CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING AGE QUALIFICATION FOR VOTERS AND CANDIDATES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-172 entitled "An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (Qualifications of voters and candidates)".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Canada Elections Act in order that only Canadian citizens may be enfranchised in a general election or in a by-election, that the age of voters may be reduced to 18 and that only Canadian citizens aged 18 and over may be entitled to run in a general election or in a by-election.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIME MINISTER

PROVISION FOR RESTRICTION ON USE OF DESIGNATION

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-173, respecting the designation "prime minister".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the main reason I enter this bill is that I am a strong believer in Canada as a nation, a unified nation. I believe the more people we have running around this nation calling themselves "prime minister" the more confusion will be created in people's minds about our nation being one nation with one prime minister. I believe it is the height of hypocrisy for these premiers to talk of unity on one hand and then ask to be called "prime minister" on the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am a Canadian who believes only one man in Canada should be called the prime minister, and that man is the leader of our federal parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO INCREASE NUMBER OF STARTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. It is based on the economic council report that 200,000 new homes are needed annually to house the increase in population and new family formations. Since housing starts in Canada are now running at an annual rate of 178,000, what direct and positive action is the government considering to ensure that the need will be met?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubt whether a question of the type asked by the hon. member is in order. As he knows, under the rules he is obliged to ask more specific questions than this. He is asking the minister to make a general statement, and in my view this is the type of information that ought to be given on motions rather than by way of an answer to an oral question.

Mr. Loney: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the importance of the matter and because it is so late in the year to reach the goal that has been set for housing in Canada, I ask the Minister of Labour will he make a policy statement within the next few days on this very urgent matter.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, a number of statements have been made during recent weeks on the subject of housing, and I do not believe that any useful purpose would be served by making a further statement at this time.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Labour tell us whether there are any plans to cope with this situation and to reach the target?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is restating the question asked by the hon. member for Bruce.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask him whether he will discuss with the Prime Minister the possibility of tabling the letter from the Prime Minister to the premiers of the provinces calling for a conference on December 11 on housing and related matters, so that members of this house may see what the proposed agenda is.

Mr. Nicholson: I shall be glad to discuss this with the Prime Minister, but I think it might be more opportune to wait until the Prime Minister has had an opportunity to receive some replies.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, in view of the obvious responsibility which I believe the larger municipalities have in respect of housing, would the Minister of Labour tell us whether the municipalities will be represented in some way at this conference which is to be held in December?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I should think that would be a matter for the heads of the provincial governments to decide. The municipalities are creatures of the provinces. An invitation has been extended to the premiers of the ten provinces by the Prime Minister, and they have been asked to bring along such people as they think may be able to contribute to the discussion and advise the governments concerned.

TRADE

WHEAT—MAINTENANCE OF PRICE RANGE UNDER INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to the international grains arrangement, 1967, which he tabled in the house the day before yesterday. In view of the fact that this arrangement does not become effective, even if ratified, until July 1, 1968, is there any addendum to it or any written agreement among the signatories to carry out the assurance the minister gave the house last May that the price range contained in the agreement would be observed until the agreement came into effect?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, there is not. However, the hon. member is aware of the action taken by the government to ensure the minimum price to the Canadian Wheat Board of $1.95½ for No. 1 Northern.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister gave the assurance to the house that the price range would be maintained during this 11 month period when no agreement was in effect, was that the result of a gentleman's agreement among the signatories or merely a pious hope on the part of the minister?

Mr. Winters: I do not think I expressed a pious hope or referred to a gentleman's agreement. I said that generally speaking the price would respond to the forces of the market.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the minister. Do I take it, then, that the government intends to allow wheat to be sold in the world markets at less than the floor price?

Mr. Winters: If we have to, in order to meet international competition. I hope that will not be the case too often. Where it is the case the differential will be paid to the wheat board, as I outlined earlier.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—POSSIBLE RETURN OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell the house whether the situation in Cyprus is such, in his opinion, that we can expect our troops to return at the end of the year, when the agreement comes to an end?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question into consideration and give an answer tomorrow.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION INTO ALLEGED MARIJUANA SELLING BY U.S. DRAFT DODGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Solicitor General. It is an important question so far as the mental health of the Canadian people is concerned. Has the minister requested a full report from the R.C.M.P. in reference to the allegations by responsible people that draft dodgers from the United States are peddling marijuana? If not, is he prepared to ask the R.C.M.P. for such a report, and will he report to the House of Commons in this regard?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Whenever the R.C.M.P. receives a report that people are breaking the law it conducts an investigation. I assume it will do the same in these circumstances.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister misunderstood me. Will he inform the House of Commons if a report saying that draft dodgers are illegally peddling marijuana in Canada is brought to his attention?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I feel this is an extraordinary request, because I should have to report to the house every time someone violated the law of Canada in this regard. I confidently assure the hon. member that if such breaches of the law are brought to the attention of the R.C.M.P. it will take immediate action.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister without Portfolio who is sitting behind the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Laing: You have the wrong minister.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I am the Postmaster General.

