ANADA. TARLIAMENT. MOUSE

DOMINION OF CANADA

OFFICIAL REPORT

OF

DEBATES HOUSE OF COMMONS

SIXTH SESSION—EIGHTEENTH PARLIAMENT

AND

FIRST SESSION—NINETEENTH PARLIAMENT

4 GEORGE VI, 1940

VOLUME I, 1940

COMPRISING THE ONE-DAY SESSION OF JANUARY 25, 1940, AND THE PERIOD FROM THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF MAY, 1940, TO THE TWENTY-FIRST DAY OF JUNE, 1940, INCLUSIVE

BEING

VOLUME CCXXII FOR THE PERIOD 1875-1940

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

OTTAWA
EDMOND CLOUTIER
PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY
1940

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Thursday, January 25, 1940.

SIXTH SESSION—EIGHTEENTH PAR-LIAMENT—OPENING

The parliament which had been prorogued from time to time to the twenty-fifth day of January, 1940, met this day at Ottawa, for the dispatch of business.

The house met at three o'clock, the Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Governor General's secretary, announcing that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate chamber at three p.m. on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

VACANCIES

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that during the recess I received communications from several members, notifying me that the following vacancies had occurred in the representation, viz:

Of Wilfrid Girouard, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Drummond-Arthabaska, by resignation;

Of Pierre Emile Cote, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Bonaventure, by resignation;

Of Otto Buchanan Elliott, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Kindersley, by resignation;

Of James Warren Rutherford, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Kent, Ontario, by decease;

95826-A

Of Joseph Leon Vital Mallette, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Jacques-Cartier, by decease;

Of Alexander MacGillivray Young, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Saskatoon City, by decease;

Of Hon. Fernand Rinfret, member for the electoral district of St. James, by decease;

Of Alfred Edgar MacLean, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Prince, by decease.

I accordingly issued my several warrants to the chief electoral officer to make out new writs of election for the said electoral districts, respectively.

NEW MEMBERS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that during the recess the clerk of the house has received from the chief electoral officer certificates of the election and return of the following members, viz:

Of Douglas George Leopold Cunnington, Esquire, for the electoral district of Calgary West:

Of Arthur Lisle Thompson, Esquire, for the electoral district of Kent, Ontario;

Of Eugene Durocher, Esquire, for the electoral district of St. James:

Of Elphège Marier, Esquire, for the electoral district of Jacques-Cartier;

Of Hon. James Layton Ralston, for the electoral district of Prince;

Of Walter George Brown, Esquire, for the electoral district of Saskatoon City.

NEW MEMBERS INTRODUCED

Hon. James Layton Ralston, member for the electoral district of Prince, introduced by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe.

Arthur Lisle Thompson, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Kent, Ontario, introduced by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Hon. N. A. McLarty. Eugene Durocher, Esquire, member for the electoral district of St. James, introduced by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe.

Elphège Marier, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Jacques Cartier, introduced by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe.

Douglas George Leopold Cunnington, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Calgary West, introduced by Hon. Robert J. Manion and Mr. E. E. Perley.

Walter George Brown, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Saskatoon City, introduced by Miss Agnes C. Macphail and Mr. Joseph Needham.

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that when the house did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows. Shall I dispense?

Mr. MANION: No; I should like to have it read.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will have it read by the clerk assistant.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

During the months which have elapsed since the close of the special session, my ministers have given unremitting attention to the organization and prosecution of Canada's war effort. The government has been in constant consultation with the government of the United Kingdom, and the measures adopted have been those which it is believed will best serve the common cause.

Vigorous action has been taken through all branches of the armed forces to provide for the security and defence of Canada, and for co-operation with the allied forces on land, on sea and in the air.

For the effective prosecution of the war, Canada's industrial, financial and other resources are being steadily mobilized and all war activities coordinated. The production and marketing of agricultural and other primary products have been given constructive direction; and safeguards have been provided against undue enhancement, under war conditions, of the prices of food, fuel and other necessaries of life.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Since last you met the developments of the war have made increasingly clear the nature of the struggle in which we are engaged. The very existence of nations that cherish independence and democratic ideals is menaced by enemy forces of ruthless aggression which aim to dominate mankind by terror and violence. The Canadian people have shown their determination to share with Britain and France to the utmost of their strength in the defence of freedom.

of their strength in the defence of freedom.

My ministers are of the opinion that the effective prosecution of the war makes it imperative that those who are charged with the grave responsibility of carrying on the government of Canada should, in this critical period, be fortified by a direct and unquestioned mandate from the people. My advisers, accordingly, having regard to existing conditions and the stage of the life of the present parliament, have decided upon an immediate appeal to the country.

Honourable Members of the Senate: Members of the House of Commons:

In all that pertains to the discharge of your responsible duties, may Divine Providence be your strength and guide.

WAR MEASURES ACT

ORDERS IN COUNCIL RESPECTING WAR EMERGENCY MATTERS TABLED

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table certain orders in council respecting war emergency matters. These are the various orders that have been passed under the War Measures Act. There are typewritten copies of all measures that have been passed since the close of the special session and up to and including January 17, 1940. All orders in council passed under the authority of the War Measures Act having the character of legislation are being printed and I have every reason to believe that they will be ready to table in printed form, both in French and in English, by the middle of next week.

ACTING DEPUTY SERGEANT AT ARMS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have appointed John Laundy to be acting deputy sergeant at arms during the present session.

DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT

STATEMENT OF THE PRIME MINISTER AS TO PROPOSED GENERAL ELECTION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move that the house do now adjourn, but if the house would permit me so to do I should like to make a statement to hon. members with respect to the paragraph in the speech from the throne which refers to an immediate dissolution. Hon. members will be interested in knowing the circumstances which have actuated the ministry in advising his excellency that no time should be lost in having an appeal to the country.

The paragraph to which I have particular reference is the following:

My ministers are of the opinion that the effective prosecution of the war makes it imperative that those who are charged with the grave responsibility of carrying on the government of Canada should, in this critical period, be fortified by a direct and unquestioned mandate from the people. My advisers, accordingly, having regard to existing conditions and the stage of the life of the present parliament, have decided upon an immediate appeal to the country.

The house will recall that at the special session my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Manion) asked me if I was prepared to give an undertaking that an election would not be called by the present government before parliament had again been summoned. I gave him that assurance and I should like to read to the house the words used in that connection. They will be found at page 157 of Hansard. They are as follows:

As to the question of a general election before another session, my hon. friend has been kind enough to say that I told him some time ago that I would not think of anything of the kind or countenance it. Nor have I had a suggestion from any member of parliament that a general election should be thought of between now and another session.

I wish to direct particular attention to these words: "before another session" and "a general election should be thought of between now"—that is the time at which I was speaking last September—"and another session."

I then gave to the house my own views with respect to the undesirability of parliament extending its own term. Perhaps I had better give that paragraph, as it follows in natural sequence. I said:

The term of parliament is five years; and as time runs on there may be in the minds of some a temptation to follow the course which was adopted during the last war and have parliament perpetuate its term, provided the war is not over at that time. Personally, I never liked the extension which was made during the time of the last war. In my opinion, the people of the country have the right to say whom they wish to have adminis-tering the affairs of Canada, and they should exercise that right periodically at the time provided for in the constitution. I do not think any parliament should take it upon itself to deprive the people of that right. That is my feeling, very strongly, at the moment. There may be conditions between now and the end of this parliament which may necessitate a reconsideration of this question, but I should hope that everyone would expect that the people of Canada should have a chance to express their minds freely with regard to the administration, the opposition, third parties and generally with their representation in parliament within the period of time which the constitution provides.

I returned to the question of calling the next session of parliament, and said:

It is my intention to have parliament called again in January. It may possibly be necessary to have parliament called before that, but I should expect that we would follow the usual procedure and bring hon. members together some time in the month of January. At that time, we will be in a position to consider what steps may be most necessary with regard to developments that may ensue meanwhile. I hope I have made perfectly clear the position of my colleagues and myself.

Then my hon. friend the leader of the opposition was kind enough to say:

May I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to break the rules and speak again merely to express my thanks to the Prime Minister for his straightforward answer to my question.

I think it is quite clear from what I have read what was in my mind at the time as to the different circumstances that might arise in a period of war; and that my intention was that before there should be a dissolution of this parliament, parliament itself should be summoned and given that information; in other words, that there would be no election between the last special session and the calling of the present session.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that at that time I had hoped that circumstances might be such as would permit of another session of this parliament being held before a general election. But as I have said, no one can foresee what is likely to take place in a time of war, and none can foretell the degree to which a government may continue to enjoy the confidence of the people in carrying on the affairs of the nation at so critical a time. I was careful therefore to say that it would be desirable when parliament next assembled to have had a careful review in the interval of all circumstances which would bear on the question of whether it would be advisable to proceed in a period of war with a preelection session, or to have on the hustings such discussion as must necessarily take placein other words, to avoid two political battles. one in parliament and one on the hustings as well.

I had felt, I must say, up until a very short time ago that it was going to be possible, at a session called in the month of January, to present to this parliament the measures which the government felt it would be necessary, before an appeal to the people, to carry through for the effective prosecution of the war. I had always been very much concerned, as I think the house is well aware, about the long period of time required by our elections act for a general election. Under the act and its administration I think something like eight weeks is required to elapse between the date of dissolution and the day of election. I had felt that possibly we might get over the difficulty of having such a long interval while war was on and parliament was not in session, by shortening the time in which there would be no parliament through an amendment to our elections act to reduce the period in which the country would be without a parliament to something like four weeks. I spoke to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition about that prior to the special session of last year. I should have liked to introduce such a measure at that time, but I gathered from what he said to me and from what others have said, that the introduction of any measure to amend the elections act would be certain to create some suspicion in the minds of some hon. members and to provoke a kind of discussion that would not be advisable.

95826-A3

Mr. MANION: If the right hon gentleman will permit me to interject, I should like him to take his own responsibility for his acts and not try to put it on other people.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am going to take full responsibility, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MANION: Then take it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thought I had done my hon, friend a courtesy in mentioning that I had talked the matter over with him before the last session and that he had given me his view that it would be unwise to attempt a measure of that kind.

Mr. MANION: The right hon, gentleman told me that he was going to bring it in at this session of parliament. I pointed out that such a period would not give a leader time to cross this country, and my right hon. friend's reply was, "Why should a leader cross this country?" So far as bringing in such a measure last session is concerned, there was no discussion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Possibly there may be some misunderstanding in the mind of my hon. friend as to just what our conversation was. At any rate he is quite right when he says that he had mentioned to me, as one of the reasons why it would not be advisable to try to shorten the period for the election, that the leader would wish to take seven weeks, at least, in discussing issues before the electorate in the country. However, my hon. friend has made quite clear his own point of view, which is that he should have a period of something like eight weeks, because that is about the time required under the act, to address the electorate in a period of a general election.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

If that is the case, it demands consideration at once of just when a dissolution should take place which will involve a campaign of something like eight weeks, and controversy on electoral matters throughout that period of time, at a time when the country is in a state of war and Europe is in the condition which we all know it to be in to-day.

But I am getting away from what I had wished to make clear to the house, which was that I had hoped there would be a feeling of sufficient confidence in the present administration, and an evidence of sufficient unity between all parts of this country to have enabled us, at a session at this time, to introduce a number of measures and then to go to the country a little later on. Until a week or two ago—indeed, until a week ago—it was my intention that this should be the procedure. But, as hon. members know, just a week ago to-day, or yesterday, the premier of the largest province in this country—

Miss MACPHAIL: A Liberal.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: -introduced in the Ontario legislature a resolution which was directed in no uncertain terms at the government of Canada now administering its affairs. That resolution was seconded by the leader of the Conservative opposition in the Ontario legislature; and when it came to a vote, the resolution was supported by all of the ministers of the Ontario government who were present in the house at the time, by some of the members of the Liberal party in Ontario, and by all of the Conservative members in the legislature. The resolution had been preceded by some discussion in the legislature—a discussion which had taken place, I think, for a couple of days-attacking the manner in which this government has sought to administer the affairs of the country during this period of war. I think I would have paid little or no attention to that discussion had it been confined to the leader of the government of Ontario and to the leader of the opposition of Ontario; I would have allowed it to pass, and not made further mention of the matter other than to discuss the merits of any points which might have been raised in the discussion. However, when the Ontario legislature adopted the resolution and it was given a permanent place on the records of the legislature, quite a different situation presented itself to this government. May I read the resolution?

That this house has heard with interest the reports made by the prime minister and the leader of the opposition of the result of their visit to Ottawa, to discuss war measures with the national government and this house hereby endorses the statements made by the two members in question and joins with them in regretting that the federal government at Ottawa has made so little effort to prosecute Canada's duty in the war in the vigorous manner the people of Canada desire to see.

I ask hon, members to notice the extent of the charge which is made there. It is a charge against the federal government. It is not against myself alone personally but against the entire administration. There have been, as no doubt hon, members are aware, many other attacks upon me personally as leader of the government; but this is against the government at Ottawa, and the charge is that we have made so little effort to prosecute the war. It is further suggested that this criticism, or censure, or whatever it is, is being made in the name of the people of Canada, because it reads: "to prosecute Canada's duty in the war in the vigorous manner the people of Canada desire to see."

I do not think I need say to hon. members that, since war was declared, and this parliament decided that Canada would participate in the war-decided in the unanimous manner in which it did-my colleagues and myself have given every ounce of our strength and every hour of our time in the most devoted manner possible endeavouring to further Canada's war effort, and the interests of the nation. We have not tried to do so in a We are too dramatic or spectacular way. conscious of the gravity of the responsibility which is ours. But we have steadily, day in, day out, given the most careful and thoughtful consideration to every step that should be taken to see that that step would be taken in a manner which would meet with the approval of the people of Canada, and which, so far as the war is concerned, would best serve to further Canada's war effort in the most effective possible way. I had thought, and I believe, that the Canadian people approve both the manner in which the government has undertaken its duties, and the way in which it has discharged them. The very fact that we have to-day throughout the country a chorus, one might almost say, of the press expressing the hope that this administration will continue to carry on, is the best evidence that at least the press of the country, which have to do with the moulding of public opinion, and know something about current opinion, believe that this government has solidly behind it the support of the people.

However, that is not the only thing. Even that resolution might have been put to one side were it not for the evident purpose which lies back of it. That resolution was passed to start a political campaign while this parliament was in session, to have advantage taken of the fact that my colleagues and myself would be obliged to give our attention and our whole attention while parliament was sitting to the work of parliament as well as to the problems of the war and the carrying on of Canada's war effort, while other gentlemen were to be free to criticize our effort, to misrepresent everything that was done, and everything that to them might seem to be left undone. In other words, we were to continue to carry the grave responsibility of doing our duty in the matter of Canada's war effort, and at the same time assume a very great responsibility-not as great as the other, but a very great responsibility-of meeting parliament day in and day out and to try so to conduct debates here as to have due regard for what is taking place in Europe and the care to be exercised with respect to whatever is said and whatever is done, and to have at the same time an electoral campaign carried on against us by those who are political opponents of the administration.

What is the cry already? Already, after this resolution is passed, the leader of the Conservative party of Ontario, at a political meeting, tells the meeting, and through the meeting the province, and through the province the country, that the election must start at once; and he gives them the slogan, "King must go." That is to be the slogan. I am quite prepared to accept that slogan if he will add the words, "to the country." But I ask hon, members: How can I be expected to do what is expected of me by this country in a time of war as leader of the government of Canada if all of my time and thought is to be surrounded by the animosities of political opponents who are seeking to undermine every effort that is being put forward in the leadership of the administration?

I should have thought that, at least until this house had met and expressed its views, those who have any sense of public duty would have been content to allow their political animosity not to be given too much expression. However, it is now evident that a political campaign has begun. That being so, I ask hon. members whether it is wise to try to carry on a political campaign in the country and a political campaign in this parliament—two campaigns at one and the same time—while war is going on at the front.

People the world over will understand, I believe, what may be said on the hustings, and they will be prepared to make some allowance for extreme statements made in the course of a political campaign. They can understand political opponents speaking differently on the hustings from the way in which they speak in this chamber where they have the responsibility which rests upon members in this house. It is a very different thing to have such, discussions introduced into the debates in this house as is inevitable once a campaign has started in the country.

Apart from that, however, may I say there are very strong reasons—and they are set forth in the speech from the throne—why it is in the public interest, in the interest of the country, and in the interest of the allied powers, if we are to have an election, as it is now perfectly evident that we must have, we should have it just as soon as possible, and have it over at the earliest moment.

In the first place, as indicated by the speech from the throne, this is the sixth session of the present parliament, one session having been a special one. This parliament was returned in 1935 and this is 1940. That in itself, in my opinion, is the strongest reason why there should be an election at this time. Some may say that this was not the case with Sir Robert Borden; that this was not the view that he took. Sir Robert Borden's government was returned to power in 1911 and war came on in 1914. Sir Robert had been in office for only three years, and there were the most cogent of reasons why he should carry on. He had still another two years before his term would be completed. Our situation, however, is quite different. As everyone knows, this is the last session of this parliament. When the time came for dissolution as fixed by the constitution, Sir Robert Borden found difficulties in the way, because of the stage to which the war had advanced, of giving to the people the right to which they are periodically entitled of declaring to whom they wish to entrust the management of their affairs, and this at a very critical time. There is, therefore, the strongest constitutional reason why we should meet the country just as soon as we possibly can.

But I would mention another circumstance. Had I thought that it would have been in the interests of the country so to do, I would have gone to the people immediately after the last special session in order that those charged with the great responsibility of government in war time might have a direct and unquestionable mandate from the electorate. I realized at that time, however, that it was necessary that Canada's war effort should be gotten under way as expeditiously as possible, that the country should be changed as speedily as possible from a peace-time to a war-time organization, that all necessary military and economic measures should be taken without delay. Once those measures were under way it was clear the situation would be entirely different. Fortunately, in the months that have elapsed since the special session, the government has been able to organize Canada's war effort and to do so very effectively. We have brought into the public service, irrespective of the parties to which they belong, key men who, I believe, enjoy the confidence of the people generally. We have formed the necessary boards to deal with the different war activities. All the work of organization with respect to the army, the navy and the air force has been admirably initiated and developed. The first Canadian division is now in Great Britain and the British commonwealth air training scheme is under way. We have just carried through, in the course of a day or two, our Canadian war loan, so that provision is made from that source for the financial needs of the country for the next considerable period of time. In connection with economic, financial and military affairs the basic work has been successfully planned and accomplished and the officials of the permanent service are at this moment in the best position—a better position than they are ever likely to be in at any other time—to carry out further development while a political campaign is in progress.

May I again ask hon, members this question: If an election is to take place, is it not wise to have it just as soon as we possibly can?

Miss MACPHAIL: In the winter?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will answer my hon. friend's question in that regard. What about the men who are fighting overseas? What about the military forces everywhere? They have to face the winter.

Miss MACPHAIL: I should like to see them drive over the roads.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have considered that question carefully and I think my answer will appeal to my hon. friend as well as to others. I am told by the chief electoral officer that an election will take nearly eight weeks. Provided we have a dissolution in the very near future, we might have the election over before the end of March. Before the end of March the roads will not have been broken up.

Miss MACPHAIL: They will be piled up, fence-high.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not care what time of year an election is held, there will always be some objections to consider. If you have not an election before the roads begin to break up in the month of March, and if you are considering in the matter the physical condition of the country, April will not be a month for an election, nor will May—May, more particularly, for the reason that if you start the election before May you will have to have the lists prepared before that month; and as everyone knows, the first of May is the time when a large percentage of the people in the cities move from one location to another, so that if proper lists were to be in existence, there would have to be a further revision of lists at that time. If you go past that time, it takes you into the month of June. For many reasons, I do not think it is advisable that we should wait until June for a general election.

May I give what I regard as the strongest reason for having an immediate election. The one thing that has caused me more anxiety than anything else, with regard to the question of having a general election, is what may happen at the front while an election is taking place. I have had to face, and my colleagues have had to face, the probability of a great offensive on the western front taking place in the spring. I say that if it is possible for this country to have its general elections over before a great offensive takes place, or before the worst of the fighting in Europe takes place, then it is entirely in the public interest that this should be done. There will be very heavy problems to consider at that time. Once the war "begins in earnest", as people are saying, there will be tremendous problems to consider, and the government that has to deal with those problems must have to no uncertain degree the confidence and the backing of the people of this country.

Now I hope hon, members will realize that what I am proposing at the moment is not to extend my time of office, or that of my colleagues, but solely to allow the people of this country to say, as they are entitled to say, whom they wish to carry on their government during this very critical time. If I were seeking to extend the time of the present administration or to extend my own time as leader of the government of this dominion, then I might be open to criticism from hon. gentlemen opposite and from opponents in different parts of the country. But when I am prepared to entrust my political future and the political future of this administration -not merely prepared but anxious that it should be entrusted—to the voice of the people of this country, no criticism can be raised against an intent of that kind.

One other point. The taking of the military vote is an important matter in connection with an election in war time. I think this country still has vivid recollections of how that vote was taken in the last war. We do not want any more occurrences of the kind. We want a perfectly straightforward and honest expression of opinion from the military forces; they are, if anything, more entitled to it than any other class in this country. May I draw attention to this: That vote can, I believe, be taken while the first division is still in England, before its members may go to Europe, if an election is brought on before May. Though as to this I cannot, of course, say. If delayed, the soldiers' vote will certainly have to be taken while they are fighting on the continent of Europe, which would present a very different situation. This government intends, as all hon. members know, if it is returned, to see that this first division is reinforced in strength from month to month and week to week, but it also intends to see that a second division is sent overseas as soon as may be possible. Now that second division, the men who are likely to go in it and form part of it, are in this country at the present time; they can still be in the country during a political campaign if the latter is held immediately. I ask if it is not fairer to them, if it is not better for everyone, that while they are still in a position to exercise the franchise in their own land, they should have their right to record their vote with respect to the government that is to carry on when their lives are at stake?

Mr. CAHAN: Does my right hon. friend intend to introduce legislation to that effect?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will himself see just how advisable that would be. I may say to him at once that the government intends to make provision for the military vote being taken overseas, and will do that under the War Measures Act as a most necessary war measure.

Mr. MANION: That is the way Hitler would do it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Hitler does not take any vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: One word further in regard to the holding of an election at this time. My colleagues and I have realized, as perhaps no others could possibly begin to realize, how important it is that we should begin immediately to prepare for post-war problems. Parliament should be in a position to deal not merely with the immediate problems of war, but also with those problems which will arise as soon as the war is over and even before. Measures such as the unemployment insurance legislation should be passed as speedily as possible. I ask hon. members: Do they believe it will be possible for these measures to be put through except by a parliament that comes fresh from the people with a mandate to carry on the government and enact such necessary measures?

May I conclude what I have to say as to the significance of an election in time of war by quoting a passage, the value of which I think will be appreciated by all those who are lovers of liberty and freedom. I have before me a statement made by President Abraham Lincoln concerning the question of having an election in war time. President Lincoln in the time of his administration was faced with a problem much more critical than any prob-Iem with which we in Canada are faced at this moment; it was that of having an election at a time when his whole country was divided by civil war. Lincoln had to ask himself the question whether he should take advantage of some means whereby he could extend his term and the term of his government, or whether the people should be given the right which is always theirs of saying periodically who should carry on their government. I should like to read what President Lincoln had to say with respect to the election which took place under his administration during the period of the civil war. I read from a volume entitled, "Abraham Lincoln, Complete Works," comprising his speeches, letters, state papers, and miscellaneous writings; edited by John G. Nicolay and John Hay. The volume I have in my hand is one which was given to me by Lady Laurier. It was taken from Sir Wilfrid Laurier's library after Sir Wilfrid's death. These are the words Lincoln used in responding to a serenade which took place on November 10, 1864. They will be found at page 595 of volume 2:

If the loyal people united were put to the utmost of their strength by the rebellion, must they not fail when divided and partially paralyzed by a political war among themselves? But the election was a necessity. We cannot have free government without elections; and if the rebellion could force us to forego or postpone a national election, it might fairly claim to have already conquered and ruined us. The strife of the election is but human nature practically applied to the facts of the case. What has occurred in this case must ever recur in similar cases. Human nature will not change. In any future great national trial, compared with the men of this, we shall have as weak and as strong, as silly and as wise, as bad and as good. Let us, therefore, study the incidents of this as philosophy to learn wisdom from, and none of them as wrongs to be revenged. But the election, along with its incidental and undesirable strife, has done good too. It has demonstrated that a people's government can sustain a national election in the midst of a great civil war. Until now, it has not been known to the world that this was a possibility. It shows, also, how sound and how strong we still are. It shows that, even among candidates of the same party, he who is most devoted to the Union and most opposed to treason can receive most of the people's votes.

Mr. Speaker, when at previous sessions we were considering the possibility of this country having to decide the part it would take should a great war come in Europe, as the [Mr. Mackensie King,] leader of the Liberal party and the leader of the present administration I took the position very strongly, time and time again, that parliament would decide that question. I was told from many sides that it was ridiculous to think of allowing parliament to decide the question of peace or war, that the war would speedily assume proportions which would make impossible anything in the way of parliamentary discussion. I gave my word to the people of this country that parliament would decide, and that the extent to which Canada would participate in the war would depend upon the decision of our own parliament and the provision that parliament might make. I kept my word in that regard. Parliament did decide-it gave its decision in no uncertain terms, and gave this government the means wherewith to carry on Canada's war effort. Now we are confronted with a situation in which our strength is being impaired by those who seek to create in the public mind distrust concerning both our ability and our patriotic efforts. There is only one national authority higher than parliament; that is the people themselves whose servants as members of parliament we all are. Just as I was prepared to trust parliament to make the decision as to Canada's participation in war, so I am prepared to trust the people with respect to the all-important decision as to what government is to administer their affairs during the years in which this war may be waged and probably be concerned with the terms of

It is not an easy or light responsibility, Mr. Speaker, which my colleagues and I have at this time and have had during the past four or five months—yes, and I might well say during the last few years. We are in the midst of the worst situation this world has ever known, and I am afraid that the situation is going to get worse and worse. No one can say how long this war will last. Those who seem to be best informed tell us it is not going to be one year or two years; it may be three years; it may be longer than that. As respects the countries that may be drawn into the conflict, there appears to be a danger of the war spreading over vaster areas than were ever thought of before it began.

So may I say that if we have to carry the grave responsibility of office in war and at a time of war such as the present, then we must be fortified by the voice of this country, expressed in no uncertain terms. If there is any group of men more capable of carrying on Canada's war effort and likely to do so more effectively, then the people should have the right to entrust them with that great obligation. We propose to leave it to the people of Canada to say whom they wish to carry on the government of Canada in this period of world war.

I move, Mr. Speaker, that the house do now adjourn.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The motion is not before the house.

Mr. MANION: Do I understand that no one is to be allowed to say anything in reply to the Prime Minister's prepared speech? Is it the intention to gag this house, in addition to everything else? Is the Prime Minister to come before this house and make a prepared speech, of which no hint was given to anyone, and then attempt to close the mouths of the rest of us? I ask him if he dares do that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The parliamentary procedure of this house is for the Speaker to put a motion first. Then, if hon. gentlemen wish to speak, they may do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: The motion is not debatable.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The motion is not debatable, but the Speaker can put the motion just the same. If my hon friend wishes to speak, I should be quite pleased to have him do so.

Mr. MANION: I certainly wish to speak.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I should like it distinctly pointed out that there is no particular courtesy in permitting me to speak, any more than there was courtesy in permitting the Prime Minister to speak on a motion which is not debatable. I should like that distinctly understood. I should like to point out also that the custom in the parliament of Canada has always been for the government to give a copy of the speech from the throne to the leader of the opposition an hour or so in advance, and up to the present session that has always been done by this government. No such courtesy was extended to-day, not even up to the time when you, Mr. Speaker, had the copy of the speech in your hands. So far as I know, no copy has been in the hands of anyone in this house except the Prime Minister and the Speaker. I merely point this out, sir, because it is a discourtesy which not only offends all the parliamentary traditions of this and the British house, but also shows an unfair decision on the part of the Prime Minister to try to catch everyone in this house without preparation, by the unprecedented step he has taken to-day. Until I went into the senate chamber I had absolutely no hint that there was any thought of anything like this. The Prime Minister called the parliament of Canada together to-day in the usual way. He brought members here from the four corners of Canada apparently, so far as one can judge-we do not yet know the intention—to dissolve the house to-night. That is what I understand; that is the only conclusion I can draw, although in one part of his speech the right hon. gentleman said we understood what was in his mind. Well, I doubt if when he spoke last session he thoroughly understood what was in his mind, because usually when the right hon, gentleman speaks as he did at that time he leaves himself an opportunity to back out one of the rear doors or slip out a window. That was what he did then.

The only reason why I mention this particularly, sir, is that it is so unprecedented to treat an opposition in this manner. Not only does the right hon, gentleman suggest, in the speech from the throne at a supposedly regular session of parliament, that he is going to have an immediate election, but he prepares a political speech to be delivered here this afternoon and gives no one else any opportunity of preparing any remarks in advance. As the Prime Minister was speaking I had to sit here and try to outline a few points I desired to make as a result of this unprecedented act. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I ask you and hon, members of the house to bear with me if my remarks are rather disjointed.

It would have been so easy, once the right hon, gentleman and his government decided on a step like this, to follow the usual courteous practice of a prime minister and a government. However, I must say this is not the first time that the right hon. gentleman has shown this type of discourtesy towards me since I became leader of the opposition. I regret that very much, because many times in the past I have said that whatever faults the right hon. gentleman might have-and I suppose I have pointed out his faults as often as anyone—that was one fault he did not have; he was usually courteous in social life and elsewhere. But he has not shown any of that courtesy in this instance. What he has done from a political point of view is to carry on what I consider unscrupulous politics at this time, by calling for an immediate election without any hint to the people, in order to gag discussion in this house and throughout the country-at all events any prepared discussion—and to attempt to get a snap decision of the people of Canada on this great question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend allow me to say one word in regard to what he suggested was discourtesy on my part in not giving him a copy of the speech from the throne? He will realize that a speech from the throne containing a declaration of an immediate appeal to the country was a document which had to be kept very secret. Otherwise, as my hon. friend knows, the information would have been on the streets of this country before it was announced in parliament. That is the sole reason why copies of the speech were not given out before his excellency read the speech.

Mr. MANION: The right hon, gentleman merely adds insult to injury. He suggests that if he had given me a copy of the speech I would have blathered it all over the streets. As a matter of fact I have no doubt at all that the press had copies of the speech before it was read in the senate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will say that no one had a copy of the speech except His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. MANION: I have no doubt at all that the press have copies of it now, while I have not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then instructions have not been carried out, which were that copies of the speech were not to be handed out until after it had been read by his excellency.

Mr. MANION: Yes, read by His Excellency the Governor General about three-quarters of an hour ago. I had not seen a copy, and that is why I had to ask Mr. Speaker to read the speech. However, that is a small matter, but it is just in line with all the other acts of the Prime Minister in this unprecedented action of his. He says, in his remarks, that the Canadian people have approved-according to his idea—the acts of this government. If the Canadian people have approved the acts of this government, why then this hurry for an election at this time? Why call a snap election on this group of two hundred and forty-five members, or thereabouts, who have come here from all parts of Canada, at great expense in many instances? Why snap an election in that manner? This is simply an attempt to take unawares not only this opposition but other opposition groups in the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will tell my hon. friend the reason why I did not do so prior to the calling of the house was that I had given a promise it would not be done until the house had been called. I would have asked for a dissolution the night the Ontario resolution was put through had it not been for that.

Mr. MANION: Is the right hon. gentleman telling me that he meant to put over a trick of this kind, and that he intended to do that at this time? Does he mean he would not call an election until the next session of the house or until another session of the house when he could put over a trick such as this? That makes it that much worse. The understanding was that the House of Commons would be called in regular session and that we would discuss the activities of the government, the effort of the government in the conduct of the war, and so on. If we had come here, as we have, and gone on for a few weeks, the Prime Minister might have decided that an election should be called; but to put over a political trick of this kind I say is disgraceful and is sneering at the political traditions of Canada and the British Empire.

If the Prime Minister had wished to do what he has done this afternoon, why did he not discuss the matter in confidence with me and with the leaders of the other parties in this house? That would have been the better course. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman and the right hon. gentleman the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), who sits beside him, both of whom have over and over again held themselves out as the great supporters of democracy, the great believers in democracy—I would like to ask these right hon. gentlemen this question: Where is the democracy in the present act?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will answer the question; my hon. friend has asked it.

Mr. MANION: My right hon. friend has had long enough.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let me answer it. Democracy does not mean I am responsible to the leader of the Conservative party or to the leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation or to the leader of the Social Credit group, but it does mean that I am answerable to the people of this country.

Mr. MANION: Through the House of Commons. The right hon, gentleman is answerable to the people of this country through the House of Commons.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, by direct approach to the people themselves, face to face with the problem.

Mr. MANION: Yes, in something like a fair manner, not by a piece of hoodwinking such as has been done to-day by calling the members of the House of Commons together, calling them from right across this country, having them here for a few hours, and then having them go back to meet their electors.

And this has happened after four months in which there has been the greatest degree of propaganda that has been put out by any government in the history of any British country. Since the government led by the right hon. gentleman has been the war-time government it has failed. For example, he and his government have appointed I don't know how many press liaison groups, but I do know this, that one of those press liaison officers is Major Thomas Wayling—and I am not saying anything against him or against his appointment. However, one of them is Major Thomas Wayling—and he is only one, because there have been half a dozen of them since this government started the war.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: Well, since this government started to carry on Canada's war effort, in the manner in which it has been carried on. The government has appointed about half a dozen liaison groups, one of which is working with the Department of National Defence. Major Wayling's press release body has released one hundred and sixty-five press releases since the war began, or more than one each day the war has been carried on. In addition to that, there have been half a dozen other press release groups. Then, you cannot turn on a radio without hearing the words of some minister of the government who is putting out what is supposedly a description of Canada's war effort, but about two-thirds of those speeches are political propaganda.

Having called this House of Commons together, as the Prime Minister did, why does he not make a report to it, as he should? Why does he not make a statement respecting the actions of the government? Why does he not make that statement right here, before the House of Commons? May I point out that at the short session of parliament held in September the party which I have the honour to lead, and for which I spoke, offered full cooperation and assistance to the government. And I say without fear of successful contradiction that on that occasion we gave cooperation, advice and assistance. Not only did we offer to do that, but in the last four months, since the adjournment of the short sessions, we have carried out our pledge. There has never been a day in which I have gone forth in Canada to make any political speech -not one. I did put out three or four brief statements in regard to certain matters such as mothers' allowances and allowances for dependents, but in that time I have never made a political speech. The party which I have the honour to lead has stood by that promise of cooperation, not only through the short session but since the close of it. I have never on any occasion been called in or shown anything by the Prime Minister with regard to the war. In fact, except two or three times socially I have not seen the Prime Minister since the last session. I say there has been no failure by one of the great parties of this country to cooperate with the government. I say we showed a desire to play ball, but the present procedure on the part of the Prime Minister shows an inexcusable desire to play politics instead. In other words, instead of preparing for the war they were preparing for an election. So far as I can see, that is what they were trying to do.

Let me deal briefly with the right hon, gentleman's remarks about the Ontario situation. Apparently he blames the calling of the general election on a resolution passed in the legislature of Ontario. I should like to ask him what right the legislature of Ontario has to dictate to the people of this country when there shall be an election. What right has it to dictate to the government of Canada? Should not this House of Commons be the body which would make that decision?

The Prime Minister has stated that the resolution was moved by Mr. Hepburn and seconded by Colonel Drew. According to the press it was moved by Mr. Hepburn and seconded by one of his ministers, the Hon. Mr. McQuesten. Colonel George Drew did not second it. Anyway, no matter who moved or seconded it, this is the forum before which the right hon. gentleman has to answer—not the provincial forum in Ontario. If he really wanted to call an election because of that resolution, why did he not call it? Why call the House of Commons here to deal with that question?

Another matter I should like to mention briefly is the soldiers' vote. The right hon. gentleman has said that the government is going to bring in by way of regulation under the War Measures Act something which would permit the soldiers to vote overseas. The right hon, gentleman has been travelling around this country for years talking about the supremacy of parliament. The parliament of Canada is now in session; and yet he tells us to-day, when parliament is in session, that under the War Measures Act he and his government are going to prepare something by way of a frame-up-and I think that is a proper word—to provide for the soldiers' vote overseas. That is what he says. I can only say that his talk in the past about the supremacy of parliament was never better proven to be humbug than it has been to-day.

Then, he has said that a new parliament would take up post-war problems. Well, this government has never solved any of the prewar problems; I do not know how it is going to solve post-war problems.

Mr. ROGERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: Let me say to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), who is laughing now, that for years he was Minister of Labour. He was the man who was supposed to handle unemployment in this country. I say that no minister of labour in the history of Canada has ever made such a complete failure of the handling of such a problem as did the hon, gentleman. reward for handling the Department of Labour in such a weak manner was to be made Minister of National Defence, at the present time, the most important department in the government. How can the people of Canada expect that a minister of labour who made a failure of running the labour department should make a success of the administration of the Department of National Defence? This is one of the reasons why the Department of National Defence has been such a farce under the present Minister of National Defence, as was the Department of Labour under the same minister.

The minister who preceded the present Minister of National Defence has many faults, as I expect many of us have. That hon. gentleman was shown up in this parliament as having acted, to say the least, not advisedly in regard to the Bren gun. But he was defended by the Prime Minister. He was defended by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe). He was defended by the then minister of labour, the present Minister of National Defence. He was defended also by one or two others, but I have forgotten which ones. These hon, gentlemen stood by him. Why then has he been demoted? If he was right, why has he been demoted? If he was wrong, why has he been kept in the government? What I meant really to say was that with all his faults I think the former minister of national defence (Mr. Mackenzie) was a more capable minister of national defence than is the present minister.

I have a few words to say with regard to the government's present war effort which has been referred to in the speech from the throne, as well as by the Prime Minister in his remarks on the floor of the house this afternoon. In view of the fact that long before the war this government was nicknamed the "do-nothing government," the people of Canada should not have expected that this government would be able to handle the war effort at all well. The people have not been disappointed in that. Not only did this government not prepare for war, but to my mind they have handled the war effort of Canada in a most disgraceful manner. After more than a year's warning we have called up one division to go overseas. There were not enough clothes for these men; there were not enough boots, not enough blankets and not enough machine guns. These men went overseas unequipped to a large extent. What equipment they had was obtained by gathering in what clothes and equipment could be found scattered here, there and everywhere throughout all sections of Canada. I know of one battalion from British Columbia which was dressed in cotton underwear and cotton clothing. These men crossed this north country in the middle of December and continued across the north Atlantic in the same kind of weather.

I say, again without fear of contradiction—this information comes to me from doctors in charge of these militia regiments—that many of these men are sick and large numbers have been sent to the hospital because of lack of preparation and because of lack of vision on the part of this government.

If it were true that no one had foreseen the danger of war then perhaps I could not criticize. But I find that the Prime Minister, in his remarks on the address in reply to the speech from the throne during last session—I refer particularly to pages 24, 25, 26 and 27 of Hansard-said repeatedly that for as long as five years he had thought of nothing except the necessity of preparing for war. Yet no preparation of any kind was made. If it were not for the fact that this is a tragedy, some of the stories which we hear about the lack of preparation would be quite funny. For example, when the war began a general wrote me-I wonder if I can remember the phrase he used?-stating that the anti-aircraft units had no anti-aircraft guns, and that the searchlight units had no searchlights. That is what has happened all across this country. There has been a complete lack of preparation, and as a result the war effort so far is deplorable.

I intended to deal with this quite fully when I was speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Whatever has been achieved in the way of preparation has been obtained only by kicking this government into action. The matter of mothers' allowances was settled only the other day. There are thousands of widowed mothers and other dependants of men who have enlisted to whom this government has failed to give the proper allowance. One man told me that he had been in the army for four months and had had to sell an old car which he had so that he could carry on. His wife had not received her separation allowance. Along toward Christmas we heard that these separation allowances were being paid, but the mothers are still without their allowances.

Many of the boys who enlisted were on relief, and they owed no gratitude to this government for anything which had been done to relieve their distress or to give them work and wages. These boys had the guts to join the army to fight for Canada; they had the decency to come forward and offer their lives for democracy; yet in many instances the mothers of these boys who were on relief, partly on account of the inactivity of the former minister of labour and the government generally in not solving this problem, are being faced with hunger. I have in my office scores, perhaps hundreds, of pitiful and pathetic letters from mothers of boys who are now in the army. Many of these mothers have pleaded with me not to let it be known publicly that they are not being treated decently by this government. They did not want their boys overseas to know of the suffering they are going through because their sons offered their lives. This matter was cleared up only a few days ago. Rather, it is not all cleared up, but a statement was issued by the Department of National Defence containing the promise to straighten out this disgraceful condition. This government never does anything without being kicked into doing it.

The wheat sale to Russia was another example. Wheat was sold to Russia, and it was only after protests were made across Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific that this government acted. As usual, it had to be kicked into doing it.

There was no defence for this country. What is even worse, there were no plans for defence or for equipment. Yet as far back as 1936, if not earlier, the defence association of Canada was pleading with this government to get ready for the inevitable war. They asked the government not only to prepare defence plans but to prepare defences. Yet practically nothing was done in regard to that. That is why the record of this government has been so deplorable, indeed so disgraceful.

I have one other matter to touch upon and then I shall have concluded for the present. The right hon, gentleman through the mouth of his excellency has made reference to the British commonwealth air-training plan. On December 17 the right hon, gentleman boasted over the radio that this plan was the result of an original proposal by the British to establish air-training schools in Canada for British pilots. The fact is that by July 1, 1938

-personally I think it goes back to 1937-the British had been over here pleading with the Prime Minister to give them the right as one of the partners in the empire to establish airtraining schools in Canada to train British pilots. It was pointed out that Great Britain was in distress. It was pointed out that the fog in that country cut down the number of possible flying hours and caused innumerable accidents. It was pointed out that in case of war with Germany that country would be able to send across the hordes of aeroplanes with which she was so well equipped to bomb the aeroplane manufacturing plants and the aerodromes of the British.

All this was pointed out to the Prime Minister in 1937. The then Minister of National Defence referred to the fact that the Vancouver Sun, a Liberal organ, in the issue of July 7, 1937, I think it was, made the statement that this government had fumbled the issue—that is the word they used—of helping the British to establish air-training schools in this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I just wish to say, in reply to my hon. friend that what I said in this house on July 1 and which is on Hansard is literally and absolutely the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth; and what I said in my broadcast is based on my statement, and I stand by it as absolutely correct.

Mr. MANION: I am not going to question that; but if the right hon. gentleman had wanted to be fair he should have been fair this afternoon and permitted me to bring down to this chamber my papers, and I would have shown the facts out of his own mouth. He admitted himself—he admitted it over the radio on December 17-that the British had made exploratory proposals to the government—verbal, of course, nothing written, because there was great play on the word "request." Senator Dandurand in the other chamber in 1938, in a speech occupying half a page of Hansard, used the word "request" nine or ten times to emphasize the point that the British had not made any request. But the fact remains, and the Prime Minister admits it in his own words, that the British, in informal exploratory conversations, proposed establishing schools for the training of British air pilots in Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We said that we would provide the facilities ourselves and give them the opportunities here, but that the administration must be under the government of Canada, not under the government of the United Kingdom.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friends had better not applaud too soon. He said that we would, in our establishments here, give them the right to train. Where were our establishments? Where were our personnel? Where were our machines? We did not have any establishments or machines. Look up the speech of the ex-Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie) in the House of Commons last year and see how many fighting planes we had. We did not have any. We did not have any facilities at all to train the British.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then we would have been no further ahead.

Mr. MANION: Well, I will deal with that too. The ex-minister of national defence, in a speech in this house which I would quote if I had had time to look up Hansard, said that the government were so anxious to cooperate with the British-reinforcing what the Prime Minister said—that we were going to train 126-I think that was the number-of pilots here a year, and all we were going to permit the British to send across were fifty a year. Those were his words as reported in Hansard—fifty a year. Yet Sir Kingsley Wood, the head of the air defence force in Britain, made the statement in October-I believe it was on October 9, because I had been studying this matter, and getting thoroughly shocked as I studied it-that what the British had hoped was that there would be 25,000 pilots trained a year. And we were going to train fifty. That is what the ex-minister of national defence stated. At that rate it would have taken us five hundred years to provide them with one year's supply of pilots. That is the proposal; those figures are taken from the actual record. Fifty years, is it? Well, it does not matter, but I think if you divide fifty into 25,000 you have, not fifty but five hundred. Some of my hon, friends laughed a little too soon. Sometimes the loud laugh speaks the vacant mind.

When the British were facing an unscrupulous man like Hitler; when it was known that Hitler had at least twice as many planes as the British and the French combined; when the British appealed to the right hon, gentleman, in the face of that emergency, with war in the offing, to permit the establishment of air-training schools in Canada to train pilots for Britain and the empire, and the right hon, gentleman refused, he did something which made him unfit to remain Prime Minister of this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I just wish to make perfectly clear that I refused nothing [Mr. Mackenzie King.]

except the matter of who was to administer the schools and by whom they were to be provided.

Mr. MANION: I will go on with that. The right hon. gentleman says he refused nothing. But on December 17 he said that the proposal which he now brings forward, and which he calls the British commonwealth air-training plan, is in effect merely a continuation of the original proposal. But this is not a British commonwealth air-training plan at all. It is largely a Canadian air-training plan. The British proposed to come over here and establish schools for their flying pilots, to be maintained at their own expense. Let us see what would have happened if the right hon. gentleman had said "yes" to them at that time, as I say he should have done. They would have come over here and established their air-training schools. They would have brought over their British young men to train at the rate of 25,000 a year. If that figure is an exaggeration, it is Sir Kingsley Wood's exaggeration, not mine. If the right hon. gentleman cares to look up his speech of December 17, he will see that he himself said that we were going to train many thousands a year. So apparently many thousands a year are needed: Sir Kingsley Wood said 25,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): My hon. friend evidently has not learned what the suggestion related to. It did not relate to the training of pilots generally; it related to an advanced stage of development. That advanced stage we promised that we would provide in accordance with the wishes of the British government.

Mr. MANION: Yes; and we have provided a lot of it! We have not even got started providing it yet. The British would have come over here in their thousands to train. Then, when we wanted our young men—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I inform my hon. friend that last year, when the $6,000,000 vote was passed by this house, the British themselves only asked us to train fifty pilots.

Mr. MANION: I remember the minister saying that, but I remember also that Sir Kingsley Wood had said that 25,000 must be trained annually, and I pointed out last March that fifty was merely a fleabite. It was not a very elegant term, but I used it. I say that the British would have sent over thousands to train here, and then, when we wanted our men trained, we could have sent them to the same schools to have them properly trained at little cost to us. On top of that, it would have meant the building up in Canada of a great industry for the production of planes, which industry is now being built up in the United States and in Great Britain itself. Here we are, a country with hundreds of thousands of unemployed looking for opportunities of work. The Prime Minister has this proposal put up to him by the British to come to their aid in a time of distress. He refused; and the British then started to do what they did not wish to do; they built up manufacturing plants for their planes in their own country-manufacturing plants which they came over here with the intention of establishing in Canada. I learned when I was in England not long ago that on one occasion they came over here with a hundred million dollars' worth of orders for Canadian plants. but they received from the Prime Minister of Canada such a cold reception to this request that they refused to give any of those contracts at that time.

That is another reason why this government, I contend, has shown itself, in its preparation for and its carrying on of Canada's war effort, unfit to govern.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is a strong case for a general election.

Mr. MANION: Yes-at the proper time. I am not objecting particularly to a general election. I am objecting to the tricky manner in which it is being called. I am objecting to the House of Commons being called together and then laughed at by the Prime Minister and-if you like-by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), in the face of all their talk across this country of the supremacy of this parliament. They are laughing at the House of Commons and at the supremacy of parliament. They tell parliament in session that they are going to pass under the War Measures Act regulations for the overseas soldiers' vote. What sense of fairness can we expect in a government which has done what it has done to-day with regard to this overseas vote?

However, I wish to close. I merely wanted to point out a few of the things which came into my head when the Prime Minister was speaking. All of them are mentioned in the speech from the throne. I say that the Prime Minister, in refusing the British the opportunity to train their pilots here, did what was unfair to the people of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I absolutely deny that there was any refusal to train pilots here. My hon. friend, by endless repetition of a statement of that kind, cannot give it any veracity.

Mr. MANION: Well, I can give it veracity by the right hon. gentleman's own words, and before this election is over I will quote them over and over again. His words distinctly state that these proposals came from the British informally. He said that they came here; they were not requests, they were "proposals", or some such word as that, which anyway meant that; that they had carried on informal conversations with this government in Canada; and he said that he refused, on the ground of constitutional practice.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that these informal conversations were within two or three weeks of the time I spoke here on the first of July.

Mr. MANION: He says that, Mr. Speaker, but where did the Vancouver Sun get its information a year before that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Probably from my hon. friend.

Mr. MANION: No, I was not even in politics then. I was not in the house and I knew nothing about it. They may have got it from the former minister of national defence, who sits near him, and who was out there about that time, and I have rather wondered if he did not give them the information in disgust at the refusal of this government to give the British government a decent break.

I repeat what I said at the beginning, that this is a most unfair procedure, unfair not only to the parliament of Canada but to the people of Canada, and I suggest to the Prime Minister that even now—he has not definitely said that he is going to dissolve the house to-night but I take it that he is—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think after my hon. friend's speech it would be advisable to.

Mr. MANION: I do not mind but if the right hon. gentleman will give a chance for the discussion to go on I will make a speech that will make him think it is even more advisable. If he wants something to hang his hat on I will give him something.

I say that it is the duty of the Prime Minister and his government to come before parliament and give an account of their stewardship.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it is to go before the people of Canada.

Mr. MANION: The Prime Minister could have gone before the people without making a joke of the members of this house, without calling them together from Vancouver in the west and from Halifax in the east.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And he would have done that if he had not promised my hon, friend that he would not have an election before another session.

Mr. MANION: He promised that he would not have an election until another session of the house. Did he mean by that to hoodwink the members of this parliament? Was that his trickery? I say that if the Prime Minister meant to do what he is doing today he meant to hoodwink us and he was guilty of a despicable political trick.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My words were very clear and were made clear because of my responsibility in the matter. I pointed out that parliament would be called. What it was advisable to do when parliament was called would depend upon what had happened in the interval. It is because of what has happened in the interval—

Mr. MANION: What has happened in the interval? The right hon, gentleman has been violently attacked by the premier of Ontario. Is there anything new about that? So far as I am concerned I think Mr. Hepburn is right. I think he has been right all along, and never was I so sure that he is right as I am now made sure by this piece of political trickery of the Prime Minister to-day. It is running away from parliament; it is not facing the people.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the opposition has repeatedly used the word "trickery". I do not think that is parliamentary.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It would be all right in the legislature of Ontario.

Mr. MANION: I will withdraw the word, but I do not quite know what other word to substitute that will express my opinion. Perhaps your honour will help me out. I do not wish to be unparliamentary and will withdraw the word. I will say this, that never in the history of our country was there a more unparliamentary act than what the Prime Minister is doing here this afternoon.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Never was there a more responsible act.

Mr. MANION: Than what the right hon. gentleman is doing?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. MANION: If the right hon, gentleman will change the first syllable and make the word "irresponsible", I will agree.

I shall not take up any more of the time of the house. I am willing to let the people decide. But I still think that in decency-I do not say that offensively-and as a matter of fair dealing with the House of Commons and the parliamentary system in Great Britain and Canada the Prime Minister and his government should come back here, carry on the session and bring in legislation for taking the soldiers' votes overseas. Of course I shall be told: What did the other party do about the soldiers' votes? Because it is already implied that something unfair was done. I was not a member of any government prior to 1921, and had nothing to do with what was done at that time, but even if I had been a member of that government, is it any justification for doing something wrong now to say that something was done wrongly then? The whole defence of this government in nearly everything has been: But you people from 1914 to 1918 did worse—the old tu quoque argument. Have we not gone ahead at all; have we made no progress in democracy and decency in this country in the last twentyfive years? If there were mistakes or crookedness in those days-I am not denying that there may have been because I do not know much about it-surely that is all the more reason that such things should not be repeated now. That is my argument. This is a time to fight for democracy here at home. What is it going to profit us if we fight for democracy in Europe and lose it here in Canada? And that is what we are doing by such an act as the Prime Minister is pulling off today. He is endangering the whole democratic principle for which we are fighting along with Britain and France. The whole difference between Hitlerian dictatorship and our system is the difference between free speech and no free speech. The place for free speech is in the parliament of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is in the country.

Mr. MANION: It is in parliament since parliament has been called. We shall have it on the hustings too. But the place to have questions answered is here in parliament. With the parliament of Canada dissolved how can I get information, without any returns, without any questions being answered? I do not expect that any of the ministers will give me much help. The place to give that information is here in the House of Commons. The place to discuss these matters is here in the House of Commons. I submit that this government has been extravagant; it has been careless; not only has it been unprepared but it has been deplorably weak in carrying on the war activities of this country. I say that; and this is the place for me to get the information I want to prove my case, not out on the hustings where the ministers will simply deny that the facts are there.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then my hon. friend is making his assertions without any proof?

Mr. MANION: I have plenty of proof. If the right hon, gentleman will allow the session to go over until next week; if he will go back to his early affirmations of fair dealing and democratic principles which he used to talk so much about all across this country, and will live up to them this session, I will give him evidence in support of all the statements I have made.

I have nothing more to say. If it is the decision of the Prime Minister to dissolve the house to-night, we shall leave it in the mouths of the people to say which party they want to govern them and to carry on Canada's war effort. I venture to make this prophecy. In view of the unpreparedness of the government, in view of its weak war effort, and in view of the attempt of this government to put over this piece of trickery on a snap decision—I beg pardon, Mr. Speaker, for using the word "trickery," but I cannot think of any other word to express my opinion-in view of the government's act to-day in trying to bring about a snap decision without the members of this house being given a fair opportunity to get the information they seek and to discuss that information here in this house, I am convinced that not only the Prime Minister but his government will be swept out of power and some other group will be put in power to carry on the affairs of this country and Canada's war effort.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker,—Some hon, MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would draw the attention of the hon. member and of the house to the fact that the motion before the house is not debatable, and the hon. member can proceed only with the unanimous consent of the house. Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I submit that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was out of order in making his statement, as was also the leader of the opposition (Mr. Manion), but I urge that it does not require the unanimous consent of the house to give a member of parliament the right to speak in a situation of this kind.

Almost for the first time in my political life I find myself very nearly in complete agreement with the leader of the opposition, not because he is a Conservative, but because I believe that in this regard he is standing for the fundamental rights of parliament and the fundamental principles of democracy. No word is more frequently in the mouth of the Prime Minister than that phrase of his, "parliament will decide", the words, "the rights of the people", and "democracy"; and yet to-day, in my humble judgment at any rate, he is violating the fundamental principles of both. It is not a question whether we are to have an election or not; under our constitution it is for him to decide; but it is a question as to the manner in which it shall be done, and the time.

The Prime Minister suddenly springs upon us the proposal of an election within a few weeks. We do not know whether this means that the voice of this parliament will be absolutely stifled. At the moment we do not know. We do know, however, that the Prime Minister has made a first-class political speech. He has thrown out the general idea of unemployment insurance. Some of us in this corner have been talking about unemployment insurance for years and have been unable to get the government to move. They have raised all sorts of constitutional objections. But now the suggestion is made that it may possibly come to pass-fine political propaganda but no legislation whatever.

We are told that we may have after-war problems to discuss and the government must have time to consider that question. The time to consider after-war problems is now, in this parliament, instead of giving a blank cheque to a government that has not shown itself particularly in favour of the common people of the country. I wonder whether the government has been so long in office and has got so far away from the people that it does not understand the hardships that are being endured by many Canadians to-day. When you come into the city of Ottawa, as I did yesterday morning, you meet soldiers and officials of every kind at every turn, and where you do not find officials you find people hunting for jobs. Does the government quite realize the position of the ordinary people of the country?

I do not say that under the circumstances under which an election is to be carried on this government is bound to be defeated, but I do know there is a great deal of dissatisfaction already, even before the war has begun in earnest. I suggest that the least this government can do is to give a full account of its stewardship during the last six months. During the special session which we had in September we had no opportunity of discussing the general affairs of the country. It is all very well to say that the war is all-important, but in Canada there are other important matters than the war; and the war will be successful only as there are people in the country who will support it. But the people are not contented to-day. I repeat, the least the government can do, if it is an honest government, is to give a direct account of its stewardship.

We are told that we cannot do what Great Britain does, that we cannot come together every few weeks, almost in continuous session, to discuss the affairs of the state. The government over there is subject to a barrage of criticism from the opposition and that has been generally considered to be a very good thing; but this government seems to avoid criticism. There is no reason why the acts of the last three months since war was declared should not be fully considered.

We are coming to the point where we are governed by order in council. The officials have been kind enough to send me advance copies of orders in council. They come to my desk almost daily. I cannot begin to keep track of them, they are so numerous. Some of these orders in council are taking away the fundamental rights of British people -the right to free speech, the right to free assembly, the right to the exercise of unionism under war conditions, and so on. condition is coming to pass, and now we are to be denied the rights of parliament. We were taught in our school days that the Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights and similar instruments had settled all these matters forever for the British people, but it would seem as if each generation must make secure its own rights and fight these battles over again in new forms.

The people of the country are anxious to know how some of these war contracts have been let, and they have a right to know. A great many people in Canada want to know, and they have a right to know, how all these dollar-a-year men have been selected, what their qualifications are, and what are the advantages which an inside knowledge may give them. The people of the country want to know why it was that the government got away from the five per cent profit legislation. It may be all very well to say, "Oh, well, under the War Measures Act we can do that"; but this five per cent profit limit was the considered position of this parliament a year ago. Under the War Measures Act apparently anything can be done and so the five per cent profit limit has been swept aside. What will come next? Is there any guarantee whatever?

We are told now that under the regulations in connection with the War Measures Act we are going to have an arrangement with regard to the vote of soldiers overseas. Why should there be any recourse to that procedure when parliament is now sitting? This is the place in which to do that sort of thing, but we are not to have the right to discuss these orders in council.

Some people have been quite enthusiastic over the recent bond issue. Three and a quarter per cent sounds very fine, but the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) the other day made a most revealing statement. I have a high regard for him, but it was one of the most cynical remarks I have ever heard broadcast throughout the country when he advocated "profitable patriotism". In the last war the various revelations that were made showed the profitable patriotism that had been manifested on the part of the bacon people, the boots people, and a whole lot of others; and now the Minister of Justice actually appeals to the cupidity of the Canadian people and says that we ought to have "profitable patriotism" in this country. It is a low motive to which to appeal.

There is something further I wish to say. If this parliament continues I shall say it at greater length on some future occasion. I desire to say something about the methods that have been used in Canada to compel young men to enlist. It is quite true that because of the opposition of the province of Quebec we have no conscription legislation on our books. But it is also true that in very many parts of the country men who have been on relief for years have been urged to enlist, and told that unless they enlist their relief will be cut off. That is the most despicable form of conscription I know of. I want to say a word for the youth of this country. The Prime Minister will probably rise in his place and say that we have no conscription in this country. No conscription? When thousands of our youth have been forced to enlist by the desperate alternative of enlisting or starving to death, it is time someone said something about the matter. These young fellows who are going to the war have a right to know what provision will be made for them when they come back. One of the bitterest things said to me was said by a returned man in my own city a few weeks ago. He said, "Yes, these young fellows that are going in now are very nattily dressed, they get good meals, they are provided for, they are heroes; but a whole lot of the fellows that went to the last war are eating in soup-kitchens." Yes, that is true. This government has been in office for years, and before it should be entrusted with another term of office it ought at least to give an account of its stewardship during the time the war has been in progress, and, indeed, for the last six months.

Free speech; the Prime Minister is urging that. Free parliament. I do not know what this order means to-day. I have been in the house for nearly twenty years, and for the life of me I do not know what is going to happen to-night, whether we are going to have a chance to debate an address in reply to the speech from the throne or not. We are all out of order. I do not know what is going to happen. There is an attempt to strangle free speech in this parliament, by shortening the session if not cutting it off absolutely. Having been called together we should remain here for a few weeks at least. What is the desperate need for hurrying this thing along? Is it in order that our people in the rural districts shall have to go out on the wintry roads in order to vote, an impossibility for many of them? Is it because there is a quarrel between the Prime Minister and the premier of Ontario? The latter gentleman sat in this house for some years. We all know he was quarrelling with the Prime Minister, but it is news to us that an election should be called and the whole country upset merely because Mr. Mitchell Hepburn says that the Prime Minister is not doing his duty. Surely the people of this country are not going to be hoodwinked by anything of that kind. If we have an election what freedom shall we have?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why does my hon, friend confine it to Mr. Hepburn?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, the leader of the Ontario opposition also.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What about the legislature of a province?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister is a good constitutionalist; let me ask him whether a provincial legislature has any right to interfere in matters like that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think it has, and that is one of the reasons why this government should make its authority clear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The people are not so concerned with niceties of that kind that they will be hoodwinked by such an excuse. As the leader of the opposition (Mr. Manion) pointed out, this defence of not calling an election before parliament was called together, and then claiming since it is called we can immediately have an election, makes me tired; and I think it will make the country tired. I do not mind facing an election, but do not let us resort to that kind of thing. Why does the government not come to this parliament, give an account of its stewardship, and then go to the country? It is here that the government ought to announce its policies for the coming election. The government ought to come out fairly in this parliament and say, We propose to do this, that and the other. Surely the government does not want a blank cheque. There ought to be a debate in this parliament on the government's proposals; when that is all over we can go to the country, having all spoken our minds, having all declared our several positions, and then the people will know what they are voting for. They do not now know.

The Prime Minister talks about free speech. Under the War Measures Act regulations to-day we are in a precarious position. How can I go to the country and say what I think about war; how can I discuss freely the short-comings of the government without coming under those regulations? It cannot be done.

An hon. MEMBER: And they know it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It cannot be done; I am likely to be picked up by any local police officer, and if I were unfortunate enough to live in Ontario I would be prosecuted by the attorney general of that province. That might be an easy way of getting rid of people who do not agree with the government. Already the people of this country have been frightened. One of my own sons came back the other day from Scotland; he said to me: "You know it is astonishing, as soon as I landed on the shores of Canada I felt that in some way the people of Canada had been frightened, were afraid to speak out what they thought." He had come from Great Britain, where they are not afraid to speak what they think. As we all know, there is literature published in Great Britain and coming to this country that is banned in this dominion. It is a ridiculous situation. Does anyone think the mother of parliaments over there would stand for this kind of thing? We are told that Canada is fighting on the side of Great Britain to save democracy; fighting for liberty, free speech, free institutions. We are told that we have no fight with the German people, but that the trouble with the German people is that they are too submissive, too subservient, that they will take whatever is handed to them by the fuehrer. Are we to become so subservient that we have a virtual dictatorship set up in this country? As I look across at the Prime Minister he does not look like a dictator—

Miss MACPHAIL: But he is one.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —he does not speak like one, but he is acting like a dictator to-day. This government is strong; it can carry on for another six months without any extension of power of any kind; but the fact that this government is strong here in Ottawa and the Liberal party is strong in a number of the provinces is no reason why it should use its strength to put over something that is essentially in contradiction to British practice and parliamentary institutions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Manion) that I have the assurance of the under-secretary of state that a copy of the speech from the throne was delivered at his office the moment his excellency began to read the speech.

Mr. MANION: I was in the senate chamber listening to his excellency.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But it was sent to my hon, friend's office and received by his secretary.

Mr. MANION: It should have been sent at least an hour in advance.

An hon. MEMBER: Do we sit to-night?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I intend to have my colleagues meet with me immediately and decide what is best to do with respect to further proceedings in this parliament in the light of the kind of discussion we have listened to this afternoon.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The eighteenth parliament was dissolved on Thursday, January 25, 1940, by proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General.

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—NINETEENTH PARLIAMENT

The eighteenth parliament having been dissolved by proclamation on Thursday, January 25, and writs having been issued and returned, a new parliament was summoned to meet for the dispatch of business on Thursday, May 16, 1940, and did accordingly meet on that day.

Speaker: The Honourable James Allison Glen

Thursday, May 16, 1940

This being the day on which parliament is convoked by proclamation of His Excellency the Administrator for the dispatch of business, and the members of the house being assembled:

Arthur Beauchesne, Esquire, C.M.G., M.A., K.C., F.R.S.C., the Clerk of the House, read to the house a letter from the Assistant Secretary to the Governor General informing him that the Honourable Mr. Justice Oswald Smith Crockett, in his capacity as Deputy Administrator, would proceed to the Senate chamber on Thursday, the 16th of May, at 12 noon, to open the session.

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:—

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

His Honour, the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the house went up to the Senate chamber, when the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that His Excellency the Administrator does not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law; but this afternoon, at the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon, His Excellency will declare the causes of calling this parliament.

And the members being returned to the Commons chamber:

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Doctor Beauchesne, at the beginning of a new parliament the first duty of the Commons is to ascertain the reasons why the king's representative—who at the moment happens to be His Excellency the Administrator—has summoned its members to meet him in parliament. We have just been told in another place that his excellency does not see fit to disclose the causes until, in accordance with custom, this house has elected its Speaker. As a matter of fact, until a Speaker has been chosen, the Commons is not yet constituted as a house. Parliament itself cannot be said to be properly constituted until the House of Commons has chosen its Speaker. Therefore our immediate duty is to proceed to elect a Speaker.

As hon, members who have been in previous parliaments are well aware, the custom in the Canadian parliament in the selection of a Speaker is somewhat different from that which is followed at Westminster, the customs of which parliament, in most particulars, we usually follow. At Westminster the practice is to do the Speaker of the previous house the honour of reelecting him at each succeeding parliament, provided that he retains his seat in the House of Commons. I recall particularly the occasion on which Mr. Speaker Lowther of the British House of Commons visited Canada and on behalf of the parliamentary association presented this House of Commons with the chair since occupied by the Speaker and which is a replica of the Speaker's chair at Westminster. Mr. Speaker Lowther informed us, addressing the members from the floor of this house, that for sixteen years he had been Speaker of the House of Commons at Westminster and that during that period of time he had not once left the precincts of the house while either house of parliament was in session. Here in Canada we have followed the practice of electing a new Speaker at the beginning of each parliament. There have been but three exceptions in this house: Mr. Speaker Cockburn, Mr. Speaker Rhodes and Mr. Speaker Lemieux were all reappointed Speakers at a succeeding parliaIn our country there is also a reason why it has been thought advisable to alternate Speakers. In the main the people of Canada are descended from two great races, the English and the French. It has been the practice because of this to have in one parliament a Speaker whose mother tongue is English, and in the following parliament a Speaker whose mother tongue is French.

There is another respect in which the practice in Canada in the selection of a Speaker differs from the practice at Westminster. At Westminster the nomination of the Speaker is made by a private member; in Canada we have adopted the practice of having the Speaker nominated by a member of the government, as a matter of fact, by the Prime Minister

However, this difference is not in any way intended to imply any restriction of the freedom of members to make whatever choice they wish. The Speaker of the house is not appointed by the government, he is elected by the Commons. Members of the house are entirely free to make whatever choice they wish. I shall, however, propose a name which I believe will be acceptable to the house generally.

I need not say how important is the position of the Speaker. It is the most honourable and highest office in the gift of the House of Commons. The Speaker is the first commoner; he is also the presiding officer of this house. In that capacity he has the custodianship of the honour, the rights, the privileges and the prerogatives of the house. It is his duty to maintain an attitude of impartiality as between members, regardless of party. It is his duty to protect the rights of members as a whole, and the rights of each individual member. Clearly in such a position one should possess qualities of good judgment and a judicial temperament. The Speaker moreover must be familiar with the rules of the house and have a thorough knowledge of parliamentary procedure. He should, I believe, be chosen if possible in the light of experience he is known to have gained by participation in the affairs of parliament itself. He should be a man of quick perceptions and be at once conciliatory and firm, tactful and just.

I am about to propose the name of a gentleman who, I believe, possesses to quite an exceptional degree this rare combination of qualities. The name is that of Mr. James Allison Glen, the member for Marquette. Mr. Glen has sat in previous parliaments and has been a member of this house for a number of years. In filling positions of this kind if circumstances so permit, it is desirable that recognition should be accorded older members of parliament, especially where in the course of the discharge of their public duties they have become known to possess special qualifications and aptitude for the position in question. Mr. Glen, as we all know, has taken a deep interest in the proceedings of parliament. He has participated in a fair manner in the debates. He has had large experience on committees of the House of Commons. Mr. Glen has had besides training in another particular which should qualify him in special measure for a position which requires the capacity for the judicial management of affairs. In addition to his parliamentary experience he is a prominent member of the bar of Manitoba, a leading king's counsel in that province. That legal training will be of real service to him and to the house in his occupancy of the position of Speaker, should he be elected to that position. He possesses another qualification which I think hon. members appreciate is very important in a Speaker; that is quick perception, the ability to grasp promptly points which are being discussed and to give, I shall not say offhand decisions, but quick decisions where such are demanded. By reason of his parliamentary and legal experience we may expect from him a sound and judicial attitude towards the different questions with which he may be called to deal.

I might say much more of Mr. Glen; he possesses other qualifications which we all know very well; I shall content myself, however, by saying that I feel that he does possess both in character and experience the qualities which will make him, if he is elected, an admirable Speaker, qualities which will enable him to fill that high office with dignity and due authority, with credit and distinction to himself and to this House of Commons and with honour to our parliament.

I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East):

That James Allison Glen, Esquire, K.C., member representing the electoral district of Marquette, do take the chair of this house as Speaker.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Doctor Beauchesne, gentlemen of the House of Commons; I rise not to oppose the motion now before you, but rather for the express purpose of supporting it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has been good enough to outline some of the functions and duties of the first commoner of the Canadian House of Commons, as patterned on the mother of parliaments. He has named as his nominee, or the nominee of the government, a gentleman who has had long experience in its proceedings. The office of Speaker, as the Prime Minister has intimated, is an important one. It is not only important, but it is an old and honourable one; its history goes back for generations in our parliamentary life. Formerly the primary duty of Mr. Speaker was to protect the rights and privileges of the House of Commons as against the crown; that is to say, that is its historical background. This duty, however, is more or less obsolete in this twentieth century, because the privileges of the commons are now universally recognized. To-day the duties of the Speaker are primarily judicial in character. They are not executive; they do not partake of the administrative, except with respect to the internal economy of the house. Speaker has first of all to preside over the deliberations of this house. He must maintain the decorum and dignity of the house. He must protect the membership of the house from insult and indignity both within the house and without. Above everything else, in his judicial capacity he must maintain an equal balance among all the parties in this house. Briefly these are what I conceive to be the functions of Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) who has been nominated by the Prime Minister, in my opinion possesses these qualities in a high degree. He has had, I believe, a long and honourable career in his profession. which must have brought him into contact with conditions and situations which would give him an insight into what judicial conduct really means. As the Prime Minister has intimated, he has had also a long and extensive experience in this house. I believe he possesses the qualifications necessary to make a competent Speaker to preside over our deliberations. What we in this part of the chamber desire to impress upon him is this, that we in common with other parties shall be treated with that even-handed British justice which is so essential to the carrying on harmoniously of the deliberations of this house. If he conforms to the best traditions of his office, as I believe he will, we shall do our utmost to assist him in maintaining the dignities, the liberties and the privileges of the house. Personally I wish the hon. member for Marquette well.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Doctor Beauchesne, it is perhaps hardly necessary for us to say much after what has been said by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Hanson). We in our group support the nomination of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen). The leader of the opposition has suggested that one of the old-time functions of a speaker was to protect the commons against the crown. I suppose that function is largely obsolete, but we believe that an important function of the speaker to-day is to have a sense of impartiality and to protect the minorities against the government. That may be highly necessary in a house of this composition. From our knowledge of the hon, member for Marquette through the years we are assured that he will recognize the high responsibility that will rest upon him as speaker, and we wish him every success in his new office.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Doctor Beauchesne, the members of my group feel that if the reputation which was so well established by the Speaker who occupied the chair in the last parliament is maintained by the hon, gentleman who is now to take the chair we shall be fully satisfied. We realize that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) has been nominated by the same right hon, gentleman who nominated his predecessor; we therefore expect that the same wisdom has been exercised in this selection as in the case of the former Speaker. The hon. member for Marquette has established a reputation for geniality and good nature among the members which has caused him to be well liked. At the same time he has the poise and dignity which cause men generally to respect him. We feel that these are qualities which are required in one holding the position of Speaker of this house, and I do not doubt for one moment either the hon. gentleman's disposition or his ability at all times to be fair in his judgments and impartial in his decisions. Therefore, Doctor Beauchesne, our group will support this motion.

The Clerk of the House declared the motion carried in the affirmative, nemine contradicente, and Hon. James Allison Glen, member for the electoral district of Marquette, duly elected to the chair of the house.

Hon. Mr. Glen was conducted from his seat in the house to the Speaker's chair by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie Kiag and Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe.

Mr. SPEAKER-ELECT said: Gentlemen of the House of Commons, I beg to return my humble acknowledgments to the house for the great honour you have been pleased to confer upon me by unanimously choosing me to be your Speaker.

The unanimity which has been expressed from all sides of the house of my appointment to the high office of Speaker of this House of Commons imposes upon me duties so grave and serious that I approach my task with very real humility and a profound consciousness of my own limitations.

In the days to come, I shall endeavour to discharge those duties in a manner not unbefitting our British parliamentary traditions, and, above all, I shall keep ever before me that, as presiding officer, I must exercise fairness and impartiality as between all members in the House of Commons and be, as has been said in this house "the protector of the rights of every individual member." I fully realise that only strict observance of these obligations will enable me to gain and retain the confidence and receive the advice, counsel and assistance of all hon. members, without which no Speaker can govern the conduct and decorum of this house.

To obtain that confidence I shall conscientiously strive and so far as in me lies I shall endeavour to prove worthy of the trust which you have this day committed to me.

LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

REFERENCES TO THE SELECTION OF HON. R. B. HANSON, MEMBER FOR YORK-SUNBURY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to adjourn this house with a view to having it sit again to-day would under the rules require a formal notice of twenty-four hours. In the circumstances I propose to move that the house suspend its sitting until three o'clock. Before, however, that action is taken, I should like to avail myself of the earliest possible opportunity to extend to the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) my warmest congratulations-and in so doing I speak also on behalf of all hon. members on this side of the house, and I think I may say on behalf of the house as a whole-upon the confidence which has been expressed in him by the members of his party and upon his assumption to-day of the office of leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition in this House of Commons.

May I say to my hon. friend that his choice as the one to become the leader of the opposition at this time did not come at all as a surprise to those of us who have been with him in previous parliaments. My hon. friend has had great experience in parliamentary life; indeed I imagine that only a few members of this house have served for a longer time in parliament. Though not a member in the last parliament, the present leader of the opposition has been in this house for a period of some fourteen or fifteen years. During that time he has taken a very active part in its proceedings. We know him to be a forceful debater; we know he has been very active in the proceedings of the commons generally. He has occupied important positions, as chairman of different committees of the house, and as a minister of the crown. If I am not mistaken my hon, friend is one of the two members of his party in this house to-day who have held portfolios in previous administrations. I should, of course, say that three hon. members opposite have been members of a previous administration, but I think only two of them actually held portfolios. My hon, friend was Minister of Trade and Commerce for a year or more in Mr. Bennett's administration. His present desk-mate, the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) was Minister of National Defence in Mr. Bennett's administration for about the same time. The hon, member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) became a member of the same administration, but unfortunately for him there was a change in the administration before there was time to have him given a portfolio.

The parliamentary experience of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will be of the greatest value, not only to him in the position which he now occupies but also to the House of Commons itself. I think I may say that no one in this house has a better knowledge of the responsibilities and anxieties which go with the position now occupied by my hon. friend than I have. For some seven years in all, I had the privilege of occupying the seat which he now occupies, so I know something of what is expected of a leader of the opposition and, as I have said, something as well of his responsibilities and anxieties.

Speaking of responsibilities and anxieties I think I may say that at this time of great peril in the affairs of the world, at this very solemn hour, all of us who are members of this parliament will be conscious alike of responsibilities and anxieties which I am equally sure it will be our desire to share. Just as the few free nations that still remain and those that until recently were free are looking for all the help they can get; just as England and France are sharing to the full the burdens of the struggle in which they are engaged; just as the British commonwealth of nations needs the effective cooperation of its every part, so we who are members of the government, with the great responsibilities we must bear at this time, are more conscious than we ever have been of the need for cooperation and help from hon. members in all parts of the house, and from none more than from the leader of the opposition and those who sit around him.

A few moments ago the hon, member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) mentioned that he and others might require the assistance of the Speaker to protect the minorities against the government. May I say to him that I am inclined to feel that the government may need the protection of the Speaker against the minorities. Seriously, however, I greatly hope that in this parliament at least we may not be as conscious of minorities and majorities as perhaps it has been found necessary to be in some previous parliaments, but rather that all may feel a profound sense of collective responsibility.

In this connection may I point out that the position of leader of the opposition is a most important one in the system of government as we have it under our constitution and is so recognized by statute. As hon, members are aware, the leader of the opposition holds a position which in degree of responsibility is, I should say, second only to that of the Prime Minister in the management of the affairs of the House of Commons.

Responsibility for government does not mean monopoly of government. In parliament, particularly in most critical times like the present, everyone can make some contribution to the needs of the day, and indeed will be expected to do so fearlessly and to the best of his ability. To a great extent an opposition can help a government in shaping the policies which may be best for the administration of public affairs. We shall not expect from the leader of the opposition the kind or degree of support which naturally we will expect from our own party. We will not expect to be exempted from criticism. Indeed one of the great functions of an opposition is that it may help to safeguard the proceedings of a government and that by its constructive criticism may prevent what might otherwise be in the nature of hasty or ill-conceived action, or what some might feel to be a lack of sufficient action.

We shall not expect, I say, to escape criticism, but I believe I am speaking for all hon. members when I say that I hope the house will be spared anything in the nature of recriminations. In the light of the great problems with which we are faced at this time, it would be our hope that criticism will be constructive.

In conclusion may I say that the cooperation which we believe we will receive from members in all parts of the house will be reciprocated in the fullest measure possible by the government. It will be our effort to work together in this House of Commons as one body of citizens who have, first and foremost in their hearts, the interests of their country, the interests of the great empire to which we all belong, the interests of free nations, and the interests of freedom throughout the world.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at the very outset I desire to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) for his kind personal references to myself. I believe no one recognizes more than I do his own limitations, but because it is the unanimous wish of my colleagues that I assume this important duty, after the fullest and gravest consideration I have agreed to accept the responsibilities that have been placed upon me. I shall endeavour to discharge the function of the leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition not only in accordance with the best of my ability but, I hope, in accordance with the highest traditions of the office.

As the Prime Minister has said, we are meeting under extremely critical conditions. The whole of the civilized world is in a turmoil. Members of that group of free democracies of which we pride ourselves we form a part, are being attacked in the most vicious and violent manner that can be imagined by the human mind. As the senior dominion and an integral part of the British empire, Canada, along with our mother country and our gallant allies, is being attacked. It is the duty of Canadians, the duty of this parliament, the duty of the government charged with responsibility for the time being and, as I conceive it, my duty as the leader of his majesty's opposition, to render to the cause of liberty and freedom the very best that is in us.

Canada's participation in this great conflict which, I fear, may grow successively worse instead of better, should be bound only by our limitations in men, in treasure and in concentrated efforts. That, in my opinion, should be our one and undivided aim in the course of this, perhaps the most important session of parliament in the history of our dominion.

Of course we shall want to know what is going on. We shall expect from the administration a full accounting of its stewardship during the past seven or eight months. The Canadian people are asking for that. I fear that they have been too complacent during the early period of the war. However, now that the shock of this tremendous conflict is being borne in upon them, and through them to us, they desire to know the measure of effort Canada is putting forth at this time.

SUSPENSION OF SITTING

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move that the house suspend its sitting until three o'clock this afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

At one p.m. the sitting was suspended until three p.m. this day.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

OPENING OF THE SESSION

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the assistant secretary to the Governor General, announcing that His Excellency the Administrator would proceed to the Senate chamber at three p.m. on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Administrator desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the house went up to the Senate chamber. Then the Hon. James Allison Glen, Speaker-elect, said:

May it please your Excellency,

The House of Commons have elected me as their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me. If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons whose servant I am.

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate, addressing the Honourable the Speaker of the House, then said:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by His Excellency the Administrator to assure you that your words and actions will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

Then His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to open parliament by a speech from the throne.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to state that the house having attended on His Excellency the Administrator in the Senate Chamber, I informed his excellency that the choice of Speaker had fallen upon me, and in your names and on your behalf I made the usual claim for your privileges, which his excellency was pleased to confirm to you.

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon, W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time. [Mr. Mackenzie King.]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that when the house did attend His Excellency the Administrator this day in the Senate chamber, his excellency was pleased to make a speech to both houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

You have been summoned to the first session of a new parliament at a time of the greatest conflict in the history of mankind. Upon the outcome of the struggle will depend the maintenance of civilized society and the inheritance of human freedom for our own and future generations.

Since parliament last met, the nature of the conflict, the character of the enemy, and the perils which menace all free nations, have become only too clear. In that short space of time, the world has seen the peaceful and peaceloving peoples of Denmark, Norway, Holland, Belgium, and Luxembourg made the victims of the treachery and barbarism which have marked the successive outrages of nazi Germany. It has also witnessed the invasion of Finland, and, despite the epic resistance of its heroic population, the partition of that unoffending country. At any time, the lust of conquest may vastly enlarge the theatre of war. These tragic events have but served to intensify our determination to share in the war effort of the allied powers to the utmost of our strength. In this resolution the government has been fortified by the direct and unquestioned mandate of the Canadian people.

The organization and prosecution of Canada's war effort have commanded the unremitting attention of my ministers. The constant consultation and complete cooperation maintained with the governments of the United Kingdom and France have been materially strengthened by the recent visit to those countries of my Minister of National Defence.

You will be fully informed of Canada's action both in the military and economic fields. You will be asked to consider measures deemed essential for the prosecution of the war, and for the social and economic requirements of the country.

While the present session of parliament will necessarily be mainly concerned with Canada's war effort, and the measures essential to the achievement of ultimate victory, my ministers are of opinion that, despite what to-day is being witnessed of concentrated warfare, it is desirable, as far as may be possible, to plan for the days that will follow the cessation of hostilities.

As a contribution to industrial stability in time of war, and to social security and justice in time of peace, resolutions will be introduced for an amendment to the British North America Act which would empower the parliament of Canada to enact at the present session legislation to establish unemployment insurance on a national scale.

The report of the Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations, which has just been received, will be tabled immediately.

Members of the House of Commons:

You will be asked to make financial provision for expenditure necessitated by the existing state of war.

The estimates for the current fiscal year will be submitted to you without delay.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

Since the last session of parliament, a much beloved Governor General has passed from our midst. In the death of Lord Tweedsmuir, Canada mourns one whose character and achievements had endeared him to our people; the British commonwealth has lost a wise and understanding counsellor, and the fellowship of writers a gifted interpreter of the graces and humanities of English literature. I join with you in the expression to Lady Tweedsmuir and the members of her family of the deep sympathy of the Canadian people.

His Majesty the King has been pleased to appoint the Earl of Athlone as His Representative in succession to the late Lord Tweedsmuir. The sense of duty and the public services which have distinguished the lives of the Governor General designate and the Princess Alice ensure for His Excellency and Her Royal Highness an eager and cordial welcome to Canada.

As you assume, in these dark and difficult days, the grave responsibilities with which you have been entrusted by the Canadian people, may your resolution be sustained by the knowledge that it is the liberties of all free peoples that you are helping to preserve. Unless the evil powers, which threaten the very existence of freedom, are vanquished, the world itself will inevitably be reduced to a state of international anarchy.

I pray that Divine Providence may guide and bless your deliberations.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the order for the consideration of the motion for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, have precedence over all other business, except introduction of bills, until disposed of.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed lists of members to compose the standing committees of this house, under standing order 63, said committee to be composed of Messrs. Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre), Casgrain, Casselman (Grenville-Dundas), Taylor and Douglas (Weyburn).

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Administrator:

The Administrator transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an approved minute of council appointing the Honourable T. A. Crerar, Minister of Mines and Resources, the Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice, the Honourable J. L. Ralston, Minister of Finance, and the Honourable J. L. Ilsley, Minister of National Revenue, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of chapter 145 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, intituled An Act Respecting the House of Commons.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION TABLED

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I table herewith the report of the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations. The report is contained in three large printed volumes. There are in addition a very large number of volumes which constitute the appendices.

Hon, R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Do the appendices contain the evidence?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sorry I cannot answer that question. I may tell my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that as yet I have not had an opportunity of opening the report to see what is in it, let alone the appendices; but I will give him the information later.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I hope it does not turn out to be just another royal commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The report is tabled in both English and French. It was received on the tenth of this month, and at the time of its receipt I sent copies to members of the press gallery of this house so that they might have an opportunity of preparing in advance the resumes which they might wish to send to their newspapers throughout the country. I also had copies of the report and the appendices sent to the premiers of the several provinces so that they would be received this morning, before the tabling of the report in this house this afternoon.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Have a sufficient number of copies of the report of the royal commission been printed so that at least each member of parliament will have a copy of this historic document?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Copies of the report are being sent to all hon, members. In fact, I am not at all sure that they have not already been sent out from the distribution office.

WAR MEASURES ACT

TABLING OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL PASSED SINCE AUGUST 25, 1939

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I wish to table the orders in council passed under the authority of the War Measures Act since August 25, 1939. In January I tabled in typewritten form such orders in council as had been passed up to the end of the year 1939. Since then those orders in council have been printed, and they will be tabled in printed form. The orders in council passed since the end of last year, up to and including May 11 of this year, are being tabled in typewritten form.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): It would greatly facilitate my perusing the orders in council if at the time they are tabled a copy should be handed to me. Would that be in order?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As these orders in council have been passed copies have been immediately forwarded to the office of the leader of the opposition and also to the leaders of other groups in the house. I shall make quite certain that my hon, friend obtains a complete set.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I thank my right hon. friend for his courtesy.

VACANCIES

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received communications from several members, notifying me that the following vacancies had occurred in the representation, viz:

Of Walter George Brown, member for the electoral district of Saskatoon City, by de-

Of Alonzo Bowen Hyndman, member for the electoral district of Carleton, Ontario, by decease.

I accordingly issued my several warrants to the chief electoral officer to make out new writs of election for the said electoral districts, respectively.

ACTING DEPUTY SERGEANT-AT-ARMS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have appointed J. Laundy to be acting deputy sergeant-at-arms during the present session.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 4.04 p.m.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Friday, May 17, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

EUROPEAN WAR.

INQUIRY AS TO RECENT DEVELOPMENTS
ON THE WESTERN PRONT

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). In view of the serious although, I hope, not critical situation which apparently has developed on the western front during the last few hours, is he prepared to make any statement to the house at this juncture?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend was kind enough to mention to me in advance of this afternoon's sitting that he would ask the question which he has just put to me. I might point out, as the house will observe, that there are no orders on to-day's order paper except the special order for the consideration of the address, to which precedence was given by resolution of the house yesterday; the procedure will be to take up at once the consideration of the address. However, the house will, I believe, agree that my hon. friend was quite right in availing himself of the earliest opportunity to ask the question he has just asked. I draw attention to the absence of orders of the day on to-day's order paper only lest some other members might feel that they were not being accorded an equal right if His Honour the Speaker ruled we should proceed at once to the consideration of the address.

Our most recent information indicates continued penetration by German forces along the Franco-Belgian border west of Sedan. For the most part the enemy forces engaged consist of mechanized forces assisted by aircraft. The situation is serious but is not considered critical. The French command are taking energetic steps, in cooperation with the United Kingdom, and it is expected the situation will be stabilized. The British and French air forces have proved very effective and a British air raid on the Ruhr has done great damage to the enemy. There is no doubt, however, that the situation is grave.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): With the permission of the house, may I add this. There is no doubt, as the Prime Minister has said, that the situation is very serious; let us pray that it is not critical. Having regard to that fact, may I, on behalf of the party which I have the honour to represent in this house, offer to the Prime Minister and the government our whole-hearted support in any measures or actions which he may desire the house to take at this time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I express to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) my own very deep appreciation, and equally that of the government as a whole, of his kindness in availing himself of the earliest opportunity to offer to the government his support and that of his party in such action as the government may deem it necessary to take at this critical time. My hon. friend's words were not unexpected; I felt that we should be able to rely upon his helpful cooperation at a time such as this.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. HUGUES LAPOINTE
(LOTBINIÈRE) AND SECONDED BY MR. JAMES
SINCLAIR (VANCOUVER NORTH)

The house proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the session.

Mr. HUGUES LAPOINTE (Lotbinière) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate as a high privilege the great honour which the Prime Minister has kindly conferred upon me at the beginning of this important session of a new parliament.

In my name and on behalf of those who have elected me as their representative in this House, I wish to tender him my heartfelt thanks.

There are here many new members who, like myself, have been summoned for the first time to the nation's parliament, and I am pleased to note that youth has secured its just share of success at the last election. Indeed, the Canadian Parliament has not since a long time numbered so many young men among its members, and I believe that the nation is justified in being glad of that. I am sure that their presence will not have the effect of dividing this House into groups made up according to age disparities but that it will rather insure a greater understanding of the serious problems which will be laid before us. It is essential, during the troublous and difficult times in which we are are now living, that the government should have the cooperation of citizens of all ages and classes. What the new members lack in experience will undoubtedly be offset by their sincerity in the performance of their duty and by their desire to dedicate all their talent and energy to the service of their country. The post-war period will give rise to problems disturbingly acute, the impact of which will unavoidably be felt more severely by youth than by any other class of the population. On their solution will depend the future well-being of our generation and of those which are still unborn.

We feel that we are cooperating in a great and useful work, and the clouds which are now darkening the world's horizon heighten the sense of responsibility which is an inherent part of our mandates.

The Right Honourable the Prime Minister achieved, on March 26 last, the greatest personal victory ever won by a government leader in Canada. No mark of confidence from the electorate has ever been so striking. The collective spirit of the Canadian nation found its expression in the recent vote and the prime minister's victory was the triumph of common sense. The government's war effort has been appraised and the people have endorsed it with a clear-cut verdict. For those of us who are from the province of Quebec the last election had a particular significance. It indicated that the province trusted her representatives; indeed, she gave an unmistakable proof of that trust on two occa-The vote of March 26 was merely a confirmation of the verdict of October 25, when certain political leaders thought it clever to wage a provincial campaign on federal grounds, and I must say that we had a feeling of legitimate pride, during the last electoral campaign, when we heard that in some other provinces the contest was being waged on the slogan "Do like Quebec, vote unity." The vote in Quebec has shown that the province is just as mindful of her duty as she is jealous of her rights.

The unanimous approval which the Canadian people gave to the prime minister's policy has made his government truly national. The compact majority which supports him is not made up of loosely connected groups. It represents the whole country.

The government's victory has still another significance. It has shown that abuse and insult, and malicious personal attacks are not looked upon with favour during a critical period like this one and that the people will not allow their best servants to be slandered with impunity.

In the constituency of Lotbinière, which has done me the honour of electing me, as happened in several other constituencies, the contest was on the question of our participation in the war. The answer has been unequivocal and I am proud to transmit it to this House.

Upon this question of participation in this great conflict, I should like, Mr. Speaker, to quote the words of an eminent preacher whose sermons and lectures have been heard by distinguished audiences in Montreal during these latter months. On April 5th, Rev.

Father Ducatillon delivered a masterly lecture which he had entitled "Civilization, the true stake for which the war is being fought". After showing the part played by Christianity in the world's civilization, and the pagan programme which Naziism and communism have initiated, the distinguished cleric concluded as follows: "No one is justified in keeping aloof from the present conflict, since it is war for or against right, for or against culture, for or against civilization."

We have seen treaties broken, and nations invaded; in short, everything that has upheld civilization until now and everything that could ensure the security of nations has been trampled upon.

Just a few days ago, three neutral countries whose only fault was that they trusted in solemn covenants, fell victims to their good faith and were treacherously attacked. May I mention in particular the heroic Belgians, those martyrs of the last war, who are once again defending their land against, that new invasion of barbarians.

Will any one say that we are not interested in all that? Will any one say that the wild beast which has broken loose upon the world does not constitute a danger for us? Will any one say that we can remain unconcerned about the fate of liberty and of those principles to which all free men have clung tenaciously for so many centuries?

For my part, I refuse to believe that my fellow citizens can stand by unconcernedly while these principles are engulfed in the surging tide of the abominable doctrines and practises of the Hitlerian and Soviet dictatorships. How can we remain neutral when this diabolic doctrine of "Might is right" threatens the entire world?

We believe in eternal justice and truth, twin beacons a passing cloud may dim momentarily, but which must reappear and shine forth with a sovereign radiance, to guide a civilization founded on Faith and Hope. Such are the truths we are committed to defend.

Now what would be for us the consequences of a German victory? I have never been, nor do I intend ever to become an ardent supporter of out-and-out imperialism. History teaches us that empires, being essentially the product of human enterprise, can never as such stand wholly free from imperfection. Yet I state without hesitation that at this critical moment in the lives of all nations, when the very existence of our democratic institutions is threatened, the dismemberment of the British Empire, as well as the defeat of France our ally, would be an irreparable catastrophe, opening wide the gates fashionable, in certain circles, to denounce the present system. Everyone is aware that the dismemberment of the British Empire is one of the avowed war aims of the German Reich, and Hitler has never ceased to predict that the Empire would crumble the day war was declared in Europe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. members of this house, I ask all my fellow citizens, would we not be deeply affected under the

to all the subversive doctrines which are not without causing a certain degree of apprehension to the very ones who have made it

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. members of this house, I ask all my fellow citizens, would we not be deeply affected under the present circumstances by the consequences of such a dismemberment? What would become of us in the event of such a disaster? What would become of those who have, at the moment, nothing but criticism for the ties that bind us to England? Do they believe for a second that a victorious Germany would pay little heed to Canada with her immense resources and wealth? Do they believe that we Canadians, a small nation of some ten million people, occupying a territory five times the size of France, could safeguard the freedom and autonomy we enjoy to-day? Do they believe, especially, that we could long maintain our racial characteristics, our mentality, our liberty and our faith?

I am aware that numerous hypotheses have been advanced with regard to the consequences of an enemy victory. Some have claimed that in such circumstances there could only accrue a greater measure of autonomy to our country because, they allege, our neighbours to the south would never permit a German invasion of Canada.

I do not share this opinion which is rather devoid of pride. It is undoubtedly true that there exist between Canada and the United States friendly relations which are extremely helpful to us in the present conflict. Our geographical position as well as our economic interests bind us strongly together. On the other hand, is there not reason to fear that these very factors may tend to weaken our position as a separate entity among the nations of the world and inevitably lead to a total absorption which, though preferable to German domination, would nevertheless mean the complete disappearance of everything Canadian? For my part, I confess that I would rather remain a good neighbour.

Mr. Speaker, the country has rallied to the leadership of a man who is sure of his ground, whose concern for our national interests is everywhere manifest and who is worthy of trust. Is it not therefore the duty of every patriotic citizen to give wholehearted support to those whom the people have unequivocally chosen as their leaders during this trying period of our national life?

[Mr. Hugues Lapointe.]

Consequently, let us now forget any disagreements which may have arisen between us during the last campaign. Let us not burden with personal considerations the solution of our national problems.

This country has entered the war of its own volition, as a free nation. It has done so, not under the orders of a foreign power nor by act of a foreign government, but by an Act of its own Parliament freely voting to participate in the European conflict. The people have recently approved this stand of the Canadian Government, in circumstances with which you are all familiar.

Is it not thus imperative that all cooperate in the effort already launched? Is it not necessary that the unity so achieved be made evident in all fields of endeavour, in order to advance efficiently the work accomplished since Canada is too great and beautiful a country for us to allow her to be divided by misunderstanding at a time when we should be strongly united. A nation is a living organism whose functions are all interdependent, and anyone attempting to destroy this solidarity at a time when it is vitally important would be guilty of treason.

The work begun must be efficiently pursued and the unity achieved at the outbreak of war maintained. It follows that we must devote all our energy to the attainment of these ends, failing which all our efforts would, to my mind, be wasted. These two aims are inseparably bound together. The achievement of the first is predicated on the existence of the second.

In order to achieve this first aim, I believe it imperative for the government to pursue the policy established at the outbreak of war, and since then applied with energy and determination.

This policy has taken into account the most effective ways of exerting Canada's war effort and assisting our allies.

May I be permitted especially to praise the part played by our country in the drafting and development of the great Commonwealth air training scheme? Recent events have made clear the vital importance of a powerful air force, and Canada's efforts in this field should prove a decisive factor in settling the issue of the present conflict.

I would also like to congratulate the government for having taken all the measures necessary to safeguard and maintain our financial and economic position.

Our efforts in the allied cause shall prove valuable only insofar as we remain a strong nation, economically as well as morally. The presence of a bankrupt country in the allied ranks would be a liability rather than an asset to the cause we are pledged to defend.

Moreover, the government will have to adopt measures designed to prevent, as much as possible, any rupture of balance in the normal life of this nation resulting from the war. Legislation has already been passed in order to curb any profiteering such as the Canadian consumer experienced between 1914-18. To the same end, the government has eliminated all political patronage in the administration of the Department of National Defence. Through the Bank of Canada, the country's credit has been stabilized. Other measures will undoubtedly have to be adopted as we go along to cope with future problems. The effective pursuit of the war will inevitably call for sacrifices on the part of the Canadian people who will be subjected to all manner of restrictions, but such sacrifices in a common cause are a pledge of unity, and we have the right to expect that the Canadian nation will emerge from this war stronger and more united than ever.

That second aim, the preservation of Canadian unity, we must achieve and maintain, if we want to safeguard the future of our country. Canada must remain united. We are at war of our own free will. Canada's war effort is voluntary and must remain voluntary. Suggestions to the contrary coming from scattered quarters would lead to catastrophe.

Canada is fighting in defence of international decency, inviolability of treaties and respect for sacred pledges. Our people would never allow our public men to break with impunity the solemn undertakings given to the nation.

Nothing should be done, no word should be uttered that could in any way destroy national unity.

God forbid, Mr. Speaker, that we repeat the mistakes of the last war. Let us so apply our effort that we may, once the hostilities are over, carry on as a homogeneous nation.

Let us not forget that we are Canadians first and that it is our duty to think and act as Canadians. In this connection, may I be permitted to pay tribute to the memory of one whose death has deeply grieved the whole Canadian nation: Lord Tweedsmuir. Although he had spent only a few years with us, he had learned to understand and love our people, and for a great many his record in Canada could serve as an object-lesson in true patriotism. Lord Tweedsmuir once said that a Canadian's first loyalty should be to Canada. It is my conviction that this principle should be the guiding light of every honourable member of this house during the present Parliament.

Another task devolving upon the government under present conditions is that of planning for the post-war period. There again we must draw a lesson from the last war. If our participation in the European conflict creates problems of a special nature, our eventual return to normalcy after the war may prove equally difficult.

As I have said, the presence of a large number of young members in this house ought to prove helpful in solving our national problems. They should give special attention to post-war problems.

During the dark years which may lie ahead of us, the youth of this country will be called upon to make the greatest sacrifice. Those of our young men who are already overseas and the others who will sail shortly have a right to expect that, in return for their sacrifices, their government will take appropriate measures to ensure that their lot will not be worse when they return to this country. Provision will have to be made for the civil reestablishment of those who have not hesitated to risk their future in the cause of justice and in defence of civilization.

This planning for the post-war period must also be extended to other fields. If, as a free nation, we are bound to help save civilization now in jeopardy, we must by the same token discover a formula whereby the welfare of humanity may be secured.

All nations firmly believe, for a time at least, in the possibility of a durable peace and in the effectiveness of institutions designed to bring about the peaceful solution of disputes. The failure of the League of Nations does not prevent this hope from rising anew to-day. Indeed, the human race would soon disappear if it gave way to despair. Public opinion in democratic countries is fully aware of the deadly peril with which western civilization would be faced as a result of a Nazi or Soviet triumph over the international community, and demands a better and more effective formula than that of 1919.

Of what avail would be the sacrifices made and the losses suffered if the settlement effected at the end of the present conflict were to result once again in nothing more than a twenty-year truce. For my part, I am convinced that divine Providence, having ever guided our destiny, will not fail us now and that God will inspire the nations that have taken up arms to safeguard world peace and freedom against what has been fittingly termed "the common front of barbarism."

Mr. Speaker, it is our earnest desire that Canada should exert among all other nations a beneficent influence toward world peace and the establishment of better relations between all countries. Such influence cannot become an important force unless we introduce at home certain reforms that would make of Canada a nation united and strong, socially, economically, and politically.

Mr. Hugues Lapointe.]

That is why I have noted with satisfaction that the report on Dominion-Provincial relations in the various spheres of activity has now been submitted to this house. This document, probably the most important since Confederation, is the work of prominent men. experts in constitutional law; may I be permitted to add that the Chairman of the Commission, Doctor Joseph Sirois, was my professor at Laval university. These men have brought to their task all of their knowledge, patriotism and experience.

In considering the recommendations contained in this report, the various governments should take into account the new conditions which have arisen in our national life.

Surely the Fathers of Confederation could not foresee the evolution which has taken place during the past 75 years, and should certain changes become necessary because of new conditions, we should not hesitate to make them.

To that end, the greatest possible degree of cooperation should exist between the Dominion and the provinces. In this sphere also there is no room for political considerations. Besides, our population will make the necessary distinctions and will not deny its support to the proper measure of reform; our people would not even lend an ear to those who, taking an easy course, set themselves up as defenders of rights and principles contested by no one and which, in fact, must remain inviolate.

I know of no greater danger for a minority in this country than to stand in the way of reforms necessitated by our social conditions and to oppose any measure deemed progressive and essential.

I could not fittingly conclude these remarks without expressing the deep satisfaction which we have felt on hearing that His Excellency Lord Athlone had been designated for the post of Governor General of Canada. Our new vicerov has had a distinguished career and his appointment is a great honour to this country.

Lord Athlone and Her Royal Highness the Princess Alice will receive in every part of Canada a most loyal and enthusiastic welcome. Their near association with Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth will draw even closer the bonds which unite us to our gracious sovereigns, whose visit to Canada last year shall ever be remembered.

(Text) Mr. Speaker, one of the most remarkable developments of the present war has been the joining of France and England into one nation for all military and economic purposes. Many prophecies have been made regarding the outcome of this union after the war. At the present time their imports are for the use of both nations, their monetary systems have been harmonized, custom barriers have been adjusted. In short, the whole economic life of the two nations has been coordinated for the purpose of war. The understanding between these two countries is being observed in other spheres of activity. Their literature is being fully exchanged and the teaching and learning of each other's language has increased tremendously. short, the union between the two countries has been not only material, but also intellectual and spiritual. What the outcome of this union will be after the war, it is hard to tell. Some observers have gone so far as to prophesy the union of France and England into one nation.

At a reception given at the Sorbonne to Lord De La Warr, former president of the Board of Education in the British government, Monsieur Albert Sarraut, Minister of Education in the government of France used these words:

It is our intention to spread as much as possible the study and use of the English language in France and vice versa. To speak another language is not sufficient. We shall teach France to the English people and England to the French people. We aim to create such a mutual understanding, that it shall not be necessary any longer to interpret words which will be understood immediately in their deepest sense. When we have finished with war, we hope that our children will be ready to help us in the task of rebuilding the world, not through the efforts of two people of different ideas, but through those of one common spiritual nation and one uniform civilization.

Whatever changes are being made, it seems certain that from the war will emerge a new relationship between France and England which will surely have its effects in future history and which will serve as a symbol of bonne entente for the other nations of the world. If so, I feel that we, Canadians, should rejoice at such an outcome and feel a legitimate pride in that we have already realized such a union.

In saying so, may I be permitted modestly to point out that never before in the history of our country has this union been more complete than it is now and that it has been under the leadership of two men whose whole careers have been devoted to this task, and who have for such a long time cooperated in intimate friendship and collaboration. I refer to the Right Hon, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and to the Right Hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe).

(Translation) Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) that the following address be presented to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government of Canada:

May it please Your Excellency:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both houses of parliament.

JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to second the resolution which has just been moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Hugues Lapointe), I must confess that I have never before been so aware of my own limitations as after hearing his brilliant and eloquent address. The right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Ernest Lapointe), during his long and distinguished career in Canadian public service, has enjoyed many great personal triumphs, but I know that none has ever made him feel prouder or happier than he is at this moment, after hearing his son so ably begin what will undoubtedly be a parliamentary career as long and successful as that of his distinguished father.

May I offer to you, Mr. Speaker, my congratulations upon your election by this honourable house to the distinguished position which you now occupy. What little confidence I may possess this afternoon is because of my consciousness that I can seek shelter and sanctuary in these somewhat strange surroundings under the sway of your kindly Doric.

May I also, if indeed that be not temerity, offer my sincere felicitations to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) upon the honour that his party has conferred upon him. I am assured that his great gifts will be a real asset to his party, to this parliament and to our country.

May I in a special way thank the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) for the honour he has done my constituents in Vancouver North in selecting me to second the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne. On their behalf, too, may I congratulate him on becoming Prime Minister for the fifth time. Four years ago he was elected to office by the mandate of the Canadian people, supported by the greatest majority ever accorded to any Canadian Prime Minister. To-day, after an election fought solely on his administration since that time, we find him returned to office with a majority surpassing even that of 1935.

No words of mine, nor for that matter no words of the most able and eloquent member of this house, could so strikingly testify to his outstanding qualities of leadership as did the collective voice of the Canadian people from Cape Breton to Nootka sound when it spoke on the 26th day of March of this year. The record of his administrations and the repeated and overwhelming approval given to him by the people of Canada mark the Prime Minister as our greatest leader since confederation.

All Canada was saddened this spring by the death of the governor general, Lord Tweedsmuir. We have always been fortunate in the calibre of the men who have held this high office, and it is neither an exaggeration nor a reflection to say that none was as highly and as warmly regarded by the common people of Canada as was Lord Tweedsmuir. Of humble parentage, he won his education in a manner which is traditional with Scottish scholars, by bursaries at Glasgow university, by fellowships at Oxford. His administrative ability was early recognized, and he went to South Africa as one of that group of brilliant young men who were trained for public service by Lord Milner. Then came literature-fiction, history, and, above all, incomparable biography.

He served with distinction in the great war, and afterwards returned to public life as a member of the mother of parliaments. When he came to Canada we already felt that we knew him well through his books, and soon we all had a chance to see and hear and meet him. We saw him in our great cities; we saw him in the pioneer settlements on our distant frontiers; we saw him in the small communities which are the real Canada, and we marvelled at his untiring industry and his burning desire to know our country from coast to coast and our people through and through.

He had the same great love of the outdoors that so many Canadians have, and we from British Columbia are proud to think that the mountains and valleys, the lakes and streams, and the great forests and the broad ranges of Tweedsmuir park will be forever a fitting and ever green memorial to this man whom I can rightly call a great Canadian. The man who was born John Buchan, a son of the manse, and who died the first Baron Tweedsmuir, a great proconsul of a great empire, may best be described in the words he himself used of Lincoln:

He conducted the ordinary business of life in phrases of homespun simplicity, but when necessary he could attain a nobility of speech and a profundity of thought which have rarely been equalled. He was a plain man, loving [Mr. Sinclair.] his fellows and happy among them, but when the crisis came he could stand alone. He could talk with crowds and keep his virtue; he could preserve the common touch and yet walk with God.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you will understand me when I say that we who hail from the far west felt a very natural pride yesterday when parliament was opened by the Administrator, Chief Justice Sir Lyman Duff. This great jurist, who by his profound learning has brought added dignity and prestige to his high office, first achieved recognition in the fair city of Victoria.

The people of Canada look forward with the greatest pleasure to welcoming the new governor general, the Earl of Athlone, and his gracious lady, when they come to our shores in the near future. It is a curious coincidence that the noble earl should come to us at this time; for twenty-six years ago, just before our entry into the last war, he was designated our governor general. At that time he asked to be excused so that he could go on service in France, and throughout that war he served with great valour and distinction. Subsequently he became the governor general of South Africa and he so completely captured the hearts of the people of our sister dominion that they asked him to remain for a second term. We are indeed fortunate to have this great soldier and statesman as governor general during the dark days ahead.

I understand that it is the privilege of the member performing this pleasant task to say a few words about his own constituency. Vancouver North, the riding which I have the honour to represent, is not as its name suggests, a part of the great city of Vancouver. It lies to the east, to the north and to the northwest of that city, extending from the banks of the Fraser river across to Burrard inlet, and then up the coast for some two hundred miles. I feel quite safe in saying that it is the most diversified industrial riding in British Columbia, containing as it does logging camps, sawmills, pulp and paper mills, the greatest copper mine in the British empire, shipyards, oil refineries, railway shops, extensive salmon and cod fisheries, quarries, grain elevators and a number of manufacturing plants.

The chief problem of this riding has always been to find world markets for the many products of its industries. In no part of this country have the trade expansion policies of the preceding administration been of such immediate and practical benefit, and the people of my riding are keenly appreciative of the great efforts of the government in this connection. In recent months the war has considerably increased the demand for the products of my riding, but unfortunately it is becoming exceedingly difficult to secure adequate cargo space to transport these goods to overseas markets. In the timber industry especially this condition has become serious, and it is my hope that the government will soon consider measures looking to its allevia-

My riding also includes three of the loveliest suburbs of Vancouver, but I regret to say that two of these municipalities are in the hands of receivers. It is the feeling of the residents of North Vancouver that their financial difficulties are mainly due to the action taken in removing most of the taxable waterfront in North Vancouver from the municipal assessment rolls, and to the operation by a national agency of the Second Narrows bridge which was built and financed by the people of this district. At a later date I hope to draw the attention of the government to these matters in greater detail.

My riding has one other important asset, one which I believe is often claimed for other ridings. I believe that nowhere in Canada is there such a magnificent and varied display of scenic grandeur as is to be found on the coast of British Columbia. Our snow-capped mountains, our beautiful lakes and streams; our matchless coastline indented with innumerable great bays and deep fiords and dotted with countless islands; our unexcelled hunting, fishing, mountaineering and ski-ing, and above all, our salubrious climate, which is the envy of all Canada, serve to make the coast of British Columbia the mecca of tourists and sportsmen from all corners of the globe.

Transcending and overshadowing every other issue before this house, Mr. Speaker, is the war in which the British and French nations are engulfed. This war is not of our seeking, but is a conflict which was forced upon us when it became apparent that the brutalities, the treacheries and the aggressions of nazi Germany directed against its small and defenceless neighbours were destroying the peace of the entire world and could not be curbed by mere appeals for decency and tolerance and justice or by the ordinary processes of international law. To preserve the rights for which our forefathers fought and died since magna charta, the people of Canada, speaking through their freely chosen representatives assembled in parliament, decided that the time had come to meet force with force. Some two months ago the people of Canada approved the united war effort of the preceding administration. The people of Canada now expect this government to press forward with all the resources at their command to help our allies bring this dreadful conflict to a speedy and successful conclusion.

There were some who believed that complete neutrality should be Canada's attitude; they cited the long and successful neutrality of the Scandinavian and low countries as proof of the wisdom of that course. The terrible events of the last month must have proved a rude awakening to these people.

The preceding administration was elected in peace time, to govern this country in peace time. Long before the war clouds began to gather in Europe, we are proud to remember that despite vigorous opposition this government began to build up our national defences and to prepare the skeleton organization for the control of the economic resources of this country should war develop. We on the Pacific coast have had a better opportunity than most people in other parts of Canada to see and appreciate the great work of the Department of National Defence in providing us with an adequate system of coastal defences. The people of Vancouver Centre recently showed their approval in no uncertain terms of the man chiefly responsible for that program of coast defence.

The present government takes over its duties refreshed and invigorated by the overwhelming mandate of the people of Canada, and is directly charged with the great task of immediately supplying the maximum military, financial and economic aid to our allies in this death struggle. I am sure that in this house to-day partisanship will be cast aside and members of all parties will devote all their energies to assisting the government in this great task.

Mention is made in the speech from the throne of increased taxation to assist in financing the war. I think everyone in Canada realized that increased taxation must come. I am sure that today no one objects, because everyone understands only too clearly that if we lose this war, we lose everything. No financial sacrifice can equal that of those who are leaving homes and loved ones behind and offering their lives for their country.

Second only in importance to our great war effort is the planning for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of this country after the war is won. It has been said that no peace-loving democracy is ever adequately prepared for war. It is surely equally true that a democracy at war should plan and prepare for peace.

There has been another bitter struggle fought in this country during the last ten years, a struggle which has been waged, grimly and silently, in far too many Canadian homes. I refer to the never-ending struggle against unemployment, poverty and disease, against old age haunted by the fear of want; the struggle of the youth of the country who have been frustrated in a desperate search for gainful employment. These are the enemies which destroyed the struggling post-war democracies of central Europe; these are the foes we must conquer in the post-war years if Canada is to survive as a free country.

The measures adopted by the preceding administration to combat these conditions were proving increasingly successful in peace time. I need mention only briefly the expanding markets provided by their trade policies; the beginning of a national forestry plan through dominion-provincial forestry camps; assistance in the development of tourist and mining roads and trails; vocational training in the cities and farm training in rural areas for our young people; municipal assistance, the National Housing Act, home improvement loans, and numerous great public works projects. This programme must of necessity be greatly extended and expanded to meet the needs of the post-war years.

We must plan to reconstruct not only our industrial and economic organizations but also the social structure of this nation. It has been increasingly apparent in recent years that grave difficulties in government are occasioned by the present division of responsibility among the federal, provincial and municipal authorities. The British North America Act was drawn up in 1867 to meet the needs of the Canada of that time, a Canada vastly different from the Canada of to-day; a Canada, for example, in which our present chief problem, unemployment, did not exist. It is high time that the constitution of Canada was revised to bring it abreast of present conditions in this modern changing world. It is a matter of satisfaction, therefore, that the report of the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations has been tabled, and it is the hope of all Canada that out of the recommendations of this report the framework of a new Canada may be designed which will allow the governments of this country to grapple effectively and efficiently with the problems which will develop in the post-war years.

As the representative of an industrial riding I am gratified to learn from the speech from the throne that an amendment of the British North America Act is being sought to permit the introduction of a national scheme of unemployment insurance. Such legislation will be most welcome in every part of Canada. While it is true that unemployment insurance is no solution of the problem of unemployment, it will serve as a buffer to lessen the shock of unemployment on the individual as well as on the community at large.

Measures for the rehabilitation of our soldiers when demobilized will of necessity, I [Mr. Sinclair.]

think, have to be expanded to include provisions for war workers and others who will be directly or indirectly affected by the cessation of hostilities. The government will probably profit by the experience in the matter of soldiers' civil reestablishment after the last war.

The honour of seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne is one which any young member may well prize, since it affords him an opportunity to speak to the house so soon after his arrival, to felicitate the leaders of his country, to mention briefly the problems of his riding, to review with pride the past accomplishments of his party, and to hold out high hopes for the success of the program outlined in the speech from the throne. To-day, however, this honour seems singularly unimportant; for the minds of all of us here are heavily burdened with just one thought, the progress of the war in which we are now engaged.

For far too long we have taken for granted the rights and privileges of British subjects, and the vast resources and the boundless opportunities of this land of ours. Now that all of this is in jeopardy we realize that these things are infinitely precious, that life without them would be impossible. Our freedom of speech, our freedom of person, our freedom from racial and religious intolerance, our right to elect freely by secret ballot, our government—all these things will surely perish if we lose this structed.

Until a month ago it was generally thought that this war was to be a defensive war, a war of exhaustion and attrition in which the economic resources of the nation would eventually be of more value than the military organization. The events of the last month have changed the whole outlook. The German hordes have swept across Denmark and Norway and are now sweeping across the low countries. It is apparent that man power and the material of warfare are the crying needs of our allies, and it is our manifest duty to aid them in this way as speedily as possible, no matter what the cost may be.

Dominating this building in which we sit is a peace tower erected to commemorate the sacrifices of the last war. In that tower is a hall of remembrance to sixty thousand Canadians who gave their lives for their country. Across Canada from coast to coast are tens of thousands of returned soldiers whose lives have been broken by the injuries they sustained in the last war. These are terrible reminders to us of the price other Canadians have paid that we might have this freedom.

This parliament meets in the darkest days since our nation was born. The hopes and the prayers of all Canada are with us to-day.

This is no time for complacency. It is a time for united effort, for ceaseless endeavour; above all, for action, fearless action. This is the time to subordinate all other affairs, to smash away the political bickerings and the departmental red tape which in the past have impeded democratic action. This is the time to mobilize with ruthless speed every resource of this vast country.

We, the Commons of Canada, assembled within these four walls, have the power to do these things, and the people of Canada, who sent us here, expect us to use that power so that we and our allies, with God's aid, may win a peace which will ensure the freedom of the peoples of this world.

On motion of Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 4.30 p.m.

Monday, May 20, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

NAVAL SERVICE ACT

PROVISION TO MAKE CIVILIANS SERVING IN SHIPS SUBJECT TO NAVAL DISCIPLINE

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 2, to amend the Naval Service Act.

Mr. STIRLING: Explain.

Mr. ROGERS: The purpose of this bill is to make subject to naval discipline persons who have agreed to serve as civilians in a particular ship or in such ships as may be determined by the minister. These are persons who are not members of the Canadian naval forces and eligible for all the benefits such as pension and so forth applicable to such forces. The bill is identical in form with one passed by the United Kingdom parliament to meet a similar situation arising in the Royal Navy. It will avoid the emergence of questions which arose at the end of the last war with respect to persons employed in the Canadian naval forces in a similar capacity.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MILITIA PENSION ACT

PERMANENT FORCE NAVAL OFFICERS TO BENEFIT IN RESPECT OF ONE-HALF OF PREVIOUS NON-PERMANENT SERVICE

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 3, to amend the Militia Pension Act.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to enable officers of the permanent naval forces to reckon for purposes of pension one-half of any former time served in the non-permanent naval forces, thereby placing these officers on the same basis as officers of the permanent military and air forces with respect to the inclusion of one-half their previous service in the non-permanent military and air forces.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

ADMINISTRATION OF SERVICE ESTATES TO BE REGULATED BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 4, to amend the Department of National Defence Act.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to enable the administration of service estates to be effected under regulations made by the governor in council. Regulations in this regard have already been made under the War Measures Act, and, so long as that act is capable of being invoked, such regulations have the force of law. Of necessity these regulations may have to be continued in force and effect for some time after the War Measures Act is capable of being invoked, and, in consequence, some other statutory authority is required to enable the governor in council to make such regulations.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PROVISIONS AS TO CONSTITUTION AND GOVERN-MENT, RELATIONS WITH OTHER FORCES AND WITH CIVIL AUTHORITIES

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 5 respecting the Royal Canadian Air Force.

He said: The Royal Canadian Air Force was constituted under the Aeronautics Act, which pertains rather to the regulation of aeronautics generally than to the constitution and maintenance of an armed force. The naval forces and the militia are each constituted under their respective acts, and it is considered advisable that like provision should be made for the air force.

The present bill does not alter the existing constitution of the air force, and is in principle similar to the Naval Service Act and the Militia Act, except that it omits a number of provisions contained in those two acts which are either not applicable to the air force or need not, having regard to the circumstances of the air force, be made applicable.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

ACCEPTANCE OF AFFIDAVITS IN LIEU OF ORAL EVIDENCE IN CERTAIN PROCEEDINGS

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 6, to amend the Canada Evidence Act.

He said: By a statute of 1938 amendments were made to the Canada Evidence Act having for their purpose the facilitating of evidence in certain matters; it was provided that an affidavit should be accepted as evidence without the necessity of hearing certain witnesses who might live a very long distance from the court. This amendment is for the purpose of making the first amendment easier of application, inasmuch as it will not be necessary to prove the official character of the person making the affidavit unless it is challenged.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT

CORRECTION OF INACCURACIES IN CHAPTER 36 OF STATUTES OF 1939

Hon. JAMES A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 7, to amend the Canada Grain Act.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to correct three inaccuracies that appear in the amending act of 1939.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What are they?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): An explanation will be given on the second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF GEORGE A. TOUCHE AND COMPANY AS AUDITORS

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 8, respecting the appointment of auditors for national railways.

He said: This is the usual bill introduced annually to provide for the appointment of auditors for Canadian National Railways.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The same auditors?

Mr. HOWE: The same as those of last year.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Rogers.]

JOINT USE OF CERTAIN TRACKS AND TERMINALS FOR PURPOSES OF NEW ENTRANCE INTO VANCOUVER

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 10, to ratify and confirm a certain agreement respecting the joint use by Canadian National Railways of certain tracks and premises of the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company, at Vancouver, in the province of British Columbia.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to ratify an agreement with Canadian National Railways for running rights over certain tracks and premises of the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company at Vancouver in order to give the Canadian National Railways an entrance into Vancouver. This object could be approved by the board of transport commissioners to be operative for a period of not more than twenty-one years, but as the agreement is in perpetuity it is necessary to apply for the approval of parliament.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER COMPANY

PROPOSED APPROVAL FOR DIVERSION OF ADDITIONAL 30,000 CUBIC SECOND FEET

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 9, respecting the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company.

He said: By chapter 19 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company were granted the privilege of diverting 53,000 cubic second feet of the flow of the St. Lawrence for power purposes. The object of this bill is to increase that diversion by 30,000 cubic second feet.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

YUKON ACT AMENDMENT

VALIDATION OF YUKON FUR EXPORT TAX ORDINANCE ACT ASSENTED TO MAY 20, 1919

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 11, to amend the Yukon Act.

He said: As far back as 1919 power was conferred upon the Yukon territorial council enabling them to provide for a tax on raw fur exported from the Yukon. A doubt has arisen, curiously enough at this late date, as to the precise powers which the territorial council had to impose such a tax. This bill is intended to make it clear beyond any question of doubt that they have the power, and also to confirm whatever actions they have taken in the past under that power.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

JURISDICTION OF PROVINCIAL COURTS—CARE OF INSANE PERSONS

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 12, to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

He said: Under the Northwest Territories Act as it stands at present the superior courts of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have jurisdiction in civil matters with respect to persons and property in that part of the Northwest Territories which lies west of the 80th meridian. This bill confers similar powers on the Ontario superior courts to deal with matters of the same sort east of the 80th meridian in the Northwest Territories. It also makes express provision conferring surrogate powers upon the provincial courts in the territories adjacent to the provinces. Under the Northwest Territories Act as it now stands the minister is authorized to make arrangements with the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba for the care of insane persons. Similar powers do not exist in the provinces further west, and this amending bill will confer such powers.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT

VARIATION OF PROVISION RESPECTING WEIGHTS OF PACKAGE CHEESE

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 13, to amend the Dairy Industry Act.

He said: The law now provides that products under the Dairy Industry Act shall be put up in parcels of pounds or fractions thereof. This has made it difficult for those who have been processing cheese to use the whole of cheeses which are round in form. The bill proposes so to amend the act as to make it possible to dispose of the residue of such cheeses.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSPORT ACT AMENDMENT

CONTROL OF TRANSPORT BY AIR, HIGHWAY, WATER OR RAILWAY

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 14, to amend the Transport Act.

He said: This bill provides for several amendments to the Transport Act having to do with the sections relating to carriage by water and by air. The amendments are put forward at the suggestion of the board of transport commissioners. The bill also has two new sections, one providing for the regulation of motor vehicles operated within dominion government parks, and the other having to do with the regulation of motor vehicles operated across an international boundary.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WHEAT

BREAK ON WINNIPEG FUTURES MARKET—PEGGING OF PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon). In view of the drastic decline which has taken place in the price of wheat on the Winnipeg exchange, and the report in this morning's press that the government has taken action pegging the price, would the minister care to make a statement to the house?

Hon. JAMES A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I anticipated the question just asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, (Mr. Perley) and in reply I wish to make the following statement:

Last Saturday morning, May 18, after consultations between the wheat committee of the cabinet and the Canadian wheat board, the Canadian wheat board addressed the following communication to the Winnipeg grain exchange:

We have been asked to advise you that the government requests that the Winnipeg grain exchange peg the wheat futures market as at the close of Friday, May 17. This action is taken as a temporary measure, pending full discussion with the government.

Upon receipt of this communication the Winnipeg grain exchange promptly issued the following statement:

At the request of the government the council has decided that the prices in wheat futures will be pegged as a minimum at the prices ruling at the close of the market on Friday, May 17, 1940, namely: May 703, July 713, October 735, to become effective at the close of trading to-day and to continue until further notice. This action is taken as a temporary measure pending a full discussion with the government.

This action means that until further notice it is not permissible to trade in the Winnipeg futures market at less than the prices mentioned, namely, May 70\(^3_8\), July 71\(^3_8\), October 73\(^5_8\). It should be made clear that trading may proceed normally at or above these prices.

On Saturday, May 11, May wheat closed in Winnipeg, at 89\frac{3}{3} cents. On Saturday, May 18, May wheat sold as low as 60\frac{3}{3}. The break in the Chicago wheat futures market has been even more drastic, their May wheat closing on Saturday, May 11 at $1.08\frac{3}{4} and trading as low as 76\frac{5}{3} cents on Saturday, May 18.

While several factors have entered into the situation it seems clear that the changed war picture has been a predominant influence in the decline in commodity and securities markets. The fear of lost markets and the general financial unsettlement have created a feeling of uncertainty and resulted in general and drastic liquidation on the part of holders of wheat. In addition to the liquidation mentioned there has been considerable selling by exporters against contracts which were cancelled on account of the purchasing countries becoming involved in the war. needless to say that the Canadian wheat board took no action which would in any way aggravate the situation.

This whole matter is now the subject of discussions between the wheat committee of the cabinet and the Canadian wheat board.

INQUIRY AS TO INTERIM PAYMENTS ON 1939 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): the group with which I am associated has already officially requested that an interim payment be made on the 1939 wheat crop, and according to a press report of March 21 last the Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, speaking at Wilkie, Saskatchewan, promised that the Liberal government, if returned at the pending election, would introduce amendments to the wheat board act providing that an interim payment of ten to twelve cents a bushel would be made on the 1939 wheat crop, I would ask the government whether this payment will be made under an amendment to the wheat board legislation or under the War Measures Act.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The question might be allowed to stand as a question on the order paper.

[Mr. J. A. MacKinnon.]

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

SUGGESTED INTERNMENT OF ENEMY SYMPA-THIZERS—COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE OF CANADA REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. BRUCE (Parkdale): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). The attorney general of Ontario has proposed that subversive elements in Canada should be placed in internment camps, in the same manner as alien enemies. I believe this proposal has been made to the minister, and that he has stated he would make a statement in the house. Is the minister prepared to make such a statement in the house to-day, or if not, when?

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I am pleased to say that I am in a position to make a statement which will answer my hon. friend's question.

The Hon. G. D. Conant, attorney general of Ontario, wrote to me under date of May 14, 1940, respecting subversive activities and the defence of Canada regulations. As, however, his letter was given to and published by the press, I think it appropriate that I should make a statement to the house; so I anticipated the wishes of my hon. friend.

Mr. Conant suggests in effect that all persons, whether British or aliens, who are accused of subversive activities be detained without trial, but subject to what amounts to an appeal, under the authority of an order of the Minister of Justice, in the same manner as enemy aliens are detained.

I may point out that the position of the two classes, that is, offenders against certain regulations, and enemy aliens, is entirely different. In the case of enemy aliens their nationality is known and a trial is not necessary or desirable. In the case of those in the other class it is essential, under the present regulations and under our system of justice, that, subject possibly to exceptions in particular cases, they should be proven guilty in a court of law in the usual manner. The regulations contemplate and provide for this procedure.

The powers contained in regulation 21, referred to by Mr. Conant, would under the present regulations be exercised by the Minister of Justice only with regard to persons other than enemy aliens and exceptional cases or where an emergency or extraordinary situation existed and no other appropriate or effective procedure was available.

It may be, however, that an amendment to the regulations might be desirable whereby after conviction in the trial court bail would be prohibited and thus the convicted person would not be at liberty pending any appeal that might be instituted. This suggestion, together with others, will be referred to the committee of this house to be set up for the purpose of considering the Defence of Canada regulations.

The constitutional responsibility for the internment of enemy aliens rests with the dominion authorities, and the procedure adopted with respect thereto is not applicable to prosecution for subversive activities. The constitutional responsibility for the administration of justice, which includes the enforcement of the present regulations dealing with subversive activities, rests with the provincial authorities, and I feel confident that they will continue to carry out their responsibilities in this respect as they have in the past.

I may say, in view of the fact that a committee of this house is to be set up for the purpose of considering the defence of Canada regulations, that it is my intention to suggest to the committee that it consider, amongst other things, the whole quesion of the enforcement of the regulations and the procedure therefor.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I am in receipt of a communication from the mayor of Vancouver which states that there is considerable feeling in that city against enemy aliens and enemy sympathizers. The communication further expresses the fear that unless there is an assurance from the federal government that adequate measures are being taken to cope with subversive activities of such people, citizens may organize for that purpose. Under the circumstances I think a statement from the minister would be useful.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I think, Mr. Speaker, that the statement I have just made largely answers my hon. friend's question. However, I may assure him that the government, through the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other agencies, is keeping close supervision on the persons referred to in the telegram from Vancouver. May I note, however, that until a few days ago all the criticisms which I received on behalf of the government as Minister of Justice were to the effect that the defence of Canada regulations were much too arbitrary and severe, and that they should be altered in that respect. Apparently there has been a change in public opinion, and now the criticism is the other way. The whole matter, I am pleased to say, will be considered by a committee of the house. The original intention in appointing the committee was to give an opportunity of expression to those who criticized the regulations because they were too drastic. Apparently now the committee will hear instead those who find the regulations not drastic enough.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Friday, May 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lapointe (Lotbinière) for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply conscious of the responsibilities that devolve upon me at this time. In approaching a discussion of the resolution now before the house I cannot disguise from you, sir, or the members of this house, that my mind, and I hope and trust the mind of each of us, is filled with anxiety over what has taken place on the other side of the ocean during the past few days. I intend to go quite fully into the question of Canada's war effort at a later stage of my remarks; at the moment I desire only to say that I believe we are engaged in a just war. If ever in the history of mankind there was a righteous war it is my firm belief that Canada is now participating in a war of high spiritual values, a war for the preservation of the maximum of individual liberty and indeed for the preservation of our Christian civilization. Because the background and the objects of the war in which we are engaged are of such importance it occurs to me that it is time for clear thinking on the part of each of us; and may I say it is time for reasonably straight talking. This afternoon I shall approach this question from no partisan point of view but rather, I hope, from the point of view of a Canadian national whose country, together with that of our gallant allies, is confronted with one of the greatest problems of our time.

First, however, there are some things which it is customary to say on this occasion. Already, Mr. Speaker, reference has been made to your election, and you will pardon me if I do not repeat now what I said previously. We all wish you well in the discharge of your public duties.

I come now to a brief consideration of the speeches we heard on Friday last. I am sure the two young gentlemen who distinguished themselves on that occasion will pardon me if I do not follow all the ramifications of their addresses. I want to congratulate them both, particularly on the composure they displayed in addressing this house for the first time. I confess to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the members of this house, that it was a long time before I caught the atmosphere of this chamber to an equal degree, if I ever did, and I have heard other hon. members, some of whom have taken prominent parts in the discussions of this house, make the same confession privately. I am making my confession publicly.

I desire to offer to the hon, member for Lotbinière (Mr. Lapointe) my particular congratulations. I read his remarks very hurriedly, but they emphasized two points to which I might refer briefly. He truly stated that youth will be the chief sufferer from this great international disaster that has come upon us. Undoubtedly that is so to-day, as it has been so in the past and will continue to be so as long as wars occur. As I conceive it, the carrying on of war so far as man power is concerned is the burden of youth, governed by the mature judgment and experience of older men. Then the hon, gentleman referred to the post-war period. That, of course, is important, and I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has placed upon the order paper, thus early in the session and early in the war, a resolution to set up a committee to study and report upon this question. Of course it is important, but it does seem to me that the winning of the war is of much more importance and that we might well postpone consideration of post-war conditions, because at this time who could say what those conditions might be?

I should like to offer my sincere personnal congratulations to the right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), the father of the hon. member for Lotbiniere. In the words of a great statesman on a similar occasion in the imperial parliament—

It was a speech which must have been dear and refreshing to a father's heart.

Those were the words of Mr. Gladstone during the heat of a debate on Ireland, addressed to Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain after his son, Mr. Austen Chamberlain, had made his maiden speech. I think they are applicable on this occasion also; therefore I congratulate the right hon, gentleman, I would not have him think, however, that the situa-tion is unique even in the history of this Canadian parliament. I am reminded that from my neighbouring province of Nova Scotia there came to this parliament in the early days of confederation two gentlemen named Tupper who made a real contribution to the early history of this country. First there was Sir Charles Tupper, one time prime minister of Canada; then there was his son Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, member of many an administration and holder of more than one federal portfolio. So that there was a similar occurrence in those earlier days; and the Tuppers made a distinct contribution to government in Canada. It has always been a matter of regret to me that there has been no substantial recognition of what Sir Charles Tupper did for Canada in its early development. Without him confederation would not have been possible, and in my view Canada should have commemorated his place in her history by a monument on parliament hill.

May I at this point congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), who seconded the address in reply on Friday last. Surrounded as he is, it must have taken a marked degree of courage to give utterance to the sentiments which he expressed on that occasion. Today he finds himself mentioned on the front pages of the great newspapers of Canada, and upon his courage I congratulate him.

What was it he said that struck the imagination of the Canadian people? May I draw the attention of hon. members to what he said, as reported at page 16 of Hansard:

For far too long we have taken for granted the rights and privileges of British subjects, and the vast resources and the boundless opportunities of this land of ours. Now that all of this is in jeopardy we realize that these things are infinitely precious, that life without them would be impossible.

And later:

This parliament meets in the darkest days since our nation was born. The hopes and the prayers of all Canada are with us to-day.

I would ask hon, members, Mr. Speaker, to be good enough to note these words:

This is no time for complacency. It is a time for united effort, for ceaseless endeavour; above all, for action, fearless action.

May I from the bottom of my heart reecho these words, and again I congratulate the hon. member upon having had the courage, from his place in this house and on the first occasion, on which he addressed it, to give utterance to what I consider to be noble sentiments. I wonder if it occurred to the hon. member that for the most part those observations were received in silence by his colleagues, but with an indication of the greatest pleasure by hon. members on this side of the house. This is a fact which should give him food for thought.

In the speech from the throne no reference was made to the visit of Their Majesties the King and Queen. I have no doubt that at the last session of parliament, or during the session which closed about the time of their departure, reference was made to this very important event in our history. But since I was not in the house at that time I may be pardoned if on this occasion I make some reference to it. No matter who suggested it, whether it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) or somebody in England, I consider that the visit of Their Majesties to Canada just a short year ago did more to cement Canadian unity than any other event in our history.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

I was delighted to have the opportunity of being at least an onlooker during a portion of that visit. I know that irrespective of class, race or creed the Canadian people responded to the utmost on that occasion. If the Prime Minister was the author of the idea may I take this opportunity of congratulating him upon it, and upon having carried it through to a successful conclusion. It gave to our people from one end of the country to the other an opportunity of seeing in the flesh a wonderful young man and a glorious woman, the king and queen of our empire and of this Canada of ours. I am confident that our people enjoyed the visit to the full. It was a matter of regret to me that during the day they visited New Brunswick they were rushed unduly; but so many people wanted to see them that a rush could not be avoided, and I am sure they did not regret the labours of that long and arduous day.

In the speech from the throne reference is made to the death of Lord Tweedsmuir. Except in a very general way it was not my privilege to know the late governor general; I met him on one occasion for a matter of only three minutes. But I have known John Buchan since the days when I began to read his books. I enjoyed reading those books, and without hesitation I would commend to every hon, member a thorough reading of his writings. If one wants to read a good story he cannot do better than read "John McNab". I have recommended that book to many of my friends. On the other hand, if one prefers history, then I know of no modern writer who better exemplifies the best traditions of English literature than has John Buchan in his lives of Montrose and Cromwell. I am pleased to reflect that upon his appointment to the high office of governor general in Canada he lived up to the best traditions of the office. In his travels throughout Canada he made friends at all points, and in large measure was the interpreter as between the mother country and the Canadian people. It was with the deepest personal regret that I learned of his death, and in my humble way at this late date may I extend to Lady Tweedsmuir and to his family my sincere expressions of sympathy.

In the address he has put in the mouth of the Administrator the Prime Minister has mentioned the appointment of the Earl of Athlone as the successor to the late Lord Tweedsmuir. I can say only that when he and the Princess Alice arrive, Canada will offer them a loyal and hospitable welcome.

Recently we had an election in Canada. I have no desire to rehash the issues of the recent campaign, nor have I any recriminations to offer. The people have spoken, as is their sovereign right, and I accept the verdict. Such is democracy. We may think that that verdict was unfair, that it was unjust, that it was not the real voice of the Canadian people, but votes count and seats in this house count. I am not going into an analysis, such as I have heard in days gone by, to show how many more thousands of Conservative votes it took to elect one Conservative member of this house than it did Liberal votes to elect one Liberal member. I shall not refer to the fact that it took only a few thousand votes to elect a member in the group angularly opposite. This is a phrase which was used frequently in this house when I first entered it. I shall not refer to the fact that it took a great many thousands of votes to elect a member of the group immediately to my left. The fact is that the government succeeded in getting about 54 per cent of the 4,500,000 votes that were polled in the election, while they have 75 or 80 per cent of the seats in this house. That hardly seems enough under the circumstances. It looks to me like an embarrassment of riches. Aside from the war issue, at the moment I have no hope of any palace revolution taking place over there. I am sure that in normal peace times there would be none because they are so intent upon one thing. There may be a palace revolution as time goes on and things become progressively worse in the war, but time alone will tell.

Of course I do recognize that the Prime Minister and his government have received a great mandate. In my view the meaning of that mandate is clear, and I wish to put this on the record. If the Prime Minister differs with my view I shall be glad to have him point out wherein he differs when he comes to speak. My view of the meaning of the mandate to the government is that we should pursue with all the power of all the resources at our disposal the work of assisting the mother country and her gallant allies in the supreme task of winning this war and driving back the ruthless invader. There must be a preservation of the maximum amount of liberty and of our Christian civilization. Above all I desire to make it clear that in my view the mandate is not for a limited liability contribution. Let there be no mistake about that.

At this point I should like to make some observations with respect to the National Conservative party which I have the honour to lead in this house for the time being. Compared with the votes which were polled in the country we are few in number, but as I look around and see the earnest young men who sit beside me I realize that what we lack in numbers we make up in quality and in devotion to Canada and to the empire. The results of this election should not be the occasion for tears or beating of the breast. Any party that can poll approximately one and a half million votes in Canada is neither dead nor dying. We must continue to pursue our war efforts and give consideration to the economic problems that confront this dominion, but we should also devote ourselves to the upbuilding of a truly Conservative party, a party which will truly reflect the views of that sober and solemn element in the country which in thought and action is always Conservative. This does not mean that we shall be a static party, but rather a party of orderly progress, holding fast to that which is good in our past, lopping off the mouldered branches of yesterday. Above all the Conservative party will continue to give its unyielding loyalty to the British crown. This is one of the cornerstones of our very existence. I want to express a profound conviction that I hold, that there will always be a Conservative party in Canada. This will be so because of the character and mentality of our people. We are proud to think of the achievements of that party in the past. I do not intend to traverse this situation. Rather should we put forward our voices, rather should we prepare ourselves to be an alternative government at any time. The king's government must go on.

I should like to make a brief reference to the retirement of the gentleman who preceded me in this position. He leaves us with the respect and regret of every one of us. In saying that I feel sure I express the attitude of the members of all parties in this house. Doctor Manion is a great Canadian. During the years he served Canada, in the army, in the government and in this house, he made a great contribution to his king and country. He is still, comparatively speaking, a young man, and I am confident that he has many years of useful service ahead of him. I should like to add that my own relations with him were most happy. They extended over a period of twenty years or more and I shall always look back with pleasure to my association with him.

I should like to give brief consideration to some of the matters contained in the speech from the throne, other than the reference to our war efforts. I should like to congratulate the Prime Minister upon being brief for once —or perhaps it is the second time. I was not here last January when the speech wasno doubt—the briefest in the history of Canada. The speech from the throne this session takes second place. I shall not revert to what took place last January, but I can tell him candidly that when I heard the announcement over the radio on January 26, when I was down in the southern part of this hemisphere, I could gladly have assassinated him. However, I do not believe in threshing over old straw, although I have views on that subject. It was an affront to parliament to call members here and then dissolve parliament. It was an affront to the Canadian people. But times are too serious to dwell upon this now and the election has washed out any indictment that may have been preferred against him by reason of what happened on that occasion.

Reference is made in the speech from the throne to unemployment insurance on a national scale, the exact statement being:

—resolutions will be introduced for an amendment to the British North America Act which would empower the parliament of Canada to enact at the present session legislation to establish unemployment insurance on a national

Of course that is absolutely the correct constitutional way to proceed. I am reminded by a smile on the face of the Minister of Justice that on a former occasion another government did not proceed in that way. Well, I really thought at the time that, having regard to the treaty-making power contained in the British North America Act, having regard to the previous legislation and resolutions passed by this parliament with respect to the Geneva labour conventions, we had brought ourselves within the jurisdiction of parliament to enact such legislation. That has been ruled ultra vires. Again I accept the verdict—this time of the courts of the country. Willy-nilly I must. I think that this is the proper course to pursue, the orderly course of amending the constitution in accordance with the powers and the precedents in that regard. But I am wondering, in the first place, if it will be possible at this session of parliament to pass such an address and such resolutions as are requisite and necessary and to have them assented to by the imperial parliament in time to put through important legislation of this kind during the present session. I am also wondering what attitude our friends in the provinces are going to take with respect to this matter. Are we to wait and obtain from them their assent to the important amendments of the constitution which will be necessary, or will they attack the provisions as being an invasion of provincial autonomy?

I do not know. These are queries which are coming up in my mind with respect to the matter.

Down in the province of New Brunswick we had, until last November, a gentleman who took very strong ground with regard to the invasion of provincial rights by the federal authority. Well, that brushwood has now been cleared away by the election. I warn my right hon. friend the Minister of Justice that there are obstacles left in that direction; however, I say to him, persevere, do not take too seriously the opposition which may come to you from that quarter.

I am one of those who have always thought that we ought to have a strong central government in Canada. I do not care who criticizes me for that opinion. I have found that the more power we gave to the provinces the more money they would spend and the deeper in debt they would put the people of this country. If you want to visualize what the founding fathers of this confederation had in mind, apply to our constitution the acid test of a war-time condition: then you will realize that the basic function of government in Canada is or should be found in the federal legislature.

I doubt very much whether it is possible to enact at this session an unemployment insurance act. If this matter is of the importance which I believe it to be, it seems to me that we have lost five precious years. I would go a little further. I suppose that if in the last twenty years my right hon. friend has promised unemployment insurance legislation once, he has promised it half a dozen times.

An hon. MEMBER: Twenty times—every year.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Well, I will not go that far. For five years I was not here, and I did not pay very much attention to what was going on in this parliament. As a matter of fact I really never anticipated coming back. If I may tell you, Mr. Speaker, a personal secret, I decided to contest this election in order that if possible I might defeat the man who defeated me in 1935. That was one motivating factor; it was not the whole reason-I should not like people to think that I am as narrow and vicious as that. But the fact is that that gentleman eluded me by accepting a high office. I should like to add that we have been on friendly terms for forty years. Once upon a time I had the pleasure and the profit of acting as his confidential solicitor, but when I became a Conservative member of parliament he dropped me like a hot potato. Let me repeat that I should not like the house to believe that the reason I have given was the only reason I contested this election. I had an idea—if I may be permitted the personal reference—that perhaps I could render service to Canada at this time. I hope I may.

Another matter is referred to in the speech from the throne. There is the very brief announcement:

The report of the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations, which has just been received, will be tabled immediately.

The Prime Minister has made good that statement. I am wondering what is the reaction of this house and the country to that report. I do not suppose that anybody here has read the report, let alone the appendices; but I have studied the recommendations which have been made, and I am impressed by some of them and I am not impressed by others. I alluded a little while ago to the spending proclivities of our provincial governments, especially those of the small provinces. They seem to be oblivious of the fact that there is only one set of taxpayers in Canada paying to both jurisdictions. The suggestion is made in this report that this government shall take over the financing and the servicing of the provincial debts, and that, as the corollary of that, the dominion shall take over certain important sources of income which the provinces now enjoy. Well, I think that if my right hon friend tries to implement the part of the report dealing with the second matter to which I have alluded, he will have a very great deal of difficulty. My experience, at least from 1930 to 1935-and I say this with great respect to those with whom I dealt-was that the provincial legislatures were willing to take all but to give very little. I suppose that is human nature. But if the government of Canada takes over the servicing of the debts of the provinces, there must be some provision whereby they will not be allowed to go on incurring debt after debt. I do not know what the report has to say in relation to that, but I should like to throw out this warning, that if consideration is to be given to the one constructive suggestion, certainly there is a corollary involved in that principle.

I had intended to say something about the defence of Canada regulations, but the Minister of Justice has forestalled me in nearly everything I had it in mind to say. I have received, as I suppose all members of this house have received, a good many communications and some briefs with respect to the severity of these regulations, and recently, since the war situation has become so acute, I have begun to receive recommendations implying that they are not severe enough. Of course, there are both points of view and both will have to be given consideration.

Having regard to the conditions that prevail in Canada, I wonder whether the Minister of Justice has not now some qualms of conscience at having repealed section 98 of the criminal code. He shakes his head, nevertheless I suggest that while it might not have been necessary in time of peace, it would be a useful adjunct to the laws of the country at the present time. I invite him to consider the reenactment of section 98.

I am glad in a way that the Prime Minister has decided to submit the whole question to a special committee, but I recognize this as an old practice of his, perhaps to evade responsibility. I say that in no harsh or vindictive spirit. My recollection of the first important project that was brought before this house in the session of 1922, when my right hon. friend was facing parliament for the first time as Prime Minister, is that there came up for consideration the question of railway rates in the west. His government, instead of having a policy on this great and vital question, referred the matter to a committee of the House of Commons and so passed on responsibility. I well remember the part played in that committee by the hon. gentleman who is now sitting in the treasury benches occupying the position of Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar). I remember the trial kite that was put out by the gentleman who was chairman of that special committee as to what the report would be-I refer to Hon. A. K. Maclean-and I believe my memory is accurate in that regard. It was stated that the committee was prepared to accept the draft report that had been made by the chairman and the present Minister of Mines and Resources, then representing Marquette. He put a pistol to the head of the Prime Minister and there was a right about face on the question. I have a long memory and I can recall that exactly. I remember being told the whole situation by a supporter of the government of that day, a gentleman who is not now on earth but whom the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) knew very well in his lifetime. That gentleman said that never again would that sort of thing happen.

I hope that these references to committees are not made by the executive for the purpose of sidestepping responsibility. The government is responsible to the people and should have a policy.

The defence of Canada regulations are based, I take it, upon those in vogue in England, although I suppose they are not the exact counterpart. In fact, I have heard the criticism that these regulations are very much more severe than those in England. Well, I think it is necessary in war time that some power should be vested in the executive to control subversive elements in the country. I am all for law and order. Whatever I may have been in my younger days, as I grow older and more mature I am all for law and order. I am for law and order in Canada in war time and I believe the government must have some power at its elbow.

I have been reading the life of Abraham Lincoln by Carl Sandburg, "Lincoln—the War Years," and I recall a criticism which was made of Lincoln and his government because of the virtual suspension of habeas corpus, and the unconstitutionality of the executive action at that time of travail in the life of our neighbouring republic. Subsequently, if I remember rightly, his act was declared ultra vires by a chief justice who had been a member of his own administration. What a situation! So far as I am concerned the Prime Minister and his government must have power by executive action to deal with any emergent situation that may arise from time to time while the country is at war, but I hope they will exercise that power with the utmost judicial discretion and will play no favourites. That is all I have to say in that regard.

I desire to devote some attention to the war effort of this administration. The Prime Minister and hon, gentlemen opposite may not agree with what I have to say, but as I stated in the very opening remarks I addressed to the house, this is a time for clear thinking and straight talking. May I refer to the situation in Canada prior to September, 1939. Perhaps I should go back a little farther than that, because during the election I heard in my own constituency a criticism of the government of Mr. Bennett from 1930 to 1935 on the ground that in those years it had not done anything with respect to the question of national defence or empire defence. I do not think it was a big issue in the election, but reference has been made to the question and I think I ought to justify the position that was taken at that time.

In the years from 1930 to 1935 Canada was in the throes of an economic revolution unparalleled in the history of the world. We were faced with declining revenues and with the necessity of imposing taxation upon the people, and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the membership of this house how any government under those circumstances would have been justified in imposing new taxation upon the people of Canada for national or empire defence in the light of the situation as it was then in Europe. I think I have only to ask the question to have the answer. No government would have been justified in 1933, when this country was in the depths of the economic depression, in asking parliament to impose new taxation on the people of Canada for national defence. If we had asked the people for any substantial sum of money for this purpose, what an uproar of indignation would have arisen from hon, gentlemen opposite, led by the Prime Minister himself! I have no doubt about that at all. I heard it on many occasions. My mind goes back to the time in 1922-hon. members know that as we get older we tend to become reminiscent; I hope I am not transgressing too muchwhen Hon. George P. Graham was Minister of Militia; the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power)-my friend from Quebec South, if he will permit me to call him so-was a member of this house and a supporter of the government, and he led a rebellion against the estimates of the militia department of that day. The Conservative party representation in this house at that time endeavoured to help the minister to put his estimates through, and, as I recall it, they were very modest estimates. I remember that the minister had to withdraw his estimates and bring them back greatly reduced in amount. If that was so in 1922 or 1923, when the country was blessed with the beneficent Liberal rule of my right hon. friend, and was returning to prosperity after the war years, what would he have said in 1933 if we had asked for any substantial amount for national defence? The roof would have been the limit.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Mr. STIRLING: It would not have been the limit; there would have been no limit.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): So I am justifying my position with respect to not having asked the people of Canada for any large sum for national defence at that time. I believe, though—I am not sure about this; I have not looked it up—we did make a start in 1934 and 1935 with respect to the establishment of a government munitions plant in the province of Quebec. I remember that that was opposed by the right hon, gentleman, and if my memory serves me aright, immediately on being returned to power he suspended all operations with respect to that well-conceived plan which had been worked out by the Department of National Defence for the purpose of making munitions under the government of this country. I never heard any great criticism of that at the time, but I have heard a substantial amount of criticism since. Of course we are always wiser in the light of after-events.

From 1935 conditions materially changed with respect to the whole question of national defence. Who ever heard of Hitler in 1933? But you heard of him in 1934 or thereabouts, when he was made chancellor of the German reich. From then one thing evolved into another, and the head of the aggressor was raised in Europe. Still I am free to admit that none of us at that time expected that by 1939 we should be plunged into a tragic war. We all stood aghast at what he did to Austria, and when the rape of Czechoslovakia took place I felt sure that a madman was loose in Europe. After Munich—and I am making no criticism of Munich, let that be distinctly understood: if ever a man laboured and struggled to preserve the peace of the world it was the Right Hon. Neville Chamberlain. He deserves the sympathy of every one of us, and history will accord to him a very high place among the statesmen of the British empire. If hon, members are interested in reading about the struggle which he made, may I commend to them a book which I have recently written-

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): —which I have recently read. I am glad I do not write books. There is a saying—I think it is in the Bible: "Oh, that mine adversary had written a book!" Some people will refer to that very feelingly; perhaps the Prime Minister himself will remember that he wrote a book—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad I did.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): —which I do not believe many people read to-day. I am bound to tell him that I never read it; I started to, but I could not finish it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is a reflection on my hon. friend himself.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That may be true; I know I am stupid most of the time. but I confess that I never could get interested in the book. However, this is a digression. If any hon, member is interested in following the efforts of Mr. Chamberlain to preserve the peace of Europe and the world I commend to him the book of Sir Nevile Henderson, entitled "The Failure of a Mission." It is I think the first record that has been given to the public of the efforts of one of the greatest statesmen we have ever had in England; and because Mr. Chamberlain failed to achieve his purpose is no reason why he should be condemned. May I say further how much I admire him for what he did in the recent past, since this crisis came on, in unselfishly giving up his position at the head of the state when he found he could not command that overwhelming confidence of the House of Commons in Great Britain which he thought he ought to have.

Between 1937 and 1939 I submit that this government had ample warning of what was taking place in Europe. I am told—I cannot vouch for the truth of this because I have not access to the proof—that everything that was done by the government was done with absolutely no reference to what might take place in Europe, that the question of overseas operations was taboo.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but I think I should take issue with him immediately on any statement that—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The right hon, gentleman will have plenty of time to reply.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But when my friend makes a statement, and says he has no authority for the statement he makes, it is part of my duty to see that a statement which is incorrect is immediately denied; I say the statement just made is wholly incorrect.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course I know that the right hon. gentleman will take the opportunity to deny it, but I state that it is my information; and more than that, as proof of the truth of the position which I am trying to formulate, my understanding of the debates of this parliament is that on every vote for national defence that was passed from 1935 to 1939 it was emphasized that the money was for the defence of Canada and the defence of Canada only. That, I submit, is some proof of the truth of the position I am trying to define to-day.

Now may I ask where was Canada's first line of defence during all the trying period before September, 1939? Was it in Canada or was it over there where to-day they are striving with the beasts of Ephesus to preserve our liberty? We have never had more than one line of defence; our first and only line has been the British navy, and we ought to thank God reverently that we have such a defence—to which, however, we do not contribute a single dollar or a single man. It is only in times of stress such as we are going through now that we recognize the truth of these matters. As was stated on Friday last by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), in normal times we take for granted the privileges of a British subject, and it is only in a period of trial and stress such as that in which we are now living that we realize what are the privileges of a British subject and comprehend that during all these years the British government has been providing our first line of defence. Why, Canada could not defend herself against Siam! Make no mistake about that. Why all this talk about the defence of Canada? Why should we not be honest with ourselves and with the people of this country and say that our defence is the common defence of the British empire and our gallant allies? That is the only defence worth anything at this time, when our liberties and our very civilization are at stake, but we have done nothing to assist.

Where was the security of Canada ever menaced? Was it to the south? Well, for more than a hundred years, ever since the Rush-Bagot treaty, there has not been a single fort, a single gun or a single ship along the whole international boundary. That is a matter of mutual congratulation to the people of this dominion and the people of the re-public to our south. We are not and never have been menaced by those friendly neighbours. On the contrary in the city of Kingston, on July 1, 1938, in the presence of the Prime Minister of this country, the president of the great republic to the south offered to take us under that country's wing and to defend us if we were ever attacked by an enemy from without. This afternoon I have no intention of saying one word repelling the goodwill of the president of the United States; it would be not only inappropriate but wholly inexpedient that I or anyone else should do so at this time, because I greatly appreciate the friendliness and goodwill of that country not only towards us but towards our mother country and our allies, and I am hopeful that it may become more than goodwill. But what they may do over there in that connection is their own business, and theirs alone. I wonder, however, if any self-respecting Canadian within the sound of my voice or anywhere in this country wants to see Canada dependent at any time for her national safety upon the government of the United States. Surely if we are a nation our self-respect will demand something more of ourselves than that. I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but if the day ever comes when we have to shelter ourselves behind the armed forces of the Stars and Stripes, that day we will haul down the Union Jack in Canada and it will never go up again.

No, I do not think we have any enemy to our south. Then what enemy have we to the west? Well, perhaps we have a potential enemy there. I do not want to say very much about that, but I believe that potential enemy is so busily engaged in digesting its gains in China that it really is not a potential enemy of this country at all. Certainly we have nothing to fear from the north. Therefore our only enemy must be in the east, among the dictators of Europe; and if that be so it is not only common sense that instead of spending money on the construction of emplacements, embankments and forts in Canada we should endeavour to the utmost to further the cause of our mother country and our allies in the terrible conflict which is now raging? That is the view I take; that, I think, is the sensible thing. That is what I, as a self-respecting Canadian, believe this country should have done.

The speech from the throne contains certain statements with reference to collaboration with the mother country. I intend to refer to this point a little later, but before I forget I should like to invite the Prime Minister to lay before the house, if it is in writing, the evidence to show that this government has collaborated with the British government. I believe the people of Canada are asking what was the degree of collaboration, if any, requested by the British government, and what was the degree of cooperation given by this government both prior to and since the outbreak of the war. I quite appreciate that there may be confidential communications which the Prime Minister cannot lay before this house, but I do suggest to him that the people of Canada will not be satisfied with anything less than substantial evidence of what the situation is, and accordingly I invite him to table that evidence.

The most striking evidence of what I fear is lack of collaboration is to be found in the matter of air defence. If my information and my reading of the evidence are correct, through the Prime Minister this country refused to collaborate with the mother country in 1937 and 1938 with respect to air training in Canada. As I understand the Prime Minister's position, as pointed out in a speech made in the house on July 1, 1938, the reason assigned was that it would be a violation or an infringement of the sovereignty of Canada.

I have before me the text of the Prime Minister's statement. It is, however, well known in the house and I shall not spread it on the record. It might have been—I do not agree that it was—academically and theoretically a sound position for the right hon. gentleman to take at that time. But, from a practical point of view, and having regard to what has since occurred, what a position for Canada to take! In effect we were saying to the mother country, "Although you lack space, of which we have an abundance in Canada, we cannot allow you at your own expense to come out here and train men for aviation because, forsooth, it would be a violation of the sovereignty of the country." I hope I have not overstated the position.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must say my hon. friend has completely misstated it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not think so. I shall read what the right hon. gentleman said, as reported at page 4527 of Hansard of 1938:

May I say a word with respect to the idea of having the imperial air force set up flying schools in Canada to train their pilots; in short, a military station put down in Canada, owned, maintained and operated by the imperial government for imperial purposes.

In those sentences the Prime Minister is setting out the premise of the position. Then he says:

I must say that long ago Canadian governments finally settled the constitutional principle that in Canadian territory there could be no military establishments unless they were owned, maintained and controlled by the Canadian government responsible to the Canadian parliament and people. In the end the imperial naval stations and army garrisons were withdrawn and Canadian authority took over.

I remember when that was done, and I do not think the question of sovereignty was the primary principle in accordance with which the British government gave up stations at Halifax and elsewhere in Canada. I think it was because the Canadian government were willing to take over and save the British government some money. I well remember when the Leinster regiment left Halifax. I was a boy going to school in those days, and my recollection is that it was not a question of sovereignty, at all; rather, it was a question of expediency, a question of dollars and cents or of pounds, shillings and pence.

Then the Prime Minister goes on to say:

A reversal of that principle and that historical process at this date is something the Canadian people would not for a moment entertain.

Well, I wonder if that would be true to-day? If the British government wanted to train men in Canada to-day I wonder if the Canadian people would show any resentment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would my hon. friend put the case fairly? There has never been a refusal to allow men to train in Canada. The government was prepared to place facilities at their disposal.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The Prime Minister is drawing a fine distinction. However, I am coming to that. From a practical point of view what is the difference? The difference is that on the one hand there would be a theoretical violation of sovereignty and on the other there would be great advantage to the mother country. But my right hon, friend stood on his dignity, and urged the question of Canadian sovereignty. Nero fiddled while Rome burned!

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, and if he would prefer I shall leave my explanation until later. However, he has asked a direct question, namely whether or not at this moment Canada would raise any objection to carrying out a proposal such as was made at that time by the British government. In answer I would ask my hon. friend to reflect upon what the position would be in Canada to-day had we in Canada an air force under the ministry in Great Britain, instead of under our own ministry as we now have it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am afraid we shall have to agree to disagree on the subject. I have no doubt that arrangements should have been made in 1938, even if a breach of the sovereignty of Canada was involved. We would have been that much farther ahead in repelling the invasion of the hun in the air. But instead of making that headway we have lost two or three precious years; that is the indictment of the people of Canada against this government. If the Prime Minister does not believe me I would recommend that he read the leading editorials which have appeared in the last three or four days in Canada's great national newspapers, irrespective of party. They speak more eloquently, more logically and more vividly than I can.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But not more vividly than they did on the day of the election.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Oh, I know the Prime Minister takes great pride in the result of the election. I wonder if the Canadian people would vote to-day as they did on March 26. I doubt it very much, and I would tell the Prime Minister that to-day, so far as public opinion in Canada is concerned, his back is to the wall. He may not realize it, but that is so. I have no doubt that to-day the Canadian people lack much of that confidence in the administration which they had on March 26. I say that lack of confidence arises entirely out of the ineptness and complacency of the Prime Minister and his administration. I understand the point of view of the Prime Minister respecting the constitutional principle, but he ought to realize that public opinion in Canada values results much more highly than constitutional principles.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

It was a recognition by the Prime Minister of that particular fact which prompted an announcement made in the dying days of the session of 1938 by the then Minister of National Defence to the effect that Canada herself would undertake the policy of air training. Unfortunately, in the light of subsequent events, very little if any money was voted for the purpose indicated, and nothing was done until war broke out.

Am I right in assuming it was intended that very little should be done? I have heard it stated, and I believe with some truth, that until the moment of the great German push of only a few days ago the contribution made by this government was to be a limited liability contribution. I have not before me extracts from speeches by different members of the administration, but I think one of the ministers was undoubtedly voicing the views of himself and his colleagues when he stated the theory that there were three points of view in Canada. There were those who were out to do their utmost; and at the very outset may I place myself with that group. Then there was a second group which did not want to do anything. The third group, with which the hon, gentleman in question associated himself, was the one which held the view that we should do a moderate amount, and should follow a middle-of-the-road course. I hope I am not misstating the idea which the hon. gentleman was endeavouring to set forth. I have no doubt that this point of view was one held by the administration, having regard to the personnel of their supporters in this country. I am making no reflection upon anyone. At the moment I am not criticizing those who may differ with me. This is a free democratic country and they are just as much entitled to their opinions as I am to mine. However, I hope their opinions will not prevail because I sense the danger that lurks behind any attempt at the application of these principles at this time. I am wondering if the member of the administration who adopted the middle-of-the-road course voiced the view of the administration. While that may have been the voice of the people of Canada during the early stages of the war, I venture to suggest that in the light of fast-changing events it is not their attitude to-day. I rather think the young gentleman, the hon, member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), voiced the real feelings of the people of this country with regard to what we should be doing.

The declaration of war was made in September, 1939. May I say at once that in having parliament make that declaration of war I think the Prime Minister conformed exactly to what should have been done in the circumstances. But let me ask him this question: What was the state of preparedness of Canada then? Let me go a little further and ask: What plan had the national defence council ready for the government in the event of war in Europe—and Canada voluntarily undertaking to participate? What plan of action, if any, had the government? I am advised that the national defence council had planned for four divisions, two for overseas service and two for home defence. I understand that the Prime Minister himself cancelled those plans.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Where does my hon, friend get his information?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I quite anticipated that question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I tell him at once that I cancelled no plans at all.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I quite anticipated a denial on the part of the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should think you would.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Under parliamentary procedure I suppose I have to accept his word, but I give my solemn word on my honour to this house that I have some evidence that four divisions were planned for by the national defence council of Canada, two for overseas and two for home service, and either the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), or members of his government stepped up and cancelled those plans.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): As a former Minister of National Defence may I say that that statement is absolutely and totally incorrect.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have to accept the minister's statement, and I suppose I have to accept the Prime Minister's statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my hon. friend tell us when the plans were made?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not subject to cross-examination. I am informed they were ready a year before war broke out—I shall not use the word "know" because I do not know personally. How could I? But I have every reason to believe that they were ready a year before war broke out. What is the situation? Six months after the declaration of war we have one division at Aldershot still under training. They have been there six months and they are still under training. Not one of them is ready yet to participate in what is going on in the western lines.

My right hon, friend made a number of speeches during the election campaign, and I should like to refer to the one he made over the radio on February 21, I believe from Ottawa. He referred to the landing of the first, second and third contingents, the first having landed on December 17 under the command of General McNaughton. May I pause here to pay a tribute to the government for having appointed him to lead the first division. I have great confidence in General McNaughton, and so have the Canadian public. As evidence of my wanting to be fair, let me say that they could not have made a better appointment. The Canadian people applauded the appointment of General Mc-Naughton. This is what the Prime Minister said in the course of that broadcast:

All three contingents made the crossing safely and exactly according to a schedule worked out months in advance. All left Canada fully clothed and fully equipped.

With respect to clothing that statement is probably true. I think by and large they probably all had enough on their bodies to cover them from the cold, but I wonder how many cases of pneumonia there were at Aldershot, England, after the first contingent got there, as a result of the fact that the men did not have sufficient warm clothing?

Mr. ROGERS: Has my hon. friend any information?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No. I have not. How could I? What is the good of asking me that or trying to cross-examine me? I am asking the people who ought toknow. I am asking for information. The Canadian public want information. If my hon. friend has that information, let him give it. My information is that a very large number had pneumonia at Aldershot because of a lack of sufficient warm clothing.

Mr. ROGERS: That matter was dealt with, I think quite adequately, during the course of the campaign. Official statements were made on the authority of the director general of medical services that there was only the average incidence of colds or pneumonia.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If my hon, friend wants to make a speech he should do so at a later time.

Mr. ROGERS: I intend to do so.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I know that a boy from my constituency in New Brunswick who is at Aldershot got pneumonia because the issue of underclothing made to him last winter was cotton and not woollen. More than that, in the first months there certainly was a shortage of socks among the boys. I know of people in my city who bought socks for the soldiers. I am not going to condemn the government because there was not a sufficient supply of this, that or the other thing in the first days of enlistment. We all know that uniforms were not ready, but the government got the uniforms ready as quickly as they could. I am not going to make any great point about that.

Mr. ROGERS: But my hon. friend is making a point.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am saying that the statement that they were fully equipped is not fully true, but was probably approximately correct. The Prime Minister went on to say that they were fully equipped. I know that during the election a controversy arose over this question of military equipment and for a time allegations and recriminations passed on the public platform between the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) and the then leader of the opposition in connection with the question of deficient equipment. I am going to call as a witness in my behalf the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston). He is an old soldier. He is a man who has a sense of responsibility in connection with the position he now occupies. He made a speech on behalf of the Minister of National Defence in the city of Kingston, on March 8. On this very question of equipment, weeks after the Prime Minister had made, on February 21, the declaration to which I have alluded, that all had left Canada fully equipped, what did the Minister of Finance say at Kingston? I am not going to quote his very words; they are a matter of record; but this is how I epitomize what he said, endeavouring to do so honestly and faithfully. He said: "The division went overseas without motor equipment." Surely in this age motor equipment is necessary, and without that equipment no one can truthfully say that they were fully equipped.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon, friend think it is quite fair for him to paraphrase the statement—to call a witness and put his own words into the mouth of the witness? Would he mind reading the statement?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The Minister of Finance is an old lawyer—well, I will say an experienced counsel; for that sounds more dignified. I think I can produce the words of the minister at Kingston. At all events, this is my understanding of what he said, and he can deny it if he likes.

He said, first, "The division went overseas without motor transport. It is hoped to have carriers ready and sent to England in time to go with the division to France."

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Two: Bren gun carriers. Where have we heard about that before? "The Bren gun carriers will be supplied to the division by the British government, Canada making replacements later on." And he did not tell us when that would be.

Mr. BROOKS: After the war is over.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Three: "Chassis for field ambulances were sent over with the troops, and the United Kingdom is putting on bodies to make them uniform in design with the British ambulances." Four: "In the matter of artillery, the division was supplied with 18-pounder guns." Nobody in the world is using 18-pounder guns to-day. None of the units in England is using them.

Mr. ROGERS: There are 18-pounder guns at the front in France to-day, and ammunition for 18-pounder guns is being made in the United Kingdom and Canada to-day.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Well, all right; I am not a military man; but my information is that they should be equipped with 25-pounder guns; and the Minister of Finance said this: "In the matter of artillery, the division was supplied with 18-pounder guns, but these will be replaced later by the more modern 25-pounder guns."

Mr. ROGERS: Quite so. That does not exclude the other statement.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think I am right in what I was about to say. The Minister of National Defence is just a little bit too quick, I suggest, in rising in his place and protesting.

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Speaker, I am just going to say this: I am interested in maintaining accuracy and in preventing misinformation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): My understanding is that 18-pounder guns are obsolete. I may be wrong, but I should like to have a better witness on that point than the Minister of National Defence himself. At the moment I am summoning to my aid his colleague the Minister of Finance.

Five: "The division took with it Lewis machine guns, fifty to a battalion, but these are to be replaced later on by the more modern Bren guns." Obsolete equipment again!

Mr. RALSTON: Oh no, no. Lewis guns are not obsolete.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Well, pretty nearly so. I believe they are being discarded as fast as they can be replaced by Bren guns.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought the hon. gentleman was not a military man.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Six: "Antitank rifles and anti-tank guns were not available for the division. They are being supplied in Britain." Seven: "Wireless equipment was not available. Some will be supplied here, some in England."

What about rifles? I understand that this division was equipped with reconditioned rifles, and that they will be discarded just as soon as new rifles can be produced.

What about gas masks? A disturbing suggestion has been made to me. I put it in the form of an inquiry. I understand that immediately before or after the beginning of the war the department arranged for the manufacture of 250,000 gas masks based on the theory that Germany would be using the same kind of gas in this war as she used in the last, but that information has come that this type of gas mask will not be useful for the purpose for which it is intended, and the whole supply has had to be scrapped except such as can be used for demonstration purposes. I do not vouch for the truth of this statement, but I ask the government to give attention to it; I have the right to put it before them.

Mr. ROGERS: If my hon. friend will permit me, does he want that statement to go out in its present form?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am asking a question. I have the right to do so, and the minister has no right to interrupt me.

Mr. ROGERS: I will answer the question, if my hon, friend will permit me. Is it a question?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Yes, it is.
Mr. ROGERS: Well, I will answer it. The statement is incorrect.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am asking the minister to give consideration to this matter. He will find that there is a great deal more to it than he is willing to admit at this moment.

Mr. ROGERS: The statement is incorrect.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): All right. What about recruiting for these suggested divisions or other units, or for any? Surely the administration is not proud of its record on recruiting. Apparently there has been no plan. If there is, it has not been divulged to the public. I say to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of National Defence that there are thousands of young men in Canada who want to enlist, and the major part of the time there is no recruiting station for them to go to, no opportunity to enlist. In New Brunswick opportunities of enlistment have been extremely limited. I should like to page the young lady writer in the Toronto Globe who made a personal investigation and found that, last week, in the great city of Toronto. there were available places for fifty-three men. Apparently the government does not want young men to enlist for the front. I do not believe the Canadian people are satisfied with that attitude. If hon, gentlemen opposite doubt what I have said, let them read the leading articles in the great public newspapers of this country. The writers are, surely, pretty well informed; they do not rush into print with statements for which there is no foundation.

I say this, on my responsibility as a member of this house, that the people of Canada are alarmed at the lack of plan, the lack of preparation, the lack of action on the part of the administration. It seems to have taken serious reverses to the allied arms in an important theatre of war to shock the Canadian people into a realization that Canada is at war at all, and it has taken the same series of reverses to shock this government into action. Because the Canadian people are shocked they are now demanding that the inertness-shall I say complacency?-of this administration with respect to Canada's war effort shall be immediately ended. Britain and her gallant allies are fighting for their very existence, for our existence, for the liberty and the Christian civilization of us all, and Canada is not at their side. Is not that a sad thing, that at this time in our national history Canada is not there?

