty. During this debate a number of government supporters have spoken and have received the applause of this house. It is quite possible that what I am about to say this afternoon will not gain for me the approbation of hon. members sitting on the government side; yet I feel that the words I speak will find an echo in the hearts of thousands of our Canadian people.

In the past from my own experience I have realized that loyalty to this Liberal government and loyalty to the Canadian people have not always been one and the same thing. My loyalty, before everything, is to the Canadian people. This is not the first crisis that has arisen in Canada. A few years ago we had an economic crisis which for depth and intensity was unequalled in the annals of this country. How then did we find this govern-ment? Did we find them then declaring a state of emergency? Did we find them then conscripting the wealth of this nation, taking over the property and factories of those who could well afford to let them go, and starting the wheels of industry? Did they conscript our man-power and set the unemployed to work? Did they then show loyalty to the people of this country, giving them the aid and assistance they had to have in order to carry on with hope for the future? I regret to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not think this government did everything then that could be done to satisfy the human needs of the people of this country.

You know, Mr. Chairman, it is not by words but by acts that the people will judge you. It is by what you do, not by what you say. It is by what has happened in the past that people will judge how you are going to act in the future. I will say this, that in spite of the absolutely callous disregard of the needs of the people in that last crisis, during the present one the very same people have come forward with the greatest loyalty any people could show. That is perfectly true. Of this, I am sure, that so long as there is any freedom in the world Canadian youth will fight to preserve it. So long as there is any liberty anywhere to be found, the youth of this nation will seek to keep it. So long as there is left one shred of democracy anywhere in the world our youth will come out gallantly to defend it, preserve it and extend it. I know that, because they have already proved it.

My friends, democracy is a living thing. If you seek to bind and chain democracy, if you seek to keep it for a while without letting it live and without permitting it to exercise itself, democracy will wither; it will die. I know that, too. You see, my friends, I am not unaware of the dangers, the fears and the destruction war may bring. When I was a girl I lived in a city where, for nights at a time, I hid in cellars to avoid bombs which were dropping all around in the surrounding Those were the days of German district. air raids. I know what fear is, and I know this to-day, that as much as I would fear the enemy in this country, an enemy which at any time may attack us, yet I also fear one other thing just as much, and that is the loss of democracy within the borders of our country. I fear that.

I say these things because if we lose democracy to-day, if we chain it and bind it, who knows what tortuous years ahead will have to elapse before democracy can ever start to grow again? Even our unemployed, men to whom in the last few years this government has denied economic democracy, have come forward during this crisis to defend democracy. There is no need to conscript those men, because of their own volition they are ready to defend these things.

I believe it was last night I heard one hon. member say that he had referred the matter to his constituency, because he felt the responsibility of deciding for or against conscription was too much for him to shoulder. Being faced with the necessity of referring the matter to his constituency in such a short time, it is remarkable that he was able to gain from that constituency any reply which could be considered at all satisfactory. I do not know how in such a short time any reply could have been received which would be in any way comprehensive.

But I do know this: we have in Canada the youth of our nation. In the years to come they will inherit the world we leave. What do the youth of this nation think about conscription? We could do nothing better than to ask them. They have not waited until this day, because we know that already numbers of them have registered their opinions in this matter. It has already been brought to the attention of the house that in Canada we have what is known as a Canadian youth congress and a Canadian youth council. It has been urged in the house that these organizations should no longer be considered legal. These young people of our nation, who have declared the great principles they uphold—first, their belief in God; second, the right of individuals to private property; third, the necessity for internal peace and cooperation between all social classes, and, fourth, the sanctity of human personality—have already declared their feelings with regard to conscription.

This morning I received through the mail some information which no doubt other hon. members received. Roughly four thousand replies have been sent in from the youth of Canada. Some will say that those four thousand replies are not representative, but I would point out that in many instances the answers to the questionnaire were not the answers from one young person, but were in fact replies of small groups or collections of young people who congregated for the purpose of making those replies. Therefore I suggest that the number of young people those four thousand replies represent is far greater than it would seem to be.

Those replies from the young people of Canada indicate that seventy-four per cent of their number are against any form of conscription whatsoever; ninety-two per cent say that conscription would adversely affect our democratic unity, and eighty per cent were in favour of a plebiscite. My friends, to a certain extent I believe those figures speak for themselves.

As to the bill, I would call attention to the general wording. I agree with some hon. members who urge that the wording of the measure should be much more specific before the people of Canada, either through their members in the House of Commons or by themselves, are asked to vote upon it. The people in my constituency definitely had the idea in mind at the time of the election that the matter of conscription would come before the House of Commons. They have stated definitely that before representatives in the house dared to give consent to conscription the people should be given the opportunity to express their views through a plebiscite.

You see, it is the young men who will die. It is the men and women who will sweat and toil in our war effort. It is the women of this country—those daughters of men, wives of men and mothers of men—who will say whether they want their men to go as free men, standing up in a free cause, or whether they will have them driven like cattle.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the hon, member outlining the policy of the united reform group?

Mrs. NIELSEN: Yes. It was included in our programme at the time of the election. We said that we should have a plebiscite before conscription.

Mr. GARDINER: That was not in the policy recently announced from the meeting they held a short time ago.

Mrs. NIELSEN: I shall give the minister a copy of the programme, if that will satisfy him.

Mr. GARDINER: I have one of the last meeting; it was sent to me.

Mrs. NIELSEN: That is fine. I was speaking of the bill itself, and was pointing out that its wording is too general. So far as I can see there are no safeguards to protect either labour or the producers of primary products in coming months or years. If at the present time we had the budget before us we might be in a position to see which section of our population was to bear the brunt, and it might be somewhat easier for us to pass judgment. So far as we can see to-day, amounts of $700,000,000 and $750,-000,000 are to be raised by taxation and by borrowing, and I am convinced that during the coming months the brunt of the load will be borne by those least able to carry it, namely, the ordinary workmen in Canada.

I see in this bill a menace to democracy. I see that the working people in Canada are given no safeguards whatsoever; and as my constituents demand a plebiscite I feel I shall have to oppose the bill in its present form.

Mr. LACROIX (Quebec-Montmorency) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, as a sequel to the speech I delivered on Tuesday, I must regretfully say that I cannot agree with the hon, member for Richelieu-Verchères (Mr. Cardin). I am a believer in the Monroe Doctrine, in the pan-American union, and I sincerely believe that our national defence will have to be strengthened on the basis of an ever closer cooperation with the United States. In our own interest we should therefore take any necessary action for our national defence, but I am still convinced, as was said on Tuesday by the hon, member for Beauharnois-Laprairie (Mr. Raymond) that it has not been shown that voluntary enlistments had ceased to produce the results that are necessary for our national defence, for we must not forget that, till now, voluntary enlistment has been conducted mainly for overseas services.

In the speech he delivered on Tuesday, June 18, 1940, the hon. member for Beauharnois-Laprairie made the following statement as reported in Hansard for June 18, 1940:

By declaring war on Germany, we assumed the risk of having to defend ourselves some day against her onslaught and that is precisely what I opposed. The Canadian Militia Act already authorizes the governor general in council to mobilize all our man-power up to the age of sixty for service in the defence of Canada, both inside and outside the country.

Let me emphasize the words "both inside and outside the country".

Now, the measure at present before the house has in view the mobilization of human and material resources for the defence of Canada. Why have we provided for the mobilization of our man-power in this bill when such a step could have been taken under the Militia Act?

That is why the attitude of the hon. member for Beauharnois-Laprairie to-day seems strange to me and why the speech he has just delivered strikes me as being still more

Besides, as was quite clearly shown by the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Lacombe), the Militia Act has not been repealed. It is still in existence and could authorize the dispatch to Great Britain, Egypt, Gibraltar, or the Dardanelles, at any time, forces raised in Canada for her defence, and this according to the meaning given to Canada's line of defence in the existing Canadian Militia Act. All this follows from the terms of section 64 which has not been repealed and is still in force.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Chairman, my season for rising is to state briefly that we support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore). In doing so, I should like to make one or two comments which I do not think have been made before. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) repeated the statement that this bill was modelled upon the act of Great Britain. That is true as far as the phraseology goes, but I would point out that the British act is supplemental to another act which made provision for the securing and controlling of the enlistment of men for service in the armed forces of the crown. That act was passed on September 3, 1939, and the act similar to the bill before us which was passed on May 22, 1940, gave to the government the power to mobilize the material resources and man-power of Great Britain for purposes other than military.

We have no such act for securing or controlling compulsory enlistment on our statute books. The remarks of Mr. Attlee which have been quoted again and again were largely directed to showing that the new act was intended to mobilize the economic forces of Great Britain. That is the distinct difference between the bill now before us and the act which was passed in Great Britain. They have the same language and phraseology, they are the same in every particular except as to intent. It seems to me that the intent of the British act was to conscript wealth. I have carefully gone over the remarks of the Prime Minister made on Tuesday of this week and according to my understanding his statement is that the main intention of the government in connection with this legislation is the mobilization and registration of man-power in Canada. It is true there are brief references to the mobilization of our economic resources, but in the main we are to have recruitment for service overseas maintained on a voluntary basis, a complete inventory of Canada's man-power and other resources, a national registration, a new department to be set up to be entrusted with the work of directing and mobilizing the activities of thousands of our citizens, and so on; and there was an expression of appreciation of the registration already undertaken by the women's organizations.

When this measure was introduced it was perfectly obvious that the emphasis was being placed upon the mobilization of man-power. In order to place our position clearly before this parliament, we of this group endeavoured to amend the bill the other night when it was given second reading so that as a condition precedent to the mobilization of man-power there would be the mobilization of our economic resources.

Mr. TURGEON: Is it not a fact that the only difference between this bill and its British counterpart lies in the fact that in

Great Britain man-power had been conscripted or mobilized already and their act provided for the mobilization of material resources?

Mr. COLDWELL: That is precisely what I was saying.

Mr. TURGEON: They took man-power first; we are taking them together.

Mr. COLDWELL: We are taking the manpower under this bill.

Mr. TURGEON: Man-power and resources.

Mr. COLDWELL: From the explanations already given in this house we have as yet no indication as to what steps will be taken or the extent to which they will be taken to mobilize our industrial life. As I have pointed out before, the Minister of Munitions and Supply has had conferred upon him already practically all the powers that are to be conferred by this bill.

Mr. TURGEON: So far as material resources are concerned, too.

Mr. COLDWELL: So far as material resources are concerned. Apparently the Minister of Munitions and Supply was stating the policy of this government when he said that we were to build two munitions plants and practically hand over their operation to Canadian Industries Limited. This government has apparently entered into an arrangement whereby that company will have a preferred position in the industry, with all that it may involve at the end of the war.

I say again to the Prime Minister that he should tell the country this afternoon the exact intent of this bill. Does he intend to do what our hon, friends to the left have suggested and use the nationally owned Bank of Canada to finance the war? Does he intend to take over the munitions industry and organize it for the conduct of the war? In view of the situation that confronts us, we as a group want to see this country mobilized for an efficient war effort. We believe, however, that before men are asked to consent to conscription and to lay down their lives, they have the right to ask that finance and wealth should be conscripted at the same time. I turn to the debate of 1917 when Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke on the Military Service Act of that day. Laurier said this:

I repeat what I said a moment ago, that the sacrifices and hardships of the war fall most heavily upon the working classes. The wealthy young man who goes to war is a hero. He goes to war and sacrifices his life at a time, perhaps, when life has the greatest attractions. In this he is not on a different footing from his poor neighbour, who sacrifices his life, and to whom life is just as dear as to the man who happens to be wealthy. If he loses his limbs, or is crippled in any way, the wealthy man comes to a home in which he will find every comfort, but the poor man has to go to a home where he cannot have comforts, since because of his physical infirmity, he can no longer earn his living. It is no wonder that among these classes there should be opposition to the scheme, not because they are less patriotic, but because they feel that if they are to be conscripted, and called upon to pay that tribute with the rest of the community, at least certain things should be done which would somewhat equalize matters. And what do they ask?

May I interject that they ask to-day exactly what they were asking in 1917, and this is it, in the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

They ask that if they are to be called upon to give their blood, the wealthy class should, at least, give their wealth in support of the cause.

Those are the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1917.

Mr. MacINNIS: And no cheers from the other side.

Mr. COLDWELL: They will be found in Hansard of June 18, 1917, at page 2397.

The other evening we heard an impassioned speech from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin). He too spoke in that debate. I turn to page 3061 of Hansard of July 5, 1917, where he pointed out that powerful interests in Montreal were opposing certain measures of taxation invoked by the government and he said this:

When these gentlemen, who are all of them exempt from military service, discuss the expediency of imposing conscription upon the people and of compelling the poor and the labourer to enlist and defend to a certain extent the very wealth of these privileged classes, their patriotism runs high. But when it comes to put out money to pay the expenses and the small wages of those who by this legislation will be coerced into active service, it is readily seen that their patriotism is only measured by the closeness of their fobs.

An hon. MEMBER: Who said that?

Mr. COLDWELL: Those are the words of the present Minister of Public Works in 1917. I am not accusing the wealthy of a desire to withhold their contribution at this time of need, but what I am emphasizing is that before we ask the young men of this nation, nay, before we compel them to give their services in this cause, we should demand as a condition precedent to that—not subsequently—that our financial institutions and at least our munitions industries should be completely nationalized and operated without private profit. That, in brief, is the contention we are making.

In Great Britain, may I point out again, the acts were separate. The Military Service Act of September 3, 1939, conscripted men. The act of May 22, 1940, to which reference has been made, was designed to supplement their Military Service Act and to conscript the wealth of Great Britain for the same cause. That, of course, was because included in the new government of Great Britain in May were the leaders of the labour and socialist movement of that country whose condition of support in the formation of the new government was undoubtedly that such a measure would be passed. We maintain that in this country to-day we should organize and mobilize our wealth as well as our man-power.

This further I would say. In Great Britain they had greater need even in September to conscript men than we have to-day; for as we said in the debate of last September we believed then, as we believe now, that Canada's major and most efficient contribution to this cause could be made by the provision of economic aid. We still think so, and if that be so, it is all the more reason why in addition to mobilizing our man-power for the defence of these shores and perhaps the territory adjacent to these shores, we should mobilize, and mobilize first, our economic resources.

Before I sit down I simply want to say again that we are supporting the amendment moved by the member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore). It does not go quite as far, perhaps, as we might desire it to go, but it does go a long way, and if it is put into effect it will do much to meet the objections that were recorded by the member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen), who placed before the house the position of many young people. I am convinced that even without the conscription of men for home defence, an appeal made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and by other members of this house to the young men of this country to defend the soil of Canada in the face of great emergency would not have been left unanswered. I believe that our young men, irrespective of race and creed, would defend the soil of this country to the last drop of their blood.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I assure the committee that it is not our intention to hold up this bill at all—

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down, then.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): After yesterday's performance you fellows opposite cannot talk. We want to see the bill passed with all dispatch, but we also want to see that it goes the full length it should go, so that after it is passed Canada will be able to put forth its maximum effort. We believe that now is the proper time to make specific provision for our future action so that the [Mr. Coldwell.]

people of Canada shall no longer be in doubt as to what the intention of the government is.

We have just heard an excellent address from the hon. member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen), who I believe expressed the feelings of the people. There is unfortunately some uncertainty in the minds of the people as to just what is to be done. I am confident that if we wish to unite the peoples of this country so that they will come forward and fight, knowing they are fighting for a democracy, knowing they are going to have a decent place to live in when they come back to civil life, we must make definite provision now for the definite purpose we have in mind. Let us leave nothing to interpretation afterwards.

As I read the bill I am convinced that there is going to be no conscription of finance or industry, but I am definitely convinced that there is going to be conscription of manpower, and if that is the intention behind the bill I am first and last against it. How did I arrive at that conviction? From the very things that have been said in this house. The other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Hanson) were in close consultation in regard to this matter, and what did the leader of the opposition say yesterday? I quote from Hansard, page 918:

What does the ministry propose with respect to the mobilization of wealth. I am not suggesting, and I would not support, the nationalization of the banks. I believe in individual effort. In peace time or in war time I am opposed to the government of this country setting up industrial plants which will compete with private industry.

That expresses the Conservative idea. They are utterly against the mobilization of the banks or the financial institutions.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is not so.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): It says exactly that in Hansard, which is what we must rely upon for hon. members' statements. I cannot put any other interpretation upon the words of the leader of the opposition.

Surely we are not going on with this war in that attitude of mind. You cannot expect the people of Canada to get out and fight for private industry and private gain as they did in the last war. We have to unite the people if we are to win. Let us do it. Let us not be shackled by terms. I think I can appreciate the position in which the Prime Minister finds himself, which deters him from making his statement or his bill more definite. But I beseech him through you, Mr. Chairman, that the people have every assurance that there is not to be any more profiteering or blood money. In every paper men pick up-and I have the extracts here-they see where profiteering is going on. That is not conducive to patriotism; it will not facilitate the proper carrying on of this war. The time is too serious for us to be in any doubt as to the certainty of the government's intentions. If it does not purpose to go as far as the amendment for which our party is asking, it will have to vote against the amendment; but if it intends to go to the length of using every available means for the successful prosecution of the war, the acceptance of this amendment will prove that Canadians are sincere in our war effort and are going to do everything possible to win. I for one shall have my doubts, if the government vote against this amendment, as to the sincerity of their intention to put into effect the measures which are stated or implied in it.

A while ago the Prime Minister asked a question with regard to what Germany had done. I know that all of us must be very careful in what we say lest we be represented as against the British empire, but I believe the time has come to speak our minds, just as, I believe, the leader of the opposition spoke his mind yesterday concerning the nationalization of industry and the banks.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Will the hon. member allow me just one word?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Certainly.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have looked up my remarks in Hansard at page 918. While I distinctly said that I would not agree to the nationalization of the banks, the meaning attached by the hon. member to what I said is not what I said or even intended. What I would do is this: I would mobilize the power of the banks in this war. I hope the government will do that. There is quite a distinction.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, the words of this bill respecting the conscription of man-power are quite definite; then let the bill be specific with regard to the banks. If we are to conscript man-power we should conscript the other resources of this country. There should be no differentiation; indeed I am convinced that the conscription of finance and wealth should come first, because there is nothing so important as a man's life. Wealth is needed first. There is no use in mobilizing men and having to send them overseas with old Ross rifles because we have nothing better, having no money to produce anything better. The leader of the opposition

I am not suggesting, and I would not support, the nationalization of the banks. I believe in individual effort.

Why not take the same attitude with regard to the soldiers, and say we believe in indi-vidual effort? Where would we get in this war as far as the soldiers are concerned if each man picked up a little gun and ran out to attack a German 80-ton tank? What a prospect!

I want to read to the house an article published by the Ottawa Evening Citizen on June 17: I think it answers quite well some of the objections which have been raised against our proposals:

The budget is due to be brought down at an early date. It is one opportunity for the parliament of Canada-

The CHAIRMAN: While the hon. gentleman may refer to an article as the basis of an argument, he may not read the whole of it. He may make reference to it or even quote a portion of it, but he must not read the entire article.

Thank Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): you, Mr. Chairman. I notice that we are going to follow the rules a little more closely, and I think that that is quite proper. It should be done on all occasions, and I hope that the chairman will see that it is done; indeed I know he will, because I have been on committees of which he has been chairman. He has been quite generous, and I trust that he will continue in the same course.

The CHAIRMAN: A certain latitude is allowed, but it cannot be extended too far.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member wants the longitude with the latitude.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I merely wish to point to the great necessity of having sufficient money available for the proper defence of our country. Thousands of people read the Citizen, and its articles are reprinted in other papers. Let us not underestimate the influence of the articles which appear in our newspapers. This particular one seems to me of great importance; I quote an extract:

Few Canadian people may be aware of the Few Canadian people may be aware of the relationship of money to the state of Canada's war preparedness. Everybody is becoming aware, however, that Germany has produced overwhelming supplies of war weapons, aircraft, tanks, guns, motor vehicles, with nothing like the resources of the allies to draw upon.

In a general way it is known, too, that money power in Germany has been made the servant of the state;-

Mr. POTTIER: They did not conscript it.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River):

-the money has been found for every war need, without any such limit to productive enterprise or to employment as Canadian monetary policy has imposed upon the people of this country in the last ten years.

However short the public memory may be, members of parliament cannot have forgotten that during recent years in this country, youth wandered the roads in unwanted legions. Nearly one million Canadian people were allowed to exist in want, denied opportunities to engage in productive labour, while Germany's disregard of the rules of international finance put the whole German nation to work in war industries.

Mr. POTTIER: And did not pay them.
Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Did not pay them?

Mr. POTTIER: Three cents a day, or five cents a day.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I do not care what they paid.

Mr. TURGEON: The hon, member says they did not pay the men who did the work.

Mr. POTTIER: Is that what the hon. member wants to happen in Canada?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Let the hon. member sit down and make his speech afterwards. I wish to quote one more sentence from this article:

While one Canadian minister of finance after the other denied the possibility of finding money to employ more Canadian people on Canadian resources, the government refused to listen to any proposal to make money available for national purposes without debt or taxation. The highest financial authorities declared that Germany would certainly collapse under an aconomic policy in defiance of international linance.

But I point out that she did not collapse. An hon. MEMBER: Not yet.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): To-day she is the greatest single power in the world, and unless we change our financial position, unless we make matters definite and specific in this bill, we are going to find very hard times ahead.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my hon, friend if he thinks he is helping the war effort of this country or of the British empire by having word go out from the House of Commons of Canada that one of its members believes the German power is the greatest power in the world to-day?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Single.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I do not think we should be trying to put false interpretations upon words spoken. I said Germany was one of the greatest single powers. So she is; and I think it is time our people in Canada should begin to know the enemy they have to fight against. And they also should know whether we are going ahead whole-heartedly or not. That recalls to my mind something said the other night. On page 902 of Hansard the Prime Minister is reported as saying:

[Mr. C. E. Johnston.]

But I do not know that you will in any way help to preserve the human if by one stroke of the pen you wipe out the whole of the material. Some of my hon. friends say—And I should like this part particularly noted: "Will you wipe out all the banks and take all the credit, the little savings of people which they have put in the banks? Will you wipe out everything?"

Nobody in this corner ever said anything like that or ever implied anything like that. That is the kind of misinterpretation that is not conducive to the best interests of the country, and no one knows it better than the Prime Minister. Certainly we in this corner of the house, or the party I am associated with, never made any such statement like that, and I have never heard the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation make it either.

Mr. BRADETTE: Speak for yourself.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I would not want to attempt to speak for the hon. member. We have made our policy quite clear on many occasions.

Mr. BRADETTE: As clear as mud.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): At least we do not go out and tell people during election time that there is going to be no conscription, and then bring it in.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): On September 8, 1939, this was said in this house in regard to finance, as reported on page 79 of Hansard:

We advocate the conscription of finance:

(a) by the creation by the government of the necessary credit and currency combined with definite price regulation to prevent any serious inflationary rise in prices;

(b) by borrowing abroad only for the purpose of obtaining needed goods and services beyond the capacity of our people to furnish;

(c) by placing an embargo on capital and capital assets as at the date of the declaration of war;

(d) by requiring that financial institutions and corporations reveal all undisclosed reserves as at the date of the declaration of war, and that these be forthwith conscripted by the government;

(e) by introducing more steeply graded income and profits taxes;

(f) by providing that all equivocation and/or evasion in this regard shall be treated as a treasonable offence.

The other day the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) further stated the position we take. We want to see everything done that can possibly be done so that we shall be able to carry on our part in this war to the greatest possible extent. Above all, we want to see that there is as far as possible equality of sacrifice in the great struggle that is ahead.

Everyone knows the extent of the sacrifice that the common man will be called upon to give. He is the one who will have to go to the front, or fight in this country, and give his life, or his arm or his leg; he is the one who makes the supreme sacrifice, and there is nothing beyond that. All the wealth, all the money is a mere secondary consideration to what that man gives. There should be no doubt in the minds of the people of Canada at this extremely serious time as to the intention of the government in this respect, so that when the word goes out that this bill has been passed they will know exactly what is going to happen, and that after the war they are not going to be weighed down into the depths of the mire by taxation and debt. I have talked with a great number of people; I have made it my business to talk to them in regard to this war, and they have told me on many and many an occasion that they are willing to fight with finance—I emphasize that word "with"—for the preservation of the British empire and freedom, but they are not willing to fight for finance and the preservation of misery and want.

Mr. POULIOT: The Chairman did not know that until you said it.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Well, I doubt if the hon. member did. These are serious matters. We are not asking for less power to be given to the government under this bill; we are asking that the powers be increased so that the people will know exactly what is going to happen. And I cannot for the life of me see why any hon. member can vote against our proposal.

Mr. JAQUES: I shall take but a few minutes. I should like if I can to correct the impression that some hon. members seem to have as to our stand on this bill. During the election campaign I had three opponents, a Liberal, a Conservative and a Cooperative Commonwealth Federation candidate. I was accused by all of them of standing for conscription. They all promised that if they were elected they would see that conscription was not brought in. My stand was this: I said I would make no such promise because I knew that if and when the necessity arose for conscription it would be enacted whether we liked it or not. I said if I were elected I would do my best to see that before the conscription of man-power was put into effect in this country finance would be conscripted. In my opinion, and I think in the opinion of every hon, member, the time has now arrived when conscription is necessary. I do not think there is any disagreement on that point.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) claims that the bill covers conscription of finance in that it says, "all of the effective resources of the nation, both human and material." I am not quite sure that it does. Of course I do not doubt the Prime Minister's good faith, but when people say a government can only borrow or tax. I am not sure that they understand the nature of money. Every competent and honest authority in the world to-day admits that money is created. Matter cannot be created; therefore I do not think it is quite exact to say that "material resources" will include the financial resources of this country. After all, money is credit; credit is a matter of faith, and faith is hardly a material resource. Ever since we have been in this house we have tried to show that money is created. If anyone still doubts that, the only answer I could give would be this. We were told over and over again that Hitler and Germany really could not become dangerous because they had no money. Then where did Hitler get his money? We were told the same thing about Italy when that country invaded Abyssinia; we were told they would become bankrupt. I only wish to God they were bankrupt to-day. Want of money does not bankrupt countries; it does not, or at least need not, prevent countries from doing anything they desire as long as it is physically possible.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the fundamental trouble with the democracies, the thing that has brought democracy to the point where its very existence is in danger, is that democratic governments have allowed themselves to be absolutely controlled by the idea that money cannot be created. and every other government has been controlled absolutely by those whose sole interest has been the lending of money. That is what has brought us where we are to-day. When the war loan was launched the public were told that a government must have money and that the only source of money was what it could tax and what it could borrow. The only fault with that statement is that it is not true. We have it from the governor of our own bank, and we know it to be a fact, that banks lend money by creating the means of payment; and we say that if banks can create money then surely the government itself can do the same thing, using the Bank of Canada as it exists to-day.