Mr. Herridge: I beg your pardon. I am addressing my question to the Minister without Portfolio, wherever he is. I wish to ask this question, Mr. Speaker, to clear some confusion in my mind. Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister can help me. In view of the position taken by the Acting Prime Minister the other day with respect to the use of the phrase "prime minister", and considering the bill tabled by a member of his party this afternoon, can the Acting Prime Minister inform the house why the Minister without Portfolio writes to the premier of British Columbia addressing him as "Mr. Prime Minister"?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have always recognized the Minister without Portfolio to be a generous and very diplomatic man.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister satisfied that the security of the state is able to withstand the disclosure that the armed forces are substituting a soft shoe drill routine for parade ground-shaking foot stamping; and can an expectant nation soon learn of other significant reforms in the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POLLUTION

TAX INCENTIVES TO PLANTS INSTALLING CORRECTIVE DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the galloping danger from air pollution, will the government immediately consider allowing tax incentives to any plants that instal anti-pollution devices?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): These incentives already exist, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WAKEFIELD, QUE.—RETRAINING OF WORKERS LAID-OFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he tell the house if discussions have been or will be initiated between the Aluminum Company of Canada and his department about the retraining of that company's employees who will be laid off early next year when the processing plant in Wakefield shuts down for good?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member's question is not of any immediate urgency since he is alluding to a situation that might arise next year only.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, that matter is as important for the riding of Gatineau as that of Dosco for the maritimes.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Aluminum Company of Canada has advised the Department of Manpower and Immigration of its intention to close down its plant at Wakefield; there have been meetings of provincial authorities with the authorities of the company and representatives of our department; other meetings are scheduled and we shall do everything possible to find jobs for people who will be laid off, either in the area or in the locality itself.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—PROTECTION AGAINST EXPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In his absence may I direct it to his parliamentary secretary, who may take it as notice. What action is being taken by the minister's department to prevent the flooding of the Canadian market with United States turkeys at prices with which our Canadian producers cannot compete?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I thank the hon. member for his question. I shall bring it to the minister's attention.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED RETURN OF ARMED FORCES FROM EUROPE TO REDUCE EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister suggested to his colleague the Minister of Finance that a good way to bring about substantial reductions in government expenditures and save tens and possibly hundreds of millions of dollars is to repatriate the Canadian army brigade and air division from Europe?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask about communications between members of the cabinet.

Mr. Brewin: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. In an effort to assist the Minister of Finance to reduce government expenditures has the minister proposed the repatriation of the Canadian army brigade and air division now in Europe, thereby saving tens and perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I have not, Mr. Speaker, because I do not believe in that proposition.

[Mr. Marchand.]

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a question in the absence of the Prime Minister. Could the minister tell us when we may expect a report from the royal commission established to investigate security procedures in Canada?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be permitted to deal with this question. It is my understanding that we should not expect the report until some time in the middle of next year; and that is not a firm date according to my knowledge at this time.

Mr. Fulton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this commission was established in November of last year, could the minister tell us whether it has completed the taking of evidence?

Mr. Pennell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I am not able to be helpful to the hon. member on that point. The royal commission is, of course, master of its own procedure. It has been some time now since I appeared before the commission as a witness. At that time it was my understanding that they did not expect to complete their report until some time in 1968.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Royal.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Justice had something to add to the reply of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister a supplementary answer?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—USE OF HYPNOTISM ON ACCUSED IN COURT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was going to say "While I am on my feet", but I should say "While I am on the feet of the Solicitor General." I wish to reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Peace River about a case in British Columbia.

I did look into the case that was mentioned. Of course I cannot comment on it while it is sub judice. However, when the facts are established, if there are any evidentiary rulings after the case has been heard and an appeal, if any, disposed of, I undertake to have my department look into the matter to see whether the Canada Evidence Act should be altered in view of the decisions.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister arising out of his statement before the external affairs committee this morning. When will the Secretary of State for External Affairs announce the establishment of geographic co-ordinates to include Dixon entrance, Hecate strait and Queen Charlotte sound within the protected fisheries of Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I cannot give any firm date, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has already announced that within the next few days the government will issue a first list of geographical co-ordinates of points which will permit the immediate enforcement of a straight base line system along the coast of Labrador and the eastern and southern shores of Newfoundland, and that other lists will follow for other areas. When the minister makes the announcement in respect of other areas will he tell the house whether they will include the gulf of St. Lawrence as a body of water that will be defined as internal waters of Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, section 5 of the act authorizes the government to establish base lines. The base lines depend largely on the negotiations which are under way. We have established the co-ordinates along the coast of Labrador and the southeastern and southwestern coasts of Newfoundland. When we are in a position, depending on our negotiations, to announce further base lines, this will be done.

Mr. Basford: What countries are opposing the establishment of these co-ordinates on the west coast?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DRUGS

ANTI-TRUST PROCEEDINGS AGAINST UNITED STATES FIRMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Registrar General of Canada. I should like to ask him whether he or his department is in contact with the United States justice department's anti-trust division in connection with the prosecution by the United States government of three of the largest drug companies in the United States for conspiring to keep the prices of antibiotic drugs at an abnormally high price and if so whether action of a similar nature may be expected in Canada.

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): We are following the progress of that case in the United States.

Mr. Orlikow: On a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Registrar General whether his department has established or is considering the establishment of regular communications with the United States government in this respect.

Mr. Turner: As I said, Mr. Speaker, we are following the presentation of evidence in this case and will examine the results when the court makes its decision.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Registrar General whether the officials in his department are investigating the activities of these three companies, with reference in particular to the antibiotics aureomycin and terramycin, with a view to seeing whether a similar conspiracy obtains in Canada to maintain artificially high prices; and if such an investigation is being carried out what action does the government intend to take in the light of that investigation?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, as I have said, the director of investigation and research of the combines branch is following the course of this investigation in the United States. I think he can be expected to take whatever action his statutory duties demand. I am also watching it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF HUNTING RIGHTS UNDER MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is he in a position to inform the house what if any progress has been made in the effort to untangle the confusion and conflict which exist between the Migratory Birds Convention Act and the hunting rights which the Indian people in Canada supposedly have under their treaties?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now asking the minister to make a statement of policy. This is the type of statement which should be made on motions rather than at this time in our proceedings.