Let us end all this. Let us put into action the forces of the whole nation in men, in treasure, and all our resources. Let us pull our full weight in this great enterprise. I tell the Prime Minister and the government that no halfway measure will satisfy either our self-respect or the great mass of public opinion in this country which is calling for action.

I call upon the Prime Minister, when he replies this afternoon, to tell the nation what the government has done and what it proposes to do, and if that is not enough the people of the country will rise up in righteous indignation and demand a complete change. This happened in England and it can happen in Canada. The Canadian people will demand, over and above everything else, intelligent and informed leadership, intelligent and immediate action. If the Prime Minister will not give this, then somebody else will.

In the speech from the throne the Prime Minister has put certain words into the mouth of His Excellency the Administrator. I quote:

You have been summoned to the first session of a new parliament at a time of the greatest conflict in the history of mankind. Upon the outcome of the struggle will depend the maintenance of civilized society and the inheritance of human freedom for our own and future generations.

Those words are true, but later on these words appear:

The organization and prosecution of Canada's war effort have commanded the unremitting attention of my ministers.

I have no doubt they have been busy letting contracts.

The constant consultation and complete cooperation maintained with the governments of the United Kingdom and France have been materially strengthened by the recent visit to those countries of my Minister of National Defence.

Then it goes on to make this statement:

While the present session of parliament will necessarily be mainly concerned with Canada's war effort, and the measures essential to the achievement of ultimate victory, my ministers are of oninion that, despite what to-day is being witnessed of concentrated warfare, it is desirable, as far as may be possible, to plan for the days that will follow the cessation of hostilities.

These paragraphs read together presuppose that the government has been doing the utmost in its power to further the effort of the mother country and her gallant allies. If so, all I can say is that my right hon. friend and his government have most skilfully concealed from the Canadian people the sum total of their effort, because the country to-day—and no one is more sensitive to public opinion than the Prime Minister and his colleagues—is giving every evidence of its belief that this state of affairs does not exist.

I wish to put upon Hansard certain specific questions which I hope the Prime Minister or some of his colleagues will answer:

- 1. Is the empire training plan being rushed with all speed?
- 2. When shall we be sending trained men overseas under this plan—a year hence? If so, it will be too late.
- 3. How far have we advanced with the second division? I understand that the Prime Minister to-day, according to the public press, is going to announce a third division. Well, we have not got the second division ready yet. How far have we advanced with the second division?
- 4. What provision have we made to reinforce the first division? What is being done about recruiting and enlistment? Why is so little being done about enlistment? Is manpower no longer required? On the economic front, have we mobilized to the utmost our plant and industrial power?

These are some of the thoughts that are crowding through my mind, and I believe they are in the minds of the Canadian people. Our industrialists in Canada are patriotic and are anxious to do their part, but they cannot get a chance. At the Chateau Laurier the lobbies are lined with men from the United States trying to get orders, and I have seen a good Canadian there, a man at the head of one of the biggest plants in Canada, who told me he had found it absolutely impossible to get an order for war equipment. I will not mention either his name or the name of his company. If I did so, the name would be recognized as that of one of the biggest industrialists in Canada, and he would have little chance of getting anything, and he fears this too if his name were mentioned.

Mr. HOWE: For what reason?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): For the same reason that he is not getting any now.

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps my hon, friend, having gone so far, will mention the name of the firm?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, I shall not; I have not his permission. In fact, I have the reverse. I have had a long conversation with him and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. GLADSTONE: What would be like to manufacture?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Aeroplanes. I will not say more. He is manufacturing aeroplanes for the British government. I am not going to weary the house, but I might ask this question: What about personnel? What about those among the personnel of the last war, members of the Canadian expeditionary force, who wish to serve? I know many of them. Many of them came to see me before I left for Ottawa and asked me to find out how they can get into the army again. They were men who were officers in the last war and who are capable of commanding units. How can they get into the army again? I made it my business to inquire at one of the departments. I do not know whether I was violating any rule laid down in this house since I was last a member, but I had the temerity to go to one of the higher officials in the department, and he told me that officers are being recruited and selected from the non-permanent militia. They are splendid men, I have no doubt, men who are keen to serve and of course I do know that some men are being selected from the old Canadian expeditionary force. But why not more, say twenty-five per cent? Do experience and mature judgment mean nothing?

These are some of the things I am thinking about. There may be a good answer. I do not think any government which has in its ranks the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Defence would have any prejudice against members of the Canadian expeditionary force; in fact, one would suppose the opposite to be the truth. I wish to do them justice. But why are not more of these men being taken on? They are asking this question, and we too must have the courage to ask it. The empire training scheme must be brought to the maximum of speed. We must have an intensified scheme of recruiting for reinforcement of our overseas division, and we must mobilize our industrial equipment.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize to this house for having detained it so long. During the past few days and over the weekend our hearts have been heavy with anxiety. We know that the first big push, the first big battle, is on. It is not ended yet. The forces of barbarism are stronger than we had any conception of. But I am glad to think the battle is not yet lost. At this moment there is no indication that the momentum of the enemy push is slowing up, not to speak of being stopped. But I have supreme confidence in the ability of the British and allied arms to withstand the shock. Stability will be established. But do not imagine that this is the end. Rather it is but the beginning of new and more severe aggressive action on the part of the enemy. The next drive may be the invasion of England herself, the first in ten centuries; and when that happens, then, my friends, this war will be that much nearer to us, and the event will carry with it to us an increasing anxiety and a correspondingly increasing obligation. Shall we rise to the occasion with our supreme effort? We must. We shall not falter. I was heartened yesterday in listening to the speech of Mr. Churchill. He is a man of stout heart. As I listened to him I recalled that England has been in many wars. She has won and lost many battles, but I am proud to think that England has always won the last battle. It is our hope and trust that she will do so in this war also.

This party which I have the honour to represent for the time being is prepared to help to the utmost. I cannot make that statement too strong. But we want to know and to be shown what is going on. The government must demonstrate to the people of Canada that the trust reposed in the government has not been betrayed, that the mandate given will be carried out to the utmost. I am not thinking in terms of party; I am thinking in terms of Canadianism.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) in concluding his remarks referred to the extremely grave situation which all free countries are facing, we in Canada in common with those great and brave countries, Britain and France and other nations formerly neutral, that have suffered so severely in the course of recent months. On Friday last my hon, friend asked me a question, to which I replied. The question related to the situation as it was at the time. When I had replied, indicating how very critical it was, my hon. friend said that he wished to assure me at once that he and his party desired to give all the cooperation they possibly could to the government, to support them in any action which they might be ready to take, and to assist in every way in the face of a common peril. My hon, friend concluded his remarks this afternoon in much the same strain. I had rather expected, I should perhaps say I had rather hoped, that in rising to reply to him to-day on the first day of the debate on the address, my remarks might be wholly congratulatory on his attitude and in the nature of renewed thanks on the part of the government to him and those associated with him for the cooperation which they had offered and which we believed they were prepared to give in full measure. I do wish to thank my hon. friend for what he has said in regard to the cooperation that is intended. I wish also to congratulate him on some of the remarks he made this afternoon. I am pleased indeed to find that in the discharge of the new duties that have fallen upon him he is full of the old vigour which he displayed in previous years and is now in a position where he may be able to contribute more and more to the public life of this country, as he has just said was his motive in wishing to be returned to parliament. I am sure all hon, members hope he may have that opportunity for many years to come. But I had expected that the offer of cooperation which my hon, friend gave would not be followed quite so quickly by a return to the political battles that were fought prior to and during the last general election. I did hope, in the light of the solemnity of this hour, that when he rose to speak he would say that all had better forget the battles that had taken place-

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): He said that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —accept the verdict the Canadian people pronounced so emphatically at the last general election, and from now on act, as far as it might be possible so to do, as of one mind in this House of Commons, giving to each other all the assistance we possibly can.

May I say I had fully expected my hon. friend would make a very brief speech this afternoon, that he would come immediately to the point, which is the one of chief concern in the mind of the Canadian people, and to which he referred as such, namely that the country is anxious to know, respecting Canada's war effort, what the government has done, what it is doing and what it proposes to do. That I think is the one question which the people of Canada are asking, and to which they are entitled to have an early and complete reply. They know in large part but they do not know all. Of necessity we have been obliged to wait until parliament met to make a comprehensive statement. Here alone questions respecting matters of national importance can be answered with authority as they arise. However, I am not going to take exception, beyond what I have just said, to the attitude of my hon. friend. I will only say that if the situation was grave on Friday last, it is if anything graver to-day. I hope, in the light of that knowledge, hon. members may not find it necessary to go back and forth over and over ground that was traversed time and again in the recent campaign, but will devote themselves primarily to a consideration of what at this moment, and from this time on, may be of greatest service in meeting the present situation.

I had thought that I would be able to give to the house before six o'clock this evening a statement with respect to what the government has done, what it is doing and what it proposes to do, that would immediately give to the people of our country that sense of security with respect to the government's actions and intentions which all of them wish to have and are entitled to have. Owing to the length of the speech which my hon. friend has made, it is not now possible for me to make that statement before six o'clock. I suppose my hon, friend will expect, and the house may expect, that I should first of all deal with some of the matters he has brought up in the course of his discussion, and that I should also comment on the different paragraphs in the speech from the throne to which he has referred. If I take up a short time prior to six o'clock in reviewing the ground he has run over, instead of immediately bringing forward the statement I have here prepared, it will be in order that I may not be open to the charge of having omitted reference to anything that has been said, but, instead, to endeavour to cover, however briefly, points which my hon. friend has raised.

First of all may I say to him with respect to his opening remarks as to the anxiety that exists in the minds of himself and others concerning the situation overseas, that this anxiety is not confined to any man, to any party, to any group; it is an anxiety which not only extends over this entire country, but is deeply felt in all parts of the world, particularly in those parts which hitherto have regarded themselves as free. I hope no hon member on either side of the house will assume that any other member, no matter in what quarter of the house he may be seated, is any less anxious, any less sincere, any less loyal with respect to the part which this country should take in the present crisis than he himself may be.

My hon. friend has spoken of this war as a righteous war, a war in which there can be no question as to the justice of our cause. With that I think we are all in agreement. He has referred in appreciative terms to the speeches delivered on Friday last by the mover and the seconder of the address. I should like to thank him for what he has said of and to these newly elected, young members. The hon, gentleman referred to the speech of the seconder of the address as being a courageous and brave speech. It was courageous and brave, but I think my hon. friend rather spoiled the effect of his remark when he said that the courageous part of the speech which he quoted was received with applause only by members of his group and not by other parties in this house. May I say to him and to the seconder that with every word used by the hon, member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), we on this side are in complete agreement.

At the beginning of this new parliament, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say how much we welcome to the membership of this house so many young men, most of them returned for the first time. As the leader of the opposition has said, they are the ones who will have to deal with the problems of the future, and the future they face would appear to be more difficult than any period heretofore faced by the members of any previous parliament of this country. It is fortunate for them and for Canada that in their earlier years, before becoming members of this house, so many of them gave earnest study and thoughtful consideration to the problems of our country. I doubt if we could have had a better example of the good effect of the many clubs which have been formed in Canada for the purpose of directing the time and attention of their members to a study of political problems than that which was evidenced by the speeches made by the mover and the seconder of the address. The hon, members who moved and seconded the address have given careful study to political problems for many years. They have accustomed them-selves to public speaking, and have come into parliament not unacquainted with public affairs but already trained in thought and with judgment matured with respect to many of the great questions of the day.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

I should like to express to the mover of the address, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Lapointe), my very warm congratulations upon the exceptionally admirable speech which he delivered. Like the leader of the opposition, I was impressed by the degree of confidence with which he spoke-and this is equally true of the seconder of the addressand the ability of each to hold the unbroken attention of the house. Few if any maiden speeches have been more suited to better the occasion than the speeches to which we listened on Friday last. I can hardly say whether my pleasure as I listened to the hon. member for Lotbinière was greater at his very obvious achievement, than was my pleasure in having the honour of sitting at the side of his distinguished father and sharing the pride he must have felt as he listened to one of his own family address this House of Commons of which he has been a member for so many years. As the leader of the opposition has said, there has been but one previous occasion on which father and son have sat in the same parliament as members of this house. My hon, friend referred to the gentleman who, as head of the Conservative party, held a very distinguished place. I should like to mention the great distinction which belongs to the right hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe, Quebec East) who to-day in point of membership is the oldest member of this house, and who in the affairs of Canada has played a part second to none in furthering the unity of our country. It must be a source of deep pride to him, as it is to all of us, that he has been privileged to hear his son speak words which must have brought to him the assurance that all he has so faithfully struggled and fought for in the course of his parliamentary and public life in the interests of the Canadian people is, God willing, certain to be carried on through years to come by the one who bears his name and who, I believe, will share his fame.

May I also congratulate most warmly the seconder of the address. His words were evidence of the careful training he has had, in part, at Princeton university and, in part, at Oxford university. May I say to him that he has given to parliament at this time of grave crisis in the world's affairs an assurance of the service which from this time on may be expected from him in the public life of our country.

The leader of the opposition took exception to the reference in the speech from the throne to the advisability of making an immediate study of post-war problems. I have been in parliament for some little time, and I think I know something of the way in which criticism is apt to shape itself. I am afraid that if there had been no reference of the kind in the throne speech, the first word we would have heard from my hon, friend would have been that it had altogether omitted one of the most important matters to be considered at this time, namely preparing as soon as possible to meet not only those great problems which will arise when the war is over but also those problems which are arising already in consequence of the war. I hope hon, members will feel that one of their supreme duties is to make a study of those very questions as speedily and as thoroughly as possible. Surely no one imagines that Canada's war effort will suffer in the least because a study of other questions is also undertaken. In this particular the government is doing what it has sought to do all along, to look forward continually to the situations that are likely to arise in the future.

My hon, friend mentioned the visit to Canada of Their Majesties the King and Queen. He drew attention to the fact that the present speech from the throne does not contain any special reference to that visit. If my hon, friend had been in the house at the time he would have found in the speech from the throne at the opening of the session of 1939, in terms which I am sure he would be the first to appreciate, a reference to the intended visit of their majesties. These were the words:

The announcement that Their Majesty's King George VI and Queen Elizabeth have graciously decided to visit Canada in the months of May and June has been received with rejoicing throughout the dominion. The honour of welcoming their king and queen, in person, on their own soil, is a privilege which will be shared with enthusiasm and pride by all His Majesty's Canadian subjects. The visit will be the first paid by the reigning sovereign to any of his self-governing dominions. It will be the first time a British king and queen have been in North America. It is deeply gratifying that their majesties' tour will embrace all the provinces of Canada.

Then follows a reference to the intended visit of their majesties to the United States. In the speech from the throne made at the conclusion of that session there was again a reference to the visit of their majesties, which placed on record one of the most memorable features of the entire visit, namely the meeting of His Majesty the King with the members of the two houses of parliament. It was in the following words:

In bringing to a close a session in which, for the first time, the king has been present in person in the parliament of Canada, I desire to express the gratification of my government at the universal and heartfelt rejoicing of a united people who are being honoured by the visit of their sovereign. . . . It was a source of satisfaction to my government that his majesty was able to give the royal assent in person to the bill respecting the Canada-United States trade agreement.

In addition to these references to their majesties visit which appears in previous speeches from the throne there will be found repeated references in Hansard by myself and others to that memorable occasion. It is a pleasing coincidence that it was just a year ago this very weekend Their Majesties the King and Queen were in this capital city. If I recollect correctly, it was just a year ago to-night the members of both houses of parliament had the great honour of having the king and queen as their guests at a parliamentary dinner. I agree with my hon. friend when he says that the visit of the king and queen to Canada was one of the happiest events in the whole of our history, happy in the rejoicing it occasioned in all parts of the dominion and, above all, happy in that it served to reveal the affectionate regard in which their majesties are held by their Canadian subjects and the loyalty of the Canadian people to the crown. Further, it helped to reveal the unity of the Canadian people under the crown

My hon, friend has been good enough to speak in kindly terms of such part as I may have had in extending on behalf of the Canadian people an invitation to their majesties to visit Canada. In doing that, I was but taking advantage of one of the high privileges which belongs to the responsible position I now hold and which I had been privileged to hold in some previous years. I believe it was in 1923 or 1926, when I was attending an imperial conference, that, through His Majesty King George V, I extended an invitation to have the Duke and Duchess of York visit Canada at an early opportunity. I now recall that that invitation was extended shortly after the occasion of their marriage. On a later occasion while in England on other business I repeated the invitation, and at the time of the coronation, when the responsibility was that of their majesties themselves, I pointed out how delighted the Canadian people would be should their majesties find it possible to visit our dominion. At that time I received from the king the assurance that the first opportunity their majesties might have to leave England on an extended tour would in all probability be given over to a visit to our country. When Lord Tweedsmuir subsequently went to England for a brief stay, His Excellency carried with him from the government a renewal of the invitation, the acceptance of which was definitely given for the following year. As I have stated previously, no words of mine could begin to express all that the royal visit meant at the time or what it continues to mean at this time, when it is the desire of members of the British commonwealth of nations to show their united strength under the British crown.

My hon, friend has referred to the loss our country sustained in the passing of Lord Tweedsmuir. At different times I have publicly expressed the sense of that loss, as I believe it was felt by all our people. I would add only this, that I believe no sovereign ever entrusted a great mission to a more faithful servant and that no prime minister ever had a more helpful counsellor or a truer friend than I had in the years it was my privilege to share with His Excellency in the affairs of the public life of our country.

May I add that with the leader of the opposition I am pleased to join in expressing the great pleasure it has given the people of Canada to know that Lord Athlone and the Princess Alice will shortly be in our midst. Their close relationship to the royal family will still further serve to keep fresh in our minds many memories which will always be cherished of the visit of the king and queen. With a knowledge of the part played by Lord Athlone in the years during which he was Governor General of South Africa I think we may regard ourselves as very fortunate that one who has so intimate a knowledge of constitutional matters and has had such a wide experience in public administration is to be the successor of our late Governor General.

My hon, friend has spoken about the general election. I had intended at this time to omit altogether any reference to that subject. Anything I now have to say in that connection will be exceedingly brief, because I have no desire to revive past political controversies. What I would like to say however is that, irrespective of party, we have reason to feel a definite pride in the strength of our democratic institutions when we reflect that in a time of war it was possible for Canada to carry through a general election, and in so doing to preserve inviolate the right of the people, within stated periods of time, to select anew their representatives in the parliament of the country. By many during the campaign, and to some degree this afternoon by the leader of the opposition, I have been censured for having brought about the dissolution of parliament at the time it was done. I ask hon. members this question: In the light of what has since occurred, is there a single hon. member who does not feel that it is a very fortunate thing that at this time of concentrated warfare we have a new parliament, assembled here with an emphatic mandate from the country to carry on Canada's war effort to the utmost of our might and power? Can any one imagine in what condition this country would be if we had continued with the old parliament, a parliament which at the very opening of its last session, despite the existence of war, began its duties in a spirit of party controversy? What would have been the condition to-day if partisan discussion had been continued in parliament for months, and the election been longer delayed? Imagine the confusion we would have if a general election were taking place at this time!

When I asked for dissolution I said it was the duty of a prime minister to take all circumstances into consideration and to have regard for what was likely to happen, as well as for all that had happened. I shall not repeat the immediate reasons which brought on the election, but I would remind hon. members that I said I thought it was advisable that the election should be over before concentrated warfare began in Europe. I said it would be advisable to have the election over before the great offensive which I believed would pretty certainly come in the Spring. I pointed out that our soldiers overseas should have the opportunity of casting their ballots if possible before going to the front, and that those in Canada should be permitted to vote before going overseas.

A prime minister at all times must shoulder heavy responsibility and that responsibility is particularly heavy in a time of war. He has a very special responsibility with respect to a dissolution of parliament. He has to advise as to what is most in the interests of the nation. If he fails so to do, he must bear the consequences of that failure. If I had the whole matter to do over again, in the light of what has since happened, I would, if anything, do it more readily than I did the last time. I know my hon. friends opposite were disappointed. My hon. friend said that when he heard the radio announcement he felt he would like to have assassinated me. I have no doubt he felt that way, and I think there were a large number in his party who felt the same way. But I was not thinking of him or of the Conservative party at the time when I advised dissolution. I was thinking of what was most in the interests of Canada at a time of war, and what the people of this country would expect. All circumstances considered, I think I have been pretty well justified in that action by the verdict which the people of Canada have given with respect to it.

My hon, friend has spoken about unemployment insurance and has said that he thinks the time difficult for us to carry through such a measure at the present session. He said that we ought to know, or at least he would like to inquire as to what would be the probable response of the provinces with respect to this proposal. He mentioned that for many years we have been seeking to get through an unemployment insurance measure, but may I remind my hon. friend that the present administration or rather a Liberal administration many years ago introduced an unemployment insurance act. It was a Liberal administration that put that act upon the statutes and it has been there ever since. It was a Liberal administration that administration that increased the scope of the act as originally passed.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That was the Old Age Pensions Act.

 $\operatorname{Mr.}$ MACKENZIE KING: The Old Age Pensions $\operatorname{Act.}$

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury). That is a horse of another colour.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We placed the Old Age Pensions Act upon the statutes. I beg my hon, friend's pardon. What I had in mind was social legislation generally. The Old Age Pensions Act was the first step in meeting the situation which arises from unemployment. Elderly people are the first to suffer lack of employment. What we as a party have been seeking ever since is authority to enact a federal measure which would make unemployment insurance applicable to the whole dominion. It has been felt, and rightly I think, that until we had reason to believe that the provinces generally were prepared to give that authority to this federal parliament, the government would not be right in proceeding with such a measure.

I am sure the members of the house will be pleased to know that the government has received the assurance of practically all the provinces that they will be prepared to support the administration in seeking an amendment to the British North America Act which will enable us forthwith to introduce an unemployment insurance act in this house. I am perhaps expressing the matter in too technical terms when I say that they approve an amendment to the British North America Act. What the provinces generally have approved is the enactment of the federal government of a national unemployment insurance scheme. This assurance has come from the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. I have a letter received this week from the Premier of Alberta, the only province whose name I have not mentioned. It expresses the view that the government of Alberta would like to have the report of the dominion-provincial relations commission or a copy of the bill itself before expressing a final opinion. However, there is not in Premier Aberhart's letter any statement which would lead one to believe that if such a measure were introduced in this house, exception would be taken to it by the members from that particular province.

May I say that the government feels that with the backing of all the provinces I have mentioned—the letters will be tabled later on-we are justified in taking this step at this time. We feel moreover that it is desirable to take the earliest possible opportunity to introduce the measure now that assurance has been given so generally by the provinces. A time of war, when there is much in the way of employment in heavy industry, offers perhaps the best of all opportunities to begin a measure of this kind. Contributions will come in more readily at such a time. Then, if unemployment comes, as it may once the war is over, there will be upon the statutes a law under which men will be able to obtain their allowances.

My hon, friend has spoken of the defence of Canada regulations and has said that he hoped this would not be a case of merely sending the matter to a committee. He hoped that something more would be done in reference to the question than just putting it to one side. I think he said that the government ought to have a policy in connection with a matter of that kind. The policy, I may say, is already there, it is laid down in the regulations. This afternoon the Minister of Justice explained what the policy was. I may add that during the course of the campaign the government was asked repeatedly to refer the defence of Canada regulations to a committee of parliament. An undertaking to that effect was given. I have answered many communications which have been received complaining of the regulations in some particulars with the assurance that if the present administration were in office when parliament met we would see that the defence of Canada regulations were referred to a committee of the house so that hon, members might have a chance of expressing their views and opinions with respect thereto and of making to the house such recommendations as they might deem advisable.

I see I have come to the part of the address of my hon, friend where he began to speak more particularly of the war effort of the government. Also I notice it is just six o'clock. If I have passed over other points which the leader of the opposition raised, I hope he will forgive me for so doing. This evening after recess I shall begin immediately to answer what I believe to be the questions which are of most concern not only to my hon. friend but to other hon. members of this house, and to the people of Canada, namely, what the government's war effort has been, what it is at the present time, and what we intend it to be.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I intimated this afternoon before adjournment, I intend to speak as briefly as possible on any matter other than that of Canada's effort in the present war. This is no time in which to review at length the state of the world. Swiftly moving events of the gravest importance to the future not only of this country but of the whole human family speak for themselves with compelling eloquence. No speech of mine could add aught to what already is all too well known. It is no time either for self-justification, or vilification, or for ancient controversies. I realize to the full, as other hon, members also realize, that the temper of the government, the house and the people and the crisis of the hour demand action and not argument, deeds and not words.

The character of the enemies of the human race against whom we and our allies are arrayed has been unmasked in all its barbarity and violence.

Within a period of eight months the tyrants of Germany have become the masters of Poland, Denmark, a great part of Norway, Holland, and the chief cities of Belgium. By weight of men and equipment they have brought devastation to the weak and the unoffending. Within the last few days their armed forces have made a deep incursion on the soil of France, and the German Reich is now preparing new attacks upon Britain from the lands which nazi brutality has violated. Words of passion and indignation will effect nothing. Knowing what the enemy has been and is doing, we must consider what we are doing and what we can do to meet him.

My purpose, therefore, to-night is to review as concisely as possible what Canada has done and is doing, and to indicate what further action the government has taken or proposes to take to meet the danger which threatens our allies and ourselves.

Some of the measures which have been taken and will be taken cannot, for reasons which will be obvious, be divulged at all at this time. Some must necessarily remain but partially indicated. Within the limits imposed by military necessity there will be no secrecy.

The greatest crisis in the history of the British commonwealth is not the occasion for partisan congratulations or for partisan criticism. We are concerned not with the past but with the present and the uncertain clouded future. The task which is ours is a task for all Canada, not for any section or group of Canadians. It needs and will need the utmost vigour and whole-hearted assistance on the part of each and every one of us.

It has not been a simple matter for this country to move from an economy of peace to an economy of war, just as it has not been easy for the democracies of Europe who once hoped for peace, to make preparations against an autocracy that has consistently hoped for war and planned it.

The record of the war effort of this country and an outline of the plans which we have initiated and proposed to initiate will be unfolded. Vainglorious justification is as foreign to the spirit of this solemn hour, as is carping and hysterical criticism. All I ask is that, as this house surveys the government's record and the government's plans, the record and the plans be placed in their proper perspective and examined and assessed as a whole.

The world has greatly changed since 1914. Canada has changed with it. Our national status has changed. Our political responsibility has changed. Our financial position has changed. Our industrial capacity has changed. The problems of local defence and overseas activity have been revolutionized by the new range, effectiveness and destructive power of aircraft, submarines, mechanized weapons and military equipment. The machine of war more than ever dominates the man at war. Military power can no longer be resolved in terms of the number of men enlisted.

The final result of all these factors of change, the rise of air power and the elimination of distance, cannot yet, of course, be accurately determined. They have remarkably increased the necessary emphasis upon home defence. They have made clearer than ever the tremendous importance of our eastern Atlantic ports for the convoying of military and other supplies to Britain and France.

They have been responsible for the great significance it has been necessary to attach to air development—not only in connection with our own Royal Canadian Air Force, but also in regard to the commonwealth air training plan, in which we have such a vital part and place.

When you examine the expenditures made, and learn the appropriations proposed, in connection with the Royal Canadian Navy and the air force, you will be more than ever impressed by the differences between the waging of war in 1914 and the waging of war in 1940.

The world, perhaps, and Canada with it, has been slow to appreciate the extent and the meaning of these changes.

When we consider, also, the difference in the alignment of forces in this war, the possibilities of the spread of conflict in all directions of the compass, and our national duties for defence and cooperation with our allies not only on our eastern shores but in the Pacific as well, you will have some idea of the manner in which Canadian defence problems have been enlarged and intensified.

I shall proceed now, Mr. Speaker, to a brief review of what has been done and planned to date. I shall give the bare, plain facts in brief outline. Full details will be supplied by my colleagues as the session continues.

A country's war effort, while by no means wholly dependent upon its financial capacity, is nevertheless definitely limited by and subject to financial considerations of which too full and careful an account cannot be taken. Appropriations for and expenditures on war account are at least one index of its nature and extent. I shall begin this review, therefore, with a brief financial statement and a mention of some of the financial considerations of which the government has been obliged to take account.

First of all may I say that our financial situation is radically different from our situation in 1914. Then we were able to borrow money outside of Canada, both in the United Kingdom and in the United States. To-day we are prohibited by the neutrality legislation of the United States from access to their security markets. To-day not only are we unable to borrow in the United Kingdom, but one of the most important parts of our war effort has been, and will continue to be, our ability to repatriate our securities. It has been and will be our duty to provide Britain with a proportion of the dollar exchange she requires in order that she may purchase certain essential agricultural and industrial supplies on this continent.

The actual money which has been paid out of the treasury on war account in the first eight months of the present war has been more than double the amount paid out in the first eight months of the last war. On the 19th of February, the Minister of Finance made public his estimate that, for the fiscal year of 1940-41, we shall require for war expenditure alone, at least $500,000,000. The developments that are taking place and the additional activities and commitments which are proposed, and to which I shall refer in a few moments, have necessitated the revision of this estimate to at least $700,000,000.

In the happening of certain other events and in the making of further commitments, to which no reference can be made at the present time, the figure of $700,000,000 will be subject to a further revision upwards. In other words, our present estimate is that we shall be spending nearly two million dollars a day on Canada's war effort in the present fiscal year. Let it be clearly understood that that represents war expenditure only. For all purposes -war expenditure, plus the ordinary expenditure for the public services of Canada—the estimate will be over one billion dollars in the present fiscal year. I am just told by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) that the figure is not merely over one billion dollars, it is over 1100 million dollars. In other words, for all purposes, we shall be spending from now on an average of more than three million dollars a day. In the fiscal year of 1915-16, the total war expenditure on all accounts was $166,000,000.

The reasons for the increased costs brought upon us by the growing necessity of the situation I have already referred to. In the last war there was no Canadian air force, nor air training plan. In this year we estimate for naval expenditure alone more than $100,000,000. In the corresponding period of the last war, the estimate was $3,000,000. Our estimated naval expenditure in this first year, therefore, is over thirty times what it was in the similar period for the last war. The estimated naval expenditures for the present fiscal year are more than three times the total naval expenditure for the whole of the last war.

The needs of modern war, also, have almost doubled the cost per man of maintaining a division in the field.

In connection with supply, the total contracts let to the 15th day of May, amounted to $275,000,000. Of these amounts, $200,000,000 have been placed on behalf of the government of Canada, and $75,000,000 on behalf of the allied governments. With the exception of amounts totalling about $50,000,000, all contracts have been let in Canada.

Twenty shipyards are engaged in the production of 90 vessels of war. Production is well in advance of the scheduled time. There are under construction 82 aerodromes, 175 construction projects, including coastal fortifications, submarine defences and hangars.

There are on order 9,000 motor vehicles, at a cost of $14,000,000, 3,000 of which have already been delivered overseas.

War munitions are being manufactured at a cost of $80,000,000.

One large explosive plant is under construction. A second is in the course of organization.

Industry is working at full speed to meet the future requirements of clothing, boots and personal equipment. The production of small arms munitions is being expanded as rapidly as equipment can be installed.

The Department of Munitions and Supply, with the assistance of the war-time prices and trade board, has taken every available step to protect sources of outside supply, and ensure against a shortage of raw materials. In addition to this, constant study is given to the possibilities of the increased use of Canadian materials in the production of supplies for ourselves and our allies.

I now propose to give the house particulars of the present position in relation to the Canadian navy, the Canadian active service force and the militia, the Royal Canadian Air Force and the air training plan. I do not need to remind the house that modern warfare demands extensive and intensive training, that modern military and naval equipment cannot be built in the space of a few weeks, however strong may be the manufacturing and industrial resources on which this construction depends.

As at May 10, 1940, the personnel of the Royal Canadian Navy consisted of 952 officers, 5,662 ratings. These numbers include 125 Canadian officers and 100 ratings who are serving in the British navy. That personnel is being increased by recruitment, and will be increased as rapidly as ships come into service. There is a provision in the estimates for the current fiscal year for the increase in our navy personnel to a total of 1,450 officers and 10,000 ratings by March 31, 1941. There will be, of course, a progressive increase from this time to that.

In addition to our 7 destroyers, we have in commission 15 minesweepers, 6 anti-submarine vessels, 15 fishermen's reserve vessels, and 51 other auxiliary vessels. The conversion of 3 high speed merchant ships to light cruisers will be completed shortly. A number of other vessels have been acquired and are now being armed for patrol duty. There are under construction 90 additional vessels, which include 54 patrol vessels and 18 minesweepers.

The Royal Canadian Navy, apart from its patrol duties on our own coasts, is assisting actively in the coastal defence of Newfoundland, and is cooperating with the British and French navies in the Caribbean area. It is also taking an active and important share in the convoy duty so essential if the military supplies and foodstuffs required by the allies are to cross the ocean in security.

I have already referred to the estimate of over $100,000,000 for the Royal Canadian Navy in the current fiscal year.

I now give you the essential facts with reference to the Royal Canadian Air Force. The figures which I shall quote are separate and distinct from the developments and projects of the commonwealth air training plan.

As at May 10 of the year, we had 1,389 officers, 10,926 airmen, or 12,315 of all ranks. Their disposition is divided between army cooperation, home defence, and the Royal Air Force contribution to the Canadian share of the instructional staff of the air training plan. In cooperation with the army, we have one squadron overseas; we have a second squadron completing its training in Canada. Provisions have been made for the continuous training of reinforcements for both squadrons in our army cooperation school. For home defence, we have 9 squadrons in our present establishment, and will have 12 squadrons when our establishment is completed.

In the Canadian active service force, the personnel as at the 10th of May, 1940, was as follows: The first division is overseas, and its strength has been enlarged by the necessary ancillary troops. The number of troops in the first division and its ancillaries is 23,438. At Canadian military headquarters there are 240 officers and men. The total of men overseas is therefore 23.678.

We have in training for overseas service a second division with its ancillary troops amounting to 24,645. We have under mobilization other troops under the following head-

Depots and training centres	16,282
Troops engaged in coastal defence and anti-aircraft work	9,036
Troops engaged in guarding vulnerable points	1,665
Other troops in Canada	6.223

The total personnel in the Canadian active service force as of May 10 is 81,529.

In addition to the active service force the non-permanent active militia has been organized into eleven territorial regiments for the purpose of providing reenforcements for the Canadian active service force units overseas. Apart from troops overseas and troops engaged in home defence our troops are assisting in the defence of strategic areas in Newfoundland, and further assignments of duties are contemplated in the Atlantic area.

In the three services there were as of May 10 more than 100,000 men on active 95826-41 service. In addition organization has been provided for the reenforcement of the Canadian active service force and for the recruitment as rapidly as ships can be put into commission of the personnel of the Royal Canadian Navy. Recruitment of the Royal Canadian Air Force is intimately associated with the British commonwealth air training plan to which I shall now refer.

The British commonwealth air training plan is not an exclusively Canadian undertaking. As the name implies, it is a joint plan in which the four governments, those of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, are all concerned. The plan originated with the British government. The preliminary work on the scheme was done by the United Kingdom air ministry. Canada cannot alter the plan at her own exclusive discretion, nor without regard for the essential factors of the adequate training of men to meet the demands of modern aerial warfare.

Neither the commonwealth air training plan nor any other air training plan can turn out trained pilots, observers and gunners immediately after its inception. The immediate requirements of the United Kingdom air force were and still are being met by the training establishments in the United Kingdom, which were in full operation at the outbreak of war. The joint training plan was established for the purpose of maintaining the progressive supply of trained pilots and airmen, and increasing it steadily until the allied air force had attained decisive superiority over the enemy in the air. It was felt that the plan had to be orderly and free from confusion. It is worked out so that all stages of training are inter-related, and the training itself is on a progressively increasing scale. It is impossible to make arbitrary changes in the plan without disrupting its efficiency, and without consultation with the other members of the commonwealth partnership on which it is based.

I can illustrate the magnitude of the plan in no better way than by giving the house a list of the number of establishments required for its full operation. They are:

4 training commands, situated respectively at Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Regina.
2 manning depots.
20 Royal Canadian Air Force recruiting centres.

3 initial training schools.

- 26 elementary flying training schools.
 16 service flying training schools.
 10 air observers' schools.
 10 bombing and gunnery schools.
- 2 air navigation schools.
- 4 wireless schools. 4 repair depots.
- 4 equipment depots.

There are also several other important units, such as a technical training school, an air armament school, a central flying school, and so forth. In other words, there will be a total of 110 separate formations and units in existence when the plan is operating at full capacity.

To illustrate the progress which has already been made, I should like to place on Hansard a list of the units which have so far been established. They are:

Training command headquarters, Toronto.

Air armament school, Trenton.
Air armament school, Trenton.
Central flying school, Trenton.
Air navigation school, Trenton.
Service flying training school, Camp Borden.
Equipment and accounting training school, St.
Thomas.

Manning depot, Toronto.

Technical training school, St. Thomas. Initial training school, Toronto.

Equipment depot, Ottawa, now being moved to Toronto. Equipment depot, Winnipeg. Wireless school, Montreal.

Training command headquarters, Montreal. School of aeronautical engineering, Montreal. Repair depot, Trenton.

School of administration, Trenton. Training command headquarters, Winnipeg.

Manning depot, Brandon.

Aircraft inspectors' school, Toronto. Training command headquarters, Regina. recruiting centres throughout the country.

New units are being established almost every week according to the program fixed in the plan itself.

It was estimated at the time the agreement was reached between the four governments that the total cost of the plan for the three years agreed upon would be about six hundred millions, of which the estimated Canadian share is three hundred and fifty millions.

Apart from pupils, about forty thousand officers, airmen and civilians will be employed when it is fully developed. Many thousands of pilots, air observers and air gunners will be trained each year on a progressively increasing scale.

I am aware that a growing feeling of impatience has become manifest in certain sections of the country with reference to what is believed to be the sl w progress made by the British commonwealth air training plan and the fact that its contribution is not one of immediate effectiveness at this critical hour. We recognize that these sentiments spring from a very natural desire to carry at this moment a greater share of the load which is being carried by the mother country and our allies across the seas. But we do believe that they are perhaps coloured by lack of understanding of the magnitude of this undertaking, and particularly of the objectives which it is called upon to fulfil. If such a misunderstanding exists it is probably due to the fact that the public has not gained a full appreciation of the size of this project, the greatest individual effort which this dominion has ever made.

It seems to me important that I should recall to you that the British commonwealth air training plan, as I have mentioned, was based upon a request made to the governments of Canada, Australia and New Zealand, on September 26, by the government of the United Kingdom. In other words, this plan was not that of Australia, New Zealand or Canada, but was one worked out in the United Kingdom, and was proposed by them to be carried out in Canada, to provide an everincreasing flow of trained pilots, air observers and air gunners to supplement the supply of Royal Air Force personnel available for manning additional aircraft when these were obtained through the expansi n of her aircraft and equipment program and her purchases of these from abroad. It is, I am sure, superfluous for me to say that the alternative, of sending a lesser number of airmen overseas at an earlier date, rather than greatly increased numbers at a later date, was discussed by the governments concerned, but the United Kingdom government felt very definitely that in view of her aircraft manufacturing schedules the present arrangements were those best calculated to serve her purposes.

I might say to hon. members that I have in my hand at the moment a copy of the summary of the memorandum of agreement between the governments of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. relating to the training of pilots and aircraft crews in Canada and their subsequent service. One of the terms of the agreement as to costs and expenses is as follows:

The share of the cost of the scheme to be borne by the government of the United Kingdom will take the form of contributions in kind, to be delivered at such times and in such numbers as may be required for the efficient carrying out of the scheme.

I draw attention to that particular clause in the agreement because there seems to be the impression in Canada that under the agreement this country was to supply the aircraft, engines and so on needed for the carrying out of the scheme.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I ask if that agreement has been made public?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it was made public the night it was signed, December 17; or rather I have just been informed that a summary was made public.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I ask if it has been tabled? We do not seem to have it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I recall the negotiations very clearly. This being an agreement between the different governments, at the time it was thought inadvisable to have the agreement in full made public. The essential features were set forth in a summary, which was then published. In regard to tabling a copy of the agreement itself, I would need to get the consent of the different governments concerned.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think that is quite all right, but I should like to see it if possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will see that my hon. friend gets a copy, in any event, but before giving it to the public at large I would wish to get the consent to which I have referred. What I particularly desire to point out is that under the agreement the Canadian government undertook the administration of the scheme; it undertook to make provision for all the buildings and the like. There was also an undertaking as to the actual cost in cash, the proportion to be paid by the different countries, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. By far the greatest proportion of that cost was assumed by Canada. Great Britain's contribution—because this is a scheme which includes all four countries-did not take the form of money; it took the form I have just mentioned, a contribution in kind to be delivered at such times and in such numbers as may be required for the efficient carrying out of the scheme.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I suppose that would mean equipment?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It means aircraft; yes.

Following upon the events of recent weeks, only a few days ago we asked the United Kingdom government whether that government would wish to see the schedules of the joint air training plan modified. The United Kingdom has stated in reply that at the present time the efficient prosecution of the war can best be achieved by adhering to the plans laid down for the air training scheme and by accelerating them to the utmost where practicable. After consultation with the British Air Mission it was agreed that the way to accelerate the plan would be the adoption of measures to expedite the purchase and manufacture of equipment, the preparation of aerodromes, hangars and buildings in advance of the schedule requirements. In accordance with this view certain special powers to act on its own authority have been conferred on the Department of Munitions and Supply for this purpose. I think I am right in saying—and the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) will correct me if I am not—that as far as the construction of buildings and the like under Canada's obligation is concerned, already we are ahead of what the schedule requires. The minister assures me that I am correct.

The house will remember that the technical administration of the plan is committed to the Royal Canadian Air Force, and I cannot stress too strongly the admirable way in which Air Vice-Marsha' Croil and his staff have carried out their heavy responsibilities. The government felt that it would be greatly aided in having the benefit of men with experience in business organization to supervise the administration, under the minister. From early in the war we have had the advantage of the services of Colonel K. S. Maclachlan, a prominent business executive, acting as deputy minister for navy and air; and under Colonel Maclachlan's regime the plan has proceeded at full pace in accordance with the program specified at its inception, which was in accordance with the timing as worked out by the United Kingdom air staff.

It was felt, however, as the plan developed, that in view of the great magnitude of the undertaking and of the many problems which it involved, a special deputy minister for air should be appointed whose chief responsibility would be to further the execution of the British commonwealth air training plan, and that this work should be undertaken by one whose energies and powers of organization were beyond question, who would concentrate his entire activities on the air side of our war effort. I was glad to be able to announce on April 11 that Mr. James S. Duncan, another outstanding business executive, had placed his time at the disposal of the government for a period. Since the day of his appointment Mr. Duncan has been applying himself to this momentous task with tireless energy and a realistic approach to its many problems. I believe that Mr. Duncan would be the first to say that he is receiving and has received the fullest cooperation of the government and of the officials of the departments concerned in the important work which he is doing; and I am glad to be able to announce that, in close cooperation with the Royal Canadian Air Force, the Minister of National Defence and the government as a whole, certain plans are in hand which, while respecting the United Kingdom's desire to leave intact the British commonwealth air training plan will, within the limitations of the present situation, envisage the speeding up of Canada's air contribution to the allied cause.

In order that Canada's contribution in this branch of our war effort may be made as complete and as expeditious as possible, the government has decided to ask parliament to make provision for the appointment of an additional minister of the crown to be known as Minister of National Defence for Air, who will give his undivided time and attention to air activities and in particular to a close supervision of the commonwealth air training plan.

Mr. HOMUTH: Why wait until now?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will answer that question. The government's final decision in this matter has awaited the return to Canada from the United Kingdom of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), who has given the creation of a special ministry for air his full approval. I may say to my hon, friend that while the Minister of National Defence was in England he engaged in interviews with the heads of the various branches of the department of defence, and naturally the government awaited his return before taking a step which would involve any part of the work of his own department.

Mr. HOMUTH: Is he getting some engines for the machines we already have?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend is as interested in Canada's war effort as a whole as I believe the rest of the house is, he will refrain from interrupting until I have completed what I have to say. I might just ask my hon. friend if his interruption was intended to be a helpful one or to be an embarrassment.

Mr. HOMUTH: It was intended to be helpful.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was it?

Mr. HOMUTH: Quite.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then my hon. friend will be quite prepared, I am sure, to wait until later for an answer from the minister himself.

I do not propose to-day to refer to the organization of agriculture, the war-time prices and trade board and the large number of collateral enterprises and committees which have been insituted by the government in its preparation of the economy of Canada for the war needs of ourselves and our allies. Suffice it to say that the government's record on the economic front is not less impressive than that on the military front, and not less important. At the moment it is primarily as to the military effort that the country desires to be informed.

The dynamic forces which have changed the war situation in Europe within recent days; the unprecedented threat to the allied powers and ourselves, must be met at once by immediate action. Production must be accelerated to its limit. Training must be intensified. But however imperative the need, once we have determined—as we have—to meet actual and threatened events to the utmost of our strength and capacity, we must see to it that what is done shall be efficient, persistent and designed to guarantee that action which we believe will contribute most to the defence and triumph of the allied cause. The government proposes that there shall be devoted to the Department of Munitions and Supply the sole, exclusive and full-time services of a minister of the crown. His responsibility will be to correlate production activities, and to speed up in every manner possible the output of essential military and other material. For this purpose there will be conferred upon the Department of Munitions and Supply certain special powers which would not be accorded in normal times, to enable it to expedite the provision of equipment of materials of war for the armed forces.

Hon, members will notice that in developing Canada's war effort the government has proceeded step by step. With respect to the Department of Munitions and Supply it will be recalled that that department took over the work of the war supply board. The war supply board, in turn, had taken over what was formerly the defence purchasing board which had been formed before the war commenced. The development has been from the purchasing board to the war supply board, and then came the provision for a Department of Munitions and Supply. As hon. members know, since it was brought into being by proclamation, the department has been in charge of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe). The Minister of Transport has not only a full knowledge of the transportation problems in the economy of this country, but from the beginning had exercised supervision over the work of the war supply board. The minister and the government felt that there would be an advantage for a time at least in having the two departments administered by the one minister, in view of the correlation of their activities. He has since said, and we agree with him, that the time has now come when the time of one minister should be given exclusively to the work of a Department of Munitions and Supply. In this connection may

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

I pause for a moment to say how exceptionally fortunate the government regards itself in being able to secure the most valuable services of Mr. Wallace Campbell of Windsor, who devoted his time and energy, to the utmost of his strength and ability, to the work of the war supply board during the time he was at its head. Mr. Campbell has generously undertaken to continue an association, in an advisory capacity, in connection with war supplies and the Department of Munitions and Supply is taking advantage of his expert knowledge to gain such counsel and advice from him as is further needed at the present time.

The government has reiterated to the government of the United Kingdom its confidence in the productive capacity of Canadian plants as an alternative source of supply, relatively free from the danger of any enemy action. Canadian manufacturers have expressed their readiness to undertake to the limit of their capacity the production of all such supplies as can be manufactured in this country. The government has undertaken to assist in the organization of the fullest use of the resources of Canadian industry, as and when the British government indicates its wishes.

This afternoon my hon, friend referred to the fact that some productive plants were not working at the present time at full capacity. He seemed to feel that there had been some lag in the placing of orders. My hon, friend, and I assume other hon, members in the house, will understand that orders are being placed by Canada for requirements needed by Canada itself, and that orders come from the United Kingdom for supplies desired by the United Kingdom. United Kingdom supplies are ordered not from Canada alone but from all parts of the world, and the placing of orders in Canada by the British Government has been a matter which has required very careful consideration on their part. No doubt there are many orders which some interested parties in Canada would like to have seen placed prior to this time; but in these matters, as in all else, the situation has been governed by what has been considered possible and advisable on the part of the government of the United Kingdom.

To turn to another phase of the matter, the government has taken all possible steps to prevent sabotage and subversive activity, by propaganda or otherwise, against the allied cause. Our efficient Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other branches of the government concerned are fully aware of the situation, and have taken action wherever warranted. I wish, however, in this connection, to make two appeals. I appeal to all citizens of foreign extraction to remember that they are living in a land which is fighting to maintain the freedom which they now enjoy, and the possibilities of international goodwill which enabled them to settle in our midst. I appeal, also, to all members of the public to refrain from persecution and panic action against harmless and law-abiding people who share our life and in most instances our common citizenship.

In view of the critical turn of events in Europe within the last few days, and in the light of information obtained by the Minister of National Defence on his recent visit to England, the government has decided to take the following additional measures to strengthen our armed forces, and to enlarge our contribution to the allied cause. These decisions, and those which I have already mentioned, are being translated into action. They are all in addition to the work which has been done and planned in the military, naval and air spheres of action, and on the economic front.

We have decided to advance the date of the dispatch overseas of the second division of the Canadian active service force.

We have decided to advance the date of the dispatch of such further reinforcements of the first division as have not already proceeded overseas.

We have decided to push forward the recruiting of reinforcements for the second division of the Canadian active service force, which will follow that division overseas at the earliest possible date.

There will be formed a Canadian corps in

There will be formed a Canadian corps in the field in accordance with arrangements which have been discussed with the British War Office.

Besides the two divisions and their ancillary units, the corps will include the necessary additional corps troops and will involve the dispatch overseas of several thousand men beyond those which I have already mentioned.

We shall undertake the raising of a third division, to be available for such service as may be required in Canada or overseas.

We have assigned, at the request of the United Kingdom government, certain naval and military formations to active duty in the Caribbean and North Atlantic areas.

There will be dispatched overseas, as soon as possible, No. 112 army cooperation squadron to act as a reserve for No. 110 cooperation squadron now overseas.

As already mentioned, we shall adopt every feasible method of accelerating the output of pilots and air crews from Canada for service in the field, at the earliest possible date.

Steps have been taken in order to advance beyond the agreed and predetermined schedule the preparation of aerodromes and hangars, and the like. Mr. Speaker, this reviews in brief some of the details of the action the government has taken to meet the critical needs of the hour. The national interest prevents my disclosing some further details in connection with these items or from referring to other developments the government has already begun.

May I pause here for a moment to say to hon. members that I am sure the review I have already made will be sufficient to indicate the force of what I am about to say. With a world situation such as our own and other countries must face to-day, it is necessary for the government to take account not only of the happenings of the immediate moment but of possible happenings during the period through which this war may run. The situation is vastly different from what it has been heretofore. As I said in my remarks at the outset, during the last war we had Japan as an ally, we had Russia as an ally, we had Italy as an ally and we had practically no problem on the Pacific coast. For some considerable time the United States also was an active ally and, as I have said, there was no problem to be considered in connection with the Pacific ocean.

In connection with the Atlantic coast there was very little to be considered. At that time the British navy undertook the protection of our Atlantic coast and we were actually being protected by the British navy in our immediate coastal waters. Our navy was a tiny affair, I believe of two ships, the Rainbow and the Niobe. These ships were taken over by the British navy and became part of that navy. In this war our navy is a unit which is serving actively on the Atlantic coast and it is rendering most valuable assistance to the British navy itself.

We know the developments in the war up to date, but we do not know what they are going to be to-morrow. We do not know what they are going to be a week or a month or a year hence. We have, therefore, to consider not only what we can do in the way of cooperation overseas but also the possible happenings with respect to Canada itself. This is one of the things that I hope hon. members will keep in mind. We have to see around all the sides of this situation and view it in relation not only to the Canada that we knew in the last war but to the Canada that is a nation to-day.

One hardly dares to suggest the thought, but should our enemy triumph in this particular struggle it is not France, it is not England, it is not Holland, it is not Belgium, it is not Norway, it is not Poland and it is not Czechoslovakia that they would seek as a prize of war; what the enemy are looking for is great new areas of development. That is what underlies this struggle for world domination and we cannot afford to ignore at this time every conceivable possibility with relation to each part of the British commonwealth of nations.

The urgent appropriations with which this house will be called upon to deal, the various measures to be introduced by the government, many of which are on the order paper, will command the earnest attention of each one of us. I appeal to all members to avoid timewasting procedure and to purge the order paper of items which cannot by any stretch of the imagination be considered a contribution to the solution of our problems. Above all, I know I shall not ask in vain that the time of hard pressed ministers of the crown and of hard working civil servants should not be diverted from their many tasks to deal with matters which are not essential.

It is the opinion of the government that the circumstances of the hour require that the urgent matter of the prosecution of the war and of Canada's part therein calls for the most immediate and thorough discussion. We do not desire to remove and do not propose to curtail unduly any of the privileges of hon. members, but the government believes that in the present emergency government business should have the right of way over the debate on the address. It is therefore suggested that the debate on the address be shortenend by arrangement between the whips. If such an arrangement is not found to be possible, I may propose that the debate be adjourned.

In making statements of that kind I shall have to ask hon, members to realize that they are not made with any view of enabling the government to avoid criticism or to take away from any hon, member a privilege which should be his, but rather because something is known of how exceedingly grave the situation is at this very time. I believe that all hon. members will feel as I do, that the more quickly we can begin consideration of the bill of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) which has to do with war appropriations, and which measure will enable the fullest discussion of everything pertaining to the war and the war effort of Canada, the better it will be in all respects and the more action of that kind will be approved by the country. So I am going to suggest that a step of that kind be taken and I hope that the house will give its approval.

As I have said, it appears to my colleagues and myself that all matters pertaining to the war can be more appropriately discussed during the consideration of the resolution providing the moneys required to support Canada's war effort. This resolution is already on the order paper and might, if the house were agreeable, be proceeded with to-morrow or on Wednesday. In view of the crisis, however, the government will be obliged to proceed with the war appropriations not later than Wednesday, and will take such steps to that end as may be necessary under the rules. I propose to discuss procedure with my hon. friend opposite and with other hon. gentlemen who are leading groups in this house. The procedure which I believe to be best designed to meet the dominant needs of the critical situation is as follows.

There should be a general debate on the resolution. We can then refer the appropriation bill to a committee or committees of the House of Commons in order that there may be disclosed to the members of those committees information which would not probably be in the public interest to place on the pages of Hansard or to broadcast in debate to the House of Commons. I propose to ascertain the views of the leaders of the house with respect to these committees. It may be that a separate committee surveying the work of each of the fighting services would be preferable to one dealing with defence matters generally. It is I am sure unnecessary for me to advance the hope and the desire, for I am sure that hon. members share both, that the personnel of these committees be selected with the utmost care.

I should like to emphasize that the setting up of these committees will not preclude in any way any member from debating any subject to which he may desire to call the attention of the house and the country, and I give my assurance to hon. members that the constitution of such committees will not be used as a pretext for concealing any information which it is in the public interest to disclose. While officers of the department and of the service will attend the committees when required, it would be a great disservice to the country at this time if members were to keep officers from their regular important public duties unless it is absolutely necessary.

I have sought to pass in brief review the main facts in connection with the war effort of this country. Everything that we have done has been done with the full approval of our allies and after complete consultation with them. We have done, and planned to do, the things which they have deemed most essential to the triumph of their cause and ours. I have told you what can now be told of the prompt and additional measures we have already taken to assist the cause to which we have pledged our honour. As circumstances permit, more will be disclosed.

I need scarcely say that hysteria and panic will add nothing but confusion to the performance of a task that is long and difficult. Munitions and implements of war cannot be forged overnight. The duration and intensity of war have alike to be taken into account. Similarly, the sailors, soldiers and airmen required to meet fresh situations as they arise in all quarters of the globe cannot all be trained at once. No one is more conscious than my colleagues and I of the necessity of vigour of action, patience of heart, and steadfastness of soul. We have acted and shall continue to act to the limit of our wisdom and knowledge and power.

I know that the government can rely upon the support of all sides of this house as long as it does all that is humanly possible to carry out its duty to the people of Canada. To assist us we shall need and, I believe, we shall receive the unwavering resolution and the full cooperation of every true man and woman in this country. If this war is lost, and tyranny triumphs, our world with its gift of freedom, and its promise of happiness for all men and women, will be lost in utter darkness. No sacrifice is too great to prevent that calamity.

The gallant youth of this country will soon be marching through the fires which have been devouring nations as well as armies overseas. They will be true to the imperishable traditions of their fathers. Everything that we can do, every help that we can give, every contribution that we can make, every comfort, great or small, that we must surrender, is as a grain of sand compared with the treasure which they offer on the altar of humanity.

Those of us who have heard the calm, brave words of Prime Minister Churchill and Prime Minister Reynaud do not doubt that the two great races from which this land derives its sinew and its strength will keep the torn flag flying on the battlements of freedom. They have faced, and we have faced with them, perils almost as great, situations almost as grave, in the days that have gone. We, and they, have remained unshaken and triumphant. It is my faith that we shall remain unshaken and triumphant again. The end of the war will find the people of Canada, where the beginning of the war found us; standing, united at the side of Britain and of France.

Mr. Speaker, I should like if I might be permitted, before the house adjourns this evening, to read a message which I sent this morning to the Prime Minister of Great Britain with reference to the speech which he made last evening, and I shall give that to the house at the conclusion of these proceedings.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this first debate of a new and what may be a fateful parliament, I do so with considerable regret that the hon, member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), our leader, is unable to speak for the group with which we are associated. I know that hon. members on all sides of the house sincerely hope that he will be restored to health in a short time.

We wish to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, upon your election to the high and ancient office which we are sure you will occupy with that dignity and impartiality which we appreciated in your predecessor.

To the mover and the seconder of the resolution we extend our congratulations, particularly to the hon, member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Lapointe), whose distinguished father must have been proud of his son's maiden speech in this House of Commons.

We are meeting to-day under the shadow of a great crisis. I want to say at once to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that we of this group are prepared to facilitate in every particular the business of this house. Like the labour parties of Great Britain and other parts of the British commonwealth, the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is essentially a peace party. We hate war with a passionate hatred because all history teaches us that, in the words of the Prime Minister spoken in this house in March of last year, war settles nothing. We know that the men who bleed and die will leave behind them only mourners who, when the conflict ceases, will pay for the struggle in tears and in treasure. Because of this, when we believed there was yet time, we advocated national and international policies which we are convinced would have promoted peace and prevented war.

We watched with growing misgivings the march of fascism and the rising menace of the nazi movement in Germany. We said that those who were encouraging these movements would bring mankind to the very brink of disaster. Nearly three years ago Mr. Heaps, then Cooperative Commonwealth Federation member for Winnipeg North, moved in this house a resolution asking our government to approach the President of the United States with a suggestion that he consider the advisability of calling a world conference in an endeavour to secure a peaceful settlement of international disputes. Subsequently, when the sky darkened still more, we urged our own government to initiate the calling of the League of Nations assembly to stop the threatened crisis. Whenever opportunities arose, we tried to focus attention on the international situation and the growing danger to Canada. We have made mistakes, as any body of people dealing with difficult situations are bound to do; but we have always held that freedom is the foundation of life and of human happiness.

We have watched the suppression of liberty in other countries. One by one and often together, freedom of thought, freedom of association, freedom of religion, freedom of speech have disappeared as dictatorships have become more powerful. We dreaded war because we knew that when it came our basic freedom would be endangered in our own dominion. Nor were we wrong in that assumption, for the defence of Canada regulations have in our opinion gone beyond the point warranted by an outbreak of war. We readily admit that when a nation is at war, actions against the safety of the state must be prevented or punished as the case may be, but we insist that every man shall have the right to plead guilty or not guilty before a competent authority in open court. Under section 21 of the defence regulations it is possible for this basic right of British citizenship to be taken away.

For a second time within a generation we are called upon to make the sacrifices demanded by war. At the outset of the struggle, the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation group in this house presented a statement expressing its attitude in the crisis. We said then, and we believe now, that the preservation of national unity and security must be kept in mind as cardinal principles underlying all we do. We said then, and we believe now, that Canada's best assistance can be rendered to the allied cause by organizing our economic resources efficiently, and granting to the allies every material aid without profit to this nation or to any individual within it. We believe that such aid may become even more important if British and French industrial centres are subjected to violent air attack, for it is obvious now that the machines of war are more necessary to ultimate victory than the provision of large contingents of infantry. It is in the field of mechanized warfare that the allied cause is said to be deficient. It is in this field that Canada can and must render her greatest assistance.

I suppose too that recent events, the power and range of the aeroplane, the organization of so-called fifth columns and so on, have brought home to many a Canadian the urgent need of coastal and home defence in a nation which comprises such enormous territory and whose coast lines extend for thousands of miles in length as do Canada's. Thus the proper organization of our industry and the defence of Canada and adjacent allied territory will tax our resources of man-power to the utmost.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Nearly all members of this house were in agreement during the election campaign that conscription of man-power for overseas service would split this country into pieces and take us out of the war as an effective allied force. Hence we believe that any policy which would even raise a demand for conscription for overseas service would cause internal divisions which would have almost as disastrous an effect as the actual adoption of that policy by parliament would have. In the last house the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) made statements which reassured our people on this point. This is a new parliament and the government contains new ministers. So I urge the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice to give the same assurances to this house as they gave to its predecessor. For the reasons I have given, in September we did not approve the sending of an expeditionary force overseas. The government intimated that while it sought appropriations for the defence of Canada in and beyond Canada, it had not then been decided whether an expeditionary force would be sent. Within two weeks after the prorogation of parliament the announcement was made that an expeditionary force was being organized for overseas service. In our opinion decisions of such gravity, as well as commitments for the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars such as we have heard of to-night, should be made by parliament. None of the private members knows the extent to which we are involved by the enormous commitments that have been made since parliament sat in September. We are prepared to support the struggle against aggression and for the preservation of democratic institutions, but we insist that democratic institutions shall be respected and safeguarded in our own country. In two weeks it will be a full twelve months since parliament met in regular session. Ever since the outbreak of war we have been governed by decree, and the actions of the government still remain shrouded largely in secrecy. In democratic countries, as Mr. Winston Churchill said in that address of his on January 27 last, "Public men are proud to be the servants of the people. They would scorn to be their masters." The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation believes that this parliament, representing the people, must demand that its supremacy be restored. At no time during this crisis should parliament recess for more than two or three months.

standing committee representative of all parties should be set up for the continuous scrutiny of every phase of our war effort and our war expenditures and for consultative purposes.

During the past few weeks we have viewed with increasing alarm the onward sweep of German aggression. Again and again men and women have asked how all this could have been accomplished by a people who less than ten years ago were almost entirely without armaments. The answer is to be found I think in the fact that the nazi dictatorship has planned its every activity for a diabolical purpose, while we continued to muddle along without any plan other than the hope that something might turn up. The challenge to the democratic nations lies not only in the military field but in the realm of economic effort. If it is possible to plan a nation's economy for a diabolical purpose, it is equally possible and certainly necessary to plan it for the welfare and protection of its people.

At the moment we bend our efforts towards bringing the war to a successful conclusion. Already economic controls and directions which the government refused to consider in times of peace have been instituted because of our war effort. I was struck last September when a government which could not find money to provide more adequate prices for farm produce or appropriations for public works and human welfare could suddenly find millions for the purposes of war. This fact was noted by the people of the country, and when the war ends Canadians will not go back again to riding the rods, to unemployment and to misery, without grave danger of civil disturbance and social dislocation. That is why we welcome the appointment of a committee now to consider plans to be put into effect when the war ends. I hope it is not going to be just the usual way of disposing of a difficult problem, as reference to a committee so often has proved to be. Such a committee should be required to make definite plans and request definite appropriations now to meet the needs of this country when the war ends.

The end of the last war found this country unprepared for the problems it created. The demobilized soldiers and war workers suffered intensely from the misery caused by unemployment and want. In contrast, the rich who had bought war bonds enjoyed a steady and permanently secure income. This must not happen again. We believe that the obligation to the soldier and his dependents should be as binding, yes, more binding, than our obligation to the bondholder. We urged that the soldiers' security should be secured by a bond or government insurance policy designed to provide adequate maintenance for himself, his family and dependants as long as he or they may require it through adverse circumstances. This has not been done. On the contrary, complaints have reached me that agents of profit-making private insurance companies are permitted to canvass troops in training for life insurance policies that will lapse if the men are demobilized and become unemployed. I intend to ask some questions regarding this matter at the proper time.

We welcome the promise that a bill for unemployment insurance will be introduced. We trust that it will secure the support of all the provinces and be sufficiently comprehensive to meet our present and post-war needs. But more than this will be needed to provide for those who will not be within the scope of that measure. We need to plan definitely and intelligently for present domestic needs and for post-war problems. I can assure the house that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation will lend every assistance it can in these matters also.

The plight of agriculture has been a sorry one for the past ten years. Last Saturday wheat prices crashed again, and the government, which condemned pegged prices in former years, was forced to step in last Saturday and peg the price of wheat at 70 cents for No. 1 northern at Fort William. At the outbreak of the war we urged that the speculative markets for wheat and other produce should be closed and that proper parity prices should be established and marketing indertaken by appropriate marketing boards on which the producers should be properly represented. The low-pegged price of wheat and the relatively low prices of other farm produce, together with the rising price of farm machinery, clothing and other commodities, spell ruin to the prairie provinces. In these and other parts of the country dairy products, hogs, tobacco, fruit have suffered falling prices. No real guidance has been given to the farmer; no planning undertaken, no attempt made to establish parity prices for these primary products. No other country at war has let such matters drift as we have done. We cannot conduct the war successfully, we cannot cope with the problems of peace, if we allow our basic peace-time industry to suffer virtual bankruptcy.

Some will say that we cannot consider such matters now. But in no small measure our ability to wage war, to finance it, and to prepare for post-war problems depends upon our internal domestic situation. A glance at the Sirois report will indicate the dangerous condition to which our great basic industry and the rural population have been reduced. Recommendations in that report will be fully discussed later in the session, but at the very first opportunity I wish to protest against conditions existing in many parts of Canada. Other members will undoubtedly present some concrete evidence of the deplorable conditions under which many of our people in urban and rural Canada now live.

When the government announced a few weeks ago that federal grants for relief had been drastically cut, many municipalities were faced with either virtual bankruptcy or the neglect of the poor and suffering. I was in Biggar in my constituency when the relief inspector met the municipal council and announced to them that they must finance relief themselves. By dint of curtailing essential road repairs and social services the council had managed to set aside a small emergency or reserve fund of about $3,000. They were told that because they had this small sum they could expect no aid from the provincial or the federal government. I saw the case histories and statements of relief applicants who had suffered years of privation and were now to be refused assistance because the council had lost outside help. Fifty other municipalities in Saskatchewan were similarly dealt with.

The Sirois report clearly shows the financial inability of the province to carry the burden, and by an arbitrary ruling the governments refuse to assist in doing so. This parliament therefore must accept some responsibility for these conditions. Indeed, the Sirois report shows that trade, tariff and other policies of successive federal governments are responsible in no small measure for the plight of farmers, fishermen and Canadian workers. We believe that intelligent economic planning would enable us to provide an adequate standard of living for the great mass of the Canadian people. This our present and prewar economy failed to do.

I was startled when on my way back from Saskatchewan after the election I read in the Toronto Star the results of the routine physical examination of 299 Montreal children at the Iverly community centre. Only five were found to be physically fit. Twenty-one of the group, ranging in age from seven to fifteen, were referred to hospital for immediate treatment. One-half were underweight, while four out of every five had a temperature above normal. Four per cent had serious ear conditions; sixty per cent had serious dental conditions; thirty per cent had infected throats; four per cent had a heart condition; eight per cent had chest conditions and were sent to be X-rayed, and twenty-nine per cent had other serious physical defects. Miss Esther M. Beith of the Child Welfare Association said that approximately sixty per cent of the children came from homes where the parents were on relief, while the others came from homes in the low income brackets. It is all very well to say that nothing else matters but the successful prosecution of the war. The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation will cooperate to bring the war to a successful conclusion, but it intends at the same time to urge that we wage unremitting war on poverty and insecurity within Canada.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Such conditions existed in peace time under successive Liberal and Conservative governments who never ceased to boast of our great resources and our mounting national wealth. We believe that our greatest resources are the men, women and children who comprise our population. To-day we pick up the newspaper and read of the huge sums being made by corporations engaged in mining and war industries. The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation demands that war profiteering must cease. Last year we enacted a measure to limit the profits on war contracts let without tender to five per cent. This was set aside by order in council on August 26 last, and abandoned in the Munitions and Supply Department Act adopted by parliament in September. The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation believes that the only effective way to eliminate war profiteering is to nationalize all war industry. This too would prevent the export of essential war material to potential enemies and indirect shipment to enemy countries. Ever since the war began we have continued to export nickel, copper and scrapiron to aggressors and perhaps even indirectly to enemy countries. Recently we read that the largest copper mine in the constituency of the seconder of the address in reply, the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), the Granby mine, had renewed its contract to sell to Japan all its output of copper for the next three years. Right up to the outbreak of war Canadian supplies were going to Germany. We boasted of our expanding trade in such commodities, and now we see them returning to our kith and kin in more menacing form.

Mr. SINCLAIR: May I be allowed to correct the hon. member? The output from the Britannia mine in my riding, which is the largest copper mine in the British empire, does not go to Japan.

Mr. COLDWELL: The mine I referred to is the Granby mine which I thought was in the hon. gentleman's constituency. The Granby mine made the contract to which I have referred, and of course that contract was made with the approval of the government of Canada. I said these commodities may be coming back to-day to our kith and kin in a more menacing form. I wonder whether the tanks which are ravaging France to-day were made in part at least from scrapiron and nickel shipped from Canadian ports last summer. To-day the copper which we export to Japan mangles the bodies of Chinese patriots. To-morrow it may return in another form to the Pacific coast of the United States or of Canada. Each year we of this little group have urged the stopping of the export of such supplies to aggressor nations. In peace time the government made excuses which many Canadians appeared to accept. In war time, and in the present state of the world, surely no excuses ought to be accepted.

We hear, too, as we have heard to-night, that huge sums of money are to be borrowed. A year ago interest rates were low because there was no demand for money. To-day we float loans at 31 per cent, an attractive rate of interest on gilt-edged Dominion of Canada securities. In our opinion the burden of interest, if the war lasts long, will be intolerable. Men are asked to give their lives. Surely a nation has the right to demand that accumulators of great wealth, both personal and corporate, should give their surplus money without interest. In this manner something approaching equality of sacrifice might be achieved. This becomes all the more necessary when we realize that we have undertaken to finance not only Canada's own war effort but also British purchases in Canada, through the repatriation of Canadian securities. There must be no profitable patriotism in this great struggle. The Canadian people have the right to demand that these matters be dealt with by this parliament in a manner befitting the economic and social needs of war and of peace. If honest attempts are made to do so, then the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, together with all other loyal Canadian citizens, will cooperate to stop aggression; but if the government fails to grapple with these problems, the war will not be brought to a successful conclusion though our fighting forces win overwhelming victory abroad.

Let me say again that our group will do everything possible to facilitate the business of this session. We believe that an alert opposition is essential to the efficient functioning of democratic government. We do not know when this war will end. We believe that victory will crown the allied cause, but the end of the present war will create problems more challenging than any we have ever known. It is certain that whatever the outcome the world will never be the same again. In my opinion the balance of the lives of all members of this parliament will be spent in one of the greatest periods of reconstruction on a world wide scale that mankind has ever seen. That reconstruction will demand more intelligent planning and control than so far many of us have seriously considered. Now we plan for war; to-morrow we must plan for a lasting and enduring peace. How that enduring peace may be secured is a problem we must approach while war still rages. One thing is certain; enduring peace cannot be secured through the domination of one people by another or, in the narrower field of human relationships, through the domination of one man by another. Peace, when it comes, must guarantee that the way of life of one nation will not be menaced by another nation. This involves the elimination of exploitation both at home and abroad. While each nation must be free to work out its own destiny, it must be prepared to recognize the rights of racial and religious minorities within its own borders. This will involve, too, the renunciation of war as an instrument of national purpose, and hence some form of collective security must be devised. International disarmament must be a principal war aim, in order that there can be a transfer of disciplinary power to an international authority. In short, our aim must be social and international justice at home and abroad. To such an effort the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation will lend its utmost support and give its assistance now and in the days to

We join with all members of the house in hoping that the day will speedily arrive when the present conflict will end and the democratic peoples of the world once more will be able to live in peace and friendship one with another, and to banish from the world for all time the economic and social causes which have led to modern, recurrent wars.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this first debate at this most sombre moment, I feel greatly depressed, but at the same time, while this is perhaps one of the darkest hours through which the British race has ever passed, I believe that if we behave as we should and put our house in order, the God who has seen us through the perilous times of the past will come to our aid and guide us safely through this dreadful time.

Since we last convened in this chamber several events have occurred. Our late governor general, Lord Tweedsmuir, has been called to that nobler work beyond, for which his rich and varied earth life so abundantly prepared him. As a public man he was ever discreet and proper, yet colourful; quiet and [Mr. Coldwell.]

unobtrusive, yet noticeable; unaffectedly gracious and amiably dignified, whether distinguished in viceroyal regalia, attired in formal dress, or adorned with the arrogant costume of an Indian chief. At his death we were shocked; his loss Canada spontaneously mourned.

Since last we met, the world's war effort has intensified appallingly. Our enemy has given yet further proof of his strength, skill, organizing ability, courage and determination.

The Alberta people have returned the Aberhart social credit government. While to introduce this fact at this stage may seem incongruous, yet we of this group believe that this event is of tremendous significance to the future of Canada and perhaps even to the winning of this war. That occurrence has two meanings. The first is that an effectively substantial portion of the Alberta voters have confidence in the Aberhart administration, which stands for social credit. The second is that those voters believe that the principles of social credit are sound and that those principles, if introduced into the Canadian economy, would serve as a basis for an abundant life. Furthermore, inasmuch as the election was fought during the war, with the clouds of adversity, anxiety and fearfulness impending over us, the vote had a significance with respect to the war.

An election has swept the Liberal party into power, first, to win a war-and without conscription—and, second, to preserve Canadian unity. I mention these two facts because already, once on the floor of the house and several times in the corridors I have heard men attempt to interpret the Liberal victory in another manner, and to make it appear that notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) laid down these two aims as the issue, yet the Liberal victory had another meaning. It is suggested, for example, that the people believed in past Liberal policies or that the people particularly believed in the Liberals as a party, or that the people had turned their backs on various kinds of reform, monetary and otherwise. I believe any attempt to interpret the victory of the Liberal party in any such manner is a tendency towards delusion of the worst kind. Therefore I say it must be refrained from, if we are going to face the problems which confront us in the way the Prime Minister has urged we should face them. Let us have the facts at all times, and let us face them in a realistic manner.

Canada is still in a great deal of confusion. I find that the leaders are confused. For instance it was reported in the press that the president of our Bank of Canada not very long ago made a speech in which he urged the people to tighten their belts. At the same time we have been told by several agencies throughout the dominion that it is a dangerous thing for us to increase our production too far, in certain commodities. I refer particularly to wheat.

Having been urged to increase our production in respect of other commodities, such as pork, we have found, within a few months, that we are in danger of having an oversupply. Strange indeed for war time!

To tighten the belt is to indicate that we are to cease to use commodities. To tell us to cease to produce commodities is to tell us something diametrically opposed to the advice to tighten our belts. The result is that confusion worse confounded aboundeth throughout the land. To-day in Canada we have a surplus of grain and apparently a surplus of bacon. We have a surplus of apples, butter, tobacco and other commodities, and we have a great deal of unused capacity in our factories, mines, farms and forests. Yet we are told to tighten our belts. We have in Canada a wage scale which is a disgrace, and a condition which will stand as an everlasting condemnation of the generation which permitted that wage scale to develop in a land of abundance like this. Not only will the Liberals be condemned by future generations, but I say that every statesman of every brand who has had any control in this country since the turn of the present century will have like condemnation.

Yet we are told to tighten our belts. If we tighten our belts, how will industry sell! If industry cannot sell, how will it employ men? If industries cannot sell and cannot employ men, how can we possibly increase our production and thereby increase our real wealth? If we cannot increase our production and our real wealth, how can we pay our taxes? Further, how can we possibly build up a reserve of goods and goods producing power against a time when perhaps those who are now producing the wheat and other commodities needed by the world will be in such a position that they will no longer be able to produce so freely, and when consequently there may develop a tremendous demand upon our productive power to provide the very food and raiment which the soldiers will need in the conduct of the war?

These facts have to be faced by any group of intelligent men who are planning the policies which the country is going to follow to win the war. In the light of these considerations I ask how we can possibly get sense out of the admonition to tighten our belts. May I hasten to say I am not averse to saving, economizing and all that sort of thing; I was raised on that. Nevertheless we have gone into a different kind of age in which, apparently, something different from saving is demanded. Canada must make the maximum war effort; all hon. members agree on that. The only difference of opinion among us is as to how we shall bring about Canada's maximum war effort.

This country has great potentialities. She could be the determining factor in the war; and to the degree to which we manage or mismanage our country we may be saving or destroying the hopes of the British race, with all that that destruction implies. We have the resources; we have the industrial equipment; we have the railroads, and other means of transportation. At the present time we have man-power which to an astounding extent is unused. Undoubtedly our potentialities are great.

Everyone agrees that there is the gravest danger to the empire. I think there is no necessity to labour the importance of the British empire in the world. I am a firm believer in the British empire, the British commonwealth of nations, and I believe most hon. members hold similar views. I am a believer in the principle that nations have a mission to perform, and I do not believe that the British empire's mission has been achieved. I believe it still has things to do greater than any which it yet has done.

Regardless of whether or not defeat in this conflict would mean the destruction of the British empire, there is great significance to Canada, as Canada, in the conflict. As I see it, our nation has before it three pathways, any one of which she may choose to follow. She may choose to become more and more an integral part of the British empire, in which event she will become more and more British. Or she may elect to become independent and suffer a precarious existence, remembering for all generations the fate of that Holland, that Denmark and that Norway about which we heard so abundantly from our friends, the members of the Canadian Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, during the last four years, when those countries were referred to as the modern nations which had continued for a hundred years to be independent and neutral and had never had need of armaments. Or Canada may turn to the United States with the object of becoming an integral part of the great north American union under the leadership of the United States.

I am not going to comment upon the desirability or lack of desirability of any one of these three courses. However, I prefer the first one, that of becoming more and more British. Not that I mean that we shall lose our sovereignty in any sense of the term, but rather that we shall continue giving loving adoration and spontaneous homage to Britain's king and queen and to the common ideals of the British people, ready to stand or fall with them. I have indicated the significance of this conflict to Canada.

How are we going to make our greatest contribution to the empire? I fancy that there has been no disagreement with me up to the present time, but I feel that probably there will not be as much agreement with what I am going to say from now on. Before I commence to give my message I should like to read a few lines from the remarks made the other day by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), lines which I am glad he uttered and which I am sure he uttered designedly. On page five of Hansard of May 16 I read these words:

In parliament, particularly in most critical times like the present, everyone can make some contribution to the needs of the day, and indeed will be expected to do so fearlessly and to the best of his ability. To a great extent an opposition can help a government in shaping the policies which may be best for the administration of public affairs.

I read another excerpt as follows:

We will not expect to be exempted from criticism. Indeed one of the great functions of an opposition is that it may help to safeguard the proceedings of a government and that by its constructive criticism may prevent what might otherwise be in the nature of hasty or ill-conceived action, or what some might feel to be a lack of sufficient action.

Encouraged by those words I am going to attempt to offer my solution. In a general way Canadians seem to be much nearer the solution which this group commenced to advocate four years and a half ago. I think they are much nearer that solution in their concepts to-day than they were. They have been forced nearer to it and I think Canadians will be well advised if they do not wait until they are shoved into it. And before I proceed to outline my proposals I should like to talk in a strain in which a good many people are talking just now. We are told that we are to have a prayer Sunday throughout the British empire on May 26, which is next Sunday. I do not know how many members of this house solemnly believe in prayer-I do. I do not know how many of them solemnly and devoutly believe in a God who directs this world-I do. I do not know how many believe implicitly in the Bible-I do. I crave the indulgence of the house for a few moments while I speak in a religious vein.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

If we are to engage in an empire-wide prayer for victory less than a week from to-day, I think it behooves us to put our minds in tune with religious concepts and thinking. We are being told in many places to-day that we must repent, but I am not so sure that there are many of us who know definitely just of what we should repent. I am going to suggest one or two things in our national life of which it probably behooves us to repent. I think everyone in this chamber has heard over and over again this statement which should sound familiar to Liberals particularly: "Usury once in control will wreck any nation." Let us turn our attention for a moment or two to the question of usury. I doubt if anyone in this house is unaware that the scriptures solemnly and expressly forbid usury and forbid interest.

Mr. REID: It is not against interest.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to read just one passage from the scriptures. Having been browsing through the pages of the scriptures during the last few months I should like to read one passage from the several which I found. I do not know whether I am in order in reading a passage of scripture to the house; I have never tried to do it before, but I am going to venture it now at the risk of displeasure. Ezekiel, chapter 22, from verse 12, reads:

12. In thee have they taken gifts to shed blood; thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion, and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God.

13. Behold, therefore I have smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee.

14. Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? I the Lord have spoken it, and will do it.

If such a passage of scripture was not designed to apply to such times as these, then my power to think logically must be most deficient. I repeat these words:

Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee?

Some people say, "How can we get along without interest?" Since I came into this house in 1935, except for the members of the group with which I am associated and two or three members of the Liberal party, I have never heard one member rise in his place in this house and tell us how we can get along without interest. I have found very little patience manifested by members of this house when I have tried to show how we might get along without interest.

Mr. REID: I wonder whether the hon. member would answer one question.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I would much rather that the hon. member would raise his question after I have finished my speech.

Mr. REID: But I want to dispute the hon. member's statement that the Bible is against interest.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will the hon. member dispute this passage—

Mr. REID: I am disputing that the Bible is against interest, as the hon. member puts it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will the hon. member dispute this passage I have just read? If he wants to discuss the Bible with me, I will retire to my room with him after my speech, and I think he will come out a repentant man.

Mr. REID: Let me tell the hon. member that I will take him up.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We are going to have an enjoyable time and a profitable one.

Mr. REID: Anyway, the hon. member will.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes, and I am sure that my hon. friend will, too.

Now, we are steeped in interest. We pay interest on every move we make with money. At the present time, no matter how much the country may need it, or for what purpose, it is impossible to get money into circulation without interest. What behaviour as a nation!

In another respect we are to be condemned. We have accumulated debts. Anyone who has read the first five books of the Old Testament will remember how solemnly and with what care the Creator commands against the accumulation of debts, especially beyond fifty years. We have gone on allowing debts to accumulate for hundreds of years, and now the total has become so great that it is crushing us so that we cannot even conduct a war successfully.

In the Bible the Lord continually condemns the people of Israel for their stiff-neckedness. I maintain that a good many of us have been altogether too stiff-necked in refusing to listen to any possibility of a change. We have allowed poverty to grow to such an extent that it is destroying the very foundations of our nation. It is destroying our children, and discouraging those who would bring children into the world. Verily in that matter "there is no health in us." Surely the time has come to repent and to find out how all this has come about.

What must we in Canada do in order to make this country successful in war? Besides moral rearmament—the thing I have been discussing, for we must rearm ourselves morally by repentance—we must see to it that we remove suffering from this land. We must make Canada a land to love, a land that men will rejoice to fight for. Certainly one hesitates to put into words what ought to be said regarding conditions in this country at the present time. We must give aged people something like a chance. Imagine a man who has spent seventy years building up this country, condemned to live on $20 a month, to pay his rent and light and water, any doctor bills he may have, and then live! Think of the meagre allowance we give our mothers! Consider the way in which we deal with relief recipients! Think of the way in which we deal with our returned men! How, under conditions like these, can we expect the morale of a country to be strong?

Again, we must check the trend to autocracy. The hon, member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has commented on that matter. I believe that the defence of Canada regulations are simply a reflection of this tendency. It is one thing to say that we need stern regulations; it is another to prove that we need sterner regulations than England has. Why should we have section 21 when England has withdrawn that? Why should we have such sections as 27, 39, 39A, 62 and 63? Why should it be necessary in Canada to suspend the Habeas Corpus Act when Britain has not done so? Tell me who is the autocratic sovereign who has demanded of Canada that she should abolish the habeas corpus which we won hundreds of years ago? In those days our fathers wrenched that right from King John. Who is the modern King John against whom our generation should arise? He is not Hitler, or Mussolini, or Stalin, but his methods surprisingly resemble the methods of these three gentlemen. It is time that we revised these objectionable statutes. They are not at all in keeping with the general way of life of a democracy, and how can people who are aware that such laws are in force in this country, go forth with any kind of enthusiastic belief that they are fighting for democracy?

We must also rearm Canada physically. Some reference to that was made by the Prime Minister. In order to rearm physically, the first thing that we must do is to make sure that we have in our country a price structure which renders it possible for our producers to produce and live. I am going to read to hon. members some figures which will indicate what has happened to the western farmer since 1914. The Prime Minister reviewed not long ago some of the disadvantages under which we labour in comparison with the conditions at the beginning of the last war. Here are some prices which the western farmer is required to pay, as reported from the Searle index:

Article	Price in 1914	Price in 1938
Cream separators (500 lbs). Post maul 16 lbs. Barb wire 4 point, per roll. 1½-h.p. engine, each. Wagon, complete. Teaming harness, per set. Wire nails, per 100 lbs. Crow bars, each. Logging chain. Oil lantern, each. Grindstone, each. Sheepskin coat, each.	in 1914
Wool socks, per doz. pair. Underwear, Wolsey, per suit Shirt, grey flannel. Work boots, per pair. Gang plough. Seed drill, Double D. Mower. Bob sleds, 2½ steel shoe. Taxes, per quarter section.	3.75 3.75 .75 2.50 89.50 143.00 89.50 24.40 20.00	9.95 7.50 7.50 1.75 3.50 147.25 260.00 147.25 44.00 30.00

In the light of figures like these and many similar ones, I ask, how can men suppose the western farmer can produce, especially when he is getting lower prices for his products and is in doubt whether he will be able to sell his products at all? It is absolutely necessary for us at this time, if we are going to secure maximum production in this country, to see that there shall be such a price structure as will make maximum production possible. How this is to be done I am not going to take the time on this occasion to tell, except just to indicate this, that it would be impossible to accomplish it merely by legislation. This government last year set a seventy-cent-a-bushel price for wheat. It was going to do that by a subsidy or bonus. A subsidy or bonus must be used not only to ensure a price to the producer but to cut down the price to the consumer. People will ask, where is the money to come from? That is the problem which confronts us to-day.

May I ask once again the question which I was pleased to hear the hon, member for Rosetown-Biggar ask to-night. How do the members of this house suppose that the dictators succeeded in building up in seven years the colossal armaments which they have built up, starting from away below scratch in 1933? I am sorry the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) has just left his seat, because I was going to ask him how it was that Canada was unable to afford any money for the construction of armaments all through the period from 1930 to 1935, while the dictators at the head of absolutely prostrate nations, ruined and bankrupt in every way, were able to build up such terrific armaments that they are to-day the dread of the world. Will some one tell me where those dictators got the money? They must have a way of getting it. I am not saying that their way was the right one, but it seems to me that they did have some way, which is different from the one we had.

If we are to have maximum production in this country we must also have maximum consumption. People are not talking at all about how to get the people of Canada to consume more; our authorities are rather off on a tangent, in the direction started by the governor of the Bank of Canada when he told us that we must consume less. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we must learn to consume more. How are we going to do it? That is another problem, but I think it would be a profitable occupation for an intelligent committee of this house to study it for several months. Certainly it must be done and I am sure it can be done, especially in a country such as ours, where we must increase consumption. I believe we might be wise to consider possibly the bonusing of Canadianmade goods. Out in Alberta, where we are struggling with a great variety of handicaps thrown around us, and determinedly and meticulously kept there, we have contrived to give a bonus on Alberta-made goods, and the results, according to figures we have, are simply astonishing even to us who expected much. If this parliament could contrive to bonus Canadian-made goods so that our people could get them more cheaply, we would overcome a great many of the difficulties which now harass us.

There is another matter which I think we should consider and which the bonusing of Canadian-made goods brings to mind. We are to-day labouring under the grievous disadvantage of a high adverse exchange rate against our dollar. We are buying vast quantities of war supplies from the United States and are paying that adverse exchange. Surely no Canadian believes that this is a sound state of affairs. Is there no way by which we can overcome it? In the first place, we should contrive to buy fewer goods from the United States and to buy more Canadian goods. I know the stock argument will be raised: If we do not buy their goods, how can they buy from us? But if they continue to manufacture armaments and we continue to need them as we have done during the past few months, we shall have no trouble in buying plenty of goods in the United States. But what we need to do is to refrain from buying such of their goods as we can get along without.

There is another point. Even though we have already taken measures to restrict the outflow of capital of Canada into the United States, I believe that we are still allowing too much of our capital to be exported. We are buying too much life insurance from United States companies for example.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon, member, but his time has expired.

Mrs. DORISE W. NIELSEN (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, in rising for the first time to speak in this house I wish to express my regrets that the Rev. W. G. Brown is not sitting here beside me this evening, because, having known him, I feel sure that his voice would have been raised throughout this session in the interests of the people of Canada.

I find myself in the unique position of being the only woman member of this house, and I deeply regret it. It is a sad reflection upon us as a nation when, while over fifty per cent of our voters are women, we can have only one representative of our sex in this house. Mrs. Black and Miss Agnes Macphail have contributed greatly in the past in the work of this house and I very much regret that they are not sitting on these benches this evening. All through the ages we women unfortunately have been regarded more or less as the property of men. Because of that position we have been expected to be but the shadows of men, to reflect their ideas and to echo their sentiments. It is only within the last few years that we have become persons in our own right. And we have at last the courage to search our own hearts and to find there that we have ideas and ideals peculiar to ourselves. To fail to give expression to these ideas is to deny our womanhood.

To-day the one great question of war overshadows everything else; until now it has received more attention in this house than anything else. From a woman's point of view I should like to say this, that war does not always mean the same things to women as it does to men. To me war means broken homes, widowhood, fatherless children, destruction, agony and death. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, what have women to do with death? Our purpose in the world is to give life and to protect it. At this time, particularly in this crisis, I feel that the women of this nation must keep a sane and level outlook, and they must remember that in a time of crisis their great duty is to guard and to protect life.

Through these last years two great calamities have reduced the people of the west, some of whom I have the honour to represent in this house, to the point of destitution. The economic depression and drought have brought to our people in the west insecurity, fear of the future, heartbreak and hopelessness.

Possibly it has often been said in this house that the west has not received from this government the attention and the consideration that it should have received. I wish to stress that most emphatically. The farmers, if they had received the consideration of this government in past years, if they had received a just and fair price for their products, would have been only too willing to struggle on to be self-supporting. The farmers of the west are wonderful people; they have virility and vitality in the highest degree, yet to-day you find them despondent and hopeless, fearing to look into the future, because they dread the years ahead. This government, having in the past failed to solve the great problem of the west, failed to give our farmers a price which would enable them to be self-supporting, and failed to find employment for our youth, threw out relief as a sop to desperate people. I am not an advocate of relief; there has never been anything more demoralizing to our people in the west than relief, there has never been anything more calculated to destroy their morale, take away their selfrespect and sap their energy than this relief. Yet to-day and in the months ahead, if the basic problem of agriculture is not tackled by this house so that these farmers of the west can be once again self-supporting, then relief must be continued and it must be increased if the people of the west are to survive. I feel myself very much qualified to speak upon this question of relief, because for three years I have lived upon relief. I had to feed a family of five-listen carefully-upon $11.25 a month.

An hon, MEMBER: A dirty shame!

Mrs. NIELSEN: And I have often wished I had the wisdom and the ability of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) to help me balance my budget. Indeed, it is a task. If this government in the days ahead cuts down the standard of living of the people in the west by reducing their relief, it condemns them to slow and agonizing death, both physical and mental. It has already been agreed by those who are best qualified to study these problems that even before the coming of drought and depression the farmers of the west were not having a square deal or getting a decent living. Professor Britnell of Saskatchewan university has stated in one of his books that the people of the west have through these last years suffered unduly. I should like to quote from his book as follows:

Direct relief became necessary if starvation was to be averted, though the standard of living was often actually lower for the very large marginal group that managed to avoid relief, or for those who were just to be pushed on to relief, than for the actual relief recipients, though relief schedules have not been extravagant.

Indeed I, who have had to live upon relief, know that they were in no way extravagant. I would say to you, my friends—and I call you my friends because I cannot believe that hon, members on the government benches are men of stone; you are men of flesh and blood; you are made of the same texture as these people who are struggling in the west to earn for themselves a livelihood, to provide a home for their children; you are made of the same stuff as they-I cannot believe that you have not in your hearts that human compassion for your fellow men in times of such There is another kind of hunger. distress. Robert Service, the poet of the north, calls it "hunger which is not of the belly kind." I speak of that need which the people of the west have for culture which is their natural right as citizens of this great country. They are living to-day under conditions which make it impossible for them to avail themselves of those things which they should have. Again I quote from Professor Britnell. He said:

There's no music, no books, no contact with cultured, leisured world. One can't even window-shop. Dirty, tawdry little village stores—and even they are miles away. There is only an aching, bewildered body whose strength wanes and waxes and wanes again. Above all, beyond all, there is the loneliness. It is an everpresent, all-pervading thing that both agonizes and numbs the soul. Or have farm women souls? Gorgeous sunrises flare and flame, painting the eastern sky with their glow, reflected in the west. We glance at it numbly as we stumble out. It means the beginning of—another day.

I will not tell you any more about these things. Possibly you have heard them expressed many, many times. This is not hunger for food but hunger of the mind. I wish I could take you to our little schools. In the children of the west we have a vast reservoir of genius which as a nation we should be training and developing for the benefit of the world in the future. What as a nation are we doing for those children? To-day some of our little schools are even closed because we cannot afford to put teachers in them. Among those children of the west we may have girls and boys with the fingers of surgeons or the minds of scientists, who, if they were trained, might give of their knowledge to the benefit of the whole world, and who might help make the name of Canada famous among the nations of the To-day, however, if their mothers and fathers are unable to buy their textbooks and send them to high schools, those girls and boys go to work scrubbing floors and picking stones in the fields. Frustration is everywhere.

I want to bring these things to you, my friends, and once again advisedly I call you my friends because you cannot be insensible: you cannot be unaware of the need for us as a nation to guard our youth and all the virility that is theirs. There is also another matter in the west which affects us as a nation. Owing to our lower standards of living during these last few years another problem is coming to the front; that is, the question of the health of our people. In the west we have isolated districts in some of which the people may have to go twenty or thirty miles to get a doctor. In my travels through that north country I have come upon instances which may appear to you almost unbelievable. I have known cases where a father or mother, with a desperately sick child at home, has had to travel twenty miles or more in sub-zero weather, not to fetch a doctor but like a whipped dog to beg of a relief officer in an endeavour to obtain a permit to get a doctor to look after that child. These things are a reflection upon us as a nation. I have said many times that a chain is only as strong as its weakest link, and as a nation we are only as great and as fine as the most humble of our people. When some of our people are living under such conditions as I have mentioned, then we definitely are not a great nation.

Since I have been in this city I have admired the great memorial to the soldiers who gave their lives in the last war. From an artistic point of view it is a wonderful monument, which has impressed me very greatly. It is a monument of stone, a monument to commemorate death and the dead. In Saskatchewan we have living monuments to the last There I have seen returned men who, like driftwood cast up after the whirlwind and the whirlpool of the last war subsided, are now left on those desolate homesteads, uncared for and unnoticed. Since I have been in this city I have thought that I should like to bring some of those men here, in all their rags and tatters, and stand them around your great monument, to form a living testimony to the ingratitude of Canada.

This is undoubtedly a time of great crisis. Already the people of the west have realized that during this period they are going to be asked to make sacrifices, and they are beginning to ask themselves how they, who are so near the edge of destitution, can make yet another sacrifice. In their minds they are beginning to doubt many things; suspicions are beginning to arise. They believe, and I think rightly, that the last government failed to give them economic freedom; to-day they are beginning to realize that they no longer have civil liberties or freedom, and, as I say, this is raising great doubt in their minds. We have been told that the defence of Canada regulations are to be enforced to defend the Canadian people from subversive elements. The people of the west are beginning to realize that there is one subversive element in Canada for which those regulations do not provide. They know it to be the greatest of all subversive influences. It is poverty, and it has been at work among them for many years. Realizing these things the people of the west are beginning to question many things in their own minds.

[Mrs. Nielsen.]

In times of crisis, Mr. Speaker, as at all times, life must go on. Life is greater than death; it prevails and goes on into the future. Every day children are born. Every day people must eat. Every spring the seed must be sown, and every fall the harvest must be gathered in. In a time of crisis such as this we are sometimes prone to forget that life continues and must continue, else there is nothing in the future toward which we may look. I would say most emphatically that the time to consider the life of the people of Canada is not when the war is finished but now. Life must be protected now in this country. Although death stalks throughout the world and knocks at the door of every nation, life goes on. In this time of crisis I feel that as a woman, and particularly as the only woman in this house, even though mine is the only voice raised-and I sincerely hope it will not be-yet I must raise it in defence of and for the protection of life, the life of the Canadian people, because the people of Canada must have life and they must have it more abundantly.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the house for more than ten or fifteen minutes, but I believe the people of Ontario, together with the people of all Canada, believe that we have reached the darkest hour in the history of this empire, and we want a real war government. After all is said and done, leaving party politics out of it, we know in our hearts that in this war Canada has not done her duty to the mother country. Constantly for the past five years I have been drawing the attention of the Canadian people to the situation of the British empire and Canada, urging rearmament and cooperation and coordination with Britain.

On March 21 of last year, on a motion to go into supply, I read a list of commitments made by the government of Great Britain to several countries in Europe; I pointed out that automatically those commitments meant that within a few months there would be a war, and that when Britain is at war, Canada is at war, and I asked, Whither Canada?

After Munich what was done? What did Canada do? I say Canada did nothing; it refused to face the situation or take the question of defence seriously. The government of the day had supported the pacifist and peace societies' movements, both in and out of the house. I say that in the country there have been three agencies which have been responsible for the people of Canada being, prior to the war, the worst informed of any of the overseas dominions in regard to defence and foreign affairs. One of those agencies has been the government of the day. It was responsible for declaring what the war policy would be and refused to give the people the real facts. Another agency was the press. While there have been some exceptions, I must say that in my opinion the press did not do its duty in the past four years in educating the public or in bringing to the attention of our people questions of defence. Owing to a lack of leadership we have not taken the question of defence seriously. From a few weeks before the beginning of the war the press has done its work well and patriotically. Another agency has been the radio. I say that down to the hour of the declaration of war the radio supported the pacifists and led our people to believe that there would not be a war.

What have we in the speech from the throne? It is a meaningless thing. It has left undone those things which it ought to have done, and it is significant not because of what is in it but because of what is left out of it. What is the government's war policy to-day on this secret, limited liability war? Nobody knows. How about man-power? I say the party in power has sidestepped the whole question of man-power; both before and after Munich it has refused to face the facts. It has not taken the people of Canada into its confidence. We hear that to-day Germany has from 180 to 220 divisions, most of which are on the western front. No line of fortifications can last forever. A time will come, in fact I believe it has now come, when the allies will be waging an offensive because attack is the best defence. That was done in the days of Hannibal. No fortifications can last forever, and in that connection we are reminded of the operations of the Japanese against the Chinese at Port Arthur.

In spite of all this the government of the day has done little or nothing to support voluntary recruiting or to establish manpower, which is the most important thing in the war. Under methods of voluntary recruiting this country could have had 600,000 men in uniform by this time. What has been the policy of the government with respect to recruiting? So far as they are concerned this would seem to be a limited liability war. They have been conducting a secret war, and even from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) one cannot obtain any information. In season and out of season for five years in urging rearmament, I have tried to find out what has been done, and have tried to have papers produced.

What has been the government's policy with regard to recruiting? It has been one of on again, off again, on again, until to-day it is as hard to get into the army as it is to get into the Rideau club, and I believe there is a long waiting list at that club. Many men gave up their jobs and went to the recruiting offices to enlist, only to find that one division is overseas, that another will not be ready until next fall, and that they are not wanted.

As I said on March 21 last it takes a year and a half or two years to train a man and to get the necessary equipment and modern mechanized power. Two years ago in the House of Commons I suggested that the government should have a survey made of large and small industrial plants, to be ready for war and rearmament, so that if the occasion arose we would have at hand a proper survey of those plants to start work. Did the government adopt my suggestion? I asked not one but five or six ministers on the front benches if they would tell us anything about that report. We know now that right down to the hour of the declaration of war no survey was made. At the last, when I kept urging the government for action of that kind, it did send out some letters, but down to the hour of war nothing had been done for a survey of man-power, economic power, industrial power or food power.

I had hoped that in the speech from the throne something would have been said about the glorious efforts of the soldiers of France and about the mother country which has protected our shores. I should have thought there would be some reference in the speech from the throne to the Christian church and to Christian religion generally, because we know that Christianity is part of the law of England, and has been from time immemorial. I thought there would have been some expression of appreciation for the efforts of France, the nation towards which the eyes of the whole civilized world are now turned. In that land which is suffering terrible privation, trial and suffering, and which for the second time in less than a generation has been the scene of vicious fighting, we have an example of the most sublime patriotism.

I had thought, too, that some tribute would have been paid to the mother country. for what it has done for the people of Canada. Had it not been for Great Britain every town in Canada on the American seaboard would be blacked out, because all the liberty and freedom we have in this dominion we owe to the mother country. I say some tribute should have been paid to Mr. Chamberlain and to his successor. One of the most outstanding events in all history has been the inspiring leadership which in the past two years has been given by Mr. Chamberlain before and after Munich.

We must remember the views which have been expressed by pacifists in and out of the house. Canada has been one of the prime movers in pacifism, and urged Britain to scrap the finest army, navy and air force the world had ever seen. We cannot get that back in a day or a generation. That is what caused the war. We did nothing while Germany rearmed on loans from the allies.

Another cause of the war was the lack of action during the Ethiopian crisis in 1937. At that time I brought before the house an empire training scheme. There were many young men in the city from which I come who were anxious to give service at that time, but who had to go overseas in cattle boats at their own expense and who have won decorations. They went to England and enlisted in the Royal Air Force because they could not enlist in Canada.

If we had that air force to-day, the force which Canada rejected—and I have the papers to show that I brought this matter before the house for at least three years—we would not have had a war at all. During the first great war 18,000 air mechanics and pilots were trained in Toronto. The plants which operated at that time could have begun operations again two or three years ago. Had they been in operation they would have been able to give the necessary equipment to the mother country.

The record of the British government in eight months has been a glorious one, particularly so when compared with that of the government of Canada. I can say truthfully that I am heartily ashamed of what has been done in Canada in connection with the present war. Two years ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) if, in view of the mistakes made during the first great war and the submarine menace, he would establish food reservoirs in England. Did he do that? No, he did not. When we see what Britain has done we can thank God for four things: First, geography; second, the glorious Royal Navy; third, the glorious French army, which has protected civilization from the 200 German divisions, and, fourth, the Royal Air Force. I can say that the action of the British government, that of the Royal Navy in its campaign at sea, that of the Royal Air Force, which has taken command of the air by acts of unparalleled heroism, the close economic alliance made immediately with France and the mobilization of man-power, are activities which have been carried out in a magnificent fashion.

The government in England has had to face the gigantic and difficult problem of defence of the civil population. It has had to consider the organization of supply groups, the suppression of profiteering and a process of equitable distribution of food stuffs. Is it any wonder the whole world has been thrilled by the efforts of the mother country and has pointed to it with pride?

I put forward the constructive idea that Canada should find a way of making possible the impossible. In other words, where there are no barracks or implements of war we should do as we did before, namely, take other public buildings. If men have no uniforms, let them train without uniforms. If they have no rifles, machine guns or other modern implements of warfare, then they should do as has been done in France and Great Britain, namely, use dummies until the real weapons can be obtained. Instead of allowing these men to drift around with nothing to do, they should be given the proper training immediately. Toronto is the main recruiting district, and the other day I was given to understand that 169 men in the Royal Air Force were to be ready as pilots next fall. Some of these men are at the Eglinton barracks and I have seen a few of them working on a city dump on Lawrence avenue. I do not know what they were doing there, they were probably moving refuse stuff from the Eglinton barracks to the dump, but they are getting tired of doing work like this, because many have left good jobs. The same thing applies to the infantry units in Toronto. The men want to get overseas and not have inaction. This is not the way to fight Hitler. The government will have to wake up. We shall never beat Hitler and win this war if we leave it to Canada. The war would be lost before we got into it at the rate we are going now. It will take one or two years before Canada is ready to give any help to the mother country in trained men or aircraft.

We do not know whether this country is going to be invaded. I do not know and you do not know. None of us knows to whom this country will belong at the end of the year. We should bestir ourselves. We have not done our part. We have not done what we should have done. Because of the secret policy of the government, because of the limited liability war the government have been waging, the people of Canada have not taken defence seriously. The people of Canada have been kept in the dark with such ideas as collective security, pacifism, the league, the Monroe doctrine, and pan-Americanism. The Prime Minister visited Hitler and the day before the war sent back a cable to him: Use your influence for peace; do your duty to secure peace. We have been relying on Washington for our defence. Did not the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons that there would never be an expeditionary force and that the danger to Canada was minor in degree and secondary in origin?

The political executive of Canada have fallen down badly since the war started and the people now have no confidence in them. The people of Canada have not the confidence they should have. They do not believe that Canada has done all she ought to have done. I believe a mistake was made in the past year in not giving the people of Canada the full facts on defence and foreign affairs. Since the last great war we have not taken the matter of a defence policy at all seriously. There will be other opportunities to make remarks, but I did not want this opportunity to pass without something being said by a representative of the main recruiting district at Toronto.

There should be a shake-up in No. 2 military district. Men from all over Canada have been brought in there to command that district who are not doing their duty. They do not understand the needs of Toronto. Is it any wonder that voluntary recruiting has fallen down? There should be Toronto men at the head of that district, as was the case in the past. I received a letter from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) on October 14 to the effect that all members should take part in this effort. We have never been invited by the heads of that military district to attend a single public parade to see this federal work in Toronto. The members of parliament from the Toronto district have been ignored, probably because they are Conservatives. I do not want any invitations myself or urge this because my stand on defence and foreign affairs in this house during the past five years has been a non-party stand. I have urged that we should cooperate and coordinate with the British empire.

The minister has never visited or inspected No. 2 district. He can visit England, which was probably necessary, but under the terms of the Militia Act and Army Act he should visit the military districts rather than have some spokesman speak for him.

In conclusion, let me say that the way this government has carried on voluntary recruiting has been a mistake. First, they exempted large bodies of people, and then they exempted other bodies of people in the provinces. By their inaction and policy they are going to make conscription a live issue in this country before many more months have passed because Canada may be invaded. They will have to face the country on the question of man-power and munitions, on the question of food and on the way this war has been conducted. So far as I am concerned there will have to be a redress of grievances all along the line before supply is voted.

Motion (Mr. Lapointe, Lotbinière) agreed to.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the said address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Administrator by such members of this house as are of the honourable the privy council.

Motion agreed to.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That sums not exceeding $700,000,000 be granted to his majesty towards defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the governor in council during the year ending 31st March, 1941, for—

(a) the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada;

(b) the conduct of naval, military and air operations in or beyond Canada;

(c) promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk or in any other manner whatsoever; and

(d) the carrying out of any measures deemed necessary or advisable by the governor in council in consequence of the existence of a state

With provision also empowering the governor in council to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $700,000,000, as may be required for the purpose of defraying the aforesaid expenses, the principal and interest of any such loan to be a charge upon and payable out of the consolidated revenue fund.

He said: I am asking that the amount of $700,000,000 be inserted in this motion which appears on page 18 of the routine proceedings. I desire to say also that His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

LOAN OF $750,000,000

TO MEET LOANS OR OBLIGATIONS, TO PURCHASE UNMATURED SECURITIES, AND FOR PUBLIC WORKS AND GENERAL PURPOSES

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That the governor in council be authorized to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, an amount not to exceed in the whole the sum of seven hundred and fifty million dollars for paying or redeeming the whole or any portion of loans or obligations of Canada and also for purchasing unmatured securities of Canada and for purchasing unmatured securities and also for purchasing unmatured securities of Canada and for public works and general purposes.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator. having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I want it to be understood that the accepting of this resolution is to be subject to the reservations stated by the Prime Minister in his speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly.

Mr. POULIOT: Before it is adopted, I am under the impression that this motion has been mentioned, and we are on the same motion for the second time.

Mr. STIRLING: The first one is on page 18. This is on page 17.

Motion agreed to.

FARMERS' CREDITORS

AMENDMENT OF ARRANGEMENT ACT AS TO PROPOSALS FOR COMPOSITION, ETC., IN MANITOBA

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend The Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934, to provide inter alia that proposals for a composition, extension of time or scheme of arrangement may be made under the said act by farmers in Manitoba.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Church.]

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

EXTENSION FOR ONE YEAR OF INITIAL PERIOD DESCRIBED IN ACT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister, for the Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, 1937, to extend for one year the initial period described in the said act.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA AND THE WAR

MESSAGE TO BRITISH PRIME MINISTER RENEWING ASSURANCES OF FULL COOPERATION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I made mention of a telegram which I sent this morning to the right hon. the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and I thought it might be desirable to have it on the records of the house to-day. With the permission of hon. members I will read it:

Ottawa, May 20, 1940.

Along with my fellow Canadians I have heard your speech to the people of the commonwealth with feelings deeply stirred, and with profound admiration and pride.

This afternoon our new parliament will begin its consideration of Canada's war organization.
The members of the House of Commons which assembled on Thursday last, are fully conscious of the grave responsibilities involved in the mandate which they have received from the Canadian people. I am making a statement before our House of Commons renewing the government's pledge to put forth its utmost effort in the organization of the resources and power of this country for the successful prosecu-tion of the war. In this effort I know that the government will have the wholehearted support government will have the wholehearted support of the parliament and the people of Canada. In these grave and clouded hours I want to renew to you, to the government and people of the United Kingdom the assurances that have already been given to you and to your predecessor in office of the full cooperation of our dominion in the struggle against the forces of evil which have been unleashed in the world. We shall muster the utmost strength of this country so that we may make our full contricountry so that we may make our full contri-bution to the triumph of right which must and will prevail.

COMMONWEALTH AIR TRAINING

SUMMARY OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED KINGDOM AND GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA, AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND TABLED

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): May I table the summary 95826-5

of a memorandum of agreement between the governments of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand relating to the training of pilots and aircraft crews in Canada and their subsequent service. I table this memorandum in both English and French. The memorandum was handed to the press, I learned, early in January. It is the summary of the agreement which was agreed to at the time. The agreement itself has some clauses in it which do not appear in this summary.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The right hon. gentleman was going to give me personally a copy of the agreement. What I have is the summary.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a copy of this that I meant, but I shall be pleased to show my hon. friend a copy of the agreement.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

Tuesday, May 21, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

EUROPEAN WAR.

STATEMENT AS TO RECENT DEVELOPMENTS ON WESTERN FRONT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Before the house enters upon the business of this afternoon I feel I should acquaint hon. members with the situation as it is in Europe at the present time in so far as the government has information that may be regarded as official and wholly authentic.

The military situation in France has become more serious. The Germans, after breaking through the relatively lightly fortified line facing the Belgian border, were held on the south and east. They have, however, after a temporary slowing up, succeeded in making rapid headway toward the west and northwest, particularly down the valley of the Somme. Arras and Amiens are reported by the French authorities to have fallen. The enemy are striving to reach the channel ports and to cut off the Anglo-French forces in Belgium. The enemy have relied upon rapid advance by huge tanks and armoured cars working in close cooperation with diving bombers and followed by infantry.

It has not been easy for the allied forces to realign their forces and to devise new tactics to meet the unexpectedly rapid advance, but they are straining every effort. The British and French forces have done brave and effective work in attacking enemy bases and lines of communication. The morale of the French armies is unbroken, and the appointment of Marshal Petain and Marshal Weygand to the supreme direction has given new confidence. M. Reynaud, in his frank and courageous address to-day, declares, "These two great peoples, two great empires, cannot be defeated. France cannot die." This is the true voice of France. It is equally the voice of Britain and of the entire British commonwealth of nations.

The situation as it apparently exists at the front is changing from hour to hour, aye even from minute to minute. In this, probably one of the darkest hours in the history of our country and empire, we can, however, all take some consolation by reminding ourselves of the past. The Germans were at the gates of Amiens, and the British army separated from the French army, in March, 1918. The hour was grave indeed, yet no one thought of giving up the struggle. Then, thanks to the resiliency and buoyancy of the French character and temperament and the dogged determination and persistence of the British, the line was reformed, reestablished and held, and finally the victory was that of the allied powers.

That is all the information I am in a position to give the house at the moment.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I desire to thank the Prime Minister. I hope he will continue this practice of letting the house and the country know the worst or the best.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): May I rise on a question of order to ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) if it is his intention to make a statement on Canada's participation in the war, and if he will do so at the resolution stage of the war appropriation measure so that in subsequent stages of the discussion we may be the better informed?

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): I may say to my hon. friend that it had been my intention to speak while the resolution standing in the name of my colleague the Minister of Finance was under discussion, and I shall be very glad indeed to do so.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROCEDURE IN REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OR COMMITTEES FOLLOWING SECOND READING

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): If I am in order I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) if he will be good enough to clarify what he had in mind yesterday when he was referring to the proposal which he then made that after a general debate on the resolution to provide the moneys required to support Canada's war effort the appropriation bill would be referred to a committee or committees of the house. If the Prime Minister will refer to page 49 of yesterday's Hansard he will see the passages to which I have reference. Perhaps in order to clarify my question I might take the time to read them:

There should be a general debate on the resolution. We can then refer the appropriation bill to a committee or committees of the House of Commons in order that there may be disclosed to the members of those committees information which would not probably be in the public interest to place on the pages of Hansard or to broadcast in debate to the House of Commons.

Further on he made this observation:

I should like to emphasize that the setting up of these committees will not preclude in any way any member from debating any subject to which he may desire to call the attention of the house and the country, and I give my assurance to hon. members that the constitution of such committees will not be used as a pretext for concealing any information which it is in the public interest to disclose.

I have studied those two statements very carefully and they appear to me to be inconsistent. Reading the first statement by itself without reference to the second it would appear that the intention is to refer the appropriation bill to a select committee of the house, on which we shall be represented, and that there will then be disclosed information which the government may declare that it is not in the public interest to place on Hansard or debate in the house. That of course, if agreed to, and if we participate, would tie our hands and preclude us forever from using information so disclosed, whether or not we agreed with respect to the principle of public interest. On the other hand the second statement emphasizes the view that the setting up of a special committee or committees will not in any way preclude any hon. member, including I assume any member of the committee or committees, from debating any subject to which he may desire to call the attention of the house and the country.

If the information, or some of the information, given to this committee, is of such a character that it would not be in the public interest to disclose it, how is it possible that any hon. member can, if he so desires, use in debate the information so disclosed? The two suggestions seem to be incompatible and inconsistent, and before we are able to acquiesce and agree to act or cooperate I think the Prime Minister should clarify the situation. I invite him to do so; if he does not, we shall be obliged to review the situation further before reaching a decision one way or the other.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): May I say to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) that I am obliged to him for bringing immediately to my attention any matter concerning which there may be the slightest doubt in his mind as to the intention of the government. With respect to the appropriation bill, which is the one that relates to the war expenditure, the procedure is in the first instance the presentation of a resolution; the bill being a money bill has to be preceded by a resolution which is approved by this house. The resolution is debatable in much the same manner as the bill itself. The resolution with the permission of the house was introduced yesterday and is now on the order paper. On the motion to go into committee on the resolution, general debate will take place. In the debate hon. members are free to make whatever representations they may wish with respect to its subject matter. If the resolution is adopted it will then be referred to the committee of the whole, and while in committee hon. members will be free to question the government on matters respecting Canada's war effort on which they may wish to have information.

Some questions may be asked to which it would not be possible, and others to which it would be unwise to attempt to make an immediate reply on the floor of this house. Whether or not the government would be justified in the nature of the reply it might make will of course be apparent from the nature of the reply itself.

When the committee stage is concluded and the resolution is referred back to Mr. Speaker and is finally passed a bill will then be introduced founded on the resolution. The bill will go through first and second readings, and after the second reading will, if the procedure proposed is followed, be referred to a special committee. The committee thought of is a committee which will be composed of hon. members from both sides of the house. It will have the right and the power to call for the production of papers and documents and to ask members of the public service, including the heads of all three branches of the Department of National Defence, to appear before them. With respect to the appropriations that are being considered, such questions may be asked direct of the responsible heads of the defence services as hon. members may deem advisable. Obviously some questions will be asked calling for information which it might not be in the public interest or more particularly in the interest of the allied powers to have made public on the floor of this house or in any other way. Such information might, however, be imparted in confidence to members of a committee where it could not be given publicly. In saying this I hope my hon, friend and hon, members of the house will not think that the government would be trying in any way to withhold information which hon. members might wish to have and to which they are rightly entitled. Such information as it would be necessary to impart in confidence would be in the nature of military secrets and information that it would not be advisable to have given in a manner which might result in its reaching and assisting the enemy.

The government has left open for consideration the question whether it would be advisable to have one committee dealing with defence matters generally or committees to deal separately with the different branches of the service; for example, one committee to deal with matters relating to the army and another with the navy, and yet another with the air force.

I think I mentioned yesterday that it would be advisable that great care should be taken in the selection of the personnel of the committee or committees to which I refer. By that I mean that members of the different parties would be asked to select those of their number in whom they had the greatest confidence, having regard to the extreme importance of the matters which would be disclosed to members of the committee. That is not a reflection upon any hon. member of the house; rather it is a caution which it is important should be expressed by the government, which of course becomes responsible for all information that may be disclosed. would say, for example, that any hon. member who had been a minister of the crown would naturally be first choice. A next selection might be from among members who have had wide parliamentary experience or special knowledge of the branch of the service to which the committee would be related, the purpose being to have on each committee as much experience and wisdom as possible in safeguarding matters of great public importance whether such experience and wisdom were gained from long association with public affairs inside parliament or in other ways from outside, on the part of those who may be duly elected to parliament.

I do not know whether I have answered my hon. friend's question in full. My hon. friend did raise a question about members being free subsequently to bring up any subject for discussion. The thought was that many of the questions which might be mentioned in the committee of the whole on the resolution would be of such a character that hon. members would have to be informed at once, "This is a confidential matter which cannot be disclosed on the floor of the house." It would be expected that material presented in that light would be further discussed in committee with members of the staff of the Department of National Defence and would receive the confidence that should be given following such a statement. It is not the desire in any way to prevent hon, members from knowing all that can possibly be known; it is simply a desire to follow the practice which has been followed for many years at Westminster, of taking the house as fully as possible into the confidence of the government in connection with confidential matters, but doing so in a manner which will protect the public interest. If I have not answered my hon. friend with sufficient clarity, and he wishes to speak to the matter further, perhaps he will do so. I may add that I shall, as mentioned yesterday, be only too happy to confer with my hon. friend and with the leaders of other groups in the house concerning the proposal before we move to have the appropriation bill referred to any committee.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): With that understanding I am content.

SUPPLY

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): According to the rules of the house the first business to be taken up immediately after the motion regarding the address in reply to the speech from the throne has been agreed to is the constitution of the committees of supply and ways and means. Hon. members will find that standing order 57, which relates to that subject, is as follows:

The house will appoint the committees of supply and ways and means at the commencement of every session, so soon as an address has been agreed to, in answer to his excellency's speech.

These are the committees of the whole house. The committee of supply controls the public expenditure and the committee of ways and means provides the public income raised by means of taxation. In accordance with the standing order I move:

That this house will, at its next sitting, resolve itself into a committee to consider of a supply to be granted to his majesty.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I have no objection at all to this procedure, but I should like to point out to the Prime Minister that as yet we have not received the estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; the estimates cannot be before the committee of supply until the committee itself has been constituted, and at the moment I am simply constituting the committee. This is a formal routine procedure which is necessary at the beginning of the session. The estimates will be presented in due course. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) will be able to inform the house, possibly tomorrow, when he expects to have the estimates brought down.

With regard to war expenditures I may repeat to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) that it is of course intended to follow the procedure which has been followed in previous parliaments at a time of war. Those expenditures will be dealt with in the appropriation bill and will not form part of the estimates.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I thank the right hon. gentleman for that statement. I am not very familiar with this procedure.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That this house will, at its next sitting, resolve itself into a committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to his majesty.

Motion agreed to.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER

ELECTION OF MR. THOMAS VIEN, MEMBER FOR OUTREMONT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZE KING (Prime Minister): Now may I draw the attention of hon. members to standing order 56, which reads:

(1) A chairman of committees of the house, who shall also be deputy speaker of the house, shall be elected at the commencement of every parliament, as soon as an address has been agreed on in answer to his excellency's speech; and the member so elected shall, if in his place in the house, take the chair of all committees of the whole, including the committees of supply and ways and means, in accordance with the rules and usages which regulate the duties of a similar officer, generally designated the chairman of the committees of ways and means, in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

(2) The member elected to serve as deputy speaker and chairman of committees shall be required to possess the full and practical knowledge of the language which is not that of the Speaker for the time being.

(3) The member so elected deputy speaker and chairman of committees shall continue to act in that capacity until the end of the parliament for which he is elected. . . .

From this hon, members will see how important is the position of deputy speaker, or chairman of committees of the house. It is a very honourable position, requiring attainments and qualities on the part of him who may occupy the post very similar to those required to be possessed by the Speaker of the House of Commons. Indeed, the deputy speaker, as hon, members will have noted from the standing order, takes the chair at many times during the course of a session and may be called upon to substitute for the Speaker whenever the Speaker may wish to have someone take his place. It is obviously desirable that in selecting the one to fill this important office the house should make the best possible choice. The name I am about to propose is that of a gentleman whose experience in parliamentary affairs has been considerable. It is that of a gentleman whose known ability to fill any position of the kind is so familiar to hon. members who have been with him in this house in former years that I have not the least doubt that his nomination will meet with ready acceptance on the part of all.

The hon. member to whom I allude is Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Vien, the hon. member for Outremont.

Lieutenant-Colonel Vien has had a long association with parliament. If I recollect correctly, he was first elected to the House of Commons in 1917. He dropped out of parliament for a while, during six years of which time he held the position of deputy chief commissioner of the board of railway commissioners. In his position on that board he was afforded wide experience in dealing with questions which required a judicial temperament and impartial decision. He resumed the practice of law for a short time before being again returned to this House of Commons. Lieutenant-Colonel Vien has been a member of the Commons for, in all, about thirteen years. In that period of time he frequently was asked to preside as chairman of committees and in the absence of His Honour the Speaker and the deputy speaker to occupy the Speaker's chair. As a presiding officer, in a temporary capacity and as chairman of standing committees of the house, he earned a high reputation for fairness and a judicial demeanour. We all know in what measure he possesses those qualities of courtesy which are a traditional characteristic of gentlemen of his race. His facility in both of the official languages of the house is a most valuable personal and public asset.

I mention these qualities in order that hon. members on all sides of the house may know in advance why I believe that, if chosen as Deputy Speaker, not only will Mr. Vien do great credit to the position and honour to himself, but as I believe you, sir, as Speaker are doing at the present time, will reflect honour upon the House of Commons itself.

I move, therefore:

That Thomas Vien, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Outremont, be appointed chairman of committees of the whole house.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE FOR GOVERNMENT BUSINESS ON AND AFTER WEDNESDAY, MAY 22

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That on and after Wednesday the 22nd May, 1940, to the end of the present session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence at every sitting over all other business except introduction of bills, questions by members and notices of motions for the production of papers.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose the motion, but in view of the fact that this is a war session I believe all parties in the house should act as one. In other words it should be our sole purpose to win the war; that should be our main and only business. While there are many domestic questions, in my view they should wait until the war has been won. I do not intend to oppose the motion, but it is my intention to assert the rights of a free parliament and a private member. I do that because under our constitution the private member is the connecting link between the government of the day and the electorate, and when he ceases to function, parliamentary government is at an end.

I hope the motion before us, if adopted, will not prevent criticism. I am not referring to criticism offered merely for the sake of criticizing. All hon. members want to see the government get on with its war work, but I trust that constructive criticism, or that which is based upon fact, will not be prevented.

Just a year ago we enjoyed the visit of the king and queen, representatives of monarchy. The visit showed the tremendous popularity of the monarchy and the decay and decline of the House of Commons because of the usurpation of the rights and functions of parliament by the executive. In my opinion we should assert the right to free parliaments, free assembly, the freedom of the press and freedom of speech. These conditions should continue, so long as they do not interfere with the prosecution of the war.

We need not be ashamed of the record of private members in the House of Commons. In the last twenty years, while I have been a member of the house, the initiative for forward action has come in a large degree from private members. They have taken the initiative with respect to our national coal supply, rearmament, supporting the war and Great Britain. The war has come so close to us that no doubt the government wants to get along with its programme, and I want, as does the country, action. On the other hand I do not want parliament to become a paradise of inaction, coma and inertia.

The first order under "Notices of Motions" stands in my name, and relates to the advisability of adopting measures for the better protection of soldiers serving in the expeditionary force, with particular reference to the establishment of a system of life insurance for all soldiers. This is not a long motion, and its discussion would not take more than ten minutes. We have insurance on bonds, securities and stocks; why not have it on the men who are overseas fighting our battles for us? The United States had a similar insurance scheme for all its soldiers at the time of the last great war. So had the city of Toronto.

It will be understood of course that I am not now discussing the resolution. Paragraph (b) deals with a transportation allowance for soldiers in Canada. We know the government pays for automobiles for some of its military district officers, and I believe our soldiers are entitled to the consideration I propose. Paragraph (c) of the resolution has to do with the guarding of public property. The last parliament placed responsibility on the municipalities, and the suggestion is that it should be that of the federal authorities.

While I am not opposing the motion I hope that in passing it we will not be turning the House of Commons, this free parliament, into a body of yes-men and nodders. We ought to use great care, because it is yes-men and nodders who caused this war and the surrender to tyranny of Germany and Italy. We must be careful not to interfere with the rights and privileges of members of parliament who are sent here. Burke has said of a private member that his wisdom, his knowledge, his mature judgment he does not derive from parliament or the law of the land. It is a trust from Providence, and for such he will later be held accountable.

We should be extremely careful in this new parliament, because the last one was criticized for its lack of action. There are eighty-five new members with us, and we ought to use great care when we are considering the taking away of their rights and privileges and functions, which they may not realize are being taken from them. First I have to consider the rule of anticipation, a rule which, when a matter has by a reference been referred to a committee, prevents one from dealing with a problem until the report of the committee is before the house. I would point out, however, that twenty or thirty important resolutions stand in the names of private members, and that those resolutions in the past have given governments useful ideas. The government rejected for nearly ten years my motion for a national fuel policy, but at the end of that time on the eve of an election they have not been slow to accept and adopt the suggestion. They have not hesitated to say then, "We did this" or "We did that."

In my view the House of Commons should sit longer hours and in the mornings and, at least in the first week or two there should be an hour for the discussion of private members' resolutions. If that opportunity is not given, I hope the government will answer through process of ordinary question and answer, and that attached to answers will be an indication of policies proposed in regard to these private members' proposals.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on this motion on behalf of the group with which I am associated. We wish to do everything possible to facilitate the business of the house. We believe that in the crisis which we now face the government should have the right of way with its business, but we want it to be clearly understood that we do not think that this should be allowed to become a precedent at any time. We would suggest that at a later date, when the urgent business has been transacted, some of these resolutions might be allowed to come before the house and be given consideration.

It is now almost a year since parliament met in regular session. During that time we have had a general election, and those of us who are in our seats this afternoon have just come from the electorate. There are certain problems that we have been asked to bring before the House of Commons by way of resolution. While we are not objecting to the government asking us to forgo this right because of the circumstances that exist, we would ask the government to provide ways and means later on in the session, when perhaps the regular business slackens-those of us who have been in the house know that at times, for very good reasons, government business is not ready for the house—for the consideration of these private members' resolutions. Perhaps an alteration in the rules would make possible the consideration of some of these resolutions.

On behalf of the group with which I am associated I want to reiterate that we wish to do all we can to facilitate the business of the house, but we also want to maintain the right of a private member to discuss the matters which the electors have requested should be brought forward by member's resolution.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on this motion, although hon. members have in some respects anticipated what I had intended to say; perhaps I was not sufficiently alert. I appreciate the desire of the government to get on with the business of the country at this time, especially after what we have heard to-day and what we have been hearing for the last two or three days from the front. I do not think there is any disposition on the part of anyone to retard the business of the session for the sake of discussing, shall I say, what are more or less academic questions.

I have never had a great deal of enthusiasm for the discussion of private members' notices of motions. In the years that I was in the house in days gone by I never had the temerity to introduce one myself. I always thought that it was more or less a waste of time. Nevertheless I suppose ten per cent of the resolutions which have been put on the order paper during the last ten, fifteen or twenty years have served a useful purpose. Of that ten per cent, probably half have resulted in action in one form or another. I had hoped that the government would see its way clear to giving private members at least to-morrow afternoon. I still hope that the government will consider that. It would be a compromise and it would dispel any impression there might be in the minds of hon, gentlemen that they are being deprived of their rights and prerogatives. I just throw that out as a suggestion; I am not going to move an amendment to the motion.

There is one other thing I should like to point out. I hope this will not be considered as a precedent for future sessions. Private members have substantial rights of debate in this house and if they are taken away at this session, perhaps some future government, not next year but later, will say, "What is the use? We need this time; here is a precedent, let us follow it." I am not hopeful that the suggestion put forward by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat will have any effect on the government. As a matter of fact, as time goes on I believe there will be less and less opportunity for the discussion of private members' resolutions. If this motion is carried we may take it as an accepted fact that it is the end of private members' motions and resolutions for this session. I commend to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the government the suggestion I have made, that private members should be given to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express in as few words as possible my opposition to the proposal of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson), that we postpone the adoption of this motion, or at any rate not make it effective for a day or so. There is a strong feeling in the country that this government is too complacent, that it is not ready to go to work and that it has not been doing any work. Now the government proposes to put everything else aside in order to try to push forward its own plans. In the light of that, no opposition of any kind should be presented to the motion. It should not be delayed until to-morrow afternoon; it should not be delayed one minute. So far as its being a pre-cedent is concerned, so far as taking away the rights of private members is concerned, where the devil would your private members' rights be if we lost the war?

Some hon, MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MAYBANK: All right; I will take back that word and speak less feelingly; hon members will understand it. I share very largely the view that there is too much complacency on the part of the government, and this in spite of what I heard yesterday. I am not satisfied, and I want that to be known now. I would not interfere for one minute in any way with the prosecution of the programme of this government. Rather I want to see it put forward and got under way.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my group is just as anxious as any group in the house that the business of the government should go forward, but the expedition with which this war is carried forward does not depend altogether upon the speed with which we get through with this session of parliament. The government had plenty of opportunity to show its speed before parliament was called, and it will have abundant opportunity to do so after this session is concluded. Notwithstanding the consideration which should be given to this matter, I believe it is of the utmost importance that the individual members from the various parts of this country should have complete freedom to express the sentiments of their communities. I recognize that in this resolution all that is called for is that a committee shall be struck, and that—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Then I say what I have said already with greater emphasis. I was out of the chamber temporarily and lost the trend of the discussion. I do not feel well disposed toward limiting the opportunities of private members.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to say a word, because I did not speak on the motion itself. May I state at once how much I appreciate the attitude of hon. members in all parts of the house with respect to the proposal made by the government and the ready manner in which all have accepted it. I should like to assure hon. members that the government is just as desirous as they are that the rights of private members should be as fully preserved as possible. Were this not a time of war and were this not a war parliament; were it not the fact that at the moment the destiny of the great empire to which we all belong is at stake, I would not hesitate to try to meet my hon, friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson), in his suggestion that an exception be made of one afternoon for the discussion of private members' resolutions. However, with the situation what I know it to be, and as I have disclosed it to the house, I am sure that the people of Canada generally would feel that we had not a proper appreciation of our responsibilities in prosecuting Canada's war effort to the utmost, in the most rapid manner possible, if we did not seek every means to give precedence to the government's programme as respects Canada's war effort. For that reason I hope my hon, friend will not feel that I have not sought to meet his wishes. I am positive that it is in the public interest that we should make just as rapid progress as possible with the government's measures with respect to the war and Canada's war effort, and take up as little time as possible with other matters until progress has been made with these more urgent measures. May I point out that the resolution does not shut out any motion or bill. It simply gives precedence to government measures. Public bills will be introduced as usual and will be given their place on the orders of the day after government business, but they will not be considered after eight o'clock on Tuesdays and Fridays.

In making the motion which I have, we are but following the practice which has been followed at Westminster throughout the period of the war. In relation to the last session at Westminster, Prime Minister Chamberlain, on November 29, 1939, moved:

That during the present session government business do have precedence at every sitting and no public bills other than government bills be introduced.

It will be seen that motion went even further than the motion before the house. It prohibited even the introduction of public bills. As the positions have become parallel, I should like to read to the house what the Prime Minister of Great Britain said, speaking to the motion on November 29:

I told the house yesterday that the government intended to propose to take the whole time of the house with government business to provide for the presentation of government bills only, during the present session.

A little further on he said:

I propose to follow the precedents of the last war. In the sessions of 1914-16, 1916, 1917-18 and 1918 similar action was taken. At that time the then Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith, said that every effort was concentrated upon one purpose, namely, the successful prosecution of the war, and that the time was inappropriate to bring forward controversial legislation on matters of academic interest.

Mr. Chamberlain went on to quote from Mr. Asquith certain words which I should like to re-quote inasmuch as they express the present intention of this administration with respect to the matters to which they refer. Mr. Asquith said:

So long as this order is in force the government will introduce no legislation of a party or a contentious character and they will, indeed, confine their legislative proposals, unless in some exceptional case, to such measures as may be found necessary to facilitate, financially and otherwise, the successful prosecution of the war.

Prime Minister Chamberlain went on:

The position to-day is the same as it was then. We must confine our efforts to the consideration of those matters which are urgently necessary for the successful prosecution of the war.

I think hon, members will agree that in following the practice which has been followed at Westminster in this time of war, the government is making no mistake. Indeed, were it to attempt to depart from such a procedure in this all important time of crisis, it would I believe be considered remiss in its duties.

I should like to say one further word in reference to the word "complacency" which with respect to the government's attitude towards the war, has been used in different parts of the house and by a section of the press in different parts of the country, a word of which use was again made this afternoon. I hope that hon, members of the house will seek to appreciate the very difficult position in which the government finds itself with reference to making known to the public from day to day and from week to week much of the information which we should like the people of Canada to have. In the first place when the government did begin to broadcast information with respect to Canada's war effort-it made numerous broadcasts setting forth the work of the government with respect to the winning of the war-we were accused, and accused very widely as I recollect it, especially throughout the recent campaign, of putting forth propaganda. Any description of its war effort was increasingly characterized as an endeavour on the part of the government to popularize itself. That is one ever present danger that it is impossible to avoid in any statements made by the government with respect to Canada's war effort. On the other hand there is the danger, and it is a greater danger still, that in duly publicizing our war effort it is very difficult to give the information that the public generally might wish to have for its own use, without, at the same time, imparting that information in equal measure to the enemy. That is a circumstance of which the government has constantly to take full account.

I really believe that such impression as has been created in the minds of some that the government has been complacent in any particular with regard to its war effort has arisen from the causes I have mentioned. It arose first of all from the fact that during the period of a general election it was inadvisable to introduce into the discussions in a political contest fresh information from day to day with regard to what the government was doing. And since that time such information. for instance, as I gave to the house yesterday was of such a character that it seemed advisable to withhold it until parliament met in order that, if there was any question with respect to its authenticity or the fairness of its being made public by the administration, that question if raised could be immediately answered from official sources on the floor of parliament itself.

Now that parliament is in session, there will be opportunity for hon. members from day to day to question the ministry with respect to matters concerning which they believe the public desire information. Now that such information will be coming forward from day to day as a result of our parliamentary discussions, I hope that what I believe to be a wholly erroneous impression with respect to complacency wherever it exists will very rapidly disappear. I believe that hon, members who heard what I gave last night, of the government's record must already feel that any criticism of the kind has been wholly unwarranted, and would probably not have been made had the public been able to receive before last night the extent of the information which was given at that time. I mention this only because I feel that at this time of war, when the government is doing its very best on behalf of the people of Canada, it is hardly fair to Canada itself not to give the fairest representation to the public of the government's action, also that when the government is carrying the load it is, the government is entitled to expect as much in the way of legitimate support, as little in the way of non-constructive criticism, as it may be possible to give in the one case, and to avoid in the other.

With respect to the rights of members to get information on matters of interest to their constituents and to themselves, may I say that there is not a subject that I can think of that cannot be discussed frankly and fully on the estimates, or, as regards the defence services, or the appropriation bill. The estimates of the government cover all the public services. They will be presented to parliament, and as they are discussed in the house members will be free to bring up for discussion questions relative to items under consideration. The items as a whole cover, I believe, every conceivable category that has to do with matters of public interest and concern.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER PRO-CEDURE AND INTERNAL MANAGEMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That a select committee consisting of Messrs.

be appointed to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of this house in regard to a more expeditious dispatch of public business and to suggest any changes that may be desirable therein; and also to inquire into the terms and operation of the House of Commons Act, the Senate and House of Commons Act and provisions of other acts relating to the internal management of the House of Commons' affairs; and to recommend such amendments thereto as the committee may deem advisable; with power to call for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses and to report from time to time.

He said: As some hon, members have indicated by what they have already said, it is apparent that this particular resolution bears an immediate relation to the one that has just been passed. The proposal is that a committee of the house should be appointed to consider matters of procedure looking to a more expeditious dispatch of public business and to such changes as may be desirable therein. In other words, while the house has just passed a resolution giving the government the right of way with regard to government business to the fullest extent that could be desired, and to that degree may appear to be depriving hon. members in part of some of their rights, the proposal is that that whole situation will be reviewed by a committee of the house composed of members of the different parties, who will be free to bring back to the house recommendations which in their opinion are essential for the preservation of the rights of private members or for the purpose of making still more secure the position of the government with respect to expediting public business.

I do not think I need say more on this resolution except to observe that, as it stands at the moment, it does not mention the names of those who will compose the committee. If the resolution carries, however, I am advised that there can be no exception to the Prime Minister announcing later on the names that have been agreed upon. The resolution having carried, it will be assumed that the house will be agreeable to the names decided upon after conference between the whips. I believe it is better not to insert the names immediately as not to do so will afford fuller opportunity for careful consideration and conference in the selection of the personnel.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question but I should not like to be debarred from saying something on the resolution later on, although I do not intend to discuss the matter at present. Has not the government in mind something concrete which it proposes to lay before the committee, and if so what is it? I ask that question in order that we may know the reason for setting up the committee. Personally I have not heard a demand for such a committee to be set up, and I would ask the Prime Minister to be good enough, if he feels so disposed, to inform the house what the government has in mind, or what has actuated him in making the suggestion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The sole motive of the government in making the suggestion is to gain an opportunity to expedite the business of the house. The kind of questions that would be considered by this committee might be, for example, to provide for presenting non-money bills without notice and passing them through the three stages the same day. I do not say that would be a question which the committee, if appointed, would agree upon immediately, but they might consider whether it would not be one means of helping to expedite the business of the house. Another matter which would require consideration would be that of giving government business precedence at an earlier date; in other words, a reexamination of the resolution which has just been passed.

Another question might be that of limiting the number and kind of questions to be placed on the order paper. My hon, friend is an old parliamentarian and he has no doubt seen the order paper frequently filled with questions many of which might be asked in the course of discussion in committee of supply, questions that mostly serve to clog the order paper, and help to protract the proceedings of the house. My hon. friend, I am sure, has also seen the order paper clogged with innumerable resolutions often making it impossible for the most important resolutions to be dealt with before others much less important are reached. There might be adopted measures similar to those at Westminster with respect to resolutions, whereby a better method might be found of deciding which of them should have precedence, how many should be taken up, and so on.

Again, there is the question of appeals from decisions of the Speaker. There has grown up in the last few parliaments a practice of appealing from decisions of the Speaker, made with such frequency that it seems at times to make the rule of respecting the Speaker's ruling the exception rather than the practice. That is putting it a little strong, but the committee might well consider whether the practice of appealing from decisions of the Speaker, unless there is a very special reason for so doing, might not be restricted in some way.

Then, again, there is the right of ministers to amend their own motions. It is a very small matter, but I have seen considerable delay created in the house when a minister who has a measure before the house has to turn and find one of his colleagues to propose the desired amendment for him. That seems to me to be the kind of thing which might be regarded as unnecessary at this time, when we have very serious matters to consider.

Then there is the question of a possible change in the hours of sitting. I am not at all sure that I would wish to see the hours changed in many particulars. I think, however, that if we followed the practice on Friday of meeting in the morning and adjourning at six, instead of meeting at three in the afternoon and sitting until eleven usually with a slim house in the evening, that procedure might help to expedite the business of the house to have it attended to more thoroughly and also serve the greater convenience of hon. members. That is a good example of the kind of question that might be considered.

Again, there might be a standing order to curtail protracted debates. There are certain statutes concerning the business of the house that might be improved. A suggestion has been made that there are sections of the Senate and House of Commons Act with respect to the leader of the opposition and some of his perquisites or prerogatives—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I hope you are not thinking of curtailing them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —which might be looked into with advantage, I believe to him. There are some sections in the act that are now anomalous or obsolete that might be improved. The clerks of the house and of the senate, and the law clerks, might prepare possible improvements for submission to the government.

That is the presentation as I made it to my colleagues, and I wish to assure my hon. friend that there is no subtle device or aught that is at all devious behind anything that I have put forward or ulterior motive behind the resolution as a whole.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am obliged to the Prime Minister for having acceded to my request and given the house the concrete ideas he has in view. To some of these suggestions I think we can give most favourable consideration; there are others which I should like to ponder a little.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend understands that I am not putting them forward as government proposals, but only suggesting the kind of questions a committee might profitably consider.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I know; I am just making some general observations. There are others to which I should be definitely opposed. There can be I think no objection to the motion in itself. I cannot recall the year, but I remember that under Mr. Speaker Lemieux—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The year was 1927.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Thank you. A committee of this kind was set up, and my recollection is that some very good men were on that committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Hear hear. My hon. friend was on it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I was not thinking of myself, but I was thinking of Sir George Perley, a highly honoured and respected member of this house, who knew a lot about the rules for—shall I say—a layman. I think the gentleman who was subsequently Mr. Speaker Black was on that committee, and your humble servant. We evolved the forty-minute rule, of which we had high hopes. If the Minister of Justice was on that committee—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I was.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): —he will probably remember that he thought that by limiting speeches to forty minutes we should curtail the duration of sessions of parliament. I do not want to speak dogmatically, but my impression is that it did not have any such effect; more people spoke, and they spoke oftener. You cannot by any time limitation curtail free speech in a body of men composed of Anglo-Saxons, men who desire freedom of thought, speech and action. However, I would not go back on the forty-minute rule; it has had some salutary effects—we do not have to listen to such long speeches. But I am a bit fearful that some of the suggestions which the right hon. gentleman has made will have the effect of curtailing discussion. Of course the government can put things through if they want to, but if this resolution is adopted it will have the effect of curtailing the rights of private members and of extending the power of the cabinet and the executive. I know that in England they have had to do these things; the pressure of empire business is so much greater than the pressure of business here that perhaps they cannot give effect to all the desires of private members along the lines of certain social legislation which is being promoted from time to time. But I hope the government will pause before taking any step that would curtail the rights of hon. members of this house-I am taking as long a view as I can—and result in the aggrandizement or enlargement of the powers of the executive in the House of Commons itself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am astonished that even the suggestion of such a thing should come from a Liberal prime minister.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I would support this motion if I thought it would cause immediate action and help in getting on with the war. But I fear it is going to have the opposite effect. We in this house have been slow to see how the executive, known as the cabinet, have been usurping the functions and privileges of parliament. The present government got along without a parliament for a year less eighteen days, except for four or five days last September. We might just as well abolish parliament altogether if we are going to refer the question of war to the Minister of Finance's committee and stop any criticism of it. They criticize war mistakes in Britain and France.

The committee system has been weighed in the balance and, in my opinion, found wanting. We have had illustrations. What is parliament for? What are the functions of parliament? Parliament is a place where the people whom we represent can address their grievances to the government and have them dealt with by 245 members in this house. It is a place where the country can get facts, something they have not been able to get so far about this war; where they can get facts about government policy, about immigration, about trade and tariffs and finances and the way the country is run. There is no other place where the people through their representatives can get these facts and the government's explanation of federal policies. They cannot get them from the press or radio; they can get them only from one agency, where the press and radio should get them, must get them in part, namely, from the government of the day. Under our parliamentary system the responsibility is on the government of the day for laying down a policy, and their responsibilities and trust should not be shunted off on some committee or side show.

What is this committee system? We were told that if the Canadian National Railways estimates were referred to a committee we would find out the facts and have some control, but the big I's were not restrained, they kept on building big hotels and all kinds of branch lines almost to the sun, the moon and the stars. When you entered the committee what did you see? I went to the committee four or five times; they invited me once, and once was enough. Members sat around a table, more than two-thirds of them smoking the pipe of peace and passing everything—a whitewashing affair.

Now, if we are going to deal with the bill of the Minister of Finance about the war by referring it to a committee we might just as well close parliament right now, and there will be no criticism or redress of grievances. Think what criticism did in France, the glorious country to whom civilization owes so much to-day; how it speeded up action. are practical people, they know the world in which they live, they can appreciate the present struggle, they know what Germany is because they have lived beside her for thousands of years. In France they get reforms not by shunting things off to a committee but by the chamber of deputies taking them up and forcing the government to speed up the war on land, at sea and in the air before they grant supply. I am just referring to the committee system.

I had a resolution along the very same lines as this motion in the sessions of 1937, 1938 and 1939. It called for a committee to take up the whole question, in view of the foes within the country and outside. It proposed to reorganize our parliamentary system, our constitutional system, our cabinet system, our legal system; to bring our system of government up to date to meet modern conditions. This resolution proposes to amend the Senate Act. That is an old plank from the platform of the Liberal party—senate reform. Do they propose to refer the selection of senators to this committee? They were to reform the Senate; how did they reform it? They made it worse than it was before. It was proposed in this house in the dying days of the session in June last year that instead of the crush and crowding of the opening in the senate they should use this chamber for the opening day. But the government would do nothing. Now they propose to deal with the Senate Act. The resolution is not broad enough to deal with Canada's main domestic problem, namely parliamentary reform, constitutional reform, cabinet reform, law reform. In the old country they had reform of the House of Lords; we want senate reform and law reform. We are miles behind the old country all along the line. Four years before the war Britain acted and reorganized her parliamentary and legal system, with the result that she was ready.

I have seen some of the results of these committees, their reports received in the dying days of the session. What happened here three days before parliament closed one session? At eleven o'clock in the morning the then Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Power) brought in the report of the elections committee. The late member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) discussed the report and no one else was given a chance to say a word; the chairman got up and moved the adjournment of the debate and prevented further discussion. That was the last we heard of that report until an hour or two before the close of the session, when no one could speak on it.

See how we have dealt with the Canadian National railways. Once we divest ourselves of powers and functions that is the last of it. Very little was heard about the committee on agriculture or the grain committee after these references to committees. Another point is that when these matters are referred to these committees no action can be taken in this house because of the rule of anticipation.

This government has been very fond of the committee and royal commission method of dealing with these questions which should be dealt with in this house. It has been a favoured method of the federal government to postpone action on the very matters with which they were elected to deal, on which action was most imperatively required in connection with both domestic and external affairs. These committees and commissions achieve nothing; that is one reason why they are appointed. In any event they are only advisory and their reports to this house generally do not amount to anything. Here we have this commission on the constitution. which I am told cost $400,000, and the report will just go to the archives. Canada has had enough of these Pickwickian committees and commissions, all of which are instructed by the government as to their personnel and as to the scope of their inquiry. Many of these appointments are made for reasons of expediency, while some of the commissions are overloaded with professors.

We are behind the times in Canada. If something of this sort is needed I believe the government should adopt the resolutions I brought before the house in 1937, 1938 and 1939, on parliamentary, constitutional, cabinet and law reform, which would include senate reform. Dear knows senate reform is badly needed, when we see some of the appointments which have been made there recently for political reasons.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I have devoted a great deal of thought and study to the subject of parliamentary practice and have gathered a library of parliamentary rules embracing every parliament, legislative assembly and legislative council within the empire. I think perhaps my collection is more complete than any other here in Ottawa, even in our parliament. I will gladly place my collection at the disposal of any hon. member who would like information about the parliamentary rules of Australia, New Zealand, South Africa or even the legislative bodies of Jamaica, the Bahamas or any other part of the British empire. Once in London I approached a firm of publishers and asked if they would publish a book on comparative parliamentary procedure and practice throughout the empire. I left the manuscript in the hands of a reader who, when I returned after a few days, said to me, "Sir, the only way to have this published is through a foundation, because no one will read a book on parliamentary practice and procedure."

A few years ago, as a delegate to a small conference of the British Empire Parliamentary Association, I had the opportunity of addressing a few words to a meeting of that conference at Westminster, which meeting was presided over by Sir John Simon. I went on to explain the practices in the various legislative bodies of Canada and other parts of the empire, and told my fellow delegates that the most complete rules in Canada were those of the province of Quebec which had been prepared by Mr. Geoffrion at the time Sir Lomer Gouin was premier. Then a delegate from New Zealand rose and said, "What is the use of mentioning any number of rules? They do not count at all, because in every legislative body the main rule is the will of the government."

I believe it will be agreed that the text of a rule is not so important as an understanding of the British parliamentary tradition at Westminster. It is our duty as a parliament-and I speak for the Senate as well as for the House of Commons-to follow as closely as possible the British tradition which has been established at Westminster and which has been in force there for many centuries; but what is the use of aping it? There is a great difference. In this parliament we have two books; we have the rules of the house, which is a very thin book, and we also have a compendium which has been prepared by our common friend Doctor Beauchesne, the clerk of the house. As I have said, the rules themselves form a much smaller book than the compendium, but they are the rules adopted by this house. We are the masters of our destiny. I remember quite well when a dinner was given to my chief, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), at the Chateau Frontenac in Quebec city after the election of 1926. Speaking of the position of the Prime Minister in this parliament my right hon. friend said, "I am only the first among equals." In this house, Mr. Speaker—and I take this opportunity to congratulate you warmly upon your election as Speaker—you are the master. You can call the prime minister to order just as you can call the leader of the opposition or myself to order, should the necessity arise. Moreover, you have the responsibility for whatever happens in this house. Therefore in this parliament you are the first citizen; that is why you preside over our deliberations.

I am very much concerned about any change in the rules at this time. If the change is to expedite the business surely it is superfluous, because I never saw the address voted as quickly as it was this session. This morning I met people who asked me if it was true that the address had been voted last night. That was very expeditious. The house opened on Thursday; the address was moved on Friday; there was no sitting on Saturday or Sunday, and on the second day of debate the address was adopted. It cannot be more expeditious than that. Of course the house is free to change the rules if in these times they are found unsuitable. My fear is, however, that under the cover of patriotism some people who are not members of the house may take advantage of the war to improve their own personal positions.

There are many new members in the house this session, and I congratulate all of them upon their election. I believe that the average of the House of Commons in 1940 is better than that in 1935, although I must express my regret that a few members were defeated. Speaking in a non-partisan way may I tell new members that in the House of Commons the danger does not lie in the application of the rules; it lies in what is done outside the rules.

A moment ago I was referring to the rules and orders of the house. Those rules and orders are contained in a small book which has been divided into two parts, dealing respectively with public bills and private bills. Any hon, member wishing to get information concerning debate on public bills has only to look at the few rules passed by the House of Commons and contained in that book. To show how tiny is the understanding of those rules may I remind you, Mr. Speaker,-and probably you have not forgotten—that at times I have heard even ministers of the crown referring to rule No. 535 or rule No. 625, when in fact there are not even two hundred rules passed by parliament. Those references in Doctor Beauchesne's book are merely to quotations from authors who have written respecting parliamentary procedure and practice. They are not rules; they are references. They refer to quotations from authors such as Bourinot, May and others, who have summarized rulings given by speakers either in Canada or at Westminster.

One point I have never understood, and it is this: A member may say whatever he thinks is true. In saying it, he may use any language, provided it is the king's language, about any individual, with the exception of His Majesty the King, members of the royal family and members of the House of Commons and the Senate. I remember well that a former leader of the opposition used very strong language regarding a newspaper man from the west, and in the use of that language he was called to order and was sustained by the chair. I can remember that on one occasion, when Mr. Bennett was either prime minister or leader of the opposition, I made a statement which was denied by him, and I had to withdraw. There was no reason at all for my withdrawal. My word was as good as that of a millionaire, and in this chamber my rights were equal to those of Mr. Bennett or anybody else. In the event of an hon. member making a statement and that statement being denied by another hon. member, the hon, member who believes the statement is inaccurate has the right of denial. But the member who made it cannot be forced to withdraw unless he has used unparliamentary language or expressions which are not fit for use in debate.

Therefore, sir, we have before us the very reason why we should be most careful when amending the rules of the house. One reason is that the rights of any hon. member, whether he be a back-bencher or a front-bencher, a private member or a minister of the crown, are deserving of the most careful consideration. All hon. members have the same right in debate, and you, Mr. Speaker, must decide who is right and who is wrong. You cannot decide in favour of one against another simply because one is a minister or a privy councillor and the other is a back-bencher. That is only elementary justice and fair play.

Then, there is another thing to be feared in the House of Commons, and that is the atmosphere created at times. May I at this point congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) upon his appearance in the house. I am glad to see him here, particularly because he is so healthy, and does not pose as a sick man. Sometimes debate has been hampered because of sickness, and when we have approached a discussion in the house we have thought that we must be in the corridor of a hospital. One could almost smell the chloroform, the anaesthetic, the bandages and the iodine. That was the atmosphere in which we worked. One was tempted to believe that he was speaking in a hospital where there were sick men, and on occasions we have had to swallow everything because of that sickness. I know something of that—but I did not swallow anything.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Then there is the atmosphere of the pinktea room. I realize of course that the newcomers are surprised when they hear me make these statements. However they must be familiar enough with British traditions to know that every civil servant is represented in the House of Commons by his minister, and if a civil servant acts under instructions received from his minister, or in accordance with those instructions, then he must do it within the knowledge of the minister, and that minister is bound to defend him in the house or to resign his portfolio. On the other hand if it is within the knowledge of a member of parliament that in any respect any civil servant has been faulty, he is within his rights when he asks information from the government about such individual. We are the ones who are called upon to vote the salaries and at times without any explanation to vote formidable increases in already high salaries of civil servants. We must inspire in those individuals both fear and respect of parliamentary institutions. I tell the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), the new Secretary of State, (Mr. Casgrain)—whom I now congratulate—the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), my old friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mc-Larty), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) that among the whole gang of bureaucrats by whom they are surrounded they will never find anyone as true and as sincere as any member of the House of Commons, whether that member be on one side or the other.

At times the government may not like to listen to criticism from the other side or even from this side of the house. Ministers do not like to be contradicted. But I will tell you, sir, that no member of parliament can be elected by thousands of votes unless he has something to his credit. Moreover, each member on this side of the house is a bar of the ladder on which the government climbs to power. No bars, no power. Bars are small things, but they must be considered. The Prime Minister and his colleagues know the respect I have for them, but at the same time they know that discussion is impossible in this house unless you, Mr. Speaker, or the chairman of the committee of the whole, comply not only with the letter of the rules that we have, which I admit are very complete, but also with British parliamentary tradition, which I hope will be kept intact for the future in this country as well as in Great Britain.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I will leave it to someone else to clear the atmosphere or to describe just what kind of atmosphere we come out of when my hon. friend sits down. Considering the cloud under which we rest to-day we ought to be brought back most quickly to a realization of our responsibilities. I am thoroughly in accord with the suggestion that there be a more expeditious dispatch of business. However, I cannot just see how a committee which will call and examine witnesses and perhaps bring in a report at the end of the session can be of much use at this particular time.

Let us get on with the public business of this country, whether we sit Friday morning, Friday afternoon or Friday night. Let us sit all the time and get on with the business if there is business to be done. Let us get on with the government business of this country. Let us get on with the war effort of this country as quickly and expeditiously as possible without having these academic discussions as to whether or not a committee should be set up. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has been good enough to give us some idea of what this committee might do. What is the real object in setting up this committee? In my opinion its real object is to shorten this session. We have had too many short sessions.

The Prime Minister says that we should follow Westminster. Since this tragic war started, Westminster has not missed a month without sitting. Those elected to the parliament of Great Britain were able to examine the actions of the government and let the people know what was going on. How have hon. members felt since war was declared? Hon. members did not know what was going on and yet the people looked to them as members of parliament to let them know what was going on. Hon. members waited patiently from the time of the short session to the next very short session expecting that they would learn something, but there was an almost imbecile inactivity. The government now brings forward a resolution which will tend only to shorten the session. We should be sitting each and every month; we should be sitting through the hot weather, through the cold weather and at all times while this emergency exists. We are ready to expedite the business of the government in every way we possibly can, but do not send us home leaving everything for the government to do. That is not enough. The people of Canada must know what is going on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon, friend—

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): We are all disturbed at the news, but we in Canada are British and we can take it. We do, however, want to know what is going on. I will answer the question of the Prime Minister in just a moment. Let us follow Westminster and let us give the people an opportunity of knowing what is going on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was going to say to my hon. friend that if it will help us to get on with our war effort, and if he were prepared to end his speech, I would be quite prepared to withdraw the resolution. Rather than have any doubts as to the motive of the government in this matter, with the consent of the house I will withdraw the resolution immediately.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I have never been accused of wasting the time of this house and I do not propose to do it this session. I am quite in accord with the suggestion of the Prime Minister that he withdraw the resolution.

Motion (Mr. Mackenzie King) withdrawn.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

ALLEVIATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND AGRICUL-TURAL DISTRESS—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide assistance in the alleviation of unemployment and agricultural distress out of moneys appropriated by parliament, and for such purpose to supplement the measures taken by the provinces towards providing assistance to those in need, establishing unemployed persons in employment and training and fitting suitable persons for productive occupations, and also to provide financial assistance to the provinces by way of loan, advance or guarantees out of unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund, and for the appointment of necessary officers, clerks and employees.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is this the usual preliminary resolution giving notice of a bill?

Mr. McLARTY: Quite so.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is there any explanation which the minister desires to make at this stage?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. McLARTY: I think perhaps it might be better to do it when the bill is presented. This is a reenactment of the Unemployment and Agricultural Assistance Act.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Are there any additions or changes?

Mr. McLARTY: There are three amendments, but they are not of great importance. There is one amendment in connection with the preamble to the bill. If it is satisfactory, perhaps these explanations could stand until the bill is before the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say that this motion is not debatable; it is simply a formal motion.

Motion agreed to.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT

DISPOSITION OF MINES AND MINERALS ACQUIRED WITH OR UNDERLYING LANDS

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce an amendment to the Soldier Settlement Act to authorize the director of soldier settlement, with the approval of the minister, to grant to the original soldier settler the mines and minerals acquired with the lands, and also to authorize the director to dispose of mines and minerals underlying land not under purchase contract by an original soldier settler.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

PENITENTIARY ACT

REMOVAL OF CONVICTS FROM YUKON AND NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES TO GAOLS OR PENI-TENTIARIES IN THE PROVINCES

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Penitentiary Act, 1939, to provide for the removal of convicts from the Yukon and Northwest Territories to gaols or penitentiaries in the provinces, and for the payment by way of compensation to the provinces for the confinement of such convicts therein.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CITY OF OTTAWA AGREEMENT

AUTHORIZATION OF PAYMENT OF $100,000 FOR THE YEAR ENDING JULY 1, 1940.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources, for the Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Minister of Public Works on behalf of his majesty to enter into an agreement to pay to the corporation of the city of Ottawa the sum of $100,000 for the year ending July 1, 1940.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

SEEDS ACT

MEASURE TO EMPOWER THE MINISTER TO PRE-SCRIBE FEES FOR SEED CONTROL SERVICES

Hon, J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Seeds Act, 1937, to empower the minister to prescribe fees for seed control services.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION

ORDER IN COUNCIL OF AUGUST 11, 1939, TO HAVE FORCE AND EFFECT OF STATUTE

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of National Revenue) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide that the order in council respecting civil service superannuation dated 11th August, 1939, shall have the same force and effect as if sanctioned by act of parliament on the said date.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

WHEAT CO-OPERATIVE MARKETING

CALCULATION OF INITIAL PAYMENTS TO SELLING AGENCIES—AUTHORITY FOR PAYMENT OF LIABILI-TIES AND ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend The Wheat Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939, to provide for the calculation of initial payments paid to selling agencies, and also to grant authority for payment of liabilities of the minister under any agreement and of administrative expenses.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CREATION OF AIR MINISTRY—ADDITIONAL DEPUTY MINISTERS FOR MILITARY, NAVAL AND AIR SERVICES

On the order:

The Prime Minister—in committee of the whole—the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce an act to provide for the appointment of a Minister of National Defence for Air, at the same salary as the Minister of National Defence, to deal with matters relating exclusively to the air service, and also for the appointment of additional deputy ministers for the military, naval and air services respectively.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the resolution which appears in my name is one related to the appointment of a Minister of National Defence for Air. I should like, if the house would give its consent, to have this resolution expedited, passed and if possible the bill introduced to-day with a view to having the second reading of the bill to-morrow. If the house will give its consent to expedite this very important bill which has immediately to do with the prosecution of the war, I would like to move that the house do go into committee of the whole on the resolution at the present sitting.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask if the bill will restrict the duration of office of the new minister to the duration of the war?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it will for a definite period in reference thereto. Mr. Speaker, if the house consents, I move that the house go into committee of the whole at to-day's sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce an act to provide for the appointment of a Minister of National Defence for Air, at the same salary as the Minister of National Defence, to deal with matters relating exclusively to the air service, and also for the appointment of additional deputy ministers for the military, naval and air services respectively.

His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Mr. MASSEY: Mr. Chairman, if I might be permitted a brief word I should like to commend the government for the step they are proposing in this resolution. I think we all realize not only the gravity of the situation but the stress and strain which must be put upon the Department of National Defence as a result. We appreciate that it is obviously impossible for one man no matter what his capabilities adequately to cope with all these matters. The onerous responsibilities placed on the shoulders of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) cannot possibly be carried by one man. Yesterday afternoon we listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) as he laid before the house the present plans of the empire training scheme. It is my privilege and one of which I am proud to be an officer of junior rank of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and I have some very definite ideas in regard to the importance of the air training plan. I am sure that hon, members will fully appreciate that the air training scheme as at present in project and in course of development is one which will and must demand the full services of a minister qualified to cope with the extent of the plan itself.

I might further be permitted to say that as a result of my contact I am deeply impressed with the calibre of the men who are in the Royal Canadian Air Force, from the chief of the air staff down to the airmen and aircraftmen. One cannot help but be proud of his fellow Canadians when one associates with them as it has been my privilege to do. I have reason to make these few remarks only to commend the government for the step they are taking in establishing a ministry for air and to assure the Prime Minister that this step will be most fully appreciated by the Royal Canadian Air Force. I say this without attempting to belittle in any way any of the efforts of the personnel of the air force themselves. They are a magnificent body of men, and while we may be proud of the Royal Air Force and its personnel, I think it is well known that there are no pilots and airmen equal to Canadians, and they deserve the best that can be had. There is nothing too good for the Royal Canadian Air Force; there is no service which the government can render that can exceed its responsibilities to the Royal Canadian Air Force. It seems to me that the step contemplated by this resolution is one in the right direction, and I commend the Prime Minister for it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to express to the hon, member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) my warmest appreciation of the remarks he has just made. They are doubly appreciated, coming from him as an officer of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and especially as he appears in the house this afternoon wearing the uniform he does.

Mr. CHURCH: Will this particular bill be within the four corners of the empire agreement, and has the British government been consulted about it and consented to it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not quite sure that I catch my hon. friend's meaning about the four corners, but I gather that what he desires to know is whether this measure will apply to the administration of the British commonwealth air training scheme—whether that whole scheme will come under the administration of the air ministry. If that is the question, I answer yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: Are there to be three ministers of national defence in charge of naval affairs, air and the military service respectively, and three deputy ministers?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The present Minister of National Defence will be the minister immediately responsible for the army and navy. The minister for whom provision is being made in this bill will be immediately responsible for matters pertaining to the air service. The present Minister of National Defence, in order that continuity may be preserved in the administration of the department and to ensure the proper coordination of the defence forces will have a certain supervision over the entire services, and the final say where questions of policy affecting the relations of all three will have to be considered. I may as well mention immediately that the intention of the government, if this measure is passed, is to request His Excellency the Administrator to appoint as Minister of National Defence for Air my colleague and friend the present Postmaster General (Mr. Power). My hon, friend, as hon, members are aware has from time to time for many years filled the position of acting Minister of National Defence when the minister of that department has been absent from the capital. The present Postmaster General has been in complete charge of the Department of National Defence during the recent absence of the present minister in London. He is already wholly familiar with the work of the department not only as it relates to the air service, but also to the other services. The two ministers, happily, enjoy the closest of personal as well as public relations, and there will be, I believe, to each of them a distinct advantage in being able to confer together with respect to matters affecting the department as a whole.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

In the old country it has been found advisable at this time of war, where they have had three separate ministries, one for the army, one for the navy and one for the air, to have one minister take supervision of the three services. That function, so far as it relates to the proper interrelation of the services, will continue to be performed by the present Minister of National Defence. For many reasons I believe no better possible choice could be made for minister for air than the present Postmaster General. He has not only had the experience to which I have just referred in administering the affairs of the Department of National Defence. He has had wide experience in the administration of other government departments. He also, as we all know, served his country overseas in the last war.

There was a question asked by my hon. friend opposite; I did not catch his words. Did he ask me whether the bill would define "Minister of National Defence", or did he wish to know whether it would be confined to him?

Mr. MacNICOL: I was not very clear and I am not quite clear yet as to what is intended. The last line refers to the military, naval and air services, and I was wondering whether there was to be a minister for military services, one for naval services and one for air services, and three deputy ministers.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The question my hon. friend asks is whether there will be three separate and distinct deputy ministers, one for each department. There will be three deputies but only two ministers responsible for the three services.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mackenzie King thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 15, to amend the Department of National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That sums not exceeding $700,000,000 be granted to His Majesty towards defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the governor in council during the year ending 31st March, 1941, for—

(a) the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada;

(b) the conduct of naval, military and air operations in or beyond Canada;

(c) promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk or in any other manner whatsoever;

(d) the carrying out of any measures deemed ecessary or advisable by the governor in necessary or advisable by the governor in council in consequence of the existence of a state of war.

With provision also empowering the governor in council to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Addit Act, 1931, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $700,000,000 as may be required for the purpose of defraying the aforesaid expenses, the principal and interest of any such loan to be a charge upon and payable out of the consolidated revenue fund.

He said: I do not propose to take the time of the house for very long in connection with this resolution. The matter of the physical aspect of Canada's war effort was dealt with at length by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) yesterday, and I have no doubt that in the course of the discussion there will be full opportunity to obtain the fullest information consistent with the public interest with regard to the various phases of our war effort. Suffice it for me to come immediately, as the desire has been indicated from all sides of the house, to the business of the day, that is to present in a word or two the make-up of the sum which it is now suggested may be voted for the use of the government in connection with the purposes set out in the resolution.

The house will remember that, back in November last, I intimated to the public of Canada that the programme which had been laid down by the government and which had been announced, it will be remembered, within a very short time after parliament prorogued, was estimated to cost $315,000,000. After that there had been added a considerable amount. I think some eight or ten millions, on account of what we have referred to repeatedly as ancillary troops, troops which may be used eventually as corps troops or divisional troops; and in addition there had been added the estimated cost of the air training scheme, all of these for the first year of war, that is to say the year ending September 1, 1940. At that time I intimated that Canada's rate of expenditure during that first year of war was estimated to be about $1,000,000 a day. Since that time that sum has had a very progressive and sturdy growth. I am not asking for any sympathy in the position which I occupy in endeavouring to direct to some extent, if I can, the economic policy of this country and this government. But I do say that the sums which come to one for consideration and which have to be dealt with in connection with the provision of funds for our war activities aremay I say this at least?—somewhat larger than I have been used to in private life. They are almost overwhelming. This sum to which I have referred, which amounted to something like $375,000,000, grew so that when the estimates were prepared at the end of the year for the session which was to open on January 25, 1940, it amounted to, not $375,000,000, but $500,000,000. Soon after that I intimated in a public address which I made that I estimated that these commitments which were proposed would, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1941-if hon. members will differentiate that from the first year with which I was dealing, the first year of the war-amount as I said to not less than $500,000,000. Then some items of difference arose from factors which are difficult to estimate.

May I say there is the greatest difficulty in estimating the cost of military units because obviously it depends entirely on where the military unit may be serving, in other words on what the cost of maintenance may be, or to use a more brutal word, what the wastage may be; and the wastage depends on the degree of activity in which the unit is engaged. Officers of the Department of National Defence advised me that it was difficult to make estimates and they had to do the best they could by taking the rates of wastage which were being used from time to time, resulting from experience, in order to make up these estimates. The amount was roughly $500,000,000. Included in that were amounts for some other departments which were engaged in war activities. That amount continued to grow. I do not want to go into items at all; but I remember one item, it did not mean the provision of another division or anything which the public would know anything about, it was an increase in the establishment of the rifle battalions in the division. That sum alone, just for the increase of the numbers in each rifle battalion in the division, of which there were nine, amounted to between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000. I remember also there was a change in the engineers establishment, and although there was still a division, the changes made in that item amounted to about $4,000,000. I remember that a depot for mechanical transport—and there was nothing to indicate to the public that anything was being done; it did not show on the surface—cost about $1,200,000. I just mention these items to indicate some reasons for the increase which took place in the financial obligation.

In addition there was the announcement made by the Prime Minister in January that a second division would be going overseas, which meant an increase in cost, on account of the necessity for providing additional equipment, of something like $41,000,000. There were other items which I need not mention which increased the estimate to between $560,000,000 and $570,000,000. Then in preparation for this session the estimates were reviewed again, further additions were made, and the amounts-and here again I realize that they are estimates—were in round figures: for the army, $265,000,000; for the navy, $100,000,000—the Prime Minister used the figure $103,000,000; I think that is the more exact figure—for the air force, $100,000,000. and for the air training plan, after allowance for payments to be received from our sister dominions of Australia and New Zealand, the net cost will be, according to the estimates, something like $120,000,000, making a total of between $585,000,000 and $595,000,000.

Mr. HOMUTH: Does that figure for the air training plan include the capital expenditure on the fields and so on?

Mr. RALSTON: That would include the capital expenditure on the fields. The cost of the air training plan is lumped, as I think was said by the Prime Minister vesterday, at something like $600,000,000. I believe he was a little modest in that estimate, but there again officers find it very difficult, in forecasting a programme, to set down the cost of fields and buildings covering a long period. May I say here to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) that I have a great admiration for the air force. There is one branch of the force which I think excelled themselves; along with Air Vice-Marshal Croil, they took part with the staff officers from the air ministry of the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand in working out this plan and endeavouring to make the most effective programme and the best estimate possible. These men made no less than three different plans and estimates, necessitated by variations in the plan which resulted from the fact that Australia and New Zealand took over certain portions of the plan which originally were expected to be carried out here, but which they preferred to do at home, particularly in connection with the elementary training. This made readjustments necessary and required the preparation of completely new estimates. As I was saying, that amounted to between $585,000,000 and $590,000,000. There were also certain administration services.

[Mr. Ralston.]