I do not like the financing of a war by means of bonds. During the campaign to put over the war loan we were told that these bonds were a safe and profitable investment. What makes a war bond safe, if it is not the risk that the soldier assumes when he faces the enemy? If we are beaten the bonds will not be worth the paper on which they are written. That is what makes them safe. What makes them profitable? We were told that this was a democratic war which should be financed in a democratic way, and the Minister of Finance said he would like to see the bonds spread as evenly and as widely as possible. Well, let us suppose he had achieved his ideal and that each Canadian had an equal number of bonds. Then where would be the profit? Surely then the only thing left would be to tear them all up, because every Canadian would be taxed to pay his neighbour's interest. But if unfortunately, as the minister said, the great majority of Canadians were too poor to buy bonds then those bonds would be in the hands of a few people, and the poor people who did not possess the means to buy bonds are precisely the ones who would be taxed to pay interest to those who owned them. That is my objection to using bonds as a method of financing a war.

I realize that in total warfare it is necessary to reduce purchasing power in order that more men may be available for the production of war materials; but I think taxation would be a better way of reducing that purchasing power than borrowing; especially since the amount of money borrowed from private individuals is only a fraction of what the government has to borrow. Eighty per cent or more of the money borrowed by the government comes from the banks, and they lend money by the simple process of writing the figures in their books. That was done in the last war and now it is being done in this war. Then, when the war is over, an enormous debt creates the illusion that the country is hard up, and we have to economize. We know that happened after the last war. In this house I heard the late minister of national defence say that the flying corps had ceased to fly. He could not say there was not plenty of room up in the air. He could not say there were not plenty of young men willing and able to learn to fly. He could not say we lacked facilities for making machines, or that we had not plenty of gasoline and oil. But the flying corps ceased to fly. Why? There is only one answer; we had no money. That was only four or five years ago. That did not pertain only to flying; it pertained to everything, so that the war caught us totally unprepared, and we are still unprepared to the extent that we are not doing all that we could and should do in fighting this war.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, while I realize that at this time it is necessary to mobilize the total man-power and wealth of this country,

I agree with my hon. friend who preceded me, and I am opposed to this bill unless our amendment is added to it.

Mr. HANSELL: I rise simply to cover a point which perhaps has not specifically been covered, and to sound a note which perhaps has not particularly been sounded. I do not know whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) will speak on the amendment, but the other night when referring to finance he made this statement, as reported at page 902 of Hansard:

Then some hon, gentlemen speak about human and material resources and they wish to know whether "material" covers "financial." Well, in what category would you put finance unless you put it among material things? It is not spiritual, nor is it human. It is material, and probably if my hon, friends were expressing their minds to the full they would say it is the most material of all things.

I fancy the Prime Minister's position is that the bill already covers what is called for in the amendment, except of course that the amendment makes it more specific. It seems to me that this matter of finance is somewhat mysterious. We question whether we should put it in the material realm, or in some other realm.

Mr. MacNICOL: The spiritual realm.

Mr. HANSELL: I am going to suggest to the hon. member who has interrupted that perhaps that is the very realm in which it must be put. But let me remind the hon. member that the word "spiritual" does not always confine itself to that which is righteous. There is such a thing as spiritual wickedness. I am going to suggest that this matter of money cannot always be defined, and when we talk of money power I suggest that we are talking about that undefined mystery of might which functions behind the scenes of all economic transactions. It receives its authority from, and it is protected by the statutory action of parliaments. It thrives in the midst of ignorance and intellectual darkness. Its power is well nigh limitless. It setteth up one government; it putteth down another. A great prophet has said:

For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

I am suggesting that the Prime Minister is cognizant of the truth of those words from Holy Writ because on more than one occasion he has referred to those forces of the underworld of evil. I am suggesting to him that behind the scenes of almost all human activity—even national activity—there are the great forces of righteousness over which God Himself rules, and there are the forces of evil over which his satanic majesty rules. I say that the money system, as presently constituted, is satan's instrument. He wields it by the manipulation of figures in bankers' books, and law.

Not so long ago in an impassioned appeal—and I have forgotten the exact reference or occasion—the Prime Minister said that we must put on the whole armour of God.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was the late Minister of National Defence, Mr. Rogers, who made that quotation.

Mr. HANSELL: I am very glad to hear the Prime Minister say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And I agree with him.

Mr. HANSELL: We all agree with him. If those are the words of the late Minister of National Defence, they were noble words. The same prophet to whom I previously referred defines what the whole armour of God is, and his first statement in that connection is:

Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness.

Yes, let your loins be girt about with truth. No realm of truth has been so perverted as has the realm of truth concerning finance. No truth is less known than the truth concerning finance. Let not hon, members talk so much about phoney money; there is no subject under heaven concerning which there is so much ignorance in our boasted democracy as there is with respect to the subject of finance. A great prophet said that we wrestle not against flesh and blood. Let me point out what was said by Mayer Rothschild, the father of the house of Rothschild: "Permit me to issue a nation's credit, and I care not who makes its laws."

We are anxious to have these stipulations placed in the bill because some of us realize the tremendous power wielded by the forces of evil inherent in the present financial system. We want the government so to use the financial system that it will be an instrument for righteousness; to use it for the preservation of our liberties. Yes, we say a great deal these days about the preservation of our liberties; we talk about our free institu-About the only institution in the world that is free is the financial institution. We like to think that the church is a free institution. Let me say this to hon. members from the province of Quebec: Let one of the members of their ecclesia say something which might be interpreted as being directed against the war effort of Canada, and then let us see—

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out to the hon. member that the bill before the committee has nothing to do with the monetary policy of the country. A certain latitude may be given in debate, in view of the text of the amendment; but I do not believe that references to the monetary system should be discussed at such great length. Casual references may be made, of course, but I am pointing out to the hon. member that our financial system is not the subject matter now before the committee.

Mr. HANSELL: I thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have always found you most fair in connection with any committees of which we have been members, and I thank you for pointing this out. I was simply saying that all institutions which claim to be free, actually are not free. But our banking institutions and financial system seem to be free at all times.

I should like to see the government take hold of our present financial system and so arrange it as to bring about the right ordering of money in order to give our war effort its greatest possible effectiveness; and also, after the war has been fought and won, to give to the people of Canada the greatest possible security. That can be done. We in this group—and I am certain that my hon. friends who sit to my right feel as we do—believe that this can be done. That is why we want these words in the amendment inserted in the bill, and we do hope that the amendment will carry.

Mr. POULIOT: I always listen carefully to what my hon. friends on the other side have to say. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) has just referred to the ecclesia. In English we refer to my church as the Roman Catholic church; in French it is église Catholique. There were certain members of that church who believed in social credit theories; but my archbishop, His Eminence Cardinal Villeneuve, the primate of the Roman Catholic church in Canada, in a public letter which appeared in the press told them to mind their own business. I prefer to stand with my archbishop rather than to accept advice from the hon. member for Macleod on religious matters.

I cannot understand how paper money can be made a weapon with which we can win the war. This afternoon I have had one eye on Hansard, but my two ears have been used to listen to what my hon. friends had to say. I may be dumb, but I must say that I do not understand anything they say. They make statements, but they do not prove them.

Mr. FAIR: If the hon, member cannot understand it, is that anyone's fault?

Mr. POULIOT: One thing I regret is that hon, members who make these statements do not understand them themselves. I have a few observations to make on this bill. These hon, members make statements and they feel that, having made a statement, they have proved their case. You, Mr. Chairman, are a lawyer and have appeared before the courts. You know that in any action it is mandatory that a man must prove his case. Even our gracious colleague, the hon. member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen), has made many statements which were quite pleasant to listen to but which were not affirmations of fact. Nothing has been proven. The hon, member referred to the poverty of the people in her riding. We want to do something for them, but simply stating that people are poor does not provide the cure. What we want from these hon. gentlemen is a concrete and practical suggestion. As I told them before, what would be the use of putting their theories into practice and having to pay our soldiers with scraps of paper, no better than the treaty of Versailles?

Mr. HANSELL: That is where the hon. member does not understand it.

Mr. POULIOT: Hon. members shout pretty loudly; sometimes they scream even louder, but that has no effect upon the intellect of any hon. member. It may affect our ears, but it does not impress our minds.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, the question we are now discussing is so important that every hon, member, before he votes for this amendment, should be perfectly clear in his own mind on what he is voting for, or before he votes against the amendment should know what he is voting against, that I desire to present to the committee exactly what we will be voting for if we vote for this amendment, and what we will be voting against, if we vote against it. I do this not merely for the sake of hon. members in recording their votes, but also in order that the people of Canada, whose representatives in this parliament we are, will know exactly what we have done. The section which is being amended reads:

Subject to the provisions of section three hereof, the governor in council may do and authorize such acts and things, and make from time to time such orders and regulations, requiring persons to place themselves, their services and their property at the disposal of his majesty in the right of Canada, as may be deemed necessary or expedient for securing the public safety, the defence of Canada, the maintenance of public order, or the efficient [Mr. Pouliot.]

prosecution of the war, or for maintaining supplies or services essential to the life of the community.

It is proposed to amend this particular section by inserting after the word "requiring" the following words:

—the Bank of Canada to finance all war effort, and requiring all corporations, industries. financial institutions and all—

The amendment really asks for two things. The first is in the exact words, that the Bank of Canada should finance all war effort. The second is the requiring of all corporations, industries and financial institutions to place themselves, their services and their property at the disposal of his majesty, as well as requiring all persons to do the same. As the hon, member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) recognized quite clearly, the second part of the amendment is already covered by the legislation as drafted. He felt quite sure that I would draw the attention of the committee to this fact. I want to make it clear that those words are wholly unnecessary. If they were the only words to be inserted in the section they would not alter in one way or another, either add to or subtract from the powers that are being given to the government under the section.

It is many years since I took a course in law, but I still have a recollection of some of the studies I made at that time. My understanding of the construction of a statute is that where the word "person" appears it shall apply equally to corporations as well as individuals.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think the right hon, gentleman will pass.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have here the act respecting the form and interpretations of statutes. Paragraph (20) of section 37, which deals with definitions, reads:

"person," or any word or expression descriptive of a person, includes any body corporate and politic, and the heirs, executors, administrators or other legal representatives of such person, according to the law of that part of Canada to which the context extends;

It is therefore quite clear that that portion of the amendment is wholly unnecessary. When this bill is passed, as I think it perhaps will be very shortly, we will be given the power to make from time to time such orders and regulations as we may think necessary for the safety of Canada, requiring all corporations, industries, financial institutions and all persons to be subjected to those powers. There can be no mistake about the effect of that part of the amendment. It is clearly understood. The bill covers everything in the particulars mentioned that the hon. gentleman or the hon. lady opposite might wish to have incorporated in the bill, so far as powers to be given to the government are concerned.

What is left? This is the whole significance of the amendment, as I see it. How will the amendment read if we insert the words desired? It will read:

. . . the governor in council may do and authorize such acts and things, and make from time to time such orders and regulations, requiring the Bank of Canada to finance all war effort—

Just see where that leads us. The greatest obligation placed upon a government is to carry on the business of the country, and that obligation assumes the greatest possible proportions in a time of war. The obligation which the people of Canada have placed upon this government is to find ways and means of carrying on the war effort of Canada; and to find those ways and means is the hardest problem which the government has before it. It will cause the government to look in a hundred and one directions to obtain the necessary financial means to carry on the country's war effort. But what do hon. gentlemen who have moved or who may support this amendment propose? It is that the government shall have power to wash itself entirely free of all that responsibility.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just a moment, please. I have a right to give my interpretation and I am stating it plainly. The proposed amendment is to relieve the government of all responsibility for finding ways and means to carry on Canada's war effort by doing what? Simply by requiring the Bank of Canada to finance our whole war effort. That is what it asks. It asks that this government or any government that may come into power in the course of time shall be given power to put upon the Bank of Canada, if it wishes to do so, the obligation of financing all our war effort. It does not even say "to assist" in the war effort. The obligation is on the Bank of Canada to finance the whole war effort. Does anyone suppose that if the government of this country were to attempt to do anything of that kind under powers to be given to it, the Bank of Canada could finance our whole war effort? Does anyone believe that for an instant?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Some of my hon, friends say yes and others say no. I am quite prepared to leave it to the intelligence of the people at large to say whether they believe that one institution which has certain powers given to it by statute could so conduct its affairs as to be able to finance the whole war effort of Canada. If we should pass the amendment we should be simply making the whole war effort of Canada ridiculous. It would be equivalent to saying: We have so little sense of what is meant by the war effort of Canada, and of what is needed to sustain it, that for the sake of helping to popularize some particular financial theory we are going to give the government the power to require one institution to finance Canada's whole war effort.

Mr. ROWE: A great relief!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says that it would be a great relief to the government if it were possible for it to turn over an obligation of that kind to an institution. But I wonder what the people of Canada would say about a government that acted in that way. That is the responsibility that hon. gentlemen are taking who vote for this amendment, and I am putting it before them now because I want them to have the opportunity, if they so desire, of withdrawing the amendment in the light of what has been said. If they do not wish to do so I want the country to know that those who are voting for this amendment are voting to give the government power to relieve itself of all responsibility of financing Canada's war effort simply by passing an order which will enable it to transfer that whole responsibility to the Bank of Canada, an institution which has its home in this city, and placing upon the shoulders of that institution the duty of financing the whole war effort of Canada. The English language is clear and I think anyone who can read will say that the amendment is not susceptible of any other interpretation. That is what it says, in black and white, in the English language. If hon, members feel that at a time of crisis like the present we can afford to trifle with the war effort of Canada in that way, I am quite certain their views will not find general acceptance among the great body of the people in this country.

I am the last one to wish to deprive anyone of the opportunity of discussing any theory of finance or any other matter that he may wish to discuss, but there are times and seasons for all things, as I have said so often, and I do think that the time we have taken this afternoon to discuss this financial question rather than the great question of Canada's war effort and the prosecution of the war has been more or less unnecessary in the light of the situation to-day. I want hon members to know just what they are doing and the country to know what we are doing, and it is for that reason I have presented the matter in its true light.

There has been much said about equality of sacrifice, and that this measure is intended to put emphasis upon compulsion with respect to human resources rather than upon compulsion with respect to material resources. I deny that there is more emphasis upon the one than there is upon the other. I deny that absolutely. This measure is to give the government power, where the situation demands it, to exercise a degree of compulsion, with respect to the human resources of Canada, and equally with respect to any of the material resources of Canada. That is the purpose of the measure, and the light in which the government will construe its power is the light of equality of sacrifice. As I have said time and again, if any place can be found where by putting emphasis on the sacrifice of material things in preference to the sacrifice of human resources, then so far as I am concerned, and I believe also every other hon. member, the emphasis will be put upon the sacrifice of material things.

The degree to which it may be necessary to exercise compulsion under this measure will depend altogether upon circumstances. A great deal has been said, and I think rightly said, as to the readiness with which the young men of this country will come forward and volunteer for service and prepare themselves to defend this country in time of war; and to the extent to which voluntary effort will meet the needs of the situation, I think everyone in the country will be glad to see the exercise of as little in the way of compulsion as possible. But if we do not get the voluntary effort that is needed, and if it is necessary as a consequence, in order to protect our own soil and our own country, to say to any body of men who are shirking their duties as citizens, "We are not going to allow you to stand in the way of the men and women of this country who want to see it defended, so get into shape and train yourself to take your part when the moment comes to acquit yourself like a true citizen of this country should," -we want to be free to say it, and to see that what is said is done; that is what this measure is for, so far as human resources are concerned. But it is not the purpose to rush through Canada and conscript every man at once, put him in uniform and provide him with a rifle, but rather to take at any particular time the steps that may be necessary for Canada's defence.

I will say what I think the first step should be. It ought to be to see that every young man, indeed every man in this country who is able to shoulder a rifle, gets an immediate course of training so that he will know what to do if he has to come forward and defend his home and his country. We all hope that the soil of Canada may not be invaded and that it may not be necessary for the youth of this country to engage in actual warfare within its shores. But is there anyone, is there any young man in this country who, if he is to be called out in his own and the country's defence, would not wish to have had such training as will make him more fit to perform his duties in the way he would wish to be able to perform them? That is the purpose of the measure, to enable us to prepare to meet any situation as it arises. And the same with regard to industry, and the same with regard to finance. If the government thinks it desirable or if it becomes necessary at any stage to take over a whole industry or a particular plant, or a bank or other financial institution, the government will have power to do so. But it is not going to commit itself to taking any of these over before it appears that such a step is absolutely necessary and the best way to win the war. Similarly with regard to finance. This measure gives the government power to take any action with respect to finance which it may wish to take, and the financial resources are, of course, a part of the material resources of the country. There can be no two ways about that.

That is all I wish to say at the moment because I am more anxious to get this bill through than I am to debate it further. I hope I have made it perfectly clear that so far as the government is concerned and its interpretation of this measure, it stands for equality of sacrifice with respect to human resources and material resources. If there is a possibility of choice between the two, material resources will have to serve the needs of human resources rather than the human resources be obliged to serve the ends of any material resources. The committee will pardon me for referring to my own views on that subject. I think I have expressed them very clearly in writing in the volume which is entitled "Industry and Humanity." The whole thesis of that book is that, industry should serve the needs of humanity, not humanity be made the slave of industry; and by that I mean equally finance and any other form of economic activity. The human is superior to anything material. The material things of life exist for the purpose of serving the higher human and spiritual needs of mankind. So there cannot be any mistake about where the emphasis lies, or where the government intends to place the emphasis. Equally there will be no mistake about what we shall be doing if we accept this amendment. We shall be ridding ourselves of all responsibility for what is required in the way of finance to carry on Canada's war effort, and we shall be turning it over to a single institution which is located on Wellington street not far from these houses of parliament.

Mr. MacINNIS: I wish to say a few words in explanation of why we of this group are supporting the amendment. If one is not careful, it is easy to get confused in this house. A few days ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) was piloting a bill through the house. He was asked on a number of occasions to give the legal interpretation of certain sections, and he said that he would not do that because he did not know what the courts might say if the bill came before them for interpretation. But here we have the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), who has not studied law for a long, long time and possibly has forgotten all he ever learned, saying there can be only one interpretation, and that is his.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend let me display a little more of my own learning and knowledge? I believe that when the courts come to interpret a matter, if there is any doubt about it they like to see how the government itself expressed its view when the statute was passed, and they take that into consideration in giving their decision.

Mr. MacINNIS: Not always. We found quite a different state of affairs when certain legislation was passed here in 1934. The legal gentleman who was then leading the government was very sure what those statutes meant, but when they were taken to the courts the interpretation was quite different.

Why are we of this group supporting the amendment? The Bank of Canada is an instrument of and owned by the government; and we are asking that the government, in carrying on the financial activities necessary to the prosecution of the war, use the Bank of Canada in much the same way as we expect the government, in carrying on military activities, to use the Department of National Defence, not some little private military organization created by some other group. I believe the government can use the Bank of Canada to whatever limit it desires. It can go further; it can nationalize private financial institutions and bring them under the same control as the Bank of Canada. My ideas of finance in this respect may be somewhat cock-eyed, but if they are, they became that way by listening not to my hon. friends on the left, but to the hon, member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer).

Amendment negatived: yeas, 17; nays, 147. At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): Mr. Chairman, for the last four years, I have opposed any increase in the military estimates, and demanded a positive assurance as to their use for the defence of Canada's territory. The Canadian people have had an opportunity of judging whether my fears were well-founded and justified.

To-day, the government are putting before us a measure embodying the very assurance I have demanded at each session since 1937, as any one can see by referring to section 3 of the Mobilization Act, 1940, which reads as follows:

The powers conferred by the next preceding section may not be exercised for the purpose of requiring persons to serve in the military, naval or air forces outside of Canada and the territorial waters thereof.

This time, we have before us no mere statements put on Hansard but a clear and definite statute.

In the defence of our country, it is a patriotic duty for us to make even the supreme sacrifice. I agree with my hon. friend from Beauharnois-Laprairie (Mr. Raymond) that this legislation should not be enforced as long as full advantage of the possibilities of voluntary enlistment has not been taken.

For the information of those who, in the past, have doubted my sincerity, I may say that I have no objection to raise as regards the wording of this bill, but I reserve the right to pass judgment, at the proper time, upon the administration of the act.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman, before section 2 of this bill passes, I should like to make some further observations. Whatever I have to say will be, I hope, direct, clear and explicit, without any mental reservations.

When the Prime Minister stated yesterday and again to-day that this bill was the same as that passed by the British parliament in a little over two hours, and, as I recall it, by unanimous consent, it escaped my attention at the time that the regulations with regard to military service had already been passed by the imperial parliament, and that the British government was then asking parliament for authority only over material resources and like matters. May I suggest to him that one of the reasons, and probably the strongest reason, why the British parliament was able to and did pass that act so expeditiously was that it was conferring these wide powers upon a national government representative of every element in the country, including labour; whereas we are asked to confer practically dictatorial powers upon a purely party government, representing as it does only 54 per cent of the people of Canada. I feel very strongly that the government is putting the cart before the horse. If the Prime Minister had first formed a national government, which the British people have had to do, which France had to do, which the two great sister dominions had to do, then I venture to say that this legislation would not have taken any more time here than it did in England. And may I further remind the government that the defence of the country should begin with unity; political unity, parliamentary unity; and not under the flag of a party government.

On Tuesday before this bill was introduced I seized the occasion to express the view that the ministry must be strengthened. I said that there are vacancies now existing which must be filled. I could not accept the view that because of the recent election we have to-day a national government. I said then, and I now repeat, that we have a party government, moved by party considerations and motivated by the party spirit, with the result that while half of the nation is to be called upon to pay, to fight and maybe to die, that half has nothing to say about how our defence shall be carried on. That is not national unity. It is quite the reverse, and in a time of national peril should not be allowed to continue.

I did not advocate a union government. I did advocate a truly national government to be formed with representation from among the best in the house and in the country for concerted national effort, so that this nation may present a united front to the common enemy. I expressed the opinion that if this did not come about, if the Prime Minister did not move to accomplish this end, the country would not function as it should if we are to present a common front and successfully defend ourselves. The Prime Minister has not yielded to that suggestion. He has stated, in effect, that after this bill goes through he will reorganize the government; but he has never for a moment committed himself to the formation of a national government.

No government apart from a national one should ask for such a blank cheque as is contained in this bill. No government except a national one representing all shades of political thought and opinion in this house and this country should ask for such dictatorial powers as are represented by this section.

If, before this bill is passed, the Prime Minister will not reorganize the government along national lines as I have indicated, then I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he still adheres to the position he took yesterday, namely, that he will not bring down the regulations to be made under this measure for a complete review thereof by parliament before the bill becomes law.

If the Prime Minister will not give any such undertaking as I have suggested with regard to reorganizing the government along national lines, and will not consider the request I have just made, I desire to make the following observations. In view of the unprecedently wide powers given the government in this bill; in view of the utterance of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) that this measure constitutes the broadest blank cheque ever given its executive by any parliament for the administration of public affairs; in view of the Prime Minister's statement on Wednesday afternoon as to the inability of the government at this time to give in greater detail or, in fact, any detailed information as to how the government will use the powers thus given, will the Prime Minister, before this bill finally is given third reading and passes this house, give the house and the country some undertaking that parliament will not prorogue but will be called at intervals during the ensuing months of this year for the purpose of being consulted in connection with and passing judgment upon important actions taken under the authority of this bill and the general conduct of Canada's war effort? My own view, and I hold it very strongly, is that parliament should be supreme in all these matters, and therefore that parliament should only adjourn and not be prorogued at the conclusion of the business of this session. I believe that while parliament is delegating wide powers to the government under this bill, it should in no sense surrender or wish to surrender all or any of its functions. I hope also that the government would not wish, after this bill is approved, to ignore parliament and not call the members to Ottawa, frequently if necessary, for further consultation.

Canada is a democracy, Mr. Chairman, and I hope will always remain a democracy; and the representatives of the people should be called together whenever the occasion requires, not only to lend added support to the government's actions with regard to the war but on proper occasions to offer constructive criticism. Consultation and cooperation within parliament I believe constitute the most democratic method of carrying on Canada's war effort, not only for the defence of Canada but also to aid the mother country in the manner best calculated to secure the most satisfactory results and bring about the achievement of ultimate victory so ardently desired by all of us.

Therefore I invite the Prime Minister, before this bill passes out of this chamber, to take the house and the country into his confidence on this most important question of frequent consultation with parliament at this time. I would ask him to give us an assurance that parliament will not be prorogued but will be adjourned in order that it may be called together again for consultation and advice with respect to not only the subject matters of this bill but also the conduct of the war generally. That is a democratic right of the people's elected representatives.

Mr. POULIOT: Before this question is answered by my leader, I should like to make an observation on behalf of the rank and file of the Liberal party. The hon, gentleman who leads the opposition has said that we live in a democratic country. That is true. But what is the rule in a democratic country? It is the rule of the majority. We have been before the people, not in time of peace but in time of war. As every one knows, at that time the situation was not so critical as it is now; nevertheless the Canadian people have selected to govern this country in time of war not the Tory party but the Liberal party.