Mr. Simpson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked on several occasions, and if my memory serves me right we have been told that this matter is being considered by the government. I wonder whether any progress has been made.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I should like to assure the hon. member that a great many studies have been carried out in this respect and at the present time discussions are going on with the Indian people. We are hopeful that a solution will be found which will be acceptable to the Indian people and perhaps even to the hon. member.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the report on Indians and the law which was tabled in the house the other day I wonder how soon the minister can establish a system whereby special constables with R.C.M.P. training would be appointed to deal with the problems of law and order on our Indian reservations.

Mr. Laing: This is only one aspect of the recommendations made in the survey. We will be looking at the entire report, and I hope we will act in many fields in addition to the one mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This particular problem has been discussed many times. I am wondering whether the government has made any moves in anticipation of the recommendations contained in the report.

[Mr. Turner.]

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CALGARY—PROTESTS RESPECTING SHOP LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I promised the hon. member for Bow River to give him a report on the employment situation at the C.P.R. terminal shops in Calgary, where 400 men were laid off. Most of them have been called back; they know their return date. If a few of them are not rehired it will be quite easy to find jobs for them, because they are highly skilled labour.

GRAIN

REPORTED LACK OF BOX CARS AND SHIPPING ORDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. A week ago today he promised to ask the Canadian Wheat Board about the possibility of calling western farm representatives together to see what could be done with regard to the shortage of shipping orders and box cars in western Canada. I wonder if he can report on that now.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that. I had a report but I do not have it with me at the moment. I will discuss it with the hon. member.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR MEETINGS OF COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Many suggestions have been made by members of our party for changes in the rules and procedures. Will the minister, who is also chairman of the special committee on procedure, institute meetings of this committee on a regular basis in order that discussions may take place on proposed changes on a continuing basis rather than in the slipshod manner in which meetings are being called now?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we will be glad to schedule as many meetings as the members of the committee desire.

Mr. Starr: Will the minister consider calling one very shortly to set up a schedule?

FINANCE

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING INTEREST DISCLOSURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Can he inform the house when, on behalf of the government, he will be asking this house to refer to the finance committee the regulations under the Bank Act for the disclosure of interest rates, as he indicated he would be doing when this matter was before the house at an earlier date?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I thank the hon. gentleman for reminding me, and I will do so immediately.

TRANSPORT

TRENT CANAL—REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF PROPOSED FENCING OF LOCKS AND DAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. The Department of Transport have written letters suggesting they are going to fence in the locks and dams on the Trent canal system. I should like to ask the minister if he would take immediate steps to cancel any such projects.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made representations, but they could not be accepted as a question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSED LAY-OFFS OF RAILWAY MAINTENANCE OF WAY EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Norman Fawcett (Nickel Belt): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he has received representations from the brotherhood of maintenance of way employees regarding the imminent lay-off of a large number of track maintenance men by both the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National railways. If he has, what action is being taken to forestall this lay-off?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I have a recollection of some such communication having come in, but I should like to take the question as notice.

[Translation]

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REFERENCE TO HOUSE COMMITTEE OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. Solicitor General whether he intends to refer to a committee of the house the bill he has brought down on the abolition of capital punishment in certain cases so that the hon. members may hear experts and be more objectively informed on the bill?

[English]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I believe the answer will be determined in part by negotiations among the several house leaders. I must say that at this moment I am not expecting to follow the course suggested by the hon. member.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In the light of recent statements the minister has made concerning amendments to the Indian Act, I wonder if he could tell the house with some clarity when those amendments might be introduced.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): We have had repeated references back to the Indian people themselves so they will have an understanding of these amendments and be satisfied with them. It would appear to me now that it would be after Christmas before they can be introduced.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

ALLEGED FAILURE TO USE SERVICES OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES ECONOMIC COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the light of recent statements by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council critical of the fact that the Atlantic Development Board has failed to use their services in drafting a comprehensive plan of development for the Atlantic region, will the minister now be directing the Atlantic Development Board to make greater use, particularly in the next month or so, of the offices of APEC in order to produce a comprehensive plan for the region that will be meaningful?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Atlantic Development Board is moving toward the preparation of a comprehensive development plan for the Atlantic provinces. The studies preparatory to a general plan have concentrated on sectors of the economy such as, for example, forestry, agriculture and so on. The reports concerning these sectors will be considered at the next meeting of the Atlantic Development Board, and following these discussions it will be possible to move toward the preparation of a comprehensive development plan for the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister could indicate, in view of the more than a decade of experience of APEC, why the services of this most important body have not been used to date in the drafting of this plan.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question. In view of the report of APEC, to which I referred the other day, to the effect there is a great deal of confusion and lack of co-ordination existing among the various federal and provincial bodies concerned with the economic development of the Atlantic region, has the minister given any thought to having a conference of the agencies so we will avoid a situation such as APEC describes, within the province of Nova Scotia having three plans put before them rather than one?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to accept fully the comments of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council concerning the lack of co-ordination among these agencies concerned with economic development. It is true that in recent years we have set up many new programs and new agencies to operate in this field, and I am sure there is a desirable necessity for co-ordination. We are quite happy to consider any comments made by APEC in order to improve the situation.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESH WATER FISH MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether, after deliberation, the government has any immediate plans for the establishment of a fresh water fish marketing board as recommended by the McIvor commission.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I had hoped my hon. friend would be aware of the fact that this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Schreyer: Then may I put the question to the appropriate minister. In view of the many requests for action in this connection, can the minister say whether the government has formulated any immediate plan of action?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): We are still awaiting the reaction of several agencies and one or two provinces. In the absence of these replies we have not yet formulated a plan.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY— REPORTED DECISION TO INCLUDE RAILS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the remarks made yesterday in Charlottetown by Colonel Edward Churchill to the effect it has now been decided rails will be included in the design of the Prince Edward Island causeway, can the minister assure this house that such a decision has been taken by his department?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I should point out to the hon. member that neither the text nor the printed reports of this speech indicate that Colonel Churchill said a decision has been taken to include rails on the causeway.