And now, as the Prime Minister announced yesterday, there has been authorized the formation of a Canadian corps. I am sure there are many people in the country, and possibly some members of this house-and I am one of them-who did not realize and possibly do not realize yet what that involves in the matter of expenditure. The formation of a Canadian corps, as I have learned, is not simply the putting together of two divisions and having a corps headquarters. The formation of a Canadian corps means the augmenting of those divisions by corps units. By the way, I understand each division contains no less than forty units, although most of us think of a division as being composed of nine or twelve battalions with a certain number of ancillary units such as army service corps, ordnance and signallers, et cetera. As I was saying, the formation of a corps does not mean simply putting together those two divisions; it means the provision of a number of units known as corps units, which operate with the corps as an integral and cohesive body, which, if the two divisions were operating in another corps, would normally be supplied by that corps command, whatever it may be. When I tell hon. members that the additional cost due to the forming of a Canadian corps complete with all ancillary units does not mean just the cost of a corps headquarters, but means, according to the estimates given me, between $50,-000,000 and $65,000,000, they will realize that the decision which was made by the government involves a substantial further financial commitment. In addition, as the Prime Minister has indicated, it has been decided to mobilize a third Canadian division. The estimated cost of that third division for one year of service in Canada, in England and overseas, is in the neighbourhood of $38,-000,000. So that the $591,000,000 may be increased by about another $100,000,000, and then there are amounts to be provided for other departments for expenditures connected with the war.

It may be said that possibly this bill does not provide sufficient money. Those of us who are on the government benches know that as the result of communications we have sent overseas other suggestions have been made and other matters are under consideration by way of cooperation. At the moment, however, this $700,000,000 is the amount for which we are asking parliament.

I was indicating that it was difficult to make estimates in the matter of military units. Let us take one example in connection with the air force, which has been referred to by the hon. member for Greenwood. The initial cost of a fighting squadron, including pay and allowances for one year, without active operations, is $2,500,000; but the cost of keeping in the air in actual operations those twelve or sixteen machines depending on the sort of squadron it may be, is something like $10,-000,000 for the year. The initial cost of a bomber squadron is in the neighbourhood of $2,700,000, while the cost of keeping those machines in the air and restoring wastage for the period of a year is something like $23,000,000. So, as the house will understand, in estimating the cost one has to take some hypothetical figure and some hypothetical view as to what will be the degree of activity of that particular unit.

The house may wish to know the expenditures from September 1 to March 31. For this period the total payments on defence account were $112,000,000. The total payments to May 15 were $136,000,000. The commitments from September 1 to March 31, in addition to pay and allowances, amounted to $267,000,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Up to what date?

Mr. RALSTON: From September 1 to March 31.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Could the minister give us any break-down of that expenditure?

Mr. RALSTON: I have a break-down here.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not want to give the minister too much trouble.

Mr. RALSTON: I had thought those particulars might be given when the bill reached committee, but I am perfectly willing to give them now if my hon. friend prefers.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I will leave it to the discretion of the minister.

Mr. RALSTON: Then perhaps I can leave it until the bill reaches the committee. I have already stated that the commitments from September 1 to March 31 amount to $267,000,000. The degree of financial obligation which we undertook can be perhaps realized to some extent by comparing these appropriations with those for the last war. Please, Mr. Speaker, do not let anyone think I am making any invidious comparison between our efforts in the last war and our efforts in this war. What I am pointing out is that an entirely different situation exists to-day. In the last war our contribution obviously was largely represented by man-power. This time it is represented by man-power and machines; by a naval force of from 6,000 to 10,000 men as compared with 1,500 in the last war; by an air force, which of course did not exist at all in the last war, and by the air training scheme, which of course is entirely new. In the last war the appropriation that was requested by, I think, the Prime Minister of the day, who sponsored a similar bill, was $100,000,000. This year we are compelled to ask for $700,000,000 for practically the same period. May I add also, in order to show the financial obligations we have undertaken as compared with those of the last war, that to-day the dollar is worth more in terms of purchasing power than it was at that time.

I do not think I need go into further detail in connection with this resolution. I have tried to give a running picture of how the amount is made up and have indicated sketchily the differences in the various departments of activity in this war as compared with the last war. There has been some talk of red tape. I think my colleagues will agree, as I believe the house would agree if it knew the circumstances, that every endeavour has been made to shorten not only departmental but also official procedure in every way. In my capacity as Minister of Finance I have not hesitated to sign my name to authorizations which I believed would be honoured by this house and by the Canadian people, authorizations covering commitments extending beyond the first year of war and even beyond the first fiscal year, where that seemed to be necessary in order to promote, speed up or produce greater efficiency and greater economy in the production of war materials. Speaking of commitments, I think I should remind the house that the amount provided for in this bill does not by any means represent the total economic effort of Canada.

As the house already knows, we have endeavoured to assist the United Kingdom in connection with the purchase of goods from this country by providing here a market for the acquisition or, as we sometimes call it, the repatriation of Canadian securities held in the United Kingdom. This means that we are furnishing an internal market to take the place of an external market for those particular securities, and providing the funds necessary therefor.

The first operation provided for the repatriation of something like $91,000,000 in securities. I might say that since that time there has been a substantial accumulation of sterling, and only a few days ago I gave authority for a still more substantial accumulation of sterling on the part of the Canadian government, looking forward to a further repatriation effort which would be made in the not far distant future. In the meantime, as members well realize, that accumulation of sterling provides the funds necessary to assist in the purchase of Canadian goods.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Before the minister leaves that question, would he be good enough to explain a point to the house? As I understand it, these securities are purchased with government funds with the idea of disposing of them in Canada.

Mr. RALSTON: No; those are government securities which are redeemed. The particular issue with which we dealt before was one which was callable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Your own obligations?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I thought you were dealing with something along the lines of securities of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. RALSTON: No. They were dominion securities which were payable in England, and callable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): When the minister spoke in the first instance, he did not distinguish between our indebtedness and other indebtedness.

Mr. RALSTON: They were dominion securities payable in England, and callable. They had been registered, and were subsequently requisitioned by British authorities on our suggestion, and the Dominion of Canada provided the money necessary to retire them.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That clarifies the situation.

Mr. RALSTON: I am glad my hon. friend reminded me of that point, because there is another matter along similar lines I should like to mention to the house. I may say that in addition to that, in order to assist, notwithstanding our foreign exchange control regulations regarding the transfer of foreign balances held by non-residents, we concurred in the requisition by British authorities, shortly after the outbreak of war, of balances held by United Kingdom citizens in Canada. That provided further Canadian dollars for the British authorities.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury: That was their own.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, their own, and held by their own citizens. A few weeks ago we authorized an arrangement—and this brings me to the point mentioned by my hon. friend—whereby Canadian securities held by British investors were allowed to be sold in this market, subject to permit issued by the exchange control authorities of the two countries. This gave the United Kingdom government the benefit of the Canadian dollars provided by the Canadian market for the purchase of these securities.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Which would be at the disposal of the British government.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. In other words, it was the repatriation of privately-held securities as compared with the repatriation of publicly-held securities. As I have said, that repatriation programme means of course that that much more money has to be found in the Canadian market in order to provide Canadian dollars for the purchase price of those securities which previously had been held in the United Kingdom market.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course that is a refunding operation.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon, friend will understand that it was a refunding operation well in advance of our obligation to refund, and at a time when facilities for refunding are, in view of our war necessities, much more limited.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There might be a profit in the matter of exchange.

Mr. RALSTON: It is at a fixed rate, an arranged rate. I can say to my hon. friend without hesitation that our friends in the United Kingdom have been exceedingly appreciative of this method of providing Canadian dollars for their purposes.

One other matter I should like to mention is the suggestion which appeared in one of the morning papers to the effect that the entire payment of this year's war bill will be by borrowing. This bill does not mean that, by any means. I wish to assure the house and the country of that fact. It is true that in accordance with the last paragraph of the resolution provision is made for the issuing of bonds and the borrowing of any sum up to the amount stated. But that is only to assure us of adequate authority for that purpose. Our policy-and I believe it is the policy wanted by the people of Canada-is that which was announced at the first session after war was declared, namely, a policy of paying as you go, so far as that may be found possible. The system of raising funds for purposes of the war will be by taxing taxation, and then by borrowing any portion of our war expenditure which it may be found necessary to finance in that way.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the minister permit a further question? Has the government formed any estimate of the national income?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. Perhaps, however, my hon. friend would permit me to deal with that when we are discussing the budget.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course I am not trying to embarrass the minister.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand that. It will be understood that that question involves a consideration of the full commitments of the country, for both war and civil expenditures. I would prefer to deal with that matter when we come to the budget.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Very well.

Mr. RALSTON: I know my hon, friend and other hon, members will not expect me to go farther by way of mentioning the methods by which we will raise this amount of money, and particularly in connection with matters of taxation because that is properly a budget matter.

Mr. HOMUTH: Could the minister tell the house how much we may have to borrow?

Mr. RALSTON: No, I am not in a position to say that at the present time.

I have given a brief outline of what is contained in the measure, and the way the amount has been made up. We have been asked, and I have been asked, what the extent of our war effort is to be. I have said before and I say it to-day-and without any heroics it is said in the words of the speech from the throne—that the limit of Canada's war effort is only the limit of her strength and of her capacity. I am sure the government and the house believe that Canada wants to put every ounce she can muster into the war, and that in trying to estimate and appraise her capacity every true Canadian will approve the principle of not how little, but how much. It is in that spirit that we have approached the problem of providing funds for the war effort outlined yesterday by the Prime Minister. As I have indicated already, as a result of communications we have sent to the United Kingdom further measures are contemplated. I can only assure the house that if it is seen fit to give this vote of credit or appropriation to the government, it will be used in the best way which earnest men can devise, not in any spirit of complacency but as men who realize only too vividly the seriousness of the responsibilities resting upon their shoulders, in an endeavour to make as definitely effective a contribution as possibly can be made to the success of the cause which is at stake in this the greatest world crisis of all time.

Hon. H. A. BRUCE (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house readily acceded to the request of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to discontinue the time-honoured custom of replying to the speech from the throne because we were informed that we would have other opportunities. The consideration of this resolution to provide the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) with additional funds presents such an opportunity, of which I shall take advantage for a few moments. I may say at once, speaking for myself and, I feel sure, for my associates, that we will vote any amount of money asked for to enable Canada to make the maximum war effort and to get our factories busy with the manufacture of the implements of war.

Those of us who, like myself, are newcomers to this house enter upon our duties under conditions that are the gravest the parliament of Canada has ever been called upon to face. Even in the darkest days of the last war the danger to Canada seemed much more remote, and indeed was more remote than it is to-day. Canadians, in company with all right-thinking people of the world, are in the throes of a terrible awakening. Even in the long period of foreboding when the vileness of the nazi ideology and the ruthless brutality of nazi aims were becoming more and more apparent, Canadians were slow to visualize the menace that overhung the destinies of free and enlightened people. I fear even at the time when this new parliament was elected many were cherishing the conviction that the nazi danger was a nightmare that would pass away, so far as the British empire and the western hemisphere were concerned.

To-day we are beginning to recognize realities. Britain was and is our shield, but hour by hour the tidings show Britain to be fighting with her back against the wall. Easyminded persons who had said repeatedly, "the United States will protect us anyway," are faced with the sharp realization that the United States are themselves alarmed for their own safety. Their president has not hesitated to sound the note of alarm. All free peoples are face to face with a situation in which lethargy and half-hearted measures may mean their doom.

We, the elected representatives of the people of Canada in parliament assembled, have a responsibility second only to that of our soldiers in the field. Throughout this broad [Mr. Ralston.]

land the people who voted for us, aye, and the people who voted against us, look to us for concentrated effort and for comprehensive measures more potent than have so far been forthcoming, in behalf of our national security and in behalf of the cause of freedom, justice and Christian civilization. Ours is a sacred task, a consecrated task. God forbid that in future days it should be on the lips of any of our own sons to say that in this grave crisis Canada failed in her duty and failed to play her part manfully because of the weakness of her government, because of the weakness of her parliament.

An awakened people look to us now, irrespective of our party affiliations, to see to it that no stone shall be left unturned and no ounce of energy left unemployed to save Christian civilization in the death grapple in which it is engaged. I suppose that there is no member of this house who has not received messages asking, "What is Canada doing?" If by the time the present session ends we have not provided a full and satisfactory answer to the demand of the people, we shall indeed have a bitter ordeal to face. Every act of government and parliament from now onwards must be directed toward the single aim of helping to make victory complete, or we shall experience disgrace.

In common with many members of this house, and with Canadians from sea to sea, I welcomed the words of the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) when on Friday last he sounded a note of rebellion against the attitude of complacency which so far has marked Canada's dealings with the problems of this war. The hon. member, as by right, voiced the high aspirations of the youth of this country. And, let me add, he spoke also for a myriad of others no longer young.

The Prime Minister and his colleagues, as was natural, have received many congratulations on their victory of March 26. It brought them an immense majority and congratulations were no doubt in order, but let me warn them that those congratulations will speedily turn to imprecations if there is a continuance of that complacency. I have no desire to minimize the burdens the government has to bear, but I would be remiss in my duty if I did not dwell on the fact that it must now face an awakened public consciousness of danger that was torpid when the last parliament was dissolved suddenly in January. In March the people of this country voted blindly and without clear information as to what the government had done to maintain the great and glorious name Canada won for herself in the last war through the glorious efforts of her soldiers. Voting blindly, a majority of the electors of this country resolved to give the administration a new lease of power. It was a vote of confidence that embodied a great trust.

It is the duty of the government to see to it that that trust is not betrayed. Nor should it be forgotten that it was by no means a unanimous vote of confidence. Nearly 2,000,000 electors who voted for opposition candidates were clearly dissatisfied with the manner in which the military effort of this country was being organized and pressed. Since Hitler's blitzkreig in Denmark and Norway began early in April they have been more than ever dissatisfied.

Every member of the house, no matter to what party he may belong, is face to face with an electorate which is demanding a great deal more information than the government has vouchsafed to it and more information than private members have so far been privileged to receive. After eight months of war very few of us know what is actually the exact position of this country as a belligerent. In the press, in public assemblages, and on street corners questions like these are being asked: What has been done about recruiting since it became clear that Hitler had embarked on a total war? Was the empire air training plan which was advertised to the world last autumn pressed with all speed, and how is it getting on? How far have we advanced with the second division, which months ago we were told would shortly reinforce the first? Is Canada really mobilized, in both a military and industrial sense? When I was in my home city over the weekend I was asked questions such as these, and, of course, I had no answers to give. The sooner the government provides the answers fully and candidly, the better for the morale of this country.

It is interesting to those of us who sit on this side of the house that, through pressure of events elsewhere, the opposition has suddenly assumed great importance in the public mind. Though months ago many were talking as though critics of a government were unnecessary in times like these, now, on all sides, we are told that an efficient and vigilant opposition is necessary if the government is to be spurred on to the necessary effort. It is being impressed on us that our responsibility is a grave and patriotic one. I think I speak for my colleagues when I say that we shall endeavour to live up to that responsibility, under the distinguished and able parliamentarian whom we chose as our house leader and who yesterday justified the wisdom of our selection.

Dependence on our vigilance and patriotism is being expressed in many quarters. It is, I take it, a symptom of the apprehension which many Canadians feel. There is a much deeper realization that the task of winning this war for civilization will be longer and heavier and more difficult than many at the outset anticipated. The possibility that through lack of energy and initiative victory may be withheld is a thought that, while it may chill the hearts, inflames the energies of a people such as ours. The fear that Canada may be found wanting is a more intimate one. People are dismayed by the thought that Canada has not, so far, done its share to avert the fate which awaits all decent people in this world should the Nazis triumph.

The public demands assurances, not by promises but by action, that whatever sins of omission or commission may have occurred in the past, our effort shall be wider in scope and more intense in efficiency and resolve. True patriotism at the present time visualizes the Canadian nation as a young and virile people engaged in a righteous campaign for the salvation of all that is precious in human existence. There is alarm lest Canada has not been living up to the full glory of that picture. The duty that lies before government and parliament is to quell such alarms; to make our effort tally with that vision.

Canadians have not as yet had it made clear to them in what directions and to what extent they can make their contribution effective. It was hinted from governmental quarters that a different kind of assistance would be needed in this war. If the conditions created by new methods of warfare demand new and different measures, the public unrest should be quelled by knowledge of what the new requirements are. Why was the public kept in the dark so long? The government cannot escape the charge that its policies and administrative methods have aimed at keeping the lid on public enthusiasm. Let there be an end of this. In the face of hourly news from Europe, public sentiment is boiling over. An arbitrarily limited assistance in the face of danger is repugnant to all our thoughts.

A check has been put on recruiting. Men anxious to serve in any capacity have had it coldly intimated to them that this desire is misplaced enthusiasm. The government certainly has it in its power to create channels for the energies of those who wish to serve. Britain is making use of every man and woman available for service. Why does Canada lag behind? At least the government can provide camps for voluntary training where young men could find outlets for their patriotic ardour by drilling in their spare time. And who is so bold as to say they shall not be needed?

There is another point of paramount importance. While we must spare nothing to organize the most complete war effort of which Canada is capable, we should pursue a policy of rigid economy in respect of non-essential war-time work. This is a vital consideration. The people have been warned of the necessity for war-time thrift, but unfortunately there has been little evidence that the government is pursuing a like policy of thrift in non-essential expenditures. It is to be feared that political promises in connection with projects initiated in peace time but nonessential now, have overridden counsels of economy. This is no time to be building post offices and railway stations, when England is calling desperately for men, guns and aeroplanes.

The state of the public mind demands clear information as to what measures the government is taking to coordinate war administration and deal with the problems of military organization, problems which the cabinet has neither the time nor the technical knowledge to solve. I beg leave to suggest that there be added to any advisory board of military, naval and air experts that may now exist a small group of members of the Senate and Commons who have had war experience in the past. Such a body would, I feel, be of real assistance in coordinating our war effort and facilitating business. Moreover, I urge on the Prime Minister the early appointment of a Canadian Minister of Defence, overseas, who shall be in continuous consultation with British military authorities. This I believe is essential. The transatlantic telephone has its uses, but it cannot alone suffice in the present crisis.

In conclusion, let me say that I am speaking for the first time in a tribunal hallowed by the memories of public men who served their country during the past eight decades, men whose names are bound up with the history of our nation. In seeking election I had no political ambition, no interest but to serve the cause of helping to stimulate a total war effort by this country.

I said on election night that the government would have my support in all sincere and efficient efforts to achieve that aim, and, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that assurance on the floor of this house.

At six o'clock the house took recess.
[Mr. Bruce.]

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): As the first speaker from this side of the house to follow the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce), I should like to offer him my congratulations upon his initial participation in the debates of this house. I feel I can offer those congratulations no less sincerely because I dissent very strongly from some of the conclusions which he expressed in the course of his address. As members of the house are aware, the hon. member for Parkdale had a long and honourable public career, in the medical profession as a distinguished officer of our medical services in the last war, and later as Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. I am quite sure he will bring distinction and honour both to himself and to his party as a member of this house. Those of us on this side who must differ from him in his political views have the highest respect for the patriotic motives which prompted him to stand as a candidate for election to parliament in these troubled times.

Before I proceed with the main portion of what I had intended to say this evening, I should like to make an appeal to this house to avoid where possible anything in the nature of recrimination. Some idle words have been spoken in this house regarding the alleged complacency of members of this government in the face of the present crisis.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, before the crisis.

Mr. ROGERS: I wish to say to members of this house that no men, whatever their party affiliation might be, could hold positions of responsibility at this time without having a keen sense of duty and without being desirous at all times to put forth the maximum effort which this country can summon to the aid of the allied powers. I wish to rebut most strongly any suggestion of complacency or indifference directed against members of this government. After all, surely we can remember the issues at stake in this gigantic struggle. From the outbreak of war and long before, when with clear vision he saw how events were tending, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mackenzie King) has given of his utmost at all times to organize a maximum war effort on behalf of the Dominion of Canada. And why should it be otherwise? We know the issues at stake in this struggle; we know that our political freedom is in jeopardy; and I ask members of this house who are familiar with the history of Canada whether one who bore the name of William Lyon Mackenzie could be indifferent to those issues at such a time as this.

I turn next to my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). Has this house forgotten, has this country forgotten that not long ago the Minister of Justice risked his political future in order to bring a united Canadian sentiment behind a vigorous war effort on the part of the dominion? Has this house forgotten, has the country forgotten that in that crucial struggle which was essential if this country was to put forward a united effort, there stood by his side his colleagues from the province of Quebec, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) and the Postmaster General (Mr. Power), who is soon to be Minister of National Defence for Air.

I turn next to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston). It so happened that two of my brothers served under his command in the last war. Had it not been for a stubborn medical board I, too, would have served under his command. Is there a single member of this house who will charge the Minister of Finance with complacency or indifference in this war?

I turn next to the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar), who was a member of the Union government in the last war. Is there a member of this house who is prepared to say that the Minister of Mines and Resources would be less zealous in this war than he was in the last?

I turn to the members of this government who served in the last war—my hon. friend the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Mackenzie) and my hon. friend the Postmaster General—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And yourself.

Mr. ROGERS: Can it be said for a moment that those who form this government, those I have named, and every other member of this government, have not been as ready and willing to put their utmost effort into this struggle as any other group of men in any other part of this house would be under present conditions?

And so I would suggest to the house at the outset to-night, particularly in the face of the grave crisis which confronts us, that we try to concentrate upon those things that bring us together and put to one side for a while those things that must sometimes divide us. I find no fault with criticism; let there be criticism, but let it be directed to the policies of this government and not at any time to the motives of its members.

If I interpret correctly the mood of this house, there is no desire that any one at this moment should spend a great deal of time in a general review of what has happened in the past. I do not intend to detain the house at great length. Much of what I had intended to say has come to have little relative importance in relation to the great events which are taking place at this day and hour. At the same time, I did feel it my duty and I believe that it would be perhaps the wish of the house that I should make some report upon my recent visit to England and France as one who for the time being holds the position of Minister of National Defence, and should give at least in broad outline some of the measures which have been taken by the government in order to meet the present grave situation. I say I shall give merely an outline of this, because it does seem to me that no extensive review on my part would wholly meet the situation. I assume that within a short time this resolution will be before the house in committee; it will then be within the power of any hon. member to address to the government questions respecting those various aspects of the war effort in which he may be particularly interested. I cannot promise to answer at once all questions that are directed to me. I have not been able as yet to charge my memory with all that has happened during the period of my absence. I can tell the house this, that I feel it my duty as Minister of National Defence, to avoid giving any answer here unless I am convinced that the answer is accurate. I shall therefore ask the indulgence of the house from time to time when I say that I will take a question under advisement and will secure the information as soon as it can be obtained.

Yesterday the Prime Minister gave to the house a number of the decisions which have been reached by the government after consultation with the government of the United Kingdom in order to meet the urgent needs of the present situation. I wish first to comment briefly upon some of those decisions. Hon, members may recall that the Prime Minister intimated that the government have decided to advance the date of dispatch overseas of a second division of the Canadian Active Service Force, and also to advance the date of the dispatch of such further reinforcements of the first division as have not already proceeded overseas. I can tell the house that the United Kingdom government, having been advised of this decision on the part of the Canadian government, expressed its warm appreciation of it, and its readiness to facilitate as quickly as possible the movement of the second division to the United Kingdom. That does not mean, nor would I have it thought that it meant, that the second division will be able to proceed overseas immediately.

The transport problem is one of considerable difficulty. I simply tell the house that this decision has been received most warmly by the United Kingdom government. I also am in a position to announce that we have just received advice from the United Kingdom that a further contingent of Canadian troops has arrived in the British Isles. That contingent includes certain ancillary units and also further reinforcements of the first division.

The government have also decided to push forward the recruiting of reinforcements for the second division of the Canadian active service force, who will follow the first division overseas at the earliest possible date. As far as recruiting for reinforcements is concerned, that type of enlistment is carried out through the depots of the various divisional units, and the men proceed from these depots to the training centres and thence to the holding units for the reinforcements in the United Kingdom.

The government have also decided to form a Canadian corps in the field in accordance with arrangements which have been discussed with the British war office. As stated by the Prime Minister, this corps will include, in addition to all divisions, their ancillary units and the necessary additional corps troops, which will involve the dispatch overseas of several thousand men beyond those already mentioned. Instructions were sent out from the Department of National Defence to-day, following immediately after the statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday, that recruiting should commence at once for those ancillary units which will be necessary in due course for the formation of a Canadian corps in the field. It was also intimated by the Prime Minister that the government have decided to undertake the raising of a third division to be available for such service as may be required in Canada or overseas.

May I say that our method of recruiting during the present war differs in a number of material respects from the method of recruiting which was followed in the last war. At that time, as hon, members are aware, units were authorized, and commanding officers appointed, and these commanding officers were frequently entrusted with the duty of recruiting their units up to strength. Under a system of that kind, in the very nature of things recruiting was in a sense competitive, and perhaps had a certain appeal to our people because it was of a competitive nature. There are few of us here who cannot remember the recruiting meetings, the marching bands and the recruiting sergeants seeking men to enlist in their units. There is no doubt that such a method of recruiting had a strong popular appeal. At the same time I must advise the house that it is not a method of recruiting that fitted into the scheme of mobilization which had been worked out carefully by officers of the Department of National Defence prior to the outbreak of the present war.

In the present war, as members of the house are aware, each division includes a number of selected non-permanent militia units. The divisions once authorized, the non-permanent militia units once selected, become themselves as it were the recruiting centres for further enlistment. That course was followed with respect to the first and second divisions, and the same course will be adopted with respect to recruitment for the third division. I am able to tell the house that the military members of the defence council have been giving immediate attention to the selection of non-permanent militia units which will comprise the third Canadian division. They will be announced as soon as possible, but before it is possible to announce completion of the entire third division we may be in a position progressively to begin recruiting for various units as those units are selected across the country. I say this to guard against any suggestion that recruiting can begin immediately for the third division right across the country. As I said a moment ago, with respect to ancillary units that can be done and has been done. With respect to the third Canadian division we shall lose no time that can be saved in selecting the units and authorizing recruiting in all the provinces of Canada.

Other decisions announced by the Prime Minister were as follows: To assign at the request of the United Kingdom government certain naval and military formations to active duty in the Caribbean and north Atlantic area. I doubt whether it would be prudent on my part to expand this statement at the present time. As expressed, I believe it indicates clearly to this house and to the country that this government with respect to its naval and military dispositions has been and is acting and will continue to act in the closest consultation with the government of the United Kingdom.

It is also announced that this government will dispatch overseas No. 112 army cooperation squadron as a reserve for No. 110 army cooperation squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force now overseas. That indication of the intention of the Canadian government has also been received with warm appreciation by the government of the United Kingdom.

Finally it was indicated by the Prime Minister that the government are determined to adopt every feasible method of accelerating the output of pilots and air crews from Canada for service in the field at the earliest possible date. It was indicated by him that certain methods had already been formulated by the Canadian government both to accelerate and to supplement the joint air training plan in Canada in order that pilots, observers and air gunners might be made available more quickly for active service. Among these steps I should indicate particularly measures already taken to expedite the preparation of aerodromes and hangars in advance of the schedules which formed part of the British commonwealth air training scheme.

Before I leave this aspect of our war effort, and in particular before I pass from the extent of our military effort, I should like to place briefly before the house the actual number of men who have been enlisted in the Canadian active service force since the outbreak of war. The table from which I shall read is one which, with the consent of the house, I shall place upon Hansard. It indicates the expansion of our military effort from one period to another during the last nine months. First I come to the strength return as of September 6, 1939. If I remember correctly, this was four days before this government actually declared war, and while we were still in what might be termed the precautionary stage of mobilization. first division and units mobilized therewith numbered 5.588, and the second division, 4,030. Manning coast defence and anti-aircraft defence were 7,605, and guarding vulnerable points, 5,655.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): At this moment?

Mr. ROGERS: As of September 6, actually before Canada had formally declared war. The total for this precautionary mobilization at that time was 22,878. I come next to September 24, 1939, two weeks after Canada had formally declared war. The first divisions and units mobilized therewith numbered The second division totalled 19,176; 20.017. manning coast defence and anti-aircraft defence, 10,650; guarding vulnerable points, 6,161; miscellaneous, 813, or a total of 56,817 troops mobilized in Canada and either on duty or in training two weeks after this country was at war. By November 1, 1939, the total in Canada had risen to 61,639. This was the date when recruiting was resumed in all arms. The first division was followed by certain ancillary troops which were chosen to proceed with that division. On January 15 of the present year, the date set for the opening of training centres, 4,728 reinforcements were ordered in for training, as a first quota. In this connection I should say to the house that it is customary to send first reinforcements forward with the division. Generally speaking, those first reinforcements amount to ten per cent of the numerical strength; and this ten per cent, which as I have said constitute the first reinforcements of the various units, commonly remains at the base until required for the purpose for which it was enlisted. The figure I have just given, however, refers to additional reinforcements for the first division, who were enlisted here and were to receive a certain amount of training here before proceeding to join the first division overseas.

Since January 15, 1940, in subsequent quotas according to wastage figures and necessary training periods, the following quotas have been ordered to report to training centres:

							All ranks
February 1.							. 1,474
February 24
March 22
May 17							. 1,809
June 7 (ord
(or	dered	for	r 2nd	Di	visi	on)	. 1,308

So the total number summoned for reinforcement purposes, chiefly for the first division but partly for the second division as well, is 14,016 at the present time. Therefore I do not think it can be suggested by any member of this house that the government has been at all negligent in providing reinforcements for our first division. As a matter of fact, while I was in England a short while ago I discussed this question of reinforcements and asked if the number we were sending forward appeared to be adequate for anticipated needs. I was assured that this was the belief of those who have the military responsibility in relation to the first Canadian overseas division. I need not assure the house that if at any time the numbers here indicated are proved to be inadequate we will at once take the necessary measures in order to enlist the additional reinforcements and send them forward without delay.

This means that the first division has had its replacements due to pre-battle wastage made up, and by the time the division is expected to strike battle casualties there will be, in addition to the first reinforcements with the division, three months' trained reinforcements available, with others doing the required four months' training. In addition to this, the second division reinforcements will start training on June 7, and will thus build up the required reserve as in the case of the first division.

Between November 1 and February 18 isolated units were formed and personnel brought into establishment as policy demanded. The strength on February 18-and I am speaking now of the Canadian active service force—was 63,518, excluding the reinforcements already mentioned. On this date recruiting was opened to tradesmen and keymen for the second division, and by March 18 the strength, less reinforcements, was 64,501. On March 18 recruiting was opened completely in the second division and certain other units dictated by policy, bringing the strength on May 20 to 72,013, exclusive of reinforcements. The grand total on May 20 was 83,394 all ranks, of whom first division and certain ancillary troops totalling 25,692 are overseas.

I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that I would speak briefly of my recent visit to England and France. In doing so, of course, I must confine myself to those features of my visit which can be disclosed at the present time and which may be of some immediate interest to members of the house. I might say that my purpose in going to England at this particular time was twofold. In part it was due to an invitation extended by General McNaughton, and a pledge given by myself that if at all possible I would visit the first Canadian division before it should proceed to active service in France. Apart from that, there were certain questions outstanding between this government, and, more particularly the Department of National Defence and the several defence ministries of the United Kingdom government. There appeared to be a distinct advantage in having certain of these questions discussed at close range, as it were, in order that we might come to final conclusions. There was also a natural desire on my part, having regard to my responsibility, to see with my own eyes how the machinery of cooperation was developing in the United Kingdom.

Those of us who are familiar with events of the last war will recall that at times there was serious and even dangerous friction between the various elements of the Canadian expeditionary force. I had no reason to believe that such friction had developed or could develop in the present instance, in view of the close relationship existing between the highest officers representing Canada in the United Kingdom. At the same time I felt it would be extremely useful if I could confer with those who were charged with varying degrees of responsibility, in order to see to it that they in their work were attaining that maximum of cooperation which we would desire.

In the course of my visit I was accompanied by Major General Elkins, Master General of the Ordnance, and by Major General Odlum, who has recently been appointed as general officer commanding the second Canadian division. I cannot speak too highly of the services rendered during our mission by these officers. The Master General of the Ordnance had numerous conferences with the officials of the War Office and the Ministry of Supply. His assistance was also invaluable in the discussions between the United Kingdom government and myself in connection with the formation of a Canadian corps. I can also say to the house that his presence in England at this particular time has resulted in our receiving very full and detailed information on all questions of equipment and supply.

As hon, members are aware and as, no doubt, my colleague the Minister of Munitions and Supply will indicate at a later time, of necessity there has been continuous consultation between the Ministry of Supply of the United Kingdom and its Canadian and American agencies, and our own supply agencies in this country. From time to time we have made certain proposals to the government of the United Kingdom in the hope that some of our industrial capacity in Canada might be put to indefinite production of certain types of necessary equipment. Up to the time I left we had not succeeded entirely in obtaining that objective. We put forward the proposal, on what we felt was sound ground, that certain items of equipment for the first Canadian division were being supplied by British manufacturers-and necessarily so in some cases, having regard to the particular type of heavy equipment. We felt it only reasonable that we might be able to work out with them some kind of exchange basis whereby in return for these items of equipment supplied to us for our use we might supply items of equipment beyond the requirements of our own division, these to be taken in replacement for the equipment supplied to us overseas. I believe that as a result of our discussion a few weeks ago definite progress was made towards the kind of agreement we have contemplated. Having regard to events in recent days, one only wishes that such an agreement had been found possible of achievement some time before.

In addition to attending many of the conferences, Major General Odlum spent as much time as possible with the Canadian troops at Aldershot. In addition to that he proceeded to France and was in close touch there with the senior British officers on whom the responsibility of defending certain portions of the French frontiers have been placed. The experience he gained in this way will be invaluable, I am sure, not only to himself, but to the Department of National Defence. It will also be of distinct advantage in training and organizing the second Canadian division. Although I would not for a moment seek to claim any foresight in the matter, in view of what has happened in recent weeks it is peculiarly fortunate that General Odlum was able to visit Aldershot, to confer with General McNaughton, and to make certain preparatory arrangements for the reception of the second division there. It is fortunate that he has been able to see the conditions under which in due course the Canadian troops will be serving in France.

At this time I should like also to add some words of very sincere appreciation of the work being done by the officers and men of the first Canadian division, and ancillary troops, under the inspiring leadership of General McNaughton and members of his staff. I cannot use any other phrase which to me describes more aptly the influence which General McNaughton has exercised over the men of the first Canadian division. I would ask the house to remember that before the first division embarked it had been scattered across this country in separate units, as it were, and it did not have that opportunity of close association which builds up coherence and esprit de corps. General McNaughton actually served as inspector general of these various units in Canada, before they embarked for overseas. He did not assume his command until the division had actually been established at Aldershot in England. But from that time forward I know something of the tremendous energy and splendid vision he has put into the organization of this first Canadian division. I have felt that at the very first opportunity I should say to members of the house how greatly we are indebted to General McNaughton for the services which thus far he has rendered to this country.

I was fortunate in being able to visit Aldershot on a number of occasions and to watch many of the units undergoing training. Ceremonial parades were reduced to a minimum, and inspections consisted very largely of visiting the training grounds in the Aldershot area, and seeing the units of various kinds undergoing active service training. Infantrymen were learning gas drill, bombing, wiring, trench digging, bayonet fighting and rifle and machine-gun practice. Signal units were seen carrying out field operations. It was the same with medical units, artillery units, army service corps units and engineering units. All were engaged in carrying out practice work of the kind which will be required of them later in the field.

I was impressed, as any hon, member would be impressed, by the keenness and intelligence of our officers and men, by the remarkably fine spirit which pervaded all our units and the vigorous determination with which they seemed to wish to train themselves for the task which lies ahead.

I should like at this point to refer also to an incident reported already in this country, but which I think has become of interest and significance at this time. I speak of the inspection of the first Canadian division, particularly the 48th Highlanders of Toronto, by the Earl of Athlone, the Governor General designate of Canada. I was in Aldershot on the occasion of that inspection and at the request of General McNaughton was able to receive him on behalf of the Canadian government. In view of the distinguished military service of the Earl of Athlone in the late war, it seemed to me that he could have had no more appropriate introduction to his official duties in Canada than the inspection of those who now represent Canada overseas in this struggle for freedom. I might say that at the close of the interview I received a letter from the Earl of Athlone in which he spoke in the very highest terms of the bearing, fitness and keenness of the Canadian soldiers of our first division and ancillary units.

Later I had the pleasure of visiting No. 110 army cooperation squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force at its aerodrome in the west of England. As members of the house are aware, this is the first representative squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force ever to go overseas. I had seen the squadron before its departure from Canada and there were no doubts in my mind as to how they would conduct themselves in England. However, it was a real satisfaction to hear from the lips of the commandant of the district that this squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force had made an outstanding impression as the result of its training in the short period it had been overseas. Men from every province in Canada were to be found in the ranks of the squadron and they seemed to take pride in the fact that they were the first unit of the Royal Canadian Air Force ever to be in England. They are keenly anxious, as is this government, that they should be attached to the Canadian corps when it is formed.

I see no reason why I should not say to the house that during the course of my discussion at the air ministry I said that I felt sure it would be the wish of the Canadian government that this army cooperation squadron should cooperate whenever possible with the Canadian corps whenever such a corps should be formed in the theatre of war.

The air ministry gave me the assurance that whatever duties the army cooperation squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force might perform meanwhile as part of the British air component in France, it would be transferred eventually to the Canadian corps. It is intended that this army cooperation squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force shall serve in due course with our Canadian soldiers in the field.

Just before leaving, I also paid a visit to a squadron which is Canadian in the sense of origin but which is actually part of the organization of the Royal Air Force. Members of the house may recall that some time ago the air ministry decided that it would be of distinct advantage if Canadian personnel scattered through the various squadrons in the air force could be brought together to form a squadron which would be largely Canadian in its composition. That end has been achieved, and except for a few non-commissioned officers this particular fighter squadron of the Royal Air Force is made up of Canadians. The commanding officer, Squadron Leader Gobeil, is a native of Ottawa, and as I passed down the line and met other officers of that squadron I passed, as it were, across the Dominion of Canada from one province to another. The chief concern of the members of this fighter squadron was that they had not yet been called for duty in France. I remember that the last words of the adjutant to me were a request that I intercede with the air ministry to see that they were sent to France for active duty as soon as possible. I mention that simply as typical of the spirit of the men who represent Canada overseas at this

I have left the Royal Canadian Navy to the last because there were no elements of the Royal Canadian Navy in England when I was there. However, I should like to say that even in England I was made conscious of the splendid service that has been rendered by the Royal Canadian Navy since the outbreak of the war. This arm of the service has been more continuously engaged in arduous duty from the very beginning than has any other branch. I need hardly say that the work being done by our navy is absolutely essential to the allied cause. I wonder sometimes if we realize fully what it means to England and what it means to us on this side of the Atlantic to have the assurance of that life-line of commerce which has been made possible by the work of the Royal Navy and the cooperation of the Royal Canadian Navy.

There are those who sometimes are inclined to say that we put our complete dependence upon the Royal Navy. There was far more truth in that statement in 1914 than there is to-day. At the Admiralty, from the chief of naval staff and from more than one of the members of the naval staff whom I met in the course of my visit, I received the highest tributes to the work which the Royal Canadian Navy has done, particularly in the organization of convoys across the Atlantic. That only confirmed testimony of a similar character which I had received from time to time from those who represented the British Admiralty in Canada. I say this because the work of the Royal Canadian Navy may at times seem monotonous and uninteresting to those who are engaged in its work, especially when they hear of the British navy performing deeds of valour in European waters. But I want the country to know that our navy is carrying out its work of patrol and convoy with the highest degree of efficiency and also with that high sense of duty which has been the mark of navy men throughout the centuries.

Before I leave this subject, I should like to place upon Hansard some evidence of the growth of the Royal Canadian Navy in the comparatively short period since the outbreak of the war. Personnel: total strength at the tenth of this month, 6,614 of all ranks. This is being increased from time to time and it is expected that the strength will approximate 10,000 by the end of the year. I ask the house to remember, when it is suggested from time to time that our war effort is insignificant when compared with that in the last war, that the Royal Canadian Navy in the number of its personnel is rapidly approaching the strength of an army division. The same is true of the Royal Canadian Air Force. When the air training programme is developed we shall have, not the strength of one army division, but probably of three army divisions before another year is passed.

Of ships now in commission there are ninetyfour vessels of all kinds, including seven submarines. These include fifteen mine sweepers, anti-submarine vessels, fishermen's reserve and auxiliary vessels.

Ships under construction: There are ninety additional vessels under construction, including fifty-four patrol vessels and eighteen mine sweepers. Vessels are also being constructed for the Admiralty.

I see no reason why I should not tell the house that while I was in England I discussed with the Admiralty the terms under which two new Tribal class destroyers are being constructed for the Canadian government. The order for these destroyers has already been placed and a beginning has been made upon their construction.

[Mr. Rogers.]

As to the duties of the Royal Canadian Navy, it undertakes patrol duty on our own Canadian coasts and it is actively cooperating also on coastal patrol and the defence of Newfoundland and also in certain operations in the Caribbean. I have also mentioned its splendid work in connection with the convoy system, and in that connection I would point out that the losses under the convoy system have been negligible and the work itself has gone forward without any interruption.

I should like to say just a word or two regarding the formation of the Canadian corps in the field. In the last war the Canadian corps was built up gradually in the field. We began first, as we must now, with one division in the field. We provided that division with ancillary units; in due course a second division joined the first division, and later a third division, and then finally the Canadian corps was established. When in the United Kingdom I discussed with the war office the conditions under which the Canadian corps might be established in the field. I say that in order that the house may know that the consideration of the formation of a Canadian corps was not prompted only by the events of recent weeks. We made, I should say, most satisfactory progress in our discussions with the war office touching the formation of a Canadian corps. These discussions related especially to particular units of an ancillary character, such as artillery, army service corps, engineering and mechanically equipped units, which would be supplied in the one case by Canada and in the other case by the United Kingdom as was done during the last war.

In these discussions I was assisted particularly by Major General Crerar, who has been appointed in command of Canadian military headquarters in London. He, too, like General McNaughton, has given of himself unreservedly to the task of maintaining a continuous and effective liaison with the war office, and Canada has profited greatly from his ability, even as it has already profited from the splendid impression which General McNaughton has made in the United Kingdom.

I may say that the duties of the officer in command of Canadian military headquarters in London are rather difficult to perform. He holds what might be termed a pivotal position. Negotiations pass through him and in particular are conducted by him. He has special command over certain administrative sections relating to our base establishments in the United Kingdom, and possibly will have similar duties in relation to base establishments in France. He also must be in continuous consultation with the High Commissioner for Canada in London, who also has been performing his duties with efficiency and tireless energy in these recent months. I found no evidence of any friction in the working of our military machinery overseas. I think that reflects credit upon all of those particularly concerned, and I give that to the house not only as my own testimony but I am pleased to be able to say that from the highest staff officers in the war office I received nothing but the highest commendation of these men who are serving Canada in high military positions in England at the present time.

I said at the beginning that I would not detain the house at any great length. I come now to a matter on which I wish to speak with some care, namely, the campaign in Norway, and I am going to ask the indulgence of the house if in what I say regarding that campaign I follow my notes very carefully. I do not propose to discuss that campaign in detail, but I should like to make two introductory observations, followed by a brief statement of the part taken by Canadian troops in the early plans for the Trondheim operation.

My first observation is that this government has always felt that Canada's war effort must be fitted into the plans of the United Kingdom government. While Canadian troops may act in units or formations under the command of Canadian officers, the real strength of our assistance can be utilized only if those actions are properly related to the disposition of the British and allied armies. This constitutes no derogation from the undoubted right of this government to exercise final control over the employment of Canadian troops. That is our ultimate responsibility as a government. It is simply a matter of arriving at the best possible understanding and producing the most effective striking force.

The second remark that I wish to make relates to the supply of equipment. There may be certain operations of a specialized character wherein the full complement of heavy equipment is not only not needed but would be an actual encumbrance. In such operations much more depends on the ingenuity and initiative of the officers and on the intelligence and skill of the individual soldier. Rapidity of movement and control may be required rather than crushing weight of material. What has happened in France I suppose provides ample commentary on that statement. There the allied forces have had to move back before a crushing weight of material.

A plan was prepared by the British joint staffs for an operation in aid of the Norwegians at Trondheim. This consisted of two diversionary landings at Namsos and Andalsnes and for a direct landing in Trondheim fiord of a force superior to that of the enemy which had seized the port. The forts at the entrance of the fiord and guns with which they were equipped would require to be attacked and overcome, and the navy were prepared to carry troops in through the fiord to effect a direct landing at the port.

The Canadians were asked to supply certain troops to assist in the Trondheim operation. Although the time was very limited, two battalions, a little short of strength because of certain details that were not required, and certain specialized units and details were selected, equipped and on their way to the port of embarkation within the allotted time. The two battalions thus selected, namely, the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry and the Edmonton regiment, each contained a number of men of Norwegian descent, some of whom spoke Norwegian.

Although this operation required only a part of the Canadian division, and although it was definitely limited in extent, Canada was ready to assume its share of the proposed operation. British authorities did not hesitate to say that there were nowhere available any troops who were so well fitted to carry out the particular task. As time went on, the original plans were altered by the joint staff committee of the United Kingdom government in the light of changes in the military situation. The abandonment of the frontal attack on Trondheim was due solely to certain military considerations which were explained to the British House of Commons by Mr. Churchill on Wednesday, May 8, the day before I left London. Mr. Churchill, I might add, was then First Lord of the Admiralty.

Our Canadian soldiers were at a port in the north of Scotland ready to proceed to Norway when it was decided that the landing operation at Trondheim was not to take place. This did away with the necessity of attack on the guns against the fjord. Consequently our men were returned to their encampment at There was therefore no Canadian force which actually served in the operations in Norway. Opinions may vary as to the wisdom of the Norwegian campaign in whole or in part. It has been the subject of debate in parliament at London. I was able to hear a large part of that debate. In any event, it has been overshadowed by more recent events. The fact remains, however, and I can see no good reason why it should be concealed from this house and the Canadian people, that Canadian troops were ready when the call came. The military change of plans might easily have involved the cancellation of the use of other units. In fact, as is well known, the decision not to attack at Trondheim itself meant that other troops besides the Canadians were not utilized. That does not detract from our readiness and willingness to serve when the request was made. The United Kingdom government, I should add, has signified, both in conversations I had with the Secretary of State for War and the Secretary of State for the Dominions, and by formal communication, its highest appreciation of the manner in which Canadian battalions were made available with the utmost speed to take part in this proposed operation.

Mr. Speaker, before I close I should like to emphasize once more as I did at the beginning that during the period when this resolution is before the committee there will be ample opportunity for members of the house to put particular questions regarding our war effort, which will be answered with the utmost dispatch. I felt I was interpreting the wishes of the house correctly in not attempting any extensive and detailed review of what has happened in the past. What concerns us most of all just now is what we can do in the immediate future to meet this crisis that is upon us. At the same time, I would not for a moment exclude any questions relating to our war effort. There may be questions which I may not be able to answer for prudential reasons, reasons which I am sure all members of the house will appreciate. If there are questions which I cannot answer I shall do my utmost to give sound reasons for taking that attitude, but in that I must put myself entirely in the judgment of the house. I should like it to be understood, however, that the government desires to have its war effort scrutinized in any detail. We desire it because we know at least something of the effort and the energy we have put into it. We desire it because we believe that when it is known in all its details, as these are presented from time to time, it will be accepted as a progressive developing effort entirely worthy of the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, the allied nations to-day are confronted with a situation the gravity of which is understood by all members of this house. That gravity was emphasized particularly by the statement we heard from the Prime Minister at the opening of this sitting. It has been further accentuated by news which most of us have read in this evening's press. The German army has broken through the forward defences in France on a wide front. In a number of places its motorized columns are moving through the battlefields of a quarter of a century ago. Whether the objective is Paris or the channel ports, or both, the nazi machine has succeeded in sending forward masses of tanks aided by low flying aeroplanes which have penetrated deep into French soil and these are being followed by motorized divisions of infantry and supporting troops. The Maginot line is intact, but the full force of the attack has been directed to the territory between the northern outpost of that line and the sea. In so far as this has resulted in German motorized units appearing behind the allied lines, so must the realization of danger increase. It would be a failure of duty to the Canadian people if I sought in any way to minimize the seriousness of the present situation.

^{&#}x27;Mr. Rogers.]

Fortunately the story does not end there. The Germans have thrown the greater part of their mechanical equipment and their finest troops into the attack. There was probably every reason why they should do so if they hoped to gain, and indeed if they must gain the victory this year, if at all. While our losses have not been light, theirs must have been much more severe. The French military genius is capable of adapting itself to a war of rapid movement without the defensive aid of concrete blockhouses and fixed emplacements. It has done it before. If our lines are threatened, so are theirs, and every mile of penetration extends their lines of communication and exposes them to the flank attacks of French troops and the telling blows of the bombers of the Royal Air Force. The men of that force have already proved themselves to be more than a match for those of the invaders, and the allied machines, I believe I can say, have proved to be in no way inferior to the German. Our great difficulty is that with respect to aircraft and highly mechanized heavy equipment we are battling against a very great preponderance on the side of the enemy.

Less than three weeks ago I was with the British troops in France and drove through some of the very areas that are now being threatened. I remember seeing children playing by the side of concrete pill-boxes in cities whose names appeared in the military communiqués this afternoon. No one could make that trip to France and see the French people at their work and in their homes without gaining a sense of their great reserve of determination and fortitude; they are full of quiet courage-after all, they have been through it before-and unfailing confidence. They know and we must believe that the French army will re-form its front and meet the enemy with ultimate success. The spirit of Verdun cannot vanish from France.

The British troops in France were fully prepared and equally determined that they 95826-7½ would carry out whatever task was to be theirs in the same spirit of confidence. I saw something of their commanders, I saw something of the line of resistance they were building against the possibility of German attack. Plans were perfected from that line for rapid and effective cooperation with the French and Belgian armies. The British army was ready to move on a moment's notice, and as recent events have shown they have been engaged in heavy fighting along the lines laid down in their previously prepared plan. The quiet effectiveness and calm determination of the British officers and men was most impressive.

The black-out—I do not think one can call it less than that—of German domination has descended on Czechoslovakia, on Poland, on Norway, on Denmark, on Holland, on Luxembourg and on Belgium. It means that loss of life and degradation and hunger have been inflicted on millions of civilians and innocent people. There seems little doubt that millions more are condemned to suffer before victory is won, as won it must be. The allied countries are shouldering the burden of mankind. There can be no mistake about that. There can be no question that we are approaching a great climacteric period in world history. When the story of these days is written I hope we may be able to remember with pride that from the comparative security of this continent, with no thought of gain or of aggrandizement, for we have no territorial objectives to achieve, with the conviction that the greatest struggle in history is upon us, Canadians have gone forward and will continue to go forward to share the allied burden and fight for the cause of freedom throughout the world. Mr. Speaker, I have no words of peroration except those which have comforted nations and men in many high moments of peril:

Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that I need tell the house how I feel the responsibility of addressing it in taking part in this debate. We are living in swiftly moving times. Indeed, what in the morning one would deem it appropriate to say seems out of place that same afternoon or evening. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), in speaking on the address in reply yesterday, assured the house that this group was not unconcerned with the outcome of the struggle which is going on at the present time in Europe. As a matter of fact we are very deeply concerned, because if nazism succeeds in dominating the world, then we and other groups which hold the same views as we do as to the society we hope to build will have to postpone the achievement of our objects for a long, long time. It was people such as belong to our group who were first in realizing the dangers of fascism and nazism, because it was against such philosophies as ours that these movements first directed their hatred. It was the trade unions and the socialist party of Italy that first felt Il Duce's oppressive hand. It was only a few years ago that the assassin of the socialists of Italy was feted in a city not 150 miles from this chamber.

It is to be regretted that the leaders of democratic countries were so slow in realizing the implications of the nazi philosophy. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) yesterday spoke about a book by the recent British ambassador to Berlin, Sir Nevile Henderson, entitled "The Failure of a Mission," and I believe he recommended that book to the attention of members of this house. I have not read the whole book; I have read parts of it. In my opinion it is a tragedy that such a book should have been published at this time. The book has been circulated in neutral countries, in the United States for instance, and its circulation in that country is doing the allied cause no good; for Sir Nevile Henderson totally failed to understand the real nature of fascism, and its implications. On page 13 of that book we find this statement. When we read it we can understand why we have got into our present position. He says:

Nor are all dictatorships even if prolonged, reprehensible. . . One cannot, just because he is a dictator, refuse to admit the great services which Signor Mussolini has rendered to Italy: nor would the world have failed to acclaim Hitler as a great German if he had known when and where to stop; if for instance, after Munich and the Nuremberg decrees for the Jews.

Mr. Speaker, before that took place, Hitler had destroyed all freedom in Germany. Hitler had destroyed the trade union movement of Germany, without which democracy and freedom are impossible. Hitler had destroyed the German social democratic party that was trying to restore the country. Hitler had destroyed the cooperative movements of Germany. Hitler had destroyed every vestige of freedom; yet Sir Nevile Henderson said in his book that Hitler could have been acclaimed as a great man if he had stopped there—and I have not even referred to the horrible atrocities committed against the Jewish race. Not only were these sentiments expressed in this book; very similar sentiments were expressed in this house by the former leader of the opposition on September 8 of last year. At page 14 of Hansard for the special session of last fall Mr. Manion said:

But, sir, Germany is controlled at the present time by an unscrupulous egoist. It is true he served Germany well, and had he stopped at a certain point he might well have gone down into history as a great German hero.

So we have these two statements that had Hitler stopped after he had destroyed everything in Germany that was of spiritual and social value, he might have gone down in history as a great German hero. Until we better understand ethics; until we have better moral perceptions than are indicated by those two statements, we cannot meet the situation that is confronting the world to-day.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are at war, and the specific resolution before us asks that we vote a certain sum of money to carry on our war effort. The group to which I belong, and I assume all other members of this house, are concerned with two things. First, we are concerned with how the money is to be spent and, second, with how the money is to be raised. The Canadian people are disturbed about our war expenditures. The hon, member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen) said last night that the people of Canada are suspicious, and I believe that is true. In any event they are disturbed as to how the money raised for Canada's war effort is being spent. Neither they nor we have any information as to the terms on which war contracts are being let. Is there real competition? Has the government competent officers, engineers and experts, who are able and allowed to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people? On these matters the people of Canada and even the members of this house have only the most meagre information. There are reasons for this suspicion, this disturbed state of mind. A year or two ago a commission investigated a certain contract. As a result of that investigation certain recommendations were made to the government and a defence purchasing board was created under which a profit of I think five per cent was to be allowed on contracts. During the special session last fall we were told by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) that the government could not find tenderers for contracts while the profit was limited to five per cent. That being the situation, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the solution is not to remove the limitation on profits but rather for the government itself to undertake the manufacture of essential war materials.

Mr. LACROIX (Beauce): It would cost a hundred per cent more.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, it might cost a hundred per cent more, but there is no reason why it should.

Mr. LACROIX (Beauce): No reason; but it would.

Mr. MacINNIS: Then we need a different government to do it, and the people of Canada elected the wrong government. Surely there is enough honesty in the Canadian people, particularly at a time like this, to see that the means are provided to defend the liberties of the people of this country. But despite what we know—the little we know—the government is now asking for a grant of $700,000,000 more to carry on the war effort. Personally I am not opposing the granting of that money but, as I said before, I and those associated with me would like to know much more about how it is to be spent.

In the second place I said we were interested in how the money was to be raised. It seems to me the procedure followed in this resolution is rather unusual. In the same resolution asking for the appropriation of supply we have a section stating how that money is to be raised. It is our opinion that there should be two separate resolutions, one asking for the appropriation and the other stating how the government intend to raise the money. Some members might wish to vote the supply but might have other opinions as to how the money should be raised. As it stands, we cannot vote against the one part without voting against the whole resolution. I am not unmindful of the statement made this afternoon that although the resolution so stated, it was not the intention that this whole amount was to be raised by way of loan; but we are asked to pass a resolution raising by way of loan the sum of $700,000,000. If it is not the intention of the government to raise the money in that way, we should be told how they intend to raise it.

During the special session last September the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ilsley), who was then acting Minister of Finance, said that in carrying on the war the government hoped to follow a pay-as-you-go policy. I should like to quote very briefly from the minister's statement in order to show how far we have departed—at least so far as we know—from that policy of pay as you go in the resolution now before us. Referring to conditions during the last war he said this:

Prices and the cost of living rose more rapidly than wages and interest on old debts. Industrial profits and property incomes increased while the real income of wage earners and individuals receiving interest payments at fixed rates declined or rose less rapidly. It was this reduction in the real income of one section of the community and the creation of large surpluses in the hands of other sections willing to lend to the government that in considerable part at least made possible Canada's remarkable record in mobilizing public savings through the various war and victory loan programmes. The decline in the relative standard of living suffered by certain groups, the rapid increase in savings and the postponement of needed capital facilities made possible the enormous volume of war loans and represented the sacrifices necessary for the conduct of the war.

Well, certainly those who at the expense of the rest of the community were becoming wealthy did not sacrifice anything when they subscribed to war loans at five and a half per cent. Financing the war in that way has had a very serious effect on the social progress of Canada since the war. Every time we asked for legislation which would improve the social and economic conditions of our people we were met with the assertion that there was no money: "Where can we find the money?" But I have never heard a minister say from his place in the house that it was impossible to raise the money to pay the interest on war According to the Minister of National Revenue that interest was received by people who got an undue share of the national income, and who consequently did not make sacrifices during the last war.

If we are going to guard against that sort of thing we must guard against it now, and not wait until the next war begins. The minister went on to say that no country had the courage to finance the great war solely by resort to taxation and borrowing out of savings. The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation suggests that at the beginning of this war the government should have the courage to finance the war out of taxation, and that those who can afford it should be made to pay for the war. Others are fighting it for them.

Already we have floated one war loan. A Canadian Press dispatch which appeared in the Vancouver papers contained a report of the meeting held in Montreal at which the first war loan was launched, and the report stated that at that meeting were 200 people who represented one-half the total wealth of Canada. That would mean that if there are 11,000,200 people in Canada, one-half of the wealth is held by 11,000,000 of them and the other half by 200. When we consider the millions of people who represent nothing at all, so far as financial standing is concerned, we can understand how very few people control the wealth of Canada.

The government should have the courage to make those people pay for the war. We insist that some means other than borrowing must be found if we are not going further to depress the standard of living of people who are now sorely pressed. Already many homes are feeling the pinch of rising food prices. The unemployed, the lower-paid wage-earners, the majority of farmers, people living on small pensions, such as our old-age pensioners, are all feeling the pinch of intensified poverty, and yet at the same time we are allowing a few to make undue profits and to increase their riches out of the nation's distress-indeed, out of the distress of humanity as a whole.

We cannot allay the suspicion and distrust of the Canadian people so long as we allow that sort of thing to continue. As I said before the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation believes that the cost of financing the war should be placed on the shoulders best able to bear it. To this end we propose increased and steeply graded taxes on incomes, and on corporations, and we say that the excess profits tax should be made a real excess profits tax, and not what it is to-day. On the other hand taxes on the necessities of life, taxes which tend to increase the cost of living of those on low incomes should be removed. In lieu of these, taxes should be imposed on stock speculations. Further revenues could be raised by the imposition of federal succession duties. Revenues should be raised in this way not only for war purposes, but also for social services. The government should take the national wealth to meet the national need, and not try to postpone payment and thereby place the burden of debt on the shoulders of those who are to follow us. Whatever may be our responsibilities in the circumstances leading to this war, certainly posterity cannot be blamed for the present state of affairs, and for that reason should not be asked to pay for it.

In view of the fact that the government has already been compelled to institute economic controls in many directions, in an endeavour to increase efficiency and to prevent profiteering, it would seem proper that such controls should be extended, not as a matter of expediency when a difficulty arises but rather as a carefully thought out programme of planned action in the interests of all the people of Canada, and not in the interests of a few.

In our opinion there is only one way in which profiteering can be eliminated. As I said before, it can be done only by the socialization of essential war industries.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

In conclusion I should like to comment briefly upon a statement made yesterday evening by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). From page 49 of Hansard I read:

I know that the government can rely upon the support of all sides of this house as long as it does all that is humanly possible to carry out its duty to the people of Canada.

I do not believe that this government can carry out its duty to the people of Canada if it continues to follow the line it has been following up to the present time. The Prime Minister then went on to say:

To assist us we shall need and, I believe, we shall receive the unwavering resolution and the full cooperation of every true man and woman in this country. If this war is lost, and tyranny triumphs, our world with its gift of freedom, and its promise of happiness for all men and women, will be lost in utter darkness. No sacrifice is too great to prevent that calamity.

I should think that if the Prime Minister were a little closer to the people he would realize that all they have had of freedom these many years was simply a promise. During the last eight or nine months I have been appalled at the number of people who have come to me with stories of distress. One old gentleman, almost seventy years of age, came to me not so very long ago in my own city. His wife had reached eighty years of age, being an invalid in receipt of an old age pension. He had been granted a municipal pension of $21.65 a month and immediately his wife's old age pension was stopped. There can be no freedom for a man living under those conditions except the freedom of slow starvation.

The members of this house owe a duty to the underprivileged people of this country and that duty should be fulfilled. They should see that these people receive a better living out of the national income of this dominion. If we do that, then there will be no doubt of the loyal support this government will receive in fighting aggression and building freedom in this country.

As I said, I think this resolution should be divided so that we could discuss the ways in which this money is to be raised and possibly vote against certain ways of raising the money without having to vote against the appropriation itself. Speaking yesterday evening, the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) said that his group, with the possible exception of one or two Liberals, were the only ones who were advocating new ways of raising revenue. I do not think he is quite correct.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Without interest.

Mr. MacINNIS: Without interest; that is true. We have not advocated the raising of money without interest, but we have advocated other ways of raising money. We believe our ways are feasible, while the other ways suggested are not. But the hon. member's group and this group and every other group in the house ought to have an opportunity of opposing the ways proposed to raise this money without having to vote against the appropriation. In order that they may be able to do that, I move:

That the final paragraph of the resolution, beginning with the words "with provision also" and ending with the words "consolidated revenue fund" be deleted and brought forward as a separate resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER: I refer the hon. member to standing order 48, which reads:

When a question is under debate no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the orders of the day; for proceeding to another order; to adjourn the debate; or for the adjournment of the house.

I refer also to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, paragraph 397, which reads:

An amendment must not raise any question which by the rules of the house, can only be raised by a distinct motion after notice.

In my opinion this amendment raises such a question and, therefore, I must declare it to be out of order.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, I have no set speech to deliver, neither do I desire to take part in this debate for the purpose of making a set speech. However, I want to give voice to certain thoughts which have been passing through my mind for a considerable length of time in regard to these solemn matters which are before the house. Canada is a leading member of a great partnership, the partnership of the British empire, and that partnership with all its forces and all its resources, concerting with her noble ally, France, is fighting a battle for freedom and liberty. It is just as much our fight in Canada as though these ruthless hordes were advancing up the St. Lawrence river. This is brought home to us every time we read of the terrible, bloody destruction which has taken place in one great country after another. We then realize that this is our fight and that we must play our part to the very best of our ability.

It is true that Canada has come into this fight, but unfortunately, to my mind, the Canadian people have been extremely lacking in information with regard to what has been accomplished heretofore, what is being planned now and what the future may disclose. We came here in January intent upon receiving detailed information on these matters, but we did not receive it. We came here again on May 16 to receive this information, and so far we have had the all too meagre statement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) made yesterday, augmented by the statement to-day of the minister. Whereas the debate on the address was cut off, perhaps rightly so, an opportunity is now given to us to discuss this matter on the resolution of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston); and it appears to me that the sooner we get down to a discussion of that resolution itself in committee, the more likely are we to get the answers to questions which are thronging our minds and perhaps be able to pass on to the Canadian people a better understanding and a fuller explanation of what Canada is doing.

In connection with the whole war one question which in the west has caused a great deal of, shall I say, misunderstanding, is in regard to the method of recruiting. Recruiting started; recruiting stopped; men who had been recruited and had been sent off to do certain tasks came back in some instances to find their jobs filled, filled because it was necessary for those jobs to be undertaken, and they found themselves on relief. It is connected with that, it appears to me, that a difficulty arose with regard to our militia forces.

I suppose everybody knows that the land forces in Canada consist of a militia which is divided into two parts—the permanent force, which is largely an instructional force, and the non-permanent active militia. If I have understood the plans of the past in connection with the formation of an active service force, or mobilization, if you will, in case of war, it has been that the skeleton, the non-permanent active militia, should be expanded by the taking of certain units, which should be kept up by recruiting, whose reinforcements should be provided by recruiting, and whose divisions should be so formed. So far as I have been able to follow the Prime Minister's speech, that seems to have been departed from, and certainly seems to have been departed from in this way, that units were incorporated in the first division, and when reinforcements were required for the units it appears to me that officers and men belonging to other units have been permitted or have been asked to come forward in enlistment as reinforcements for the units of the first division. Whether or not I understand that aright, whether that be a good plan or not, it is most unfortunate that the members of the non-permanent active militia units have not received any detailed explanation that such is the case. Before I started on my journey of three thousand miles to arrive in Ottawa there was a great deal of misunderstanding and unrest not only in the minds of members of the non-permanent active militia units but also in the mind of that general public which looks on at the non-permanent active militia units with some pride. That is a matter which I trust will be further explained, and I shall expect to take a further opportunity to speak of it in the discussion which ensues when we get into the committee stage.

There are two things I want to say now. One is that having occupied for a short time the position which the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) now holds, I have some realization of the load which he is carrying. But it should not be forgotten that we on the opposition side of this house have very grave duties to carry out. We look upon them in all seriousness, and one of the matters which has caused me more concern than another has been the gauge with which I am to measure the criticism which I can properly use. It is not my intention to say one word which can needlessly embarrass the administration, and it is not my intention to leave one word unsaid which will be of any assistance in pressing Canada's effort forward to exactly what it should amount to.

There is another thought. We are faced with these ruthless aggressors. If we do not bend every effort and strain every sinew we shall be recreant in our task and our names will go down in obloquy to those who come after us. We shall be recreant in our task; for there are things which Canada can do, and perhaps should be doing in greater volume than she is doing now, and it is pressing forward to these tasks which, in my opinion, is the obvious duty of every member of this house at the present time.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) correctly this afternoon, he used words to this effect, that the government would not allow financial restrictions to hamper Canada's war effort and that the only limitations would be Canada's ability to produce. With those sentiments we in this corner are heartily in accord. We only regret that has not been the policy of this government and of the governments of the allies in the past. Had it been so, I do not think we would be in the same critical position in which we find ourselves to-day.

On the other hand we in this corner are definitely opposed to the method proposed in the last paragraph of the bill, where the minister proposes raising money by way of loan. During the past five years we have frequently criticized the government's procedure of raising funds on the ground that it has built up a great interest-bearing debt that can never be repaid and one that is wrecking the economic life of this country. In tracing the growth of debt we have stressed the fact that during normal times industry is not selfliquidating; that is, industry is not able to create an effective demand for its own production except in times of abnormal capital goods production, and as a consequence industry is not maintained at its maximum level or at a level sufficiently high to guarantee the people a decent standard of living. Unemployment increases, and there is a further decrease of purchasing power. That is why in this house and outside of it we have continually urged upon the government the need for monetary expansion to the degree necessary to provide full employment, capacity production, and a higher standard of living. But strangely enough we had to wait until the declaration of war to receive from this government what I would term its first really sane statement on monetary policy, and that was the statement made by the acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) in September last, which can be found at page 140 of Hansard. It reads:

All this is not to say that a small and carefully regulated amount of credit expansion may not be desirable in the early stages of the war in order to assist the increase of production and employment. . . . If at the beginning of the war there are unemployed resources, some credit expansion may give an impetus to their prompt utilization. If it is carefully controlled, the expansion of production may prevent any abnormal rise in prices, confidence may be maintained and the initial impetus may be carried on and accelerated by the insistent demand that exists for supplies. . . With an economy at full production and employment, the only result of expanding money and credit is to raise prices without increasing production. At such a point commences the cumulative spiral of inflation with all its deadly consequences to the economy.

He stresses there that monetary expansion may be desirable for the purpose of providing full employment and production. He also stresses the fact that there need not be any fear of inflation until we have acquired full production. I think we will all agree that we are a long way from reaching maximum production to-day. In the last edition but one of the Financial Post the fact is emphasized that the production of Canada can be increased by many billions of dollars.

To come back to the question of monetary expansion, did not the minister's statement apply equally as well during the years from 1935 to 1939? Did we not have a large number of unemployed? Did we not have a large number of idle and semi-idle factories and thousands of people in dire need of the goods that could have been produced? Apparently at that time the government were not interested in the demands of the home market; they were more interested, it seemed, in the demands of foreign markets even though it entailed perhaps the selling of war materials to our potential enemies. They were more interested in maintaining a large favourable balance of trade, and of course the orthodox way of doing that is to maintain a low standard of living in the country so as to decrease the demand for imports and to make a greater amount of goods available for export.

[Mr. Stirling.]

During the budget debate at the last special session it was declared most emphatically that the government would insist upon equality of sacrifice and that as far as possible a policy of pay as you go would be adopted. Judging by subsequent events, it would appear that the government have already forgotten about that declaration. I suppose it has been shelved with that famous statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that currency and credit would be made available in terms of public need to meet the domestic and social requirements of the Canadian people. I challenge even the most rabid Liberal to suggest that that has been done in the last five years. The government appear to be following a policy similar to that which has obtained in the past, the policy of borrowing vast sums of money instead of utilizing the services of the Bank of Canada.

We maintain that the establishment of a national credit account with the Bank of Canada for meeting war expenditures would represent a real pay-as-you-go policy, and provided a judicious use were made of price control and an equitable form of taxation employed, there would be no danger of real inflation. If necessary, the cash requirements of the Canadian banks could be increased. I make that statement in view of the fact that the former Minister of Finance in this house was always warning us of the danger, if money were issued by the government, of its increasing the cash reserves of the chartered banks and so enabling them to expand loans on that basis. That danger could easily be overcome by compelling the chartered banks to increase their cash reserves. If that is not considered wise, if people do maintain that as a result of that action the banks could not operate, then the only other solution would be to nationalize the whole banking system; and of the two I admit that I am strongly in favour of nationalizing the chartered banks along with the other financial institutions and putting into operation an investment board for the purpose of directing the investments of the country. Instead of carrying out a pay-as-you-go policy the government prefers to continue a policy that results in one of the most vile forms of inflation possible, that is, inflation of profits and savings.

First of all, we borrow $200,000,000 from the chartered banks; that is, we hire the chartered banks to create $200,000,000. That is utilized to meet war expenditures and there is an expansion of profits and savings. Then we exchange interest-bearing bonds for some of these savings and profits. Not content with helping to create these large profits and savings, we take steps to fasten them as a perpetual debt round the necks of the ratepayers at an annual levy of three and a quarter per cent. I can appreciate the reason why this government appears to favour the idea of an increase in the national debt in view of the fact that the financial adviser to the government, Mr. Towers, stated definitely before the banking committee that in his opinion there was no reason why we should try to pay off the national debt. Perhaps it is not fair to refer to him without quoting his exact words. At page 80 of the evidence there appears a question which was put to him by Mr. McGeer. I quote:

Mr. McGeer: Is it possible for you to imagine any way by which we are ever going to pay the debt we have got?

Mr. Towers: As the debts of the government are an asset of the Canadian people, I do not see much point in the thing.

He adds, except in so far as there is a maldistribution.

But the national debt is not an asset of the Canadian people; it is merely an asset of a few privileged individuals, comparatively speaking, whilst on the other hand it is a liability of the whole nation. As a result of this policy, therefore, we make a levy upon all the people of Canada in order to pay tribute to a few; and then we are told that the government insists upon equality of sacrifice. I have always maintained that this kind of racket is bad enough in time of peace, but it is more contemptible in time of war. Mr. F. Fairer Smith, in his book on War Finance, puts it quite clearly when he says:

What it all amounts to is this. In the dark ages your acknowledged enemy levied present tribute on you at his peril, for you were at liberty to strike him down if you could. Nowadays it is a certain number of your fellow countrymen who levy a continuous tribute on you and they are protected in their depredations by your own government.

Let us get the matter of war costs absolutely straight. The only materials available to us with which to wage war are those that have been produced in the past and those that are or can be produced at the present timeperhaps I should say current production. We cannot borrow guns or ammunition from future generations. Borrowing money internally will not increase the amount of goods in the country by a single item. This war will be fought with current production. Surely therefore, if we are to adopt a pay-as-you-go policy, when we consume goods in the prosecution of the war the claims against those goods should be destroyed at the same time. What right have we to say that we will consume a certain proportion of goods for war purposes but will leave a demand on future generations to pay for them? Have we their permission? Of course not. It is a straight case of misappropriation of funds of future generations. It is not only a dishonest policy but one that is absolutely impossible of accomplishment. Industry through current production cannot pay out more in salaries and wages and dividends than it is going to recover through prices of the product. As a matter of fact we as social crediters maintain that industry does not pay out enough in wages, salaries and dividends to buy back its own production. However, not even the most orthodox economist would claim that industry can pay out more than the aggregate prices of the goods it has to sell. That being the case—and it cannot be challenged—how will it be possible in the future for industry to distribute sufficient money to pay for its own production and, in addition, pay for the goods that we are consuming to-day? Of course it cannot be done, but the hoax is kept up by borrowing. Therefore we are most emphatically opposed to the money for this expenditure being borrowed. We feel that the services of the Bank of Canada should be utilized and a true pay-as-you-go policy adopted.

Mr. ALAN COCKERAM (York South): First let me say, Mr. Speaker, that this is the first time I have ever spoken in an assembly such as this, and if I transgress any of the rules of this house I trust you will forgive me.

As a soldier of the last war I pay tribute, with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), to the spirit that animates those of our soldiers who are overseas. I believe they will be every bit as good as our men who served twenty-five years ago. But what surprised me in the minister's statement was that he made no reference to how he proposes to equip the second and third divisions or [Mr. Quelch.]

how he proposes to issue uniforms to those of us who belong to the non-permanent active militia at this time. Hon, members may not know that the non-permanent active militia is training in civilian clothing.

During the course of the recent general election many things were said regarding equipment and many assurances were given to the public that our troops had gone overseas properly equipped in every way. I believe I can state with confidence that the assurances given to the people of this country by members of the government are not borne out by the facts. Everything that has taken place up to the present time tends to confirm the doubt with which a great many people received those assurances. It is a well known fact, the assurances of the Minister of National Defence and other members of the government to the contrary, that the first Canadian division went overseas totally unequipped for modern warfare. The government's evasions with respect to this matter are to be con-And our information about the second Canadian division is that it is not up to strength at the present time. I trust that in voting this money one thing this house will be doing will be assuring the people of this country that our troops will not be sent to France unequipped to meet the conditions of modern warfare. After eight months of comparative calm the full storm has broken. It is to be hoped that the events of the past week have aroused the government from its lethargy. I believe they have, but I believe it is too late. Hitherto its ears have been so firmly attuned to the ground to catch the rumblings of future political emergencies that it has been rendered incapable of grasping the deadly nature of the dangers that threaten us. Our feet are set on two roads, which lead to two destinations only; one to victory, the other to annihilation.

Now that the war has commenced in earnest, the casualties will equal or exceed those of the last war. But in Canada recruiting is at a standstill. Recruiting should be carried on continuously in this country until there is a minimum of four hundred thousand men under arms. Those of us who served overseas in the last war and who know something about action know that you can go into a show one morning at nine o'clock and come out next morning with only a handful of men. Reserves must be on hand. Neither the first nor the second division should be allowed to enter any zone of battle until the Canadian people and the Department of National Defence are satisfied that sufficient trained reserves are on hand to reinforce them.

We in Canada should contrast the efforts of our government with those of Australia, which to-day has two divisions in Egypt or en route there and five further divisions training.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my friend permit me? I think his information is not correct.

Mr. COCKERAM: The information I have is just such information as is available to the people of this country.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon, friend perhaps does not know that the Australians had five divisions in the last war, and they began numbering their divisions in this war at six, and they have now the sixth and seventh Australian divisions. I think that is perhaps where my friend is mistaken.

Mr. COCKERAM: Is it not true that they have 75,000 men under arms in Australia training?

Mr. RALSTON: I did not understand my friend to say 75,000 men.

Mr. COCKERAM: Well, that is approximately five divisions.

Mr. RALSTON: Here I think we will have 100,000. I only wanted to point out that when my friend speaks of five divisions I think he is wrong.

Mr. COCKERAM: The Australian air force we are given to understand is seven times as strong as it was in 1939.

It has been said all over Canada that the answer of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the answer of members of the government to any word of criticism has been that they are in constant contact with the British government and that the government of Canada has done everything that has been asked of it. What the people of Canada would like to know is what this government spontaneously offered to the mother country at the outbreak of the war. It is well understood that the British government made no demands for assistance; that is not its policy.

An uneasy feeling prevails, that the policy of the Prime Minister and of his colleagues, is one of so conducting the war effort that, no matter what the results of the conflict, this country will emerge from it with a balance on the right side of the ledger. If that is so, let me tell the Prime Minister that he is not pursuing that policy with the endorsement of the Canadian people. No red-blooded Canadian wishes to profit at the expense of the lives of his fellow-citizens in other parts of the empire.

The Prime Minister has never taken the public into his confidence until yesterday; they have therefore failed to realize the gravity of the situation. Events of the past week have brought it home to them. Still, during these fateful days until yesterday the Prime Minister's lips have remained sealed. And now what do we find? We find the Prime Minister telling this house and the country that he will expedite our war effort to the maximum. In other words, he is telling us that he is going to do now what we had been told he has done ever since this war started.

Perhaps the most serious condition that exists in this country to-day is what is known as the fifth column. Many members of the house will have seen in the press an account of a meeting of the Canadian legion in Vancouver, at which a resolution was passed, a copy of which I understand was forwarded to the Prime Minister. That resolution was to the effect that in the city of Vancouver there were 5,000 active enemy aliens, and, requesting that in the interests of public safety, steps be taken immediately to place those individuals in concentration camps. It may surprise hon, members to learn that the number of enemy aliens at Petawawa camp at the present time is less than 300, and I do not suppose anyone in this house will believe that there were not a greater number of dangerous enemy aliens foot-loose in eastern Canada. I have not checked this up with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), but I am informed that a number of the prisoners who have been interned from time to time have been able to obtain their release through political interference. I say that any member of this house who uses his office to bring about the release of any prisoner who has been interned is a traitor to his country. Every enemy alien in Canada should be ferreted out and placed under restriction.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has made quite a serious charge in regard to the release of an enemy alien through political pressure. Would he furnish the Minister of Justice, in confidence, with the name of this person or any particulars of the case?

Mr. COCKERAM: I think I can do that. I do not know how they get out, but they do.

Mr. RALSTON: That is quite different. I thought my hon. friend said it was from political pressure.

Mr. COCKERAM: I understand that was it. The returned soldiers of Canada have stated that they will be glad to assist the government in these efforts.

I believe the government would be well advised to turn its attention to the activities of communists and other subversive elements as well. There is need for action along this line, but I am doubtful if the Prime Minister will do very much to encourage that action, in view of the fact that yesterday afternoon he asked us not to get panicky over this situation.

I was elected to this house, Mr. Speaker, to make every effort of which I am capable, to further the prosecution of this war. That I intend to do, disregarding any political consequences to myself. I do not intend to say or do anything obstructive merely for the sake of being destructive, but where criticism is necessary I shall criticize freely. The other day the Prime Minister expressed the pious hope that during this session there might be no recriminations. Doubtless recriminations are distasteful to him, but he can hardly expect not to be called to account for his past actions, now that the results of his folly and his persistent refusal to face realities are apparent to everyone. "As a man sows so shall he also reap." It is well to let bygones be bygones only when there is a real change apparent.

Surely it must be dawning upon the Prime Minister that his popularity has been on the wane since March 26 and that he no longer enjoys the confidence of the people of this country. If he doubts it, let him read and digest what is being said in the daily press from coast to coast. I am sorry the Prime Minister is not in the house to hear this.

Mr. POWER: He is not missing anything.

Mr. COCKERAM: The Prime Minister is full of words, but he has shown himself quite incapable of action. The record of the government since the outbreak of war is one of ineptitude and frustration. For that record he must take the responsibility. A strong feeling prevails that as long as he remains Prime Minister of this country there will be no change in the situation. There must be a change. Every man and every dollar must be mobilized immediately. Every wheel in every factory throughout Canada must turn with a single purpose in view: victory. Furthermore, no brakes must be placed upon the wheels of industry by political patronage.

What I am going to say now will, no doubt, be in the nature of a bombshell to hon. members of this house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COCKERAM: Wait till I am through before you laugh. Bombs are falling thickly in other countries and countless thousands of men and women are being killed. I do not desire to offend the Prime Minister, but I believe what I am about to say is in the interests of our country, and it is being said without malice. In this dreadful hour of crisis, when the very existence of everything we hold dear, hangs by a thread, I solemnly implore the Prime Minister, for the good of his country, to emulate the example of Mr. Chamberlain, who, with much less reason to do so than he has, resigned his office in the interest of sustaining public confidence in the ability and determination of the government to carry the war to a successful conclusion.

I make this plea under the firm conviction that such action on his part is necessary in the interests of the national safety of Canada. The tragedy of the moment is the fact that the country has been given no effective leadership, though people have anxiously awaited it. The result has been public apathy, and the events of the past week have left the people fearful. The Prime Minister has among his followers others better fitted to lead than he is, and better able to inspire public confidence. Let him play the man and the patriot, and sacrifice his personal ambitions for the good of his country.

Mr. DENTON MASSEY (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take a very brief part in this debate I am fully conscious of the fact that these are days when it is expected of us in this house that we should give action and leadership, not merely words. Therefore it is not my purpose to detain the house at any length, but what I am about to say is being said with the greatest sincerity and earnestness of purpose of which I am capable.

To-night I listened with the closest attention to the speech of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers). I am sure all hon. members were impressed by his earnestness as well as by the fact that he rightfully referred in glowing terms to the calibre of the Canadian soldier, sailor and airman. The minister referred also to the personnel who are at this moment charged with the responsiblity of discharging the duties of chief of staff and supporting officers, as well as to the men themselves. I have not heard it said in Canada at any time that there is or has been any doubt in the minds of the Canadian people as to the calibre of their own sons. I have not heard anyone at any time-and I make this statement broadly and as I feel it-question General McNaughton or those who are associated with him. Canada has reason to be proud of General McNaughton, and I mention him only as one of the men to whom the minister referred to-night.

No one doubts the Canadian soldier, sailor and airman, Mr. Speaker, but I feel that there is not a member of this house worthy to be a member but who at least to-night is charged with his responsibility as such in relation to the present crisis with which not only this dominion but the whole world is faced.

There has not been a day in the history of what, for lack of a better name, we call civilization when all that we regard as most precious to us has been so severely threatened as it is at this very hour.

At this moment we are not concerned with bickering about what has been. We could spend hours in this chamber discussing what should have been done, perhaps by Great Britain, perhaps by Canada, perhaps by some other country, but at the moment what we want is action, not words, not a discussion of what has been and what has not been. We are looking ahead, not back. We have a job of work to do, and we are charged with that job. As we sit here in this chamber to-night in-and I quote the words of the minister-"the comparative security of Canada"-can we help feeling that there is another country which gave us birth and has given us continued life, but which sits to-night in insecurity. I wonder what it would feel like to be in England to-night. What must it mean to those who live in the United Kingdom and at this very hour to know that the most ruthless enemy of modern or medieval times, for that matter, is separated from one's home by only a few miles of water?

Mr. Speaker, we cannot consider too seriously what faces them and us. I am sure that I speak for every hon. member when I say that party differences fade into puny insignificance. We do not meet here to-night as Liberals, Conservatives, or members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation or Social Credit groups. No, we meet here tonight as Canadians. There is but one thought in our minds; there must be but one thought in our minds, and that is the course of action which we perforce must take if we are to preserve this dominion and this empire. Party politics, I say, fade into insignificance. Those hon, members of our party who have spoken as well as myself, speak from that point of view.

It is not unpatriotic to disagree with the course the government has taken or to feel earnestly and sincerely that the government can make mistakes. It is our duty as members of an opposition out of our sincerity as Canadians to point out to the government where we feel their action can be bettered and speeded up. That is our duty as Canadians, and the government of Canada should welcome constructive criticism.

Again I quote from the speech delivered to-night by the minister. He spoke of the comparative safety of Canada—yes, the "comparative" security of Canada; the adjective is important. That safety, that security is only comparative. How long will it remain

I had the privilege of sitting in this chamber as a member of the last parliament between 1935 and 1940, and I can recall speeches in regard to the defence of Canada to which some members replied, asking, "Who are the enemy against whom we are defending ourselves?" That question can no longer be in our minds. The decent people of this world have a common enemy who stands grimly apparent at this very moment. For a thousand years it has been inconceivable to us to consider an invasion of the British Isles. And yet to-night we must contemplate that as a possibility. It is inconceivable to us to think that any nation could be strong enough to wrest from the empire the mother country. And yet we must face that possibility. There can be no thought more staggering to Canadians than the fall of the United Kingdom and the subsequent invasion of Canada.

What are we doing in this chamber if we fail to concentrate on that point, and that point only? Not for a moment am I neglecting the fact that Canada has peace-time problems which carry forward into war time. Hon, members who sat in the last parliament must know that I spent the greater part of my time dealing with problems of unemployment relief, agricultural distress and youth reestablishment. I am not neglecting those problems as I speak to-night, nor am I neglecting the fact that there has been tabled in the house the report of a commission which sat arduously not only for months but for years, dealing with matters pertaining to the relationship which exists between the provinces of this dominion. The other day I read an editorial which it seems to me summed up the situation concisely when it asked this question: What will be the problems between the provinces if we lose this war? In that event there would be no problem between provinces.

Mr. Speaker, not unmindful of nor neglecting our major domestic problems, there can be but one problem primarily before us in this session of parliament, and that is: What can we do to speed up the war effort of Canada so that we may achieve the full defensive power of which this country is capable, and so that a Canadian may feel in his own heart that he has done his fullest and best, regardless of the outcome. There can be no satisfaction in our own minds if we as the people of a great dominion are not confident that we are giving all we have to give.

Unfortunately I could not be in the chamber, for very obvious reasons, on the day my hon. house leader assumed his high and important office. But I have read his words as they are reported in Hansard, and I find that he said this:

Canada's participation in this conflict, which, I fear may grow successively worse instead of better should be bound only by our limitations in men, in treasure and in concentrated efforts. That in my opinion should be our one and undivided aim in the course of this, perhaps the most important session of parliament in the history of our dominion.

That is my point of view. We must think not only in terms of conflict in Europe but must realize that a conflict in Europe which has an adverse result means of course that which we cannot comprehend at the present time, namely that the north American continent is placed in an entirely new and unique position. The defence of Canada, as we have conceived it in the past, is the defence of this country against some hypothetical enemy who had to cross a wide ocean in order to reach our shores, and who could not cross that wide ocean as long as there was a British navy. That has been the fundamental basis of the defence of the shores of Canada for many years-and in that statement I refer not only to the last five years.

That conception must change. Reference has been made in this chamber on more than one occasion to fifth column activity-I believe that is the new expression for it. We have not only enemies without but also enemies within. Not only have we enemies to deal with in Europe, but we have them to deal with at home. And if this conflict in Europe follows the course which, as I have said, we cannot conceive of its following, but which it may follow, then a new problem confronts us. Are we going to be caught asleep again? What would it have meant if in the last few years our preparation had been carried forward in equal proportions with those of Germany? I speak not only of Canada. In what position would the war be to-night? Surely we must face stark and absolute reality. Seven hundreds of millions of dollars—a staggering sum for this dominion! We all caught our breaths when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) used the astronomical figure of $1,100,000,000. But can we put a price on liberty and freedom? We have before us a task which must know no limitations, one which must know no handicaps. Not only must we take our part in this conflict to the fullest of our ability, but we must prepare now for the emergency which may arise—and pray God that it may never arise—and that is the defence of the very shores of Canada against an aggressor nation.

Mr. Speaker, my earnest plea, as I take my seat, is that the government give release at once to the virtually unlimited potential [Mr. Massey.]

power—men, material, and money—of the Canadian people, in defence of Canada, the mother country and all for which she stands.

We have only to look to the south of us to realize the fear, if you will, which has gripped the hearts and minds of the people of the United States; we have only to read of the programme which is being put forward to-day by the government of President Roosevelt to know at once that the United States is not insensible to the danger in which we are on this continent. Therefore, I urge, not only upon the Prime Minister, not only upon the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), but upon the proposed Minister of National Defence for Air, that they not only conduct Canada's participation in this war to the full but also give consideration to the defence of Canada as a nation. We have a task before us, and I can only urge upon the government with all the earnestness of which I am capable that any differences in party politics and any divisions, regardless of how important they may seem in times of peace, be cast aside and that the utmost in leadership be given to the people of Canada in this hour of need, not only of the mother country but of Canada herself.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, although every member of this house is greatly concerned over the trend of events in the world to-day, I am sure that we should not lose sight of the problems that exist in our own country. Seven hundred million dollars is a very large sum of money, and I am sure that all the members of this house are anxious that this appropriation be spent in the best interests of the Canadian people, at this critical time.

Rising for the first time in this house, I do so to plead for more adequate assistance for agriculture under the clause providing for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada, than has hitherto been provided by this parliament.

In making our greatest contribution towards the successful prosecution of the war, the producing of foodstuffs will play an important role. It seems certain that those engaged in the manufacture of armaments will be assured of their costs and profits. I ask that the farmer be given assurance that the return he receives for his produce will enable him to pay his taxes, his store bills and provide a decent livelihood for his family. In war or peace, during my lifetime at least, the farmer has not received for his products a return which would enable him to live as other groups in society have been living.

The impression was created in this house a year ago by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that wheat could be produced at from thirty to forty cents a bushel, and legislation was passed to guarantee the farmer a return in that price range. It is true that farmers have been continuing to produce wheat at these low prices, but what has been happening during the process? Western members at least are familiar with the problems that exist throughout the wheat belt, of mortgaged farms, of farm buildings and country schoolhouses in a dilapidated condition, of undernourished children, of poorly paid school teachers, and a whole host of other problems.

Recently I had sent to me some forty-four communications from my constituency reporting on a variety of conditions in the different parts of that riding. I might mention that this riding is a large one, being 104 miles east and west and 621 miles north and south. I should like to give the house the findings contained in four of these reports. Two of them were received from one of Saskatchewan's best wheat producing areas, a place where crop failures are unknown. The others were received from northern settlers who are trying to reestablish themselves on the heavily wooded land of northern Saskatchewan. One report comes from an Icelandic settler, another from an American, another from a Canadian from the time of the United Empire Loyalists and another from a Ukrainian. These men are representatives of four racial groups which are making a splendid contribution toward the building of a better Canada.

The man of Icelandic extraction has been on his farm since 1904, a matter of thirty-six years. He reports that during that period he has paid $50,000 in interest and principal and that the value of his farm is now $8,000, but he still owes $4,200. He reports that during 1939 he spent $100 for hospital and medical services; for dental services, $40; for books, $4; for newspapers, $10; for travelling for pleasure, $25; for recreation, $30; for groceries, $300, and for clothing, $200. He states that approximately 35 per cent of the people in that farming community have furnaces in their farm homes, that five per cent have electricity, that 75 per cent have radios, while 40 per cent have pianos. He reports that no home in the community has running water. I might say that this man is considered to be a well-to-do farmer.

The next report comes from another good farming district. This man has been on his farm since 1903, or for thirty-seven years. He has paid $25,000 in interest and principal. He values his farm at $11,000 but he still owes $12,000. During the year he paid out nothing for dental services, and nothing for books. For medical and hospital services he paid out $35, and for newspapers, $18. He reports that in his community there are no farmers with running water in their homes, that one per cent have furnaces, one per cent, electric lights; 75 per cent have radios and two per cent have pianos.

The Ukrainian farmer reports that he has been twenty-one years in the north country trying to become a self-supporting Canadian on a bush homestead. He has paid out only $150 in interest and principal, and he values his farm at $900, with $734.75 still owing. He values his house at $50 and his furniture at $25. During the last year he spent one dollar for dental services and one dollar for books. He spent $2.50 for newspapers and nothing for travel for pleasure or recreation. For groceries for himself and his wife he spent approximately $50. He is twenty-two miles from the nearest doctor and fifty-five miles from the nearest hospital. In his community there is not a single home with running water, with a furnace, with electric lights, or with a piano.

Another settler in the new north is a man who with his wife has spent the best part of a lifetime in large cities. They went north when the depression set in some ten years ago, having left one of our western cities rather than face the humiliation of going on relief. The wife is a trained nurse, a woman who would be a real asset to any community and who is a real asset in this community. Their place is worth, according to the assessment roll, $1,060. They owe $600. They value their house at $250, and their furniture at $275, because most of their furniture has been brought north as a reminder of better days gone by. During the past year they spent for medical and hospital services, $19, although this trained nurse is in need of a major surgical operation. They spent for dental services nothing; for books, nothing; for newspapers, $2; for travel and pleasure, nothing, for recreation, nothing, and for groceries, $150. In their community, no homes have running water, or furnaces or electric lights. Fifty per cent of the homes have a radio and one per cent, a piano.

Summarizing the information contained in these forty-four reports, I find that the average is as follows:

Value of house	$510	83
Value of furniture	190	49
Amount spent in 1939 for medical and hospital services	31	75
Books	2	72
Newspapers	3	67

Although in my constituency, with over 28.000 electors, we have twenty-six towns with sufficient business to warrant the railway companies locating station agents there, we have in the constituency only sixteen medical doctors, five hospitals, six dentists and only seven banks. My only reason for mentioning the banks is that in the early years of settlement nearly every small town had its local bank, but as the effects of the depression were felt, together with the results of producing wheat and other farm products at less than the cost of production, bank after bank closed their branches until to-day we have only seven chartered banks in the constituency. I place this information before the house in order that hon. members may realize the necessity of dealing with the urgent problems confronting agriculture, particularly in western Canada.

With respect to proposals for giving the farmer a better deal I wish to make two recommendations. Mention has already been made by several speakers in this house of the election on March 26. Our province has sent a large number of government supporters to this house, and one of the important factors in the election in Saskatchewan was the assurance given by the hon. Minister of Agriculture that the wheat producers would receive an interim payment on the 1939 wheat crop. I quote from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in reply to what the hon. gentleman has just said, at no time during the campaign did I say that an interim payment would be made and any reports to that effect are not in accordance with what I said.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was merely going to read the report which appeared in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, containing the statement which to my knowledge was not denied by the Minister of Agriculture while the election was on.

Mr. GARDINER: It was not only denied while the election was on, but a correct report appeared in the paper following every other meeting I addressed. I made the same statement at Wilkie which I made at every other meeting and not the statement which was read here yesterday.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There was no statement made here yesterday as to what the minister said at Wilkie. I was going to read what the minister said as reported in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, the statement which was used in the campaign. I should like to read it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: The minister states that the statement is not in accordance with the facts.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. NICHOLSON: He has not heard it vet.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon, gentleman said what was in the statement, and I said that on no occasion did I make the statement or make a promise that an interim payment would be made.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Until I read what the minister is reported by the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix to have said I think he is not in order in denying it. But, Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to accept his denial.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the hon. member accepts the denial of the minister.

Mr. NICHOLSON: But I have not read the statement yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has indicated the contents of the newspaper report, and the minister has declared that it is incorrect. His statement will have to be accepted.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Do I understand that the Minister of Agriculture is denying the accuracy of the statement appearing in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of March 21 reporting his speech at Wilkie?

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the minister to say that he denied the statement, the contents of which the hon. member had indicated.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I should like to read what the newspaper says, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid that cannot be allowed.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I understand that I am not permitted to quote the exact words?

Mr. COLDWELL: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister does not yet know what the newspaper report contains. The member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) is asking the minister if he denies the report to which he refers of a speech made at Wilkie on March 21. Will you give your ruling, sir?

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. member to make a statement indicating the contents of the article he was about to read, and the minister thereupon rose in his place and denied having made any such statement. His denial must be accepted, and I so rule.

Mr. COLDWELL: On the point of order, do we understand that the minister denies the accuracy of the report?*

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no point of order before the house just now. A denial has been made by the minister of the statement attributed to him by the hon. member, and his denial must be accepted.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am pleased to bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the constantly rising costs of production I submit that the government should lose no time in implementing the assurance given by the minister, as reported by the press, at the meeting at Wilkie that there would be an interim payment made on the 1939 wheat crop.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend, but would he before eleven o'clock tell us how what he is now saying bears on the resolution before the house? We should keep to the resolution.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Paragraph (a) of the resolution deals with the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada, and I submit that a further payment to the farmers on the 1939 wheat crop is of urgent importance to the welfare of Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is eleven o'clock.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 22, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*AIR MINISTRY

Mr. CHURCH:

Will the government give immediate consideration to the creation of a separate air ministry for Canada to control war and civil aviation and empire air work?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This question, as my hon. friend will have noticed, has been answered by action already taken.

WAR-TIME MORATORIUM ON MORTGAGES

Mr. CHURCH:

Will the government give consideration to a national mortgage moratorium under the war measures or other act for the period of the war and one year after, to prevent extortionate rates in war time on mortgages?

Mr. RALSTON: This question relates to a matter of policy and it is not usual for the government to make statements on matters of policy in giving replies to questions.

*LAW AND PARLIAMENTARY REFORM

Mr. CHURCH:

Will consideration be given to the appointment of a select committee of the house to consider the whole subject of law reform in Canada, a revision of the criminal code, imprisonment for debt in Canada and parliamentary reform and the question of setting upestimate committees?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I do not know whether I should say that this matter is being considered. I do not think there is any chance of its being done this session.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

Mr. CHURCH: The line of least resistance again.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT, 1939—RECEIPTS-FROM ONE PER CENT GRAIN TAX

Mr. PERLEY:

1. How much money, by provinces, has the government received to date from the 1 per cent tax on all grains of the 1939 crop, under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939?

2. What further amount is expected to be received on this account, by provinces?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West):

1. Amount collected by provinces under Prairie Farm Assistance Act, deducted by licensees up to and including March 31, 1940, and received by the board of grain commissioners: Manitoba, $307,418.46; Saskatchewan, $1,166,586.73; Alberta, $628,249.31. Total $2,102,254.50.

2. Impossible to estimate further amounts to be received.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT, 1939—AMOUNT LOANED TO BONUS FUND

Mr. PERLEY:

1. How much has the government loaned to the bonus fund provided for under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939?

2. What further amount is expected to be loaned to this fund?

3. How does the government expect to recover the amount loaned to this fund?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Under authority of order in council P.C. 4172, dated December 14, 1939: $5,000,000. Under authority of order in council P.C. 880, dated February 29, 1940: $4,000,000.

2. Nil.

3. The Prairie Farm Assistance Act does not provide for the repayment of amounts advanced to the prairie farm emergency fund except through collection of the 1 per cent levy provided under the act.

1941 CENSUS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Will a census be taken in 1941, and on what basis?

2. Will the list of questions to be asked be tabled?

3. What new additions have been decided on?
4. Will consideration be given to enlarge on the questions to be asked to include: (a) a survey for national emergency purposes and national defence; (b) regarding real estate and housing and mortgages and rates of interest charged therein and rent charged; (c) service of those on active service?

5. Will any reports or information in this regard be tabled for the information of the

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West):

1. Yes, (see Statistics Act, 1918, chapter 190. sections 16 to 19).

2, 3, 4 and 5. Final decisions as to details have not been reached.

APPLES PROCESSED UNDER AGREEMENT WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. What price was paid by the Canadian companies for apples to be processed under agreement with the Canadian government in: (a) Nova Scotia, and (b) Ontario?

2. What price was realized for the finished products from: (a) Nova Scotia, and (b)

Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. (a) For 34 selected varieties, No. 1 grade, 2½" up, \$1.69 per barrel; No. 1 grade, 2½"-2½", \$1.51 per barrel; Domestics, $2\frac{1}{2}$ " up, \$1.24 per barrel; Domestics, 2½"-2½", \$1.03 per barrel. For unnamed varieties, 25 cents less in each

(b) None processed under agreement with the Canadian government.

2. (a) Estimated sales to May 15 at various prices for pre-war and post-war contracts overseas and in Canada: -543,967 cases canned apples, net return $826,599; 48,491 cases dried apples, net return $168,851.

(b) Answered by 1 (b).

GULL BAY INDIAN RESERVATION-PULPWOOD SALES

Mr. MacNICOL:

1. Was any pulpwood sold from the Gull oay Indian reservation or lake Nipigon during the years 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940?

2. What was the cordage of pulpwood sold in each or any of the sold ware?

in each or any of the said years?

3. What amount was received therefor?

4. What were the names and addresses of purchasers?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. 1936-37-No.

1937-38-Yes.

1938-39-No.

1939-40-Yes.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

2. 1937-38-2,944.57 cords. 1939-40-3,800 cords (estimated).

3. 1937-38-$14,722.85.

1939-40—Contract incomplete. Returns not yet received.

4. 1937-38—Abitibi Power & Paper Co., Port Arthur, Ontario.

1939-40—Abitibi Power & Paper Co., Port Arthur, Ontario.

FISH TRAPS AND FISHING ON PACIFIC COAST-REPORT OF JUDGE SLOAN

Mr. NEILL:

1. Has the report of Judge Sloan, regarding fish traps and fishing in the Gulf of Georgia, been received yet?

2. If so, when will it be laid on the table of the house?

Mr. MICHAUD:

1. Yes.

2. As soon as printing, now in progress, is completed.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES—ANTI-ALLY PROPAGANDA

Mr. CHURCH:

Will the government give consideration to the appointment of a committee of the house to investigate all adverse anti-allies propa-ganda carried on in Canada by the so-called fifth army and those who are pro-German and pro-Russian, as well as American channels in the air and the distribution of certain American press publications carrying items detrimental to the cause of our allies.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think this question is answered in part if not in whole by the motion which appears in my name with respect to the appointment of a select committee of the house to study and report upon the defence of Canada regulations. If this answer does not satisfy my hon. friend I should be glad to confer with him as to what further powers he might wish the committee to have.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I suggest to the right hon, gentleman that the questions of United States channels in the air and the distribution of certain United States publications carrying items detrimental to the cause of the allies are very important in the matter of propaganda, and consideration might be given those matters in connection with this committee. Of course if you go on enlarging the scope of the committee it will have to deal with a great many things, but these are important matters and some consideration might be given them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would say that the matters mentioned would be covered by any inquiry into the defence of Canada regulations. If my hon, friend feels that they are not I shall be glad to deal with the matter further when we come to the motion itself.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN LEGATIONS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. How many foreign legations has Canada abroad?

2. Who are the heads of each legation, who are the staff in each case and what are their salaries and other allowances?

3. What has been the cost of each legation since its inception to the end of 1939, for

(a) capital, and (b) maintenance?

4. What trade commissioners, and at what cost, has Canada in each of these legation countries?

5. What new legations have been opened since January 1, 1939, what is the staff in each case, and their respective salaries and allowances, and what amount, if any, of the one hundred million dollars voted for war in September was spent on such work?

6. What training have these men for diplomacy and who instructs and trains them as diplomats?

7. Are any of them returned soldiers, and whom?

PENITENTIARIES COMMISSION

Mr. CHURCH:

- 1. When was the prison commission appointed?
- 2. What was its cost for salaries, fees, hotel and travelling expenses and all other emoluments paid to everyone connected with it?

3. When was the report received?

- 4. Have any of its recommendations been carried out?
- 5. When will the commission be appointed and function?

6. What is the cause of the delay?

7. Who are the present chief heads of this branch of the service and what training have for work of this nature? they for work of this nature:
8. When will the Borstal system be installed?

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT, 1939—PAYMENTS ON ACREAGE BONUS

Mr. PERLEY:

1. What amount has been paid by the government on account of the acreage bonus provided for under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939, (a) by provinces; (b) by municipalities?

2. How much more does the government of the government of the government.

expect to pay on account of the acreage bonus for the year 1939?

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ACT-EXPENDITURES

Mr. PERLEY:

What was the total amount spent under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act in the province of Saskatchewan during the year 1939, on the following projects: (a) dug-outs; (b) community pastures; (c) conservation dams; (d) Moose Jaw water project; (e) Saskatoon dam; (f) on all other projects?

WAR SUPPLIES-PRICES OF FOODSTUFFS

Mr. McGREGOR:

- 1. Has any agreement been entered into between the war supply board or any department of the Canadian government and the meat packing firms of Canada, defining the basis upon which prices are to be determined for beef, pork, mutton, lamb, lard or other foodstuff supplied by such firms to His Majesty's troops in Canada?
- 2. What prices were paid for each of these items furnished to His Majesty's troops in Canada during the first month of the war?

SALES OF INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS

Mr. MacNICOL:

- 1. Have any Indian reservation lands been sold by the Department of Indian Affairs during the years 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940?
- 2. If so, from what Indian reservations were the lands sold and the acreage sold from each reservation?
 - 3. What was the value of each sale?

Mr. CRERAR: Return tabled.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. SENN:

- 1. What was the total, itemized cost of the royal commission on dominion-provincial re-
- 2. What salary, travelling expenses or allowances were paid each of the four commissioners?
- 3. What salary and other payments were made to the counsel of the commission?
- 4. What salary and other payments were made to members of the commission staff, by name?
- 5. What salary and other payments were made to experts, by name, employed by the commission to make special studies for its information?

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE—DISPOSITION OF ROCKCLIFFE STATION

Mr. SENN:

- 1. Is the Royal Canadian Air Force station at Rockcliffe, Ottawa, being abandoned for training purposes?
- 2. If not, what are the precise plans for use of that field?
- 3. What are the plans for enlargement and development of the Uplands air field, near Ottawa, as to obtaining more land, erection of buildings and training?
- 4. What has been the cost to date of work undertaken at Uplands field by the Trans-Canada Air Lines and, separately, by the government, and how much more money does the government plan to spend on this, and for what exact purposes?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

NATIONAL DEFENCE-ORDERS REGARDING RECRUITING

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all orders to military districts regarding recruiting, together with a copy of rules and regulations issued under the Militia or Army Acts.

CANNING OF CANADIAN APPLES

Mr. McGREGOR:

For a copy of all agreements entered into between the government of Canada, the Canadian Department of Agriculture and any of the canning companies of Canada, relating to the processing or canning of Canadian apples. Also a copy of any orders in council providing for the canning or processing of that portion of the Canadian apple crop which could not be disposed of otherwise. disposed of otherwise.

Mr. McGREGOR:

For a copy of any agreement or agreements entered into between the Department of Agriculture or any other department of government and the canning companies of Canada, or each individual canning company, providing for canning, evaporating or otherwise processing Canadian apples. Also a statement showing the names of those with whom such contracts were

PORK PRODUCTS-EXPORT PRICES

Mr. McGREGOR:

For a copy of all agreements entered into between the government of Canada, the Canadian Department of Agriculture, the Canadian bacon board or any other governmental body and the British government, the British supply board or any organization in Great Britain, relating to the price to be paid for Canadian exports of pork products to Great Britain, and for the amount of such products to be shipped to Great Britain. Also a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, orders in council and other documents exchanged between the above mentioned governments or organizations For a copy of all agreements entered into above mentioned governments or organizations representing them, relating thereto.

LIVE OR DRESSED HOGS-PRICES TO FARMER

Mr. McGREGOR:

For a copy of all agreements entered into between the government of Canada, the Canadian Department of Agriculture, the Canadian bacon board, or any other organization bacon board, or any other organization appointed by the government of Canada and the Canadian council of meat packers, or any or all of the Canadian meat packing firms, relating to the price to be paid the Canadian farmer for live or dressed hogs. Also a copy of all letters, telegrams, orders in council and other documents in the possession of the other documents in the possession of the government, relating thereto.

SALE OF TUGS TO RUSSIA

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, cables and agreements exchanged between the government of Canada, the Soviet government of Russia, the American Trading Corporation of New York, the Soviet government representatives in America and Sincennes-McNaughton Tugs, Limited, of Montreal, or McNaughton Tugs, Limited, of Montreal, or any other corporations or persons, regarding the sale of two tugs or ice breakers known as the Bonsecours and the Bon Voyage, of Montreal, to Russia for use as ice breakers for war and commercial purposes, including all correspondence of the Department of External Affairs on the matter, along with protests received by that department in connection therewith. therewith.

CANADIAN BACON BOARD

Mr. McGREGOR:

For a copy of the order in council which provided for the appointment of a Canadian bacon board, along with a statement showing the power conferred upon such board.

YUKON TERRITORY-PROSECUTION OF CHIROPRACTOR

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, communications and other documents exchanged between all officials and employees in any department of the government in Yukon Territory and elsewhere in 1939 and 1940, con-cerning a chiropractor in said territory and the prosecution of said chiropractor.

WAR SUPPLIES-ORDERS FOR CLOTHING

Mr. ESLING:

For a return showing all orders for clothing (including uniforms, underwear, socks and boots) issued by the National Defence Department and/or the War Supply Board during the months of June, July, August and September, 1939, with the date of the order and time of delivery; also the name of the party who negotiated with the department and/or the board for the order, and the page of the porter. board for the order, and the name of the party or firm to whom the order was issued; also the number of units and the price per unit, and the total amount of the order; also stating whether the order was in the form of a con-tract or direct order.

PRODUCTION IN CANADA OF AEROPLANES AND AEROPLANE PRODUCTS

Mr. ADAMSON:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other memoranda between the Curtiss-Wright Aeroplane and Motor Corporation and the director of aircraft supply, the War Supply Board and the Department of National Defence offering to manufacture aeroplanes and aeroplane products in Canada; also a copy of memoranda submitted to the director of aircraft supply during December 1939 in connection with the subject. December, 1939, in connection with the subject.

Mr. ADAMSON:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, and memoranda, exchanged between officials of the United Aircraft Corporation or any of its subsidiaries in Canada, more particularly the Canadian Pratt and Whitney, and officials of the National Defence Department and the War Supply Board during 1938 and 1939 in regard to the manufacture of aeroplanes, aerial motors and other aeroplane products in Canada by the said companies.

[Mr. Senn.]

EMERGENCY POWERS

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CONSCRIPTION OF LABOUR AND WEALTH AS INTRODUCED TO-DAY IN BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). At to-day's sitting of the British parliament, in view of the emergency conditions existing, there was introduced and enacted into law a bill giving the government sweeping emergency powers with respect to the control of persons, wealth and property. May I ask the Prime Minister if he and the administration have given consideration to the necessity and the desirability of the government in Canada having similar authority?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the text of the bill referred to, and I presume my hon. friend has given to the house what came over the press wires this morning. I may say that this government has given consideration to measures of a sweeping character that may be necessary; but beyond saying that I cannot say more until I have seen the United Kingdom legislation itself.

RURAL FAIRS

PROTEST AGAINST WITHDRAWAL OF FEDERAL GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, may I read to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) a telegram I have just received. It is dated at Vermilion, Alberta, May 21, and is in the following words:

Vermilion agricultural society have sent today to Hon. Mr. Gardiner telegram protesting against withdrawal of federal grant to B Fairs. Heavy obligations already contracted in anticipation of grant will mean serious loss to society and discontinuance of fair against which farmers are protesting. Asking that grant be continued for this year and agree to its being withheld next year or for continuance of war.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has read the contents of the telegram; he should now state his question.

Mr. FAIR: I thought it better to read the telegram first. My question is this: Will the government be good enough to reconsider this question and place a vote in the estimates, so that these grants may be paid at least during this year?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Full information with regard to grants to fairs will be given when the estimates are brought down, within the next few days.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE RESPECTING QUESTIONS ASKED ON THE ORDERS OF THE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Arising out of what has just been read to the house may I suggest to hon. members that where possible they refrain from asking, on the orders of the day, questions of which the government has had no prior notice. If questions are not very important and the answers are not imperative, I would ask that hon. members have them inserted on the order paper, and thereby save a considerable amount of time.

Mr. FAIR: I had given notice to the Minister of Agriculture this morning.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was aware that the hon. member had given notice to the minister, but I doubt very much whether the question he has just put was important enough to warrant taking up, particularly at this very critical moment, the amount of time it has taken for him to read the telegram.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

SUGGESTED INTERNMENT OF ENEMY SYM-PATHIZERS—RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon, H. A. BRUCE (Parkdale): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). In view of the serious situation which has developed in France since the minister gave his reply to my question on Monday last, will the minister please tell the house if he is now prepared to take a more realistic view of the situation and take immediate steps—

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Thank you—for the lecture.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING PROVISION FOR HOME GUARDS IN MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question which I believe would refer to the departments under the supervision of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Lapointe). I have before me a large number of requests from municipalities throughout Canada indicating that they would like in days such as these to have the protection of a home guard, and they want to know whether the government will give the necessary statutory authority to act and organize. If action were taken I believe amendments would be required to the criminal code; or it could be through the War Measures Act or the Militia Act. In this way the home guards would be given official recognition and would be in a position to give very valuable service in the municipalities in the matter of home defence and cooperate fully in that regard with the federal authority.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which my hon, friend refers is receiving the attention of the departments concerned.

CREATION OF AIR MINISTRY—ADDITIONAL DEPUTY MINISTERS FOR MILITARY, NAVAL AND AIR SERVICES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 15, to amend the Department of National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On Section 1—Definitions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope it will be possible to have this bill passed speedily, among other considerations to suit the convenience of another house which is now sitting but may be adjourning shortly.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To-day? Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Let us have some discussion on it, though. Of course we have agreed to the bill in principle, but I understand it has not yet been distributed. As a matter of fact it has just now reached the chamber. I realize, as the Prime Minister has said, that there is a necessity for action, but surely we should have a little time so that hon. members may read the bill. I have read it and I know what is in it, but it may be that some others are not in that position.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I believe every feature of importance in the bill was discussed on the resolution which preceded it. Perhaps if the sections were read, one by one, we would meet that difficulty.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): One thought which occurs to me is that the name suggested is not a good one. Certainly it is not euphonious. May I suggest the consideration of something like this: Minister of Air Defence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government has given careful consideration to the best designation for the minister. It was felt that reserving the title of Minister of National Defence in connection with the minister holding that office for air would make clear the immediate relationship of the two ministers to defence. The other two branches of the defence service would be under the Minister of National Defence himself. In drafting the measure the government has had in mind the possibility that once the war is over and after a lapse of six months, it might be thought advisable to have this particular measure repealed. If desired, reversion could immediately be made to the original statute.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I realize that explanatory notes are not necessary in connection with the different clauses, but I do not see why we could not follow the same nomenclature as is followed at Westminster. Then the department would have a distinct name and it would have distinct functions. We should have a real department which would be ready to give some action to our effort. In the absence of explanatory notes, perhaps the Prime Minister would be kind enough to elaborate his statement as to the functions of this department.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With regard to what my hon. friend has said about Westminster, there they have, as he has just said, three separate departments. The government does not contemplate, at any rate at present, having three departments; it prefers to keep the three branches of the service correlated and coordinated under one minister, as, since the beginning of the war, has been found advisable in England. However, full responsibility will be given to the Minister of Defence for Air with respect to all defence matters immediately pertaining to the air branch of defence. There is no exact parallel to the situation at Westminster, for the reason I have given. To all intents and purposes, however, the functions of the Minister of Defence for Air in Canada will be the same as those of the minister for air in Great Britain.

[Mr. E. Lapointe.]

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): It seems to me that this department will be a sort of lean-to of the Department of National Defence. Surely the new minister will not be answerable to the Minister of National Defence. I understand fully that there will have to be cooperation, but to my mind the new minister is being placed in a category where he will be more or less answerable to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), who in turn is answerable to this house. I should like to see a department created which would have the necessary energy and enthusiasm to carry out a job of work which is of great moment at the present time. The impression should not be given to the country that the minister in charge of this department will be subordinate to the Minister of National Defence.

I hesitate to make a suggestion, but from my observations of many years I know the energy and enthusiasm with which the new minister designate will carry on the affairs of this particular department, and he should be answerable to no one except this parliament. I know he is capable of demonstrating to us from his place in this house that he is doing his part in the administratiion of this department. I would be sorry to see him put in a position which would make him subordinate to the Minister of National Defence, for whom I have a good deal of respect. I want to see him rise in his place in the house and give us some action about which we can become enthusiastic, something about which we can brag in the face of world conditions to-day, something that we can broadcast to the civilized world. We should be able to tell everybody that we have a Department of Defence for Air which is second to none. The Prime Minister has a man who is capable of inspiring the confidence of the Canadian people. Let the right hon, gentleman give him full rein and let him inspire us in Canada. He should lead the way so that Canada can make a real contribution toward relieving the difficult situation under which civilization is labouring at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank my hon. friend for his warm appreciation of the government's selection of my colleague, the present Postmaster General (Mr. Power), for this particular post. Perhaps I cannot better describe what we expect of him and what we intend he should do than by saying that my hon, friend himself has described that perfectly. There is no intention that there shall be any subordination of the Minister of Defence for Air to the Minister of National Defence. There are three branches of the defence service, the navy, the army and the air arm. These three services are in many respects interdependent and interwoven. Some question affecting all three may come up which will require a final word on the part of someone. I doubt very much if a question of the kind is likely to arise between the Min-ister of National Defence for Air and the present Minister of National Defence, but should there be an occasion where some authority must give the final word on any matter of inter-relation between the departments, the Minister of National Defence would have the responsibility for that final word. I might say that this has been found necessary in practice in Great Britain since the war commenced. As my hon, friend knows, there were three separate services there and as matters developed it became necessary to give Mr. Churchill general supervision over the three branches. We are making it clear now that on questions that are interrelated, when a final word is necessary it will be given by the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I quite appreciate the necessity of having it come from the Department of National Defence. I am trying to speak from my experience, gained by absorption, if by no other means, after sitting in this house for a long time. I think I know the Minister of Defence for Air designate and how he will apply himself to this task. I know he will do it well, and in these times of stress and strain I hope the estimates of the Department of Defence for Air will be brought down separately from those of the Department of National Defence. I notice a smile on the countenance of the Minister of National Defence, but let me say to him that the new Minister of Defence for Air was in this house long before he was. To my mind he should be charged with responsibility and he should not be able to get out of that responsibility by leaning on the Minister of National Defence. Let us hold him to his job, because he can take it. I have sat here and looked at him for the last nineteen years. He can take it; he is good enough. I should like to ask if the estimates of the Department of Defence for Air will be presented separately from those of the Department of National Defence. I should like to know also if the new minister will be answerable for his estimates.

I give him one other question to ponder over while he is considering these matters. I do not need to tell him what to do because we know he is a man who is looking forward all the time. He is not looking backward. It may be thought there is some insinuation in that statement, and in case hon. members do not understand that insinuation I will particularize. I say to my hon. friend, the Minister of National Defence, and I couple with him the Prime Minister: The Canadian people are not in a mood at the present time to listen to a history of what has occurred since war was declared; they are more in a mood to insist upon being given—

The CHAIRMAN: May I draw the hon. member's attention to a rule which it is well to keep in mind. I did not wish to interrupt him, but it might be useful, to new members particularly, if I were to remind the hon. gentleman that any member addressing the house or the committee must address himself to the chair.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I had the rapt attention of the Prime Minister for once, and also that of the Minister of National Defence. I would not suggest that they hypnotized me, but I could not turn from them seeing that they were listening so attentively to what I had to say. I bow to your ruling and I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the Canadian people are not so much concerned with the history of what has taken place in the last seven or eight months or in the last few years; they are greatly concerned about what is going to happen during the next few months while this house is in session. We have often heard hon. members say that the Canadian people want action. I believe they do want action, and in all our deliberations in this honourable assembly would it not be well for us Canadians to brag a little-I use that for want of a better word—to the world at large about the great effort that we are making?

In the consideration of this bill would it not be wise if it went out from this house to-day that in the setting-up of this air ministry we are taking full advantage of our geographical position and establishing ourselves as the greatest unit that could possibly avail itself of the broad expanses of Canada in the development of this new science that has made such strides in the last two decades in all air activities? Should we not make it known that we are taking steps to dominate the military situation which has forced itself upon us by the conditions and the ideas that have emerged, in this civilization, from peoples not akin to ourselves, who have resorted to ruthless force and cruelty? Should we not make it known that we are going to put all our energy into activities of the same sort with a view to taking full advantage of the opportunities before us?

We have a new minister designate. Let us clothe my honourable and gallant friend (Mr. Power) with every possible power that can be given him by statute, and let us also encourage him to grip the imagination of the Canadian people so that the high place which our airmen have won will justify the belief that they will attain a still higher position in that field. They made a great name for themselves in the war some twenty-five years ago, and we should do everything in our power to make the dominance, which we believe they can achieve in this war, a reality.

Do not make the minister subordinate to any other department. Give him a free hand and all the power, money and resources necessary to make our air effort an unqualified success, so that under the ægis of the Minister of National Defence for Air our Canadian flyers may be stimulated to go on from success to success until finally they dominate the situation so far as the air is concerned.

Let me ask the government this question: Will the estimates of the air ministry be separate and will the new minister be answerable for them, or will they be part and parcel of the estimates of the Department of National Defence as a whole? Will the government see to it that the new minister is allowed to carry on with energy and enthusiasm instead of being hamstrung by all sorts of technicalities and by shortness of funds? Will he be allowed to put Canada in the proud place she should occupy in this one particular field, for which she is peculiarly well fitted?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no question about the estimates; they will be entirely under the Minister of National Defence for Air as regards air matters. As to the intended minister's conception of his duties, opportunities and relations to his colleague, I think perhaps he ought to speak for himself. If he does not satisfy my hon. friend in his reply we shall have to seek some means to see that he does.

Mr. POWER: I wish to assure my hon. friend that in so far as the powers, authority and jurisdiction to be conferred upon the new minister are concerned, I have had the privilege of studying the bill. In fact, I had something to do with the drafting of it, and I am quite satisfied that there will be abundant authority and perhaps all too great responsibility on the shoulders of the person who has been designated as Minister of National Defence for Air.

May I thank the members of the committee, and particularly my hon. friend who has just spoken, for the kindly manner in which the news of my appointment has been received. It would be presumptuous for me at this juncture and in this time of crisis to attempt to lay down any specific programme or policy. I can only say that I am fully aware of the magnitude of the task before me. To realize what it means, one has only to reflect for a moment that in the amount of money involved in this joint empire training scheme there are almost as many million dollars as go into the operation of either the Canadian National Railways or the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that we must organize something greater in industry than exists in Canada, comparable, in its scope and in the financial commitments involved, with some of the greatest industries in the United States. When we begin to realize that, even with the start already made by those who have been working on the undertaking for the past several months, the whole organization must be completed within the shortest possible time, and that what took fifty years to build in connection with the railways must be completed in two or three months in connection with this air training scheme, we can understand what is involved. So that I realize the position, and I hope that the house will also realize it and assist me in the work which is before me. I am not asking that hon, members shall spare their punches; rather, let them intensify them if they will: but I take it from what was said by the hon, member who has just spoken that I shall not be asked to indulge in post mortems.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): No. Go ahead.

Mr. POWER: We will look into post mortems afterwards. For the moment, in this time of crisis, I ask the house to allow the officers of my department and myself to get on with the work as fast as possible. I would ask the officers of the air force to extend the kindliest cooperation to me as to one who is not at all familiar with the technical details of the work. Perhaps I should say in passing that in my utterances in the house I have not given any indication of idolizing members of the staff or the like; but in this instance I should like them to understand that I am fighting with them and for them and am their representative here.

I might add that apart from the empire training scheme there is the Royal Canadian Air Force, on which something like $100,000,000 will be spent during the coming year in its training, in its preparation for overseas service, and in its overseas service. I ask also of the officers and men of that force their kindest consideration and assistance.

Owing to the events of the past few days it is extremely difficult to speak of anything but the urgent, insistent nature of the present crisis. But we would be lacking in hope, we would be lacking in faith, we would be lacking in confidence in our allies in France and in Great Britain if we did not plan, even at this darkest hour, to be able to send assistance to them when they have stabilized the line and are holding the invading hordes. I hope that, if the plan may be considered as a long range plan, the ideas which are already in train for its acceleration may bear fruit, and that meanwhile the Canadian people will be satisfied with the thought that we are endeavouring to the best of our ability to turn out those trained men who will relieve those who at this time are holding the fort and suffering the heat and toil of the day.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to ask the minister a question, which, probably, comes within the principle of this bill. There are two bills: one, No. 15, the definitions of which we are dealing with now; another, known as the air force bill, which is pretty much the same. What is the division of authority between the ministers? Under this definitions section I should like to find out who will be responsible for one of the most important parts of this air scheme to-day, namely, the defence of the civil population from air raids.

Last session the minister brought down a bill dealing with the Pacific Coast Defence, where virtually all the air defence is, from Puget sound, some 600 miles away, to Queen Charlotte islands and the mainland. The principle of this vote was to protect Canada's neutrality.

It may be better for me to discuss on the third reading the three or four points I have in mind, because, having gone into committee so quickly, we got very short notice of the second reading. But I may say that I raised this matter three or four years ago, at the time of the Abyssinian campaign: on that occasion I said:

As I said in a debate in this house on March 24, 1938, on the defence estimates, Abyssinia was recently a theatre of war—

Just like Canada.

—and we all know the destruction of civilian population that occurred through that means of attack. Abyssinia is an open country with only a small density of population compared with the island of Montreal, the cities of Quebec, Ottawa and Toronto and other parts of Canada. Air raids can work great havoc in time of war, and the menace will be a very real one in Canada, especially to the people of Quebec, the maritime provinces and British Columbia. What are we doing to take care of the civilian population? Nothing. Aircraft could come up the Ottawa river at a moment's notice. I should like to direct the attention of the Social Credit members to what might happen. An air attack might occur and the whole social credit system be destroyed at a moment's notice.

An aerial bombardment is one of the dangers most to be apprehended in time of war, particularly in large cities with their dense populations. The protection of cities from aerial lations. The protection of cities from aerian bombardment should be one of the chief objectives of the national defence department, and proper equipment for defence against this menace should be provided. Large quantities of poisonous gas could easily be spread over a large area, as was done in Abyssinia. Incendiary bombs could be dropped on our large cities with great destruction and slaughter, and cities with great destruction and slaughter, and the enemy aircraft could get back to their base in practically no time. These attacks would not only bring ruin to our cities and towns, but break the morale of our people and prevent us from developing a proper defence and mobilizing our man power and armaments.

That is what I said on March 24, 1938, but nothing has been done.

Then I asked:

What has been done to protect the civilian population in Canada from awful air raids?

Inasmuch as such attacks could destroy all the public utilities of the large cities of Canada. I said:

One of these days there will be a rude awakening in this country. Hon, members sit in this chamber and listen to one or two speeches by their leaders, and then all they do is say "me too." As far as they are concerned, the people can continue to suffer or lack the security which is better than opulence.

I admit that, technically speaking, these may be matters to discuss on the third reading instead of on the details of the bill which is linked up with the other bill. The minister has brought it down just three years too late. It is two or three years ago since I pleaded for an empire training scheme to train the youth of the high schools and the universities. In connection with the estimates of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), I asked him, in 1937, 1938 and 1939 to plan an empire air scheme under which youth could sign up for from three to five years' apprenticeship, learn a trade or calling, get food, money and clothing, also deferred pay. In that way we would have accomplished something like Australia and New Zealand have done, where they have a large body of young people fitted to be pilots, and adapt it to national service plans adapted to Canada's circumstances. But that was not done.

In the next place I would like to know whether flying clubs can be extended to include the universities and high school students during the coming summer, the season when so many cannot get seasonal employment. should also like to find out what has been done with regard to the application last year of the Toronto board of education, which offered to give the government the use of a large technical school for the air force training scheme. But probably these other matters can be raised on the next step of the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated, as I understood it. that his task would come in two parts: first. the provision of the commonwealth air training scheme; second, responsibility for the Royal Canadian Air Force. Will the Prime Minister inform us whether aircraft production will come under this department, or will it continue to be under the jurisdiction of the Department of Munitions and Supply?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Aircraft production will come under the latter depart-

Section agreed to.

On section 2-Minister of National Defence for Air may be appointed.

Mr. STIRLING: There are two remarks desire to make in regard to this whole section. Subsection 2, leaving out the redundant words, reads:

He shall . . . exercise all the powers of the Minister of National Defence and in respect . exercise all the powers of the of any matter affecting both the air service and any other service. . . .

Surely there should be some qualification of the word "service" in the second phrase. Does it mean "any defence service"?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Defence service is what is meant.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The word should be inserted.

Mr. STIRLING: With regard to the rest of subsection 2 and subsection 3, it appears to me to be uncommonly like dual responsibility. I am not suggesting that these two individuals who will now occupy those two positions are in the least likely to fall out in their work, but after all this will become a statute and it appears to me that in other times it might easily happen that dual responsibility would produce an uncomfortable situation.

With regard to the second part of the objection I am raising, I believe it has always been the custom in the past, in the absence of a minister, for one of his colleagues to be delegated to do his work. If that practice were continued, I scarcely see the necessity for subsection 3. The dual responsibility as it is at present written seems to me a matter which should be explained. If there be some very strong reason for arranging it in this way I think the reason might be given to us.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. POWER: When this bill was drafted we were faced with exactly the difficulty which has been presented to us by the hon, member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) and by other hon. members during the course of the debate this afternoon. There is no doubt that it would be almost a calamity to have three separate and distinct services. It might result, as it did in Great Britain, in bringing about the necessity of having a Minister of Defence on top of them, and then on top of him again a Minister of Coordination. So that we were faced with the problem of having this famous unity in diversity of which so much is said in another sphere of action. It was decided that the Minister of Defence for Air should have exclusive right and jurisdiction so far as air is concerned. As my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) put it to me when we were discussing this bill, in matters of air you take off your hat to nobody. In matters of the general defence of Canada-take the extreme case of an invasion-it would then be necessary for the Minister of National Defence for Air to consult with the Minister of National Defence as to the manner in which the air force would be placed at the disposal of the Minister of National Defence. If it so happened that they disagreed, then the Minister of National Defence would be the one who would have the final judgment and decision, subject again to the cabinet. Outside of that I do not know of any other contingency in which there would be subordination. But there must be, as I think the committee will recognize, the utmost cooperation.

Fortunately, in this particular instance, at any rate at the inception of the scheme and until Providence or the House of Commons or the people of Canada dispose otherwise, the two persons most interested are able and willing to work in the closest possible cooperation and coordination. My relations with the Minister of National Defence are such that I have no difficulty in working in the closest possible cooperation with him. There are branches of the Department of National Defence which have to do with air; we could not at once effect an absolute separation. Pay services, medical services, legal services, perhaps a half dozen others are examples; if we set up a separate air ministry, all that would have to be changed. It will be worked out quietly, with sufficient expedition and sufficient authority in the air minister to permit him to carry on the duties with which he is being charged by this parliament.

I see the difficulty raised by my hon, friend and were I in his place I would make the same observation. He is familiar with the proceedings of the cabinet and knows very well that it is quite possible by order in council to appoint an alternate minister or one to act for another minister, and probably my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, able lawyer as he is, will agree that it is bad parliamentary draftsmanship to set out the motive of any piece of legislation in a section of the bill itself. That is what happens in this particular instance, but in order to ensure the coordination of the defence services and the continued administration within the Department of National Defence, the two alternate. That is in order that the principle be preserved that the Department of National Defence has to remain, if possible, as a national defence department. It will be observed that this particular branch or department for air is constituted only as a war-time measure until such time as under the War Measures Act the state of war is declared to be ended and six months thereafter. After that the future of this department will be in the judgment of the parliament and the government of that day. But it was felt that to meet a war-time necessity one man should be charged with the responsibility of carrying out this work of air defence and offense if needs be.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Now that the banns have been published, let us get on with the marriage. Let us get on with this job of work that the new minister has to perform. My first question is, may we consider the announcement made yesterday by the Prime Minister as a proclamation that this ministry is now established, or must we wait for a few days until such time as we can have the proclamation issued through the Canada Gazette?

The second question I should like to ask the minister-designate is whether the securing of the clothing, supplies and other material which will be required in order that his department may function quickly and efficiently will be under his energetic review or under the review of the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. POWER: Everything required by the air force will be secured through requisitions made by the Minister of National Defence for Air, directed to the Minister of Supply. If he does not get what he wants quickly he will talk to the Minister of Supply.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): The other question is about the proclamation, as to how quickly it can be issued.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend is aware, the bill has to be passed by the other house and receive the royal assent before an appointment can be made under its provisions. I have asked the leader of the government in the senate if he would make it a point of seeing that there is no adjournment of the senate until after the bill leaves this house so that, if the senate is agreeable, it might there pass through all its stages this afternoon. We would then endeavour to get immediate assent, and the minister would assume office at once thereafter. Once the bill becomes an act of this parliament, an order in council will be passed at the earliest possible moment appointing the minister.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): And he will function in the meantime?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite so.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Together with my associate, the hon, member for Yale, I have studied this bill and we are quite satisfied with it and with the object the government has in view. However, I think there should be an amendment in line 27, inserting the word "defence" after the word "other" and before the word "service." I think that is the intention. The section would then read:
—and in respect of any matter affecting both the air service and any other defence service—

Mr. POWER: Otherwise it covers a little too much territory.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think so.

Mr. RALSTON: I move, seconded by the Minister of Public Works, that the bill be amended in line 27 by inserting after the word "other" the word "defence."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3—Appointment of additional deputy ministers.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not criticizing the appointment of the deputy ministers, but I should like the Prime Minister or the minister for air defence, as I prefer to call him, to tell the committee what is the status of General LaFleche.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At the present time General LaFleche is acting as military attache at the Canadian legation at Paris. As my hon, friend is no doubt aware, General LaFleche was granted leave of absence for some time on account of illness. It was realized that his ill health was due in no small measure to the great burden that had been placed on him as the one deputy head of the department. Provision was accordingly made by order in council on September 9, 1939, for the appointment of two acting associate deputy ministers. More recently a third acting associate deputy minister has been appointed. General LaFleche remains deputy minister of the department, but at the present time is absent on leave, and his place is being filled by three acting associate deputies.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is it intended to perpetuate that situation? Is it intended that General LaFleche shall return to the department and that this shall be a temporary measure?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot tell my hon, friend what may take place in the future. That will depend on the state of health of General LaFleche and the situation as it may develop meanwhile.

Mr. BROOKS: This bill provides for the length of time the minister shall hold office. Will the deputy minister cease to hold office after the minister has completed his work? There is no provision for that in the bill.

Mr. POWER: Frankly the question does rather puzzle me, though I do not think there would be very much difficulty in connection with the air service. This bill provides that "when a Minister of National Defence for Air has been appointed, the duties of the deputy minister for the air service shall be such as are specified by such minister, and the powers of such deputy shall be such as might have been exercisable by him if there were a separate department for the air service." I take that to mean that when the minister disappears the powers which he has specified as those allotted to the deputy minister would disappear also. However, that question should be looked into. My hon, friend the leader of the opposition shakes his head, and he may be right; frankly I cannot answer the question offhand.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I appreciate the point raised by the hon. member for Royal; it is certainly well taken. You create an air ministry and provide for the demise of the minister—of course I do not mean that literally—but you make no provision for getting rid of these associate deputy ministers. You may find that you have them on your hands. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he immediately draft something to meet that situation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the point could be pretty well covered by the order in council appointing the deputy.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But you are going to operate under a statute, and it will supersede the order in council.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

125

Mr. POWER: As my hon. friend the Minister of Finance points out, with the organization once completed—and after all, we will always have an air force—in all probability it will call for a civilian head such as a deputy minister, just as not so very long ago there was a deputy minister for naval affairs and a deputy minister of militia, and just as in the Department of National Revenue there are three men of equal rank. There will be no difficulty about the man who is to act as deputy minister for air at the present time. Our problem will be to keep Mr. Duncan for a greater length of time than that for which he has contracted. I know he has no idea of remaining permanently in the civil service. His services are extremely valuable, and we hope to be able to retain them for a longer period than was originally anticipated.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That does not settle the question. The office is still there and, if I have any knowledge of human nature, if it is vacant there will be someone who will want a job and my hon, friend will find great difficulty in withstanding the pressure. As a matter of fact at this moment I see a number of hon, members looking very much interested.

Section agreed to. Bill reported.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, there are some points which possibly I should have mentioned on the debate on second reading because they relate to the principle of the bill. However I shall not speak at any length on the third reading, because I believe there is another bill in reference to the air force which deals more specifically with the details of the division of the work between the Department of National Defence and the new air ministry.

Defence and the new air ministry.
What do the people of Canada think of the public men in all parties who during the past twenty years have been more or less responsible, in one degree or another, for the absolutely defenceless position in which the people of Canada find themselves? On this occasion I do not rise to criticize Bill No. 15. Criticism is a tonic which stimulates governments to action. In the past month Britain and France have learned this to their sorrow from bitter experience and learned that constructive criticism prevents governments from relaxing into blunders which are nothing but suicide. So long as criticism is honest and founded on facts and not inspired by any ulterior political motive, it is more helpful and urgent and necessary in war time than in peace.

This is the darkest hour of the war and we do not yet know to whom this country will belong at the end of this year. Those two glorious countries, Britain and France, have to go it alone for freedom. Germany has nearly 200 divisions of nearly six million men, and if they break the Maginot and other lines on the western front—as no fortifications can hold out forever when the Germans are on the march—if they break the line they will arrive at the channel ports and use pom-pom guns and huge bombing planes and awful tanks of a mechanized age, with the union of barbarism and mechanization, and the British empire may have seen its day. It is Hitler's dream; he will trample down Britain the way he did Belgium in the last war, and Finland, Poland, Holland, Belgium and Czechoslovakia in this, by the most cruel brutalities of all time.

Now in connection with our Canadian air programme: if hon, members would take the trouble to read the debates of 1937, 1938 and 1939 as reported in Hansard they would find that I brought this empire air scheme before the house. I pointed out at that time the danger to the civilian population of Canada. Those were the days when the Germans were trying to establish a base on Anticosti island and Hudson bay. If the Germans can cross the channel Hitler will be in a position to treat Britain the way he treated Belgium, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Holland and Finland. It is too bad the people of Canada have not been more alert in the matter of its air force. Had we been more active we could have saved civilization.

The unfortunate truth is that in the past year and a half nine times out of ten we have been too late.

> Too late, too late, will be the cry; Hitler and Germany passeth by.

Those are the words which might be substituted for the old evangelists' song. I repeat that nine times out of ten Canada has been too late. She was too late in her recruiting; too late in her operations respecting the Bren gun; too late in the commonwealth air training scheme; too late in respect of clothing and boots and equipment; too late in furnishing money for dependents; too late in supplying big guns and Bren guns and modern rifles and munitions; too late in dealing with the fifth column; too late in making a national register; too late getting a survey of industrial and economic power; too late in organizing large and small plants for the manufacture of munitions and aircraft; too late in preventing the menace which arises from magazines printed in the United States and from United States radio programmes which are sent into Canada every day to destroy the morale of the Canadian people.

I have in my hand a pictorial United States publication, the Daily News of May 22, which can be bought in the Chateau Laurier and at any newsstand in Ottawa, with big headings, "Nazis drive to channel—Trap Million Allies—Threaten Britain." It operates against the morale of our people, and particularly the women in Canada. In the present and other issues of the paper I have before me they criticize the British government, the empire training plan, and many other matters. Nine or ten times last year I asked ministers of the government to stop these United States propagandist alien and anti-ally papers. It is most dangerous to permit them to enter the country.

While in connection with our air scheme it is of tremendous importance that we have the splendid support of our friends across the border, still we must face the fact that so far as our air force is concerned they are not willing to help us or help the allies. Their policy to-day is that which follows the Johnson act, the Ludlow resolution and the neutrality legislation and the resolution in the senate of the United States, which I read some time ago. They are back to the days of the policy of their first presidents, George Washington and Andrew Jackson, and take the stand that they will go to war only if they are attacked or invaded.

We realize that there are a great many splendid people living in the United States, and my only reason for mentioning the point at this time is that the subject has been discussed in the United States house of representatives and senate. Not long ago the German ambassador addressed a meeting of citizens in the city of Cleveland, and during the course of his observation, pointing towards lake Erie and lake Ontario, he said, "Those people in Britain ought to surrender parts of their country; they ought to give up Gibraltar, the Cape and Hong Kong; they ought to give up the West Indies, and should not be interested in the great Singapore base"-in which unfortunately Canada is not represented.

We realize that the United States is a neutral country. It is to be hoped that in connection with the present aid to the Allies they will no longer act the part of the Levite and pass by on the other side, only to come back later and say, "We are willing to pull the smaller nations out of the pit, but only on a cash-and-carry plan." It has also been indicated by some of the members of the senate and house of representatives that Britain should give up Bermuda, the West Indies, and, one says Canada, for the war debt and munitions. Aid from America to crush the dictators may come too late for civilization.

The minister (Mr. Power) has been very active. We know that he served during the [Mr. Church.]

first great war with a Toronto unit, and I know that the people up there have a great deal of regard for him in military matters. I hope his record as minister of the new department will be as good as it was as a soldier in the last war.

While head of the city of Toronto in the last war I helped secure the Royal Air Force headquarters for Toronto. During the last war 18,000 pilots and mechanics were trained in Toronto. At that time different action was taken. Those in authority took over the best buildings connected with the university of Toronto and public schools, and established camps at Armour heights and four or five other places. The work done in Canada at that time was of tremendous advantage to the mother country. It is my hope that the minister's record will be as good as that of the Royal Air Force in the last war, as set out in Mr. Carnegie's book dealing with the Royal Air Force. It was a wonderful achievement from 1915 to 1918.

Canada has been fortunate in getting a magnificent type of recruit, in this war, and I am certain that had the suggestions for an air scheme for Canadian youth made in 1937, 1938 and 1939 been adopted, we would have at least 5,000 trained pilots here to-day. In those years many high school boys were riding the rods and looking for employment. If they had been signed up in the national service and air plan they could have been given clothing and lodging, pocket money and deferred pay, and at the end of a three-year period, which would have ended in May of this year, we would have had at least five thousand pilots. We would have had at our disposal men with air training, and in the meantime they would have had proper care.

It is not yet too late to take this matter of national service for the air force into consideration, and I hope the minister will discuss it with boards of education throughout the country. Three years ago a boy in Belleville found himself in trouble because he gave the wrong age when he enlisted in the air force, and I brought the matter to the attention of the house and got him out. I could say that there were two or three hundred Canadians who had to go to England in cattle boats at their own expense. There are five or six of these whom I know who have received decorations over there. These Canadians are well trained and make the best pilots, as was demonstrated by the exploits of Barker, Bishop and Ray Collishaw during the great war. I hope the minister will endeavour to get Vice Air Marshal Collishaw back to help in this great air scheme and work along with Air Marshal Bishop.

The recent accidents at Trenton have done considerable harm to recruiting, and some official inquiry should be made immediately. Four boys were killed only the other day, and four others were killed last January and civilian inquests should also be held as in 1917 as well as military ones. When Trenton was chosen and Camp Borden closed up it was stated that Trenton was not at all suitable because of wind conditions and other things. There should be a civil inquiry into these deaths because they have hurt recruiting. Some improvement should be made in the hospital accommodation and all that sort of thing, also for the Royal Canadian Air Force and better buildings. Why not take them under the War Measures Act.

We should have a compulsory national registry in order that we might have better success than we have been having with voluntary recruiting. Many men have been exempted and many orders have been issued exempting other groups. I believe conscription is going to become a live issue whether we like it or not unless we prosecute voluntary recruiting more diligently. We must remember there is conscription in all laws; in the Militia Act; there is conscription in education, in our economic and health laws and so on. This country should have a stock-taking of resources. We should have a complete record, a domesday book of all Canada so that each may do his part, which would provide a survey of the country and be of the greatest benefit in the defence of Canada and the empire. Conscription was not an issue in the last election because its enforcement had not been a success in the last war and more men would have been got voluntarily in 1917, but I believe we will have to go into that matter again very shortly and have a proper survey made.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, May 22, 1940.

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Mr. Justice O. S. Crocket, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, will proceed to the Senate chamber to-day at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving the royal assent to a certain bill.

I have the honour to be, Sir, Your obedient servant, F. L. C. Pereira, Acting Secretary for the Administrator.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ralston that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That sums not exceeding $700,000,000 be granted to His Majesty towards defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the governor in council during the year ending 31st March, 1941, for—

(a) the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada;

(b) the conduct of naval, military and air operations in or beyond Canada;

(c) promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk or in any other manner whatsoever; and

(d) the carrying out of any measures deemed necessary or advisable by the governor in council in consequence of the existence of a state of war.

With provision also empowering the governor in council to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $700,000,000 as may be required for the purpose of defraying the aforesaid expenses, the principal and interest of any such loan to be a charge upon and payable out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, at eleven o'clock last night I was urging that a portion of this proposed appropriation of $700,000,000 be made available to provide for additional payments on the 1939 wheat crop at the earliest possible moment. In conclusion I wish to say that my constituents are fully aware of the gravity of the present situation. I feel sure that my people are anxious to do their utmost to carry out the provisions of paragraph (a), which provides for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada. A great many of the boys from Mackenzie are now in uniform in the various military services. At least three have served with distinction in the air force and have made the supreme sacrifice. A large group of men who served with distinction in the last great war have voluntereed their services in any capacity.

We cannot offer large industrial plants; we cannot subscribe large amounts of money for attractive government loans, but we have extensive tracts of fertile land, and there are on our Saskatchewan farms men, yes, and women and children too, who have worked and who are willing to continue to work from early morning until late at night in order to produce the foodstuffs so essential to victory. Our Canadian farmers have no intention of holding a gun at the head of the government, as it were, and demanding unlimited profits in return for the production of foodstuffs, but I do urge that out of this $700,000,000 we spend sufficient to give the farmer an adequate return with which to pay operating expenses and provide a decent living for those engaged in agriculture.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the discussion of the resolution appropriating $700,000,000 for Canada's war programme would hardly be complete without a report on the work of the Department of Munitions and Supply, which will have the spending of a large part of this money. As the statement I desire to make will improve with accuracy, I trust the house will pardon me if I keep rather closely to my notes.

It seems to me that the duties and limitations of the work of the department are not generally understood. I am often asked why we have not filled every factory in Canada with orders for war equipment regardless of the cost. The complete answer to that is that before we can purchase any finished article, we must know that it is required, either by our own armed forces or by those of Great Britain and France.

Except for the purpose of carrying out its responsibility to see that Canada has on hand a supply of raw materials sufficient to meet the needs of warfare, the department does not purchase munitions of war on its own initiative. The requirements of Canada's armed forces are passed on to the board in the form of requisitions from the Department of National Defence. The governments of Great Britain and France are represented in Canada by purchasing boards, each of which passes on to the Department of Munitions and Supply the needs of their respective governments for purchases abroad. These usually take the form of general inquiries, to which the department responds with statements of the available supply in Canada, the sources of supply and the probable cost. The department is, in fact, the salesman for Canadian war materials to the governments of our allies, and is and has been doing its best to put forward Canada's potential productive capacity in a form that will attract orders.

It must be remembered that Canada's army in Britain and France, although commanded by Canadians, forms part of the British army, and has no separate lines of communication. Therefore, it is practically a necessity that our equipment be interchangeable with British equipment. This means that the armament of our troops must largely be built to British standards, and that British designs must be followed. One of our chief difficulties has been to obtain the latest British designs for mechanical equipment used by our troops in common operations. British industry has not been too willing to part with these designs, many of which represent years of study and development by private manufacturing firms.

In the last war, Canada's chief production was shell cases. We are now tooled up to produce this type of equipment far in excess of our own needs, but to date British orders have not been forthcoming in a quantity proportional to our industrial capacity.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the minister be good enough to tell us exactly where those plants are, and whether they are government plants?

Mr. HOWE: Plants that are tooled up?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Yes.

Mr. HOWE: Production is going on at the government arsenal at Quebec, at Lindsay and at other points such as the National Steel Car and Massey-Harris. I will give the information later.

This has been disappointing to our manufacturers, who have been building on the precedent of the last war. I can only say that this war bears little resemblance to the last one in the nature of the requirements from Canada. The fact that to date Britain and France have been satisfied to rely largely on their own production and mechanical equipment and have not been disposed to encourage Canadian production of heavy equipment to the extent of furnishing up to date plans and specifications, has undoubtedly prevented Canadian industry from playing its full part in mechanical warfare. I am happy to say that there are now indications that this will not continue.

In the matter of supplies for Canada's armed forces the department must decide whether it is desirable to initiate Canadian production or to buy abroad. This depends largely on the quantity required and whether the source of supply in Canada for a particular article is justified as a defence measure, even though production in Canada means greatly increased costs for the quantities required. Canada does not attempt to manufacture every item of equipment required by its troops overseas. By arrangement, certain items have been and will be furnished by Britain, and are being paid for in kind by shipments of other equipment more suited to our productive capacity.

Broadly speaking, there are three essentials in our war needs. Our people must obtain an adequate supply of the necessities of life; industrial output must be increased to meet military needs; and we must have sufficient supplies of foreign exchange to buy the necessary imports of raw materials. Prior to the outbreak of the war the government had planned to meet these needs. The defence purchasing board had been established and was in operation, developing sources of supply for war materials. On the day war was declared the war-time prices and trade board was created to maintain the flow of the necessities of life. On September 15, following a plan laid down before the outbreak of war, the foreign exchange control board was in operation and has since made exchange available for materials not procurable in Canada. The work of the Department of Munitions and Supply and its predecessor boards has been and will be closely allied with the work of the war-time prices and trade board and with the foreign exchange control board, and the closest association and cooperation is being maintained.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

The policy established at the inception of the defence purchasing board, of drawing on industry for its ablest personnel, has been maintained in the ministry of munitions and supply. Appointments to the latter have been entirely non-partisan and all key positions have been filled by experienced business executives. The direction of the department is assisted by the executive committee, the members of which direct policy and give their personal attention to the larger and more difficult purchasing problems. It is worthy of special mention that the members of the defence purchasing board and the war supply board have all served, and the executive committee of the Department of Munitions and Supply now serve, without salary, and a number of the department's leading executives also serve without salary.

We have called on the services of those business men who have seemed best able to perform the tasks in hand and very few who have been invited to serve have declined to do so. The Department of Munitions and Supply purchases on requisition from the Department of National Defence all such materials as that department requires. It also acts as purchasing agent in Canada for the government of Great Britain, represented here by the British purchasing board, and also for the government of France, represented here by the French purchasing board.

The department attempts to anticipate the needs of all three as far in advance as possible to the extent of having factory space available and tools and raw materials in hand. It is the duty of the Department of Munitions and Supply to see that an adequate supply of materials for war purposes is constantly available, and its economic branch carries on studies of the raw material situation constantly.

The department takes responsibility for the purchasing of such materials as cloth for uniforms, chemicals for explosives, silk for parachutes and any raw material that may be difficult to obtain when requisitioned. Its economic branch studies exchange problems with a view to conserving foreign exchange wherever possible, and problems of production in an effort to obtain maximum results in Canadian industry.

Since the defence purchasing board was established in July, 1939, the Department of Munitions and Supply and its predecessor boards have purchased $225,000,000 worth of equipment, material and munitions for the Canadian army, navy and air force. In addition to this the department has placed $75,-000,000 worth of equipment, material and munitions orders for Great Britain and France, making a total in orders placed of about $300,000,000. In doing so they have placed some 17,000 separate contracts. Throughout April contracts were being awarded at an average rate of 135 daily. Each of these contracts has been awarded by tender except those, relatively few in number, where it was impossible to obtain competitive bidding or in cases where the full output of an industry is required.

If the full output of an industry is required, the custom is to call in the association of the industry, if there is an association, or to call in the separate firms to determine their output in order to start the industry working at full speed. An audit of the books of each firm is made before the work is undertaken and another audit of the books is made when the contract is completed, and the price paid is the actual cost as determined by these audits, with a margin of profit which is kept to an amount consistent with that usual in the trade in ordinary competitive conditions.

Mr. MacNICOL: Do I understand that where a certain line has been purchased the department divides the whole order among all the manufacturers of that line capable of producing the article?

Mr. HOWE: That is done only where the entire output of the industry is needed. For example, in cloth we have been keeping the entire production of our textile mills running at full capacity, at least those suited to the classification. In that case we ask the industry to divide the orders among its members and depend upon the reports of the government auditors to fix the price when the order is completed. Those that have not been awarded by tender have all received the severe scrutiny of men who are not in the strict sense of the word government employees but are serving on the executive committee of the department without salary. In other words, one or more members of the executive committee of the department are required to initial any order placed except as a result of competitive tender where the low tender has been accepted.

The cost plus form of contract has been eliminated and where competitive prices cannot be established auditing firms are retained to examine manufacturers' costs to determine a fair price for the product. At times the suppliers' books are audited by chartered accountants both before the contract is completed and afterwards. All profits are kept to a level consistent with the competitive situation.

It is possible that there are better ways of allotting government contracts than by awarding the work to the lowest tenderer, but no one knows a better means of safeguarding the public interest. Business is placed without competitive tender only when a situation is found that will not permit of competitive tenders being obtained, or when fair prices have been established in the locality by recent competitive tender. Where we have a recent tender for a certain amount of goods, and further goods of the same kind are required, the practice is sometimes followed of extending an order at the previous competitive price.

Our purchasing organization is required to buy a great variety of products. A continuing problem is to keep up with demands for clothing.

To give you a few figures: Our factories have delivered up to a few days ago over 400,000 blankets, 125,000 pairs of boots, 270,000 shirts, 775,000 pairs of socks, 155,000 uniform blouses and jackets, and 190,000 uniform trousers.

Mr. BROOKS: Did all these goods pass inspection?

Mr. HOWE: They have all been inspected by the inspection branch of the Department of National Defence. I am giving the figures of accepted goods.

Mr. BROOKS: All the shoes have been inspected and passed by the inspectors?

Mr. HOWE: Quite. They all go through the inspection rooms of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Well, they have the inspectors in the factory.

Mr. HOWE: Other clothing orders are current which will keep our textile and finishing industries busy to capacity for months to come. So far as needs will permit, clothing [Mr. Howe.]

orders have been placed on the basis of continuous production for the duration of the war. That is particularly so as regards the air training scheme. Our weekly rate of production of these articles is about as follows:

Blankets					 	 20,000
Boots					 	 20,000	pairs
Battle dress	3	uni	for	ms.		 5,000	suits
Socks					 	 40,000	pairs
Underwear.					 	 30,000	suits

Production is now under way of shells and their components ranging from small arms and ammunition, anti-aircraft shells and field gun ammunition to heavy artillery shells. Machine guns are being made in Canada, and the expansion of facilities for the production of anti-aircraft guns and field artillery is proceeding. Some half dozen firms are now directly interested in different phases of gun production, in which activity prior to the war had been confined to the limited field of small arms manufacture in a government arsenal.

Behind this activity stand the heavy metal industry and the machine tool manufacturers of Canada. Our plants have largely been equipped by the domestic tool manufacturers. In addition the vast quantity of inspection gauges necessary to the certification and acceptance of munitions of all kinds is being supplied through Canadian sources. Many thousands of gauges of infinite precision have already been delivered.

All these activities are based in the ultimate analysis on the primary steel and non-ferrous metal industries. Steel furnace capacity has been increased by some hundreds of thousands of tons since the outbreak of war.

Canada's favourable position in the nonferrous metals as compared with 1918 is well recognized. New facilities are being created for the extensive supply of these and other raw materials which go to the manufacture of munitions.

Eight Canadian plants are at present engaged in the manufacture of 2,250,000 shells. These plants have been equipped with modern shell-making equipment. Within a few days an additional 2,250,000 shell order will be placed. Thus within a few days twelve or more Canadian firms will be engaged in the manufacture of 4,500,000 shells. I might say by way of comparison that in the seventeenth month of the great war Canada shipped 5 .-380,000 shells to England—which was a very excellent record at that time. We have placed orders up to the present time for only about the same quantity, which will mean that when that time is reached, based on present orders we shall have delivered about the same amount as had been delivered in the last war. The difference is, of course, that we have installed much more modern machinery, we have larger plants engaged in the business, and the business is not distributed to anything like the extent that it was in the last war. If we had the business to place, relative to our productive capacity, that we had in the last war, we could, of course, supply Britain with many times the quantities of shells that we supplied in the last war.

The shells which Canada now makes or will make in the immediate future include 40 millimetre, 18-pounder, 25-pounder, 3·7 inch, 4·5 inch, 6 inch, and 9·2 inch shells. In order to make the shells complete. Canadian plants are at present engaged in the manufacture of corresponding quantities of cartridge cases, fuses, primers and other requisites. Some sixty different Canadian companies are engaged in this work. The dominion arsenals are also engaged in certain special munition work for the United Kingdom.

Excluding certain explosives orders, for which the capacity of the dominion is being rapidly increased, contracts totalling more than $40,000,000 have been placed for these munitions, including 100,000,000 rounds of small arms ammunition, individual gun barrels, anti-tank carriages, and other items. I might say that that item of 100,000,000 rounds of small arms ammunition has been very greatly increased since these notes were prepared.

Mr. BROOKS: How many of these plants for the manufacture of munitions, shells, cases, and boxes are located in the maritime provinces?

Mr. HOWE: I cannot say, I am sure. I cannot remember offhand the number. great many people say that they cannot come to me and get orders for munitions. My reply is this: I am greatly interested in just one thing, and that is getting the best material available in the shortest time and at the lowest price. I am prepared to open the doors of any department of munitions supply. You can discuss your problem with the chief, you can tell him what your plant is, you can tell him where your difficulty is. He can, perhaps, help you to remove it. If he can, and if you can get your price down so as to produce competitively with other plants, you will get shell orders; if you cannot, you will not.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition, speaking in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, said that he knew of a prominent Canadian manufacturer who was seeking aeroplane orders and could not get them. He did not disclose 95826—9½ why he could not get them, but the implication was, either that we did not like the person applying, or that there was something wrong with his political stripe.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is your own implication, not mine.

Mr. HOWE: If my hon, friend will examine the book I laid on the table to-day, he will find that, in the first place, the firm to which he referred have had a good many million dollars' worth of orders from the war supply board, and in the second place, their difficulty is very much the same as that of a great many other manufacturers applying for orders: they have not put themselves in a position to supply goods of the quality desired in the time required and at a price consistent with the level of production that we are able to obtain in this country.

Mr. BROOKS: I do not want to interrupt too much, but we have had very few orders in the maritimes. I am sure the minister does not wish to intimate that we cannot manufacture as quickly or as cheaply or as well in the maritime provinces as in other parts of Canada.

Mr. HOWE: What I say applies to every part of Canada; these orders go out so widely. They are placed by competitive tender; or, if they are not placed by competitive tender, the entire industry in Canada is canvassed to see who is available to handle the business. Possibly one reason why not so many orders have gone to the maritime provinces is that the principal steel industry there is shipping direct to Great Britain on orders secured well before the war. I think some seventy-five to eighty per cent of the output of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company is being shipped direct from Sydney to Great Britain without passing through the war supply board. If there are other factories in the maritimes capable of doing this work, the doors of the Department of Munitions and Supply are wide open to them and we shall be very glad to help them place themselves in a position to manufacture the type of equipment that is going. I may say that the textile mills in the maritimes are, to my knowledge, operating at full blast; I have yet to recall any manufacturer in the maritimes who has called on me for assistance since I have been associated with this board in the last several months.

We now have some 250 separate construction projects under way, including coastal defences, fortifications, hangars and submarine defences for our harbours and waterways. Outside of the work of the Department of Munitions and Supply, the Departments of Transport and Public Works are assisting by taking over the direction of certain other construction projects. The Department of Public Works is building naval and military structures of the type usually built by them for these service departments. The Department of Transport, owing to the fact that it has trained personnel and experience in building airports, has become responsible for preliminary surveys, land purchases and construction of airports required for the British empire air training programme. Under this plan the Department of Transport is charged with the provision of the necessary airports for training purposes. Of the fifty-one terminal and intermediate aerodromes on the Trans-Canada airway and its feeder lines, thirty-four are being utilized in this programme. These airports were designed for commercial transport flying, with landing strips or runways. For training purposes a larger usable area is desirable; on all of these thirty-four fields a considerable amount of grading will be necessary, and on most of them additional hardsurfaced runways will also be provided. It will be necessary to establish fifty-four completely new aerodromes, more particularly for the advanced flying training, bombing, gunnery and navigation schools. In all there are eighty-eight projects, involving an expenditure of approximately $19,000,000 for develop-

The selection of suitable sites for the new fields was put in hand immediately the new training scheme was approved. In all some seventeen hundred sites were examined. A preliminary survey was made of 195, and out of these 102 were selected for more detailed survey. Complete topographical and development plans have been completed on fifty-three new fields, and tenders have been called for twenty-nine of these. Seventeen jobs were already under way, and it is expected that development work on practically all the projects will be completed during 1940. In the meantime the existing fields are available and many are being used for training purposes.

We are spending some $14,000,000 on the purchase of some nine thousand motor vehicles. Some three thousand of these vehicles have now been delivered overseas, and the seven thousand vehicles required by the first and second divisions will all be delivered overseas by July.

The orders placed for ships in Canadian shipyards aggregated on April 30 approximately $47,000,000, involving a programme extending into 1941. Of this amount, approximately $43,000,000 will be expended in Canada for Canadian labour and material, and the balance either in Great Britain or the United States. It is rather remarkable that on an order for warships only $4,000,000 out of $47,000,000 is required to be expended outside the borders of Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: I assume a large number of the ships to which the minister now refers are either trawlers or mine-layers or mine-sweepers?

Mr. HOWE: In general the bulk of the order is in two classes: one, the mine-sweeper type costing about $550,000; and the other, what is known as the anti-submarine, whale-catcher type, costing something over $500,000. In addition we have a variety of smaller service boats, but I think there are ninety-four in all of the two types I have mentioned.

Mr. RALSTON: Costing about $500,000 apiece.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, $500,000 apiece. This programme directly and indirectly involves a personnel, exclusive of supervisory and office forces which will vary during the programme, of from 10,000 to 17,000 persons. Every ship-yard in Canada has orders for warships that will use the full capacity of the yard until midsummer of next year. A number of ships have been requisitioned from our merchant marine and other services and have been armed and converted to war use.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is that convoy purposes?

Mr. HOWE: Well, a variety of purposes; certain ships for convoy purposes, and others for mine-sweeping and certain other service vessels.

Our navy now consists of some ninety-four ships, ranging from destroyers to patrol boats and service vessels. At the end of the present fiscal year it will have been increased to some 242 ships. Except for destroyers, these added ships will have been built by Canadian shipyards, or requisitioned, and converted in Canadian shipyards.

Our aeroplane division has been exceedingly busy in arranging for the purchase of fighting and bombing planes for the Royal Canadian Air Force, for some five thousand aeroplanes required for the British commonwealth air training plan, and for the plant necessary for the overhaul of planes and engines during the training period. The production of aeroplanes in Canada has been expanded to a point where 1,028 planes will be built in Canada during the current year and 1,583 in 1941.

Mr. MacNICOL: Will the planes be built completely in Canada, including the manufacture of engines?

Mr. HOWE: I am coming to that a little later, if my friend will bear with me.

The progress of the industry can be judged by noting that in 1934 Canadian production was eighteen aircraft; in 1935, 58; in 1936, 109; in 1937, 110, and in 1938, 282.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Pretty small.

Mr. HOWE: An industry is in operation for the manufacture of aeroplane instruments in Canada, and is being rapidly expanded.

In May, 1940, there were 5,711 employees in aircraft plants in Canada, and it is anticipated that this number will be increased to 20,000, based on orders now in hand in the industry.

Aeroplane engines are not manufactured in Canada, and are at present the limiting factor in the further development of our aircraft industry. Extensive study has been given to obtaining a source of aeroplane engines within Canada, and negotiations are proceeding for the establishment in Canada of a large plant for the manufacture of aeroplane engines. This problem presents great difficulties, as is evidenced by the fact that practically all aeroplane engines used on this continent come from three or four sources of supply in the United States and two or three in Great Britain. The production of aeroplane engines involves enormous capital investment, extensive patent rights and a degree of engineering skill not readily obtained. In addition to the Canadian production, arrangements have been made to obtain aeroplanes in the United States and Great Britain, and deliveries are now being made according to schedule. Aeroplane engines for our own production are being obtained from the same sources.

I may say that from time to time we have bought in advance the engines which might be reasonably required under the plans we could see in hand. We contracted in good time for all the aeroplanes required for the air training plan according to the early schedule, both for installation in the machines that we were building or ordering from abroad and for spares during the training period. Since then, of course, the British government has moved into the United States market and contracted for the entire production of aeroplane engines for some time to come, and has arranged also to expand aeroplane factories there. The stepping up of our industry on short notice is, of course, made very difficult by that situation. In the last few days I have been able to discuss the situation with one British and two United States manufacturers of aeroplane engines. They tell me that the engine production in the United States is expanding very rapidly and that it will be only for a matter of months that the production of aeroplane engines will continue to be the bottle-neck of the industry.

Of course the question that we have been asking all manufacturers of aeroplane engines for some months has been, "Why can you not move part of your plant to Canada?" It has been explained to us that the difficulty is in training the technical staff. Apparently the building of aeroplane engines is a highly specialized industry. I was told by a manufacturer only yesterday that he could double his plant in the United States and get production in four or five months, whereas to build a plant in Canada production would take at least from eighteen months to two years. That, I think, explains the difficulty we have met in trying to work out any practical arrangement for the manufacture of aeroplane engines in Canada.

Another difficulty, of course, is the wide variety of sizes of engines we use in this country. One might say, "Well, why not turn out one size of engine and try to standardize your aircraft to the use of that size?" To do so, would very seriously hold back the development of the production of aeroplane engines in this country. Large plants that are in production are able to work up from one size of production to the next size and keep up with the development of the science of flying. Therefore, even if we spent two years in tooling up for one particular size of engine, we might find when we came into production that this type had ceased to be useful in fighting aircraft. I am simply pointing out the tremendous advantage that lies with a plant in continuous production in keeping up with the present situation, as compared with building a plant from the ground up.

To overhaul planes and engines, which is being made a civil occupation under the air training scheme, will involve about 5,600 craftsmen in addition to the 40,000 personnel mentioned for the air training scheme itself. Buildings for overhaul work are being constructed or reconditioned and equipped by the department at an estimated cost of about $4,500,000. These plants are located in various centres from coast to coast, convenient to air force operations.

Our explosives and chemical division has had under study the problem of supplying basic and important raw materials. In some instances we have had to purchase raw materials; in others we have taken steps to augment the supply from Canadian industry and from abroad. Our explosives programme is being rapidly developed. The first unit, involving a capital expenditure of $10,000,000 in plant, is well under way, and an annual production valued at $17,000,000 is expected to commence in the early autumn. Some 1,200 to 1,400 men will be employed in this project when operations commence. This plant will produce 12,000 tons of cordite and 15,000 tons of TNT as its capacity. Arrangements have been practically consummated for another large plant of approximately the same size, and it is expected that construction will start immediately. The capital expenditure on the latter plant will be approximately $10,000,000.

In addition to these new plants, the existing plants of Canadian Industries Limited at Beloeil are running to full capacity on TNT and cordite. At the present time negotiations are being carried on for an extension of the Beloeil plant, to increase the manufacture of propellants required in small arms ammunition, which will be utilized by the Quebec arsenal and the small arms ammunition plant of Dominion Industries Limited at Brownsburg. Toluol is being obtained from all immediately available sources in Canada, and new sources are being developed. This toluol, with the exception of what is required in Canada for the manufacture of TNT, is being exported to Great Britain. After September, all the toluol produced in Canada will be required for the manufacture of TNT in Canada.

Arrangements have been completed for the construction of a plant to produce hexachlorethane, which is a component of smoke-producing mixtures. We are also dealing with inquiries for very large quantities of ammonium nitrate and certain other chemicals which will be used in the explosives programme and for export to Great Britain. Arrangements have been practically concluded for the establishment of a plant to manufacture activated carbon for gas masks to meet Canadian requirements and for export to Great Britain. I might add that we have been manufacturing the gas masks for some time but have had to obtain our activated carbon partly from Great Britain and partly from the United States.

In order to purchase quickly and efficiently, we have to know exactly what Canadian plants can produce and exactly the type of production to which their equipment might be diverted. By the end of last March the plant survey division had completed 2,200 plant inspections. We have on file a fair estimate of the present and potential capacity of Canada to produce any given war material. The immediate availability of this information has resulted in substantial savings to the country on many contracts.

The work of the Department of Munitions and Supply is expanding and will continue to expand as our industrial capacity continues to be absorbed in supplying war needs. It is inevitable that our production can be stepped up only gradually. It takes time to provide machines and to tool up for a new type of production; it takes time to prepare plans and specifications for ships and for coast defence projects; it takes time to organize sources of supply for our new aviation industry; it takes a longer time to build new factories for the production of machine guns, heavy artillery and explosives. The fact that we have been able to place orders for some $300,000,000 worth of war supplies within nine months is an indication that Canada has an enormous industrial capacity and a wide range of production.

I should point out that purchases by the Department of Munitions and Supply and its predecessor boards do not include the purchase of such products as wheat, bacon, cheese, lumber, copper, zinc, nickel and aluminum, which are purchased for direct import by Great Britain. These are handled by other agencies of government, and are in addition to purchases made by the Department of Munitions and Supply.

The Department of Munitions and Supply follows the pattern of its predecessor boards in being entirely non-partisan. Its directing heads and employees have been appointed entirely without political consideration. Its purchases have been awarded to the low tenderer or, where tenders are impossible, to those best able to supply the material at lowest cost. Its transactions are open to the fullest possible scrutiny of parliament subject to limitations that the public interest must not be jeopardized. I am satisfied that all its transactions have been conducted honestly and I take full responsibility for them all. If mistakes have been made, they have been errors of judgment on the part of men qualified by training and experience to exercise sound judgment on the problems before them.

Canadian industry has shown every disposition to cooperate with the department. The department is clothed with extraordinary powers to deal with industry reluctant to fulfil its requirements and with industry not willing to produce at reasonable prices, but these powers have not as yet been exercised in a drastic way, as the need for such action has not arisen. The industrial tempo is rising rapidly, involving increasing difficulties to the department. It is inevitable that the personnel of the department will be expanding for some time to come and that supply and exchange problems will come increasingly to the fore. If we can continue to obtain the services of the type of men that are directing the work at present and have directed it in the past, we can feel confident of meeting these problems as they arise.

In closing, I wish to pay a tribute to the industrial leaders of Canada who have given and are giving their full time to the work of the department without salary, many of them paying their own living expenses. These men bring to the work of the department a wealth of experience that cannot be purchased and a devotion to duty that has been outstanding. I also wish to thank those industrial firms who have placed valued employees in the service of the department without expense to the department. Many of our key positions are filled by men of this type. I also wish to express my appreciation of the work of the rank and file of the department, who have been working long hours, without complaint, in order that there may be no undue delay in meeting our war requirements. Whether the Department of Munitions and Supply is doing all that it could do in the present crisis is for others to judge, but I can say this, that if it is not doing all that it could do, the reason is not lack of effort on the part of its personnel.

I wish to acknowledge the splendid cooperation of Canadian industry with the Department of Munitions and Supply. Industrial management has placed itself at the disposal of the department in a way that has made for most harmonious relations and has tended to facilitate the work of the department to the fullest possible extent. Labour relations on the work of the department have been placed in the hands of an experienced labour leader, who is working in close association with the Minister of Labour, and his efforts have been most helpful.

I feel confident that all branches of industry—labour, management and capital—will continue to cooperate to the end that nothing will interfere with the successful prosecution of the war.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on Monday evening at five minutes to eleven I was speaking, and consented to the adjournment on the understanding that at a later time I might have five or ten minutes more.