Mr. HOMUTH: Under false pretences.

Mr. POULIOT: I can argue that in the constituency of Waterloo South, which is represented by the hon. gentleman—

Mr. HOMUTH: Come on and try it.

Mr. POULIOT: —with him, at any place within that constituency, and I am sure I will receive the cheers of the people. Well, sir, I am bored with the repetition of the same inanity.

Mr. BROOKS: We are bored, too.

Mr. POULIOT: You will be more bored in a few minutes. We had a request for a national government from hon. gentlemen opposite, while at the same time one who wants to be included in that government. although he says he would not act, was casting aspersions on this government from what is called the other place. Is that the way to carry on the war? Is that the spirit of unity and national understanding for the common good that we should expect from those who must bow before public opinion? The leader of the opposition was not a candidate in 1917, but he was the key man for the Tory candidate in his constituency supporting the union government, which committed so many crimes that now they dare not advocate a union government. Now they advocate a national government. There was a national government that existed in the fertile imagination of their past leader, but it lived no longer than a dream and he awoke with a nightmare. At page 858 of Hansard for this session the leader of the opposition said:

I cannot accept the view that because of the recent election we have a national government.

That Rip Van Winkle is not awake yet.

I am advocating a truly national government, to be formed by this administration, with representation from among the best in this house and in the country, and for concerted national effort, so that this nation may present a united front to the common enemy. I beg the Prime Minister, I beg the members of the government, to unite this country under a truly national government. He and they alone can do it.

Well, this is the truth: It is the privilege of the Prime Minister to select his colleagues, and so long as his cabinet has the confidence of the House of Commons, just so long can he carry on the business of government for the country. And he carries on that business not only for those who voted for the Liberal party at the last election, but for all the people of Canada.

May I remind the leader of the opposition that I understand I am elected by the vote of good Liberals and sound-thinking Conservatives who supported me at the last election.

Mr. MacNICOL: But not this group.

Mr. POULIOT: No, I am sorry. You see, the Conservatives in my constituency are high above those who supported my hon. friend. On the evening of election day, when I had won the election, I considered I was the representative not only of those who had supported me, but of the whole population in my constituency.

Exactly the same reasoning applies to this government. When it is in office it represents not only Liberals, sound-thinking and intelligent Conservatives, intelligent ex-Social Crediters and intelligent ex-Cooperative Commonwealth Federation followers, who voted for it, but all the people throughout the country. If it does something wrong it is subject to a vote of censure; if on a vote of want of confidence in the House of Commons it is defeated it must resign, and instructions are issued by His Excellency the Governor General for the formation of another government. I say, then, that this government has the confidence of the people, and I do not see how the tiny minority, this infinitesimally small minority, is in a position to say, "We will dictate our views to the Prime Minister, and we will impose our conditions upon him." That is the summit of absurdity.

The leader of the opposition is a sound country lawyer, as I am. At this time I leave aside his political views, and I refer only to his knowledge of the law and the statute books. He knows I am perfectly right when I say these things to him.

At page 913 of Hansard the same story is told in the same terms, just as if the hon. member wanted to learn it by heart. Everything is the same at page 913. Then again to-day we heard it twice, and particular reference was made to Mr. Knox in the United States. President Roosevelt may have his own reasons for the formation of a union government in the United States. Of course he did not have a recent mandate, as this government had in the month of March. Elections in the United States for the selection of a president are to take place in the fall of this year. The conditions are entirely different. Then, the last general election in England took place in 1937, a long time before the war. I believe the election was at the time the empire was rejoicing over the coronation of their majesties. That is a long time ago, and a lot of water has passed under the mill during those years. Conditions are entirely different to-day. Here we have a fresh government.

An hon. MEMBER: A strong one.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, a strong one.

Mr. HOMUTH: How strong?

An hon. MEMBER: And a good one.

Mr. POULIOT: That is the voice of the people I am hearing now. Why should this government be compared with those of the United States and England? Some hon. members have a mania for saying that a certain thing is done in England, or that it is done in the United States, or that it is done in Afghanistan, and that we must copy it at once. They have no imagination.

I would ask the leader of the opposition to have a little more imagination and to make more constructive suggestions than the appointment of a Tory in a Liberal government. That is all I have to say on that point. Of course we have a Methuselah here, a Methuselah representing the defeated Methuselah of the last parliament. And they have a few Methuselahs in the other place. We would be told that they have the experience, and that we may judge it by the size of their beards. Even if they are clean-shaven, it does not matter. It is political experience that counts. A man may be old in years, but too young in experience to sit in the councils of the nation, or to make decisions of the utmost importance, which must be done to-day.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

That being settled, I have just a word to say about the mobilization of resources. There is a danger ahead, and it is the danger of red tape which was mentioned the other day by the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe), when he said that the officers could decide that a pressed felt was as good as a woven felt. That is the story of red tape. Everything must be absolutely perfect. Well, this has no importance, whatsoever; there is something more important.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Skip it.

Mr. POULIOT: I want to be fair to hon. members opposite, and that is why I consult the text of their spoken words. I would refer the leader of the opposition to his speech as reported at page 914 of Hansard—and he may check Hansard, if he wishes—and hon. members opposite, his supporters, may do so until they select a new leader. They, too, may check Hansard. He said:

This whole question of the mobilization of the man-power and material resources of the country is so important that authority ought not to be lightly and without careful thought delegated to any minister.

In this I agree with him. Then again at page 922 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said:

I wish to make it perfectly clear that the mobilization is intended to provide men for all kinds of war work, of which services in the military forces is only one.

And he added this:

It is important therefore that I should make it quite clear that the essence of the measure is that the government is to be empowered to direct the men and the material equipment of this country into the work most urgently needed in the present crisis.

I fully agree with that. Then, something further of importance was mentioned at page 921 of Hansard. Two ministers are involved; one is to have some powers under the measure, and other powers are to be given to the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty). I quote the following words of my leader:

The Minister of Labour would be given power to direct any person to perform any services required of him—to prescribe the terms of remuneration, the hours of labour and the conditions of service.

Then, farther down on the same page:

The Minister of Labour had been given the responsibility of supplying the labour required for the programmes of the various departments. He proposed to set up a production council consisting of representatives of the chief government departments concerned with munition supplies. A director of labour supply would be set up, training facilities would be established, et cetera. What I have set forth illustrates the scope of the measure as it was put through. It gave the government power to deal with any and every situation which might arise at a moment of great crisis or emergency.

And again on the same page:

In order to have the powers as broad as possible they have been made all-inclusive, to include the mobilization of human and material resources.

There is something else. The Minister of Munitions and Supply referred to the Canadian Industries Limited. For several months this government has been freed of the sinister influence of Mr. Arthur B. Purvis. I do not want that sinister influence to be continued by another man. Who is Tom Moore? I ask hon. members to turn to pages 2378 and 2379 of Hansard of April 28, 1938. My great fear was that should a Tory government be returned to power there would be conscription, not only for home defence but for overseas service.

An hon. MEMBER: We have it now.

Mr. POULIOT: Let the hon. gentleman take his pill; he needs it. We would have conscription, not only for home defence but for overseas service. We would have a national government and we would have a formidable trust which would cover every kind of production in this country. That was my fear. Not long ago, speaking along the same lines as the hon. gentleman, I expressed that fear to my people in no uncertain language. I spoke to them with the sincerity I always have when I rise in my place in this house. I told them that if the other party were to come to power, we would again be faced by a man who was described by the then leader of that party as being more capable than the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston)-Mr. Purvis. This man has had a sinister influence upon the public life of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: I have a right to say that under the rules of this house.

Mr. ROWE: The hon, member has no right to say that.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee is considering section 2 of the bill. I think we have given considerable latitude, and even longitude, in connection with freedom of debate. I ask the hon member to stick more closely to the section under discussion.

Mr. ROWE: Is "sinister" parliamentary?

Mr. POULIOT: In order to make my point, both latitude and longitude will be necessary. I have only a few words to say on this point. It is not my business to dictate to my leader or anyone else. I simply express my own feelings, as did the hon, gentleman. It is the privilege of the Prime Minister to select whatever assistance he needs from among his supporters, both inside and outside the house, whether or not they have been Tories previously. As the hon, leader of the opposition said very aptly, that is his privilege. But I cannot accept Tom Moore as one of my leaders, should he be called to sit at the council table. I cannot agree to the putting into force of legislation to bring about the amalgamation of our railways and the formation of trusts which will kill the initiative of our people, increase the cost of living and render life in our country unbearable.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief. Upon looking over the regulations issued by the government in connection with labour conditions, I must say that I find them fairly satisfactory. There is one thing which seems to be omitted. Section 14 of the British National Service (armed forces) Act, passed on September 3, 1939, reads:

It shall be the duty of any employer by whom a person called up under this act for service or by whom a member of His Majesty's reserve and auxiliary forces called out for service under the permanent enactments relating to those forces, whether before or after the commencement of this act was employed when he was called from his civil employment for service connected with the present emergency, to reinstate him in his employment at the termination of that service in an occupation and under conditions not less favourable to him than those which would have been applicable to him had he not been so called as aforesaid, and if he fails to do so, the employer shall, subject as hereinafter provided, be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds; and the court by which any employer is found guilty of an offence under this subsection may order him to pay to the person whom he has failed to reinstate a sum not exceeding an amount equal to twelve weeks' remuneration at the rate at which his remuneration was last payable to him by the employer.

It seems to me that this is a very important provision. When a man is called up for service he should have the right of being reinstated without loss of seniority or any other privileges which would have accrued to him had he remained permanently employed.

I think also the government should do something, under either this or some other bill, to protect the general public and the working people in particular from any undue increase in rents. I have received a number of communications from various parts of Canada, including this city, pointing out that advantage is being taken of the present situation by landlords to raise rents. In Great Britain there is a rent control or restriction act, and I think the government should give some consideration to this particular problem at once.

If the Prime Minister intends to speak again, there is one other matter I should like him to deal with. I intended to ask him for an explanation of this point this afternoon, but I omitted to do so. At page 854 of Hansard, the Prime Minister is reported as saying:

National registration will also provide the government with an inventory of the mechanical and industrial skill of our population. Such an inventory will prove valuable in affording additional information on the extent of our resources of skilled labour which can be drawn upon to meet the needs of essential war-time industries.

Then follows this interesting sentence:

It will also show the directions in which intensive industrial and technical training is most urgently needed to provide an adequate supply of labour to meet the growing demands of our war industries and other essential services.

I was wondering what the right hon. gentleman had in mind, whether it was an extension of technical education using our present technical schools and institutions, or whether he had some plan for the training of young men for work in industrial plants. I should be glad if we could get some information on that point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I answer the hon, member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) immediately in reference to the last matter to which he has referred. In making the registration an effort will be made, so far as can be done within a limited compass, to ascertain the experience men have had in particular trades, particular callings, and in different walks of life, which may be of service in connection with our war effort. When the government finds it necessary to seek numbers of men to perform particular duties we shall then have in the inventory a guide at least to what men may be available for particular purposes. At this moment a committee of government officials is at work upon what might be called the questionnaire which will be submitted when the citizens of the country are asked to register so that the government will have an inventory of the human resources of our country. It is almost certain that before this war proceeds further, there will be an ever increasing need for certain classes of war materials. There may be a number of young men in the country who will have had technical training in certain classes of work but only up to a certain point; and if it were known to the government that they had received a certain amount of training along technical lines these men might be drafted immediately into a study group, or whatever name would be appropriate to describe a group undergoing further technical training to qualify them to perform the kind of skilled work which might happen to be most needed at the time. I think my hon, friend will agree at once that there are large numbers of young men who have received technical training up to a certain point but not sufficient training to enable them to be entrusted with completing, say, certain parts of an aeroplane, tank or other instrument of warfare; but with very little additional training they might quickly become skilled for that class of work. That is the kind of thing that was thought of in that connection.

May I thank my hon, friend for his words of appreciation with regard to the order in council which I tabled to-day setting forth the government's declaration of principles to govern during war time with respect to labour conditions, and which is intended to prevent so far as possible at a time of war anything in the nature of industrial unrest.

My hon, friend referred to one omission which he noticed, but may I point out to him that until some measure respecting compulsory enlistment had been placed on the statutes it would hardly have been a right thing to insert a clause in the declaration of principles with regard to how men who had enlisted under a compulsory measure were to be treated in the matter of their employment after having served for a time. The declaration of principles which I tabled to-day was drawn up some days ago; in fact, before the present measure was introduced in the house. As a matter of fact, something very similar has been in the hands of the Minister of Labour for some time past. Naturally any clause intended to protect men who might be compulsorily enlisted would not properly come into the declaration before a measure respecting compulsory enlistment had been enacted. After we have a compulsory service law in force in this country it may be necessary to supplement it by a clause such as appears in the English act, and which came into the English act after their compulsory Military Service Act had gone into effect.

May I remind the committee that when the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar was discussing the present bill yesterday, I think it was, he sought, as I thought at the time, to impose a condition upon which his support of the measure depended. I told him very frankly at the time that I could not accept any condition at all, that I could not permit any coercion by way of being obligated to accept a condition before having this bill passed by the House of Commons. I said I would be glad to give to him later the particular declaration of principles that had been worked out between the government and labour, but that I would not give it to him as a condition of his support of this particular measure.

The house will also recall that this afternoon the hon. leader of the Social Credit group or one of his followers introduced an amendment to the bill to provide that the government should undertake to see that the Bank of Canada would do all the financing of the war effort of Canada, and both groups, the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and the Social Credit, if I am not mistaken, intimated that they would have to support that amendment unless I would give them an undertaking in advance as to what the government would be prepared to do with respect to the Bank of Canada in its relation to the powers given the government under this measure. Again I said frankly that I would not be bound by any condition with respect to this measure, nor did I feel that any member's vote for the bill should be made conditional upon anything other than the merits of the bill itself.

I am sure my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) will feel that if I have been obliged to take that position with respect to two important groups in this house. I would equally be obliged to maintain the same position with reference to himself with regard to any condition which he might seek to impose as a condition of his support or that of his party, of this measure. Let me say at once that the measure is before the house and my hon. friend knows perhaps better than anyone else on that side how important it is that this measure should go through with the least possible delay. I cannot and will not at this time agree to any condition as one which must govern with respect to the passage of this measure other than the merits of this measure itself.

I had not expected that the question of national government would come up for discussion at this time and particularly in relation to this measure, but since my hon. friend has mentioned it and has spoken of governments in other countries having found it desirable to form national governments as the war has gone on, may I remind him that in those countries which have formed national governments of the character he has described, that course has been taken owing to the fact that the governments have been in office for a considerable period of time and saw no other way of avoiding a general election whereby the people themselves could express their views. They could see no way of bringing on an election at the time they normally should, and therefore they sought to perpetuate themselves in office by making arrangements which would avoid the necessity of a general election and of any expression of opinion on the part of the people. They have in that way managed to avoid what is the practice if not also the law of the constitution, that a general election should be held once in so often in order to maintain the rights of the people to assert their own control over parliament.

Mr. MacNICOL: What the Prime Minister has said does not apply to what has just taken place in the United States.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What has happened in the United States is a matter of their own internal economy. I cannot say what may have actuated the president in taking into his administration one or two gentlemen who were his political opponents; but I think I can give a reason. According to the constitution of the United States a general election will have to take place in the course of a very few months, and it is quite conceivable that the president himself may wish to adopt some course of action before an election takes place which would not be possible for him without bringing into his administration the gentlemen whom he has brought in at this particular time. But as I say, I cannot tell what motives may have governed the president, and it would be quite improper for me to try to express an opinion on a matter of domestic concern to another country; what I have said is said only as a matter of surmise.

Since my hon, friend has brought up the question of national government, may I ask him and others this question: Who was it that made national government an issue in the last campaign in Canada? It certainly was not myself. My hon. friend to-day sits with those about him as the leader, I think I am right in saying, of a Conservative party. Before the general election, when I was occupying the position which I am occupying at the moment, I was facing hon. members who were members of a Conservative party; and when I appealed to the country I fully expected that my chief opponents on the platform would be members of the Conservative party. But, as the campaign went on. the Conservative party completely disappeared, and not one of the hon. gentlemen opposite was returned as a Conservative; all of them were returned as national government candidates.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): No, sir. Excuse me; I am returned as a Conservative supporting National government.

Mr. POULIOT: The exception confirms the rule.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am another.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend, who is the most loyal of men, must then have deserted or been forced to desert his leader on that occasion. I would say that that is not always the best way to get into parliament or the best way to stay there. However, it is the fact that as the election progressed we had four parties, or at any rate four groups, contending. There was the government of the day, which was led by a Liberal administration. There was the Social Credit party, which by the way rather went back on itself and ran under the name of the New Democracy. I have not yet got quite clear in my mind which party it is, or whether they still retain both names. I believe they do. Then there was the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. And the other party was the National Government party. As a consequence, the people have already expressed themselves in regard to national government.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): May I just make an observation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Very well.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I was going to ask the Prime Minister, are we to continue this burlesque all evening?

An hon. MEMBER: Who started it?

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): There is a war on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that if a national government is a burlesque, he must credit his leader with having begun the burlesque, because I certainly did not bring up the subject. And I am speaking quite seriously. I think it is very important that the position should be clearly understood.

As I have said, the parties which were before the country were the four I have mentioned. As a result of the voice of the people, as I recollect it, of 245 members returned to this parliament, thirty-eight were elected as those who stood for a so-called national government.

Mr. HOMUTH: And the rest, as anti-conscriptionists.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Those who were anti-conscriptionists were against conscription for service overseas, and as long as this government is in office we are going to maintain that position and see that effect is given to it. That is just one of the reasons why, in carrying out the will and the wishes of the people, we do not propose to take into this government any of those whose object in coming into the ministry would be to see that con[Mr. MacNicol.]

scription overseas was again made one of the issues in this country.

I wish just to add, so far as a national government is concerned, that I think a party which represents in this parliament some 183 members out of a total membership of 245 may pretty well claim to be a "national" government in the truest sense of the word.

One further word. When the present administration appealed to the people, it did so after the war had been in existence for some time. The policies of the present administration were known. So also was the personnel of the administration. All were before the country, and the majority by which the people returned the present administration indicated pretty clearly that the government which they wished to have carry on the affairs of the nation during this war was the government whose policies they supported in the election. More than that, the fact that in that campaign every member of the administration from the Atlantic to the Pacific was returned is another evidence of how well-satisfied the people were with the government of the day.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will leave the matter there for the present. My hon. friend says "Hear, hear." I should be glad to hear from my hon. friend the leader of the opposition who are the particularly strong men in the group about him whom he feels should be brought into the administration at the present time. I hope he will not ask me as the leader of the administration to accept as a colleague any of those in the front benches before me who have said that they thought I was quite unqualified to be the leader of a government at the present time.

When I take into the administration additional gentlemen in order to strengthen it, one of the first qualifications which I shall require of them, as of anyone else, is, loyalty to myself, and not a disposition to stab the leader of the party in his breast when he is trying to serve his country to the best of his ability at a time of war.

I am just as ready as anyone else can possibly be to endeavour to strengthen this administration. Two or three times in the last few days I have indicated to the country and to parliament that I have had very much in mind the desirability of bringing into the administration one or two or more gentlemen who will help to give, in the minds of the people, an assurance of added strength with respect to the administration. But let me say to my friend the hon, member for Témiscouata that I am going to make the choice of the men I wish for this ministry, and if I think it best to choose any particular gentleman to fill the position of Minister of Labour because I think he commands the confidence of labour better than anyone else in this country, I propose to decide accordingly and to decide without fear of any kind whom I intend to have in the cabinet. As Prime Minister I propose to exercise to the full the authority given to me to select men in whom not only I have confidence but who I believe will serve to increase the confidence in the administration existing throughout the country; and I shall not be influenced in the making of that choice by other than my sense of profound duty in this grave situation.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition mentioned one other matter. He asked whether before this measure passes I would give an undertaking that I will not prorogue this session, but adjourn. In a previous session of parliament I gave one undertaking, which was that I would not dissolve parliament until after parliament had at least been brought together. I held to my promise in that regard, but I learned one lesson which I shall not forget, and which I intend to keep in mind at the present and at all times. It is this, that at no time should a Prime Minister tie his hands with respect to what he may wish to do with respect to the life of parliament. I propose both with respect to adjournment and prorogation, and, if needs be, dissolution, to exercise my full authority as Prime Minister at the time I think it may be necessary to exercise it and in the way I think it is necessary to exercise it. And I shall not have my hands bound in any way.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Limitation in respect of service overseas.

Mr. BROOKS: The Prime Minister in speaking the other day mentioned the fact that we had troops in Newfoundland and Iceland and some other territories adjoining the coast of Canada. Section 3 reads:

The powers conferred by the next preceding section may not be exercised for the purpose of requiring persons to serve in the military, naval or air forces outside of Canada and the territorial waters thereof.

It occurs to me that, in view of Newfoundland being so near to Canada, and Iceland, and St. Pierre and Miquelon which may possibly pass to other hands than the French, and because the coast of Labrador is a part of Canada geographically although a part of Newfoundland politically, this section might be amended to read, "in or adjacent to Canada."

It does seem anomalous that we can raise troops for the defence of Canada but could not send those same troops to Labrador or to Newfoundland or even to the islands adjacent to our coast for the protection of our own country. I mention that, and feel that an amendment is necessary permitting the sending of our troops to these areas for our own protection.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The suggestion my hon, friend has made is a natural one to make, and in many particulars would commend itself to me immediately, were it not that it might give rise to some confusion in the minds of some hon. members and people throughout the country were the scope of this measure as it is at present in the powers it gives the ministry to be enlarged in any way. Up to the present there has been no difficulty whatever in getting the necessary men to serve outside Canada without compulsion, and I think for the present we had better keep this bill in exactly the form in which it has been brought down, and not seek to amend it at all.

But may I thank my hon, friend for speaking of these outlying areas, particularly referring to Iceland? It enables me to give a word of explanation which perhaps is necessary in view of a wrong impression that I see conveyed in some quarters in the press. There seems to be an impression that the men who have gone from Canada to Iceland were part of the first Canadian division. They were not. The first Canadian division is overseas entirely. The men who have gone on the first contingent of a new expeditionary force are men who have been sent since the first division crossed, and did not belong to the first division at all. I want to make that clear. I say to my hon, friend that I think he will find that so far as Iceland and territories immediately adjacent to Canada are concerned, we shall not have any difficulty in meeting the situation there without making an exception to what is intended by the government in the matter of there being no conscription for overseas service.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I regret that the Prime Minister has taken that rigid attitude. My colleague consulted me about this matter to-day; it had not occurred to me. But I have been in Labrador. I suppose not many hon. members have been there. Labrador is full of fine harbours and tablelands which would be very convenient taking-off places; much more convenient, I suggest, than Iceland. I hope the government will give consideration to this suggestion. It is offered in the utmost good faith.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, absolutely, I appreciate that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It is not intended to embarrass the administration in any way. By the insertion of two or three or half a dozen apt words this section could be amended to take care of the situation. Places could be named if necessary. I could do it very quickly. I did not draft anything at all because I really thought that the Prime Minister would accept this suggestion without any reservation or delay. I ask him still to consider it. There are numerous fine harbours right opposite the strait of Belle Isle which, if taken, might constitute a menace to the province of Quebec and adjacent territory. I would press this upon the Prime Minister. I do it with the utmost good faith, because I have been over the territory to a certain degree.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon, friend will realize that the matter of the extension of any provision of this measure is one that I would certainly wish to consider with my colleagues before attempting to make a final pronouncement with respect to the action to be taken. But as I have said, apart from that altogether, if there were doubt in my mind concerning the securing through voluntary enlistment of the forces that may be required to go to these places, I might feel differently on the matter. My hon, friend may rely on the government watching with great care the very matter that he has suggested and which the hon, member who proposed the amendment had in mind in proposing it.

Mr. POULIOT: I understand that in virtue of this legislation various classes will be called in turn. May I ask the Prime Minister if, when a certain class of conscripts is called, the conscripted men of other classes could enlist for home service without at the same time being obliged to give their consent for overseas service?

I want to make it as clear as possible. In virtue of this section various classes of conscripted men will be called in turn.

Mr. STIRLING: We do not know that.

Mr. POULIOT: And I would ask the Prime Minister whether a man who does not belong to the class that is called can enlist for home defence without being obliged to give his consent to serve overseas.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Anyone may enlist for home defence; and if there are some who are not inclined to enlist for home defence and the necessity for their enlistment should arise, this measure will give us the power to compel them to enlist. I do not know that I grasp the further point of my hon, friend's remark.

Mr. POULIOT: I understand that in virtue of this section certain classes of conscripted men are called in turn for home defence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The method that may be followed in calling out men for home defence will be decided by the Department of National Defence, and no doubt the department will settle it in accordance with the need that may arise. There is nothing in this legislation that says men are to be called out in any certain order. All this measure does is to give the government authority to take such steps as may become necessary to protect the dominion. They may exercise that authority by having men called out to take a course of training so that they may be fit for fighting if the moment for fighting comes. If that moment comes, then men may be called out in one part of the country, or another, as the Minister of National Defence may deem most advisable; but there is nothing in this measure that obliges the government to follow any particular sequence in dealing with conscripted men. This provides for the mobilization of men for different purposes, some for military purposes, some for industrial and some for other purposes.

Mr. POULIOT: I want to make myself as clear as possible. I am speaking only of mobilization for home defence, and I want to know if a man not in the class that may be called for military service in connection with home defence may enlist just the same, without being obliged to agree to overseas service.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The answer is yes.