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Departmental Administration—

1. Administration, operation and maintenance, $4,206,600.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Chairman, when the estimates of my department were studied last year, I pointed out that in the forthcoming months we would be introducing a number of projects and programs.

Since I have had the honour of directing the destinies of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, somewhat less than two years, we have adopted a new method to distribute training allowances which has proved remarkably effective as may be seen by the number of adults who adapt themselves to retraining.

We have implemented a good number of pilot projects which tend to direct our action towards the training of handicapped persons.

I proposed a new legislative measure for the creation of advisory bodies.

I presented a white paper on immigration.

We reformed the Immigration Appeal Board.

We have, for the first time, consolidated immigration selection procedures by adopting new regulations which will be of greater benefit to individuals while at the same time meeting our manpower needs in a more satisfactory way.

We have set up a new and better system of enrolment in vocational training institutions.

And we have implemented a new manpower mobility program.

Since most of those programs are now being implemented, the estimates which we are considering at this time naturally represent the amounts of money we need for the 1967-68 fiscal year. I also wish to take this opportunity to explain the other steps taken in order to provide Canada with an extensive range of services in the fields of manpower and immigration.

A manpower policy, Mr. Chairman, is short-lived if it does not provide both the workers and the employers with adequate services in their work or their everyday life. This is the basic need which inspired the program changes I have just mentionned. To this end, we made special efforts to improve the counselling services of the manpower centres all over the country.

I said earlier that we would not get short-term results, because our efforts can be successful only if they are continued all year long. Furthermore, some of our officials must undergo difficult readjustment to new working devices and new methods. Hence the necessity to institute personnel training programs of unprecedented scope in both the public and private fields. The results of such an effort take some time to become apparent. They are not obtained without transitory difficulties nor mistakes. On the other hand, I am pleased to point out that the first results are beginning to be felt much more quickly than I had hoped.

But we are far from having in each of our communities a manpower centre of Canada to which one would quite naturally apply to solve an employment problem, a centre which the community would consider has an essential unit of its activities, finally a centre which would help people to use their skills in the best possible way in the work of their choice. Such a centre would also provide employers with the services which they require to fulfil their task. We are not even close to such an ideal objective, but several of our offices should attain it before long.

Now, I want to say a few words about our staff. We all know that consultation is very demanding, that it is not practised as if the applicant were a mere cog in the production machinery of a large industry. It calls for interviews where emphasis must be placed on the employment needs of the applicant and the help he requires to find out all about his skill, to provide him with information he will understand and use to his advantage when applying for a job or a promotion. Of course, in many cases the information called for pertains to the jobs available, according to time and place. Then, placement must be done without delay and needs are sometimes more complex because quite often an individual is unable to improve his situation or his income because in order to take a vocational training course he has to move for which he needs financial help.

To this effect, our personnel must have a wide knowledge of human behaviour and of the nature and activity of the labour market. Therefore, each employee must make the best use of his knowledge and must have the personal qualifications required to give out proper advice and information.

Training for that type of work is difficult and sometimes upsetting. It concerns senior officials, some of whom have to temporarily relinquish their regular duties, receive the required training and subsequently take up their duties again, equipped with all that is required to face national manpower problems. Such training cannot be acquired overnight. Yet, it is essential to all our activities.

As the training of our staff improves, the quality of its work will be directly related to the amount of information available with regard to the labour market. On the one hand, the workers must know the place and the nature of a planned employment. On the other hand, the employers must know where to find the labour force. Therefore, the training courses the most apt to assist the workers must be known. Also, vocational counsellors, instructors and educators must be provided with appropriate information about the labour market to advise the students on planned careers and jobs.

That is why we need a very good information service about the labour market. As was emphasized by the Economic Council, there is no such service at the present time and we shall attempt to set up one. At the present time, we are recruiting labour force analysts. They will be responsible for the collection and analysis of information on present and future employment, and they will set up the information so that it may be useful to our labour advisers and to anyone else who might need it anywhere in Canada.

The ideal solution would be to make available to the labour advisers in the Canadian manpower centres a complete index of appropriate employment everywhere in Canada, which they could look up to direct toward appropriate jobs, the people looking for a suitable position. This objective will be reached progressively. We must rely on the co-operation of employers to get the necessary information and we shall win them over only if we can prove to them the usefulness of those services. As the services we provide for workers and employers improve, an increasing number of people will take advantage of them because they fulfil their needs. This will allow us to be better informed and present a truer picture of the Canadian labour market.

However, to reach our goals we must take giant steps and we cannot wait for this gradual process in order to act. In other words, we must sometimes have recourse to other sources of information which give us an adequate idea of the trends of the labour market, even though we do not know all the particular aspects. Together with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, we have agreed to undertake in September a quarterly review of jobs available in Canada. On the basis of experiments made in that connection in 1966, we invited the bureau to prepare and implement a detailed account of the number of jobs available by occupation, by area and by industry. These details will then be sent to the Canadian manpower centre, where manpower analysts will co-ordinate them so as to allow improvement of the service without delay.