It is all very well for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) to give the report he has given to-day. In my opinion he has done good work in connection with civil aviation in Canada. But the minister and the government say that for three years they have known that war was imminent. Last spring I read to the house commitments made by Great Britain to many countries in Europe, and at that time it appeared certain that war would be upon us in six months, because when Britain was at war Canada was at war. Yet the government did nothing. I asked if a survey could be made of large and small industrial plants in Canada, and yet we know that minister after minister told us nothing had been done. A football was made of the question of a national register of man power, food, economic and industrial power.

The Minister of Transport must have known, as I then said, that Britain had two thousand less merchant ships to carry food and munitions than in 1914; and he knew, too, that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) had refused to create storage reservoirs in England, despite his knowledge of the effect of submarine warfare in the last war. What did the government do? Canadian National merchant ships which had cost one or two million dollars were sold for less than $50,000 and, in many cases, without tenders. That is the way Canada treated the imminence of war and the question of shipping, so vital to the empire.

The war supply board is all right, as far as it goes, but we know it is honeycombed with red tape, and the man with the small plant has not got much of the business. What has been the benefit received by the air force from the war supply board? How many of those factories are turning out aeroplanes? How many are turning out heavy tanks or bombing planes? The government has not yet received a Bren gun; in fact there are many things they have not received. I say the first order which should be given to-night is an order under the Militia Act to mobilize all the militia in Canada for all military districts from coast to coast for active service. Call out the militia at once for active service in all Canada. Secondly, a home guard of returned men and others should be formed, because we know it is badly needed in every municipality. Australia has this system. True, home defence is not as important in Canada as it is in England where they are only about twenty-six miles away from the guns and are more liable to air attack; besides, there are 40,000,000 civilians to protect in England. It is all very well for people in Canada to depend upon the protection of the mother country on land, sea and in the air, but it is quite a different thing when you have not that protection.

In order to provide for a home guard three measures would have to be amended, namely, the Militia Act, the War Measures Act and the criminal code, and through those amendments we would empower the mayors of municipalities throughout Canada to form home guards for purposes of protection. The home guards should be backed by legislation and financial support, and rifles should be provided.

In recent years we have had cause to notice how some people from other countries have come to Canada. For instance, we know that von Ribbentrop lived in Ottawa for three years, where he was a social lion. I used to see him at the football and hockey games here and elsewhere.

An hon. MEMBER: Why didn't you hit him on the head?

Mr. CHURCH: He was received in some of the big homes; for Ottawa never knows what the rest of the community is thinking; at times he was in fact a society favourite in Ottawa. He got all those nice ideas and, one fine day, departed for parts unknown. Another one of those famous German ministers used to work on public works. When he came to Canada first he worked for a short time in the sewers and on roadway work in Ontario and in the west. Spies have been all over Canada. I read of their work in Canada in some American and other papers. I say something should be done along the lines of setting up a home guard for the protection of our people and of our empire along these lines; then this kind of propaganda would be stopped.

It is all very well for some people to say that they want peace. Canada wants peace, too, but we realize that we can have peace only through a more vigorous prosecution of the war, and that prosecution must take place throughout all the provinces of Canada. Let us see to it that our effort is not hindered or hampered. Canada's war effort can be carried out properly only when we have courageous leadership. Canada is being asked to make sacrifices because of this situation. Hitler is not going to be beaten because lights are being kept burning in a number of Ottawa buildings, because orders in council are being passed or because blue books are being issued to show what a war board is doing. It will take more than that to beat Hitler. This government refused to have a proper survey made of the manpower, the economic power, the food power and the industrial power of this country. If that had been done two years ago when Great Britain started rearming, conditions to-day might be different. Hitler is not going to be beaten by majorities in parliament or by parliamentary repartee. He can be beaten only by a great national service, by sacrifices on the part of every man, woman and child in Canada. That is the only way in which we can pull our full weight in the boat.

I do not know what will be the fate of this country and no one knows to whom this country will belong at the end of the year should Great Britain lose the war. Canada is the next objective in this fight to a finish. So long as this war is on, Canada must do something all along the line. The only issue in this resolution is how the government of the day has been discharging the public trust which the country put in their hands. In times like these, if the government rises to the situa-tion, it will have the unanimous support of every individual in this house. Canada is willing to make any sacrifice provided she is told that it is necessary. During the course of a war which may engulf all countries, the people are ready to give the government maximum support with minimum criticism.

The main question being asked by the man in the street is: How goes the war? This house should make its only business the prosecution of this war. A number of boards and commissions have been set up, but the government have failed all along the line. They seem to have underestimated the patriotism of the Canadian people. The government have left undone many of the things they should have done, and have done many things they should not have done. For three years the government saw that war was imminent, but they did nothing but talk and pursue a policy of neutrality and isolation. The two cardinal principles of our belated efforts on defence were:

(a) A skeleton of a defence force for home defence.

(b) To protect our neutrality, depending on the United States for maritime freedom.

Here are the Liberal party principles of external policy, as laid down by the Prime Minister himself:

- 1. The principle which must be followed in formulating Canada's external policy is the preservation of unity in Canada as a nation.
- 2. The foreign policy of Canada, generally speaking, does not lie in her relations with the League of Nations but in her relations with the United Kingdom and the United States.
- 3. Canada must, as a rule, keep in the background, in Geneva or elsewhere, whenever European or Asiatic interests are discussed.
- 4. Canada is in no way bound to adopt military sanctions imposed by the League of Nations, neither is she bound to defend any other member of the Commonwealth.
- 5. Canada is in no way bound to apply economic sanctions imposed by the League of Nations.

[Mr. Church.]

But it did apply sanctions against Italy and this action drove Italy into German arms. The next principle reads:

6. In future, before accepting to participate in any military or economic sanctions, or in any war, the Canadian government will have to secure the approval of parliament or the Canadian dian people.

On May 24, 1938, the Prime Minister spoke as follows in the house:

At present danger of attack upon Canada is minor in degree and second hand in origin.

Then on March 30, 1939, another debate took place in which I participated, at which the Prime Minister said:

One strategic fact is clear: The days of great expeditionary forces of infantry crossing the oceans are not likely to recur. Two years ago, I expressed in this house the view that it was extremely doubtful if any of the British dominions would ever send another expeditionary force to England ary force to England.

That statement was made just a little over a year ago.

Then on March 31, 1939, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) stated that he agreed with what had been said by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Manion) and the Prime Minister. I should like to quote the remarks of the Minister of Justice as they appear on page 2468 of Hansard of March 31, 1939:

I read in the Magazine Digest of January, 1939, a translation of an article that appeared in the great newspaper Candide of Paris, by one of the ministers of Austria under the former Chancellor von Schuschnigg, a confidante of Schuschnigg, who gave details of a conversation that took place between the former chancellor and Herr Hitler at the famous interview at Berchtesgaden before the invasion of Austria. May I be permitted to quote these words, which appear at page 64:

"Hitler spoke plainly of the danger and the eventuality of a European war. He sketched briefly the external situation of the Reich and that of the other European states. The British empire, in his opinion, is a colossus with clay feet. The dominions would not take part in an empire war. The break-up of the empire is not only possible, but extremely likely, should war come."

But war did come. Hitler was led to believe, as the kaiser was led to believe in 1914, that the dominions would not back up the mother country. Such speeches as we had in this house on March 31 about neutrality were sent abroad to the world. Other countries were led to believe that Canada would be neutral in the face of war. The parliament of Ulster passed a unanimous resolution telling the mother country that if she were attacked by land, sea or air, the full strength of that dominion would be sent to her aid. Did Canada pass such a resolution? No. We adopted a policy of isolation. Here is a 95826-10 question I asked on May 18, 1939, and the reply I received from the Prime Minister:

- 1. Has the government taken cognizance of the remarks of the Right Honourable Neville Chamberlain and the Secretary of State for War there, as to the free city of Danzig made in the British House of Commons, and calling on the British people to sleep on their haversacks, and calling up for duty large sections of the army, navy and air force at once?
 - 2. Will any papers on this be tabled?
- 3. What was Canada's reply, and what is being done about Canada's security?

Mr. Mackenzie King:

- 1. The government are aware of the published statement to which it is understood this question refers.
- 2 and 3. No communications or papers have been received regarding the statement in question made by the United Kingdom Secretary of State for War, which obviously related directly to instructions being issued to the people of the United Kingdom.

Right down to the hour of the declaration of war this government continued its pacifist policies. War will never be abolished until we have made a much better job of peace than we have. War would be further off if all the sham of Geneva had been eliminated. When men will do their duty to their neighbours, war will go. What is the use of talking as they do at Geneva, about the mote in war's eye and retaining the beam in the eye of Geneva and peace? We would be nearer peace if we got rid of all these pacts and became more critical of what we have failed to do to make a success of peace. Some of the people who are preaching pacifism are being prosecuted. A trial occurred just lately at the Ottawa assizes of certain men who might be termed provocative pacifists, a term used by Mr. Chamberlain. Article thirty-seven of the Thirty-nine articles of the Church of England states that it is lawful for Christian men at the commandment of the magistrate to wear weapons and serve in the wars. If the government is going to prosecute certain people for spreading propaganda, similar action should be taken all along the line. The regulations should be tightened up all along the line. I hope the government will be a real war government. There will be no criticism either in this house or outside if they realize the situation. In my opinion all parties in Canada will have to share the responsibility for the defenceless position in which we found ourselves when war broke out. I have been preaching this gospel since I came here in 1921, but in vain.

Mr. MacNICOL: Seeing that the house will rise in a few minutes, may I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate.

And having returned.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Administrator had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bill:

An act to amend the Department of National Defence Act.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 23, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIONAL REGISTER FOR WAR PURPOSES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Will any steps be taken at once by the government to secure a national register or modern doomsday book or survey of all the people of Canada for war and after the war people of the defended of the step of t purposes, and for defence, economic, industrial and other labour purposes?

2. If so, what are they?
3. Will such a proposed register include:
(a) man power; (b) industrial power; (c) food power; (d) military and defence power; (e) unemployed; (f) transients?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This question, like all others that require a statement of government policy, will be answered as the policies of the government are announced. It is not customary to announce government policy in answer to specific questions on the order paper.

CANADIAN ACTIVE SERVICE FORCE-MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS

Mr. BRUCE:

[Mr. MacNicol.]

1. How many men of the first division were reexamined before going overseas?

2. Were X-ray examinations made on enlistment?

3. How many men developed chest conditions between enlistment and going overseas?
4. Were all men examined by X-ray before going overseas?

- 5. Have all precautions been taken, and records kept so that proper identification may be made later when the question of pensions is being considered?
 - 6. If so, what are they?

Mr. ROGERS:

- 1. All of first division were re-examined before going overseas.
- 2. All men not X-rayed (chest only) on enlistment have since been X-rayed (chest
- 3. During the period between date of mobilization (September 1, 1939) and 31st December, 1939, there were, among all the troops in Canada, 1,339 cases of chest conditions admitted to hospital, including bronchial pneumonia, pleurisy, asthma, emphysema, tuberculosis of the respiratory system.
 - 4. Yes (chest only).
 - 5. Yes.
- 6. A radiologists's written report and film for all cases. These reports and films are numbered with the man's number, name, unit and a serial number, and are filed at the record office in Ottawa.

ALBANY RIVER WATER DIVERSION

Mr. MacNICOL:

1. Was any representative of the government of Canada or the province of Ontario requested or authorized to introduce or discuss the diversion of the water of the Albany river watershed at the recent negotiations in Ottawa or Wash-ington in connection with the proposed St. Lawrence river navigation and power project?

2. Was any Canadian representative, at the negotiations referred to above, directed to protest against the present diversion or the increasing of the present diversion of lake Michigan water at Chicago?

3. Was any Canadian representative, at the above referred to negotiations, directed to discuss the relation of lake Michigan to the proposed St. Lawrence navigation and power

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

- 1. The question of the utilization of waters diverted into the great lakes and St. Lawrence system from the Albany river watershed has been under discussion between the government of Canada and the government of Ontario for many years. Articles were included in the St. Lawrence treaty signed in 1932 and also in the draft Great Lakes-St. Lawrence treaty put forward by the United States government in 1938, providing for the utilization by Canada for power purposes of all water so diverted into the great lakes system. The question has continued under discussion in subsequent negotiations.
- 2. The Canadian authorities have made representations on all appropriate occasions against the excessive diversion of water from the great lakes through the Chicago sanitary canal. The United States federal government and various lake states have also pressed for its restriction. In the past ten years the diversion has been reduced by more than 5,000 cubic second feet as a result.

3. The question of control of the diversion through the Chicago sanitary canal was dealt with in the St. Lawrence treaty of 1932 and has continued to receive attention in all subsequent negotiations.

CANADIAN ACTIVE SERVICE FORCE-ENLISTMENTS. DISPOSITION AND MOBILIZATION

Mr. CHURCH:

- 1. How many men have enlisted in Canada by provinces: (a) for overseas; (b) for home
- 2. How many men by contingents or divisions went overseas: (a) in the war of 1914-18; (b) and have gone to date overseas in this war?
- 3. How many divisions in this war have so far been mobilized, and where, and are any others contemplated?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. The following includes all enlistments C.A.S.F. which were for general service and overseas, if necessary:

All Ranks (As of 11th May, 1940)

Military District No. 1	 6,751
Military District No. 2	17,500
Military District No. 3	13,385
Military District No. 4	8,345
Military District No. 5	4,910
Military District No. 6	10,721
Military District No. 7	 4,477
Military District No. 10	 7,099
Military District No. 11	6,848
Military District No. 12.	4,718
Military District No. 13	 6,041
National Defence Hdqrs	 1,235
Total	 92,030

2. (a)
1914										30,885
1915										84,632
1916										164,524
1917										63,718
1918										73,124
(b)

(0)		CTII
1st flight	 		 	 	 7,797
2nd flight	 		 	 	 8,193
3rd flight	 		 	 	 7,816
4th flight	 	٠.	 	 	 2,473

3. Two divisions C.A.S.F. mobilized in various centres from coast to coast. At least one more is contemplated.

SOLDIERS' CLOTHING IN STORAGE

Mr. MacNICOL:

- 1. What number of soldiers' uniforms were in storage in the Toronto government stores and depots in August of each of the following years: 1936, 1937, 1938, and 1939?
- 2. What number of soldiers' greatcoats were in storage at above referred to stores and depots in said years?
- 3. What number of each of the above referred to uniforms and greatcoats were unserviceable in September, 1939, through having been (a) destroyed by moths or (b) other causes?
- 4. How many pairs of soldiers' boots were in serviceable condition in the above referred to stores and depots in August, 1939?

Mr. ROGERS:

- 1936 1937 1938 1. Breeches.... 1,444 1,336 876 852 Caps.. 3.389 4,678 2,590 3.861 Jackets 9.629 9.349 8.153 Trousers..... 2,912 2,513 1,911 2.864 Puttees 2,210 1,341 2,214
- 2. 1936-9.839 1937-9.842 1938-9,028 1939-8,550
- 3. (a) Number destroyed by moths—negligible.
 - (b) Average quantities condemned annually as unserviceable through fair wear and tear.

Breeches	 	 270
Caps	 	 750
Jackets .	 	 1,250
Trousers		800
Puttees Greatcoa

4. 2,890 pairs.

DEPENDENTS' ALLOWANCE BOARD

Mr. CHURCH:

- 1. Who are the members of the soldiers' dependency board, when were they appointed, what are their respective salaries and duties, and what financial or other qualifications had they for such a position?
- 2. What instructions have been issued to them, and will a copy of same be tabled?
- 3. (a) How many claims have been passed, and (b) how many are pending settlement?
- 4. Will the government consider a system for more prompt payment through the chartered banks, the Bank of Canada or other agency?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. The duties of the members of the dependents' allowance board are set out in financial regulations and instructions for the Canadian active service force. These regulations have been laid on the table of the House and have also been promulgated in the Canada Gazette.

Members:

Colonel S. H. Hill—Appointed September 5th, 1939—In business in Quebec prior to 1912. On January 1st, 1912, appointed officer in the permanent active militia; served in France and was wounded there and on return to Canada served as general staff officer at various places. In 1920 was appointed director of physical training and cadet services. In 1933 transferred to London, Ontario, and served for six years as assistant adjutant and quarter master general. Retired on pension April 10th, 1939. Recalled for duty with the dependents' allowance board on September 5th, 1939.

Salary—Difference between permanent force pension and regimental pay of rank—$1,851.50 p.a.

Lieutenant-Colonel Joseph G. Raymond—Appointed September 20th, 1939—Four years active service 1914-18 War. In Canada and France company commander and adjutant. Experience in civil life—In bond and insurance business and office management with A. E. Ames & Co., and in business for himself.

Salary—Pay of rank—$4,990.50 p.a.

Mr. Arthur H. Brown—Appointed September 5th, 1939—A lawyer by profession. Holds position of secretary of Canadian Farm Loan Board. Has a wide knowledge of general conditions in Canada.

Salary—Paid by farm loan board. Receives no extra pay.

Flying Officer Walter A. Kenzie—Appointed January 17th, 1940—Lawyer by profession, gave up practice to join the forces. Has had considerable experience in handling cases of a social nature.

Salary-Pay of rank-$3,456.

Lieutenant-Commander Archibald E. Fortington, R.C.N.—Appointed March 14th, 1940—Pay Officer in the navy in the Great War. 21 years of service in the dominion civil service, trade and commerce division.

Salary-Pay of rank-$3,686.50.

Chairman, A. MacNamara—Appointed January 17th, 1940—Three years of service in Imperial Air Force and Royal Air Force, 1914-18 War. Twenty-five years with provincial government of Manitoba in administrative positions in Department of Public Works and Labour. Holds position as Deputy Minister of Public Works and Labour of that province and is on loan to the national defence department.

Salary—Receives same salary as paid by the province of Manitoba ($6,000 p.a.), plus a living allowance of $10 a day.

[Mr. Rogers.]

- 2. Answered by 1.
- 3. (a) An April 30th, 1940, 66,762 applications for payments on behalf of men in the service were in payment and of this number 16,627 were for insurance premiums only. The balance, 50,135, was the number of payments being made to dependents.
- (b) As to the number of applications pending, these applications are received as men are recruited and the number varies from day to day. On April 30th, 1940, there were 802 applications under investigation all of which were of recent date.
- 4. There is no delay in the dispatch of cheques to dependents. Cheques are mailed so that they reach dependents on the first of each month and are cashed by any bank and many other agencies.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT— SASKATCHEWAN APPLICATIONS

Mr. FLEMING:

How many applications were made in the judicial districts of Humboldt and Wynyard, in the province of Saskatchewan, for the year 1939-40, under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?

Mr. RALSTON: Eighty-seven farmers submitted applications in the judicial district of Humboldt and 132 farmers submitted applications in the judicial district of Wynyard.

NICKEL EXPORTS

Mr. COLDWELL:

- 1. How many tons of nickel were exported from Canada in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1940?
- 2. To what countries, and in what amounts to each country was the above nickel exported during each month of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1940?
- 3. What amounts of nickel and nickel matte were exported each month to the Falconbridge Nikkelark Aktieselskap of Kristiansand, Norway, during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1940?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. The total exports of nickel and its products for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1940, were 2,345,608 cwts. or 117,280·4 tons (of 2,000 pounds).

Exports per month were as follows: April, 187,541 cwts.; May, 227,643 cwts.; June, 159,-800 cwts.; July, 172,757 cwts.; August, 149,921 cwts.; September, 263,298 cwts.; October, 228,-509 cwts.; November, 204,079 cwts.; December, 169,990 cwts.; January, 205,805 cwts.; February, 171,667 cwts.; March, 204,598 cwts. Total, 2,345,608 cwts.

2. The figures below are of exports to principal countries for each month of the period

April-September, 1939. Since then separate totals for shipments to individual countries of consignment are not being made public, in accordance with the practice followed by all the allied countries.

(In cwts.)	April	May	June	July	Aug.	Sept.
United Kingdom	73,790	106,580	52,296	74.671	46.606	56.599
United States	84,271	73,119	69,629	60,207	80.203	141.821
Norway	9,217	19,181	13,638	18,527	14,224	20,432
Japan	20,142	27,393	23,834	19,209	6,507	40,598
Australia	17			28	50
Brazil	67	850	165
Chile	5	491	45	48	57	684
Colombia			11	5		17
France					2,245	2,240
Mexico	22		182		12

3. In the period for which a breakdown of export figures is available, i.e., April-September, 1939, the only nickel exported to Norway was in the form of nickel matte for refining. The figures given for Norway in reply to question 2 above are therefore entirely for exports of nickel matte. It is understood that these exports were destined to the Falconbridge Nikkelverk Refinery of Kristiansand, Norway. All exports of nickel from Norway since the outbreak of the war were subject to arrangements negotiated between the United Kingdom Ministry of Economic Warfare and the Falconbridge Nikkelverk Refinery. With the German invasion of Norway, shipments of nickel matte from Canada ceased immediately.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN BACON BOARD

Mr. McGREGOR:

- 1. Who are the members of the Canadian bacon board and what is the occupation of each?
- 2. Does the bacon board deduct and retain a portion of the price paid by Great Britain for Canadian pork products exported to that country?
 - 3. If so, how much per 100 pounds?
 - 4. When were such deductions first made?
- 5. What is the total of such deductions to date?
- 6. What amount, if any, of Wiltshire sides and other pork products intended for shipment to Great Britain is now being held in cold storage in Canada?
- 7. By whom are the storage charges on the above being paid?
- 8. What is the total of such charges to date?
 9. How many pounds of fresh pork have been imported into Canada from the United States in each of the last sixteen months?

- 10. What rate of duty was imposed upon such importations?
- 11. Was a drawback of duty allowed on any of such imports?
 - 12. If so, on what amount?
- 13. What is the amount of such drawback to date?

ENLISTED MEN RETURNED TO CANADA

Mr. BRUCE:

- 1. How many enlisted men and officers, who went overseas either with the first division or subsequently, have been returned to Canada?
 - 2. Why were they returned?
- 3. Have they since been discharged from the army?
 - 4. Will they be entitled to pensions?
 - 5. If so, to what amount?

MONTREAL CONSTRUCTION COMPANY—SHELLA PRODUCTION

Mr. HOMUTH:

- 1. How many shells of each size have been produced by the Montreal Construction Company pursuant to the contract awarded to them on November 17, 1937?
- 2. What prices have been paid for these shells?
- 3. What further orders for shells have been given to the Montreal Construction Company by the government?
- 4. What prices have been paid for such further shells or what amounts have been contracted for?
- 5. Under what date or dates were these further contracts awarded, and by what means?
- 6. What is the total amount paid out or contracted for by the government for machinery to equip the plant of the Montreal Construction Company?
- 7. What amount of money is still owing to the Montreal Construction Company in respect to its original contract?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—MONTREAL TERMINAL

Mr. BRUCE:

- 1. What is the total of the expenditures made by the Canadian National Railways on the Montreal Terminal project up to March 31, 1940, under the authority of the vote of last session for the expenditure of $4,200,000?
- 2. What contracts or other commitments have the Canadian National Railways entered into in this connection, covering sums which are not yet due or paid, but which are not included in the answer to the previous question?
- 3. In view of the present crisis, is it the intention of the government to authorize the Canadian National Railways to continue with this programme, which was stated in the first session of 1939, to contemplate expenditures of $12,600,000 during the fiscal years ending March 31, 1940, 1941 and 1942?
- 4. Will the government obtain from the management of the Canadian National Railways and publish drawings and descriptions of the station building which it is proposed to erect under the $12,600,000 project?
- 5. Will the government obtain from the management of the Canadian National Railways and publish plans and descriptions of all other work to be carried out by the Canadian National Railways under the $12,600,000 project?
- 6. Does the contemplated expenditure of $12,600,000 cover: (a) the conversion of the Bonaventure station area into a local freight delivery terminal; (b) the rearrangement of the Canadian National Railways freight yard at Turcotte?
- 7. Does the $12,600,000 project correct the lack of a connection between the east end and west end freight yards of the Canadian National Railways which was stated by the officers of the railways to be a major operating disability?
- 8. Does the $12,600,000 project cover the foreseeable requirements of the Canadian National Railways in connection with its Montreal terminals?
- 9. Is it the intention of the government to authorize the Canadian National Railways to treat this project as a first instalment of the execution of the so-called Palmer project, which was estimated to cost in excess of $50,000,000?
- 10. When will the Canadian National Railways suspend electric passenger car service on the Victoria bridge, and substitute a transfer of passengers at the south end of that bridge from electric tramway cars to train, as outlined in published descriptions of the $12,600,000 project?
- 11. In making the decision to proceed with improvements to their Montreal terminals, did the officers of the Canadian National Railways consult with the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway to ascertain whether the city of Montreal could be given equal or better terminal facilities at a less cost to the public by cooperative action between the two companies as contemplated under the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, 1933?

[Mr. Homuth.]

VOLUNTARY SERVICE-UTILIZATION OF MAN-POWER

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth):

- 1. Is the government using all available voluntary service of man-power in Canada to help in the war effort? If so, how?
- 2. Is the government using all available voluntary service of woman-power to help in the war effort? If so, how?
- 3. How many men over the age of 21 are registered with the voluntary service bureau?
- 4. How many women over the age of 21 are registered with the voluntary service bureau?
- 5. How many Canadians under the age of 21 are registered with the voluntary service bureau?
- 6. Under what categories are the voluntary service lists being indexed?

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD-SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. FLEMING:

- 1. How many loans were applied for under the Canadian Farm Loan Board in the province of Saskatchewan in 1939-40?
- 2. How many part-time appraisers did the Canadian Farm Loan Board employ in the province of Saskatchewan in 1939-40?
- 3. What are the names, the salaries, the expense accounts of the part-time appraisers, and of the full-time appraisers, in the province of Saskatchewan, under the Farm Loan Board?

Mr. RALSTON: Return tabled.

PENSIONS FOR THE BLIND-SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. FLEMING:

- 1. How many persons were examined in 1939-40 in the province of Saskatchewan for pensions for the blind?
- 2. How many were granted a pension for the blind in 1939-40 in the province of Saskatchewan?
- 3. Who are the examiners for the pensions for the blind in the province of Saskatchewan?
- 4. What salary does each examiner receive?
- 5. How much remuneration did each such examiner receive in the province of Saskatchewan in 1939-40?
- 6. How much of a contribution did the dominion government make to the province of Saskatchewan in the year 1939-40, for pensions for the blind?

RIOTING IN SASKATCHEWAN

INQUIRY AS TO RECENT DEMONSTRATIONS BY SOLDIERS AND CIVILIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, has the attention of the government been drawn to the damage to property and danger to life occasioned by rioting in which civilians and uniformed soldiers participated in Regina on the evening of Thursday, May 16? If so, what steps are being taken to investigate the causes and prevent recurrences of a similar nature? I gave notice of the question yesterday.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): I received notice of this question before coming into the chamber. The facts reported to me are as follows:

On May 16 last the district officer commanding military district No. 12 heard a rumour to the effect that some trouble might be expected between soldiers stationed in Regina and the German element in the east end of the city. He immediately called a conference of all commanding officers and acquainted them with the situation.

Later on the same evening between 80 and 100 soldiers congregated in the east end of Regina and despite the fact officers attempted to stop them they proceeded first to the Ukrainian labour temple, then to the Canadian German club where certain damage was done to hangings, furniture and glass. From here they carried on to the Austrian Kitchen where equipment was damaged and windows broken. The total damage was reported to be in the neighbourhood of $3,400.

At this point the district officer commanding met the soldiers involved and persuaded them to return to their quarters. Large crowds had gathered and apparently those actively engaged in the disturbance were incited and encouraged by civilian sympathizers. The mayor and chief of police were interviewed and they decided that in the best interests of all concerned no action would be taken by the civil authorities. Meanwhile the military authorities endeavoured to trace the ringleaders. Demonstrations were continued on the night of the 17th, damage being done to the Metropole hotel, the Regina hotel, the Courier, and Fuhrman's butcher shop. As on the previous occasion the soldiers (about fifty in number) were again apparently encouraged by a large number of civilian sympathizers.

The efforts of the military and civil police were greatly handicapped by the civilians massed about the scenes of the demonstrations which also made the apprehension of the culprits extremely difficult. The civilian police were unable to keep the crowds on the move. No arrests were made by the civil authorities, but a number of soldiers were taken into custody by the military pickets. As a result all troops were confined to barracks and strong pickets sent out to patrol the streets. The garrison was paraded and spoken to by the district officer commanding and further precautions taken against any repetition.

On Sunday, May 19, about twenty soldiers did about $300 damage to an out-of-the-way

Chinese cafe in Saskatoon. This is at the moment the subject of a court of inquiry. Three ringleaders were put under arrest by the military police. This raid occupied only about five minutes. On the night of the 19th a group of four to six soldiers—presumably on leave-did some damage at Estevan. The police were unable to identify the participants, so that no further action could be taken.

Mr. CHURCH: Get these men overseas and there won't be any rioting.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

DEFENCE OF CANADA REGULATIONS-APPLICATION TO ENEMY ALIENS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement on the subject matter connected with the question which has just been answered. This information has particular reference to the defence of Canada regulations, and deals with enemy aliens.

The police have for the past several years been watching closely the activities of foreigncontrolled organizations in Canada. Prior to the outbreak of war, on the 14th March, 1938, the government appointed a committee under the chairmanship of the under-secretary of state, Doctor E. H. Coleman, to make representations to the government as to what should be done in the event of war with respect to the persons of enemy nationality resident in Canada. The committee prepared a report and suggested certain regulations, which were subsequently incorporated as regulations 24, 25 and 26 of the defence of Canada regulations.

The committee recommended that all enemy aliens in Canada, so long as they peacefully pursue their ordinary avocations, should be allowed to continue to enjoy the protection of the law and should be accorded the respect and consideration due to peaceful and lawabiding citizens, and that they should not be arrested, detained or interfered with, provided they comply with the requirements in respect of registration prescribed in the regulations, unless there was reasonable ground to believe that they had been engaged in espionage or were engaging or attempting to engage in acts of a hostile nature, or in giving or attempting to give information to the enemy, or unless they otherwise contravened any law.

It was known to the police prior to the outbreak of war that some enemy aliens were engaging in activities which in the event of war would be prejudicial to the interests or safety of the state. Some persons who were actively engaged in furthering the nazi cause in Canada were persons who had become, during the course of their residence in Canada, naturalized British subjects. These persons, therefore, could not be dealt with under the provisions of the law relating to enemy aliens. They were, therefore, dealt with under the provisions of regulation 21, which provides that the Minister of Justice may, with a view to preventing any person from acting in any manner prejudicial to the public safety or the safety of the state, direct that he be detained in such place and under such conditions as the minister may from time to time determine.

At the beginning of the war it was necessary to use this regulation to take into custody not only persons who were naturalized British subjects of enemy origin but also enemy aliens, who had been engaged or were suspected of engaging in acts of a nature which might be prejudicial to the state or of assistance to the enemy. The Minister of Justice was advised, with a view to preventing particular persons from acting in any manner prejudicial to the public safety, that they be detained immediately.

The first group dealt with were German nationals resident in Canada who were either known or suspected to be members of the German national socialist party (N.S.D.A.P.). Each member of this party undertakes to obey implicitly and without question the orders of the German fuehrer and of his representatives. This organization is a compact and rigidly disciplined body and its members were regarded as dangerous persons in the conditions now prevailing.

A second class of persons whose detention was recommended consisted of male members of the Deutsche Arbeitsfront (D.A.F.), which is an affiliate of the N.S.D.A.P. This group consists of German nationals who describe themselves in their application for membership as true followers of the fuehrer.

A third group whose arrest was ordered consisted of German nationals resident in Canada not known to be formally members of either the N.S.D.A.P. or the Arbeitsfront, but who from their political and social associations, business and industrial connections and other opportunities for espionage were considered to be persons who could not safely be allowed at large in time of war.

The fourth class of persons arrested consisted of a number of naturalized Canadians of German birth or racial origin who had so identified themselves with nazi propagandist activities in this country that it was felt that they could not be regarded as loyal citizens of Canada. These persons were persons of influence in their community and were the leaders of the Deutscher Bund Kanada who had been conspicuous in their attempts to disseminate German culture among Canadians of German origin.

While the Minister of Justice felt at the time that as a precautionary measure these persons should be arrested, he was also aware of the fact that probably many of them could safely be released under suitable sureties of good conduct if subsequent inquiries established that they should no longer be regarded as dangerous persons.

The number of persons originally recommended to the Minister of Justice for arrest consisted of 265 German nationals and 60 naturalized Canadians of German origin. It was felt also that persons in this last category whose conduct had been such as to warrant their continued detention under regulation 21 should be investigated as to their status under the Naturalization Act and that if such persons were considered dangerous in time of war and could not be released, proceedings should be taken to revoke their naturalization with a view to deportation from Canada at the close of hostilities.

It will be noted that of the number originally ordered detained under regulation 21, two hundred and sixty-five would in the ordinary course have been interned under the provisions of the regulations dealing with enemy aliens and steps will be taken to deal with these persons hereafter under the provisions of the regulations dealing with enemy aliens.

Under the enemy alien provisions registration was undertaken by the registrar general, who is the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The following is a statistical statement of the operations carried on by the registrar general of enemy aliens:

 Enemy alien registrations:
 12,483

 Male...
 4,160

 Total...
 16,643

Note: Figures for male and female registrations are estimated, i.e., females 25 per cent of total, males 75 per cent of total.

Surveillance: Enemy aliens are required to report as often as their local registrar considers necessary. Practically all report in person once per month.

Exemption certificates issued: Of the total number of enemy aliens registered, 4,322 have been issued with exemption certificates.

Note: Sex divisions estimated on same basis as registrations.

[Mr. E. Lapointe.]

These exemptions were granted to people from Czechoslovakia and to other similar refugees. The figures continue:

Exeats: Exeats granted for permanent residence outside Canada:

Male. Femal
											-
T	ota	ıl									28

Total exeats granted both sexes for visits to United States, 202.

Internments:

Total internments	406 145
Total now interned	261
Males

Note: Figures for total males now interned include two who escaped, were recaptured, and are now in Kingston penitentiary.

All enemy aliens who are not interned report monthly or very frequently to the police. All reports of enemy aliens are centralized with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at Ottawa and a continuous check is made on the activities of these persons.

The interdepartmental committee is still reconsidering the whole question and any needed change will be effected.

With regard to firearms, I am sure that hon. members of the house have received many telegrams, as I have, with regard to this question. On October 11, 1939, by P.C. 3042, it was provided that the possession of firearms or any ammunition therefor or of any dynamite, gunpowder or other dangerous explosive within Canada by any enemy alien is prohibited.

It was further provided that every such enemy alien within Canada having in his possession or upon his premises any firearm, or ammunition therefor or any dynamite, gunpowder or other dangerous explosive should within ten days of the publication of the order in the Canada Gazette cause such firearm, ammunition, dynamite, gunpowder or other dangerous explosive to be delivered to a justice of the peace residing or to an officer or constable of a police force of a province or city in or near the locality where such firearm, ammunition, et cetera, is had in possession, or to an officer or constable of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The order further provides that if any enemy alien within Canada is reasonably suspected of having in his possession or upon his premises any firearm, ammunition, et cetera, he may be searched or his premises or any place occupied or believed to be occupied by him may be searched by any peace officer or by any officer or constable of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police without warrant, and if any firearm, ammunition, et cetera, is found, it shall be seized, and if the search and seizure takes place after the ten day period mentioned in the first part of the order, the property so seized may be forfeited to the crown and the person who has failed to carry out the order is liable to a penalty not exceeding $500 or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months.

The order further provides that it shall be an offence for any person to give, sell, hire, lease or transfer possession of any firearm, ammunition, dynamite, gunpowder or other dangerous explosive to any enemy alien and any person guilty of such an offence shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $100 or to imprisonment for any term not not exceeding one month.

Under this order in council the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has reported that enemy aliens have given uppossession of firearms, ammunition, et cetera. Consideration is being given by the government to the extension of this order to all aliens residing in the country. The police are keeping a close check on the activities of all such persons.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police has a uniformed strength of 2,450. Steps are being taken to increase the number to such an extent that every eventuality will be taken care of. The commissioner has this matter in hand at the present time.

Regulations 39, 39A, 39B and 62: Regulation 39 of the defence of Canada regulations prohibits, amongst other things, the spreading of reports or making of statements which are intended or likely to be prejudicial to the safety of the state or the efficient prosecution of the war, and regulation 39A prohibits, amongst other things, the printing, publishing, distribution of any document containing any material, report or statement intended or likely to be prejudicial to the safety of the state or the efficient prosecution of the war. These two regulations are, generally, enforced under the direction of the attorney general of the province on information furnished through either the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the provincial or municipal police, all of whom are constantly carrying on investigations in this respect. Under these regulations, particularly 39A, there have been, throughout Canada, numerous prosecutions.

Paragraphs 4 and 5 of regulation 62 prohibit associations, organizations or societies from committing acts prohibited under regulations 39 and 39A, and provide, in certain cases, that the court may declare such associations, organizations, or societies to be illegal

Under this regulation the communist party of Canada was, under a judgment of Mr. Justice Chevrier of the Supreme Court of Ontario on May 15, 1940, declared to be an illegal organization, with the result that every one who after the date of the said judgment, if confirmed, continues to be or becomes an officer or member of the communist party of Canada or professes to be such, or who advocates or defends the acts, principles or policies of the communist party of Canada, is guilty of an offence against the defence of Canada regulations and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $500 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, or to both fine and imprisonment, or liable upon conviction by indictment to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to both fine and imprisonment.

It is, of course, to be understood that regulations 39, 39A and 62 apply to all persons, whether British or alien.

By way of summary I desire to point out the following:

- 1. The law and the regulations as they stand cover all possible eventualities.
- 2. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police and their secret service are in complete control of the situation, both present and as it may develop.
- 3. Persons of present enemy origin suspected of nazi activities have been interned.
- 4. Persons of potential enemy origin are known and are being closely watched.
- 5. The overwhelming majority of foreignborn citizens are passionately anti-nazi.
- 6. Any cessation of labour or diversion of effort to deal with matters that are being and can only be handled by the police would be helping the enemy.
- 7. Any persecution of racial minorities in this country is unworthy of our people, and foreign to our traditions and our national
- 8. In addition to the measures that have been taken, all military precautions have been instituted to safeguard public works, communications, transport facilities, and other property from sabotage or so-called fifth column activities.

May I add in conclusion that it is the intention to have all these matters submitted to a committee of the house for consideration and recommendation as to any changes that may appear to be desirable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, just one question arising out of the minister's statement. Would he be good [Mr. E. Lapointe.] enough to tell the house whether any of these reported 14,000 odd enemy aliens are in the employ of the dominion government?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I hope not, but I cannot answer that question.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think he will find that some are.

ENEMY ALIENS-USE OF SERVICES OF WAR VETERANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. J. M. LOCKHART (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement just made by the Minister of Justice and the many communications received by myself and by other hon, members with respect to enemy aliens in this country would it be possible for the government to give some indication of its attitude with respect to using returned men in that connection?

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): The further use of veterans of the last war is receiving the attention of the two departments chiefly concerned, the Department of National Defence and the Department of Justice, and I might add the Department of Pensions and National Health. I hope shortly to be able to make a further announcement as to the specific plans that may be adopted to that end.

Mr. LOCKHART: May I have the pleasure of handing to the minister certain communications that might be helpful?

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE DEVELOPMENT IN THE NIAGARA DISTRICT FOR ACCOMMODATION OF TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. J. M. LOCKHART (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, may I direct an inquiry to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), which perhaps he may not be able to answer to-day. In the light of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) that a number of large construction programmes are being carried on, I would ask the minister whether in view of the set-up in the Niagara-on-the-Lake district which has been established over a long period of years a development is likely to take place there to house a large number of troops.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): I shall be glad to take note of the question and give my hon. friend an answer to the question as soon as possible.

EUROPEAN WAR

POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT WITH RESPECT TO CARE OF REFUGEE CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): May I ask the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Crerar) to inform the house as to the government's policy with respect to relieving the mother country of the care of a large number of refugee children from different countries of Europe.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Immigration): The matter is under consideration by the government. If my hon. friend will allow his question to stand I may be able to give him a fuller answer to-morrow.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I should like to supplement immediately the answer given by my hon. colleague, by adding that the subject matter of Canada's accepting refugees has for some little time past been receiving the attention of the government. Communications have been taking place with the British government through our high commissioner's office in Great Britain. I mention this because my colleague spoke of giving an answer to-morrow, I thought the house might like to know immediately that the question has been taken up and that we are awaiting information with respect to aspects of it which the government will have to have before it can announce any definite action.

STATEMENT AS TO RECENT DEVELOPMENTS ON WESTERN FRONT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, if it would be wise on my part to attempt to give the house day by day a statement of the situation in Europe. But where there is reason for grave concern or where there may be some word of exceptional interest of an opposite character I believe it might be desirable to give such information to the house as it is received from authoritative sources. I mention that lest the house should come to expect a daily bulletin, so to speak, on the war situation. I should doubt the wisdom of that. The information being received by the government officially might be in some particulars colourless owing to the war situation continuing much the same, the country in consequence might get a wrong impression of just what is taking place from statements of the kind.

Today, however, the situation has become quite serious and I think that I ought to give to the house such official information as the government has received up to the time that I came into the chamber.

In northwestern France the conflict is waging with great intensity, but at such widely scattered points that uncertainty remains as to the exact position. The main German advance yesterday ran on the line from Cambrai through Baupaume to Albert. The main French armies had formed new defensive positions south of the Somme and Aisne rivers. The German advance forces appeared to have halted yesterday, but to-day succeeded in pushing through Abbeville up as far as Boulogne, where heavy fighting is continuing. A French counter-attack has reached Cambrai and the British forces on the Franco-Belgian border, which the Germans are seeking to cut off, have also counter-attacked strongly to the south. British air bombers have done heavy damage against German concentration centres in the Ruhr area, and along the river Meuse.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ralston that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That sums not exceeding $700,000,000 be granted to His Majesty towards defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the governor in council during the year ending 31st March, 1941, for—

(a) the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada;

(b) the conduct of naval, military and air operations in or beyond Canada;

(c) promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk or in any other manner whatsoever; and

(d) the carrying out of any measures deemed necessary or advisable by the governor in council in consequence of the existence of a state of war.

With provision also empowering the governor in council to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $700,000,000 as may be required for the purpose of defraying the aforesaid expenses, the principal and interest of any such loan to be a charge upon and payable out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the grave news that came over the air to-day and has just been given to the house by the Prime Minister (Mr.

Mackenzie King), it is with a good deal of anxiety in my heart—and all hon. members I am sure are equally anxious—that I rise to continue this debate. Nevertheless I am convinced that God Almighty will carry the British empire through this crisis as He has protected it in the past; because the British and the French empires are doing and have done more for His cause than have any other of the warring nations.

In view of the gravity of the situation I intend to shorten my remarks, leaving out much that I would otherwise have said. At the same time, having listened to the statement of the Prime Minister on Monday, and to the statements of the ministers of finance, national defence, and munitions and supply, I regard it as my duty to refer to each of those speeches, because they contain, so far as I can see, the sum total of the government's war effort, an effort which is receiving throughout the country a very great deal of criticism. I have been told by the press that the Secretary of State for the Dominions, Viscount Caldecote, has to-day issued an appeal to the dominions for aeroplanes, and has stated that one plane now will be worth ten later on. That undoubtedly is true.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will probably allow me the privilege of touching on the point that he has raised. I think it should be dealt with immediately.

Mr. MacNICOL: So long as the right hon. gentleman does not take up too much of my time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. I am sure hon. members will allow my hon. friend any loss of time I may occasion him. The government has learned through the press—I repeat, through the press—of a statement made to-day by Lord Caldecote in London, in which the dominions secretary points out the supreme immediate importance of maintaining and increasing supplies of planes and war materials. This statement is reported to have been addressed to the dominion governments.

For the information of the house I wish it to be known that no official communication of this nature has yet been received by the Canadian government. If such a message does come, we shall, of course, inform the government of the United Kingdom of our determination to do everything that is humanly possible to assist.

As a matter of fact, hon, members will wish to know that on Saturday of last week we communicated with the United Kingdom government stating that we were "willing to do everything possible to encourage and assist [Mr. MacNicol.]

in the development of increased production in Canada for Allied purposes, and that Canadian manufacturers are ready to undertake to the limit of their capacity production of such supplies as can be manufactured in this country." This statement, of course, merely reaffirms what we had already said repeatedly in earlier communications to the governments of our Allies.

On the specific point of the supply of planes the house will, I know, approve the action of the government in offering, as was done on Tuesday last, to forward at once to the United Kingdom all the machines of a certain typenow available in Canada. Other steps of a similar nature which it would not be expedient to describe publicly have also been taken.

I thank my hon. friend for allowing me to state the position, which I think it is important should be made known at once.

Mr. MacNICOL: As I said a moment ago, I take it that the four speeches I have alluded to contain the sum total of what the government has done in its war effort.

On May 20 the Prime Minister said that on May 10 of this year the total personnel in the Canadian active service force was $1,519, and that "in the three services"—presumably the army, the navy and the air force—the total is approximately 100,000 men. With reference to the air service alone the Prime Minister stated that there are 10,926 airmen—which number includes, I assume, not only the aviators but everyone associated with them—or 12,315 of all ranks. Yet of all these men enlisted for the air service, only a single squadron, No. 110, is overseas. Further, of eighty-odd thousand men in the army and naval services, a single division is overseas, consisting of a total of 23,678 men.

Then the Prime Minister referred to Newfoundland. I have a recollection that in September last he made the statement that Canada was going to take care of or to assist in the defence of Newfoundland. A few days ago I met in Toronto a gentleman associated with the administration of Newfoundland, and I asked him if that promise had been carried out, particularly in relation to the strait of Belle Isle and Saint John harbour. He may not have had complete information, but he told me that in neither case has Canada assisted in Newfoundland's defence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, well, he could not possibly have full knowledge of the situation.

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, particularly those two, the strait of Belle Isle and the harbour of Saint John.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are assisting very materially.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Shouldn't the hon. member be allowed to make his speech?

Mr. MacNICOL: The Minister of National Defence also made some statements as to what Canada has done, but he did not give the same figures as the Prime Minister. He stated that the total enlistments in the active service forces of Canada were 72,013, or with the reinforcements, 83,394, but the Prime Minister's statement referred to the figures as of May 10, while the date the Minister of National Defence had in mind was May 20, which may account for the difference in the figures. The minister also stated that there was just one division overseas, but he said that the division on May 20 consisted of 25,692 officers and men. He also stated, as the Prime Minister had done, that there is one squadron of flyers overseas.

The Minister of Finance gave as the total of Canada's financial contribution from September 1 of last year to March 31, $112,000,000, or up to May 15, $136,000,000; and he stated that the commitments up to March 31 were $267,000,000.

Then the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) said that the Department of Munitions and Supply and its predecessor had purchased $225,000,000 worth of equipment. The figures do not just jibe.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon, friend permit me to say this? Those commitments are exclusive of pay and allowances. Of course he will understand that commitments are made now for pay and allowances for the balance of the year.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am dealing only with munitions.

Mr. RALSTON: Oh, no. My hon. friend quoted me as having said that that is the total of our financial contribution; he did not confine it to munitions.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does that include pay and allowances?

Mr. RALSTON: It does not include pay and allowances for the remainder of the year.

Mr. MacNICOL: I did not say it did. I am trying to confine my remarks to munitions. I am trying to set out that in my judgment, from the statements of the four members of the cabinet to whom I have referred, the contribution of Canada to the war effort is small.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend and I never disagree. I just want to be sure that we understand each other. I understood my hon. friend to indicate that what he was giving was my statement as to the total financial contribution. He did not confine it to munitions but spoke of the total financial contribution. He stated that I said the commitments were $237,000,000 up to March 31. I am pointing out that these commitments do not include our commitments for pay and allowances.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister's present statement does not conform to what he said. I will read what he did say:

The house may wish to know the expenditures from September 1 to March 31. For this period the total payments on defence account were $112,000,000.

The total payments to May 15 were $136,-000,000. The commitments from September 1 to March 31 in addition to pay and allowances amounted to $267,000,000, not $237,000,-000 as the minister said.

Mr. RALSTON: I said that those were commitments in addition to pay and allowances.

Mr. MacNICOL: The Minister of Transport made an exhaustive speech in which there was a good deal of information. He spoke of contracts having been let to the amount of $225,000,000. I have looked carefully through the list of contracts, searching diligently for contracts pertaining to the things that men fight with. I quite agree that the materials in all these contracts are necessary. They consist largely of food supplies of all sorts, material for buildings everywhere throughout Canada, electrical equipment, heating and plumbing supplies, textiles, medical and sanitary supplies, furniture of all kinds, boots, aeroplanes and boats, railroad cars, handkerchiefs, locomotives and clothing of one sort or another-a long list of materials of every description. But I cannot find in this list of contracts anything relating to shells, rifles, tanks, bayonets, guns and so forth.

Yesterday the minister said that since these reports had appeared about 2,500,000 shells had been ordered. Something was said also to the effect that the letting of shell contracts compares favourably with the situation in 1914. I believe the point the minister was making was that the shell contracts had been let more rapidly this time than in the last

Mr. HOWE: No, I said about the same.

Mr. MacNICOL: But industry to-day is infinitely better equipped for making shells than it was in 1914. In 1914 industry in Canada did not have shell making machines of consequence, and such machines as they had were slow. I was thoroughly familiar with the making of shells at that time. To-day however the shell making machines are marvellous compared with those that were in use in 1914; they are many times more rapid. In a few minutes they can turn out the very latest shells. In fact the Canadian manufacturers of shell-making machines are producing, I am told, machines that are unsurpassed anywhere in the world-which is borne out by the fact that our manufacturers are shipping shell-making machines to all parts of the empire, including large numbers to Great Britain. They are equipping whole plants over there for turning out shells of various

The minister spoke about the air training scheme. I sincerely regret that when we began purchasing aeroplanes, which we should have done two or three years ago or even before that, we did not try to create a plant in Canada, even if only a small pilot plant under the control of the government, for making aeroplanes in this country. I very much regret this, having been associated for so many years with working men. I hate to see this vast quantity of equipment coming from outside. Perhaps it would be better for us if a good deal more were coming in, but that does not alter the fact that we should have been able to make aeroplanes in Canada ourselves instead of merely assembling, or largely assembling them.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): We are making aeroplanes in Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: No, we are not making aeroplane engines here. We should be.

Mr FRASER (Northumberland): We are building aeroplanes

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. gentleman can get up and make his own speech; I want to finish my own. As far as I can see, in the past eight and a half months, since the outbreak of war in September last, the sum total of Canada's present war contribution at the scene of action has been, as I have stated, quoting what the Prime Minister said. After eight and a half months we have one division and one flying squadron in England, but not at the scene of action. I am going to recall 1914 for a moment. I remember the period quite well, as most members do. Everything was sailing along down stream without any thought of war, certainly not until the assassination at Sarajevo. Throughout the month of July, 1914, people went on their holidays, carried on their business as usual and pursued their customary avocations. At the end of July or beginning of August, 1914, stark tragedy faced the world. Canada was drawn into the maelstrom along with the rest of the empire, and in nine and a half months Canada had fully equipped, thoroughly armed and well dressed battalions in France to the number of 40,000 men and another 20,000 in England. I am not complaining particularly about what the government has done, but I want to show that what was done in 1914 was infinitely superior to what has so far been accomplished in this war, especially in view of the fact that prior to 1914 there were no warnings whereas prior to 1939 we had three years of warning. Great Britain and France were rearming feverishly and we should have been doing the same.

Mr. HOWDEN: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MacNICOL: This is too serious an occasion to waste time or words. What I am stating is a fact.

Mr. HOWDEN: The question would challenge the hon, gentleman's fact.

Mr. MacNICOL: Hon. members have no doubt read an article which appeared in last night's Ottawa Journal; I have it here. After nine months, it states, in 1914 we had 40,000 men in France.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the hon. gentleman wishes to make the comparison fairly, perhaps he will tell us what was done in 1914 so far as naval defence was concerned, and also what was done by air at that time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not think the Prime Minister should say that.

Mr. MacNICOL: In reply to the Prime Minister's question with regard to aeroplanes in 1914, I might ask what this government did about cavalry in 1939. In 1914 aeroplanes were not the important factor they are to-day, but cavalry was very important. While I have not the figures here, I have no doubt that the Canadian government dispatched cavalry to the front in 1914.

Mr. McNEVIN: Is there any comparison between cavalry and aeroplanes?

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, if the government plant at Lindsay had been devoted to the manufacture of aeroplanes we might be turning out aeroplanes in Canada to-day, instead of having had a plant capable of giving employment to 1,500 standing idle for some years past. It is what the government has done that has occasioned the criticism that is being offered in the press across the entire dominion. There is no use denying it; the government know as well as I do what has been said all over the country in the press and by great clubs and associations. On May 21 the St. Clair Business Men's Association of Toronto sent a telegram to the Prime Minister, a copy of which was sent to me as well. That is one of the largest business men's organizations in Canada; in the summer time it sometimes has 20,000 people present at its outings. The telegram stated:

[Mr. MacNicol.]

At a meeting of this association held to-day the following resolution was passed unanimously:

That in the opinion of this association nothing will satisfy the people of Canada short of the use of the last ounce of energy and the last dollar in the prosecution of this war.

That is the opinion of a large business men's association. On Sunday last in this city a well known clergyman gave an address from the pulpit, a report of which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of Monday morning, headed:

Declares it Time Government Woke Up.

That is public opinion, and no doubt the Prime Minister has had many telegrams and read many articles along the same line.

I should like to give one or two headings from some of our leading newspapers. This was in the Toronto Telegram:

Why the Paralysis in Canada's War Effort?

The results show that there has been a paralysis, so far as placing troops in the front line is concerned. We have not a battalion in France yet, so far as I know, unless it went over within the last day or two. In the Ottawa Citizen of May 2 we read this:

They have projected this controversial matter (the dominion-provincial report) into dominion and provincial politics wholly to shield the head of a government of a defenceless people.

That was the opinion of none other than the premier of Ontario, the greatest province of Canada. I have been wondering if the reason for the laxity of the government in prosecuting the war lies within the Prime Minister himself. He has been a peace loving man. Everyone should love peace, but we have to face stark war when it comes. On September 8 of last year the Prime Minister said:

I never dreamed that the day would come when, after spending a lifetime in a continuous effort to promote and to preserve peace and goodwill in international as well as in industrial relations, it should fall to my lot to be the one to lead this Dominion of Canada into a great war.

Well, I wonder if the right hon, gentleman has been able to transmute his laudable desires for peace into a desire to promote war now that he is compelled to face war, or whether he is still consumed with the desire for peace in the face of this stark war.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend is asking me the question, I will tell him that I am trying to hasten the day when peace will come by putting forth the strongest possible effort against the greatest enemy of peace in the world to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacNICOL: If the hon. gentlemen who are applauding what the Prime Minister has just said are satisfied, after eight and a half months of war, with not having a Canadian battalion in France and not having an air squadron at the front, I can say that I am not satisfied. I maintain that ours has been a very weak war effort, and that is why we find the press and many important associations and clubs throughout Canada denouncing this government.

This is not a time for talk; in conclusion let me say this. Probably the Prime Minister is doing the best he can, but he is not surrounded by the ablest men he could select as ministers. He has some able men but there are others sitting around him who are also able. I am sure he could pick capable men, out of the rump over here or elsewhere throughout the house, to reform his cabinet into a fighting war cabinet—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order; there is too much noise in the chamber. If the hon, gentleman wishes to do so of course he may allow these interruptions, but he is entitled to proceed without being interrupted. I suggest that the noise should cease.

Mr. MacNICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Prime Minister wanted to reorganize his cabinet and carry on he could get a number of good men from his own following. But if I were prime minister I would not do that. I would do what the press of Canada are asking him to do, in the face of stark reality, when perhaps the empire is crumbling. I hope and pray to God that is not so, but the situation is so serious that he should be surrounded by the ablest men available. Today the press are asking the Prime Minister to do what has been done in both France and England—to establish a national government, to surround himself with the best and ablest men in this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacNICOL: Hon. members may laugh, but I am not interested in politics at this time; I do not care a fig for politics.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is not a laughing matter, either. I am interested in doing my level best and contributing what I can in the most useful manner to assist Canada to help the empire win this war. With me that comes ahead of anything else. The great Toronto Globe—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacNICOL: You may laugh at that, too, but the Globe is a great newspaper. Another great newspaper, the Border Cities Star—

Mr. MARTIN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacNICOL: My hon. friend says "hear, hear." He is the last person I should expect to say that, in view of what this newspaper said about his leader. This is what the Border Cities Star had to say:

He has shown, more and more every day, that he is temperamentally unfitted to lead a country in a great war effort.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That was said during the recent campaign by my hon. friend's leader at that time, but the people of Canada took a different view.

Mr. MacNICOL: I certainly do not like to see the Prime Minister injecting politics into a discussion of this kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have refrained from politics in the course of my remarks; I have tried to be constructive and certainly I have not been recriminatory, in accordance with the suggestion made by the Prime Minister a few days ago.

In my humble judgment, which is supported by the great editors of this country, and by the great clubs and associations, the government is not giving Canada an opportunity to contribute its full strength and help to the allies in this hour of distress. The government should wake up and start again, forgetting the past and rallying behind the motherland. Cable the motherland that you are going to send them a thousand aeroplanes; cable them that you are going to send them a thousand tanks. We are not making tanks in Canada, but I could name a score of large industrial plants in this country in which tanks could be made within a reasonable length of time.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, sure.

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes, I can. I would point out to the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), who spoke a moment ago, that there is a large plant near Windsor, an auxiliary steel plant, about a thousand feet long, and more or less than 300 feet wide, a plant which has its own blast furnaces. They may not be right up to date, but they could be brought up to date. Yet that great plant stands idle while Rome burns—and when I say "Rome" I mean France and the British empire.

Every plant and every man in Canada should be utilized, no matter what the government may be, and those plants and men should be doing their best to enable Canada, in this hour of the world's greatest need, to render to the British empire and to her gallant ally, France, the greatest possible measure of support.

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in this grave hour in the life of Canada and of the British empire and, indeed, of our Christian civilization, as a private member of the House of Commons I hesitate taking up any time at all in debate. My only reason for doing so is that I have certain suggestions to place before the government concerning our war effort—suggestions which I believe, the Canadian people as individuals would make to the government were that possible; suggestions as to which sooner or later—and I think it will be sooner—the Canadian people will compel action on the part of this or any other government which may be leading Canada.

All hon, members must feel to-day that the people of Canada are looking to us in parliament for leadership as they have never done before in the history of this young nation. Can we not keep our heads high; can we not show to our people courage, determination and initiative? I ask hon, members to do that; let us give encouragement to our people in these trying times.

My first suggestion is that recruiting should be thrown wide open, so that every fit Canadian wishing to serve in our fighting forces may do so. The government must take full advantage of the will of our people to serve. The greatest failure of the government—and in my criticism I shall try not to be destructive—in directing the war effort of Canada has been its failure to harness the enthusiasm and, further, the patriotism of the Canadian people.

We are depending on volunteers to fight for Canada overseas and to defend her at home. Volunteering must be encouraged in every way. All hon, members know what has happened; I dare say each one of us knows what has been happening in connection with recruiting. When the war broke out the men who had been in the militia were called up; they left their jobs, and then some units were either demobilized or reduced in strength; the demobilized militiamen, being out of work, were thrown back on their own resources. This is the manner in which some of the militia were treated. With respect to volunteers, at their own expense men have come to my home city of Vancouver from as far away as the Yukon in the north and Texas in the south, anxious to volunteer and perfectly fit to serve. Yet there was no chance for them to join the Canadian forces; they were told they were not needed. In some instances names were taken and the men were told that they could come back.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

In his statement the other day the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) stated, quite properly, that we must now recruit for the third division; that recruiting for that division must be opened at once. He said further that we would continue to recruit reinforcements for our first and second divisions. Of course that is of paramount importance, and I commend the government for taking that step and thus making certain that these young Canadians of ours will not be left unsupported overseas. It is proper that they be adequately reinforced.

But why can we not also recruit up to strength the other non-permanent units? For example in my own city we have the British Columbia regiment, one which perpetuates the senior fighting battalion from that province in the last war, namely the 7th battalion. That unit is not in the active service force and not mobilized. Officers have drifted away to other units and men have been sent to other units. There they are, really not in a position to render any effective service.

If the government cannot afford to carry men in units of that type on a full-time basis, let them enlist in the militia as they would have done before the war, and train in the evenings. Frankly I am afraid that the question whether or not we can afford to pay these men has entered too largely into the military plans of the government.

Mr. RALSTON: Does this resolution show it?

Mr. GREEN: Whether or not they are in the active service force, all these units will be needed. They may be required for fighting right here in Canada within the next year. They cannot be recruited up to strength too soon. Whether or not they are needed to fight here as units, the training would be invaluable. We would be building up trained forces for use in any national emergency.

In this connection we have a good example to follow in Australia. What has been done in that country? With a population twofifths less than ours—I quote from a newspaper dispatch, dated May 20, from Canberrathey have done this:

Intensified recruiting to form a seventh division of the second Australian imperial force was officially announced to-day.

Prime Minister R. G. Menzies announced the war cabinet's decision, while Brigadier Geoffrey A. Street, National Defence Minister, simulissued a public appeal to young men taneously

"The utter ruthlessness of the German machine emphasizes the necessity of fighting to the bitter end," Brigadier Street said. "Increased recruiting can be an evidence of the allies' inflexible will to victory."

That same day in Ottawa Major General Sir William Glasgow, High Commissioner to Canada from Australia, told the Ottawa Rotary club that an estimated total of 90,000 troops would be sent abroad from Australia by June of 1941, and that a militia comprising 80,000 men was being maintained for home defence. If Canada were to have a similar force in proportion to her population, we would have 300,000 men under arms by the time specified by Sir William Glasgow.

The subject of recruiting brings me to that of training. I served in the last war, and if there is one thing that makes me heartsick about not recruiting men early enough it is the possibility that those men may go to war half-trained. That means nothing more or less than that young Canadians who would otherwise have had a chance for their lives will be killed. We cannot train a man to be a soldier in a week or a month. It took months in the last war, and it will take many more months in this one, in view of the high degree of mechanization. Those men should be given a chance to get the very best training. Now, we have this situation in British Columbia. The only way a young man can obtain training for a commission is in the officers' training corps of the university of British Columbia. That training corps, if you please, has been given orders to shut down from June 9 until September 15. One wonders whether or not there is a war on when things like that are done. Furthermore, one cannot enter that officers' training corps unless he is a graduate either of the university of British Columbia or of some other university. We have hundreds of bright young business men who are members of our junior board of trade-no doubt the same situation exists across Canada-yet many of them are not eligible for officer training. These men have shown by the success they have made of their business activities that they are leaders of men. Many of them would make excellent officer material. The officers' training plan in Canada should be enlarged at once. Certainly there should be no cessation of its activities during the summer months, with Canada facing a crisis which may mean the life or death of the nation.

My third suggestion is that immediate and drastic steps should be taken to procure equipment. Two days ago the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) stated that the enemy had a great preponderance of equipment. I think we all know that our overseas force did not leave Canada fully equipped with mechanical equipment. They had to get part of that equipment in Great Britain and apparently they had difficulty in obtaining it even there. What about our home forces, the forces that may have to fight in Canada? They cannot get equipment from Great Britain and they are entitled to the best equipment that can be manufactured in this day. We must manufacture it in Canada and perhaps purchase some in the United States or possibly in Australia. Our sister dominion has set up a system of state arsenals in which are manufactured many types of equipment which we cannot get here now; I suggest to the government that they should try to purchase certain equipment from Australia. Speaking in the house yesterday, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) uttered these words:

In the matter of supplies for Canada's armed forces the department must decide whether it is desirable to initiate Canadian production or to buy abroad. This depends largely on the quantity required and whether the source of supply in Canada for a particular article is justified as a defence measure, even though production in Canada means greatly increased costs for the quantities required.

May I say to him and to the government that every type of equipment needed to equip troops to meet this modern type of warfare is required as a defence measure in Canada, regardless of the cost, and steps should be taken to see that it is manufactured here. The minister continued:

Canada does not attempt to manufacture every item of equipment required by its troops overseas.

I realize the difficulty and I sympathize with the minister in having to solve this problem, but I say that Canadian initiative is great, and Canadian initiative is needed here. The initiative of Canadian labour and the initiative of Canadian industry are well known, and if the government step into the job I believe we can manufacture in Canada the equipment needed to provide our troops with the most modern weapons. We may have to become the arsenal of the British empire. If Great Britain is bombed, as she may well be even within the next twenty-four hours, and the factories of the mother country are destroyed, we may have to become the arsenal for the empire. We should take steps at once to prepare ourselves to carry out that task.

My fourth suggestion is that we raise home defence units of the different infantry regiments, batteries and other military formations. For example, there could be a second or third battalion of the British Columbia regiment to which I have just referred. Have it understood that these units will be home defence units, and I suggest that they be thrown open to the returned soldiers of Canada. At the present time most of the non-permanent militia units perpetuate Canadian corps units. Why should we not take advantage of the spirit shown by the Canadian corps in the last war? Look at the record of that corps. Those of us who served in it are prouder of having served in the old corps than of anything else we have done in our lives. There is no reason why that same spirit cannot be put into this present effort.

The members of the Canadian corps had courage; they had determination; they had initiative. What has been the record of the returned men of Canada since the war? Time and time again, in periods of depression and of unrest, in every crisis in the life of our nation, the returned soldiers of Canada have stepped in and said, "Steady; we must face this situation in a sensible way." More than any other group they have steadied this nation since the last war. A year ago, before Canada was at war, they offered to register for service in the event of trouble, and over 60,000 returned men did so. What has been done with those registrations? Nothing at all that I know of, or at least very little. These men can be relied upon in any emergency. I do not care what comes up, they can be relied upon to do their job and to do it well. The failure to use the Canadian veteran in this war has been another grave mistake of the present government. As a home defence force they would do a great deal to bring a new spirit to the Canadian people.

My final suggestion concerns the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). I suggest to him that the Canadian people have a right to be relieved at once of worry over possible fifth column activities; in other words, they should be free from worry over treachery at home. Our people have enough trouble now without having to worry about whether or not they are going to be stabbed in the back. All those who might be treacherous are not Germanborn; make no mistake about that. There are other people in this country who would be just as dangerous. I realize there must be no persecution of Germans or any other group simply because they are of certain racial descent. Those of our foreign born population who are loyal—I agree with the Minister of Justice that they are in the great majority —have a right to be cleared of suspicion, and that can be done only if the government acts in this matter.

What has been happening? A week ago to-day 2,000 people met in Vancouver and agitated for some action to meet this difficulty. To-day we heard in the house about riots in Regina over the same matter. I have always had great respect for the Minister of Justice, but in effect his answer to-day is that the matter will be referred to a committee of the house. The committee may meet next week, or it may not meet until next month and we may not get action until next fall. This is not the solution to this problem. It must be faced far more directly and far more quickly. I suggest that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should at once not only consult but act with the authorities and police in the different provinces and municipalities. Where there is any doubt as to the intentions of an individual, action should be taken now, and the case can be fully investigated later.

Mr. MARTIN: Surely that is being done.

Mr. GREEN: If steps are not taken at once there is apt to be a breach of the peace in many parts of Canada—there have been some already—innocent people will suffer with the guilty and the nation will be thrown into an atmosphere of distrust and suspicion. I urge the government to act at once.

In conclusion all these steps, every step which I have mentioned, can be taken by the government within a few hours, and they will be taken if the members of the house insist. Private members in this house supporting the government, and they alone, can force this government to take action on these matters, and I throw out the challenge to them. They are the ones who can get action for the Canadian people at this time. The Canadian people are crying out, they are desperate for leadership. They do not want pussy-footing leadership; they want bold leadership at this time, and it must come from this house and come quickly; because upon whether or not we give leadership may depend the very survival of our nation. If we show steadiness, courage, determination, initiative, and faith in the Almighty, qualities which are common to Canadian men and women, we need have no fear that we shall have behind us in this crisis a strong united nation, and a nation that will not fail.

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, since Canada entered the war this is the first opportunity I have had of making a few remarks in this chamber. I therefore ask the indulgence of the house if I take a few minutes to outline the stand which my constituents sent me here to present regarding our part in this war.

First, I believe that apart from the conscription of men for overseas service this country should bend every effort towards the successful prosecution of this war. I believe in a cooperative commonwealth. That is, I believe in a society in which the natural resources, the key industries and the financial institutions would be cooperatively owned, and democracy-managed in the interests of all the people rather than exploited by a few. But such a society depends upon the free exercise of democracy. It depends, that is to say, upon freedom of speech and of the press, collective bargaining for labour and the farmer, and the exercise of parliamentary government. Wherever nazism has raised its head, these privileges have been ruthlessly suppressed. Because I believe these principles are at stake, I am prepared to see this country bend every effort towards successful resistance of the spread of the totalitarian states.

In recent months some of my friends have accused me of being an imperialist. I am far from being an imperialist. In the history of imperialism there are pages of which very few of us can be proud, but I say solemnly, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon that only the British commonwealth of nations and her allies stand against barbarism and the extermination of everything that makes life worth living to a civilized human being.

The people of Canada are a peace-loving people. There are few who hate war as much as the Canadian people do. But they are also a freedom-loving people; and if it is necessary to fight to prevent a group of international thugs and racketeers from spreading all over the world, I believe that the Canadian people in the main are prepared to fight. They are not unmindful of the fact that many of those who are to-day asking that we join with them to fight against Hitler were partly instrumental in bringing Hitler to power. I am not unmindful of the fact that some democracies played a lamentable part in undermining collective security. I am not unmindful of the unfortunate part which the Canadian government played in the Ethiopian crisis or of the speech which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) made in September, 1936, before the assembly of the league when he said that we were not in favour of "peace by coercion." We are getting coercion now. I have not forgotten that in the last four or five years we have played a very sorry part by helping to arm the aggressor nations of the world. But, Mr. Speaker, I submit that these things are past and there can be no value in holding post mortems because the part that people who believe in democracy and who cherish our civilization should play to-day is to stand shoulder to shoulder to resist the megalomaniac who, drunk with power, now seeks to fasten his rotten and unscrupulous order upon the whole world.

The appropriation which the government now asks the house to vote is for a staggering sum of money-$700,000,000-staggering when we stop to realize that it is 40 per cent more than our entire budget has been in the past three years. It places a tremendous burden upon the taxpayers of Canada. This money is not my money; it is not the government's money; it is not the money of any member of this house. It is the money of the thousands upon thousands of Canadian people who through sales taxes and other taxes contribute to the treasury of Canada, and in contributing that money there are certain things which I believe they have a right to demand of the government and parliament in appropriating that sum.

The first is that the war shall be conducted so far as possible efficiently and competently, without any of those blunders that cause men to lose their lives or the taxpayers' money to be squandered. I was born in the British isles, but I do not believe, as some do, that British general staffs are any more infallible than any other general staff. The history of the last war, Passchendaele, Loos and the Dardanelles, prove that any general staff, no matter how brilliant, may make mistakes. Even in the last nine months in some instances it has been shown beyond the shadow of a doubt that men's lives may be lost because other men have been given responsibilities for which they were not mentally equipped. The people of Canada have a right to know, in giving this money to the government and in offering their sons' lives, that this war is being conducted efficiently and competently. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) the other night made the plea that the government were doing their best, and he enumerated the cabinet one by one. There is not a member of this house, Mr. Speaker, who doubts at all the loyalty or integrity of any member of the government. I believe and I think we all believe that they are doing their best, and any criticism that is aimed at them is not the criticism that they are not doing their best, but whether that best is good enough. We are all going to do our best, but the Canadian people have a right to know whether our best is adequate to the situation. With that in mind I make two suggestions.

The first is that the Canadian government should ask for representation on the allied supreme war council. We should not place men and material at the disposal of military leaders, no matter how brilliant, without having some voice in the policy that will control the destiny of the men whom we are sending overseas.

The second suggestion is that there should be some method by which this house can check the efficiency and the competency of our war effort here in Canada.

There are many matters about which we cannot ask questions in this house. I suppose there is hardly an hon, member who has not some friends or constituents in the activeservice forces. I am sure that we have all been told different things which are far from reassuring. Even after they are trimmed of all exaggeration, and the tendency to grumble which one always finds in some quarters is taken into account, the fact remains that there are many things which we should like to know, but in the very nature of the case the questions cannot be asked, and if they were asked could not be answered. That situation might be met, as the Prime Minister suggested, by setting up a committee representing all the parties to which private and confidential information would be given. I hope that when that committee is set up, it will be continued for the duration of the war. We might go further. We might do as they have done in the British house, and hold secret sessions from time to time.

There are many matters about which we cannot ask the ministry in this house; first, because it would embarrass the ministry, and nobody wants to do that at this time; second, because even if the question could be answered in the affirmative, the mere fact that it was asked might create suspicion and undermine public confidence, and nobody wants to do that at this critical time.

Yesterday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) made reference to supplies, for instance, shells. We should know how many shells we are producing a week, and the calibres. We should know the rate at which we are capable of producing them and how that rate compares with present needs. We should know what we are paying for them as compared with what other countries pay. Naturally that is confidential information and cannot be given openly.

We should know something with reference to our position here in Canada. The speaker who has just taken his seat made mention of the anxiety which is felt among the Canadian people because of the danger of "fifth column" activities. I agree with him that we should raise in Canada a home guard, but someone might ask the more pertinent question, "Have we anything with which to arm a home guard?" This house should know—confidentially—how many rifles and machine guns could be placed in the hands of a home guard in the event of disturbances in Canada. Any hon. member who asked that question in the house and tried to embarrass the government would be doing a disservice to this country, but there should be methods by which we could ask that information and be given some assurance which we in turn could pass on to the people whom we represent.

The second thing which I think we have a right to know when this money is being voted is that, while the Canadian people are sending out men to risk their lives, and the common people are assuming an ever-increasing burden of taxes, there are no profiteers in Canada fattening themselves upon the misery and the tears of the nations at war. No one needs to go back over the story of the last war. It is not a pretty picture. One year ago the government brought down the defence purchasing act, providing for a five per cent profit on all contracts not let by tender. We in this corner supported that act and applauded it. Strange to say, the moment we came face to face with the realities of the situation and were actually at war, and even before we were at war, the provision was removed by order in council. It was like giving a man an umbrella when the sun is shining, and taking it away as soon as it begins to rain. There was tabled yesterday a list of contracts amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. We know nothing about the terms of those contracts, about the rates of delivery, about comparison of prices. There are, for instance, cost-plus contracts in which, the minister says, a margin of profit was allowed which was usual in the industry. Well, what is the "usual" margin in the industry? Who gauges what is the usual margin? The industry? Are they the best judges?

Mr. McGREGOR: What about the five per cent?

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): The five per cent is gone, and the reason why it is gone is that on September 12 the Minister of Transport, from his place in the house, said that he and his department could not get the manufacturers of this country to accept contracts if the profits were limited to five per cent. I say, shame on any group of men who in Canada's hour of Gethsemane are not prepared to give their time, their industry and their machinery of production towards the cause of defending democracy in the world. It would seem to me, therefore, that during this session the Prime Minister might take into consideration, either the setting up of a special committee, or allowing the public accounts committee to go over those contracts so that that committee in turn can give assurance to the Canadian people that they are getting actual value for every dollar which is being spent.

With that in mind, I wish to make one or two suggestions to the government.

The first is that in our opinion you can have neither an efficient prosecution of the war nor a prosecution of the war free from profit unless you are prepared to nationalize the armaments industry in this country. In Great Britain in 1934 the Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin, as he then was, announced a rearmament programme, and for six years Great Britain has been vainly trying to catch up to the great nazi juggernaut. Yesterday, realizing that the attempts so far have not been as successful as they might have been, the British government brought in an act to conscript industry and to conscript wealth. They did more than that. They declared a one hundred per cent excess profits tax. Our excess profits tax in this country does not take even the cream off the profits. In Great Britain they decided to take away profits altogether. I make an appeal to this government not to wait until it is too late. Now is the time to conscript the armaments industry Why should the International Nickel company, for instance, using as it does great natural resources of Canada, be allowed to make between nine and ten million dollars clear profit, as it did in the past three months, at a time when we are asking other men to go out and fight for one dollar and thirty cents a day and are requiring the Canadian people to assume great burdens of taxation?

I think the Prime Minister is to be commended for setting up a Ministry of National Defence for Air. I hope that a minister will be separately charged with the entire responsibility of the Department of Munitions and Supply. It may even be necessary, and probably this parliament, before it prorogues, should give the government the power to set up a department of aircraft production.

Another thing we might do is to conscript those industries which are producing raw material for war purposes and exporting it. I suggest that the government should take the necessary steps to do this, so as to exercise some control over where that material is going. I do not intend to burden the house with statistics. My deskmate, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), this afternoon received an answer from the government with regard to exported nickel. For the last four years the members of this group have checked very closely the exports of war material and have pleaded with this house again and again to stop the export of such material to aggressor nations, particularly Germany, Italy and Japan. This was not done. Now we are at war. The statistics given to us here-and I am not saying this in criticism; no other course is possible under the circumstances-with regard to the export of nickel to different countries ends with September last. In view of the war situation we are not allowed to know the names of the different countries to which nickel has been shipped; but for the period we do know anything about, between April and September, the export of nickel to Japan doubled, and we notice our total output since the outbreak of war has steadily increased, despite the fact, that belligerent nations are no longer importing our nickel. Where is the extra nickel To Great Britain? If so, well and But there are indications that war materials are going to Japan. What assurance has this house to give to the country that these raw materials for war purposes are not being transhipped to Vladivostock and thence to Germany. There may be a gentleman's agreement. I say that in this hour a gentleman's agreement is not good enough. Anyone who reads the report of the British parliamentary committee or the report of the Chamber of Deputies in France which investigated conditions in the last war knows that all through that war indirect shipments went on by which countries at war supplied one another with war material. I say to the government that the people of Canada are in no mood to be trifled with. I know nothing that would do more to put confidence, heart and enthusiasm into the Canadian people than for them to know definitely that steps were being taken to see to it that producers of war material in this country were not making profits out of nickel, scrapiron and copper finding its way into the hands of an enemy power to be used in the wounding of Canadian soldiers and in their destruction. The Canadian people have a right to know that.

I make one other suggestion. We have a right to know that while we are seeking to defend democracy in Europe we shall not be in any danger of losing it at home. I am well aware that strict measures are necessary in war time. We want no fifth column in Canada. No individual or organization that owes allegiance to a foreign power or a foreign ideology has any place in our Canadian life. At the same time the desire to prevent sabotage must not be used as a pretext to restrict our right to criticize governments and to subject governments' conduct of the war to the most rigid scrutiny. Some of the defence of Canada regulations need modification or qualification, and I think the government are to be congratulated upon setting up a committee for the purpose, although I would point out that these regulations might have been submitted to the House of Commons in September. For nine months we have been living under a set of regulations which parliament had no opportunity of examining or passing upon. Some of the radio censorship in the last election was almost ludicrous in a country that is fighting to preserve democracy, and some of the press censorship has been most puerile. Newspaper accounts of the Norwegian campaign which appeared in United States papers were carefully omitted from most of the Canadian papers. It is safe to say that the Canadian people, in the language of the street, "can take it". They do not want their news with a sugar-coating on it. They want to know, when they are given information through the press or over the radio, that they are getting the facts.

A fourth thing which the people of Canada have a right to know in voting this appropriation for carrying on the war is that this war will not be used as an excuse to lower their standard of living. We are already informed that some of the relief expenditures have been curtailed by the government. I am daily receiving letters from my constituency informing me that relief cheques supposed to be out on May 10 have not yet been issued, and in some instances where issued, they have been reduced 33 per cent. The farmers are finding all costs of production going up without a commensurate increase in their prices. People on small wages are finding that their wages are not rising in comparison with the cost of living. The common people are again beginning, through a reduced standard of living, to pay for the financing of the war.

I am aware that it takes money to fight a war. I am aware that sacrifices are involved. But I am also aware that these sacrifices could be more equally distributed than they are now. I am aware that in time of war the government needs money, but I am also aware that in Canada there is no lack of food, no lack of clothing, no lack of all those things that are necessary to give the great mass of the Canadian people a reasonably decent standard of living; and as long as those things are there, we should not be asked to use the war as an excuse to reduce the standard of living of the Canadian people.

One thing more I wish to say in conclusion. During this period of the war this parliament has been charged by the Prime Minister with the responsibility of formulating some type of plan to meet the period of dislocation that may come after the war. It is to be hoped that will be done. One year ago young men could be seen "riding the rods" on freight trains across Canada. To-day hundreds are in his majesty's uniform. Most of us know some of these young men personally. These men are going to fight for a society that could not even give them a job. What do we propose to do with them when they come back? Do we propose to put them back on the rods? God forbid.

A great deal is said about winning the war. That is our paramount job, but it takes more than material and men to win a war. It takes morale, and the only way by which one can preserve democracy is to make democracy work so that it is worth preserving. The totalitarian states have given their people a measure of economic security and they have paid a terrible price for it; they have lost their freedom. In the democracies we have retained freedom and liberty, but the people have very little economic security. We in this group believe it is possible to have both economic security and liberty, and our task is to help to build this democracy so that the men who come back will find that this was not only a country worth fighting for but a country worth living in.

May I say this as I sit down. We all recognize that this is a black hour. There is very little use in the Pollyanna type of optimism. Most of us remember March of 1918. At that time I was a boy thirteen years of age; I stood on Buchanan street in Glasgow in a drizzling rain, together with hundreds of other people. Soldiers of the Canadian corps who spent their leave in Glasgow will remember the Maple Leaf building. There was a great map, on which were flags denoting the various armies' lines. On the particular morning to which I refer there was a gap in the lines; the bulletin announced that an entire British army had been wiped out and that the German military machine was on its way to Paris. That was probably the blackest day in the history of Great Britain, until this moment. There was not a sound, although there were hundreds upon hundreds of people in that crowd. Suddenly someone in front began to sing, and those Scottish workers, together with soldiers from every corner of the British commonwealth, taking off their hats, stood in the drizzling rain and sang:

> O God, our help in ages past, Our hope for years to come.

As I looked around at those people I came to realize something of the inner resources that have made the British people great in the hour of danger, and that strength is still with us. My plea, Mr. Speaker, is: with firm faith in the "divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will"; with confidence in each other and with firm determination to do the right as we see it, let us, the Canadian people, stand shoulder to shoulder in this grim hour until at last the blackness of the night shall give way to the promise of a better day.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, even at this grave moment may I first of all extend my congratulations to you, as one coming from my native province, upon your election to the important office of Speaker of this house. Since your arrival on the prairies from the land of the heather I have followed your career with pride, and I know you will grace your office with dignity and impartiality.

Realizing my limitations, I hesitate to speak on this momentous occasion in what is probably the most serious session of parliament in the history of Canada. As a new member, with some definite instructions from my constituents, naturally I feel very much opposed to the usurpation of private members' privileges and rights in this house under our democratic system of government, which step was taken just the other day.

I am one of those who are thoroughly convinced that the war effort of the Canadian government to date has been half-hearted. In that belief I was confirmed by a minister of this government who last March stated from the public platform that the administration was purposely pursuing a middle-of-theroad policy in regard to the war effort. Last Tuesday in this house the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) stated that modern warfare required extensive and intensive training. From my experience in the last great war and in the militia since that time I fully appreciate this fact, but I believe this is a further reason why the many thousands of our young men who are so willing to enlist should have been mobilized, equipped, and put in training many months ago. Physical and disciplinary training is most necessary, no matter in what branch of the service they may serve. To a very great extent this would have assisted also in solving the great unemployment problem which we have to face even to-day. In my opinion our war effort up to the present time has been very weak, and our people have not received from the government the leadership to which they are rightly entitled.

I should like to say a word concerning agriculture. Napoleon said that an army marched on its stomach, and I believe food may be properly described as a munition of war. It is right and just that those engaged in the manufacture of guns, those who build ships and aeroplanes, those who supply clothing and general equipment, should be properly compensated for their contribution to the empire war effort, and this is being done. It is right and just also that the farmer, who is responsible for food production, should be properly rewarded for his contribution of knowledge, labour and financial investment. He is ready and eager to play his vital part in the general war effort, but for him to do so at fair rates of compensation will require considerably higher prices for many farm products, and especially wheat, than those now prevailing. This objective is of real empire importance. For example, in 1935 through the wheat board the farmer was assured of at least 87½ cents a bushel, basis Fort William. To-day, in the face of increased cost of production and a higher cost of living, for his 1939 wheat crop the farmer is assured of only 70 cents a bushel, basis Fort William. On the other hand a harvest binder cost the farmer $68.50 more in the fall of 1939 than it did in the fall of 1935.

At the present time we have a surplus of bacon in this country. It is disturbing to many farmers, whose sons have offered their lives to this dominion, to learn that the troops in training in Canada are being fed bacon imported from the country to the south. The acreage bonus scheme, while probably a step in the right direction, along the line of crop insurance, has been perhaps the most unsatisfactorily administered act in Canada, causing economic disturbance and hardship in many sections. Approximately one-third of the population of Canada is directly dependent upon agriculture for a livelihood, yet those people receive only approximately one-twelfth of the industrial income of Canada.

On the declaration of war last September the militia council had ready a plan of mobilization, which was not accepted by the government. As the hon, member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) so well stated at the opening of this session, we must ruthlessly mobilize our money, materials and manpower if we are to win this war and, I trust, to win the peace which will follow. In the mail to-day I received from the Boissevain and District Board of Trade a resolution addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister, reading as follows:

Whereas the members of this board of trade, assembled in general meeting at Boissevain in Manitoba, this 14th day of May, A.D. 1940, [Mr. J. A. Ross.]

view the recent developments in Europe with the deepest concern for the safety of our empire and for the preservation of the fredom of all peoples throughout the world;

And whereas it is apparent that Canada's participation in this war, to be effective, must be such that will place all our resources of men, money and materials at the disposal of England and her allies immediately and that our effort must be sustained at its highest pitch until victory has been won;

And whereas from the fact that recruiting has, up until now, been, and still appears to be, discouraged both for our land and air forces, every one of us being acquainted with young men whose offers of service have been rejected, and from the further fact that, in spite of very evident need for haste, our empire air training scheme is still only in its formative stage, it would appear that our war effort is as yet very ineffective and wholly inadequate and that unless something is done at once to invigorate and accelerate it our aid to Britain and her allies will arrive too late to be effective and our participation in the war will prove to be nothing but an idle gesture;

And whereas Canadians sincerely feel, and are openly saying that, after nine months of war nothing has yet been done by Canada, beyond her formal declaration of war, to make either the enemy or England and her allies, in any really effective degree, realize that she has entered the war as an enemy of Germany, and great dissatisfaction at this state of affairs is evident on every hand;

And whereas the feeling of uneasiness over the apparent failure of our government to take vigorous measures to make Canada's participation in the war more apparent and more effective, after nine long months, has developed into a restiveness which is growing daily and is causing open and vigorous criticism of the government's war policy to the extent that Canadians of all walks of life are asserting that Canada's war effort is not intended to be a real one but only a gesture and that the government either cannot or will not make it anything else;

And whereas Canadians are determined that our contribution towards the defence of our empire and the cause of freedom shall be real and effective and active rather than chimerical and ineffective and passive, as to many Canadians it has been in the past and now appears to be:

And whereas there appear to be no effective steps being taken for the complete and effective control of all enemy aliens, and the suppression of subversive propaganda and the teaching of subversive doctrines within the country or for the adequate protection of our grain elevators, railway terminals, transportation systems and other resources vital to our whole-hearted and intensive prosecution of the war;

And whereas it is generally felt that no effective measures have as yet been taken towards the development of Canada's industrial and labour resources for the immediate maximum production of munitions and aeroplanes of which they are now capable and for the rapid expansion of that maximum to its very limit:

Therefore be it resolved that this board of trade forthwith memorialize the dominion government expressing the fears set forth in the premises and urging upon it a vast and immediate invigoration and expansion of its war effort programme in all its branches but particularly in control of enemy aliens and suppression of subversive elements within our borders, the organization of veterans and others for the purposes of home defence and protection of vital industries against sabotage, the development of our industrial and labour resources to their maximum efficiency for the production of munitions and aeroplanes, the carrying out of the air training scheme to a point where trained airmen are made, without any delay, available in large and ever increasing numbers and in recruiting and equipping and training division after division of troops to take their places at the front, and generally, in at once marshalling Canada's whole strength and all her resources to the end of immediately more vigorously and effectively assisting Great Britain and her allies in the prosecution of the war in which we are now jointly engaged.

Canada is rich and big and young and strong and vigorous and we Canadians now address a direct and urgent appeal to our government, in whose promises to effectively prosecute the war we showed such unbounded confidence and trust just a few short weeks ago, to lead us in taking to England and her allies immediately all the great help of which our strong young country is capable and of which she and they at this moment stand so greatly in need.

The Boissevain and District Board of Trade
W. V. Udall,
President.
A. J. Robbins,
Acting-Secretary.

Speaking at this time as a Britisher and a Canadian, with a full realization of the grave crisis now existing, and devoid of any partisan feeling at the moment, may I say that my respect and sympathy are very much with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) in the tremendous task he has undertaken. My sympathies are also with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) in these days of great national peril.

Of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) may I say that during this great and grave crisis in my opinion he does not inspire the confidence of the vast majority of people across Canada. May I repeat the words of Mr. David Lloyd George when recently addressing the Right Hon. Neville Chamberlain in the House of Commons at Westminster: "The greatest contribution you can make towards winning this war, Mr. Prime Minister, is for you to hand in your resignation."

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Who said so?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am quoting the words of Mr. David Lloyd George. In view of the news which has come recently from the motherland and in view of what has occurred in Canada, with all the feeling in my heart

I appeal to our Prime Minister to prove himself the great and true Britisher that the Right Hon. Neville Chamberlain proved himself to be, and to hand over the reins of government to one having practical war experience. If he wishes to cooperate in the interests of his country, he should do likewise immediately.

This is not a time for political expediency—Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): —but rather a time for the whole-hearted cooperation of all members in the house. That cooperation was ably given by our leader, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), at the opening of this session.

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, as a new member in the House of Commons I realize fully my position in rising to take part in the debate. I agree most heartily with the observations just made by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross). It seems strange that as soon as he mentioned the words "political expediency," there was immediate applause from the government benches.

It is not necessary to dwell on the seriousness of the hour, and I say to private members on the government benches that now is the time for them to show their loyalty.

An hon. MEMBER: How?

Mr. WHITE: We of the opposition have duties to perform, too. We have the duty to our constituents who sent us here to reflect in the House of Commons their opinions and desires. It is not my intention in any way to rehash or go over the issues involved in the election for, after all, the past is gone. Whatever the mistakes have been, and whatever bad judgment has been shown, are of little importance at this time. The present and the future are our vital concern.

But even to-day can we, the members of the House of Commons, truly satisfy ourselves that, even at this important hour, the present government is making every possible war effort. Speaking for myself—and I say this with deep regret-I have absolutely no confidence that the government is capable of arousing even within its own ranks, let alone throughout the nation, the action and the speed necessary to cope with the daily increasing threat to our very existence. This hour calls for inspiring leadership, for complete harmony and unity, for the thrusting aside of petty and insignificant matters and of forgetting all past differences so that we, the elected members, may in the brief time remaining at our disposal mobilize with lightning speed all our resources for the defence of Canada.

The press of yesterday and to-day which mentions names such as Arras, Vimy, the Somme and Abbeville, must recall stirring memories to the minds of many hon. members who were the veterans of another war, men who formed part of that glorious Canadian corps which served from 1914 to 1918, men who took part in writing a glorious page in history. These men will recall other dark days in March and April of 1918, and they will remember with pride the message that came from Sir Arthur Currie when he said: "We have our backs to the wall and we must fight it out". Everyone knows how the Canadian corps of that day met that challenge and how they fought it out. Once more we have our backs to the wall, and I am confident that once more we will meet the challenge and fight it out.

I represent the counties of Hastings and Peterborough. To-day we have in England with the first division the Hastings and Prince Edward regiment, one of the finest regiments that ever left these shores. It is simply disgraceful that so little is being done in the way of recruiting in these counties which made such a wonderful contribution from 1914 to 1918 in men, munitions and supplies. I wonder if the members of this house realize that in Ontario east of Toronto there is only one rifle infantry regiment, and that in all that area there is only one place where a man may enlist in such a regiment. That point is at Picton, a most inconvenient place. That is in the riding of my hon. friend (Mr. Tustin), but I said "most inconvenient", not "most insignificant".

At the present time recruiting at this point may be carried on for a week, and then the office is closed down. It may interest hon. members to know that there has been no recruiting at this point, the only recruiting depot east of Toronto, since May 11, and the depot is still closed. Any man who wants to enlist in a rifle regiment must, if he resides east of Toronto, travel or hitch-hike hundreds of miles to Picton, and then when he arrives there he may find there is no recruiting and be told to come back the following week. In many instances the man's name is taken and he is told he will be advised when recruiting will begin again. Is it the policy of this government at the present time to have only one place where a man may enlist in an area covering hundreds of square miles east of the city of Toronto?

In my riding there are hundreds of young Canadians who have been trying for months to join the Royal Air Force, and the best they have been able to accomplish is to have their names taken and be told that they will [Mr. White.]

be advised at a later date. There is no action which the government has taken which has so discouraged the young men of Canada more than this action in regard to recruiting. In the small village of Madoc in which I reside there is an armoury in which from three to 500 men could be trained. That armoury has been locked up since October 1, 1939. In that armoury there is not a single rifle, a single round of ammunition, a single machine gun or any equipment or war supplies of any kind. All the equipment consists of is two dozen chairs and a few tables. Why? Because the equipment which had been there for years and which had been brought home in 1918 was used to equip the Hastings and Prince Edward regiment. That regiment took this antique equipment back to England.

In the village of Norwood in my riding, there is another armoury in which 500 men could be trained. That armoury has also been locked up since the beginning of the war and contains no rifles or equipment of any kind. In Peterborough and Belleville are located two of the finest armouries in Ontario, but they have not been used in any way. I ask the government, why are they not taking advantage of these buildings? Why does this condition exist? It certainly is not because of a lack of recruits, because recruits can be had at any time.

It is not because of a lack of capable officers. In the small village of only 1,000 people in which I reside there are ten qualified officers, five of whom have had overseas training. All these officers have been connected for years with the non-permanent militia and are well qualified to drill troops, instruct and lecture in signalling practice, bayonet fighting and gas warfare, as well as machine-gun practice, military tactics and military organization. In addition we have many non-commissioned officers who are fully trained and capable of performing all military duties. These officers and non-commissioned officers are most willing and anxious to give their services.

The manner in which this government has conducted recruiting has convinced me more than anything else that the public have no confidence whatever in the present war effort. From the press we learn that various veterans' organizations have offered their services to the government, but these services have not been accepted. Much has been said already in this house about "fifth column" activities. I was interested in the statement made a few days ago by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the effect that all "fifth column" activities were being checked carefully and handled by the mounted police.

I should like to bring to the attention of this house a most serious condition which exists in the county of Hastings. In that county there are about fifty-five miles of a power line which runs from the Gatineau to Leaside, about thirty-five miles of which run through a most sparsely settled section of the county. Yet there is not one guard of any kind to protect this line. There are no soldiers within a radius of 100 miles. The provincial hydro commission has a maintenance man who patrols a beat of thirty-nine miles. Can hon. members grasp that? One man patrolling a beat of thirty-nine miles! That is all the protection there is for this vital power line.

It would be the simplest matter in the world for one man to wreck the whole system. I am told that if this line were wrecked, at least two-thirds of Toronto and a large portion of eastern and western Ontario would be without power or light. Within the last month a foreigner was charged in the police court at Marmora with removing brace arms from these hydro towers. When addressing the court at the conclusion of the evidence, the crown attorney said to the magistrate that this was a direct case of sabotage. And yet no action has been taken by anyone to protect or guard this highly vulnerable power line. I might explain to members of the house that the method of sabotaging these towers is to remove certain braces and cross-arms, or to saw partly through certain girders and then leave the rest to nature, so that at the first storm or strong wind the towers will be completely wrecked. Throughout these two counties there are many mines of great importance in war time and many important industrial works, and yet there is not a single guard of any kind.

The huge sum of money which is being asked for by this resolution should be spent within the Dominion of Canada. So far as the amount itself is concerned it is of little importance because what does it matter what amount we spend to-day if we are in danger of losing our freedom and all the privileges we have enjoyed under the British crown, if we are in danger of being reduced to actual slavery? In these circumstances the amount matters little.

Like my hon. friend the member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green), I am going to make a few suggestions to the government:

- 1. That all militia units throughout Canada be recruited to full strength at once, and if clothing is not available, that arm bands be used.
- 2. That with all speed all war equipment be manufactured and used to equip fully all overseas troops; then huge stores of same be set up in Canada.

3. That a home defence corps be organized and trained.

4. That the cadet units of high schools and collegiates be used in any possible manner, such as for instruction and organization purposes.

5. That provision be made by counties or districts for the protection and guarding against sabotage of all vital industries, public utilities and military objectives within such county or district.

6. That all armouries now locked up or partly used be utilized to the full degree.

7. That the services of all war veterans be used for training and guard duties.

8. Registration of all man-power and other resources.

9. Immediate internment of all aliens and enemy sympathizers. That a local tribunal be set up in each county or district under the local county judge to deal with internment, so that this can be carried out with speed and efficiency.

10. That the government consider what steps can be taken to control the broadcasting of enemy propaganda from American stations.

11. That the government consider the passing of measures to provide the death penalty for espionage, sabotage or "fifth column" activities.

And lastly, that in the grave situation to-day the government consider invoking the provisions of the Militia Act, which provides for the calling-up of all able-bodied men for home defence.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, the house to-day is in a very serious, very sober and perhaps I might add, a very militant mood. None of us has witnessed in our time in this house members more bent upon determined and aggressive action by the government than we find them in this chamber to-day, and in that they but reflect the opinions which are being so audibly expressed by the people of the country who are now thoroughly aroused and fully conscious of the import of the present emergency. Words seem so futile in these days. Routine parliamentary proceedings seem so lamentably out of place. Debates seem so irksome in the face of recent developments which are so vital to the very existence of our nation and of our empire.

The government has asked us to forget the past, with its pathway strewn with examples of what many of our citizens regard as instances of puny and inadequate preparedness. But few, Mr. Speaker, will be able to erase it from memory. This afternoon, however, I think it is the sole duty of the House of Commons to take the government at their word and to forget the past, because it is our duty to press by every means within our power the administration into a more aggressive and a more determined prosecution of the war both on our home front and on the front overseas. To-day only the present and the future count, and both of them count very heavily.

I now propose to make certain insistent proposals to the government. My words will be few, but I trust they will be emphatic. They are made in the spirit of a united Canada which has its mind made up that the empire must and will march on to ultimate victory in this conflict. Stripped of all unnecessary words, I have the following to propose.

First, that the preservation of the Liberal party, of the Conservative party or of any other party in this house, is of small consequence. Regarded as a political entity the fate of no party is of any consequence to-day when forces from without our frontiers threaten to destroy the very democracy upon which our parties operate. National government-I know I am not going to have the support of every member of this house when I say this—was desirable in my opinion last September when war broke out, and it has become more desirable in every month which has followed the declaration of war right down to this date. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is now the only answer to our urgent national needs.

Second, no man and no woman in Canada should be without his or her place in our national war plans. Our people are crying out loudly to-day for an opportunity to serve Canada and serve the empire in her day of need. Continuing unemployment in time of war has seemed to me during these past months not only to be unnatural but to present a farcical situation in our land. In this country the wheels of industry should have been humming twenty-four hours a day and not a man should have been out of work since the war began. We have not all realized, Mr. Speaker, that we are at war, and it was the government's obligation to give us the lead so that we might as a nation be more fully conscious of our exact position. Every Canadian must now put his or her shoulder to the wheel without a moment's further delay.

Third, let us look more intently to our home defence as well as to our overseas plans. There is a definite and immediate duty resting on us to protect our people, our homes and our industries against "fifth column," "Trojan horse," and sabotage operations within our own borders. The citizens at large, and particularly the men who served so gallantly in the last war, are demanding to-day, in terms the urgency of which I have never in my life known to be equalled, that the government of this country give them their place in plans to render impotent any "boring" operations which may be conducted by enemy sympathizers within our gates.

Fourth, the contribution of Canada towards the maintenance of universal freedom and liberty must be more than merely a war I confess I never liked that word "effort." It sounds too much like an attempt being made at something. There must be, from this moment, a determined, aggressive and ceaseless hurling of every ounce of energy which we as a nation can muster; for nothing less than the best we can do is good enough for Canada, as a nation and a part of the British commonwealth of nations, in this hour of national and empire trial.

In conclusion may I say that I am deadly in earnest. I speak with a deeper feeling than has permeated me in any address I have given this house these past five years. I plead with the government for a yet more vigorous prosecution of its war plans. This is the time for public and personal sacrifice on the part of everyone of us. The day of thinking in terms of political parties, of personal convenience and of selfish ambitions has gone. The hour is far too serious for that. that thought foremost in my mind, I urge with all the emphasis at my command, that the Prime Minister and his government abandon now their one-party administration of this war—I never liked it. I like it less this afternoon-and, following Britain's lead, give Canadians new confidence in this hour of trial and need, and unite our political forces to form a strong reorganized coalition government.

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the hon. member (Mr. Graydon) who has just resumed his seat. I regret to say, however, that my opinions do not at all coincide with his. Having no intention of prolonging the present debate, I shall be brief.

Canada's participation in the war is and must remain free and voluntary. Such is the wish of the people of this country, a wish that was indeed most clearly expressed last March 26, as regards our war effort and the nature thereof. Never before has a government been endorsed to a similar degree by the electorate. The right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr.

[Mr. Graydon.]

Mackenzie King) won an unprecedented victory, and the Canadian people returned him to power because they realized that he and his government stood for a policy of moderation, freedom and voluntary assistance. Thus must we consider these three ideas as a synthesis of the returned government's election programme, not to mention the preservation of Canadian unity. That unity must be safeguarded at all cost, in the name of liberty, justice and right. The ultimate victory of the allies depends largely upon the preservation of national unity in democratic countries, as well as upon the union of all hearts and minds toward the realization of the powerful and inspiring ideal represented by the victory of right over might.

If ever any government should endeavour to impose conscription on this country, it would find itself opposed by every true champion of Canadian unity.

The bloody conflict of which unfortunate Europe is once again the theatre is but a page, the most harrowing and darkest perhaps, of the troubled history of heroic and noble France whose soil has withstood time and again the invasion of barbaric hordes. On behalf of the motherland, the allied armies are desperately striving to triumph over injustice and barbarism. Every man worthy of the name most strongly desires to see the forces of liberty and civilization decisively victorious over anarchy, tyranny and barbarism. Gigantic struggle, wherein the very survival of a civilization ennobled by centuries of sacrifice and genius is at stake. Alarming fray, wherein the terrifying roar of motorized columns will never blot out the agony of the heroic dead, whose lips still frame the glorious words of victory and peace!

Mr. Speaker, while England and France are far advanced on the path of sacrifice, Canada, notwithstanding the opinions expressed by some hon. members, has done and is still doing her important share. According to the right hon. Prime Minister's recent statement, Canada's participation in the war will cost her, for the financial year 1940-41, the sum of $2,000,000 a day. Should this fail to satisfy the extremists, I wonder if we are not entitled in turn to suspect their loyalty to Canada. Do they believe that a bankrupt Canada would be of use to the allied cause? Have they given a moment's thought to the after-war period? Have they ever considered our financial and economic position? Does the agriculture and labour problem mean nothing to them?

Mr. Speaker, even in this difficult hour, let us not deceive ourselves. Let us not allow ourselves to be carried away. Let us keep calm so that we may consider with wisdom and moderation Canada's interest before all others

I mentioned the agricultural problem. The day is not far when the allied armies and countries will turn to Canada for their food supplies. We should therefore speed up still further the reorganization of our agricultural production in all its branches. The rising cost of living makes it imperative for governments to give all possible aid to agriculture. Our whole economic structure is based on agriculture. More than ever, in this extremely critical situation, should we encourage, develop and promote agricultural production.

In closing these few remarks, I am happy to say that I still look at the future with optimism. It is through optimism, hope and faith that truth will triumph over error, right over might, civilization over barbarism and justice over tyranny.

One word in conclusion. In her participation in the war, may Canada keep from excessive zeal and waste. May our lawmakers ever keep engraved in their minds and in their hearts the image of the Canadian fatherland. May the soil of our country continue to be the granary of the world and the almost inexhaustible source of the natural wealth of which the need is at present so great. May our land continue, under the kindly eye of an admirable Providence, to spread life, fecundity and happiness among the peoples of the world, but especially in Canada, our beloved country, so badly in need of them.

The speech from the throne ends at every session of parliament with the words: "I pray that Divine Providence may guide and bless your deliberations." If there was ever a time when legislators needed light and strength, it is the present difficult moment when the fate of the continent of Europe and the economic future of Canada seem to be at stake. May God preserve Canada from downfall and ruin! May He keep our beloved Canada united, great and prosperous! May He allow the triumph of civilization over the forces which barbarism has let loose upon the world.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1940-41

A message from His Excellency the Administrator transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1941, was presented by Hon. J. L. Ralston (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ralston that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That sums not exceeding $700,000,000 be granted to His Majesty towards defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the governor in council during the year ending 31st March, 1941, for—

(a) the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada;

(b) the conduct of naval, military and air operations in or beyond Canada;

(c) promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk or in any other manner whatsoever; and

(d) the carrying out of any measures deemed necessary or advisable by the governor in council in consequence of the existence of a state of

With provision also empowering the governor in council to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $700, 000,000 as may be required for the purpose of defraying the aforesaid expenses, the principal and interest of any such loan to be a charge upon and payable out of the consolidated revenue

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as was stated this afternoon, it is most difficult to proceed to a discussion of past events and present and future possibilities in connection with agriculture in Canada when the war news is of the kind reported to the house to-day. Perhaps the chief reason why we are able to carry on this discussion may be found in the history of Great Britain; and our knowledge of the fact that on at least three previous occasions the dogged determination of Britain to preserve her institutions for succeeding generations has triumphed, leads us to believe that again she will find a way. The destruction of the Spanish armada; the defeat of Napoleon, and the final triumph of the allies over Wilhelm II in the last war all give testimony to sustain the hope, which becomes faith, in the success of Britain in the final outcome of the present war. So it becomes my task to outline to the house the effect that preparation for war and the coming of war has had upon agriculture in Canada; to outline the efforts made to meet pre-war difficulties as well as those made to meet the immediate difficulties brought by war. In order that I may place the records correctly and completely upon Hansard I hope you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, if I follow rather closely the notes I have prepared.

A world war is always preceded by a period of preparation, and hence a period of war fear, the effects of which are first felt by agriculture. When a nation begins to make preparation to go to war, one of the first considerations is food, which is produced almost exclusively by farmers. If a country has, in time of peace, the essential food products within its boundaries, it is in a relatively strong position in preparing for war. If much of its food is, in time of peace, obtained from outside its boundaries, that country must do one of two things, or a combination of two things, in preparation for war; it must either increase its production at home or protect its trade routes to countries from which the food can be obtained, or do both.

The three countries which have been making the greatest preparations for war during the last ten years are Germany, France and Britain. Over fifteen years ago Germany began to prepare for war. Her endeavour was to have the necessary food products within her own boundaries when war came. France looked on for a few years and then, fearing that when Germany became strong her desire for revenge might turn her attentions westward, more than ten years ago turned her attention to food production within her own borders. Britain did not take action in this direction until about eight years ago, but during the past six years has been employing many of the devices used by the others to increase the production of food within her own borders. Canadian farmers in the past had been accustomed to sell the greater part of their surplus farm products in the three countries I have mentioned and in the United States To the extent that these three countries increased their production of meat, cereals, dairy products, poultry and fruit, the three great branches of agriculture in this country were bound to suffer.

The net result has been that during the greater part of the last ten years prices of farm products in Canada have been abnormally low. I think I would be safe in saying that for the ten year period from 1931 to 1940, prices of farm products reached an alltime low, if all the factors of relative values were taken into consideration. My contention, therefore, is that the Canadian farmer entered into this war under very unfavourable circumstances, largely because those countries now at war have been preparing for it for a period of years. To emphasize the point I am trying to make I should like to give this record of the prices during the five years preceding the last war, the five years of the last war and the five years preceding the present war, on the five products of greatest export. These prices are for the best grade at Toronto for all products with the exception of wheat, and for No. 1 northern at Fort William for wheat.

[Mr. Lacombe.]

	1910-1914 (Aver- age)	1915-1919 (Average)	1935-1939 (Average)
	Cents	Cents	Cents
Wheat	100.6	205.4	100.2
Cheese	$13 \cdot 24$	22.06	12.99
Hogs	8.88	14.96	8.98
Cattle	6.77	10.36	6.46
Apples (Barrel)	461.0	683.0	582.0

From this table it will be seen that the prices f r the five years preceding this war are almost exactly the same as they were for the five years preceding the last war. It will be acknowledged, however, that the purchasing power of the dollar has been lower during the last five year period. Fear of war and preparation for it have been the underlying cause of economic difficulties in Canada as well as in other countries, more particularly as related to agriculture.

Before going on to deal with the situation created by the war, it might be well for me to deal shortly with our experience of prices in the last war. There was an increase in prices during the last war as compared with the previous five year period, of approximately 50 per cent on apples, 60 per cent on cattle, 75 per cent on hogs, 60 per cent on cheese and 100 per cent on wheat. It is well to recall, however, that there was no unusual increase in the prices of any of these products until the war had been going on for two full years. In the second year of the last war wheat averaged $1.13 a bushel; cheese, 16.4 cents a pound; hogs, 8.5 cents a pound; cattle, 8.04 cents a pound; and apples, $4.96 a barrel. I think there are two principal reasons why prices of food products do not rise in the first year of a war. The first reason is that countries preparing for war store food in many forms. The second reason is that often war does not interfere with the increased production of food in the combating countries during the first year. These increases in production which take place preceding a war are usually encouraged at points safest from destruction by marching armies. After war has been under way for a year and armies move across areas of production, demands become greater for the surpluses of countries far removed.

The detrimental effects of war preparation and of war itself upon farm prices has been accentuated by the fact that when war broke out, Canadian farmers were harvesting the second largest wheat crop on record. Heavy fall marketing of hogs and poultry was in prospect. Butter and cheese production was at a higher level than in the year previous. Apple and other fruit crops, as well as vegetable crops, were normal in yield. A record tobacco crop was expected. The production was higher for 1939 than the five-year average in every important farm product used for food except mutton, lamb and honey.

I should like to place on Hansard a table comparing the production of crops and the output of live stock in 1939, with the previous five-year average. May I have the consent of the house?

Average

Mr. SPEAKER: Consent is granted.

Mr. GARDINER:

	1939	previous 5 years
Wheat, bushels	489,623,000	263,444,000
Oats, bushels	384,407,000	325,414,000
Barley, bushels	103,147,000	81,001,000
Rye, bushels	15,307,000	7,070,400
Flaxseed, bushels	2,169,000	1,265,800
Hogs, numbers	3,706,179	3,403,048
Cattle, numbers	1,183,305	1,151,444
Calves, numbers	795,402	691,050
Sheep and lambs, numbers	753,062	802,056
Butter, pounds	266,879.000	248,128,000
Cheese, pounds	120,976,000	114,166,000
Tobacco, pounds	109,846,000	62,762,000
Apples, barrels	5,468,400	4,700,520
Honey, pounds	28,856,100	29,387,000

Farm prices just prior to the outbreak of the war were at a very low level, and indications at that time pointed to a low net return to farmers, despite bountiful yields, even had there been no war. The immediate effect of the war was a rise in grain and live stock prices and later an increase in prices of dairy products. In August, 1939, the index of the wholesale prices of farm products stood at 58.4, as compared with 72.4 for all commodities. By March, 1940, the farm products index had risen by 12.9 points to 71.3, as compared with a rise of 10.8 points in the general index to a total of 83.2.

The following figures will indicate the monthly change in the prices of the main agricultural products:

		Aug. 1939	Sept. 1939	Oct. 1939	Nov. 1939	Dec. 1939	Jan. 1940	Feb. 1940	Mar. 1940	Apr. 1940
Wheat In Oats Store Barley Fort Rye Fort Flaxseed William Steers, good, Tor. $ Hogs, bacon, Tor. $ Butter, Mont. c. lb. Cheese, Mont. c. lb. Eggs, Mont. c. doz.	ewt	54.9 27.3 32.3 37.6 130.0 6.37 7.85 21.5 11.2 31.8	73.9 36.7 45.3 56.5 166.0 7.30 8.60 26.2 13.0 37.6	70.3 32.8 42.0 60.4 167.9 7.19 8.57 27.8 14.1 41.5	70.5 32.3 41.5 56.8 158.3 7.27 8.73 28.2 16.0 44.4	82.4 38.8 47.3 72.3 177.0 7.48 8.94 28.0 17.0 33.9	82.8 42.6 49.0 74.8 193.7 7.47 9.07 27.7 18.7 27.0	83.8 41.7 49.9 71.6 191.9 7.17 9.00 26.8 19.3 26.8	87.0 38.7 48.7 70.6 204.2 7.23 9.03 27.6 17.2 27.0	89.2 38.4 50.0 69.8 223.6 7.17 8.55 26.3 14.5

Very shortly after the war commenced, it became evident that the United Kingdom did not require some of our farm products. It was indicated that bacon, cheese and fibre flax would be needed, but there was some doubt about fresh fruit, tobacco and canned goods. Great Britain's purchasing programme is not only based upon her needs, but likewise influenced by the availability of exchange and shipping space, as well as by political and economic considerations, some of which were mentioned by one hon member, I believe, this afternoon.

Before the war came, the government had reorganized the Department of Agriculture into four divisions, with a director over each division. And I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this was done in spite of the fact that it was not advisable at that time to suggest that it had any relationship with war. It was done because this government realized, as a result of the experiences we were having in the British market, that something very unusual was going on in the continent of Europe. It was done, too, as a result of an action taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) which had some relationship to myself, as Minister of Agriculture, in the spring of 1936, when he said to me that he desired me to go to Great Britain and to Europe. When I asked him why, he replied, "No one can administer the Department of Agriculture in the Dominion of Canada, a country producing the large surpluses we produce for marketing in Great Britain or on the continent, without having an intimate knowledge of what is going on both in Great Britain and on the continent."

I repeat that as a result of the experience gained at that time we reorganized the department and changed it from a department composed of a dozen or more branches to a department organized under four directors, a deputy minister and an assistant deputy minister. The day war was declared, the principal officers of the department were called together to discuss the part to be played by agriculture in war activity. An agricultural supplies board composed of six members, four of whom were the four directors I have just mentioned, was established. The board, together with the department, commenced immediately to deal with agricultural situations arising out of the war. Cooperation with provincial authorities, with advisory boards and with other dominion government bodies was sought from the beginning, to accomplish the following things:

- 1. To establish constructive direction for agricultural production;
- 2. To make available for export those commodities required by Great Britain;
- 3. To conserve essential supplies such as feeding materials, insecticides and fertilizers needed to meet the production of farm products in Canada, and
- 4. To assist in the marketing of surplus farm products.

Because it has been stated on a number of occasions outside the house that information and direction have not been given to those associated with agriculture, I desire to take some time to outline what has been done by the board under the direction of the department. A conference between the agricultural supplies board and representatives of the provincial departments of agriculture was held at Ottawa on September 27 and 28, 1939. At that conference Great Britain's probable needs of Canadian farm products were outlined and stress laid on so planning war-time activities that the agricultural industry should not be thrown out of gear when the war ended. Papers were presented by various officials indicating, commodity by commodity, the Canadian situation in 1939 as compared with that in 1914 with regard to available and prospective supplies of farm products likely to be needed. At the close of that conference provincial delegates agreed to cooperate in work undertaken by the board, as the central directive agency, and undertook the responsibility, in cooperation with producer representatives and dominion field men in their respective provinces, of implementing such production programmes as might become necessary.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Following the conference most of the provinces established special committees to collaborate with the board and to give local direction to programmes undertaken. Provinces reporting the establishment of such committees follow:

Prince Edward Island, production service committee, October 5;

Nova Scotia, agricultural advisory committee, October 6;

New Brunswick, agricultural supplies committee, November, 17;

Manitoba, war-time agricultural committee, March, 1940;

Saskatchewan, provincial swine committee, November 15;

Alberta, agricultural production committee and swine production committee, November 14; crops production committee, December 9;

British Columbia, agricultural production committee. November 15.

Due perhaps to the close contact with dominion organizations made possible by their proximity to Ottawa, Quebec and Ontario apparently thought it unnecessary to establish special committees to collaborate with the board. There has been, however, continuous communication between the board and existing organizations in these provinces with respect to specific activities. If the house will permit, I shall be pleased to place the full personnel of those committees on Hansard for the information of hon. members:

Personnel

Agricultural Supplies Board Establishment of board

Establishment of board

The Agricultural Supplies Board was established September 9, 1939 (P.C. 2621), with the following named as members (P.C. 2622):
A. M. Shaw (Chairman), R. S. Hamer (later appointed Vice-Chairman), E. S. Archibald, G. B. Rothwell, A. T. Charron, J. M. Swaine, with Dr. H. Barton, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, a member ex officio. Following the death of G. B. Rothwell, on December 3, 1939, J. M. McCallum was appointed in his place, while J. G. Bouchard was named to replace A. T. Charron upon the latter's retirement on March 9, 1940. On September 27, 1939 (P.C. 2893), S. R. N. Hodgins was appointed Secretary. On November 17, 1939, J. R. Peet "on loan" from the marketing service, was named tary. On November 11, 1959, 5. 1. loan" from the marketing service, was named

Special Committees

To assist in carrying out its duties, the Agricultural Supplies Board has established the following special committees:

September 22, 1939—Seed Supply Committee, consisting of N. Young (Chairman), T. M. Stevenson, W. T. G. Weiner, L. H. Newman, C. Sweet, L. S. McLaine; Secretary, A. M. W. Corton Carter.

September 22, 1939—Fertilizer Supply Committee, consisting of G. S. Peart (Chairman), L. W. Wright, E. S. Hopkins, G. D. Mallory, 95826-12

W. H. Losee (the latter two from the Department of Trade and Commerce); Secretary, A. M. W. Carter.

October 7, 1939—Pesticide Supply Committee, consisting of G. S. Peart (Chairman), Arthur Gibson, H. T. Gussow, A. G. Lochead, C. H. Robinson, E. A. Watson, L. S. McLaine, G. D. Mallory, W. H. Losee; Secretary, A. M. W. Carter.

October 25, 1939—National Apple Advisory Committee, consisting of R. L. Wheeler (Chair-man), M. V. McGuire (British Columbia), G. H. Laird (Ontario), W. G. Tawse (Quebec), F. W. Walsh (Nova Scotia); Secretary, L. F. Burrows.

Provincial Committees

Provincial Committees

Prince Edward Island—Production Service Committee, consisting of Hon. W. H. Dennis, Minister of Agriculture (Honorary Chairman), J. J. MacDonald, President of the Dairymen's Association (President), W. R. Shaw, Deputy Minister of Agriculture (Secretary, W. J. Reid, President of the Livestock Marketing Board, J. W. Boulter, Secretary of the Potato Growers' Association, Dr. J. A. Clarke, Superintendent of the Experimental Farm, F. M. Nash, Director, Poultry Division, Gordon MacMillan, Federal Seed Branch, J. A. Gillies, Secretary of the Livestock Marketing Board, Leonard MacDonald, Manager of the Egg and Poultry Association, W. D. Ross, Secretary of the Central Farmers' Institutes, W. L. Brenton, Superintendent of the Dairymen's Association, S. C. Wright, Fieldman, Department of Agriculture, P. A. MacIsaac, President of the Swine Breeders' Association, S. D. Irvine, Sheep and Swine Division, L. K. Lockerby, Fieldman, Department of Agriculture, E. L. Eaton, Supervisor, Illustration Stations, Dr. E. S. Notting, Health of Animals Branch. Health of Animals Branch.

Nova Scotia-Agricultural Advisory Committee, consisting of Hon. John A. McDonald, Minister of Agriculture, Dr. W. V. Longley, Director of Extension, Principal L. T. Chapman, Dr. W. S. Blair, Secretary of the Nova Scotia Farmers' Association, Mr. W. W. Baird, Super-intendent of the Dominion Experimental Farm, Nappan, Mr. J. F. Haggerty, Senior Poultry Fieldman with the Federal Department, Mr. F. W. Walsh, Director of Marketing.

New Brunswick-Agricultural Supplies Committee, consisting of J. K. King, Deputy Min-ister of Agriculture, Fredericton (Chairman), T. G. Hetherington, Director Extension Division, T. G. Hetherington, Director Extension Division, Provincial Department of Agriculture, Fredericton, C. F. Bailey, Superintendent Experimental Station, Fredericton, representing Dominion Department of Agriculture officials in New Brunswick, one representative from the Farmers' Association of New Brunswick, to be designated by the accounting of this association. ers Association of New Brunswick, to be designated by the executive of this association, George Stephenson, Maugervill, Sun. Co., N.B., representing the New Brunswick Dairymen's Association, Roy Grant, Secretary Maritime Chamber of Agriculture, Moncton, F. L. Wood, Poultry Superintendent, Provincial Department of Agriculture, Fredericton, (Secretary).

Manitoba—War-Time Agricultural Committee, consisting of Hon. John Bracken, Premier of Manitoba, (honorary member), Hon. D. L. Campbell, Minister of Agriculture, (honorary member), D. G. McKenzie, Vice-president, United Grain Growers, Ltd., Paul F. Bredt, President, Manitoba Pool Elevators, Ltd., Dr. J. A. Munn, President, Manitoba Federation of Agriculture, Fred H. Downing, Manager, Canadian Livestock Co-operative (Western) Limited, Cecil Lamont, Director, Public Relations Department, North-West Line Elevators Association, W. S. Patterson, President, Manitoba Co-operative Poultry Marketing Association Limited, W. F. Popple, Manager, Manitoba Co-operative Wholesale, Ltd., G. W. Tovell, Secretary-Treasurer, Manitoba Co-operative Wholesale, Ltd., G. W. Tovell, Secretary-Treasurer, Manitoba Co-operative Dairies, Limited, J. W. Braithwaite, President, Manitoba Co-operative Honey Producers, Limited, Rev. A. H. Laurin, President, Manitoba Bekepers' Association, Roy McPhail, Manager, Canadian Livestock Sales Agencies, N. C. Mackay, Director, Extension Service, Manitoba Department of Agriculture, W. H. French, Past President, Union of Manitoba Municipalities, C. B. Davidson, Secretary, Manitoba Federation of Agriculture, Mrs. E. L. Johnson, Vice-President, Manitoba Federation of Agriculture, Mrs. W. H. Hicks, President, Manitoba Women's Institutes, John Spalding, Secretary, Union of Manitoba Municipalities, Dr. W. H. Tulloch-Lee, President, Agricultural Societies' Advisory Board, W. L. McGregor, President, Manitoba Horse Breeders' Association, Rev. Adelard Coulture, Director of Social Organization for Diocese of St. Boniface, Alex McPhail, President, Manitoba Swene Breeders' Association, R. B. Hunter, President, Manitoba Sheep Breeders' Association, J. E. Crawford, President, Manitoba Dairy Cattle Breeders' Association, Les. Robson, President, Manitoba Cattle Breeders' Association, Andrew Turkeivich, Farmer, Winnipeg Beach, Dr. H. C. Grant, tion, Les. Robson, President, Manitoba Cattle Breeders' Association, Andrew Turkeivich, Farmer, Winnipeg Beach, Dr. H. C. Grant, Professor of Economics, University of Manitoba, Dr. E. Cora Hind, Editorial Writer of the Winnipeg Free Press, Axel Bergkvist, Farmer, Sanford, Mrs. M. G. Ellis, Agricultural Editor, Family Herald and Weekly Star, Paul Kwiatkowski, Farmer, Tolstoi, R. D. Colquette, Joint Editor, The Country Guide and Nor'-West Farmer, W. D. Strang, President, Dauphin Agricultural Society, Rev. A. Benoit, Parish Priest of St. Malo, Prof. A. V. Mitchener, Dean of Agriculture and Home Economics, University of Manitoba, J. T. Hull, Manitoba Editor of the Western Producer, Neil Wright, Director, Manitoba Federation of Agricultural Department, Northwest Line Elevators Associative. Department, Northwest Line Elevators Association, J. J. Siemens, Farmer, Altona.

Saskatchewan-Provincial Swine Committee, Saskatchewan—Provincial Swine Committee, consisting of E. G. Harlton, President, Sask. Swine Breeders, W. B. Weightman, Vicepresident, Sask. Swine Breeders, E. F. Richardson, Director, Sask. Swine Breeders, C. M. Learmonth, Superintendent of Institutional Farms, J. H. Coles, Senior Livestock Fieldman, Production Service, J. G. Robertson, Sask. Livestock Commissioner, A. D. Munro, Dominion Markets Representative, E. E. Brockelbank, Extension Dept. University of Sask., Prof. J. W. G. MacEwan, Professor of Animal Husbandry, University of Saskatchewan, A. H. O. Colbert, Experimental Farm, Rosthern.

Alberta—Agricultural Production Committee, consisting of F. H. Reed, Superintendent of the Experimental Farm, Lacombe, representing Dominion Department of Agriculture agencies in the province of Alberta, Dean E. A. Howes, representing the University of Alberta, O. S. Longman, Field Crops Commissioner, A. A. Campbell, Acting Live Stock Commissioner, R. M. Putnam, Director, Agricultural Extension (Secretary), J. R. Sweeney, Deputy Minister of Agriculture (Chairman).

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Swine Production Committee, consisting of Swine Production Committee, consisting of N. Curtis, representing the Production Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Dr. R. D. Sinclair, University of Alberta, Prof. J. P. Sackville, University of Alberta, H. E. Wilson, Dominion Experimental Farm, Lacombe, Roy Marler, Swine Breeder, Bremner, William Hudson, Swine Breeder, Kathryn, Dr. P. R. Talbot, Provincial Veterinarian, A. A. Campbell, Acting Live Stock Commissioner, J. R. Sweeney, Deputy Minister of Agriculture. Deputy Minister of Agriculture.

Crops Production Committee, consisting of O. S. Longman, Field Crops Commissioner, Department of Agriculture, (Chairman), Frank Foulds, District Supervisor, Plant Products Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Calgary, Dr. K. W. Neatby, Professor, Field Crops Department, University of Alberta, A. Craig Pierce, Farmer, Drumheller, L. C. Anderson, Farmer, Bittern Lake, Milton McKeen, Farmer, Sangudo. Farmer, Sangudo.

British Columbia-Agricultural Production Committee, consisting of J. B. Munro, (Chairman), J. A. Grant, Markets Commissioner, Geo. H. Stewart, Statistician, Ernest MacGinnis, (Secretary).

(Secretary).

Bacon Board—Appointed December 20, 1939 (P.C. 4249), consisting of Hon. J. G. Taggart, Minister of Agriculture for Saskatchewan, (Chairman), S. E. Todd, Secretary Industrial and Development Council of Canadian Meat Packers, L. C. McQuat, General Agricultural Agent for C.P.R., Adrien Morin, Chief, Live Stock Branch, Quebec Department of Agriculture, L. W. Pearsall, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Secretary-Manager.

Bacon Advisory Committee—Appointed Department of Depart

Bacon Advisory Committee—Appointed December 20, 1939 (P.C. 4173), consisting of William J. Reid, Charlottetown, P.E.I., H. Wilson, Charring Cross, Ontario, J. H. Tapley, Toronto, Ontario, K. N. M. Morrison, Barrie, Ontario, F. H. Downing, St. Boniface, Manitoba, John Burns, Calgary, Alberta, John Harrold, Namao, Alberta, Joseph Bisson, Montreal, Ouebec. Quebec.

Dairy Products Board—Appointed May 22, 1940 (P.C.), consisting of J. F. Singleton, Associate Director, Marketing Service, Dairy Products, Dominion Department of Agriculture, (Chairman); Joseph F. Desmarais, Montreal; John Freeman, Montreal.

A glance at the membership of these provincial production committees will show that producer organizations are fully represented. This will likewise be found true of the national apple advisory committee set up under the agricultural supplies board, and of the advisory committee to the bacon board.

The farmers across Canada have been kept informed of developments through these various committees and organizations, as well as directly through agricultural representatives. newspapers and the radio. Plans are under way to hold another meeting with provincial officials in the near future. At this meeting the problems of disposing of this season's production of agricultural products will be discussed. Great Britain's needs for certain products may be greatly different in the months to come. No one knows how much our crops will yield this year. It is possible that there may be a shortage in a certain line of production where a surplus existed a year earlier. Plans to cope with the many situations which may develop will be discussed at the coming conference. In keeping with the understanding reached at the conference, it was decided that the agricultural supplies board should serve as the central directive agency, giving leads based on the needs of the situation in Britain or Canada. The board suggested bacon-hog programmes for each province last October in the light of feed supplies and other factors.

In November seed conservation and utilization programmes were suggested to each province. These programmes, it may be added, were found acceptable and were put into effect by the provincial committees. In response to a request by the provincial delegates that the board keep them fully informed of its activities, seven monthly progress reports were issued by the board down to April 30, 1940, as well as a quarterly report at December 31, 1939, and a complete summary of activities to March 31, 1940. Beginning with the second monthly progress report, reports received from the provinces were appended so that the board became a clearing house for news, not only as between itself and the provinces but also between the various provinces themselves.

Up to April 30, Nova Scotia and Alberta had each sent in six progress reports, to accompany the reports of the board. Ontario had sent in three; New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and British Columbia had sent in two each. and Prince Edward Island had sent in one. No official progress reports have been received from Quebec and Manitoba although communications of other kinds have been received. The provinces have likewise been kept supplied with copies of orders in council and other documents relating to the work of the board, as well as with copies of press releases when such provided suggestions dealing with production matters. Through correspondence the board and the provincial officials likewise maintain contact.

In support of its production work the board issued forty-five different special pamphlets in its war-time production series, publishing them in large enough quantities to enable them to serve the needs of the provincial departments of agriculture. These pamphlets present in a short, practical form information of particular value in war time. The total printings of these pamphlets ran to 1,147,000 in English and 310,000 in French, or 1,457,000 in all. Five of the pamphlets have already had to be reprinted to meet the demand. Not only have considerable quantities been distributed by the provincial departments of agriculture, experimental farms and agricultural colleges, but as a result of radio publicity and notices in the press copy issued by the dominion department of agriculture, large numbers have gone directly to farmers requesting them.

The general public has been kept fully informed of the war activities of the Department of Agriculture through public addresses, through statements released to the press and agricultural papers and by means of radio. I am not going to take the time to read what has gone to the press itself, although I have a fairly complete summary of that. Much of what went to the press has appeared in the press from time to time. Use has been made of the department's farm broadcasts to keep farmers throughout Canada informed of the various aspects of the war effort, and to give out special news when necessary. As examples, one might mention the special statement issued over the air by the bacon board following the developments in Denmark early in April, the publicity given to the special pamphlets published by the agricultural supplies board as these became ready for distribution, and the three special messages broadcast this spring, to farmers in eastern Canada, suggesting measures which might be taken this year to make themselves more independent of purchased feeds.

Specific requests by the United Kingdom have been met for supplies of bacon, cheese, eggs, fibre flaxseed, and flax fibre and tow. The arrangements between the United Kingdom and Canada for these products either provided for a greater supply than has usually been exported from Canada or about the same supply as usual. Bacon and fibre flaxseed exports are larger than usual, while exports of cheese and eggs will be about the same. Restrictions have been placed by the United Kingdom on the importation of apples, tobacco and dressed poultry. Import licences for honey were withheld for a time. Imports of canned goods were not licensed until late in March, with the result that Canadian supplies were exported in large volumes. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be permitted to place upon Hansard a table showing the movement of Canadian farm produce to the United Kingdom this year as compared with the last two years. The table is as follows:

95826-121

Exports to United Kingdom S	eptember to	March inclusive
	1939-40	1938-39	1937-38
Wheat and flour bush. Barley bush. Oats bush. Rye bush. Bacon and hams cwt. Other pork cwt. Lard cwt. Dressed poultry .lb. Eggs doz. Butter cwt. Cheese cwt. Apples bbls.	1939-40 54,886,146 3,079,771 2,046,668 57,143 1,613,143 3,130 13,525 789,679 903,240 1,972 539,411 1,178,802	$1938-39 \\ 57,361,894 \\ 8,212,950 \\ 4,154,191 \\ 44,298 \\ 950,141 \\ 4,623 \\ 74,115 \\ 2,614,717 \\ 1,129,888 \\ 88,800 \\ 459,136 \\ 2,490,861$	1937-38 $46,459,977$ $8,737,300$ $2,131,885$ $54,873$ $1,049,180$ $8,146$ $118,013$ $1,361,840$ $1,336,580$ $36,265$ $459,469$ $2,039,706$
Canned apples lb. Canned pears lb.	24,375,945 21,927,200	8,978,215 6,031,986	8,820,647 $5,559,792$
Total canned fruits lb. Total canned vegetables	54,138,609 138,163,689	18,055,474 51,843,680	18,027,065 38,921,417
Honeylb.	5,057,319	3,133,437	1,809,868

For the immediate benefit of the house I will read one or two of the most important. In wheat and flour we exported to Great Britain in the months from September to March of this year a total of 54,886,000 bushels.

Mr. HOMUTH: Are those months inclusive?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. In 1938-39 we exported 57.360,000 bushels, and in 1937-38, which was a small crop year, we exported 46,459,000 bushels. It will be seen that exports during the months of this year compare very favourably with exports during the same months in the previous two years. Exports of barley are down to less than half, while exports of oats are down to about half what they were last year but are about the same as they were the year before. Exports of rye are about the same. Exports of bacon and ham totalled 1,613,000 hundredweight as against 950,000 hundredweight a year ago, and 1,049,000 hundredweight the year before that. Our exports this year were more than fifty per cent greater than they were during the same period last year.

Exports of eggs totalled 903,000 dozen as against 1,129,000 dozen last year and 1,300,000 dozen the year before. Exports of dressed poultry were down to about one-third of what they were last year, while exports of cheese were considerably higher than they were last year. Exports of apples were down from 2,490,000 barrels to 1,178,000 barrels, while exports of canned apples rose from 8,978,000 pounds to 24,000,000 pounds. I could continue to go through the list, but I have suggested that it be published in full in Hansard for the benefit of hon, members.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister tell us why those two months only were chosen?

Mr. GARDINER: We have taken the months from September to March inclusive, the months we have been at war. We have [Mr. Gardiner.]

compared the exports during this period with the exports in the previous years in order to indicate what change has occurred this year as compared with the other years as a result of the fact that we are at war.

Mr. SENN: I understood the minister to mention two months only, rather than six.

Mr. GARDINER: It is the whole period of the war from September to March inclusive. The Canadian government is directly concerned in the export of bacon, cheese, fibre flaxseed. Egg exports go through the normal trade channels. Government guidance was necessary in connection with the export of apples, poultry and tobacco in order to ensure that producers in all sections of the country received a fair share of the restricted market.

I should like to give the house the particulars with regard to the bacon agreement. Canadian bacon was requisitioned by the ministry of food in Great Britain from the first week of the war. Settlement was made with the packers' agents until the bacon board took control of shipments the week of January 20, 1940. The agreement provides for weekly shipments of 5,600,000 pounds until the end of October, 1940. A flat price of $20.18 per 112 pounds for grade A bacon, basis Canadian seaboard, is being paid by Great Britain, which is equal to $18.01 per 100 pounds of bacon.

The four members of the bacon board are leading men in the agricultural industry, all having broad administrative experience as well as a practical knowledge of farm operations. The advisory board is composed of men representing the producers and the bacon trade. One duty of the bacon board is to ensure that the supplies required for export will be available.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Grenville-Dundas): Would the minister give us the names of the representatives?

Mr. GARDINER: I was going to have that submitted in an appendix, but if it is preferred I can read the names now.

CASSELMAN (Grenville-Dundas): Read them now.

Mr. GARDINER: The bacon board, appointed December 20, 1939, consisted of Hon. J. G. Taggart, Minister of Agriculture for Saskatchewan, (Chairman); S E. Todd, Secretary, Industrial and Development Council of Canadian Meat Packers; L. C. McQuat, General Agricultural Agent for C.P.R.; Adrien Morin, Chief, Live Stock Branch, Quebec Department of Agriculture; L. W. Pearsall, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Secretary-Manager.

The bacon advisory committee, appointed December 20, 1939, consisted of William J. Reid, Charlottetown, P.E.I.; H. Wilson, Charring Cross, Ontario; J. H. Tapley, Toronto, Ontario; K. N. M. Morrison, Barrie, Ontario; F. H. Downing, St. Boniface, Manitoba; John Burns, Calgary, Alberta; John Harrold, Namao, Alberta; Joseph Bisson, Montreal, Quebec.

Mr. SENN: Have all of these gentlemen or any of them been nominated by agricultural organizations, or were they the choice of the minister?

Mr. GARDINER: Quite a number of them are not, of course, members of agricultural organizations. Mr. Downing I think was recommended by the cooperative organization in Manitoba. Mr. Harrold was chosen I think simply as a representative farmer actually producing hogs in the central part of Alberta, and Mr. Morrison of Barrie was chosen as the manager of the only farmers' cooperative packing plant in Canada. Mr. Reid was chosen I think by some group in Prince Edward Island, and the others were selected because of the positions they occupied.

One duty of the bacon board is to ensure that supplies required for export will be available. This necessitates regulation in the marketing of bacon and storing the product in the season of surplus production to make up deficits in the summer months, when hog marketings are usually light. Another duty is to arrange for price differentials between grades so as to ensure the maintenance of pre-war quality as required by the agreement.

A deduction of 72 cents per 100 pounds was made by the bacon board for the period January to April in order to build up a fund. Recently the amount deducted was increased. The purpose of the fund is to pay for storage on bacon held over for summer shipment and to pay a higher price during summer months.

Supplies of hogs coming forward from farmers in the first four months of 1940 were much greater than those required to fill the weekly quota of 5,600,000 pounds of bacon. The amount of bacon requires about 48,000 hogs weekly. Hog marketings averaged 93,000 hogs per week from January 1 to March 31. Domestic consumption usually requires 40,000 per week, which leaves an excess over export and domestic needs of 5,000 hogs weekly; that is of Canadian delivery.

From January to mid-April the board authorized packers to store to its account a quantity each week. Storage stocks accumulated in heavier volume in the first three months of 1940 than was the original intention of the board. There seemed good reason to believe during that time that Great Britain would require quantities in excess of the weekly quota shipments, and during a considerable part of that time she was taking bacon in excess of the weekly requirements.

However, even after the German invasion of Denmark word was received from the United Kingdom that Canada could not expect to ship any quantity of bacon over the minimum of 5,600,000 pounds per week during the life of the contract. Storage stocks in Canada at that time were sufficient to supplement the smaller summer production. Accordingly the board was forced to restrict storage from mid-April in gradually declining amounts until May 4, when all into-storage movement for the account ceased.

Mr. SENN: I do not like to interrupt the minister so often, but would he state how much of that surplus was due to imports from the United States?

Mr. GARDINER: I was just coming to that. It is only fair to say this, that while the figures I have given to the house deal with Canadian production only and do not deal with the importation from the United States, there was a considerable importation of pork products into Canada from the United States during those six weeks beginning about the middle of January and running towards the end of February.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the minister tell us the amount of the importa-

Mr. GARDINER: In round figures, 24,000,-000 pounds, and those 24,000,000 pounds have had some bearing upon the 68,000,000 pounds we have in storage in Canada or had at the first of May.

Hog prices on the domestic market held steady, $9 per hundredweight Toronto, and $8.60 Winnipeg, as long as the board was willing to pay for storage of excess quantities. However, packers were nervous about the outlook and early in April price declines occurred. The invasion of Denmark inspired confidence that excess supplies would be needed, but by April 17 definite word was issued by the bacon board that Great Britain would not require any extra bacon for the time being.

The average price of domestic supplies, including the cheaper United States product, was below the price paid for Canadian hogs up to March 31. The margin over the cost of American pork allowed the payment of export values for the limited number of Canadian hogs going into domestic consumption. Now, however, it is necessary to place in domestic consumption all hogs except those being processed for immediate shipment to the United Kingdom. Accordingly, domestic hog prices fell and now are about $1 per hundredweight lower than during the period December 22, 1939 to March 31, 1940. Future prices will depend upon the volume of hog marketings and the rate of domestic consumption in the next few months. Prices are now being adjusted to the average of the export and domestic value of the product. The meaning of that is that an adjustment has been made in the price which goes to the packer. The price has been reduced by one-half cent a pound from what it was during the winter months.

Mr. HOMUTH: Is the packer still getting the same return, because he is buying his hogs cheaper?

Mr. GARDINER: I have just stated that the price to the packer who delivers under the contract with Great Britain has been reduced by one-half cent a pound.

Mr. HOMUTH: The packer is making no sacrifice.

Mr. GARDINER: He is making a sacrifice to the extent of one-half cent a pound; that is, he is getting one-half cent a pound less.

Mr. HOMUTH: But he pays less.

Mr. GARDINER: He pays less, but that only affects about half the hogs, for about half the hogs go into domestic trade and the other half for export.

Mr. SENN: Is not the 72 cents per 100 pounds deduction from the price paid by Great Britain sufficient to keep on storing hogs?

Mr. GARDINER: It is not sufficient to keep on storing hogs and at the same time make provision for giving an advance in price to the farmer during the month, say, of July [Mr. Gardiner.]

if it is found possible to do that under conditions then existing. There is a twofold purpose in the set-up of the board.

Mr. PERLEY: What was the duty paid on the pork imported from the United States, and was there a drawback?

Mr. GARDINER: The duty was 1½ cents a pound under the trade agreement with the United States. There had been a drawback prior to the time this agreement came into effect, but that drawback has been withheld since the agreement came into effect. The question has been raised by some people whether it should be retroactive but, up to the present moment, the whole drawback has been withheld.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Grenville-Dundas): How much did the drawback amount to?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not at the moment in a position to say, but it would be 99/100ths of 1½ cents a pound.

Mr. CASSELMAN (Grenville-Dundas): On 24,000,000 pounds?

Mr. GARDINER: At the moment I have not the figures. Prices are now being adjusted to the average of the export and domestic value of the product. Cooperation of the trade is being secured to increase domestic consumption, this being one means to relieve the supply situation.

I should now like to say a few words regarding cheese. No restrictions were placed on the importation of Canadian cheese into the United Kingdom until late in March, 1940.

Mr. HOMUTH: I do not want to interrupt the minister; I think the house is willing to give him plenty of time. Before he leaves the question of pork, I wanted to ask him a question. I understand there has been an arrangement made that United States pork is not coming in; it is put on a quota basis. Will the minister explain to the house under what clause of the trade agreement that was done, or how was it done?

Mr. GARDINER: Since the trade agreement was made with the United States there have arisen a number of instances where it has been necessary to negotiate as between the two governments in relation to certain developments. We had negotiations, for example, with regard to cattle. At first, provision was made for a number of cattle to be exported, and when we came to the end of that number, whether it was the middle of the season or whenever it was, we ceased to send cattle into the United States. It was afterwards arranged to put the quota on a quarterly basis.

When war was declared there was a considerable interference with the movement of furs from one country to another; and the United States government asked the government of Canada to consider placing a quota on furs moving out of Canada into the United States. That was done.

When the question came up of the importation of pork products into Canada, it was obvious that, had we just placed an embargo on the importation of those products we would have met with some opposition from our United States friends with regard to cattle or some other products going into that country. Therefore negotiations were carried on with the government of the United States, and they agreed, on the request of this government, to place the quota on the basis of what it had been monthly from January 1 to September 30, 1939. So it is now on that basis, of about 1,600,000 pounds a month.

Mr. HOMUTH: That will remain in force during the life of the trade agreement?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. FAIR: Before leaving the hogs, may I ask whether it is not a fact that the packers have a guaranteed price for the products they sell and that the producers have to take the price that the manipulated market will afford?

Mr. GARDINER: The point that has been mentioned is probably not as clear as it might have been in the statement I have just made. It is this, that when the bacon agreement was first made, the government was allowed $18.01 a hundredweight at the port of shipment for any bacon which he was shipping to Britain. The government was provided, under the agreement, with $18.01. The packer was allowed $17.29; which leaves, I think, 72 cents a hundred pounds to be placed in a fund. In that fund, before the 72 cents was taken, there was already some $300,000, which represented the difference in price paid in the first two months of the agreement to farmers for hogs as compared with the price the packer was getting for the bacon. Then, since a date which I have not before me at the moment, the price to the packer has been reduced another half-cent a pound, and that halfcent is also going into the same fund. So during the early weeks of the agreement the fact that pork products were coming in from the United States in considerable volume made it possible for the packer to pay more to the farmer than the agreement would have permitted him to pay. During that time the farmer was actually getting more for his hogs than the British agreement by itself would have provided for, simply because of the fact that a price was being charged to the consumer in Canada for United States products which made it possible to pay a higher price to the farmer. During that period we did not consider it advisable to put the price on the basis of the payment which was being made to the packers for bacon. Now, of course, the situation is changed somewhat; but an attempt is being made to adjust the consumption, so that later on a better price can be paid to the farmer as a result of these activities.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): May I ask the minister if he implies that the trade agreement is working against the interests of the Canadian farmer?

Mr. GARDINER: No, I do not think so, because during the winter months we received $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 cents a pound more for our hogs than they were receiving in the United States; during considerable part of that time, from 1 cent up to $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound more than would have been provided to our farmers had it not been that we had this agreement with the United Kingdom and arrangement with the United States.

Mr. WRIGHT: What is the price the farmer will get on the basis of the export market alone?

Mr. GARDINER: It would depend, of course, where he was.

Mr. WRIGHT: At Winnipeg?

Mr. GARDINER: At Winnipeg it was something under 8.60 cents a pound. At Toronto it was something under 9 cents at that time.

Mr. WRIGHT: How much under?

Mr. GARDINER: I could not say offhand. It would be a very small fraction of a cent.

To return to the discussion of cheese, as I was saying, no restrictions were placed on the importation of Canadian cheese into the United Kingdom until late in March, 1940. From the commencement of the war until that time sales were made through the regular channels. In other words, there was that difference between the importation into Britain of bacon and the importation of cheese. There were restrictions on bacon but no restrictions on cheese during the months of last winter. From the commencement of the war until that time, sales were made through the regular channels. A substantial increase in exports occurred at prices considerably above those prevailing before the war. Pre-war prices, however, were abnormally low.

Discussions took place during the fall of 1939 with regard to the possibility of concluding an export cheese contract. Rapidly rising cheese prices owing to unrestricted sales in the United Kingdom and the consequent stimulus to exports resulted in the clearing out of most of the cheese held by producers. The matter of making an agreement was, therefore, held over until 1940.

The United Kingdom took steps to control the price of cheese in March, and a general import order was issued on March 20. From March 27 to April 15 import licences were granted for Canadian cheese on a restricted price basis.

Practically all details of a cheese agreement were concluded by May 20, and the agreement has now been made. It was announced in the press last evening. The agreement is retroactive to May 1. The ministry of food agrees to purchase from Canada up to 35,000 long tons of cheese from the production of the season ending November, 1940. That is, between May 1 and November 1, 1940, they will take 35,000 long tons. A dairy products board has been established in Canada to carry out the provisions of the agreement. The contract price, basis f.o.b. ocean steamer or rail Montreal, is to be 14 cents for first grade, 13½ cents for second grade and 13 cents for third grade cheese.

In regard to fibre flax, British sources of flax fibre and fibre flax seed having been curtailed as a result of war developments. United Kingdom authorities sought from Canada increased supplies of fibre and asked that seed surplus to Canadian requirements be made available to the government of Northern Ireland, where such seed was urgently needed. By order in council P.C. 3532, of November 7, 1939, the export of fibre and tow was prohibited save under licence, to make sure that these products should go to the British fibre control board. Plans were likewise made by the agricultural supplies board to increase the area sown to fibre flax from the 8,000 acre figure of 1939 to some 22,000 acres in 1940, and after sufficient seed had been set aside to ensure this expansion in Canada, the remainder, amounting to 17,754 bushels, was shipped to Northern Ireland.

Exports of Canadian eggs went forward to Great Britain in the last four months of 1939, and were paid for at values fixed by the ministry of food. Import licences were required and were freely issued. Negotiations took place between the two governments during the fall months, but owing to brisk fall distribution in Canada and volume of exports to Great Britain, quantities immediately available were insufficient to make an agreement possible. In January a surplus of eggs developed in Canada, and negotiations for an agreement were renewed. In the meantime some advertising was done in Canada to dispose of an impending accumulation in stocks of fresh eggs. By the end of April the United Kingdom made a definite offer for the purchase of eggs for May and early June shipment and for fall delivery. The agreement was concluded by May 3. The ministry of food will purchase through normal trade channels, and exporters are being requested to make offers through their agents. If private trading is not successful, the Canadian government is prepared to establish an agency to facilitate shipments.

Concerning the conservation of essential supplies, required in the production of agricultural products, the agricultural supplies board in the fall of 1939 established three special committees to deal with seed supplies, fertilizers, and pesticides. In some instances requirements have been cut off from Europe as a result of war, and in others it was feared that the export demand would quickly deplete Canadian stocks. The seed committee made a comprehensive survey of Canada's seed supplies in September, 1939. Sufficient seed for all requirements was found to be available for 1940, while many vegetable seeds were sufficient in supply for 1941.

Action was taken through provincial agencies for the conservation and utilization of rust-resistant and other valuable strains and varieties of cereals. The cooperation of the provinces interested in field beans and peas was sought to encourage increased production for domestic needs.

I have already dealt with the matter of fibre flax seed to the extent I think it need be discussed. Certain arrangements were made with regard to seed potatoes; and field root seeds, garden vegetable seeds, and fertilizer supplies were arranged for under the committee set up.

Mr. HATFIELD: What was the advance in price on fertilizer, and how much was exported from Canada to the United States?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not those figures; I will get them when the estimates are before the house.

The pesticides supply committee investigated the supply of insecticides, fungicides and disinfectants, and arrangements were made for these supplies.

There have been certain discussions with regard to feed for the feeding of live stock in different parts of Canada.

There is one other matter that I should like to deal with. I refer to the question of the apple agreement. The government has kept continuously in touch with British government authorities in an endeavour to dispose of farm products such as apples and poultry. The Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) and the government officials who accompanied him overseas in November, 1939, carried on discussions with the United Kingdom government. An export outlet was obtained for 1,350,000 long hundredweight of apples, 8,000,000 pounds of tobacco and a quantity of dressed chickens. The apple quota was based on 50 per cent of the average shipment for the previous two years, while the dressed chicken quota was 50 per cent of the 1938-39 exports.

In September it was anticipated that the United Kingdom would import very few apples from Canada, partly owing to the fact that a large crop was available in the old country and partly because apples were not considered as essential as some other foods. Canada usually produces annually from four to five million barrels of apples, and the 1939 crop was nearly five and one-half million barrels. The government met apple growers and representatives of the trade at a conference on September 15, 1939. At this conference it was agreed that the dominion government would aid the industry by (a) direct purchase of apples; (b) assistance in canning and dehydrating; (c) zoning of sales areas in Canada; (d) raising minimum grade standards; (e) advertising and merchandising campaign; and (f) negotiations with Great Britain to obtain at least a portion of the crop.

An agreement was formed with Nova Scotia growers and processors to absorb their surplus of apples by processing, manufacturers to pay prices based on 65 per cent of the average of the past three years for No. 1 and domestic grades. There was packed in Nova Scotia a total of 1,735,726 barrels, of which 1,214,465 barrels were processed; 349,981 barrels were exported to the United Kingdom; 30,567 barrels were exported to other countries and 140,713 barrels were sold in Canada. March 31, the Nova Scotia marketing board, which took over full control of this province's apple marketing, had no supplies for either export or local sales. Under the agreement with Nova Scotia manufacturers, an unsold balance of 546,653 cases of canned apples and 154,633 cases of dried apples came under government disposal on May 15. This quantity represents 49 per cent of the total quantity canned, 512,754 barrels, and 76 per cent of the quantity dried, 712,041 barrels. apparent value of the quantity on hand is $1,408,130. The government loss on the whole operation is expected to be $1,154,000.

Mr. SENN: Is that Nova Scotia alone?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. SENN: Has the minister the Ontario figures?

Mr. HATFIELD: Were any apples imported from the United States?

Mr. GARDINER: There would be some. Exports of both canned and dried apples were below expectations, and recently the United Kingdom placed restrictions on importations of all canned fruits and vegetables. It is possible, therefore, that the loss on this project may be greater than the figure I have given to the house as the present loss.

The dominion government agreed to guarantee against loss on consignment exporting of British Columbia apples to the extent of $425,000. The actual expenditure on this project was $106,750. In addition, the government purchased 90,000 boxes of British Columbia apples at a cost of $87,500 for relief distribution in the drought area of western Canada. British Columbia had 67.244 boxes of apples in storage on May 4. This figure is in line with stocks in previous years. The total distribution of British Columbia apples in both export and domestic trade was not dissimilar to that of the previous year. More sales were made in western Canada, less in eastern Canada; slightly less were exported and more were processed.

The government agreed to purchase 75,000 barrels of Ontario apples undisposed of at March 31. No request was made for this assistance because exports of Ontario apples exceeded expectations.

The steps taken by the government relieved a serious situation. The apple advertising campaign was instrumental in increasing domestic consumption by 33 per cent throughout the dominion. The agreement with the United Kingdom to export 1,350,000 long hundredweight aided greatly in relieving the all but hopeless situation. The department in cooperation with the apple advisory committee arranged for a fair distribution of this export quota among the then main production areas.

An interesting development as a result of the large surplus of apples has been the introduction of a new fruit juice made from Canadian apples. Nearly 1,000,000 gallons of this new product were produced from the 1939 crop as compared with some 60,000 gallons from the 1938 crop. So popular has this product proved itself that supplies on hand are not sufficient to meet the demand for the remainder of this year. As a result, the 1940 production is expected to be a great deal larger and of a more uniform and higher quality. Special grades have been established by the department to ensure a quality product to the consumers.

On the assumption that imports of Canadian apples will again be curtailed by Great Britain in the 1940-41 season, the government has already taken steps to meet the situation. A basis for an agreement has been drawn up for Nova Scotia, and arrangements are under way for discussions with representatives of the British Columbia and Ontario apple industry. Under the proposed agreement with Nova Scotia the government agrees to guarantee to producers a percentage of the average return for apples of the more desirable varieties and grades usually exported.

In conclusion I should like to make this statement. Speaking in Winnipeg on November 15 last I stated:

So long as there is a prospect of Britain being able to keep the trade routes open we should not become too anxious to change our agricultural objectives in this country. We will probably do most for ourselves and Britain by continuing to produce just what we have been producing, improving immediately the quality and stepping up the quantity as the demand develops.

That advice was not accepted as sound by some but was acted upon by most. The result is that we have not an unduly high storage of any product, although more of every farm product, with the exception of cheese, was in storage on May 1 last than on the same date during any of the previous three years. The records show that because of an increased production of cheese there will be more available for delivery this summer. The following table will show our storage on May 1 of this year as compared with May 1 in each of the preceding three years.

Stocks of farm products in store on or near	May	near	or	on	store	in	products	farm	of	Stocks
---	-----	------	----	----	-------	----	----------	------	----	--------

Commodity	Unit	1940	1939	1938	1937
Wheat (visible)	'000' bush.	298,448	134.916	41.744	72,228
Oats (visible)		10,288	8,978	8,200	7.858
Barley (visible)		9,605	6,980	8,204	8,712
Rye (visible)		4,587	2,327	1,226	1,843
Flaxseed (visible)		680	165	417	704
Pork		68.716	36,477	44,358	57.946
Beef		20,362	12,822	15,383	13,907
Veal		2,303	2,520	2,170	2,105
Mutton and lamb		2,651	1.914	1.713	3,252
Lard		3,880	3,162	3,450	2,954
Imported pork		3,802	46		_
Butter, creamery		10,320	9,650	4,543	5,817
Cheese, factory		13,684	26,508	17,787	15,985
Concentrated whole milk (1)		10,571	7,025	8,601	7,319
Eggs in shell		4,600	3,148	4,440	4,570
Eggs, frozen		3,756	2,527	2,839	2,797
Dressed poultry		7,858	5,128	4,951	8,146
Apples		262	213	266	106
Potatoes		56	88	48	5(2)
Onions		3	1	-	1(2)

⁽¹⁾ April 1.

There is one other point I think I should mention before sitting down, because it has been brought up on quite a number of occasions since this debate opened and I believe was mentioned again this afternoon when I was not in the house. I do not know whether I followed the lead of the previous leader of the opposition who, toward the end of the campaign and later on, said that he probably addressed too many meetings during the campaign, but apparently I addressed some meetings which my friends think I should have addressed in a different way. In the first place it was suggested that I had stated at some meeting somewhere or another that there would be an interim payment on wheat. If I may be permitted to do so, I should like to read the newspaper report in question in order that [Mr. Gardiner.]

I may point out just what it does say. This report went right across Canada; I saw it in newspapers in different parts of the country. It states:

Definite promise of amending legislation to provide for a ten or twelve cent interim payment on the current year's wheat crop was made here Wednesday afternoon by Hon. J. G. Gardiner. The Minister of Agriculture declared that if the King government was returned to power the present bill would be changed so that a payment might be made as soon as possible.

That is the report of the meeting at Wilkie on March 21 of this year, and it will be noted that what has been stated in the house does not appear in this report.

Mr. HOMUTH: It sounded like a good promise.

⁽¹⁾ Does not include stocks held by commercial growers.

Mr. GARDINER: As a matter of fact my promise was that if the present government was returned to power I would recommend to the government that the wheat board act of 1935 be amended to provide that an interim payment could be made if circumstances warranted that being done. I have made that recommendation to the government, but I am not in a position to state to-night whether or not my recommendation will be acted upon.

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister quote from the Leader-Post of February 9?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not have it before me.

Mr. PERLEY: That is an important quotation, because there was a distinct promise made under certain conditions.

Mr. GARDINER: The statement in full would be in these terms, that in 1935 we had an act placed on the statute books of Canada providing for an initial and a final payment. It did not provide for an interim payment, nor did it provide what the initial payment would be. During the session of 1939 we amended the act in order to provide that the advance payment should be 70 cents, and left the clause providing that there should be only the advance and the final payment. I may be wrong, but it was my opinion that if it had been brought to the attention of the house at that time, provision would have been made for an interim payment. An interim payment is one to be made when a sufficient amount of wheat has been sold at a sufficiently high price to make that payment possible without the government taking any loss. That is what an interim payment actually means. If the act provided for an interim payment, such payment would be made only provided there had been a sufficient sale of wheat at a sufficiently high price to make any such payment possible. In addition to what I have already said I stated that if all the wheat could be sold at the price prevailing, which was somewhere around 87 cents a bushel on the day I was speaking, a payment of from ten to twelve cents a bushel could be made; and if the act were amended to make an interim payment possible, such a payment could be made if a sufficient volume of wheat were sold at 87 cents or higher to make that payment possible.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What proportion of the 1939 wheat crop has been sold up to the present time? Mr. GARDINER: I should prefer to have the hon. member reserve that question until the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce are brought down; for, after all, that is a matter dealt with by his department.

Mr. PERLEY: The statement of the minister at both Regina and Wilkie mentioned another condition, did it not, which would have to prevail in order to have an interim payment of five to eight cents or ten to twelve cents?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not recall that at the moment.

Mr. PERLEY: Did not the minister say something about storage charges being avoided?

Mr. GARDINER: The carrying charges at that time would be around four to five cents, and if you provided four to five cents for storage and carrying charges out of 87 cents a bushel you would have ten to twelve cents a bushel left as an interim payment. Both things are involved in the one statement.

Mr. PERLEY: Then why did the minister suggest five to eight cents on February 6 and ten to twelve cents on March 21?

Mr. GARDINER: Because the price was lower at one time than it was at the other, at least according to my information. If the price were around 80 cents a bushel you could not pay more than 5 cents; if it were 82 cents, you could pay 2 cents more; and if it were 87 cents, you could pay 5 cents more.

Mr. PERLEY: The price was 87 cents on the first occasion and very little more on the second.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not remember now what the prices were on those dates, but usually before making a speech I would look at a newspaper to see what the price was and then calculate the amount in accordance with that price.

Mr. PERLEY: Then in accordance with these promises or statements with respect to an interim payment, will the minister in due course bring in the necessary legislation to amend the act?

Mr. GARDINER: I can only say that this would not be my legislation. This matter is not dealt with by my department at all. If it had been, probably I would have said more than I did say. I said I would recommend to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that certain things be done, and have made that recommendation. We have not the same Minister of Trade and Commerce to-day, but no doubt the present minister has my recommendation before him.

Mr. PERLEY: I think the minister should have made that clear to the electors.

Mr. GARDINER: I made it very clear to the electors. If those are all the questions, I should like to say in conclusion—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): May I ask how much wheat has been imported into Canada this year?

Mr. GARDINER: My hon, friend will have to get those figures from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon). If I may be permitted to conclude—

Mr. PERLEY: Just before the minister concludes—

Mr. GARDINER: I think I have been fairly liberal in answering questions—

Mr. PERLEY: I believe I have been rather generous to the minister on many occasions and I think he might extend the same courtesy to me now. At the same time the minister made another statement with respect to interim payments, namely, that the farmers would have representation on the wheat board, and also that the advisory committee of the board would be reappointed. A statement to that effect was made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, namely, that the wheat advisory committee would be appointed in a few days following February 9, when the minister made the statement.

Mr. GARDINER: That statement was made on the authority of the whole government, so I think the hon, member will find it will be carried out.

The remark I would wish to make would be this, that so far as agriculture is concerned, war always brings great difficulties to farmers. We in this house who represent agricultural constituencies are interested in seeing that farm surpluses which do accumulate from time to time in the early stages of the war are properly taken care of, and that farmers do not have to assume too great a share of any losses which may be incurred during the early years of a struggle of this kind.

We do not expect that in this war farmers will receive as high prices for farm products as they did during the last war, but we do hope that matters will be so managed during the period of the war that the farmer will secure his just returns, those returns always bearing a proper relationship to the fact that we are at war and that it is more important that we should win the war than that any other thing should happen.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I should like to make a statement. We have got, as it were, into a committee form of procedure. Questions have been asked of ministers and answers have been given. The house will notice that during the whole debate I have not endeavoured to limit any of the ministers to the fortyminute rule, although they would properly come within its operation. The reason is that I sensed it was the feeling in the house that as much information as possible should beobtained from the government. Therefore I have allowed ministers to speak more than forty minutes, always realizing that if they wished they could speak again during the discussion on the resolution in committee. Under those circumstances, however, their remarks would be disjointed.

As I say, it appeared to me it was the sense of the house that ministers should make their statements fully, rather than that I should invoke the strict rule. However, I call attention to the fact that the forty-minute rule still exists, so far as other hon. members are concerned. I have permitted the ministers to speak at great length because I believed the house wanted to have as much information as possible before the discussion on the resolution in committee.

Hon. W. E. ROWE, (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted at this time to congratulate you, an old colleague of mine in the house, upon the responsible position you have assumed, and also upon the creditable manner in which you are discharging your responsibility.

In rising to discuss this measure, I do so with very different feelings from those which have animated me on many occasions in the past. I realize, as every hon. member must, that at this moment we face a situation so grave that it challenges each and every one of us to approach the problems at present before us with an outlook different from that with which we have allowed ourselves to approach problems on other occasions.

I do not propose for a moment to review statements which were made during the election campaign. I do not propose to discuss promises or gestures made here and there throughout the country, nor do I propose to take up the time of the house in complimenting the government upon its return to power or in giving any empty flattery to the political expediency which often brings about these situations. I say that because I am conscious of the fact that to-night the situation is so grave and so seriously affects the very heart of the empire that each and all of us are far removed from the narrow partisanship which at times in the past has seemed to prevail.

Problems to-day are different. To-day we are engaged in a conflict which, indeed, is not of our own choosing. It is a great conflict between two great ideals.

It is a conflict which does not involve our methods of farming; it does not involve the profit we may obtain from an industry; it does not involve the social welfare of our people in our national life, but it does involve the decision as to whether or not we are going to retain our national life at all. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel the issue is and has been very clear. Our duty never was so clear as it is to-day, and, in all humility, I say our task never was so great. As an individual member of the house I feel I have a responsibility which, if not as great as that of those sitting to your right, sir, is a responsibility which, as an older member, I must meet.

I have every sympathy for those who are carrying the burden of governmental responsibility in these perilous times, but I do say that even though in these times we seem to have turned to wishful thinking, tragic hesitation and divided council, our duty is still clear. Individuals throughout the country and, indeed, members of the house have wondered much as to what is going on. We know that at times we feel helpless and almost submerged in the problems confronting civilization to-day. I feel that if ever there was a time when each and all of us should feel the gravest humility for the situation, that time is now.

If some hon, member may have thought that in the past I have been partisan, as I have thought some hon. members have been partisan, I would say that not one iota of partisanship is in my mind or heart to-night. As I sat listening to the speeches delivered to-night, and was deciding whether or not I should rise in my place, I could not help thinking of an old saying of my dear old mother. She always said, "When you are in an hour of crisis it might be well to get down on one knee and pray, rather than talk too much." Sir, we face this situation, knowing that only if we exhibit calmness and courage can this empire survive. We have felt that for many months; yes, we have felt it for several years. I say our duty is so clear to-night that we must assume it. We must bring home to every man and woman in Canada a realization of the danger of the German assault to every outpost of freedom, morality and human decency in the lives of men and nations. We must realize that we have a duty-and when I say "we", I include the government of Canada. In this parliament we are the people's representatives, to whom the country is looking to-day for aggressive leadership. They are looking for leadership, not to improve the prices of farm commodities, not particularly to improve the wages of men in the mines or on the farms, not particularly to improve the happiness, social welfare or luxury of the individual in his home. They are pleading to-night at indignation meetings which are being held all over the country that action be taken to save a situation which is well-nigh appalling, to save a situation that can be saved only by courage, confidence and calm resolution. What is needed from this part of the empire as well as from the other parts is not a minimum effort, but a maximum effort.

Not only have we a duty to impress this upon the people, but as a member of his majesty's loyal opposition in this parliament, I feel it is my humble duty to try to impress upon the government of the day the fact that the old land is calling for every man able to hold a gun. I want to impress upon the government the fact that there are millions of refugees in France who are hungry to-day, and before very long there may be millions of refugees in the old land who will be in the same situation. They are pleading for us to do our best. Idle men come to me, as they come to every other hon. member, pleading for a job to do, asking where they can fit into this task.

We have skilled artisans; we have excellent mechanics; we have strong and able-bodied men in this country who are pleading for something to do. Thousands of men are idle and thousands of factories are running only part time or standing idle. We have elevators filled with wheat, and yet before this crisis is over, men and women will be crying for bread. This crisis will not wait the slow pace of our measured political tread which we seem to be pursuing. I intend to try with all my sincerity to divorce myself from saying against any one individual anything which might be construed as being of a partisan and political nature. I have only one motive in mind and, knowing the members of this house as I have known them for many years, I do not believe that there is one within sound of my voice to-night who has any other motive than the one to which I refer, namely, that there is a gigantic task to finish, that there is a victory which must be and shall be won, but can only be won if every part of the British empire makes its maximum effort.

That duty is clearly before us. In the British House of Commons hon, members have made speeches stating that they like our sympathetic sentiments, but that they would rather have guns, aeroplanes and munitions.

I am going to be cautious in what I say because I do not want to tell the enemy of all the failures of the present government. I should like to review to-night why we have not given more in the way of guns. The few guns that we have given stand as an appalling example of the lack of effort. This is the first opportunity the country has had to be told of what is going on. We fought an election when the people expected we would be fighting a war. Much was said then, but I feel that whatever has been done by the government to provide more guns, that whatever has been planned, it is not enough. We must have much greater activity. Our mines and our mills must be driven with fevered desperation lest it be too late.

No doubt the production of munitions is under way; no doubt military plans and schemes have been drafted, but that is not enough. Along with other members of the house I supported a gigantic military scheme to spend $188,000,000 for military equipment. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that when the first $37,000,000 was voted, I said that so far as my riding was concerned I knew that the people would prefer to have it total $100,000,000. I am here to-night representing, not the farmers in a demand for higher prices, not the business people of my district, but those people who have no other issue in their minds but that Canada shall make the maximum effort to win this war.

I am not going to talk about what has been done in the way of providing munitions, but I know that we have not done what we might have done. I do not think anyone will deny that. Our forges must work overtime; the fires in our factories must never die down. Bombs and shells and bullets must be multiplied mercilessly if we are going to win the war. Our people must be just as merciless in dealing with our common foe.

There is another matter that must be considered, that of food. This country is flowing with milk and honey. For years our farmers have been producing wheat for less than the cost of production. This government and this country as part of the British empire should not worry about selling wheat to Europe; we should be ready to give 5,000,000 bushels of wheat to Great Britain and France to feed their refugees. This should be a gift in order to let them know that we are in this fight. We should send every type of support we can muster from the great heritage we have in this dominion. I should like to see this country realize that while people over there are in their present condition, we should share our bread, slice for slice if necessary, even though we must take up our belts a little in the process.

[Mr. Rowe.]

We are in a fight to the finish. We are going to win; but the sooner we go in whole-heartedly, the sooner we will come out victorious. There is no doubt about that. The hour has struck in Canada. We should let down the dollar sign and let the people see the danger sign. I have received letters from different departments asking me to save money in the next year or two. I hear speeches telling us how we can save the financiers and how we can save prices for the farmers of this country, but that is not our task now. Our task is to save the bulwark of Christian civilization, the British empire.

One other thing we can do is to send men. Many men are clamouring to serve, but they are being refused. They cannot get into the Canadian army. These men should be given an opportunity to serve because it might well be that during this struggle the last soldier could sway the balance to victory. Such a man would feel very much disappointed if he was deterred and hindered from doing his part in this terrific fight because the government was not ready to take him on.

One other item that could be given is aeroplanes and more aeroplanes. We are seeing the effects of the blitzkreig that is now going on, and to face this needs all the calmness, courage and fortitude that we have. We know that members of the Royal Air Force are fighting with courage, determination and skill and their achievements are equal to the best British achievements of the past. We feel here to-night that we should have every factory in Canada working twenty-four hours a day in the manufacture of aeroplanes, and that we should be pressing this to the limit and beyond all limits. I say that the government to your right, Mr. Speaker, will stand condemned on the pages of Canadian history for not having overseas in support of those gallant boys to-night at least 25,000 British fighting planes. Some hon, gentlemen would laugh at even that.

An hon. MEMBER: Nobody is laughing.

Mr. ROWE: The boys of the Royal Canadian Air Force are not laughing to-night, and the government which sits to your right, Mr. Speaker, should not be laughing to-night.

Mr. MARTIN: Nobody is laughing.

Mr. ROWE: I am sure that my hon. friend the member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is not laughing because he knows the situation just as well as I do, and he has been one of the promoters of training schemes in this country. I repeat that this government will stand condemned on the pages of history for its appalling lack of war preparation, and I challenge any hon. member who sits in the present administration to rise and deny it. None rises, Mr. Speaker. Silence gives consent.

Mr. MAYBANK: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I rose to address you a moment ago, the gentleman who has the floor having resumed his seat. I did not know at the time that it was merely histrionics; I thought he had concluded his remarks.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the point of order?

Mr. MAYBANK: The point of order is that he has lost his right to speak.

Mr. ROWE: This hour is too grave for any quibblings by the hon. member. The people of this country are not very much concerned whether my parliamentary etiquette is strictly according to Hoyle.