Mr. ROWE: Since the Prime Minister has stated that at present there is no sign of any necessity for conscription for overseas service, because there are plenty of volunteers—which I believe to be true—does he expect that there ever will not be plenty of volunteers for home defence?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say. I would rather expect that, in a young country like Canada, the moment it became generally apparent that there was danger of the country being invaded you would find an enthusiastic voluntary response on the part of Canadians. The one thought I would like to get over to the young men of this country is that, having regard to the rapidity with which events have taken place in Europe, and having regard to the state of unrest throughout the world at the present time, I hope none of them will lose a moment in beginning to fit themselves physically for whatever service they may be called upon to perform, voluntarily or, if there is necessity, under the provisions of this act.

Mr. ROWE: I quite agree with the Prime Minister in that; I think compulsory training, if necessary, should be brought in at the earliest possible date, and I think it should apply to all men from the ages of sixteen to fifty. Following the question of the hon. member for Témiscouata, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in the event that it should be necessary to go out and meet the enemy even beyond the borders of Labrador or Newfoundland, those who had been conscripted for home service would have the privilege of volunteering for that duty?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why, certainly; anyone has the privilege of volunteering for any purpose.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I should like to draw attention to the fact that in line 31 on page 1 of the bill it is stated that this power may not be exercised in connection with overseas service. I understand, of course, that in legal phraseology the term "may not" has the same connotation as "shall not". I rise merely to draw the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that in addressing his own compatriots the other day as reported at page 877 of Hansard, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) gave them the assurance that the section would be amended to read "shall not".

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank my hon, friend for raising that point. As a matter of fact, I was going to draw attention to it myself, if no one else had mentioned it. There does appear to be a very natural impression among some hon, members that the word "may" as it appears in the bill gives a discretionary power, and that it does not mean "shall". That is a matter again of the construction of statutes. It is covered by the Interpretation Act. As my hon, friend has said, the Minister of Justice did mention that he would see that all doubts on that score were removed, and before he went away-he is unavoidably absent to-day-he left with me a memorandum signed by the deputy minister of justice, one of the law officers of the crown, setting forth the exact significance of the word "may" as it appears in this section. I should like to read the memorandum in order that it may appear in Hansard. It is addressed to the Minister of Justice and dated Ottawa, June 19, 1940:

1. Referring to the word "may" in the second line of section 3 of the bill, I beg to advise you as follows:—

2. The purpose of the section was to make it clear that the powers conferred by the bill might not be exercised for the purpose of requiring persons to serve in the military, naval or air forces outside of Canada and the territorial waters thereof.

3. Inasmuch as section 2 of the bill is made subject to the provisions of section 3 no authority is contained in the bill to mobilize persons to serve in the military, naval and air forces outside of Canada and the territorial waters thereof.

4. In these circumstances I approved of the section as drafted, because both from the standpoint of good English and good legal draftsmanship the word "may" is the proper word to use, and the word "shall" is not the right word to use in this context. However, if the house prefers to substitute the word "shall" for the word "may" I see no objection to this being done, so far as the legal effect of the bill is concerned.

I imagine it would please some members, at all events, if the word "may" were changed to "shall", and if it is going to help remove all possibility of doubt someone might be kind enough to move for me that this section be amended accordingly.

Mr. CARDIN: I move accordingly.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I suggest to the Prime Minister that he adhere to the original draft, which in my judgment is correct and does not require any amendment. I think the legal gentlemen will agree with me. It may be a good thing to appease a fear, but if the Prime Minister amends the bill in this particular I think he will be making a mistake from the legal point of view.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I had given my undertaking to the Minister of Justice to see that this was done if there was a desire in any quarter in the house that it should be done. Perhaps I may say to hon. members that in view of the statement I have just made in the name of the Minister of Justice, and the statement I am making in the name of the government—with, I am happy to say, the entire agreement of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition—hon. members who have entertained any doubts may feel that this would be even a greater security than changing the language of the bill. In that case we might pass the section as it stands.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I wonder if the Prime Minister would care to advise the house and the country when the first call will be made so far as the mobilization of man-power is concerned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I were in a position to do so, I would; but I am not.

Amendment (Mr. Cardin) withdrawn. Section agreed to.

On section 4—Limitation.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 4 carry? Carried.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, it is not carried; but it will be carried shortly if you, Mr. Chairman, will be polite enough to let me speak. I have not delayed this bill, as I am sure all hon. members will agree; neither has any member of this party delayed it. The words "state of war" in the second line of this section have a distinctive meaning. as I understand the situation. I have not had an opportunity of looking up exactly what it means, or how long a state of war may be said to exist. We do know that under the War Measures Act the government proclaimed a state of war; I think that was the second order in council passed under that act. After the last war a state of war continued for some little time after the armistice. I am not sure just how long that was; but I am just wondering how long after the armistice may be completed-if it is completed-the country should be said to be in a state of war. This is a technical point, I admit. I suppose I should have hunted out the information, myself, but I thought there would be somebody on the government benches who would be able to say quickly just what the situation would be. I am sure if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) were in his seat, he could make a statement. However, I should like to know what the government has in mind, because I believe there should be some limitation. We do not want to keep on the statute books provisions for compulsory military service when there is no necessity for them. I believe all hon, members will agree on that point. Can it be determined just when a state of war ceases to exist?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I can indicate to the leader of the opposition what the government had in mind: The state of war would exist until the signing of the peace.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The formal peace treaty?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think that would be satisfactory.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Tabling of orders and regulations.

Mr. COLDWELL: Before the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) spoke this evening, I had on my desk an amendment to this section which I intended to move. I mention this point because I want to have it clear that my remarks are not prompted by what either the leader of the opposition or the Prime Minister has said. The powers conferred by this bill are very wide indeed. In Great Britain it is provided that the powers and regulations taken under their act must be tabled in the House of Commons within twenty-eight days of the making of such regulations. In a country the size of Canada it is quite impossible for this parliament either to remain in session indefinitely from day to day, or to be called together every twentyeight days. But I think that, in times like these, this parliament should neither prorogue nor adjourn for a period of longer than, shall we say, ninety days.

We are not asking the Prime Minister to tie his hands or to give the House of Commons a promise. It seems to me the house should decide that the government ought to meet the House of Commons at least every ninety days for the duration of the war. That is to say, the house should neither prorogue nor adjourn for a period of longer than ninety days. If the matter of indemnity is raised, it seems to me we might surmount that difficulty by paying the indemnity once annually. Then, if subsequent sessions are called after adjournment or prorogation, there would be no further indemnity for any other session held within a period of twelve months from the beginning of the session for which the indemnity has been paid.

I believe the house owes it to itself and to the country, apart from any question of confidence or lack of confidence in the government or in the Prime Minister, to decide that when we are conferring such wide powers, powers which are almost dictatorial, we should see to it that all regulations made under the act are reviewed by parliament at least every ninety days or so. It is true that the government won the election, but to a good many democratic people in Canada it has seemed more than passing strange that in a country where we profess democracy, eleven and a half months should have elapsed without a regular session of parliament. In view of the gravity of the hour, in view of the situation facing us and in view of the wide powers we are conferring upon the government, we owe it to the people of Canada to lay down the stipulation that these wide powers ought not to be exercised unless they can be reviewed by parliament at least every ninety days.

I would remind the Prime Minister that all through the years he has been respected across Canada because of one distinguishing feature of his public career, and it has been this: There is no man in Canada who has told the people more frequently that parliament is supreme and that parliament must decide. I suggest to-night to the Prime Minister that it is not a question of lack of confidence in his personality, or anything of that sort, but merely that in a country operating under democratic institutions, and where powers of a dictatorial type have been conferred by parliament upon the government, we ought to lay down a stipulation that for the duration of the war, during which such wide powers are conferred, parliament shall not recess either by prorogation or by adjournment for a period of more than ninety days. My own first thought was that sixty days might be better, but the ninety-day period has been suggested to me, and I believe it is a reasonable request.

Therefore, unless the government accepts my suggestion—in which event I should be pleased to withdraw my amendment—I move:

That section 5 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words: "And parliament shall, for the duration of the war, not prorogue or adjourn for a period longer than ninety days at one time."

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I say a word before the Prime Minister replies, and thereby give him a little more time to consider the matter? The amendment of course goes farther than I urged earlier in the day. What I had in mind-and I hope I made myself quite clear-was that I should like to see parliament not prorogue when the business of the session is concluded, but that it should adjourn from time to time. Some arrangement should be made whereby, if there was no necessity of meeting at the end of that period, parliament could be again adjourned. I do not know that I am expressing myself very well, but my point is this: Sometimes parliament prorogues to a certain date; and then it is further prorogued, and further prorogued, and then it is called for the dispatch of business. If some such modus operandi as that could be put into effect, it might meet the situation.

I believe, however, the government should give heed to the suggestion that we should not be dismissed now in July, and then not meet again until next January, February or March, or whatever time the government might see fit to call us together. This country is at war, and parliament ought to be consulted frequently. That is the democratic way, and especially in war-time. I know that we are living in a country of vast geographical distances, and that members from the Pacific coast or from the far east would be inconvenienced and would suffer hardships if they were to come here often. But I think we all were elected for a specific duty in war-time and we ought to be willing 95826-621 to make any sacrifice of time that we may be called upon to make. I urge the Prime Minister in the most conciliatory way that I can to give consideration to some such suggestion as this and incorporate it in the bill. These are dictatorial powers that are being granted. Since this debate began, I have tried to visualize the uproar the Prime Minister would have made had a Conservative government been asking for similar powers. He would have made the welkin ring. However, that is past and gone and I am not going to revert to it. I do suggest that he give some consideration to consulting parliament. Surely that is one of our democratic principles. He should be the first to accept it, having regard to his past record and his expressed opinions.

Enough for that. I should like to call the attention of hon, members to the last clause of section 5. These powers are to be carried on under orders in council or by regulation and this section provides that every order or regulation passed under the authority of this measure shall be tabled in parliament forthwith if parliament is in session. That is quite all right; that is just what the government ought to do. But when parliament is not in session, should the Prime Minister not adjourn parliament, it has been suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Coldwell) who preceded me that we would have no opportunity of getting these orders in council until within two weeks of the opening of the next following session. I cannot believe that this is a proper provision.

Whoever drafted this section simply followed the usual form in connection with routine orders in council. But these are war measures having the force of legislation. These orders in council should be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette, and every hon, member of this house should be furnished with a certified copy. Surely that is a reasonable request. We ought to know immediately what they are. There is no provision in this bill even for publication in the Canada Gazette. I do not believe that was an intentional omission. I hope that the attention of the Prime Minister having been drawn to this omission, he will have it rectified. I believe he will see the necessity of letting the public know what these orders in council are. He may answer that this will be done through the newspapers, but that is not enough. That is not evidence. I suggest to the Prime Minister that when parliament is not in session, these orders in council be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette and that certified copies be sent to every hon. member of this and the other house. That will not cost very much money. Will the Prime Minister do that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The suggestion made by the leader of the opposition is one that there should be little difficulty in accepting. I agree with him that this particular section has been drafted in the customary manner. I may say that in connection with the defence of Canada regulations the practice has been to have them published in the Canada Gazette and make a certain distribution of copies of the regulations apart from the Gazette. I do not know to what extent that is done, but certainly copies are sent to the leaders of the different parties.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I agree with that, but anyone else must apply for them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would undertake to see that in connection with regulations made under this legislation the same practice is followed as is followed in connection with the defence of Canada regulations. Perhaps that will meet the request of my hon. friend.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not think it does. What I want the government to do is to publish these orders in council forthwith in the Canada Gazette when parliament is not in session, and to have certified copies sent to members of the House of Commons and the other house. Let members of this house know what the government legislation is. I understand the defence of Canada regulations are published in the Canada Gazette and supplied to the leaders of the parties, but they are not supplied to private members unless they apply for them.

Mr. PINARD: They are, every one.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Excuse me; they are not. They are not sent to private members except on application. I am sorry to tell the hon. gentleman that I have received the Canada Gazette for fifteen years, and unless a particular copy contained something special, it went into the waste-paper basket. I imagine that hundreds and hundreds of copies meet a similar fate. It may not be very respectful to the Canada Gazette, but I am afraid that is what happens.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would it meet the situation if the government published the regulations in the Canada Gazette as they are passed?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They might be put in a special issue.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Have them published in the Canada Gazette and then have reprints of the regulations struck off separately and sent to each member of par-[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

liament. My hon, friend is quite right in suggesting that this be done and I am glad he has made the suggestion.

The hon, member for Rosetown-Biggar has suggested that parliament should meet once ever so often, and he quoted what I have frequently said about the supremacy of parliament and the right of parliament to decide. Let me make my position perfectly clear in this regard. What I have said as to the supremacy of parliament has always referred to the supremacy of parliament over the government or the administration. Parliament is supreme as against the executive, but the people are supreme as against parliament. That is the point which I wish to make very clear. The supreme authority in the state is the people from whom parliament derives its authority.

It may become necessary to appeal to the people for an expression of their views. That right must be reserved to the administration and I intend to hold firmly to that. I am certainly not contemplating another general election at the moment, but I can imagine a situation which might arise where it would be necessary to appeal to the people. In the course of a war such as this, if matters were to take a turn whereby, because of certain circumstances it became impossible for parliament to carry on, I would not hesitate for five minutes to give the people another opportunity of expressing their views. I do not think it desirable that the Prime Minister should bind his hands for one minute with respect to the limit of time that we should carry on. My hon. friend suggests three months, but no one can tell what situation may develop within that time.

I can say frankly to hon, members that it is a source of comfort rather than the opposite to have parliament in session at a time such as this. I say that quite sincerely. There is comfort in the sense of knowing that where the situation is as serious as it is, the body of the people's representatives are here and can express freely their views, as can the government its views and what it is doing, in a manner which it is not possible to do through the press. I do not mean physical comfort in the matter of day to day attendance on parliament and carrying on the business that is expected of a member of the administration, but I do mean, and mean quite sincerely, that I would not wish a long period to elapse, with the country and the world in the state in which it now is, without having an opportunity of consulting members of parliament and having them fully informed with respect to what the government is doing.

Whatever action is taken by the administration, either in the way of doing anything or of not doing anything, will always have to be taken in the light of its responsibility to the people of the country, and I cannot conceive of a government seeking to adopt any course in this period which would run counter to public opinion generally. By public opinion I do not mean the voice of one or two or three or four newspapers. I think the last general election made pretty clear what the public thought, as contrasted with what one or two particular newspapers in this country seemed to regard as public opinion, or sought to have others believe was the expression of public opinion. But I hope the day will never come when I cease to be sensitive to public opinion at large throughout the dominion. In the light of that attitude I certainly would wish to see that parliament carries on its proceedings as seems best in the interests of the country. All situations being considered and not knowing what situation may arise or what may happen from day to day, I wish to be perfectly free in the matter of deciding, after advising with my colleagues, when parliament shall be called, if that is necessary, when it shall recess, or if necessary when it shall prorogue and when it shall dissolve.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May we ask the Prime Minister without any commitment, without any pledge, without any promise, without prejudice and all the other legal phraseology that I might use, to give consideration to calling parliament oftener?

Mr. MACKENIE KING: I will, with great pleasure.

Mr. STIRLING: May I suggest to the Prime Minister that it would be helpful if this certified copy were sent to each hon. member of either house of parliament immediately after it is published in the Canada Gazette.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, that is right.

Mr. STIRLING: I understood that it was to be done when the house was not sitting, and I suggest that a certified copy be sent whether the house is sitting or not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall be quite agreeable to that.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the Prime Minister please have that inserted in the bill? This clause surely will not stand as it is because it reads "shall be tabled in parliament forthwith if parliament is in session and, if parliament is not in session, within two weeks of the opening of the session next following". The other wording would have to be substituted for this.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think both methods might be followed. We might leave the bill as it is and table all the regulations when a new parliament meets, and if parliament is in session table them from day to day, and supply hon. members with a copy of the particular order as it appears in the Canada Gazette.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Let me draft an amendment now for the Prime Minister. We might say: "and if parliament is not in session then every order or regulation passed under the authority of this act shall be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette and certified copies thereof be sent to every member of the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada forthwith". There is your amendment.

Mr. COLDWELL: I might have sent a copy of the amendment to the Prime Minister had I had an extra copy by me. I think he has misinterpreted the amendment. The amendment is not intended to prevent the calling of parliament every week if the Prime Minister should so desire, nor is there any attempt to limit the right of the Prime Minister to decide upon dissolution. But when we are giving such dictatorial powers as are being given by this bill, I think parliament should not recess for more than ninety days at a time. That is the only intent of the amendment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend, and I think he will appreciate this, that I have in my mind at this moment a situation which I should like to have dealt with in the last few hours; in fact, yesterday I would have been glad to have been able to deal with it under the powers given by this bill. But the action which the government would wish to take is to anticipate something that is expected, and if every order is to be immediately printed and distributed, immediately it becomes public the whole purpose of that particular action might be defeated. These are double-edged swords, and while I have every desire to meet every wish of hon. members that is reasonable, at the same time I think in times like these the government ought to be permitted in connection with the distribution of some at least of these orders to exercise a wise discretion as to the moment at which publicity should be given to them. In other words, if giving publicity to a particular order is going to defeat the end for which the order is intended, it should be understood that the government will have the right to reserve publication of that order, but of course it will be accountable to parliament later on for the reservation so made.

May I say this further. Hon. members have referred to the extent to which I would have exclaimed had these powers been taken at other times and the extent to which I did exclaim when similar powers were taken. But when I spoke I was speaking of powers taken in times of peace and I always made an exception with respect to what might be necessary in times of war. I think every hon. member will see that the authority and discretion of the executive has to be enlarged in time of war in a manner which would not be necessary in time of peace. I just want to make that clear because it does explain the difference between my readiness to denounce extreme powers being granted to the executive in time of peace and the necessity, which in many respects I greatly deplore, of the executive having to have enlarged powers in time of war.

Mr. TUCKER: I would point out to the Prime Minister that the very purpose he has in mind with respect to reserving publicity concerning certain orders would be defeated by the wording of the section as it now stands, because it says that if parliament is in session you must immediately table every order, and so it becomes public property at once.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was pointing out that while that provision is there, I would feel that an explanation could be given to parliament which would be thoroughly satisfactory and which would meet a situation of that kind. I should like to reserve the same right in respect to the period between sessions of parliament.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am certainly impressed in a degree with the reasons the Prime Minister has given. But let me say to him that the ordinary way of doing this in Canada, and the way in which it was done in England with respect to the conscription of man-power, was by public statute. The marshalling of man-power in England was not done by regulations under the law of May 22. It was done with meticulous care by parliament itself in a public statute. I think we must ask the government to go that far and to let the public know just how they propose to take people for military service, and let the financial institutions know just what they are expected to do under the regulations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No trouble as to that at all.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): A question of treason or sabotage would be dealt with under another law altogether. I really cannot imagine for one moment anything which the government might want to do under this act—they might wish to do something under the other act—which they would not want the public to know about, and therefore I have drafted an amendment which I submit again and which covers not only the point I raised myself but the point raised by my colleague. I suggest that section 5 be amended to read:

Every order or regulation passed under the authority of this act shall be tabled in parliament forthwith if parliament is in session, and a copy thereof sent to every member of the House of Commons and of the Senate, and if parliament is not in session, then every such order or regulation shall be forthwith published in the Canada Gazette, and copies thereof sent to every member of the House of Commons and the Senate forthwith.

The CHAIRMAN: I did not want to interrupt the leader of the opposition, but I must draw his attention to the fact that we have before the chair the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, and it must be disposed of.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Excuse me.

The CHAIRMAN: Or this could be an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No. I would prefer to move it after the hon, member's amendment is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN: If the leader of the opposition will wait a few minutes, we can dispose of it. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Which amendment? The amendment of my hon. friend with regard to the ninety days? No. I have given my hon. friend and the committee generally my views with respect to the necessity of the government reserving its rights as to adjournments and prorogations and dissolutions, and I think, with the situation as it exists at the present time, I cannot agree to have my hands tied in any way. It is not that I would not wish to meet my hon, friend in the matter of control by parliament, but because I cannot foresee what situations will arise. If I began to state them I think it might alarm everybody, and there is no necessity of trying to get the country unduly alarmed. I suggest that the government can be trusted to use a wise discretion in this matter. Why should we wish to be without a parliament at a time when parliament is really needed? May I add that it is doubtful whether parliament has the power to fix beforehand the duration of its sessions. I do not believe that would be constitutional.

Mr. COLDWELL: The amendment does not seek to do that.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Coldwell) negatived.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has suggested that section 5 should be amended so that it will read as follows:

Every order or regulation passed under the authority of this act shall be tabled in parliament forthwith if parliament is in session, and a copy thereof sent to every member of the House of Commons and of the Senate, and if parliament is not in session, then every such order or regulation shall be forthwith published in the Canada Gazette, and copies thereof sent to every member of the House of Commons and the Senate forthwith.

My colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) has applied his legal draftsmanship to the expert task of adding the following to protect the situation to which I made reference:

Provided that any of the steps specified in this section may be omitted or deferred if the governor in council consider such omission or deferment necessary in the national interest having regard to the special circumstances.

If that is satisfactory, would my hon, friend like to move it himself?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No; the right hon. gentleman had better move it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I doubt if I have the right to amend my own bill.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have had too many honours thrust upon me.

Mr. RALSTON: I move the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 6, preamble and title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MacINNIS: Before this bill is read a third time, there is a word that must be said from this corner of the house. When parliament met in special session last September, the Prime Minister pleaded for the cooperation of all parties and groups in the house. This group, as far as we could, have tried to cooperate. We have not, I am sure, caused the Prime Minister or the government any embarrassment. We are now faced with a bill which asks for the widest of powers; as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) said two evenings ago, this is the broadest blank cheque ever given to its executive by any parliament. I presume that means just what it says—any parliament in any country—that is, provided the parliament was to continue.

We appreciate the fact that the times call for wide powers for the government, and we are anxious to give the government those wide powers. Consequently we are not opposing the principle of the bill. But we do want assurance that in carrying out the powers given to it the government will not carry them out in one direction only. We know from past experience that when this bill passes, the compulsory features of the bill as applying to the human resources will be carried out as and when necessary. We have not the assurance, we do not know, that these compulsory features will be carried out with regard to the material resources of the country. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister has told us that as far as enlistment is concerned either for home defence or for overseas, there is no need for compulsion at the present time. But there is need for compulsion in this country with regard to the use of the material resources of the country, because the "two hundred families" in this country who own the resources of Canada are not giving that cooperation which is necessary at this time. Their prototypes in both Great Britain and France have held up the productive effort of these countries, to the disaster at least of France. We are far from satisfied that the compulsory features in the bill will be applied to these interests. What do we see to-day? There is hardly a big business interest in the country that is not now represented in an advisory capacity to the government. These people are strong in the councils of the government.

The Prime Minister, speaking on Tuesday evening, repudiated even the suggestion of the idea that the human element would not be given every consideration. Let me tell the Prime Minister that on October 14, 1935, when he heard of his election and the election of his party, he said in a radio address broadcast over the whole of this dominion that the first, the supreme concern of his government would be to alleviate the distress which was then prevailing because of the poverty of the great mass of the people. That distress still continues, and he has done nothing about it. Nothing has been done about it. As I said the other evening, the rich are becoming richer and the poor poorer.

In my own city of Vancouver last October, young transients who had applied to the provincial relief office for relief were arrested in front of the office, and one of them was given six months in gaol as a vagrant. Another was given three months. He appealed his case, and the judge who heard the appeal upheld it because he said there was no evidence whatsoever to show that the person was a vagrant in the sense stated in the charge. But before that took place, this other man who was given six months had served practically four months in gaol, and he was released only after I made representations to the Department of Justice at Ottawa. This is not an isolated case; there are hundreds of them, thousands of them, which is proof positive that the human element is not being taken care of.

This evening and all through the discussion of this bill the Prime Minister has rejected every offer, every suggestion made by hon. members in this corner of the house, and has stated in the most emphatic language that he would not have his hands tied in any way whatsoever. There is no use in asking people to cooperate unless you are willing to cooperate. It takes two at least for cooperation. We have tried to cooperate, and all our efforts have been rejected. There is nothing further for us to do except to use the few privileges that are left to us as long as parliament is in session. Under the provisions of standing order 77, paragraph 813, I move the following amendment, seconded by Mr. Coldwell:

That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it so that the governor in council shall not authorize the compulsory mobilization of human resources until he has first authorized the compulsory mobilization of essential war industries and financial institutions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask Your Honour, whether you regard this amendment as in order. It seems to me it takes away from the governor in council the power which the measure is intended to give, and changes the direction in which the government may exercise its authority. It is against the principle adopted in the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. member wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. MacINNIS: I thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct your attention to paragraph 813 of standing order 77, which reads:

When a bill comes up for third reading a member may move that it be not now read a member may move that it be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it in any particular. The motion for third reading is debatable under standing order 38. Or the bill may then be ordered to be reprinted or committed to a select committee. Bills may be recommitted a number of times with or without limitation; in the latter case, the whole bill is opened to reconsideration, but in the former case the committee can only consider the clause or amendments or instructions referred to them.

I think that is all I want to say in that regard, and I believe it is quite clear.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. gentleman wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. NEILL: I would point out that the amendment is worded contrary to the rule. It should read "with instructions that they have power to amend." It is not in order to give a direct command to the committee. The usual form is to refer it back to the committee with instructions that they have power to amend. It cannot be made mandatory.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. gentleman wish to speak? The amendment as moved does limit the bill, in the scope of the bill, and therefore in my opinion the amendment is not in order. Also, as is pointed out by the hon, member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), it should be referred back to the committee with instructions "that they have power" to amend it. I therefore rule the amendment out of order.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

VACANCY

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a communication from two members notifying me that the following vacancy has occured in the representation, viz:

Of Honourable Norman McLeod Rogers, member for the electoral district of Kingston City, by decease.

I have accordingly issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

ALLEVIATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND AGRICUL-TURAL DISTRESS-UNDERTAKINGS IN GENERAL INTEREST AND FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

TO PROVINCES

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 18, consideration in committee of Bill No. 42, to assist in the alleviation of unemployment and agricultural distress-Mr. McLarty-Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1-Short title.