We have two basic tools to improve employment conditions for workers: orientation and information. To these tools are added, of course, others means, the most important relating to manpower mobility and training. The new aspects of these two programs were explained to the house earlier this year, and I do not intend to give the details now. I want to say a few words about what has been done.

The increases in the training allowances which the house approved last year were very useful. A large number of unemployed underwent training last winter. During the last three months of 1966 and early in 1967 the monthly enrolment doubled compared to last year's.

But such success, impressive as it might be, is not enough. The figures alone cannot show the full scope of our new needs which, from now on, must deal with the improvement of adult training methods. To avoid spending money needlessly and disappointing the people, we must make sure that the training given to an individual is in keeping with the work he wants to do eventually.

That last consideration implies a change of attitudes and duties, both on the part of our officials, and those of the departments of education and of school boards.

The adoption of such a policy will necessarily give rise to certain tensions and difficulties. But the difficulties caused by our project have never been as great as some circles have led to believe by quoting figures for various months of the year. Anyway, the difficulties were short-lived. As soon as school starts in the fall, the number of adults taking training classes keeps on increasing. Last winter, the first year following the creation of our department, the number of students increased more than ever. The agreements entered into with the provinces, under the new program, will ensure a further increase.

This trend explains the estimates we had to prepare.

[English]

The financial provision for training operations totals $110 million in these estimates. This in itself is a considerable increase over last year. However, when these estimates were drawn up virtually a year ago we could not be sure how quickly training would develop under the new programs and therefore budgeted cautiously. As the Minister of Finance announced in his budget speech some time ago, the pace of activity which has in fact proved possible will require a substantial supplementary estimate.

I do not apologize for this. The need for more training is universally recognized. Our studies have fully confirmed that training, if it is for the right jobs, yields economic benefits far greater than its costs. In the world in which we now live workers need training to keep up with technological change and our economy needs their new skills. Adult occupational training is vital to the growth and technological development of the Canadian economy from one end of the country to the other. At the same time, and precisely because training is so important, I am determined to see that the large sums involved are well spent, even though this means we shall be criticized because we cannot provide everything that some individuals want or that some agencies think we should make available.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, it is necessary to convince the house of the importance of training as a means of improving productivity and living standards. We have to invest in our people. It is my concern to see that we do this on the increasing scale that is necessary, and at a pace at which we can ensure that the money is well spent.

Turning now to the matter of geographic mobility, the house will recall that a manpower mobility program was initiated late in December, 1965. From that date to the end of March, 1967, a total of 2,748 loans and grants were provided to workers and their families to help them move to communities where they could get jobs. That is not a large number. But it was an important program for the workers who did benefit; on the average their annual incomes were more than doubled. From the national viewpoint the increase in their output was, even in the first year, much greater than the amount the federal government paid to help them move.

Accordingly, as I announced in March, we began on April 1 a new program which eliminates loans and enables many more people to benefit from grants. Since then the rate of utilization of the program has increased to about five times what it was last year. In the first four months of this fiscal year over 3,600 people received grants to move; of these, over 2,200 were relocation grants and the remainder exploratory.

I should say that except in special emergency cases like that of Bell Island the program is not being used to move large numbers of people away from particular areas. Most of the moves are within a province or region. That is to say, in most cases we are able to find new jobs without having to move people too far from home. I should like to reaffirm too that the mobility program is being implemented in line with the economic plans and programs of the provinces and of other federal government agencies.

I would like to turn now, Mr. Chairman, to the other major responsibility of my department—immigration. In October, 1966, I tabled in this house a white paper on Canadian immigration policy. As you know, this white paper has been given intensive study by a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, and I would like to take this opportunity again to express my thanks and appreciation to members of the committee for their careful consideration of immigration principles and policies. Their frank criticisms, as well as their suggestions, were of immense help in framing the new regulations which took effect on October 1.

I intend to submit a new immigration act to this house as soon as the timetable allows. I will not now take the time of the house to discuss in detail the new regulations or the policy details which I discussed with the special committee last April 18. The regulations are, I believe, a great step forward. They are completely non-discriminatory. They give increased recognition to family relationships. At the same time they ensure that the flow of immigration is better attuned to our economic needs. They give us for the first time a consistent basis for considering immigration applications from people already here as visitors.

Perhaps most important of all, the new regulations mean that for the first time the rules governing the selection of immigrants are spelled out in detail for all to see. This means that the assessment system will enable immigration officers to apply the same standards in the same way to all potential immigrants. In combination with the new appeal board, which has now completed its preparations and will be ready officially to start work in a few weeks, maybe within a week or ten days, it should provide an objectivity and a humanity which it has not in the past been able to ensure. I am moved to say, immodestly perhaps but sincerely, that I believe we have made a very long step forward in this difficult area of public policy.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The number of immigrants who came to Canada in 1966 was the second largest since the end of the war, 194,773 people. That number was exceeded only in 1957 when, as hon. members will recall, some very exceptional circumstances prevailed. A successful immigration movement of this size can be sustained only if we are successful in recruiting and training a high quality staff, particularly selection officers. We have improved our services and must continue to do so to get the full benefits of the new policy.

As I have stated on a number of occasions, I believe it is important to bring the flow of French speaking immigrants to Canada more into line with the language characteristics of our population. This is not going to be easy, but I am determined to achieve all the improvement possible.

Last year the number of immigrants from France, Switzerland and Belgium totalled over 12,000, an increase of about 45 per cent over the previous year and the highest figure on record. It will be higher this year. Over 11,000 have already arrived, but this still represents a much smaller percentage of our total immigration movement than we ought to be able to attract.