Mr. MAYBANK: Nor your histrionics.

Mr. ROWE: I will give you some, and you will not enjoy them before I have finished.

As I said when I rose to speak I do not propose for a moment to get into any political argument with my hon. friend to my right or my hon. friends across the way. I have done so in the past and I may do so in the future, but there is an issue much larger than that before us to-night, and I say, Mr. Speaker, that a government which has failed so dismally up to the present time should take the cue and answer the cry from all across this country, perhaps not to resign, but to reorganize the government so that we shall have one that the people can trust to finish the grave task before us. I well recollect the occasion when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) gave us clearly to understand by his words which are on the records of Hansard that he was not prepared to cooperate with Great Britain to the extent of building British aeroplanes here in Canada and training British airmen here.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford City): That is not so.

Mr. ROWE: My hon. friend should know for he was here; I am sorry he was not listening. May I be permitted to read from the records of Hansard. I refer the hon. member for Brantford City to Hansard of July 1, 1938, and may I be pardoned if I omit from what I read the tilts between the Prime Minister and the then leader of his majesty's loyal opposition because I say again that the issue which is facing us to-night is too grave for us to be entertaining ourselves with the smart repartee between those two leaders which they could display on any issue that comes into this house. But I will show the hon.

member for Brantford City and other hon. members that the reason why we did not train British airmen in Canada and build British aeroplanes in Canada at a greater speed than we have done was because the Prime Minister of this country refused to consider the matter on that basis. The hon. member for Brantford City again shakes his head. I quote the words of the Prime Minister speaking in this house on July 1, 1938. A discussion had previously taken place on the air training scheme, and there had been mention of an article in the Vancouver Sun, as many hon. members will recall. The present Prime Minister said:

. . . the statement then made was to the effect that no requests had been received from the British government for the establishment in Canada of training centres for aviators of the air force of the United Kingdom.

Mark you: No request was made.

Mr. HOWE: Is the hon member reading from Hansard now, or making his own remarks?

Mr. ROWE: The hon, minister surely trusts me to quote accurately. I have trusted him beyond that.

Mr. HOWE: I did not think the text read as the hon, member was continuing to give it.

Mr. ROWE: I am reading the text and I will pass the copy of Hansard over to the hon. member. The Prime Minister went on to say on that occasion:

Confidential and informal exploratory conversations with respect to training of British air pilots have taken place, but nothing has developed which it was felt warranted a statement of policy. As has been indicated, if any proposals are made by the government of the United Kingdom, the Canadian government would of course be prepared to discuss them with that government and to make its position known to the Canadian people and to parliament. Possibly hon, members have noticed that this matter has been brought up in the British parliament at Westminster where replies have been made to questions asked.

Now I omit a few lines.

Mr. HOWE: Read it all.

Mr. ROWE: You have asked me, Mr. Speaker, not to infringe on the time of the house as ministers are allowed to do, so I shall make my own speech in my own words. The Prime Minister proceeded:

May I say a word with respect to the idea of having the imperial air force set up flying schools in Canada to train their pilots; in short, a military station put down in Canada, owned, maintained and operated by the imperial government for imperial purposes. I must say that long ago Canadian governments finally settled the constitutional principle that in Canadian territory there could be no military establishments unless they were owned, maintained and controlled by the Canadian government responsible to the Canadian parliament and people. In the end the imperial naval stations and army garrisons were withdrawn and Canadian authority took over. A reversal of that principle and that historical process at this date is something the Canadian people would not for a moment entertain. Such domestic ownership, maintenance and control of all military stations and personnel is one of the really indispensable hallmarks of national sovereign selfgovernment and an indispensable basis for friendly and effective cooperation between the governments of Canada and those of other parts of the British commonwealth of nations, including the government of the United Kingdom. Outside its homeland a state may have military stations and quarter military personnel in countries which it "owns," in its colonies or "possessions," or in its mandated territories according to the trust deed, or in countries over which it has assumed or been yielded, by some arrangement, what amounts to a protectorate. But no country pretending to sovereign self-control could permit such a state of affairs or its implications and consequences.

Then the leader of his majesty's loyal opposition, the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett, replied:

The question I was about to ask has been answered by the Prime Minister. I would be derelict in my duty if I did not say at once that I wholly and entirely and utterly disagree with that statement. When the ancient partner upon whom we have leaned all these years is not to be permitted to provide effective means for maintaining, not her life but the life of an empire and commonwealth, then I say it is time for us to take stock of the situation.

Mr. Bennett further states, on the same page:

Every man who has read-

This was the position of our party at that time, the position of our leader; yes, and the position the Canadian people believed should have been taken.

Every man who has read the history of modern warfare and knows what is being prepared realizes that the bombers of to-day will make the British islands the very forefront of attack in the next war. They are threatened, and where are they to prepare for their defence, which is our defence? Not in those little islands. And if they want to come here and train and prepare to send their bombers across the ocean if the occasion arises, should they not be permitted gladly to do so and be welcomed? For what they are saving is our civilization, and Canada—and Canada, I repeat.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford City): England was always in accord with Canada's stand.

Mr. ROWE: Was Canada always in accord with England's stand?

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford City): They were one. They have always been one on the air training scheme.

[Mr. Rowe.]

Mr. ROWE: My hon, friend had better read the magazine The Sphere. He had better have talked to the three men from the War Office who were out here.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford City): I have talked to them all, and I am still of the opinion that Canada and Britain have always been at one on the air training scheme.

Mr. ROWE: May I go further and show from our leader's speech where our party stood at that time? Mr. Bennett said:

And now we are told it would be inconsistent with national sovereignty that we should permit a partner to provide for a contingency that means our life. Do not let us have any misunderstanding about it. When Britain goes we go. Who stands if freedom fall; who dies if England lives? If it was the last word I ever uttered in this house or with the last breath in my body I would say that no Canadian is worthy of his great heritage and his great traditions and his magnificent hope of the future who would deny to the old partner who established us the right in this country to create those centres which she may not have at home to preserve her life and the life of every man who enjoys freedom and liberty under the protecting aegis of that flag.

The present Prime Minister replied:

May I say to my right hon. friend that the course above all others which serves to unite and which serves to keep united the British commonwealth of nations is that which is implied in the words "complete self-government on the part of each of the self-governing dominions" and self-government means control by the government of a country over its own military establishments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have every regard for Canada's sovereignty. I say, however, a sovereignty that is tenderly applied might win an election, but only a sovereignty which is courageously executed can win a war. I may say to my hon. friend that this is not in Hansard, but it will be, I hope, from now on.

Mr. MacKENZIE (Lambton-Kent): I thought the hon, member was not going to play politics.

Mr. ROWE: Surely it is not playing politics to say that our sovereign place in this British empire requires us to do everything we can to win this war. My hon. friend surely would not say that that was playing politics, for he was one of those who offered their lives in the last great war. But I insist that this matter is all important. If our past record of delinquency in this regard is any indication of the way we are going about this awful task in the future, it is high time that we should make a change which will restore the courage and confidence of our people to face the future, because I am certain that our people do not believe that we should have some mysterious form of status to prevent us from putting our shoulder to the wheel with the British empire at the time we should have done it, namely, two years ago, not to-day, when we have a war plan or aviation scheme which will be ready in 1942 to meet the blitzkrieg in 1940.

Now may I proceed? I am going to leave out some statements that were made which would be interesting, but I see that my time is flying. If my hon, friend had read this speech in the past he would not have interrupted me as he has done this evening. The Prime Minister said:

May I say again to my hon. friend that when we have requests from the British government for a particular purpose we shall be prepared to consider them, but we have had no requests from the government of the United Kingdom for the establishment of training stations in this country up to the present.

But mark this:

We have had some exploratory conversations with respect to what might be desirable with a view to affording facilities for pilots to train, and we have indicated our position. . . .

This was back in July, 1938. The rumour at that time was that the plan was to train 25,000 pilots in Canada each year.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ROWE: My hon. friends may say, "No," but let them read the British magazines.

Mr. GOLDING: That is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. ROWE: The hon, member would not know. If my hon, friend is such an authority on military developments, why does he not move over closer to the government?

This country is asked to provide a 1942 plan to meet a 1940 crisis. But may I proceed to quote what the Prime Minister said, following what I read:

We have had some exploratory conversations with respect to what might be desirable with a view to affording facilities for pilots to train, and we have indicated our position, as I have stated it on the floor of this house this morning, that we are quite prepared in connection with our own establishments, to help in affording facilities to British pilots if that will be of service to them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWE: "To help."

Mr. GOLDING: That was not a refusal.

Mr. ROWE:

But I ask my hon. friend this question-

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford City): Whom is the hon. member quoting?

Mr. ROWE: I am quoting the hon. member's leader, the present Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford City): There were so many interruptions that I could not follow the hon. member.

Mr. HOWE: One-third Mackenzie King and two-thirds Rowe.

Mr. ROWE: Again my hon. friend doubts me. However, I trust hon. members will believe that I am reading the statement as it appears in Hansard.

But I ask my hon. friend this question: Does he believe that an announcement by any government, either Liberal or Conservative, in this parliament to the effect that the Canadian government was going to permit military establishments in Canada to be owned, controlled and operated from Great Britain, would for one minute make for peace and unity and helpful, cooperative relations between Canada and the United Kingdom and other parts of the British empire?

Mr. REID: What was wrong with Great Britain, anyway, that she did not come forward?

Mr. ROWE: That was the statement made by the Prime Minister. Then Mr. Bennett rose and said:

The question has been answered. No British government, after the statement made this morning by the Prime Minister of this country, will ever apply to his government for permission to establish an air training school here...

I am sorry; but I have obtained from the Prime Minister a statement which makes it obvious that no British government will face a refusal; and we have the refusal now, before application is made.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford City): He is obviously wrong.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. REID: If anybody failed, it was Great Britain.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon, member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) wishes to permit interruptions, he of course may do so. But unless he gives that permission, no hon, member has the right to interrupt him. I would ask the house to let the hon, member continue his speech, because he is getting near the end of his allotted time.

Mr. ROWE: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am not at all disturbed. I have had courtesies from other hon. members, and I do not want to be lacking in courtesy to them.

I leave the rest of the speech, which was made on July 1, 1938, for hon. members to read. To my mind it condemns this government for woeful lack of initiative in the most challenging crisis this country has ever faced.

I do not think that anyone, realizing the critical position of the British empire to-day, can disagree with that conclusion. I would ask hon. members to refrain from interruption, and in quiet solitude as they go to their beds to-night ask themselves, would it have hurt our present war effort if the Prime Minister of that day had said to Britain: "Yes, you have protected us in the past; you protected with your navy our transportation of everything we sell abroad; you have protected the life of this country; you are the only security on which we lean; certainly we will give you the facilities of our vast areas to train your airmen. It may not suit the political whims of some in Canada, but it may defend us against the most brutal assault that civilization has ever seen." I say that in all sincerity, and I would not smile if my hon, friend said it, because the hour has struck, the crisis is here. Our duty is clear, the challenge is clamant throughout the country and the government must hear it.

Canada is a nation at war by her own decision. Canada is in the war as a member of the British commonwealth of nations. But is Canada not at war at this moment, in reality, as a member of the Franco-British commonwealth of nations? No other nation in the league of allied countries is so well equipped by heritage, by language and by ideals to understand the mother nations, Britain and France. It will be to the lasting glory of Canada that she heard the spiritual call of both these great mother nations and chose without delay, without a moment's hesitation, to heed that call of common blood and language, of religion and ideals. Canada is a nation of this western hemisphere and the only nation of this western hemisphere which is at war by her own decision and at her own charge. In this unique position we find ourselves, as a nation, an understanding interpreter and ally of our two mother nationsand pray God this understanding interpreter of the best ideals of two vast hemispheres may survive. Despite those who repudiate every ideal of truth, brotherhood and human honour, despite those who turn every gift of science, invention and industry to the service of robbery, murder and destruction, we must keep faith with those who have gone before, and we shall win. But we shall win only if we are calm, confident and courageous and give all our energy to the task.

Mr. J. SASSEVILLE ROY (Gaspé) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, at this critical moment when we are all filled with anxiety, when we are assisting at the agony of democracy in Europe, and when the spectre of barbarism of which several unfortunate countries have already been the victims is now threatening us—indeed, the war situation as reported to us this afternoon by the Prime Minister is even worse than it was—it is not surprising that the world should be panic-stricken. It is thus, Mr. Speaker, every time that the storm breaks suddenly over our heads or that a grave danger of annihilation threatens us. We have reached the brink of the awful precipice at the bottom of which everyone sees the worst horrors, and confusion is beginning to prevail.

Some accuse the government of not doing enough; others urge it do this rather than that, while still others are already asking for conscription, that law which almost brought about disunion in this country and which resulted in a twenty-year condemnation of the political party responsible for its enactment. Some there are also who would have the ship of state placed in charge of a different skipper.

The inference to be drawn from that state of affairs is that a new wave of imperialism is rising and is about to carry the government with it.

It is true that so far only the voice of the English-speaking provinces has been heard, the voice of Quebec having remained silent. At this moment when our future and our national unity are at stake, the greatest service we could render our country would be to find out the true opinion of Quebec regarding our participation in the war. The question of participation is not at issue; participation is a fact.

While condemning the government's foreign policy, we admit that the higher principles such as civilization and christianity, which are at present at grips with the forces of hell, have to be defended. And if we differ from the government, it is solely as to the extent, the method and the effectivness of our participation. The hon, members who have spoken on the subject these last few days have been admirable in their loyalty to the mother country. While believing that Canada's interest lies in the success of the effort we are now putting forth, that is to say the victory of our armies and the preservation of our institutions and of civilization at large, we feel that what matters most is that Canada should be saved.

That is why we should guard against the dangers that are threatening us, and they are numerous. Tuesday evening, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) referred to fifth column activities in Canada. There is still another danger—that of conscription. It does exist and threatens us since a still greater participation is being organized and the government is telling us, through the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) and the hon, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), that "our capacity should be the limit of our participation." Hence the danger of conscription against which I am now raising my voice.

The French-Canadians have the utmost respect for the British crown. We are just as devoted to England as our English speaking fellow-citizens are. We have proved it in the past when, a short time after the conquest, we rallied to the side of England against Montgomery who was helped by France, our former mother-country. In 1812, we gave another proof of our loyalty. Our whole history shows that we have remained loyal subjects of England, while preserving our affection for France.

But, we are more truly Canadians because we want to make Canada our country, the country that we have defended against the dangers that have threatened it.

In order to still better understand the real feelings of Quebec, and the reasons for its anti-imperialistic views, one must go back to 1914. The Liberal party to-day is placed in circumstances similar to those in which the Conservative party found itself when it engaged Canada in the first great war. But it is the same Liberal party who, since 1914, in the province of Quebec, continually condemned extreme participation in wars and roused the people against conscription, to the point that in 1918 there was rioting, and almost a revolution. We all remember that.

In 1919, when peace was signed, if it may be called peace, our newspapers, our public speakers criticized the Versailles treaty, on the grounds that this treaty had placed Germany in a geographical situation which would oblige her to break away her bonds some day. Since then they have criticized the Locarno conferences and others, and all those concessions we made to Germany whereby she was spared the obligation of paying what she had agreed to reimburse. The same newspapers and the same speakers have constantly criticized the European policy of lending enormous sums to Germany, a country which claimed poverty but eventually spent a good deal more than what it had promised to pay. Our papers and public speakers have also unceasingly criticized our allies, England and France, at the time when they made treaties with Germany for the exchange of material likely to help her rearm. Up to this day, they have censured such stupidity and insaneness which made it possible for Germany to rearm. Democracies were content, but that poor country was building up her armaments and thus became the power now threatening the whole world. We have organized war rather than peace. It would seem that war has been prepared through occult influences.

As you well know, that is how debts pile up and there can be no debtors without creditors.

There must be some reason to explain this

There must be some reason to explain this disastrous lack of forethought. Why did the wealthiest countries lend their money to Germany and enable her to rearm?

There is no reason for unemployment to exist here to the same extent as it does in England and on the continent. Ours is a young country whereas these other nations no longer possess sufficient natural resources. They do not enjoy our possibilities of development. There is no justification for the existence here of the same problems and difficulties, and yet we are torn by the very dissensions that have upset the whole of Europe. We see the same advanced ideas penetrating into this country.

Therein lies another danger which the government should seek to allay. At all events, these advanced ideas continue to penetrate more and more deeply. Yet no one seems to realize this. There are already in this house certain members whose opinions on monetary questions differ from ours, thus leading one of them to say that war was merely a premium to the vicissitudes of the system.

Unless we show sufficient foresight, there may well occur in Canada certain changes that will bring about, before this war is won, the destruction of the order we seek to preserve. It is time, Mr. Speaker, that we should try to avoid the mistakes committed in the past.

Mr. Speaker, let us try to avoid the errors committed in the past, to ensure our protection at home in the first place, to study the best means, as I have said, of participating without jeopardizing our national unity and without allowing subversive ideas to go further and to overthrow the present order which we hold dear and which we wish to defend and protect. But everyone will admit that the things I have just said are true. Quebec is profoundly anti-imperialist. We are in favour of a moderate participation. It is so true that Quebec is profoundly antiimperialist that it would be dangerous to disregard its feelings. The Liberal party, whose leaders, members and defenders are good psychologists, have taken advantage of this point of view; they have made capital of this question of imperialism. They condemned their opponents by accusing them of imperialism and pretending that they themselves were not imperialists and saying that they should be anti-participationists. Not very long ago, just two or three sessions back.

the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) stated that he was opposed to all participation in extraterritorial wars.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That is untrue.

Mr. ROY: If he asked parliament to vote millions, it was solely for the defence of Canada in Canada. During a by-election held in Lotbinière, he himself stated the same thing. In Quebec last fall, while participating in the provincial election campaign, the right hon. Minister of Justice declared himself opposed to conscription as well as to the sending of an expeditionary force overseas. All this was merely for the purpose of obtaining votes, of capitalizing on the antiimperialist feeling he has fostered in that province, not a very difficult task since our soul, as I said a moment ago, is essentially Canadian and desires nothing else than to contribute to the progress of this country. A great deal of political capital was made out of this last March.

No one should mistake the real meaning of the vote given last March 26. During that campaign, every Liberal candidate stood against imperialism. The Liberal party's campaign rested on the issue of limited participation in the war. The government itself made the very same declarations and undertook the same commitments. They warned the people of Quebec against the Conservatives, claiming that a national government meant conscription. The right hon Prime Minister himself stated over the air that the national government advocated by Dr. Manion was synonymous with conscription. Here again did they capitalize upon antimperialist and anti-conscriptionist feeling.

It would appear much easier to be absolutely opposed to participation as well as anti-imperialist and anti-conscriptionist when one is in the opposition in peace time than when one is in power and at war.

Where are to-day these men who claim to represent in this house the point of view and ideas of the province of Quebec? What have they to say these opponents of imperialism? What is their reaction while everyone here loudly demands conscription?

They stand behind the rampart—about which such a great deal was said in Quebec during the recent campaign—holding their breath in order not to be discovered.

Some hon, MEMBERS: Ridiculous!

Mr. ROY: If these courageous gentlemen, wish to speak, they enjoy as well as I the privilege of doing so. I shall go even further and say it is their duty, and that their province expects them to do so.

Let them rise and fight in this critical hour for the principles they have defended during the last twenty-five years.

Mr. HUGUES LAPOINTE (Translation): May I request the hon. member to stick to the facts. The present issue has nothing whatever to do with conscription.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Translation): I would like to point out to the hon, member that the motion at present before the house is a motion to the effect that the Speaker leave his chair in order that the matter of an appropriation of $700,000,000 toward Canada's war effort may be discussed. As the hon, member for Lotbinière (Mr. Hugues Lapointe) has just remarked, the matter of conscription is not before the house. I feel that I must draw the hon, member's attention to the fact that he should, as far as possible, confine his remarks to the subject which is now being discussed in the house.

Mr. ROY (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I beg to apologize if I have unwittingly broken the rules, for this is my maiden speech in this house. My object is to offset what has been said by imperialistic hon. members of this house in favour of a greater participation, for we all admit that the situation is quite serious, and I wish to state why our province is opposed to imperialism. It is because we have been led to adopt that attitude. I may be told that there is no sense in declaring a moderate war against Germany, but, as a matter of fact, that is what was promised to us.

To-day, we must guard against a fifth column that might cause us as much harm as Denmark, Czechoslovakia, Belgium and Holland have had to suffer. Consequently, before spending too much money in an external war, it behooves us to analyse carefully the needs of our country and the dangers with which we are confronted. I believe in the possibility of steering a middle course and reaching an agreement upon the participation that would be most effective. Since-September, the situation of European countries has changed considerably. The French and British empires have lost allied territories, so that they are now deprived of important sources of supply. England and France may be bombed, ravaged, but not beaten-God forbid that they should be-they may beravaged to such an extent that their productive capacity will be greatly impaired. They are not lacking in men; what they need is food, arms and munitions. Well, if England and France have lost considerable sources of supplies in Europe through German conquests. it would be highly important to devote our efforts to the organization of our 'natural resources with a view to filling their needs. It would therefore be urgent to have our workers produce as much as possible in order to supply the armies with what they may eventually lack. It is in that direction that we should turn our efforts and not in the direction of supplying men. It is by mobilizing all our wealth for the benefit of our allies that we will contribute to the defeat of the enemy.

Any measure involving compulsory enlistment would constitute a menace to Canadian unity. Everybody is agreed on that. Let us ward off such danger and we will avoid graver disorders perhaps than those that took place in 1918.

Next Sunday will be consecrated to asking God to bless our armies and to protect our country and our institutions. I think that on that day every hon, member of this house should particularly pray God to grant us the wisdom necessary to triumph without jeopardizing the future of our country, in order that she may come out of her conflict stronger than ever, that we may understand one another better and that our hearts may beat in unison for our homeland which is Canada.

Mr. A. R. ADAMSON (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is with great misgivings that I rise in the house for the first time, not only because of my very obvious shortcomings, but because I feel that this is an hour the seriousness of which requires action, not words. It is only because what I have to say to-night will in my view be of some assistance to the government in its very heavy task that I rise in my place and take up the time of this honourable house.

During the course of the debate on the motion it was apparent to me that each member of the government who spoke took great care to stress the fact that the government was not conducting a limited liability war. They took very great care to leave that impression, and each one of them used the word "complacency". The government "doth protest too much, methinks".

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to reopen the old sores of the campaign or to expect an explanation of many of the statements which were made at that time but which to this date have not been satisfactorily explained. However, since I have been sitting in the house, two points have been raised by my leader, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson), which have not yet been satisfactorily answered by the government. I refer first to the suggestion made by my leader that some drastic alterations of plans were made on those three crucial days, September 3, 4 and 5. Hon, members must realize that we had and still have a very capable general staff, and I think it will be agreed that it was inconceivable that the general staff did not have some plan, some mobilization order or some scheme prepared, the orders and blue prints of which were in operation or in existence, to be used in the event of hostilities breaking out.

As I am informed, this plan called for the immediate concentration of four divisions: one at Camp Borden, one at Valcartier, one at Sarcee, one elsewhere, and a very considerable concentration of artillery and ancillary troops at Petawawa. On September 3 the royal engineers in Toronto immediately began the purchase of large amounts of equipment, lumber and other supplies for huts and other buildings to be erected at Camp Borden. Work was carried on through the night of September 3, a Sunday, and again on the following Monday. On the Monday afternoon, that day being Labour day, a drastic change was ordered by Ottawa. Hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of equipment had been ordered and sent to its destination, but nothing more was done. That equipment lay at Camp Borden for several months. The 300 carpenters who had been hired went up to Camp Borden, but were discharged shortly afterwards. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) will have to show why that plan was altered. Otherwise, the militia department must have been working under an entirely erroneous conception for those three days. I happen to have seen the material so I know of what I speak.

The present leader of the opposition brought up the matter of faulty gas masks and his statement was absolutely and categorically denied by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers). As a member of this house I naturally took his word to be true, but quite by accident I happened to meet a friend of mine who had soldiered with me. In the course of a casual conversation he asked me if I had heard about the 90,000 gas masks which had to be got rid of, and I said, "No." He told me that they had had to be sent back to the manufacturer because they were not suitable for the new type of gas which had been perfected. I questioned him further about this because he had no possible opportunity of seeing Hansard. I contend that his is a statement which will require an answer from the Minister of National Defence.

I have some knowledge of chemical warfare and I understand that this new gas is one of the hydrocarbons, similar to carbon monoxide As hon, members who have worn gas masks will know, the hydrocarbons are not filterable by an ordinary respirator. Carbon monoxide has not been used because it dissipates rapidly into the air, but apparently this new gas has been perfected. This is a matter of grave importance, and I think the Minister of National Defence should tell us whether the situation has been satisfactorily cleared up. Perhaps hon, members will be interested to know something of the pathology of these two types of gases. I should like to quote Doctor Axel Höser, the famous Swedish expert on Experimental Pathology:

Certain poison gases specifically attack the terminal organs—

That is the nerve ganglia. He continues:

The action of phosgene on the finest ramifications of the pneumo-gastric nerves which surround the alveoli is somewhat different. The patient himself is not aware of it. By the action of the gas on the nerve extremities the walls of the alveoli, which separate the capillary vessels from the air cells, become porous and the blood serum begins to filter into the alveoli, till air can no longer penetrate to provide the red corpuscles with their oxygen.

And further:

Asphyxiating gases cause loss of oxygen by preventing the entry of air into the blood. Other gases produce the same effect differently; carbon monoxide, for instance, attacks the red corpuscles and combines with haemoglobin so as to prevent its ordinary function of absorbing oxygen and carrying it into all the organs. The patient then succumbs to internal asphyxia, the lungs remaining full of oxygen but the blood being badly provided with it. Carbon monoxide, however, owing to its low density, is only employed in special circumstances as a war gas.

As I understand it, the improvement in this hydrocarbon gas is such that new respirator filters must be employed. I should like the Minister of National Defence to clear this matter up.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Speaker, I am a new member here and I do not know if I may ask the hon. member a question. I may be out of order, but I should like to ask him if the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) is supposed to know what gas will be used to-morrow?

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes, that is his job.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: To-morrow?

Mr. ADAMSON: He categorically denied that this had happened. I merely bring this up to outline the situation, and I am sure the Minister of National Defence will be able to clarify it. The matter is so serious that I thought it was worth while bringing it to the attention of this house.

[Mr. Adamson.]

We are facing an extremely grave situation. We are up against an entirely new type of warfare. None of us in this house has experienced this particular type of warfare before.

It is my opinion that we should take immediate steps to organize the country on the best basis for overseas service and home defence. We are not sure from where or how the next blow will fall. I suggest that in view of the terrible peril in which we are to-day, the recruiting of a third division is completely inadequate.

I suggest that the government take stock of the entire Canadian picture and try to produce those troops for which we in Canada have a peculiar genius. My riding is one of the largest railway ridings in Canada and railroad men come to me and ask why a railway corps cannot be organized. They talk about the wonderful work of Canadian railway troops at the battle of Vimy ridge. This was perhaps the best example up to that time or since of the splendid coordination of all arms of the service-air, railway, transport, infantry and artillery. It was the first occasion on which all arms of the service operated together and started moving at a certain zero hour. I think the organization of a railway troops corps should be proceeded with immediately.

There is another matter. We in Canada are peculiarly blessed in having a great number of highly trained hard-rock miners. In South Africa all the mining is done by natives, but we have skilled miners and tunnelers who are familiar with all types of rock and earth conditions. That presents a unique opportunity; for not only are our miners accustomed to working under different conditions as between one camp and another, but conditions often vary substantially from one end of a camp to the other. I suggest that the government utilize the services of these highly skilled men. Here we have an industry that has built and perfected a great number of new tools to suit conditions in Canada. Certainly we do not know what type of warfare we may have to meet in the coming months or the coming years; but we do know that a great part of Europe is mountainous and rocky, and a corps of expert miners, trained in the use of power tools and hard-rock equipment, would be a tremendous asset if we were called upon to fight in Italy or in some of the Balkan states. I make that suggestion to the government in all sincerity.

Another suggestion I have to make is with regard to mountaineer troops. At the outbreak of war the Canadian Amateur Ski Association sent word to all ski clubs and to all its branches and posts and received an absolutely unanimous 100 per cent reply from young men trained as skiers, many of them trained in the art of mountaineering. They offered themselves unreservedly to serve their country in time of peril. After recent events I do not have to tell members of this house what a tremendous advantage a trained corps of mountaineer troops would be to Canada. If invasion should unfortunately come to our shores, we have mountains and we have snow, and we will need such troops. I suggest, therefore, that the government take steps to train a corps of mountaineer troops in the shortest possible time.

I come now to the tanks. Here again we have in Canada a great number of loggers, men used to driving heavy trucks and heavy transports, men used to driving mining and logging trains in our great north country. They are almost trained now as tank drivers. They are used to picking their way across country; they understand heavy machinery and how to work it. One of the most serious criticisms that can be levelled against the present administration in view of recent events in the low countries is that we have not a great tank corps here in Canada. That is something we could have built up. It would perhaps take time to build aeroplane engines, but we have steel mills and the great automobile industry, which has built caterpillar tractors. We have men who have operated them and who could do so again. I wish some member of the government could rise in his place and tell me, "We have a thousand tanks. We have begun to establish a great tank corps." Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to hear the government say that we have tanks at the present time and that we are operating them. But in Oshawa to-day a tank battalion is being trained, and it uses a piece of rope carried between two men to represent a tank. That is almost as severe an indictment against the government as anything I know.

To make matters worse, in Toronto we organized a charity to help train tank troops. It was called the armoured troops fund. It was a public charity, not for the purpose of providing socks or comforts for the troops training at Camp Borden, but to provide equipment for tank units, research and development of actual vehicles of war. I quote from the prospectus of the fund:

For further research and development of apparatus utilizing "electric eye" for use with miniature range enabling indoor gunnery training of superior value to be given at low cost with high degree of safety.

For further development of a "light-projector" gun for gunnery training in tanks or vehicles across country. This apparatus enables observation of fire under field conditions without the use of ammunition.

For research and development of a simple and sturdy two-way radio telephone set. At present only two expensive British standard sets are available. A technician has already been sent to Camp Borden to assist in the design and when plans and specifications and a model set are prepared the defence department will be asked to furnish them.

For research and development of a basic training vehicle, a vehicle having the general characteristics of the tank on which training may be given in driving, maintenance, gunnery and practice without wearing out the standard tank equipment, to be constructed using commercial truck chassis and standard parts as far as possible.

There was a considerable amount of other equipment. The ironical thing about it all is that at the bottom of the circular appears this statement underlined:

Donations to the fund will be exempt from income tax up to fifty per cent of the net taxable income.

Hon, members will be lucky if we have any income to be taxed on unless we do better than we are doing at the present time.

Mr. ROGERS: Would the hon. member permit me to ask a question?

Mr. ADAMSON: Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS: I understand that during my absence my hon, friend made some reference to a considerable number of gas masks which had had to be discarded. I am very sorry that I was not in my seat. He will understand that it was not possible, because I was engaged on other important business; but if he would not mind repeating his statement, I should be very glad to deal with it now.

Mr. ADAMSON: The statement I made was this, that in reply to the leader of the opposition, who stated that some 90,000 gas masks had had to be discarded, the hon. minister made a categorical denial that this was done. I happened to have met one of the troops at the gas training school who served with me. Obviously he had not seen Hansard. His statement, "Did you hear about the 90,000 gas masks which had to be sent back to the manufacturer?" rather startled me, in view of the categorical denial given by the minister to the statement of the leader of the opposition. I questioned him further, and he said that a new type of gas has been perfected and is now in use. Apparently it is one of the new hydrocarbon compounds such as carbon monoxide. I happen to know that carbon monoxide will penetrate the oldfashioned gas mask, and I was interested enough in the matter to bring it up for the purpose of obtaining a statement from the minister, because I myself was through the gas school last summer and received gas instruction at camp Niagara, so I happen to know that these hydrocarbons are a filterable gas, they cannot be stopped by the filter which is in use.

Mr. ROGERS: If my hon, friend will permit me; I know he wishes to be fair, and I wish to be equally fair with him. The statement as made by the leader of the opposition was one which I felt ought to be dealt with at the time. The leader of the opposition stated that a very large number of these gas masks had had to be discarded. I said that that statement was incorrect. I afterwards confirmed my statement by discussion with the master general of the ordnance, who, as my hon. friend is aware, is responsible for the manufacture of gas masks. I am sure my hon. friend will understand that it is not always possible to give complete information in a matter of that kind at this time. But I was perfectly correct in stating, as I did at the time, that the statement made by the leader of the opposition was not accurate.

The truth of the matter is that certain of the components of the container of the gas mask had to be changed in accordance with a change in actual conditions. As my hon. friend is well aware, that has been done and the gas masks have not had to be discarded. Originally the gas masks were made to war office specifications, and the change was made just as soon as possible.

I may say that I have a report in connection with the entire matter from the master general of the ordnance, which report I shall be pleased to place before the leader of the opposition to-morrow at his convenience. I felt that it was in the interests of the house that I should deal at once with the matter which has been raised here to-night.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The only difficulty is that my statement was too sweeping. There was in fact some basis for the inference in view of the change that has been necessary to meet the present situation.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be very glad indeed to place the whole situation before my hon. friend.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think it would have been better if my hon. friend had given me the information yesterday if he had it. Perhaps he did not have it.

Mr. ROGERS: I had not the entire information before me, but I had enough to warrant my saying that the statement was not correct.

[Mr. Adamson.]

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. minister is pretty sweeping in his denials.

Mr. ROGERS: The statement made is not correct.

Mr. ADAMSON: I am delighted to get the true story, and I shall be interested in knowing what has happened in connection with this matter. The house, I think, is in a better position now that the situation has been cleared up and it knows the facts. I hope that as the session goes on, any inquiries of or any differences we have with the Minister of National Defence will be dealt with as quickly and as suitably as this one has been.

In conclusion, I merely want to say this, that I am in deadly earnest. We have no time to waste. This is a matter of hours. The government should be prepared to take emergency measures instantly, not to wait; because if we fail, if the lights are put out on this parliament hill, the next time a parliament is here assembled, the government will have a majority of about 99.8 per cent; there will be but one speech, and before that speech is given, hon. members, all being in uniform, will raise their right hands in salute, and shout two words which God forbid should ever be uttered in this chamber.

On motion of Mr. Kuhl the debate was adjourned.

VETERANS HOME GUARDS

VOLUNTEER FORCE FOR PROTECTION OF MILITARY PROPERTY AND OTHER NECESSARY PURPOSES

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): I wish to advise the house that it has been decided to establish immediately a force to be known as the "Veterans Home Guards", for the more adequate protection of military property or for any other purpose that may be found necessary in Canada. The force at the outset shall consist of twelve companies, to be expanded if circumstances so require, distributed across Canada and under the military district in which they are located. Each company shall be in command of an officer of the rank of major, and shall consist of 250 all ranks.

The district officer commanding shall in each case be responsible for the organization of any of such companies within his district. He will deal with all applications and shall have full control over the operations of such companies within the geographical limits of his military district.

The members of the said force shall be recruited from persons who served in the armed forces of Canada or the United Kingdom in the war of 1914-1918, and shall include persons in categories "A", "B" and "C" up to the age of fifty years. They shall receive pay and allowances according to the rates at present in force for the Canadian active service force.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I congratulate the minister upon yielding to public opinion; and may I ask him if the officers will be selected by the district officer commanding in each district, or will they be appointed by the department here?

Mr. ROGERS: The intention is that the district officers commanding shall have the responsibility of organizing these various units. It is understood that they will select the officers from the reserve of officers, and in every instance they shall see that the officers so chosen have had active service in the last war.

Mr. GREEN: Does that mean that there will be a total of only 3,000 in all Canada?

Mr. ROGERS: I have gone into the matter most carefully with the officers of the Department of National Defence, and it is the belief that at the outset this will provide a sufficient body for the purpose indicated. It is already stated in the announcement I have made that it will be expanded as circumstances require.

Mr. COCKERAM: How is it proposed to arm them?

Mr. ROGERS: This will be a military force in every sense of the word, and it will be uniformed and armed as a military force.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 24, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

DOMINION ELECTIONS

MEMBERS OF COMMUNIST AND NAZI PARTIES INELIGIBLE AS CANDIDATES

Mr. WILFRID LaCROIX (Quebec-Montmorency) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 16, to amend The Dominion Elections Act, 1938.

He said: The German reich being at war with Canada, and Russia having allied herself with the German reich, it is fit and proper that the communists and nazis, representing the ideologies of Russia and Germany, should not be allowed to spread throughout Canada the doctrines of these revolutionary or totalitarian states, and should not be allowed to run as candidates at elections.

It is quite true that in a recent judgment of the Supreme Court of Ontario Mr. Justice Chevrier has declared that under the War Measures Act and regulations made thereunder the communist party in Canada is an illegal association. The regulations made under the War Measures Act are, however, of temporary character, and it seems preferable under the circumstances that an act of parliament should declare for all time that the communist party and the nazi party have no place in a democratic country like Canada, whether Canada be at war or at peace. Norway, Holland, Belgium, and many other countries have learned by bitter experience that the activities of the fifth column are just as dangerous and fatal in peace time as during the war.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

COMMUNIST AND NAZI PARTIES DECLARED TO BE UNLAWFUL ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. WILFRID LaCROIX (Quebec-Mont-morency) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 17, to amend the criminal code.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the same general explanation would apply to this measure as to the former.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

REPORTED FLIGHT TO MEXICO AND SOUTH AMERICA OF CANADIAN-BUILT DIVE BOMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to bring to the attention of the house a news item appearing on page 4 of the Toronto Evening Telegram of May 23. My inquiry is directed to the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power), to whom I have already sent a memorandum respecting the news item. It is dated at Montreal, May 23 and is as follows:

Canada's new fighting plane can dive 572 miles per hour. The Gregor FDB-1 dive bomber, newest Canadian-built fighting plane, was flown into Montreal yesterday on its way to Mexico and South America for demonstration purposes.

I shall not trouble the house with the rest of the item, but would proceed to ask this question. Are Canadian-built fighter aeroplanes being sent to Mexico and South America for demonstration purposes? If so, how many have been sent, and when will they return to Canada?

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air): Mr. Speaker, with respect to certain Canadian made fighter aeroplanes which it is alleged are being sent to Mexico and South America for demonstration purposes, I received notice of this question a few moments ago and was able to obtain somewhat sketchy information from the technical officers of the department. I understand that only one Gregor FDB aeroplane has been made in Canada up to the present time. This machine was produced some time in 1938. In May, 1939, the officers of the air force tested the aeroplane and found that it was not suitable for their purposes. I am not quite familiar with all the technical details, but I understand that this machine is a biplane and at the moment the latest developments are in connection with the monoplane type of aeroplane.

Only to-day the Department of National Revenue asked the Department of National Defence whether it was prepared to release this aeroplane to South America. Instructions were given to have the application made in writing so that it could be considered. My view is that in this crisis the engine at least would be valuable to us whether or not the rest of the machine is, and it is entirely unlikely that permission will be given for this aeroplane to leave the country.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DISPATCH OF AEROPLANES TO GREAT BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Coupled with the question I have just asked is another which perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) will feel disposed to answer. I sent a memorandum to the minister of defence for air (Mr. Power), but I see that he and the Prime Minister have been together on it and perhaps one answer will do for the two questions. Are Canadian fighter planes being sent to Great Britain in accordance with the report from London to the effect that Viscount Caldecote, dominions secretary, had sent a message to the dominion government pointing out the importance of supplies and aeroplanes?

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air): With respect to the question dealing with the appeal broadcast by Viscount Caldecote, I take it that my hon. friend is referring to a press release pointing out the importance of supplies and aeroplanes. I understand that no message of this kind has yet reached the Department of External Affairs or any other department of this government.

However, I will say what is perhaps already known to the house through the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister, that some ten days ago the government of Canada offered to place at the disposal of the government of Great Britain all the equipment in the way of aeroplanes which it might require and which were available from Canada. The government of Great Britain is fully aware of the supplies and equipment which we have here and some days ago it requested a certain number of various types of aeroplanes, the particulars of which I do not think I should give to the house. This was received on Tuesday last, and on Tuesday evening a reply was sent to the effect that these aeroplanes would be available and would be sent forward at once.

STATEMENT AS TO ORGANIZATION OF THIRD CANADIAN DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to make a brief statement regarding the organization of the third Canadian division. I have to-day received details of the organization of the third division, Canadian active service force, and immediate steps are being taken to proceed with this organization in the various military districts. The composition of the division has received the fullest consideration. Selection of the units for every arm of the service in the division is being made after carefully weighing the various factors involved. As is the case with the first and second divisions and ancillary troops which have been previously mobilized, every endeavour has been made to ensure that all parts of Canada are represented in accordance with population, and bearing in mind the forces each province or area has already mobilized.

As in the case of staff and commanding officers of the units of the Canadian active service force already serving, in which fiftysix per cent have had previous overseas service, the same consideration will be given to officers with former service in the Canadian expeditionary force when selections are being made for the third division. Some of our mobilized units which, as a result of changes in war organization, have become surplus will be included in the composition of the third division. Owing to adjustments arising from the decision to form the third division immediately, it will be necessary to postpone the training in camp of units not mobilized in the third division until later in the summer.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Thursday, May 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ralston that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That sums not exceeding $700,000,000 be granted to His Majesty towards defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the governor in council during the year ending 31st March, 1941, for—

(a) the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada;

(b) the conduct of naval, military and air operations in or beyond Canada;

(c) promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk or in any other manner whatsoever; and

(d) the carrying out of any measures deemed necessary or advisable by the governor in council in consequence of the existence of a state of war.

With provision also empowering the governor in council to raise by way of loan under the provision of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $700,000,000 as may be required for the purpose of defraying the aforesaid expenses, the principal and interest of any such loan to be a charge upon and payable out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. W. F. KUHL (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, I am quite well aware that because of the gravity of the hour the government wishes to proceed with all haste with the measure now under consideration; consequently in whatever remarks I have to make I shall endeavour to be as brief as possible and to avoid repetition. I shall try to say something in connection with this resolution which has not yet been said. While many aspects of Canada's war effort have been discussed, it is amazing to realize that what in my opinion is the most important aspect of this resolution has been touched upon only slightly, and in the short time I shall devote to discussion of the resolution it is to this aspect that I shall particularly refer.

It is a foregone conclusion that all hon. members are agreed that Canada must make the most effective contribution she can in order to preserve the democracy of our empire. If Canada is to make her most effective contribution I believe it will require the combination of the best ideas that can be put forth by all the parties in this house. I do not think any party has a monopoly on the best ideas for the prosecution of this war and the preservation of democracy. While we in this corner are a minority group we do represent a substantial part of the electorate who have definite ideas as to the methods by which Canada can make her most effective contribution to the struggle in which we are engaged at the present time.

The circumstances in which the people of Canada find themselves to-day are indeed grave, but so far all the causes for the gravity of the situation have not been advanced in this debate. We are faced with an external enemy and we must exert all the power we have to defeat that enemy. But in my opinion the problem that we face is doubly difficult because I am quite convinced that the people of Canada are fighting on two fronts and are facing two enemies. We, the common people. are engaged not only in an armed conflict with an external enemy but also in a conflict with an internal enemy. We find ourselves in the same position as that in which that great champion of democracy and freedom, a president of the republic to the south of us, at one time found himself. I refer to Abraham Lincoln, who, when engaged in the civil war. made this statement with regard to the enemies with which he was faced:

I have two great enemies, the southern army in the front of me and the financial institutions in the rear. Of the two the one in the rear is my greatest foe.

That is the enemy, the financial institutions, with which I believe the common people of this country are also in conflict, and it is an enemy which I think is being almost entirely ignored. My greatest fear in connection with the prosecution of Canada's war effort is that as a result of the methods we are going to use, particularly the method involved in this resolution, we shall permit to grow up in this country a dictatorship which no doubt will prove to be as menacing and as devastating to the national life of Canada as the one with which we are in armed conflict. I refer to the dictatorship of debt.

All who have observed the progress of debt in this country must admit that already we have well nigh succumbed to the ravages of this dictatorship in our national life. How much more will that be the case when possibly double or treble will be added to the almost overwhelming burden of debt we carry to-day! One of the most oft-repeated statements we have heard in the debate on this resolution is that we are fighting for democracy and all that it implies. That is very true. But we ought to be careful that in the process of doing so we do not undermine for ourselves and the generations who will come after us the very principles for which we are fighting. In my opinion, to approve the principle involved in this resolution is to deny one of the most sacred and conspicuous prerogatives that democracy can possess, that of creating and issuing the medium of exchange.

95826-133

The part of this resolution to which I wish particularly to refer is contained in the concluding paragraph:

With provision also empowering the governor in council to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act—

The method by which this money is to be raised is the point I wish to discuss. In my opinion, and we have urged this from our corner of the house during the last four years, there is no legitimate and honest reason why a government should finance either its war or its peace efforts through debt. We often hear it said in conversation that it costs so much money to carry out peace-time enterprises or to carry on war-time activities such as those in which we are engaged to-day. I believe that our understanding of the real cost involved in carrying out peace-time enterprises and war-time activities has been obscured, and it must be simplified in order that the general public may grasp what is After all, the only cost really involved. involved in carrying on peace-time enterprises or in prosecuting war is human energy and physical materials. The cost of waging a war is in a real sense blood, sweat and tears. That is the real cost. Surely it is obvious to everyone that when the real costs of a war are met-that is blood, sweat and tears-the costs are paid by the people as a whole as the war is waged. Canada's part in the last war as well as in this war was paid and is being paid day by day as the war is carried on. There is no other real cost; that is the only real cost.

In peace-time the only cost of carrying on enterprises is the extent of human energy and physical materials consumed.

The question I have to ask in this regard is: If we provide all the real costs; if the people of Canada, including the soldiers abroad and all others who participate in the war, provide all the real costs as the war progresses, why must we be told after the war is over that we are still in debt? Is there any other cost in a real sense besides the blood and sweat and tears?

What is wrong is that our financial policy is not such that it reflects facts. Our monetary policy should be such that it reflects, rather than conceals, physical facts. Our monetary policy should be such that when the nation as a whole has expended energy and consumed materials, the national accounting system, our money system, should indicate that the bills are all paid. We are still obliged to pay financially for the last great war. Yet in a real sense that war was fully paid for when the last shot was fired and the last soldier yielded his life. This war in a real sense is being paid for day by day in the expenditure of energy and the consumption of materials, in broken hearts and agony of soul. We in this corner have urged in season and out of season that the government should adopt a financial policy which will reflect facts. Notwithstanding the fact, to judge from what was said in 1935 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and those associated with him, that there was an undertaking that Canada's monetary policy would so be altered that it would reflect facts. It has not yet been done. If the crown's prerogative, the most sacred and conspicuous it can enjoy, had been restored to parliament in 1935 we would not find ourselves in the embarrassing situation we are in to-day. I do not suggest that we would be any better prepared in the way of providing the materials which are needed to prosecute the war, but industrially our nation would be ready to turn without much trouble to the production of the necessities of war.

The question of creating and issuing and controlling the medium of exchange is most important in relation to our war effort. As we are now carrying on, we limit the physical and economic activities of our nation to the amount of money which is made available by those who control the issue and the policy of money. The reverse should be the case. In my opinion we ought to restore to parliament, even at this late stage, its most important prerogative, and the government should exercise it in such a way that whatever is physically possible becomes financially possible. I should like to quote a couple of passages from Abraham Lincoln with regard to the importance of the state's prerogative of creating and issuing the medium of exchange. Lincoln, one of the world's greatest champions of freedom, had this to say on the subject of money:

Money is the creature of law, and the creation of the original issue of money should be maintained as an exclusive monopoly of the national government. Such needs can be served by issuing national currency and credit through the operation of a national banking system.

The government should create, issue and circulate all the currency and credit needed to satisfy the spending power of the government and the buying power of consumers. The privilege of creating and issuing money is not only the supreme prerogative of the government but it is the government's greatest creative opportunity. The people can and will be furnished with a currency as safe as their own government. Money will cease to be the master, and will become the servant of humanity. Democracy will rise superior to the money power.

These words are true words; and I would urge that, even though the hour be late, it is imperative, if we are to make the maximum and most effective contribution to Canada's war effort, we restore to parliament this prerogative and see that it is exercised in the proper way.

Our money system to-day is nothing more than a bookkeeping system. It should reflect facts. All that would be required to change the policy would be to change the bookkeeping methods, and that surely would not require any more than a matter of hours and days. When we consider the production of aeroplanes or any other of the engines and materials of war which we require, we have very difficult technical problems to face, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) indicated the other day when he stated that it would be impossible to produce aeroplane engines in less than eighteen months or two years. Enormous technical problems are involved in the production of this type of requirement for the war. But when it comes to our banking system, which is nothing more than an accounting system, nothing is involved but the principle of bookkeeping, and that, certainly, would not take very much time to alter.

If this is not done I fear that, because of the increased debt, a pretext will arise, if not in our time, then in the generation to come, for those who control money to abolish those very democratic institutions for which we are supposed to be fighting. We have in the case of Newfoundland an illustration of the consequence of carrying on the principle which is involved in this measure. Newfoundland enjoyed democratic government, but now it no longer has a parliament. Parliament was dismissed on the ground that the government was inefficient and incapable of handling its financial policy. What guarantee is there that Newfoundland's fate will not be ours if we continue to finance our undertakings, whether for war or for peace, in accordance with the principle involved in this resolution?

Again I say that so long as the materials and the man power are available within our country there is absolutely no reason, according to my conception of logic and common sense, why the government should go into debt either for war services or for peace-time enterprises.

In conclusion, on behalf of those who sent me here to represent their views and their wishes, I desire to protest the method involved in this resolution of financing war, or peace for that matter, as a denial, a negation and a repudiation of the very principles we are seeking to defend and preserve in the present armed conflict. I urge upon the government, even at this late hour, that they take steps to restore to parliament its most sacred prerogative, that Canadians of the present generation may more effectively do their duty without placing in jeopardy the welfare of generations to come.

Mr. L. PHILIPPE PICARD (Bellechasse) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, it is not without emotion, I must admit, that I rise in this house before the elected representatives of the nation on behalf of those who have accepted me as one of their own and have sent me here to represent them. The cordial reception given to me at this moment is such as almost to make me imagine that I am still in the county of Bellechasse.

During the contest which ended on March 26th last I frequently exhorted the electors of my constituency to go to the polls in large numbers. Many times did I tell them: "You should deem yourselves fortunate to live in a country where you have the right to vote and where you are still consulted. There are so many countries in the world where every vestige of liberty has disappeared and where the people would like to have, as you have, the right to choose the men who are to administer their affairs. Be proud to vote, be proud to express your opinion, you who are not obliged to salute with the extended arm or the clenched fist, but who still can, if you are not satisfied with your representatives, get rid of them at an election.'

The thought which I expressed then, Mr. Speaker, is present in my mind still more vividly at this moment when I rise to address the house. How many legislative assemblies are there in the world to-day to which the leaders are obliged to render an account of their actions and from which they get their authority.

This thought alone should be sufficient to make us appreciate our institutions, but especially to make us realize the importance of proving by our actions that we understand the seriousness of the present moment and the necessity of acting in such a manner that our conduct may deserve the approval of history.

I will therefore refrain from lengthening this debate unduly by unnecessary words or considerations of minor interest. I should have liked to say, as the mover of the address, my good friend the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Hugues Lapointe) has so well said, how grateful I am to the good people of Bellechasse for having chosen me to represent them in this house. I should have liked to describe to you the beauties of the fertile valleys and picturesque mountains of Bellechasse and to speak to you of the gallant tillers of the soil of my constituency, from the shores of the St. Lawrence to the boundary of the state of Maine; but at this moment our minds are occupied with grave problems, the destiny of the world is at stake, the survival of our institutions is in the balance; I will therefore limit my remarks to a few considerations pertinent to the military appropriations which we are asked to vote at this time.

As a gesture of good-will, Mr. Speaker, and as a contribution to a better understanding between the two great races that settled, pioneered and built this country of ours, I will ask that you, sir, and the House generously excuse my faulty accent and wrong pronunciation—to say nothing of the rest—and I will proceed to make the few remarks I intend to contribute to the present debate in a language which is not mine or that of my ancestors but which is better understood by the majority of this assembly.

First of all, sir, allow me to congratulate you upon your election as Speaker of the House of Commons, an exalted position for which your talent, your training and your ability designated you to the choice of your fellow members and which you will, we are assured, fill with honour, dignity and competence. Allow me at the same moment to express to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) the satisfaction which we all feel at the choice he has made of the men called to be Secretary of State (Mr. Casgrain) and Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) and the particular pride we have in Quebec to see the confidence which he has placed in the member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) in calling him to fill the most important task of leading the ministry of National Defence for Air. The energy and the wonderful spirit of organization of the New Minister for Air, if he is given the free hand he should have at a moment like this, will undoubtedly be soon manifest in this important branch of war activities. Lest this last sentence be misconstrued or misunderstood, I hasten to say that this in no way means that I do not appreciate at its fullest value the splendid work of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) and the most valuable leadership he has given his department.

As we are at the moment, Mr. Speaker, considering appropriations necessary for the pursuance of our war effort, it may not be inopportune to analyse some of the opinions expressed by the public about the present conflict. Its consequences at large we all too well appreciate; the world will emerge from it impoverished in men, in wealth, in means of culture. The best of the world's population, its youth, will have been partly sacrificed; the largest part of its accumulated wealth will have been squandered in building up means of destruction and in using such means to destroy immovable assets such as roads, railways, bridges and houses, factories and so on; the means of culture will have been reduced in number and most probably in quality, and a large number of people, having been reduced to poverty and misery, will be deprived of the leisure necessary to the advancement of culture and its spreading throughout humanity. All this we too fully realize; and we may even fear worse: world revolution and the collapse of the present economic system may ensue; and, should our enemies win the war, the most essential liberties which humanity has fought so hard to obtain in the last five or six centuries will be denied to a great part of the world.

As to the immediate responsibility for the conflict there is also no doubt. The wanton attack on Poland, which was the occasion of the start of the war, coming after the rape of Austria and Czechoslovakia, and followed more recently by the invasion of Norway and Denmark and the inhuman attacks on Belgium and the Netherlands, despite the assurances given a few months ago by the same man who later ordered the slaughter of the civilian populations of these countries, are gradual steps in a diabolic programme of ruthless world domination.

The form of idealism which has permeated the structure of Germany is not in itself a cause of this but facilitated it by effacing the rights of the individual and subordinating entirely the individual to the state, which has become a horrid machine dominated by a madman avid of conquest no matter at what cost. We are waging war upon human superrobots whose individual liberties exist no more, whose wills have been abandoned to the guiding hand of a maniac who has equipped them, through years of preparation, with the most advanced mechanized ways of destruc-That we know, and the unfortunate populations of Europe are experiencing it at the present time.

There are those, Mr. Speaker, who go beyond this. There are those who analyse the events of the last quarter century in so far as diplomatic relations between European nations are concerned and who feel that the events of to-day are the consequence of illadvised policies of yesterday and that the world would not be faced with the horrible situation it is in at the moment if the sacred union which existed between Great Britain and France during the last world war, and which is so vivid and real at the present time, had not been put into oblivion soon after the Versailles treaty. There are those who remember that at one time France through her chain of alliances with Poland, Czechoslovakia and the Little Entente controlled the situation on the continent while Great Britain mastered all the seas of the world. Had Britain at that time supported France and upheld its just recriminations when Germany repeatedly violated the Versailles treaty, Europe might not be in such a mess today. Those in the last year who criticized or even blamed the Chamberlain policy of appeasement do not seem to realize that the Chamberlain regime was the successor of the Baldwin and the MacDonald regimes which had failed to support France when there was still time to save Europe from German domination without having to risk the fate of the commonwealth and to sacrifice so many lives. History will tell, Mr. Speaker, if those who hold these views are justified; but whether they are or not, whether the present state of Europe is due to the failures of British diplomacy and statesmanship between 1920 and 1938 or not, we have now to face facts as they are. We have to live in the present and look to the future and decide how best we can foster the interests and the safety of the country in which we live.

Since this session has begun many words have been spoken in this house, many words have been printed in newspapers, about the necessity of helping the empire, or furthering and speeding our war effort to help save Britain. But strangely enough, only from the lips of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and of his colleagues who took part in the debate did we hear words that seemed to show that those who uttered them took into account the welfare of Canada, the safeguarding and security of Canada, and the future of Canada. In this sort of hysteria which seems to have caught the minds of many people in this country it is comforting to see that those whom the people have elected to guide it have a special consideration for their country in this moment of crisis. For after all we must realize that our country is Canada, and that our first duty is to Canada. The fate of the commonwealth of British nations of which we are a member is of prime interest to us; the fate of Great Britain and France, from which countries have sprung the most numerous elements of our population, is of great concern to us. The previous Liberal government and the one which now leads the country have, with the approval of parliament, taken the necessary steps to supply to our allies all the help possible in the present circumstances. But above all we must be Canadians, and it is the fate and the future of our country that must be the main source of inspiration of our actions.

If we analyse some trends of public opinion prevailing at the present time we may note that there are people in Canada who consider that we are a north American country and that we must look to the future as a north American country, like the United States and Mexico. Geographically they are right; economically they are probably right. However, the distinct culture of the English and French elements of this country, and the deep attachment of the English-speaking population of this country to Britain, from which the great majority of them are removed by only one to three generations, have made of us more or less a branch of Europe in America. The reason for this may also be the lack of a truly national Canadian sentiment. The majority of French Canadians, we must admit, when speaking of Canada think of Quebec, their province, the land settled by their ancestors, which has become since 1759 their one and only country. English Canadians, or at least a majority of them, when speaking of Canada, think of the British empire, and do not dissociate in their minds the country they should consider as theirs from Great Britain and the other countries of the commonwealth. I believe, sir, that when the Canadian history of this period is written those who have in a moment like this put above all else the interests of the nation will be considered its true patriotic servants.

During the last political campaign I explained everywhere in my constituency the necessity for our participation in this conflict, in order to save the national unity and to preserve harmonious relations in the confederation; and everywhere this was fully understood. I now wish to state to this house that no matter what may happen in Europe in the next few weeks, if we want to preserve national unity and thereby render more effective our cooperation; if we want to preserve harmonious relations in the confederation, our effort should be adequate but it should remain voluntary.

This national unity, sir, is worth saving now that it is gaining more and more momentum. I might even express the hope that it shall extend and develop. The political battle that took place in Quebec last fall and the eloquent answer of the population of that province to the rallying appeal of the right hon, the Minister of Justice was a substantial contribution from Quebec. The result of the last federal election was another manifestation of the same kind. The Liberal party went to the people with the same policies throughout Canada, while our opponents were using some methods in certain parts of Canada which they repudiated elsewhere. It is a known fact that so-called independent, nationalist or separatist candidates in Quebec were supported by the National Government party, which was the temporary name of the Conservative party during the last campaign; and in most constituencies where there was such a candidate the Conservatives withdrew their official candidates before polling day and switched their support to the independent, the nationalist or the separatist. The result of this can be seen in the speech made by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Roy) last nightthe discrepancies between his utterances and those of his leader since the beginning of this session have been very apparent. We may wonder what would have happened to Canadian unity had the country fallen for such discordant appeals. The Liberal party, on the other hand, represented uniformity of programme and unity of spirit and action.

This national unity, this spirit of cooperation between all parts of Canada and all races of which our country are composed, is a most valuable asset. It is to be hoped that it will not remain only a form of speech, or be manifested only in time of emergency, but that it will lead to a better understanding between races and as well to a better distribution of civil service posts and of employment by public service companies, such as the two railway systems, the telephone systems and the public utilities corporations. Then and then only will the spirit of national unity have borne its fruits.

It is a source of satisfaction to us of the Liberal party to be able to say that in the last forty-five years those who have done most for the cause of national unity, those who have done most to guide this country out of colonial status to that of an independent dominion and from the latter to that of a sovereign state, have been the leaders of the Liberal party. The first was Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose prime aim in life was the unification of this country into a harmonious body of men of different origins, understanding one another and working side by side for the greatness of their country. Laurier's call has not remained unanswered. We find to-day in his successor as leader of the Liberal party, and his successor as the recognized leader of the French element in this country, two men who have set for the country at large a most eloquent example of how harmonious cooperation can be established between our two great races.

I do not consider it inopportune, at a time when we are considering the estimates for our cooperative effort in this war, to point to the extraordinary relationship that exists between the two men who are considered the [Mr. Picard.]

true successors of Laurier and the most faithful disciples of his Liberal doctrine. The consideration and respect they have for one another, the total absence in them of that envy or friction which so often exists between men who share the responsibilities of government, are a tribute to their greatness. Their breadth of view and the loftiness of their political and national ideals should serve as a model to all who enter the public life of their country. Both are great men, one in that he has given brilliant leadership to the country for over fifteen years and is now proving to be the man who can best steer the ship of state through the tempestuous seas that lie ahead; the other in that he has, after a parliamentary career of over thirtysix years, kept the confidence of all his race, of which he is a living symbol and is to-day, as during the last twenty years, the undisputed leader. They are both great in that one is broad enough to share the limelight with his partner, knowing that it does not minimize in any way the authority of his leadership or the intrinsic value of his acts; the other in that he has not considered it beneath him to serve his leader faithfully in all circumstances, knowing that it could not take away from him the deserved admiration of all his fellow citizens. These are the men that the people of Canada by an overwhelming majority elected two months ago to govern the country. These are the men in whom the people of Canada have confidence at the present time, no matter what the few members composing the remnants in this house of the Conservative party, or some of their newspapers, may try to insinuate. The people of Canada have placed well their confidence, and the country may feel assured that it will be given the proper leadership.

After the events of the last few weeks in Europe nobody will hesitate to support the motion which the government have now put before the house. After the enlightening speeches of the Prime Minister and the Ministers of Finance, of National Defence, and of Munitions and Supply, nobody can sincerely retain any doubts as to the wisdom of the actions of the government in regard to the conduct of the war.

Mr. DOUGLAS G. ROSS (St. Paul's): May I first, Mr. Speaker, congratulate you on your election as Speaker of the House of Commons. I know that you will perform your duties well. This congratulation comes from one Scotsman to another.

I am afraid I do not agree with the last speaker (Mr. Picard) in many of the remarks which he made.

An hon. MEMBER: It does not matter.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I will not say anything more in that connection at the present time. I do not wish to delay the business of the house, but I should be neglectful of my duty if I did not give expression to a few of the thoughts which are running through my mind. The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) a few minutes ago said "hear, hear" when the matter of repetition was mentioned. I am afraid I may repeat some things that have already been said in this house, but it may be necessary to do so; it seems to take a thing a long time to get from the ear to the brain of the government, and in that regard a little repetition may do some good.

My reaction to the speeches of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) is that there is no driving force behind the government. It is still the old government of laissez-faire, inaction and ineptitude. I do not wish to recall things of the past, but it is only by its accomplishments in the past that the government can be judged as to its capability at this time to carry on its task.

This is a serious time in our history, and it must be the view of all that the greatest power is necessary to drive us to our war effort. We must work so that in the shortest possible time we shall be in a position to produce in Canada and send to our troops overseas large quantities of munitions of war and have a sufficient surplus for use in this defenceless Canada. We must take immediate and adequate steps against subversive influences and sabotage. Every effort must be made to limit the danger from those sources. The action now being taken to counteract subversive activities is puny indeed when we consider what it should be. The services of all people in Canada ought to be enlisted, but up to the present time this has not been done. The people are crying out in their desire to do their part, but so far to most of them that privilege has been denied. As one hon. member said yesterday, in a time like this when munitions are required it seems farcical that we should have men walking the streets with nothing to do. We need men, guns, rifles, armoured cars, machine guns, clothing and other kinds of equipment. Many of these things can be made in Canada.

We did derive some solace from the observations of the Minister of Munitions and Supply when he gave us the figures with respect to clothing and boots. In my view there should be no reason in the world why any troops in Canada should be without those necessities, if they are being produced as he has stated.

In these days it is most important that we protect our exchange position with the great country to the south of us, so that we may buy from them the things which we cannot produce. Steps must be taken to see to it that our imports of luxuries, things we can do without and articles which can be made here, are materially cut down, so that we may preserve the exchange position existing between Canada and the United States and place ourselves in a position to buy the things we need, and of which we will need plenty.

May I repeat that what we need now is action. We must see to it that our forces overseas obtain as quickly as possible the things they require. We must watch all subversive forces in Canada, and must take care of the homes of the men who have gone or are going overseas.

As hon. members are aware, the government at Westminster has passed a bill placing the property and services of the people of England at the disposal of His Majesty the King. Is our peril less? It may be, but if so it may be only a matter of time when it will be just as great. In my view we should have a national registration of every man and woman in Canada; if we do not, I wonder how we are going to find out about subversive influences? How are we going to learn about the spies or those of our citizens who belong to nazi organizations? The Minister of Munitions and Supply has all the power he requires to carry out his job. He is within his rights if he chooses to take action under the legislation passed in September. His powers are unlimited, and he must use them now. There are nazi organizations throughout this continent, and we hear of their existence in Canada in particular.

Another danger to Canada arises in connection with the tourist traffic which will enter our country this year. I ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) to take every precaution to have proper supervision at all border points so as to prevent the infiltration of enemy aliens or sympathizers from the United States. It is our duty to do that, because the United States would be in peril if anything happened to Canada. I would ask the minister to do everything in his power to secure the cooperation of the President of the United States in this connection. One ought not to take too lightly the danger which arises from possibilities at our border points.

How secure are we? Only the ministry knows. Those of us who are not in the confidence of the government hear rumours, and as a result of those rumours we are forced to the belief that drastic steps must be taken at once—not in a week, but right now—to meet these new perils. Great Britain has taken drastic steps. The attorney general of Ontario has urged upon the government that they take action, and the legion and other organizations throughout the country have done the same thing. There must be no fooling in connection with the rounding-up of enemy aliens, and it must be done at once. We know what happened in the countries overseas which now lie devastated. One of the main causes of their devastation was the infiltration of enemy aliens and the traitorous action which arose therefrom.

For example, knowing that our great hydroelectric system in Ontario serves the whole of the province, we must realize that there is great danger of interference with the plants and transmission wires. I know that some steps have been taken to prevent damage, but the need is greater now than it ever was to see to it that any interference is impossible. Is there any reason why people should be allowed to enter some of the armouries in the country without being questioned? These things should not be permitted.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) announced last night the formation of a veterans home guard of 3,000 men. There was some encouragement in that statement, but 3,000 men stretched from coast to coast is only a drop in the bucket. Even though the 3,000 men were fully armed it would be nothing to what is really required. Consideration should be given to the enlistment of the services of all veterans. These men are willing to do something, but they are impotent at the present time.

The militia regiments of the country should be brought up to full strength at once and equipped and armed. If we cannot get the arms and equipment from our own factories, they should be obtained from the United States. The people want action; they do not want promises. Action will give them some idea of what is going on. I suggest that the necessary arms can be obtained from the government of the United States. In view of the speech made by the President of the United States at the opening of the Ivy Lea bridge, I am sure he would be only too glad to assist this country to obtain arms for home defence. I urge the government to go to the President of the United States and put their cards on the table. I am sure they would then be able to get the arms and equipment needed for the home defence of Canada.

We as members of the House of Commons can assist this government. Last September we offered cooperation to the government but I do not know of one member who has been asked to cooperate. We on this side said that we would not criticize, that we would allow the government to get on with their work. We offered cooperation and we did not criticize, but unfortunately we made a mistake. We should have criticized and we should have prodded the government into action.

As I say, we as members of the house can help this government, but the government should keep the members informed as much as possible. Committees of the house could be formed to assist the various departments. The committees could then be instructed as to what is going on, and this would help to a great extent to retain the confidence of the people. The House of Commons should have been in session ever since September. There could have been adjournments of a month or two at a time, but parliament should have been in session at the call of the government. If that had been done there would not have been the recriminations we hear at the present time. Let us not allow that to happen again.

In his speech the Prime Minister said that the people wanted action now. Funny that it should be only now; I thought it was last September that action was wanted. The Prime Minister said that he had received a mandate from the people. I say that he has a mandate based on speeches and words, but not on truth. Here are his words, as reported on page 36 of Hansard of May 20:

—namely that the country is anxious to know, respecting Canada's war effort, what the government has done, what it is doing and what it proposes to do. That I think is the one question which the people of Canada are asking, and to which they are entitled to have an early and complete reply.

Mark that, "an early and complete reply."

They know in large part but they do not know all.

Note that: they do not know all. They do not know all, but if we are helping them, they will know. When the people know, public opinion will be so definitely formed that there will be nothing but action. There is a demand throughout the country for a reorganization of the government. If confidence is to be restored this must take place. One piece of reorganization has occurred already, of which I approve, but further reorganization is necessary. This is not the time for politics, and anything I have said to-day is not party politics. Everything I have said comes from the bottom of my heart in an endeavour to urge upon this government the necessity of making the greatest effort that has ever been made. I make one further plea. I urge upon hon, members on the other side of the house that they raise their voices in this time of crisis and see to it that Canada gets the action it is demanding, the action we must have if we are to preserve our freedom.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I do not think hon. members, including myself, should take up the time of the house unless they can add something new to the debate. I intend to speak from what I know, not what I think. Five years ago we did not have an aeroplane factory in Fort William, but now we have a factory making aeroplanes which employs a thousand men more or less. Last weekend I visited Trenton, my previous visit having been some weeks ago. I found the number of aeroplanes there all ready and fairly well equipped to be about 100 per cent more than on the previous visit. I saw large boxes approximately 50 feet long and about 12 or 14 feet wide containing aeroplane parts which had been shipped from England to Trenton to be assembled. All this shows that something worth while has been done.

A short time ago I was across the line doing a sacred job, and I was surprised to find many professors there most willing and anxious that the United States should have a hand in this battle because this fight is for something which the United States at its best stands for. The great problem that faces the President of the United States as it faces the government of Canada is how to harness the enthusiasm that prevails on the north American continent from coast to coast. It is no easy job. I am sure, however, the people of Canada believe, notwithstanding what some people say, that the government of this country are doing a fine job.

But what I rose particularly to say, Mr. Speaker, was something that was touched on very briefly by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers). It is something which is always on the side of right; it never straddles the fence. Without its aid I think we are sure to lose and with its aid we are bound to win. When Admiral Beatty sent his call back to the homeland and throughout the British empire for prayer, it was not very long before the devil in France and Flanders had to hide his head. The call to prayer has come again, and I could not help listening with an attentive ear, Mr. Speaker, to the manner in which you said the prayer at the opening of this session, "May thy kingdom come." If we say that prayer with sincerity, and keep a clear head and a healthy stomach, we are ready to do our part anywhere. On the invitation of our king and of this government we should spend this weekend in quiet, reverent prayer, not failing to be sincere; and if we do, the devil who is now going about like a roaring lion in Europe will certainly be beaten. Without this aid we cannot win.

Mr. NORMAN J. M. LOCKHART (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak very briefly to bring to the attention of the government one or two salient facts. May I say at the outset that my attitude is distinctly to cooperate with the government in every way I can. I realize from the remarks of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) last evening that he has made some approach towards relieving the state of alarm that prevails in the minds of our Canadian citizens. He has intimated that his department will form a home guard composed of about 3,000 men.

It was my privilege yesterday to bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the Minister of National Defence the situation that obtains in my own community. I spoke briefly of the situation obtaining at the old historic camp grounds at Niagara-on-the-Lake. May I amplify what I said? At Niagara-on-the-Lake we have one of the greatest camp training grounds in the Dominion of Canada. It has been famous for half a century. It has training fields equipped with the latest sanitation, and buildings of every description. I reminded the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) of this historic camp ground when he spoke of the construction of new buildings, in the hope that the buildings and camp ground at Niagara-on-the-Lake would be utilized to a greater extent than they have been. It is now deserted, but the Minister of National Defence intimated to me to-day that the matter would be given consideration. I want to urge upon the members of the government, from the Prime Minister down, the imperative necessity of action in that district.

We have heard a good deal about "fifth column" activities in this country, and in that connection I should like to read a telegram which reached me just a few minutes ago. It is from an organization representing approximately 500 returned veterans, men who probably would not be accepted for overseas service, but men whom I know to be zealous, for I know most of them personally. The telegram is dated to-day and reads:

Veterans voluntary home defence corps sponsored by Canadian Legion, St. Catharines, requests that you arrange with Department of National Defence for a supply of five hundred rifles and ammunition to be placed in the custody of the chief constable, St. Catharines, to be used in case of emergency.

The telegram is signed by the secretary of the Canadian Legion, which represents all the returned soldier organizations in that district.

At the present time we find the armoury at St. Catharines deserted, and a large empty factory which was used by the 10th St. Catharines battery before it went overseas in December, has now all its windows barred again. Nobody is in the armoury, and the camp ground at Niagara-on-the-Lake is deserted. We have a situation obtaining in connection with the "fifth column" which is alarming and in respect of which I handed a letter to the Minister of Justice yesterday. In view of the situation I urge upon the Minister of National Defence not to confine his activities to setting up a home guard of twelve companies of 250 men in each military district. In that old historic Niagara peninsula we urgently need a home guard of at least twice the size of 250 men. There is no danger of subversive elements getting the upper hand if we have proper protection in that district, and in urging action upon the government I would remind them that we have there one of the greatest industrial areas in Canada, with factories of every description, most of which I am sorry to say are not doing very much towards winning the war but rather are pursuing to a large extent their peace-time activities. Ever since the beginning of the war, efforts have been made by factory after factory to engage themselves upon war work. I have checked over their lists of equipment, and I am sorry to say that very little of it is being used for war purposes.

Also in that area we have one of the greatest transportation systems paid for by the people of Canada—the Welland ship canal. And yet it is protected by just a paltry guard. True, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are doing a wonderful work, but how many men have they there? One here and one down there. Reference has been made to tourists who might come into Canada at this time, and the devastation that might be worked is alarming when we stop to contemplate it. The only protection is a handful of provincial police to guard the greatest hydro-electric system in this country, with power lines running overhead in every direction. I urge the Minister of National Defence to take full cognizance of the situation in the Niagara peninsula. I urge that he place two or three companies there. I recommend him to make a close scrutiny of the question of protecting those power lines. Industries in Toronto, Hamilton and many other places are dependent upon the hydro-electric system and will be completely crippled if anything happens to it. Although it is now being taken care of by the provincial government, its protection is a direct obligation upon this government.

I bring these matters to the attention of the house and of the government, and I urge the Minister of National Defence not to confine this protective work to a mere handful of small home guard groups, but to place in this particular district two, three or possibly four bodies of men constituted as he has suggested to give us ample protection, and to do this with the least possible delay.

Mr. W. K. ESLING (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted very briefly to make reference to recruiting conditions as they have existed in districts in the southeastern portion of British Columbia? It is the hope that the minister will take cognizance of such conditions and provide a remedy in connection with the recruiting of the units for the prospective third division.

Along a highway some fifty miles in length there are three communities with approximately 25,000 people. In those communities are two permanent armouries, and one large drilling space requisitioned by the government at the outbreak of war. There are hundreds of young men in those communities who are eager and anxious to serve the country. Departmental physicians are there to make the necessary medical examinations, and those young men are medically examined first of all by them. They then apply to the recruiting officer at Vancouver, five hundred miles distant. Having travelled there at their own expense, and after having appeared before a medical board at Vancouver, they are informed that they will be notified when required. It is then necessary for them either to hang around Vancouver or to find their way back home, a distance of five hundred and, in some instances, six hundred miles, at their own expense. Does it not seem reasonable that when men, anxious to serve the country, are accepted first of all as medically fit by local departmental officials, and after reporting to the recruiting officer at Vancouver, have been given a sufficiently good medical certificate there, they should receive at least a warrant for their return fare home? I ask the minister if he will not consider this situation which obtains in the interior and relieve future applicants from the obligation of travelling so far. Remember it means a thousand miles of railway travel, berths, meals, and hotel expenses in Vancouver city.

To bring home with emphasis certain conditions which apply generally, I am also going to refer to the matter of applicants for the air force. I have in mind one young man who at his own expense went to the United States to take a course in flying. He did not have sufficient funds with which to complete that course. He returned to Canada, resumed his occupation, saved sufficient money to cross the line again, and came home with a firstclass pilot's certificate. Then he went to the coast to present his application. He was examined there, accepted as physically fit, and told that in a few days he would be advised as to when he would be needed, but that it would be, perhaps, better if he went to Ottawa. Through all these varied travels this young man, anxious to get into the air force, and equipped with a pilot's licence, incurred actual expenses of approximately $500 in his endeavours to serve the country. With him on this particular trip was another young man who did not have sufficient money to permit him to hang around Vancouver-because that is just what it amounts to. One may see throughout my district several hundred of these young men, discouraged, their ambitions thwarted. They stand on street corners and they support light-standards or the fronts of buildings; they do not know which way to turn or what to do; they are waiting for advice as to when they will be called. In the instance to which I have referred, the young man who travelled these five hundred miles to Vancouver, unable further to meet the financial strain, simply crossed the line and joined the United States navy.

I want to refer briefly to a matter which has its unjust aspects. During the war session the minister placed on Hansard a table of pay and allowances and made it clear that there would be an allowance to the wife of the enlisted man. Unfortunately no reference was made to the widowed mothers of sons who enlist. I do not blame the government, but I say that more specific instructions should have been given to the officers who recruited the men who enlisted in our local batteries, that is to say the 109th and the 111th batteries in southern British Columbia. The recruiting officers were keen to get a full unit, and they simply said to these young men, "It is perfectly all right; you sign up and your dependents will be taken care of." These boys were given to understand that mothers receive the same allowance as wives. Unfortunately these young men who enlisted were given to understand that such would be the allowance—and so were their mothers. The result was that for fully three or four months after their enlistment, although these young men had assigned their pay or a portion of it to their mothers, no allowance was granted and there was repeated correspondence with the dependents' allowance board.

About the early part of January there were amended regulations to the pay and allowance provisions and these mothers were given about ten dollars, perhaps a little more. That allowance was made only from the time that the amendments were made. It would seem perfectly reasonable that a boy who enlisted early in September was not at fault, nor was his mother guilty of any negligence, if the regulations were not properly drawn up or if they were not made early enough to cover such cases, because the dependents' allowance board had sufficient notice. The mothers therefore, instead of receiving this allowance from the time of the enlistment of their sons, were given it only from the date of the amended regulations.

One must realize that the dependents' allowance board was a new body, that it had innumerable cases to deal with, and that in some instances, there were aggravating circumstances. But one must also conclude that, with the number of changes in the chairmanship of the board, the personnel were not all well informed. I believe the minister will agree that since September last there have been at least three persons administering the board. There is Colonel MacNamara now, then before him Colonel Hill and prior to that the minister's personal representative; while before that time the matter was handled from the minister's own office. These are matters of current criticism with the mothers at home and among young men who are now waiting to be called.

I might cite one case. A mother presented her claim for allowance by reason of the enlistment of her son, and this is the reply she was given in an official letter-not a letter from somebody outside the department but an official communication. It stated that they had looked into the matter and found that during a period of six months prior to the son's enlistment he had contributed to his mother's support the sum of $110. That means $20 a month for six months except for the last month when the contribution was $10. The letter then went on to point out that during the period of six months after enlistment the mother had received by way of assignment of pay the sum of $20 a month, or $120 for the entire period, so that she was really better off by $10 for the six months than she had been in the six months prior to her son's enlistment. Does any one believe that such a letter would satisfy this mother or the mothers of other young men who were prospective recruits?

I suggest that the minister, in connection with the recruiting of units for the third division, should utilize the local departmental physicians and the local armouries and save, to those who desire to enlist, the trouble of travelling the distance from Vancouver, a thousand miles, to say nothing of travelling expenses and hotel accommodation. Taking it by and large from the beginning in southeastern British Columbia, the conclusion seems to be justified that had the government concentrated upon a plan to discourage voluntary enlistment, they could not very well have done a better job.

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): It is with considerable diffidence that I rise for the first time to address the house, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not my intention to waste any time. In the first place I should like to compliment you, sir, upon your election to your honourable office and upon the impartial manner in which you occupy the chair.

I realize that the Canadian people are looking for action and not for words at this time. I listened yesterday while the opposition criticized severely the action of the government because of its slackness in recruiting, but very little was said abouts its slackness in supplying up-to-date equipment and fighting material, which in my opinion is a matter of even greater importance. To-day if your men are not properly equipped it means annihilation. In Toronto the other day, riding on a bus, I remarked to the conductor how smoothly it operated. His reply was that it was new. I inquired what the company did with their old buses. He said that he understood they were selling them to the government, and he added that if the government had all the trouble with them that the company had had, the government would wish that they had never seen them. In Oshawa I saw car after car rolling off the production line, that you and I and other fellow Canadians might ride in comfort. If my information is correct, we are sending our men overseas without modern fighting equipment. Anything is good enough for the army so long as we ride in comfort at home.

Surely it is time this government woke up and demanded the nationalization of our war effort, both financial and industrial. Only by this action can we hope to cope with the present situation. This would not only speed up production but save the taxpayers millions of dollars.

Let me read a quotation from a speech delivered by Mr. David Lloyd George in the British House of Commons on August 18, 1919:

The 18-pounder, when the ministry (of munitions) was started, cost twenty-two shillings sixpence a shell. A system of costing [Mr. Esling.]

and investigation was introduced, and national factories were set up which checked the prices, and a shell for which the war office at the time the ministry was formed, paid twenty-two shillings sixpence, was reduced to twelve shillings, and when you have eighty-five million shells, that saved £35,000,000. There was a reduction in the price of all other shells—

I should like hon. members to note this:
—and there was a reduction in the Lewis guns. When we took them in hand they cost £165, and we reduced them to £35 each. There was a saving of £14,000,000, and through the costing system and the checking of the national factories we set up, before the end of the war there was a saving of £440,000,000.

In Canadian money that is over two billion dollars.

This government should take immediately similar steps to organize the industry of this country on a war-time basis without profit to anyone. We have to-day in Canada many unemployed. We all thought and expected that immediately war was declared these men and women would be absorbed into industry. Private enterprise has failed to do this; it has failed to exert a maximum war effort, not only in this country but in Great Britain. They have realized this over there and are hastening to remedy it. Surely it is time that this government woke up. If they fail to do so, in a very short time they are going to find themselves in a precarious position, despite their huge majority.

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I am quite cognizant of the fact that all parties in this house are most desirous of cooperating to the fullest extent in order to win this war. That is the desire of everyone in Canada. Time is precious; we realize more than ever that time has been wasted until now. But from now on there is going to be a united effort in order to win this war. We realize that this is a different war from any that has ever faced the world before. It is purely a mechanized war, and this mechanization will increase. It is true that battleships are required, which entail a tremendous expense. They have to be manned by a great many sailors. We must have aeroplanes, again entailing enormous expense. We must have a great standing army, entailing great expense. But one of the things that I think we are overlooking is this, that no matter how many battleships and how many aeroplanes you have, or how many men you have at the front, unless you have made provision for their maintenance they will be utterly useless.

The thing which I have particularly in mind with regard to battleships and aeroplanes is fuel. Alberta is most favourably situated in that regard. In time of siege of this country that province could render more service to Canada by supplying coal and oil than all the other provinces put together. It is not inconceivable that the British fleet, as I pointed out here a year or so ago, might require the oil that we have in Alberta. Two years ago when I pleaded with the government to do everything in its power to assist Alberta in providing a pipe line from Turner valley to the coast, no heed was taken. I am making no criticism in that respect at this moment, but I say the time has come when every assistance should be given that province further to develop its oil and coal fields. We talk about developing a vast air training scheme in Canada, but where are you going to get the fuel to supply the requirements of that air effort? It is going to require a tremendous quantity. The assistance for which I ask should be given so that development can take place.

I do not believe that the people of Canada realize the potentialities of the oil fields of Alberta. It is a well known and undisputed fact that Alberta has the greatest potential oil fields in all the British empire. We have the Turner valley field south of Calgary; we have the Wainwright field southeast of Edmonton; we have the Athabaska tar sands in which there is an unlimited quantity of gas and oil products. We have the Steveville and Moose Dome areas, containing one of the greatest crude producing wells on the north American continent, and we have the Ram river and the Clearwater and the Pouce Coupé areas which constitute in prospect one of the largest fields anywhere in North America. Those areas should be given serious consideration.

Mr. J. L. Irwin, statistician of the provincial department of lands and mines, stated that if markets were available, by 1940 regulated daily production would exceed 29,500,000 barrels. That is a tremendous amount, but that is only a fraction of what can be done. It is necessary that every possible step be taken to ensure that this oil is made available not only for Canadian defence but also for the defence of the British empire. During the first three months of 1940 an increase of 440,868 barrels was made, bringing the production at March 31 to 1,667,412 barrels compared with 1,222,544 barrels a year ago. That is a tremendous increase. In the same period six new wells were developed, four of which are the largest producing wells yet struck. And that is only the beginning. If it were possible to reach the market that is available here, for the output of those wells and the smaller wells scattered over that area, by the construction of a pipe line to the coast and possibly another pipe line to the head of the great lakes, this would be desirable not only for eastern Canada but for the defence of the western coast as well. It is an amazing fact that a few years ago Germany offered to finance a pipe line, and our Canadian government would not move. It is strange that we have to allow a foreign country such as Germany to come in and offer capital to develop a natural resource comprising one of the most essential war-time needs.

Some people raise the question of money. There is no question of money involved in this—at least there should not be. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) said the other day, the only limit of our ability to supply materials and assistance in this war is our capacity for production. If money is essential, we have the Bank of Canada, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) solemnly declared in 1935 would issue currency and credit in terms of public need. Then let us use it. I am not concerned how the money is got at this critical time, but I say, get it, and see that this great industry is taken care of.

I wonder if it is necessary to get the country into debt to construct that pipe line or develop those oil fields. That is not a question which at this time I am going to go into, but I wonder if the government has considered fully the protection of those wells at Turner valley and in other parts of Alberta.

Yesterday I received a telegram which I believe I should read to the house, to show the seriousness of the situation. This copy was sent to me, and I believe a similar telegram was sent on May 22, 1940, to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers). It reads as follows:

Many returned men in the Turner valley oil fields are anxious to form protective body at no expense to government in order that they may be in position to act in case any emergency arising in oil fields. We solicit governmental sanction for such an organization and any assistance that you may see fit to authorize the officer commanding military district 13 to extend to proposed organization.

Herbert Greenfield,
President, Alberta Petroleum Association.

Those people are greatly concerned over the protection of the oil fields, because they know that the supply of oil is one of the essential services the Dominion of Canada can render in time of war.

On this occasion I do not intend to take up any more of the time of the house. There are some other points which will be discussed more thoroughly when the estimates are before the committee of supply, or when we are in committee on the bill. I hope, however, that the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Finance will take this matter under advisement and see that every precaution is taken to assist in Alberta, and that those making the request will receive all the necessary cooperation. They are only too willing to help defend Canada, and I hope the government will see to it that all assistance possible, financial and otherwise, is given, not only in connection with the development of those oil fields—because we are surely going to need the oil—but also to see that they are properly protected.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Vien in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee to report the resolution?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. HANSELL: No. I am sorry I am so far away from the chair; perhaps I shall have difficulty in making myself heard. I purposely refrained from speaking on the resolution until it reached the committee stage because I was desirous of asking the Minister of Finance a simple question. I thought perhaps this would be the best time to ask it.

So far as I am able to ascertain from the resolution, it would seem that the government's policy in financing the war is the same policy of financing that has been used in past history, not only in the last parliament but through the last number of decades; that is to say, when the government wants money, it must either borrow, or tax it out of the people.

My question is this: In what way does the method of financing the present war differ from that used in financing the last war?

Mr. RALSTON: With respect to the general principle as to the method, I think the hon. member is correct. The principles are the same, except, however, in this respect, that on this occasion we propose so far as possible, as was indicated in the budget speech in September last, that the war shall be paid for as we go, and that borrowing shall be resorted to only when it becomes necessary, in order that the burden may not be too drastic, particularly in the early stages. Of course when one comes to details of method, having regard to rates of interest, tax-exempt features, and matters of that kind, there is a difference between this war and the last one. However I do not think that is what my hon. friend is interested in at the moment.

Mr. HANSELL: I appreciate the minister's reply, and in that connection I should like to read from the speech of the acting Minister of Finance who served at the special war session in September. In explaining to the [Mr. C. E. Jonhston.]

house that the government's policy would be to finance the war on a pay-as-you-go basis, the minister called attention to the fact that the government was going to be particularly careful in this war, lest the results of our financing it would be similar to the results of our financing the last one. May I read from page 139 of Hansard for September 12, 1929:

No country had the courage to finance the great war solely by resort to taxation and borrowings out of savings. As already indicated, the record of some countries was much better than that of others but all suffered from a world-wide inflationary rise of prices of enormous magnitude. For the last twenty years the world has been paying the price—a colossal one. Indeed it is perhaps not too much to say that some of the roots of the present war are to be found in the world-wide unsound financing of the last war and the great economic dislocations and continuing burdens of which it was in part the cause. It is to be hoped that in the present war the world may be able to avoid a repetition of that experience.

I fail to see how the results of this war can differ from those of the last one, if the same method or policy is used in financing it.

Although I have not yet located his exact words—and he will correct me if I am wrong —I was pleased to hear the Minister of Finance say a few days ago that we would finance the war on a pay-as-you-go basis, and that he realized that it could be paid for only out of current production. I believe that is the term he used. We understand of course that terms are often misunderstood; a term may mean one thing to one person and something else to another. What did the Minister of Finance mean by his reference to financing the war out of current production?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think my hon. friend will find that expression in what I said the other day.

Mr. HANSELL: I am sorry if I have misquoted the minister. I did not have time to look up the statement.

Mr. RALSTON: I notice the expression has been used frequently from that corner of the house, but I do not think it was used.

Mr. HANSELL: The resolution went into committee rather quickly. I had expected some other hon. members would speak, and I had not an opportunity to locate the phrase. Perhaps the minister will remember what he did say, and give it to us now.

Mr. RALSTON: Of course, I am not taxing my memory with what I said on that occasion, but I do not think I referred to financing the war except on the principles which I mentioned a moment ago, namely, on a pay-as-you-go basis as far as possible. I do not think I mentioned anything about financing the war out of current production.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I think we are all rather pleased with the idea that some of this cost will be met on a payas-you-go basis. I have an inquiry to make of the minister, but he need not reply to it at this stage. He may want to wait until he has had an opportunity of considering what I may say. I should like to direct attention to certain conclusions and decisions which have been arrived at by certain bodies, some official and some semi-judicial, some judicial and some semi-judicial. If consideration were given to some of these decisions, I believe a good deal of revenue could be derived in this time of more or less emergency.

I should like to bring to the attention of the minister one particular item in which a great number of people are interested. The tariff board carried on a study of this matter for two years. It was first started on an application made on December 11, 1936, and the tariff board finally brought down a report recommending the application of certain excise taxes similar to those obtaining in the United States. These taxes were enacted by the United States revenue bill of 1936 and given effect to in August of that year by an amendment known as the Bailey amendment. I consider our tariff board to be a semi-judicial body. After considerable study and research, that board made certain definite recommendations, which, if carried out, would bring at least $4,700,000 a year into the treasury of Canada. At the same time there would be no real hardship worked on the people of Canada.

The recommendation of that board recites the ways and means by which this could be done. One is impressed with the fact that throughout all the findings the idea persists that no real hardship would be worked. When the recommendation was brought before the former Minister of Finance, he found that our friends in Great Britain were a little disturbed over the possible effect of the recommendation upon their market. The fear was that this market might be thrown into the hands of the United States. However, since that time this fear has been dissipated by what has occurred in Great Britain. It was thought that the United States with their large production of lard might substitute this product for the tremendous Canadian importations of vegetable oil. It was thought that Canadian people might be using United States lard rather than empire oils. Another argument was advanced that Canadian lard was finding a ready market in Great Britain and that in exchange we were taking empire oils produced largely in Nigeria, the Straits Settlements, Ceylon and other countries.

This state of affairs has been re-orientated. Great Britain is not now taking our lard. Compared with the consumption, there is an over-production of lard in Canada. The 95,-000,000 pounds that are produced here could be readily consumed if there were not such a large influx of tropical products from the empire, amounting this year to some 200,000,-000 pounds. I ask my hon friend, the Minister of Finance, to give this matter considerable thought. Here is an opportunity to pick up $4,700,000 in order to assist the treasury of Canada, and it will work no hardship on the Canadian people. This action would put our Canadian producers more on a parity with United States producers of fat and fat products. They will not be put on exactly the same basis because this recommendation is not of the same magnitude as the recommendation enacted in the United States in August, 1936, by means of the Bailey amendment to the revenue bill.

It would be good business for Canada to pick up this revenue at this time. Such action would help to conserve Canadian exchange, which is now going out of the country to purchase African oils to the extent of $6,000,000 to $7,000,000 a year. The whole trade will not be diverted immediately, but this action will tend to slow down the tremendous influx from Africa and at the same time stimulate the production and consumption at home of the domestic commodity. I have not seen a market report for the last two weeks, but the last report I had showed that lard in tank-car lots sold for five cents a pound. There are many farmer members in this house, of whom I am one, and I know they will agree with me when I say-I am glad the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is in his seat, because I know he will agree with my statement—that you cannot grow fat on a hog's back for five cents a pound, let alone kettle, render and put it on the market in carload lots. With the cost of feed being what it is, that is just not possible.

The recommendation has been made that the excise tax should be applied. The government has the power to apply it, and I know they will have the good-will of the people should it be applied at this time. Here is a chance to take some constructive action by carrying out the recommendation of the tariff board. Such action would allay some of the feeling in Canada that we are too prone to apply more or less direct taxation, which is burdensome and not at all popular, rather than taxation which is not too hard on the individual and which may have a compensating effect upon a great industry. In my opinion the recommendation now before the government compensates agriculture for any slight burden which there may be upon the consumer.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend and I have discussed this matter already, and I want to say that he gave me the benefit of his extensive experience along with that of his colleague, the president of—

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): The national dairy council of Canada. Representations were made also by the small packers of Canada who are not refiners or importers of these oils.

Mr. RALSTON: All I can say now to my hon. friend, and I know he will not expect me to say more, is that his representations have not gone unnoted or unnoticed. They are being given every study.

Mr. GREEN: During the course of the debate on this resolution many statements have been made as to the difficulty young Canadians are having in trying to join up with the different fighting forces. I understand, for example, that at least one of the British Columbia units in the second division has never been recruited up to strength, although now it is proposed to send that division overseas at once. We have been told by the Minister of National Defence that a third division is to be recruited immediately. We all know it is a fact that there are many, many units of the non-permanent active militia which are only skeletons at the present time. I think the government should tell us, and in telling us tell the country, exactly what their policy is to be from now on with regard to recruiting. I can see no reason why all these non-permanent active militia units should not be recruited up to strength. It would give us additional protection, and it would also give the men who join these units a chance to become trained. As the minister knows, we cannot train a fighting man to be ready for this war in a matter of a few weeks. I would ask him to let us know just what the policy of the government is to be from now on with regard to recruiting in Canada.

Mr. ROGERS: I did not hear the earlier part of the question put by my hon. friend, but possibly the latter part of it will be sufficient to enable me to provide an answer for him. The policy so far as recruiting is concerned, as I indicated the other night, is materially different from that followed in the last war. In the last war commanding officers were appointed who raised certain units; recruiting was done for that purpose, and the units were brought up to strength. At the present time, and ever since the outbreak of the present war, the method of recruiting has been to authorize the non-permanent militia units to be brought up to strength, and it was under that policy that the first and second divisions were mobilized. At the outbreak of the war, and subsequently in connection with reinforcements, recruiting has been through depots of the units already raised, and the men who have gone into these depots have been sent to the different training centres. The same applies to reinforcements recruited for units in the United Kingdom.

So far as the third division is concerned, it is the intention to follow the same method, which I might say had been worked out by the Department of National Defence long before the outbreak of the present war. It has on balance, I think, distinct advantages over the other method. It does mean, I quite agree, that there is what might be termed a controlled method of recruiting. There is continuous recruiting. There is recruiting for particular units until they are brought up to strength. May I say to my hon. friend, so far as his question as to the non-permanent militia units generally are concerned, that we have provided, and it has already been announced, that these non-permanent units will be given an extended period of training during the summer months. They will be authorized to bring their units up to a certain strength, not full strength but a strength in excess of their present establishment for training purposes. I do not care to say from memory just what the strength of the non-permanent active militia units will be for the training period, but it is in excess of their present skeleton establishment. So far as the third division units are concerned, it is intended, as already announced, to bring them up to strength.

Mr. GREEN: In this desperate situation that we are facing, why cannot those other units which are not in the active service forces be recruited up to full strength? Even if the men who joined these units trained only in the evening and trained without pay, at least they would get some training. At the present time our young men have to wait, carry on with their jobs or remain on relief if they have no work to do, until reinforcements are called for the first and second divisions. It seems to me that the reasonable way to handle the problem would be to give these young men a chance to get at least evening training before they go into the overseas units.

Mr. ROGERS: The whole purpose of the department has been to recruit units up to strength as required, and in the nature of things the government has had to be the judge of the time when additional recruits of the different units should be called. We have just authorized a third division. It will be formed from the non-permanent active militia units, and we shall be governed by circumstances as to the calling of further units. Apart from that entirely, we are providing for extended training of units which will not be included in the third division.

Mr. GREEN: The minister has said that these units which are not being called up are to go into camp this summer. Why cannot they be recruited up to strength before they go into camp, so as to give young Canadians an opportunity of getting that training in Canada? Then, when they come back from camp, they can train in the armouries in the evening. That would be at least a start, and it would give us that much larger reserve force in Canada. At the present time the government are making practically no use whatever of the units that are not in the active service force. I instanced yesterday afternoon a British Columbia regiment perpetuating the old 7th battalion. There they are with just a handful of officers, non-commissioned officers and men, and they are not able to render any real service. Why should not that unit be allowed to recruit now up to full strength, and let the men who join get some training? Is there any reason why that cannot be done?

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be glad to look into the possibility of recruiting up to strength at an earlier date than anticipated some of these units which are not included in the third division. My hon, friend will realize that the amount of training which can be done in the limited accommodation in towns and cities is not comparable with the training that can be given in summer camps which were contemplated. But I shall be glad to look into my hon, friend's suggestion and see how far it is feasible.

Mr. GREEN: I realize that, of course, but this country may be invaded within the next year, and we cannot sit back and wait indefinitely for the training of our young men.

I have another question I should like the government to answer. I should like to know why they are allowing the officers training corps at universities to be shut down for three months in the summer. Why cannot that training be carried on during the summer?

Mr. ROGERS: As my hon, friend is aware, the universities themselves have terms which normally close at this time of the year, and obviously if the officers training corps were continued beyond that period, the men receiving that training would simply be waiting around at their own expense without being able to take any university course at the same time.

Mr. GREEN: Yes, but in our province many young lawyers and business men who are not attending university take the course in the officers training corps. I do not know just what the percentage of university students is, but certainly a large number are not university students, and the corps is the only school where officers can be trained in British Columbia. We have young business men by the dozen who want to get this officers training. Some of them were not allowed to train because they were not university graduates. That is another matter which should be remedied at once. There is no reason why the government should refuse to give a man officer training unless he is a university graduate. Let these officers training corps be kept open during the summer for the young men who are not attending a university. Why cannot that be done?

Mr. ROGERS: It may be done. In certain localities it may be desirable to continue the officers training corps during the summer months. I shall look into that and see if it should prove feasible. I would remind my hon. friend, however, that we are not drawing solely upon the officers training corps for officer material. It was indicated at the outset that we would provide officers from the reserve of the non-permanent active militia units which are moved to training centres and also —and this is of very considerable importance -that we would draw officers through promotion from the ranks. Naturally we do not want to expand the officers training corps to the point of creating expectations of appointments which cannot be realized. I think, if my hon. friend sees the number that were actually trained in the officers training corps this last winter, he will understand my point. We have actually trained a very large number. I have not the figures, but I shall be glad to obtain them and give them to my hon. friend.

Mr. GREEN: How is it intended to train young men from the ranks? Are they to go to the officers training schools?

Mr. ROGERS: I think my hon, friend will understand from his experience in the last war that I am referring to appointments which will be made to vacancies in the field.

Mr. GREEN: I agree entirely with that policy, but I am referring to the units which are at home in Canada. How is the young man from the ranks of the unit in Canada to be trained? Is he to go to an officers training corps, or how is he to be trained?

Mr. ROGERS: Officers are posted to training schools through the non-permanent active militia units; and the non-permanent active militia units, when they are authorized to be brought up to full establishment, obtain normally their quota of officers from those who are already serving or those who are on the reserve.

Mr. GREEN: Is it not possible to have refresher courses for the men and the officers who served in the last war?

Mr. ROGERS: That matter is now receiving the consideration of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. MacNICOL: Will any portion of the money raised under this resolution be used for the payment of allowances to soldiers' dependants?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: In that connection I should like to suggest that the regulations pertaining to soldiers' dependants be revised. I will give three cases, examples of many with which I have come into contact. They are the cases of three widows, each one representing many others who have similar troubles.

One widow's son before he enlisted had a substantial salary, $75 a month, from which he was able to give his widowed mother $50 a month. When he enlisted and went away, she received from him his assigned pay of $20, and from the dependants' allowance board $35 a month.

The second widow's son had intermittent work. Some months he was able to give his mother $50; at other times, $30 or perhaps not over $15 a month. When he enlisted, the widowed mother received the assigned pay of $20 and the board made her an allowance of $10. In other cases, perhaps the allowance was $5, but never anything like $35 in addition to the assigned pay.

The third widow and her son were both on relief at the time he enlisted. She received his assigned pay, $20 a month, and the dependants' allowance board allows her nothing.

I have felt right along that inasmuch as these respective sons go overseas together, face shot and shell together, and are all subject to the same trials and troubles of war, their widowed mothers should receive exactly the same, namely $20 a month assigned pay and $35 a month from the dependants' allowance board.

I would ask the minister if, after the resolution has been passed and the machinery is in operation, he, in conjunction perhaps with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) who is very sympathetic, and whatever other minister has to do with the matter, would go into those regulations and see to it that they are made uniform. I am not sure, but I have been told that such was not the case in the last war. Am I wrong?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then the information I received is wrong. But that does not alter my argument. I believe that inasmuch as the three young men face the same dangers and difficulties and are all equally subject to the risk of being wounded or killed, their dear mothers at home should receive exactly the same consideration.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I entirely disagree with the recruitment policy which is being carried on. Even if one grants that is to be followed, has the minister considered that, in forming a division, instead of taking a regiment from one city or garrison, it would create more interest in the garrison if a company were taken from each regiment in the garrison or district. Taking it for granted that the minister's present policy is to be followed, does he not think that the method I have suggested would create much more enthusiasm and foster esprit de corps in the military district?

Mr. ROGERS: I quite agree that there is a valuable thought in what has been proposed by my hon. friend. That, too, I might say, has been given some study in connection with the plans for the third division, and I think I can assure my hon. friend that it may be possible to carry it out in some degree, at least in connection with certain of the units which will be raised.

Mr. BROOKS: I am wondering if the minister was considering the taking over of some of the units which are now doing guard duty and using them in the third division. I know that throughout the country there are some fairly well trained units which have been doing guard duty. It seems to me that to incorporate such units would hasten considerably the training of this third division.

I agree with the hon. member who has just spoken with reference to recruiting. Referring particularly to my own province, in New Brunswick we have four militia units, and one was selected for the first division. Men from all over the province enlisted in that regiment, which comes from York-Carleton, two counties in New Brunswick; and, of course, the section from which the York-Carleton regiment comes is extremely proud of being represented. But in that regiment are men from the other militia units in the province. They and other units have taken non-commissioned officers, some of the officers, and a great many of the men, and they have to some extent weakened the other militia units. It seems to me that a more practical arrangement would have been to designate it the first New Brunswick regiment that went overseas and taken a company, perhaps, from each of the other infantry regiments. There would have been more esprit de corps as far as the unit is concerned, and these other units would not have been weakened as they are to-day. I believe that the adoption of that principle in connection with future recruiting would have a very good effect.

I do not regard the present system as altogether practical. It has another effect. After the war is over-and, we trust, successfullythese units will hope to carry on. A regiment which has not been represented overseas will certainly lose face with a regiment that has been overseas, and I believe that this would have a bad effect on the militia of the future. Presumably what is true in New Brunswick is true all over Canada. Take Manitoba, for instance; you might have a first Manitoba regiment and a second Manitoba regiment; in the same way, a Montreal unit; or a western Ontario unit. In England they have the Kents and the Surreys; each county has one unit from which there are different regiments of the same name. believe that in this war it would have been much better for recruiting in this country if we had followed some such scheme as that. I remember that in the last war only one New Brunswick infantry regiment was represented at the front, although we sent enough men to maintain two, or three, or perhaps more in the field; and the people in our province did not feel that they were receiving fair treatment in this regard. We sent men to reinforce units from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I had hoped that in this war a different system would be followed, a system which would give the different provinces better representation as far as their units are concerned.

Mr. HOMUTH: The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) has raised a very important question in respect of the allowances that are being paid to widowed mothers. Are we going to continue to pay them an allowance based on the economic condition of their families prior to their sons' enlistment? Apparently that is what we are going to do.

I know of several cases where the boy was out of work and contributed very little to the home, and the allowance paid to the mother is based upon what he was able to contribute. There are three privates in the ranks and the widowed mothers are receiving different allowances. In my opinion this is very unfair. Surely some adjustment can be made; and not only should there be an adjustment, but it should be made retroactive from the time of the enlistment of the son.

Mr. RALSTON: The dependants' allowance regulations are made by the Department of National Defence and are concurred in by the treasury board. In my own constituency there are instances of the same sort as the hon. member has mentioned. Rightly or wrongly—he will say wrongly, judging from what he has already said—the rule, not only in these regulations but in the regulations that were in force during the last war and also in the Canadian Pension Act, which I suppose has undergone more revision than any other act on the statute books, provides that while wives are entitled as of right to pension, parents are entitled only in accordance with need, or as in this case, having regard to the support which the enlisted man has given. That has been the rule, and there has been the want of uniformity to which my hon. friend has referred, in that one soldier's mother may be getting a different allowance from another. Under the Pension Act, if a wife were in receipt of an income of $10,000 a year, she would still get the pension, but the rule does not apply to the parents. The idea is that there is a different situation as between parents on the one hand and the wife on the other, and that distinction has been perpetuated and is to-day in the financial regulations. It would be adopting a principle that has not been followed in any pension legislation or in any financial provisions of this sort that I know of if we adopted the suggestion which has been made. The theory is that the country endeavours to restore to the parent, to a certain extent at least, what has been lost by reason of the son's enlistment. That is the principle which has been laid down. In the third case stated by the hon, member for Davenport, I believe he said that the mother had been on relief.

Mr. MacNICOL: The mother and son.

Mr. RALSTON: As he knows, there was a hardship in that connection and it was recognized. The regulations provided that it had to be shown that the son had contributed to a certain extent. Obviously that could not be shown where the son was himself on relief, and so an amendment was made whereby it was possible to make an allowance to the mother to the extent of the contribution made by the son, with the limitations mentioned in the regulation, if it could be shown that the son's failure to contribute to his mother's support had been on account of circumstances beyond his control. That amendment was made to cover the case to which my hon. friend refers. The request has been made that the matter be taken into consideration and I shall be glad to consider it; but, speaking as one minister interested in the whole question, I would point out that the principle would be entirely new and very far-reaching if we adopted the suggestion that has been made, because it would apply to the father as well, and there is no reason why it should not also apply to other dependants who are not in the relationship of wife. You would have to go all down the line.

Mr. HOMUTH: I think it is unfair. Three boys enlist, privates in the ranks, and they are fighting for Canada at different rates of pay. Their people are more or less destitute in consequence. When the war broke out, there prevailed throughout Canada economic conditions that we had never experienced before. These boys wandered about the roads for several years without being able to get work. They were not wanted by the municipalities or the provinces. No provision was made for them, but they forgot all that hardship and enlisted because they loved their country more than they disliked governments because of ill treatment. These boys wandered hundreds of miles over the province looking for work and therefore they could not contribute anything to the support of their mothers. They finally enlist and the mothers get nothing. To me it is unfair. We are passing a vote of $700,000,000. What does it matter what the war costs? If we lose the war, neither our money nor anything else will be of any advantage to us. For God's sakeand I say this as reverently as I can-let us be fair to those who are going to fight to defend the country. Let us look after the loved ones they leave behind and may never see again. Surely the country can well afford so to amend our laws as to enable us to look after the loved ones of those boys who have enlisted to fight for us.

Mr. RALSTON: Everyone agrees with the sentiment the hon. member has expressed; but he is presupposing a case of destitution, and it is the case of destitution that the amended regulations were intended to meet. If a son has been prevented from contributing because of circumstances beyond his control, allowance is made. I yield to no one in my desire to treat the men and their dependants fairly; I am merely pointing out that in the regulations which were in force in the last war, continued in the Pension Act and considered by a committee at every session of the house, certainly in the nine years that I was in the house, and continued down to this [Mr. Ralston.] war, the principle I have stated has been recognized as sound. I ask hon. members whether that principle is not fair, namely, that of restoring to the parent or other dependant what he or she is deprived of by reason of the enlistment of the son or relative. In instances where they are deprived of nothing by reason of the fact that the son had not made a contribution, if the failure to contribute has been on account of circumstances beyond the control of the son, the allowance is still made. I ask, is that not a fair situation?

Mr. PERLEY: The minister has stated pretty clearly what the intention is, and I am glad that these regulations will be reviewed. May I cite one case, that of a widowed mother with an only son who is trying to carry on a farm. The father died last fall after the war broke out. This is an only son, nineteen years of age. The mother is trying to carry on the farm operations. I think this is rather a special case, because she had to hire help. The son is a fine boy, anxious to help his mother, but he got the spirit and enlisted. In reviewing these regulations, such cases should be taken into consideration. There are many of them in the west; I know of several. The mother has not yet received any allowance. In fact, I have a letter about the matter since I came to Ottawa.

Mr. RALSTON: My friend has written the board about it?

Mr. PERLEY: I have written the board since coming to Ottawa.

Mr. MacNICOL: It was difficult to get a prompt reply from the board.

Mr. RALSTON: We are all interested in this. Speaking for myself, I believe the government felt that when we got Mr. Mac-Namara—and this is making no reflections on others who occupied the position—we had a man who was highly qualified, sympathetic, and whose administration would be a credit to the dominion. I am sure he justified those expectations. He has a board with some new members, and I know he has had difficulty about space. The dependants' allowance board is going into the new building which is being built near the war supply board. The board has forty thousand files, and hon, members can understand that there may have been some congestion and possible delays on that account. But I am certain that the Minister of National Defence and I also would like to have any information of instances in which hon. members do not get prompt replies, because that must be remedied of course, and Mr. MacNamara would be the first to see that that was done.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am not blaming Mr. MacNamara or any other official, but I am sure the Minister of National Defence will find letters on his files—the Minister of Finance perhaps not so many—advising that I have been unable to get a prompt reply. The reason may be that there are far too many such cases. I am not finding fault with the board. But I have found it necessary to write to the ministers that I cannot get prompt replies from the board. I have advised the ministers that the widows themselves cannot get replies.

Mr. ROGERS: If my hon, friend will bring any such letters to my attention, I shall be glad to see that they are dealt with immediately. I do not recall his having written to me about not having received any reply. Is that the suggestion?

Mr. MacNICOL: I have written advising that I cannot get a reply from the board. Unfortunately when I am at home I have not a stenographer; I write my letters by hand and therefore have not a copy. Nevertheless it is a fact.

Mr. MacINNIS: The point raised by the hon, member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) is most important and should not be passed over until it has received the most earnest consideration of the committee. We should not be satisfied with the fact that the principle applied now is the same as applied during the last war. The situation at the beginning of this war is not that which existed at the beginning of the last. The world has moved on tremendously since the last war, and it is moving to-day, possibly at a faster rate than ever before. This question has caused more heart-burning perhaps than any other associated with the matter of allowances. I doubt if there is any hon, member who has not received letters, most passionate letters, in regard to this. I have letters from mothers whose husbands and sons have been unemployed for a number of years, or doing intermittent work. A mother whose son was fortunate enough to have work, was looked upon with envy by other mothers, whose sons were unemployed. There is more bitterness now when the mother of an unemployed boy gets a smaller allowance or none.

One of the things we are supposed to be fighting for in this war is democracy. If democracy means anything, it means a striving towards equality. That being the situation, we should strive towards equality of treatment of mothers who give their sons, regardless of whether those sons happen to have been employed or unemployed. I quite realize that there are cases in which there would not be a just or valid claim; that is where the son had left home, had given no thought to the welfare of his parents. In such cases I do not think the mother would have any claim because of the enlistment of the son. But where the son had been at home and would have assisted if economic conditions had enabled him, there is a claim, whether he was employed or not. I think it would go far to bring about a better feeling in this country, greater eagerness to assist the country in this extremity, if the government would give generous consideration to this matter.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the chief whip informs me that he has been in touch with the other whips of the house and that there appears to be a desire that the house should not sit this evening, the reason being that this week has been one of intense activity on the part of all, not only hon. members but all associated with the business of parliament. I think we have made exceptional progress with the business in the last six days. Moreover, there is the fact that to-day is Victoria day. When there is not great pressure of business, the house sometimes does not sit at all on Victoria day; but to-day we have sat half the day, and if there is no exception on the part of any hon. member to an adjournment, I shall be pleased, on behalf of the government, to suggest that the house do now adjourn until Monday. If there were a desire on the part of hon. members to sit this evening, of course the government would be prepared to continue until eleven o'clock.

On Monday the house will continue discussion of this resolution.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at six p.m.

Monday, May 27, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN ACTIVE SERVICE FORCE—FIRST DIVISION

Mr. CHURCH:

- 1. How many officers, non-commissioned officers and men, of all ranks, by provinces, compose Canada's first expeditionary force?
- 2. On what dates since the war started has the government sought recruits for overseas service, on what various dates was it stopped and restarted, and on whose recommendation?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Strength as at May 18, 1940—Canadian active service force (overseas)-

Province Officers	Other
Prince Edward Island 6	165
Nova Scotia 42	1,232
New Brunswick 53	1,478
Quebec	3,992
Ontario	10,616
Manitoba	1,189
Saskatchewan 71	1,857
Alberta	1,954
British Columbia 56	1,595
Headquarters and miscellaneous 137	441
Total	24,519

- 2 (a) Recruiting began with the mobilization of the Canadian active service force.
- (b) Recruiting for certain units has been suspended from time to time in order to control the intake in accordance with the unit desired to be recruited.

CANADIAN ACTIVE SERVICE FORCE-THIRD DIVISION

Mr. COCKERAM:

Will consideration be given to the inclusion in the proposed third division of an Irish regiment representative of Canadians of Irish descent?

Mr. ROGERS: In selecting units for the third Canadian division full and careful consideration will be given to the claims of all of the unmobilized militia units from coast to coast, including Irish regiments.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES—ANTI-ALLY PROPAGANDA*

Mr. CHURCH:

Will the government give consideration to the appointment of a committee of the house to investigate all adverse anti-allies propaganda carried on in Canada by the so-called fifth army and those who are pro-German and pro-Russian, as well as American channels in the air and the distribution of certain American press publications carrying items detrimental to the cause of our allies.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I mention that there is on the order paper a notice of motion under my name with respect to the defence of Canada regulations and the intention to appoint a committee of this house to take up all matters that might arise in connection with a study of these regulations. I think the motion is sufficiently broadly worded to cover everything that my hon. friend would wish to have included in it, as is indicated by his question, and I would ask therefore that the explanation I am now making be considered as an answer to the question.

[Mr. Church.]

INTERNMENT OPERATIONS

Mr. ROSS (Souris):

1. Was one Doctor Schneider, of Lockport, Manitoba, interned since the outbreak of war?

2. If so, when, where, and why?
3. How long did he remain interned?
4. Was he released? If so, what were the circumstances connected therewith?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East):

2. Sept. 3, 1939—Kananaskis internment camp. Why? See answer to question 4.

3. Order for release signed March 30, 1940.

4. Yes. The circumstances connected with the internment and release of enemy aliens cannot be disclosed to the public. Such disclosures would involve the publication of secret sources of information which it would not be in the public interest to disclose.

Mr. COCKERAM:

1. How many enemy aliens have been interned since the outbreak of war?

2. How many have been released from internment?

3. How many were released from internment during the period between January 26, 1940, and March 26, 1940?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East):

1.409.

2. 145.

3. 47. The date of such releases depended largely on the time the reports of the tribunal that investigated various cases were received.

Mrs. NIELSEN:

1. Was one Alois N. Schneider, of St. Walburg, Saskatchewan, interned following the outbreak of war?

2. If so, why?
3. Was he released?

4. If so, when, and for what reason?
5. Was he supplied with railway or other transportation by the Department of Immigration or any other department of government?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East):

1. Yes.

2. Yes. The circumstances connected with the internment and release of enemy aliens cannot be disclosed to the public. Such disclosures would involve the publication of secret sources of information which it would not be in the public interest to disclose.

3. Yes.

4. Answered by No. 2.

5. He was supplied with transportation from the internment camp to his home.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. FAIR:

1. What is the total cost to date of the administration of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act?

2. How many inspectors were in the field in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta?

3. What other staff is employed in each province?

4. How many are employed at head office in Regina?

5. Are all claims for bonus on the 1939 crop now satisfied? If not, how many are under consideration?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. $278,956.90 (to April 30, 1940).

2. Manitoba, 79; Saskatchewan, 162: Alberta, 39.

3. Manitoba, one supervisor; Saskatchewan, six supervisors; Alberta, one supervisor.

4. 52.

5. 89 townships still under consideration.

PREPARATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE MEASURE

Mr. CHAMBERS:

1. Have any appointments been made by the government in connection with the proposed unemployment insurance bill?

2. Have the services of any persons been arranged for temporarily or otherwise to assist in the preparation of the bill?

3. If so, what are their names, and under what arrangement have they been engaged?

Mr. McLARTY:

1. No appointments have been made in connection with the proposed unemployment insurance bill.

2. The services of several persons have been utilized temporarily to prepare data in connection with the preparation of the bill.

3. The persons assisting in the collection of data in connection with the preparation of the bill were D. Christie Tait of the International Labour Office, A. D. Watson, Chief Actuary, Insurance Department, Bryce M. Stewart of New York, Charles Bland, Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, Watson Sellar, Auditor General and employees of the Department of Labour including Messrs. E. Stangroom, J. S. Hodgson and A. A. Heaps, the latter three employees in a temporary capacity.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION-EMPLOYMENT OF REGINALD J. JONES

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn):

1. Was Reginald J. Jones hired, in any capacity, by the dominion government under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act programme?

2. If so, during what periods of time, and what remuneration did he receive: (a) in salary, and (b) for expenses?

3. Is Reginald J. Jones now in the employ of the dominion government, and, if so, in what capacity?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. No.

2. Answered by 1.

3. No.

FRESH WATER FISH

Mr. DESMOND:

What is the total value of Canadian fresh water fish marketed annually (1) in Canada, (2) in United States?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The value of production of the commercial fresh water fisheries of Canada in 1938 was $6,718,828. The value of Canadian fresh water fish marketed in Canada in 1938 was approximately $1,507,538. The value of fresh water fish exported from Canada to the United States in 1938 was $5,177,713 and in 1939 it was $5,069,953.

WHEAT BOARD ADVISORY COMMITTEE*

Mr. PERLEY:

When will the advisory committee to the wheat board, as provided for in chapter 53 of the statutes of 1935, be reappointed?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The entire wheat situation, as well as the matter of an advisory committee, is receiving the close attention of the government.

INCOME TAX-EXEMPTION OF SOLDIERS' PAY AND ALLOWANCES

Mr. MARTIN:

Is it proposed to amend the Income War Tax Act so as to restore the provision whereby the pay and allowances of officers and soldiers of the armed forces of Canada was exempt from taxation?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will realize that his question covers a matter affecting policy and something that should properly be dealt with in connection with the budget.

BACON AND CHEESE EXPORTS

Mr. LACOMBE:

1. What was the total value of bacon exported from Canada to Great Britain during each of the years 1938, 1939, and 1940? 2. What was the total value of exported from Canada to Great Britain during each of the same years?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): 1 and 2.

Exports to the United Kingdom

Fiscal years ended March 31st.						Bacon Value	Cheese
1	938					 $32,622,079	$11,862,240
1	939					 29,441,133	11,161,499
1	940					 39,439,672	12,550,199

TRADE BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN, UNITED STATES AND CANADA

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth):

What was the value of: (a) manufactured goods entered into Canada for consumption from Great Britain and from the United States, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1937, 1938, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940; (b) partially manufactured goods entered into Canada for consumption from Great Britain and from the United States, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940; (c) raw materials entered into Canada for consumption from Great Britain and from the United States, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940; (d) manufactured goods exported to the United (d) manufactured goods exported to the United States and exported to Great Britain for consumption from Canada, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940; (e) partially manufactured goods exported to the United States and exported to Great Britain for consumption from Canada, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940; (f) raw materials exported to the United States and exported to Great Britain for consumption from Canada for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West):

	(Liamonton	1,000,1
Imports from
(a) Fiscal years	U.K.	U.S.
1937	102,056,865	247,207,956
1938	117,896,089	317,844,135
1939	94,222,239	271,785,137
Calendar year
1939	94,361,372	330,120,888
(b) Fiscal years	U.K.	U.S.
1937	14,880,157	22,165,712
1938	15,541,599	25,384,296
1939	11,263,507	18,212,805
Calendar year
1939	10,101,176	25,380,956
(c) Fiscal years	U.K.	U.S.
1937	12,570,863	124,346,994
1938	11,571,083	144,051,076
1939	10,147,301	122,481,845
Calendar year
1939	9,544,861	141,396,622
Ex	ports to
(d) Fiscal years	U.S.	U.K.
1937	158,075,328	115,343,358
1938	162,415,883	138,064,686
1939	134,223,880	124,377,765
Calendar year
1939	150,642,589	132,342,939
(e) Fiscal years	U.S.	U.K.
1937	160,175,467	99,535,914
1938	170,092,001	133,753,156
1939	158,245,507	102,490,608
Calendar year	,,
1939	92,608,259	107,525,443
(f) Fiscal years	U.S.	U.K.
1937	116,763,749	193,117,426
1938	90,623,207	137,593,840
1939	83,469,974	98,596,638
Colondon man	00,100,014	00,000,000
Calendar year	107 141 100	00 000 000
1939	137,141,199	88,230,860
[Mr. J. H. Harris.]

The compilation of imports and exports by degree of manufacture is not available for the fiscal year 1940 since all trade statistics are now issued on the basis of the calendar year.

*WAR REFUGEES

Mr. BRUCE:

1. Has the government yet decided to relieve

Great Britain and France of the burden of their thousands of refugees?

2. If so, have they set up the necessary machinery to give this immediate effect?

3. How many refugees do they contemplate bringing to Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With respect to the first part of this question, namely, as to whether or not the government has decided to relieve Great Britain and France of the burden of their thousands of refugees, the answer concerns itself in the main with transportation. The decision to assist in relieving both Great Britain and France of refugees was made some time ago.

Concerning the second part of the question, as to whether or not the government has set up the machinery necessary to give this immediate effect, the answer is, as I have indicated, that in the main the government has been concerned in finding the means whereby at this particular time some of the refugees can be brought to this country.

Concerning the third question, as to how many refugees the government has contemplated bringing to Canada, the answer is that that will be a matter to be decided as time goes on.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT-COST OF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. ROSS (Souris):

1. What amount has been paid by the governnent on account of the administration of the acreage bonus provided for under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939, (a) by provinces; (b) by municipalities?

2. How much more does the government expect to pay on account of administration of acreage bonus for the year 1939?

acreage bonus for the year 1939?

PUBLIC SERVICE-ADDITIONS TO PERSONNEL SINCE SEPTEMBER, 1939

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. What numbers of additional staff have been taken on by the government, by departments or branches, since the outbreak of the war last September, at Ottawa and also at other centres throughout the country?

2. What has been the total annual addition to the government payroll by reason of such additional staffs at Ottawa and also at other centres of Canada?

ADDITIONAL OFFICE SPACE SECURED SINCE SEPTEMBER, 1939

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. What additional office space has been secured by the government in Ottawa since the outbreak of war last September, showing the names of the lessors, locations, amount of floor space secured and the annual rental to be paid?

2. What buildings in Ottawa have been taken over or expropriated by the government since September, showing the express purpose of such and the cost involved to the government in each such transaction with all available particularly ticulars?

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ACT-EMPLOYEES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. PERLEY:

1. How many were employed under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act in the province of Saskatchewan during the calendar year 1939?

2. What were their names, occupations, salaries and expense accounts?

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. PERLEY:

1. How many inspectors were employed from the 1st of July, 1939, to the 31st January, 1940, under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939, in the province of Saskatchewan?

2. What were their names, home addresses, salaries, travelling and other expense allowances, and how long was each employed?

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn):

1. What are the names and addresses of all persons hired under the prairie farm assistance branch of the Department of Agriculture?

2. What is the occupation of each, and for what length of time were they employed?

What length of time were they employed?

3. What remuneration did they receive in the form of (a) salary; (b) expenses?

4. What is the total amount received by the government in the special account of consolidated revenue fund for the prairie farm emergency fund?

VERMILION, ALTA., GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

Mr. FAIR:

1. How many lots are owned by the dominion government in the town of Vermilion, Alberta? 2. From whom were they purchased, on what date, and at what price?

3. How many buildings are owned by the dominion government in the town of Vermilion? 4. From whom were they purchased, and by whom were they built, when, and at what price?

5. Are all government owned lots now occupied by the government? If not, by whom, and on what terms?

NOVA SCOTIA FISHERY GUARDIANS

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland):

1. What are the names of the fishery guardians employed in the fiscal years ending March 31, 1939, and 1940, in the constituencies of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare and Cumberland?

2. What remuneration was paid, and what expenses were allowed to each such fishery guardian?

COMMONWEALTH AIR TRAINING PLAN

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland):

1. How many air-fields are there in Canada, constructed or in course of construction?

2. How many such air-fields are under the control of the federal government; where is each such air-field located, and what was the cost of each to March 31, 1940, to the federal government for (a) land, (b) buildings, (c) additional costs, and (d) total?

3. What have been the contributions by municipalities or private interests towards each such air-field?

4. How many air-fields is it proposed to utilize in connection with the commonwealth air training plan, and where is each such air-field located?

5. What is the estimated cost to complete the construction of each such air-field to be utilized in connection with the commonwealth air training plan?

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

Mr. MARSHALL:

1. When did the Canadian government first institute government annuities, and what was the original object of the plan?

2. How many contracts were issued under: (a) deferred annuities; (b) immediate annuities, during the year ending March 31, 1940?

nuities, during the year ending March 31, 1940?

3. How many commission agents are there actively engaged in writing this type of business; what are: (a) their names; (b) their length of service; (c) commission paid each agent during each of the last five years?

4. What was the total cost of administering this act in 1920.40 and by when were thereof this act in 1939-40, and by whom was the cost borne ?

5. How much has been appropriated to date to provide for mortality losses?

6. Is the audit a continuous one? If not, what type of audit is carried out to-day?

7. Has the government given any considera-tion to the suggestion that the Annuities Act should be administered by the Department of Insurance?

8. How many contracts were cancelled during the year ending March 31, 1940, and what was the amount involved?

PROCEDURE RESPECTING QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, before leaving the order for questions may I suggest that questions 16 and 17 asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) and 29 and 30 asked by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) should not be turned into orders for returns. Short answers could be given to these questions, and under the rules we are entitled to have answers which will appear in Hansard.

My understanding of the rule is that questions are passed as orders for returns in order to avoid encumbering Hansard with long answers, occasioned by reproducing all or parts of departmental files, and so on. I should not think that the questions I have indicated would come within that category; they are of a type which heretofore have been answered in the usual way.

Mr. GARDINER: It will take at least three weeks to obtain the answer to question 17. The information must be obtained from western Canada. I suggest that if the question is to be answered as a question it be deleted for the present, rather than have it stand from day to day throughout a long period of time. The answer will be quite lengthy, even at the end of that time. The other question to which the hon. member referred is of about the same type.

Mr. MICHAUD: With regard to question 29, may I point out that the answer will consist of a three-column return; in other words, there will be 120 names with two sets of figures against each name, and the material would fill two pages of Hansard. It is thought advisable to make it a return.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is not an answer.

Mr. POWER: With respect to question 30, only a few moments ago the chief of the air staff made representations to me to the effect that the procuring of the information indicated in the question would take some considerable time, and he pointed out further that the staff of the department is at the present time extremely busy.

I have no objection at all to allowing the question to remain on the order paper. I believe some parts of the question, notably that part which seeks information respecting the contributions by municipalities or private interests towards each air field, would require an order for return. In any event my information is that possibly we could get the reply for the hon. member for Cumberland very much faster if it were done privately than we could by asking the staff to work on the preparation of a return. If the hon. member for Cumberland insists upon its remaining on the order paper, we will answer it, but we cannot guarantee that it will be answered within a short time. I can tell the hon. member, however, that we will give him the information privately as soon as we can get it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): On that point may I say that these are questions of public interest.

Mr. POWER: There is no secrecy about it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Some of these questions are of more than local interest. They are of interest to more than the hon member who asks the question, and they should appear in Hansard in the ordinary way.

Mr. POWER: I have no objection to allowing the question to remain, if the hon. member wishes it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Questions are passed as orders for returns as a matter of convenience, and I believe my hon. friend is wrong in saying the rule precludes that procedure. The rule and practice is that it is in the discretion of the government or the minister concerned to change a question into an order for return. Of course that discretion must be exercised wisely—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Judiciously.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): —and not abused. I remember a former prime minister reminding me that he was the judge as to that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Well, I am not so sure I agree with that. However we will not debate the point at length.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

SYDNEY AND LOUISBURG RAILWAY—CONCILIATION BOARD

Mr. GILLIS:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents relating to a request for a conciliation board for employees of the Sydney and Louisburg Railway, made by District 26 of United Mine Workers of America.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR AGREEMENTS WITH COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS AND PROCESSORS

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939, to provide for agreements with cooperative associations and processors, and to provide also for the calculation and payment of liabilities of the minister under any agreement and for the payment of administrative expenses.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EMERGENCY MEASURES FOR IMMEDIATE EXPANSION OF MILITARY AND AIR FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the house that certain further military measures have been considered by the war committee of the cabinet and approved by the government. These measures will call for the immediate expansion of the military and air forces of Canada. This will be done by the raising of additional rifle battalions and air force personnel, and through the establishment of reserve companies of veterans, in addition to the veterans home guards already announced. Further details of these arrangements will be given by the ministers concerned.

I might add that these are emergency measures to meet the critical situation which has developed suddenly in Europe in the past fortnight. In the light of events it is necessary to have regard to all possibilities and, in so far as it is able to do so, the government is seeking to take account of every possible situation that may arise.

In announcing these measures the government believes it can count upon the whole-hearted cooperation of the Canadian people to see that they are carried through with complete success. It should be understood now that with the many urgent demands we have had to meet we will not be in a position to provide complete equipment at once for every new recruit. At the same time I can give an assurance that the ministry of munitions and supply will meet our requirements at the earliest possible date, and with the cooperation of industry and labour our factories will work night and day to supply our needs.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Will the Prime Minister indicate the extent in numbers to which the new forces will run?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: One of my colleagues might answer that question.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): So far as the military forces are concerned, in the statement made by the Prime Minister reference was made to the organization of reserve companies of veterans to supplement the veterans home guards already announced. We have not as yet determined the number of these reserve companies which will be required. That will be a matter for consultation with the various military districts.

I may say that in order to assist in the training of these reserve companies it is proposed to attach to each district head-quarters a group of veteran officers and non-commissioned officers whose services will be made available to the veteran companies as required.

In addition to this, a special training course will be established which will be available to senior officers of the Canadian active service force, and a quota of veteran officers from each military district in Canada under the age of fifty years who wish to take a refresher course to qualify them for any further duties that may be required of them.

Now, more specifically as to the Canadian active service force: in addition to the third division we propose to recruit additional defence units which will include at the outset all the rifle battalions of a fourth division. These will be recruited in addition to the third division and the ancillary units required for the formation of a Canadian corps.

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air): With respect to the air force, the government, through the Department of National Defence for Air, proposes to call up for service immediately some thousands of young men whose names are already on the lists of the department.

Some have been waiting for a considerable time. We now propose to call them up in order of priority of their application, incorporate them in the Royal Canadian Air Force, and give them general duties to perform. They will be taught to drill and given such education in the duties which they will afterwards be called upon to perform as craftsmen, pilots, observers and gunners, as can be given in advance of their being placed in the schools to which they are ultimately destined.

For the time being they may be called upon to do guard duty in the camps, or to carry out the training of an ordinary infantry or machine gun unit. It is possible that some of them may complain that they will not be immediately put to work in the trade or craft in which they aspire to become efficient, and may not immediately receive the emoluments to which they would be entitled under the regulations regarding tradesmen pay. But I would like to emphasize certain points in this connection.

The first is that the government believes that much of this excellent material, practically the best of our young manhood, should be mobilized rather than allowed to kick its heels about waiting until the time comes for them to be fitted into a particular trade, profession or category. Under these proposals they will at the earliest possible moment be placed in such conditions of discipline and availability that no matter what circumstances arise they can usefully and promptly be employed.

I should also like to make this observation: The men whose names we have can be roughly divided into two main categories. First, those who are now employed as tradesmen in useful or essential war work. Where such is the case we shall request them to remain in their present employment for the time being. Meanwhile they will be issued with a badge of recognition indicating that they have offered their services to the Royal Canadian Air Force and are liable to be called at any time. Second, with respect to the others, that is those unskilled, or skilled but unemployed, their services will be utilized either in a military capacity or, if sufficiently proficient in their trade, in a service unit.

Accommodation is or will be made available shortly. The necessary personal equipment is in hand and the details of the plan are being worked out so that in a very short space of time approximately 5,000 vigorous, capable, energetic, young Canadians will be undergoing training for any emergency.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate the government upon getting into action at last. Just a week ago to-day, from this place, I took the occasion to say, if I recall correctly, that it needed some major disaster to get Canada into action. That time has now arrived.

May I say to the Prime Minister and to his colleagues that the whole country will be behind him in his effort. The young men of this country who have been anxious to serve will flock to the colours in the time of Canada's peril.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Friday, May 24, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Ralston—Mr. Fournier (Hull) in the chair:

That sums not exceeding $700,000,000 be granted to His Majesty towards defraying any expenses that may be incurred by or under the authority of the governor in council during the year ending 31st March, 1941, for—

(a) the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada;

(b) the conduct of naval, military and air operations in or beyond Canada;

(c) promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risk or in any other manner whatsoever; and [Mr. Power.]

(d) the carrying out of any measures deemed necessary or advisable by the governor in council in consequence of the existence of a state of war.

With provision also empowering the governor in council to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, such sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $700,000,000 as may be required for the purpose of defraying the aforesaid expenses, the principal and interest of any such loan to be a charge upon and payable out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to know that the war veterans are to be called into action and given an opportunity to serve the country. Thousands of them are anxious to do so, and a veterans' home guard is to be set up, but I do not believe that a force of 3,000 will be at all adequate to give the protection which the force will be supposed to provide. It amounts to 250 for each military district. I am sure as regards military district No. 12 a force of 250 men will not meet the very serious situation there.

I assume that this question should be directed more particularly to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers). I should like to ask him how it is proposed to equip this guard. Is it intended to use the units, batteries or whatever they may be, which have been carrying on since the last war in the different districts? Their officers have been going into summer camps with their men and have done wonderful service for the country in keeping these organizations intact. Are these local units to be utilized?

I should also like to know whether consideration has been given to using the various armouries throughout the country. I have particularly in mind my own province, and more specifically my own constituency. In the Qu'Appelle riding are four armouries, one each at Moosomin, Indian Head, Broadview, and Grenfell. They are splendid buildings and they have not been used very much in recent years, but I think they should be used now. Possibly certain small units could be located there and given training with the officers whom they have ready to take on this work. I should like the minister to inform us whether he proposes to give these local units an opportunity to serve in this way, and to utilize the accommodation which I have mentioned.

There is, of course, considerable agitation in the public mind to-day. I do not believe it can be said that the numerous meetings which have been held in the various parts of Canada in the last two or three days have been organized by agitators. It seems to me that the public mind is shifting and changing quickly as the theatre of war and the course of war are changing rapidly in these days. It is important that this guard be set up as soon as possible to meet any difficulties that may arise. I should like to have a statement from the minister with respect to the armouries in question and as to the extent to which the local units will be used.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend has asked first as to the organization of the veterans home guards. He will recall that it was stated at the time the announcement was made that twelve of these units would be formed in the various military districts across Canada and more as circumstances should require. He has asked next as to the way in which these units will be uniformed and armed. They will be uniformed and armed as a military force: that is the intention of the department in that respect. He has also asked whether the formation of these veterans guards will prevent the full utilization of the non-permanent active militia units, which I fully agree with him have done splendid work in past years in training for the time when their services might be required. I can see no reason why the formation of veterans home guards should interfere at all seriously with plans for the training of these non-permanent active militia units.

With the formation of the third division and the calling up of battalions of the fourth division, the number of the non-permanent active militia units not mobilized will be proportionately decreased.

As to the use of armouries, I agree that there is merit in that suggestion and I shall be glad to pass it on to the officers of the department for further consideration.

Mr. HOMUTH: I do not wish to delay this matter unduly, but I was at home over the week-end and I made it my business to go and talk to different people in order to get some idea of how they feel about the whole situation. Several resolutions have been passed by different clubs in our district, municipal councils, service clubs and so on, and there appears to be a general fear on the part of the people of the so-called fifth column, the subversive element. The people are afraid that in the last few years various persons may have entered the country ostensibly for good reasons but really in the guise of agents of the fifth column. In other words, there is felt to be a danger of the enemy within the gates.

The general feeling among the people to whom I spoke is that one way of overcoming this trouble is to have a national registration of the men and women of the country with a view to having a list of those available for war work. It may be possible that before very long we shall have to move mechanics from one industry to another to speed up the production of something that may be necessary, or we may have to retain in a particular industry certain men employed therein and prevent them from enlisting. Such a registration would give us a knowledge of the birthplace and nationality of every man and every woman in the country and would assist to a large extent the work of the local police and of the mounted police in looking after those who may be regarded as coming within the class of the so-called fifth column. There is a real fear on the part of the people. There are a great many of these enemies at large in Canada. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) the other day said that we must be very careful lest we arrest anyone unfairly and put him in an internment camp, or bring down upon his head the condemnation of the local citizens. Personally I would rather see a dozen people unfairly interned and given an opportunity to prove their loyalty afterwards than take a chance on one of them running at large and doing something against the interests of Canada or of our loved ones. One of the most important parts of our war work-and it is only under this vote that we can ask these questions and get this information-would be a national registration in Canada of every man and woman over the age of sixteen.

Mr. POULIOT: As the hon. member knows, a census is taken every ten years, and the next census will be in 1941.

Mr. HOMUTH: That will be too late for our war effort.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the hon. member prepared to suggest that the census be taken now?

Mr. HOMUTH: Quite.

Mr. POULIOT: Is he prepared to have it taken this year instead of next year, and the necessary changes involved made at the same time? Of course there is a fifth column in this country; we see its activities in the propaganda that is going on. But there is also a sixth column which has not been mentioned yet; it is the column of civil servants who have no public spirit and who think only of themselves.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I would ask the leader of the opposition to keep quiet. Many of these people were appointed by the government of which he was a member from 1930 to 1935. They were appointed under the guise of Tories but now they are neither Tories nor Liberals; they are selfish and are a public nuisance, and they shall be denounced in this house.

The hon, gentleman thinks that at last the government has done something. Let me tell him that at last he recognizes it. Of course, he bears illustrious initials, those of R.B., but I may tell him that he is not the first leader of the Tory opposition party that I have seen here. When I came here that great genius, the one who is the leader of the Tory party in the senate, occupied the very seat in which the hon, gentleman is now sitting, and he went to the electorate in 1925 and was defeated. He returned in 1926 and was defeated again. Very few of those gentlemen that were here then are on the front benches now; they were got rid of. That gentleman at that time was got rid of as Jonah got rid of the whale. I would not say he was thrown overboard: there is an expression I would not use in this house although it is the king's English. Afterwards I saw another gentleman who was there pro tempore, Mr. Guthrie, a former Liberal, who left Laurier on the question of conscription during the war to become a minister in the so-called union government. He was a delightful man, just as Mr. Meighen wasvery delightful people; but he made a great mistake while addressing a Tory gathering which was supposed to elect a big chief for the party. On that occasion he said, "The Liberal party, whom I led in the house during the last session," and everyone laughed, because he was addressing not Liberals but Conservatives. Then they went to Winnipeg, and as chairman of that convention they appointed my dear friend the member for Davenport who asked for conscription of wealth.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RALSTON: I know that the hon. gentleman realizes, perhaps as well as any one else in this house, the extent to which debate may go particularly in committee. I know that he sometimes becomes quite enthusiastic over certain subjects and there are times when, speaking for myself, I enjoy very much listening to him. But I do want him and the committee to feel, as I am sure we on the government benches feel, that there is a war on and that we are engaged in the consideration of what is without any doubt the most important subject that will come before us at this session. I would say to the hon. gentleman, if he will permit me to mention him, and I think I can include other hon. members, as those of us on the government benches, that we ought at this critical time to stick to our knitting so far as this particular resolution is concerned. It deserves the fullest and most undivided consideration possible, if we are to accomplish the object we all have in view.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I will not insist on matters that are known to those who have studied politics in this country, but I will remind my friend the Minister of Finance of one thing, that when in the course of the discussion on this resolution some members of the other party were advocating national government nobody objected to that, and I do not see why I should not say a few words to show the futility of advocating a national government, with such leaders, when this government is doing very well. It was in answer to what has been said, not on this bill in committee but on this bill while the Speaker was in the chair, and it is exactly the same discussion because we are discussing the same bill. But I shall not say any more now until someone from the other side repeats the same argument; then I could reply to the satisfaction of every hon, member of the house, including you, Mr. Chairman.

Now, sir, I consider the matter of war just as seriously as the leader of the opposition, the Minister of Finance or anyone in this house, I consider it very seriously; on the other hand let me tell you, sir, that it is no use having long faces in the house. We are doing our best as members of parliament and we do that very earnestly, sometimes at great sacrifice, but we do it just the same for the sake of our country. I will not tolerate any jeer from the leader of the opposition or any other Tory member, whether he is a Tory or a Conservative-"Conservative" is a mild expression for an opposition member, but "Tory" is a strong expression. I will tolerate no jeers or jokes from any of them, and any one of them who jeers will have the same treatment as their former leader the Right Hon, Mr. Bennett had from me when he was leading their party. This is not a threat; it is just a warning.

I congratulate the Minister of National Defence upon instituting the home guard. Of course for a time there were returned men on guard at the railway bridges; they were paid, I am told, by the railway companies. But they should be in the service of this country and should receive uniforms and arms from the Department of National Defence. The protective branches of both railway systems in Canada should be attached to the Department of National Defence for the duration of the war. In my constituency there are many returned men ready to serve in that capacity; some of them had been wounded, some of them receive pensions, but all of them had a good record during the war and are ready to serve their country to the best of their ability. Their offer should be accepted; they are the very best men to guard bridges and public buildings. One remembers that on two or three or four occasions very young men with no experience in the carrying of rifles were put in such positions. What happened? Some were killed; some others met with accidents. They had no military training, so that they were not as competent as returned men for such positions. Therefore I congratulate the minister very warmly. And if any new recruits are placed on the home guard they should be placed with returned men who have had military experience, in order that they may get their military education and serve the country better. The men employed by the railway systems who were guarding bridges did not wear military uniforms. Those to whom this duty is assigned should wear military uniforms with a badge to distinguish them from men who belong to the regular army. This is very important because they might have to make arrests. Being in uniform they will inspire more respect in people who come in contact with them.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

I also congratulate the new Minister of National Defence for Air on the very important post to which he has been appointed. May I tell you, sir, that among the rural members I am probably the one who has recommended the largest number of young men for the air force. The Minister of National Defence knows about it. Many of them are excellent aviators and are doing their duty faithfully. Some have been turned back an account of lack of education or some minor deficiency. They could be used otherwise, as has been mentioned; they could work on the aviation fields; they might be used as gunners or in other capacities, because they are ready to serve their country.

But there is another thing, sir, concerning which I will put the department on guard. It is that at times when the medical examiners go down to the rural districts they tell those who come to enlist that if they do not pass their examination they have only to see the member in order to get a position somewhere else. This is unfair. The present Minister of National Defence for Air has admitted that it is unfair to tell them something that is untrue. If a man does not succeed in passing his test I do not see why anyone, whether it be the officer in charge or the medical attendant or anyone else on the board, should tell him that he can get a job by asking the member, when everyone knows that the member has nothing to do with the distribution of such jobs during the war. The minister will agree that my request is only fair. If I had time I would show a certain file I have which would prove to him that this has happened in my own constituency.

There is a very important thing that must be said about war, and it has been said by the leader of the opposition, who was not wrong that time. It was said at twenty minutes past four on May 20. "This," he said, "is a time for clear thinking and straight talking." It was a most appropriate remark. we are, all of us, ready to do our best. Just a moment ago I was speaking about the Tories; let me tell you, sir, that there is not a single Tory that I dislike-but I hate Toryism. If the war is carried on on the sound and sane principles of Liberalism, the principle of liberty, the principle of decentralization, which is part of the order that must reign in the army as well as in the state, then everything will be the better not only for the army but for the country. And we should never base our discussions on words. We must use words in discussion, that is evident; but we must attach more importance to facts than to words. Every discussion should be objective, not subjective. Before blaming any member of the government for anything that is done in connection with the carrying on of the war or the administration of the domestic affairs of this country an hon. member, in order to avoid committing any injustice, should try to get accurate information as to what has been going on.

Hon. members opposite may be surprised, at times when their privileges are denied them, to find that while I do not share their views on many points I am ready to fight for the respect and maintenance of their privileges as well as my own. On the other hand, sir, there should be no party politics in this matter. Neither should there be any spirit of self-sacrifice, and perhaps I should explain that remark.

Mr. BROOKS: Don't bother.

Mr. POULIOT: Of course I admit that everyone is making a sacrifice to be here at this time; of course we must make most difficult decisions, but my hon. friend from Royal will understand me, as I hope other hon. members will, when I say that I do not see the use of coming here with the Isaac attitude of immolation on the altar of the country. Some members, according to their speeches, are ready to immolate themselves. That is like suicide, you see; it may be a kind of sweet death, but they will be of no further use to this country. I suggest to hon. members opposite, as well as to those on this side of the house, that they be more friendly than ever on all matters that are not strictly partisan questions. I suggest that they carry on their discussions in a friendly spirit, looking to the common good; and of course if they sacrifice themselves on the altar of their country there will be nothing left of them. I want them to be here. I am never so happy as when I hear an hon. member opposite offering a constructive suggestion. It shows that the hon. member, even though he belongs to the opposition, is really trying to help this country. While I very seldom share the views of the hon. member for Waterloo South, I congratulate him on what he said a moment ago. So, sir, would it not be possible for all hon. members to your left to have a brotherly spirit in time of war and to realize that even though we do not believe in their glories of the past we are ready to work with them to try and reach a common goal for the good of this country in the future?

There is something else I should say as well. War is a very sad thing and the heart of each member bleeds when he thinks of it. But the earth will not cease to turn on account of the war, and we must look after our own problems in the most efficient way. I can assure my hon, friends on the treasury benches that the Liberal members are ready to give their support to the government in all reasonable measures, as I presume is the case with members of the opposition; but our work as members would be made much easier by the civil service. I should like to mention the action taken by the premier of one province who decided to do all he could for the local members. He notified the civil service of that province to be most obliging to all members of the provincial house when they required information or assistance, and said that any civil servant who did not comply with that rule was to be reported immediately to the premier. That, as I understand it, is the way government should operate. The civil service is maintained at a tremendous cost to the country. A member of the staff of the bureau of statistics estimated that during the last twenty years the federal civil service had cost the country over a billion dollars. We spend a great deal of money on the civil service, and we expect service in return. They must be told to respect parliamentary institutions and to be prepared to help members of the House of Commons as well as the government.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that I will not have to say anything more along this line; I trust this warning will be sufficient for those who deserve to be named in this house and censured very severely if they continue their work of obstructing our parliamentary functions. Having said that, and hoping that such obstacles will be removed in future, I am ready to do anything possible to help the government as long as it is on a sound basis and as long as no one loses his head.

Mr. BROOKS: I should judge that the hon. member's help has always been on a sound basis.

Mr. POULIOT: That is my wish, but very often I make wishes which are not fulfilled. We will wait and see, Mr. Chairman, and in the meantime we will support the government; but if there is anything wrong in the discussions that take place in this house or if we have any more trouble with the civil service, you will hear further from me.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Mr. Chairman, I am not going to talk politics, as did the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, though I am very glad he mentioned constructive ideas from this side of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: One idea.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Many ideas; in fact it has been the loyal opposition that has forced the government to take action. The hon. member for Waterloo South suggested that we have national registration. With that I wholly agree, and I do not mean that we should have it in 1941. I believe we should have it immediately, for this reason. On Friday in Peterborough four Germans were found on lock No. 23. One of the Germans was a pensioner from the German army, not naturalized in this country. The four included this pensioner, his wife and two naturalized Germans. They were taken to the police station; the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Toronto were notified and they requested that the Germans be sent to Toronto as soon as possible. Half an hour later they were found at the lift lock in Peterborough. I believe that with national registration those people would be under lock and key, where they should be. That German pensioner should not be let loose in this country. I believe there should be a complete check-up, and further I think we should have a sufficient home guard to check everyone travelling on the highway. I believe we should have cards, as we had in the last war, to enable a complete check to be made at any time.

I should like to suggest to the Minister of National Defence that when he sends out specifications for 40 millimetre shell boxes, he send blue-prints with them. I understand that one firm had to send their specifications to an architect, who took two days to figure out what was what.

While I am on my feet I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he intends to use the Prince of Wales Rangers of Peterborough as a recruiting unit. The men in that unit are well trained, I suppose seventy-five per cent of them having their matriculation papers. They have worked hard and they have full knowledge of the machines with which they would have to work. The same applies to the fourth field battery in Peterborough. I understand all the guns have been taken away from this unit. There are over one hundred trained men and non-commissioned officers available in this organization. I was talking to them on Sunday when I was home and they are very much put out over the fact that there has been no recruiting in Peterborough. One man said that there certainly has been a war movement in Peterborough because men have had to move all over the country to find a place where they could join up.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Chairman, we have heard a good deal this afternoon about the organization of the man power of the country, as well as a suggestion for registration and so on. However, I am wondering what steps the government is taking to organize the industry of the country. I think the past week or ten days have shown Canada and the allied powers that the deficiency from which we are suffering is mainly a deficiency of machines. According to bank reports there has been some decline in our factory activities during the last few months. I have before me the monthly letter for May of the Canadian Bank of Commerce which states that there was a fall in the use of our factory capacity in the month of April and that in that month we were only using that capacity to 85 per cent of its possible output. This letter states also that a slight recession is shown in the iron and steel group, a decline being shown in primary iron and steel production as well as in the production of castings, forgings and hardware.

It may be necessary that we should concentrate upon the mobilization of man power, but I am also of the opinion that we ought to be giving a great deal more attention to the organization of our industry and finance. I rose to draw the attention of the committee to the figures shown in these authoritative reports. In the event of certain things happening in Europe during the next few weeks or months and the threatened destruction of British centres of supply, Canadian industry ought to be organized immediately to render the aid which Canada can best give. When we met in this house last September to consider our participation in the war considerable discussion occurred as to the possibility of Canada becoming more or less the arsenal of the British empire. But there has been continued unemployment in the country and much of our industrial capacity remains idle.

I think that those who produce essential materials for the war, whether on the farm or in the factory, ought to be guaranteed a proper return for their labour. The other afternoon I discussed the situation of western agriculture, but I notice that various labour bodies throughout the country are complaining that companies manufacturing equipment for the troops are not compelled to comply with the labour regulations in effect in certain cities. For example, I have before me a letter from the Winnipeg Trades and Labour Council which states that they have contractual relations with the Winnipeg manufacturers of shirts, pants and overalls. They state that they are given to understand by the local press that a firm in Portage la Prairie, which they classify as being unfair and unreasonable to labour, has been given two clothing contracts by the government in recent days. They charge that some years ago this firm moved away from a city in the province in order to escape regulations which were imposed. If these facts are true it seems to me that in making contracts the government should see at all times that labour, which is going to be asked to speed up and perhaps forgo some of its hard-earned rights, should be adequately protected. In my opinion these contracts should be given only to firms and organizations which are prepared to see that only the best labour conditions are allowed to prevail.

I rose primarily to point out that our industrial capacity is not being used. I believe the time has come when this country should be organized as they are organizing in New Zealand and Great Britain. We heard over the air the other night that the Prime Minister of New Zealand had announced that following the example of Great Britain, finance and industry in New Zealand would be taken over by the country and mobilized for the war effort of that sister dominion. I am strongly of the opinion that we should consider steps of a similar nature. As I say, we hear about the mobilization of men, but to my mind it is far more important that we should mobilize our industrial strength. Perhaps sooner than we think this country will be called upon to render substantial economic aid, which at the moment we are not prepared to give. I should like to ask the government if they are considering steps along these lines and if we may expect an announcement in the near future.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend has referred to two subjects, one dealing with industry in the broader sense and the other with regard to labour clauses in agreements. With reference to the matter of our industrial production I know that my hon. friend will not expect me to detain the committee by describing the steps which were taken at the time the war supply board was organized, when the war supply board itself was given the widest powers to organize industry in order to anticipate prospective needs in so far as they could and endeavour to provide for them. The board went on to operate under Mr. Wallace Campbell. As hon. members of the committee know, Mr. Campbell, an industrialist himself, had associated with him men who were prominent in industry and who, I am sure, took all the steps they felt they possibly could in order to see that industry was organized. I should also remind the committee that surveys of industry had already been made and the potentialities of various plants right across the country ascertained.

Later on the Department of Munitions and Supply, which was provided for at the short session in September, was formed. What had been forecast in September came about, that is, the war supply board completed its organization and then it was decided to give this branch of the service the importance of a full and complete ministry. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), is minister of this department as well but, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has indicated, arrangements are being made so that the Minister of Munitions and Supply will give his entire time to the work. I realize I may be too optimistic, but I do not think that anything has been left undone by the Department of Munitions and Supply in the way of speeding up industry in order that it may be prepared for whatever demands may be made upon it. A few days ago, before the resolution reached the committee stage, the Minister of Transport made a statement which indicated clearly what the expectations were regarding industrial production and the reason that some of the expectations were not realized. Nevertheless I can say to the committee that before the emergency arose, as well as since, increased efforts have been made to see that industry is organized in the best possible way to meet the demands which, as has been quite properly suggested by the hon. member, we may anticipate under these suddenly changed conditions. We will do everything that men can do to see to it that Canada does her full part in connection with industrial expansion.

I realize that those statements are general, but they are thoroughly earnest and sincere.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

The hon, gentleman who is acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply is not in his seat today. I am sure if the committee desires further information in respect of this point he will be glad to give it. An opportunity will be afforded when the bill which is to be introduced is in committee.

I say this because, as pointed out already by the minister, the doors of the Ministry of Supply are always open. He wants to give the house and country all the information which can possibly be given. I know that in the Ministry of Supply are men who are there for one purpose, and one purpose alone. They are not there as partisans or even as civil servants; they are not there as people who have taken jobs, in the sense of obtaining salaried positions, but they are there as private citizens who have had experience and who have come in in an endeavour to help produce the greatest efficiency in the department.

The hon, member has touched on two branches of activity which are vitally important. One branch is connected with the day to day purchases of supplies which from time to time have to be obtained to equip our forces. In connection with that branch of the work, as pointed out by the minister, contracts to the extent of something like $225,-000,000 have been let. In all there are about Then there is the other 17.000 contracts. branch, one which is perhaps more important now, namely, the matter of the organization of industry, and seeing to it that raw materials, machinery and things of that kind are available in order that whatever demands may come we shall be able to meet them. May I tell the committee that I know of unusual, indeed extraordinary, steps which have been taken during the last ten days in the matter of government administration? They were steps which were regarded as necessary in order that we may try to ensure that essential supplies and raw materials are available.

I think the committee will find that in other respects the Ministry of Munitions and Supply has been just as zealous.

I am sorry I cannot inform the hon. member respecting the matter of the labour clauses in the agreements. I feel certain that the clauses are those prescribed by the Department of Labour. However I shall be pleased to get that information at a later time, because I notice that the Minister of Labour is not in his seat at the moment.

Mr. LEADER: The hon, member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) referred to an industrial firm in my home city of Portage la Prairie and quoted from evidence he had received from Winnipeg indicating that the firm in question had violated some of the ethics connected with labour regulations. I want more evidence than the hon, member has submitted to-day. I should like to know the name of the firm and the name of the person in Winnipeg who protested. At a time like this we should not split hairs; we should be prepared to use not only the factories in the large industrial centres but also those scattered throughout the smaller towns. One of the greatest evils in Canada is that too many of our industries have been centralized. I say they should be scattered so that the smaller cities and towns may have a chance.

I presume the hon. member was referring to the Green manufacturing plant at Portage la Prairie. I went to some trouble to find out if that institution could have some work. They submitted a tender which was accepted. I would say to the hon. member that I have heard no complaints respecting the labour regulations, and I believe Portage la Prairie would be glad to see more of these factories established in their city.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) has directed what appears to me to be an important question connected with the situation which has developed within the last few days. Is the Minister of National Defence prepared to recommend national registration of man power in Canada, and a comprehensive survey of the availability and suitability of industrial activity to help win the war? I believe the hon. member is to be congratulated upon having brought the matter before the committee, and in my view the minister should make a statement with regard to it.

Mr. ROGERS: I was not aware whether the question had been directed to me or to another member of the government. As a matter of fact national registration affects not one department alone but all departments having to do with the military forces and the mobilization of industrial activity. The question of national registration has engaged the attention of the government and has received the careful study to which it is entitled.

Mr. HOMUTH: The reason we have a crisis to-day is that certain nations in Europe have regimented the bodies and souls of their people. We can fight them only if the people who are arrayed against that vicious philosophy are prepared to stand for the same kind of regimentation. At the time of the last war we had national registration. People were told to appear at certain points within so many days for purposes of registration. The same could be done again, if the government were prepared to notify the people through the medium of our newspapers and the radio.

We have just gone through an election. The returning officers in Canada have practically complete lists of all people over twenty-one years of age in the various constituencies. If the government said that those people must appear within a certain time for purposes of registration, and that they would be given a card, a copy of which could be filed by the authorities, the whole procedure could be carried out in no more than two weeks.

The people of Canada are in a temper wherein they want to do things. They want to know what jobs they can do best. They want to know where they can be placed to help in the war effort. At the risk of repetition I would point out that through the national registration we would have an opportunity of checking up on those influences in Canada which within a very short time might becomvery dangerous.

Mr. ADAMSON: The Canadian Institute c Mining and Metallurgy, the Engineering Institute of Canada and the Canadian Society of Chemical Engineers were all registered shortly after the beginning of the war. At that time every technical man voluntarily registered to serve his country wherever he could be of service.

A few days ago I attended a meeting in Toronto of the Engineers' club, and from what the chairman said I understand that only two of all the engineers in Canada had been called up. May I point out to the Minister of Finance and to the Minister of National Defence that the entire technical population of the Dominion of Canada has recorded itself as ready and willing to serve. I would suggest that the government give immediate consideration to the voluntary effort made by those people.

Then there is one further point to which I would direct attention. In my constituency over the week-end I was besieged by people giving me information about the state of the production of armaments in Canada. the minister prepared to tell the committee how many Bren guns have been produced, and-unless he would consider this as not in the public interest-whether the Bren guns so far produced have been satisfactory? I may add that it will be one of the happiest moments of my life if the minister can stand up and say, "We have a large quantity of Bren guns, and they are satisfactory." One thing more: Are we producing any 25-pounder guns, any anti-aircraft guns, and what is the production of small arms ammunition and of field ammunition?

As I sense the feeling in Canada, the public are vitally interested in actual production, in what is going on. The allies are crying out for help, and if the minister can say that we are doing something, nobody will be more pleased than myself.

Mr. ROGERS: I thank my hon. friend for the manner in which he has put his questions to me. He will understand that I would not wish to give him specific answers to such questions until I can be very sure that my information is correct. I made that proviso, as it were, when I spoke in the course of the debate a few days ago, that I would try to answer such questions as I could when they were put to me, but if I was not certain of the answers I would hold them in reserve until the necessary information could be secured.

I would not like to say to my hon. friend that it would be in the public interest to give all the information that he has requested, but I shall take note of the questions and shall advise him if they can be answered in this house. It may be preferable, if it does not appear that the information should be spread upon the pages of Hansard, that I should give him the information myself.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should say that the minister could at this moment give, as a general statement, information as to whether we are producing Bren guns.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be very glad to make a statement upon that matter, possibly this evening.

Mr. SENN: There is one phase of Canada's war effort which has not been very fully discussed in this debate. I was greatly interested and pleased with what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) has had to say about the way in which our war effort, in the production of munitions and war supplies of different kinds is being conducted But there is another class of production which is very important, namely, that of foodstuffs for the allied armies and for people living in the countries that are at war. It may well be that foodstuffs will be one of the deciding factors of the war.

Last Thursday evening the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) spoke in this debate. I believe his reason for speaking was to outline the manner in which the government has been attempting to organize agriculture for the production of war materials in the shape of foodstuffs. I listened attentively to his statement. He told us that an agricultural supplies board had been formed, and with it certain committees or boards had been appointed by the provinces. He also told us that a great deal of propaganda had been disseminated in the country by way of press reports and pamphlets.

[Mr. Adamson.]

I know a number of the men who are on these boards. I regard them highly; I believe they are efficient in their particular line; but I feel, in common I believe with many other members as well as with a great many farmers, that if we are to produce to the fullest extent the classes of commodities which will be required, we must give more attention to agriculture. It takes a considerable length of time for the farmer to produce. After he has made his plans a year or more must elapse before he can place his goods upon the market. Mother Nature cannot be hurried and cannot be changed in any way. Springtime is the time of seeding, and when springtime is over no plans for speeding up agriculture in the required lines can be made before another year.

For some years the farmers of Canada have been treated to a surfeit of pamphlets; indeed things have come to the stage where in a great many cases when pamphlets come to a home they are dumped in the wastepaper basket or used for some purpose other than a source of information. Frankly, I do not believe that Canadian farmers know to-day exactly what is required of them or will be required of them in the future. Only one body can ascertain these requirements, namely, the government, and its agricultural supplies board, who are in constant communication with the allies overseas and no doubt receive recommendations from time to time as to what should be supplied in the future. Perhaps those requirements will be changed from time to time with changing conditions. But I believe that the government and the agricultural supplies board could have gone much further in their efforts to acquaint the farmers with what will be necessary if we are to produce the foodstuffs which will be required in days to come in Great Britain and France and even in our own country.

The minister spoke about the bacon board and about the sale of bacon to Great Britain for the year ending, I believe, October 31. I regard that agreement as a very good one. It fixed a price for the year for Canadian bacon in England, and I believe that when it was announced the impression went abroad that the farmers were to receive a stated price for their live and dressed hogs. Unfortunately for the farmer—unfortunately, I think, for the country as well—he has not been receiving a fixed price for some time past, and at the present time every indication seems to be that prices will be again lowered or he will be well below the nine cents which the farmer was supposed to receive. Nothing in the world will discourage production more than to receive prices which are below the cost of production. Last fall, when the farmers were apprised of the price they would receive, they made certain commitments and certain arrangements; and they are finding out now that when their finished product comes on the market they are receiving well below the price they expected to obtain.

Again, the Minister of Agriculture announced the other day that a sale of cheese had been made to the British Isles. I am not going to discuss at the moment whether the price was adequate. As nearly as I can figure, it will mean that if the farmers receive the full benefit of that price they will be getting something less than a dollar per hundred for their milk, or well below the cost of production if we can believe the estimates and the reports of surveys which have been made by government officials from time to time. I will not pursue this any further except to say that the farmer is not in a position to continue to produce at a loss. He is just as loyal as any other man in the community or in the country. He does not want to reap big profits at this time of the nation's danger. But he must be in a position to produce without taking a loss.

In his speech the other night the minister gave figures which showed that the price of farm commodities is well below prices of other commodities, and there has been very little relative change since the war began. To-day the farmer is not in a position to produce at a loss; in too many instances he has not any cash. If he remains in this position, if his product continues to be sold at prices less than he expected and was led to believe he would receive, there will be an immediate effect on production: the farmer will produce less of that particular commodity. I suggest to the minister and to the government that the time has come when definite plans should be put before the farmers of this country. More than that, the time has come when they should have some definite assurance that they will receive a reasonable price for the products which they are asked to produce; otherwise the organization which has already been effected will not be satisfactory.

I would ask the minister to enlarge upon the statement he made the other evening if he is in a position to do so. He told us about the agreement made with the British supply board for the sale of bacon. Was any agreement made between the Canadian packers and the bacon board or the Department of Agriculture as to the price that was to be paid the farmers of Canada for live hogs or dressed hogs? Is there any guarantee that the price for cheese at Montreal, announced the other day, will be uniform for the time that this contract is in force? It goes until October 31, or later; I am not sure of the date. I am not asking for this information in any critical spirit, but I think the farmers are entitled to know, and if they do know and are given an assurance of some kind I believe they will carry on with better heart and grace than otherwise.

Mr. GARDINER: In answer to the last question, whether the price for cheese of 14 cents for the first grade, 13½ for the second and 13 for the next grade, is to continue for a given length of time, I can only say that it will continue for the full period of the agreement. The only change that could be made would be a change upward as a result of a further conference with the British government. The price stated in the agreement is the lowest price that will be paid during that time, but from all the conditions that obtain I rather fancy that it will be the price prevailing throughout the length of the agreement.

Mr. SENN: Is that the price paid to the shipper or to the farmer?

Mr. GARDINER: The price which the farmer will receive back at his own farm will be between 13 and 14 cents. This is the price on board at Montreal.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is to the shipper?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. It is the price the dairy board receives from the food ministry at Montreal. As regards the question of the agreement on bacon, I attempted to explain the other night that the price which the government have secured through the food ministry of Great Britain works out at $18.01 per hundredweight of one hundred pounds. The price which was guaranteed at that time to the packer was $17.29, which left 72 cents to be put into a fund to be used for paying on storage or to assist in giving a better price to the farmer later on. The developments of this spring which made it necessary, because of conditions on the local market, to reduce the price to consumers as well as to producers within Canada have brought about an adjustment of the arrangement with the packers. The packers are now paid half a cent per pound, or 50 cents per hundredweight, less than they were receiving during the winter months. That means that 50 cents more per hundredweight is going into the fund which will be used later for one of two purposes, either to pay for storage or to pay the producer a greater amount for his product later on.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Mostly storage.

Mr. GARDINER: Very largely storage, as conditions exist at the present time.

The other question was whether in the agreement any arrangement was made to pay a definite price to the farmer or the producer of hogs. In the agreement no arrangement was made to pay a definite price to the farmer, but I may indicate what the hope was-it would be a fairer way of putting the matter than to say it was stated by anyone that there would be a set price to the farmer. It was hoped when the agreement was being negotiated that it would be possible to arrange for a definite price to be paid to the farmer, and when the agreement was made, when the negotiations were proceeding between the board and the packers, it was considered both by the board and by the packers, and I believe by those who represented the producers from different parts of Canada on the advisory committee, that under all the circumstances it was best to proceed on the price which then prevailed on the local markets across Canada, which was a little higher than could be arranged for if the price had been based on the amount that was being paid to the packers for bacon under the agreement. They allowed that price to go on and it continued at about that level until approximately the first of April of this year, so that there was no reason, down until that time, to give the matter further consideration, because the price could not have been set higher than it was on the local markets.

I cannot state all the reasons why that price was a little higher, but one of the main reasons was the importation of United States pork products into Canada. That probably turned out to be one of the main reasons why the price went down eventually on the Canadian local market. There had been a volume of United States pork products brought into Canada, and that probably had as much to do with reducing the price in the home market as anything else, unless it were the larger production of hogs in Canada during the year than anyone had expected, in spite of the information which we had last fall.

Another question raised in the remarks of my hon. friend was whether the farmer has had sufficient information and direction in the production of foodstuffs. If we are to answer the question upon the same basis as that upon which we are attempting to decide whether or not things were done properly in other directions, then we shall probably decide the question upon the basis of the results, and I would call the attention of the committee to two tables which I placed on Hansard the other evening, showing the results. These tables answer the question fairly well. At page 167 of Hansard there is one table showing that in every single product, with the exception of the number of sheep and lambs, and honey, the production of farm products from one end of Canada to the other in every branch of the industry was very much greater up to December 31, 1939, than the preceding five-year average. Later on I placed on Hansard, at page 178, another table showing stocks of farm products in storage around May 1. This is after eight months of war. After eight months of war there is in storage more of every farm product, except veal, cheese and potatoes, than there was on the same date in 1939 or 1938, and more of most products than at the same date in 1937.. These two tables answer the question fairly conclusively. In the first place the production is high, and in the second place the amount of the different food products in storage is very much higher than usual. In other words, we have the food produced and we have it in Canada for marketing. If one desired to go further he might ask, Is not the matter of the high storage due to the fact that we have not sold the products?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To lack of consumption.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, that is the assumption. On page 172 of Hansard will be found another table showing the volume of food products that we sold to the United Kingdom in each of three years. Of wheat, for example, we sold during 1939-40 from September to March inclusive, 54,886,146 bushels in the form of wheat and flour. For the previous year the figure was 57,361,894 bushels, and for the year before that it was 46,459,977 bushels. So that during those eight months, the period of the war, we sold nearly as much as in the preceding year. I would not compare this year with 1937-38, because that was one of the lowest wheat yield years we have had for a long time, but this year compares favourably with 1938-39 when there was more than an average crop.

Of barley and oats our sales to Great Britain were very low as compared with those of the previous year.

Of bacon and ham our sales were 1,613,143 hundredweight in the eight months September to March as against 950,000 hundredweight in the year before and a little larger amount in the year before that. So we have sold to Great Britain during this eight-months period nearly double the amount of the preceding year, and we still have more in storage.

Mr. ROWE: How much United States bacon is in storage in Canada at the present time?

[Mr. J. H. Harris.]

Mr. GARDINER: There is very little, but there is some Canadian bacon that would not have been there if we had not brought in United States pork. It is largely pork that is brought in and some of the pork brought in is converted into bacon here, but there would not be any considerable volume of United States bacon or pork products in Canada in storage.

Mr. ROWE: Did I rightly understand the minister to say that the consumption of bacon and pork products in Canada had been less in recent months?

Mr. GARDINER: No, I did not mean to say that. I do not think it has been less.

Mr. ROWE: I wondered whether the effect of the United States fat bacon had been to spoil the appetite of people for bacon.

Mr. GARDINER: No, I think the consumption is at a higher rate at present than for some time past, probably due to the programme put on to increase consumption.

Then, as to exports again, lard is down, dressed poultry is down, butter is down slightly, cheese is up. The export of cheese to the British market is considerably higher than for the same period a year ago. Apples are down from 2,490,861 barrels in 1938-39 to 1,178,802.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): If the minister has the figures, would he put on record how much lard is down?

Mr. GARDINER: Lard is down from 74,115 hundredweight to 13,525 hundredweight.

Mr. COLDWELL: What are the figures for butter? The minister said it was slightly down.