Mr. McLARTY: I should like to answer one or two questions which were directed to me during the discussion on the resolution preceding this bill. My first answer is to the leader of the opposition who inquired as to the amount of real money involved in this measure. Perhaps I can best serve the purpose by referring the hon, member to page 17 of the estimates, where I think his question is completely answered. I am sure he will not wish me to read it. It will of course be dealt with on the estimates.

Then the hon. member for Lethbridge asked for a report as to the result of the canvass which was made by the interdepartmental committee involving war industries. This report covered two points. First, it dealt with the number of men immediately required by those particular industries engaged in war work, and the canvass showed that 7,721 were required immediately, while in those industries in which assistance would be required in the near future, the report indicated that the number they would require would be 9,327. Those are the figures that were obtained by the committee through a canvass of those industries engaged in war work on present contracts.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Agreements with provinces and others.

Mr. MacNICOL: In the Toronto newspapers of June 15 an announcement appeared in regard to the opening of technical schools for summer training, in which it was stated that the federal and provincial governments would share the cost of operating those schools to train young people for work in factories. Is that correct?

Mr. McLARTY: Yes, it is correct, but we are trying to enlarge it to much more than that. We are not limiting it to the younger people but are including the retraining of those who need retraining in connection with employment in war industries. Not only, however, does that apply to the city of Toronto; I think I am safe in saying that it applies to every technical school in Canada possessing the necessary facilities.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I should like to direct attention to the fact that this bill is the same as in other years except that one section is being dropped. Last year that was section 3, which in its first clause provided for the governor in council, out of moneys appropriated by parliament, executing such undertakings as the governor in council might determine to be in the general interests of Canada. The second part of that section provided that unemployed persons on relief should be used on these undertakings.

I think it is unfortunate in the extreme that this section is being dropped. In 1935 the present administration was elected largely on the policy, as set out by the Prime Minister at that time, of setting up a national employment commission for (a) the providing of relief for those in necessitous circumstances and (b) to provide work for the unemployed. What we in this corner have complained about year after year when these bills have come down is that while the (a) part of the Prime Minister's promise was looked after in some fashion—we felt too niggardly a fashion -the (b) part, providing that the unemployed would be put to work, was looked after but very little, and there was no definite, constructive policy to deal with the question of unemployment. Year after year we have witnessed the same bill brought down providing the same subsistence for the people on relief, with a few undertakings to put people to work, such as farm placements, forestry work and so on. We have said we ought to be having less and less relief, as it has been dispensed, and more and more public works and government undertakings to utilize the services of people both in towns and on farms who want to earn wages.

Now we are witnessing the last vestige of the (b) part of the Prime Minister's promise fading into insignificance. This bill has now become nothing more or less than a dole bill. The last bit of provision for putting the unemployed to work is now apparently to disappear, and we are to sink into the position where we are to say to the many hundreds of thousands of people who, according to the government's own figures, are still getting relief, that we have nothing to offer, that we have no constructive policy, and that all we are now doing is to provide more grants in aid to the provinces to enable them to keep these people from actual starvation.

I think some explanation ought to be given why this section is being taken out. In the summary of the estimates for the present fiscal year it is noteworthy that of the $77,000,000 which has been cut off last year's expenditures, the sum of $4,827,000 has been taken off the Department of Agriculture, and $12,170,000 off the Department of Labour, and that chiefly off the expenditures for unemployment relief.

I noticed, according to the Leader-Post of May 27, that the government of Saskatchewan was greatly perturbed about the fact that the announcement of the federal estimates for this year would mean serious curtailment of work on highways, and roads into mining camps, all of which would make it less possible than it had been previously to employ people on relief, and to give them some opportunity in the summer months to earn a few dollars to buy the commodities they need.

I do not think any government, whether it holds office in time of war or in peace time, can be content to allow almost ten per cent of its population to sink into a state of perpetual degradation, to permit them to live on relief and then come to this House of Commons year after year and present absolutely nothing by way of a constructive policy to meet conditions existing throughout the country; for, despite any statement to the contrary, the report of the commissioner of unemployment and agricultural assistance, tabled in the house a few days ago, shows that the situation in Canada is actually not much better than it was even before the war. I draw the attention of hon, members to figures published in that report. These are the figures by months of the total relief recipients for the province of Saskatchewan and for the Dominion of Canada.

1939:	Total relief recipients for Saskatchewan	Total relief recipients for Canada
April. May. June. July. August. September October. November December	320,473 307,569 298,512 281,909 55,083 65,741 93,384	1,004,856 923,421 839,326 805,654 802,652 539,013 543,883 585,696 629,246
1940: January February March	118,311 133,009	714,143 753,065 768,500

The month of March was the last month for which there were complete figures. May I point in particular to the sudden change which took place between August and September, 1939. A close perusal of these two columns of figures shows that any decline in the total is largely accounted for by the decline in the number of recipients in Saskatchewan. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) will no doubt certify, the drop in the number of relief recipients in Saskatchewan began in the month of September, and that was the month when the acreage bonus was supposed to be paid under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Oh, no; the acreage bonus was not supposed to be paid until December. That was the month in which the wheat was threshed.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): But the relief of those who were eligible to receive the bonus stopped in the month of August. August was the last month in which they received relief. There were 281,909 receiving it in August, and the number dropped to 55,083 in September, or a drop of about 230,-000 people in one month. That was the situation in Saskatchewan.

I made no statement at all when the resolution preceding this bill was before the house, because the hon. member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen), the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson), and the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) outlined conditions in Saskatchewan. I thought they did it very well. As one who has travelled over a good part of Saskatchewan I knew that what they were saying constituted a fair portrayal of actual conditions. I was surprised when the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Tripp) rose in his place and said that what the hon. member for Mackenzie was saying was not true. I was surprised when the hon, member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Donnelly) made an objection.

Mr. TRIPP: May I correct the statement of the hon. member? I did not say that all the statements of the hon. member for Mackenzie were untrue.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I read Hansard next day, and I understood Hansard to report it in that way.

Mr. TRIPP: I used those words in this sense, that all roses are not red, or that all men are not tall. That is the sense of what I said.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I will not argue with the hon. member. He explains that what he says therein is not what was intended. I am very glad to have his explanation. But what I want to say to the committee is that when the hon. member for Assiniboia, the hon. member for Wood Mountain, and any others objected to or differed from descriptions given about conditions in Saskatchewan, it was their duty, and it is still their duty before the bill is finally passed, to tell the committee just what the actual conditions are among the people in their constituencies, and among relief recipients in Saskatchewan. They should say how the people are getting along. I will tell the committee how they are getting along.

I now turn to the statement made by the

I now turn to the statement made by the hon. member for Assiniboia—and I quote, not with the intention of contradicting the hon. member, but only to show that I was not misquoting him. Turning to page 554 of Hansard I find the hon. member for Assiniboia made this statement:

I was a member of the legislature in Saskatchewan for eight years, four of them being from 1934 to 1938, and I can say all the statements he has made to-day are not true. Mr. TRIPP: That is exactly as I said it. But the meaning I wish hon, members to take from it is not that every statement of the hon, member was not true. That was not my meaning. As I said before, I used that expression in the sense that one might say that all roses are not red, and that all men are not tall. That interpretation is far different from the one the hon, member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas) is now making.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): In that event I think the hon. member for Assiniboia has the duty to tell the committee how much of what the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) said was true, and how much was not true.

Mr. GARDINER: May I just read the sentence uttered by the hon. member for Assiniboia:

The hon, member has challenged other members of this house to get up and deny certain statements. I want to deny some of the statements he has made here to-day.

He does not say all of the statements.

I was a member of the legislature in Saskatchewan for eight years, four of them being from 1934 to 1938, and I can say all the statements he has made to-day are not true.

He said, "I want to deny some of the statements he has made here to-day." Some of them were not true. The kind of misrepresentation the hon. gentleman is making is similar to his usual misrepresentation.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Is the Minister of Agriculture to be allowed to impute motives of misrepresentation to me or any other member?

The CHAIRMAN: I did not grasp that there was any motive conveyed. There have been statements of fact made by the hon. gentleman, and there have been denials of those statements of fact. When statements of fact are not true in the opinion of another hon. gentleman and he states that there has been a misrepresentation of fact and challenges the accuracy of the statements, that is not imputing a motive to the hon. gentleman who has first made the statements.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): That is not what I was referring to at all. I think, sir, you must have heard the Minister of Agriculture say that this was the usual kind of misrepresentation I made. I am not going to try to force a withdrawal by the Minister of Agriculture because a statement like that from him is the kind of thing we have had in Saskatchewan for a good many years, and it is not a source that would trouble me greatly. There are members from Saskatchewan on the government side. They know what the facts are. I ask them if they do not agree with the portrayal of conditions which has been given from time to time.

As I said a moment ago, according to these figures the number of people taken off relief last August was 230,000. These were mainly people who were supposed to receive an acreage bonus under the prairie farm assistance scheme. The minister said that this bonus was not payable until December. During September, October and November these people were without relief. Most of them went through December without relief. In my own district the cheques came in on December 22. Many of them went into January and, in some instances, into February. I am not saying anything about the prairie farm assistance scheme. It was a new scheme and many details had to be worked out. But what I want to tell the minister is that during those months of September, October, November, December and, in some instances, January, there was serious want and privation.

Thousands of farmers and their families were only able to live half decently because the store-keepers advanced credit. When they finally received their bonus cheques they owed a great part of them to the local store-keepers. Where a man had a large family and only a small amount of land under cultivation, his bonus cheque would be small and it would not be long before it was spent. There was then an effort to get back on relief. The figures for January, February and March show a gradual increase. A few more here and a few more there were managing to get on the books. In March, 1940, there are still over 200,000 fewer people on relief than there were the year before. There were some 200,000 people who could not get on relief. Many of them, of course, received a bonus and did not need to go on relief. A large number, however, did, but could not get on. They were compelled to give a statement about their bonus, which was only fair, but still they could not get on. I have in mind a man in my own district who had a large family and only a small amount of land under cultivation. He received his bonus, if I remember correctly in the latter part of January, but he owed practically all of it to the store-keeper. Spring came along and he had no seed. He tried to get on relief, but they told him he could not. They told him that if he went north and got work somewhere, his family would be taken care of.

Mr. DONNELLY: Who told him?

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): The municipal council.

Mr. GARDINER: That contradicts the previous statement made by the hon. member.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Not at all. In what regard?

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend is attributing the fact that there was an increase in the number of those on relief to the further fact that some of those people had received assistance under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. He now goes on to show that when they got this assistance they were denied the right to relief. The fact of the matter is that most of those who got relief got it because their wheat was sold in the fall; that is, those who had wheat. When the money was all gone, they then had an opportunity of getting on the list.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): This man had no wheat in the first place.

Mr. GARDINER: You are just telling us that he did not get on the list.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): He did not get on the list. That would account for the increase from 55,000 to 141,000, but it would not account—

Mr. GARDINER: If he did not get on, there would be no increase.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): It does not account for the 342,000 on relief before. This man went up north, leaving a farm on which he had lived for many years. His family was on relief at first, but the last word I received is that the family is now refused relief. The father is hardly making enough to buy himself the necessary overalls and clothes and send a few dollars home. In the districts where no bonus was payable the people stayed on relief during the winter. In the districts where the bonus was payable, the people went off relief at the end of August, but when the bonus came in they had already spent the amount. They then tried to get back on relief. Some were fortunate, but a good many were not. In all the years I have spent in Saskatchewan I have never seen more suffering or more actual privation and want than I saw during the last few months of 1939 and during the spring months of this year, in March and April particularly.

Mr. GARDINER: Those with prairie farm assistance got their payments in March.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Some of them. As I told the minister a few moments ago, a good many of them owed the money before they received their payments. Every store-keeper in southern Saskatchewan will testify to that. Many of them owed more than the amount of their payment. That was the situation which confronted these people.

I rose simply to point out to the minister that it is not enough to keep on paying out a few dollars a month to these people. You cannot keep people alive in any sense of decency with those small amounts. With the exception of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, all measures which offered some opportunity to these people to earn some money are being taken away by the deletion of another section which provided for government projects to provide employment for the unemployed.

Mr. McLARTY: The section to which the hon. member refers as being deleted, might I say again, was never used.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): That makes things much worse. There is $12,500,000 less for public works in the estimates this year, and yet the minister states that this section of the act which was to provide for government work to employ people on relief has never been used. Consequently it is being taken out.

Mr. McLARTY: The section covering arrangements between the dominion and the province to enter into public works is not altered at all. But the section providing for the dominion on its own account to enter into public works has never been used since it has been in the act. No works have been undertaken under it.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Surely the minister will agree that it ought to be used.

Mr. McLARTY: In a time of war, when we are spending hundreds of millions of dollars, and when it has never been used in peace time?

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): So long as there is one man idle in any part of Canada who is not required to work in connection with our war effort, and who needs money in order to maintain his wife and family, it is the duty of the government to provide some form of employment to give him work and wages, which the Liberal party talked of so glibly in 1935. The farm placement schemegone. Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act reduced three-quarters of a million dollars. It simply means that what we are doing is this: People whose services we cannot use in the fighting forces or to help in our war effort in any other way are now to be condemned to a form of dole and be given relief. All I am asking the minister to do-and we have asked it year after year, and it is what many people believed the Liberal party was really going to do—is to provide government projects, particularly in the summer months, in order to give these people a chance to work with their hands and their teams and to earn wages. The relief they get is not enough to allow them to replace their bedding and dishes and to keep their homes and buildings in anything like a decent state of repair. The amount they are allowed for clothing is not sufficient, and the result is that the father and mother go without, so that the children may get what they need. If they do get any opportunity to earn a few extra dollars, it helps them to buy these necessities. If they do not get it, what are they to do? What can they do?

I plead with the government because I am certain this is just one more retrograde step that we are sliding into, accepting as permanently submerged from three-quarters of a million to one million people-a sort of permanently submerged tenth of our population, ill clothed, ill housed and ill fed. Surely it is not outside the power of this government, even if we are at war, to find government projects on which we can put to work these men who cannot be used in any other way. Maybe some of these men with experience as mechanics may be moved to work in munitions factories and other types of war work, but for those who cannot be so used, surely there are many projects which could be undertaken in this country. There is no shortage of food in Canada, or of building materials, or of labour. Think of the natural resources lying untouched in the great west. Think of the number of these people who could be employed, even if it is only for three months in the year. That would enable them to get their hands on some cash and help them to buy clothing, dishes, furniture and some of the other commodities they need, so that when winter time comes round again and they have to go back on this miserable relief dole, they will at least have been able to replenish their homes and provide their families with some degree of warmth and comfort.

I am not saying this in any spirit of criticism because I know what this problem must be like and I have a feeling that both he and the Minister of Agriculture are sympathetic with what I am now saying, for otherwise I fear there would have been a bigger cut in some departments. I plead with the minister not to allow the fact that we are at war to make us careless about the problem of these people in the backward parts of our community whose condition perhaps is not noticed by the great throng which passes by. Let us not forget them but make some provision this session to give them a chance to earn some money and get at least a reasonable standard of living. Nobody in this country is free while one man is enslaved, and nobody in this country can enjoy a decent standard of living contentedly if some group of our people is living in these deplorable conditions.

Canada is facing a time of crisis, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has repeatedly said during these last few days, but the thing that collapses first in a country is not the forts or the navies or the armies; the thing that collapses first is the morale of its people, and what caused some nations in Europe to collapse was that their people had lost everything worth fighting for. Unless we give these people for whom I am speaking a new sense of their manhood and womanhood, a new sense of worth in the community, a realization that the people and government of Canada respect them and think of them still in terms of human personality, the morale of these people must gradually be sapped and they will become excellent ground for subversive doctrines and for people to come along and lead them down unfortunate paths.

Mr. McLARTY: Mr. Chairman, as the Prime Minister wishes to make an announcement, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

ARRANGEMENTS FOR CEREMONY OF INSTALLATION OF THE EARL OF ATHLONE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, hon. members are aware that the ceremony of installation of the Right Honourable the Earl of Athlone as Governor General of Canada will take place in the senate chamber at twelve noon to-morrow. If the bill which passed the house this evening is passed in another place before the ceremony of installation to-morrow, the Earl of Athlone, who by that time will be His Excellency the Governor General, will be asked to give his assent to the bill and such other bills as may be awaiting assent. For that reason I would move that when the house adjourns this evening, it stand adjourned until eleven forty-five o'clock to-morrow morning. By hon. members meeting here at 11.45 a.m., they will receive the formal notice which comes from the secretary of His Excellency the Administrator, informing hon. members that their presence is desired for the purposes of both installation and royal assent to bills. I regret that members of the government will not be able to be in their seats in the house when the message comes because they will be at the station to meet Canada's new governor general upon his arrival in the morning. However, there will be seats reserved in the senate for all hon, members, and if the house meets at 11.45 a.m., the formal notification will be made, and hon. members may then proceed to the senate, and will find their seats there and have the same seats for the purposes of the assent to the bill. I move:

That when the house adjourns, it stand adjourned until 11.45 a.m. to-morrow.

Mr. STIRLING: May I ask whether this arrangement is contingent on the bill passing in another place?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, the assent is, of course. On the other hand I believe it would suit the convenience of hon. members to meet here in any event at 11.45 a.m. and proceed to the senate, where seats will be provided.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Seats will be provided, but not at the bar of the senate?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, the bar of the senate is being visibly moved a little further forward so as still to preserve the arrangement with respect to the bar of the senate. There will be a bar, all right.

Motion agreed to.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, June 21, 1940

The house met at 11.45 a.m.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

INSTALLATION OF THE EARL OF ATHLONE-THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I beg to inform the house that I have received the following communica-

Ottawa,

21st June, 1940

Sir,

I am desired by the Administrator to inform you that the Right Honourable the Earl of Athlone will proceed to the Senate chamber to-day, at 11:50 a.m., for the ceremony of his installation as Governor General of Canada, following which His Excellency the Governor General will remain to give the royal assent to certain bills.

sir. Your obedient servant, F. L. C. Pereira, Acting Secretary to the Administrator.

I have the honour to be,

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The house will now proceed to the senate for the royal assent to certain bills. After the assent has been given the Speaker of the House of Commons will withdraw. Members of the House of Commons who wish to do so may remain in their places, but I would point out that we shall require a quorum of at least twenty when we resume here, after the assent has been given.

Accordingly, the house went up to the senate.

And having returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name royal assent to the following bills:

An act to confer certain powers upon the governor in council for the mobilization of national resources in the present war.

An act respecting the appointment of auditors for National Railways.

An act to amend the Canada Grain Act. An act to amend the Dairy Industry Act.

An act to anish the Daily Industry Act.

An act to ratify and confirm a certain agreement respecting the joint use by Canadian National Railways of certain tracks and premises of the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company, at Vancouver, in the province of British Columbia. An act to amend the Seeds Act, 1937.

An act to authorize the raising, by way of loan, of certain sums of money for the public service.

An act to amend the Department of National Defence Act. An act respecting the Royal Canadian Air

An act to amend the Canada Evidence Act. An act to amend the Trans-Canada Air Lines

Act, 1937. An act to amend the Department of National Revenue Act. An act to authorize an agreement between His Majesty the King and the Corporation of the City of Ottawa.

An act to amend the Militia Pension Act. An act to amend the Wheat Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

DECLARATION RESPECTING ILLEGAL ORGANIZATIONS -CONTROL OF PROPERTIES

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table of the house an order in council declaring illegal an organization known as Technocracy Incorporated; also an order in council providing for the control and management of all properties belonging to associations declared illegal.

If the house wishes to know in what way we will deal with them I would say this, that all property rights and interests in Canada belonging to any illegal organization shall be vested in and be subject to the control and management of the custodian, as defined in the regulations respecting trading with the enemy, 1939.

Subject as hereinafter provided, and for the purpose of the control and management of such property, rights and interests by the custodian, the regulations respecting trading with the enemy, 1939, shall apply mutatis mutandis to the same extent as if such property, rights and interests belonged to an enemy within the meaning of the said regulations.

The property, rights and interests so vested in and subject to the control and management of the custodian, or the proceeds thereof, shall on the termination of the present war be dealt with in such manner as the governor in council may direct.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the order in council, banning Technocracy Incorporated, in the ordinary course of events be printed in the Canada Gazette?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes.

INTERNMENT OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL UNITY PARTY

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to give some further information. Eleven members of the so-called National Unity Party in the last few days have appeared before a court in Montreal for preliminary investigation. Having heard the evidence and having seen the exhibits produced, the presiding judge declared he had reason to believe that a plot has been organized against the state, and he has referred the matter to the attorney general at Quebec. The attorney general at Quebec has sent me a report in the matter, accompanied by certain exhibits which show clearly that those people had communications and intelligence with enemies—Germany, Italy and elsewhere. Accordingly I have issued an order directing the internment of those eleven persons for the duration of the war. Among them are Henri Arcand, Maurice Scott, of Montreal; Joseph C. Farr, and John Lorimer of Toronto.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Are the criminal proceedings to be continued also?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): They will stay in abeyance.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But they are not being abandoned?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Not at all; far from it.

SEQUESTRATION OF PROPERTIES OF DUFFERIN SHIPBUILDING COMPANY AND DUFFERIN PAVING COMPANY

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): While we are on this subject, may I presume to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) if the property of the Dufferin Shipbuilding company and the Dufferin Paving company has been sequestrated? I saw a legal notice in one of the Toronto papers to the effect that the firm of Price, Waterhouse & Company has been appointed to some position in respect of this matter. Probably the minister would be in a position to give the house some information.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Alien enemy property is under the Secretary of State, who is custodian, the under-secretary of state being deputy custodian. I think something has been done, but possibly my colleague would make a statement in the matter.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Perhaps the Secretary of State (Mr. Casgrain) would make a statement. I must apologize for not having asked him in the first instance.

Hon. PIERRE F. CASGRAIN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, all I can say to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) is that Price, Waterhouse & Company have been appointed to look after this matter. As yet I have not received any report, but my hon. friend is correct when he says that we have taken charge of the property of the party in question.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Part or all? Mr. CASGRAIN: All, I understand.

PRIVILEGE

THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—ATTITUDE OF NEWS-PAPERS TOWARDS CONSCRIPTION OF WEALTH

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I never raise questions of privilege, or allude to what appears in the newspapers; but my attention has been called to an editorial in the Ottawa Journal interpreting certain words I used in an address a few days ago as applying to all the newspapers in Canada. That was far from being my intention. I had in mind only two or three newspapers, and I am pleased to say that the Ottawa Journal was not one of them.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE CEDAR RAPIDS MANUFACTURING AND POWER COMPANY

Mr. D. C. ABBOTT (St. Antoine-Westmount) moved the first reading of Bill No. 44, respecting the Cedar Rapids Manufacturing and Power Company.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. ABBOTT: The purpose of this bill is to grant certain powers to this company as now provided for in section 14 of the Companies Act. Three powers are being asked for. The first is the power to sell or dispose of the undertaking of the company or any part thereof for such consideration as the company may think fit. The next is the power to distribute among the shareholders any property or assets of the company of which it may have power to dispose, and the third is the power to amalgamate or consolidate with any other company. The first of these powers is identical with that granted by paragraph (m) of section 14 of the dominion Companies Act. The second is substantially identical with that granted by paragraph (u) of section 14, and the third, while somewhat abbreviated, is similar to that granted by paragraph (b) of the same section.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FIRST READINGS-SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 45, for the relief of Elma Jane Harris Aspell.—Mr. Hazen.

Bill No. 46, for the relief of Edith Leanora Holland Bonnet.—Mr. Bercovitch.

Bill No. 47, for the relief of Dorothy Lavinia Worsley Baker.—Mr. Casselman (Grenville-Dundas).

Bill No. 48, for the relief of Eugene Belanger.
—Mr. McIlraith.

Bill No. 49, for the relief of Rebecca Cohen.

—Mr. McIlraith.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

QUESTION OF ACTION UPON APPLICATIONS FOR ENLISTMENT WHICH HAVE BEEN ACCEPTED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. K. ESLING (Kootenay West): Is the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power) ready to make a statement which would relieve the anxiety of several thousand young men whose applications have been accepted for enlistment in the air force? These men have waited some time for definite word and are beginning to feel somewhat discouraged. Many of them are ignoring the call for enlistment in other branches of the service.

[Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East).]

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air): I shall be very glad to make some such statement at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There are many young men in this position.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

ALLEVIATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND AGRICUL-TURAL DISTRESS—UNDERTAKINGS IN GENERAL INTEREST AND FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES

The house resumed from Thursday, June 20, consideration in committee of Bill No. 42, to assist in the alleviation of unemployment and agricultural distress—Mr. McLarty—Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 3—Agreements with provinces and others.

Mr. MacNICOL: I was quite pleased with the information the minister gave yesterday in reply to a question I asked with reference to the use of technical schools in Toronto. The minister stated that my understanding of the matter was correct. I think this is a step in the right direction. If Canada is to do her part toward winning the war there is no doubt that in a short time many of the plants in this country not now in operation will be operating at full force and there will be need of young men to man these plants. Many young men now taking courses in the technical schools will have an opportunity to take the three months' summer course in order to finish their training. The board of education in Toronto has decided to keep all the technical schools open and the various instructors have indicated their willingness to forego their holidays in order that instruction may be given. I think that is a most patriotic gesture on their part. As I understand it these students are to be instructed in machine shop and foundry practice and so on.

Mr. McLARTY: And the metal trades.

Mr. MacNICOL: They will be instructed how to make drawings of the different things they are working on; they will be instructed in the welding of metals and in die and tool making. In many of these trades there is an acute shortage of mechanics at the present time because during the last two or three years many mechanics have gone back to the old country. Will there be instruction in laboratory practice?