We cannot take the most effective action to stimulate a greater movement of immigrants from France and other French speaking countries until we know precisely what has been causing the small movement to date. Accordingly we have made arrangements with a group of social scientists at the University of Montreal to carry out a number of studies on the attitudes of people in some of these countries to Canada, on things which stimulate them to migrate, on the experiences in various parts of this country of those who do come to Canada, and on the way in which different groups in Canada regard and respond to such immigrants. We are just beginning to get findings from these studies, and I hope they will enable us to do more to continue the increase in the number of French speaking immigrants.

Another point I would like to make about our immigration activities concerns the steps we have taken to co-ordinate them with our manpower programs. This co-ordination is going forward in two important ways.

[Mr. Marchand.]

First, the build-up of our labour market information system includes provision for making data on our manpower needs available more frequently and more reliably to immigration officers throughout the world. Thus they will be in a better position to counsel those who wish to come to Canada about opportunities and occupational requirements.

Second, we have changed the way in which responsibilities for immigrants once they arrive in Canada are handled. The strengthening of our manpower services across Canada provides an opportunity to ensure that newcomers to this country who are seeking employment are able to obtain the same help as Canadians. This is both in their interest and in ours. Accordingly, the former settlement and placement services of the immigration division have been transferred to the manpower division of the department and integrated with our manpower services. This change has inevitably involved some minor administrative problems, but it is the way in which I believe we can soon render more effective services to immigrants.

I would not want that opinion to be interpreted complacently. On the contrary I would emphasize that there is room for considerable improvement in the help we give to immigrants to get settled in Canada, help which is well worth while in the national interest as well as in the interest of the individual. This is one of the important problems on which my department will try to make substantial progress next year.

At the same time I have to say that the increasing volume of international travel is taxing our existing staff and facilities to the limit. There is the same problem here as in our efforts to help Canadian workers find better jobs. If immigrants are to be fairly selected and are to make a maximum contribution to our economic growth, and if international visitors are to be treated with speed and courtesy, we must have adequate numbers of well trained and efficient staff.

I have referred throughout this review to many programs. But programs approved by parliament are in themselves only expressions of good will. To make them work requires money and people.

I have touched on the highlights of our activities for the period to which these estimates apply. We are trying to do many things, some of them unusually complex and difficult. We have encountered some problems and we will encounter more. We are doing and we will do our best to meet and solve those problems.

It is very obvious, I believe, that an active, co-ordinated manpower policy can make an enormous contribution to our economic and social progress. It is the response we have to make to accelerating technological change, which requires us all to adjust our ways of work on a scale and with a frequency that are quite new to human experience. But while it is all very well to see the need and legislate the necessary organization into existence, what counts is to make it work. My department exists to serve people, to meet individual needs. Our task is to offer people the information, advice and assistance which will enable them to push open the door to greater economic opportunity. This can only be done person to person.

I believe we have set up the right kind of organization. We have made the right changes in the programs. We are trying to bring our services to the Canadian people where they are needed, how they are needed, when they are needed. I would be the last person to make any large claims for what we have actually achieved so far. We have not set out to get easy, quick results. We have set out to build properly, but I think we are building fast enough to look forward before too long to being able to say that Canada clearly has the best manpower programs and services in the world. I will not be satisfied with any lesser achievement.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say at once that the field covered by the Department of Manpower and Immigration is one of special importance. Expenditures of the department for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, are listed at almost $313 million, and a few moments ago the minister said, definitely that these expenditures will be added to by supplementary estimates yet to come before us. However, his department is a rarity among departments in that the estimates show a decline of some $25 million compared with last year. Some $20 million of the estimated expenditures comes under the immigration division. Consequently about $293 million is left to be expended on manpower services.

Our job as legislators is to determine whether the expenditures are justifiable. If they are not then they should be criticized. Vote 10 commits the government to an expenditure of $206 million, in respect of the field of development and utilization of manpower. Of this amount, $120 million is set aside for capital assistance to trade and vocational schools, most of which is now being phased out.

I should like to say a few words about this program which dates back to June of 1961. That was the time the agreements were signed by most of the provinces with the exception of Quebec, which signed later. This is a program which did a great deal to provide the very necessary facilities for the training of our labour force both in the youth and adult groups. After the present government came into office it established a quota basis, based on the per capita of population, and applied it to the moneys already received. Consequently those provinces which had not utilized this program prior to this government coming into office had made available to them millions of dollars for the construction of new schools. This was based on the old agreement in respect of which the federal government had participated to the extent of 75 per cent of the total cost and the provinces to the extent of 25 per cent. This had the effect of alleviating the tax burden on the municipalities for the construction of these facilities.

Other provinces, and I am referring particularly to Ontario, had utilized this program to the extent that when the quotas were set by this government they found they had very little entitlement under the program to the 75 per cent participation by the federal government. Under the quota system the federal government participates only to the extent of 50 per cent. The province of Ontario, which I take only as an example, is a very heavily industrialized province in which a high level of skill is required. An industry in that province which has exceeded the 50 per cent ceiling receives no benefit from the federal government except through the issuing of debentures. These are related to the number of trainees who participate. If there are 500 trainees in a particular school in Ontario, and only 50 are eligible through federal government referrals, then federal participation would be to the extent of only 10 per cent of the total cost of construction. This is most unfair. It places a burden on provinces which are endeavouring to establish the necessary training facilities. The need now is just as great if not greater than it was in 1961. Our labour force is expanding year after year. Instead of a curtailment in the participation of the federal government there should be an acceleration. We must make certain that facilities are available so that skills and trades so vitally necessary in this age of technology and automation can be acquired.