Mr. GARDINER: The butter figures are greatly down, from 88,800 hundredweight last year to 1,972 hundredweight. I should have said eggs are down slightly; they stand next to butter in the table. Eggs are down from 1,129,888 dozen to 903,240 dozen.

Cheese is up from 459,136 hundredweight to 539,411 hundredweight. Apples are down to a little less than half of what they were in the preceding year. But canned apples are up from 8,978,215 pounds to 24,375,945 pounds, and canned pears are up from 6,032,000 pounds to 21,927,000 pounds. Total canned fruits are up from 18,000,000 pounds to 54,000,000 pounds, or about three times as much. Total canned vegetables are up from 52,000,000 pounds to 138,000,000 pounds. Honey is up from three million pounds to five million pounds.

So of many of the food products Great Britain has been taking about the usual amount and of some much more than the usual amount, of others considerably less. But I think these tables fairly well indicate that the farmers have been producing the food products that are going to be required, that these food products are in store in considerable volume, and that we have been selling most of the important food products to Great Britain as formerly. I believe, moreover, that the consumption of most of the food products in Canada has also been increased. This would indicate the answer to the question. The farmer has been informed.

Mr. SENN: It is gratifying to me, as I am sure it must be to all hon. members, that we have in store at the present time such a large volume of necessary food supplies. There is no doubt in my mind that all will be needed. Undoubtedly a large number of those who have been producing food in Great Britain and in France will have entered the armies and will not be able to produce in the former quantities. I am not entirely satisfied that the figures the minister gave in regard to production in 1939 indicate that the agricultural supplies board has stimulated the farmers to produce, because this production was well under way, in fact complete, before any agricultural supplies board was thought of. The war did not break out until last fall, and every provision made last year for agricultural production was made much earlier than that.

What is required of the agricultural supplies board is that it guide the farmers to produce in the right channels. The minister referred to canned apples. We have a very large surplus of canned apples at the present time, and there is little prospect of their being disposed of by the time the next crop comes along. I feel strongly-and I only say what I am saying for the purpose of offering suggestions, not from the point of view of criticism at all—that the agricultural supplies board and the Department of Agriculture should go much further than they have hitherto in guiding farmers in the back districts as to what should be produced. The greatest incentive to greater production that can be provided is to give the farmers a reasonable guarantee that they are not being asked to produce at a loss; that the prices they receive will be at least commensurate with the cost of production. I do not believe there is any other industry in Canada manufacturing war munitions that is being asked to produce at a loss; in fact, they all have some kind of guarantee as to the prices they will receive. In certain branches of agriculture prices were pegged in days gone by and will probably be pegged again, and there is no reason why other vital branches of the industry, producing goods that will be needed in Great Britain before the war is over, should not be in the same position as other industries and certain branches of the agricultural industry that have their prices pegged at the present time.

Mr. GARDINER: As to the first point, that the agricultural supplies board was not in existence in 1939, I would remind the committee that the members of the agricultural supplies board are the assistant deputy minister and the directors of the different divisions of the department.

Mr. SENN: And they are all good men too.

Mr. GARDINER: These men were all on the job all through 1939; in fact, they were appointed to the supplies board because they had been carrying on similar activity during the preceding years.

Mr. SENN: The minister would not suggest that they have not increased their efforts in any way in that regard?

Mr. GARDINER: No; they have increased their efforts, but those efforts were sufficient even before that time to improve production very much. I agree that farmers should have a reasonable return for their products, and I think the other table I placed on Hansard, which appears at page 168, will bear me out when I state that someone has been fairly successful in at least improving the prices of farm commodities since the beginning of the war. I do not know that the Department of Agriculture can claim all the credit; nevertheless all our efforts have been in that direction, and prices have improved.

Mr. COLDWELL: How many of the products exported to Great Britain have been sold on the basis of an agreed price? I understand that there have been discussions, and I am wondering if it would not be possible to have this large surplus, which is carried largely in the interests of the safety of Great Britain, looked after under some joint arrangement between the two countries so that the people who produce these commodities could be guaranteed a reasonable return. My constituency is largely composed of wheat growers. They do not want a price that will cast a burden upon the country, but they do feel, and I think quite properly, that they should be assured a reasonable return. I have heard that attempts have been made to negotiate a price, and that figures have been suggested to this government by Great Britain, in regard to wheat. In that country, of course, they guarantee their own producers a certain price. We are anxious to give the farmers some guidance as to the quantity they should produce, and at the same time I think they should be guaranteed a reasonable return for their labour.

Mr. GARDINER: Since the beginning of the war there has been more or less constant discussion between the British food ministry and representatives of the producers on this side in regard to both quantity and price. There has been a constant discussion with respect to all cereal products, particularly wheat, between the wheat board and the cereals board of Great Britain. No definite price has been arranged between the two, but the price paid from time to time has been as a result of those negotiations and offerings made by the wheat board in order to meet the requirements of the cereals board in the old country. As hon, members know, a set price has been arranged for bacon, ham and other pork products enumerated in the agreement. That has been operating since the middle of last November. Negotiations have been proceeding since early last September with regard to a set price on cheese, but that price was arranged only within the last week or ten days, following the discussions which were carried on all through the winter months. There have been discussions also with regard to apples, respecting not so much price as volume. Finally, the British food ministry was persuaded to accept about fifty per cent of the quantity of apples they took during the preceding year. That has resulted in the sale of British Columbia apples for export being as high this year as it was a year ago if not indeed a little higher. The sale of Nova Scotia apples has been considerably lower, while of course in any year only a small percentage of the Ontario apples goes to the old country.

The figures I gave a few moments ago illustrate fairly well what has been happening in connection with canned apples. As one hon, member said a few moments ago, we have a considerable quantity of canned apples on our hands. That is largely on account of the fact that we dealt with the situation that existed last September by arranging to can or dehydrate a very considerable part of the Nova Scotia pick. Those canned and dehydrated apples are now in the possession of the government, and negotiations for their sale of course will be carried on by the government. During the period intervening we have been exerting every possible influence to have as much as possible of the Nova Scotia crop consumed in the form of canned and dehydrated apples.

During the greater part of the winter, negotiations have been carried on with regard to the price and quantity of eggs to be sold to Great Britain. A few weeks ago it was finally agreed in connection with eggs that it would be better to allow the market to operate much as it has been operating, and I think the results have been fairly satisfactory. The other product we have been discussing with the British food ministry to a considerable extent is poultry. Shipments of poultry to the British market were interfered with by the outbreak of war. We have not as yet negotiated a final agreement in connection with eggs, butter or poultry, but continuous discussions have been going on with regard to those products.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is the minister prepared to give any assurance on behalf of the government that there will be minimum prices for farm commodities, at least for the duration of the war?

Mr. GARDINER: The only answer I can give to that question is to say that I am not prepared to give an answer at the moment.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister certainly is giving us more information now than we were given in the statement he made the other evening. I was interested in his reply to the hon, member for Haldimand and also in his statement that the price of wheat had been discussed with the British authorities as far back as last September. To-day, in reply to a question appearing on the order paper in my name, the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated that the general policy with respect to the marketing of grain was being considered by the government. To me that seemed a very unsatisfactory answer. There is no doubt that farm products, particularly wheat, will play a very important part in the winning of the war. As several hon, members have stated, I believe the farmers are just as loyal and just as anxious to cooperate as any other group in Canada, but in view of what they have come through in recent years I believe they should be considered from the point of view of what is a fair price.

At this stage I do not intend to ask the government for any general statement as to their policy in the marketing of grain. Probably we shall have an opportunity later on, perhaps on going into supply or at some other time, to have a general discussion on this important question. But since that matter has been coupled with this motion, we might consider it to-day as well. In the chamber at the moment we have two members of the subcommittee of the cabinet, although I am sorry the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not present, because I believe he is also a member of that subcommittee. A short time ago the Minister of Agriculture said that the question of the price of wheat was considered last fall. I understand that as soon as war broke out, Great Britain appointed Mr. James Rank as the sole purchaser of grain supplies for both Great Britain and France. Negotiations took place at that time, and I understand the British government asked this government to close the grain exchange and said that if they did so, a price would be agreed upon for the duration of the war. The ministers are in the chamber; they will know about the matter and perhaps they could give the committee some information with respect to it. I was informed, I believe by a reliable source, that that is what happened, but that the government would not agree to the closing of the exchange at that time.

I think this committee should have a report of the operations of the wheat board since last August. I think we should also have a report from the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) who was invited to go overseas to discuss this all-important question with the British authorities. If the reports in the press are correct, the matter of a price for Canadian wheat was discussed at that time. A recent report in the Winnipeg Free Press is to the effect that a price was considered, as well as the closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange. We should have a statement as to the permanent policy of the government. A report appeared in the Leader-Post of May 22 to the effect that the subcommittee of the cabinet was considering the question of closing the Winnipeg grain exchange. If that matter was being considered, we should have a statement as to what decision was reached. I think this committee should be informed also of the source from which this recommendation was received, whether it came from the grain exchange, from the producers, or from other organizations in western Canada.

If the exchange is to be closed, I think the public should be told at this time. Certainly the producers should know about this important action. The government should set a fair price for wheat for the duration of the war. I understand Mr. Rank is still the sole purchaser of supplies for Great Britain and France. Then I think a higher price than 70 c nts should be set. Possibly the government is contemplating bringing down legislation at this session to amend the act. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made many promises during the campaign and the western producers are expecting him to carry out at least some of them. The producers of western Canada will not be satisfied with 70 cent wheat. I believe they would agree to the closing down of the grain exchange for the duration of the war, but the guaranteed price should be higher than 70 cents. We should first have a report from the Minister of Mines and Resources on his conference overseas, and then we should have a statement from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) with respect to the permanent policy that will apply.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, naturally the government wants to give the fullest information possible. The hon, member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) was inquiring as to the policy of the government with regard to supplies, and I believe the question asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) arose out of the other question. I suggest to the hon, member for Qu'Appelle that he is opening up a rather large subject, one which is at least collateral and not directly related to the bill before the committee. I want to ask him, through you Mr. Chairman, if he will permit that matter to stand for discussion on its own merits until that opportunity arises? The question which he raises is quite different from that raised by the hon. member for Haldimand, that is to say, with regard to the quantity of supplies on hand. No one has any doubt that there is on hand in Canada plenty of wheat for some time. The manner in which that wheat will be dealt with is already a matter of policy and has been dealt with by statute.

The hon, member refers to the possible closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange. It is almost to be expected that a matter of that kind would be under discussion at a time like this. As the hon, member knows, the price of grain has been pegged on the Winnipeg grain exchange. The hon. member asked for an outline of policy, but all I can say to him at the moment is that the grain exchange has not yet been closed. That does not say what the policy of the government may be next week, the week after or when further consideration is given to the matter. The question of the price to the producer is one which involves dealing with the Wheat Board Act as well as other statutes. Perhaps he will permit this to stand for discussion on its own merits until after we have dealt with the resolution at present before the committee.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The minister's request is a reasonable one, but I should like to see it coupled with an undertaking that ample opportunity will be given at some relevant stage of the session, which I hope will be at a not too distant date, to discuss the question raised by the hon, member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley). There is no doubt that this question is of the greatest importance to the farmers of western Canada. Will the minister or his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon), be good enough to give an undertaking that at an early date opportunity will be provided to discuss this whole question?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): At the very moment the hon, member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) first raised this question, I was in conference with the members of the wheat board who have been called to Ottawa. I am in a position to assure the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that the opportunity for discussion which they ask for will be provided at as early a date as possible.

Mr. PERLEY: May I say to the Minister of Finance that I brought up this question at this time only because of certain remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) with respect to wheat. I would refer also to the answer given this afternoon by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon), to my question on the order paper asking when the advisory committee to the wheat board would be reappointed, which answer I think was most indefinite. That question did not involve the whole wheat problem, and I do not consider I was treated very courteously. However, as an undertaking has been given that we shall have this opportunity, I will let the matter drop at the present. I hope that opportunity will not be too distant.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): In making the answer referred to this afternoon, I was as definite as I could be under the circumstances. I wanted to make the answer as complete as possible, but I could not be more explicit without intimating the course taken by the conversations with the officials advising the department.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon, member for Qu'Appelle has taken a couple of what I might call sideswipes at the Minister of Agriculture, and I point out that my colleague is restraining himself until the proper time.

Mr. PERLEY: He does not need to be restrained.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think he can take care of himself.

Mr. LOCKHART: I should like to implement what the hon, member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) has said. Considerable concern is being expressed by farmers who have large acreages of tomatoes, to take that crop as an example. As a result of the food commissioner in Great Britain limiting the licensing for export, the acreage of tomatoes might be materially reduced. In line with the questions asked by the hon. member for Haldimand, I would point out that the farmers are wondering whether it would be better to grow oats and peas to produce bacon, and whether it would be better to divert large amounts of acreage to other crops. I know there is a tremendous acreage of tomatoes in the constituency of Prince Edward-Lennox; and if those tomatoes cannot be exported in the form of tomato juice and canned tomatoes, I believe some direction should be given to the farmers in Canada indicating what might best be sown

[Mr. Perley.]

However, it was not my intention to discuss that point in detail, although it was forcibly brought to my attention over the weekend. I rise at this time particularly to enlist the attention of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers). Over the weekend I made an extensive survey of some matters which I brought briefly to the attention of the minister last week. I know he is giving serious consideration to some of them.

I believe I am correct when I say that the protection afforded our great power units, the great Welland ship canal transportation system—which, incidentally, carried nearly 12,000,000 tons of merchandise last year—is somewhat jeopardized at the present time. I believe that this information would be useful to the Minister of Finance, as well as to the Minister of National Defence.

After carefully investigating the matter during the last few days, I learned that our efficient Royal Canadian Mounted Police are in charge of the canal system. At some points only one man is stationed, while at other more vulnerable points there are two. I repeat that the protection is entirely inadequate, when we give due consideration to the dangers involved. When we are dealing with a transportation system over which 12,000,000 tons of the produce of Canada have been transported, it is of the utmost importance that that system be protected at its vulnerable points by more than one or two men. I draw this point particularly to the attention of the Minister of National Defence.

I pass on now to a further discussion of points which have been raised in connection with the power plants. I understand that those plants are under provincial jurisdiction. I do not know whether the minister is satisfied with the protection being given, but in the light of the influx of tourists which we may expect any time—and I take no exception to the operations of the director of the travel bureau—I am wondering whether the federal government, the Minister of National Defence or some other constituted authority will give careful consideration to the matter and decide whether the protection is adequate. Rumours are constantly coming to my ears, and some of them I wish to discuss with the minister. We realize that the great Welland ship canal, and the power centres in and about Queenston and Niagara Falls from which run important transmission lines serving thousands of factories in all parts of Ontario, must be given adequate protection, even at the cost of large sums of money.

The provincial police are small in number, and in the light of present conditions I cannot see why these public utilities should not now be under the supervision of the Department of National Defence or some other federally constituted body. In my view it is high time that this matter was given serious consideration. The placing of one man, two men or even three men within a few hundred yards of the great hydro-electric power system at Queenston Heights is very small protection indeed when we compare it with the great preparation made at the Sault locks by the United States government. They have gone to great lengths, and yet they are not at war. I draw the minister's attention particularly to the preparations which have been made at the Sault locks by the United States govern-

In view of the "fifth column" activities, reports of which have been circulating in the past few days, and some of which have come to my attention, I urge most seriously that immediate steps be taken to see that something more definite is done in connection with the protection of these power and transportation facilities. We realize that the Welland ship canal offers one of the greatest conveniences for the conveyance of the wheat crop to the markets of the United Kingdom. I urge upon the minister those points which were brought to my attention, and those of a more secret nature I shall bring personally to the attention of the Minister of Justice.

I urge most seriously that consideration be given at once to increasing a hundredfold the guards at vulnerable points, and that the government utilize the camp grounds at Niagara-on-the-Lake to which, I was told Sunday morning, only one or two units have come. The grounds at that point offer the best facilities and sanitation, and could be utilized profitably. If we are to permit a great influx of tourist traffic across the border at Queenston, Niagara Falls and Fort Erie, conditions may develop suddenly with which two or three guards would not be able to cope. Inadequate lighting facilities would add to the difficulties of the guards, and there are other features with which I shall not trouble the committee.

I ask the minister to check what has been done, and to do something which will remedy the situation and allay the fears of the people in that great peninsula who live at the seat of vulnerable points and in the midst of vulnerable systems which within five minutes of crossing the international border could be attacked with ease. I plead that the minister make a careful check of the situation.

Mr. ROGERS: The federal government was in communication with the provincial government last week with respect to more adequate protection of the hydro-electric plants along the international boundary. As a result of those discussions, certain military dispositions were made over the weekend. May I add that the district officer commanding has been in touch with the attorney general of Ontario. I shall be pleased indeed to carry out the suggestion made by the hon. member and to watch most carefully the situation he describes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: During the last few days I have been in receipt of a large number of resolutions from various bodies in Saskatchewan demanding that the government do something towards controlling the nazi influence within their province. The people of Saskatchewan are not given to hysteria; but having regard to the releases of interned aliens that have taken place in the last few weeks, they feel that all is not well with the administration of the alien enemy problem in that province.

I point out that to-day there are areas in Saskatchewan where nazi activities are continuing in a manner which would not be credited elsewhere in the dominion. People in the province are asking for action. The legion and other public bodies of all kinds are asking that something be done, and they make the request because several men who were interned have been subsequently released. The government has not taken the public into its confidence or given any indication of the reasons why the releases were permitted.

May I bring one instance to the attention of hon. members: A man at St. Walburg was interned shortly after the outbreak of war. He was known in that locality to have been engaged for a considerable time in nazi activities. After a period of internment he was released, and until ten days ago occupied the position of a justice of the peace, charged with administering British justice in Saskatchewan. The question that we, representing constituencies in that province, ask is this, what will the government do with regard to the alien enemy problem? Upon whose recommendation does the government act in permitting the release of aliens who have been interned?

The people of Saskatchewan, I repeat, are not hysterical, but they want measures to be taken at once to offset and control this menace in their midst. One of the suggestions offered is that there should be recruited to full strength immediately the various military units in that province. I take as one case in point the condition existing in the city of Prince Albert. There we have two militia units; one, the Prince Albert and Battleford volunteers, which owes its inception to the Riel rebellion; the other, a battery of artillery, the 44th. Both units have had excellent records in competition with others throughout the dominion. Yet they have not been mobilized. There is a large armoury there, within the constituency of the Prime Minister, which is not being used except for minor training purposes. The men who enlisted in that city during the past winter had to go to Saskatoon, where proper housing facilities were not available. They were housed at the fair grounds in that city under conditions that did no credit to the government. Yet in Prince Albert facilities were available. The only way we can successfully recruit for the army is by establishing esprit de corps, which will arise only when local units are mobilized and trained where enlistment takes place.

I ask the Minister of National Defence whether, in view of the critical situation—I call it critical advisedly—arising from subversive activities in Saskatchewan, he will consider the immediate recruitment to full strength of the Prince Albert infantry and artillery units. Otherwise there will be no protection in northern Saskatchewan against enemy activities.

The veterans' defence scheme is a good one, but 3,000 men are inadequate, representing one man per mile from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We need the militia units. If orders are given to recruit them in Prince Albert, the difficulty which has arisen in the past to retard recruitment, namely the fear on the part of people in that city that their own units are to be taken elsewhere, will disappear, and within a few days there will be available, not only for home defence, but in preparation for overseas service, at least 1,000 men. I ask the minister to give consideration to the suggestions I have offered.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be very glad indeed to give consideration to the suggestions. I may say that the units which have been raised thus far in Saskatchewan and elsewhere have been based upon the non-permanent active militia units, and it is always a question of the choice of the units which shall constitute a particular division which is being called up. At the present time, if my recollection is correct, there are two infantry units from Saskatchewan, namely the South Saskatchewan regiment and the Saskatoon Light Infantry.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The Prince Albert regiment is the oldest in the province with a great tradition of service to its credit.

Mr. ROGERS: I am quite sure it will receive the careful attention of the district officer commanding, in the constitution of the new division and other formations.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Would the Minister of Justice mind answering the question I asked with reference to internment?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): As to the question of internment and release, there seems to be a misconception of how alien enemies, who were interned, obtained their release. When war broke out, many people were astonished at the speed with which so-called aliens were interned—the very first day.

 $\operatorname{Mr.\ HANSON}$ (York-Sunbury): I was not astonished.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Well, the hon. member knew that the matter had been well arranged by the police. Precautions had been taken weeks and even months before war broke out, on the assumption that some trouble might arise. But of course there was not much evidence against some of those who were so arrested and interned; they were apprehended because they were suspected to some degree. A tribunal, indeed two tribunals, were constituted for the purpose of investigating and studying each case which was appealed.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Who were on the tribunals?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There was one constituted of three members: Judge Smiley, of Ottawa; Mr. O'Meara, Assistant Under-secretary of State; and Mr. Fortier, legal officer of the Department of Transport; and they went around the country. In some instances judges were engaged. I know that Mr. Justice Cannon sat in Quebec, and I believe Mr. Justice Hyndman sat in the west. Those tribunals sent in their reports on the cases which were involved when an appeal had been taken and representations made. These reports were made to the Minister of Justice. In every case, before a release was signed, the whole of the evidence, the report and the file were submitted to a special interdepartmental committee, of whom one, Mr. MacNeill, is a leading law officer of the Department of Justice, and another, Mr. Robertson, is counsellor in the Department of External Affairs. This committee, again, reports to me, and it is on these reports that releases or refusals are agreed to.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I ask whether the procedure which is adopted in England has been carried out by these tribunals here? That is, were the arrested parties brought before the tribunals in person, and were the police who made the arrests represented there to give their side of the case? I understand the procedure in England was very thorough. A great man died on his way to attend one hearing. There were important men on these tribunals. I have nothing to say against the civil service, but on those tribunals were not civil servants but men of judicial character, experience and ability. What is the procedure?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): On the first tribunal I mentioned, there was a gentleman of judicial capacity, Judge Smiley, who was strongly recommended. I do not think he has ever been a political friend of the present government. The other evening I was not present in the house, but subsequently I read in Hansard an insinuation or a suggestion on the part of an hon. member that party politics had crept into this matter. May I say that I would not be worthy of the position I occupy if I allowed party politics to play any part in a question of this kind. The hon. gentleman who made the statement, when he comes to know me better, will not repeat such a thing. There is no party politics in the matter. In fact, representations have been made to me with regard to the internment of alien enemies by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the house, and those representations have received exactly the same consideration coming from one side as from the other, and that is none at all.

Mr. HOMUTH: My right hon, friend assures the committee that no alien has been released except through the tribunals?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes, except perhaps in one or two instances where there was illness and the man was sent to his family.

Mr. DAMUDE: I do not always agree with my hon. friend the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lockhart), but on this occasion it seems to me that the inadequacy of the guards on the Welland ship canal and those who are looking after the hydro development in the Niagara peninsula is a matter that should receive the most careful consideration from the government in order to see to it that the great Welland ship canal, where the locks are situated in the constituency I have the honour to represent, and the hydro development are strictly guarded.

Mr. MacNICOL: Before the resolution passes, may I ask the Minister of National Defence a question in connection with the provision for promoting the continuance of industry. In 1938, I believe, the minister, speaking on the question of the relief of unemployment, intimated that the intention of the government at that time was to assist in promoting industry with a view to providing employment. Sitting here, I have listened to statements from various members, and I suggest that the minister has an opportunity under this resolution to carry out the intention he expressed on that occasion and to assist industry. Last evening I heard the President of the United States making a very strong point with regard to the rehabilitation of military equipment in the programme of the United States government, intimating he would go a long way towards financing industry in the development of new military equipment. That has been the plan of the government of France in the last three or four years, and the same thing is true of Great Britain. These governments did help industry to develop military equipment, because military equipment changes so rapidly that no manufacturer can afford to carry such development. I submit that we should be manufacturing tanks in Canada. A few days ago I made that suggestion, and one of the ministers thought it would be quite an undertaking, but there are many large plants in Canada which could, without too much difficulty, engage in the manufacture of tanks provided they received some assistance from the government. On Saturday afternoon I listened to the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and one of the things he especially requested from Canada and other parts of the empire was a supply of tanks. In the manufacture of tanks in Canada this government would have to assist any manufacturer in the initial cost of production of engines, tools and so forth.

I was wondering whether under clause (c) of the resolution the minister could not do something to assist Canadian industry to produce tanks, and, through that, further the development of iron production in the country. I do not know how far we have to go for iron to-day. We do get some from Minnesota, some from Wisconsin and some from Bell island in Newfoundland, but in Canada there are mines that could be developed. I read of a recent discovery in northern Ontario where it is said iron ore of the same high grade iron content as that produced in Minnesota is available. Under this provision the government could do something to encourage large industry in Canada-because small industry could not possibly undertake the work—to manufacture tanks. The first part of the work would be the melting of iron and rolling the steel. We have large blast furnaces in Midland, Hamilton and Sydney. Near Windsor we have one that has never been operated. The blast furnace still stands and the steel plant is idle. I have been through that plant lately. In fact, I made a survey of about two hundred industries in Canada in four months last fall in order to find out exactly what Canadian industry could do. This particular plant I speak of might be ideal for the production of tanks. If under this clause something could be done in this direction, it would go a long way towards assisting the allies and would develop the steel industry of Canada through the manufacture of tanks.

Mr. COLDWELL: My hon, friend speaks of opening up mines. It occurs to me that we have a large amount of excellent material lying around the country which could be gathered up and assembled. It would provide the best sort of material for this purpose. I refer to the enormous quantity of scrapiron that remains even after we have exported a great deal. I bring that to the attention of the committee, and I suggest that some arrangement should be made to utilize this vast supply of scrapiron, which I am informed is the finest kind of material.

That is not what I really rose to suggest. There is one phrase in this resolution on which I should like some explanation. It is the phrase:

(c) . . . or indemnity against war risk . . .

What is meant by that? Does the government propose to provide indemnities for industry in the event of the war ending? If, so, I submit that agriculture should be indemnified as well as industry. I do not suppose it means insurance; it reads, "insurance or indemnity." Might we have an explanation of what this phraseology means?

Mr. RALSTON: The purposes, of course, are as wide as the phrase itself. What was probably in mind is what is mentioned there, insurance or indemnity against war risk, relating in most cases I would think to the transportation of goods.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): By sea.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, "promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications, whether by means of insurance or indemnity against war risks or in any other manner whatsoever." I think the insurance or indemnity against war risks is what the draftsman primarily had regard to, what we understand as the assumption of war risk by way of insurance or indemnity against loss.

Mr. COLDWELL: Nothing beyond that?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think there was probably anything more in the mind of the draftsman, but I realize that the words are wider than that because of the last phrase "or any other matter whatsoever."

Mr. McIVOR: I am sure the Minister of National Defence will not overlook the head of the lakes when he is organizing his home defence. We have hydro-electric power there at Cameron falls and the Kam Power Company at Kakabeka falls, but more especially we have the greatest grain storage in the world to-day. In fact, we are called the bread-basket of the world, and I am sure that the Minister of National Defence in his thorough way of doing things will see that that bread-basket is adequately protected.

Mr. BROOKS: I am sure we were all very much pleased to hear the Prime Minister this afternoon state that we are going to raise more troops in Canada. I would ask the Minister of National Defence what system he is going to develop for enlisting and recruiting. It occurs to me that we have a very heavy contract on our hands. I was surprised to read in the Ottawa Journal, I think it was, on Saturday that one of the units belonging to the second division and leaving Ottawa for camp was still two hundred men short. If the same condition prevails in every other unit in the second division, we are far short of the number of men required to fill up that division. On top of that we are organizing a third division, and now it is announced that we shall have a fourth division.

Mr. ROGERS: Infantry units or rifle battalions.

Mr. BROOKS: Well, that would mean sixteen thousand men or twelve thousand men, I presume?

Mr. ROGERS: No, that would be nine regiments.

Mr. BROOKS: Nine infantry units would be nine thousand men, and again five thousand men for the air force, the corps troops as the minister mentioned the other day, and four or five thousand men for the navy. It simply shows how in the past nine months this matter of recruiting has been very much neglected. Now we have it piled up against us, and it seems to me it is going to take a great deal of organizing ability on the part of the Department of National Defence to obtain these men in Canada to-day. The units we have already organized are not up to strength; when the first division went overseas at the last minute we had to provide men for them. I should like to hear, and I am sure the country would like to hear from the minister, what definite plan we have at last evolved to obtain men at such short notice, or if we have a plan at all.

Mr. ROGERS: Perhaps I should answer my hon. friend now, and if he requires more detailed information I can obtain it later. In the first place I would not agree with him that we have experienced difficulty up to the present time in recruiting such units as have been authorized.

Mr. BROOKS: At that point might I ask the minister then why it is that these units have not been recruited up to strength, although for instance it is two or three months since the second division was formed?

Mr. ROGERS: If my hon. friend will permit me to proceed, I think I shall be able to give that information too. The first division was recruited to strength when it went overseas, and as my hon. friend who has had military experience is aware, it also carried its first reinforcements. Subsequently further reinforcements have gone over; in fact we have four months' accumulated reinforcements for the first division. A few days ago I placed a return on record on that question, and I think there is no reason why I should repeat it

Mr. BROOKS: That would be the ten per cent pre-battle casualties reinforcements?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. Since then, we have sent forward additional reinforcements from the depots to the training centres and thence to the holding units in England. That is the method of reinforcement, a method which has been worked out most carefully by the Department of National Defence in communication with Canadian military head-quarters in London. My hon. friend may be assured that the arrangements we have made to provide reinforcements have received the approval of Canadian military head-quarters in London and of the general officer commanding the first Canadian division.

Mr. BROOKS: How many reinforcements have we for the first division in England at the present time?

Mr. ROGERS: That is not a question I should answer categorically at the present time. I believe my hon, friend will find on Hansard for the other evening the actual number of reinforcements raised up to the present time for the first division. If he has any difficulty about the figures, I shall be glad to provide any information.

Mr. BROOKS: I think it would be four or five thousand.

Mr. ROGERS: As to the second division my hon. friend said certain units went to camp below strength. I should like to satisfy myself definitely on that point before I answer the question. If he will refer me to the unit which he stated was below strength, I will take note of it. I can say that the second division units during the winter months were not brought fully up to strength for reasons that I think were entirely sound. We could not give all second division units complete and satisfactory training in their winter quarters. That could be done satisfactorily only when they had opportunity to carry out full unit training in summer encampments. But we gave authority to the second division to bring their various units up to strength and have recently also given them authority to add reinforcements. As already stated by the Prime Minister, we propose to see that reinforcements for the second division are expedited. I assure my hon. friend and the committee generally that we realize the importance of ensuring a continuous stream of reinforcements to the divisions that have been mobilized and will in due course go overseas.

My hon, friend also asked regarding the method of recruiting the division which has been more recently authorized, the third division, and such other units as have been indicated by the Prime Minister this afternoon. After a most careful study by officers of the department, it has been thought wise to proceed broadly in the same manner as we recruited the first and second divisions. In other words, the department receives from the district officers commanding nominations of certain units which should comprise the particular divisions. Those nominations are gone over in the department very carefully in order to see that there is also a satisfactory regional distribution of those units, infantry, artillery, engineers, et cetera, across the country. These units, once finally selected, are through the district given authority to be brought up to strength. I am bound to say at once, with respect to the methods of recruiting we followed for the first and second divisions, that there was not always a satisfactory spread of the recruiting areas.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROGERS: I agree absolutely, and I have put it to the officers of the department that in what we do now we should widen the areas of recruiting. But my hon, friend who has asked this question, and who has had long militia experience himself, knows that these militia units were localized to a considerable extent. If I might take one in his own province, the Carleton and York regiment, the very name of the regiment implies that it has its establishment in a restricted area.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The whole west side of the province, from the bay of Fundy to the Quebec boundary.

Mr. ROGERS: It is a large, but nevertheless a restricted area. My point is that in further recruiting for units of the third division we should widen the area from which men may be enlisted, and I can assure my hon. friend that this question is definitely receiving the attention of the officers of the department at the present time. I can go further and say that I think it is also desirable to set up recruiting offices in a larger number of cities and towns than was the case with the first and second divisions. I received personally quite a number of complaints in connection with the recruiting of the first two divisions, to the effect that men were obliged to go some distance to recruiting centres in order to offer their services, and of course when a man was rejected he had to make the return journey, entirely at his own expense. I am not going to suggest that we should set up recruiting offices in all the cities and towns within a province, but certainly I shall see to it that we distribute the recruiting facilities on a wider basis than has been the case heretofore.

Mr. ESLING: I think across Canada there will be the warmest commendation of the Prime Minister's statement concerning intended recruiting activities. It has been indicated that the responsibility will rest largely with the officers commanding the military districts. That is only natural, because it could hardly be expected that the minister or his officials would know the exact geographical condition in each province. In southeastern British Columbia we have perhaps the most populous communities of that province with the exception of the coast cities. We have the armouries; we have the medical officers; we have experienced officers who distinguished themselves in the last war, perfectly capable of acting as recruiting officers. My point is that these young men in the interior who are anxious to offer their services to the country have been and are now compelled to pay their transportation expenses to the coast. a distance of perhaps six hundred, seven hundred or eight hundred miles. The minister can readily appreciate the discouraging effect this has had upon men who have been unemployed. I want to ask the minister if he will not take a personal interest and see to it that these young men in southeastern British Columbia are given an opportunity to enlist in some of these units which are to be recruited to strength.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be very glad indeed to do so.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Some of the Peterborough men had to travel 135 miles to try to enlist and were turned down. Would it not be possible for these men to be given passes on the Canadian National Railways in order that they might return home?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The government should pay their transportation expenses.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Yes, the government should pay the transportation both ways. This situation has discouraged recruiting; in fact, it has really chilled it. I believe everything possible should be done for those men who are willing to give their lives for us, and I think transportation is one thing with which they should be supplied.

Mr. ROGERS: Perhaps a better way to deal with that situation is to bring the recruiting offices closer to the men instead of taking the men to the recruiting offices.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I quite agree.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): I agree also. The men from Peterborough had to go to Picton, Kingston or Toronto. Some of them, after standing in line all day, were turned down or perhaps did not even get into the recruiting office. They had to get back the best way they could, and some of them went without food for two days.

Mr. GERSHAW: I should like to direct attention to a few factors which have not been mentioned so far. One is that on the farms, in the smaller towns and in the cities throughout the country there is a tremendous amount of scrapiron and discarded material which in some countries would be of very great use, and which might be of use in Canada as well.

Another point is that in the west, particularly in southern Alberta, conditions are eminently favourable for the training of airmen. There we have wide open spaces without trees, fences or power lines. We have stretches of level prairie without stones or sloughs, conditions which are considered ideal for this training. Visibility is good, with very little fog and very low precipitation.

In the same district is one of the greatest petroleum producing fields in the world, with some ninety-seven producing wells which could supply the entire requirements of the commonwealth air scheme without interfering in any way with service to domestic consumers. We have a tremendous potential wealth there; the source of supply is secure. I believe that with these ideal conditions and this great petroleum supply, super airmen can be trained in that region.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Mr. Chairman, before this resolution carries, perhaps I should say a word with respect to the feeling in my constituency and throughout a large section of Nova Scotia. The citizens in that part of the country are dissatisfied with the progress which has been made up to now in the war effort. There are strong misgivings with respect to what has been done. I do not wish anything that I may say to be misconstrued as being critical of those who are carrying responsibility at the present time, especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) or the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), both of whom come from my home town. The county of Cumberland has great pride in the fact that two of its citizens occupy front benches in this house and are carrying heavy responsibility at the present time. I want to offer them all the cooperation of which I am capable. That was my pledge to the electorate, and I give that assurance now.

There is a feeling among a large number of the electorate that some restraint is being placed upon the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Defence and that, if this restraint were removed, more progress could be made in the war effort. The Minister of Finance has a wonderful record, and he enjoys a great deal of public confidence in my constituency and throughout Canada because of the achievement he has made in every sphere of his activities. He early took a high place in his profession and in public life, and he had a fine record in the last war; then he was back in public life discharging the responsibilities of Minister of National Defence, retired to private practice and again, early in this war, he came back as Minister of Finance.

Many people in this country are of the opinion that if he were in control at the present time as Prime Minister, there would be a feeling of greater confidence. I do not believe we would then have an extreme partisan government such as has been the case. I feel sure he would call in to consult with him leading men in Canadian public life irrespective of politics. He would call into consultation such men as Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Hon. H. H. Stevens, Hon. C. H. Cahan, Hon. R. J. Manion and others. Even though he had to enlist them as dollar a year men, he would do so rather than carry on a party government.

During the last war industries in Cumberland were actively engaged in war work. They gained a fine reputation in the manufacture of munitions, but there has been none of this work this time. Well-established industries should have been equipped in peace time with the machinery necessary to manufacture munitions even at government expense so that they might be ready to manufacture in a time such as we are now going through. But this has not been the case in our province. Practically no munitions have been manufactured there. In the town of Amherst we have a regiment stationed there which has been furnished with splendid quarters at considerable expense. There are trained officers in charge, but the regiment has not been up to strength. Recently there has been only a handful of men. At the same time all through the county of Cumberland men have been offering to enlist, but there has been no opportunity for them to do so. The fear is that there has been degeneration among the men in that unit because there is so little for them to do.

The promise of work manufacturing aeroplanes has been dangled before us ever since last September. One of the finest fields in eastern Canada was recently surveyed, and we were even told that it was one of the best in the dominion. A second field was surveyed at Amherst, and we were told that the Canadian Car and Foundry Company would be given orders to manufacture aeroplanes. Mr. Asquith, representing the British purchasing board, came to Amherst before the last session of parliament was called in January and said that he wished to place orders immediately. The people of Amherst and the officials of that company were willing and anxious to have work started.

During the election campaign it was made known indirectly, not through government [Mr. P. C. Black.] channels, that Amherst would be called upon to contribute 50 per cent of the cost of providing and equipping the field. I was a member of a committee of the board of trade, and yet that information was not given to me. It was only learned in a roundabout way, and the people of Amherst said that they would go fifty-fifty on the cost. A plebiscite was held on the question, and it carried one hundred to one in favour of providing the necessary field. Fields were provided in other parts of Canada at considerable expense, I understand up to $1,000,000 for a single field.

According to the Hansard in the other chamber the announcement was made by the leader of the government there that the aeroplane programme of this country provided that machines were being manufactured at Amherst. It was stated that there was the assembly of Anson wings and aircraft and the overhaul of Anson aircraft. That was given out to the country as part of the programme to provide Canada's aircraft equipment. Up to the present time nothing more has been done to carry out that programme in the town of Amherst than has been done in this chamber. Therefore, I say that the people of Amherst, the people of Cumberland and the people in a large section of Nova Scotia have great misgivings about the progress made by this government in carrying on the war effort.

Public opinion is strongly in favour of putting forth the maximum effort. I have been told at different times that the labour unions are against doing their utmost to win this war, but I do not think that is the case. I feel sure the workmen of Canada are willing to work day and night. Sundays and week days, in order to meet the challenge that has been made to the British empire. I have a telegram before me from one of the labour organizations in Cumberland county which I should like to read to the committee as an indication of the feeling of the workmen in eastern Canada. I have no doubt the same thing may be said of the workmen throughout the rest of Canada. This telegram which I received on May 25, reads:

The workers of Malagash demand that Canada prosecute the war to the ultimate capabilities of the national wealth and man-power must be conscripted through measures similar to those taken in Great Britain. If the present government is unwilling or unable to adopt these measures it must give place to government that will. Workers here will support fully any government capable of organizing effectively and completely for the purpose of assuring British institutions the man-power and financial and industrial resources of Canada and will gladly submit to any temporary curtailment of our liberties that may be necessary in the national cause. We must win this war.

Laurence Sutherland,
President, United Salt Mine Workers.

I believe that is an expression of opinion of the workmen throughout Canada. However, the trouble has been that we have had no proper leadership. Steps which have been taken since parliament met have been taken because of the pressure from the opposition in the house, and because of public opinion throughout the country as indicated in the press. The government has been forced to take some advanced steps.

I believe it was Burke who said that a statesman should be as a mountain peak, first to catch the light of the new day, and to spread it to the valleys below. That does not appear to have been so with this government. They have had to be forced. Public opinion as voiced by men and by women throughout the country demands action, and it is not satisfied with what has been done. I would repeat that there is great misgiving in my own town of Amherst, and throughout Nova Scotia, that the activities of the government are not what they should be, having regard to the great issues at stake.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Ralston thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 18, for granting to his majesty aid for national defence and security.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2-Appropriation.

Mr. CHURCH: Will any part of the $700,000,000 mentioned in section 2 be used for any purposes other than war purposes, defence and matters of that kind? Last summer the house voted $100,000,000, but proper restrictions were not imposed. I understand part of that money was used to open embassies. Will any of this money be used for any purposes other than those set out in section 2 and remaining clauses? We should earmark this sum so that we may know where it is going, and particularly it should all be for defence on land, on sea and in the air. Will any of the money be used for any civilian purposes other than those indicated in the bill?

Mr. RALSTON: No; the money will not be used for purposes other than those set out in section 2. My hon, friend understands, however, that section 2 is very wide, but the intention is to use the money for purposes connected with the war.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The minister will recall that when on May 21 he was making his introductory statement on the resolution, I asked him, as reported at page 85 of Hansard, if he would give a break-down of the expenditures. At that time I meant past expenditures and past commitments, and also expenditures to be made under this bill. At that time the minister said:

The house may wish to know the expenditures from September 1 to March 31. For this period the total payments on defence accounts were $112,000,000. The total payments to May 15 were $136,000,000. The commitments from September 1 to March 31, in addition to pay and allowances, amounted to $267,000,000.

Will the minister give the house a break-down of those several figures, and also a break-down of the balance of the $700,000,000, which I believe he has before him.

Mr. RALSTON: At the moment I have not a break-down of the commitments to which the hon. member has referred, but the break-down of expenditures up to March 31 is as follows:

Depar	tment of National	Defence	$112,469,000
		$67,579,000
	у	11,455,000
		28,380,000
	training plan	4,219,000
	sorship	99,000
		500,000
	ernment
Depar	tment of Agricultu	ire	1,419,000
Audit	or General		8,000
	Service Commission		6,000
	nal Affairs		76,000
Finan	ce; Comptroller	of the
	asury		358,000
	Supply Board
	e		15,000
	r; Wartime Prices
	rd		55,000
Mines	and Resources		18,000
	nal Harbours Boa		69,000
Natio	nal Research Coun	cil	121,000
Natio	nal Revenue		2,000
Pensio	ons and National I	Health	900,000
Post	Office		70,000
Privy	Council		30,000
Public	Works		829,000
Royal	Canadian Mounte	ed Police	1,400,000
	tary of State
Trade	and Commerce		4,009
	port		350,000

With regard to the $700,000,000, my hon. friend will understand that to give a breakdown of that would involve stating the allotments for the different services for the coming year. I draw the attention of hon, members to explanatory notes which appear opposite the second page of the bill:

This bill provides for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of a sum not exceeding $700,000,000 in addition to the ordinary grants of parliament towards defraying expenses incurred by or under the authority of the governor in council during the current fiscal year inter alia for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada. Authority is also granted to borrow the sum of $700,000,000 for any of the purposes set out in the bill. A similar act (The War Appropriation Act, 1939) was passed at the session of parliament held in Santankar 1939.

September, 1939.

The requirements of particular services on war account will depend on the course and progress of the war in circumstances which cannot now be foreseen. Therefore, it is clearly unwise to attempt to make specific allocations of the total appropriation to particular services. It is nevertheless desired that members of parliament shall have the usual opportunities for discussion of expenditures which may be made under various headings. Accordingly, there is set out below a list of the principal objects of expenditure under the Department of National Defence and a list of the other departments for which provision for expenditures on war account is now known to be necessary.

Then there follows a list: under the Department of National Defence, militia services, naval services, air services, general administration; and other departments which may be involved in connection with expenditures of moneys which are to be provided by this bill.

In adopting this form we have endeavoured to follow in a practical way the method which is adopted at Westminster, where, perhaps hon, members will recollect, what is done is to show under each heading a token vote of £100 in the estimates. We have not troubled to put a token vote of $100 opposite each item, because obviously it is only a token and it does not add anything to the information. What is endeavoured to be conveyed by this bill and by the explanatory notes which I have read is that the moneys provided for in the bill will be spent for the purposes set out in section 2; and for the convenience of hon. members various headings are given opposite pages 3 and 4 of the bill which will enable them to ask questions on any particular subject which may occur to them as being an object of expenditure.

I do not propose to attempt to give the committee any detail of the amounts for the different services. I do not mind, as a matter of fact, telling the committee what the rough amounts are as we see them at the present time; but that must, of course, always be subject to this, that under this bill we can change the amount which I have mentioned for any particular purpose and devote it to some other purpose, so long as it is within the purview of the bill. With that understanding, if hon. members would like it, I would be glad to indicate roughly what the various amounts might be, shall I say, in connection with the different services.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Before the minister does that, I quite understand his observation that the requirements of particular services on war account will depend upon the course and progress of the war and other circumstances which cannot now be foreseen. That is wholly understandable, and I would not press the minister to be more specific on that. But, if one refers to the explanatory notes opposite pages 2 and 3 of the bill, it would seem to run the gamut of the whole public service. I suppose that is a correct statement of the position, that there is hardly a department of the government—they even have fisheries in here-which will not in a measure contribute something, I hope, to national defence.

The list of figures which the minister has been good enough to give to the committee with respect to the expenditures already made is very satisfactory, and the figures cover a large number of items. It is obviously impossible for us to keep in our minds those items at this moment, and I should like to give them some study with a view to asking some further questions on them. I confess my utter inability at the moment to ask questions intelligently on that list of expenditures. I am therefore going to suggest to the minister that he be good enough to let section 2 stand. We might go on with the rest of the bill and, perhaps to-morrow, take up section 2 and report the bill, if that meets with the minister's approval.

Mr. RALSTON: It is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): May I ask if the fund provided by this appropriation, $700,000,000, provides for moneys necessary to pay for the manufacturing programme in this country of the British government or the allies?

Mr. RALSTON: There is a section in the bill which permits the dominion government to act as agent for the British government and allied governments, and for the time being recoverable charges would be paid out of this appropriation. They would be recoverable; that is, they would afterwards be repaid by the other government. .

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is no other appropriation out of which they would be paid?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. GILLIS: I rise at this time, not for the purpose of retarding the matter which is before the house, but to get some information on questions which appear to be bothering some of the men who are in uniform. I know that one of the essential things if we are to have a proper prosecution of the war is to satisfy the expeditionary force. The men who are going to do the fighting must be assured that they have something to fight for and that the government are paying strict attention to their dependents.

The first matter in which I am interested is set out in a letter which I received to-day from a boy from my own constituency who is now in England. He says that there is considerable criticism within the ranks in England at the present time because, he says, they are paid on a fixed rate of exchange; that is, the pound at the present time is valued at $4.47, and on every $5 they receive in wages they are losing 53 cents. The government should give some recognition to that complaint.

Another matter of which he complains is the differential that exists in the dependents' allowances, to the prejudice of the mother as against the wife. That matter has been raised here, but as far as I am aware, no satisfactory answer has been given.

There is another matter about which considerable complaint exists, and I should like some information on it. According to press reports it is the intention of the government to grant two weeks' leave with subsistence allowance to all members of the Canadian active service force in Canada after they have completed six months' training. According to my information that has not been done. It is reported that some have had leave, but that no subsistence allowance was granted. Many others have not had the furlough. What is the intention of the department of the Minister of National Defence with respect to this matter?

With regard to another matter I have had some trouble prior to coming here, and I know it has occasioned some correspondence with the Department of Pensions and National Health. It is probably a little unusual; nevertheless it exists. What is the regulation of the minister's department in respect of the following category: a married man with a wife and dependants, who was parted before enlistment, but who, in accordance with the court decision, was compelled to support his wife and child before enlistment, neglects to make provision for them? His wife has presented her marriage certificate and a copy of the court order granting her support. support had been taken from her by virtue of her husband's enlistment, he having failed to register at that time. Have there been any complaints of that kind? If so, what is the ruling in such cases?

These are several matters that are pertinent to the welfare of the men in uniform, and in my opinion, if we are to have a proper prosecution of the war, the men who are to do the fighting must be absolutely satisfied that we at home are taking care of all those matters which, however much we may be inclined to regard them as minor details, are nevertheless of major importance to them.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be glad to take a note of what the hon, gentleman has said and give him an answer to-morrow.

Mr. CHURCH: Some of this vote is for home defence, and much of it has to do with public buildings throughout Canada for war purposes. The explanatory notes opposite page 2 of the bill give a list of items for militia services, naval services and air services. It will be noticed, in the explanatory notes opposite page 2, which will have to be read into section 2, that a good deal of this work is for home defence. As I say, it has to do with public buildings, land services, construction, repairs to naval buildings, expenses of the Royal Military college, Nothwest Territories radio services and a good many other things which formerly appeared in the main estimates and to some extent in the supplementary estimates as well. The other day the minister declared a holiday from public works, but these items have to be taken into account.

Home defence in Canada is not as important as it is in the old country, which is so close to enemy activities, because they are only twenty-five to thirty miles from the war zone. It is of course of some importance, but in my opinion the minister should give the committee some information on three or four points. In the first place, what part of this expenditure is for home defence and how much of it is for overseas? I find that a number of the undertakings under this bill formerly appeared in the main and supplementary estimates. I should like to know, for instance, whether the pegging of wheat and other commodities, if that is decided upon by the house, is to be included in the expenditures that are to be made out of this $700,000,000. Then, again, there may be further bonuses, subventions, subsidies, for other protectional purposes later. Many of these items will come up also in the main estimates and the supplementary estimates, if any. Will they form a part of the expenditures out of this $700,000,-000? Last September the house voted $100,-000,000 and no part of that money was earmarked.

We are spending $700,000,000 now in connection with a war overseas, defence at home and as a protection to bonds, railway securities and public securities; yet there is not enough money to insure the men who are fighting our battles overseas, to give them this protection. I suggest that the minister should lay down some policy of soldier insurance for all Canadian soldiers such as they had in the United States in the last war. That effected an economy in other ways later and helped the soldier and his dependents; it was found cheaper and lessened pensions, bonuses and the like. I hope the minister will consider some system such as they had in the United States with a view to insuring every soldier who goes overseas, so that in the event of his death in action or of his coming home crippled there will be some means by insurance of reestablishing him in civil life after the war. An insurance system was set up in Toronto in the great war, and it aided recruiting and helped the dependents when the soldier was killed. There was no reason why the people should have done it in Toronto, but they did it as a means of helping recruiting and the war.

I think the time is coming when we should definitely consider the huge taxes placed on the shoulders of the people to-day, especially the industrial workers of Ontario and Quebec. They pay the large share of our taxation both direct and indirect. The people in these cities and towns, the working class, have suffered from unemployment and depression in the last few years, and now they are suffering the consequences of a second war. A large number of these men have enlisted, and I urge the minister to provide that a larger part of these war votes shall come out of capital account and not be so heavily charged into the tax rate and charged to income. There is too great a charge upon income at the present time. We all know that whether it is charged to income or to interest, debt charges and sinking fund, it falls back upon the main body of taxpayers, the industrial workers, especially in Ontario and Quebec. The people of these two provinces contributed 80 per cent of the cash taxes of Canada, and they got little or nothing in return during the depression. The minister ought to give them some consideration. It seems to me that we are going too far in charging so much by way of taxes directly to income in the country.

I find that a great deal of what is outlined in this bill had been eliminated from the main estimates. This section refers to the conduct of naval, military and air operations in or beyond Canada. If the minister is given power to pass orders in council, I hope he will see to it that some of the inequalities are removed as between those who serve on land or on sea and in the air. I do hope he will bring down a bill for the purpose of removing the discrepancies in dependency payments and removing inequalities found to exist from experience so far.

Mr. RALSTON: In reference to the purposes for which these moneys are to be used, the committee will understand that the section is, as I have endeavoured frankly to point out, as wide as it can be made having regard to all the circumstances. It is, I think, word for word the same appropriation act that was passed in the last war, which gave the government power to use the money for the purposes indicated. It cannot be otherwise. Peacetime or normal public works are not contemplated by this bill, and so far as I am concerned I shall endeavour to see to it that expenditures of that kind are not made under this measure. They belong to ordinary peacetime estimates. There are expenditures contemplated for buildings such as those for buildings in connection with the services and the air training plan. The air training plan expenditure would appear to be capital expenditure, but it has to be amortized over the life of the plant. I assure the committee that the objects set out in section 2 cannot be limited to any greater extent than they are, and I can only assure hon, members that every endeavour will be made to see that the expenditures shall have relation to objects connected with the war.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): We should have an explanation from the government to assist us in discussing this matter further. When this bill was in the resolution stage, the Prime Minister suggested that a committee would be set up representing all parties to receive confidential information regarding the appropriations. Is it the purpose of the government to set up that committee to review these appropriations before this bill is finally passed, or will that be discussed after the bill is passed?

Mr. RALSTON: I think the Prime Minister was going to discuss the matter further with the leader of the opposition; I believe that was what was intimated at the time. I thought we could go ahead with the bill in committee.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Does this appropriation cover ordinary peace-time expenditures necessary for administering the military, naval and air services?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, peace-time expenditure for military services.

Section stands.

[Mr. Church.]

On section 3—Government may act as agent.

Mr. RALSTON: I answered my hon, friend the leader of the opposition incorrectly when I intimated that this $700,000,000 was the only fund out of which moneys could be paid by the government in acting as agent for allied governments. As he will see from this section, moneys may be paid out of the consolidated fund, not necessarily out of the $700,000,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: This brings up a very important matter. I do not know whether this is the time to ask the Minister of Finance to give the committee some idea of the intentions of the government regarding the financing of allied expenditures through repatriation of Canadian securities. I take it from the wording of section 3 that it gives the government power in that regard. If so, I think the committee should have some idea, before passing this section, as to what the government intend to do in that connection. I am not objecting in any way to the government assisting the allies in this matter to the fullest degree. But I have heard a great deal of discussion as to the extent of the repatriation of Canadian securities held in Great Britain and the effect it may have on our own economy both now and after the war. I understand that in Great Britain there are something like $2,500,000,000 worth of Canadian securities held. If it is the intention to repatriate these during the course of the war, we might find ourselves in difficult circumstances unless we know exactly what is to be done when the securities have been repatriated. Are they to be sold to the general public as they are transferred to Canada, or are some of them to be retained by the government, and thus some organizations represented by those bonds become government-owned institutions? And how is it proposed to proceed in marketing securities if they are to be marketed? I do not want to delay the passage of the bill, but if this is the proper time, as from the wording of the section I judge it is, we might ask that a rather complete explanation of what this clause means might be given now.

Mr. RALSTON: I am one of those who hesitate to attempt to interpret a piece of legislation. It may turn out that the lawyers find that it means something different from what the legislators thought it meant. I always feel that one must take the wording of the clause and, if necessary, leave it to the courts to decide what it means.

It had not occurred to me until my hon. friend raised the point that this section was one under which repatriation procedure might be carried on. As a matter of fact, the provision was in the appropriation act at the time of the last war, and was in last year, and I recall one instance already in which it was found useful in making certain advances temporarily to one allied government for a certain emergent purpose which it was felt should be attended to at once without the delay which would be attendant on having to get a remittance from the other side. That is the type of thing I have in mind under this section. However, as my hon. friend will notice, it does provide that——any obligations or costs incurred temporarily or assumed by the government of Canada in the exercise of the powers hereby conferred may be paid out of any unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund.

But it is always prefaced by this, that in respect of the exercise of any powers under this section the government of Canada must be acting as agent for the government of any British or foreign country allied with his majesty. So I rather apprehend that it does not apply to repatriation proceedings such as my hon, friend suggested.

But, if it is convenient for the committee, let me finish now what I have to say regarding repatriation. I do not think I can add much to what I said the other day. Repatriation is simply one method which this government has adopted in order to provide Canadian dollars for our allies to purchase goods in Canada. It is a simple method; the leader of the opposition and I had a dialogue about it the other day; it simply means that Canadian securities have been sold in the British market and are held by British holders. The British government through their exchange control provide that all such securities must be registered, and the government have the right to requisition them from the holders. The British government needing Canadian dollars, and the Canadian government being willing to provide Canadian dollars for the British government, say to that government in effect, We will take these securities which have been absorbed by the British market and see that they are absorbed by the Canadian market and Canadian dollars representing the purchase price put to your credit. In turn the British government credit the holders of the securities with the amount represented by them and pay them the necessary funds in pounds, shillings and pence. As a matter of fact, the sum of $91,000,000 of one of our issues was repatriated during the first three or four months of the war. Since that time there have been some other operations; certain credits have been extended; certain substantial accumulations of sterling have taken place and exist at the present time. As I intimated to the house when introducing the resolution, I have authorized another very substantial sum by way of accumulation of sterling, which means that in connection with certain transactions between us and the British government we did not ask them to pay in Canadian dollars but were content that for the time being sterling should be credited to our account in London. It may be that later on repatriation procedure may be taken-I was going to say to regularize that, but to settle the outstanding balance so that the British government in effect, gets the Canadian dollars for that sterling. At the present time I can describe it as more or less an open account; a very large balance in sterling is to our credit for goods sold by Canada. This will later be closed out by a repatriation operation.

As to the extent of repatriation operations from this time on, I have in mind quite definitely an arrangement arrived at with the British government as to the extent of the operations and the nature of certain intermediate operations which would take place between the two governments. The committee will understand that I do not feel at liberty to disclose the nature of those arrangements, because it will be understood that they affect the economy of both countries, and securities and exchange transactions in both countries. I can only say that the undertaking Canada is entering into in that regard is a very substantial one and I believe will be of material assistance to our allies; in fact, it has been indicated in very unreserved terms that such is the case.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): While the minister is on this subject, I should like to mention something along the same line, although probably it will not be quite in order until we reach the next section. It is with regard to the repatriation of Canadian bonds and Canadian dollars, particularly from the United States. As the minister knows, shortly after war was declared Canadian bonds in the United States dropped considerably below the Canadian level, with the result that there was considerable bootlegging, if I may call it that for lack of a better word, of Dominion of Canada bonds from the New York market. These bonds were brought to Canada and sold, and some unscrupulous financiers made a good deal of money out of that practice. I should like to ask the minister what new or further safeguards the foreign exchange control board are putting into effect to stop that practice, particularly in view of the announcement made by the minister last night with regard to the sale of war certificates.

I might add one further question along the same line. Many hundreds of thousands of Canadian dollars are finding their way across the border and are being bought up, even by Canadians, in such places as Buffalo, for example. I have in mind one incident which occurred just yesterday. Canadian dollars spent in Buffalo are being accumulated by people in that city at 78 cents each, and quite a few of those dollars will find their way back into Canada to buy some of the very war certificates of which the minister spoke so highly last night. Now that the question of the repatriation of Canadian funds has been opened, I wonder if the minister would give us a statement as to what is being done to protect our interests in this connection.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think the committee will expect, as I am sure my hon. friend will not, that I should go into the details of the foreign exchange control regulations, because they are really extremely intricate. I can only state the general principles. My hon, friend mentions the bootlegging of Canadian bonds, by which I think he means that a non-resident holder buys Canadian bonds at a low rate in the New York market and succeeds in getting a Canadian resident to purchase the bonds, giving him Canadian money for them. That, of course, is an export of capital and is contrary to the regulations; it is an export of the capital necessary to pay the United States holder for the bonds. I can assure the committee that every effort has been made to deal with that situation, and if there can be any tightening up of the regulations, that will be done.

Mr. HOMUTH: Is there any particular control over that? The bonds held in the United States are bearer bonds, are they not?

Mr. RALSTON: Even bearer bonds payable in United States currency but held by a Canadian resident are registered with the foreign exchange control board. But in the case of bonds held by United States residents it is not the bond, it is the Canadian purchaser's bank balance over which there is control. That is to say, the payment by the Canadian out of that bank balance is what is prohibited, because that is really an export of capital.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I merely bring this to the attention of the minister and of the committee in the hope of drawing from the minister an emphatic statement that the government will take this problem definitely in hand. Then people who are in this most unscrupulous business will know that the government is aware of what is going on and will take drastic steps to deal with it. My purpose in mentioning this matter is purely constructive, to try to stamp out an evil which to my mind is one of the worst in which anyone interested in finance in this country can be implicated.

I have something to say about the war certificates but I will say that when we come to the proper section. In passing, I may say that I hope there will be no scandalous financial operations with regard to the raising of part of this money by way of loan. I should like to have the minister make an emphatic statement with regard to the repatriation of Canadian funds, indicating that every possible precaution will be taken so that no unscrupulous methods will be tolerated.

Mr. RALSTON: As a rule, committees are reluctant to accept general statements from ministers in connection with these matters. I appreciate my hon. friend's motive in mentioning this situation. I was saying that I thought it was not the matter of the bonds, but rather the matter of the bank balances, the Canadian who buys cheap Canadian bonds from an American who has purchased them in that market. That is contrary to the regulations, and I say to my hon. friend most emphatically that if I can do anything to make that regulation more effective, he may be sure it will be done. With regard to the matter of Canadian dollars, of course my hon, friend understands that this money may be carried down to the United States, or there may be a Canadian balance held by a United States resident, who may sell it cheaply in the United States. The result is that somebody buys cheap Canadian dollars and comes up here to spend them, possibly for war savings certificates, as my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. HOMUTH: Would it be possible to have all bondholders registered?

Mr. RALSTON: Canadian holders of Canadian securities payable in United States currency must register with the Foreign Exchange Control Board even if they hold bearer bonds. They must register as holders of those bonds.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They cannot collect the interest unless they do.

Mr. RALSTON: That is correct; and of course we have a check through the banks when the interest coupons are paid. That registration is complete. Generally speaking, I have mentioned the way in which cheap Canadian dollars get into what some people call the free market, although it has other names, particularly with us. There is another instance, when someone who is in Canada visiting, goes back with a few Canadian dollars in his pocket. He does not want to keep them and sells them cheaply in the United States. That creates a little more money in the so-called free market.

Mr. COLDWELL: When the hon. member for Danforth rose, I was going to ask another question. I quite understand that there is some difficulty about divulging to the House of Commons and the public any information concerning this matter of the repatriation of Canadian securities, because of the effect it might have on the economy of the countries involved. But we are engaging in very considerable commitments which may have an effect upon our whole economic structure. There is only one way in which this house really controls the government; that is, in the voting of moneys and the agreeing to commitments and expenditures. As I say, I realize the necessity of safeguarding the economy of the countries concerned, but I think that is a reason why this information should be given a committee before we pass upon this matter. I do not want to delay the bill, and I am not suggesting that we should do that; but if we should get an undertaking from the government that a committee of this house will be given an opportunity to look into and study this matter thoroughly, I have no objection to the passing of this section. This house controls the purse-strings of the government, and in my opinion the answer of the minister, from that point of view alone, is unsatisfactory. I think we should have an opportunity of knowing exactly what are the financial commitments and to what extent we are being involved before we are asked to approve a section of this kind.

This evening the minister made a remark similar to one he made earlier in the day, to the effect that he hesitated to interpret a section of the bill, that this was a matter for the courts rather than a matter of what the legislators had in mind. This afternoon the minister said he did not know what the draftsman had in mind in drawing up a section in a certain way. I really think we should en-deavour to get these bills into such shape that we will know what we have in mind, and that nothing can be read into these measures which will give the government wider powers than it is intended should be conferred at the present time. As is suggested to me, if the minister does not know the exact meaning of the phraseology of his own bill, how can we be expected to know what the bill actually means?

Mr. RALSTON: I know what I think the bill means, but I am not the one to decide. My hon. friend has been a legislator long enough to realize that some bills go through this house which are supposed to mean certain things and yet they turn out to mean something else, not because anyone has attempted to mislead but simply because of interpretation. Therefore, I hesitate to paraphrase a bill. It seems to me it is much better to read the section and endeavour to understand it; we should endeavour to get an interpretation which may be sound and pass it if the principle approves itself to us. My hon, friend has brought up the matter of repatriation of securities, but I do not think this section has to do with that. We shall not be acting as an agent of the British government in repatriating our own securities; we shall be purchasing securities for our own account.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I was just about to make the same observation as the minister. In the repatriation of our own securities we will be conducting what is more or less a refunding operation. As I understand it, this is limited to the securities of the Dominion of Canada and is being done for the convenience of our own treasury, to build up in the old country a sterling balance which may be needed at some future time. I am quite in agreement with what the minister has said about the construction placed by the courts on clauses of bills. I have been faced with this many times in the course of the last thirty-five or forty years. The government is asking authority to act as agent for the allied governments in any contingency that may arise.

Mr. GREEN: The Canadian government is to have the power to act as agent for the British government for any purpose, direct or indirect, which will aid in the prosecution of the war. If I may do so under this section, I would ask the government to give some explanation of the difficulties which seem to have arisen in the working out of the British commonwealth air training plan. For example, in the press of Vancouver on Monday last, a week ago to-day, there appeared this report:

Vancouver's air training programme for war pilots will not start for another year.

This unexpected prediction from Ald. H. D. Wilson, chairman, drew indignant comment from the civic airport committee to-day.

Ald. Wilson blamed lack of organization and "official red tape" for delay in commencing local instruction of Canadian war birds.

Decision to turn over the Sea Island airport—

That is the Vancouver airport.

—to the federal government for duration of the war was made by the city council two months ago, and it had been expected the air training scheme would be under way by now.

That is a most disturbing statement. It may not be correct, but I think it should be explained. I understand also that tenders [Mr. Ralston.]

have not even been called for in connection with certain training fields on the prairies which will be required to carry out this air training plan. I understand also that unless work is commenced within the next two or three weeks, these fields cannot be completed this year. I hope the minister will be able to assure us that these difficulties are being ironed out.

Mr. ROGERS: In the absence of the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power), perhaps I can supply some of the information my hon, friend desires. In the first place, the fact that a particular school is not to be opened in Vancouver until such and such a date does not of itself imply that the air training plan is running behind schedule.

Mr. GREEN: This report says it will not be ready until next year.

Mr. ROGERS: If I may just go on with my explanation, the air training plan as outlined to us—I want to emphasize this again—by the United Kingdom government embraced a development over a three-year period. That was a plan which was put to us at a time when the British government was of the opinion that we should plan for a war which would continue for three years.

Mr. ROWE: When was that plan put forward?

Mr. ROGERS: It was put to us in October of 1939.

Mr. ROWE: Would the minister not say that the present crisis might accentuate the need for training?

Mr. ROGERS: Most certainly, and if my hon. friend will permit me to continue, I think I can satisfy him on that question as well. I merely wish to point out that the air training plan was worked out on a basis which provided for the progressive development of air training schools right across this country during this three year period. In the nature of things the government decided that it would develop first the schools at its own military aerodromes. It would then develop further the schools at aerodromes made available by Trans-Canada Air Lines. These aerodromes were already in a position to supply facilities for training purposes. It was decided that we would then continue with the construction of new aerodromes, which would become available as and when required. I can assure my hon, friend that the schedules that were worked out by the various air missions, those of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and Can-ada, were followed faithfully up to the present crisis. Until that time the members of the various governments that made up the supervisory board followed the progress of the plan and expressed satisfaction with that progress.

Having said that, I agree at once with my hon, friends that the grave situation which has developed in recent weeks presents us with a new problem, not only in relation to the air training plan but in relation to all our plans, for both military and naval operations. The Minister of National Defence for Air has already given to the house his statement that every possible means will be taken to expedite the output of pilots and air men, either within or outside the plan. I need hardly say that that is the wish of this government, as it would be the wish of any government in the face of the situation which confronts us at the present time.

Mr. GREEN: It really does not do much good to blame the British government. Perhaps we should blame our own parliament as a whole, but certainly the Canadian government is not free from blame.

Mr. ROGERS: I am simply stating the facts.

Mr. GREEN: The minister made no mention of the air training fields on the prairies.

Mr. ROGERS: If my hon. friend will permit me, although my colleague, the Minister of National Defence for Air, can answer this more effectively and it is his responsibility; provision has been made to go ahead with the construction of these aerodromes this year in advance of the schedule.

Mr. GREEN: Will either minister say whether or not they are to be completed this year so that they can be used?

Mr. POWER: The decision has been arrived at to proceed with these aerodromes this summer with the greatest possible expedition, even though under the original scheme and plan they were not to be done until next summer.

Mr. GREEN: There are no fields that will not be completed until next year?

Mr. POWER: Not if we can help it.

Mr. ROWE: When were the qualified pilots supposed to be turned out from the commonwealth air training scheme itself?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): As originally planned.

Mr. POWER: There is a schedule. I would have to consult to ascertain whether I am at liberty to give the exact dates at which the first or second or any other class of pilots were to be turned out. But they will be turned out on schedule.

Mr. ROWE: It appears to me that this strikes at the vital principle in our whole air training scheme. We are told now, or the impression is given that we cannot march any faster than Britain dictates that we shall.

Mr. ROGERS: That was the original position. That was the position.

Mr. ROWE: I would hope it is not the position.

Mr. ROGERS: It is not the position.

Mr. ROWE: Because it is only a short time ago that we were told in this house that we must have full control, full management, full ownership and full operation of our military affairs. Surely now, when the crisis has arrived, we can at least give our maximum, whether or not it is the minimum required by the mother country.

Mr. POWER: It may take a little time to answer, because this whole air training scheme is complicated, and perhaps the committee will bear with me if I am not as clear on it as I might be. But in any case approaches were made to the government of Canada some time towards the end of September, 1939, by the government of the United Kingdom asking the government of Canada, with the government of Australia and that of New Zealand, to join in a plan for the development of air pilots, gunners and observers. That plan was definitely a long range plan. There was a great deal of discussion. Missions came here from Great Britain and from the other two colonies interested in the scheme-I mean dominions.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That word is taboo.

Mr. ROWE: It is acting like a colony now.

Mr. POWER: I would ask my hon. friend if he prefers Canada, in a colonial status, to be told what to do, or to sit down at a conference table and talk, as he would in any other business transaction.

Mr. ROWE: I was saying that we were acting like colonials.

Mr. POWER: We are acting as a partner in a business transaction. Only now it may be that we may have—out of a sense of duty and loyalty—to carry more of the burden than originally it was anticipated we would have to carry.

Mr. ROWE: I would hope so.

Mr. POWER: The plan was agreed to in December, 1939, and a contract signed by all the parties to it. It calls for a wide expansion in the air training programmes of each of the three dominions, and for joint training in Canada in the more advanced stages of pupils from Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom. Practically all air recruits in the United Kingdom were to be trained at home. Practically all of those in Australia were to be trained at home, although Australia, New Zealand and Great Britain were to send a proportion of their trainees here for their advanced training. All of the Canadian trainees were to receive their training in the Dominion of Canada.

The initial and elementary training was to be carried on in Canada for Canadian pupils only. I will not go into the question of how those trainees are to be selected. The training programme contemplated making full use of the existing facilities of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and the aerodromes which the Department of Transport had developed for the use of the Trans-Canada Air Lines. In addition, it was considered necessary to proceed to the construction of a very large number of new aerodromes in different parts of the dominion. When the programme is in full operation, some eighty-seven aerodromes, including relief landing grounds, will be required.

Work of constructing these aerodromes has been taken over by the Department of Transport on behalf of the Department of National Defence. Large supplies of equipment and stores will be needed. In each of the sixteen service flying training schools, there are required 108 planes, approximately. Twenty-seven machines are needed for each of the twenty-six elementary flying training schools, and ten observer schools call for twenty-four aircraft per unit. Ten bombing and gunnery schools require seventy-five machines each. Aircraft for two air navigation schools call for forty-eight machines each.

The United Kingdom, in connection with her part of the cost of the undertaking, had agreed to supply most of the aircraft, including engines and spares. Apart from the aircraft supplied by the United Kingdom, the light aircraft for elementary training and a portion of the other aircraft will be made in Canada.

The aircraft to be made in Canada will be included with the other costs in the air training programme, which is to be divided between Canada, Australia and New Zealand in proportion to the use to be made of the various facilities by the pupils of the three countries. This means that excluding the cost of the aircraft provided by the United Kingdom Canada will bear the cost of the [Mr. Rowe.]

initial and elementary training in Canada and about four-fifths of the remaining costs of the programme.

The duration of the agreement is until March 31, 1943. This may be extended. For the fiscal year 1940-41 we are asking for a net of approximately $124,000,000. The direction and control of the air training plan are vested in the Minister of National Defence for Air.

There is a supervisory board of the four partners in the scheme. The supervisory board has one representative from Great Britain, Sir Gerald Campbell, and with him is associated his technical adviser, Air Vice-Commodore McKeen. Sir William Glasgow is from Australia, and from New Zealand there is Group Captain Izitt. The Canadian representatives are the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), together with the chief of the air staff, Air Vice-Marshal Croil, and Air Commodore Johnston, the head of the training organization. The supervisory board meets every month and reports progress on the scheme.

Perhaps I ought to say that the plan is intended to provide an ever-increasing flow of trained pilots, air observers, and air gunners, whose arrival in England would coincide with the expansion of her aircraft production and equipment manufacturing facilities, along with her purchases of these from abroad.

The work is proceeding accurately, and according to plan. Aerodromes are being surveyed or developed, and some are already in operation. Many types of buildings are in process of construction. Some are already constructed. Hangars have been selected, and public buildings or institutions have been taken over. Every province of the dominion is represented in this air training scheme.

There is a real need for intensive air training. It is commonly thought that all that is necessary to train a service pilot is to teach him to fly an aircraft of any type.

Mr. BROOKS: How long does it take to train a pilot from the time he commences as a raw recruit until he is turned out as an experienced pilot, fit to go to the front?

Mr. POWER: I should be very glad to place that information on Hansard, and not only that but also the steps which are necessary. I believe at first there was some hesitation in stating the number of weeks which were required to carry a pilot through the various stages. But since it has been bruited abroad, and even mentioned in a number of speeches, I have discussed with the officers of the department the advisability of placing the information on Hansard. Although I have not the information before me, I have it upstairs, and will place it on Hansard. It consists of a chart indicating how long the pilot remains in the initial stage, how long in the elementary flying school, how long in the intermediate school, how long in the wireless school, the observers' school, the bombing and gunnery school, and so on.

The scheme in graph form gives a better picture of it than any description which I have been able to read up to the present and it appears on page 256.

Mr. ROWE: The minister mentioned elementary schools. Are any such schools in operation now?

Mr. POWER: I think there are two, although I shall have to check on that. I believe there are two in operation by contracts with flying clubs. There will be twenty-six in operation when the scheme is completed.

Mr. ROWE: Could the minister tell me where they are?

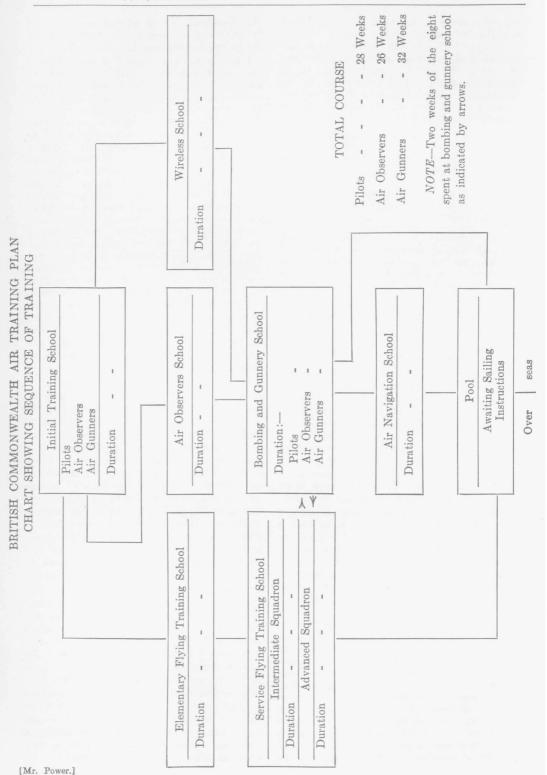

Mr. POWER: There is one at Malton. A contract has been entered into with the Toronto flying club to carry on an elementary training school at Malton. Perhaps my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence is more familiar than I am with the details. In any event, what I wish to impress on the committee is that you cannot just take a man and teach him how to fly and make an air pilot out of him, any more than you can make a wireless operator or a bomber or an observer out of him. These men have to go through the course just as though they went through a university, and flying is only a small part of their education. Even then a man's full time at the school cannot be devoted solely to flying. There are a number of subjects of a service nature such as theory of flight, air firing, bombing, navigation, the study of aircraft engines and air frames, all of which enter into the curriculum and must be mastered by the pupil before he can graduate as a service pilot. The training plan syllabus has been drawn up after years of experience and provides that these subjects be covered progressively. The fact that the training plan does not immediately produce thousands of pilots, observers and air gunners as if by magic is probably no fair criticism of the organization. As has been pointed out, this is an undertaking, so far as Canada is concerned, of unparalleled magnitude, which aims, not at furnishing momentarily a limited amount of assistance to the air arm of the British empire, but at playing a major part in establishing complete air supremacy for the British commonwealth.

I realize-no one realizes it more than I do-that a plan such as this is not of the greatest possible benefit at a moment of crisis such as has arisen at the present time. The plan was conceived by the British government and submitted to us in Canada. That there will be difficulties in carrying it out to the letter goes without saying. The rapidity with which the war upset prearranged plans is obvious to all, and it may be necessary before long to make modifications to suit changed conditions. Any situation which would prevent the United Kingdom from fulfilling its part would necessitate an acceptance of even greater responsibilities by Canada and the other dominions who are partners in the plan. For instance, certain supplies of aircraft and equipment were to be furnished exclusively by the British government as their contribution. Up to the present the deliveries required have been made, but no man knows to what extent the development of hostilities may interfere with these deliveries. It may be necessary to enter into commitments and undertakings not foreseen last December, or even three weeks ago.

Not only is every consideration being given in this regard, but definite action is being taken, the details of which I cannot give the committee at the present time. I want to make clear to the committee, however, that we are not sitting down quietly awaiting a time when the entire machinery may break down. Alternate schemes are being thought out wherever there is a possibility of suspension or postponement. Up to the present, and that is within the last few hours, our partners in the plan have requested that we adhere to it in all particulars permitted by circumstances, and we are doing so, but that has not precluded us from making such provision as should be made to speed up and accelerate every phase of it.

That is the situation. It was a long range plan, carefully conceived, and was to be carried out with care so that the pilots would arrive at the time that the proper equipment was ready for them on the other side. We have been asked to adhere to that plan in so far as circumstances will permit. We have done so and we are doing so, but we propose not to wait until something happens in order to have to improvise a new plan, and we are giving our best thought and all our energy to preparing against such eventualities as may occur, in order to accelerate the plan.

Mr. ADAMSON: May I point out to the Minister of National Defence for Air that the Toronto flying club at Malton, which is the largest flying club in Canada, has had so far only thirty-five students joining up with the club, and in the last month no students have joined the club to receive their initial training at Malton. There are a sufficient number of what is known as ab initio trainers at Malton, and they have their plan and their planes and their instructors all ready, but they have not had a sufficient number of students to utilize the plan to the full. I bring this to the attention of the minister.

Mr. POWER: I shall be very glad to check that and give my hon, friend a reply tomorrow.

Mr. ROWE: I do not wish to speak of this matter in any critical way, or to review our past failures in connection with it. But it seems to me rather a sad spectacle that we cannot now move any faster than we can get certain parts from the old land. If we are running true to form as a self-governing country with such special characteristics in the way of sovereign rights and with so special a type of political sovereignty as was expressed in this chamber two or three years ago, when this scheme might have been started, why have we not done more? I will not enlarge on the subject, because I have already spoken about it. But it does appear to me that the Minister of National Defence for Air, who is just as aggressive as anybody, and proved to be so before, in a similar cause, should give careful consideration to the advisability of not only speeding up the training of air pilots but developing our air fields throughout Canada.

Mr. POWER: That is being done.

Mr. ROWE: Having some knowledge of practical operations, I am not at all satisfied with the state of our air training fields throughout the dominion, some of which, although the minister did not mention the fact, I have reason to believe are not planned to be completed until 1942.

Mr. POWER: There were some fields, under the plan and scheme as laid down by the partners, which were not planned for completion until 1942, but I have already stated to the committee that we are going to endeavour to complete each and every one of them this summer.

Mr. ROWE: That is encouraging. We have had much information to-day which is encouraging. I am glad that the crisis, if not the disaster, to say nothing of what has been said from this side of the house, has shocked the government into some action. And I know, we are all one with regard to the purpose which we are all anxious to achieve. As regards the contracts which are now being let for air training fields to be completed in November or December, I believe, having some knowledge of these matters in operation, that the fields could be completed in half the time.

Mr. POWER: If the hon, member will tell me the names, I will tell the Minister of Transport, and we will hustle them along. We will all work together.

Mr. ROWE: I shall be very glad to do so. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. POWER: There is nothing I am more anxious to know.

Mr. ROWE: I shall be very glad to tell the minister privately of some that I am aware of.

An hon. MEMBER: He would not talk to you about it.

Mr. ROWE: My hon, friend says he would not talk to me about it. I have known the minister longer than my hon. friend has, and I think he will. The end justifies the means. There is an old saying that we are daughter in our mother's house, but mistress in our own. We must branch out in a time of crisis and show that we have some initiative. Two or three years ago we could not branch out because if we ventured to do so, the question of our sovereignty came up. Now that we are working in close cooperation with the rest of the empire, I had hoped that we would not be deterred by any inability to move faster than they. Some hon, members have said that Britain and France have not gone ahead as rapidly as they should have done. Well, we should exercise our sovereignty, the political status that we have been talking about for years, and show some initiative ourselves. In that regard I am glad to know that the government are alive to the situation, at least to some extent, and that they are going to try to meet the conditions that are changing from day to day. I can assure them that they will get every cooperation from this side of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: Some of my hon. friends would not understand that, but this afternoon they heard many suggestions from this side of the house, suggestions which they might very well consider, with reference to alien enemies, for example, suggestions with reference to national registration, suggestions with reference to recruiting.

Mr. POTTIER: What suggestions did you make in 1939?

Mr. ROWE: I made some suggestions that the hon. gentleman did not agree with. We had some suggestions this afternoon from the hon. member for Haldimand with reference to foodstuffs. The hon, member for Lincoln gave a suggestion. Surely no one will suggest that it is not a matter of paramount importance to guard as carefully as possible a canal through which freight moves to the extent of 12,000,000 tons a year, and hydro power that serves the nation's industry. I could not help realizing at the time the catastrophe to which this country is exposed if anything happens in that connection. The minister and every other member of the government, especially those who had experience in the last war, must realize what a tragedy it would be if anything happened in those districts. We have seen the development of nazism and fascism; we have seen signs of espionage and sabotage, with all the cunning and subtle devices of the enemy. Surely we have had ample warning. We have seen eight or nine different countries overrun not only by nazism but by all the subversive influences that preceded its advance. I say, we should stop, look and listen.

An hon. MEMBER: You should be stopped.

Mr. ROWE: You have been stopped too long; that is the trouble. I repeat, the hour of crisis is here, and I do not wish for one moment to weary the committee with any review of what we have not done in the pastwe have all made mistakes. I urge upon the government the importance of considering all these suggestions that have been made. It is what we are going to do in the future that counts. If it is the last thing I ever do in this house, I hope it will be to offer some constructive criticism at this juncture. I would therefore urge the Minister of National Defence for Air to give these questions his careful consideration. He was a worthy soldier in the last war and I have no doubt he is just as much interested now, but he has been involved in the complacency of the party surrounding him, and I fear some of the spirit which he showed then may have been killed. I think it is fortunate that two or three of the members of the cabinet experienced a similar grave state of affairs a quarter of a century ago, and if they are aroused we may find that they are capable of greater action than the public realizes. I am not speaking in order to save what is left of our party but rather to save the government themselves from their own iniquity. I would say to them: Give careful consideration not only to the general plea that has been made for caution but to the suggestion that you look into each individual contract and see whether, if a contract is to be completed by December, every effort cannot be made to have it finished by the first of October. With the machinery we possess to-day it is amazing what can be done. As a farmer, if I were not a member of the House of Commons, I could take any of the training fields and finish the work in half the time the government are asking the tenderers to do it in.

Mr. POWER: I saw a letter to-day from some municipality where I believe it is proposed that there shall be an air field, and I mention this because it is of some encouragement to me and bears on what is being discussed. That municipality requests that it be given permission to clear the air field by its citizens at their own expense. I mention this because we may get some offers from other municipalities who have been very anxious to have air ports. They said they would do it in two weeks.

Mr. ROWE: Certainly. There are two that are going to be cleared in my county. Rather than see the empire collapse, there are enough farmers in the district to clear them in a month. There are many things that we can do. The minister may recall the story told by the former member for Mount Royal. He told us that a rabbit climbed a tree when he was out hunting. Somebody had said the rabbit could not do it, but that rabbit had to climb the tree.

I do not wish to leave the impression that I am criticizing for the sake of criticism. I should like to leave some proposals with the government for consideration, because I am sure that some hon, gentlemen opposite are convinced of my sincerity. I would ask the government to consider the question of rushing these air training fields. Have them leveled off and prepared for service. Why be over fussy? I have heard the statement-it may be untrue, it may be only gossip, but I have heard it—that the inspectorship of aeroplanes that are being turned out is so extremely critical that objection is raised if there is a scratch on the paint on the outside of the chassis. I urge the minister to look into this matter. As a practical farmer I know that I can haul as many turnips in a wagon that is not painted as in one that is painted. We have a job to do; let us do it. The pilot is not concerned with the colour of the paint on the plane when he has to meet the blitzkrieg of the enemy.

With regard to the question of protection, which has been discussed by the hon. member for Lincoln, I suggest that every means be taken to bring this entirely under the department of the Minister of National Defence, working in conjunction with the provincial police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. We have not half the protection we need. There are bridges between Canada and the United States that are not protected at all. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police are the pride of Canada just as the local police are the pride of every city. But, after all, we have only a small number of these men for this vast country. They are gallant fellows. Many of them have spent four or five years of the best of their lives, many lost their lives, and this would be as great a job as they have done in Canada for many years.

This national crisis is far too great for such a small force. In all sincerity I urge the government-and I am not critical because they did not do it yesterday, because I know the crisis of to-day is different from that of yesterday and perhaps to-morrow will be different from to-day-to give serious consideration to doubling that force, if necessary, to enlist the services of 10,000 ex-service men throughout this dominion. Scores of them are appealing to me every week for something to do. And a man who served in the last war, even though he be sixty years of age, if he is still reasonably fit physically, is of much more value as a guard of a bridge or canal or power transmission service than some young fellows of eighteen, twenty or twenty-two years of age with no military experience. These ex-service men have special value in a crisis. If Canada were invaded, such men would be of paramount value in dealing with swift mechanized assault that other countries have experienced. Their capacity for judgment and decision on the spur of the moment is of more importance than the capacity to endure three or four years of trench warfare. Many hon, members here would be unable to endure long marches, but for a blitzkrieg of two or three days the Minister of National Defence for Air would, I am sure, be of more value from his experience in the last great war than a man who might be able to stand twenty- four months of hardship in the cold, wet trenches. These ex-service men would be of paramount value not only for the protection of transportation and vital points, but if the occasion arose they could be used in other capacities.

Another suggestion to which I hope the government might give consideration is this. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have done a great job; in many parts of this country if there are signs of subversive influences they would be appealed to. I believe they are the proper body to which to send complaints. But in my county I have not seen a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in twenty years. I believe the same could be said of the adjoining county. Perhaps there are places where they are needed more. But if a man in such a district has working for him a nazi representative who is trying to spread subversive influences, to whom is he going to report it? He wonders whether he should report to the clerk of the municipality, to the county police, to the provincial police. I know for a fact some have gone to certain newspapers. The government might well consider setting up at different points throughout the dominion an organization or bureau, not of information but for information, consisting of returned men. I may point out that this would relieve the government. As the Minister of Justice said this afternoon, there would not be even the semblance of politics in it. I do not want to charge the Minister of Justice or any other member of the government with playing politics; I know how well they have played it in normal times, but I exonerate them from playing it in this time of crisis. But I believe that bureaux for information should be set up in places like Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, Belleville, Toronto, and county towns as well. We have seen what these subversive influences have done in other countries far in advance of the invading enemy, and we have now these bitter experiences for our guidance. Our returned men stand ready clamouring for something to do, and their experience in the last awful crisis qualifies them to give leadership in this.

I hope these few suggestions may be accepted in the spirit in which they are made, not as criticism of what has not been done. This country is at war; now that the crisis is here, let us get on a war footing and realize that there are subversive influences at work in this country just as in other countries, and surely we can benefit from the experience of other countries in that regard.

Mr. GOLDING: Can the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Defence give us some estimate of the cost of the British fighting machines?

Mr. POWER: If my hon, friend means the amount as measured by planes that are to be supplied under the plan, it is $180,000,000. That is the amount of the contribution of the United Kingdom government. Canada's contribution is $360,000,000, and Australia and New Zealand contribute in proportion to the use they make of the schools. That is over a period of three and a half years.

Mr. GOLDING: My question arises from a statement made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) the other night. I should like to know what the cost would be to manufacture these 25,000 British fighting planes. The hon. member said, as reported on page 182 of Hansard:

I say that the government to your right, Mr. Speaker, will stand condemned on the pages of Canadian history for not having overseas in support of those gallant boys to-night at least twenty-five thousand British fighting planes.

I should like to know what the cost of 25,000 fighting planes would be, and the length of time it would take to manufacture, or to set up plants to manufacture, that sort of thing. We ought to keep in mind in discussing these matters the time it takes to establish plants for the manufacture of fighting machines or munitions. I had some experience as shop foreman in the plant at home during the last war. We got a contract for shells, I think in March, 1915; we had to set up the whole plant, tool the machines, and we were not shipping shells until November of that year. In addition, every machine operated in manufacturing the shells was manned by a person who had had no previous experience in machine work at all. We had to take the time not only to set up the plant and tool the machines but to train the men to operate them. Anyone who has gone through that experience will have some idea of the time it would take and the cost of setting up plants for that production. It cannot be done overnight. I am not saving this in a critical way. I just want the information, if I can get it, as to what would be the cost to Canada of supplying 25,000 fighting machines and the length of time it would take to set up plants to handle that production.

Mr. ROWE: The hon, member is asking the minister, but perhaps he will permit me to remind him that while I referred to fighting planes I meant that they would be piloted by Canadian-trained pilots. The scheme to which I had reference, according to my understanding and the general rumour throughout this country, and indeed in Great Britain, was that at that time Britain proposed to pay for the scheme herself and to train 25,000 pilots in Canada each year. Apparently our status would not permit that to be done, but now we are led to believe that same status permits us to move no faster than Great Britain asks us to move.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon, friend referred to this scheme the other night. I was not in the house at the time and I have not taken the trouble since to answer him. I really thought that what we were engaged with was the present, not the past. Since my hon. friend has mentioned this matter again to-night, however, perhaps we can just clear it up in a few minutes; at least let me say a word about it. I want to say to my hon. friend that I have examined the records, and that the largest number ever suggested by the British government in connection with the training of pilots in Canada was in the first part of 1938, when they suggested the training of 300 pilots a year; not 25,000 but 300. There is quite some difference between those figures.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is that proposal in writing?

Mr. RALSTON: That suggestion was submitted to the Royal Canadian Air Force; and if I remember correctly, according to the records the answer came back that instead of 300 the number might be $235,\ I$ believe 201 for Britain and 34 for Canada. That proposition was submitted to Britain, and they came back with the suggestion that the number should be 135. I should have said that when the Prime Minister made the statement in this house to the effect that he felt this should be a Canadian scheme, instead of its being suggested in the British house, that never again would Great Britain ask Canada for anything, the Minister for Air, Sir Kingsley Wood, thanked Canada for that offer. I believe that statement was made in the House of Commons and placed upon Hansard. Finally, the arrangement was made for 50 pilots a year, and in 1939 this house voted $6,000,000 for the cost of that training.

That is the story with regard to the training of British pilots, as I read the records. So I do not think there is much point in anyone going back and talking about 25,000 pilots a year in connection with that previous arrangement, or saying that if the scheme had been in operation now, the training would have been completed and we would have had 25,000 pilots or any such number over there to-night if that scheme had been carried out. In point of fact, it was suggested that this should be a Canadian scheme, and the number was changed as the result of discussions carried on from time to time, discussions in which the British high commissioner participated all the way through. The British government thanked the Canadian government and accepted the proposition for the training of 50 pilots a year. That is the story with regard to that previous air training scheme, and this house voted money for it, together with money for the training of Canadian pilots.

[Mr. Power.]

I have taken this much time to deal with this matter because my hon. friend has seen fit to refer to it once more. One further word and I have finished, because I am going through with this bill no matter what my hon. friends say in criticism with reference to the past. My hon, friend used one other word to which I want to refer. He used the word "complacency." If there is any word I dislike, it is that word "complacency;" and if there is any word that is foreign to my nature, if I may be pardoned for saying so, it is that word "complacency". Whatever may be my shortcomings, I do not think I can be accused of that. I am not satisfied with what goes on even in my own life, or with anything else that goes on around me. I think perhaps I may claim the reputation of being somewhat of a troublesome person, in that I am all too seldom satisfied with things as they are.

Mr. ROWE: I did not charge the minister with that. I said he was surrounded by a certain amount of it.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon, friend did use that word "complacency".

Mr. ROWE: I did not refer to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of National Defence for Air.

Mr. RALSTON: Then I have taken it to myself as a member of this government; for I have been here since September, and I accept my share of responsibility for what has taken place since that time. I say that is not a fair word. We endeavoured to work out a plan which we believed was sound, sane, forward looking and far-reaching, and indeed a heavy plan for Canada; and we have tried to carry out that plan to the best of our ability. We have not slacked on it for a moment. The ministers who have been engaged in carrying out that plan have done their level best in connection with it. I am not at all worried about what history may say. The thing I count as worth while in life is this, that if a man has in his own heart the feeling that he has done the best he could, it does not matter what history says. That is my feeling, and I say we have endeavoured to do the very best we could in connection with what we regarded as a full sized job for Canada.

Now, after having approved the first and second divisions and the ancillary troops which have gone overseas; after having increased the naval forces as we have; after having increased the air force; after having provided for the defence of the east and west coasts; after having undertaken the air training scheme and carried it forward to the extent that has been mentioned to-night, namely, having it right up to the minute as far as the development of the necessary institutions is concerned; after having carried out our economic policy; after having carried out our industrial policy and industrial development, a crisis has come upon us and we have to make many adjustments. I never agreed more thoroughly with the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe than when he said that if there was anything Canadians are noted for it was initiative and resourcefulness. I agree absolutely that if we cannot show initiative and resourcefulness in this crisis, we are not worthy of the name of Canadians Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you, and through you to this committee, that this government has been trying as hard as men can try for the last fifteen days, ever since this crisis arose, to make every possible adjustment that could be made, in this plan or in anything else, in an endeavour to make the most effective contribution possible in the emergency which has suddenly loomed up. That is what we are busy with; that is what we are trying to do. Because one sits here listening to quite a bit of criticism of the government without replying, that does not indicate complacency on my part, I assure you; I felt that the most important thing at the moment was to endeavour to get this bill through and this money voted in order that we might carry on with the job.

Perhaps the committee will pardon me for having taken these few minutes to make clear the position as I see it. I say we have endeavoured, not just by day but by night as well, to ascertain what changes might be made to the best advantage; and I may say that sometimes we have made changes in the face of protests from those who felt that they knew more about this plan than we did, who believed that the plan which had been mapped out in a certain way, whether the air training plan or any others, could not be changed. We have applied our best judgment, as ordinary human beings anxious to do a job, and with a full sense of our responsibility. We have endeavoured to find different ways and perhaps short cuts whereby this plan and our other plans might be carried out more quickly and more effectively, because this, for the time being at least, has become a day to day business. Our programme is going on, but our programme has to be adjusted, has to be supplemented, has to be varied, has to be modified and has to be made to work if we can possibly make it work, because no one knows better than I do the crisis we are facing to-night. So I want to assure you, Mr. Chairman, and this committee that this is what we are endeavouring to do.

Constructive suggestions have come from all quarters of this house; I am perfectly free to acknowledge that valuable suggestions have come from hon. gentlemen opposite. It must not be thought that we have been asleep, that we ourselves have not been thinking, and that many things have not been worked out. We do not want any particular credit for it, but neither do we want any blame on the assumption that we have not been doing anything about it. We have been endeavouring to do our level best.

Now I have made this statement to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the committee. We are prepared to accept and act upon all the constructive suggestions we can possibly get from any quarter, and we welcome them. We welcome the cooperation we are receiving in this house, and I am only asking that hon. members, as far as possible, deal with the present, with the problems that are before us, with the situation that faces us. Let us together try to pull out; let us together try to fight this thing through to the end.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman, I am not rising for the purpose of continuing this discussion along the lines that it has taken. My own view is that it has gone far enough. The minister has got off his chest some things that doubtless he wanted to get off. I have no doubt that he and the government have been smarting under the criticisms which have been leveled at them from one end of Canada to the other during the last fifteen days, and in which the terms "inertia" and "complacency" found a most Those terms did not prominent part. originate on this side of the house; they originated in the public press long before parliament met. Having said that, let us see if we cannot get back to the bill. I shall try to help the minister make some progress in getting this bill through parliament. This discussion, which seems to have got into a by-path, arose out of a question which was asked of the Minister of National Defence for Air, as to the time it would take to turn out a trained pilot. I quite realize that it may not be in the public interest to give information on this point.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps I can give it; twenty-eight weeks for a pilot, twenty-six weeks for an air observer, and thirty-two weeks for an air gunner.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have been trying to work it out. I may tell the committee that I have had the privilege of reading the secret agreement, but I am not going to divulge anything contained in that because it was shown to me in confidence. I have been supplied, along with other hon. members, with a summary of the air training scheme. If hon, members will look at page seven, appendix one, they will see that there are seven categories of schools in the complete course of training. There are initial training schools, elementary flying training schools, service flying training schools, air observer schools, bombing and gunnery schools, air navigation schools and wireless schools. As I understand it, the training that might be given in these different schools could not be simultaneous. I would suppose that a pilot would have to go through seven different courses of training.

Mr. POWER: Not necessarily. For instance, the man who goes to a wireless school would be a wireless operator. He would not have to go to the navigation school.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): He would not have to do that?

Mr. POWER: He would not.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): He would not be an all-round air man if he did not go through the whole thing.

Mr. POWER: Some men are being trained as pilots, some as observers, some as machine gunners and wireless operators.

Mr. HANSON (York Sunbury): The second paragraph of appendix one contains the following statement:

The flying training and air observer schools will be developed at rates which will provide for their peak capacity for training pupils being reached by the following number of weeks after the date of opening:

Elementary flying training schools. . . . 4
Service flying training schools. 6

That makes a total of 22 weeks. That seems to be different from what the minister said

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think all those schools deal with the same sort of pupils. An elementary training school and a service training school would be for the training of pilots, whereas the observer school would have nothing to do with the training of a pilot.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should like to have some explanation. I am frank in saying that I do not understand very much about this scheme.

Mr. POWER: I did not until I studied the chart.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Perhaps if the minister would let us have that chart we could get some information which would be of value. Could it be put on Hansard? We should like to know these things, provided it is in the public interest that they should be divulged. How long from the time a man signs on is it until he becomes a useful air man and is sent across the water?

Mr. POWER: Twenty-eight weeks for a pilot; twenty-six weeks for an observer, and thirty-two weeks for an air gunner. It may be the other way round, but I shall have the figures for my hon, friend.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): This agreement was signed last December and we are now into May. Can the minister tell us how the time schedules are running in the different categories and how many student pilots have been taken on? Are we still at the beginning of that stage?

Mr. POWER: Up to the present every school has opened on schedule; every class has entered the school on schedule; every graduating step will be taken on schedule; every airport has been ready on schedule, and every aeroplane that was required in the particular scheme has been ready on schedule. In so far as I am aware—and I have made strict inquiries within the last few days—we shall have no difficulty for some little time to come either with regard to opening schools, with regard to instructors or with regard to the necessary equipment. But in some little time we may have considerable difficulty.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is not my point.

Mr. POWER: That difficulty may arise out of the crisis. I thought that was understood. Does that answer my hon, friend?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In a measure it does. Is the minister able to say that men are now being trained under this scheme? When will the first man go forward? That would help me.

Mr. POWER: I would rather not say.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If that information is not in the public interest, I will withdraw my question.

Mr. POWER: I have been asked not to say when the first will go forward. Certain things will arise out of the present crisis, but up to that crisis everything was up to date. We may have to change the plan considerably, and if we do we shall endeavour to keep the output as high as possible. We will probably accelerate the plan even though it has to be done at the cost of some part of the plan which is more in the nature of a long range programme.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would suggest to the minister that he give consideration to adding to this bill a section numbered seven providing that a detailed account of the sums expended under the authority of this measure shall be laid before the House of Commons of Canada during the first fifteen days of the next ensuing session of parliament. I think parliament ought to be informed as to what moneys have been spent.

Mr. POWER: That would not refer only to the air training scheme?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To the money expended under this bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN: Section three reads:

The government of Canada may act as the agent of the government of any British or foreign country—

I am wondering if there is any closely coordinated contact as between the government of Canada and the other governments in connection with the supply of materials for use overseas. Is there close cooperation between this government and the ministry of supply in the United Kingdom and the government of France? If not, I think it would be advisable to have the closest cooperation.

I, along with many others in the constituency which I represent, am engaged in the lumbering business. We have noticed that there seems to be considerable confusion in respect of material wanted. At one time I believe Mr. Harris in the ministry of supply published a lengthy statement showing the quantity of material which might be required by the United Kingdom government. That list showed billions of feet of lumber and an enormous yardage of linoleum, as well as other articles.

In a short time we in the lumber business discovered that purchases had been virtually stopped, on account of the fact that the exchange problem became serious. I believe that not only in connection with the lumber but also in connection with agricultural and other products we in Canada are in a sort of fog, because we do not know just what is required. While I do not speak from a selfish point of view, I am trying to find out what we may be able to do by way of giving them the supplies of which they may be in need, as well as maintaining the economic and social order in our own country. That applies in lumber as well as in agricultural products. It seems to me it would be most advisable, when Canada is looked upon as a storehouse, for the ministry of supply to have somebody on this side of the water so that direct contact could be made. Such an officer could speak with some authority.

There is this further point I should like to bring up at this time. In view of the disturbing news received from overseas from time to time, and particularly in the last few trying days, it would seem possibleand let us hope that this condition may not materialize-that events may create for us a very unhappy and uncertain condition in Canada. I believe the committee would appreciate assurance from the Minister of Finance that the government has foreseen such grave possibilities of national economic stress, and that in so far as it is possible to foresee such a deplorable condition, steps have been taken to absorb the shock, so that our economic and social life in Canada may continue, even if in a crippled condition.

Mr. RALSTON: With regard to the first point raised by the hon. member, speaking generally, the matter of the purchase of munitions and supplies by the British government in Canada is done through the British purchasing commission, which is and has been in Ottawa. The British purchasing commission, in turn, by arrangement with the Canadian government asked the war supply board to act for them, as their agent. That arrangement was made very early in the organization of the war supply board, and has been continuing, and such orders as have been placed for munitions and supplies have been placed through the war supply board.

The hon. member has been dealing with timber. As I understand it, timber has been purchased in Canada through a representative of the British timber control. I have been trying to remember the name of the gentleman; perhaps the leader of the opposition will remember. However, the gentleman I have in mind is living in Montreal, and represents the British timber control. As I understand it, they have been making arrangements direct with the various lumber concerns in Canada. So far as I know, there has been no arrangement with or through the Canadian government by the British timber control.

Mr. O'BRIEN: When the minister mentioned the organization in Ottawa, I believe he had in mind munitions, and not what might be described as civil goods. The gentleman to whom the minister referred might be Mr. Fensom.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, I think so.

Mr. O'BRIEN: I believe he does not occupy an official position, but is the representative of eastern Canadian lumbermen. As a matter of fact, a pool has been formed [Mr. O'Brien.]

in connection with the purchase of pit props, one of the articles required in great volume. They are on this side of the water at the present time, located at Moncton. We are also selling lumber privately through brokers in England, just as we always did.

As I said a little while ago, we were told that we could not possibly produce in the maritimes the volume of lumber which would be required. Then in a very short time it was discovered that the ministry of supply had stopped buying because of an exchange situation which had become difficult. It seems to me there is great uncertainty, and that if we had someone from the United Kingdom with whom the Canadian government could consult and from whom the individual exporter could obtain information based on authority, a great deal of uncertainty would be saved.

Mr. RALSTON: I believe Mr. Wiseman is the trade commissioner attached to the office of the British high commissioner. I do not know whether he represents the ministry of supply, as a single department, but I do know that he is the trade commissioner for the British government. Does my hon. friend know whether or not Mr. Wiseman has been consulted?

Mr. O'BRIEN: No.

Mr. RALSTON: I shall be glad to make inquiries about that, and about some other commodities which have been bought direct. I am sure that if we can get the British government to arrange coordination through one central bureau, it will be a substantial assistance for Canadian producers.

In respect of the other point raised by the hon, member I would say that the matter is receiving attention from hour to hour. We are trying to see as far ahead as we possibly can, and make plans accordingly.

Mr. GREEN: Apparently the Minister of National Defence for Air is planning to rush the construction of training fields this summer. Would it not be of assistance if the government were to recruit works battalions to help with that particular undertaking? The older men might be used, or those younger men who have been rejected for the active service force. It would serve the double purpose of hurrying up the work and also giving these men a chance to feel that they are doing something for their country.

Mr. POWER: So far as the suggestion refers to airports, I shall be glad to refer it to the Minister of Transport, who is in charge of their development. In reference to the construction work on hangars and aerodromes, I shall be glad to give it the most serious consideration.

Section agreed to.

On section 4-Loans authorized.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, in the discussion on the previous section I intimated that I would have a word or two to say on this one. The minister has already given the committee some idea as to what departments will benefit from the expenditure of this money. I believe he has given an estimate of $690,000,000, and he has $10,000,000 to spare. Probably he could tell the committee how he is going to raise the moneyhow much will come out of the consolidated revenue fund, on the pay-as-you-go policy, how much he anticipates from the war certificates, and whether he expects it is going to be necessary to put out a Canadian loan. I say "Canadian" loan because I gathered from his previous remarks that he is going to raise practically all this money in Canada. Perhaps when he gives us the break-down, he will answer the question as to just how these funds are to be raised.

While I am on my feet, let me express the hope that there will be no blocking off of a geographical area of Canada and handing it over holus-bolus to certain financial interests in certain sections, so that they in turn, when it is necessary to raise money on loan, will have allocated to them a section which, because it lends a good deal of money for causes of this kind, will enable them to profiteer in the raising of those funds. Similarly, if the minister has in mind to raise some of this money in the United States, I hope he will be cautious about allotting certain sections, for the raising of money, to certain bond houses to the exclusion of others -a condition which obtained during the victory loan campaigns of some twenty years

Could the minister give us some idea now as to how the consolidated revenue fund is to be replenished to the extent of this $700,-000,000?

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid it is impossible to give the committee that information. Obviously the amount to be raised by taxation is a matter which has to be discussed when the budget comes down. The effect of the bill is that we ask that there be paid out of consolidated revenue $700,000,000, and my hon. friend is quite right in suggesting that I ought to be able to tell him how I am going to get it into the consolidated revenue fund before I get it out. Until the budget is brought down, I shall be unable to say what amount will be raised by taxation. Obviously, whatever amount is not raised by taxation will have to be raised by borrowing, and that borrowing, I confidently expect, will be done in Canada. I hope, unless there is some decided change, that there will be no possibility of attempting to borrow in the United States.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Is the scheme which was outlined last night, relative to the war savings certificates that are on sale today, to provide part of this money?

Mr. RALSTON: The proceeds of the war savings certificates which were on sale to-day go into the consolidated revenue fund, and in so far as the consolidated revenue fund is "replenished"-to use my hon. friend's expression-by the war savings certificates, and in so far as there are no other demands, the amount we have to borrow under this bill will be just that much reduced. I was going on to say that such borrowing as is done under this bill will, I confidently expect, be done in Canada and will be provided from the savings of the Canadian people. I assure my hon. friend, if I apprehend his reference correctly, that the greatest of care will be taken and no monopoly will be given of certain areas of this country or any other country for the purpose of the disposal of bonds or for the making of profits in connection therewith. The results of the two hundred million dollar loan which was made in January, and which, by the way, was a united effort of the Canadian people in which the government received the fullest cooperation of public men of all shades of politics everywhere in the dominion, and the record made with regard to the matter of distribution, will, I hope, be some indication and some assurance to the committee that the evils to which my hon. friend has referred will not be found in any flotation under this particular measure.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): As the story we got last night indicated that there was very little cost involved in this war savings certificate issue, and as we know that there is considerable expense in the flotation of a loan of, we will say, $500,000,000, probably the minister and his advisers had some idea before they started as to what the result was going to be. To my mind the selling of these certificates is something which does not go ahead with a great deal of enthusiasm. People have to be educated. Perhaps for once the school children will be educating their parent that they ought to go out and buy a $500 bond. I should like to know what propaganda or what effort is being put forward by the Department of Finance to stimulate this admirable method of raising funds. If one million homes took their maximum, that is, if all the homes in Canada participated, you would not have enough to provide your quota of $700,000,000. I suggest that some definite plan to stimulate the idea of the war savings certificate should be carried right through, so that there will be no decline in the enthusiasm which we are trying to inspire. The movement to-day, as the minister knows, is quite slow. I do not say that by way of destructive criticism; I couple with that statement the thought that it is a slow movement because the people have to be educated. I hope the finance department has some definite plan to push the idea right along so that the maximum of money at the minimum of expense will be raised by this means. Could the minister give us an idea of how much money he expects to get from these sales of war savings certificates?

Mr. RALSTON: I appreciate my hon. friend's reference to the war savings certificates. He dampens my enthusiasm just a little when he speaks of the returns being slow to-day. At noon I saw both the national chairmen, and they were extremely enthusiastic with regard to what had taken place during the morning, and intimated that from a number of post offices and banks had come already applications for fresh supplies of application forms. Perhaps I took that as being better news than it really was. But my hon, friend sees pretty clearly what this job means. It is not like a war loan, in which you are over the top on Monday morning, and you are into the trenches and have carried the objective by Thursday or Friday night. This is a long pull, and my hon. friend is quite right in intimating that there must be, as he says, some stimulus or at least some "stick-to-itiveness" in connection with the movement so long as it continues. I am one of those who hope it will continue after the war as well as during the war. Let me say to him that the general plan of organization is to have those two gentlemen, Mr. Beaubien and Mr. Somerville, as national chairmen. Then there are provincial chairmen, the names of whom I gave last night, gentlemen prominent in each province, who have gathered around them in the different provinces committees of different sizes, depending on local conditions.

With regard first to the schools, we have had, not a passive attitude, not just "God bless you," but the active cooperation of the provincial governments and the provincial departments of education. I anticipate that by the first of June, if not before, there will be in all the schools application forms for the students. I was reminded this morning—just to give an indication of the physical task—that in Ontario there are some 8,000 schools and 700,000 school children. That means getting packages done up and sent to all these schools, and when you multiply that by the number of schools and the number of pupils throughout the dominion, you realize the magnitude of the task.

This morning in practically every mail box over the whole dominion there were application forms; this morning in every post office and in every bank the same situation existed. The work with regard to the schools will be done in cooperation with the department of education and with the teachers. It will be one of the biggest tasks, and that is where we anticipate that there will be a system of regular saving built up to last, we hope, during the war.

Perhaps some hon, members have seen the application form. It is rather an unusual document, being a combination of envelope and application form (with rules and regulations set out in simple language), so that one may sign the application form, put in one's four dollars, fold it up and mail it to the chairman; or if one has not four dollars one may open the form, buy a twenty-five cent stamp and paste it on; and when the sixteen spaces have been filled up, one can purchase a war savings certificate. It is a good many things in one. Some advertising will appear in the newspapers—some appeared this morning—and a programme has been mapped out to cover a considerable period of time. There will be special circulars for school children. Another circular will be sent to the children when the schools reopen in the fall.

In the meantime another large field is the industrial field, where we have the benefit of the services of men from the insurance companies. Some eight key men from the large insurance companies have given their services free, and in addition to that the insurance companies have assigned eight hundred of their salaried men, who are familiar with group insurance and who are best qualified for the purpose, to get in touch with employers and employees in business concerns throughout the country with a view to having a regular plan prepared of saving by means of deduction from wages. Then there are the retail outlets and the stores and farms, the people in the mining and lumbering industries and the fishing industry.

Mr. STIRLING: The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. Not only will there be the press and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, but we have secured, free, the cooperation of all the branch radio stations and the film industry. The effort, therefore, will be a worth while one. The foundations have been thoroughly laid. It has involved a great deal in the way of planning and of physical equipment, and I wish to pay tribute to the men and women, the public authorities and all those generally who are cooperating so cordially to make the plan a success.

[Mr. J. H. Harris.]

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I wish to congratulate the minister upon the appointment of a high type of citizen in New Brunswick, Mr. George E. Barbour, who will do everything he can to forward the aims the minister has in mind. I wish to call the minister's attention to the words in the sixth, seventh and eighth lines of section 4. The governor general in council may, "in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by parliament". This $700,000,000 is to be in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable. Can the minister give us an idea of what these sums amount to, so that we may know the gross borrowing power of the government under the legislation heretofore passed and under this legislation?

Mr. RALSTON: The other statute was the loan act of last year which authorized the borrowing of $750,000,000. The powers under that act were exhausted by the issue of about $20,000,000 of war savings certificates under the act. That was the balance left unborrowed of the $750,000,000.

Section agreed to.

On section 5— Orders and regulations.

Mr. MacNICOL: During the last few days I have had quite a number of letters with reference to the matter referred to in paragraph (b), "allowances to soldiers' dependents." I refer to the widowed mother of a soldier. There is also a daughter in the family. The young man enlisted and went overseas. He was paying his mother $12 a week or $48 or more a month. At the time he enlisted, so he states, the papers he signed were to the effect that his mother was to receive, in addition to the $20 assigned pay, $35 separation allowance. Since then the allowance has been cut because the daughter, it is said, is receiving a matter of $20 a week. The daughter claims that, having insurance and other expenses to meet, she cannot contribute to her mother's support, but the board takes no notice of that contention. The result is that the daughter has left home, so that there is just the mother at home, and all she receives is $10 in addition to the assigned pay. This is not a satisfactory state of affairs. It is bad to break up the family because an agreement of this kind is not carried out.

Mr. RALSTON: What was being contributed by the son?

Mr. MacNICOL: Twelve dollars a week before he enlisted.

Mr. RALSTON: Has the hon. member written to the board? Would he mind sending me a statement?

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: Why is paragraph (b) here at all? It is already covered by the existing statute. Why should it appear in this bill?

Mr. RALSTON: It is only precedent, so far as I know.

Mr. COLDWELL: There is a typical case which I might be permitted to put before the minister. A boy now seventeen years of age joined the signallers corps two years ago. When war came, he was instructed to report and he did so. He is now an orderly with the rating of a class A boy. He receives 70 cents a day-for a twenty-four hour day incidentally. My information is that all the soldiers' pay rates by classification have been proclaimed except the class in which this boy happens to be. Apparently this entire class has not yet been proclaimed. The father consented to enlistment. The boy assigned one-half of his pay. The parents are on relief in a province where very little relief is paid. They were getting $2 a week for their fuel this winter, and so far the father has received none of the assigned pay, no allowance of any description. It seems to me that this may be a typical case of a class and therefore I am bringing it before the minister in order that it may be looked into. The complaint is that this particular class has not been proclaimed.

Mr. RALSTON: My friend means that this class has not had a rate fixed according to a classification?

Mr. COLDWELL: That is right.

Mr. RALSTON: What class was it my hon, friend mentioned?

Mr. COLDWELL: Class A boy.

Mr. PERLEY: This section is very important. It gives wide powers to the minister, with the approval of the governor in council of course. I think the minister should make a statement with respect to the practice that will be followed in letting contracts. I refer more particularly to paragraphs (c) and (e), which I read:

—the governor in council may, by order or regulation:—

(c) prescribe administrative practices with respect to contracts and agreements for the execution of any public work or for the acquisition of lands, buildings, equipment, stores, materials and supplies, by purchase or otherwise, for the use of the public service of Canada;

(e) prescribe administrative practices with respect to the making of financial commitments, the taking of security for the performance of contracts and agreements, and the recording and paying of accounts.

The minister should make a definite statement with respect to the practice that will be followed in order to protect the department in taking security or providing a drawback or holdback with respect to the contracts that will be let under this measure. Large sums of money will be spent; large contracts will be let. There was a practice followed in the defence department in 1939 of which I do not think the present minister would approve. He stated earlier this evening that he had been in this government only since September last. I know this committee would not approve of the practice of which I speak. The practice was complained of by the auditor general in his report for 1939 just tabled last week. At page 236 he says:

Cost plus contract, payment of holdback prior to completion of work—vote 184.

I requested the department to inform me why the holdback provided by the contract for the construction of defence works was paid to the contractors before the work was completed. The department stated that the payment was made in order that "the funds provided in 1937-38 might be fully expended." I pointed out that the payment could not be justified on these grounds, and that by long established practice it has been customary to require security from contractors for the due performance of the work, either by a security deposit or a drawback on progress estimates, or both. The department replied—

This is the statement of the auditor general to which I desire to draw the particular attention of the committee and the minister:

—that in the case of this cost plus contract the interests of the department were well safeguarded and consequently the clause relating to the holdback had been deleted under the authority of the governor in council.

And the footnote is, "No further action was taken."

I do not think the minister would approve of that practice being followed, a contract let, an agreement made, then afterwards an order in council passed deleting the clause in the contract which provided a holdback as security for the government interest.

[Mr. Perley.]

Mr. RALSTON: I refer the committee to the statement made by the minister acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply on May 22, in which he set out the practice with regard to purchases made by the Department of Munitions and Supply, by which practically all the contracts referred to here will be let. The statement will be found on pages 129 and 130 of Hansard. The minister there indicates that the method of tenders and contracts and lowest competitive price is the practice. Where there are exceptions, he points out that it is where the entire output of the industry is needed; in that case the industry is asked to divide orders among its members, and we depend on the reports of the government auditors to fix the prices when the order is completed. His statement

Those that have not been awarded by tender have all received the severe scrutiny of men who are not in the strict sense of the word government employees but are serving on the executive committee of the department without salary. In other words, one or more members of the executive committee of the department are required to initial any order placed except as the result of competitive tender where the low tender has been accepted.

The cost plus form of contract has been eliminated and where competitive prices cannot be established auditing firms are retained to examine manufacturers' costs to determine a fair price for the product. At times the suppliers' books are audited by chartered accountants both before the contract is completed and afterwards. All profits are kept to a level consistent with the competitive situation.

It is possible that there are better ways of allotting government contracts than by awarding the work to the lowest tenderer, but no one knows a better means of safeguarding the public interest. Business is placed without competitive tender only when a situation is found that will not permit competitive tenders being obtained, or when fair prices have been established in the locality by recent competitive tender for a certain amount of goods, and further goods of the same kind are required, the practice is sometimes followed of extending an order at the previous competitive price.

The committee can be assured that this practice will be followed, subject to this, that in the emergency the government has given to the Minister of Transport wider powers in order that he and his executive committee may, if necessary, close contracts or get work done more expeditiously, or in the phrase sometimes used, cut red tape. I feel that, generally speaking, we ought to follow well established procedure; but there are cases, and this is one, in which the government feel that there may be instances in which it is necessary, in the public interest and in order to expedite matters, that all the safeguards which are generally thrown around public contracts be not exacted. In that case the government, and the minister acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply, will take and of course will have to take full responsibility. But I can assure the committee that the exceptions will be just as few as possible.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): This is a very important section, having regard not only to the amount of money to be expended but to the practice that has been followed heretofore. I read with a good deal of care the statement made by the minister on May 22 last. He admits the principle of public tender; he says it is possible that there are better ways of letting government contracts than by awarding the work to the lowest tenderer, but no one knows a better means of safeguarding the public interest. That is a very sound principle. I wonder what steps have been taken to safeguard the public interest by calling for public tenders. I am afraid that practice has not been followed very closely by the department. I am sorry the Minister of Transport is not here-

Mr. RALSTON: That statement will be on the record. I want to assure my hon, friend and the committee that the Minister of Transport is away on most important business.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have no doubt that is the case, and perhaps it would be just as well if the discussion were allowed to rest here until he comes. I have in mind this sort of thing: I am afraid the practice is still being carried on of having people on the selected list; that they are being asked to quote on certain things, and that the ordinary man who might tender does not know anything about the contract until it is let. It has been said that contracts have been let before tenders are called for, but I will not go that far. I have heard of a case under the provincial government of New Brunswick where a man was on the job before the time was up for tenders to be received. I know of one case of that kind personally, but I am not suggesting that this has been done here. I have in mind, however, a case where a selected list of contractors were asked to tender on a public work. The contract was awarded to one of three tenderers, and within twenty-four hours the company to which the contract had been awarded sublet the contract in its entirety to a fourth party.

Mr. RALSTON: Under the war supply board? Since the beginning of the war?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Oh, yes; since the war. I do not like to tell my hon. friend the name of the party or where this took place, but it concerned an important defence work, the construction of fortifications.

Mr. RALSTON: I think I know what my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That contract was let to a company which was not especially in that kind of business, and it was sublet by the successful tenderer to a first-class contracting firm. There is an unearned profit there to somebody, and that is not in the public interest. That is one sort of case. There are other classes of contracts that might be investigated a little further. On the whole I think we might have a profitable discussion, without acrimony, if this whole matter were to be left until the minister comes back. It is nearly eleven o'clock now, anyway. As a matter of fact, the section is so wide and sweeping that it occurred to me that we should consider it subsection by subsection. The hon, member for Yale referred to paragraph (b). I suggest to the minister that this is entirely regulated by existing legislation and ought not to be in the bill at all. In the meantime he might make some further inquiry in regard to this point.

Mr. RALSTON: With all due respect to my hon. friend, he is not going to get me to jettison anything in this bill that has been there previously if I can help it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There may be a reason for it, of course; but at first blush, if I may put it that way, there is no reason. Then I have been looking at paragraph (a) and wondering if we were putting aside entirely the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I understand that employees of the Department of Munitions and Suppfy and of the Department of National Defence are being secured through the civil service commission from approved lists of persons who have passed examinations and so on. This subsection, of course, simply puts aside the whole principle of the Civil Service Act. After all, these are civil employees.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will permit me, under its statute the Department of Munitions and Supply has full power to make appointments without reference to the civil service commission, which is just the provision we have here. But the government has adopted a practice under which, although the government has the right to make the appointments, the matter goes to the treasury board which in turn refers it to the civil service commission, for the purpose of obtaining information before the appointments are recommended to the government. So, while my hon. friend says the Department of Munitions and Supply obtains its employees through the civil service commission, that is by reason of the fact that the government, notwithstanding its power to make the appointments direct, itself voluntarily refers the matter to the civil service commission.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course the fact that parliament has erred heretofore is no reason why it should err again. I think as far as possible, having regard to the exigencies of the case, we should stick to the Civil Service Act. I know there may be times when you cannot go through what I may call the red tape of having men or women appointed by the civil service commission, but still there is a principle involved even in war time. We know that under the Civil Service Act regard must be had for the approved lists, although the treasury board may take the last one on the list without taking the names in rotation. I think the minister should give further consideration to this point. Perhaps we might call it eleven o'clock now and let this whole section stand.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Ralston the house adjourned at 10.58 p.m.

Tuesday, May 28, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

VACANCY

APPOINTMENT TO THE SENATE OF THE MEMBER FOR WATERLOO NORTH

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a communication from several members, notifying me that the following vacancy has occurred in the representation, viz.:

Of Hon. William Daum Euler, member for the electoral district of Waterloo North, consequent upon his having been summoned to the senate.

I accordingly issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

EUROPEAN WAR

STATEMENT AS TO RECENT DEVELOPMENTS ON THE WESTERN FRONT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house will [Mr. Ralston.] doubtless wish to have a statement with regard to the situation in Europe in view of what has appeared thus far in the press. I do not know that I could better express the situation as it exists than to read to the house the statement which was made by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom in the British House of Commons this morning. The text of the Prime Minister's statement was as follows:

The house will be aware that the king of the Belgians yesterday sent a plenipotentiary to the German command asking for suspension of arms on the Belgian front.

The British and French governments instructed their generals immediately to dissociate themselves from this procedure, and to persevere with the operations in which they are now engaged.

The German command agreed to the Belgian proposals and the Belgians ceased to resist the enemy's will at four o'clock this morning. I have no intention of suggesting to the house that we should attempt at this moment to pass judgment on the action of the king of the Belgians in his capacity as commander in chief of the Belgian army.

This army fought very bravely, and both suffered and inflicted heavy losses. The Belgian government has dissociated itself from the act and declared itself to be the only legal government of Belgium and formally announced its resolve to continue the war by the side of the Allies, who came to the aid of Belgium on her urgent appeal.

Whatever our feelings from facts so far known to us, we must remember that that sense of brotherhood between the many peoples who have fallen into the power of the aggressor and those who still confront him will play its part in better days than those through which we are passing.

The situation of the British and French armies now engaged in a most severe struggle and beset on three sides and from the air is evidently extremely grave.

Surrender of the Belgian army in this manner adds appreciably to the grievous peril, but our troops are in good heart and fighting with the utmost discipline and tenacity. I shall, of course, abstain from comment on what, with the powerful assistance of the royal navy and the royal air force, they are doing or hope to do. I expect to make a statement to the house on the general position when the result of the intense struggle now going on can be known and measured.

This, perhaps, may not be until the beginning of next week.

Meanwhile, the house must prepare itself for hard and heavy tidings. I have only to add that nothing which can happen in this battle can in any way relieve us of our duty to defend the world cause to which we have bound ourselves, nor can it destroy our confidence in our power to make our way, as on former occasions in our history, through disaster and grief to ultimate defeat of our enemy.

THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE TO ACT AS LEADER OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the gravity of the situation at the moment I would ask the house if it would permit me to adopt a course which has been found necessary in Great Britain and which was found necessary in this country during the last war, namely, to delegate to one of my colleagues the responsibility of leading this House of Commons for the greater part of the time in order that in my position as Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs I may have the needed time and opportunity to give the concentrated attention, the study and thought to the many questions that are presenting themselves to the government as a whole, and to deal immediately with many situations that are becoming more pressing every moment.

My right hon, friend and colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) has at different times, and for the greater part of the last session of the previous parliament, filled in my absence the position of leader of the government, and he has kindly consented to take on that task at the present session. My right hon. friend the Minister of Justice has, however, also very heavy duties at this time, as all of us have who are members of the war committee of the cabinet, and it may be that he also will be obliged to be absent from the house on occasions for a considerable period of time. In view of that possibility I have asked my colleague the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) if he would take on the duty of second in command, to lead the house in the absence of the Minister of Justice and myself.

Perhaps I need not say to hon, members that no members of the government are more taxed at this present time, and likely to be more taxed in their duties during the session, than the ministers of national defence. They are and will continue to be obliged to give considerable of their time to conferring with members of their own departments in dealing with the many critical situations with which they and all of us are faced. I hope, therefore, that it will be possible so to arrange the business of the house that measures which relate immediately to war effort can be brought on and discussed at times when it may be convenient for my colleagues the ministers of national defence or myself to be present in the house; and if by any chance their presence will be required elsewhere on short notice, that the house will understand the reasons why they also may have to absent themselves for a considerable portion of the time.

Those, I think, are the only matters upon which I wished to speak immediately. I might add that this afternoon I would like to have the opportunity of conferring almost immediately with certain of my colleagues; and in the arrangement of the business this afternoon it might be understood that some of the bills other than the one which was yesterday before the house, and which are on the order paper, would be taken up first. We could return a little later in the afternoon to the bill with respect to the appropriation for war purposes.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I was not unprepared for the announcement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has just made. A day or two ago he intimated to me that owing to the seriousness of the situation and the consequent tax upon his time it would be almost impossible for him to give to the affairs of the House of Commons the attention which he has given in previous sessions. I can appreciate that, and I believe that all members of this house will be prepared to excuse him from attendance, except perhaps upon the most important occasions. As I have intimated more than once, we shall try to facilitate in every way the business of the house. I am sure that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) who will be taking the place of the Prime Minister as leader of the House of Commons, is quite capable of carrying on the business of the country.

With respect to the suggestion that the two ministers of national defence may find it necessary to be absent, I can quite understand that, but I should like to say that we would not care to excuse them entirely from attendance when measures which they are promoting and in which they are vitally interested are before the house. I do not think that I can add anything further on this occasion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank my hon. friend.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUESTION OF REFERENCE OF WAR APPROPRIATION BILL TO COMMITTEE—FURNISHING INFORMATION TO MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) intimated last week that a committee might be appointed to which the government might communicate certain information. I believe that everyone who is in the house this afternoon feels a sense of grave responsibility, and I am urging upon the government that this parliament be taken fully into its confidence and that this committee be appointed immediately so that we may be apprised of the situation, because after all the security of Canada may be involved. The Prime Minister might see fit even to arrange for a secret session of the house. There are many questions running through our minds at the present time, and we are alarmed, and we want to get certain questions answered. I was wondering whether the Prime Minister would speed up the appointment of a committee or make some other arrangement so that we may get the information which some of us would like to hear from the government.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): May I say to my hon. friend that, when I suggested that the house might think it advisable when we came to the second reading of the bill to have its provisions referred to a committee or to a group of committees to permit of certain information being given by the different defence departments which it is obviously not wise to make public, the present situation had not developed as it has since that announcement was made. I rather gathered from what was subsequently said from the other side of the house that there was some doubt in the minds of hon. members whether that procedure would be the best to follow, that hon. members might feel that, if information was given to them secretly before one of these committees, their tongues, if not their hands, would be tied when it came to asking in public certain questions of the government. Many of the things which the government thought, at the time this parliament met, it would be inadvisable to speak of publicly at the time, have already been spoken of quite freely in the house since parliament met. I am sure that in the course of the discussion on this measure respecting war appropriation, hon, members have gained a knowledge of many situations of which formerly they were wholly ignorant, and have obtained explanations which I hope have helped to account for what may have seemed to some of them an absence of the degree of activity which many of them, very rightly, would expect at a time like this.

One matter which has been impressed upon the government more and more is the necessity of using great care in divulging matters in advance of the time when it would be wise to make mention of them. For example, I might give this house information at the moment with respect to our expeditionary force, the Canadian active service force overseas, but if I were to give that information to-day it would be giving it to the enemy. I might answer questions with respect to the disposition of our naval forces, which answers, if given at the moment, would equally be given to the enemy. Obviously it is not desirable that matters of this kind should be disclosed, and for that reason I had thought that some such method as I have suggested, of giving to hon. members information that could not otherwise be made public, might be made in the manner I have indicated. But, as I have said, on the resolution itself, questions have been asked and answered quite freely and much information has been disclosed which the government, I thought, would not have considered disclosing at this time if matters had not developed as they have. We are now free to say some things which at an earlier stage we did not deem it wise to make known.

There is however one other reason which I regard as having at the moment an urgency which it did not have at the time I made the proposal to which I have referred. It is this, that the time of the officials of the defence forces at this moment, and probably for some little time to come, would be very seriously encroached upon if those officials were taken away from the duties in which they are engaged to come and discuss matters before a committee of the house, whether a secret committee or not. The government has therefore thought it advisable, and still considers it the right course to pursue at the moment, to allow the discussion to go on in the way it has. If ministers find that they are asked questions which it is not in the public interest for them to answer they will say so frankly and take the responsibility of refusing to give such information, just as they must take the responsibility for giving any information which they impart.

I along with my colleagues shall endeavour to see that information that is sought, if answers cannot be publicly given, is given confidentially in so far as may be possible to those who have the responsibility of leading parties or groups in this house. I should like this afternoon to have a talk with my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Coldwell) with regard to the present situation and some matters which I should like him to know, leaving to him the responsibility of imparting their significance to those about him in a manner he thinks would be justifiable. Equally I should like to have a talk with my hon. friend the leader of the Social Credit group (Mr. Blackmore). Yesterday I had a talk with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) and with one or two of his colleagues who are members of His Majesty's Privy Council for Canada. I had not time later in the afternoon or in the evening to see my hon. friends of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and Social Credit groups but I intend to do so to-day. I purpose this afternoon-in fact, that is the reason I am asking that the house should allow some of my colleagues to withdraw with me at presentto have a conference with the leader of the opposition in the senate, together with my colleague the leader of the government in that chamber, and to ask him to bring with him one or two of his colleagues who were members of the war administration of Sir Robert Borden in order that we may discuss with them the situation as it appears at the present time. If we proceed to attain the desired end in that way, in the light of information with respect to conditions as we know them, we shall be taking the course that I believe will be the wisest one to adopt in the interest of the country.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): If I may be pardoned, I should ike to say a word with respect to the subject natter to which the right hon. gentleman has just alluded, namely, consideration of the question of setting up a secret committee or committees to deal with the appropriation bill. We have given a very great deal of consideration to the matter and we still have an open mind on it. I take it from the Prime Minister's remarks now that the government have come to the conclusion that no useful purpose will be served by referring the bill to such committees and that the matter will be dropped. Our view was that the Prime Minister's first proposal seemed to be just a bit inconsistent, and until the position was clarified we did not care to enter into an undertaking of that kind. Members rather took the view that they did not like to be tongue-tied or hamstrung and they would rather not serve if they could not use the information. At the moment I rather concur in the view expressed by the Prime Minister, that perhaps the matter should not be brought up again. I should like to make our position clear. We have not actually refused to act on any such committee, but we wanted to have certain points clarified before we agreed to do so. I do not question the Prime Minister's decision at all at the moment.

CONSCRIPTION

PRESS REPORT AS TO ASSURANCE GIVEN AT LIBERAL CAUCUS—QUESTION OF NATIONAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. ROY (Gaspe): Before the orders of the day are called I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). My question is based upon a news item published in yesterday's Le Canada, Montreal Liberal paper, wherein it is reported that the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Jean) stated at a public banquet that Liberal members of this house, at a secret caucus of the party, have been given the assurance by the leaders of the party that conscription will not be enforced and that no national government will be formed. Is the hon. member's statement based on truth?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Those of us who have been in parliament for some time have been accustomed to regard the proceedings of caucus as matters wholly confidential to the parties concerned. If it once became the custom to disclose what had been said at a caucus, or to deny or confirm what it is alleged to have been there stated, I am afraid that very erroneous impressions might readily get abroad. I will say to my hon. friend that proceedings of caucus are private and I intend to set an example to members of all parties by doing my utmost to keep them so.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

INQUIRY RESPECTING LEADERS OF FASCIST MOVE-MENT IN MONTREAL AND TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. BRUCE (Parkdale): Before the orders of the day are called I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). In view of the arrest and internment in England a few days ago of Sir Oswald Mosley and his lieutenant Captain Ramsay, a member of the British House of Commons, may I ask if any steps have been taken to apprehend and deal with the leader of the fascist movement in Canada, Mr. Arcand, of Montreal, and his lieutenant, Mr. Joseph Farr, of Toronto?

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): A number of papers and documents have been seized by the police at the office of that organization and in other places. The representatives of the attorney general of the province of Quebec and the crown prosecutor are at present looking into all these papers and material with a view to taking the necessary proceedings.

ALIENS BROUGHT IN BY BATA SHOE COMPANY AT FRANKFORD, ONTARIO

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): I wish to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) a question with reference to the employees of the Bata Shoe Company at Frankford, Ontario, in view of the peculiar situation of this plant. It is only a matter of five miles from an airport, and it is located immediately beside very important hydroelectric plants and quite close to many large railway bridges. The question is this: Will the Minister of Justice consider the immediate reinvestigation and reexamination of all the aliens brought in by the Bata Shoe Company during the last three years?

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): The question will stand as a notice for the consideration of both the immigration department and myself.

YUKON ACT AMENDMENT

VALIDATION OF YUKON FUR EXPORT TAX ORDINANCE ACT ASSENTED TO MAY 20, 1919

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved the second reading of Bill No. 11, to amend the Yukon Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1-Powers to make ordinances.

Mr. CRERAR: There is little I can add to the observations I made on this measure when it was in the resolution stage. I might however say that so long ago as 1919 the Yukon territorial council imposed an export tax on fur taken out of the Yukon territory to other parts of Canada or to other parts of the world. Generally speaking that tax corresponded to the royalty imposed in the various provincial jurisdictions throughout Canada. It was imposed for purposes of revenue. It placed no disability upon the trapper or exporter of furs from the Yukon that was not imposed by the royalties levied in the various provinces. It is rather curious that recently the question arose as to the power of the Yukon territorial council at that time [Mr. Bruce.]

to impose the tax. This amendment to the Yukon Act simply makes it clear beyond any doubt that they have the power to impose such a tax, and should there be any doubt about their power in the past, what they have done in the interval since 1919 is regularized and made effective.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): This seems to be an innocent and harmless bill. I am surprised that in the present circumstances the minister should take the time of parliament to bring forward such a bill, but it should not take long to pass it. According to the explanatory note and the explanation given by the minister on a previous occasion as well as to-day it would appear that there is some doubt as to the legal validity of an ordinance passed some years ago by the Yukon territorial council. He has omitted to say what the legal doubt is. I should like to know what the doubt is, what it is based upon.

Mr. CRERAR: The doubt, as I understand it, is as to the legal power of the Yukon territorial council to impose such an export tax.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): In principle the bill is quite proper and desirable, but I do not think it should be made retroactive to May, 1919, and when we come to section 2 I propose to offer an amendment in that regard. I shall send a copy of it to the minister now. As to section 1, I think it is quite proper.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Coming into force, Retroactive.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I understand that this matter has arisen because of litigation now pending, or possibly a prosecution which has been attempted under the ordinance passed by the territorial council. At the bottom of this amendment I believe is the desire to bring such prosecution or litigation within the powers of the council. That may be correct as to litigation that may arise in the future, but as to the litigation now pending, I hardly think it fair for this parliament to legislate a man out of court. I suggest that this amendment be added to section 2 as subsection 2 (a):

This amendment does not affect litigation or prosecutions now pending under the ordinance passed May 20, 1919, by the Yukon territorial council, entitled "An ordinance to provide for a tax on raw furs exported from the Yukon territory" and in respect of such litigation or prosecutions section 1 of this act shall not be retroactive.

I hope the minister will not have any objection to that. It is merely to protect the people of whom I speak.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend who represents the Yukon was good enough to speak to me the other day about this amendment, and mentioned then that he thought—so I understood him—that some litigation was pending. We have no record in the department of any litigation pending under this act. A communication has been addressed to the commissioner in the Yukon to which a reply has not yet been received, but the officers in charge of administration here are quite certain that if litigation had been instituted in respect of the tax imposed on any particular individual they would have had notice of it.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): It may be that the information has not yet reached the department. Having very recently come from the Yukon I happen to know that such litigation is pending.

Mr. CRERAR: Can my hon. friend give me any particulars of it?

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): It is, I believe, an attempt to export fur from the Yukon without observing the proper formality. Only recently amendments were passed to the Yukon game ordinance whereby trappers and persons purchasing furs and persons exporting furs must have separate licences. These people I believe undertook, not at all secretly or in an attempt to evade any obligation, to ship some fur, and naturally got into trouble. This legislation should not be retroactive and thus affect them. The words that I suggest as an amendment would accomplish that purpose. Without the amendment I do not think the proposed legislation is fair. As to the general public and as to what will be done in the future in the way of exporting furs, the suggested amendment will have no effect; it is simply a matter of dealing with the particular case that is now pending.

Mr. CRERAR: No one in the past has challenged or disputed the fairness of the tax. No handicap is being imposed upon anyone now in respect of paying what everyone else pays. It would be unfair to those who have paid this tax for twenty years if consideration were given to some person merely on a legal technicality. I do not think this legislation imposes any hardship upon anyone. The litigants in question, if the facts are as stated by my hon. friend, and I do not dispute them since I do not know, could pay the tax and have their furs. There is no discrimination against them; they are simply being asked to do what everyone else has done under the same conditions for twenty years.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not think the minister has quite caught the point of the objection of the hon. member for Yukon. There is a principle involved. As I understand it, the litigation referred to is not ordinary civil litigation; it is a criminal or quasi-criminal prosecution. In that case the question of the constitutionality of the ordinance has been raised as a defence, if I am correctly informed, and it is a perfectly proper and legitimate defence for any accused to raise on advice of counsel. By section 2 of this bill you seek to take away the legal rights of this accused, and that is wrong in principle. The status quo would be preserved for the future by the amendment of the hon. member for Yukon, which affects only prosecutions now under way; in future prosecutions there would be no doubt about it at all, and nobody would be injured. It is a very bad thing to come into parliament and legislate a man out of court. I could use much stronger language than that. I shall not do so, but I suggest to the minister that if he were a legal man he would grasp at once the significance of what I am saying. For a legislature to pass legislation taking away from an accused person a legitimate defence savours of autocracy. I will not go so far as to say it is Hitlerism; it is not as bad as that, but I do suggest to the minister that he ought to accept the amendment. I understand that it has reference to only one case, and it will preserve that man's legal rights. After all this is a British country and we ought to preserve the principles of British justice. I suggest to the minister that to pass this section without the amendment would be a violation of those principles.

Mr. CRERAR: Would that not open the door to all those who have paid the tax in the past, to seek reimbursement?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Oh, no; that is an entirely different matter. It would not give them any rights at all.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): As to the act being retroactive, the proposed amendment would not prevent that. The act would still date back to 1919 and be effective except with regard to this one prosecution in which the question has been raised. It would not be open to anyone else to take advantage of this amendment. I think it would be only fair to accept the amendment.

Mr. CRERAR: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that we let this section stand. We have asked for a report from the commissioner of the Yukon, and before accepting the amendment I should like to satisfy myself as to all the facts in connection with it and to secure the opinion of the legal advisers of the department as to its real scope and effect.

If that is agreeable to the committee I will move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The motion is not debatable, but before it is put would the minister at the same time ascertain from the officers of his department just what is the occasion for this bill if it is not as the result of pending prosecutions under the ordinance? There must be something that brought it to a head. The export tax has been in effect for twenty-one years without ever being challenged, as I understand it; the question has not arisen until now. Perhaps we might have all the reasons for bringing in this legislation at this time. I am just suggesting that the minister might get that information.

Mr. CRERAR: Yes, I can get that, but I rather suspect that these amendments have come under the eye of some student of the law who has raised the question.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They do not usually arise in that way; they arise in concrete cases.

Mr. CRERAR: Not always. These acts are very often under review.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

JURISDICTION OF PROVINCIAL COURTS—CARE OF INSANE PERSONS

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved the second reading of Bill No. 12, to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1—Jurisdiction of provincial courts in civil matters.

Mr. CRERAR: At the present time the superior courts of the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have jurisdiction, west of the eightieth meridian, over civil matters arising in the territories north of their respective boundaries. I am not in a position to inform the house why that jurisdiction was not extended or applied east of the eightieth meridian. At any rate the amendment proposed here seeks to give to the superior courts of Ontario the necessary jurisdiction in that part of the territories lying east of the eightieth meridian. That meridian, I might [Mr. Crerar.]

point out, runs north through Hudson bay, about two-thirds of the distance from the west coast of the bay.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is it approximately an extension of the Manitoba-Ontario boundary?

Mr. CRERAR: No, it is somewhat east of that. In paragraph 2 it is proposed to give the courts surrogate powers to deal with estates in the territories adjacent to their respective provinces. Doubts have arisen in the minds of some of the surrogate court judges as to whether they have the power now to deal with these matters. This is particularly so in the western provinces. By way of illustration may I point out that in the northwest territories north of the province of Alberta considerable mining activities have developed, particularly along the north shore of Great Slave lake. At that point there is now a considerable population. Two small mines are operating, and in the natural course of events people will die and leave property. Their wills will have to be probated or administrators will have to be appointed. This particular section of the bill is being enacted to make clear beyond doubt that these powers exist.

Curiously enough, in the Northwest Territories Act as it stands at present, power is given to the governor in council to arrange with the lieutenant-governor of Manitoba for care of insane persons, or persons who might become insane in the territories adjacent to Manitoba. Section 2 gives power to the governor in council at Ottawa to make similar arrangements with the governments of all the provinces.

Mr. CHURCH: Has there been any application from Ontario to take over this section east of the eightieth meridian as part of that province? I ask that in view of the expenditures made by Ontario at points very close to the boundary. Then, who asked for the bill? Did Ontario ask for it? Has Ontario asked the federal government to confer on these territories civil and surrogate jurisdiction?

Almost every session during periods set aside for the discussion of private and public bills, members are asked to approve of principles and, secondly, to approve the legality of legislation. Has a law officer of the crown attached to the minister's department recommended this bill? Does the Department of Justice recommend it, and if so does it state that it comes within the British North America Act? I ask that question because the bill deals exclusively with property and civil rights of the provinces.

The committee should not pass the next section of the bill. We know that sane people have been found in mental institutions, as has happened in Ontario; and the law courts have had no jurisdiction to take them out. To give the governor in council power to detain people in an institution when, in fact, those people may not be insane, is a most dangerous principle.

I should like to hear an explanation of the first point I have raised. Was the bill referred to the Minister of Justice, and has he decided whether it is within the provisions of the British North America Act? Has he decided whether parliament is at liberty to amend the Northwest Territories Act, and thereby confer additional jurisdiction outside that act? I ask that because the Northwest Territories Act has some jurisdiction in respect of property and civil rights, although the territories do not constitute a province. It may have been held in the courts that there is a lack of jurisdiction over surrogate matters. or matters connected with wills and property. In my view however the bill should have been reported on by the Department of Justice, and we should have a statement from the various provinces affected indicating whether they are asking for it or were consulted. Were the attorneys-general of the provinces affected by the measure shown a copy of it, and did they approve of it?

We have had other bills seeking to amend the Northwest Territories Act, and we know what was done with property, civil rights and education on those former occasions. On one or two occasions the privy council had to interfere, and in view of that fact we should be most careful, especially in war time, not to sanction a bill of this kind without first knowing what we are doing.

Mr. CRERAR: I am not a lawyer. Sometimes I thank heaven I am not.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Oh, don't say that!

Mr. MacNICOL: You will have a greater chance of getting into heaven.

Mr. CRERAR: Consequently my opinion on the point raised by the hon. member for Broadview, whose legal knowledge I do not question, may not be very valuable. After all, however, this is simply a common-sense arrangement. To-day we have northwest territories which are not part of any of our provinces, and are under federal administration.

There is no new principle in the bill, because already, for years past, judges in the superior courts of Ontario and the western provinces have had jurisdiction over civil matters in that part of the northwest territories west of the eightieth meridian. This bill seeks simply to give such power in the territories east of the eightieth meridian. It seems to me there cannot be any question of contravention of the terms of the British North America Act in what is suggested in the bill with respect to the winding up of estates, the probating of wills and matters of the kind. I believe there can be no doubt that we can confer those powers on judges.

The amendments are proposed only to help administration. They have been approved and passed by the law officers of the crown, and I believe there can be no question of their validity. If some action of this kind is not taken the federal administration will probably be under the necessity of setting up its own courts in the northwest territories. Certainly at the present time that is neither necessary nor desirable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): This measure would seem to involve an extension of the principle already indicated in the Northwest Territories Act. There must be some provision made for civil procedure in those territories, and the bill seeks to divide the jurisdiction at certain geographical points for purposes of convenience. Paragraph 2 is new, and seems to have arisen from the growth of the population in the area affected.

Mr. CRERAR: It has applied to Manitoba in the past.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That fact is not indicated in the explanatory note. I can see no objection to the passing of the bill; in fact it seems to me it ought to have the endorsation of all hon, members. I would suppose the minister would be good enough to call the attention of the law officers in the Department of Justice to the academic question raised by the hon, member for Broadview. That could be done before third reading. It is a question involving constitutionality, and the law officers might give some consideration to that phase of the matter. I say that because there is some point in what the hon. member has said, but I am not so sure that it is a practical one.

Mr. GREEN: Is there any intention of turning over any portion or portions of the northwest territories to a province?

Mr. CRERAR: No, that has not been seriously considered. I believe that individuals in the provinces have written letters to the newspapers suggesting that the provincial boundary should be extended to the north pole, but, so far we have not seen any keen disposition on the part of the provinces to assume the extra financial burden which would be involved in the administration of the additional territory.

Mr. GREEN: The premier of British Columbia on different occasions has mentioned that he would like to take in the Mackenzie River basin. Have any negotiations along that line taken place? What is the present situation?

Mr. CRERAR: I can say at once that no such negotiations have taken place.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Confinement of insane persons in provincial institutions.

Mr. CHURCH: May I ask the minister if these insane persons are to be taken completely out of the control of the law courts and their care turned over to the minister? In other words, are those who are placed in these institutions subject to any regulation or control by the law courts of the land, and do they preserve their property and civil rights in the province, or is the liberty of the subject repealed entirely by the new section 75 which appears in clause 2 of this bill? It states:

The minister may, subject to the approval of the governor in council, arrange with the lieutenant governor of any province for the removal to and confinement in any asylum . . . of any insane person. . . .

As I pointed out a moment ago, in Ontario the grand jury found that one person who had been confined in a mental institution was sane. As I read this section the minister is removing the law courts from control over these people and taking power to confine them, subject to the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. CRERAR: I think the hon. member is wholly mistaken. This legislation takes away no civil rights from anybody. All it does in effect is this: If to-morrow an individual in the Yellow Knife area north of Great Slave lake requires care in an institution we want power to arrange with Alberta to put him in an institution in which he can get proper treatment. None of his civil rights is taken away or interfered with. We have this right to-day in the territory adjacent to Manitoba and we simply seek to secure the same right in the territory adjacent to the other provinces.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): May I ask who is meant by "commissioner" in the new section 75, which provides that an insane person may be kept in custody until the pleasure of the commissioner is known? Is it the commissioner of the northwest territories?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes. [Mr. Crearar.]

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Who is the commissioner of the northwest territories?

Mr. CRERAR: Doctor Camsell, at the present time.

Mr. BLACKMORE: As the act now stands the minister is empowered to "make such arrangements with the lieutenant governor of Manitoba as seem reasonable as to the compensation to be made by Canada to that province." I am wondering why that expression is not included in the new section 75 which is being substituted for the old section. It looks as though the minister is to be allowed a certain amount of dictatorial power.

Mr. CRERAR: No. It provides for making arrangements. We have to arrange for the placing of these individuals in appropriate institutions. We could not, for instance, take some person from Great Bear lake down to Edmonton and hold a pistol at Mr. Aberhart's head and say: You have to put this fellow in the asylum. No, we have to arrange the matter with him, and I hope that if the occasion should ever arise we shall be able to make a favourable arrangement with the premier.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I was just wondering why the same expression was not used in the new section.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. CRERAR moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should be quite agreeable to taking the third reading now but the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) has raised a legal question and therefore it would not do any harm for the third reading to wait until the next sitting.

Motion stands.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT

VARIATION OF PROVISION RESPECTING WEIGHTS OF PACKAGE CHEESE

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 13, to amend the Dairy Industry Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1—Cheese.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister give us a general idea of what the bill purports to do and whence came the demand for this change? I was not aware that there was any great amount of processed cheese made in Canada, or even imported, unless put up in packages as outlined in the first part of this clause.

Mr. GARDINER: The explanation which I made on the first reading was probably open to some misinterpretation. In accordance with the provisions of section 8, subsection 2, of the Dairy Industry Act, it is illegal to cut from processed cheese packed in bulk portions of indiscriminate weight for sale to customers. That is, if anyone has a package of more than a pound, a half-pound, a quarter-pound, and so on, it is illegal to cut it on the counter and sell it to the customer.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Just why is that?

Mr. GARDINER: The existing legislation has not been enforced for the reason that a very important part of the trade in processed cheese consists of selling portions cut from packages having an initial weight of five pounds. The old way of selling cheese in stores was to cut a slice, weigh it, and hand it to the customer. Nowadays processed cheese is usually put up in small boxes or packages, but there has grown up a practice of putting it up in five-pound loaves or bricks, and when persons come in who do not want five pounds, the merchant cuts from the five pound loaf. Under the law as it is to-day that practice is not legal, but it is thought to be a legitimate trade in that type of cheese which could be very properly controlled, and this bill simply provides that in future it will be legal to cut from loaves provided they are of not less than five pounds weight.

Mr. SENN: Why is the weight limited to five pounds? Why not three pounds? Is there no demand for the smaller size of package, or what is the reason?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand the customary loaf or brick is a five-pound loaf or brick. It is not thought wise to reduce it to a lower amount if the present weight meets the conditions of the trade as now carried on.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

CORRECTION OF INACCURACIES IN CHAPTER 36 OF STATUTES OF 1939

Hon, JAMES A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 7, to amend the Canada Grain Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair. On section 1—Binning of tough with straight grades as a means of drying.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister will recall that last year there was quite a long discussion and consideration in committee having to do with the general revision of the Canada Grain Act and the question of the drying and mixing of grain. Drying through such a process as is outlined here was considered at some length. Would the minister inform us whence came the demand for this provision, that is, allowing tough grain to be mixed with straight or dry grain for drying purposes?

The CHAIRMAN: I think that the question arises under section 2 rather than section 1.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The purpose of the bill is simply to correct three inaccuracies in the wording of the amending act.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In the numbering.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The section with which we are now dealing relates merely to the correction of the numbering of paragraphs. I can go fully into the matter if the hon, member wishes.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister might give us some information as to the effect of the amendment he made last year in this respect, as they related to the marketing of the crop last year. Probably the Minister of Agriculture will recall that provision was made for a certain amount of mixing so long as it did not interfere with the ultimate grading of the grain as it was weighed out or shipped out of the terminal elevator for export. What was the effect of the amendment last year?

The CHAIRMAN: This section is only for the purpose of correcting the numbering. At present there are three subsections, and the purport of the present section is to make subsections 3, 4 and 5 read 4, 5 and 6. Therefore the question is out of order under section 1. Shall section 1 carry?

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SEEDS ACT

MEASURE TO EMPOWER THE MINISTER TO PRE-SCRIBE FEES FOR SEED CONTROL SERVICES

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Seeds Act, 1937, to empower the minister to prescribe fees for seed control services.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Will the minister explain the resolution?

Mr. GARDINER: We test in our laboratories approximately 100,000 samples of seeds each year. The tests are made in large part for the purpose of selling seeds under grade certificates as required by the Seeds Act. Those having seeds require them to be tested for selling purposes and they are given a certificate showing that the seed is of a certain type. The practice has grown up of having seed tested for all kinds of purposes, and these tests could very easily be made at home. There is no difficulty about making them. Instructions can always be obtained free of charge as to how to make tests and how to consider them. It is proposed to charge a small fee for tests in order to stop a practice which has grown up which takes up a great deal of time and causes a great deal of expense in this branch of the department in carrying out tests which are not absolutely necessary. In addition to that it is intended to charge enough to cover at least a part of the cost of giving the service to those who have considerable quantities of grain to sell. The fee will be a very small one.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is there any authority at the present time to charge such a fee?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The object is to legalize the charge?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. SENN: I notice in the report of the Minister of Agriculture for the year ended March 31, 1939, a statement at page 106 that under the Seeds Act and regulations revenues amounting to $37,744 were collected for the fiscal year. What were these services for? Were they for regular inspection, when perhaps a conviction was going to be registered?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not prepared to say at the moment, but when the estimates are [The Chairman.]

under consideration I will discuss the item. There is no power under the act to charge the fees proposed here.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gardiner thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 19, to amend the Seeds Act, 1937.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WHEAT COOPERATIVE MARKETING

CALCULATION OF INITIAL PAYMENTS TO SELLING AGENCIES—AUTHORITY FOR PAYMENT OF LIABILITIES AND ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend The Wheat Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939, to provide for the calculation of initial payments paid to selling agencies, and also to grant authority for payment of liabilities of the minister under any agreement and of administrative expenses.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Mr. QUELCH: Will the minister explain?

Mr. GARDINER: The first important change is simply an enlargement of the definition of primary producer. At present primary producer means any person who is engaged in the production of wheat and it is intended to widen that definition to provide that "producer" shall be deemed to include any person entitled, as landlord, vendor, mortgagor or otherwise, or by contract or operation of law, to wheat grown by the producer, or any share therein. It makes provision whereby under a crop agreement a person entitled to a third of the crop may deliver under the act as well as a person entitled to two-thirds. The next section provides for the correction of an inaccuracy in connection with the wording in the definition of selling agency. Another section merely provides for wording to clarify the meaning of the section in the original act, and the remaining provisions are to make it possible for the minister to make any payment which may be necessary as a result of the operation of the act. The act now provides that if under the agreement entered into between the department and the selling agency the wheat is not sold for the full value of the advance, then the minister may pay the difference between the amount for which the wheat was sold and the amount of the advance. But there was no provision in the act giving authority to the minister to make the payment and this section provides that authority. It also enables the minister to make payments on administrative costs.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister might at this stage give us more information with respect to this proposal. Speaking generally on the measure, not exactly to the amendment, I might say that last year I opposed a similar bill, from the standpoint that I did not think it necessary, that it did not serve any useful purpose and was intended-I think the term I then used was to succour the grain trade or salvage some of those who needed help and under present conditions I think the same observations would apply. The minister might tell us how the act worked last year, how many cooperatives were set up, the number of elevators and firms that went in, and what happened to many of the small independent dealers or operators in the trade. We might also have figures with respect to the amount of wheat marketed through the cooperatives. It is important that we should have a statement as to the losses sustained in their operations and what amount the government will have to pay to make up that loss, the difference between the guaranteed price of sixty cents-was it?

Mr. GARDINER: Fifty-six cents.

Mr. PERLEY: —and the price at which they sold the wheat. I should think there would not be a very great loss because it was during only a very short time in the marketing season that wheat was below fifty-six cents. That also might be stated—for how long a period was the open market price below the guaranteed price? We should also have a statement as to the effect of the competitive selling by these cooperatives of wheat against the other organizations handling board wheat, for instance. Did any direct benefit accrue to the producers generally from this legislation?

The Turgeon report distinctly recommended that the wheat board should be kept intact ready to operate, certainly in case of an emergency or crisis; and, I believe on the same page of the report, it stated that open market or exchange could not function in the case of an emergency. Surely we have an emergency now. From the information given yesterday by the Minister of Trade and Commerce it would appear that the wheat board will be called upon this year more than ever before to operate, especially if the grain exchange is closed.

As I see it, this proposed legislation more or less continues the competition. It is not necessary; no doubt the board will handle practically all the grain. Further we have the three western pools, one in each province thoroughly organized to carry on the work that these cooperative organizations or groups will do. I think we should have from the minister a general statement as to the operations of these cooperatives in the last marketing season, what the loss will be, the number of bushels handled and the amount of wheat sold below the guaranteed price of fifty-six cents.

Mr. GARDINER: I think I may say that most of the grain trade-I would be inclined to say all of it, though it is just possible that there may be a few exceptions of very small companies—has been organized under this legislation. There are nine different central selling agencies set up. There is the Grain Growers Export Company Limited, Winnipeg, which is the selling agency of the United Grain Growers; the selling agency of the Saskatchewan Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, known as Saskatchewan Pool Elevators Limited, and there is the Alberta Pool Elevators Limited of Calgary, set up under the Alberta wheat pool. Then there are some seventeen elevator companies that have one common selling agency, the Grain Sales Agency of Winnipeg. The Searle Grain Company have their own selling agency. There is Midland Pacific Terminal Limited of Vancouver, British Columbia, which represents the Midland Pacific Grain Company, the Peace River Milling Company and the Northern Grain Company, and there is the Saskatchewan Pool Elevators Limited of Regina for the cooperative elevator associations of the Manitoba pool. They are handling the Manitoba pool wheat. Then there is the Prairie Grain Sales Limited, of Edmonton, representing the Gillespie Grain Company, the Ellison Milling Company and James Richardson and Son; and the Victoria Trading Agency Limited of Winnipeg, representing the Robin Hood Flour Mills, N. M. Paterson, Scottish Cooperative Wholesale Society, Western Canada Flour Mills Company Limited; McCabe Brothers Grain Company, Lake of the Woods Milling Company Limited, Ogilvie Flour Mills and Robin Hood Flour Mills Limited. All these have organizations set up under the act.

The information with regard to marketings by the different companies is given to us confidentially, and I think it would not be proper for me to give that information to the committee. I can only say that something over three million bushels was marketed during last season and up to the present under these different organizations.

Regarding the possible losses on the operations to dateMr. SENN: Before the minister proceeds, was any part of the three million bushels he just spoke of Ontario winter wheat?

Mr. GARDINER: Not to my knowledge, although I would not like to say definitely that none of it was.

I was about to say that all these organizations made an initial payment of fifty-six cents a bushel on wheat which they took in under the act. The act provides that they may not pay more than sixty cents a bushel advance. In setting up their organizations to take delivery of grain from farmers during this year they found it necessary to provide for an average of about four cents a bushel for cost of carrying grain for the period that it has to be carried, so that they said the only price at which they would be safe would be about fifty-six cents. We agreed with that position, and the fifty-six cents per bushel advance was made. Some time ago, I have not the date at the moment, most of these organizations, I think all of them that had wheat, applied for permission to make an additional interim payment of fourteen cents. This additional payment has been made by some of them, if not all. So that the advance which has been paid on that wheat up to date is seventy cents a bushel, or the same advance that has been made to the wheat growers on all the wheat taken in by the Canadian wheat board. The statements that were presented to the government at that time showed that on the wheat which had been pooled until the recent pegging of the price the government was not likely to take any loss. As a matter of fact the wheat had been disposed of at a price which enabled these pools to pay their advance without much possibility of the government having to take a loss. At the present time, so far as I know-it cannot be stated definitely and finally, of course, until the end of the crop year on July 31 next-it is not thought that there will be any loss on the wheat which has been marketed under this legislation.

Mr. PERLEY: What was the exact number of pools or cooperatives set up?

Mr. GARDINER: Nine, I think.

Mr. PERLEY: The statement we have just heard from the minister is a positive admission that there is no need for this measure at all. Nine pooling agencies, including most of the elevator firms and many members of the grain exchange, handled only 3,000,000 bushels out of a crop of 375,000,000 bushels. I think we will require something more substantial from the minister to justify the government coming to the rescue, so to speak, by guaranteeing 'hese companies in [Mr. Gardiner.]

this way in competition with the board and the regular pools of the west. These pools under this legislation paid an advance of 56 cents and then made an interim payment of 14 cents, equal to the total payment under the wheat board act of 70 cents. It resolves itself into this: they have made practically the same payment as was made under the wheat board, except that they did not make the entire payment at once. This interim payment was held up; these pools had the use of that money for a certain length of time, and I think they should be required to account for it.

It seems to me the minister's statement is a definite admission that no useful purpose is being served by this measure, and I think he should move that it be repealed. Allow these people to wind up their affairs with respect to the handling of the 1939 crop; then repeal this measure and continue under the system we had previously.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): If I remember correctly, on April 5 of last year, when the Minister of Agriculture was introducing his bills regarding the marketing of wheat, he stated that he was carrying on something in the nature of an experiment; that is, that there were three ways in which wheat could be marketed under the legislation he was setting up. First there was the open market; second, there were the facilities set up under this bill, by which a farmer might sell to a pool or association; and, third, there was the wheat board, to which the farmer might sell his wheat and secure a minimum advance price.

I agree with the hon, member who has just taken his seat that even on the basis of the experiment it would seem pretty plain now that the contention we made at that time has been justified by what has occurred; in other words, that the best way to handle the marketing of wheat is through a wheat board giving the farmer a guaranteed minimum advance price commensurate with the cost of production. But something has happened since that time. Since then war has broken out, and the best proof that war is no time for experiment with different marketing policies is the fact that just a few days ago the government itself had to intervene and peg the price in order to prevent a very serious collapse in the marketing of wheat.

In view of the fact that it would involve another of his colleagues as well as the policy of the government I do not suppose the minister can make any statement now, but I wonder if he would take under advisement and press upon the government the need for a wheat policy based on the fact that this country is at war and that speculating in food products in time of war can lead to nothing but instability. I believe the government should very seriously consider the closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange, at least for the duration of the war, and the marketing of our wheat through the Canadian wheat board, dispensing with the facilities under this act and with the open market while Canada is at war. It seems to me that is the only way we can hope to have anything resembling a stable agricultural life in this dominion. If at the present moment we are straining every nerve to mobilize our industrial reserve it would seem very unwise to allow the marketing of wheat to be carried on under what the minister himself said was really an experiment. Within a very few days or weeks the government ought to bring down in this house a definite policy for the marketing not only of wheat but of all agricultural products.

Mr. QUELCH: I find myself wholly in accord with the hon, member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas). When this bill was up for consideration last year I stated that in my opinion the correct way to market our crop was through the wheat board; and I think the majority of the farmers of western Canada are in agreement with that idea. If that is sound in time of peace it is even more sound in time of war. Not only should we have a wheat board; in my opinion it should be a one hundred per cent compulsory wheat board, which would market all our wheat. I think we have a very undesirable state of affairs at the present time, in that we have a number of organizations selling wheat apparently to only one man in England. Certainly that must be to his advantage and to our disadvantage. I know if I were buying horses I would much prefer to buy them from a number of people rather than from one man who might hold me up for any price. Naturally the man in England is at an advantage when he is able to buy wheat from a number of organizations instead of from a central selling agency such as the wheat board.

So far as any changes in the measure go, apparently they will make no difference in the price of wheat. I think if any change is to be made at all it should be made in the method of calculating the initial price; and the only fair method would be to take into consideration the actual physical cost of producing that wheat so that the farmers might receive a price commensurate with the prices of other commodities. Especially is that so when we have a government which says, as this government said last September, that it will insist upon equality of sacrifice during the war. There can be no equality when the farmers have to sell wheat for less than the cost of production while on the other hand they are paying gradually rising prices for the things they have to buy. That is indicated very clearly in the last issue of the Searle index, from which I should like to read a few words:

The Searle index of the price of "Things Farmers Buy" (147 items) now stands at 135, 1913-14 equals 100, which means that these things cost farmers in the west, at the present time, 35 per cent more than they did in 1914 before that Great War. The price of wheat—No. 1 Northern—as of April 23rd, basis the open market price, is now 24 per cent lower than it was in 1913-14. This means therefore that a bushel of wheat in western Canada now has a purchasing power in relation to "The Things Farmers Buy" of 56 per cent in comparison with the purchasing power of 100 that it had before the war.

Certainly it does not look as though things were getting any better; as a matter of fact they may get a great deal worse. Therefore I think the farmers have every right to request that the government take immediate steps to institute a one hundred per cent wheat board and guarantee a price that has some relation to the prices of other commodities at this time.

Mr. CHURCH: In view of the war, in my opinion the resolution should be referred to the committee on agriculture. It is of tremendous importance to the people of Canada that this great basic industry, the grain-growing industry, one which the minister understands, be placed on a sound basis. It was urged for many years that free trade should be practised, and that the grain trade was a north and south industry, and not an east and west one to the markets of the world. To-day, however, we have to face the fact that we are at war, and that to a great extent markets have vanished owing to war problems, transportation difficulties and the submarine menace.

To-day we are faced with a grave situation, and we must consider the ability of the country to pay all these bonuses, subventions or subsidies such as the minister and the Liberal party have contended for years were, under free trade, unnecessary. In many respects the principle behind the Wheat Cooperative Marketing Act is satisfactory in times of peace and plenty, but it must be remembered that to-day we are faced with a world war which has brought with it losses of markets all along the line for everything in trade and commerce and industry. In addition to that we are confronted with transportation difficulties, and the dangers consequent upon enemy submarines. We do not know what the cost of the operation of legislation founded upon the resolution will be, and in my view the Minister of Finance should report to the committee on agriculture respecting that phase of the matter.

We find in the resolution provision for the calculation of initial payments paid to selling agencies, and provision for granting authority for payment of liabilities of the minister under any agreement and of administrative expenses. No one can calculate what those provisions and calculations may or will cost Canada. Last year we spent almost six weeks in discussing agriculture; it was virtually a Saskatchewan session. At that time, early in 1939, the minister said, as is indicated in the copy of Hansard which I have before me, that the government was going to get out of the grain and market industry; that it was going to stop subventions and bonuses, and that it would go back to the old principle. That was not done. Later the government recommended the passage of the Wheat Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939, and other measures providing additional bonuses, stabilization funds, subventions and subsidies to the grain-growing industry.

What is the minister doing about the orderly marketing, if possible in time of war, of north American wheat? Has he had any conferences with Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, regarding the orderly marketing of wheat by Canada and the United States under war conditions? Then, is the government going to consider the preference afforded under the Canada-United States treaty, which as I understand will terminate some time in June? Is it the intention of the government to continue the operation of that treaty?

Under the Ottawa agreements Canadian grains enjoyed a six-cent preference when carried on Canadian or British ships to Great Britain, a preference since also given to the United States. In view of the war is it the intention of the government to continue the treaty with the United States for another three-year period? I believe we should have some report as to what a measure founded on this resolution would cost, because in the present circumstances we are asked to consider calculations that in the end may be just a gamble. Wheat may sell at forty cents, fifty cents or sixty cents; no one can tell what the price may be during the war months of this year yet to come. In this year the war, alone, will cost the country, before we are through, almost a billion dollars, and I say we should not pay the losses just in the marketing of the products of one basic industry at the expense of loss of markets in all others.

I do not want hon, members to think that I object to this industry, getting substantial aid as in the past, or to according it a good measure of protection. I have been a consistent protectionist friend of the grain industry since I came here, although I have not acted the way some hon. members in the prairie provinces have acted. I have been a consistent protectionist for the grain-growing industry of Canada, and ever since I entered the House of Commons I have supported advanced protection for that industry. We were told years ago by free-traders in the prairie provinces that the United States was our logical market. They were opposed to any form of protection, and were in favour of complete free trade. However, after that they came along and supported bonuses, subventions, subsidies and stabilization funds of all kinds, and since then we have had all kinds of bonuses, subventions and subsidies for this one industry.

The grain-growing industry is not the only one in Canada which has lost its markets. What industry has not, as a result of this awful war? If we are beaten in the war, everything is gone; industry generally will be ruined and will lose markets. The industrial workers in our cities and towns in the east will lose their work, and many have. Were it not for the British fleet we would be blackened out. We must yet face the war submarine menace and loss of markets, a very serious thing so far as trade is concerned.

In my view Nos. 26 and 27 on the order paper referring to the Wheat Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939, and the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939, respectively, should be referred to the agriculture committee. We have many calculations, all of which may be out in fact and only a guess. The committee should have the power to go into the whole question, and it should have the advantage of hearing the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for the tax-rate in the country. How he is going to raise all the money required, I do not know. Industrial workers can pay no more of these bonuses, subventions and subsidies; they are not content to pay bonuses to some and not to others. There should be equality of treatment. I am for protection for all the people, all the time. and not just for some of them. I do not know on what foundation the calculations respecting this resolution are based, and I believe the committee on agriculture should have the advantage of all details, and make their report accordingly.

Mr. FAIR: I only wish the hon, member who has just taken his seat would go out west and work on a prairie farm for as long as he has attended in the House of Commons. If he did that, he would be in a position to come back and educate those of his friends who are taking the same stand as he has just taken, namely, that industry is bearing all the taxes and all the load.

In contrast to what the hon. member has said, may I point out that the taxes paid by industry are unloaded on to the shoulders of the producers and the consumers, particularly those in western Canada. On different occasions I have given figures showing where the markets of eastern Canada are to be found. On different occasions we have heard hon. members, particularly those of his majesty's loyal opposition, supporting higher tariffs, and from those hon. members we have heard strong objection to any help being given to the wheat producers in the west. Perhaps they will remember that for the only year concerning which we have information respecting tariffs, every man, woman and child in Alberta paid $26.93 to satisfy tariff impositions.