Mr. McLARTY: I do not think that that will be studied in any great degree; I think it will relate pretty largely to the practical trades, to training in the metal trades and in tools and diemaking, in which, as the hon. member suggests, there is a very small surplus. I would not want to be too specific about laboratory practice, but there will doubtless be some.

Mr. MacNICOL: I had in mind the various items that enter into the construction of steel, of which we shall require such a large production in this war. There will be some instruction in foundry practice, I presume, because all our technical schools now have foundry furnaces within their walls, and I presume there will be also instruction in electricity and in the making of the various parts used in aeroplanes, diesel engines and so forth. If so, that is fine; the minister should be commended if such a programme is to be carried on. Such training of this kind will be very beneficial; it is a step in the right direction.

Under the bill that was passed in the United States instruction is to be given in the technical schools in four major courses of study in the various trades I have mentioned-steel, the metal trades, and so forthand parallel instruction in electricity and allied subjects. I find in that bill something which I presume the minister also has in mind—that in training men regard will be had to supply and demand. On the other side they are very particular to see that there will not be four or five qualified tool and diemakers applying for the one job, and they have arranged to have regard to the law of supply and demand. But in this country the demand in my judgment will, owing to munition production, greatly exceed the supply, so I do not think we need to worry very much about an over-supply. If the minister keeps that consideration in mind, his bill will perhaps be more effective than it otherwise would be.

Perhaps under this bill the department would undertake to keep a record of those about to graduate—I am speaking particularly of factory employees—so that they might be placed in factories which will be requiring their services or which will shortly be called upon to produce war equipment. The main purpose of the bill this session is altogether different from the purpose of the previous bill, because under this bill the purpose is to provide a sufficient number of qualified mechanics in all the trades allied with steel and iron production so that we shall have a sufficient number of men available to produce munitions and all the other equipment that is necessary to win the war.

Mr. McLARTY: I thank the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) again for his constructive suggestions. I am advised that the arrangements for the use of the technical schools this summer call for 4,000 to 4,500 for courses in instruction, and we are going to endeavour to speed that up. We are going to use instructors in technical schools who have been kind enough to offer their services. We are also going to have instructors from different plants. We have already made a survey of the amount of labour immediately required not only in each plant but in each portion of each plant, and we are endeavouring in every possible way to speed up the training in order to meet the demand.

Mr. MacINNIS: Since the beginning of the war there has been a continuous increase in the cost of living. That increase is not yet burdensome to persons with wages or salaries over $1,500 or running into several thousand dollars, but it has a very important bearing on the standard of living of those who must live on $200 or $300 a year, as many of the unemployed have to do. Has there been any conference with the provincial authorities with a view to increasing the relief allowance to take care of the increased cost of living?

Mr. McLARTY: The position of the dominion government is this, and I think perhaps I have stated it before. The provincial governments and the municipalities are the ones that fix the quantum of individual relief. Our arrangement with all the provinces except New Brunswick is that we shall contribute dollar for dollar with the province. Answering the specific question which the hon, member has asked, there has been no conference between the dominion and provincial authorities relative to an increase in the quantum of individual relief as a result of any rise in the cost of living, the reason being that that is purely a matter of provincial and municipal determination, we simply paying dollar for dollar with the province.

Mr. MacINNIS: Has the federal Department of Labour been approached by any province for an increased grant in aid owing to the situation which I have just mentioned? It is very well known to the house, I think, that many provinces are in such a position that they cannot increase their grants or aid to the municipalities until they first receive increased aid from the federal authority.

Mr. McLARTY: I think perhaps the hon. gentleman is putting the cart before the horse. Answering offhand, the dominion Department of Labour, so far as I know, has not been approached by any province relative to the quantum of individual relief, the reason being that the quantum of relief is within the sole determination of the province. If they decide to increase that quantum, then under our arrangement we have to meet the province dollar for dollar, but we cannot ourselves step in and fix the quantum of relief.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think the minister misunderstood my question. I was speaking not of the individual amount of relief given to recipients but of the increased burden on the provinces because of the rise there has been in the cost of living.

Mr. McLARTY: I do not think any province has suggested an increase over the 40-40-20 arrangement that was entered into last year. Speaking purely from recollection, my answer would be that there has been no representation made by any province that the dominion should absorb a larger proportion of the total relief.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: During the past several weeks various relief recipients in Saskatchewan have received notice that the amount of their relief is to be considerably reduced. But if I understood the minister correctly he stated the other evening that no notice had been given by this government to the provincial governments of any anticipated reduction this year in the amount of relief that would account for the notices being sent out by the provincial administrators of relief.

Mr. McLARTY: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but he will remember that in the notice sent out to the provinces was the suggestion that in view of the vast war expenditure some maximum might have to be applied. I added that the intention was to apply that maximum in those provinces in which war orders are to a great degree resulting in a reduction in the amount of relief required, and suggested that I did not think Saskatchewan was in that class.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I appreciate that. Mr. Chairman. Let me say that the questions I am asking are in no way to be considered as criticism. I believe too many hon, members from some parts of Canada are prone, particularly in view of the increased expenditures now requisite for war and war preparations, to complain of the inadequacy of the amount of relief which is being received. Coming as I do from Saskatchewan, I do not want the committee to suppose that we in that province do not appreciate the bountiful manner in which the successive governments of Canada have made expenditures in that province in order to relieve destitution. It is not in a critical spirit that I speak to-day. [Mr. McLarty.]

We in Saskatchewan realize that, while we have passed through conditions the like of which, I believe, no other province of Canada has encountered, had it not been for the kindly attitude of hon. members representing other provinces, the position of Saskatchewan to-day would be worse than it is.

According to the estimates there is an anticipated reduction this year in respect of relief of some $12,180,000. What are the anticipated allotments by provinces based on the estimated expenditure of some $24,000,000 for relief? How much does the minister anticipate will be spent in the three prairie provinces during the current fiscal year?

Mr. McLARTY: I do not wish to withhold from the committee any information that I have, but this bill has not yet been passed; as soon as it is passed, estimates will be received from the various provinces as to their requirements. I suggest that the hon. member's question would be more appropriately asked upon the estimates. I cannot answer his question at the present time, much as I should like to do so.

The CHAIRMAN: Although there is a certain connection between section 3, which is now under consideration, and the question which was asked by the hon. member, I do not believe that, in view of the fact that the estimates are to be studied, it would be quite in order to discuss the amount to which he has referred, namely the estimate of $24,000,000 for relief, because this will come up in due course when the estimates are before the committee.

Mr. McLARTY: I did not mean to take advantage of any rule of order. I merely suggested to the hon. member that I thought, if he could defer his question until the estimates come up, I would be able to give him an answer, which I am unable to do to-day.

The CHAIRMAN: I wanted simply to point out to the members of the committee that it is undesirable to go at too great length into items of the estimates, although some latitude is quite in order, as has been recognized heretofore.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Without reference, then, to the question of estimates, the point I am trying to make is this, that under this legislation what the government asks is a blank cheque to proceed with measures for the alleviation of unemployment and agricultural distress.

Mr. McLARTY: Nothing will be spent until the estimates are passed in this house. We are not asking for a blank cheque. Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Surely the minister is in a position to give an estimate of the amount which he anticipates will be expended in the several provinces.

Mr. McLARTY: No. I regret, Mr. Chairman, I cannot give that to the hon. member to-day. But, as far as a blank cheque is concerned, not a cent will be spent which is not passed by this house, save and except under the Youth Training Act, which is a statutory amount.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: In order to arrive at the amounts set out in the estimates the minister must have had in mind the several sums which it is anticipated will be expended in the several provinces. Otherwise the amounts and the anticipated reductions would not be provided for in the estimates placed before the house.

Mr. HLYNKA: In my opinion, what the group in this corner of the house is asking for may be boiled down to the three fundamental things of life-food, clothing and shelter. For the past three days we have been engaged in discussing what is probably the most important bill of the present session. that relating to conscription. The agricultural assistance bill, it seems to me, is at least next in importance. Considering the plight of our farmers in western Canada, we sometimes wonder whether this government realizes its obligations towards these people. It seems to me that, for some reason or other, this government has a grudge against the people, at least those of western Canada, and that it is trying to revenge itself upon the farmers of the west. Every hon. member will admit, I am sure, that during the past ten years our western farmers and workers have had no assurance that they would get three meals a day, along with clothing and shelter. When these three fundamentals of life are denied to our humblest and poorest, it is about time for this government to shake off its sleepy mood and proceed to give assistance to our people.

Last September, when the leader of this group, the hon member for Lethbridge, came home from the session, his little boy asked him a question.

Mr. MacNICOL: Not about finance, I hope?

Mr. HLYNKA: He said, "Daddy, do you think that you will keep up with this line of work?" My leader replied, "Why not?" "Well," said the boy, "it surprises me, Dad, that according to the press you are always wrong and the Prime Minister is always right. How is it? Is the Prime Minister such a brilliant man, much more so than you are?" The leader of the New Democracy group answered his little son in this way: "Well, son, some people may think to-day that the Prime Minister is right, but there will come a time when the people will realize that we are right and have been right all along. And I am sure that that time is not far off."

As a new member, I have been astonished at the readiness with which government supporters, when the views of our group were propounded, have taken offence or tried to distort anything we have suggested. The government at this time should be only too glad to receive suggestions from every corner of the house. I do not see any special evidence of wisdom in any one particular section of the house and therefore I suggest that we should try, at this critical moment, to work together as one family for the purpose of solving our problems. Our people are entitled to food, clothing and shelter. The two oldline parties have denied the Canadian people these three fundamental necessities of life in the last ten years. We must have these things to begin with if we are to exist at all. Napoleon on one occasion said that an army travels on its stomach. I say that a nation exists and fights on its stomach, and you cannot expect the Canadian people to carry on unless they are given adequate care, unless they have the assurance that conditions will make it possible for them at least to exist, to say nothing of getting a real living.

I disagree with some members in our group on one point. Many of them have stated on the floor of this house that the present government gives no privileges to the under dog, no privileges to western farmers and workers in the economic sense. I disagree with that, because our farmers and workers enjoy one privilege, a privilege which is exclusively theirs, or almost exclusively—the privilege of paying taxes. They are never asked to express their opinion as to whether they can bear the burden of taxation that is being piled up on their shoulders. Now, at this critical time, when our farmers in the west need assistance as never before, what do we find? This government invests $750,000, three-quarters of a million, in a building in this city, the Jackson building, to be used for war purposes. Should the government do this, if it is sincere, as I hope it is? Should it invest three-quarters of a million dollars in a building of this sort—a dead investment—at a time when we need this money for our people and to further our war effort? After passing the important bill that was put through yesterday, the government could take possession of that building without paying three-quarters of a million dollars. They could have had the use of that building for the duration of the war. If we are going to have equality of sacrifice, if we are going to conscript wealth and industry, that would be the right place to begin at this time. It is inexcusable to spend three-quarters of a million dollars for this purpose, and I suggest that we are justified in saying to the government that they are hindering our war effort by sinking money in an investment of this kind, an investment that is as dead as a doornail.

A few days ago I received a copy of a magazine with beautiful pictures in which suggestions are given as to where one can go for a holiday. I am sure some of the members of this house, and especially government supporters, must have forgotten that the people in western Canada especially do not know what a holiday means. It is about time that we thought of giving them a chance at least to exist. Recently I read a book with the strange title "How to Live On Nothing a Day," written presumably by a Liberal. It is an attempt to force the philosophy upon the people of Canada that it is possible to exist and enjoy life, not on a dollar a day, not on a dollar a year, but on nothing a day. Why should anyone suggest such a thing? We should try to help people along.

We have often heard from the government side the statement that this is war-time and that their obligations are exceptionally heavy. Of course, they will offer a whole lot of such excuses. But great men, any number of great men working together, never shun their responsibilities or look for excuses; they rise to the occasion. If they are really big men they can cope with any situation, no matter how serious it may be, and excuses of that sort are nothing but admissions that the government is incapable of dealing with the problems of the day. Until the poorest and the humblest in our country are provided with food, clothing and shelter, neither this nor any other government in Canada can pride itself upon having discharged its obligations to the people.

I do not know how many of us have ever stopped to consider the implications of what is called interest. We in western Canada have had a little more to do with interest than some of the people in the eastern part of the country, and I have been wondering why the federal government in the past has never concerned itself with the fact that our people have paid interest rates ranging from one to fourteen per cent. May I point out something in simple arithmetic. One dollar at three per cent compound interest gives a total in one hundred years of $19.22—using one hundred years as a round figure. One dollar compounded at the rate of eight per cent gives a total of $2,199.76, and one dollar at ten per cent gives a total of $13,780.00-and mind you, our people have had to pay at the rate of $13,780 for the use of one dollar; at least, that is what it would amount to over a period of one hundred years. But we have never heard of any supporter of the government getting up on the floor of this house and telling the government that this is going a little too far, that this burden should be taken off the shoulders of the people. They have allowed our people to pay this rate of interest and to-day they wonder why the morale of the Canadian people and of the people of the British empire is not as strong as it should be. That is the real reason.

Who invented this compound interest? I should like to know who gets the benefit of it. Surely not the poor people in western Canada, not the producer, not the worker. What would this government say if our farmers in western Canada refused to produce wheat on the assurance that they would get five per cent above the cost of production? They would say it was sabotage. Some of the manufacturing concerns have refused to put in tenders in time of war because they were not allowed more than five per cent profit. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is real sabotage. If the farmers of western Canada were assured of five per cent above the cost of production I am sure they would be satisfied; and on behalf of those farmers I ask that this government consider at least the question of the cost of production.

Mr. MAYHEW: Will the hon, gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HLYNKA: When I get through.

Mr. GARDINER: What has this to do with the bill?

Mr. HLYNKA: I am trying to point out to hon, members that the farmers of the west must receive greater assistance than they have received in the past. I have pointed out on other occasions that they did not need charity but only what was coming to them.

Mr. GARDINER: Assistance to the farmers of western Canada, about which the hon. gentleman is talking, has been carried on under another bill.

Mr. HLYNKA: Section 3 of the bill reads:

3. The governor in council may enter into agreements:

(a) with any of the provinces respecting the alleviation of unemployment conditions and of agricultural distress therein and to assist those in need;

I believe that settles it.

[Mr. Hlynka.]

Mr. GARDINER: Assistance to farmers in connection with feed and fodder, and the relief given in farm homes, has been given through the Department of Agriculture under another arrangement in the most difficult years. This measure has to do with the lending of money and making grants in aid to the provinces to carry on the work of relief.

Mr. HLYNKA: I still maintain that this is agricultural assistance. Our problem is one of distribution; our farmers and workers must have more purchasing power placed in their hands. This government has absolutely failed to show us how it can place that purchasing power in the hands of our people, and it has absolutely failed to show me how it is going to wipe out unemployment. It seems to me that the government is just dragging on from day to day, and you know that at five per cent compound interest any sum of money doubles itself in fifteen years. If this government carries on its present policy for fifteen years it will simply mean that our farmers will have to repay the money lenders twice the amount originally received.

I am not going to speak at any great length—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. HLYNKA: I know the hon. members on the government side are anxious that no one else should express his opinion, but no one party has a monopoly on the desire to help our people. We all want to do our bit in that direction. I happen to represent over fifty thousand people, and I do not think any member of this house will suggest that we should not have the privilege of saying what we have to say.

We in western Canada are not so much interested in theories or in the wording of bills. We have been fed with all that sort of thing for the past seventy years or so, and our people find themselves in distress to-day. We are interested in the results that are achieved by putting the bills into operation. In most of the totalitarian states they have resorted to the production of synthetic bread. We do not need to do that. Canada produces ample supplies to feed not only Canada but the whole British empire. All our farmers ask is a fair price for their wheat and a little assistance when they really need it. If they get that, believe me, our farmers will never fail the nation in time of stress.

A tricky system has been used many times to more or less pull the wool over the eyes of the farmers; the current year is compared with the year previous, or the year before that, to show how the revenue or the profit or commerce has increased. The government never compares the better year with the worse, but always the worse with the better. Then they say, "Things are improving. You go ahead and rely on us to see that you get what you deserve." That has been the system used right along. There is only one reason why our farmers will not accept a negative answer from this or any other government until they get what they want and what they are entitled to, and that is the law of self-preservation. This nation is fighting Germany because of the same law; we must obey it or submit, or die. That is the only choice we can expect. This government should be proud and glad that our people in the west are not dead yet but are making themselves heard and are placing certain demands before the government, through their elected representatives. I think that that is a good sign. If we ever came to the time when our people would no longer demand or ask for anything, it would be a sign that we had reached the end and that there was no future before us.

I beseech the government to consider our farmers, our workers, the real pillars of our nation. Give them what they deserve; then, believe me, these farmers will not refuse to produce. Give them five per cent over the cost of production and they will be only too glad to carry on. And let us have no more deals in which we squander and waste three-quarters of a million dollars in buying a dead investment while the farmers really need money and would at least give some return on the investment.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hlynka) on his interesting speech, his first address in this house. The hon. member has a fine voice; and if he would sing a duet with the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) it would be well worth hearing. The hon. gentleman has shown enthusiasm, and, while we do not agree with much of what he has said, he deserves praise and I am glad to give it to him.

There is another hon, gentleman to whom I should like to say a few kindly words. I refer to the hon, member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). His remarks this afternoon were refreshing. In the past the government has received nothing but abuse from the other side of the house in regard to the way the people of the west have been treated. The hon, member for Lake Centre uttered a few words of appreciation and gratitude, however, which indicate that he has a kind heart and can appreciate what is done for his constituents, although perhaps he does not get all that he would like to get for them. I have here the report of the dominion commissioner for unemployment relief for the year ending March 31, 1940, and it shows that the western farmers have not been as badly treated as has been stated in some quarters. As a matter of fact the prairie provinces and British Columbia have enjoyed great superiority over the eastern provinces in the matter of financial aid.

Take for example the matter of seed grain. In the first instance the farmer will say to the municipal authorities that he is insolvent. In turn the municipal authorities say to the provincial government, "All the people in this municipality are insolvent." The report is sent to the province, and the province writes to Ottawa that all the municipalities in that province are insolvent and must therefore have aid. Just because the eastern provinces do not use the same methods of approach, they do not receive seed grain assistance.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): And the dominion government does not do anything.

Mr. POULIOT: Assistance is given in three forms. In the first place a guarantee is given to the province.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): That is not aid.

Mr. POULIOT: In the second place, loans are given, and in the third place, grants are given. Sometimes it happens that for different purposes the western provinces receive at the one time guarantees, loans and grants. Well, that is not so bad. On the other hand we in the province of Quebec do not have so much; Ontario does not have so much; the maritime provinces do not have so much. The western provinces seem to be the pet population in Canada.

Mr. MacINNIS: Did the hon. member say "pep" or "pet"?

Mr. POULIOT: Pet and they have lots of pep, too. I am not making these statements to minimize their efforts, because I admire the constituents of the western provinces. But I suggest they think of others in the east who are in great trouble at times, but who are not so greedy, when it is a matter of dominion assistance.

Mr. FAIR: How about public works grants?

Mr. POULIOT: No public works this year. Mr. FAIR: How about years gone by?

An hon. MEMBER: What about the tariff?

Mr. POULIOT: If I were to speak about the tariff I would be out of order; if the hon. member will put that question to me when we are discussing the budget resolutions I shall be in a position to answer him. I will tell him right now that if we had no tariff we would have no revenue to give these grants. This is a very important matter, and one which ought not to be forgotten. Without money no grants would be available. The grants go from the east to the west—and of course that shows just how much we like our western friends.

Mr. FAIR: And the money to pay those grants comes from the west to the east; don't forget that.

Mr. POULIOT: I turn to page 16 of the report of the dominion commissioner of unemployment relief, and I find that outstanding loans to the province of Manitoba amount to $25,573,138.54, and those for Saskatchewan amount to $71,291,194.81.

Mr. MARSHALL: What is the hon. member reading?

Mr. POULIOT: I am reading from the report of the dominion commissioner for relief.

Mr. MARSHALL: What is the hon, member quoting?

Mr. POULIOT: Loans outstanding for the year ending March 31, 1940, as outlined at page 16 of the report.

Mr. GILLIS: That is for the last ten or fifteen years.

Mr. MARSHALL: Yes, those are loans for the last ten years.

Mr. POULIOT: For the province of Alberta net loans outstanding amounted to $26,025,500; for British Columbia, $34,503,762.30. The grand total of loans to provinces outstanding as of March 30, 1940, is $157,393,595.65. Then, in addition there is an amount for the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Well, that is not so bad. In these expenditures the western provinces have received something which they do not share with the east. Then, there are the dominion subsidies to provinces, and I find that in respect of Saskatchewan an exception has been made. I refer to the principle of payment according to population. Hon. members may check what I say in the year book. Proportionately the province of Saskatchewan gets much more than do the other provinces, so far as population is concerned.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): When the hon. members contrasts the drought conditions in Saskatchewan with the smiling conditions in the fair province of Quebec, as I know it, does he not think that the people in Saskatchewan ought to receive more in the way of help? I suggest we ought not to begrudge fair treatment to the drought-ridden farmers of Saskatchewan. The east has not been affected in the same way.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POULIOT: I would ask my hon. friend, in the first place, not to place a false interpretation upon my words.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I did not do that.

Mr. POULIOT: It is much better to let me finish; and the hon. member ought to know that it is always dangerous to interrupt me, because he does not know what I am about to say. In my argument I am not complaining about giving assistance to those who need it; that is not my point of view. My complaint is that one part of the country is receiving aid through the gift of large sums of money by way of loans and grants. Those moneys amount to $157,393,595.65. Last year we heard the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Labour say that the interest was not all paid on that large sum of money.

This is a serious consideration, and as an hon. member representing taxpayers who contribute to those loans and grants, and who are responsible for the guarantees, I say to the western provinces, "You have got something; do not complain that you have received nothing."

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): How much did Quebec get in the same period?

Mr. LACROIX (Beauce): They got twenty cents on their butter.

Mr. POULIOT: Hon. members from the west are always asking more and more. That is their right, but they ought not to forget what they have received. I do not say that they must thank the government; they have no reason to thank the government for assistance given to people on relief. But at least they could show their appreciation. That is why I have just complimented one of the supporters of the opposition.

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. POULIOT: I know what stand he has taken in the matter. People have been put on land in Quebec. Those lands have been found to be rocky, and they are not fertile. It is not the fault of those settlers that they were given wrong information about the district to which they went. But under the present circumstances it is impossible to get anything for them. I shall not repeat what I said a few days ago in that connection; but if farmers in the west receive a certain amount of aid from the dominion government by way of loans to the provinces, I do not see why the settlers in my constituency cannot have the same kind of aid. That is my point of view, and it seems to me it is a fair one. I have written often to the Department of Labour, although the present minister of that department may not have seen the correspondence. If he were to refer to his officials they would tell him that they have received more correspondence on behalf of the settlers from the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) than they have received from any other member of the House of Commons. In that correspondence I have made representations respecting the dire circumstances in which those people were living. They have been asking aid from the government.

I do not complain because the western farmers are receiving help. That is the end of my argument. But I do point out that the settlers in my constituency, and especially those in the southern part—the leader of the opposition is familiar with the parish of St. Jean-de-la-Lande—are suffering hardships. I want them to receive the same help as the western farmers have received. It seems to me that that would be fair.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): We are right with you on that.

Mr. POULIOT: If we only listen to each other there will be complete understanding in a short time.

Mr. MacNICOL: Except in connection with matters of finance.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not talking about finance. Nothing has been given to my people. I want something given. It may take months or years, but I know they will get it.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member will be over here then.

Mr. POULIOT: I will be here until I die, and I expect to live to an old age.

A most sensible decision was arrived at by the city of Cincinnati with regard to relief. The city manager of that municipality is Colonel Clarence O. Sherrill, a gentleman who has had considerable experience, both as an engineer and otherwise. The soundness of the policies of this city in dealing with the relief problem has been demonstrated quite clearly. They decided:

- 1. To see that no one suffers from lack of food, shelter, clothing and fuel.
- 2. That no unworthy person shall receive relief.
- 3. That every able-bodied adult shall prove his worthiness by working for the relief furnished his family.
- 4. That each person on relief shall have a real incentive to get a job in private employ.

Mr. HANSELL: If a man works and receives pay, he is not on relief.

Mr. POULIOT: I am sorry, but I have not the time to argue that. For several days I have been in the chamber listening to what was being said and after I am through with my remarks I intend to see to my correspondence.

Before I take my seat I should like to give the committee certain information in connection with the department of welfare of the city of New York. We cannot compare Canada with the United States because the population of that country is ten or twelve times the population of this, but there is no reason why we cannot do in Canada what has been done in the city of New York. That city has a certain advantage in the regulation of welfare in that the population is compact, while the population of Canada is distributed from ocean to ocean. Regulations in connection with welfare differ in every municipality. However, I should like to let the committee know what has been done in New York city by the welfare department under the able leadership of Commissioner William Hodson. I intend to quote from a report covering the period from January 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939.

On January 15, 1940, Mr. William Hodson, commissioner of welfare of the city of New York, wrote as follows to Mayor LaGuardia:

The effort has been made to save money on administration, in places where it could be saved, not as an end in itself but as a means of providing the largest possible amount of financial aid and kindly, humane care for the distressed families of our city.

In his report to the mayor for the calendar year 1938 and the first six months of 1939, Commissioner Hodson has given most interesting figures about the efficiency of the work of the department of welfare of the city of New York. The accomplishments of that department may be quoted as an example. In New York city unemployment relief is no longer regarded as being temporary or an emergency. Mr. Hodson writes:

On January 1, 1938, the task of caring for the needy unemployed as well as the needy unemployable was established in New York city as a regular function of government thereafter to be administered by a permanent city department.

What have they done? On January 1, 1938, 167,226 were under the care of the home relief division. During the following eighteen months, 396,659 applications were disposed of, 195,380 were accepted and 201,279 were rejected. A total of 206,522 families left home relief to accept private employment, WPA, some other form of public assistance, or for other reasons. On June 30, 1939, the total cases under care [Mr. Pouliot.]

were 156,084, a decrease of 11,142. The total cost of home relief, exclusive of administration, during that period was $118,062,532.