The minister knows very well that the percentage of jobs available to those persons who have no trade or skill is getting smaller and smaller. The day will come, as the minister himself has said, when everyone will require retraining at least two or maybe three times during a lifetime. This program should be accelerated. The government seems to have lost sight of the fact that there is a growing need for this program. I hope the minister will give this matter serious consideration.

In Ontario particularly the amount of assistance formerly available in respect of the construction of new facilities is not forthcoming now. Referrals by the manpower services have been cut in half in the last year. Nevertheless, unemployment has increased. It is noteworthy that as of September 30, 1966—these figures are available from the Ontario department of education—there had been 7,393 referrals for training by federal manpower offices and as of September 30 this year only 3,896 referrals, a drop of 50 per cent.

This area should be reviewed carefully. If the minister looks into it, he will find these figures are correct. The provincial government has the responsibility of the training curriculum. A 50 per cent drop between last year and this year in federal referrals is very serious. There should be an increase rather than a 50 per cent decrease. A drop of this nature in one year represents a very drastic phasing out of training in the province of Ontario particularly since future grants are based on the proportion of federal referrals. This situation is a cause of grave concern to provincial training officials. These people are wondering whether under this government training programs are being left high and dry.

Another cause for concern is the manner in which the three-year rule is being applied by the federal government. Under the three year rule persons cannot be referred for training until they have been out of school for three years. Then they qualify to receive federal training. This means there is no provision for training high school drop-outs, because they have not had three years in the labour force. I submit that this is precisely the area in which training is needed. It is directly related to the question which we as members of parliament are bound to deal with, whether the taxpayer is getting full value for the expenditure of $206 million in this particular field. I submit that if that group is being left out to which above all training should be made available, that is, the drop-outs, perhaps even the "hippie" group, then this program is not doing a good job.

Perhaps the minister feels that drop-outs should not be disturbed and should be allowed to go on collecting unemployment insurance if they have sufficient contributions rather than being asked to take training. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, there are a great number who are not qualified to receive unemployment insurance because of the lack of time spent in employment. They do not have contributions sufficient to qualify. The act was designed to help young people fresh on the labour market to get training so they can obtain useful and gainful employment.

Mr. Marchand: Perhaps the hon. member might permit an interruption. They can receive training. The only thing is that they cannot receive allowances.

Mr. Starr: That is right; that is what I am getting at. That is what this government is doing. They can receive training provided somebody else pays the allowance. The government is not taking this responsibility. That is where this government is falling down and shirking its responsibility to the young people of our country.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: It is a form of blackmail.

Mr. Starr: I submit to the minister that if he has any interest in the young people of our country, in all fairness those who have dropped out of school and have not been in the labour force for the required three years are just as much his or his government's responsibility as the responsibility of the provinces. If he wishes to see our labour force fully trained in the future with the skills that are necessary in modern society, he must assume his responsibilities and give this entire question serious consideration. The three year provision ought to be eliminated.

There are reports from the provinces that the minister's department is being arbitrarily restrictive in its interpretation of "training". I ask the minister, how can young people deal with blueprints, instructions and other documents if they are not proficient in English or French? Being made proficient in either language is part of training. Yet such language courses have been outlawed in the form of assistance given by his department.

Mr. Woolliams: And that is quite ridiculous.

Mr. Starr: I ask the minister to look into this situation and to rescind this regulation or interpretation, if it be an interpretation.

I like to speak kindly of the minister. I have known him for a number of years. He has wide experience of labour conditions and he knows that for a youth to work in a modern, automated industry he must be able to read and write and follow written instructions proficiently.

I also ask the minister to find out why fewer and fewer people are, because of restrictions, being referred for training by manpower offices. Are we to take it that young Canadians now enter the labour market fully trained? Is that why the minister has not included our young people in this program? Or are we to take it that the labour force has finally caught up to automation? I cannot believe that; and I do not think the minister believes it either, especially if one scrutinizes carefully the statement he made earlier today.

The provinces have not found that our young people are qualified to cope with automation. In Ontario the need for training is greater than ever before, according to the authorities, and the parliamentary secretary to the minister knows this because he comes from a highly industrialized region of Ontario. Provincial authorities know that it is almost hopeless for any young person who is without qualifications to attempt to obtain a job in industry. The parliamentary secretary and the minister will agree with that statement. The minister, with his unrivaled experience in this field, will certainly agree with it. The department is fortunate to have at its head a minister who has such a sound grasp of labour conditions. It is fortunate to be headed by a minister who feels such sympathy for Canadian workers. Nevertheless, I ask him not to shirk his responsibilities to the young people of this country.

I ask him to look into the matters I have raised and to see whether there cannot be more referrals by his offices than at present. I am sure the declining number of referrals, does not conform to policy. Something must be wrong with the instructions or regulations and they ought to be amended. Second, to provide for a more flexible interpretation of training, subjects that are not directly part of the technical field ought to be provided for our young people when knowledge of those subjects is essential to enable them to hold down a job. These subjects are not being taught under federal training provisions at present. It is important that they should be. Third, the minister should take steps to waive the three year waiting period. It is not working. It is causing hardship. This policy affects most strongly young people just out of school. They should be given an immediate opportunity for training. Hope of a place in the labour market and in society should not be denied them for three years before allowing them to qualify for training allowances. After all, Mr. Chairman, Canadians are putting up $206 million for these programs and they are entitled to expect results.

In his opening statement the minister said that manpower services had been improved. I hope he is right. In many areas they needed improving. Manpower policies have caused a great deal of dissatisfaction throughout the provinces. The minister knows this because it has been brought to his attention. Confusion and uncertainty about policies are prevalent. As a matter of fact, there are no set goals. Huge sums, nevertheless, are spent without bringing desired results.