If we were to get back that amount, by way of payments on our wheat crop, we would not need to come to Ottawa to fight our battle each year, as we have been doing in the past. Perhaps hon. members will realize that in the past ten years farmers have not been receiving much more than fifty per cent of the average cost of growing their wheat, and yet we are expected to continue to be patriotic—not in a profitable way—and to supply Canada and other countries as well. Countries across the ocean are being subsidized in the production of their wheat, and yet we have to come here and listen to speeches such as the one just delivered by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church).

Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) told us that supplies of farm products on May 1 were greater than on the same date in 1938 or 1939. But this is no indication that these products were produced at a profit. Last year he told us that if a man gets over twenty bushels of wheat to the acre, he can produce it at from thirty cents to forty cents a bushel. With that statement I do not agree, either. Hon. members in this corner of the house have produced figures proving definitely that over a period of years wheat cannot be raised for less than ninety-five cents a bushel at the farm. I believe that fact is borne out if we look up the operation of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, a measure made necessary through debts piled up because of poor prices received by the producers.

I believe the amendment now being sought is about as necessary as a second tail for a horse or a cow; there is absolutely no need for it. We have on the statute books other legislation which, if properly used, would remove the necessity for the measure suggested. I refer to the Canadian Wheat Board Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. If those measures are used as they should be, and as it was intended they should be, the amendment now before us could be scrapped.

I would suggest consideration by the government of the permanent closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange. After war started, the grain exchange in England was closed. Passing through Winnipeg a few weeks ago, I had a look round the exchange for the first time. One of the officials pointed out to me and to others with me the benefits being derived by farmers from the operation of the exchange. He told us we could not get along without it, and so forth. I asked him if the grain exchange was operating in England. He said, "I do not think it is just now." I told him that it was closed because the government of the old country found it necessary to close it, and I believe the grain exchange in Canada should be closed and left closed. I believe the wheat board should be used and a decent price based on cost of production guaranteed to the farmers.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): What is the estimate of the selling price of these selling agencies which are disposing of the wheat or have disposed of it?

Mr. GARDINER: All I can say at the moment is that the sale price has been more than sufficient up to date to pay the 70 cents; that is, after paying the carrying charges, the 4 cents we are allowed for that. I do not think it would be proper for me to go further even if I had the information here because it would be dealing with business information of these companies which still hold some of this wheat.

In reply to some of the points that have been raised, I would say that this legislation makes provision for carrying on for this year. It is most necessary that this legislation should be on the statute books to make provision for carrying out this year what we provided for last year. If this amending legislation were not passed and there happened to be a loss—at the moment we do not think there will be—we would not be in a position to make payment to the different concerns which have taken delivery of this wheat from the farmers. That covers the first point raised, that the legislation should be dropped altogether.

So far as this amending legislation is concerned, it is necessary that we should have it on the statute books so that it will operate in connection with over 3,000,000 bushels of wheat this year, in order that we may be able to make effective use of its provisions in finally disposing of that quantity of wheat.

On the question whether it would be wise under war conditions to have the legislation on the statute books at all, I would point out that if what has been suggested were to take place, namely, if it became advisable for the government of Canada to take control of all the wheat of Canada and deal directly with the British government, then not only this legislation but all the other acts having to do with the handling of our wheat as they now stand on the statute books would simply have to stand by until the end of the war. There would be no possibility of continuing to handle wheat under the provisions of legislation, for instance, for the proper operation of the grain exchange, or under the provisions of the wheat board act as we now know it, or under this or any other legislation relating to grain which was passed before the war started, so I do not think anyone needs to worry about what would happen in the event of our having to take the action which has been proposed from the other side of the house. On the question whether we should take such action I am not in a position to say anything at the moment. As was suggested by one hon. member who spoke, it is a matter for the consideration of the government, and any final announcement of policy would be for the leader of the government or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, under whom the wheat board is operating.

I would suggest, therefore, that in passing this amending legislation we are providing to make the present legislation operative to take care of the wheat which has been delivered under the act.

One further point. It has been suggested that the act has served no good purpose. Well, the greater part of the wheat which has been handled under this act has been handled by the Saskatchewan pool. They were the first to ask to have the act brought into operation. Most of the wheat which has been delivered under the act to anyone has been delivered to the Saskatchewan pool, and I think the experience gained already in the handling of even 3,000,000 bushels is sufficient to have warranted the act's being brought into effect this year, if for no other reason than that it has made it possible for at least a small group delivering grain under it to determine what they think of a measure of this kind as a future method of marketing grain. We are not always going to be at war. We are going to get back to normal conditions some time, and I do not think the experience that we shall have had under this legislation will prove otherwise than beneficial to the western farmers.

I therefore suggest that the resolution be allowed to pass so that the bill may be presented to the house for consideration and the necessary amendments made in order to carry out the terms of the act.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister has just stated that the Saskatchewan pool handled the great bulk of this wheat. He will recall that when the western committee was down here last year, the Saskatchewan pool was represented on it, and its representatives opposed the passing of the bill of last year. They presented an argument, in their second submission I think, opposing the act.

There was a reason for the pool coming in on it. Not only had they their pool operations, but they are now doing a business similar to that of other grain firms, and naturally they would come in to accommodate certain of their customers who were not putting their grain through their pool; that is, they conducted open market operations just like other companies are doing. I think that is the reason why the Saskatchewan pool came in.

Again, if they handled the great bulk of the 3,000,000 bushels, that is another reason why the bill is not necessary. The minister has not yet stated what was the effect, from a competitive point of view, of the selling of the grain by these cooperative organizations. I grant that it could not have been a very large amount and that the pools handle most of the wheat. The minister has not yet stated what the exact loss is. He said that it was more or less confidential.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no loss yet.

Mr. PERLEY: That is fine. Then there is hardly any necessity for this amendment. In reply to the minister's argument, I would say that section 4 of the bill of last year gives the minister almost unlimited power to prescribe regulations to deal with various matters and to make almost any kind of agreement with the cooperatives. If there is no loss, I think the minister already has sufficient power under section 4 of last year's legislation to wind up the business of the cooperatives.

Mr. GARDINER: I am very sorry that neither myself as minister nor the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) can determine the question as to just what legal powers I have.

The Department of Justice informs me that under the legislation as it is now drafted, if we did have a loss, I have not the authority to pay what the act provides shall be paid, and the department says that this amendment is necessary to give me the power to pay what the act provides shall be paid. If there is no loss, there will be nothing to pay. Up to date there has been no loss. But if there is a loss, then this legislation simply gives me the power to pay what other provisions of the legislation say ought to be paid and require to be paid.

Mr. PERLEY: I would ask the minister to use some of the powers delegated to him in one or two of these bills. At least he might try to do so. In certain bills passed last year, wide powers were given, and I suggest that the minister try out some of those given him in this particular bill.

Mr. GARDINER: All I can say in reply to that is that I found out on quite a number of occasions that the powers given me in a bill were not nearly so wide as some hon. members had said they were.

Mr. COLDWELL: I should like to emphasize the point made by the hon, member for Qu'Appelle. In my travels through Saskatchewan I have found that people connected with the pools, although they may be using this particular act, are not in favour of it because they believe that it is a misnomer to call it a cooperative marketing act. I realize that this measure must go through, but I think the government might be wise to consider the suggestions that have been made from this part of the house that during the war period, at least, all grain marketing be placed under a single board and a price guaranteed to the producer which will give him an adequate return for his labour. After all, we may find in the course of the next few months or a year that food means the winning or the losing of the war.

While I am on my feet let me say that, if we had approximately 450,000,000 bushels of wheat this past year, and 3,000,000 bushels have passed through these particular channels, only about two-thirds of one per cent of the wheat has been marketed in this way. I do not think the experiment has been satisfactory. I do not believe we should continue to operate under this particular measure, to which, although they use it, the people who are handling grain in western Canada are not favourably disposed. I repeat that I just wish to emphasize the point which has been made by the hon member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I wanted to ask the minister a question which does not relate directly to this resolution, but will come up later. Was the grain futures bill which was passed last year, providing for the supervision of the Winnipeg grain exchange, ever proclaimed to become law?

Mr. GARDINER: That act is under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I do not think it was proclaimed.

Mr. CHURCH: As regards this mythical "bonus" which the industrial provinces get, I never heard of it until three years ago some professor started the idea and it was referred to in this house by some hon. members at that time. As a matter of fact, it does not exist except in the minds of some professors and some free traders on the prairies, and with the war, it has gone forever.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gardiner thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 20, to amend the Wheat Cooperative Marketing Act, 1939.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

He said: The house will understand that a portion of the fiscal year has gone, and it is necessary that interim supply be granted in order to carry on the public services.

The interim supply which I propose to ask for is one-sixth, that is two months' interim supply for all items in the estimates which have been tabled; that is, all items which are to be voted. Hon. members will understand that there are a large number of items which are covered by statutory provision and therefore do not have to be voted by special estimate. I am asking for two months' supply for all items; another and additional month's supply for certain items listed in the schedule to the bill which I propose to introduce founded upon the resolution—hon. members will see, when the bill is in committee, just what these services are—then, another two months' supply for a certain other set of items, which means four months' supply in all for that last class; and another four months' supply for the last set of items, which means a six months' vote, or one-half year, for a special set of items contained in the fourth resolution.

We are asking for two months' supply in connection with all items, for three months' supply in connection with some of the items, for four months' supply in connection with some others, and for six months' supply in connection with certain others.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): The minister was good enough to mention this matter to me yesterday. My understanding was that the amount to be voted was one-sixth of the total; and of course, as the fiscal year begins on April 1, it will be readily understood by anybody that two months' supply must be made immediately available or the government services cannot go on. To that provision, of course, there could not be the slightest objection. It has often been done before, under all governments, as far as I know, and there is no objection from this side of the house. But I am wondering whether I should ask at this stage with respect to resolution No. 2, which calls for another one-twelfth in addition to the onesixth provided by No. 1, for certain items for whose meaning we have been asked to look at the estimates; and for an additional twotwelfths or two months' supply under resolution No. 3 for two votes alone; and under No. 4, the sum of $5,543,000 odd for a full six months' vote, or four months' supply in addition to the one-twelfth asked for in No. 1. I am wondering why the Minister has reached out so far especially in reference to resolution No. 4. I understand that resolution No. 4 carries the deficit in connection with the Canadian National Railways. Is it absolutely necessary to pass at this time the full half of the estimated deficit of $15,000,000? Perhaps the minister will make it clear why the change in plan is necessary. I am not objecting, but it might be well to have an explanation.

Mr. RALSTON: My officers advised me, after I had spoken to my hon. friend and hon. members in the south end of the chamber, that various departments were pointing out that one-sixth of the vote would not be sufficient to meet the necessities of the services in some branches, some of which are seasonal and require heavy payments at the first of the year.

With regard to the Canadian National Railways deficit, as the hon. member knows, the traffic in the early part of the year is down and the amount to be provided is larger than in the summer months, so that the heavy part of the deficit is incurred in the earlier half of the year. And of course the Canadian National deficit is on an annual basis and not on the basis of the fiscal year.

After consultation with the various departments concerned, my officers advise me that they have scrutinized the representations made by the departments, and that in their opinion these amounts are necessary to carry on the service, and the payments ought to be made fairly soon in connection with the particular services represented in these different resolutions. When the bill is introduced, hon. members will find a schedule at the back of it giving the different items which are the subject of different monthly periods for which the votes are granted.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is as regards resolutions Nos. 2, 3 and 4?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Vien in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Mr. RALSTON moved:

1. Resolved, That a sum not exceeding $41,455,066.47, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted, as set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty, on account, for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941.

2. Resolved, That a sum not exceeding $2,318,646.13, being one-twelfth of the amount of each of the several following items to be voted, as set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, in addition to the sum mentioned in resolution No. 1, be granted to His Majesty, on account, for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941, namely:—

Votes Nos. 6, 8, 101, 124, 127, 128, 42, 140, 141, 147, 149, 150, 162, 167, 168, 170, 171, 172, 268, 270, 355, 375, 407, 410, 419, 439, 443, 445, 447, 460.

3. Resolved, That a sum not exceeding $507,316.67, being one-sixth of the amount of the following items to be voted, as set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, in addition to the sum mentioned in resolution No. 1, be granted to His Majesty on account, for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941, namely:—

Votes Nos. 17 and 31.

4. Resolved, That a sum not exceeding $5,543,071.67, being one-third of the amount of each of the several items to be voted, as set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, in addition to the sum mentioned in resolution No. 1, be granted to His Majesty, on account, for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941, namely:—

Votes Nos. 22, 39, 99, 156, 165, 191, 192, 193, 196, 453, 459.

Mr. PERLEY: The Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat. May I ask whether resolution No. 3 will take care of the costs incurred in connection with the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, particularly in connection with dug-outs, dams and work of that sort? I understand that there was a considerable overexpenditure. Many of those who put in dug-outs expecting to be paid found that the money was all gone owing to the fact that contractors had been allowed to put in a large number of these dug-outs. Is any part of this vote intended to meet expenditures in connection with these dug-outs?

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. RALSTON: In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I can only say that the vote is available for payments in connection with works which were authorized and for which commitments were made. If the works in question come within that category, they will be paid for out of the vote.

Mr. MacINNIS: The understanding of this group with regard to the resolutions before us is that we shall have an opportunity to discuss all these items when the regular estimates are under consideration. On that understanding we wish to refrain from discussion at the present time.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the understanding.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Mr. RALSTON moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1941, the sum of $49,824,100.94 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Adverting to schedule C, in which the items are enumerated, it may be that a six months' vote in connection with item No. 459, for the Canadian National Railways deficit, $15,000,000, is required now, but is that true with respect to item No. 156, the national parks bureau, historic sites, and so forth, for which the vote is $1,144,215?

Mr. RALSTON: That is the very item which the secretary of the treasury board referred me to first when I called him on the telephone. Before I had seen this bill, I wanted to find out what the nature of the services was, and I said, "What is in need of the six months' service?" And he said, "Parks particularly, because we have to make commitments early in the year." He said that the expenditure is all over by September or October. I join with my hon. friend in being surprised about it, but I can give only the information given to me. I assure my hon. friend he will have ample opportunity to discuss the matter when the estimates are before the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Ralston thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 21, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1941.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. MacNICOL: It would be beneficial if the members had the bill before them.

Mr. RALSTON: I think it would be the first time such a bill was ever distributed in the house. My hon. friend will understand that the bill is not printed, that is it has to have a number, and that it does not get a number until after introduction. Therefore we cannot print the bill before it is introduced. I should have seen that the draft bill was printed, as I did yesterday, but in this case apparently it was not done.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules A, B and C agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

LOAN OF $750,000,000

TO MEET LOANS OR OBLIGATIONS, TO PURCHASE UNMATURED SECURITIES, AND FOR PUBLIC WORKS AND GENERAL PURPOSES

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That the governor in council be authorized to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, an amount not to exceed in the whole the sum of seven hundred and fifty million dollars for paying or redeeming the whole or any portion of toans or obligations of Canada and also for purchasing unmatured securities of Canada and for public works and general purposes.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Perhaps the minister would be good enough to make a statement now.

Mr. RALSTON: There were two matters I wanted to mention to the committee. One was in regard to a question asked by the leader of the opposition with regard to section 4. The hon, gentleman asked me whether there were any other general borrowing powers outstanding, in addition to the amount authorized by this measure. I told him that we had the $750,000,000 general act of last year, which had been exhausted by the issue of war savings certificates, and that I was not aware of any other act. As a matter of fact, I should tell him that the general appropriation act of each year contains provision for borrowing up to an amount of $200,000,000, and there has been borrowing under that act to the extent of $65,000,000. I believe the announcement is to be made to-day, but a day or two ago we issued $65,000,000 of 2 per cent bonds, I think for five years, in retirement of an $80,000,000 issue which is maturing. In other words, at the moment, until the new appropriation act is passed covering these estimates, there is outstanding the power to borrow $135,000,000, the difference between the $200,000,000 provided for in the general appropriation bill of last year and the $65,-000,000 just issued. That power will expire concurrently with the passing of the new appropriation act.

Another matter was mentioned last night by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black), as to whether it was intended, out of the funds provided by this bill, to pay the cost of administering the Department of National Defence. At that time I told him that was the intention. I should have directed attention to the fact that in the general estimates there is provision for a comparatively small amount for the administration of the Department of National Defence, which is in addition to any sums which will be paid out of the money provided by this bill. At page 25 of the estimates as tabled the hon. member will find provision for $228,925.42 for the Department of National Defence, normal services, pensions and other benefits.

The hon, member for Northumberland, N.B. (Mr. O'Brien), asked a question with regard to the purchase of timber by the British government. I have just received a memorandum from my secretary in this regard. I am afraid I shall have to read this memorandum, since I have not had time to study its contents:

On the advice of Mr. Wiseman and (through him) of Sir Gerald Campbell's office, I communicated with Major L. R. Andrews, manager of the trade extension bureau of the British Columbia Lumber and Shingle Manufacturers' Association regarding this matter. While there are in Canada representatives of the British ministry of supply, there are no representatives here of the timber controller for the British government. I quote from a memorandum which Major Andrews has sent me, as follows:

"Major A. I. Harris, timber controller for the British government, handles all bulk purchases of lumber and timber. Up to the present he is dealing through the regular channels. That is, his inquiries go to the big timber agents and importers in the old country who contact their representatives in Canada for quotations, usually requesting prices on very large volumes, 50 million to 150 million feet at a time delivered to a Canadian port. The timber controller then arranges for his own freight to the old country.

"In connection with aeroplane spruce, which is a specialty wood, the ministry of supply have appointed Mr. Bryan Gatty (at Vancouver) purchasing agent for the British and French governments.

"In connection with boxes Mr. Bennett, of the British Box Board Commission (916 University Tower Building, Montreal) is sole purchasing agent for the British ministry of supply for boxes (in the same office as Mr. Ken Fensom, timber commissioner to the United Kingdom for eastern Canada).

"In connection with pit props Mr. L. T. Daniels has been appointed by the ministry of supply as head of the Pit Prop Export Limited. He is located at 4 Imperial building, Moncton, New Brunswick. He has control of purchases of all pit props for the United Kingdom ministry of supply.

"Mr. R. L. Sargant, secretary-manager of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association, has authorized me to say that he is in agreement with me that the purchase of timber by the timber controller is being very well handled and there does not appear to be any necessity for local representation in Canada."

By that I presume he means local representation of the British timber controller.

"If such were the case it would appear obvious that a representative would be attached to Colonel Greenly's staff here."

As my hon, friend knows, Colonel Greenly is head of the British purchasing mission here.

Mr. ROGERS: I believe several questions were asked while I was not in the house yesterday afternoon, and an undertaking was given that they would be referred to me for reply. One question was asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), in the following terms:

What is the regulation of the minister's department in respect of the following category: A married man with a wife and dependents who was parted before enlistment, but who, in accordance with the court decision, was compelled to support his wife and child before enlistment, neglects to make provision for them? His wife has presented her marriage certificate and a copy of the court order granting her support. This support had been taken from her by virtue of her husband's enlistment, he having failed to register at that time. Have there been any complaints of that kind? so, what is the ruling in such cases?

[Mr. Ralston.]

Quite a number of such cases have already arisen. The dependents' allowance board obtain a statement under oath from the wife and forward it, together with a copy of the court order or separation agreement, to the commanding officer of the soldier concerned, who is then paraded and given an opportunity to recognize his responsibility. Considering both the wife's statement and the husband's statement, the board then decides on appropriate action. If an assignment of pay by the soldier is not sufficient to make up the required sum under the court order or separation agreement, the board may then make an additional allowance up to the required sum.

I also have a question which was asked by the hon, member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), in which he refers to a class A boy, who under existing regulations suffered some special hardship with respect to his eligibility for dependent's allowance. The answer to that question is as follows: It is not understood what the hon. member means by a class A boy, because there is no such category in the militia. It may be that he refers to the grouping which applies to tradesmen's rates of pay under classes A, B and C. Boys under the age of eighteen are considered as learners or apprentices and are not entitled to tradesmen's rates of pay until they are mustered as men. The rate of pay for a boy is 70 cents a day. He may make assignments to a dependent and apply for dependents' allowance on behalf of the dependent. If the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar would give me the name and the particulars of the boy to whom he refers, I shall have his case investigated in order to ascertain the reason for his being refused dependents' allowance on behalf of his parents. I believe that was the particular question raised by the hon. member.

Then two questions were asked by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Adamson), as follows:

1. Is the minister prepared to tell the comnittee how many Bren guns have been produced, and—unless he would consider this as not in the public interest—whether the Bren guns so far produced have been satisfactory?

2. Are we producing any 25-pounder guns, any anti-aircraft guns, and what is the production of small arms ammunition and of field ammunition?

My hon, friend is not in the house at the moment, but it is not considered in the public interest to supply the answers to these questions. I shall be very glad indeed to give him a further explanation of why it appears necessary to give such an answer at this time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That seems to be a reversal of the attitude taken yesterday afternoon by the minister. If he will look at page 230 of Hansard he will see that he promised to give me a statement on the production of Bren guns, and used the words, "possibly this evening." I have been expecting him to do so. However, if in the interim he decided on some other course, or that it is not in the public interest to do so, he will be prepared to take the responsibility. But I thought it was decided last night that a statement would be made. At all events, that is how I interpreted his remarks.

Mr. ROGERS: I have a copy of Hansard before me. The leader of the opposition said:

I should say that the minister could at this moment give as a general statement, information as to whether we are producing Bren

I went on to say that I would be glad to make a statement upon that matter, and did use the expression, "possibly this evening." The question put by the hon, member for York West was somewhat beyond that, as my hon. friend must realize. I might say I should be very glad indeed to explain to the leader of the opposition the entire position with respect to the production of Bren guns. May I point out that in these matters I am acting entirely after consultation with officers of the department? I could go this length and say that the Bren gun is in production, but certain modifications just received from England will be adapted before actual issue takes place. I can go that far in making a statement upon the matter, but it is not considered in the public interest to answer the question specifically as put by the hon. member for York West.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would be pleased if the minister will see me about the matter, because the production of Bren guns is of great importance. Of course, if there is real good reason why information should not be made public, I will respect it.

Mr. ROGERS: I appreciate that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I take the responsibility of saying that. And while I am on my feet-and I understand that we are dealing with the new resolution, No. 17 on the order paper with respect to the proposed loan of $750,000,000—may I observe that the minister has made some statements with reference to dependants' allowances, and other matters, which I suppose might more properly come under the war appropriation bill. While we are dealing with dependents' allowances, howeverMr. RALSTON: Oh, what I called was the order for the debate on second reading, but it would seem that we are in committee on the resolution.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I was misinformed. I thought we were dealing with order No. 17.

Mr. RALSTON: I am sorry if there is a misunderstanding.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We can go back to a consideration of the bill, and for that purpose we would have to report progress on the resolution.

Mr. RALSTON: I must confess I did not hear the number of the order called. When calling the order I simply said, "war appropriation." However, according to the chair we are now dealing with the resolution involving the sum of $750,000,000. That being so, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

The house resumed from Monday, May 27, consideration in committee of Bill No. 18, for granting to his majesty aid for national defence and security—Mr. Ralston—Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 2—Appropriation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Last evening, in response to a request I made to the Minister of Finance, he was good enough to send me a copy of a typewritten statement showing total war expenditures up to March 31, 1940, amounting to over $118,000,000, and he supplied me with what I thought was to be a break-down of those figures. What he sent me in fact is not a break-down, but merely a distribution of the total among the different departments. For instance, under the heading of details there is an amount of $112,469,000 for the Department of National Defence.

Mr. RALSTON: Is the hon, member reading from Hansard?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, from a memorandum which the minister read into Hansard.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, that is what appears in Hansard.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But this is not the information for which I was asking. It is a distribution of total expenditures, but it is not a break-down, in the sense an accountant would use the term. We would like to have details of the $67,579,000 for the army, and that sort of thing. That is what I call a break-down. We cannot intelligently discuss the details under this section of the bill until we have that information. Probably I should have indicated my position earlier in the day, and should have pointed out to the minister that the information he gave was not a break-down of the total war expenditures, but merely a statement of distribution. I am not so particular about the $6,000,000 for the other departments indicated in the table, because I believe I understand what most of those expenditures would be. I would point out, however, that we should have the details respecting the huge expenditures on the army, the navy, the air force and the air training plan. Perhaps the word "breakdown" is not the correct technical term.

As it is now six o'clock, I would ask the minister to give consideration to what I have said, and to ascertain whether he can give the committee the details. I am not asking for complete accuracy to the last cent or dollar, but I believe we should have some idea what the expenditures have been.

Mr. RALSTON: I find I did give my hon. friend what I thought I had given him. I was afraid I had made a mistake. I understood he desired a break-down. By that term I understood I should supply a distribution between the various services, the air training plan and other defence services, and among the other departments. I gave my hon, friend that information. I did not know he was asking, nor at that stage did I intend to give him, a break-down of the expenditures for the army, or the navy. That is, I was not at that time attempting to show how much of the sum allocated to the navy was spent for boats, how much for pay and allowances, and so on. I should be glad to consider that point, but I would ask my hon, friend during the dinner recess to consider whether it is advisable to break down those figures, and how far.

In what I have done I am following the practice of 1915 and 1916. I am not suggesting that that is binding at this time, but it is what was done by the then Prime Minister, as reported at page 1397 of Hansard for 1915. At that time Sir Robert Borden said:

The statement which has been given to me in regard to the expenditures by various departments of the government under the appropriation, up to the 30th January, 1915, is as follows.

And then he set out a figure of $32,000,000 for militia and defence, as a whole, $3,000,000 for naval service, and so on. That was all that was done at that time. The other items in the table referred to other departments. I wonder if my hon. friend, to save the time

I wonder if my hon, friend, to save the time of the committee and of the department, would indicate to me on what items he would like to have information as to the amount of the expenditure made.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The main items of course are the army, the navy and the air training plan.

Mr. RALSTON: But what items in those?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We can-not really tell until we see them. This is merely a distribution; it is in no sense the de-tailed expenditure. If it is not in the public interest that we should have the information, the government must take the responsibility, and I have not very much more to say. For the sake of illustration, I was told by a member of the other house, a gentleman who is very close to my hon. friend, that some Tory profiteers had gone down to New York, bought a lot of rich men's yachts and sold them to the government. They are now in Bedford basin or somewhere in that vicinity. I did not treat the story very seriously, but I would ask what amount has been spent in the purchase of bottoms in the United States, where the purchases were made, and so forth. That is merely an illustration of what I have in mind, and I am giving it to illustrate what we would like to have. Of course, we do know that pay and allowances must account for a large portion of the $69,000,000 for the army, and there is no necessity of going into that. But there are other things, and until we know what the government has done, until some detailed expenditure is given to us, how can we possibly investigate these expenditures? That is what I have in mind and the minister might give it consideration during the dinner hour.

Mr. RALSTON: I assure my hon, friend that these are not mere generalities. I want to give the utmost information I can. But I say to him also that I do not believe any government has ever before submitted a statement showing each individual item. Take, for instance, the item my hon, friend mentions. The statements in the public accounts appear in the form of votes. It may be pay and allowances and other things. That was exactly the purpose I had in mind when I put opposite pages 2, 3 and 4 of this bill certain headings which would indicate certain objects of expenditure respecting which hon, members could ask questions. But I did not expect to bring down the public accounts, as it were, showing in detail all the individual invoices paid in respect of each particular item. I suggest to my hon, friend that he and I both give the matter consideration during the dinner recess; and I think the best way would be, if he has anything in mind with respect to which he desires to ask questions, to do so, or if I have anything in mind with regard to a breakdown of the expenditures I shall be glad to give it. That will give my hon, friend an opportunity to ask for details in connection with a particular item; and if the information can be given, in the public interest, it will be given, but if it cannot be given in the public interest, an explanation will be made which will be entirely satisfactory to my hon. friend.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 2-Appropriations.

Mr. RALSTON: The leader of the opposition asked for some further figures in connection with the expenditure. I may say that I did not expect to be giving a further breakdown, but I have had the office of the comptroller of the treasury working during the recess, and I expect to have in a few minutes figures which will show a break-down under the general headings which are mentioned in the explanatory notes to the bill itself.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask the Minister of National Defence a question in connection with paragraph (c), particularly with regard to the word "industry." I read in the press that the United States government have issued an order that no one but citizens of that country shall be permitted to work on the manufacture of any military equipment for that government. Will there be or is there in Canada a similar order, permitting only British citizens to work on the manufacture of munitions required by this government?

Mr. HOWE: There is no such order. Canada is interlocked with the United States in a good deal of its production, and I think it would be hardly feasible to put an absolute prohibition against anyone excepting a citizen working on any British munitions order. I believe we would find that our production would be very seriously curtailed.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then how can the United States do it?

Mr. HOWE: The United States is a more self-contained industrial country than Canada. Canada is still dependent upon the United States for certain grades of steel, for cotton and for certain other materials, and I believe that an order of the kind that my hon. friend suggests would cut our production tremendously.

Mr. MacNICOL: As a matter of fact I had not suggested anything. I only asked a question, and my question pertained particularly and solely to the manufacture of munitions in Canada, not in the United States. We have no control over whom they employ in the United States to make munitions for Canada, but have we not control over Canadian manufacturers employing people to make munitions in this country?

Mr. HOWE: We have control, of course. But we have passed no such order.

Mr. GREEN: The other day, when the hon, gentleman acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply made a statement, he mentioned that certain articles of equipment could not be manufactured in Canada. Apparently the intention was that some would be procured in the United States and some would be obtained in Great Britain. It seems fairly obvious now that it will not be possible for us to get equipment in Great Britain. Certainly we shall not be able to get very much from there. Under those conditions would it not be possible for the government to initiate a programme under which all equipment shall be made in Canada or purchased, say, from the United States or from Australia?

There is one other matter upon which I should like to have information. Apparently there are across the country many plants which have been anxious to do war work and have not yet been given an order, perhaps because they could not carry it out as cheaply as some other firm. In view of the seriousness of the situation in which we are placed at the present time, would it not be well to allot work of one kind or another to all these plants and get them into the war effort without any further delay?

Mr. HOWE: I may say that since the position of Britain as a supplier of Canada has changed, the Department of Munitions and Supply is making strenuous efforts to review production of such war materials as it had been dependent upon Great Britain for. We are exploring the possibilities of production in Canada; we are replacing certain supplies by obtaining them from the United States instead of from Great Britain, and we are reviewing our whole purchasing programme.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

Our position previously, of course, was quite obvious. We were collaborating with Great Britain; where they had obvious advantages in respect of production we were not attempting to manufacture the same class of supplies. We thought our best contribution would be to concentrate on certain articles which we could produce more advantageously than Britain. At the moment we are revising that policy in the light of the existing situation, and we anticipate that there will be a speeding up of production and an opening up in Canada of new lines of production just as rapidly as they can be organized.

Mr. GREEN: What about making use of these smaller plants across the country?

Mr. HOWE: As I interpret my job, it is to supply the requirements of the armed forces in the most efficient manner possible. As far as I am concerned I am not interested in whether a plant is large or small provided it can do the job. We have certain work to do; we have a complete record of every plant in Canada and its equipment, and we are doing our best to use the resources of Canada most efficiently.

Mr. GREEN: I understood the other day that the question was one of cost. I am not suggesting that any particular small firm should get work, but I am asking whether it would not speed up the production of equipment if all the plants in Canada were used on the manufacture of one or another type of equipment.

Mr. HOWE: Well, it would indeed, provided we required types of production that could use all the plants. As it is, we have certain requirements to fill; and as I say, we have a record of every plant in Canada. We try to fill those requirements as efficiently as we can and at a reasonable cost, although we have never let cost be the entirely determining factor; the factors of deliveries and quality are very important, in fact they are often the determining factors. But naturally we pay no more for this equipment than it is necessary to pay.

Mr. CHURCH: Will there be sufficient funds available in case the government finds that, owing to the progress of the war, it may be necessary to call out the militia all over Canada? Also at some militia camps last June there were complaints of a lack of mechanized equipment.

Might I refer to another matter under this bill for granting to his majesty aid for national defence and security? Section 91, subsection 7 of the British North America Act says it is this parliament's responsibility under militia and defence for the protection of all municipal and provincial property in time of war, which includes in the Niagara district, for example, rights of way and towers for direct current of the power lines. The import-ance of those power lines during the last war is shown by the fact that at one time Ontario was supplying 56 per cent of all the munitions because Ontario's industries had cheap power ready. If the power went off through lack of guards, the production of munitions would be stopped or slowed up. I should like to know what the government is going to do about this question of soldier guards on all municipal and provincial utilities. This matter has been before the house; it was one of the scuttled motions away back in January. The onus of protecting the lines during the last war was on the dominion government under the words, "militia and defence." For example, there is a camp at Camp Borden, another at Barriefield, and another at Trenton. Soldiers in these camps were, in the days of the first war, used in part of their time, while in training, for this guard duty, and were utilized in guarding the rights of way of public utilities all over Ontario.

What is the government going to do also about cadet services? In the great war, in fact, in all the wars that we have been engaged in, had it not been for our cadet services the militia units, who are largely recruited from former school cadets, would not have made the showing that they did. They were the back-bone of the militia during the days before the South African war, in the Northwest rebellion and in the last great war. I submit that we should have a declaration from the government on a forward cadet policy in conjunction with boards of educa-

There have been many requests for transportation on the railways for our soldiers. The soldiers are moved from Windsor to Camp Borden and from the maritimes to Toronto. In the last war the government issued what were known as soldier commutation tickets, and were carried on the local street cars free in many cities. I have seen instances, in the city I come from, of women and children travelling on trains and having to pay full fare, coming long distances. Some of these camps are only five or ten miles from a city. The men are getting $1.30 a day. When 30 cents a day for carfare is deducted, there is not much left them; and if they are late they are fined and may lose two or three days' pay. The result is that the women and children suffer. The minister ought to look into this matter and make an announcement. He should get in touch with the boards of education in connection with the cadet movement.

May I say one word in conclusion with reference to soldier insurance. Surely out of this $700,000,000 there can be found something for looking after the insurance of our men who are going overseas, both for those who get killed and for those who come back after the war. In my opinion it would be cheaper if we had a system of soldier insurance to take care of dependants of those who are killed and to aid in the civil reestablishment of those who come back. A system of this kind would effect a large economy in pensions, and widows' and other allowances.

I hope that as the session proceeds the government will see the advisability of having one or more private sessions. If we had one or two such sessions, we could clean up a large number of non-contentious matters which, if freely and fully explained, would no doubt pass easily, such as improvements and inequalities in dependants' allowances, guards, recruiting, and other soldier grievances.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: May I refer briefly to a matter of vital importance which so far has been almost completely overlooked in the debate? The Minister of Finance spoke the other day of the morale of our Canadian troops. Without that proper morale, all the money, all the men and all the sacrifice will be of no avail. What creates this spirit in our men and in our people? It is created by faith and confidence, by that assurance which comes from the knowledge that their leaders have the ability and the power to render proper leadership. How can we best create that assurance in the minds of those who go to sacrifice all that living means? How can we maintain in the hearts and minds of those who remain at home that proper spirit? We can do it only by assuring them that their sacrifices are not again a waste of life and material, and the creation of a great debt which will cast its shadow over the lives of generations yet unborn. There must be proof of effective action at home. They must know that there is not corruption or profiteering. We must rid Canada of the spirit of a profiteering world. These boys must be assured that justice will be preserved and democracy maintained at home. Let the traitors of the great cause of democracy—those who would use the freedom given to them under the British flag to betray us in the dark hour of trial-be treated as befits their acts; but let us be equally sure that the civil liberties, the justice and the fair play, which are also a part of our traditions, will not be destroyed in the process. That is vital.

Canadians must always remember that the civil liberties won for us by our forefathers are our only guarantee for progress. It those liberties for which we are at war. They are sacred to all true Canadians—they must never be abused. The maintenance of those liberties is a sacred trust of this parliament. To-day Canada's manhood goes to fight to maintain freedom and democracy abroad so that these rights still may be the heritage of future generations.

It is incumbent upon every parliament of Canada to respect and constantly protect every clause of our constitution. Orders in council may be necessary at a time of stress, but Canadians must be eternally vigilant to see that these privileges are properly used. No cabinet should be permitted to set aside legislation passed by parliament as was done on August 26, 1939. Not until seven or eight days later was the War Measures Act passed which permitted such action. Why? When our constitution is not respected, Canadians must make their instant protest; for the path of such action leads directly to anarchy.

Mr. RALSTON: I am sure my hon. friend is not aware that the War Measures Act was in force at the time, forming a part of the statutes of Canada published in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Was it not made retroactive?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: While men offered their life-blood in the hour of danger, profiteering industry refused to provide the sinews of war. To-day Canada hangs her head in shame as we find our earliest efforts thwarted for want of supplies. Canada and the empire were sold out.

Quoting from Hansard of September 12, 1939, page 179, I find these words of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe):

I can say to my hon. friend that from that day to this the defence purchasing board has done its very best to place contracts on that basis and has used every pressure that could be brought to bear in the form of patriotism and so on, but to date it has not succeeded in placing a single contract on that basis.

This is one of the most revealing cases of the attitude of industrialists toward the war. From this statement it is quite evident that there was agreement among the contractors. It is abundantly evident, too, that patriotism and sacrifice mean nothing to them—profits mean everything. Profits to them mean more than Canada or the British empire. They are largely responsible for our present plight with regard to the shortage which is paralyzing our war effort. Instead of yielding to the demand for a greater increase in profits, why did not this government or the administration nationalize the industries which are so vital to our very existence?

Is money again to be considered of more importance than life? Many boys from the western plains leave debt-ridden homes as they go to fight for Canada. After enlisting, they hear that relief quotas are to be drastically reduced, farm machinery prices are raised within ten days after the election. and the soldier goes into battle wondering how his aged parents and his sisters can live on the meagre returns from the home he has left. There are no profits for him. To-day he looks to this house for leadership. He asks why, if he is willing to give his life, the money-lenders should not be willing to give a part of their money. In the last war Canada socialized her greatest natural resource, the blood of her manhood; and while this was being poured out, profiteering industry and money-lenders enriched themselves with taxfree bonds, and laid upon coming generations a debt so staggering that we can but borrow to pay the interest. Too soon wives and parents will be sent telegrams to tell them that their husbands and sons will not come back. No telegrams will come to tell the money-lenders that some of their contribution will not come back.

An hon. MEMBER: It will not either.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Why do we not have some equality of sacrifice? The boys in 1914-18 died in what they were told was a war to end war.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): What is the hon. member reading?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): He is a new member, let him go on.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): My point of order is that I should like to know whether he is reading his own speech or if someone else wrote it for him.

Mr. ROWE: There is no point of order in that.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is he reading his own speech or what someone else said?

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think that is a point of order. It might be a question to be asked of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I thank you, sir. We maintain that the natural resources of Canada are the birthright of the Canadian people. We believe that they should be used to the utmost in the winning of this war. This control over our life eats like a cancer into the good young life of our country, and our people wilt and rot. Canada is rotting to-day. The most healthy part of this nation, as far as I can see, is in the maritime provinces where cooperative societies are making some progress. Ex-directors, directors and legal advisers of big business are, I fear, too close to the coffers and inner councils of this government.

[Mr. Castleden.]

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The question is raised as to whether the hon, gentleman is reading his speech. The rules of the house do not permit him to do so. If the hon, gentleman is reading his speech—

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I have some notes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): On that point of order, my understanding is that the hon. member is following his notes pretty closely but, he being a new member, I suggest that we allow him to proceed; I think we shall make progress better in that way than in any other.

The CHAIRMAN: I draw the attention of the committee to the fact that, from the beginning of this session, no objection was ever raised to an hon. member reading his speech; but when the attention of the Chairman is drawn to the fact that an hon. member is reading his speech, the Chairman has no alternative but to call attention to the rule.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Thank you, sir. The common peril at this time, and the common good of this and future generations, demand the public ownership of all the natural and industrial resources of this country. These are the wealth that provides the sinews of war. We also believe that if you take the profits out of war, you would do a great deal to abolish war. If that is done, perhaps the world and humanity may yet be saved. Canadians have inherited a great land, and they are willing to sacrifice for it. Our government should be immediately condemned if they fail to take these natural resources, the things that belong to the people of Canada, and use them in this hour of trial. Western Canada has been betrayed by the governments of this country. The people in that land have been exploited; the organization of society in the west is but a shadow of its former self. The other evening this house listened with bated breath to the cry of humanity—the cry of a mother starved for her brood. I watched, with sinking hopes, the looks of disdain on the faces of some hon, members opposite. She spoke for thousands. Let me warn this administration that out of that great land of suffering humanity will rise a voice which will demand the restoration of the heritage that has been taken from them. They will demand that measure of equality and of social justice and the opportunity to live which have so far been denied them. If this government fails, there will sweep across Canada, when this war is ended, a rising protest which will take this present administration and drive them into the "abysmal depths of oblivion" from which they never should have emerged.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The western province have been the victims of vicious exploitation. Uncontrolled grain exchanges, unchecked machine combines and ruthless mortgage and finance companies have looted and ravaged the great land of the west. The price of everything the farmer buys is controlled, but he is given no assurance even of a minimum price for the commodities he sells. Over ninety-five per cent of the farmers of Saskatchewan are in debt; almost ninety per cent have mortgages on their farms and forty-five per cent of them have lost their land and become mere tenants and share croppers. About one-third of the people in the constituency which I have the honour to represent are of Ukrainian birth. They came to Canada, have worked to build a home, and now in the hour of trial they are willing to offer themselves to fight for that measure of freedom which they know should be the heritage of every Canadian, and which was denied them in Poland from which they came. These men are offering themselves willingly. To the eternal shame of Canada we find these dispossessed people more willing to die for Canada than are the money-lenders to surrender their pound of flesh. Give to Canadians the assurance that when this war is over and they come back, opportunity will exist for all. They look to you for that guarantee. Demonstrate to everyone that action and a square deal will be the great achievement of this parliament; that will inspire our people to great sacrifices, and so great will be their morale that they will win against all odds. This administration has been in power for over five years; it has been returned with the greatest majority ever enjoyed by any government in this house-

An hon. MEMBER: Too long and too big.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They have an opposition which is willing to assist in every way and a willing people ready, yes begging, to serve. Do not betray them.

Mr. NEILL: The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) was kind enough before six o'clock to answer one or two questions with regard to dependents' allowances, although it did not seem very appropriate to the section. I wonder if he will allow another question in that connection.

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly.

Mr. NEILL: It is perhaps not so much a question as an explanation which I think will be appreciated by many people throughout the country who seem to think—and I share the view—that some discrimination exists in connection with the matter.

When the war began, the government in their wisdom, and I think rightly, decided to realign the payments made to soldiers' wives, and also introduced payments to dependents. They raised the payments made to wives from $20 in the last war to $35, quite properly. They also introduced the question of soldiers' dependents, giving the woman an allowance for the children the soldier had up to two, and also took cognizance of dependent mothers. But for some unknown reason they allowed a dependent mother, who stood in the place of a wife to him as far as housekeeping and so on goes, only the sum of $20, and the argument for this is along these lines. I applied to some of the numerous boards, and I quote the answer I received as to why a widowed mother should not get $35 just the same as a wife:

As a consequence of the additional responsibilities assumed by a wife in regard to the maintenance of a home for herself and her husband and possibly her children, the total expenses involved are considered to be greater than those of a mother whose responsibility ends with her own maintenance.

I differ very much from that. In the first place there is no need to introduce the question of children because they are paid for separately. Further, a woman does not have any more expense maintaining a home for herself, if she has no children, than if she is the soldier's mother. Furthermore, the wife of a soldier to-day would naturally be a young and presumably healthy woman. She would not require as much to maintain herself; she could even go out to work to a certain extent, if she had the opportunity. Certainly she could do certain chores round the house, such as splitting and bringing in wood, that would be perhaps impossible for an aged mother to do. Again, the old mother would probably require medical care and attendance, which surely would bring her requirements up to those of a wife. So, instead of giving only $20 to a mother, I would suggest that the amount should be the same as that given a [Mr. Castleden.] wife, which is $35. If $35 is considered to be a fair and reasonable sum for the woman who is left alone, who is relieved of many of her responsibilities in connection with maintaining a home through the absence of her husband, I think that should be considered also a fair and reasonable sum for the mother.

I should like also to refer to a case which probably does not arise very often, but which has arisen and in which I think a favourable decision might be given. I took up the case of a man who was the sole support of his grandmother. When he went overseas she was not allowed anything. When I took up the case I discovered that according to the rules, which were formulated last August or September, the grandmother would be eligible if the soldier were illegitimate, but that if he was of legitimate birth the grandmother would not get anything. I believe that was later altered, but only to the extent that now no grandmother is eligible for the allowance. I imagine there would be very few cases in which the grandmother would be the sole dependent of a soldier, and in those few cases I think the department might well waive the difference between the words "mother" and "grandmother." That is a small matter which could be easily adjusted. I should like an explanation on that point and also as to why an aged widowed mother, requiring assistance in her house and perhaps medical care, should not receive the same allowance as an active wife.

Mr. ROGERS: I should like to thank my hon. friend for bringing these cases to my attention. The other day the Minister of Finance announced that the regulations concerning dependents' allowances would be reviewed in order to discover cases of hardship and to seek remedial measures where such cases were found. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is difficult to distinguish between the soldier's wife without children and the mother he mentioned.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The children do not matter; they are dealt with separately.

Mr. ROGERS: Quite so. Actually I believe the amount payable to a mother in the circumstances mentioned is based upon the amount paid under the Pension Act. I should like, however, to take note of both the cases mentioned by my hon. friend, and I will see that they are made subject to review. I shall give him any further information that may be required on that point.

Mr. NEILL: Not these particular instances only but typical similar cases.

Mr. ROGERS: Quite so. While I am on my feet I should like to say to the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) that the appropriation provided by this bill is intended to cover the expenditures he mentioned, for example the possible expansion of encampments during the summer months and any expansion which may be necessary in our Canadian active service force. Needless to say, if the amount provided is not sufficient for these purposes, more money will be obtained, because we must be guided by the necessities of the situation as they develop.

In the committee there has been some discussion of the position of tanks and their utilization in Canada. I should like to take this opportunity to deal with an exchange of correspondence on the subject of tanks and more particularly on the employment of Colonel Carter, British tank officer, this correspondence having been made public yesterday in a Toronto afternoon paper. I think it is of some importance that this question be dealt with at this stage. Perhaps I might proceed by first placing on record a telegram which I received on November 14 last from Major Everett Bristol, of Toronto, as follows:

In view of newspaper reports yesterday that Canadian government is asking British government for experts may I call your attention to the fact that Colonel E. J. Carter lately chief instructor of the royal tank school, England, one of Great Britain's experts on tank and armoured car design and tactics is at present at the Mount Royal hotel, Montreal, and proposes to sail for England on Saturday 18th. Colonel Carter who is retired expects to be reemployed in England on his return but in meantime is not under orders and is available if required here. He has already visited the tank training centre at Camp Borden and is well known to General McNaughton. As a result of meeting him a group of ex-officers and others in Toronto have expressed their willingness to assist in any way that may seem practical in developing tank training equipment and for benefiting Canadian armoured troops generally. May I respectfully suggest that Colonel Carter be asked to postpone his sailing and that he be interviewed with a view to the possibility of utilizing his services in the training of the tank units of the C.A.S.F. and in the event of production of tanks on this side being determined upon in advising on the technical problems relating thereto.

In reply I sent the following telegram on November 15:

Reply your wire yesterday respecting Colonel Carter, appreciate your interest in this matter. Matter has been carefully considered but our tank organization does not warrant appointment additional senior officers at present.

That is signed by myself. In accordance with the usual procedure my reply to Mr. Bristol was made after his telegram was referred to the appropriate officers of the Department of National Defence for a report.

My reply was based on this report. To put the matter briefly, it was considered that while Colonel Carter was a most competent officer-I should like to have it fully understood that there was no question at all as to his competence—our tank organization did not warrant the appointment of additional senior officers. Lieutenant-Colonel Worthington, a Canadian officer, was in charge of this work. He had exceptional technical qualifications and was well acquainted with Canadian conditions. He was an officer in whom everyone, including the tank authorities in England, had the greatest confidence. After his return from England, where he had been taking a course in tank tactics and maintenance for over a year, the highest reports on his work were received from the authorities in the United Kingdom. Therefore it was considered that for the present no additional senior officers would be required, since Colonel Worthington was a competent adviser on all matters pertaining to tanks. I might add that during his visit to Canada, Colonel Carter met General McNaughton as well as other staff officers at the Department of National Defence, where he was received with every courtesy and consideration.

The article in the Toronto Telegram raises the further question of why tank units were not sent forward with the Canadian division. The reasons why we have not sent tank units overseas relate in part to the war establishment of a division and in part to problems of production. So far as the organization of a division is concerned, tank battalions are neither divisional nor corps troops. They are army troops and are supplied on an established scale to each corps forming part of an army. As it was intended at the outset that the first Canadian division would form part of a British army corps in the field, it was decided that tank battalions for this British corps should be supplied by the British army establishment, at least until such time as we were able to work out the problem of tank production in Canada in cooperation with the British purchasing mission. My colleague the minister who is acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply will be in a position to deal with this aspect of the question. I felt it was of some importance that I should place this information before the committee as soon as possible, because I want to make it entirely clear that our attitude towards Colonel Carter was one of respect for his ability. But the officers of the department, with full knowledge of the situation, were convinced that in the person of Colonel Worthington, who had a distinguished record in the last war, and had had specialized training in tactics in England recently, we had one who was entirely capable of supplying us with whatever advice might be required in connection with the use of tanks.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): While we are on the question of tanks and tank equipment, would it not be desirable that the minister who is acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply give to the committee a frank statement as to what the government policy is in relation to this class of equipment, and also some information in respect of aeroplanes. I have heard something of the story with respect to aeroplanes, and I know something of the difficulties. We have had no statement from any member of the government as to the question of policy on this major equipment, namely aeroplanes.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon, friend will note that the minister who is acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply was about to make a statement when the hon, member rose.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We would like to hear it.

Mr. HOWE: I might explain at the outset that it was not the function of the late war supply board, nor is it the function of the present Department of Munitions and Supply to state the defence policy of the country. It is the function of the Department of Munitions and Supply to obtain materials and supplies as required by the service departments of this government, and the departments in Britain.

However, I am in a position to give a history with respect to tanks, as it has reached the Department of Munitions and Supply, and its predecessor board. On October 20, 1939, a requisition was sent in to the defence purchasing board, which was then functioning, for one hundred tanks, infantry, mark 3, known as Ballantyne tanks, hulls only. That was received from the British purchasing mission. This requisition stated that drawings and specifications would be forwarded as soon as possible.

Drawings and specifications were received by the production department of the war supply board on January 27, 1940. A conference was immediately held between the technical experts connected with the British purchasing mission, the technical experts of the war supply board, and the master of ordnance department of the militia, and it was decided that the logical plant in Canada to undertake the order was the Angus shops in Montreal. The Canadian Pacific Railway, which owns the shops, stated that it would undertake the work, and immediately placed its engineers on the job of organizing production.

On April 2, 1940, the British war supply board withdrew the requisition. No reason is given in our files, but it was understood that the drawings we then had were to be replaced with a later development in the line of tanks. In fact, I was told that verbally at at the time, namely, that other plans and specifications would be along, and that Britain preferred the production of tanks in Canada from a later design.

Since then the department has received no further information. Concurrently with that order, it was the intention of the master of ordnance to develop supplementary production for Canada. Wherever we can, we have attempted to combine British production and Canadian production in whatever of the major munitions of war are undertaken here. Very frequently we share the capital expenditures necessary to provide equipment, and in general we try to coordinate our efforts so that our types of production may follow parallel lines.

That was the policy on tanks, and we have been pressing for a reopening of that subject. I think it would be unwise to pass on to hon. members the reasons given me as to why a further inquiry has not been received from Great Britain.

In the matter of aeroplanes the Department of Munitions and Supply has had two problems: first, to produce the aeroplanes that have been regarded by the technical experts of the government as proper defence equipment for our coasts and, second, we have also had the problem of arranging a supply of aeroplanes for the British empire training programme. We had those two problems well in hand until quite recently. We had all the components for our defence aeroplanes purchased, and we had production going in this country. The same was true of the air training planes. We had certain production in Canada, and certain production arranged for in Great Britain and the United States. The events of the last few days have disorganized that considerably. As I said a few minutes ago, we are bending every effort to reorganize that programme so that it will function with the new sequence of events. I think I can say we have made a great deal of progress in reorganizing our plans, and that at the moment we have the situation fairly well in hand.

In addition to the Canadian requirements of the types I have mentioned, Great Britain herself has organized certain sources of supply of aeroplanes in Canada. About a year or more prior to the war a contract had been arranged with Associated Aircraft, which was a partnership of some six Canadian aeroplane firms, to produce aeroplanes for shipment to Great Britain. Another source of production was arranged at a plant at Fort William, for direct shipment to Great Britain. In the latter case, Canada placed a supplementary order of the same planes for her defence forces.

The production for Great Britain is of course going on, because the aeroplanes are being shipped, less engines—the engines to be supplied in Great Britain. Our difficulty has arisen on account of the fact that we have been advised that Great Britain, temporarily at least, will not be able to supply certain engines.

Mr. HOMUTH: Are we to understand, then, from the minister's statement, that no tanks have as yet been ordered?

Mr. HOWE: That is correct.

Mr. MacNICOL: Cannot the government order from the United States?

Mr. HOWE: Is the hon, member asking if we have ordered from the United States?

Mr. MacNICOL: Will not the United States supply this government with tanks?

Mr. HOWE: That inquiry is in hand, through the British purchasing board and the Canadian Department of Munitions and Supply. Certain investigations are being made to that end.

Mr. QUELCH: I may have misunderstood the minister who has just spoken, but in reply to the hon, member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) I understood him to say the reason why we were giving orders to larger factories rather than smaller ones was that the former were more efficient. Surely at this stage we should be utilizing the services of every factory in the dominion, large and small, and all the shops. It should not be a question of which factory is more efficient. If a smaller factory is not properly equipped, it could be remodeled to produce to the maximum. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) assured the house that our production must be accelerated to the limit-indeed, without limit. I would ask the minister this question: Does he consider that we are at the present time increasing our production of the required needs to the maximum rate possible? If not, why not?

Mr. HOWE: Speaking for the Department of Munitions and Supply, we are filling all requisitions as expeditiously as we can. We have heard no complaints that we are not meeting the requirements of the services both here and in Britain to the extent that they are made known to us. We use as many factories as we can, to obtain the production that we require to obtain. It is hardly fair to say that we are favouring the larger shop against the smaller. If there is a well equipped small shop, I think it is busy on production; but there are large shops not properly equipped for our purpose, which are not busy, just as there are small shops not properly equipped for our purpose which are not busy. Ours is a job of supply. We are supplying the needs of the services as those needs are indicated to us, and we are doing it to the very best of our ability. As I say, the situation of the last week has greatly changed the needs, and we are expanding our production as rapidly as we can. It takes a little time to do that. Sources of supply are needed now that were not needed three weeks ago because we had sources of supply in England. We are, in a word, doing our utmost to meet the requirements of the services as rapidly and as efficiently as we can.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): The remarks of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) have been most startling, and following them up I would ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) this question: Is it a fact that we have in the second division militia regiments transformed into a tank corps which to date have never seen a tank for purposes of training in this country?

Mr. ROGERS: Owing to the small number of light tanks available, it was not considered possible for maintenance reasons to distribute these tanks among the mobilized and unmobilized mechanized cavalry and tank units in Canada. It was therefore decided to retain these tanks at the Canadian armoured fighting vehicles school at Camp Borden, bringing in as many personnel as possible from the mobilized mechanized cavalry and tank units to Camp Borden for training, and it was proposed that certain tanks would be allotted to these units for all purposes when they were concentrated at Camp Borden.

Mr. BRUCE: I am afraid that the people of Canada will be very much disturbed when they hear the statement made to-night by the Minister of Transport that no tanks are being made in Canada to-day. I wonder why the tank units are being trained in this country if there are no tanks for them to use after they have finished their training. We have a tank unit in the city of Oshawa, and I understand that it is being trained on a rope.

Mr. ROGERS: If my hon, friend will permit me, there are certain tanks available for training purposes. They are localized at Camp Borden.

Mr. ROWE: How many?

Mr. BRUCE: There are none in the city of Oshawa, I believe. Yet we have been told that in the city of Hamilton there are two factories able to produce tanks in a very large way.

Mr. HOWE: I am looking for information. Might I ask who told my hon. friend that?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It does not make any difference who told him.

Mr. HOWE: He said he was told.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not think the minister has the right to crossexamine the hon, member,

Mr. POULIOT: Perhaps we can find then where the leaks come from.

Mr. BRUCE: If the Minister of Transport will read the proceedings of the senate of a few days ago, he will find that a member of that chamber stated that there were two factories in Hamilton, one of which could produce 250 tanks a month.

Mr. HOWE: I will give him a contract if he can do it.

Mr. BRUCE: I do not intend to proceed further with that at the moment.

I am sorry that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is not in his place because the matter to which I wish to refer concerns him. On two occasions since the opening of parliament I have asked for information as to what steps the Minister of Justice was taking to probe and check treasonable or what are now known as "fifth column" activities by various organizations in this country. The only reply the house has received is that the question is being referred to a committee; but so far as I know, no committee of this house has as yet been set up. Since I first asked for information, evidence has accumulated daily tending to show the profound and, indeed, immeasurable importance of the subject. In April we had already learned of how great a part treason had played in Hitler's successful seizure of southern Norway. We have since learned that the resistance of Holland and other countries was handicapped because they were gangrened with treason.

Early in the present war France woke up to the fact that the communist party within her borders, which had done so much to paralyze her preparations to meet the menace of war and invasion, was ipso facto also a pro-nazi organization. Probably the full story of all that treachery has done to create the horrible events which have occurred in northern France since mid-May has not yet been revealed. Subversive activities to strangle all powers of resistance within the nation have been rampant in Britain and Ireland, and last week were made manifest. We may take it for granted that in Britain and Ireland measures to root out treason and espionage in their nests were not dictated by mere hysteria. It was realized that the danger from within was as serious as the danger from without.

What I ask this government and the Minister of Justice especially is, whether they are so blind in view of what has been revealed as to suppose that Canada is immune. Those of us who know anything at all about this country know the contrary. We also know that the more expeditiously Canada goes about the business of a more intensified war effort, which we were told by the ministers here during the past few days they intend to do, the greater the danger from within. It is not as though the machinery to promote treason and sabotage did not already exist. In my own city of Toronto, a whole score of organizations operating under different names but all aiming at the same objective have been at work for years. They have for the most part been affiliated with the communist party, and that is true also of all the larger centres in Canada.

Perhaps because of the peculiar audacity of the communist agitators working under cover, with orders from Moscow, we have paid too little attention to fascist and nazi activities in our midst. A fact which stares us in the face to-day is that ever since last August the communist, nazi and fascist elements in Canada have made common cause with each other. Their sole objective is to destroy the British empire by whatever means lie at their hands. We are living in a fool's paradise if we assume that Canada, the premier dominion, a dominion with enormous potentialities for assisting the allies to win the war, is to be excluded from this objective. We Canadians who are still privileged to sleep safely in our beds at night owe a debt to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and to the other police organizations of this country that we have so far escaped serious incidents.

But in a crisis like the present the government may go too far in relying for security on ordinary police vigilance. Yesterday the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) gave us an instance which should cause the Minister of Justice to reconsider his former decision to refer the matter to a committee before taking action. It seems incredible to me that a former German soldier, who is still a German national and was in receipt of a pension from the German government to the outbreak of the present war, should be on an unguarded lock, No. 23, of the Trent valley canal. On the Trent valley canal there are key dams which, if blown up, would flood the power plants along the lower Trent. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lockhart) drew the attention of the house to the inadequacy of the protection of our great Welland ship canal and the power plants situated in the Niagara district. This is another place exposed to great risks owing to lack of realization by this government of the menace of the "fifth column" activities.

[Mr. Rowe.]

Let me also relate an episode which occurred in the northeastern suburbs of the city of Toronto on a recent evening. A young man crossing one of our ravines heard the sounds of falling wire, and on investigating found a man sixty feet in the air on a transmission tower busily cutting the high tension wires which carry electric power from the Ottawa valley to the great industries of Toronto. It was an isolated wooded spot, but the young man bravely effected an arrest by himself. When the prisoner was searched and identified, it was found that he carried a membership card in the communist party of Canada, and had been a recipient of relief for ten years. It was obvious that he was no ordinary vagabond, but a skilled mechanic equipped with the requisite tools to carry out very dangerous work. He was serving not Russia, but Germany, in an attempt to disorganize our war effort. It is a fact that in many centres of Canada the individuals who were in the past most active in shouting for the communist cause are now cheering every nazi success in Europe. They are probably hand-in-glove with nazi organizations which have been secretly at work in this country for two or three years.

The Minister of Justice informed the house this afternoon that papers which had been seized on the premises of the fascist party were being examined by the Quebec authorities, and that the attorney general of Quebec would take any necessary action. I am sorry that the Minister of Justice is not in his seat, because I should like to ask him if the attorney general of Quebec has the necessary powers under existing statutes to have the head of this organization arrested and placed in an internment camp. If he has not such authority, will the Minister of Justice take immediate steps to provide not only Quebec but Ontario with the necessary power?

A detailed survey of the activities of the so-called communist party in this dominion during the past twenty years was made in 1938, the year of Munich. At that time a singular change of front in the Canadian communist propaganda was noted—a denial of all connection with Moscow and a refusal to compare Russia with the communist state which they advocated for Canada. At that time the communist party, with its widely ramified chain of societies, became anti-British and anti-democratic rather than distinctly pro-Russian. In 1931 direct connection with the third international of Moscow had been proved up to the hilt in the trial of Tim Buck and other officials of the communist party Canada. The change of attitude was therefore a remarkable development. There is nothing to show whether this policy of repudiation was sincere and actual, but it was abundantly clear that a large following of dupes, which had been built up on promises of a régime in which the proletariat should be supreme was to be turned into an instrument to oppose Great Britain when war should come. The machinery has been built up over a period of years, and is still functioning, but in a less open way. There is little doubt that the men who built up that subversive machine are, as far as lies in their power, servants of Hitler to-day. I am credibly informed that the local authorities of Toronto are actually unaware where the three most prominent of local communist politicians are to be found to-day. They are Tim Buck, Stewart Smith, and a Mr. Salzberg, all of whom have been active as municipal and provincial candidates in the past, and they are mysteriously absent from their accustomed haunts.

For years right-thinking people in many industrial centres have been worried over conspiratorial efforts to corrupt the children and young people of Canada as well as the working classes with the virus of hatred against our Christian traditions and ideals of democratic government. Let me give a partial list of the organizations which have been formed at various times to accomplish this end:

The Young Communist League.
The National Children's Council.
The Student League of Canada.
The Workers' Theatre Movement.
Various organizations of the unemployed.
The Canada-Labour Defence League.
The Workers Unity League.
The Canadian League Against War and Fascism.
The Friends of the Soviet Union.
The Independent Mutual Federation.
The Student League for Social Reconstruc-

And in addition, various organizations of foreign immigrants in which social entertainment has been a disguise for anti-British or, as they prefer to call it, anti-imperialist propaganda.

There have also been efforts, not so successful, to spread anti-British poison in exservicemen's organizations. Interlocking directorates figure in the records of many of these organizations. To prepare their numbers for class warfare rather than for the redistribution of this world's goods was certainly the aim of all these organizations. For instance, the manifesto of the Student League of Canada issued in November, 1932, stated:

The Student League of Canada presents a programme of active participation in the class struggle based upon a scientific analysis of the course of social development.

It therefore proposed to combat uncompromisingly the leadership and policies of those organizations which, consciously or un-consciously, delude the student by fostering reformist hopes and democratic illusions.

The assault on democracy, later so familiar a tenet of nazism and fascism, was already being promulgated in Canada at the time when Hitler rose to power. Even more outspoken was the speech delivered on March 2, 1935, by Tom Ewen, national secretary of the Workers Unity League, at a meeting under the auspices of the Student Peace Movement. On this occasion not peace but civil war was preached. Mr. Ewen said:

In order to root out the causes of war, we must do away with the capitalist system. Communists are not pacifists, and if war breaks out we will turn the imperialist war into the civil war in order to abolish the capitalist system and thus remove war causes forever.

It would be tedious to recite the many utterances, all aimed at overturning our governmental system by any measures available. that have been heard in the gatherings of the various organizations I have named, and I have no intention of doing so. They were constantly heard in Canada during the years when Hitler was preparing to attack democratic civilization and paving the way to an understanding with Russia. I have quoted two different utterances to show how well the ground had been prepared in the way of subversive sentiment in this country prior to the outbreak of war. Canadian youth were taught to accept as an ally any enemy who sought to destroy the British commonwealth of nations. Hitler, let me again point out, found ready to his hand in these organizations a vastly ramified subversive machine to supplement the work of his own underground agencies in Canada. The nucleus of that machine still exists, and although during the past eight months it has been driven underground, it is not the less dangerous on that account. Therefore, in all seriousness, I urge this government to take all steps within its power to check subversive activities, which common sense must tell are not the less alive because they are not so apparent as they were to the naked eye. I am certain the Minister of Justice will have the earnest support of every patriotic member of this house in any measure he may devise to meet this situation.

[Mr. Bruce.]

We were encouraged to hear from the Prime Minister yesterday that the crisis with which we are now faced has at last moved the government to action. But what we have every reason to complain about, is something I was going to call complacency, a term to which the government is so sensitive. I will substitute another word. Let me say that what we complain about is the "indifference" that has been so painfully manifest, even during the last pire months since the war broke out, as to Canada's war effort. During this time the government have wasted two months in holding an unnecessary election and nearly two months more in their endeavour to recover from their partisan labours—four months in all when the total energy of every member of the cabinet should have been directed to speeding up Canada's preparation for the spring offensive which the Prime Minister had stated he expected. If any word was ever justified as descriptive of the present government it is the word "indifference." May I congratulate the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) upon the announcement yesterday of the formation of a fourth division. I was disappointed, however, when it was followed by the statement that at present he would recruit only 7,000 men for the formation of a rifle battalion for this division.

Mr. ROGERS: I believe I said that we would recruit all the rifle regiments of a fourth division, which would be nine rifle regiments.

Mr. BRUCE: How many-9,000?

Mr. ROGERS: Pretty close to 9,000.

Mr. BRUCE: Well, I will change my figure. I thank the minister for the correction. He will recruit only 9,000 for the formation of rifle battalions for this division. It is a little better than I thought, but may I urge upon him that complete plans be immediately formulated for the development not of four divisions but of six divisions in Canada.

These are not ordinary times. Canada and the British empire are facing the greatest crisis in our history, and surely there can be no two opinions as to the urgent and imperative necessity of bringing together in one cooperative government the best brains that are to be found in the country, whether inside or outside this house, for the purpose of enabling Canada to put forth its maximum effort with the sole object in view of helping to win this war. Until this is brought about, nothing else matters. Is it right, in the face of such danger as confronts us, to have battling for political position going on, when our very parliamentary institutions are endangered?

I come now to a part of my remarks which is going to be very distasteful to me.

I have been a friend of the Prime Minister of Canada for many years and have admired his many excellent qualities. He was prepared, as few in this country have ever been, by long years of education and training in state-craft for public life. He is a man of high character, a man of peace. I wonder whether these qualities, which are so admirable in times of peace, are not the very qualities which disqualify him now in time of war.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

An hon. MEMBER: Shame.

Mr. BRUCE: The Prime Minister's Asquithian attitude of "wait and see", or in other words, let public opinion become crystallized and then follow it, may have been good statecraft for a virile people in ordinary peace times, but it is not the attitude for war time.

Mr. GRANT: He was elected in war time.

Mr. BRUCE: It is now absolutely imperative that we have a man of action who will lead public opinion instead of following it. This man must have a strong and forceful character, must be one who will not be influenced by personal or private considera-tions, and will be ready to brush aside red tape and all other obstacles in the way of quick and decisive action. Last evening we had an illustration of party loyalty on the part of the Minister of Finance which was most commendable. When I listened to him I could not help the reflection that history may repeat itself and that what has happened in the mother country might with advantage happen here. The Minister of Finance enjoys the respect and confidence of both sides of this house, as well as that of the people of Canada generally. With his splendid war record, his undoubted ability in finance and law, his well known driving force and character, may I venture to suggest that he is the one man in the Prime Minister's cabinet-

Mr. MARTIN: You are trying to undermine him.

Mr. BRUCE: —qualified and equipped to lead a war government. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was changed in spite of the fact that Mr. Chamberlain had very strong support in the House of Commons, 418 supporters as against the combined Liberal and Labour strength of 197, but he was forced by pressure of public opinion to hand over the seals of office to Mr. Churchill, a man of great energy and ability in whom the people had confidence. May I briefly recall to members of this committee what happened on that memorable occasion.

The CHAIRMAN: May I draw the attention of the hon. member to standing order 58, section 2, which provides that:

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Mr. CHURCH: The Prime Minister did the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN: The item under consideration is an appropriation. I do not believe that the speech of the hon. member is relevant.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a point of order in defence of the hon. gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon, gentleman may speak to the point of order already raised, but he cannot raise another one until this one is disposed of.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I will appeal from your ruling to the Chair. And I will put it in writing if I have not the right to be heard. My point is that this bill is for an appropriation. We do not know whether that appropriation will be spent by this government or by a government suggested by the hon. gentleman. Therefore the hon. member is perfectly in order in continuing his argument, and I also shall be in order when I answer him.

Mr. BRUCE: I thank the hon. member for Témiscouata for his remarks. He voiced what I had thought of saying. We are considering the appropriation of a very large sum of money to be expended by this government as at present constituted. Before I am willing to give my vote as to the expenditure of that money, I wish to raise my voice as I am doing this evening in regard to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN: I am entirely in the hands of the committee as to the ruling I have just made. This ruling is not debatable. An appeal can be taken to Mr. Speaker. But I was simply drawing the attention of the committee to the rule. If it is the desire of the committee that the hon. member should have leave to carry on, I am in the hands of the committee. But my own judgment is that he is not within the provisions of standing order 58, section 2.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking to the point of order— $\,$

The CHAIRMAN: This matter is not debatable.

Mr. POULIOT: The Chairman has no right to decide a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: Order, please. I have just stated that my decision is not debatable. You can appeal to the Chair if you want to, but I was saying that I am in the hands of the committee to determine whether the hon. gentleman should have leave to carry on as he was proceeding to do. In my opinion he is not within the rule.

Mr. CHURCH: I rise to a point of order. I would ask that the committee rise and ask for the ruling of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is not debatable. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the hon, gentleman should have leave to continue?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. CRERAR: May I say a word at this point? I think there is a basis for the point the Chairman has raised. It occurred to me that the speech the hon. member was making could more properly have been made on second reading of the bill than in committee. But I would make this observation, that a good deal of latitude has been taken in the discussion. I would be the last to wish to curtail anything that the hon. member wishes to say. I would make the suggestion that he endeavour, if possible, to keep closer to the section of the bill that is under consideration.

Mr. BRUCE: Mr. Chairman, in spite of the very kind remarks of the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar), I accept the ruling of the chair and shall discontinue my speech at this moment.

An hon. MEMBER: You cannot take it.

Mr. POULIOT: Nobody can speak until the matter has been referred to His Honour the Speaker.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not know that I am in order, but I think that it would be a pity if the Chairman's ruling were allowed to stand and the hon. member for Parkdale forced to discontinue his speech. I am quite familiar with the rule referred to, but we are debating in committee of the whole section 2 of Bill No. 18, and under that it is wide open to any hon. member to discuss the conduct of the war or the fitness of the men conducting the war. With the greatest respect for the chair I suggest, sir, that you withdraw your ruling.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot withdraw the ruling. I have pointed out to the hon. member that, in my opinion, he was transgressing the rule which I have cited. I am in the hands of the committee as to whether the hon. member should have leave to carry on. [The Chairman.]

The affirmative would be equivalent to a suspension of the rule in favour of the hon. member. If the committee so desires, it can suspend the rule by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOMUTH: Does the government dictate the rules of the house, or are the rules in the book?

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the unanimous consent of the committee that the hon. member should have leave to carry on?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. BRUCE: I am a new member of this house. I come from a part of the province in which free speech is welcomed, and I have always been able to say what I think. No one has ever interfered with me in making a speech. I am not going to break a rule of this house after having been here only two weeks; therefore I accept the Chairman's ruling and shall not continue my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman that freedom of speech is not involved in this point. We have rules governing our debates; those rules must be obeyed. But in the present case, the hon. gentleman, having the unanimous consent of the committee to continue, he can do so without breaking the rule.

Mr. CHAMBERS: If the hon. member does not wish to continue, I should like to say a few words. It is a tradition of this house that a new member, when rising to make his maiden speech, shall introduce his remarks by a description of the beauties and natural wealth of that portion of Canada which has elected him. I shall take the responsibility, if I may, of breaking this tradition by saying immediately that at this moment in the world's history all that British Columbia represents to me is a collection of human beings whose liberty and happiness, and, indeed, whose lives, depend upon the events of the next few weeks.

Another tradition is that a new member's whole career may depend upon careful avoidance, in his early days in this house, of anything which savours of a lecture to an assembly of men far more experienced than he may be. At some risk to my future I must set aside this tradition also; for nothing could be of less importance to me at this moment than the question of my own political future. If I have any right to stand here to-day, it is as one of the 245 men and women in whom eleven million men and women have placed their trust to bring to the affairs of the country wise guidance while civilization is on the brink of disaster.

The verdict to which we must subject ourselves is that of history. I stand with the rest of this house on trial before all the generations which will succeed us. If at this time we let them down, we must go down in history as those who failed in their duty. For this reason I venture to say to you, sir, that the time has long passed for members of this house to remember the ancient divisions which have separated them, the question of what language they learned at their mothers' knees or the accident of their place of birth, and to remember only that to-day they stand facing a nation in peril of destruction and not likely to be tolerant of such human weaknesses.

Since the beginning of this, my first session in this house, I have heard no small amount of discussion as to where the blame must lie for the fact that this country faces the greatest of all crises in its history not fully prepared. The time has come, Mr. Chairman and I say this with all respect to the veteran members of this house—to put an end to this form of argument. It will be of no concern to the people of this country to know who are the guilty. It will be of no concern to them to ascertain whether the responsibility lies here or elsewhere. It will be of no concern to anyone to be able to say that he was wiser than another. All that will concern the people of Canada will be whether from this moment forward the service of the state is conducted with all the vigour and efficiency of which the members of this parliament and the servants of the crown are capable. It will not even concern the people of this country whether the decisions which so far have been taken were right or wrong. It will concern them only to know that the decisions we make from now on are right.

If I may be permitted to say one more word, it is that I feel deeply that there lies upon me heavy blame for my failure up to this moment to exhibit a full appreciation of my duty to serve the nation with the greatest courage and skill I can put forward. There may be others in all parts of this house who have the same conviction. It is not for me to judge the others. It is my duty to say to you, sir, that I am prepared to accept my full share of any blame which may attach for past failures, and that I am prepared to accept any amount of criticism, be it fair or unfair, provided only that the criticism is not made at the expense of the rapid and efficient functioning of the machinery of the state.

I should like to record the fact that what moves me to say these things is my realization of the verdict which the people of Canada of to-day, and particularly those of to-morrow, will pass. I hope, sir, that this will be my only formal contribution to the debates of this house this session. I propose to support the measure to which I am speaking at the moment, with full appreciation of the fact that the steps contemplated are not perhaps fully sufficient for the needs of the times and that they must be executed with something slightly less than perfection. All I can hope is that every member of the house will feel in his inmost soul the humility which I feel as to our inability to give the nation completely the service which it so sorely needs. I believe that only if this spirit imbues us all and directs our every word and action, shall we rise to meet the problems which confront us and serve, as we should, in the present struggle to save the world from destruction.

Mr. ADAMSON: Unfortunately I was in the lobby this afternoon when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) referred to some questions I asked last night. The minister said it was not in the public interest to disclose the information I requested. I appreciate the position of the minister; but in view of the very grave unrest in regard to the Bren gun production, I wonder whether he would give to the leader of the opposition, to myself or to some other member the information in his possession so that we may be able to allay the fears and the very great dissatisfaction of the Canadian people in general, and those of my own riding in particular, with regard to the present situation. I quite understand that the matter of the production of munitions may be considered confidential. but it would help if we could say that the information given us by the government was satisfactory. Perhaps the members of the opposition who served in the last war are more anxious to be able to do that than to do anything else. If the minister could give my leader in confidence any information which would permit us to say that things were not as bad as rumour has them, I think it would be a great contribution to the peace of mind of the Canadian people.

I should now like to say a word with regard to Colonel Carter, Mr. Everett Bristol and Colonel Worthington. I believe that before war broke out, Colonel Carter was the foremost British expert on armoured fighting vehicles, tanks and mechanized warfare generally. He came out here purely unofficially and in an advisory capacity, I believe. And he with Colonel Worthington, who is a brilliant tank officer, discussed the possibility of producing tanks in Canada. Among his findings were these—and I have not his exact words, because he wrote a number of articles on tanks or mechanized warfare. He said—

Mr. MARTIN: Who wrote it?

Mr. ADAMSON: Colonel Carter. He said that we in Canada had some of the finest possible material in the empire for tank troops, and he hoped that we would take advantage of that not only because we have this wonderful material in our northern logger, in our men who drive tank trains and other heavy transports, but because we have in Canada those wonderful potential assets which should be developed. He brought the matter up in the public press, and to the attention of Colonel Worthington, who entirely concurred in the argument. It was also called to the attention of General McNaughton. That is the situation with regard to Colonel Carter.

The subsequent situation was this, either that the government would not or could not act quickly enough. In any event a public charity was formed to train the troops in Camp Borden under Colonel Worthington, and Mr. Everett Bristol was in some way responsible for the fund being organized. I might say that some of the most responsible people in the city of Toronto were connected with that fund. Colonel Carter mentioned in his series of reports that we had a very great asset not only in our man-power but in our industry in Canada, and he suggested that we could produce armoured fighting vehicles in Canada in great numbers.

I understand this was not an official representation of the British government, but certainly it was a representation from Mr. Everett Bristol to the dominion government. In my opinion the unfortunate part of it is that it was an opportunity which was missed.

I am going to ask the Minister of Munitions and Supply one or two questions about aeroplane production. I have observed that last week at Malton-on the 21st of the monththere were over $2,000,000 worth of aeroplanes stored in the hangars of the Associated Aircraft Corporation. These included nine bombers valued at $150,000 each. I believe they were Douglas and Lockheed bombers. Then there were over eighty ab initio, that is initial Fleet or deHavilland training planes in the hangars, waiting for acceptance by the government. They have been there for a considerable period of time-some of them for months. The government in my opinion should explain why those aeroplanes were kept in the hangars on their noses, turned up in storage at Malton for all that time. The production of aeroplanes in Canada is a matter which faces us now in a most realistic manner. I would suggest to the Minister of Munitions and Supply and the Minister of National Defence one thing, and that is that we are an American nation.

I was educated in England as a mechanical engineer, and I understand the difficulties of trying to produce aeroplanes in Canada to English specifications. We have our automotive industry, and all our shop practice is based on American standards. The American Society of Automotive Engineers (S.A.E.) and the American Society for Testing Materials (A.S.T.M.) lay down our standards for us. It is not helpful for us to attempt to produce aeroplanes on an English standard. Nobody appreciates that more than I do, because I have studied in England and have worked in Canada. I would suggest that to-day our problem is that of production of aircraft. Nothing else matters. What is gone before is of comparatively little importance to-day, when the whole of civilization is falling about our ears. Let us get on with the job of producing these aircraft, using what standards we can and any methods we can, so that we can give the greatest assistance not to the empire, not to the allies, but to civilization itself. That is the thought I bring to the attention of the minister.

We in Canada are very short of machine tools and machine tool equipment. The machine tool industry is the one industry to-day on the north American continent that is overworked, because there is a tremendous scarcity of the product of that industry. If to-night the government would get in touch with the priority officer in Washington, who is known to me, I am quite satisfied that a sufficient number of machine tools would be released for the Canadian government to produce these jigs, dies and other things necessary to set up our aircraft industry or to begin the industry on a national American basis. We have to work with our co-partner on this continent.

I suggest to the Minister of National Defence that something should be done about this. In this instance, time is of the essence of the contract. I would not be taking up the time of the committee if I did not believe that some really helpful and concrete action could be taken along these lines.

Mr. ROGERS: I should like to thank my hon. friend for some of the suggestions he has made. May I say something to him regarding his statement concerning the production of Bren guns. He has referred to a grave unrest arising from certain rumours which he has heard regarding the Bren gun. May I say to him now, in the light of the statement I made this afternoon, that I know of no cause whatever for grave unrest with respect to the production of Bren guns. On the contrary, we anticipate that delivery will be well in advance of schedule. A certain modification has to be made, in the same manner in which it is being made in England. This is being proceeded with as quickly as possible.

And even at the risk of hon. members charging me with a desire to contract discussions in the house, may I suggest that questions ought not to be put in this chamber in such a manner as would appear to give substance to idle rumours which, of themselves, cause unrest at a time when, above all else, this country needs steadiness. I do not think that we can overemphasize the importance of steadiness in this house. It is in a time of crisis that we realize just how thin is the crust that separates us from a feeling of alarm which sometimes borders on hysteria. I am thankful to say that throughout this country we can put our faith in the steadiness of our people at this time despite the distressing news that is coming to us day by day. But I suggest that this house should give a lead to the country in maintaining faith and confidence.

Mr. ADAMSON: May I say to the Minister of National Defence that it was merely in order that he should give such a lead that any words of mine have been spoken in this house; if the minister could assure us in this house to-night that the production of Bren guns, the production of artillery, the production of shells and the production of munitions or every kind was satisfactory, nobody would cheer more enthusiastically or be more delighted than I, and I believe every member on this side of the house feels as I do.

Mr. HOWE: May I reply to one other part of the last speaker's address. The government is well aware that in the production of planes it is simpler for Canadian industry to follow American methods. Nevertheless it must be kept in mind that Britain and Canada are in the war as partners, and the principal effort of Canada to date has been to reinforce the effort of Britain in Great Britain and in France. That has led us to cooperate with Britain in building the type of plane that Britain is using. The factor of interchangeability is sometimes of tremendous importance in war equipment, and the fact that these planes go into aerodromes in the battle area where suitable repair parts are immediately available, is important. However, we are working on American standards where we can. We find United States aeroplanes are simpler to build, and we can get better support for our industry in the United States.

May I say to my hon, friend that we have a representative of the Canadian government at Washington who is charged with looking after priority in the matter of machine tools. We have, however, a satisfactory production of machine tools in Canada, and it is growing steadily; most of our factories are tooled with machine tools made in Canada. I just wish to point out that we have not overlooked the American sources of supply or the fact that American standards are simpler for us to work to. Nevertheless we have followed the British plane production, for the reason that we thought by so doing we could in this particular situation render more valuable service.

I should like to say a word about the suggestion that two factories in Hamilton can turn out 200 or 250 tanks a month. I doubt if many people understand the problems involved in building a tank. There is no industry in Canada that could of itself build a tank in anything like six months. The production of tanks even in a great country with the reserves of the United States is amazingly small, as statements from United States army engineers, made public, will indicate. I may say at once that the particular tank we were looking at was plated with armour plate four and a quarter inches thick of a particular type of resistant steel made in only one or two places in the British empire, and there are only one or two sources of supply in the United States. The type of engine is of a larger size than has ever been produced in Canada. Every country has had tremendous difficulties in the engineering of tanks, and the problem of building tanks is one that will challenge the whole industry of Canada, even if we had certain assistance from other countries that is not presently available. So when a man stands up and makes reckless statements about two firms in Hamilton that can build tanks with great speed, I think it is time that the facts were made known to the house and to the people of Canada, in the hope that statements of that kind will not recklessly be made.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is it not true, Mr. Chairman, that the Canadian Pacific Railway were quite willing to make tanks at the Angus shops, and is it not true that for six weeks they have been waiting for instructions to proceed, but have not proceeded on account of the circumstances mentioned by the minister this afternoon, which I do not doubt is the case? Is it not also true that the National Steel Car of Hamilton are prepared to undertake the construction of tanks?

Mr. HOWE: To the best of my knowledge and belief the latter part of that statement is not true. The Canadian Pacific Railway were quite willing to undertake the work, knowing they would have to import certain parts of the tank, the engine, armour plate and certain other parts. There were certain parts which could be made by the Canadian Pacific Railway shops, and I suppose no plant in Canada is better equipped to manufacture them than the Angus shops, and probably Canadian Locomotive and Kingston Locomotive shops come next. But to suggest that a tank may be completely built in a car building plant is going beyond anything that makes sense.

Mr. MacKINNON (Kootenay East): Mr. Chairman, there is in session at the present time in the city of Fernie, British Columbia, the associated boards of trade of eastern British Columbia, and I received a telegram from the secretary of the association this morning enclosing a resolution passed at yesterday's session which I should like to read to the committee. It is as follows:

Whereas it has been held desirable by our dominion government that tourist traffic into Canada be encouraged to the utmost, and

Whereas such traffic unregulated would permit the unobserved entry of spies, saboteurs and other undesirable agents, and

Whereas there are in Canada numerous strategic points and key industries vital to the well-being of our communities, the economic life of the nation, the empire and to the uccessful conduct of the war, and

Whereas facilities for the control of undentified visitors and the guarding of such strategic points and industries are at present insufficient and ineffective.

Therefore be it resolved:

(1) That the dominion and provincial governments be asked forthwith to inaugurate a system of closed areas surrounding such strategic points and vital industries within which entry may be had only by authorized persons for specified and authorized purposes.

(2) That such governments be advised that a serious and dangerous condition exists at border points and that they be urged forthwith to organize an effective home guard for protection of such strategic points and vital industries that sabotage may not be possible.

(3) That the dominion government be asked to create a fully efficient control of the entry of persons into Canada by the addition of inspecting personnel in sufficient numbers.

J. R. Hunter, Secretary, Associated Boards of Trade of Eastern British Columbia.

Section agreed to.

On section 5-Orders and regulations.

Mr. POTTIER: Before section 5 carries, would the minister consider adding the word "ship" to paragraph (c)? There is in this measure power to take over practically everything except ships; that is, to "acquire lands, buildings, equipment, stores, materials and supplies." Suppose we wanted ships to add to our merchant marine, not naval ships, I [Mr. Howe.]

know of nothing in the bill which gives us that power; yet it might well be that in carrying on our war effort or in looking after the transportation of commodities we would need to spend some of this money to charter or acquire ships. I suggest that the minister consider adding the word "ships" before the word "equipment." I think it would clarify section 2 in that regard.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon, friend is referring to paragraph (d) of section 5?

Mr. POTTIER: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: With due respect to him I do not think that this is the place for the insertion of the word "ships," having in mind what his object is. This is for the purpose of enabling the governor in council to make regulations giving him unquestioned control over equipment. It was felt that there might be a risk of one department getting a monopoly of certain kinds of equipment. The idea was that the governor in council might distribute it among the departments. It really has nothing to do with the objects of the bill, which are, as my hon, friend knows, contained in section 2, namely the provision of money for "the conduct of naval, military and air operations"; "the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada"; "promoting the continuance of trade, industry and business communications", and "the carrying out of any measure deemed necessary or advisable by the governor in council in consequence of the existence of a state of war." I assure my hon. friend that the utilization, control, acquisition and building of ships is fully covered by the provisions of section 2. If he will look at the explanatory notes opposite page 2 he will find, under "naval services." "acquisition, construction and repairs of ships."

Mr. STIRLING: Has the minister discovered any good reason for the inclusion of paragraph (b)?

Mr. RALSTON: Not a very good reason, but at least a reason. As a matter of fact, I unintentionally misled the committee last night when I told them that this clause was in the 1915 act. It was not. The clause was drawn by one of the departmental officials and then was inserted with the idea that possibly there might be auxiliary units not within the scope of the military, the naval or the aeronautics act, the pay and allowances for which might not be provided for. That is why the paragraph was put in. As my hon. friend knows, the Militia Act provides for pay and allowances for the militia, and the Naval Services Act for the navy, and there will be a new act for the air force. But it was thought that there might be auxiliary units of some kind which would not be otherwise covered.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister is not apprehensive that having it in two statutes might induce a sense of confusion?

Mr. RALSTON: No, I think not. It is only an authorization to the governor in council to provide pay and allowances, and it seems to me that being there twice would merely provide double authority.

Mr. BROOKS: I am glad to see that the Minister of National Defence for Air has come into the chamber. There was a question I wished to ask with reference to Canadian airmen who are with the Royal Air Force. I am sure that we all listened with much pleasure to the statement of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) when he told the other day of visiting these men in England, and of how the Canadians who had gone overseas in the last two years had been collected in a squadron under the Royal Air Force. These men, as we all know, found it impossible to get their training in Canada. Coming from all parts of Canada, they paid their way across the ocean and were trained by the British air force. I wish to know whether it is the intention of the minister's department to take over from the Royal Air Force the Canadian airmen who are at present in that air force; or, if these men are not taken over, whether they will receive the same pay and allowances as Canadian airmen under the Royal Canadian Air Force, or will they continue to receive the same rate of pay as the Royal Air Force? I thought it possible that these questions might appropriately come under paragraph (b) of section 5 of this bill.

Mr. POWER: I am quite sure that, in view of the fact that these men are members of the Royal Air Force, they will receive the pay of the Royal Air Force, not of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Mr. BROOKS: Is it the intention of the Royal Canadian Air Force to have these men join that force later on? They are all Canadians, and the only reason why they are with the Royal Air Force at the present time is that they could not get opportunities to train here in Canada and had to go to England at their own expense to train. I understand that the pay in the Royal Air Force is not as high as in the Royal Canadian Air Force. I think these men should, if they wish, be given an opportunity to belong to the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Mr. POWER: I cannot see any particular reason why they would not be transferred to the Royal Canadian Air Force if they so wished. I do not think that matter has ever been considered. They are members of the Royal Air Force, and we have never seriously considered taking them away and incorporating them in the Royal Canadian Air Force. However, I will make inquiries and give the matter consideration.

Mr. RALSTON: The leader of the opposition asked me before six o'clock for some further particulars with regard to expenditures. I have had the officials of the comptroller of the treasury make the collocation of expenditures, and hon. members can follow these expenditures by looking at the explanatory notes opposite pages 2 and 3 of the bill. What has been done is to collect, under headings similar to those shown in the explanatory notes opposite page 3, under "general administration," items of expenditure from September 1, 1939, to March 31, 1940:

Civilian personnel—salaries and wages	$456,248	99
Pay and allowances		01
Transportation		61
Operating expenses of properties	4.341
Construction and repairs	116,296	02
Stores, equipment and supplies	110,285	60
Sundries
Total	$837,924	84

That is the total for that combination of items.

That is under general administration. If hon, members will turn back to the explanatory notes opposite page 2, and begin at the top with "militia services," I can give them the expenditures under the items which are set out there. The expenditures are from September 1, 1939, to the end of the fiscal year, as follows:

Expenditure September 1, 1939, to the end of the fiscal year from war appropriation, militia services:

Civilian personnel—salaries and wages	$ 918,011	42
Pay and allowances C.A.S.F. and other personnel charges Non-permanent active militia	37,090,498 856,579
Construction, repairs and operating expenses of military buildings, works and lands Transportation and food supplies	8,644,840 5,374,341	54
Stores and equipment — unit equipment, personal equipment and ammunition	14,439,883 443,413

Note.—Expenditures for Royal Military College and Northwest Territories radio service not segregated as expenditures merged in above headings.

$67,767,567 10

Expenditure September 1, 1939 of the fiscal year from war appropriservice:	to the e	end val
Civilian personnel—salaries and wages $Pay and allowances R.C.N. and	131,593	81
other personnel charges Acquisition construction and re-	4,108,043	38 pairs of ships	1,696,860	17
ings, works and lands Transportation Naval stores, armament equip-	896,644 219,479
ment and food supplies	$\substack{4,273,999\\146,465}$
$	11,473,087	05
Mr. STIRLING: Does ammu into that?	nition co	me
Mr RAISTON: I cannot tel	I I show	ıld

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot tell. I should think it would be in naval stores.

Expenditure September 1, 1939, to end of the fiscal year from war appropriation air services, including air training plan:

0	ervices, including air training p	lan
	Civilian personnel—salaries and wages.	$	304,009	80
	Pay and allowances R.C.A.F. and attached personnel		6,633,036 491,958
	Operating expenses of properties Construction of R.C.A.F. and B.C. air training plan build-		442,524	31
8	ings, works and lands		5,073,378	64
	plies	1	9,163,947 432,493

$32,541,349 43

There is one other set of figures here, but I have not the break-down that my hon. friend asked for. I refer to the commitments. What I have given the committee so far is the actual money paid out. With respect to commitments, I can give them only broken down into the three services. The first item under this statement, which is a summary of commitments recorded during the period from September 1, 1939, to March 31, 1940, is military services, $73,247,674.

Mr. HOMUTH: Is that inclusive of the figure the minister gave a little while ago?

Mr. RALSTON: It is partly included, because that item is only stores, material and construction and does not include pay and allowances which I give further down. I give the statement now:

Summary of commitments recorded during period, September 1, 1939, to March 31, 1940, against war appropriation for stores, material and construction.

Military services.		 	 	$ 73,247,674
Internment opera	tions.	 	 	149,850
Naval services		 	 	71,387,551
Air services		 	 	60.776.960
B.C. air training	plan.		 	61,525,214

$267,087,249

31 for pay an office expense	d s,	allo	owa	nce	s, t	rav	rel,
Military							$	45,296,616
Internment								77,260
Naval	٠							4,682,180
Air training	•	• •			٠.
Air training Administrative.	٠.	٠.						984,762 502,306
Administrative.								502,500

Actual expenditures made to March

Censoring.....

$ 59,161,699

					+,,
	enditures
ments,	Septembe	r 1,	1939,	to
March	31, 1940			• •	$326,248,948

This does not include commitments which may have been entered into by the Canadian military authorities overseas for stores and equipment, as these figures are not available.

Leaves unliquidated commitments as of that date of..... $213,779,948

Mr. STIRLING: Making a very rough deduction, taking the $326,000,000 from the $700,000,000 under this bill, we have approximately $400,000,000. Is the minister going to be able to give us any break-down of that, any explanation as to how it will be used?

Mr. RALSTON: It is a little difficult for one to explain it clearly. This represents $326,000,000 in commitments made to March 31. For the first year of the war we still have the months of May, June, July and August, or four months more. When our first programme was announced, I calculated that the expenditure would be something like $375,000,000 for the year; as a matter of fact, I said a million dollars a day. That estimate has been exceeded in a good many ways by additions which have been made from time to time. I mentioned one item the other day, increase in personnel of rifle battalions, $5,000,000 and so on. But there were additions to that, when one came to figure the fiscal year from March 31, 1940, to March 31, 1941. There had to be added to the $375,000,000 about $40,000,000 more on account of the air training plan and about $60,000,000 more on account of naval service. The naval service was something in the vicinity of $40,000,000, and we now estimate about $100,000,000. That brought it to a little over $500,000,000.

Then there were other increases, the largest being to send the second division overseas, amounting to about $43,000,000, and other increases that brought it to between $560,000,000 and $570,000,000. Add to that the cost of the Canadian corps, something like $65,000,000, and the third division, another $38,000,000, and that brings it nearly to the $700,000,000 without any allowance for other departments. As I have said, those estimates for the cost of the different units depend on the theatre in which they serve and the amount of wastage there is. That is how, without my notes, I reconcile the amount of this bill with the amount of the expenditures and commitments up to date.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am greatly obliged to the minister for the trouble he has taken in giving this break-down, but I am sorry it came so late because there will be no opportunity to make any study of the figures in time to base any questions on them with respect to this measure.

Mr. RALSTON: I had intended to hand them to my hon. friend immediately after eight o'clock; then something started up, and as hon. members know, a good deal of discussion has been going on this evening, which, it seemed to me, had not a great deal to do with the bill before us.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not finding any fault.

Mr. ESLING: In connection with the recruiting of the third and subsequent divisions, may I ask the interest of the Minister of National Defence in connection with regulations covering pay and allowances? In my district there was no difficulty so far as the wife was concerned, but there was an obstacle causing much distress in connection with allowances for mothers. It seems that such allowances were not granted until a report was received by the department from one who was designated by the pay and allowances board as a special interviewer. The regulations were amended early in the year, I think after the first division had gone overseas. When I communicated with the department and asked who was the special interviewer in connection with the 109th battery, I was told that he was the commanding officer of that unit or any other officer not below the rank of captain. With that unit overseas, it will readily be seen what situation arises.

I suggested to the minister by letter and telegram that, to overcome delay and distress of mothers who were affected, the provincial government agents in that district, both of whom have served overseas and are men of experience and well able to pass upon the financial condition of the mothers, be used as interviewers. It seems that the department has been using the services of a social worker. Well, the mothers are entitled to the allowance, and the social welfare worker cannot very well cover a district some two hundred miles square, whereas the government agents are always available. I ask the minister, in view of the fact that this amendment came into effect after the 109th battery had gone overseas, if he will see that some arrangement is made so that the report, if required, can be made either by the government agent or, say, by the secretary of the local legion, either of whom can reach the mothers quickly.

Mr. RALSTON: I am very sorry; I thought my colleague the Minister of National Defence was sitting here listening to my hon. friend, and I confess I did not catch clearly the particular case to which the hon. member was referring. Will he take my assurance that I will refer it to the Minister of National Defence along with the other cases that have been mentioned?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Before this section and the bill pass, I should like to refer to an order in council, a copy of which has come to my desk to-day, P.C. 2189, passed May 24, 1940. This vests in the Minister of Munitions and Supply the most extraordinary powers ever vested in any man in the history of this country. I shall not read the whole order, but I shall refer to one of the recitals and then to two or three portions of the enacting clauses. This is one of the recitals:

And whereas the Minister of Munitions and Supply reports that it is a matter of urgency and of national importance that all possible steps be taken to ensure an adequate supply of certain materials and commodities for the production of munitions of war and supplies and that unless such supply is ensured immediately there is a serious risk that a sufficient quantity thereof will not be available at a later date or that the price for such quantity as can later be obtained will be substantially in excess of that now prevailing; that it is impracticable and not in the public interest to call for tenders; and that to disturb the market price as little as possible, purchases and sales should not be made through an ostensible government source;

And then by paragraph (a) the minister is authorized:

- (a) to acquire at such price or prices as he may from time to time decide, such quantities of materials or commodities, raw or manufactured, as he may consider necessary or expedient for the production of munitions of war and supplies, and for that purpose he be authorized to expend a total sum not exceeding $5,000,000.
- (d) to enter into agreements with such company or companies as the Minister of Munitions and Supply may cause to be incorporated whereby such company or companies will act as his agent or agents to acquire, dispose of, mortgage and generally deal in all or any such materials or commodities.

Then there is a further recital:

And whereas the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Munitions and Supply represent that, in order to carry out the terms of this order, it may be desirable to observe commercial financing practices associated with like purchases and sales by importers, commission agents and manufacturers;

Now therefore His Excellency the Administrator in council . . . is further pleased to order as follows:-

(a) The Minister of Munitions and Supply is hereby authorized to mortgage or hypothecate for such amount or amounts as he may from time to time consider desirable either directly or through the medium of such company or companies, all or any of the said materials or commodities.

(b) The Minister of Finance is hereby authorized to give such guarantees as he may deem necessary to any bank or banks against loss, by reason of the exercise of any of the powers conferred on the Minister of Munitions and Supply herein, provided that the total amount of such guarantees in effect at any one time shall not exceed two million dollars, the Minister of Finance to be entitled to rely upon the certificates of the Minister of Munitions and Supply, as to the name of any company (the account of which with any such bank the Minister of Finance is being asked to guarantee) and that such company is beneficially owned by His Majesty, through ownership by the Minister of Munitions and Supply, as trustee of all its issued shares save and except directors' qualifying shares.

I am sure the minister will agree that this is a most unusual departure in government operation and financing. I pondered this matter to-day, but have not had an opportunity of consulting with anybody on it. I should have liked an opportunity of talking to the minister about the matter, but I had only a minute with him. If it is not in the public interest that the reason for this order in council should be disclosed, and the minister will say so, I shall not pursue the matter further; but I do hope that if there is no real reason of that kind, we might have some explanation as to why the government is taking this power to create government-owned corporations, and some statement as to the rationality of the whole scheme. I do not want to embarrass the government or hamper its undertakings. I assume that the idea is to speed up war preparations, and of course that is all to the good.

Mr. RALSTON: All I desire to say is that, as the order in council indicates, there are certain commodities which it may be desirable to acquire, and that it is considered in the public interest that they be not acquired, ostensibly at least, for government purposes. Then we have the formation of a corporation, all the shares of which are owned by the Minister of Munitions and Supply, who in turn has to come to the Minister of Finance before he gets any guarantee. That is the safeguard, if hon. members consider it such: two ministers of the crown have to concur in the giving of the guarantee. One of them holds, in his official capacity, all the shares of the company as agent for the crown.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): In paragraph (c) it is provided that the governor in council may prescribe administrative practices with respect to contracts. I wonder if the minister who is acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply would give us some outline of what the administrative practices are with reference to the letting of contracts. As I understood the minister the other evening, there are three classes of contracts; those let by general tender, those let to a select group of contractors, and those which it is found necessary to give to preferred contractors because of some special, secret design or something of the kind, where tenders cannot be called for. Could the minister give the committee any idea, in terms of total value, how the contracts let so far would be divided as among those three categories; and, in the case of the latter category, the basis used for determining the price to be paid? That is, are we still operating on the cost-plus basis with reference to the preferred contractors or, as the minister said the other evening, is there the general margin in that industry? How is that margin arrived at and on what basis?

Mr. HOWE: The method of placing a contract depends somewhat on the time at our disposal. Certain orders are earmarked as necessary for a certain date, as may be determined by the departure of a battalion or the sailing of a ship. In general, I may say that we exercise all the business precautions that time will permit. I should think that probably at least seventy per cent of all our purchases is made by open tender.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Is that in terms of value or in terms of the number of contracts?

Mr. HOWE: I should think in terms of value, at a very rough estimate. I should think perhaps ninety per cent of the transactions are by open tender. Then we may have a contract to let for something in which we know certain people are interested. For instance, we know that certain firms are interested in particular textiles, and when an invitation to tender is sent out, it goes to certain firms that are interested. That is all our list means to us, that there are certain people qualified to make certain goods, and they have indicated their interest in contracts of this kind.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

That is the way we try to proceed; that is the way we like to proceed. Sometimes, however, the state of an industry is such that it is impossible to get a reasonably competitive tender. In other words, we need the entire capacity of that industry, and in that event there is not much chance of getting a tender. In that situation it is our policy to put in an auditor to determine the position of the firm before the order is taken and the position after the order is completed, and to establish a price which allows the cost of turning out the article plus a modest profit. I can say that five per cent is the usual profit for that sort of work. I think the textiles, the rubber goods and much of the mechanical transport have been priced on a five per cent margin.

Then there is the question of fortifications. The Department of National Defence have pointed out to us, very reasonably, that it is not in the public interest to send out forty or fifty sets of plans for coastal defence fortifications. They would very much prefer that only one contractor be called in. We have compromised with them, and they have agreed that three contractors shall be asked to tender, those three to be very carefully selected, reputable firms which will proceed with reasonable discretion in handling these secret plans.

In reading Hansard, I noticed that a reference was made to one of these contracts, and I think I know the particular contract to which reference was made. In that case we called in three of the largest firms doing that class of work and awarded the contract to the firm submitting the lowest tender. The work was in a rather remote section, and I understand that part of the job was sublet. The statement in Hansard says the entire job was sublet, but that is not at all permissible. We never allow a contractor to assign a contract in toto to another contractor, and we never deal with an agent. We always deal with firms that we believe will be able to do the work, and the contracts are given to firms that in fact do the work. It is not unusual, however, for a contractor to sublet a certain part of a construction job. For example, another contractor may have concrete equipment much closer to the scene than the firm that has the whole contract. The contractor may sublet the concrete work or the sheet metal work. Part of the contract referred to was sublet, and I am making inquiries to ascertain just what was the extent of that subletting. Without having obtained the full facts, however, I feel sure that only a portion of the contract was sublet to a local contractor nearer the scene than the Montreal firm that had the contract.

I can say that where it is possible to call for tenders we do so, and that practice is followed as fully as the circumstances permit. Where time does not allow us to follow that system, we sometimes use established prices; that is, prices that have been established by recent tenders. Where there is no time to call for tenders, we may renew a contract at the price we last paid for the commodity. If we are using the entire output of an industry, we put in auditors to fix a price that will return a reasonable profit; and where secret work is done, we try to get at least three contractors to tender and award the contract to the company with the lowest tender.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I thank the minister for the information. Is the principle of the cost-plus contract still being used in cases where we are taking all the output of an industry? The minister will remember a certain cost-plus contract which came before the last parliament. In that instance the government was responsible for the purchase of certain tools, jigs, dies and so on, and placing them at the disposal of the firm concerned. Is that principle being carried over into contracts?

Mr. HOWE: So far as I know, no cost-plus contract has been awarded in the last eight months. Sometimes when we have had no previous production of an article, we have used what is known as a target-price contract. which is somewhat different from a cost-plus contract. A price is arrived at which is considered reasonable, and a certain margin of profit is fixed. If the contractor can do better, his margin of profit is slightly increased; and if he is not able to do as well as the established price, his margin of profit drops. That is a contract which is widely used. It has a profit incentive in it, and is the next best thing to a fixed-price contract. The targetprice contract is the nearest thing we have to what my hon. friend has described as a costplus contract.

Mr. COCKERAM: Would the minister inform the committee whether the Lindsay arsenal is working to capacity, and how many men are employed there at the present time.

Mr. HOWE: Lindsay arsenal is in process of installing machinery. So far as I know, it has not started actual production. I presume the number of men there is the number connected with the installation of the machinery, and the building of auxiliary plant. It is scheduled to start operation on June 15, I am informed.

Mr. COCKERAM: I see the Minister of National Defence is now in his seat, and I should like to direct a question to him respecting the tank problem, which has been discussed to-night. I direct his attention to a statement made by Brigadier Schmidlin in Toronto last fall regarding the Polish campaign. Would the minister consider whether that statement was the kind of statement one would expect from an officer at headquarters responsible for the mechanized forces of Canada. After all, Germany had been very successful in her campaign in Poland, and it does seem to me that the general staff should have gone into the matter more fully than would seem to be indicated by Brigadier Schmidlin's talk in Toronto. If Brigadier Schmidlin could throw the question of tanks so lightly to one side, does the minister not think it is time for a reorganization of the general staff of the militia? I ask that because it must be realized we have a big job to do and responsible men are needed to head the general staff. Those of us who served in the militia right up to date know what that job is. If an officer, responsible for the mechanization of our army, can view events in Poland so lightly, I do not think he is fitted for the position he now holds in the Department of National Defence.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall answer first the question respecting the Lindsay arsenal. I can only assure the committee that the Department of National Defence has realized fully the productive possibilities of that arsenal, and the importance of making the greatest possible use of it during the course of this war. Plans are under way to that end, and they will be carried forward without delay.

With respect to the second question raised by the hon, member, I would say that the particular statement attributed to Brigadier Schmidlin was brought to my attention to-day. I find the speech he made was given at a meeting of a local association of electrical engineers in Toronto. He has stated to me that the portions of his speech quoted were in fact actual parts of it, but that without the full context they do not give a full picture of his argument, which was based on the hypothesis that both sides were approximately equal in tank and air power.

May I say to the hon, member that Brigadier Schmidlin was at that time director of engineering services. He was not actually in control of the organization of the tank training depot at Camp Borden. It is quite evident that in the course of his remarks at the meeting of the engineering society he did make certain comments respecting the Polish campaign, and that when taken out of their context those comments do not appear to have been borne out by the events of more recent weeks. But I would remind the hon. member that if all those whose military prophecies of six months ago were to be censured at the present time, they would constitute a very large number. Military officers of very high rank in the armies of all the allied powers would be included. With respect to this matter I would say that so far as the information before me is concerned, I have the distinct impression that the portion of Brigadier Schmidlin's speech which was quoted does not fully reveal the actual tenor of his remarks on that occasion.

Mr. McNEVIN (Victoria, Ont.): With respect to the Lindsay arsenal may I say that one hundred men are being employed on production at this plant which has been operating since May 1, 1939.

Mr. MacNICOL: Producing what?

Mr. McNEVIN (Victoria, Ont.): Producing ·303 cups, and discs for the production of heavy shells. The installations under way are for the production of heavy shells, and I am most anxious that that development be completed with the least possible delay. However, it would not be correct to say that the plant is not in production.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is there a fair wage clause in the various contracts being let, and has the government taken precautions to see that fair wages are paid and that decent working conditions are provided in connection with all contracts let by the government?

Mr. HOWE: The fair wage clause is included in all government contracts for munitions, and the Department of Labour has the same control over those contracts as it has over all others.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is that the case in connection with other supplies, too? I have in mind contracts let to the textile industry. I believe there is a great deal of textiles being purchased now. As indicated by a royal commission which reported to this House of Commons, wages in the textile industry are extremely low. Is the government taking precautions to see that men and women working on government supplies are not being sweated in that industry.

Mr. HOWE: The rates in textile wages are covered by contracts and prevailing rates in the industry. May I point out that they are considerably higher now than they were when that royal commission reported, as my hon. friend must know.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Does that same wage requirement apply to manufacturers of aeroplanes and aeroplane parts, too? I understand that it does not.

Mr. HOWE: I feel quite sure it applies in the aeroplane industry, as well as in all other industries.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): On several occasions in the last two or three days I have been informed that within this city of Ottawa wages are being paid as low as eight cents, ten cents and twelve cents an hour, and that when these men work three or four months they are laid off and new apprentices put in their places. In that way production costs are reduced; but if that procedure is adopted, we shall never have any development of experienced mechanics. I was hesitant about bringing up the matter; but since it has been raised, I should like the minister to assure the committee that no such wage as that is being paid in any industry where government contracts are let.

Mr. HOWE: I am not familiar with all the circumstances. The important trades allow a certain number of apprentices. I do not know the wages paid, but I shall be glad to look into them.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I can give the name of this concern. I have been trying to get a little more information upon it; that is why I delayed bringing up the question.

Mr. McLARTY: Perhaps I might answer the question. There are two classes of contracts with different sets of labour conditions. There are what are known as the class (b) conditions in which local wage rates and local labour conditions apply. In other contracts—and this applies to the aeroplane construction industry—minimum wages are set which have been agreed upon in consultation between the contractors and the Department of Labour. These are minimum wages, of course, and if there has been any variation below that minimum wage, I shall be glad to see that the circumstances are looked into.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Can the minister tell us the minimum wage?

Mr. McLARTY: The minimum wage varies so widely in the different mechanical departments of the aeroplane construction industry and the various types of labour employed that I could not from memory give my hon. friend the figures, but I shall be very glad to furnish him with the information.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Surely no industry would pay a married man wages so low as eight or ten or twelve cents an hour; and if that is being done, something should be done about the matter. A man cannot make a decent living at that wage.

Mr. McLARTY: I have no hesitation in assuring my hon, friend that the minimum wage fixed in any contract is far above the figure he mentions. If he will give me information as to the particular company he has in mind, I shall be glad to have an investigation made immediately.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River); I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question with reference to this sentence which appears in the Windsor Star, entitled "Editor's note." It reads:

A special writer for the Windsor Star, who speaks German fluently, has been mingling with the German population in Detroit and finds there are no less than 7,500 German army reservists in that city, said to be training regularly.

I have no doubt the same kind of thing goes on also in Buffalo, where there is a very large German population. I know the minister is familiar with the situation, and I would ask him if any special precautions have been taken in Windsor, across from Detroit, and on the Niagara falls side across from Buffalo, to prevent serious subversive action by such people as those to whom this dispatch refers.

Mr. ROGERS: I can assure my hon. friend that we are taking such precautions as are suggested by the most reliable information we can obtain. We keep constant watch of that situation across Canada.

Mr. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): The Minister of Transport will remember that when the defence purchasing board legislation was before the house last year, considerable pressure was brought to bear from various parts of this chamber to have provision made that no member of the board should be a shareholder or stockholder in any armament firm, and the government brought in an amendment providing accordingly, but it was finally deleted by another body. The defence purchasing board was later merged with the war supply board, and the war supply board is now merged with the Department of Munitions and Supply. But the principle is still a good one; and in view of the fact that the government gave assent to the principle, I am wondering if it is being carried out so that those responsible for placing orders and for letting contracts under the minister shall be in no wise connected with the firms receiving the contracts; not because we are suspicious of everyone, but because the people of Canada would have a greater measure of confidence if they were perfectly certain that the men responsible for letting contracts on such a large scale were in no wise connected with the business firms receiving the orders. Is that principle being carried out?

Mr. HOWE: It is necessary, in organizing a supply programme on the scale that faces us to-day and did face us at the outbreak of war, to have the help of the most experienced men that Canadian industry can provide. We have attempted to get that type of assistance and, I think, have been fairly successful. But obviously when we draw a number of men from industry, we can hardly say that none of these men have or have had any connection with the firms that are making something for the government's war programme. I cannot give my hon. friend the assurance he wants, but I can give him this assurance: I know the calibre of the men we have chosen; I know their integrity, and I am prepared to take personal responsibility for anything they have done in the service of the government.

Mr. COCKERAM: I understood the Minister of National Defence when he was speaking to say that Colonel Carter had made and submitted a report to the government. Is that correct?

Mr. ROGERS: I made no such statement. I believe the statement which appeared in the Toronto Telegram yesterday did refer to a report which was made by Colonel Carter to Major-General McNaughton, and perhaps that is the report my hon. friend has in mind. But I made no reference to that report in my remarks.

Mr. COCKERAM: Is that report available in the department?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to answer that question at the present time. The report I assume was made to General McNaughton either in his capacity as former president of the National Research Council or in his capacity as inspector general of the units of the first Canadian division in training in Canada. I shall, however, make the necessary inquiries.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): The question of the Lindsay arsenal has been brought up. Perhaps the minister or the hon. member for Victoria, Ontario, might tell us how many men will be employed when the arsenal gets into full production on June 15, or will be in full production by June 15.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be glad to take note of the question and supply the information if it can be made available.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I have been much informed by the material which has been given out to-night. I would ask the minister [Mr. T. C. Douglas.]

if any provision has been made for the manufacture of armoured cars in Canada. They should be much easier to manufacture than tanks, and they would be exceedingly valuable to the country under certain conditions.

Mr. HOWE: We have produced in Canada all the mobile equipment that goes with a division, in fact two divisions—some 9,000 vehicles, of which 7,000 are of the type of armoured car my hon. friend has in mind. We also have production of universal carriers for carrying machine guns and other equipment that go with a division. We have manufactured in this country and have a very large production of all the mechanized equipment of a division apart from tanks.

Mr. ADAMSON: That would include Brengun carriers?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. We have a contract for 600, and while we have yet to turn out the first, we are very close to production.

Mr. HAZEN: I should like to ask a question of the minister having to do with members of the Canadian active service force going on leave. I understand that when they go on leave, they are provided with a warrant that permits them to travel at half fare. That would be perfectly satisfactory so far as the members of the force are concerned when they have to travel only a short distance. But in the case of a man located, say, in Ottawa, who, when he gets leave, has to go to Saint John, or Halifax, or Timmins, Ontario, with the warrant that he gets he is obliged to pay from $15 to $20 for his transportation. In the case of a married man, who, I understand, draws about $19 a month, this may work a great hardship. I am also informed, although I do not know whether the information is correct, that when a man goes on leave, he is unable to obtain an advance from the paymaster of his unit. Will the minister state whether that is so; also, whether any consideration has been given by the minister to the provision of free transportation to men going on leave prior to proceeding overseas?

Mr. TUSTIN: I wish to say a word along the same line.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought possibly the committee had almost finished. If I could, I should like to report the bill to-night, although of course there is no intention to rush it. I was going to suggest that as the committee of supply will still have the main estimates of the Department of National Defence to consider, I would think, without making a ruling on it, that almost anything could be discussed on the question of the salary of the Minister of National Defence, if on no other item. So if the discussion is about through, and if hon. members are willing, I would be very glad if the bill could be reported. However, I see it is five minutes after eleven.

Mr. TUSTIN: I wish to say a word about the same matter that the hon, member for St. John-Albert spoke about. I have received to-day three protests along the same line from my constituency. No doubt the Minister of National Defence knows that there are a great many men located at the city of Kingston or at Barriefield. My home is on highway No. 2, and they pass by there in great numbers. Last Saturday there was a torrential rain all day long, and there were actually hundreds of soldiers thumbing their way along that highway. I have had three protests to-day from my home town and that district asking me to take this matter up with the Minister of National Defence, with the object of assuring in future that the men receive free transportation from the Canadian National Railways which is owned by the people of this country.

Mr. ROGERS: I shall be glad to take a note of the question. I believe that the first hon. member who spoke, correctly stated the present position with respect to transportation warrants. My strong impression is that in this respect we have followed the practice which was established in the last war. It does not apply in England, where transportation warrants are given to those who are on leave.

Mr. MacNICOL: The distances in England are very short.

Mr. ROGERS: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Section 6 agreed to.

Bill reported.

On motion of Mr. Ralston the house adjourned at 11.06 p.m.

Wednesday, May 29, 1940.

The house met at three o'clock.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER:: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

29th May, 1940.

Sir,-I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Mr. Justice O. S. Crocket, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, will proceed to the Senate chamber to-day at 5.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

F. L. C. Pereira,

Acting Secretary to the Administrator.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DIRECTOR OF AIRCRAFT SUPPLY-FLEET AIRCRAFT COMPANY

Mr. ADAMSON:

1. Who is the director of aircraft supply? 2. Who is the president of the Fleet Aircraft Company?

3. What orders have been given to the Fleet Aircraft Company by the War Supply Board?

Mr. HOWE:

- 1. Mr. W. J. Sanderson.
- 2. Mr. W. J. Sanderson.
- 3. See published record of contracts awarded July 14, 1939, to March 31, 1940. Refer to pages: 12, 18, 19, 25, 45, 61, 78, 91, 100, 138, 140, 155, 171, 189, 196, 210, 213, 247, 270, 316, 320, 325, 328, 348, 391, 393, 407, 409, 507, and 614. July 14, 1939, to March 31, 1940, incl., $3,581,432.53. April 1, 1940, to May 22, 1940, incl., $138,352.41. Grand total to date (May 22, 1940), $3,719,784.94.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION ACT-T. WATERS

Mr. PERLEY:

1. Who was the officer employed under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act referred to under travelling expense accounts Vote 480, in the Auditor General's Report for the year ending March 31, 1939, page 232?

2. Why was he discharged, and when?

3. Was he reemployed, and when?

4. What is his present position?

5. What was his salary at the time of his

- What was his salary at the time of his
- discharge?
 6. What were his travelling and other expenses for the year previous to his discharge?
 7. What is his present salary and other expense allowances?

8. Was an investigation carried on as suggested by the Auditor General?
9. If so, what were the findings, and, if not, why was such investigation not held?

Mr. GARDINER:

- 1. Mr. T. Waters.
- 2. He was removed from the service on March 12th, 1939, because of reported irregularities in expense accounts.
- 3. He was replaced in the service for the period August 1, 1939, to November 8, 1939, to complete the special work on which he had been engaged.

- 4. He is not at present employed by the Department of Agriculture.
 - 5. $125 per month.
 - 6. $2,385.17 for the fiscal year 1938-39.
 - 7. See No. 4 above.
- 8. An investigation was carried on covering some of Mr. Waters' expense accounts.
- 9. Irregularities to the amount of $79.63 were found. This amount was subsequently recovered from Mr. Waters.

ALIENS BROUGHT IN BY BATA SHOE COMPANY AT FRANKFORD, ONTARIO

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth):

- 1. How many Europeans from the age of 12 to 21 were brought into Canada by the Bata Shoe Company, Frankford, Ontario, in 1938, 1939, 1940?
- 2. How many Europeans from the age of 21 to 60 were brought into Canada by the Bata Shoe Company, Frankford, Ontario, in 1938, 1939, 1940?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. 1938-none.

1939-8.

1940-none.

2. 1938-2.

1939—123.

1940-1.

MILK PRICES-MONTREAL

Mr. LACOMBE:

What was the average price of milk in Montreal during each of the years 1938, 1939, and 1940?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West):

	Wholesale *Milk, fresh price paid to producer per 100 lbs. deliv- ered at railway station, Montreal	Retail Milk, fresh per quart at Mont- treal
	$	$
1938 1939	2.076 2.023	·116 ·109
1940, January to April	2.150	.115

^{*1} gallon of milk equals 10.3 pounds.

SECRET SOCIETIES

Mr. JAQUES:

- 1. Is the government considering the advisability of making secret societies and the membership in them illegal?
- 2. Will a return be made to the house of the names and members of the government who are members of secret societies, and also of the presidents and general managers of banks who are similarly affiliated?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East):

- 1. This question relates to a matter of policy and it is not customary to make a statement in reply to same.
 - 2. Answered by No. 1.

*DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES OF BILLS TO MEMBERS

Mr. HANSELL:

Will the government consider having a copy of all bills of the House of Commons placed in the post office boxes of members on the day on which they are filed in the chamber?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is a question about which I should like to have a word with Your Honour before it is answered.

THE ROYAL TRAIN

Mr. HANSELL:

1. Was the royal train put into service since it was last used by Their Majesties?
2. If it is not now in service, would the government consider putting it on display at the various city exhibitions during this coming

Mr. HOWE:

- 1. The cars which made up the royal train were returned to normal railway service by the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railway companies at the conclusion of the royal visit.
 - 2. Answered by No. 1.

CANADIAN TRADE BALANCES, 1910-1940

Mr. HANSELL:

What was Canada's favourable or unfavourable trade balance for each year since 1910?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West):

Fiscal years ended	Balance of trade
March 31	Favourable Unfavourable
1910	$ 71,554,206
1911	162,724,393
1912	214,688,524
1913	294,138,879
1914	163,756,774
1915	$ 5,486,601
1916	271,098,936
1017	000 200 000
1010	000 005 014
1919	349,053,580
1920	222,130,586
1921	29,730,763
1922	6,122,677
1923	142,716,593
1924	165,396,430
1925	284,429,106
1000	406,583,761
1007
	238,692,028
1928	147,196,219
1929	127,766,443
1930	103,335,512

Fiscal years	s ended	d Balar	ice of trade
March	31	Favourable	Unfavourable
1931			$89,584,647
1932		$ 32,749,123
1933		128,594,376
		238,466,770
		299,753,013
		402,368,654
		285,751,286
		311,542,117
		. (a) 155,987,834

(a) Statistics for 1940 do not include gold. Net exports of non-monetary gold amounting to 188.1 million dollars are additional to the favourable balance as shown.

*WAR REFUGEES

Mr. BRUCE:

In view of the congestion and difficulty imposed upon the British authorities in consequence of evacuating children from many of the eastern seaport towns, is it the intention of the Canadian government to immediately offer the hospitality of Canada to any large number of these children, and if so, how many?

Mr. CRERAR: There is little if anything that can be added to the information already given by the Prime Minister in reply to similar questions yesterday and a few days ago. The matter is the subject of communication at the present time between Canada and the United Kingdom.

DOCTOR ALBERT MOELLMAN

Mr. McGREGOR:

- 1. Is Dr. Albert Moellman, formerly of Waterloo, Ontario, in the employ of the federal government?

 - 2. If so, what position does he hold?
 3. When was he appointed?
 4. By whom was he recommended?
 5. What salary does he receive?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West):

- 1. Yes.
- 2. Dr. Moellman is a temporary statistician grade 3, during the absence of the permanent incumbent on extended sick leave.
- 3. February 12, 1940; was previously on temporary staff during the summers of 1938 and 1939.
- 4. His application for special work was favourably considered by the department and the civil service commission.
 - 5. $2,880.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

BREN MACHINE GUNS-JOHN INGLIS COMPANY

Mr. ROSS (Souris):

1. How many Bren guns have been delivered by the John Inglis Company Limited? 95826-21

2. How many Bren guns have been purchased by the dominion government in England and/or from any other source, and how many of such guns have been delivered from England and/or any other source?

3. What sums of money have been paid by the dominion government to the John Inglis Company Limited, since the letting of the Bren gun contract?

4. Having regard to the fact that the Bren gun contract was divided into three parts, viz: gun contract was divided into three parts, viz: (1) the preparatory period of two years; (2) the production period of four years; (3) the series of special clauses: (a) What sums of money have been paid and/or charged against each of these periods by the dominion government to date? (b) Will any further sums be chargeable against periods (1) and (3)?

5. How much money has been contracted for or paid by the dominion government for machinery for the John Inglis Company machinery Limited ?

6. What amount of money has been paid by the Dominion government for tools or dies:
(a) to the John Inglis Company Limited;
(b) to other suppliers of such materials in connection with the Bren gun production?

7. How many members of the civil service or militia of Canada are engaged in the John or militia of Canada are engaged in the John Inglis Company Limited on the Bren gun contract; what is the salary of each, and, are these salaries paid from the federal treasury?

8. What experts, other than Mr. Gillespie, have been brought to Canada to assist in the production of the Bren gun?

9. What other contracts have been given to

9. What other contracts have been given to the John Inglis Company Limited by depart-ments of the dominion government?

LIFE INSURANCE—LAPSED POLICIES

Mr. HANSELL:

- 1. How much life insurance held by policyholders in Canada has lapsed during each year since 1914?
- 2. How much of this insurance was in Canada and British and American companies respec-British and American companies respectively?

SOLDIERS' DEPENDANTS' ALLOWANCES

Mr. HANSELL:

1. What is the schedule of allowances to soldiers' dependants: (a) dependants of married soldiers; (b) dependants of unmarried soldiers?

2. Is there ever any exception to the schedule?
3. Is each application for soldiers' dependants dealt with separately? If so, by whom, and by what procedure?

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

INCIDENT AT VERNON, B.C .- STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. I have just received this telegram from the mayor of Vernon, British Columbia:

Last night a meeting was being held in the Legion hall Vernon to form a home defence corps when some person or persons unknown bombed the hall breaking all windows on one side. We would ask your assistance in putting this matter before the hon. minister of the proper department we would like to ask for an issue of a few rifles and ammunition to help protect our wives and children also our country urgent.

I should like to ask the minister whether he can make a statement with regard to the steps which the government are prepared to take to allay the anxiety that naturally exists and to which I have drawn his attention for ten days past.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I had not intended making any statement to-day on this matter but I will give my hon. friend information. Before doing so however I should like to impress upon members who have concrete cases the desirability of sending them to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or even to the Department of Justice-I am not referring to my hon. friend's question; that is another matter altogether-instead of giving them publicity by questions in parliament, sometimes hampering the work that has to be done by conveying knowledge to the interested parties of what may be done, and sometimes casting unfair suspicion upon people who do not deserve it. For instance, yesterday a question was asked about the employees of the Bata Shoe Company and I immediately obtained information. There are 156 men there, all Czechs, refugees who came here after their country had been invaded and crushed by Germany. These men are all registered. They all report except nine of them who have certificates of exemption. These exemptions are not given by me but by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who is also registrar general of alien enemies. These people have not given any trouble which the police know of except for the fact that one complaint which was made against some of them is being investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

As regards the question raised by my hon. friend, there are no particulars as to who may be responsible for the disorder that has taken place in Vernon. May I say that under the law as it is, and as it has always been, it is for the provinces and municipalities to maintain law and order within their limits. Of course, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are quite willing when their services are required to give them, and in connection with anything relating either to war or to some other matter coming within federal jurisdiction they even take the initiative. The administration of justice in the provinces is however under the province.

Mr. ROWE: That is, in normal times. [Mr. Stirling.]

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): At all times the administration of justice is under the provinces. We may help them, we may give them all the material we have, we may assist them. But not only is it within their jurisdiction under the constitution, but it is even their right, to administer justice. Indeed, not so very long ago the premier of a very important province of this dominion simply refused the federal authority the right to have one counsel assisting crown prosecutors in matters relating, for instance, to smuggling or in other matters of that kind, because it was for the province to prosecute the accused, and he did not wish to have anything to do with anybody appointed by the federal authorities with a view to giving assistance. Strictly speaking, he was right legally because it is within the jurisdiction of the province. In this case, there are no particulars indicating that it is something connected with the federal authorities and we could not go there without being requested to do so by the proper authorities. However, I shall be glad to have the necessary information obtained regarding this matter.

While I am on this subject may I say that until two weeks ago the criticism I had to meet was quite the opposite. During the whole of the election campaign I had to defend myself on every platform, I had to defend the government, because the defence of Canada regulations were being attacked everywhere on the ground that they were too strict, too arbitrary. I was called the Hitler of the government of Canada; and, mind you, there are gentlemen criticizing me to-day who were not defending me at the time against the attacks of Colonel Drew, for instance, who said that we were taking away all the liberties of the Canadian people. Even my good friend the former member for St. Lawrence-St. George, Mr. Cahan, made a speech before the Rotary club in Montreal in which these regulations were strongly attacked because, it was said, they interfered with the liberty of the country.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): On a point of order, the first part of the minister's statement was correct in every way. Now I suggest he is making a political speech.

Mr. ROWE: A campaign speech.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I did not intend to say a word about this to-day, but the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) asked me to make a statement and I am proceeding to make that statement. Is there anyone who can contradict what I have said?

Mr. BROOKS: You are reaping the whirlwind and will reap it. Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We were told that our regulations were much more strict than the British regulations. I had to plead this case before the people of Canada on the political platform; we were asked everywhere to decrease the severity of our regulations at least to the level of the British regulations. But just recently the British regulations have been increased in severity. We have not gone down to them; they have come up to us.

Mr. ROWE: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have been flooded with questions. This is my first answer.

Mr. HOMUTH: You have not answered it very well.

Mr. SPEAKER: A question was asked of the minister. I think he has now replied to it.

ENEMY ALIENS—USE OF SERVICES OF WAR VETERANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. J. M. LOCKHART (Lincoln): I have received similar telegrams; I will not enlarge on the details. I asked for some information some days ago. I should be glad if I might have that information to convey it to one or two of the returned soldiers' organizations or groups to assure them as to what has been done.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I shall be glad to see that what my hon. friend asks is furnished.

ALIENS BROUGHT IN BY BATA SHOE COMPANY AT FRANKFORD, ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): I should like to ask a question arising out of the statement of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). He said that the Bata Shoe Company employees and those brought in who are presently in the Frankford area could be considered as refugees, and that they have come in since Czechoslovakia was ravished. I hope the minister will check that statement and give a further statement on it. A large number of them came in long before Czechoslovakia was ravished, and a large number were not in the class of refugees at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It is for the Minister of Mines and Resources to answer that.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources): These admissions were made 95826-211 after the occupation of Prague by the Germans, certainly after the Munich settlement. There is no question of that.

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): I should like to refer to the question asked by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) and also that asked yesterday by the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White), in connection with the Bata Shoe Company. I believe that every hon. member of this house wishes to be fair to these people—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon, member is out of order. There is no question before the house.

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): With regard to the question I asked yesterday concerning the Bata Shoe Company, am I to take it that the remarks the minister has made to-day are the answer to my question and that the department does not intend to make any further investigation?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I said that the only complaint that has been received has been one received these last days with regard to only a few of those men, and that their activities are now being investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. These people are all registered; the police are watching the activities there as elsewhere, and I do not know that we can do more than that, especially since those men are being checked.

Mr. WHITE: I shall be glad to supply the minister confidentially with certain information that has come to my knowledge.

An hon. MEMBER: Why did the hon. member not do that a week ago?

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): I should like to direct a question to the hon, member for Hastings-Peterborough.

Some hon, MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

INQUIRY AS TO RAIDING OF OFFICES OF MONTREAL YOUTH COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. DORISE W. NIELSEN (North Battleford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). I have received a letter from the Montreal Youth Council stating that last Thursday their offices were raided by officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Montreal Youth Council is affiliated with the Canadian Youth Congress which I believe has come to the attention of a great many people in this country as being a worthy organization. They intend to meet in Saskatchewan this summer. Already the lieutenant-governor of that province is a patron of the congress, and I believe the minister of education of Saskatchewan has become a patron as well. I believe the Montreal Youth Council should have at least some opportunity of learning why their offices were raided.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Will the hon. member please state the question without offering any opinions?

Mrs. NIELSEN: I should like to know why the mounted police raided those offices and whether the material which they took away will be returned?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This will perhaps reestablish some equilibrium in the matter; to a certain extent I am glad that criticism of the other kind comes to me now. I shall be pleased to secure the information which my hon, friend desires. I cannot give a definite answer to-day.

MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED CHARGE AT CANADIAN LEGION MEETING
AS TO POLITICAL INTERFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALAN COCKERAM (York South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. At the Canadian Legion convention in Montreal yesterday, definite charges were made that there was political interference with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I think the house and the people of the country should be given definite assurance that such is not the fact.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I do not know that any such charge has been made; if it has, it is an atrocious untruth. If there is any body of men in Canada with which politics has nothing to do, it is the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. This statement applies to all their activities, to the recruiting of them, their promotion, their retirement; every time a member of parliament or any outsider has asked that there should be some influence prevailing to promote a man or do anything in regard to the police the letter has gone to the wastebasket, and any officer of the mounted police from the commissioner down would say the same thing.

Mr. COCKERAM: I am glad to have that assurance, because I have great faith in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

[Mrs. Nielsen.]

ALIENS IN UNITED STATES

REPORTED LEGISLATION REQUIRING REGISTRATION AND FINGERPRINTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I wish to call the attention of the government to dispatches in Monday's United States papers saying that a bill has been reported by the judicial committee of the United States Senate requiring all aliens in the United States, which includes hundreds of thousands of Canadians working there, to be registered and fingerprinted. I would ask that the Prime Minister be good enough to look into the matter and see that the interests of our Canadians over there are protected.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The Department of External Affairs has asked for a copy of the bill to which my hon. friend has just referred, and there will be communications between the department and the United States legation concerning it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUESTION AS TO SUPPLY BY BRITAIN OF TANKS AND TRAINING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALAN COCKERAM (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), who is not in the house at the present time. The question is: Is there on file in the Department of National Defence a letter written early in October last from the War Office or British authorities in which the Canadian authorities were informed that the British government would be unable to supply any tanks to the Canadian forces and also would be unable to supply training facilities for Canadian tank troops.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think that question should take the form of a motion for an order for the production of these documents.

INQUIRY AS TO DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES OF CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), who is acting as Minister of Munitions and Supply. On May 22 he tabled a report of contracts let to March 31. Will copies of these contracts be available to members? At present they are not in print or not in the distribution office.

And when may we expect a copy of the contracts awarded up to—I think the minister said May 10?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): I am sorry to say that the printing office has not yet been able to turn out sufficient numbers for distribution. They are delivering them to my office as they are turned out. To date I think we have about half enough to supply the requirements of the whole house. If any hon. member wishes them immediately, if he will send a note to my office I will see that they are delivered to him. We hope to have sufficient copies to deliver within a day or two.

It has been our practice to publish the contracts by periods of two months, but if it is the wish of the house we could revise that and publish supplements to the list of contracts to the end of each month.

WAR APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR GRANTING TO HIS MAJESTY AID FOR NATIONAL DEFENCE AND SECURITY

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 18, for granting to his majesty aid for national defence and security.

Hon, R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Before this bill receives third reading and goes forward for royal assent, I desire to advert to a principle to which I alluded when the bill was in committee of the whole last Monday; that is to say, that provision should be made in this bill, as in all money bills, for a full report to parliament within a period of time stated in the bill, as soon as possible after the opening of the next session of parliament, containing as far as possible a full and correct statement of the moneys expended under the measure and the purposes for which they have been spent. The principle involved is that parliament shall have complete control over expenditures, and I know when I state that principle concretely in that fashion it will find an echo in the heart and mind of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) because on many occasions between 1930 and 1935 he "set the heather on fire" with enunciations in support of that very principle.

I assume that I shall be met at once with the reply that this is all very well with respect to money bills in ordinary times, but that these are not ordinary times; that this is a war measure; that it is not in the public interest or that it may not be convenient within the time suggested to lay before parliament a true and correct statement of all the moneys expended under this bill. I submit, sir, that even though this premise be correct, it does not follow that parliament should not have an accounting; for certainly it should be the aim of parliament to retain control over all expenditures.

I discussed the matter briefly with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) and made the suggestion to him as long ago as Monday that of his own motion he should place in the bill a new section containing this provision. I had intended referring to this matter yesterday afternoon or last evening, but inasmuch as my memorandum in that connection had been sent over to the minister and had not been returned, it escaped my attention. To-day I deem it my duty to ask the minister to accept the principle which I have endeavoured to enunciate as succinctly as possible, for the reasons which I have suggested. This is the last opportunity I shall have to say anything about this matter; but because it appears to me that the principle involved is fundamental I believe we should put on record a statement of our position in regard to this money bill even though it may be a war appropriation measure.

I know there may be occasions when it is not in the public interest to do certain things; but with respect to expenditures of public money, even in war effort, I believe parliament should retain control. I am sure the Prime Minister will not controvert the principle involved; in fact, he is so wedded to it that I am surprised at its omission from the bill in the first instance. If we do not put something like this in this bill, something similar to what was in the Unemployment Relief Act, of course we can say good-bye to parliamentary control over the expenditure of public funds. Our position then will be merely that of rubber stamps voting public funds to the government to spend as they like, without any control by parliament and without any necessity for reporting to parlia-

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling):

That the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by adding thereto section 7, to the effect following:

"7. A detailed account of the sums expended under the authority of this act shall be laid before the House of Commons of Canada during the first fifteen days of the then next session of parliament."

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance): The leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) was good enough to speak to me about this matter just at the opening of the house. I should explain to the house what I explained to my hon. friend, that in the first place the appropriation bills on which this bill has been modeled have not contained such a provision as he suggested. I think the reason was that it was considered inadvisable to make any hard and fast regulation with regard to details of expenditures, having regard to the purposes of the expenditures and the fact that of course only a certain amount of information could be given. When I mention the bills on which this bill was modeled, of course I refer to the bills passed in the sessions of 1915, 1916 and 1917, during the great war. That is why this provision does not appear in this bill because I believe those reasons apply to-day also. It is, I think, quite impossible to give an undertaking, or to insert in the statute a provision, that a detailed statement shall be given concerning expenditures of this kind, because obviously that would be to undertake to reveal information which it may not be in the public interest to give, having regard to the nature of the expenditures. It is also, I am told, difficult to provide for a statement of this kind until a reasonable time has lapsed after the fiscal year has closed, because the various purposes for which the expenditures had been made have to be collocated under different headings from those usually used; that is to say, more general headings.

I have suggested to my hon, friend—and I hope he will accept this suggestion—that I shall now give to him and to this house an undertaking that the Minister of Finance will lay upon the table of the house or present to the House of Commons within two months after the end of the fiscal year a statement of all the moneys expended upon the provisions of this measure under headings to be approved by the governor in council. When I say, "under headings to be approved by the governor in council," that simply means that there might not be details, for instance, of the expenditure on ships or pieces of ordnance or other things which would indicate the extent of our equipment. General headings would be used along the lines I would think of the headings in the explanatory notes which appear in the bill with which we are dealing and the headings under which I gave expenditures last night.

The house will realize that hon, members will then be in this position: They will have three checks upon the administration. They will have the check of the undertaking that a statement shall be presented containing information upon which all questions and inquiries can be based. They will also have the check that they need not vote more money under any subsequent war appropriation bill unless the information given is satisfactory. They will also have the check of getting information which is desirable on the estimates of the Department of National Defence, which department I would anticipate under present conditions will be going on for a good many years in this country. I hope my hon, friend will accept that.

May I add one further word? I said that there would be a statement laid on the table of the house within two months after the end of the fiscal year; but if by any chance parliament is not then sitting, the statement will be laid on the table within fifteen days after the opening of the next sitting of the house.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, when I remember the insistence which the right hon, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) laid on the necessity for control by parliament, I am sure that had the argument put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) now been put forward from that side of the house, it would not have been acceptable to the right hon, gentleman. I do not think the reasons given by the minister meet the difficulty at all. It would not give parliament that inquisitorial right which it has to look into these matters as soon as possible after the assembling of this house. He suggested that he will give an undertaking. That undertaking would be the undertaking of the occupant of the position of Minister of Finance at this time.

I do not think it is a difficulty that the end of the fiscal year would not have been reached. It certainly was no difficulty in these cases with which we are drawing comparisons. The contention put forward by my leader is a most reasonable one, that there shall be attached to this bill a provision to the effect that these pieces of information, financial detail in the hands of the government, shall be laid before parliament, which is supreme.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, fifteen days after the opening of the session has been the rule for the tabling of all reports of departments and commissions, even the Canadian National Railways and other bodies.

Before the vote on the third reading is taken, I want to ask one question. First, I call attention to the fact that eight days ago the government announced that there would be recruiting for the second division and for a third division. Recruiting offices all over Canada are being visited. Within the last three or four days young men have been crowding recruiting offices in the city of Toronto, Hamilton and other places, and they are told that only skilled draftsmen can be engaged-electricians, carpenters, blacksmiths, machinists, mechanics and others skilled in technical lines. The government should do something for these young men. First of all they cannot get a job; second, they can get no relief; and, third, they are now prohibited from joining the army although they are ablebodied men willing to fight. Surely within twenty-four hours the government could give instructions to the heads of the twelve military districts to go ahead and register these men. Otherwise I should like to find out if action along this line is awaiting the third reading of this bill. Many of these men are thus left again to ride the rods, and many of them will have to go back to panhandling. They will not get food or lodging or anything, and so they will be out on the street. The government could easily give instructions to the commanding officers in the military districts to have these men report and register them. There should be some announcement by the government with respect to recruiting for the second and third divisions which was announced eight days ago, but nothing has been done.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) with respect to the undertaking given by the Minister of Finance, that in so far as the undertaking can be given in the name of the government I am prepared to give it in the name of this government.

In reply to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson), he is quite right in saying that no one has been more insistent on the principle of control of public expenditures by the House of Commons than myself. I would point out to him, however, that whenever I have spoken on this subject I have spoken not at a time of war when very exceptional conditions arise, but at times when the country was proceeding with its normal business in a normal way. I laid particular emphasis on the need of control of expenditures for purposes of relief and the like. Had I been in the House of Commons at the time of the last war, my attitude would have been precisely the same as that of the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier who was then the leader of the Liberal party; and the leader of the opposition. It was that as long as the country was opposing and was confronted by the enemy he would be prepared to lend to the government of the day whatever assistance he possibly could, and would reserve until a later time any criticism he might have to make of measures which he had reason to believe were intended to save the administration from embarrassment at such a time. That I think is an attitude which my hon, friend himself will appreciate. I believe his attitude towards the present administration is along those lines. I point this out because I do think there is a difference between information being given in a time of peace and giving in detail to parliament, while war is on, certain expenditures which it may be inadvisable to disclose in detail and which have been made under a measure which parliament itself has approved.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, before the amendment is put, I should like to say that in my opinion there is involved in the amendment a principle which we cannot very well refuse to support, namely, the principle of the control by parliament of the expenditures that have been or are to be made. On these grounds we would support the reference back to committee, where a discussion as to the feasibility of the amendment could be gone into thoroughly. I realize that undoubtedly there might be some objection to the word "detail" in the amendment, but simply to accept the undertaking of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston), in whom we all have great faith, is in my opinion not the proper thing for the house to do; for ministers come and ministers go. I think in this first appropriation we should give further consideration to the suggestion made by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Hanson) and thoroughly look into the feasibility of what is suggested. On these grounds we are supporting the amendment.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, the period referred to by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is not the same as is in the minds of members of this house. The right hon, gentleman referred to the last war, but we were thinking of the time when he and his colleagues occupied the benches on this side of the chamber. From 1930 to 1935 this country was faced with an economic situation the like of which it had never known at any time in its history. I have a most vivid recollection of the Prime Minister belabouring the government of that day hour after hour. That government was elected and we came here to a special session of parliament to enact legislation to relieve the economic condition which existed. We were elected at that time for that sole purpose. I can remember the Prime Minister, after three or four quite long speeches, rising in his place and tracing the history of parliamentary institutions back to the time of confederation and reciting the achievements of his progenitors

He did that when our people were hungry and were waiting for some relief. He insisted on a certain principle being adopted, and the government of that day did adopt that principle.

So much for history. We are anxious to get on with this job of work. There has been a great deal of give and take across the floor of this house and I hope there will be more. I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) and the government will see their way clear to adopting this amendment. After all, there is little difference between the undertaking which the Minister of Finance has given on behalf of the government and this amendment. Let us keep our house in order as we go along. It is something new to me to see a statute bereft of intention, and then have that intention covered by a solemn undertaking given by the Minister of Finance.

I am quite serious and sincere when I say that before very long I hope someone else will be Minister of Finance and that the present Minister of Finance will be occupying a higher position than he does at the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): The Minister of Finance has given an undertaking in the name of the government, but in my opinion that undertaking should be part and parcel of this bill. I do hope the government will reconsider the stand they are taking and accept the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury) negatived on division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of Finance) moved that the bill do now pass and that the title be as on the order paper.

Mr. K. K. HOMUTH (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, before this bill receives its third reading—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The third reading has been carried.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): On a point of order, the hon. member was on his feet before the motion was put.

Some hon, MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not see him.

Mr. HOMUTH: Before this bill receives its third—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry, but the third reading has been carried and the title is as [Mr. J. H. Harris.] on the order paper. I did not see the hon. gentleman.

Motion agreed to and bill passed.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

JURISDICTION OF PROVINCIAL COURTS—CARE OF INSANE PERSONS

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved the third reading of Bill No. 12, to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

NAVAL SERVICE ACT

PROVISION TO MAKE CIVILIANS SERVING IN SHIPS SUBJECT TO NAVAL DISCIPLINE

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air) moved the second reading of Bill No. 2, to amend the Naval Service Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1—Naval Service Act amended.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to ask the minister in charge of this bill what Canada's navy consists of, where it is located on the Atlantic and Pacific and what work it is doing to coordinate and cooperate with the mother country to overcome the grave submarine menace which may occur any time, as it did in the great war.

Mr. POWER: As to where the navy is actually operating, I cannot give that information to my hon. friend because it would not be in the public interest to do so. As to the numbers of the forces, I do not know that it is in the public interest to give that, either; but I will say this, speaking from my knowledge of the estimates, that by the end of the year 1941 there will be 12,000 officers and ratings enlisted in the Canadian naval forces—I believe about 1,400 officers and 10,000 ratings.

There are in commission seven destroyers, fifteen mine-sweepers, six anti-submarine vessels, fifteen fishermen's reserve vessels, and fifty-one auxiliary vessels; and under construction, ninety vessels, fifty-four patrol vessels and eighteen mine-sweepers. At the present time the personnel is 952 officers and 5,662 ratings.

Mr. STIRLING: As I understand it, from the few words of explanation which the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) gave on the resolution, this is for the purposes of administration only. Would the minister who is in charge of the bill tell the committee whether in any sense this affects the rights, the standing of those affected by the bill?

Mr. POWER: Oh, not at all. This applies purely to such civilian personnel as may be attached to or employed by the navy or the officers of the navy, and it is in order that discipline may be observed. During the last war some difficulty arose on that account.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That statement of the minister is quite reassuring, that is that it is for discipline only. In the explanatory note in the bill that is accentuated. But further on, it is said that the procedure during the last war was open to certain legal objections. Would the minister give us just the meat of the whole thing and inform us as to the difficulty which arose at or since that time? I think there was some question of civil rights, in connection with actions for negligence, which might be taken away from these men if they became subject to naval discipline. To my mind there is something in that. Perhaps it has not occurred to the officers of the department to meet that point, and the bill may not be designed for that purpose. As the minister knows, the rights of a seaman in the navy in respect of, we will say, accidents, are entirely taken away from him, as contrasted with a civilian, working in a naval vessel, who is not an enlisted man or a rating. Having regard to the words, "it was open to certain legal objections," perhaps the minister will give some explanation as to what that means. Further on in the explanatory notes it says, "it gave rise to many claims for war compensation which, though not legally admissible, were extremely difficult to reject." There seems to be more in the bill than appears on the face of it. If the minister has the information, perhaps he would give it.

Mr. POWER: First I want to make it quite clear that this applies to persons who are not actually enlisted in the navy—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I understand that.

Mr. POWER: —but are serving with it. Pilots, I suppose, would be one category while they are serving with the navy; perhaps fishermen; and other trades serving in connection with or attached to the navy. Apparently during the last war that was not made quite clear, and trouble arose with regard to discipline. I have no recollection of that, I do not remember any instances of it, but I do remember of cases with respect to compensation in the shape of pensions. I take it that this bill will apply to those men who are not actually enlisted in the navy, that it will give them rights with respect to pension similar to the rights of those who are in the navy. Perhaps my hon. friend will follow me as I read section 1; I am skipping words which may be redundant:

(1) If any person who, not belonging to the naval service, enters into an engagement with the minister to serve his majesty... and agrees to become subject to this act upon entering into the engagement, that person shall, so long as the engagement remains in force... be subject to this act, and the provisions of this act shall apply in relation to that person as if, while subject to this act, he belonged to the naval service and were borne on the books of one of his majesty's Canadian ships in commission.

I take it that this would entitle him to the pension rights to which members of our naval forces are entitled. I remember, although I cannot recall the details, that certain pension claims were rejected on the ground that men who served in such capacity in the last war were not, properly speaking, members of the forces as laid down in the Pension Act; and I believe that this bill is intended to cover them.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There cannot be any objection in principle to the bill. I rose merely to clarify, if possible, the legal objections referred to in the explanatory notes. The intention of the bill is to make those persons who are not regularly enlisted subject to discipline as if they were one of the ratings of a ship. Of course there may be other implications which one does not understand unless one has read the entire naval act. I have not had time to do that. If the minister says that that is the only purpose of the bill, I am quite content.

Mr. GREEN: Could this section be used in the case of a Canadian who enlisted in Canada in the British navy or in an armed British merchantman? We had in Vancouver a case last fall where the British authorities with the aid of the Canadian authorities called for recruits for an armed merchantman which was not in the Canadian forces but was under British control. Quite a number of men enlisted, and some of them, at least, believed that they were enlisting in the Canadian navy. They found that they were actually with the British forces; they got British rates of pay, and their wives received allowances at British rates, which are a good deal lower than Canadian rates; also they learned that they would not have pensions at the Canadian rates, and they were losing money every month through the exchange, because they were paid in British funds. Would it not be possible to make some provision for men of that type?

It seems to me that they should be treated in the same way as other Canadians who enlist in the Canadian navy.

Mr. POWER: In a bill intended to deal with the Canadian naval service I would not care to endeavour to encompass the rules, regulations and discipline of the Royal Navy. There may be some other statute which can be amended to meet the wishes of my hon. friend; but I doubt very much whether in amending the Canadian Naval Services Act we can do anything which would effectively meet his wishes with regard to men enlisted in the Royal Navy.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister see whether some steps can be taken to protect in this respect Canadians who are enlisted in the British navy or serving on converted British armed merchantman? It really is not fair that they should be paid at British rather than Canadian rates.

Mr. POWER: As a former Minister of Pensions, I have such a lively recollection of the headaches that I had with respect to those who served in the last war in other than the Canadian forces, that I am willing to do anything to avoid headaches for the Minister of Pensions twenty years hence. I shall be only too glad to take into consideration what my hon, friend has said.

Mr. MacNICOL: If an officer enrols in the regular naval service at, say, Halifax, and is then ordered to go to the west coast, where he remains during the war, is he entitled to move his family out there at the public expense? I think he should be. I have in mind the case of a man in the naval service who was ordered from one coast to the other, at which time he had to pay the expense of moving his family. I am convinced that the government should assume the expense of moving an officer's family from one coast to the other.

Mr. POWER: That matter has received the consideration of the government. Under the permanent force pay and allowance regulations, with which doubtless my hon. friend is familiar, when there was a removal or change or transfer the officer had the right to receive the costs of moving his family and furniture. At the moment these regulations are being amended and the question of removal or transfer is still under consideration.

Mr. MacNICOL: What I had in mind was an officer being ordered from one coast to the other. His family followed him but the officer had to pay the expenses. I understand [Mr. Green.] that the department intends to reverse that situation and to make allowance for the moving expenses of the officer's family.

Mr. POWER: That is under consideration by the pay and allowance board.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should think there would be no question about it. The same thing applies in the civil departments of the government. Under the Department of Trade and Commerce men are frequently moved from one station to another and the department pays all their moving expenses. I used to notice that they did themselves pretty well, because they stayed at the best hotels, and sometimes we saved the country a few dollars-not much-by lopping off what we thought were unnecessary expenses. This should apply without question to officers, and I do not see why it should not apply to petty officers, who cannot stand the cost of removal nearly as well as the others. I commend the suggestion to my hon. friend.

Mr. POWER: That is all laid down in the pay and allowance regulations.

Mr. CHURCH: At the last session of parliament when the estimates were before the committee I drew attention to these very matters that are now being discussed, and I spoke particularly about uniform rates of pay for all the services. It is true that this bill is more or less disciplinary in some respects, but I should like to draw attention to a return made last February with regard to the particular matters that come under this bill. The subject matter of this bill appeared before the house in some form or other last session and I discussed it then. Canada, as the return to the order of the house I moved for shows, has a navy, and when the former minister made this return-and he was an active minister; he got something done-it was announced that early in the year 1939 the ships of the Canadian navy according to the return, went on a goodwill tour through the West Indies, through the Panama canal and on to British Columbia, a sort of show navy. That return to an order of the house, which covered some points mentioned in this debate, showed the ratings of the officers and men and I fail to see how the navy has been since much increased. Recently some naval colleges were opened in Kingston and other places, but there is nothing to show that it has been

As I said last session, we owe everything we have to the mother country, and it takes a war to show us exactly what we have in the way of freedom, and the debt we owe to the royal navy. Many of our boys had to cross the ocean on cattle boats to join the navy, though there are in the public schools of all the provinces many youths who would like to be in the navy and merchant marine because we are a nautical people, and excel in aquatic sports, rowing, canoeing, and boating of all With the magnificent inland waterways that we possess, Canada has not done its duty to the motherland so far as this arm of the service is concerned. At the shipping conference during the imperial conference in 1917, this whole question was under discussion. The question was asked, where is Canada? It was shown at that conference that there were 2,000 less merchant ships to carry food to Britain than there were in 1914. The report of that conference dealt with all the dominions and Canada's contribution to that arm of the service and it showed the dreadful menace of the submarine in the last war. For every four boats of the British merchant marine going out there was one that did not get back, so that in 1917 the British people were nearly starved out. In my opinion these recruiting offices should be opened all over Canada for this branch of the service. As I said last session, in the past five or ten years Canada should have trained 10,000 cadets for the merchant marine and British navy. Canada held aloof at the 1937 empire shipping conference although it was known that the disaster of war would overtake us from the commitments Britain had given. When asked to help in the empire shipping scheme in 1937 Canada turned a deaf ear, as it did in the matter of empire air training. Canada did nothing at the shipping conference to help the mother country then, or at the imperial conference, though we all know quite well that we owe to the royal navy everything worth while that we have in the way of freedom.

One word more. Why should there not be equality in pay for all branches of the service? This is a question which should be fully discussed, and I had hoped that the government would take the responsibility of holding one or two private sessions at which these inequalities, in regard to dependency money and other matters of the same sort, might be cleared up.

Mr. POWER: Knowing my hon. friend as well as I do I would hesitate to ascribe to him any desire to make a slighting reference to the Royal Canadian Navy, as he would appear to have done in speaking of it as a show navy. I want to assure him and the committee that if he really meant it in the sense that the Canadian navy was not at this juncture doing its duty, I would resent it emphatically and strongly. Perhaps he was referring to some of his previous speeches in former years, but I wish to assure him that the Royal Canadian Navy is now doing work of which every member of this house and every person in Canada ought to be proud. It is carrying on convoy work, anti-submarine work and rendering the most valuable assistance to the common cause, and every man in the navy is doing his duty as well as the members of any other force in the country.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Will these people come under and be subject to the rates of pay and allowances of the naval services?

Mr. POWER: I think this bill is scarcely the appropriate occasion on which to discuss the rates of pay and allowances of the navy and compare them with other forces. I am not familiar with all the details of the pay and allowance regulations. I am however under the impression that there has been an adjustment all the way round. It is not possible to say that every man who serves below the rank of officer shall get $1 or $1.50 or $1.75, and that every man who is an officer of a certain rank shall get the same rate. These rates must be adjusted according to the work being done-not by each individual, perhaps; but the categories in the navy are much wider and more varied than in the army. These pay and allowance regulations were worked out with considerable care by the officers of the navy and army and air forcea committee was formed of the three services in order that there might be some equality and similarity. We are endeavouring to adjust the matter to the satisfaction of all the services, and I think in a measure we shall succeed.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister is referring to allowances, is he?

Mr. POWER: Pay, allowances and all the rest.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What I was after was not how much the pay and allowances were but whether a man when he comes under this legislation is subject to pay and allowances.

Mr. POWER: This measure would have no effect at all on the financial terms of his engagement—simply the discipline.

Mr. CHURCH: The minister's remarks were quite uncalled for. I did not attack the men of the navy. What I attacked was the government, for not having done its duty in 1937 at the imperial conference to the men in the navy. The estimates were pared until they were ridiculous for a country of this size, depending as it was on the mother country for all our maritime freedom. I have done as much for the men of that service as the minister. I call the attention of the minister to the fact that this government in the session of 1937 announced in the house a purely pacific policy of neutrality at the coast regarding this branch. What was that policy? It was the policy that Canada would spend money on the Pacific on a navy to protect our neutrality, and when they were asked against whom they were to protect it, the reply was that they were to protect the United States, to protect the border and protect Canada from being invaded by a foreign foe seeking to attack America along the Pacific. From Puget sound six hundred miles to the Queen Charlotte islands and the mainland, money was spent. That was in 1937, and I happened to be the only member who pro-tested in this house against that policy, because it did not link up with the British fleet; it was dependent on protection of our neutrality and giving Washington protection, not the people of this country.

95826-221

As a result of the 1937 expenditure of that money what have we in the Atlantic to-day? We have no real protection there, or on the Pacific, except the British fleet.

Mr. POWER: May I interrupt the hon. member right there? He intimated a moment ago that I was putting words in his mouth that he did not utter. He is now telling us that this navy does not protect the Canadian coasts in any way. I resent that statement. This navy is doing the work of protecting the Canadian coasts. I want him to hear me and understand that.

Mr. CHURCH: The minister can make his own speech when I am through. He was one of the persons who supported that policy of depending on the United States fleet to protect our shores. Then when they got this money spent under their 1937 policy on Puget sound and six hundred miles up to Queen Charlotte islands what happened? They found that the idea that the United States would not stand idly by, that they would protect our neutrality, would quarantine the dictators, was all a myth; that the United States were back to the old policy of their first president that of neutrality unless attacked. We had all that work on the Pacific and no air force to back it up. What I have been urging in this house for the past ten years is for Canada to do its duty to the mother country and maritime freedom. This party has traditionally supported that policy of cooperation and coordination with the mother country for maritime freedom.

What is the minister doing about our merchant marine? Does it come under this bill? [Mr. Church.]

Canada's maritime fleet consists mainly of merchant ships. It was all very well to buy a couple of destroyers in the last year or two; one of them was called the Lord Kempenfeldt, a celebrated naval name, but immediately it got to Canada someone out on the prairies thought that the name should be changed and it should be named after his constituency, Assiniboine; yet they say it is not a political navy. It has been, but not through the fault of the officers or men. This matter has been discussed in 1937 in the house; it was discussed with a good deal of humour by some hon, gentlemen then who are now standing up for a Royal Canadian navy. I have stood for them and for maritime freedom and a proper contribution by the people of this country since I entered the house in 1921, and will continue to do so.

Mr. ADAMSON: Having been one of those to experience the Halifax disaster in the last war I should like to know whether the pilots going in and out of Halifax harbour are subjected to naval discipline. In the last war the hospital ship Letitia ran aground, and I do not think it was ever quite satisfactorily settled why the Mont Blanc and the Belgian relief ship, the Imo, ran into each other. I know there was some talk that the pilots had been in some way negligent, and ugly rumours were going round. I wonder if the matter to which I refer has been given attention by the ministry. I suggest to the minister that the entire district of Halifax harbour, which in this war is of even greater importance than it was in the last, be put completely under naval jurisdiction. I suggest also that a force be recruited of naval ratings-a naval regiment, if you like—to have complete control not merely of the naval dock yard but of all the district around Bedford basin and Dartmouth and the other side of Halifax.

Mr. POWER: The navy is in complete control of Halifax harbour and all our seaports. There is naval control of all shipping entering or leaving certain ports of Canada, and Halifax is one of them.

Mr. ISNOR: Does this cover a case we had in December, 1917, at the time of the explosion referred to by the hon. member? The crew of a certain ship had been taken over on the morning of the explosion but were not registered. One of the crew lost his leg. He applied for compensation but his claim was not recognized on account of the fact that his name was not enrolled in the navy. The former minister of national defence is no doubt familiar with the case. I endeavoured to have a pension paid to this man but the question was raised whether or not it was a war casualty and pension was not given. Does this bill cover such a case?

Mr. POWER: Perhaps some of the difficulties with respect to compensation mentioned in the explanatory notes refer to those arising out of the case to which my hon, friend refers. I think it was found impossible, either under the Militia Pension Act or under the Pensions Act itself, to make an award in that case. Of course the purpose of this bill is not to make any retroactive provision; this is to deal with what may happen in the future.

Mr. ISNOR: That may be so, but if a boat was taken over by the naval forces in Halifax and the crew were not properly registered, would they come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. POWER: Only yesterday the Minister of Finance said he did not think ministers of the crown or those in charge of bills should give interpretations as to their legal effects, and I believe that is good advice to follow. Offhand I would think that the object of the bill would be to cover cases analogous to the one my hon. friend has mentioned, but I should not like those words to be quoted in a law court as being the opinion of a former member of the bar.

Mr. ISNOR: I quite appreciate that neither the Minister of National Defence for Air nor the Minister of Finance would care to give a legal opinion, but I am concerned as to future acts such as I have mentioned. In Halifax we have practically a state of war which I do not think is appreciated by a great many people in other parts of Canada, and it is because of my concern for what may happen that I am anxious to have provision made in this or some other bill for the protection to which I think the seafaring man operating in and around the port of Halifax is entitled. That is my interest, and if it is not covered now I think some provision should be inserted in the bill to protect these men.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MILITIA PENSION ACT

PERMANENT FORCE NAVAL OFFICERS TO BENEFIT IN RESPECT OF ONE-HALF OF PREVIOUS NON-PERMANENT SERVICE

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air) moved the second reading of Bill No. 3, to amend the Militia Pension Act. Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1—Period of service in Royal Canadian Naval Reserve or Volunteer Reserve for computing pension.

Mr. STIRLING: I understand that the purpose of this bill is to put an officer of the permanent naval force on exactly the same footing as an officer of the permanent militia and air forces, and that it is simply and solely for that purpose?

Mr. POWER: Absolutely; for no other reason.

Mr. MacINNIS: I may be exposing my ignorance in asking this question, but I notice that this amendment has reference to officers only. I should like to know if there are any men serving in these capacities; if they are subject to pension, and if not why not.

Mr. POWER: I know there is a long service pension with regard to the men of the navy as well as the men of the army and air force, but as to the basis or time of service upon which pension is computed, at the moment I am unable to say. However, I shall be only too glad to look into the matter.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PROVISIONS AS TO CONSTITUTION AND GOVERN-MENT, RELATIONS WITH OTHER FORCES AND WITH CIVIL AUTHORITIES

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air) moved the second reading of Bill No. 5, respecting the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1-Short title.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps I had better say a word with respect to this bill. There is nothing new in it at all. It simply purports to set up the Royal Canadian Air Force as such. Up to the present the Royal Canadian Air Force has operated under the Aeronautics Act, revised statutes of Canada, chapter 3, section 4. Under that act, which also deals with civil aviation and with matters relating to aviation generally, the Minister of National Defence is empowered to make regulations with respect to the authorization, discipline, efficiency and good government generally of officers and men employed in the air force.

On the strength of that the Royal Canadian Air Force as we have it at present was built up. But even before there was any question of providing for a separate department of national defence for air it was thought advisable to have an act which would govern the Royal Canadian Air Force. This bill in almost every respect is similar to the Militia Act and the Naval Act.

Section agreed to.

On section 2-definitions.

Mr. STIRLING: Paragraph (d) provides: "Minister" means the Minister of National Defence.

I was wondering if it would not be better to use the wording in paragraph (c) of Bill No. 15.

Mr. POWER: Bill No. 15 amends the Department of National Defence Act. The Royal Canadian Air Force Act was studied in conjunction with the amendment to the Department of National Defence Act which set up the Department of National Defence for Air. The definition of "minister" is as follows:

"Minister" means the Minister of National Defence unless under the provisions of this act a minister of National Defence for Air has been appointed, in which case "minister" means the Minister of National Defence or the minister of National Defence for Air acting as in this act provided.

It goes on in another section to provide that when the act relates to matters regarding air, the Minister of National Defence for Air has exclusive jurisdiction. Otherwise I suggest to my hon, friend that you might take away from the purely temporary war-time character of the position of the Minister of National Defence for Air. After all it is a war-time ministry. The Royal Canadian Air Force will be in existence for many years to come, and if we can with the least possible disturbance to existing statutes have a minister carry on the functions of minister for air I think it would be better draftsmanship so to provide.

Mr. HOMUTH: The air training school in the city of Galt comes under the youth training scheme. Does that school in any way come under the Minister of National Defence for Air?

Mr. POWER: I cannot be quite sure of my reply, but subject to further checking I would say that the school in Galt is under the provincial department of labour. Under the empire air training scheme the Minister of National Defence for Air through his department pays on a per capita basis certain subsidies for the preliminary training of certain students at the Galt school, but there is no federal control, either administrative or executive, over that school.

Mr. HOMUTH: I understand that at the beginning of this week it was decided that the capacity of this school should be doubled. It has been doing wonderful work; of all the youth training schemes in the country this school has certainly proved to be a real asset in this crisis. A great many of its boy students have gone out to various aircraft factories, and I think some of them are now at the Manning school in Toronto. Could not a little more effort be made along that line? Certainly it has been a wonderful thing for the empire training scheme.

Mr. POWER: My attention was drawn to the item in the newspapers to which my hon. friend refers, and I mentioned it to some of the officers in the air force. They expressed their satisfaction that there was to be an extension of the work carried on by that school.

Mr. MARTIN: The minister has already stated that as a result of the events of the last few days there will be an acceleration of the whole air programme. Prior to his becoming minister for air the department announced that under the air training programme the Windsor airport would not be used until some time in September. It struck me that even under normal circumstances that would be undue delay. In view of recent events can the minister say to the house now that in the acceleration of the programme use will be made of the Windsor airport at once, or within the next few weeks, instead of in September next? May I have an answer?

Mr. POWER: I was not quite sure that the hon, member wanted an answer.

Mr. ROWE: What does the minister think he wanted?

Mr. MARTIN: Like hon. gentlemen opposite, I always expect an answer.

Mr. POWER: I am endeavouring to put through a measure constituting the Royal Canadian Air Force. It deals with it as a cohesive body and with its administration, the powers and duties of the officers and men, and so forth. It is a long way from the empire air training scheme, although the Royal Canadian Air Force is the administrator of that scheme. I have not brought with me all the information which would permit me to answer questions with respect to the developments which are to take place under the air training scheme. That would open a very broad subject indeed. While I have no objection to that being done, and I can perhaps give some information to my hon. friend at some other time, to give such information now would delay the passage of this bill, which is not at all related to that development.

Mr. MARTIN: I appreciate that point, and I do not want to delay the bill. Perhaps my question will cause due expedition in the department.

Mr. POWER: Correct.

Mr. ADAMSON: Paragraph (c) of section 2 says:

"Emergency" means war, invasion, riot or insurrection, real or apprehended.

The militia may be called out, I understand, to give aid to the civil authority. Would the same machinery be used if the air force were needed to give aid to the civil power?

Mr. POWER: That is explained by section 9.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not wish to delay this bill. I understand its purport and I approve its principle. As I see it, the air people want a bill of their own; they do not want to have an inferiority complex.

Mr. POWER: They have a minister and they want a bill too.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): With respect to the question raised by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), it is inevitable that information should be sought from time to time, but I do not know whether the debate on this bill is the proper place. I should like to ask a few questions with respect to air training activities in New Brunswick, and if it is not convenient for the minister to answer them now, perhaps he will do so later.

An announcement was made in the New Brunswick papers on Monday morning, from the office of the premier of New Brunswick—I do not quite understand just why that medium was used, unless the air force is being utilized for the spreading of political propaganda—that there would be established three new airports for use in the empire training scheme. It was stated that landing fields would be located at Chatham in North-umberland county and at Scoudouc and Salisbury in Westmorland county. The statement which issued from the premier's office declared:

The premier has been informed that the Chatham airport has been approved by the Royal Canadian Air Force and the specifications will shortly be completed for this work. This also applies to the Scoudouc and Salisbury fields.

The airports to be built at Scoudouc and Salisbury undoubtedly will form part of an air training unit to be centered at Moncton. Under plans formulated at Ottawa, it is understood that each training unit will consist of a main port (in case of Moncton) and two subsidiary airports (Scoudouc and Salisbury).

I should like to know just what is the position with relation to New Brunswick and what is intended to be done at Scoudouc and Salisbury, as well as at Chatham. I do not expect an answer now and my remarks may be taken as notice.

In 1933 an emergency landing field was constructed at Blissville, in one of the counties which I have the honour to represent. This field would be ideal for air training purposes, and I am wondering why the officers of the department have not utilized it. The country there is quite level and the landing field was prepared at very little expense. It is located on the main line of the Canadian Pacific and a station has been built there. The present field could be extended for another mile or two at a minimum of expense.

I do not know much about the locations at Scoudouc and Salisbury. They are contiguous to Moncton, and we have all generally recognized that Moncton will be an air training centre because of the commitments that have been made. It is one of the termini of the Trans-Canada Air Lines. I understand the field has been taken over by the government and it is planned to make substantial expenditures. I ask the minister to give consideration to the utilization of the Blissville air field, which is ideally located and which can be operated or extended at less expense than any other site in New Brunswick.

Mr. POWER: All I can say with reference to the Blissville field is that I will draw the attention of the technical officers of the department to the remarks of my hon. friend. I should like to say now to every hon. member who may have a recommendation to make with respect to any field in his constituency that the matter will be referred to the technical officers. I personally do not know why one field should be better than another and if the technical officers of the department prefer one place to another, I think it is my duty to back them up.

With regard to information given to the press, I am sure my hon. friend will appreciate that in the short time I have been in office I have not had time to set up a publicity or public relations agency. I have asked the officers of the department to give such information as they are free to give to any person who asks for it and who has some authority. If my hon, friend were to ask me what progress is being made in connection with any particular air field, I would pass his request on to the officer in charge of that particular work. If the work had advanced to a point where he could make a definite statement, he would make it. In this particular instance, I take it that the premier of New Brunswick or someone on his behalf inquired as to what air fields were to be developed in the province and that the project had reached the stage where they could be specific in the information given to the premier.

I have received many inquiries from members of parliament, all of which have been handed over to the proper officers. I understand the custom has been not to give out information until either a contract has been let or it is definitely decided that tenders will be called for. I believe that is the practice. If it is, it is a good one.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): He is simply trying to get some political kudos.

Mr. POWER: Is the hon. gentleman referring to me?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To the premier of New Brunswick.