In connection with the care of dependent children, the city maintained 22,610 children, half of whom were in private institutions and the other half in individual boarding homes, at the cost of $13,304,324. In the matter of the care of the homeless, 5,466,000 night lodgings were provided and 14,641,000 meals were served to homeless men at the municipal lodging houses and in the commercial shelters. Approximately 1,000 men are under care at the rehabilitation center, camp LaGuardia, with a total of 517,000 night lodgings, and 1,612,000 meals over the period. There are 125 women cared for daily at the women's emergency shelter. The total cost of homeless care was $3.020,466.

In connection with relief for non-settled families, there were an average of 3,784 families that did not have settlement in New York city receiving home relief each month. Settlement means residence in the city for one year without having received assistance. The department returned 1,449 of these families to their places of residence, and the children's division returned an additional 296 children. The cost of relief to non-settled families was $2,534,075.

In the matter of special services, during that period the department collected $230,873 for the care of children born out of wedlock and $139,404 for the support of dependent children. In the matter of old age assistance, in addition to home relief, the department cares for dependent old people, 65 years and over. The total cost of old age assistance was $22,532,029 for 49,969 persons.

In regard to veteran relief and assistance to the blind, the total cost of veteran relief was $8,047,974 for 10,763 families, and that of assistance to the blind was $614,622 for 1,482 persons. During any one month, approximately 566,253 men, women and children are receiving some form of public assistance from the department of welfare. There should be added to that total the 65,971 children and their mothers cared for by the board of child welfare, and the 550,912 Works Progress Administration (WPA) workers and their dependents. The grand total would be an average of 1,183,136 men, women and children assisted by public funds at all times during that period.

During the eighteen months there were 314,989 visits made by physicians and 22,510 visits by nurses of the medical and nursing service division to the homes of families receiving the various forms of public assistance, whenever acute illness occurred. The sick were given 455,759 prescriptions, together with 58,542 pairs of eye-glasses for those with defective sight and 2,488 surgical appliances to overcome physical disabilities of various sorts. In cooperation with the WPA, 272,870 dental treatments were given by the dental projects. The total cost of the medical and nursing services was $2,397,297, while the cost of dental care was $344,471.

A WPA serving project sponsored by the city produced 5,292,295 pieces of cotton clothing and household articles valued at $3,993,334, and the department distributed these articles through 16 depots to families under care. In addition, 127,642 women's and girls' coats and dresses were made by a WPA project and distributed by the department. The value of this clothing was $545,826. The department also distributed 89,118 garments valued at $940,248, which were allocated to the city by the federal government out of an open market purchase made to absorb the clothing surplus. These garments were of excellent quality and included men's and boys' suits and overcoats, women's and misses' suits, coats, dresses and other items, all of regular models. This clothing was provided over and above the cash allowances for clothing which are included in the relief grants from time to time.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to know what we are on. Are we discussing the bill or reading statistics?

Mr. POULIOT: I can tell the hon. member. In the first place, if he is not interested, he simply need not listen. But I am telling the committee what has been done across the boundary for people on relief. If we are not going to heed and profit from what has been done elsewhere for the good of mankind, we might as well just let the country drift. It is to the interest of Canada to know just what is being done elsewhere and to take advantage of it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Go ahead.

Mr. POULIOT: Certainly I will go ahead. The chairman is fair enough, and I take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Fournier, Hull) to welcome your presence in the chair.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Suppose we have a holiday from this for twelve months and then start in again after the war is over.

Mr. POULIOT: I will tell the hon. member for Danforth, whose name I mentioned a moment ago, that this is no matter for a holiday. I will appeal to his heart. There are in this country people who are unemployable, unable to work, and I am pointing out to the committee what has been done for unemployables in New York City. These men cannot work, and they must live. If we are going to take care of aliens and German people I do not see why we should not do something for our own people who would otherwise starve to death. I can go to the constituency of the hon. member for Danforth and speak to his own people, and then his small majority will be reduced to nothing and changed to a Liberal majority. I am sick of that kind of thing.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. POULIOT: No.

In New York city, Mr. Chairman, and in all the other cities of the United States a marked division is made between the unemployables and the employables. The unemployables, of course, are supposed to be looked after by the state because they can do no work in return, but they are considered as citizens just the same and something must be done for them, and the services I have enumerated are provided for the relief of unemployables. So efficient and so good are they that within a period of one year and a half the number of unemployables in the city of New York decreased from 210,000 to 155,000, thanks to the good food, good care and decent clothing provided. That means that 55,000 unemployables by reason of this good care and good food became employable. That is a great lesson in Christianity and brotherly love to the whole world.

But there is something else. While the city of New York takes good care of its unemloyables, much is also done for its employables. I think hon, members will be surprised at the record of the city of New York in the years 1938 and 1939 in providing work for the unemployed of that city under the WPA. New York is only one city, but this work has been done under the dynamic leadership of Mayor LaGuardia and Colonel Brehon Somervell, a distinguished army engineer who made a survey of navigation conditions on the Rhine and Danube rivers for the League of Nations, and who also was engaged by the Turkish government to help put the country on a sound economic basis. Here are the notable achievements of the WPA in the city of New York in 1938:

Public buildings:

158 newly constructed, 761 reconditioned, work underway on 420.

Fire:

2 new houses erected, 41 renovated, work in progress on 40.

Highways:

172.5 miles of new construction, 308.2 improved.

Bridges:

13 new ones built, 46 altered and improved.

Sidewalks:

82.3 miles newly built, 158.2 miles improved.

242.7 miles newly laid, 69.4 miles relaid and Athletic fields:

9 built, 6 reconditioned, working on 18.

Playgrounds:

35 built, 13 improved, working on 42.

Swimming-wading pools: 25 built, working on 13.

Tennis courts:

95 built, 44 under construction.

Water mains:

116.9 miles laid, working on 67.3 miles.

50.8 miles newly laid, 53.5 reconditioned; working on 24.6 miles.

Manholes:

3,512 new ones built, 6,987 altered, working on 4,433.

Mosquito control:

399.9 miles drainage ditch dug, 148 miles improved; underway, 88 miles.

Police-fire signals:

84.1 miles of line laid, working on 65.2 miles.

Planting:

319,089 plants or trees set out.

Here is the record of the WPA in the city of New York in 1939:

Public buildings:

210 newly constructed, 518 reconditioned, work under way on 188.

Fire:

The art program during the year contributed murals to public buildings . . at the same time taught art techniques to thousands of eager students.

The size, variety, importance and usefulness of all the WPA projects cannot be fully summarized in the short time that I have at my disposal.

Mayor LaGuardia and the WPA Administrator in New York city, Lt.-Col. Brehon Somervell, had every reason to be proud of their accomplishments when they addressed the following message to the city: From the Mayor . . .

In my opinion the maintenance of the morale In my opinion the maintenance of the morale and self-respect of the worker, the preservation of his skills and work habits, and the benefits of the community in the way of improved public property and extension of personal services, more than offset the alleged deleterious effects of work relief, most of which are indefinite and unrealistic.

I know that the city has benefited by the works program, that it has maintained services that are indispensable in a modern growing city.

I do not know what would have happened had all the thousands of men and women employed under the works program been forced into complete idleness and sustained by a dole, but I have a feeling that the butcher and the baker and the candlestick maker whose business has been kept going could tell you, and that another answer could be got from thousands of homes where normal living has been made possible by the work relief program.

Mr. KUHL: Where does the money come

Mr. POULIOT: The report goes on:

From the Administrator . . .

During the course of the year inquiries by the thousand are received regarding the program of the Works Progress Administration in New York City. This booklet is an attempt to simplify and to answer graphically some of these inquiries.

Back of these pictures moves a varied program of public works and services. Through it the city's assets in buildings, in ultilities, in required facilities for promoting decent living have been preserved and extended. The same is true in respect of properties of the state and federal government.

Beyond these construction projects are hun-Beyond these construction projects are nundreds of others through which employment is given to "white collar" workers. Through these, WPA is aiding in the eternal struggle to conserve health, promote the public welfare, and to improve educational and recreational opportunities for all citizens and at the same time give employment to those who through no fault of their own have no other means of support.

Brehon Somervell.

These are the accomplishments of New York city through its department of welfare and also through the Works Progress Administration.

My hon, friend asks where the money comes from. Regarding WPA projects, the federal government pays for all labour, and in addition pays for a fraction of the material, namely six dollars per average man-month of labour. The proportion may be higher than that when the classifications are made respecting salaries. It is a long story.

Mr. JAQUES: Where does the administration get the money?

Mr. POULIOT: They do not get it in the form of social credit money, anyway; otherwise no work would be done there.

I have given these facts to inform hon. members of what has been done in the way of social services to people across the border. We may learn from their example. Let us provide relief of some kind to those who are unemployable, but let us also take advantage of the ability to work when help is given to the man who is employable. Let us utilize what he can do for the benefit of the state.

It comes to this, that it is important for the Department of Labour to make a distinction between the employables and the unemployables. The distinction should have been made a long time ago. That work was done by a member who is in the house now, but afterwards a commission was appointed on which there were men who were unable to understand the importance of the problemamong them Mr. Arthur Purvis, whom I mentioned yesterday, and Mr. Tom Moore.

Mr. MARSHALL: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. MARSHALL: I wonder if the hon. member would refer to the appendix to this report under the Unemployment and Agricultural Assistance Act, 1939, and explain for the information of the committee the figures shown on page 40 of that report.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, I would like to explain that to the hon, member, but it would take me a whole week. I regret that those figures are very numerous. My hon. friend knows that, with twenty-six letters of the alphabet, millions of books have been printed; and here there are many figures.

Mr. MARSHALL: Will the hon. gentleman explain what is meant by the figures under "recapitulation of dominion disbursements under relief legislation as at the close of fiscal year 1939-1940:" Quebec, $61,000,371; Ontario, $99,919,778; Manitoba, $26,315,113; Saskatchewan, $56,109,009; and Alberta, $17,954,838?

Mr. POULIOT: That is not page 40; it is page 41.

Mr. MARSHALL: No; the figures I am quoting will be found on page 40 of that report. If the hon, member will look at the list he can verify it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fournier, Hull): The hon, member having put his question, I would like the hon. gentleman who is speaking to proceed, and stay within the limits of standing order 58.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Will you read standing order 58?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fournier. Hull): It reads, in the second paragraph:

Speeches in committee of the whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Mr. POULIOT: I am very glad that that has been read, because all this is strictly relevant. It shows the amount which has been paid to the provinces, and if we cannot discuss it, it would be just as well to lock our desks here. I know, Mr. Chairman, that you will not insist upon such an interpretation.

In this connection there are two things to be considered. In the first place, the population, which is not the same in Alberta as in Quebec, as my hon. friend knows. Besides that, no mention is made on this page of the loans and guarantees. In any case, besides the amounts set out here, other guarantees have been made to the western provinces, and there have also been grants. I have the list upstairs; I have not brought it down to-day.

Therefore, sir, to bring these observations to a conclussion, is it not possible for the department to make a classification of the unemployed, differentiating between unemployables and employables, and to enable the provinces to provide sufficient relief to the unemployables so they may live and be looked after if they are sick, their families not being allowed to starve during that period. On the other hand the employables should be separated from the unemployables so that advantage may be taken of skill and ability to work, with consequent benefit to the state. The example of New York is very good. I fear, sir, that in the branch of the federal department which is charged with relief, as well as in the provincial and municipal relief departments, there are officials who live on the distribution of relief and are opposed to work relief. I do not know about it, but I ask the minister to make an investigation on these lines. Of course, what has been given there has been given. It has been distributed to a certain number of people, but they have been enabled just to exist. I want the settlers in my county to be fairly treated when they are on land which is not productive.

I hope the minister will consider seriously the matter of supplying work to necessitous people. It is a very bad thing, as he knows, for persons to remain idle; idleness is the mother of all vices. It is important for the men who are employable, who are able to do something, to have an opportunity to work, and it is necessary for the welfare of the state that that opportunity should be given them.

Reverting to what I said a minute or two ago, I regret that the work which was done by a single member of parliament, with his secretary, was not done by the employment commission, when upon that commission were men like Arthur Purvis and Tom Moore. I regret it very deeply. The work they did was useless, and I threw that report on the floor of the house because there was not a waste-paper basket near my desk. These are the men who are supposed to give us lessons in matters of welfare and relief. No, sir! There must be order among the unemployed; there must be order among every other class of Canadian citizens; there must be order in the distribution of relief. I hope that the Minister of Labour will stay long enough in the department to carry out the policy which is necessary for the welfare of the country.

Mr. DONNELLY: I did not intend to say anything on this bill, but since so much has been said in the house in the last few days with reference to the question of relief I feel it my bounden duty to say something in connection with farm assistance and relief. I have had the honour for the last eleven years to live in the constituency of Wood Mountain and to represent in this house the people who live in that riding. That constituency has had the misfortune during those eleven years to have but one crop out of eleven. Ten crops were lost, all but one through drought. One crop was lost because we had too much moisture and the crop was ruined as a result of rust. Last year we had the first crop in eleven years. The result has been that a prosperous and thriving community of farmers who had been well off have found themselves almost destitute and have had to live on relief. If anyone knows what it means for farmers to live on relief, I ought to know as well as anybody in this house, because the farmers in my constituency have a reason for being on relief. They have been living in the centre of the dried-out area of western Canada. I have seen them all around me, on all sides, having to go to municipalities, to the province and to this government for assistance.

Let me say on this occasion, in regard to the relief question, what I have said before in this house. In the administration of relief, the conditions are contrary to what some members have said. The hon, member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen) made the remark that someone had said, "If you do not vote for the government you may be off relief the next day." That has never been true in my constituency; it has never been true under either the Conservative government or the Liberal government. There has been no politics federal or provincial in the administration of relief. If there has been any politics at all, it has been on the part of the municipality. Sometimes one of the councillors has a friend living next to him and has been lenient in giving him relief.

Mr. BROOKS: The hon. member is speaking of Saskatchewan?

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, I am speaking of the district that I know, in the province of Saskatchewan. Sometimes the municipal officer has a neighbour whom perhaps he does not like very well and he cuts down on his relief.

How is relief administered? As far as we are concerned as a federal government, we have nothing to do with the administration of relief. Relief is first of all a matter for the consideration of the municipality. The municipality is supposed to look after its indigent, those who are in want. It is their responsibility and duty to look after all such people, and when they are not able to discharge that duty then they come to the province and ask for assistance. If it is a small matter the province assists, as it has done in the past; but when it involves anything of magnitude, as in the past ten years, spreading over a large part of Saskatchewan, affecting seventy or more municipalities, then it becomes too large a problem for the province and the province asks for our assistance. It gets that assistance and this bill is for the purpose of meeting that need.

But we as a dominion have nothing to do with the administration of relief. It is administered entirely by the province and the municipality. If a farmer needs relief he goes to the municipality and applies for it. He signs a request asking for relief, and then either the council as a whole or a committee of the council will consider the application and decide how much relief should be granted or whether there shall be any relief. The province has a relief officer who looks after several municipalities. He will come to the municipal office and go over the relief orders with the council or a committee of the council. and the committee or the council and that relief officer have both to sign the order before the man can get relief. If a man is not getting enough relief, as some people have complained, it is the fault not of this government but of the municipality and the relief officer. The councillor living next door to the man knows quite well how much relief he needs or whether he needs any, and they decide how much will be given. They are the ones to whom complaint should be made. It has been that way all along. There has been no change. It is no use coming here and blaming this government because people are not getting enough relief. It is no use saying it is this government's fault. It is the provincial government, with the relief officer and the municipality above all else, who is to blame, if there is any blame.

Some peculiar men in the haw corner have read letters from their constituencies. One man read a letter about a school-teacher who, he said, had had to put up with various insects, the worst being bedbugs and fleas. What has that to do with relief? What is the hon. member trying to do? Is he trying to advertise the district? Perhaps he is advertising it for tourists. I am sure the people who live in that district must be proud to have it branded in that way by a member. But that has nothing to do with relief, as everyone knows. The same man says something about the school district. He says they are unemployed, there is no chimney in the building, the chimney is falling to pieces and they have no well. What does he want? Do those people want this government to tax people in Nova Scotia or in eastern Canada generally in order to dig wells for them while they sit around and do nothing because they are unemployed? Why do they not dig their own wells and fix their own chimneys? Why bring up that sort of thing in this house? Why read such letters? I do not think the reading of letters in this house should be allowed unless the names of the writers are disclosed so that the complaints may be investigated. We have investigated a number of these letters from Saskatchewan and we have always found that there was a nigger in the woodpile, that the municipality knew better what should or should not be

Mr. PERLEY: You are running true to form.

Mr. DONNELLY: I think I am giving pretty nearly what is right.

Then we heard a good deal about schools, but that has nothing to do with this bill at all. Even a school-teacher should know that the local school districts have charge of the schools and the hiring and firing of the schoolteachers. The province gives a grant, and then some of our school-teachers say they have not received their grant for three or four months. Well, even a school-teacher should know that the grant is not due until the end of June. It is based upon the number of pupils attending the school up to that time, and it cannot be paid until then. Part of the grant is paid on January 1, on the basis of the attendance since the beginning of the school year, and it is impossible to know how much to pay until that time has elapsed. These grants are paid when they are due. And the school-teachers should know that if they wish they can compel the province to pay the grant to the teachers for their salaries, because that money cannot be used for any purpose other than the salaries of the teachers.

An hon. MEMBER: Try and get it.

Mr. DONNELLY: You can get it if you go after it in the right way, and a school-teacher should know how to do that. Even preachers know that.

Then I come to the remarks of the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden). I am afraid some of the medical men and the hospitals in his district would not be very proud to hear what he said in this house. He told us about a man in his district who suffered from an acute attack of appendicitis, but who was refused admittance to a hospital because he had no money.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DONNELLY: You said it; it is in Hansard. You said it was reported. Where was it reported from? What was the district? Who was the man? From whom did you hear it, and where?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Read what I said.

Mr. DONNELLY: You insulted the whole medical profession and all the hospitals throughout our country when you said they would not look after a man because he did not have the money with which to pay. I have never heard of a hospital in the whole Dominion of Canada that would refuse to take in a man suffering from an acute attack of appendicitis, and I defy anyone to tell me of any such instance. I never knew of a medical man who would refuse to attend a person suffering from an acute attack of appendicitis. have heard several attacks made on the medical profession, but if I say so myself there is no profession in the world that does as much charitable work as the medical profession. I practised medicine for a number of years, and in all that time I never refused to attend a case when I possibly could attend, whether or not they had the money. That, I believe, is true of practically all medical men throughout the country.

To hon, members in the far corner who talk about the medical attention given to people on relief, I want to say that while we have had no crops in our district for ten years, our people are better attended medically than ever before. I can give a practical illustration of that. Prior to 1929 practically ninety-five per cent of our women were confined at home and were lucky to have a doctor at all; or, if they had a doctor, not one per cent of them would have a trained nurse assisting. What do we find to-day? Now ninety-five per cent of our women are confined in hospitals, with all the attention that is given in those institutions. Let hon. members investigate and they will find out for themselves; this is no hearsay. I could tell the committee where these people are, who the medical men are, and all about the matter. From 1929 to the present time our people have been better attended and better looked after, from the medical point of view, than ever before.

Mr. NICHOLSON: In the Wood Mountain constituency?

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, right in my home town, in Kincaid, Saskatchewan. There they have a municipal doctor, and they are looked after in that way at the present time. Then I hear people say, "Oh, it is terrible the way the children are suffering without proper food." A couple of years ago the dominion government sent fish, cheese and other articles to our people, and they had to send instructions to a great many of them on how to prepare this food. They did not know how to cook it or how to look after it. They saw more varieties of food than they had ever seen

Mr. MARSHALL: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. DONNELLY: You made your speech. There has been so much talking from over there that we are all deaf. Sit down.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): accounts were all guaranteed by the municipality and the province, so the doctor did not lose very much.

Mr. DONNELLY: I want to tell my hon. friends that as a rule we find more of these underfed and undernourished children in the families that are better off, the richer families. A great many children are underfed and undernourished, not for lack of food but because of the kind of food they get and the way in which they are fed. That is well understood in the medical profession, and it is just as true to-day as it ever was. Frequently it is lack of the right kind of food, not lack of food itself, that causes many of these conditions.

Not long ago I listened to the hon, member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) when he spoke of the amount of relief that had been handed out to Saskatchewan. I just want to say to him that Saskatchewan is not the only province which receives assistance in looking after unemployment. It is true that we have had farm assistance out there. We have had to have it because of the great disaster that has overrun our province for ten years. I doubt if any other district or country in the world could have looked after its people as well as our people have been looked after during that time. We were ten years without a crop. It is a wonder they are not worse off than they are to-day.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That includes from 1930 to 1935, I hope?

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, I said from 1929 to 1939. As far as that is concerned, the people were well looked after under both Conservative and Liberal governments. None of our people died of starvation; none of them froze to death and many of them lived comfortably. But I never saw a man who admitted that he had enough relief; I never saw a man who admitted that he had enough money, and it is just the same thing. Probably there are some who did not get enough, and I must admit also that some got too much, under both governments. We do not hear about those people at all. I have seen them; I know many people who got too much, just as I have seen some who got too little. Very often it is the best citizen who gets the least money, because he does not want to ask for relief all the time. When relief is being given out, he is not the first man there to ask for it. Those are our best citizens, and unfortunately they are the ones who suffer most.

The hon. member for Témiscouata referred to the amount of money that had been given to Saskatchewan. I should like to refer to what was mentioned a little while ago by an hon. member from the far corner of the house. I turn particularly to page 40 of the report of the commissioner of unemployment relief, where I find a recapitulation of the grants given to the different provinces. It will be seen there that the other provinces are getting a good share of the money. It is indicated that Ontario is getting $90,000,000.

Mr. GARDINER: $99,000,000.

Mr. DONNELLY: Saskatchewan is getting $56,000,000 and Quebec $61,000,000.

Mr. FAIR: What did Alberta get?

Mr. DONNELLY: It got less, because I want hon. members to understand that so far as Alberta and Manitoba are concerned, although they did have dry years, as a matter of fact Alberta was blessed by pretty fair crops each year.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And they had Aberhart.

Mr. DONNELLY: And they were not exerting themselves a great deal to pay a great many of their debts, because Mr. Aberhart said, "I am not going to pay a great many of our debts."

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Aberhart never said any such thing.

Mr. DONNELLY: And I guess with that kind of legislation, and with fair crops they must be thriving pretty well. So far as Manitoba was concerned—

Mr. BLACKMORE: On a point of order, the statement of the hon. member concerning Mr. Aberhart is absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

Mr. DONNELLY: Oh, sure, sure! I expected that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am asking the hon. member to withdraw, because the statement is false.

Mr. HANSELL: Withdraw.

Mr. BLACKMORE: No member of this house can make such a statement.

Mr. DONNELLY: I will tell the committee this: I will withdraw, as soon as Mr. Aberhart starts to pay his twenty-five dollars a month.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The statement that Mr. Aberhart has said he will not pay his debts is false.

Mr. HANSELL: Withdraw.

Mr. DONNELLY: Then, in all the years, only a small portion of Manitoba was affected by the drought. Saskatchewan, however, has been unfortunate. In the last ten years there has been no crop at all in the great bulk of Saskatchewan. Its chief product is wheat, and the farmer in Saskatchewan must depend on the production of wheat. We do hope that we will not need that relief in the future, that in years to come we will have crops again, and that we will begin to prosper.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Section 3 of the bill with which we are now dealing reads:

The governor in council may enter into agreements: (a) with any of the provinces respecting the alleviation of unemployment conditions and of agricultural distress therein and to assist those in need—

And so on. About an hour and a half ago I endeavoured to secure from the minister an answer respecting the amount to be allocated to Saskatchewan in the coming year. I am asking him again whether he will let the committee know what the anticipated amount will be, so that the argument now being used in that province may be met, namely that the cut in relief is on account of the fact that the dominion government is cutting the allowance given to the province this year.

When I spoke some time ago I mentioned that the people in Saskatchewan were appreciative of what was being done and what had been done since 1930 in the matter of assistance for the alleviation of conditions there prevailing. The hon, member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Donnelly) has admitted today something which I think he would not have admitted between 1930 and 1935, namely, that during those years, too—and often in the face of strong opposition from hon, members of the opposition—assistance was given to Saskatchewan in particular, by reason of the conditions there prevailing.

As the hon, member for Wood Mountain has pointed out, the difficulty in Saskatchewan, so far as relief is concerned, has been accentuated by drought. That condition made it necessary to make expenditures of large amounts of money in that province, moneys over and above amounts which had to be spent to meet conditions prevailing as a result of unemployment elsewhere throughout the dominion.

The hon. member has said there is no control by the dominion government in respect of expenditures made by the provinces. I would suggest, therefore, to the minister that some system should be adopted whereby the multiplicity of inspectors and officials administering relief would be substantially reduced. The hon. member said that the responsibility for the cutting of relief has been on the municipality and that the responsibility for relief measures is that of the municipal council. He very well knows that on each occasion relief is granted, it can be granted by the council only with the consent of the relief inspector, who is the representative of the provincial government.

When the hon, member says there has been no political influence in connection with the administration of relief, all I can say is that in the provincial election of 1938 there was political influence. Men and women in Saskatchewan were placed in a position where, while direct threats were not made, they were made to realize that it would be diplomatic to be known outspokenly as a supporter of the government. To be fair I must add that during the last federal election I saw no

Mr. EVANS: Where did that happen?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have the sworn evidence, and I shall deal with it, in answer to the question raised by the hon. member. I have before me sworn evidence in a trial in the rural municipality of Fish Creek, situated within the provincial constituency of Rosthern. If necessary, I can give reference to the page of the evidence. Some days prior to the provincial election of 1938 it was bruited about that relief was going to be cut after the election, and relief vouchers were issued before the election and five days in advance of the usual time. Do hon. members know where they were distributed? They were distributed at the polling station on election day, as individual voters went into the polling booth to cast their votes.