Mr. BROOKS: Taking advantage of the suggestion made by the minister in connection with recommendations for air fields, I should like to say that a few years ago considerable work was done on a number of air fields in New Brunswick. I refer particularly to the field at Havelock, just a few miles from Salisbury, which has been referred to already. At one time that field was well developed, but to-day it is just covered with bushes. The money spent has been simply wasted. It would take only a minute or two to fly from Salisbury to Havelock, and I cannot understand why a new field should be developed at Salisbury when this other field was available. I understand the same thing is true of the field at Cambridge.

I just wanted to call the attention of the minister to these fields which are already constructed. If time is of the essence in the development of our air force, some consideration should be given to work which has been done already on certain fields. I am well acquainted with the field referred to by the leader of the opposition at Blissville and I can only second what he has so well stated. During the last two or three sessions there has been considerable discussion about the establishment of air fields, and it seemed strange to me that when vast sums of money were being spent for the development of military air fields in the maritime provinces, all four fields that were developed should be in Nova Scotia. At that time the statement was made that air fields were being developed for the defence of our focal points. I contended then as I contend now, that Saint John is one of the great eastern harbours of Canada, and if air defence is needed for focal points an air field should be selected somewhere near Saint John, New Brunswick. At that time I suggested that the military air field at Sussex, where the defence department has spent a great deal of money in extending its area, should have been used for that purpose. I may say in connection with that air field that I hope the defence department will, in future, make more use of the facilities they have there than they have done since the war started, and more than is indicated at the present time, for training purposes this summer. I have simply taken advantage of the suggestion of the minister to call these matters to his attention.

Mr. CHURCH: Under this bill the minister is taking over the control of administration of the Royal Canadian Air Force. It will be noticed that section 2 is the most important section in the bill, because if that passes there is very little else to be said. It deals with interpretations. So far as these interpretations go, they reproduce the exact text of the Militia Act, and in the Naval Services Act the very words used are applicable to air services. In this interpretation section the words "air force works", "airman", "emergency", "minister" and "officer" are defined.

As I see it, under this bill no one but a British subject can belong to the Royal Canadian Air Force. During the great war numbers of men were trained for the air force at Toronto and in various camps. It was claimed that the number trained was 16,000 or 18,000, depending no doubt upon how one classes the 3,000 or 4,000 workmen and mechanics. At that time 4,000 or 5,000 men applied and came over from the United States, a great number of them from American colleges, and applied to enlist in the air force. In the winter, by arrangement between the governments and the munitions boards of Canada and the British empire, a camp was established at Fort Worth, Texas, where it was thought advisable to train because of climatic conditions. At that time-1917-of course the United States had come into the war. At the present time the United States is not in the war; it is a neutral, not an ally; but under the definition as it appears in the Militia Act and the Naval Services Act it would appear that one has to be a British subject in order to join the present Royal Canadian Air Force and that Americans are not eligible.

Another point is this. "Air force works" is described as also including aerodromes hangars, air harbours and barracks. During the great war the British munitions board and the air force took over, sometimes by compulsion, a great many useful and good public buildings. During June and July, in the first months of conscription in Great Britain, what did the government do regarding the young people who were joining the air force? They were coming out of civilian pursuits; they were untrained and unused to hardship. The regulars were coming home from Asia Minor. Egypt and other places abroad. To aid recruiting, the British government gave the best quarters to these new recruits to the air force of the conscript army; of course, as the conscientious objectors numbered only one per cent, practically all the recruits enlisted eagerly and almost voluntarily. What I would urge upon the minister in this connection is that dilapidated stables are not suitable quarters to-day to house our recruits for air training. As I said the other day, in paying a compliment to the minister, I believe he has the vigour and the energy to get things done, with the aid of the splendid air vicemarshal who is with him to-day. What I urge is that these young people who are coming from civilian occupations should be given as good treatment as the British government gave to its new recruits. When the regulars came home to the old country, they began to object. They said, "We are regulars; we have been serving in Egypt and other places abroad; why should we be turned out and put in tents while the men of the air force are given the best barracks?" But the principle was to make recruiting a success.

In connection with another clause of the bill, I think it is a mistake that the government should go to work and take over various buildings when others are available. During the war the city, the university and the Toronto school board, which has recently again offered a school building for training purposes, granted the use of the best buildings they had, and the school and the university gave the school of science and three or four other schools. The government had the use of Hart house, all the buildings round the university. No. 4 school of military aeronautics was at Victoria college and was given to the air force. Other properties also were gladly made available, and are now again offered by the municipality. Why, therefore, take over a lot of stables?

The other day, passing by Eglinton barracks, I saw 160 men who are in training there. I am not criticizing them; they have a good officer commanding; but I think it is a great mistake, when some of their parents come to town, to have a few of them working on the city dump. No doubt it is necessary to detail five or six of them for cleaning up the yards. The government should go to work and commandeer, where necessary, good air force buildings all over Canada, including buildings for hospitals.

I think there is a little too much rigour in connection with some of the training. If one may believe what appears in last week's Saturday Night, the new recruit is severely penalized for a moment's loss of time. As there is very little transportation near some camps it is not always easy to report on time, and I do not think the new recruits should be given some of these penalties, which in fact are illegal at the present time, and will be until we pass section 2. Our new recruits who are coming up voluntarily should receive equitable treatment as in England and the officers in charge should see to it that recruiting is not injured by any mistake of this or that junior officer.

Under paragraph (h) "prescribed" is defined as giving the governor in council prescribing power, and paragraph (i) defines "regulation" as meaning "a regulation made by the governor in council under the authority of this act." That is a pretty broad clause, and I am doubtful if the government should have that power.

As far as the camps are concerned, it seems to me that under the present arrangements they are too far away from the cities and towns. In the last war we had Leaside, Beamsville, Camp Borden, Armour Heights, No. 4 School, Trenton camp, and other places. I believe that the closer they are located to centres of population, the better. The city of Toronto has spent a million dollars on an airport over at Hanlon's Point. That field is empty to-day, and it could be obtained, I believe, by cooperation with the city and the government. Malton airport has been handed over.

I see nothing in the bill to take care of the cadet and technical services in the high schools. Last Sunday evening I saw at a service at St. Paul's church, Toronto, conducted by Air Chaplain Bishop Renison some 2,000 cadets, royal air force trainees, public school cadets and sea cadets, and others who are willing to come along when they are needed. The cadet feature of this work should not be neglected

I do not wish to delay the passing of the bill. I have every confidence in the minister. Everybody wants to give him cooperation, the maximum of unity and very little criticism. I consider that the government is to be complimented upon the very fine body of head-quarters officers and other officers. Throughout the Royal Canadian Air Force I have heard nothing but expressions of the utmost confidence in the military officials, and everybody wants to see this important branch of the service developed rapidly in Canada.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister seems to be in a genial or susceptible frame of mind this afternoon, and has evidently accepted some of the suggestions on the part of hon. members from New Brunswick who are making pleas for the development of air fields. I am just going to make a plea and I hope the minister will pass it on to his officials. In other sessions, on projects of this kind and on public works generally, I have had to speak for the whole of Saskatchewan. Members from that province were a little backward in coming forward, and that is practically the case to-day. However, I have one good associate and the committee will probably hear from him later. Speaking for my own constituency, I would point out that we have two air fields one of which has had considerable development. It is near the town of Broadview. The runways have been constructed and it is in a wide open space. The other one is near the town of Moosomin. Both these air fields are in line with the Trans-Canada airways and I should like the minister to consider their further development. The one at Broadview is particularly well adapted to such development and I am sure that in the air training scheme both these could be made use of. In both towns there are good armouries and facilities of every kind for training members of the air force. I trust the minister will consider this matter.

Mr. MacNICOL: Now that the various ministers are assuring us that political considerations are altogether divorced from any matter pertaining particularly to war administration, will the minister try to persuade his associates to come back to the question of building a tunnel to the airport on Toronto island? It is one of the best airports on the continent, or will be when completed, and as the tunnel to the island was killed by polities on the part of our friends opposite, it should be possible to have the work done if political considerations are eliminated.

Mr. MARTIN: At a time like this, when the country should conserve its energies, the suggestion of the hon. member for Davenport is surely out of the question. The distinguished gentleman who sits immediately in front of him, and others, would repudiate that suggestion at this time, I should think.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On section 6-Persons subject to the act.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have not had a chance to check this. The marginal [Mr. Church.]

note says, "See sections 69 (2) and 70 of the Militia Act." I assume that they are similar, allowing for the necessary changes.

Mr. POWER: The judge advocate general informs me that they are exactly the same in principle, although the form has in some instances been changed.

Section agreed to.

Sections 7 and 8 agreed to.

On section 9-Aid to civil power.

Mr. STIRLING: Am I right in taking this to mean that if it is necessary to call out the air force for this purpose they cannot be called out unless the militia has been called out?

Mr. POWER: The militia must first be called out before the air force can be utilized, and that stands to reason. Apart from exceptional circumstances there would not be a large number of airmen available to do the kind of duty that would be required in aid of the civil power.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to know whether a home guard of the old Royal Air Force could not be utilized.

Mr. POWER: Formerly they had no separate existence; the members of the air force were a part of the army. Now they are proud to say that they have a separate entity.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): With respect to the question which my colleague asked a few minutes ago, I quite agree with the construction which the minister has placed upon the section, but I am not at all sure that I agree that the object is wholly desirable. As he pointed out to me in the course of discussion over this section, there might be times when the air force was the only military force that would be available quickly in a given emergency, and they could act very much more quickly than the militia. In British Columbia, for instance, there are no military units located in the interior, which may be several hundred miles from the coast where there are military units; it would take a long time to get the militia to a given point, whereas if the air force were available it could be done in a matter of hours and perhaps less. I suggest that consideration be given to the question of placing the air force in exactly the same position as the militia. There is of course a well understood programme or mode of procedure which is followed prior to the calling out of the militia. There must be a form of requisition from the civil authority, and so on and so forth. I recall a case in Nova Scotia some years ago where litigation resulted. The dominion government tried to collect and failed, did they not?

Mr. POWER: They waived their claim.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, I think it went to the courts.

Mr. POWER: I am now informed that it went to the supreme court. The federal government did not succeed in their claim.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not recall the exact circumstances, but that is neither here nor there. I think there is something in my associate's suggestion and perhaps the minister will give it some further consideration. So far as I am concerned, it is not important enough to delay the bill.

Mr. POWER: I brought up a similar objection about a month ago when I first looked at the bill. I was then acting as Minister of National Defence and the answer I received was that it was not really the function of the air force to act as militia men. They do not habitually drill with rifles, bayonets and that sort of thing. They are a technical force, and in any case the officer commanding the military district could readily overcome any objection by going through the form of calling out the militia. He could call out a squad or company or platoon and if he did not have enough men he could call on the air force. But the advantage of the air force is that its planes and equipment would be at the service of the officer commanding the district to transport troops where required, if any civil commotion

Mr. HOMUTH: Could he do it legally under this clause?

Mr. POWER: Yes. Probably he could do it in any event without this clause.

Section agreed to.

Sections 10 and 11 agreed to.

On section 12—Liability for air force offences.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): As a matter of information, not having had time to look up section 71 of the Militia Act, what is the penalty in that act for desertion?

Mr. POWER: The Militia Act does not seem to provide a penalty except in case of absence for over seven days. Section 72 reads:

72. Every member of the militia called out for active service who absents himself without leave from his corps, for a longer period than seven days, may be tried by court martial as a deserter.

Under the British Air Force Act desertion on active service is punishable by penal servitude. Our regulations contain the same provision.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Not death. Section agreed to.

Sections 13 and 14 agreed to.

On section 15—Air force property in his majesty.

Mr. HOMUTH: Are these air fields that are being developed in cooperation with the municipalities vested in the crown, or is there joint ownership?

Mr. POWER: I think they are held in the name of the crown. The property is purchased by the crown in the right of the government of Canada, and the contribution—

Mr. HOMUTH: It is just a contribution; they have no ownership in it?

Mr. POWER: No, there is no ownership.

Mr. HOMUTH: It is generally considered that when the war is over these air fields that are being developed will serve for commercial purposes.

Mr. POWER: I hope so.

Mr. HOMUTH: If that is so, then apparently commercial flying in this country will be under the control of the government.

Mr. POWER: The government now has some control in the matter of regulations for civil aviation. As my hon, friend knows, the government is the owner through shareholdings of Trans-Canada Air Lines. I have not looked forward far enough to know whether these fields now being developed for the commonwealth air training plan will be handed over to Trans-Canada Air Lines or what will become of them. I am trying to get them built first.

Mr. HILL: The minister's department has overlooked the finest site for an airport and training school that there is in the maritime provinces. I speak from twenty-five years' experience in engineering. There is a site at Pennfield, four miles square, sixteen square miles, from which he can select a site. This is a natural landing field, a high gravel plateau three to four hundred feet above sea level; on three sides it drops off towards the sea and on the other side there is a small elevation, rising gradually, so that there would be no interference with planes taking off. There is fifteen to twenty-five feet of gravel drainage. A field can be built on this site for twenty-five per cent of the cost of any other field that is being built in the maritimes, and can be maintained for ten per cent of the cost of maintenance of any other field. Why it is being overlooked I do not know. It is the field on which Mollinson made his emergency landing after flying across the Atlantic, and he landed without a break-up. The site has road connection to a paved highway. It has railway and hydro connection; it has everything for cheap development. It can be built and put in operation in less than four months and at very small cost; on that I will stake my reputation as an engineer.

It has been stated to me by the minister's department that two other fields were necessary as emergency landing fields. One is already constructed and has been in use for two years at Blissville, 35 miles away; another at Brockway 30 miles away has one runway constructed, the work having been done under the relief plan in 1934. The other runway can be constructed very cheaply. If the department want to get into operation at an early day this is the proper site. A field can be constructed here cheaply, and at very little extra cost can be enlarged to any size required for training purposes. Two emergency landing fields are already practically provided. Some of your other fields will not be finished within the next five months, although they have been under construction for at least two years.

Section agreed to.

Mr. CHURCH: By leave of the committee may I ask one question on section 14? This section provides for commitment to the common gaol or other lawful prison or place of confinement, up to a period of two years. My objection is that some of the county gaols in the provinces have been declared by grand juries to be unfit for human habitation, and some are unused. If they are not fit for civilians they certainly are not fit places in which to confine members of the Royal Canadian Air Force for minor breaches of regulations. During the great war the general officer commanding No. 2 district asked the city of Toronto for leave to use an unused wing of the old Tombs gaol. It was built about the time of confederation, and the wing had been closed for a number of years, having been condemned by the health officer. The city refused its use on the ground that if it was not fit for civilians it was not fit for men- who were risking their lives in the war. That may be all right for some soldiers, but the vast majority of the offences covered by the interpretation section might be described as minor, as they would be under the code. I do not think it is in the interests of recruiting that this provision should be in the bill. I wish to protest against it, even though I may be the only member doing so, because I have seen its operation in practice and the injury it has done to recruiting and to discipline. During the last war it was condemned by almost every newspaper. Dilapidated buildings which were not fit for civilians were good enough for soldiers, and the same thing applied to the unused Gerrard Street hospital, closed as not being good enough for civilians.

Section agreed to.

Sections 17 and 18 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

ADMINISTRATION OF SERVICE ESTATES TO BE REGULATED BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of National Defence for Air) moved the second reading of Bill No. 4, to amend the Department of National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1—Regulations respecting service estates.

Mr. STIRLING: In reading subsection 2, I wondered whether the wording was wide enough to take care, for instance, of mail which is actually in the process of being delivered to a person who dies before its delivery, and which would include property in the form of a parcel, a letter, or registered mail.

Mr. POWER: The judge advocate general informs me that once a parcel is placed in the mail, it becomes the property of the person to whom it is addressed and therefore forms part of his service estate.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

LOAN OF $750,000,000

TO MEET LOANS OR OBLIGATIONS, TO PURCHASE UNMATURED SECURITIES, AND FOR PUBLIC WORKS AND GENERAL PURPOSES

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 28, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Ralston—Mr. Vien in the chair:

That the governor in council be authorized to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, an amount not to exceed in the whole the sum of seven hundred and fifty million dollars for paying or redeeming the whole or any portion of loans or obligations of Canada and also for purchasing unmatured securities of Canada and for public works and general purposes.

[Mr. Hill.]

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Perhaps the minister would make some explanation of the resolution. In view of the fact that the estimates, totalling something like $448,-000,000, have been tabled, if this is the ordinary resolution that precedes the voting of supply in the ordinary way I have been wondering just why it is necessary to ask for the whole sum of $750,000,000. I assume that the answer will be that this has to do with loans and refunding operations, but perhaps the minister will give us a succinct explanation.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is correct in his last assumption. This is not necessarily for the purpose of providing for more than the current estimates, but in order that we may be in a position to refund maturing loans, as an example, and for general purposes, as my hon. friend will see when the bill is brought down. I thought perhaps I might put on record the maturities in 1940 and 1941.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I was going to ask for that.

Mr. RALSTON: The first maturity is on June 1, 1940; 1½ per cent, payable in Canada, amounting to $80,000,000, with annual interest charges of $1,200,000. That, I may say, is being refunded by a $65,000,000 issue which I mentioned last evening, which is being issued out of the $200,000,000 borrowing authority which was provided in last year's regular appropriation act. My hon. friend will remember that I said we still had power to borrow $135,000,000 under the authority of that act. That figure is arrived at by subtracting the $65,000,000 which is being issued in order to refund this loan of $80,000,000 to which I have referred, from the $200,000,000 provided for last year. As I intimated, that power under last year's regular appropriation act will expire when the bill founded on this resolution becomes law, because the new bill will contain a provision terminating that power. That is to say, they will not be running concurrently. Then on July 1 there is a maturity, payable in Canada of $33,293,470.85, 4 per cent, with an annual interest charge of $1,331,738.83.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the minister state when these loans were issued, if he has that information?

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid the particulars I have here do not give the dates of issue. The other maturities are as follows:

Date	Interest rate per cent	Amount	Annual interest charge
September 1, 1940 (Canada). March 15, 1941 (Canada). May 1, 1941 (New York). May 1, 1941 (Canada). October 16, 1941 (Canada). November 15, 1941 (Canada).	 $\begin{array}{c}1\\1\frac{1}{4}\\1\\2\end{array}$	\$ 75,000,000 45,000,000 20,000,000 250,000,000 200,000,000 141,663,000	\$3,375,000 $450,000$ $250,000$ $2,500,000$ $4,000,000$ $7,083,150$

That goes to the end of 1941.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What was the date of issue of the New York maturity?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot tell my hon. friend but I will find out. The 1½ per cent, May 1, 1941, New York payment of $20,000,000, annual interest charges, $250,000, is callable March 1, 1941. The May 1, 1941, 1 per cent issue of $250,000,000, is payable in Canada, and interest charges are $2,500,000. The October 16, 1941 issue payable in Canada is for $200,000,000, with annual interest charges of $4,000,000, and is callable October 16, 1940. The November 15, 1941—here is an old one—carries 5 per cent coupon and is payable in Canada; the amount is $141,663,000, and interest charges are $7,083,150. That brings us to the end of 1941.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): When was the New York maturity issued?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot say offhand but I will find out. I am giving the committee the maturities of funded debt and treasury bills of the dominion as of May 15, 1940, maturing up to the end of 1941.

Mr. HOMUTH: What is the total of that?

Mr. RALSTON: About $850,000,000.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Which of those maturities are callable and which maturing?

Mr. RALSTON: The issue of May 1, 14 per cent, New York, is callable March 1, 1941.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What is the amount of that issue?

Mr. RALSTON: $20,000,000. Another callable issue is this maturity of October 16, 1941. This is a two per cent $200,000,000 issue callable October 16, 1940, one year in advance. I do not know whether I stated the actual date of maturity as compared with the call date of the New York payment. Its maturity date is May 1, 1941, and it is callable two months before, on March 1, 1941.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What was the total amount of all these issues?

Mr. RALSTON: I totaled them up quickly and made it about $850,000,000.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I notice that the resolution authorizes the governor in council to use any portion of this amount for public works and general purposes. Is that language usual in resolutions of this sort? And what use is made of that provision? I always thought that in ordinary peace times, appropriations for public works appeared in the main estimates or in the supplementaries, which gave the house an opportunity to speak to them and debate them if desired, but this resolution would give power to the government, apart from war work, which is dealt with in the other bill, to deal with public works. The minister might tell me for my information and guidance, if nothing more, just what use is made of this power respecting public works and for general purposes.

Mr. RALSTON: I think that is intended to indicate one of the objects for which moneys may be borrowed to be put into the consolidated revenue fund. So far as public works are concerned, my hon. friend I think is perfectly right; the actual vote authorizing a public work has to be made by parliament.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But it would be possible under this resolution to use some of this money for public works.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend asked me whether this provision was usual. It is the same provision as that contained in previous bills.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): How long has this practice obtained? I do not recall it myself.

Mr. RALSTON: For three years, I think.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You may be right.

Mr. ADAMSON: Last night, speaking of the aeroplanes stored at the Malton airport, I inadvertently stated that they had been awaiting acceptance by the government. Actually they had been accepted by the government some weeks and months before and the bombers were actually flown to the Malton airport. I just wished to make that correction of my statement of last night.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): This resolution authorizes the raising of $750,000,000 out of the $850,000,000 which are either maturing or callable.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. RALSTON: That is up to the end of the calendar year, 1941.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Could we not get something more definite as to that part of the resolution dealing with public works and general purposes? I understand, of course, that maturities have to be taken care of and that it is in the public interest to call certain loans. I have never liked the last words of this resolution, "for public works and general purposes". It seems to me that we ought to have more details of what the public works and general purposes are to be.

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend will find that that is the purpose of the loan, raising the money. It then gets into consolidated revenue. Then you have to get it out of consolidated revenue again. I do not think you can get it out under this statute for public works.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): You get it into consolidated revenue under this resolution, but you cannot get it out?

Mr. RALSTON: That is right. You get it out for public works by vote.

Mr. MacINNIS: The government was given power last session to borrow $750,000,000. Has all that borrowing been done during the last year? If not, how much?

Mr. RALSTON: Would my hon friend like the list? Answering his question generally, the unused balance was exhausted by the issue of about $20,000,000 of war savings certificates a few days ago.

Mr. ROWE: I was out of the house when the resolution came up for consideration. May I ask how much of this $750,000,000 will be used for our general war expenditure?

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate.

And having returned.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Administrator had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name royal assent to the following bills:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1941. An Act for granting to His Majesty aid for National Defence and Security.

LOAN OF $750,000,000

TO MEET LOANS OR OBLIGATIONS, TO PURCHASE
UNMATURED SECURITIES, AND FOR PUBLIC WORKS AND GENERAL PURPOSES

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Ralston—Mr. Vien in the chair:

That the governor in council be authorized to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, an amount not to exceed in the whole the sum of seven hundred and fifty million dollars for paying or redeeming the whole or any portion of loans or obligations of Canada and also for purchasing unmatured securities of Canada and for public works and general purposes.

Mr. RALSTON: If the committee will permit, I will put on record complete statements of the funded debt maturities in 1940 and 1941 as at May 15, 1940, and also of outstanding treasury bills. There are some points which I have not read in the statement I made with regard to unmatured funded debt and treasury bills. There is one London issue of $93,926,666.66 which is callable October 1, 1940, and due on October 1, 1960. I will put on record, if I may, the total of all issues except treasury bills, maturing or callable up to December 31, 1941. It is $938,883,137.51.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They all appear in tabulated order?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. (The table follows):

As : May 15, 1940—

Un atured funded debt and Treasury Bills of the Dominion of Canada, maturing up to Dece per 31, 1941, and annual interest charges thereon:—

	Rate per cent	Where payable	Amount outstanding	Annual interest charges
19 — June 1. July 1. September 1.	$1\frac{1}{2}$ 4 $4\frac{1}{2}$	Canada Canada Canada	\$80,000,000 00 33,293,470 85 75,000,000 00	\$1,200,000 00 1,331,738 83 3,375,000 00
March 15	1 11 1 2 5	Canada New York Canada Canada Canada	$\begin{array}{ccccc} 45,000,000 & 00 \\ 20,000,000 & 00 \\ 250,000,000 & 00 \\ 200,000,000 & 00 \\ 141,663,000 & 00 \end{array}$	450,000 00 250,000 00 2,500,000 00 4,000,000 00 7,083,150 00
There is also an issue which is callable 1st, 1940, although it does not matroctober 1st, 1960. That issue carries cent interest rate, is payable in Lor	ure until		$844,956,470 85	$20,189,888 83
the amount is	ie issues		$93,926,666 66 $938,883,137 51
The Treasury Bills maturing in 1940	are:—
	777	****

Date of maturity	Rate per cent	Where payable	Amount outstanding	Annual interest charges
940—			TO SEE BUILDING
May 31	.739	Canada	$15,000,000 00	$110,850 00
May 31	.751	Canada	25,000,000 00	187,750 00
June 14	.739	Canada	15,000,000 00	110,850 00
June 14	.747	Canada	25,000,000 00	186,750 00
July 3	.739	Canada	10,000,000 00	73,900 00
July 3	.742	Canada	25,000,000 00	185,500 00
July 16	•739	Canada	10,000,000 00	73,900 00
July 16	.739	Canada	30,000,000 00	221,700 00
August 1	.739	Canada	10,000,000 00	73,900 00
August 1	.736	Canada	25,000,000 00	184,000 00
August 15	.738	Canada	40.000.000 00	295,200 00
	, 50	-	,,
Total Treasury Bills maturing in	1940		$230,000,000 00	$1,704,300 00

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 30, 1940

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE-MR. CHURCH

REFERENCES TO CANADIAN NAVY IN DEBATE ON NAVAL SERVICE BILL

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I rise to a question of privilege in connection with my remarks in the debate yesterday on Canada's navy. My remarks related to a return that I was about to read when the minister replied. This return is dated February 14, 1938, and is found on page 392 of Hansard for that year. It contains particulars of what the navy consists of, where it was located, whether any of the fleet had gone to Sino-Japanese waters, and the goodwill cruises for that year.

The minister replied on that occasion that the destroyers had left for a winter cruise in January and that the schooner Venture would cruise in West Indies waters. The programme for the visit was released to the press on January 4 and 5 of that year. That report is what my address was based on. I never made any reflection on the great body of men of the navy, As I said in this house yesterday and on other occasions, Canada has cause to be proud of her men of all ranks in uniform, in the army, the navy and the air force. They are the real people to be proud of and what they are doing to win the war. Their history is a history of courage. Yesterday and for the past ten years I have supported a policy of rearmament, which the minister brought down in 1938. I have known the minister who spoke yesterday for many years and until yesterday have always found him very courteous. I should probably have used the expression "goodwill navy" instead of "show navy." I try to cooperate with the government, and there is one thing I can say because I have known him a long time, that the Prime Minister has always shown courtesy and politeness to members of the opposition.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BREN MACHINE GUN CONTRACT

Mr. WRIGHT:

1. What is the total amount paid to date, under the terms of the Bren machine gun contract with the John Inglis Company?

2. What is the estimated remaining amount which the government will have to pay before the terms of the contract are fulfilled?

3. On this basis, what is the estimated cost to the Canadian government for the Bren machine gun, per unit?

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. ROGERS:

1. $1.882.997.56.

2. Estimated amount: $3,725.826.62.

3. The above total of $5,608,824.18 includes capital costs of $1,600,708.18. On this basis the estimated unit cost per gun and spare parts (per set), exclusive of capital costs, is $572.59. (Gun $368.30; spare parts $204.29).

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL-FREE AND OFFICIAL RATES

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth):

1. What was the free market exchange rate between the Canadian dollar and the United States dollar and the British pound September 1, 1939; October 1, 1939; November 1, 1939; December 1, 1939; January 1, 1940; February 1, 1940; March 1, 1940; April 1, 1940; May 15, 1940;

1940? 2. What was the exchange control rate at the same dates?

Mr. RALSTON:

1. Note—The so-called free market for Canadian dollars in the United States simply represents scattered transactions between nonresidents, when a non-resident may happen to have Canadian dollars to sell. Wide fluctuations in rates take place and it is difficult at any time to establish an accurate measure of prevailing rates as the volume of transactions of this kind is relatively small. In these circumstances the rates published by the federal reserve bank of New York probably represent the best approximation of prevailing rates based on the comparatively small volume of transactions of this kind.

Exchange rates in the so-called free market referred to above for Canadian dollar and British pound in New York, as published by the federal reserve bank of New York:

Exchange rate for British Canadian British pound in Montreal dollars pound 4.214.4625Sept. 1, 1939... 95.625" ... Oct. 2, 88.875 4.015no free market Nov. 1, 89.625 4.00" ... 66 86.9375 3.895 Dec. 1, 66 2, 1940... Jan. $88 \cdot 625$ 3.955 66 3.96 66 Feb. 1, $87 \cdot 4375$ 66 66 86.125 Mar. 3.93 1, 66 66 81.50 3.56 Apr. 1, " ... 81.8125 3.24May 15,

2. Foreign exchange control was not instituted in Canada until September 16, 1939. The official rates set by the foreign exchange control board on that date were as follows:

Sterling—4.43 buying—4.47 selling

United States dollar—1.10 buying—1.11 selling which is equivalent to quotation of 90.91— 90.09 for the Canadian dollar in the United States.

These rates have not been changed since September 16, 1939.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE-CADETS AND EX-CADETS IN ACTIVE SERVICE

Mr. BRUCE:

1. Has the Minister of National Defence called up for war service the hundreds of cadets and ex-cadets of the Royal Military College?

2. If not, is he prepared to tell the house whether he contemplates doing so in the near future?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. (a) Under the regulations, all gentlemen cadets on leaving the college with a diploma of graduation or a certificate of military qualification, who have not obtained a commission in the royal navy, or in his majesty's regular land or air forces, or in the corresponding naval, land or air forces of the other portions of the empire, are required to accept combatant commissions in the R.C.N.V.R., or the non-permanent active militia or the non-permanent active air force. Having thus become established in the various arms of the service, full scope is provided for their appointment to active service units.

(b) According to available information there were, as on the 17th May, 1940, 534 ex-gentlemen cadets of the Royal Military College serving in the active service components of the sea, land and air forces of Canada and Great Britain.

The total output from the Royal Military College in the past twenty years has been about 900. This means that in the 9th month of the War, 60 per cent of the entire output from the Royal Military College in the past twenty years is already serving.

2. Action has already been taken through appropriate channels to inform district officers commanding of other ex-gentlemen cadets who are anxious to serve in the Canadian active service force.

*DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES OF BILLS TO MEMBERS

Mr. HANSELL:

Will the government consider having a copy of all bills of the House of Commons placed in the post office boxes of members on the day on which they are filed in the chamber?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As hon. members are aware, immediately after the bills are printed they are distributed by the pages to the desks of all hon. members. If however there is a general desire that there should be further distribution, that copies of bills should be put in the post office boxes, His Honour the Speaker is quite agreeable that that should be done. The government is also agreeable. It might however be advisable for the whips to confer in reference to what it will mean in the way of additional distribution.

BATA SHOE COMPANY-MACHINERY IMPORTS

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth):

1. What was the value of machinery imported into Canada by the Bata Shoe Company of Frankford, Ontario, during the fiscal years ending March 31, 1938; March 31, 1939; March 31, 1940?

2. Did the Bata Shoe Company, Frankford, Ontario, pay duty on all machinery imported into Canada?

3. If not, what was the value of the machinery imported duty free by the Bata Shoe Company, Frankford, Ontario?

4. Did the Bata Shoe Company, Frankford, Ontario, pay a sales tax on all machinery imported into Canada?

5. Under what tariff items was the machinery imported into Canada by the Bata Shoe Company?

6. Through what ports of entry was the machinery of the Bata Shoe Company imported into Canada?

Mr. ILSLEY:

- 1. It is contrary to established practice to give information which would disclose the private business of any individual or concern.
 - 2. Yes.
 - 3. Answered by No. 2.
 - 4. Yes, where exigible.
 - 5. Under various tariff items.
- 6. The principal ports of importation were Belleville, Trenton and Montreal.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—USE OF SERVICES OF MECH-ANICAL ENGINEERS

Mr. BRUCE:

- 1. Has the Minister of National Defence considered the question of using some of the large number of mechanical engineers who are available in Canada?
- 2. If so, would it be necessary for these men to apply through the Civil Service Commission on a competitive basis?

Mr. ROGERS: It is understood that the civil service commission has received a large number of applications from qualified mechanical engineers. When the department requires professional assistance of this kind, application is made to the civil service commission and the appointment is made by them.

REPORT ON CULTURAL CONDITIONS IN CANADA

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. Has the report on cultural conditions in Canada, etc. been received as provided for in vote 63 of the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1940?

2. If so, by whom was this report prepared? 3. Has the report been printed, and, if so, is it available for circulation?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. No.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

BATA SHOE COMPANY-LOANS UNDER NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth):

1. How much money was loaned under the National Housing Act to the Bata Shoe Com-pany employees at or near Frankford, Ontario, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1939, 1940, and 1941?

2. How much money was loaned under the National Housing Act to the Bata Shoe Company for the construction of homes at or near Frankford, Ontario, for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1939, 1940, and 1941?

Mr. RALSTON:

1. No loans have been made under the National Housing Act, 1938, directly to employees of the Bata Shoe Company of Canada, Limited.

2. Loans have been made under the National Housing Act, 1938, to the said company to assist in financing the construction of sixtyfour family units for employees of the said company. The total amount of money loaned jointly by the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada and the government of Canada for this purpose was $115,200, of which the share of the Sun Life Assurance Company was $86,400 and the share of the government of Canada was $28,800. The average loan per dwelling unit was $1,800. The loans for construction of these dwelling units were all approved in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1940. No loans to this company were approved in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1939, or, to date, in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1941.

CADET TRAINING

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What was the cadet vote in the militia estimates as passed by parliament for each of the years 1935 to the end of 1940?

2. What is to be spent in 1940?

3. Are any periods of two weeks training being provided as in the great war for cadets in each military district?

in each military district?

4. Are there any votes to boards of education in Canada for such work, or for other main-tenance charges, uniforms, instructors, equip-ment or pay, and what are they?

Mr. ROGERS:

1.	1935-36	 		 	 	$150,000
	1936-37	 	٠.	 	 	150,000
	1937-38
	1938-39					139,500
	1939-40	 		 	 	144,500
	1940-41

[Mr. McGregor.]

2. The sum of $145,500 has been included in the estimates for cadet services, 1940-41.

3. No.

4. No.

In each district, instructional personnel are employed to supervise cadet training.

Instructional allowance, at the rate of $1 in respect of each senior cadet on parade at the annual inspection of cadet corps, authorized under the provision of paragraph 60, Regulations for the Cadet Services of Canada, 1928, is payable to each cadet corps instructor.

No grant is authorized towards the provision and upkeep of cadet uniforms, but rifles, .22" ammunition, etc., belts and signalling flags are issued on loan to cadet corps by the Department of National Defence.

*MAJOR-GENERAL MCNAUGHTON

Mr. BRUCE:

Will the government give consideration to the question of immediately recalling Major-General McNaughton to organize further divisions in Canada as he is better qualified for such organization than anyone at present available?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would point out to the hon, member that in framing his question he concludes with a statement of fact, which I think is not in order. I suggest that the hon. member restate his question in another manner.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If the last clause were dropped I submit the question would be in order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As to the first part of it, an answer would involve announcing government policy. It is not customary to announce government policy in reply to a question on the order paper but to make it known to the house at such time as the government deems it advisable. That would be the answer to the first part.

*SUPREME COURT DECISION AS TO POWER OF PROVINCES TO REGULATE PRICES

Mr. NEILL:

In view of the great effect on the relations between the dominion and provincial jurisdictions created by the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, that provincial legislatures have the right under the British North America Act to regulate prices of all commodities within their own boundaries, will the dominion government take steps to carry an appeal to the privy council?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This involves a question of government policy as to which I cannot give a definite answer to-day.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY

SIGNIFICANCE OF "WAR OFFICE REQUISITION" IN CONTRACTS TABLED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Would the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) inform the house on a point in connection with the lists of contracts which have been tabled? Frequently under the name of the contractor the phrase appears "war office requisition". Does that mean that there has been a requisition by Canada on the war office, or that it is the United Kingdom purchasing in Canada?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): The reference means that Canada has requisitioned the war office of the United Kingdom for that particular material.

DELIVERIES UNDER CONTRACTS—REARRANGEMENTS WITH RESPECT TO CANCELLATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Inasmuch as these contracts run into many millions of dollars, and there is no notation with regard to delivery, perhaps the minister would inform the house also whether delivery is up to date. And in respect to requisitions which have since been cancelled or rearranged, has rearrangement been made for the supplies from other sources, particularly the United States? Perhaps the minister could reply to-morrow.

INDUSTRIAL SURVEY

TABULATION OF AVAILABLE MANUFACTURING RESOURCES FOR PRODUCTION OF MILITARY REQUIREMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) whether the registration of the Canadian manufacturing industry which was initiated by his predecessor in office has been completed, and is it up to date?

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): I received notice of this question only a moment or so ago. I shall be glad to obtain the information for the hon. member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF ·303 AMMUNITION—POSTPONEMENT OF CERTAIN RIFLE PRACTICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALAN COCKERAM (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is there a shortage of ·303 ammunition in Canada at this time?

I understand instructions have been given to military headquarters in the various districts restricting the use of .303 ammunition to infantry battalions of the third division in training centres and machine gun battalions—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of National Defence): I wonder if the hon. member feels that he is serving a useful purpose by putting a question of the kind at this time.

Mr. COCKERAM: I do.

Mr. ROGERS: I will answer, although I entirely disagree as to the usefulness of the question at this time. Certain rifle practices have been postponed only as a result of new mobilization arrangements arising out of the decision to call up the third division and additional rifle battalions of the fourth division.

LOAN OF $750,000,000

TO MEET LOANS OR OBLIGATIONS, TO PURCHASE UNMATURED SECURITIES, AND FOR PUBLIC WORKS AND GENERAL PURPOSES

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 29, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Ralston—Mr. Vien in the chair:

That the governor in council be authorized to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, an amount not to exceed in the whole the sum of seven hundred and fifty million dollars for paying or redeeming the whole or any portion of loans or obligations of Canada and also for purchasing unmatured securities of Canada and for public works and general purposes.

Mr. ROWE: The attempt to comprehend the meaning of this resolution to borrow $750,000,000 further emphasizes the gigantic task that lies ahead of this country. It is a challenge to our national credit, which fortunately is high enough to sustain it. The future will test our ability to pay, and that test will be met by an energetic people in a country of vast and rich resources.

This stupendous financial provision is only one more shocking indication of the extent of the effort which will be necessary to carry out our high purpose to defend religious and individual freedom. Events of to-day and shadows of the events of to-morrow consolidate our people as nothing before has done in one common bond of effort for one common purpose. Our people, of different religions, races and languages, are standing shoulder to shoulder in the face of a peril that is common to the members of our commonwealth and to the countries which have already been overrun. While we stand by we are inspired by the actions of those gallant men of the British expeditionary force who are maintaining the finest traditions of the empire in an unexpected emergency caused by the desertion of an allied king. We are also fortified by the courage, determination and skill of the great French army. We have the further assurance of the well-grounded and lasting friendship of the great nation to the south, their president one of the greatest of world statesmen, who has struggled so earnestly to save his people from the disaster of war and is at the same time a great force in preserving democratic freedom.

Therefore while our hearts may be heavy and sad to-day, realizing the difficulties which confront us, and knowing that the way we have to go is hard and long, we believe that with God's help and by doing our duty we shall win. Closely allied with the mother countries of Britain and France we must now face fearlessly and by swift action the greatest conflict in the history of our Christian civilization. No other people in the world are more capable of accomplishing so terrific a task than this enterprising and free people, if they have courageous leadership. No people in the world have greater resources behind them, and we must be prepared to offer an ever-increasing variety of services and sacrifices if we are to meet the necessities that arise from day to day. I am sure they will challenge almost to the point of weariness the mental capacity of the government which sits to your right, Mr. Chairman, just as the physical attacks will challenge the capacity of our gallant, youthful and vigorous army which must meet them in the field. We must gird ourselves to meet this task on one common front. We must strengthen our determination, without fear or favour. No one is worthy of being in this house if he would play politics with this crisis.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWE: Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I feel that anyone who would hint that politics were being played can scarcely realize the seriousness of the situation. On the other hand we on this side are equally weak and guilty if we withhold anything that may assist to bring about a common victory. We are now a nation at war. We have a War Measures Act which contains wide and effective powers. It is now our duty to establish this country on a war basis. Our man power and resources must be rapidly mobilized to their maximum. are told that a record has been made of our industrial capacity. That is encouraging, because it may be needed soon to replace the output of British factories. The subversive influences that have already opened the gates of other nations in advance of the swiftly moving hordes of Hitler must be dealt with by quick and forceful means. This can be effectively accomplished, just as our forces can be effectively and successfully organized, only by an immediate registration of every man and woman in Canada. We must meet a swift aggressor with swift action. We must develop mass production to withstand a mass destroyer.

When our government fears that it will take a year or two before we can begin to produce tanks, let them talk to Mr. Henry Ford, who says that within six months he can produce a thousand aeroplanes a day. Let our government tell the people that the events of the last few years have aroused them and that now their policy is not the slow and steady mobilization of eight or nine thousand men, as it was the other day, but a rapid and vigorous recruiting of at least forty thousand men for the immediate future. The mobilization at once of a home defence army of fifty thousand men might well be considered and put into operation by the present The militia guards at many government. points, such as bridges and hydro plants, might be replaced by experienced war veterans who are not at present on the strength of the militia. To furnish supplies for these men and thousands more who may be required in the near future, our factories must not wait and run part time, as many are doing to-day. They must be speeded up and kept producing twenty-four hours a day.

These and many other measures are necessarv, as I think everyone within sound of my voice will agree. The confidence of our people, which is necessary for the achievement of our war objectives, must be inspired by government action and government policies. The old middle-of-the-road speed, no slower or faster than the people will enjoy, is not good enough to meet a crisis such as we are facing to-day. The wait-and-see policy, politically popular in days of peace, cannot meet this situation. Economic appeasement, often mentioned in fireside chats, was a sweet phrase in days of tranquillity, but it is useless to-day. Deferred military cooperation with Britain, practised before the war, now constitutes a dangerous policy, threatening the speed which must be made in this crisis which now menaces our

I should be derelict in my duty to this house and to this country if I failed to offer these considered suggestions before we pass this gigantic expenditure which future generations will have to meet. The light of our immediate past does not reflect much encouragement in regard to the action necessary to secure our immediate future. It is a past strewn with blunders, failures and, I say again, complacencies that are almost inexcusable. Our allied forces must be supported. Those forces defeated Germany twenty-five years ago and this time those forces will not only defeat but will conquer Germany. We are not afraid; we are not downhearted, but if as a people we are going to meet a swift aggressor, hasten our victory and save the lives of many of our gallant young men, I urge upon the government to do what other governments have done when facing a crisis such as this.

[Mr. Rowe.]

I say this, Mr. Chairman, with the very deepest respect for this government and especially for my good friend the Prime Minister, whose friendship I enjoy, whose personality is delightful and whose integrity I would never allow anyone to challenge.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWE: The Prime Minister has been a great man of peace, a great promoter of peaceful negotiations and of friendly relationships with other countries. But I say these are days of war, not of peace, and in all sincerity and certainly not in any spirit of politics but with the deepest feeling of sympathy—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: Some of my hon, friends may not understand—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to my older colleagues in this parliament that no man worthy of being in this house will even impute those political motives at this time of dire crisis. I have not referred to some of the weaknesses of the Liberal policy which I could have mentioned in a way that might awaken bitter resentment among hon. gentlemen opposite.

An hon. MEMBER: Go on.

Mr. ROWE: Someone says to go on. No, thank you. I have been in this house longer than the hon. member—

Mr. McCANN: In and out.

Mr. POWER: By the back door.

Mr. ROWE: My hon. friend says "in and out," but we are in this game to stay. On the other hand, if we do not measure up to this task we are going to be out, as far as the part of this country in the war is concerned. I would say to the Minister of National Defence for Air that I am not so much concerned about being out—

Mr. POWER: I said you try to come in by the back door after you have failed to get in by the front door.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear. [Mr. Rowe.]

Mr. ROWE: Someone mentioned something about political taunts, but to my friend the minister I would say that I think I have as much right to come in the front door of this parliament as he has.

Mr. POWER: We are not talking about parliament; we are talking about the government. You could not get in the front door of the government by the votes of the people, and now you are trying by intrigue to get in by the back door.

Mr. ROWE: Mr. Chairman-

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. CHURCH: Canada came in at the back door, late in the empire air training scheme.

Mr. ROWE: I am surprised but I am not at all disturbed, because there is no one who can challenge me on the question of intrigue against the present government. There is intrigue going on throughout our civilization to-day, and you ought to know it.

I will say, as I conclude-

An hon. MEMBER: Keep on going.

Mr. ROWE: I do not propose to go on further. Political taunts have been thrown across the floor of the house, but I say in all sincerity—it is my duty to say it, whether I am listened to or not, and I believe the leader of the present government will follow me in what I am about to say—that at the present time we need a prime minister speeded up to a war job.

An hon. MEMBER: We have it.

Mr. ROWE: With deepest respect and sympathy I urge the Prime Minister, a great man of peace, to step aside and let a war prime minister speed up a war job by an order for swift advance.

Mr. GARDINER: For the past ten days we have been meeting in this house for the purpose of attempting to speed up the war effort of Canada. During that period it has become the daily effort of our friends on the opposition side, and more particularly our friends in the official opposition, day by day to raise the question which has been discussed here and there in different types of organizations which have apparently been set up for that purpose, the war effort of this government, from a point of view which makes it possible for them to stand up on the floor of the house and question the incentives and motives of the present Prime Minister of Canada.

We met in this chamber a few months ago and were confronted with much the same opposition, in so far as the official opposition is concerned, as that with which we are confronted to-day. The one man directly opposite who then sat in this house, who is not now here but who really counted at that time, was the leader of the party. The group of men who are sitting in the opposition seats to-day are a group who have got rid of more leaders since 1927 than any other political party in any part of the British empire. Following the last great war they had a leader, one who was chosen at the end of the war partly because of his practices during the war. He appeared before the people of this country for one election, and was defeated. He was defeated because of the fact that he did more during the short time he was in office in this country to disunite the people of Canada than any other man had done. To-day he sits in another place. After he left the leadership of the party he took his place in the business life of this country, and in the business life of this country, Mr. Speaker, he made a failure. As a last refuge he went to that other place from which he speaks to-day in order to attack and criticize the leadership and the government of the Dominion of Canada. And daily our friends on the other side of the house get up from time to time and raise questions as to whether or not we should have different leadership, not only in the House of Commons but in the Dominion of Canada.

I think it is time someone should answer some of the statements which have been made. My hon, friends follow the usual route taken by men who want to seek a way in by the back door, as was said a minute ago. They always begin their remarks with something kindly with regard to the men they begin to attack. That reminds me of the fact that the one great betrayer of all time did it with a kiss.

Having driven the leader of whom I spoke a moment ago from the leadership of their party, they chose another. They kept him in office until he lost an election. Then they hounded him inside this house and out of it until they drove him from the public life of the Dominion of Canada. Then they chose still another. They called him the man of action-"fighting Bob". He went through an election with them. Following the election they met in caucus in this city, just before the house met, and on that occasion he offered them his services to carry on throughout this session, or as long as they desired him to do so. But they refused his offer, turned him down and selected another leader, who entered the house to lead their party. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that at the present time they are carrying on further intrigue with the idea of bringing back to this house another leader, in order to lead them if possible to greater success. Well, my friends may call that politics, or they may call it whatever they like. I do not think it is even worthy of the name of politics. Politics was never intended to be played in that way.

An hon. MEMBER: You ought to know.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and I have remained in the public life of this country a long time because I have played politics in a square way.

How do my friends start in? They say the Prime Minister has been one of the greatest leaders of this country in peace time—but that is not what they have been saying for the last twenty-one years. Yes, to-day they say he is the greatest leader that Canada could possibly have in peace time, but they go on to say that he is not warlike enough to be here to lead in a time of war. Let us check that. Some of us have sat in this house for four or five years, and some longer than that. Those of us who have been here four or five years will remember that when the government of which the hon, member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) formed a part, prior to 1935, left office, they had voted for one year's expenditures upon the defence of Canada some $17,000,000. In the last complete year they were in office they had spent $13,750,000, if I remember rightly.

An election was held, and a new government took office. During the first year he held office the Minister of National Defence in that new government brought down estimates totalling some $24,000,000, if I remember correctly, and what happened?

Mr. ROWE: Nothing.

Mr. GARDINER: Nothing so far as the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe was concerned. He sat in this house and did not say a single word in support of the passing of those estimates.

Mr. ROWE: If the minister will look up Hansard and read what I said in the house he will see that I favoured the spending of a hundred million dollars.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): What page?

Mr. MARTIN: You said that a week ago.

Mr. ROWE: No, I said it when the first estimates came up in 1937.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Not a single member of the Conservative party opened his mouth while on the floor of this house.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Show us the book.

Mr. GARDINER: As has just been stated, when those estimates came down in this house they were discussed day after day. Hon. members sitting in the far corner of the house opposed them. Some hon. members sitting on this side of the house opposed them. Hon. members sitting directly opposite, if I remember correctly, during that session did not utter a word, either of criticism or of endorsation, of the government's policy.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think the minister should say "some" members in this corner opposed them; certainly some members supported them.

Mr. GARDINER: I was speaking more particularly of the official opposition and the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, as well as certain members of the Social Credit group who were in the house at that time. That was the position in 1936 when we were meeting in session here.

In 1937, if I remember correctly, the then minister of national defence brought down estimates asking for expenditures of approximately $35,000,000. Again those estimates were opposed from the opposition side of the house, more particularly by our hon. friends of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. They were opposed also by other hon. members sitting on the opposition side of the house, and by a few hon. members sitting on this side. But those estimates were finally voted through the house.

On each of those occasions the present Prime Minister of Canada found it necessary to stand up in this house and plead not only with his own supporters but with the members of the opposition to support the proposed increases in expenditures for defence in the Dominion of Canada. As was said here the other day, hon, members on the other side of the house, irrespective of what party they belonged to, tried to put forward the idea, in a critical attitude, that those estimates were going to be used for some action outside of Canada. If I remember rightly, from every part of the opposition there was insistence that he give to the house an undertaking that those estimates would not be used to prepare for an expeditionary force or to help some nation outside of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. GARDINER: Members from every part of the opposition; I did not say all members of the opposition.

Mr. MacNICOL: We supported it.

Mr. GARDINER: Members from every part of the opposition took that position on each one of those occasions.

Some hon, MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GARDINER: The point is that on each one of those occasions the leader of the government of this country, the present Prime Minister of Canada, got up and made a special appeal in connection with the estimates of the Minister of National Defence in order to have them passed as nearly unanimously as possible. A group of men who reduced the estimates from a total of $22,000,-000, in the last year the Liberal party was in power in 1930, down to an expenditure of $13,750,000, for the last full year that they were in power prior to the election of 1935, now get up and say that Canada should have been making preparations long ago; now they come along and tell us that we should have been building aeroplanes, that we should have been building up an air service in this country more than two years ago. Before 1930 the dominion government were making provision for the building up of a flying force. They had already made some provision for the establishment of a trans-Canada flying service to carry the mails of this country. When the new government came in, what did they do? They destroyed that service. They discontinued it. They left the people of Canada in a position where, when the new government came back into office in 1935, there was not a sign of that flying service from one end of Canada to the other.

After we had been in power for four years we had increased the estimates for militia from $17,000,000, which was the amount for the year when they went out, to $60,000,000. We had taken over a Canada with no civil flying service and we established from one end of the country to the other a trans-Canada service. We had built feeder lines to connect with the trans-Canada from the north and the south. I should like to ask my hon, friends of the opposition: Do they mean to try to convince the people of Canada to-day that their policy of scrapping the trans-Canada system was an encouragement for the building of aeroplanes in Canada? Do they intend that this house should believe that with the scrapping of that system and the cutting down of those expenditures, Britain was brought to the point two years ago where she began to discuss the possibilities of building up a training system across this country? I do not believe that there is a man, woman or child-more particularly a child-from one end of Canada to the other who will believe the kind of argument that is presented to the people of this country at the present time, nor will they believe it at any other time.

What was it that inspired the British government to come to Canada and interest themselves in the building up of a flying force in this country? It was the fact that the Minister of Transport in the government of the right hon. the present Prime Minister of Canada took hold of the Department of Transport under the inspiration of his leader and applied himself to the building up of its operations and the establishment of a trans-Canada system from the Atlantic to the Pacific. When Britain saw that all the energy of a country like Canada had been put into the building up of a system of that kind, they were inspired with the idea that this was the country in which to build up a system of air training. Again I ask this question: Was it the lackadaisical policy of the present official opposition, which was the party in power from 1930 to 1935, with regard to the development of flying and the building of planes in this country that inspired the British government, or was it the activities of the Minister of Transport in building up that system from one end of Canada to the other? The answer is obvious.

So much for the leadership of the Prime Minister of Canada in times of peace and in times of war, as related to the position in which we find ourselves at the present time.

Another statement was made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, one which is made daily in this house in one form or another. He stated that the Prime Minister has great international knowledge. There is nothing new about that. We on this side of the house knew it in 1919, and long before. We certainly knew it in 1919 when the present Prime Minister was chosen as leader of the group that sits on this side of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: On this side too.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and on that side over there as well. As a matter of fact, a great many more people in Canada seemed to have known that. That is the reason why, when referring to a matter of this kind, I cannot cover the whole situation by referring to this side of the house. Many hon. members who sit on the other side are here because the people of Canada have given expression to that very view. Why do they know? They know it because services of the present Prime Minister of Canada had been used by the government of Britain, by the government of the United States and by the government of Canada in the consideration and settlement of problems that concerned countries far distant from this dominion. He has built up an international reputation even before his reputation for political leadership had been established in this country, and one of the reasons why at the end of the last war he was chosen to lead the party now in power in the time of another war was that the people of Canada already recognized him as one who would create a spirit of unity, one who was better qualified than anyone else in Canada to understand and bring together all the different elements in the prosecution of a common task. The record of the Prime Minister, not only before the war but since, has borne out the judgment of the party which chose him as leader, and the judgment of the people of this country who have on four occasions made him Prime Minister, and the judgment of the members who sit behind him and in front of him, whether they be in the government or outside of it.

We believe, Mr. Chairman, that the group that sits behind the Prime Minister in this house to-day is more national in its constitution and spirit-because of the fact that it is representative of so many constituencies and is so widely spread—than any other government that could be created by any other person anywhere in the Dominion of Canada. In other words, confronted as we are with the necessity for unity in order that we may meet the enemy either from outside or from within, there is no man in Canada who can more effectively unite all the forces of this country than the present Prime Minister. That is why we stand behind him to a man. That is why the people of Canada stood behind him when war was declared. Men and women from one end of the country to the other said then that there was no other man in Canada who could have carried this country so unitedly into war as the present Prime Minister. That is why Canada stood unitedly behind him on the 26th day of March last, and Canada, sir, still stands unitedly behind him.

I do not think that the great mass of the people are taking seriously those who appear in this house as spokesmen for what at one time was known as the Leadership League, or those who appear in this house as spokesmen for what has been known for years in this country as the element who would like to control Canada for their own benefit in time of peace or war. I do not think the great mass of the people are taking seriously the criticisms that are made by the representatives of either group—and there is no great difference between the two groups, because one was only the mouthpiece for the other. If they had possession of the seats of government tomorrow they would not be thinking half as much about the prosecution of the war as the present government is doing. They would be thinking, some of them, about other things.

Mr. TUSTIN: Cheap stuff.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon, friend says "cheap stuff." It is not as cheap as the kind of thing that has been put up in this house for the last ten days, and as one member of this house, I do not intend any longer to sit silently by and listen to such statements with regard to the one man in this house who has put forth a greater effort than any other to prepare Canada for the difficulties which we are facing at the present time and which we are trying to steer our way through in the most effective manner possible.

Something was said by the hon, member for Dufferin-Simcoe with regard to the great friendly country to the south of us.

An hon. MEMBER: No thanks to him.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend says "no thanks to him." We on this side of the house have never been in the habit of courting, for political purposes, the friendship of any country or any group of people outside the Dominion of Canada; nevertheless we have believed, and our leader more than anyone else, that the thing least to be desired, either in time of peace or in time of trouble, is a lack of a feeling of friendship towards us on the part of any country. Living as we do alongside the United States we have been inspired by what after all is the fundamental principle related to the fighting of this war. What is it that has made the war a necessity? What was it that brought it upon us? It was the fact that under the doctrines of Hitler and the totalitarian state it is not enough to say that we are a great nation; it is necessary to build up a system under which it is essential that everything that is necessary to the existence of the people who are living within those boundary lines be within the boundary lines of the nation. Once having adopted that doctrine it becomes necessary to bring all the necessities of life and all things necessary for the protection of your land within the bounds of the country you happen to be ruling. When Mr. Hitler did not find within his own country food products sufficient to feed his own people he went out to acquire more territory. He got more in Austria, more in Czechoslovakia, more in Poland, more in Holland and Denmark, and more in Belgium. In other words, his doctrine is that when you cannot find supplies sufficient within your own borders, go out and take them. In private life we punish people who act upon that doctrine. It is a doctrine for which nations when they adopt it have to be punished; or they must be prevented from carrying it out.

What do the great democratic nations of the world believe in? We believe that the best demonstration of the doctrines we believe in is to be found on this continent more than anywhere else. We are a small people, some ten or eleven millions of us, living on the northern part of this continent side by side with a great country of a hundred and thirty millions of people. When they want mineral wealth from the northern part of our country; when they want pulpwood or food products from various sections of Canada they do not find it necessary to come over here and take the country in order to get what they want. They make no preparations for taking it.

Mr. MacINNIS: No, they simply bribe the government.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend says "they simply bribe the government." That is exactly the kind of sentiment I should expect to come from that corner of the house. It is the kind of statement which when made throughout this country does not tend to create that friendly feeling which is so desirable under present conditions. We in Canada have lived in friendship alongside the people of the great country to the south and have traded with them in the commodities that we and they require. When we have wanted southern fruits, when we have wanted some of their manufactured products, we have not thought it necessary to go and take a piece of the United States. It probably would not have done us much good had we felt inclined to do so. But in any case these two great countries, one with 130,000,000 and another with 11,000,000 people have lived for over one hundred years side by side in peace and harmony; and one of the reasons why we have been able to live in that way is that we have had during the greater part if not the whole of that time men inspired by a desire to be friendly towards the great country to the south. And not the least among the great leaders of this country, inspired by that desire, has been the present Prime Minister of Canada, the present leader of the Liberal party and of this government.

When I was travelling through Canada during the last campaign I heard these same stories that are being flung across the floor of the house at this time. I heard these same suggestions to the effect that we had leading the government of Canada a man who was too friendly to the United States. I know where the inspiration for that story comes from.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Toronto.

Mr. GARDINER: It does not all come from Toronto—some of it does—but it comes from sources where there are certain individuals and corporations who are not particularly interested in doing some of the things that ought to be done in order to maintain the friendship that exists between the two countries. What I said in reply to that suggestion on every occasion was this, and I repeat it in this house: Is there anyone in the dominion, at a time when we are at war, at a time when Britain desires the friendship of the United States more possibly than she desires anything else, who would advocate having in charge of the government of Canada a man who was not friendly to the United States? I reply now to the criticism in this statement, that the people of Canada in 1940, on March 26, declared that they wanted the present Prime Minister to carry on during the period of this war, and for the following reasons: First, because of his great international reputation; second, because he was a good peace-time prime minister, as everyone admits now even in this house; again, because he has been an even better war-time prime minister; because he inspires confidence in the institutions of the country both inside and outside Canada. And in so far as the members on this side of the house are concerned—and supporting members on the other side as well, and I am sure I speak for some even in the opposition groups—we all believe that there is no other man in Canada, either in this house or in the other place, or outside both houses, who can form a government in Canada to-day that would represent the national spirit of this country to the extent that the present Prime Minister does.

Mr. COLDWELL: For the last five or six days a number of us sitting in this corner of the house have been wondering whether there really is a war going on. We wonder this afternoon what the men who are overseas would think of this exhibition were they present in the gallery. Let me remind my friends who sit to my immediate right and who say "hear, hear" that whether we of the opposition groups like it or not the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) less than two months ago received the largest endorsation that a government has ever received in the history of Canada. I venture to say that two years ago none of us in this house regarded the possibilities that now face us as anything but more or less fantastic. Speaking for myself, I did not think that the events which have come to pass could have taken place. An hon. member says that we had plenty of warning. Well, the governments of democratic peoples throughout the world, knowing more than we could possibly know, paid little heed to the warning.

The resolution before the committee involves the refinancing of an exceedingly large sum of money—$750,000,000. It seems to me that much of our consideration of Canada's war [Mr. Gardiner.]

effort involves resolutions of this kind. We have to consider not only the immediate interests of the Canadian people but also the effect of such a proposal upon our economic structure and its implications which will be felt now and in the post-war period. We in this group believe that this proposal calls for a thorough planning and a complete control of our financial system in order that we may marshal our resources in a manner which will be entirely effective; and believing this, we wish to place before the committee once again the suggestion that before we proceed to raise money by way of loan we should consider the national ownership and control of all our financial institutions so that they may serve the needs of the nation in this crisis. Now, that involves more than control of the chartered banks. It involves control of institutions engaged in investing the funds accumulated by our private citizens and by semipublic, public and private corporations. Britain and New Zealand have both done this. We have heard the statement in this house so frequently, it has been repeated so often that the people pay little heed to it, that we should mobilize our man-power. Before any suggestion is made to mobilize man-power for overseas service, I suggest that we should mobilize our economic resources, particularly the financial institutions, to serve the interests of the state at this time. How are we going to do it? That has always been the question, and my answer now is that Great Britain and New Zealand are doing it, and the basis of settlement will be decided when the present crisis is over. The important thing, it seems to us in this group, is to proceed with the mobilization of our economic strength in order to withstand both the shocks of war now and the shocks that will come with the aftermath of this great struggle.

We believe that refunding proposals ought to become merely a part of the planned, controlled use of the accumulated wealth in this country. The time to initiate such a programme is clearly now, not when it has been complicated and made more difficult by the sale of large quantities of new bonds which will be held by many more of our people.

The resolution provides for raising by way of loan a sum not to exceed $750,000,000 to redeem obligations of Canada, to purchase unmatured securities of Canada, and for public works and for general purposes. When we discussed a similar resolution in May of last year we were not at war and the problem was different. The proposals we made at that time might not have the same application to the problem that we face to-day. We suggested then that some $100,000,000 might be issued directly through the Bank of Canada. We were told that the appropriation of large sums of money through the Bank of Canada could not be undertaken for public works, and that we should strive to keep our budget in balance. Well, to-day there is no thought of a balanced budget; the only question is the extent to which we can finance the great public effort necessitated by the war.

At the moment in Canada we have vast quantities of goods, some of which could be consumed in Canada itself if those who lack them had the opportunity to buy them. In this respect we differ from Great Britain, where such commodities as wheat, bacon, butter, fruits, and so on, must be rationed and conserved. And there of course the effect is different because conservation forces a certain measure of saving which can be diverted into war production channels. In Canada we need to encourage the purchase and consumption of the very things the consumption of which is being discouraged in Great Britain; hence the necessity of providing, under an appropriation of this sort, adequate means for necessary relief and the promotion of a public works programme, until at least opportunities are furnished for the reemployment of those who are now unemployed. Aside from the humane considerations, or the actual necessities of the unemployed, and so on, the consumption of farm products would enable farmers to assist in financing our war effort. Unless they can dispose of their commodities they can make no contribution financially to the needs of the country at this time.

At the moment in Canada both the workers from many industries and the farmers are enmeshed in a net of depression prices and unemployment which, as we have often said in this house, are related directly one to the other. The latter could have been solved had Canada's economic resources been organized on the outbreak of war to provide the material aid which the allied cause lacks. The former will have to be met by increased consumption in Canada, by the planning of production and the establishment of set prices, to be agreed upon, of primary products in Canada. Our plea, then, is for the immediate control through nationalization of our financial system and of our key war industries. This suggestion does not even go as far as the policies now in effect in Great Britain and New Zealand, although we would go as far ourselves to enable this nation to marshal its strength and plan its production to meet consumptive needs.

Obviously it is a mistaken policy to borrow huge sums of money and let future generations pay a mountainous toll of interest. Previous war experience demonstrated that such a policy led inevitably to vast accumulations of wealth. Subscriptions to government loans may now be received from people with very small incomes who will make tremendous sacrifices in order to make these subscriptions; but when the inevitable post-war depression follows, the bonds or securities or certificates held by those with small incomes will go upon the market and find their way into the vast accumulations, just as they did after the last great war, the net result being that we have permanently in our midst a small number of people who can collect vast sums in interest from the rest of the population—people who have nowhere to put that money except, as we saw a year ago, into savings accounts in the several banking and other financial institutions, and who can demand for years to come a toll of wealth from those who produce wealth. Such accumulations exist in Canada to-day, and if we are asking men to sacrifice their lives, to risk their health, we have a right to demand of those who have vast accumulations of wealth a contribution in money, substantial sums of money, to the common cause of the country in this crisis.

At the moment social services are being cut. On May 1 relief was cut in half, causing a tremendous amount of suffering to many of our citizens. The interest we have been paying and are going to pay to the bondholders remains relatively high. Our first loan was at the rate of 31 per cent, which is within one-quarter per cent of the rate on the first loan during the great war. During the last war the interest rate on war bonds reached 54 per cent, free of income tax. We hope that example will not be followed during the course of the present war. John Maynard Keynes, who recently wrote a book on war financing in Great Britain, contends that under no circumstances should the rate of interest paid by the government exceed 21 per cent. In my opinion that is a very generous rate of interest when we are asking sacrifices from so many of our men and women during the period of the war. This afternoon the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) made an impassioned appeal for the registration and mobilization of our man power; but as a prerequisite to any such registration we would ask that this government bring down a policy of the nationalization of at least our financial institutions and our war industries.

I do not think there is very much more I need say on this resolution. I have simply tried to express a point of view and to advance some constructive proposals in relation to the resolution now before us. I hope within the next few days we may get down to a consideration of the measures necessary for the defence of this country, and consider them from the point of view of the welfare of the Canadian people rather than that of any political advantage that may accrue to one group or another in this house. If we do this, probably we shall be able to find some constructive policies to meet the present situation.

I hold no brief for anyone, but there are some matters I think the government should make clear to the house; for example, as to whether or not some articles which have appeared in our western papers-I refer specifically to those appearing under the name of Mr. Grant Dexter-accurately state the position in regard to the war effort as far as the government is concerned. If they do then I think this house and the country ought to know it. We have been told, for example, that the government programme was advised by the government of Great Britain on the outbreak of war. Is that true, and has it been followed? Did the government, as Mr. Dexter says, extend or desire to extend that programme greatly beyond its present limits? Is it true that the British authorities did not greatly welcome our sending a large expeditionary force last autumn, and was that due to the fact that Britain herself was short of the equipment needed? Then of course we have the statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) in the house on May 22, when he told us rather explicitly that one of the difficulties Canada had experienced was our inability to obtain the necessary plans and so on from British manufacturers for the production in Canada of the heavy equipment that is needed in modern war.

We have heard a great deal of criticism and replies thereto across the floor of the house. I believe that if these matters could be cleared up definitely the country would be more satisfied and united. As far as we in this group are concerned, we want to see the war financed by those who have the ability to carry the load. We want to see our resources, industrial and financial, organized intelligently and not left to mere chance. To such policies, when the government brings them down, we will give our support.

Mr. QUELCH: I had not intended to take part in this debate, Mr. Chairman, but in view of the fact that or several occasions the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) referred to this group and made certain charges that are totally untrue, I want to take a few moments to deal with some of the things that have been said.

Speaking in this house a few days ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) stated that public opinion during the past five years would not have tolerated adequate defence estimates. The important question is why public opinion would not tolerate such estimates. The simple reason is that during the past five years we have had a reactionary financial policy dominating the activities of the government. I suggest that if during the last five years the Prime Minister had implemented his promises regarding monetary expansion, the people would not have held that opinion. If he had carried out his promise to make currency and credit available in terms of public need, to meet the domestic and social requirements of the Canadian people, then they would not have hesitated to agree to the necessary expenditures to safeguard the welfare of this nation. Instead of that, however, we have had a policy that year after year has been sabotaging the resources and productivity of this nation. Time and again in this house the former minister of finance stated that the only money available to meet government expenditures was the money taxed from the pockets of the people. The former minister of labour even went one step further and said, "If we are going to increase our expenditures it will become necessary to increase taxation," and he added that as we were already taxing the rich as far as we could, it would mean that we would have to increase taxation on the poorer classes of the people. Is it any wonder that the people were not prepared to support an increase in taxation for purposes of defence when we were told quite plainly that that increase would have to be borne by the poorer classes?

I should like to say just a few words with regard to the stand we have taken on this matter. During the special session of last September I think we in this group made quite plain what our stand was. What did we advocate? We advocated the complete mobilization of the total resources of the dominion, conscription of financial and industrial resources, and we demanded that this should be done before the conscription of man-power; we demanded a national registration of all manpower in order that we might find out how many men were trained for this or that industry, how many unemployed were skilled and how many were unskilled. Then as we developed our plans for the defence of the country, as we realized what expansion there would have to be in this or that industry, we would have been able to institute schemes whereby those people would have been given the necessary training. I recall-and this is something which does no credit to those who took part in it-that during the past election campaign certain men came into Alberta and attacked us on the ground that we had advocated the greatest possible mobilization of the resources of the country for war purposes. In other words in an election campaign held during a serious crisis they were willing to sabotage the defence of the country in order to gain a few votes. It is unnecessary for me to refer to any names, because hon, members realize who were guilty of that action. Certainly it is not to their credit that such action was taken.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

We had to wait for the special session of parliament to get from the former Liberal party the first really sane statement respecting monetary policy. That statement was made by an acting minister of finance (Mr. Ilsley), and I take it he was speaking on behalf of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston), who was minister at that time although he had not a seat in the house. The acting minister told the house that it was intended to bring about monetary expansion for the purpose of providing full employment and to develop the resources of the nation to their full extent. It is strange that during the five years the Liberal party had been in power, on each occasion we advocated that very thing we were told that we were advocating inflation. Yet as soon as the war came along the government advocated the same thing. was willing to bring about monetary expansion to provide full employment in a time of war, so that we might develop the resources of the nation to full capacity, but it had so little interest in the welfare of the Canadian people from 1935 to 1939, that it was not willing to provide monetary expansion to satisfy the needs and requirements of the people in times of peace. For five years the government deliberately sabotaged the life of this country. Is it any wonder that when war is declared we find ourselves in difficulties? Is it any wonder that when war came we did not have men skilled to take their place in industry?

I noticed a few days ago an item in the Financial Post to the effect that the production of Canada could be increased by many billions of dollars, but the main stumbling block was that we did not have sufficient skilled labour. Why have we not the required skilled labour? Had the Liberal party developed the resources of Canada between 1935 and 1939 as we continuously advocated, we would not be short of skilled labour today. They are the ones responsible for that condition, and they ought not to try in any shape or form to place that responsibility upon the opposition. They have had the full power at all times to carry out their policy, and it has been a policy of laissez-faire.

In my opinion those who have been responsible for our financial policies in the past five years, policies which have wrecked the very lives, health and morale of the Canadian people, are more guilty of treason to the nation than many people who have been arrested, because by its action the government has made it impossible for us to make the effort we should be making in this hour of crisis.

Mr. HOMUTH: I rise for the purpose of speaking to the resolution and making some suggestions to the government, which I think are of considerable importance. No one loves a political fight more than I do. I learned my politics in a hard school. But I do believe the people of Canada are not concerned with political speeches at the present time. One thing I did notice, however, was that busy as the cabinet ministers are with our war effort, they could sit here long enough to listen to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) make a political speech before they went out to attend to our war affairs.

Mr. McNEVIN: Was it not in two or three schools you learned your politics?

Mr. HOMUTH: No matter what money vote we are called upon to pass, it must have some relation to our war effort. Perhaps the best thing that could have happened the war effort was the calling together of the members of the House of Commons to sit in session. Since we have come here we have been able to get some information from the government, and at least to some extent we have been able to find out things they have done and things they have not done.

In the discussion on the resolution preceding the one now before the committee I advocated the registration of man-power in Canada. The necessity for such action becomes more manifest every day. I urged upon the government at that time, and I repeat my plea now, that under this vote of $750,000,000, an amount of money be set aside immediately to take that registration. In the last few months we have had in Canada an appalling wastage of man-power and labour hours. We still have thousands of people out of work. Thousands are wandering the highways of Canada, men who ought to be in some productive industry connected with our war work.

In my home town a soup kitchen was opened last January, and under the regulations pertaining thereto a man was entitled to only one meal a day in that kitchen. Thousands of people pass through that town, many of whom, if given a chance, would have joined the army, and others who would like to be in productive industry. Had we a registration of man-power those men could be allocated to our various industries and thereby give a tremendous impetus to our war effort.

As I said the other day, people are fearful of the so-called fifth column, and I believe the registration would give us a complete picture of each person, showing the birthplace of every man and every woman. Through it we would gain some idea of what we have in Canada, and would have closer contact with the people than we have at the present time. I am not so sure but that right in our government service we have men—in fact, I am sure of it—who in the last two or three years have been looked upon as admirers of the totalitarian philosophy. This is something we must check up more closely than has been done.

Then, Mr. Chairman, we must speed up industry. We were supposed to have had a complete registration of industrial capacity. Persons connected with the Department of National Defence were supposed to have gone out and made a study of all our industry. Prior to the last war, industry in Canada was not in any position to make shells, because it had never made them. Finally however our industrial activity was geared up to the making of shells, and as a result we turned out millions and millions of them. To-day the first thing we must do is to get the machinery necessary for their manufacture. So far hundreds of manufacturing plants scattered throughout Canada have not yet been asked to produce the machinery necessary for the production of munitions in the smaller centres. There are thousands of plants in Canada which could produce munitions of some kind, but I feel we have not put enough energy into organizing the industry of the country. It is quite true that the last few weeks have brought this home to us perhaps more than anything else, but do not let us fail. Let the government go ahead and speed up these things. I feel that the government have not been as frank with the country and with the members of this house as they ought to have been.

When I was questioning the minister of supply the other day about certain matters, he told me that he supplies everything he is asked by the Department of National Defence to supply. In other words, if these things are not being ordered, it is because the Department of National Defence has not ordered them. Apparently it is the fault of the Department of National Defence if tanks, anti-aircraft guns and anti-tank guns are not in production. The other day the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) told us the story of the Bren gun and admitted on the floor of the house that Bren guns were not produced.

Mr. MARTIN: Surely that is not so.

Mr. HOMUTH: The minister said that distinctly. If the hon, member will look at [Mr. Homuth:]

Hansard, he will find that the minister said that.

Mr. MARTIN: Will the hon. member permit a question?

An hon. MEMBER: Give us the reference.

Mr. MARTIN: Surely that is not the fact.

Mr. HOMUTH: Oh, yes.

Mr. MARTIN: That is a very serious statement.

Mr. RALSTON: Bren guns are in production.

Mr. HOMUTH: The minister of supply is in the house and the Minister of National Defence is not. I could take no other meaning than that out of the minister's reply the other day.

An hon. MEMBER: Read it.

Mr. HOMUTH: I could take no other meaning than that they had not yet completed production of Bren guns, that they were waiting because there had to be some modification which was coming from England. That is what the minister said. Under the terms of the contract the production of Bren guns was to start at the end of the twenty-fourth month, and 1,000 guns were to be delivered between the twenty-fourth and thirty-sixth months. We have been told continuously ever since war broke out, particularly during the election, that the Inglis company was far ahead of schedule in the production of Bren guns. If that is the situation, then why have we not had production of Bren guns? I think I am correct in making that statement.

Mr. HOWE: The statement of the Minister of National Defence, as I recall it and as the facts would warrant, was that Bren guns are in production but have not been issued because certain modifications recommended by the War Office must be made before the guns are issued.

Mr. HOMUTH: I quite agree with the minister that Bren guns are in production.

Mr. ROWE: But not produced.

Mr. HOMUTH: I am saying that they are not produced.

Mr. HOWE: They are produced.

Mr. HOMUTH: There is some modification which has to come from England. I am not finding fault with that. The people of this country are no longer going to be lulled into a sense of false security. They want the truth. They are not afraid of the truth. Let us speed up these things. About two weeks ago I listened to a programme over CBF entitled "Canada at War". This included a description of a trip through the Bren gun plant, and it ended up with the knocking down and building up of a Bren gun, with all the attendant noise. The final bit was the firing of a Bren gun. If this matter entails a mechanical problem, then that is something for the engineers in charge to solve. If it is simply a lack of labour, then that is all the more reason why we should have a national registration. With a national registration the labour competent to do this job could be put at it. Perhaps other industries could be making certain parts of the Bren gun and thus help to speed up production. I do not say this in a spirit of criticism, I say it because each and every one of us is much concerned about the situation here in Canada, even for our own defence.

There are artillery units training in Canada which have never fired a gun. There are machine gun units which have no machine guns with which to train. These matters cannot be kept from the public because the boys who are in these units come home for leave. These boys are getting tired of the sort of training they receive. They feel they are not getting the training for which they enlisted. Our industries should be geared up to produce the commodities we need and enable these men to get the type of training for which they enlisted. Everything possible should be done for them so that when they do go over there they will have an equal chance of coming back. That is the whole story, and that is my reason for urging this on the government. As I say, the men in many of these units are disgusted because they have not had the proper training. They play baseball and softball, but we will not lick the Germans by throwing stones at them. We must have something better.

My reason for rising at this time is to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) if he will give some assurance along these lines. If that is done, I believe the people would respond. They would then feel that something worth while was being done. Give us the assurance that a national registration will take place as soon as possible. It is something that could be done quickly and cheaply.

There is another matter I intended to deal with, something that concerns the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty). We are now beginning to pay the price for the cost-plus contracts which were given out by the Department of National Defence. Under these contracts the profit is based entirely on the cost of production. What has happened is that in a desire to speed up production, certain industries are going to other industries and coaxing men to come and work for them at wages far in excess of what they are getting. Men are being taken away from industries which have government contracts obtained by tender and are being employed in industries with cost-plus contracts. The result is that certain industries are being slowed up in their war work. A national registration would give us some idea of what industries men could best be employed in and also provide some means of allocating labour to the different industries.

There is no one more willing than I to see men get more wages than they are getting at the present time, but we must remember we are in a war. It is not a Liberal or a Conservative war; it is a war that concerns every man, woman and child in this country. This matter is something the Minister of Labour should take cognizance of and see what can be done. I urge the government as strongly as I can to have a national registration immediately so that the people will feel that they are being given an opportunity to see what part they can play in this war.

Mr. CLEAVER: Mr. Chairman, four Conservative members of this house have risen in their places and suggested the resignation of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). I think the time has come when private members on the government side of the house should express their views.

Before dealing with that, I should like to answer briefly the arguments advanced by the speaker who has just taken his seat and who has complained that Canada has been doing nothing about the manufacture of shells.

Mr. HOMUTH: I did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. CLEAVER: I would refer him to the speech—

Mr. HOMUTH: Wait a minute. The hon. member is not going to put into my mouth words that I did not use. I said nothing about not manufacturing shells. I said that we ought to speed up the manufacture of shells.

Mr. CLEAVER: If the hon, member was not complaining, I should very much dislike to hear him when he is complaining.

Mr. HOMUTH: You will one of these days.

Mr. CLEAVER: I would refer to the speech made by the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) on May 22, part of which I will read to him.

Mr. HOMUTH: I have read it.

Mr. CLEAVER: The minister said, at page 130 of Hansard:

Eight Canadian plants are at present engaged in the manufacture of 2,250,000 shells. These plants have been equipped with modern shell-making equipment. Within a few days an additional 2,250,000 shell order will be placed. Thus within a few days twelve or more Canadian firms will be engaged in the manufacture of 4,500,000 shells. I might say by way of comparison that in the seventeenth month of the great war-

Not the seventh but the seventeenth month: -Canada shipped 5,380,000 shells to England.

An hon. MEMBER: We have not shipped any yet.

Mr. CLEAVER: The minister went on to say:

The shells which Canada now makes or will make in the immediate future include 40 millimetre, 18-pounder, 25-pounder, 3.7 inch, 4.5 inch, 6 inch and 9.2 inch shells.

Then the hon, member complained that we have not yet had deliveries of Bren guns. I did not think any member of the present Conservative opposition who sat in the house in the last regular session and urged the cancellation of the Bren gun contract would have the temerity now to rise in his place and criticize this government for maintaining that contract in force. The people of Canada are grateful to the government for retaining the Bren gun contract, and that we are now in actual production instead of having a year's delay.

Mr. HOMUTH: Let us have another political speech.

Mr. MARTIN: We might as well have a

Mr. CLEAVER: I believe that in this critical period the people of Canada are demanding one thing, namely, a vigorous prosecution of this war. I do not think it can be gainsaid that unity is the first requisite if Canada is to make her maximum contribution to the prosecution of this war. Second only to the strength and size of our armies and the quality of our military equipment is the necessity that the morale of our soldiers and of the public should be maintained. I say in all seriousness, Mr. Chairman, that any citizen of Canada or any member of this house who without justification attempts to undermine or weaken confidence in the government's prosecution of the war is positively guilty of sabotage of the nation's war effortsabotage just as real and just as detrimental to the prosecution of the war as the sabotage of an alien enemy who destroys plant or equipment.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Fifth column.

Mr. CLEAVER: Those words of mine are strong words. Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Cleaver.]

Mr. MacNICOL: Not so strong; pretty weak.

Mr. CLEAVER: But I believe that conditions to-day compel plain speaking and I intend to speak plainly, to recite facts, to draw no conclusions of my own but to ask members of this house to draw their own conclusions from the facts.

Anyone who has sat in this house during the last few days and heard member after member of the Conservative opposition from his place demand the resignation of the Prime Minister, and anyone in Canada who has read that part of our daily press which opposed the election of the present government, must fully realize the fact that there is a sinister and organized movement in Canada to-day to thwart the will of the Canadian people. The temerity and virulence of the attack are apparent to anyone who stops to think that the attack is being made within two months of an election in which our Prime Minister received the unbounded support of the people, the greatest support ever given to any Prime Minister at any time in our history. I say that such an attack is harmful to our war effort to the extent to which it has any effect either on our soldiers or on the general public. Certainly such an attack does not improve the morale of our people; certainly it does not intensify the loyalty of our troops.

Let us frankly and fearlessly look at the facts. The first member who rose in his place and demanded the resignation of the Prime Minister was the hon, member for York South (Mr. Cockeram), and what did he say? These are his words:

The record of the government since the outbreak of war is one of ineptitude and frustration. For that record he—

The Prime Minister.

—must take the responsibility. . . . I solemnly implore the Prime Minister, for the good of his country, to emulate the example of Mr. Chamberlain.

That statement was made notwithstanding the fact that the war record of the govern-ment was the issue of the last election, and notwithstanding the fact that the electors of this country weighed that war record and gave the Prime Minister their whole-hearted support. The statement of the hon. member for York South was also made despite the fact that he himself did not receive even a majority vote of the electors in his own riding.

Mr. MacNICOL: Neither did the Prime Minister in his riding, nor the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. CLEAVER: What was the one and only reason he advanced for that request? He said that the Prime Minister should resign because Mr. Chamberlain resigned. Let us look at the two situations and see if they bear any similarity. Mr. Chamberlain took office in May, 1937. Mr. Chamberlain never at any time appealed to the electorate of Great Britain for support as leader of a government. Then, when the crisis came a few weeks ago, what happened? Out of a house of 615 members, of his supporters 130 did not vote and forty voted against the government, among them being Mr. Duff Cooper, a former First Lord of the Admiralty, Sir Roger Keyes, Admiral of the Fleet, and many other prominent private members. The result was that out of a house of 615 members, while the Prime Minister received a majority on the division, he received a minority vote of the house, for only 281 members out of 615 voted for the government.

What about the position in Canada? We have a Prime Minister who has just received an overwhelming vote of confidence from the people, and not one of his followers in the house is in revolt. Is there any parallel between these two situations? The only persons, the only groups of individuals, the only newspapers in Canada to-day who are asking for the Prime Minister's resignation are those who opposed him as bitterly as they could in the recent election. I sometimes wonder if these gentlemen really realize that we have had an election and that the people have spoken.

Let us come to the next member of the Conservative opposition who demanded the resignation of the Prime Minister, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce), and let us examine the reason he advances for asking for that resignation. I will read from his speech:

I come now to a part of my remarks which is going to be very distasteful to me. I have been a friend of the Prime Minister of Canada for many years and have admired his many excellent qualities. He was prepared, as few in this country have ever been, by long years of education and training in state-craft for public life. He is a man of high character, a man of peace.

And now here is the ground for asking for his resignation.

I wonder whether these qualities, which are so admirable in times of peace, are not the very qualities which disqualify him now in time of war.

Let us examine this argument. As I understand it, the hon, gentleman says simply this: We do not want a man of high character to lead us in time of war. From the bottom of my heart I thank God that we have a man of high character at the head of our government. I will say this. Certainly the Prime Minister has not changed his disposition and 95826—24 his character since the election. To use his own words, while he is a man of peace he believes that peace can best be attained through a vigorous prosecution of the war. In any event, the Canadian people knew full well the character and disposition of the Prime Minister on March 26 last, and I believe that it was precisely because of his high character that the Canadian people chose Mackenzie King as their war Prime Minister. But as a preface to his demand for a change in leadership, the hon. member for Parkdale stated that what he was about to say was distasteful to him. He said that he had admired the Prime Minister and that the Prime Minister had many excellent qualities. He was educationally better fitted than any other man in Canada for the post. I say that either the hon, member who made these statements was sincere, or they were just as full of hypocrisy as the kiss of Judas.

Let us look over the record. I call as my first witness a certain Doctor Bruce who spoke at Massey Hall in March last. I ask hon. members to read the verbatim report of his speech in the Toronto Globe and Mail of March 19. He sat on the platform and listened to Colonel Drew making the most disgracefully virulent personal attack on the Prime Minister that, in my opinion, has ever been known in Canadian history. Did he upbraid that gentleman for making that attack? No; he doubled the offence. Let me read some of the remarks which Doctor Bruce made—and bear in mind that this is the same gentleman who, a few days ago from his place in the house, paid such a glowing tribute to the Prime Minister. Doctor Bruce gradually built up his courage until he could say what he wanted to say. He first accused the Prime Minister of "impertinence," of "domination of his own personal political machine" and of "four years of vacillation and side-stepping," and then when he got warmed up to the proper pitch, this is what he said:

Mr. King has created the impression that if war came Canada would not be standing behind the empire.

That statement, as to the truth or as to the loyalty of which I leave the house to draw its own conclusions, was made just six months after Mackenzie King had let a united Canada into war with an enthusiasm never before equalled in our history. Doctor Bruce then went on to say:

After being forced into war Mr. King for a full three months left the impression that Canada's contribution would be as slender as he could contrive to make it.

Those are the words of a friend.

The scuttling of parliament was the act of a desperate man who has been masquerading as a statesman too long.

And just three days ago the same hon. member said in this house that he was a friend of the Prime Minister, that the Prime Minister was the man best fitted in Canada for public life. And listen to this final touch:

I do not believe that Mr. King is sincere in his professed desire for Canadian unity unless he has a colossal capacity for self-deception.

I say that Canada gave an emphatic answer on March 26 to the Colonel Drews and to the Doctor Bruces of this country; and now this same Doctor Bruce—

Mr. HOMUTH: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I do not think any hon. member has the right to refer by name to another.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon, member is going too far. The rules of the house are well known. In debate hon, members must refer to an hon, gentleman as the hon, member for so-and-so. In speaking as he has just done, the hon, member should have referred to "the hon, member for Parkdale".

Mr. CLEAVER: There is some misapprehension, Mr. Chairman; I was referring to the Doctor Bruce who spoke in Massey hall.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member is quite in order in referring as he has done to the hon. gentleman, who was not then a member of the house. The hon. member was quoting from press extracts of remarks made by a gentleman who was then Doctor Bruce and is now the member for Parkdale.

The CHAIRMAN: The ruling has been given. The hon, member made two references to the hon, member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce). The first reference was to a speech by the hon, member for Parkdale before he was elected a member of parliament. That was in order. But later he referred to the hon, member for Parkdale after his election, and there he was out of order.

Mr. CLEAVER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I understand your ruling to be that the Doctor Bruce who made the speech in Massey hall before he was elected to this house is the same gentleman who is to-day the hon. member for Parkdale. And with that Massey hall speech still fresh in his memory as it must be, with those virulent attacks on the Prime Minister still fresh in his memory as they must have been, he rose in his place in this house and said:

I have been a friend of the Prime Minister of Canada for many years and have admired [Mr. Cleaver.] his many excellent qualities. He was prepared, as few in this country have ever been, . . . for public life. He is a man of high character—

An hon. MEMBER: Dispense. Keep to the motion.

Mr. CLEAVER: In my opening remarks I said I would not draw any conclusions of my own but would leave it to hon. members to draw their own conclusion, and I now ask them to do so.

Throughout the years we have heard a good deal of the so-called loyalty of the Conservative party. I confess with shame that as a young man before going overseas during the last war I was deceived into voting for Union government. But to-day when I see the workings of these self-styled loyalists, these conspirators who are seeking to undermine the unity of the Canadian people—

Mr. HOMUTH: I rise to a point of order. The hon, member has no right to refer to any other hon, members as conspirators. If the hon, member wants to make political speeches, I will meet him on any platform in the country.

Mr. CLEAVER: I withdraw the word "conspirators." The hon, member came to my riding—

Mr. HOMUTH: Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN: The hon, gentleman who has the floor just said he was withdrawing the word "conspirators."

Mr. HOMUTH: I did not hear him.

Mr. CLEAVER: I withdraw the word "conspirators," and I say the men who conspired together.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I rise to a second point of order. The hon, gentleman has made matters worse. I ask that those words be withdrawn, because in effect it is charging hon, members on this side with being conspirators. Let us have decency and a little decorum.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I listened to the hon. member very attentively; he did not refer to any member of the house just now. As a matter of fact, I know and hon. members know that if there is a conspiracy it starts from somewhere outside the house.

Mr. CLEAVER: I do not want to offend the sensibilities of Conservative members, and I will withdraw the word "conspired" and say "communed" together. In reply to the hon. member for Waterloo South who challenges me to meet him on a platform, I should like to tell him and hon. members of the committee that he came to my riding during the election, spoke at the town of Milton, and gave me the largest Liberal majority ever turned in by that municipality.

These gentlemen who have communed together, these self-styled loyalists, provoke in me such scorn and contempt for their tactics as parliamentary rules do not permit me adequately to express.

I would have respected the hon. member for Parkdale if he had used words like these: "I have been a staunch Conservative all my life. I have received in the past high honours at the hands of my party; I have always opposed Mr. King; I have permitted unfair personal attacks upon him to go unrebuked; I have myself made bitter partisan attacks on him; I tried to defeat him in the last election, but I miserably failed. Notwithstanding all that, I am still willing to try to force him out of public life, even if it does affect the war effort of our war leader."

There is another thought. The Conservative members demanding the resignation of Mr. King have suggested that Colonel Ralston should take his place. I ask hon members, if Colonel Ralston should become Prime Minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CLEAVER: If the Minister of Finance should become Prime Minister, just how long would he have the support of the Conservative opposition? Twenty-four hours? I do not think so. Has the Minister of Finance ever suggested that he could make a better contribution to our war effort in any other post than the one he so ably fills to-day?

Mr. HOMUTH: He is too modest.

Mr. CLEAVER: Has the Minister of Finance ever suggested or hinted that his war effort has been thwarted or injuriously affected in any way by the Prime Minister?

Mr. RALSTON: Quite the contrary.

Mr. CLEAVER: And I ask this further question: Just when did it become the duty of the Conservative party to pick a leader for the Liberal party? I frankly admit that they have had plenty of practice in picking leaders recently, but I would not say their efforts have been marked with conspicuous success.

I say to the opposition: Let us quit this quibbling. If you doubt that the Prime Minister has the support of this house, be men, have the courage to put the question to an issue. Let us have a vote. Then accept the result of the vote and get on with the war.

If I read public opinion aright, it is thoroughly disgusted with the exhibitions of partisan criticism on the part of some hon. members—I do not say all—of the Conservative opposition. If we keep this up, and do not settle this question once and for all, these criticisms will do positive harm to our morale and our war effort.

While Canada demands that our war effort shall be prosecuted to the full limit of our ability, to those who say we should not count the cost I say that we would be doing a serious disservice to Canada's war effort if we committed Canada to financial obligations in excess of our ability to pay, and as a result, brought on a financial crisis.

In conclusion, let me say to the government: We are behind you to a man. In the light of the present crisis we believe that perhaps you have not done quite as much as we would have liked you to do, but go ahead with your task, and whatever sacrifice you demand of us will not be too great.

Mr. CHURCH: The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver), who has just resumed his seat, has preached the parliamentarian's religion of the line of least resistance. I went to law school with his respected father some years ago, and I am not surprised at what the hon. gentleman has said. No doubt, in view of the political speech he has made he will qualify for some preferment or portfolio before the war is over, under the present pacifist, isolationist policy of this government.

I have taken a non-political stand, since I came to this parliament in 1921, on the question of defence and foreign affairs. I am a British imperialist, and I am not ashamed to say so. I am an unashamed Conservative as well; I ran as one in the last election. Since I have been in this house I have not adopted the policy of following my leader at all times, and that your leader is your policy, as the previous speaker does; I do not believe that is a policy consistent with our democratic parliamentary form of government. That policy has been found wanting in Ontario. I realize that everything we have to-day in this country in the way of liberty and freedom, we owe to the mother country. Just a year ago His Majesty the King departed from the city of Ottawa. As he went across this country the tremendous popularity of the monarchy was shown everywhere, and the love and affection the people of Canada hold for their king and queen. In my opinion, however, the popularity of our own form of government is not so great. We have been slow to notice the decline and decay in popularity of our parliamentary institutions and of the House of Commons during the last few years, brought about by the way in which the executive have usurped the functions, rights and privileges of the private members of this house. We have been slow to see also the way in which the great dominions have been drifting away from the mother country since the last war. I referred to this during the debate which was opened last session under the auspices of the government, by a government member, the hon. member for Selkirk, through his motion regarding the status of Canada in war time, that parliament should decide the question of war, just as if we were a separate country and could remain neutral if we wished, in a war on Great Britain. I do not like to refer to it, as the hon. member is not here.

 $95826 - 24\frac{1}{2}$

What is the situation? In the last war Germany fought the whole civilized world for four and a half years. At that time we had allies such as Italy and Japan, whom we never should have lost to please another country; and towards the end of the war the United States came in on our side. To-day Germany is far stronger than she was in 1914, when only the efforts of the mother country and her glorious dominions, and France, and towards the end of the United States, were sufficient to beat her. I was not a member of this house at that time, but we were slow to appreciate the change brought about by that war. The present generation, and many of the last generation, forgot that nothing was ever the same after Germany convulsed the world in 1914. That fact has been overlooked by the professional politicians who, like the Bourbons, learn nothing and forget nothing. Politicians we are and politicians we shall remain! The politicians in this house receive tumultuous applause at the hands of their supporters in this house and the hangers-on outside. The country does not expect Canada to beat Hitler by keeping the lights of the parliament buildings burning until midnight. We will not beat Hitler by the way we have been carrying on recruiting, on again, off again, on again. We will not beat him by majorities in parliament, by desk thumping or by yes-men, by nodders and pacifists in our country who caused this war. We will not beat him by parliamentary repartee or by blindfolding the public, as we have done for the last five years in regard to the real state of affairs throughout the world in respect to defence and foreign affairs. We in Canada, in parliament, have allowed the public to know just so much of the facts as they could learn through those who lead this government, or from those who write columns in the newspapers; the government have refused to give the people the facts.

The object of a newspaper, as I see it, is to give the people all the facts. What was said by the editor of the great Yorkshire Post when he retired last year, about the press of England having kept from the public the real facts about what went on in parliament? He said that the acid test of a newspaper was the way in which it reported the proceedings of the House of Commons, the way in which it let people know what was going on in the country's parliament. This House of Commons, together with the other chamber, is the only forum in which the grievances of the public can be brought up and remedied, and where the public can learn all the facts about this war and about the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is the only place where we can get a proper explanation of the actions of the government on their policies, and the reply of the opposition to it all. We have never had an adequate explanation of the policy of this government with regard to defence and foreign affairs. The staff of the Department of External Affairs have con-ducted the business of that department as though it were their own private business, and have told the public only what they want to let them know.

I am not blaming the press; I blame parliament. Probably the speeches here are not worth reporting, as one editor told me a few years ago. But there is another agency I blame even more; that is the radio, which is competing with the press to-day in the dissemination and distribution of information. I have paid tribute in the newspaper bill to the press of this country as a thoroughly honest, reliable body. I have paid tribute to them for the way in which they carried on both before and after Munich, in spite of the heavy costs of getting news, and publishing; but I really believe parliament is the only place where the people may find out what is the policy of the government, of the opposition, of the groups to my left, and all that sort of thing, and the public rely on the press for it. Mr. Chamberlain in January, 1939, told the House of Commons that if the people were not allowed to know the facts, but were told only so much as their rulers allowed them to know, then the government was embarking on a course that in future would be fraught with great danger to the country. I quoted this on a motion to go into supply, on March 21 last, criticizing the defence policy.

I have nothing to do with who may be the leader of the government; he has been elected by the people, and that is for them to say. The people deserve the form of government they voted for and got. I have no desire to criticize the Prime Minister. Far from it; I have known him perhaps longer than any other hon member in the house at this moment, and I can say that he has always acted the part of a gentleman to people, and has been most courteous and kind in debate. There have been one or two exceptions, so far as I am concerned, but that is all. It is not for me to criticize the Prime Minister; he has been elected by the people who placed him where he is. But I point out that it is no disparagement of the front benches of the government to say that there are many men who as ministers have done most excellent work in peace time, yet in war time some are not suitable, do not take the needed action, and delay things. Criticism in France and Great Britain has been most useful. It has served as a tonic to governments, and sometimes it has been a blessing to them.

[Mr. Church.]

MAY 30, 1940

I am not reflecting on the government when I say that I believe our political executive have fallen down badly throughout the world since the war started. A different form of administration and a different manner of facing problems are required in war times from what is necessary in peace time. In my opinion the Prime Minister has been too much of an analytical intellectualist, and does not know how to combine or cooperate, or to decide promptly, and he does not know how to create a plan for the future or for the immediate prosecution of so great a war, nor does he see the significance of the policy of his drift in war, which was so severely condemned by Napoleon and by other great military leaders of past years.

He has conducted defence and foreign affairs as if this was a secret war, and has kept the information not only from members of parliament but from the country at large, as if it were his own personal business. Certainly we cannot get any information along defence lines, such as is given in the British parliament. He is conducting a limited liability war and a secret war. Even in respect of recruiting one is led to the conclusion that it is a secret war. Recruiting has been interfered with by the policy of exempting large bodies of people, to begin with, and by proceeding in an on-again, off-again, on-again manner. That has been followed to such an extent that we have the announcement of third and fourth divisions ten days ago, but when young people go to the recruiting offices this week to enlist in the air force, army or navy, they are met with the response, "We do not need you; we need only skilled craftsmen." Those young men cannot get jobs, cannot get relief, and cannot join the army, with the result that many of them find themselves in the awkward position of going back to panhandling and riding the rods, although ablebodied. If the government of the day had not brought about these recruiting delays, Canada would have 600,000 men in the army to-day, from coast to coast under a voluntary system. That is the best system, if the people can get the facts, and it is the one which appealed to me and to others during the last war.

I believe, however, that the government have misjudged the whole question of manpower and have refused a national register. Three years ago I asked a question respecting man-power, food, industrial and economic power, and suggested a survey of large and small plants so that we might know our economic possibilities. I do not like to say anything respecting the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) when he is not in his seat, but the fact remains that some time ago, in 1937-39, when I saw war coming, I asked if he would establish food reservoirs in England, in view of the submarine menace which existed during the last war which almost starved out England in Easter, 1917. He was in England, but nothing was done. To-day he has made a political speech which will mean little or nothing to our troops overseas, but which brings joy to the government following in the house, while brave men are risking their lives.

Do not let us forget that on the eve of closing the session last May and June, I called the attention of the government to commitments given by Great Britain in 1939 which would, before the end of summer, mean war to Canada. I pointed out that on March 15, 1939, the Germans by force seized Bohemia and Moravia. On March 22, 1939, the Germans took Memel. On March 31 the British Prime Minister gave a pledge to Poland, in these words:

If Poland is attacked, in such a way as made it necessary for her to resist, his majesty's government would feel themselves bound at once to lend the Polish government all support in her power.

I pointed out that on April 7 Albania was attacked and occupied by Italy, as Italy had become a vassal German state. On April 13 the British Prime Minister addressed parliament in these words:

Britain has given formal assurances to the Greek and Roumanian governments that if they were attacked Britain would lend them active support.

I pointed out that on April 26 the British Prime Minister adopted conscription, when over 300,000 youths under twenty were called to the colours. Only two per cent of them registered as conscientious objectors.

I pointed out all those commitments, and then asked the government to state its policy because the dictators were after Canada, and we would be involved. What is the policy of hon. members opposite? We have eighty-five new young members in the house, and one might say that they are our hope. Yet the applause means they follow their leader. I did not agree with what was said on defence and foreign affairs by many hon. members who sat in the last parliament, but we must remember that we have these eighty-five new members, and we may hope that they will instil a little more life and spirit into the proceedings of the house. I would say to them, "Go not with the multitude to do wrong" and trust the people and they will trust you. And so I say to them and to members of the government: What was the policy of the government when those commitments were given by the British government? War was then in sight by a few weeks. The Prime Minister in England told the House of Commons last May that Great Britain would have to be prepared to sleep on its haversacks during the coming summer. Somewhat later I asked, through a newspaper article in the Globe and Mail of Dominion day, July 1, 1939, on the same lines:

Where, oh, where, is Canada? Is she still asleep? The Department of External Affairs is asleep. Our Canadian parliament were meeting all the above months this year and were kept in the dark, and the press silent also on Canada's part on all these commitments on such a world-wide front. Also re Japan and the Pacific.

Is Canada secure? No. We may have the awful horrors of war on our own soil, yet this year, while the Rip Van Winkles at Ottawa are asleep. If a storm comes on any of these fronts from Germany, Canada will be involved at once and all Canada's merchant ships on the seven seas will by German law be considered as belligerent.

To meet all this, Britain has only a small army—a regular army of 224,000 men only; below this strength even.

A territorial army of 325,000. Some new recruits still untrained. Anti-aircraft defence force only 96,000, and Britain has 2,000 less ships to carry food than in 1914.

Then I commented on the submarine menace. What did the government do? It did nothing, right down to the hour of the war. It did nothing after Munich. At that time we had what amounted to almost an explosion in Canada, in the press, on our unpreparedness on land, sea, and in the air. In that dark week in September, 1938, and even after Munich the government of the day did not bring down any policy, and had none but neutrality, dependence on the league and collective security, isolation, separatism and pan-Americanism.

After parliament closed the Prime Minister came to Toronto, and while there, in April, 1939, made a speech at the Royal York hotel. I have a copy of several pages of the meeting, but in it I find no real reference to defence or the war—only a few lines—and that was less than thirty days before war was upon us. I ask the people of Canada what they think now of the public men in all parties who have been responsible for the helpless and defenceless position of this country when war came. I ask that question, because for the past four years I have been non-partisan in the matter so far as defence of the empire goes. When war broke out, what did our people think of our public men in this government who kept them in the dark and had no defence policy up to the very hour of the war.

As head of the Department of External Affairs, in season and out of season the Prime Minister has been teaching what? He has taught that peace pacts and protocols and peace agreements could take the place of service and sacrifice and rearmament. May I point out to him that in the whole history of the world that has never been so, and it is not so to-day. We see results of it at the present time, to our great humiliation as a people. The weakness of our army, navy and air force when war broke out led the dictators to believe that the dominions would never fight. That was the belief in 1914, when Germany thought that the empire was through. The pacifists and peace societies talk in and out of this house of sovereignty and collective security, and psalms of the like have led Hitler to believe that the British dominions would be neutral. In every instance since I have been here I have supported increases in the estimates for defence purposes, and in that connection I would refer hon, members to questions and answers placed before the House of Commons on February 14, 1938.

Where was Canada when Great Britain was asking the dominions to do something about the Singapore base, that great base in the Pacific ocean? New Zealand and Australia know what it means to them. British Columbia knew what it meant, and forced the government of the day to come down with a policy. On February 14, 1938, I asked the following questions of the Prime Minister:

- 1. Has Canada been yet invited by the British admiralty to the ceremonial opening of the new giant dry-dock at Singapore on February 11?
- 2. Is the government aware that the United States, New Zealand and Australian warships have been invited and have accepted the invitation according to dispatches from London, England?
- 3. Does Canada contribute anything to maintain maritime freedom in the Pacific or to the cost of this Singapore base—past or present—and what agreement was ever in existence about it, if any?
- 4. Who will represent Canada's navy if an invitation is extended to Canada?

[Mr. Church.]

The Prime Minister replied:

- 1. No.
- 2. No official information; press reports have been noted.
- 3. Canada has made no contribution to the cost of the Singapore naval base. The government know of no agreement in this respect. The expenditures upon measures for the naval defence of Canada, as approved by parliament from time to time, are shown in the records of the house.

4. Answered by No. 1.

That was the reply of the government on a matter as important as that. During this debate we seem to be forgetting the lessons of history. We must remember history when dealing with these people. Canada as one of the overseas dominions is fighting the German people, and why should that fact not be brought home to them? Why are we depending on only one division, now in England, when we should have 600,000 men, ready and equipped? Over in Germany they have raised an army, largely on the western front, of 6,000,000 men. The question now is: Can the French army hold the line until Britain is able to obtain proper reinforcements? There is no fortification yet built that can stand forever. There comes a time when a break occurs. Should the dictators get to the channel ports, then it is all over as far as Canada and the United States are concerned, because Britain and France are our first defence. Germany will trample on Britain the way she did on Belgium during the last war, and the way she has on Czechoslovakia, Poland, Finland, Holland and Belgium during this war. When dealing with these people, we should not forget that the Prussianism of modern Germany has cost Europe the loss of 12,000,000 lives in four wars. Those wars were planned long ahead after she had lulled her prey into false security. She first spread by poisonous propaganda hopes of a peaceful end and secured the wide sympathy of professors and ill-informed columnists that no war would result. That is an example of what happened in 1914. Prussianized Germany chooses her victims by pagan methods. In 1864 her victim was Denmark; in 1866 it was Austria: in 1870 it was France, and in 1914 it was France and Serbia. She adopts the same methods as those of the pirate and assassin. She begins by vilifying her victim and then mobilizes her forces. She declares she has only peaceful ends in view and attempts to hinder any preparedness that might be going on. She waits until her victim talks and then calls the answer a gross insult to German honour. She then attacks her prey in a ferocious, bloody and pagan attack.

I am tired of reading in the Canadian press that the German people are not fighting us. They are fighting us. A great editor of the Toronto Telegram said during the last war in answer to the babble of pacifists that "we are not fighting the German people", that "everyone in Germany was fighting us from the scavenger on the street to the kaiser". Today everyone in Germany is fighting us from the scavenger on the street to Hitler. What are we doing to-day? We sit here in this chamber and talk party politics as if it was a past war, and not a real war. We hear a lot about majorities and we spend time listening to parliamentary repartee and all that kind of thing, but that will not win the war or beat Hitler. I am rather surprised at the action of the government of the day. It has been said that criticism is a tonic which stimulates governments to action. Britain has learned this to her sorrow from experience and has learned that constructive criticism prevents governments from relaxing into blunders which are nothing but suicide. So long as criticism is honest and founded on facts, so long as it is not inspired by any political motives, then is it most helpful. This applies more to times of war than to times of peace.

The Minister of Agriculture has taken part in this debate. He was one of those who preached pacifism, neutrality, and dependence on collective security and the league. agreed with the policies of the hon. members to my left, namely, that pacifism, collective security and depending upon such sands as the League of Nations and Washington would enable us to weather the storm and prevent our being drawn into the conflict. All this has proven not to be so. As I said the other night, I prefer to speak not as a member of this house but as a private citizen, and I am ashamed of Canada's war effort so far. I do not say that any one party is to blame but the government in the main are, for refusing to face the facts. I am ashamed when I receive blue books from Australia and New Zealand showing what those countries are doing. New Zealand was represented at the opening of the Singapore base, and that country had a dreadnought in the great war. Her ships along with the Achilles took part in that thrilling attack on a German craft.

The press contained a story of the capture of a German boat by a Canadian destroyer, but the fact came out later that this boat had been captured by a British warship and the Canadian destroyer was simply acting as a tugboat to bring it into port. Then the Canadian press announced under an eight column head-line that Canada was guarding the Dutch West Indies. This story also fell through when it was shown that a Canadian destroyer was simply acting as a ferry boat to transfer 500 soldiers to the shore. I think we should be receiving information different from that kind of thing.

In 1938 the people on the Pacific coast suddenly became alarmed at the unprotected state of their long coast-line of 600 miles. The Minister of National Defence then brought down a defence policy based on a possible attack upon the United States by a transpacific power. In 1935 the United States under its present president adopted a naval policy whereby she was to have a navy equal in strength to that of the British navy. In 1938 our minister, when bringing down a measure for a certain amount of protection, stated that the existence of a first-class naval base on Puget sound demanded that any enemy be prevented from establishing advance bases within effective flying range of approximately 600 miles. The most northerly of the Queen Charlotte islands is within 600 miles of Seattle. He stated that it would be our responsibility as a neutral to prevent advance bases being established on Canadian territory.

From whom were we getting our protection at that time? We were getting it from the mother country and the British fleet alone, and all our defence, as in 1812, was relying on Great Britain. There are four things over which we can rejoice, all of which help to keep the dictators from our shores. First, there is geography. Second, we must give thanks for the Royal Navy which protects Canada and the United States. Third, we must give thanks for the glorious French army and, fourth, we must be thankful for the Royal Air Force. If the glorious men who serve in the Royal Canadian Air Force had been given an opportunity through the 1937 scheme, they would be over there now. In 1938 the per capita contribution of the mother country for defence was thirty times that of Canada, and Canada was $1.25 a head. In 1935 Canada's permanent active militia consisted of 3,000 officers and men and we had four destroyers. The naval forces comprised 88 officers and 781 ratings. These figures were given in a return which the minister brought down to the house.

The economy axe did fall heavily in 1930 because of the depression and other conditions and because the government of the day was listening to the prattle of the pacifists, who were depending upon pan-Americanism. To the credit of the minister I want to say that in 1938 he brought down estimates doubling the per capita cost of our contributions for defence, and four modern destroyers were acquired. But they are not modern to-day; naval personnel was increased by 65 per cent, mine-sweepers by 65 per cent, and there was provision for mechanization of the forces. That was all very well as far as it went, but the policy of Canada remaining neutral and depending on pan-Americanism, the Monroe doctrine and the policy of isolation was not right, nor was the policy of the government in following such farces as the League of Nations and listening to the babble of the pacifists who caused this war. If we had got away from these things and away from the pacifists who caused this war, we would be in a much better position to-day to defend this country.

I did not know this question was coming up to-day, but ever since I have been a member of the house I have, in season and out, opposed these policies of neutrality, isolation and dependence on Washington for our defence, and supported cooperation and coordination and rearmament with Britain.

Mr. BRUCE: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to delay the committee for more than a moment or two, but I feel that if I sit quiet in my place my silence might be misconstrued.

Since coming to this house I have heard many references made to an election that was held on March 26 last. I have made no references to anybody's political speech during that campaign and I have no intention of doing so now. I entered the campaign from purely patriotic motives. I did not enter it as a partisan. I offered myself as a candidate for National government because I thought that that was the form of government best suited for Canada in this time of war. I think the hon, member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) has given to the house the very best evidence to show that I was not and am not to-day a partisan when he said that I had an association with the Leadership League. That league was founded by a gentleman in Toronto, Mr. George McCullagh, purely from high patriotic motives. He was and is a supporter of the party which is now in power. I joined him when, after efforts of many months, he was unable to carry on. I have no apology to make to the house or to the country for anything I did on that occasion, nor have I any apology to make for what I have done in the service of Canada since I was old enough to do it.

I should like to say to the members of this house and perhaps to a larger audience outside that the day after war broke out I offered my services in any capacity to the then

[Mr. Church.]

Minister of National Defence, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), who is now sitting in the house. Again when he was superseded by another Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), thinking perhaps that the second minister might not know of that offer, I again offered my services to my country in any capacity but specifying particularly that I had certain qualifications for service with the Canadian army medical corps. I therefore offered my services specifically as a consultant to the Canadian army medical services of Canada. I received a very polite answer but nothing more happened. I should like to ask hon, gentlemen here, how many of those who have to-day been so noisy have yet offered their services to Canada?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

An hon. MEMBER: You would be surprised.

Mr. CLEAVER: I have.

An hon. MEMBER: Many of us have.

Mr. BRUCE: I know that some of them have and I admire their patriotism. I know that many who are here served gallantly in the last war. I do not intend to make any further reference to that.

An hon. MEMBER: You had better not.

Mr. BRUCE: I have no apology to make for any services I have given to Canada since the last war. I am in this house, Mr. Chairman, for the one and sole purpose of adding my small contribution, whatever it may be, towards the maximum effort by this government to win the war. At this solemn time when our hearts are heavy, when some of our fellow-countrymen are probably giving their lives in France, I will conclude by saying:

The tumult and the shouting dies; The captains and the kings depart: Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice, An humble and a contrite heart.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Mr. Chairman, when we came to this parliament a few days ago, none of us expected that there would be any political battles on the floor of this house. However, the opposition has made it impossible for members on the government side of the house to see and hear the leader of the government attacked day after day without replying. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) wisely selected an election date at a time when there was no war hysteria in this country and the people had a chance to vote coolly and calmly on the issue. The slogan of the opposition was that "King must go." The election was fought on this issuewhether Mackenzie King and the Liberal government should lead Canada through the war or whether the National government should take their place. The most decisive defeat in the history of Canada was sustained by the National government forces and by those other forces who stood up against Mackenzie King in that election. The greatest mandate, the greatest vote of confidence ever given by the Canadian people was given to Mackenzie King and the Liberal government in the last election. The people of Canada surely thought that the matter was settled for at least four years and for the remainder of the war if it should exceed that period. I thought when I came here that there would be no politics, that all members would endeavour to assist the administration at this time; but although the Tory party was decimated in the election, the members of that party still have the Tory mentality that they are born to rule. They cannot understand that the people have a right to speak-and the people have spoken most emphatically.

The Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power) this afternoon said that throughout the two months of the election campaign the Tories had tried to get in by the front door and that now they are endeavouring to get in by the back door. I think it is by the parachute route they are trying to get in. With a war fever on, with some of our people somewhat jittery at the present time, the Tories in this house, the newspapers supporting them, and their political organization throughout the country are all endeavouring to undermine the government at this very moment—a thing that almost borders on treason. Their love of country, so loudly shouted, cannot wait for their lust for power. The wounds inflicted upon them by Mackenzie King will not heal; they must have their revenge even though it jeopardizes the very life of Canada and of the empire to-day.

A united Canada is behind Mackenzie King. He has led wisely and well for many years; his foresight has been outstanding. For fifteen years I have seen old politicians and young in this house, on his own side and on the opposition, disagree with his judgment. He has invariably been right and they have invariably been wrong. His leadership is being challenged now—by strong men? No. There are no strong men in the opposition to-day, Mr. Chairman, the weakest opposition that has ever faced a government in the parliament of Canada; and arrayed against that opposition is the strongest government with the strongest following, not only in numbers, because the new men who have come in since the election, so far as the government side of the house is concerned, are of the highest quality and compare favourably with any men who have come to this house since confederation.

The Tory organization, the Tory press, the Tories in this house cry for a new leader. I will admit that they need one, and almost anyone brought in would be outstanding at the present time. A gentleman in a high position in another place calls for a new leader. His judgment has been rejected on many occasions by the people of Canada. Perhaps the ease with which he holds a seat in the parliament of Canada by appointment has made him forget the difficulties he had in getting into it by election. The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) asks for leadership. Well, he knows something about it; he led his party in Ontario to oblivion. The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) shouts for a leader. Well, he could not get twenty men out of thirty-eight to support him in that, and they knew him much better than the people of Canada.

Last and least is the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce). He symbolizes leadership; he is the last vestige of the Leadership League. When he started to lead it, he put his head high in the air. He never looked back, and he has not realized to this day that he is the only one left of the many thousands who formed the organization at one time. But his criticism of the leader of the government appears to be natural. He has before attempted to oust and succeeded in ousting men from high places. He spoke this afternoon of the Canadian Army Medical Corps. During the last war there was considerable grumbling in the Canadian Army Medical Corps, and it finally culminated in real dissatisfaction when some of the units of the Canadian Army Medical Corps were sent to the Mediterranean. The reasons were not apparent on this side of the water. Those in charge here did not clearly understand why, and the man who is now the hon. member for Parkdale was sent overseas to investigate. Personally I know little of the incident, so I go to an undoubted authority for my information. I shall read from the History of the Canadian Forces, 1914-19: Medical Services, by Sir Andrew Macphail, beginning at page 165:

It was not so easy to convince Canadians of the propriety of sending medical units into areas where no Canadian troops were engaged. Nos. 1, 2 and 5 stationary hospitals had been dispatched to the Mediterranean and this afforded a new point of controversy. A piteous and moving letter to Major-General Jones from Sir Alfred Keough, director general of the army medical service, silenced all but the most unreasoning criticism: "I had not any hospitals at the moment. I called upon you for assistance. You gave me hospitals. They saved the situation. They were good hospitals, containing good officers. I shall always be indebted to you for the help you gave me at a time when I was very hard pressed. The only alternative was to send home wounded in transports, which might have been sent to the bottom of the sea if you had refused the help I asked. You were quite entitled to refuse to send Canadian hospitals where there were no Canadian troops. I am very glad you did not."

I asked. You were quite entitled to refuse to send Canadian hospitals where there were no Canadian troops. I am very glad you did not."

The inspector, after an investigation that lasted six weeks, issued his report on September 20. To this the medical director issued a reply. Both documents were reduced to comparative abstracts by a practised lawyer, and on October 6, 1916, all was placed before a body in London known as the acting overseas sub-militia council. This body was largely composed of "business men," the term that was used in those days to designate persons who were infallibly wise in giving decisions upon subjects of which they knew nothing. The report was approved, and the council advised that the necessary reorganization of the medical service be made to give effect to the recommendations.

The council then set forth formally that "whereas the investigation had already seriously interfered with the administration of the service under Major-General G. C. Jones, the council recommended that Colonel Herbert A. Bruce, the special inspector-general, be appointed acting director in his stead." Upon this resolution a poll was taken. All the members approved except Brigadier-General Leckie who declined to vote. Possibly the resolution was too strange and subtle for the mind of a soldier. The result of these deliberations was conveyed to Ottawa. The minister approved. By formal letter he wrote to the council, "Kindly give the necessary authority to Colonel Herbert A. Bruce, special inspector-general, to proceed with the reorganization of the medical service, as recommended in his special report to me." Colonel Bruce accordingly began his great work. His first step was to transfer the title of acting director, which the council had conferred upon him, to another officer, "as a temporary measure until a suitable man could be found." Such a measure, and the use of such derogatory words may be ascribed to inexperience and lack of aptitude.

In the leisure of office, if the new director had studied the abstract of the two reports, his own and his predecessor's reply, prepared for the council by the deputy judge-advocate general, he must have been astonished to read that of the fourteen recommendations he had made his predecessor concurred in eleven, partially concurred in one, concurred in another apart from the expense in carrying it out, and disagreed with only one. From this it appears that General Jones was conversant with the whole situation. In his reply he explained the difficulties in the way; and with the curious irony of events the new director encountered those very difficulties in the task which he undertook so bravely.

On November 20 he complains bitterly, "All I can do is to make known the requirements to those in authority over me, and to suggest the most effective way of carrying them out, leaving to those authorities, whose province it is, the duty of taking the necessary steps." At this time he also records the discovery—a mistaken one—that "the whole matter of providing hospital accommodation is in the hands of the quartermaster-general." This experience is not unique. There is nothing in the army so difficult for an officer as making his superiors perform their duty.

[Mr. J. G. Ross.]

In spite of his good intentions the new director found himself roughly taken to task for failure to have those matters settled which he had already explained were no affair of his —after he had made a report upon them. In his own defence he was obliged to write on November 20 to the overseas minister "that he had repeatedly and vainly brought them to the attention, both in writing and verbally, of the sub-militia council and the responsible heads." He protests that action on his part was not delayed, but that on the contrary he had placed the matter before the sub-militia council on four separate occasions—the same council which had judged so sapiently between himself and the previous incumbent. Again he is writing direct to the overseas minister, who recommends him to operate through the usual channels. He was obliged to confess that after writing letters since August 26 at "the present moment the venereal situation is most serious and is becoming more so." Indeed he is more critical of the service under his own direction than he was when it was under his predecessor.

Within a month of assuming office he was writing: "Administrative work of this character is distasteful to me." Inspection, criticism and reporting was much easier. Administrative work is distasteful to all soldiers, but they do it. The irony of a soldier's life is that he enters the army to escape from books, and if he succeeds the remainder of his life is spent amongst files, which are books of the most desolating kind. When a military board was called on November 16 to review the report he had made he cabled to the premier protesting against its membership and asking to be relieved and sent home. To this request no answer was received, which was a sign that a new system had come into being. He was relieved of his appointment December 30, 1916, and General Jones was reinstated in his stead.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend brought up his service in the medical corps this afternoon, and I just wanted to read that statement from an undoubted authority. The hon. member has ousted people from high places before and had his own nominees put in their places. On this occasion I am certain that he had unbounded confidence in the man that he had placed in General Jones' position. It is men of this kind who are trying to wreck a government in the greatest crisis in Canadian history. But they will not succeed. They are the light brigade—in name only; very light. This government has the strongest support in the country that a government ever had in Canada. This government has the strongest support in the house that it or any government ever had. This government has the wisest and strongest leader that ever sat in this House of Commons since confederation. No man has ever earned or received the whole-hearted support from his party so much as has Mackenzie King, the present leader of the government. In addition, he holds the respect and friendship of those outside our borders, a situation which is very important for the British empire at the present time. I did not think we had to come here to answer the gibes of the opposition. I think it is time we stopped this political sniping in this house. We have an important job to do, which will take our best thought and all our time.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Let us get at it.
Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That is right; let us get at it.

Mr. MAYBANK: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I need say anything to this committee in order to convince hon, members that I am not likely to pay court to any person, to speak in complimentary terms of any person or anything of that sort merely because some person else may have done so. I have maintained, as I propose to continue to maintain, an attitude of what I believe to be healthy independence. But in view of the remarks that I made a few days ago in this house, I must say that I have been appalled at the attitude taken by some hon, members, particularly those of the Conservative opposition, during the last few days. To-day we have had a sort of field day in the way of reply. Some bitter things have been said. I do not propose to follow along that line, but to the two hon. gentlemen who have been singled out in particular to-day I must say this. They have no one but themselves to blame if they have been dealt some rude blows here this afternoon. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce) ought to know, if any person should, that by the speeches he has made in this house he has not been advancing the war effort of this country. Surely if there were to be a reorganization of the government, his proper place in it would be as a minister of misstatement. And the oratorical exhibitionism of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe-well, it has been forty minutes plus forty minutes plus forty minutes plus forty minutes of delaying the game, delaying the work of the house. That is the contribution he has made.

I do not propose to deal at any length with the absurdities by way of misstatements made by the hon. member for Parkdale—I almost said the minister of misstatement—particularly with reference to the tanks he would manufacture. I wish to get away from that immediately, Mr. Chairman, and to say to the committee that we have before us a resolution stating that authorization should be given to raise a certain amount of money by way of loan, and all this is related to getting on with the war. I am going to propose, more particularly to the members of the opposition, but to all other hon. members as well, that we impose upon ourselves, in connection with any measure coming before the house concerning the war effort of Canada, a selfdenying ordinance and speak for not more than ten minutes, without insisting upon the right of private members to speak for forty minutes. Of course that which would form the subject matter of the speech would be a question of taste and judgment, but it seems to me that we can boil down what we have to say to mere factual statements and get away from all the turgid oratory of the kind we have been forced to listen to in the last few days. If we do not do that, Mr. Chairman, or something of the kind, we will have first one person on one side of the house making a statement which will provoke some person on the other side of the house, so that we will advance almost not at all.

Having said that I think we ought to confine ourselves to statements as short as possible, I feel that it is time I myself should

Mr. JAQUES: I do not think we in this group can be accused of playing politics, but I should like to say that I believe most people outside this house will agree that the fate of this government or of parliament itself will depend not on the amount of thumping we give our desks but on the thumping we give the common enemy. In view of certain statements that have been made as to the policies of this group, I should like to read two planks from the platform we used in Alberta during the election campaign. The first plank is:

We believe that Canada should finance her share in this war by the creation of the necesshare in this war by the creation of the necessary debt free credit and currency, with definite price regulations to prevent any inflationary rise in prices, thereby enabling the dominion to give the most effective support without the nation incurring huge debts by borrowing or resorting to exorbitant taxation.

We strongly support the just demands of Canadians for the greatest possible equaliza-tion of sacrifice, including adequate measures to ensure the present and future economic security of all our people. We affirm that the conscription of finance, without expropriation of individual's property or money, should precede the conscription of man-power.

The other plank is:

We are opposed to any private or corporate monopoly of money and credit. Until the active control of the creation and issuance of all money and credit is taken over by the federal government, no real democracy, general prosperity or economic security can be enjoyed by our people.

This measure is similar to one which a year ago was the subject of a long debate in this house, followed by an inquiry con-[Mr. Maybank.]

ducted by the banking and commerce committee into our banking and financial system. That inquiry brought out some useful information which not only has not been publicized but has been denied in the press generally. In fact we in this group have been accused of misstatements when we have stated them on the platform and in the press. I should like to read one or two questions and answers which occur at page 285 in the evidence of Mr. Towers. I might add that the bulk of the questions were put by an hon. member who sits on the government side of the house. Here is one:

Q. Ninety-five per cent of all our volume of business is being done with what we call exchange of bank deposits—that is, simply bookkeeping entries in banks against which people write cheques?

A. I think that is a fair statement.

Q. When you allow the merchant banking system to issue bank deposits—with the practice of using cheques—you virtually allow the banks to issue an effective substitute for money, do you not?

A. The bank deposits are actually money in that sense.

Q. As a matter of fact they are not actual money, but credit; bookkeeping accounts, which are used as a substitute for money?

A. Yes. Q. Then we authorize the banks to issue a substitute for money?

A. Yes I think that is a very fair statement

And another statement which has been denied so often is this statement of Mr. Towers:

The banks cannot, of course, loan the money of their depositors.

And then follow these questions and answers: Q. You will agree with the statement that has been made, that banks lend by creating the means of payment? A. Yes, I think that is right.

And then, with respect to financing a war there is this statement:

So far as war is concerned to defend the integrity of the nation there will be no difficulty in raising the means of financing whatever those requirements may be.

We have been told—in fact the vast majority of people believe-that the efforts which can be made not only in war but in peace are confined to the money which the government can borrow from savings or raise by taxes. But Mr. Towers answered that question differently when he said this:

The limit of the possibilities depend on men and materials.

Had that fact been fully grasped, not only by the people at large but, I will venture to say, by this government, and had it been acted upon, I believe that we should have been able by this time to have made a very much greater contribution to the war than has been made up to the present time. When I say that, I have no political meaning whatsoever. I am not blaming this party or that party; I am merely condemning a system of finance which both parties administer.

Finally—and I offer this from page 771 as the most illuminating of the answers to the questions:

Q. Would you admit that anything physically possible and desirable can be made financially possible.

A. Certainly.

I have before me an extract from the report of a royal commission which was set up to inquire into the monetary and banking system of Australia. This commission, which sat in 1938, found as follows:

Because of this power the Commonwealth Bank-

Which corresponds, of course, to the Bank of Canada.

—can lend to governments and to others in a variety of ways, and it can even make money available to governments and to others free of any charge.

And that is amplified by this statement:

The statement in the paragraph mentioned is to the effect that as a matter of power the Commonwealth Bank can make moneys available to governments or to others on such terms as it chooses,—even by way of a loan without interest, or even without requiring either interest or repayment of principal.

Now, as a consequence of the financial system which, I might say, controls not only this parliament and government, but all other parliaments in democratic countries, taxation becomes so burdensome that it is impossible to finance the necessary things which should be done. I should like to quote from a speech made in the House of Commons in England by Mr. Lloyd George on February 12, 1931, in which he said this:

I want to urge the chancellor again not to be frightened of the city of London.

And I might say that the city of London means, of course, the Bank of England.

Since the war the city has been invariably wrong in advising the government. Deflation was wrong and it had most injurious effects. They have been wrong every time, and there is no doubt they were using the whole of their tremendous influence for the purpose of restricting the raising of money for national development. Take the cause of the depression throughout the world at the present time: There is not a man who has examined it who will not tell you that a very large part of it is due to the mishandling of monetary questions on the advice of the money barons. These men who have mishandled this monetary question not merely advise what to do but establish a veto upon every proposal which is made for national development. If you go to the city of London, what is their remedy for the depression? Their only remedy is by placing artificial barriers to prevent plenty from reaching want.

And I say this, that not only has our failure so far been one of not doing what we could have done in aiding in the prosecution of the war, but I believe that the very war itself was brought about by those conditions. And I believe that so long as you have the policy of nations controlled by the money-lenders, there is not much hope for us.

When the then Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) introduced the war budget last September, he said that no matter how the war was financed, the real costs must come out of current production. That is true. The real costs of the war are precisely the blood, the sweat and the tears which must be shed in the fighting of the war. When the war is over, the real price has been paid. But we are still paying for the last war. In Great Britain they are still paying for the Boer war and even for the Crimean war. I ask hon. members to consider the debt which will be accumulated by this war. I ask them to add it to the debt accumulated by the war of twenty-five years ago and then ask themselves what will be the total debt of this country and what taxation will be necessary to service that debt.

At general meetings which were held in Montreal and Toronto throughout the winter, our bankers expressed the opinion that when we have won this war we can look forward to generations of hard times. I should like to direct the attention of the proper minister— I do not know whether it would be the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe)-to the fact that such statements have an adverse effect upon recruiting in the country and the enthusiasm of our people for war. A number of people have said to me that apparently it does not matter whether we win or lose, we are going to be ruined anyway. I do not think there is any need of having generations of hard times. It must be because these people, as Mr. Lloyd George has said, control the policy of governments. I think that sort of thing has done more harm than the statements of these people who have been put under restraint.

If our present system of government cannot prevent generations of hard times, then it cannot survive. We shall have to get some other form of government which will give us some measure of prosperity instead of generations of hard times. I should like to quote a statement by Mr. Philip A. Benson, president of the American Bankers' Association, made during a speech delivered at Milwaukee on June 8, 1939. He is quoted in the New York Times of June 11, 1939, as follows:

There is no more direct way to capture control of a nation than through its credit system.

We believe that it is possible to finance this war without piling up this enormous debt. If debts are piled up during this war as they were during the last, then I cannot see how we shall survive the peace. If we win the war, we certainly shall have deserved a better fate than generations of hard times. I suggest respectfully to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ralston) that he continue the sittings of the committee on banking and commerce. Experts should be called in to see if there is no practical possibility of financing this war without creating a debt which will throttle the life from the nation.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, after listening to the hon, member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Jaques). I have come to the conclusion that he is the victim of an illusion. He is confounding an accessory with a principle. As everyone knows, currency is simply an accessory which makes up the difference in trade and barter. In the view of the hon. gentleman this country should issue a different kind of money. Then our soldiers would be paid with little pieces of paper, similar to this piece I am exhibiting, which is torn from an order paper. That would satisfy my hon, friend and the members of his group. Such paper would be worth nothing, but my hon, friend would be satisfied. He would have reached his goal.

I know the hon. member for Wetaskiwin as an intelligent citizen, but I cannot understand his scheme. I have listened to members of his group expounding their theories in the house and quoting Lloyd George and Doctor Schacht, reading extracts from speeches delivered in Milwaukee, quoting speeches by Mr. Aberhart and by the illustrious Mr. Herridge.

Mr. JAQUES: And Lloyd George.

Mr. POULIOT: Lloyd George has outlived his usefulness.

Mr. JAQUES: Mr. Lloyd George saved the situation twenty-five years ago. He is possibly the most illustrious Liberal alive and his ideas are good enough for me.

Mr. POULIOT: I call the hon, gentleman to order. If he desires to ask me a question, he must rise in his place and ask my permission. I do not intend to be interrupted by the hon, gentleman. I know the history of England just as well as he, and I have read many of the books written by Lloyd George as well as many of the articles which have appeared in the yellow press. He has outlived his usefulness, and that is why Mr. Churchill did not invite him to be a member of his cabinet.

We hear quotations from remarks of Mr. Lloyd George and from statements by many other people whom the hon, gentleman does not know. This is all a complete waste of time. I should like to ask: Is political economy a science? The answer is "no", for a very good reason. A science must be based upon facts and definite rules. A science is objective, not subjective. A science cannot be formed from the queer views expressed by the hon, gentlemen who form the social credit group. All they have is a conglomeration of views which scream because they have been brought together. These hon, gentlemen are always busy taking notes which are never read by anyone and yet they think they are saving the world. They are trying to find a utopia. We know that currency should be worth something on the markets of the world. During the French revolution the government in power issued assignats, which were similar to the certificates issued by the Aberhart government. Everyone must use his tongue to stick a little stamp no bigger than a diamond on the back of these certificates.

Mr. HANSELL: That is what we shall all be doing pretty soon.

Mr. POULIOT: Then the hon, member will be wasting his saliva. I shall be wasting mine by trying to describe further this utopia.

Mr. HANSELL: I am referring to the time when the Minister of Finance begins to issue his stamps.

Mr. POULIOT: Those stamps will be worth something, but the others just provide a foolish exercise for the tongue. I must congratulate the leader of the social credit group, the hon member for Wetaskiwin and the other members of that group for not advocating a new leader for the Liberal party, especially when their own leader, Mr. Herridge, suffered a most humiliating defeat at the polls. I understand Mr. Aberhart is giving him the cold shoulder, which is so much the better for Mr. Aberhart. But for a time Mr. Herridge was accepted as the Moses who was to lead the Canadian people into the promised land. Of course Mr. Herridge was to have a candidate of his own in every constituency of this country, but there was none in mine. Very few of his candidates survived, and those who did succeed in being elected can tell him now that he was wrong. That leader of that new group got what he deserved. He has been defeated, and I hope he is out of the public life of this country for good.

Now I look at my hon. friends who are in front of me, and may I tell them that during the last campaign my slogan was: "No Union Government." Their leader then was Doctor Manion, who is a personal friend of mine. He came into my constituency last summer and made an interesting speech. He said that he used to spend some time at Rivière du Loup, my home town, and along the shores of the St. Lawrence river, and that when he went in bathing he found the water there very cold. But what was colder than the water was the reception that he got from my electors. He said some more insignificant things like that, as did the others who accompanied him, and after a short time the rain started to fall and the meeting was over. Doctor Manion was the leader of a great party, but he was dropped like a hot potato by all the hon. gentlemen who are in front of me. I was very much surprised when the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) suggested Doctor Manion as a "one dollar" man. Is he not worth more than that?

May I remind hon, gentlemen of the Conservative party who are here for the first time that their party had a great leader, another Moses who was to bring the Canadian people to the promised land, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, and I remember the day, sir, during the special session of 1930, in the month of September, when that leader of the Conservative party, who had just been elected by a large majority—not on account of the bad policies of the Liberal party but just because he had told the people that he would make gold out of butter—sat here in his seat as Prime Minister of Canada. I remember his perfect sartorial attire, and his importance—

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The point of order is that the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) is not speaking within the confines of the resolution before the chair, and that his remarks are entirely out of order. And I would ask how much longer this farce is to go on.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I do not see any point of order in what my hon, friend has said.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Chairman-

Mr. POULIOT: Just a minute, please.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand that the hon, gentleman is speaking to the point of order.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I can see no point of order because although my hon. friend is gifted with the most powerful voice of any member of the house, I did not hear a word of what he said.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): If I may have the privilege, Mr. Chairman, of restating the point of order which I desire to raise in this honourable chamber, it is this, that the hon. member for Témiscouata is not speaking within the confines of the resolution which is presently before the chair. I made one further observation: How much longer is this farce to go on in this serious time?

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I draw the attention of the hon. member to the very important fact—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon, member must now speak to the point of order.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, sir, I now do. Speaking to the point of order, I draw the attention of the hon. member to the important fact that by what he has said he shows that he has never read the rules of the house. My remarks, I submit, Mr. Chairman, are perfectly relevant, and I hope that this day I shall not suffer the same injustice as that which I was the victim of the other day. I want to tell you, sir, that any member of this house has the right to follow hon. gentlemen opposite on the path which they have chosen for war.

The CHAIRMAN: Does any other hon. gentleman desire to speak to the point of order? If not, I draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the resolution calls for an authorization——to raise by way of loan under the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, an amount not to exceed in the whole the sum of seven hundred and fifty million dollars for paying or redeeming the whole or any portion of loans or obligations of Canada and also for purchasing unmatured securities of Canada and for public works and general purposes.

I consider, in the first place, that the resolution is of the nature of a motion to go into supply, and that has been the construction put upon it, I think, since the beginning of this debate, when the widest possible latitude has been given. I believe, therefore, that the hon, gentleman in speaking as he does is within his rights.

I would further draw the attention of the committee to this, that if it were proposed to restrict the discussion, that step should have been initiated a little earlier in the debate. At this stage I think we must give the utmost latitude to hon. members, as if this were a debate on the address or on the budget.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I have just a word to add. My hon. friend the member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) was a member of the last parliament; and when Mr. Bennett left Canada, the hon. member was not one of the two members of the Conservative party who said good-bye to him at the station here in Ottawa. He preferred to stay in his room at the Chateau Frontenac, although the house was not sitting at the time. He was not regretting his leader any more than that.

Mr. MacNICOL: Chateau Frontenac?

Mr. POULIOT: Nor was the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) at the station either. It was only the member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green), and my dear old friend from Parkdale, Mr. Spence, who, I regret, is now dead.

Mr. MacNICOL: All I suggested to the hon. member was that when he said the Chateau Frontenac he probably meant the Chateau Laurier.

Mr. POULIOT: That is all right. But my statement as to the hon, members not being there is correct.

There is another point. The present leader of the Tory party in the Senate has been mentioned as a possibility for the leadership of a Union government.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the attention of the hon. member, as of all other hon. members, to the fact that it is not permissible in this house to refer to the upper chamber except as "another place". The Senate cannot be mentioned by name.

Mr. POULIOT: That is all right, sir. The leader of the Tories in the other place was speaking on that subject, and I have only this to add. It is that what is left of his ashes has been exposed in the ash tray of the Rideau club—I mean the Ottawa Journal -and is politically dead. I attach no more importance to him. Every member who has spoken has mentioned his platform during the last election. My platform, as I have said, was "No national government". Of course, that government existed only in the fertile imagination of Mr. Manion; it existed only for the time of the campaign; but I said to my electors, "If we have such a union government, we may have Mr. Manion as prime minister, a gentleman who says he is against the amalgamation of the railways, a gentleman who says he is against conscription, but who will be flanked by Mr. Arthur Meighen, who has always been defeated when he has gone to the polls and has submitted his views to the electorate—the man who is responsible for the War-time Elections Act, the man who is responsible for conscription, the man who is responsible for the insidious and awful campaign that was waged against you, Mr. Chairman, in the county of Lotbinière when you ran there in 1917, and against all the liberals who were with Laurier on that occasion, the man who is known for his famous ciphered telegram in which he asked for his share of the soldier vote". They knew all about it, and it was enough to mention the possibility of that choice of Mr. Meighen by Mr. Manion to secure for us Liberals the votes of many Conservatives, well-thinking and sincere Canadians.

And afterwards there were others. There was another genius who was never elected to this house but who belonged to the infamous Anderson government, the KKK government of Canada, the glorious MacPherson-Mac-Pherson, KKK, Saskatchewan. Again, it was sufficient to mention that man's name to inspire fear in the minds of all good Canadians who listened to us, and I congratulate my good friend the hon. member for Regina (Mr. McNiven), upon his great victory over that gentleman, who I hope will never be returned in an election either in federal or in provincial politics. And there was another one still, Sylvanus Apps, who was easily defeated in Brant by my good friend George Wood. Mr. Apps was bold enough to say that in his opinion only one language should be spoken in Canada, the English language; and he was if anything bolder in saying to those who heard him, "Some of you may not like it, but I don't care." Well, he was defeated and it was a good thing for this country. And I warmly congratulate my hon. friend the member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) on the great victory that he won over the former leader of the Conservative party.

All the leaders of the Conservative party are now have-beens. I have known several of them. When I was first here, Mr. Meighen was here. Gone-dropped like a hot potato. Guthrie was here afterwards, acting. Gonehe too was dropped like a hot potato. Then came R.B. Dropped again like a hot potato; nobody to accompany him to the station. That was why he wept so much; he felt that he was an orphan; he felt that all those to whom he had given patronage were heartless, ungrateful, that they did not remember the days when he did so much for them. Abandoned. That is perhaps why he felt that Canada was no longer his home and why he left for England, although he was born in Hopewell in New Brunswick. Then came poor Doctor Manion. He thought he had a good job as leader of the Conservative party. He went before the people and was defeated. Gonedropped by his supporters like a hot potato. He asked for two days; "Wait until Wednesday before giving your decision," he said. And the day after, they said to him, "Go away; we don't need you any longer."

The hon, member for Cumberland says "Hire his services for one dollar." The hon.

gentleman had a different view on the Monday before the session started when he had to decide about the matter.

Now we have the hon. lecturers in front of us, those who lecture us and tell us what we have to do. We know what we have to do. We are acting in accordance with the trust given us by our electors, who told us, "When you go to the house you have only one thing to do; you have to continue to support the government which you are now supporting in the election campaign, in order that we may have no amalgamation of railways, in order that there shall be no conscription, in order that none of the crimes that were committed by the Union government shall be committed Why did Doctor Manion mention National government? It was because everyone in this country remembered what had been done by the Union government. Everyone remembers it. But at that time, sir, everything was done under the guise of patriotism. It was under the guise of patriotism that Foster used to sell his old war horses, horses thirty years old, for $300; it was under the guise of patriotism that butter was thrown away; it was under the guise of patriotism that a famous shovel was invented by a Miss McAdam, Sam Hughes' secretary, as a piece of armour. All that was done in the name of patriotism. We all remember that. remember the scandals of those days. At that time there was a union of bad Conservatives and bad Liberals to form the Union government. Now my hon, friends opposite cannot suggest such a plan because there are no bad Liberals on our side.

My hon, friend opposite does not like it, but I will tell him something more. The present leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) is a former minister of the Bennett government. He was in that cabinet. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), who sits next to his leader, is also a former minister of the Bennett government. The hon, member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) is also a former minister-without portfolio, thank heaven. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce) is a former lieutenant-governor who was appointed by the Bennett government. My hon, friend the member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) is one of those who supported the Bennett government with his harmonious and sweet voice all the time that government was in power. My good friend the hon, member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) was chairman of the convention which committed the great blunder of selecting Mr. Bennett as leader of the Conservative party. There are a few other members who were here banging their desks when Mr. Bennett was here. Let me say to them in all sincerity and with sympathy that the fact that they either have been ministers of the Bennett government or have supported the Bennett government when that government was in power, disqualifies them completely for gaining the confidence of the people in the years to come until the next generation. Sir, those views are not only mine, but those of my constituents and of the great majority of the Canadian people

We want a government that is responsible for its policy. That is essential. We have it now. And the duty of the opposition is not to make futile, stupid and absurd criticisms, and stupid and absurd suggestions; it is to give constructive criticism. This is how an opposition can help a government, according to the old parliamentary tradition. An opposition can be very useful. Those gentlemen can serve their country very well by studying what is being done by this government and making fair criticism of its policies. This can be done even by private members who support the government.

Let me give three examples of what was done during last year's session by one private member. Take, first, the national defence purchasing board. There was a member of parliament who said at that session that it was absurd for the Minister of Finance to have that board under his control-and I could tell much more of what was done at that time. His contention was that in the first place the Minister of National Defence should be responsible for the expenditures in his department, and that in the second place such a commission was nonsense; that what was necessary, and the right thing to do according to British tradition, was to create a ministry of supply. At the time that member stood alone. The then leader of the opposition, Mr. Manion, agreed with the government on that. Constructive opposition had to come from a private member who was a supporter of the government at the time. And the thing was done in due course, because it was evident that it was the only way to deal with the enormous purchases which had to be made in war time.

Again, there was the mortgage bank, instigated by a man who had so much interest in insurance companies, was director of so many insurance companies, the Sun Life, the North American Life and many others, that I was suspicious when he brought in the mortgage bill. I think our people in the province of Quebec would want to take advantage of that legislation, but it was not to apply there. I congratulate the government on having appointed some officials by virtue of that legislation. But that legislation for the benefit of certain insurance companies has not been put in force. That is another victory which was won by a private member who was supporting the government, when the opposition was not doing its duty.

A third instance is the penitentiaries commission. Once again it was a private member, a supporter of the government, who strongly protested against the appointment of such a commission. In fact, the appointment of one man that was to be made to that commission would have proven a great embarrassment to the government. But the objection did not come from the opposition, although it contained many lawyers: the opposition came from a private member who was a supporter of the government, who made that constructive criticism not only for the good of the government but also for the good of the country. This, sir, shows what can be done provided one can express himself freely in this house whether it sits as such or in committee of the whole.

Now, sir, the conclusion. It is, that the government should not think that one is hostile to them when he complains about the way in which we are treated by some civil servants here in Ottawa. Of course they are defended by the Tories, but I am suspicious of Tories when they talk politics. And I would class as a Tory some confidential officer who boasts he is first cousin of Arthur Meighen, and is always with the Tories on the streets or in public places. The government should be very careful about it. I say this for the benefit of the government and because I know where the leaks come from when ministers are attacked unjustly from the other side of the house.

The other day we received a pamphlet, a page from the Toronto Telegram, which contained an article by a former officer of the Canadian army complaining about the policies of this government and saying that Canada was "sold out." That man should be courtmartialed, because no one in the army should be either Liberal or Conservative; there is only one Canadian government, and army officers must stand by the members of the Canadian government and give their help to that government. Of course, sir, when my hon, friend the present Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Mackenzie) as Minister of National Defence brought in for the first time his increase in military estimates, I told him to be very careful about the brass hats of the Department of National Defence. There is some intrigue somewhere in the department. Let me tell the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers)-I regret he is not in his place—it is because some colonels would like to be promoted to generals, by serving the Tory party, by advocating a national government, against the best interests of this country. Well, sir, I am fed up with that. And when I say that, it is because as a Canadian citizen I am proud of my country and I do not want there to be any intrigue, especially in such a department. The matter is most serious.

We have heard a lot about red tape: now we hear about red tabs. Sir, I was the one who said in the Bren gun debate that I did not understand why the details were given in this house. Of course I contend that we must be free to speak in this house. But when we come to important details about arms and munitions, it seems to me that it would be your duty, and the duty of Mr. Speaker, to clear the galleries in order that no outsider should know what is being said about the technical details of the defences of this country. But yesterday when I listened to the Minister of Transport who was giving some technical information to the other side, hon, gentlemen of the opposition party listened just as well and seemed to understand just as much as the ladies who crowd the galleries when the figures of the budget speech are given by the Minister of Finance. I would ask you, sir, to have the galleries cleared when such important technical details

In the last house there were two people who were familiar with the technology of arms; they were the hon, member for Huron-Perth (Mr. Golding) who was a manufacturer of shells during the last war, and my good friend, Mr. McAvity, then the member for St. John-Albert, who was interested in the purchase of war supplies during the last war. Those men were technicians. The other day an hon. member opposite said that he was a mechanical engineer. So much the better, but who among us is familiar with the details of those armaments? Before the war one could look at the New York Times, the Montreal Gazette or any other newspaper, and see details about the armaments of England, France and Canada. That is beyond my understanding. When did any hon. gentleman who listens to me to-night see a word about the technical side of the armaments of Japan, Germany, or the other enemy countries? They keep those details hidden and secret.

We have heard a good deal about a fifth column and have been told that there are members of the fifth column among us. Is anyone so prejudiced as to think those people do not read the press and do not take advantage of what appears there? I am too much concerned with the freedom of members of this house and their right to ask questions of the government to try to deprive them of that right. On the other hand I think it should be taken for granted that anything a member of this house learns should not be given to the public at large. We know we have some difficulties in the Department of National Defence, as we have had for years. I think there should be a census taken of that department, although I pay homage to the three deputy ministers, who are worthy successors to General LaFleche, one of the best deputy ministers to have been appointed by the other government. However, I think we should be very careful about any intrigues that may go on there.

One more point, sir, and I shall conclude. Does anyone think I have any animosity toward any civil servants here in Ottawa? No, sir; but my contention is that each of these men, who are paid by the state, should try to help not only the government but private members as well. When members ask for their help, it is very often refused for the sake of economy. Very often when a member goes to such an official, he sees some of the brain work of that official who tries to find a reason to refuse what is being requested. The answer is, "We regret that it is impossible to give you that information." Another member goes; same story. Another one goes; same story. Others go; same story. Then, sir, this official goes to the minister and says, "Sir, look at what I have been asked for by so many members. I thought it was better not to give it to them. Will you give it to me in the form of an increased salary?" That is the intrigue which is going on.

I shall have other opportunities to say more, but this is enough for the time being. I hope, sir, that there will be an improvement and that the government will tell the officials of each department to be obliging to members who come to them for assistance, in order that members may avoid useless correspondence and may be able to stay in this house to defend the government against any attacks that may come from the other side.

Mr. ADAMSON: I should like to bring to your mind, Mr. Chairman, one or two remarks made this afternoon by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). The minister attempted to give the entire credit for the construction of Trans-Canada airways and the airports to the previous Liberal administration. I happened to be in Cobalt in 1934 and 1935, before the Liberal administration came into power. The emergency landing field at that point was then under construction, and I understood that General McNaughton, who had been appointed by the Right Hon. R. B.

Bennett, was responsible for the construction work then going on. I should like to remind hon. members opposite that the organization of a system such as Trans-Canada airways is a very large undertaking. The construction of emergency landing fields in northern Ontario, where there are muskeg conditions, rock and difficult country to contend with, takes a long time.

The minister said something else to which I should like to refer. I do not come from Toronto, but I thought the minister had some unpleasant things to say about the attitude of people who came from southern Ontario in general and Toronto in particular. He said we were anti-American. I am not going into any great detail, but at a recent service club meeting in Toronto—

Mr. GARDINER: Just by way of correction, Mr. Chairman, I did not at any point in my remarks say the people of Ontario were anti-American.

Mr. ADAMSON: The minister said the people of Toronto.

Mr. GARDINER: No, not even the people of Toronto.

Mr. ADAMSON: The inference was that the minister meant the people of Toronto. I want to point out to the minister that at a recent service club meeting in Toronto I, an imperialist, suggested that we might or should join the pan-American Union, and that suggestion was received favourably by the press and people of Toronto. Unfortunately, to take any step in that direction now might be construed as running for cover; we shall have to beat the Germans first. But, speaking as an imperialist, I see no reason why we as an American nation should not take our place as a member of the pan-American Union.

The matter of the Bren guns also has been brought up in this house, and I should like to read a question I directed to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) and the reply of the minister. I asked the minister:

Is the minister prepared to tell the committee how many Bren guns have been produced, and —unless he would consider this as not in the public interest—whether the Bren guns so far produced have been satisfactory?

I explained to the minister that my sole purpose in bringing this matter before the committee was to secure a favourable reply from the minister, because we in Canada, and particularly in my constituency, are very much worried over the information that we have obtained, that the Bren guns have not been satisfactory or that there has been some hitch in their production. If there has been no hitch, I would appreciate, as I know the country would appreciate, the minister making a statement. I do not want him to say merely that they are in production, because by just making the stock or the barrel or the plunger mechanism the thing can be in production; but have they been produced? I think that would go a great way towards restoring confidence in the situation.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon, friend give me the page of Hansard from which he is quoting?

Mr. ADAMSON: The bottom of page 291, where the minister said:

My hon. friend is not in the house at the moment, but it is not considered in the public interest to supply the answers to these questions. I shall be very glad indeed to give him a further explanation of why it appears necessary to give such an answer at this time.

That is the question I would ask. The subject came up this afternoon. I thought I would bring to the attention of the committee again the reason I brought the matter up. I feel quite satisfied that there is production going on, but I think the country wants to know, and I see no reason why it should be thought that it would give any aid or succour to the enemy if the country were to have that information.

Then, with regard to the production of aircraft—

Mr. RALSTON: My hon, friend has looked at page 308 of Hansard, has he?

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes, I have it before me. At the bottom of the page the Minister said:

I should like to thank my hon, friend for some of the suggestions he has made.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON: That is the question and—

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend wants a favourable answer. Would he be good enough to quote the question and answer of the minister at page 308?

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: I am taking at face value what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. ADAMSON: The minister says they were in production?

Mr. RALSTON: Would the hon. member be good enough to read what the minister did say—or I will read it, if he does not.

Mr. ADAMSON:

I should like to thank my hon, friend for some of the suggestions he has made. May I [Mr. Adamson.]

say something to him regarding . . . the production of Bren guns.

Mr. RALSTON: No—"regarding his statement concerning the production of Brenguns."

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes. It continues:

He has referred to a grave unrest arising from certain rumours which he has heard regarding the Bren gun. May I say to him now, in the light of the statement I made this afternoon, that I know of no cause whatever for grave unrest with respect to the production of Bren guns. On the contrary, we anticipate that delivery will be well in advance of schedule.

Mr. RALSTON: Does that help any?

Mr. ADAMSON: No.

Mr. HOMUTH: The first of April is the date set.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend knows it is not the first of April.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No, absolutely no.

Mr. RALSTON: It is the first thirty-six months.

Mr. HOMUTH: No.

Mr. RALSTON: No, not at all. My honfriend knows, if he has seen the contract at all, that the first thousand guns are deliverable in the third period of twelve months—that is, in thirty-six months. That is not the first of this April; it is the first of next April.

Mr. HOMUTH: We are supposed to be months ahead of schedule.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, and we may be; the minister says we will be.

Mr. HOMUTH: But we were assured it would be right at the start.

Mr. RALSTON: Would my hon, friend rise in his place?

Mr. ADAMSON: And the minister went on to say that there have been some modifications—

Mr. RALSTON: It reads, "A certain modification."

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes, it says:

A certain modification has to be made in the same manner in which it is being made in England. This is being proceeded with as quickly as possible.

Have these guns been manufactured, or have they not? That is the question which I think the minister should answer. It is only justifiable that he should answer it.

An hon. MEMBER: I don't think you know what you are talking about.

Mr. ADAMSON: Unfortunately I do.

Mr. DUPUIS: Does Hitler give you the details of his production?

Mr. ADAMSON: This is not Germany, I would have my hon, friend understand.

Mr. DUPUIS: We should not give them to the enemy.

Mr. ADAMSON: We are trying to help, not hinder, by getting this information, because there is some unrest. I know that is true. I get letters about it daily.

Mr. RALSTON: And does my hon, friend think he is settling it by repeating these rumours?

Mr. HOMUTH: Let the government be frank, and say what is being done about the matter.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon, friend has the answer of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers), and the minister indicates why he does not answer further. If any further answer can be given, I am sure he would be glad to give it. There is nothing in respect of the Bren gun situation but this, that it is much better than could have been expected because, as he indicates, delivery will be made well in advance of schedule. I should think that would be comforting to my hon. friend.

Mr. ADAMSON: It is comforting, but I should like to know when we may expect those deliveries, and whether any guns have been made.

Mr. RALSTON: I suggest to my hon. friend that he ought not to repeat in the house idle rumours. He has done it to-night again, with regard to rumours about the Bren gun. He has that assurance, at least, so that there is no justification in a rumour which would cause unrest. The fact that they are being made well ahead of schedule, I think does away with any rumour of that kind; and I suggest to my hon. friend that if he is desirous of indicating to the committee how slowly we are getting along, he should not repeat idle rumours when they have been expressly denied and contradicted by the minister responsible.

Mr. ADAMSON: I am glad to have the minister's reply in that case.

Mr. RALSTON: I knew my hon, friend would be—and I say that seriously.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down, then.

Mr. ADAMSON: I hope to have a statement when the guns are produced. Now, one more question of serious concern in Canada to-day is—

Mr. DUPUIS: Why not ask it privately?

Mr. ADAMSON: Because the information is public. I should like to point out to the government two or three facts in connection with the production of aircraft in Canada. At the National Steel Car plant in Toronto they are turning out—

An hon. MEMBER: At Malton.

Mr. ADAMSON:-army cooperation Lysanders, and they have done a good job and will continue to do so. The maximum production is four a month. I think they could improve on that. The Fairchild Aircraft Company of Montreal have a cost-plus contract for Blenheim and Bolingbroke bombers. I would like to point out to the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Rogers) and the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power) that the Blenheim has been proved in recent weeks to be an obsolete type of aircraft, and heavy casualties have been suffered in the fighting because of the use of this type of bomber. I would suggest to the Minister of National Defence for Air that these planes be modified in some way so that these obsolete ships do not continue to be produced.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, as a member representing the constituency in which the Fairchild aircraft is produced, I strongly object to any information being given the enemy respecting any planes manufactured there, because if there is any improvement to be made, ministers of the crown are able to see to it that it is made, without giving the information to the enemy.

Mr. POWER: Will the hon, member state on his responsibility as a member of parliament that the Blenheim aircraft now being produced in Canada is obsolete? I should like to have that question answered.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes or no.

Mr. THORSON: On his responsibility as a member.

Mr. POWER: Will he or will he not?

Mr. ADAMSON: The Blenheim aircraft that was supplied—

Mr. POWER: No —"that is now being produced in Canada."

An hon. MEMBER: Answer it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver-Centre): And another question: Does he know whether the Blenheims produced in Canada are the same as those produced in England?

Mr. ROWE: One cross-examination is enough at a time.

An hon. MEMBER: Let us have a Donnybrook.

Mr. ADAMSON: It sounds like the reichstag.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That will go to Hitler!

Mr. ADAMSON: We are asking for information.

Mr. POWER: You are not.

Mr. GARDINER: Who wants the information?

An hon. MEMBER: Hitler.

Mr. ADAMSON: If this aeroplane is obsolete, we should be told.

Mr. POWER: My hon, friend is now holding a responsible position as a member of parliament. He is spreading the rumour that one of the aircraft to be used by our men is obsolete. I want him to state whether he will say that as a member of parliament. Otherwise he could have come to me privately, as he knows very well, and asked me to inquire into the matter.

Mr. ADAMSON: I am asking for information.

Mr. POWER: My hon, friend insinuated that these aircraft are obsolete. I want him to say if he believes that or if he does not believe it.

Mr. BROOKS: Why does the hon. gentleman not give the information as Minister of National Defence for Air?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. ADAMSON: I ask the minister to say on his responsibility that they are not obsolete.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Hitler would like to have that.

An hon. MEMBER: Withdraw.

Mr. ROWE: He has nothing to withdraw.

Mr. ADAMSON: I should like to get that information.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): Withdraw and talk about something you know something about.

Mr. ADAMSON: I happen to know something about the production of aircraft.

Mr. POWER: Will you tell us whether these planes are obsolete or not?

Mr. ADAMSON: I have not been in the factory to see the planes.

Mr. POWER: I charge my hon. friend with sabotage of Canada's war effort by making that statement. If my colleague, the Minister of Justice, were carrying on the work as it should be carried on, he would intern the fifth column over there.

Mr. ADAMSON: Mr. Minister-

Mr. REID: You are getting action now.

Mr. ADAMSON: I am very glad indeed to get this action on this matter.

Mr. GARDINER: Read some of your past speeches outside the house.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): You are trying to make political capital out of something about which you know nothing.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. ADAMSON: I say-

The CHAIRMAN: The hon, member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) has risen to a point of order.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): The Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power) has not addressed his remarks to the chair. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and the hon. member for Northumberland, Ont. (Mr. Fraser) have acted in a like manner. The leader of this house has sat in his seat and has not defended the rules and privileges of the house. He has permitted these ministers to talk directly across the floor and not to the Chairman.

Mr. POWER: I must say the point of order is well taken, and I withdraw anything that I may have said by way of addressing myself directly to the hon. gentleman opposite. However, I do not withdraw any of the essential things which I said, namely, that the kind of discussion which has been going on here and the spreading of false rumours are derogatory to Canada's war effort and sabotage.

The CHAIRMAN: My ruling on the point of order is that it is not well taken. All these

hon. gentlemen have resumed their seats and the point of order should have been raised while they were on their feet. I shall take this opportunity to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that I have tried to give as much leeway as possible to all hon. members. This debate has not been in accordance with the rules of the house and I ask hon. members kindly to follow the rules. The hon. member for York West (Mr. Adamson) has the floor.

Mr. ADAMSON: I can assure the Minister of National Defence for Air that it is not my intention to do anything but endeavour to help. This information has come to me to-day.

Mr. POWER: Go on and do it.

Mr. ADAMSON: This company is also producing the Hampden bomber, which is a modern and up-to-date craft.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? What is the name of the company producing the Hampden bomber?

Mr. HOMUTH: The hon. gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon, member asked leave to put a question and it was not refused.

Mr. ADAMSON: The Fairchild Aircraft Limited.

Mr. DUPUIS: They are producing good bombers.

Mr. ADAMSON: They are producing some good ones, but the Blenheim—

Mr. DUPUIS: Keep that to yourself.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): Will the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): Did I understand him to say that the Fairchild Aircraft company of Longueuil was producing obsolete planes for the Canadian government?

Mr. ADAMSON: That is the information I was given to-day and I want to find out whether it is true.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland, Ont.): Your information is absolutely and teetotally wrong.

An hon. MEMBER: Teetotally?

Mr. ADAMSON: I am delighted to have the assurance of my hon. friend. I am glad to have his totalitarian views on these matters.

Mr. DUPUIS: Please proceed in a spirit of cooperation.

Mr. ADAMSON: That is just what I am trying to do. The information I have received is quite considerable, and I shall follow the suggestion of the Minister of National Defence for Air and give it to him in private. This afternoon we have witnessed members of the government rising in their places one after another and criticizing things which have gone before, things which happened five or even ten years ago. I should like to draw their attention to the speech made by the Prime Minister of this country at the opening of this nineteenth session of parliament. The Prime Minister said that he hoped that this house would carry forward and forget the old sores of the past. I commend his words to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. DUPUIS: And to the other side also.

Mr. ADAMSON: I commend those words to the hon. gentlemen who have been making political speeches all afternoon. I ask them to realize during the rest of this debate that we have a war effort to accomplish. Let us get on with it.

Mr. McNEVIN: Mr. Chairman, my sole purpose in taking part in this debate is to offer a few suggestions which I trust may be of value in prosecuting the task that lies ahead. The first item to which I desire to refer is the request which has been made for permission to organize volunteer units throughout Canada. I believe there is a large number of citizens who, by reason of age or from other causes, do not come within the category of those who can take part in the struggle now going on overseas. If they were granted permission to organize volunteer units, careful supervision would have to be exercised, but in the light of recent events it is not beyond the bounds of possibility or reason that suicide pilots might land in Canada and destroy valuable utilities and other important plants. It is also true that large numbers of our soldiers may have to be sent overseas as rapidly as possible, and from correspondence which I have received I have no doubt at all that large numbers of men are prepared to organize and to train without remuneration to deal with the menace to which I have referred. In adopting such a course we would only be following what has already been done in Great Britain, and I would therefore ask the Department of National Defence to give the matter thorough consideration.

Furthermore, as the mother country has assumed responsibility for Greenland, it would appear to me that if this dominion can give any assistance in guarding that country, we should be prepared to survey all such possibilities. We have in our northern areas large numbers of citizens who are accustomed to an extremely rigorous climate and would be well fitted to serve in Greenland.

I now come to the training of recruits for service in the tank units. Recent events have proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that the tank is the most formidable implement of warfare on the land. In our lumbering industry in Canada we have large numbers of young men who have had wide experience in the piloting of immense caterpillar tractors. These men are accustomed to driving these machines, weaving through the trees and round the stumps, hauling huge loads of logs, sometimes numbering hundreds on one load, and I believe we should encourage young men who have had that experience to enlist in the tank training units of the Canadian active service force.

There is another matter which I should like to bring up. Because one of the government-owned munition factories is located in the riding I represent, I revert to some remarks which I made in this chamber approximately twelve months ago, when I urged upon the committee of supply, then dealing with National Defence estimates, that this government-owned factory be completely reconditioned and put in readiness for the production of munitions. I am pleased to note that substantial progress has been made in that direction. Two divisions have been in operation for many months, and the shell factory will shortly be in full operation for the production of heavy shells. But I am not yet completely satisfied. I noted that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), in discussing the other night contracts let by the Department of Munitions and Supply, which is under his jurisdiction, intimated that in several lines buildings still had to be constructed for the production of various articles. The point I want to emphasize is that we have a number of buildings in the Lindsay munitions plant which have not yet been put into production.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): May I ask the hon, member if any shells are actually being manufactured there at the present time?

An hon. MEMBER: Ask the minister.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): The minister is not in the house.

Mr. McNEVIN: I believe that question was answered the other night and that the hon. member was in the chamber at the time.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): The hon. member said ·303 cups in his remarks yesterday, but I understand that all that the [Mr. McNevin.]

Lindsay plant is turning out is rolled sheets of brass. Is that right?

Mr. McNEVIN: That is not right. Now we have a division of that plant which might well be used for the filling of shells when shell production gets under way, and I want to impress upon the department that I shall not be content nor will the people of my riding nor the people of the province from which I come be content until the shells are completely filled in that plant. That would do away with the necessity of shipping the shells for filling to other parts of the province or the dominions.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, there are two elements which enter into the successful prosecution of war-the elements of speed and surprise-and in that connection I point out that the enemy have a much greater opportunity to use these two elements than those who are on the defensive. In order fully to promote our war effort, I would urge that we generate, to the fullest possible extent in keeping with efficiency in the organization and training of our units, and in the production of the necessary commodities, that element of speed which counts for so much on the field of battle. It is true that this is a trying, troublesome and difficult hour, and it may well be that before this maniac who is guiding the German hordes has been paid his just dues, every Canadian dollar, every ounce of our strength and every drop of our blood may have to be organized in a titanic effort to preserve the rights, the freedom, the very civilization and liberty that the British empire has stood for, not only for a few brief years but for centuries.

In conclusion I would suggest this—that we forget bitterness and recrimination and get on with the job.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to give some more information than was available yesterday with regard to the time during which bills of this sort have been passed. I have looked back as far as 1909, and bills have been passed since then in varying amounts. It was $500,000,000 in 1928, then $750,000,000 in 1931, 1932, 1933, 1935, 1936 and 1939. So that this is the amount that has been generally passed in the last few years. My hon, friend the member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) indicated that the interest on the first war loan of this year, 31 per cent, was only one-quarter per cent lower than in the case of the first public loan in the last war. That is not correct. The first loan in the last war was a 5 per cent issue at ten years, which sold at $97.50, yielding 5.34 which was tax exempt. So that you have, not one-quarter per cent but the difference between 3¼ and 5·34, plus the additional margin which would result from the fact that these bonds in 1915 were tax free.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Can the minister give a break-down of the figure so as to let us have a clearer conception of how much of this money will be used for general purposes, how much for public works, how much for unmatured securities and so on? I sent a note in advance to the minister, and I hope that before the resolution gets out of the committee stage we shall have a little more information showing the break-down.

Mr. RALSTON: I inquired whether there was any more information available, but I cannot give more than appears. There is a possibility of the refunding of roughly $326,000,000 up to March 31, 1941; that is, if that callable issue is actually called in The balance may be used for refunding other issues that may be made in the meantime, or it may be used for deficits. I may repeat what I said last night with regard to public works. It may not be used for public works unless public works are voted, except that with regard to public works which might come under defence works and which are not the subject of specific estimates, it might be used for that purpose.

Mr. MacNICOL: Will any of the money that will be raised under this resolution be used for the payment of any of the bills listed here as coming due in 1941?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend sees that there is one one per cent issue, $45,000,000, due March 15, 1941. It might be used for that.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the purpose of mentioning 1941 at all?

Mr. RALSTON: Up to March 31, 1941, the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. MacNICOL: There are some up to October.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, I started to give the committee the outstanding issues for the year to December 31, 1941. My hon. friend is quite right: we would not use it except for such issues as are either callable before the end of the fiscal year or mature before the end of the year.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then the only one that would be considered would be that of March 15, 1941?

Mr. RALSTON: March 15, 1941. 95826-25

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Will further supplementary estimates be down before this bill gets to second reading?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I should like to ask the same question of the Minister of Agriculture, who is now in his seat. Will any of this money be used for building more dug-outs in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GARDINER: There is nothing specific in the vote for it. I do not think any will be,

Mr. HANSELL: I am not going to weary the committee by making any long speech. To-night we listened to the hon, member for Témiscouata criticizing this group in this corner as well as men outside the house who could not defend themselves. We heard him criticize and ridicule the premier of Alberta, who is a minister of the crown, duly elected by the electorate of that province. As I listened to the hon. member, especially as he was trying to illustrate Canadian currency, and watched him tear up the order paper, I could not help feeling that it would have been better had he torn up his speech. I am sorry I was not able to speak as soon as the hon member had finished. I know that when people read Hansard they do not get the same reaction as we who sit and listen in the house. But another member got the floor and I was not able to follow the hon. member for Témiscouata. He is now out of his seat, I thought I saw him standing behind the curtains for a time and I hoped he would return. Whether he was hiding himself I do not know, but if I had been the hon. member I certainly would have hidden my head in shame. I deeply deplore that type of speech at this particular time. To see such a comedy enacted, while the flower of the British empire are shedding their blood upon the battlefields of Europe, is a tragedy imposed upon this committee. Hon. members to-night have mentioned Herr Hitler. I suggest to the hon. member for Témiscouata that such a speech as he made here to-night makes Herr Hitler laugh-and angels weep. I am afraid that much of to-day's proceedings in this house will form a very cloudy spot in the annals of Canadian parliamentary debate in years to come.

I was intending to ask the hon. member a question, but it is no use now because he is out of the house.

An hon. MEMBER: He will read it in Hansard.

Mr. HANSELL: But I do not suppose he will be able to answer my question. He said that the opinions he expressed were the opinions of his constituents, and his next statement was that they are the opinions of the majority of the Canadian people. What I should like to ask to-night is whether the opinions he expressed are the opinions of the government. If he reads Hansard, perhaps he could answer that privately. Or if one of the members of the government wishes to answer it he can; it would be interesting to this group.

I noticed that while some Liberals sitting behind the hon, member were laughing at his comedy, the Minister of Finance was not laughing. The hon, member is now in his place. He can read my speech so far as it has gone, but I will ask him the question. I noticed that the Minister of Justice was not laughing. The Prime Minister was not in his seat. He has been excused; if he were in his seat he would not have been laughing. The possibility is that he was wrestling with some of the greatest problems that any prime minister of this country has ever had to wrestle with. Yet some supporters of the government can rise in their places and waste the time of this committee-

Mr. DUPUIS: What is the hon. gentleman doing now?