Mr. McLARTY: Would the hon. member permit me a question? I do not wish to interrupt him, but I think it must be recognized that the matter of administration is [Mr. Diefenbaker.]

purely provincial. The hon, member may say, "Well, why not cover this point in your agreement with the provinces?" In reply I would point out to him that in respect of all dominion-provincial agreements concerning material aid, it is clearly provided that no person's eligibility for assistance shall be affected, either through discrimination against that person or by favour, by reason of his or her race, religious views or political affiliations.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No doubt that principle is in the agreements, but let me tell the Minister of Labour that it is not carried out in actual practice. There should be a close inspection on the part of his department, but that has never been done and abuses do exist. Make no mistake about that.

Mr. GARDINER: Is not the evidence just recited by the hon, member for Lake Centre the evidence taken in a case where persons were prosecuted for using relief money in a manner in which it was not intended to be used? I understand that is a case where the province was prosecuting persons for having misused relief funds.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I think the Minister of Agriculture knows the circumstances of the case. When this government hands over money to the provinces to be expended by them, there should be some system of inspection and control so that we may be sure that this sort of thing will not happen. Referring to what the Minister of Agriculture has said, may I say that for seven long months the director of relief of this particular municipality continued to issue false relief certificates which were made out to non-existent individ-There was no check-up whereby that could be found out. It was discovered only when the relief certificates commenced to come back from the wholesalers four, five and six months afterwards. The agreements referred to by the Minister of Labour should be enforced and followed up with a system of control by the dominion government.

Mr. GARDINER: What proportion of the money expended by Duck Lake municipality came from the federal government?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: According to the evidence of the inspector of relief, 40 per cent was paid by the federal government, 40 per cent by the provincial government and 20 per cent by the municipality. Here is an excerpt from the evidence of the inspector of relief:

Q. So that the man primarily responsible for the checking of direct relief is yourself?

A. I would not even admit that.

Q. So that your entire check consists of accepting the figures given to you by the reeve and members of the council of the municipality? A. Yes, certainly.

There was no check-up, either provincial or federal. The conditions there were very bad, but they were not found out until some time later. In certain parts of the municipality, relief vouchers were distributed by being left, duly filled out, on the counters of certain merchants. The recipients picked up the particular vouchers they wanted. That continued for several months. There should be some control on the part of the federal administration to ensure that politics shall not enter into the administration of this act in any way. There would be little need to reduce relief payments to individuals if the administration costs were cut by the appointment of non-political relief administration.

An hon. MEMBER: Like 1930 to 1935.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The hon. gentleman refers to 1930 to 1935. During that period we had that system in Saskatchewan and there was no suggestion of political interference.

Mr. GARDINER: Does my hon. friend not know that during that period there were relief dealings with about 200 municipalities, in one year, and about 300 in the other.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No one expects that we can check up on the petty grafter who takes advantage of the farm placement scheme, but a municipality should not be permitted to expend money in this manner over a period of five, six and seven months. When 40 per cent of the money comes from the federal government, there should be some check-up. In this case $92,000 was expended in twelve months upon relief in an area where, according to the government inspectors, only ten per cent of the people receiving relief should be receiving it. Will the minister tell the committee how much will be paid to the western provinces during the present year? Recently cuts have been made in the relief grants, and in consequence many people in the province have been placed in a most unfortunate position. The people in the drought areas have been forced to live under conditions which are absolutely unfair, unjustified and unconscionable. It is said that the dominion government made this cut. As a result these people have had to accept less than they had been receiving in the past, and in many instances their mode of living has dropped to below the sustenance level. The minister is courteous at all times and I feel sure he will give me an answer. I want to know the amount that it is anticipated will be paid to the provinces.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is the case to which the hon. member is referring, the Wakaw case?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. gentleman was the defence counsel.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The minister wants to know about the administration of relief in Saskatchewan. Let me point out to him what happened in connection with employment upon public projects in Regina. The provincial member for Regina took the stand that unless a man had been able to get his application for work initialed by the president of the Liberal association or, better still, by the Liberal member, he could not obtain employment on a public project.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is true all over.

Mr. STIRLING: Not only in Saskatchewan.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The slogan, "To the victor belongs the spoils" was altered to, "Without initials you shall not have work."

Mr. GRAHAM: May I ask the hon. member another question?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: One minute, please. Surely there should be some control, so that this sort of thing could not happen. The very suggestion even of any political influence should not be permitted to exist.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is it not a fact that the premier of Saskatchewan repudiated categorically and completely any such suggestion as was alleged to have been made by the member for Regina?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: He repudiated it, yes, some two days later, after a public furore arose all over the province. I point this out as indicating, first, the necessity for control, and, second, the necessity for an assurance from the minister that the amount which will be paid in the western provinces has been determined and some indication as to the amount which has been determined upon.

Mr. McLARTY: In reply to the request which the hon. member made some time ago and which he has just now renewed as to the actual amount allocated by this government to Saskatchewan for material aid, I tell him quite frankly I have not that information. I think, in fact I know there has been no definite agreement arrived at between that province and the dominion. All I can do is to repeat that the amounts which will be set will be on the same basis as are set in all other provinces where material aid is granted, and we shall contribute our 40 per cent. I say without hesitation that we have not advised the province of Saskatchewan that we will diminish the percentage of our contribution to their relief. We are prepared to meet our share on the same basis as we have before. If the hon, member would care to place his question on the order paper, I shall be glad to give such information as soon as it is available.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the minister not bring it down voluntarily?

Mr. McLARTY: I shall be glad to bring it down if we have the information. As to the matter of administration, as my hon. friend knows, that has for some time been under the direction of the province. It illustrates what has been complained of, namely, the unfortunate situation that exists when the dominion contributes the money and the province has the administration. As my hon. friend knows, not only is his recommendation one that has been brought to the attention of the department at the present time, but the dominion-provincial commission have made a similar recommendation. It is a matter that I think deserves consideration, but it could not receive consideration in time to be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Chairman, in rising to discuss this particular section, I should like first to express my thanks to the minister and the officers of his department for dealing so promptly with all the problems which I brought to their attention. By telegram and airmail they have communicated with the proper authorities in Saskatchewan with respect to these cases, and I assure the minister that I appreciate that very much. In spite of that, reports still come to me from my constituency indicating that people on relief are going to be cut off. Just this morning I received from a relief recipient in my constituency this mimeographed sheet which was attached to his relief order for the month of June. It reads:

This notice is to advise that the grocery order for August will be the last one issued to you.

Northern Areas Branch.

The individual to whom this was sent is living under the northern reestablishment plan. Regardless of how good a crop there might be or how good the price might be, I consider it would be quite impossible for these people to live through the next year on the returns from their farm, and I feel sure that the minister will continue negotiations with the province of Saskatchewan in order that the people who have no way of getting through the next few months will not have to live under the threat of having their food cut off.

[Mr. McLarty.]

While I am on my feet I should like to refer to some remarks that were made by the hon. member for Wellington North (Mr. Blair) in discussing this bill the other day. He said:

Western farmers have talked until I am tired of listening to them.

As one member who has spoken of the problems of the west, I assure hon members that so long as there is a single individual in my constituency who is going hungry in this land of plenty, my voice will continue to be raised to see that the necessary action is taken to remedy that situation. The hon member for Wellington North went on to say:

The Ontario farmer is tired of listening to that sort of speech, and I say to western farmers, "The time has come when, if you cannot live in the west, you had better get out. If you are dried out year after year, get out and go somewhere where you can live."

I am sure the members of this committee realize that a suggestion of that sort cannot be taken seriously. The evidence placed before this committee by the minister indicates that there are thousands and thousands of people who would be affected by such a suggestion; and if I were to ask where would these people go, I am sure the hon. member for Wellington North would be the last man to say that in his constituency there are places where these people might become self-supporting in a few years. Speaking a year ago, the same hon. gentleman, discussing another aspect of this unemployment relief measure, and speaking of the unemployed, said:

But when I go to your city bums from the street I cannot get a man in fifty. You might think you could, but just you go and hire some of these yaps on the streets and you will see what you have got. In the country I can get men that have a spine, but I cannot when I pick up these travelling transients.

Observations of that sort with respect to the unemployed, with respect to people in western Canada who have been asking for assistance, are doing a great national disservice. I tell the hon. members of this committee that the people in western Canada do not want charity. They are not asking for something for nothing. The chairman of the Alberta wheat pool, speaking a year ago at the conference in Winnipeg under the chairmanship of Premier Bracken to discuss western problems, pointed out that all you had to do was to travel through western Canada, view the farm homes and draw your own conclusions. He said:

You city dwellers, take a trip by rail or highway through the west, and as you go along note every farm home you see, and figure out how many of those homes appear to you as places in which you would like your family to live. Look over the average farm home and visualize what it would take to put it on the same basis of comfort and convenience as the average city home.

Mr. Hutchinson pointed out to the conference what is obvious to anyone who travels through western Canada.

During this century the people of western Canada have produced untold quantities of new wealth. But what have they now? Heavily mortgaged farms, worn-out equipment, very little of this world's goods.

The hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Donnelly) spoke a short time ago. I am very glad to hear that the people in his constituency are living as well as he indicated. I should like him to come to my constituency to see some of his former friends who, through no fault of theirs, have been forced to move north. As he spoke, I recalled one of his old neighbours, a man who a few years ago had a fine farm in the hon. member's constituency. One day a United States farmer who was coming to Canada to settle drove into this man's yard when his golden grain was waving in the breeze and offered him $40,000 cash for the farm with the crop. At that time there was not a cent of debt on the farm. The farmer had a family of young people. They had a conference. To them, $40,000 seemed a great deal of money. They said, "Will we sell or will we not? If we sell, what shall we do?" The farmer did not want to move with a growing family to a town or a city, and he knew that if he sold his farm and went to buy another, he could not better himself. He said to his visitor, "You have given us a good offer, but this is going to be our home, we are going to stay here." Through no fault of his, adversity came to his community. He is now up in my constituency living in a log house. He came north without one cent of equity in that $40,000 property.

Mr. DONNELLY: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is that the fault of this government?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I made it quite clear that through no fault of this man he is now in a position where he is not in possession of a $40,000 farm.

Mr. DONNELLY: I asked if it is this government's fault or any other government's fault? It is the weather conditions—

Mr. NICHOLSON: The hon. member made a speech a short time ago without any interruption on my part. I am pointing out that this man, who formerly had a good farm in the constituency of my hon. friend, is now reduced to a position where he has had to ask the government for assistance. I saw him during the week when he first went to ask for government assistance, and I know it was a bitter pill for him to swallow.

I want to point out to hon. members that thousands and thousands of farmers in western Canada have been compelled, through no fault of their own, to ask for relief. I do not blame the present administration; I want to make that clear; but I point out that these people who need food and clothing-yes, and medical services; yes, and educational services-have a right in this day and age to receive them. I submit to the hon. member for Wellington North, who is not present at the moment, that when we ask, on behalf of our people in western Canada, for assistance for those who are unemployed through no fault of their own, we are not setting any precedent.

In the case for Manitoba which was presented to the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations, there are statistics on page 19 showing what the people of Canada have paid as a result of tariffs. In only two provinces of the dominion have the people on the whole benefited as a result of tariffs. This is a table, as presented in this brief, showing that seven of the nine provinces have carried a load to benefit a small group of manufacturers:

Province	Net annual loss per capita
Prince Edward Island	 $17.88
Nova Scotia	 12.28
New Brunswick	 11.67
Manitoba	13.25
Saskatchewan	 28.16
Alberta	29.93
British Columbia	 22.33

Only two provinces have enjoyed a net profit as a result of our tariffs. Their net per capita gains per year are:

Province		Net ar gain cap	per
Ontario Quebec	 	$11.	03

On page 22 of the same volume there is a table indicating what the average farmer has paid in respect of farm operations as a result of our fiscal policy:

Automobile equipment and fuel.		$ 27.19
Machinery, implements, etc
Building material		7.16
Household equipment		12.60
Clothing		24.41
Food		20.57

Assuming that there are 290,000 farmers in the three prairie provinces, the added cost borne by western farmers as a result of tariffs would be about $29,000,000 a year. I suggest that such remarks as those of the hon, member for Wellington North and the hon, member for Wood Mountain, indicating that we are asking for more than our share, are not conducive to the building up of national unity.

The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) is not in his seat at the moment, but I want to express my agreement with him when he says that the people of his constituency who need help should have it. I do not believe he wished to be unfair to Saskatchewan when he suggested that we have had a great deal of money. Possibly the sum of $56,000,000 for Saskatchewan in a ten-year period sounds like a great deal of money. But if in a province or a community there are families where the children go to bed hungry, I do not care how many millions of dollars have been given in the past ten years; I believe it is the concern of this government to see that the necessary policies are carried out so that the provincial government can take steps to see that children do not go hungry. I like to think of Canada as a great family.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the hon, member allow me a question? I am distressed to hear him say that children go to bed hungry. Will he state that at any time during the last ten years, since relief was first instituted by the Bennett government, in September, 1930, anybody in Saskatchewan has starved or has been in actual want? I would be disturbed if that were the case. I know it was not the intention of R. B. Bennett and his government that anybody in Canada should be in want, and I cannot for a moment believe that it is the intention of anybody on the other side of the house since 1935 that anyone shall be in actual want. I can scarcely credit such a thing. But what I do believe is that there should be a tightening up of the whole position; there should not be any question of playing political favourites or of vote-catching in connection with this matter. That is something which distresses me, too. Human suffering should never be made the basis for the bartering of votes. I want to say that just as emphatically as I know how.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I appreciate very much the remarks of the leader of the opposition, and I really believe that members of this house do not know the conditions that exist in my constituency. I do not believe the Minister of Labour has any idea of the suffering in northern Saskatchewan. There are many people in the cities who really do not [Mr. Nicholson.]

know what it means to have a budget such as the hon. member for North Battleford has had for several months. Speaking the other night she gave the government the benefit of the doubt in telling of the allowance for their family, and I want to say most emphatically that at the present time there are in Saskatchewan not one, but hundreds, yes, thousands of people who are not getting enough food for their children. I have two letters to which I might refer. The hon. member for Wood Mountain objected to my reading letters from my constituents, but I do not think I am doing my duty unless I let the committee know the conditions that exist in that section. This is a letter here from a married woman who worked in England in a munition factory for four years during the last war. She and her husband live in Canada. She tells me that on the day she wrote there was no flour in the house. She has offered her services again for work in a munition factory, but so far she has received no reply. I know she would not be accepted anyhow, because she is not physically fit for such work. She would not have a chance in the world.

Mr. McLARTY: I think my hon. friend is aware that the provincial government proposed sending an investigator and asked the labour department's representative in Saskatchewan to cooperate. I wonder if the hon. member would give these names to the investigator so that we can make a definite check on it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: When I began my remarks I expressed my appreciation of the cooperation which the minister and his officials have given, and I have already submitted this communication. As a matter of fact, the minister's department took the matter up at once and telegraphed to Saskatchewan, but the leader of the opposition asked me if I had any specific cases and I felt obliged to refer to this matter. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee by dealing with specific cases, but I had these two that had been attended to at once by the minister's department. I assure members of the committee, speaking from a wide experience over a period of ten years in northern Saskatchewan, that the people who are being reestablished from our cities and southern Saskatchewan are not having proper clothing. If hon, members had the privilege of spending a week or a month in those northern areas they would be surprised. While in Hudson Bay junction, I wrote to friends in eastern Canada and sent them pictures which I had in the house the other day, and with the greatest possible speed they sent generous consignments of clothing and all sorts of things. I know, therefore, that if the people really had the facts, action would be taken. I am concerned that the minister should see to it that the present emergency throughout the world will not be used as an excuse for pressing down relief allowances in northern Saskatchewan, because those allowances are already far too low. I hope the minister will see that those responsible for the administration of relief in Saskatchewan are advised to make sure that no person is deprived of food and clothing in this day and age.

Mr. GRAHAM: Have the cases to which the hon. member has been referring been submitted to the provincial authorities of Saskatchewan?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am glad to answer that question. One of these cases was referred to the department in charge in Regina. I am sorry I have not the reply with me, but my advice was that commencing the first of June this particular allowance was cut down to $14 a month as a result of the coming in of gardens

Mr. GRAHAM: Will the hon. member give me the name of the municipality?

Mr. NICHOLSON: This is in an unorganized district.

Mr. GRAHAM: Will the hon, member give the name of the district in which the person resides?

Mr. NICHOLSON: In the northern reestablishment area, in the Erwood district. I shall be glad to give my friend the name and the correspondence from the department in Regina. The minister's department is investigating this case. I did take the matter up with Regina, and they advised me that the allowance was reduced to $14 a month at the beginning of June as a result of gardens coming in. This woman replied that they cannot expect garden stuff until July, and she says that the allowance is only $12. I am sure the minister will investigate to see whether it has been cut to $12 or whether it is $14 as the department in Regina says.

Mr. GARDINER: This discussion has been wide of the section now being considered. Much of the discussion that has taken place to-day, and the discussion that took place previously, has had to do with another matter which will come up later on. The term "northern settlement plan" has been referred to time after time. In my estimates there is a vote for the northern settlement plan, and all the work under that plan which is done by the provincial government is done as a result of arrangements made under that vote and not in connection with this bill. All the discussions in connection with that, I presume, will take place again when we come to the estimate of $250,000 to be used in the different provinces for that kind of work, the greater part being used in Saskatchewan. The settlers spoken of are settlers who, as the leader of the opposition will remember, were moved into that country under a plan started by Mr. Bennett in 1932, whereby the municipality paid $200, the province $200 and the federal government $200, to move people, many of them from Saskatoon and Moose Jaw and some from other districts into the northern areas of Saskatchewan. They were given this $600 to buy equipment and building materials to take with them in order to start farming. Many of these people had no farming experience or knew very little about farming in bush country. Some had worked the greater part of their lives on the railway. Eventually the plan was dropped. Some of these people lost their live stock; some lost other supplies that had been sent up as a result of securing the $600. Most of them had to be placed on relief, costing the province and the government of Canada and others at least as much as they were costing where they came from, and, in many instances, more.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The suggestion being that they were not qualified to farm.

Mr. GARDINER: They had not the equipment for farming, or they were put on bush farms when they were acquainted with nothing but the open prairie. Moreover, in that country it cost as much as $40 an acre to break the land, and when a person goes on the land in some of these areas it is a long time before enough is cleared to produce sufficient to pay the cost. In the last four or five years the government, with the assistance of the federal authority, has been helping these people to break some land, actually buying tractors to help them to break up the land at a lower cost. I shall have the figures when the estimates are down in connection with my own department, indicating the number of those persons taken off relief as a result of the activities of the provincial government and the federal authorities working in cooperation. That is being carried on not only in Saskatchewan but on a smaller scale in New Brunswick. It is also being done to some extent in British Columbia and in Alberta, but by far the greater part has been done in Saskatchewan. That is another story altogether but one that has been mixed up with this bill from time to time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: At page 14 of the report I see an item, No. 20, with reference to the reestablishment of settlers, $250,000.

Mr. GARDINER: That does not include northern settlement work, or it may have included such work prior to four years ago when it was changed from the Department of Labour to the Department of Agriculture; or if it is there, it is merely an account of the work in order to make the report complete on assistance.

Mr. NICHOLSON: It is for the last year.

Mr. GARDINER: This bill would not have anything to do with the northern settlement end of it.

There is another point. Much of the discussion that has taken place has had to do with an entirely different expenditure, one not under this measure or under the northern settlement plan. In the years when the drought was bad there was no legislation to deal with it, and what the government did under those circumstances, while Mr. Bennett was in power, and under this government as well, was this: When those conditions arose in the middle of the summer and there was no legislation on the statute books, the money was produced by warrant, and we had to come into this house session after session and vote millions that may not be in these records at all. If they are in the records, they are not related to the bill.

When you say Saskatchewan borrowed so much money and got so much more under this legislation, you may not have all the figures. Very substantial amounts of money have been spent in Saskatchewan under warrants which have been issued, and the greater part of that money has been spent through the Department of Agriculture and not through the Department of Labour. There was something over $20,000,000 in 1937-38 spent through the Department of Agriculture under these warrants, because of the fact that we had drought on which we had not counted when parliament was in session.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And for which there was no financial provision.

Mr. GARDINER: That is correct. That was reported at the next session of parliament; the house agreed that the money should have been spent, and passed on to another year. Many of these matters are dealt with, not through this legislation but in other ways.

I should like to say a word with regard to one other matter which has come up time after time in these discussions. It was brought to my mind by the newspaper clipping, I think it was, read by the hon, member for Mackenzie a few moments ago, stating that somebody had notified some individual that after August they could not depend upon further relief allowances.

Mr. NICHOLSON: This notice was sent out with the June relief order, from the northern areas branch.

Mr. GARDINER: I will explain that. I think a notice which covers three months is a fairly long notice. These notices say that after August there may be no relief issued. This is not something happening for the first time this year. I understand the matter fully; I have dealt with it for many years, both here and in the province. No government, either federal, provincial or municipal, intends to pay relief one day longer than it must.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is right.

Mr. GARDINER: I think that is proper. They intend to pay relief just as long as it is a necessity in order to assist people.

Now may I say this. No matter what our wishes or feelings may be, there is no government, municipal, provincial or dominion, whatever may be its name, that is going to do for individuals what those individuals would like to do and would do for themselves if conditions were such that they could look after themselves without assistance from the government. No government is ever going to be able to satisfy all the people to whom they must give assistance. I do not think it makes any difference what form of government you have, or under what name the government operates; that will be the situation. People will never get from a government what they really require in order to live as we all believe people should be able to live. It has always been found difficult to bring about that condition with government assistance, and I think that will always be the case.

Having said that, I should like to mention how the system has operated. This has been stated a number of times from the opposite point of view. We have said that the municipality has the first responsibility, the province the next and the dominion the next; and we say that when the municipality cannot meet the situation, it is up to the province or the dominion, or all three combined. Look at it in this way. The municipality is the first authority upon which is placed the responsibility of saying whether or not there is going to be any further relief. For that very reason the municipality is asked to pay 20 per cent of the cost of relief. Somebody, some time, has to begin to stop it; after the municipality has had its say, the province has its chance, and this government, as well as the previous government, has in most instances accepted the statement from the municipality, plus the statement by the province, that something ought to be done to assist these people. We make the municipality assume responsibility by finding 20 per cent and the province by finding 40 per cent. Now we are in June, and there may be a very fine crop standing. I drove through my hon. friend's district last August, and I saw the finest crop I have ever seen in my life.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Not in the Erwood district.

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps I should have said in the district of the hon. member for Melfort, (Mr. Wright), which is right alongside, and even starting from Foam Lake, or just north of Yorkton, and continuing north in the constituency of Mackenzie, there was a pretty fine crop last year. In the district north of Tisdale there was the best crop I have ever seen at any time anywhere in the world. That is immediately tributary to the district where these people are settled.

Mr. NICHOLSON: A hundred miles away.

Mr. GARDINER: I say in the district right around the edge of the country to which I am referring, and where the crop is, you will find many of these people.

Mr. WRIGHT: The biggest percentage of these people have no land under cultivation at all.

Mr. GARDINER: Then they are under the northern settlement plan, with which I am not dealing at all. Here we are in the month of June, and the municipal councils see fine crops growing. Do not hon, members think they are showing good judgment when they give notice three months ahead that if those crops continue to grow, there will be no further relief after September 1, when harvesting will be in progress? That notice is given now in the statements referred to, but if in the meantime there are no crops; if they are dried out or frozen or hailed out, then the provincial government, the federal government and the municipality will come back into the picture, as they have ever since we have had relief.

Mr. WRIGHT: May I ask a question?

Mr. GARDINER: It is just about six o'clock, and I should like to finish what I have to say.

Mr. WRIGHT: I just wondered if the minister knew what percentage of those people were settled in municipalities and what percentage in unorganized districts.

Mr. GARDINER: I will have those figures when I bring down my estimates but I believe the percentage in the organized districts will be lower than in the unorganized.

Every year the agreements that have been entered into under this act have run out on April 1. We have extended them month by month and have indicated that if conditions were better as we got into the season, the agreements would be cancelled entirely. But along in August or September we have entered into our new agreements. Between April 1 and September 1 every governing body has called the attention of the people to the fact that they might be cut off relief and probably would be cut off if conditions justified that being done. Most people hope they will be able to go off relief, and they are all trying to cooperate towards that end. So I suggest that if a provincial government, as in this case through the northern settlement plan, have given three months' notice of their intention to cut people off relief, they have given fairly good notice; but if there is no crop in the meantime, the people will have relief just as they have always had it. No one will deny it to them.

The municipal council is the first body that must act. I suppose we might as well admit here, as we admit elsewhere, that it is only human nature to pass the buck a little. When a man is cornered and asked, "Why aren't you going to give us relief?" the municipal man may say, "Oh, the province is not going to help us," and the province may say, "Well, the federal government is not going to help Our view has been that if we are absolutely satisfied that they should not be helped, we will not help them, and I believe the province would say exactly the same thing. But the municipality with the assistance of the province and the federal government will carry them along until all are satisfied as to whether they should be helped. This bill is to make the help possible. I think my hon. friends will agree with me in this, that in the ten years we have gone through, the great majority of people, irrespective of party or irrespective of any government with which they might have been associated, and irrespective of any municipality with which they might have been connected, have been trying to do the best they can for the people who have been having very difficult times.

If there was only one court case of the kind described by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), then I think there can be no great criticism. I say that because when between three hundred and four hundred municipalities are in difficulties and only one court case has resulted, the condition cannot be too bad. I would hope that there have not been other cases, and that generally the conditions were much better than that one case would indicate they might have been.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East) the house adjourned at 6 p.m.

END OF VOLUME I.