I suggest to the minister that in order to ease some of the uncertainty the whole question of training should be referred to a standing committee of the House of Commons. The entire policy ought to be looked into thoroughly. We should review completely the department's training programs. Many questions could be asked in order to clear the air. Witnesses from the provincial departments could be called and we could learn whether the department's policies are working as the provinces wish to see them work. We might learn whether the provinces are able to implement the policies and whether areas of need are being neglected. We ought to hear from labour representatives and from management. The whole subject should be aired. Questions should be asked. I wish to pose questions, and I am sure other hon. members participating in the debate would wish to do so.

With regard to this debate, I hope the minister will not wait until items are reached before answering questions. It will be beneficial to us all if at some point in this discussion he will answer some of the questions.

I wish to ask for a start: What is our program with respect to on-the-job training in designated areas? These are areas trying to entice new industries. Is there any provision whereby employees in those areas have the opportunity to be trained for jobs? Such jobs would be in those industries which have been enticed to come to such areas by the tax incentives of the government.

We should have information about this program. There is a certain amount of confusion about this matter in the minds of many people to whom I have spoken.

Another question is: What arrangements have been made with the provinces in respect of training? Are people being trained under new facilities or are they being trained under the old facilities? What facilities have been agreed in the arrangements between the federal government and the provinces? How many man-hours of training per year have been agreed upon? I understand that the figure is something like 18 million man-hours of training per year. If that figure is not right, the minister can correct me. These are some of the questions the minister should answer.

Mr. Marchand: It is eight million days of training.

Mr. Starr: My figure is smaller because I said 18 million man-hours of training. Eight million days of training would amount to a great many more million man-hours.

Mr. Marchand: For sure.

Mr. Starr: For sure is right.

Mr. Marchand: You are too conservative.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: I ask this question which the minister should be prepared to answer. If the full time agreed upon is not being used, is the federal government committed to pay for the full time? Is the government, in other words committed, to pay for the full time whether or not it is used? The minister nods, so the answer is yes. These are some of the things we should know. How much is this program costing the taxpayers of this country?

If we have to pay for the full time, why are we not utilizing it to the full? If our young people are being paid training allowances, why are they not being trained? Are we paying for empty days in this training program? The minister contracts for eight million days of training a year and says he will send our young people to utilize this time. But if this is not happening—and it seems that it is not—then we are paying for empty days of training. Even where there is no full participation—in some cases nobody is participating—this government is still paying for the time. The minister agrees that this is correct. I know from what I have heard that the provinces will insist upon full payment whether the government uses the full time or not. We find that as of September 30 there was a drop of 50 per cent in the referrals compared with last year.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Starr: I ask the minister to answer some of these questions and give us a full picture in respect of this huge expenditure. We should know whether it is being fully utilized and whether it is giving full value to the taxpayers of this country.

I wish to spend a short time now in dealing with our economic development. Canada has a rapidly growing labour force, an increasing consumer demand, high potential output and an expanding economy. The question of productivity is causing concern in this country. Unless it is tackled in a realistic way we will find ourselves in a situation in which we will not be able to compete. One of the ways in which productivity could be assisted by this government is through a reduction in government spending, which contributes to inflation; and a consequent reduction in taxation—I hope the Minister of Finance is listening—which adds to the cost of production and has a debilitating effect on productivity. The minister knows these things and no doubt has on many occasions brought them to the attention of his cabinet colleagues.

The advent of compulsory medicare, which according to the Prime Minister will take place on July 1, 1968, for those provinces which can afford it, will put another burden on the shoulders of the wage earner in this country and will further add to the costs of production through imposing additional taxation upon the economy. In view of this and all the other fixed charges which this government has assumed, it now has the choice of increasing income and corporation taxes or slicing some of its free-wheeling expenditures.

We read with a great deal of interest that the Minister of Finance has now been able to face his cabinet colleagues with the realistic aspects of the financial situation of this country and the government is whittling away at these expenditures. It will be very interesting to all of us to learn what success he has met with in overcoming the stubborn resistance of his cabinet colleagues.

Knowing this government's reluctance to compromise with its divine right to be extravagant, one can only assume that it will raise taxes, adding a further burden to the economy and further reducing the productivity of the nation. It is quite evident, in view of the answer given to my colleague the hon. member for Perth the other day when he asked the Minister of Finance whether he intended to bring in another budget, that the minister is seriously contemplating doing so solely in order to increase taxes. I say this is evident because of the inconclusive answer given by the minister and the hesitancy with which he gave that answer. I notice that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has left the chamber for a moment.

An hon. Member: He is behind the curtain.

Mr. Starr: I apologize. I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada. It deals with economic policies on page 258. I quote as follows:

> The second basic strategy of economic policy, strengthening the supply and productivity capabilities of the economy, should involve such things as these: measures for promoting greater efficiency, competition, manpower mobility, training and education, and more ready adjustments to technological and other change—

The minister is no doubt familiar with the recommendations with regard to increased adult training as a means of contributing to increased productivity and output. I feel that these matters cannot be too strongly emphasized because there is every evidence that this government is completely unconscious of the vital importance of improving productivity. They even abandoned and disbanded the productivity council we set up. It was making great headway toward reaching the goal of increased productivity.

So far as this government is concerned, productivity seems to be a bad word. Productivity simply means producing at a cost that will enable us to compete in world markets. Anything which adds to the cost of production is anti-productivity. Anything that reduces the cost of production is pro-productivity. Nothing has added more to cost of production in this nation than the economic policies of this government.

The Minister of Finance, referring to the removal of the 11 per cent tax on production machinery and equipment on October 4, said as reported on page 2811 of Hansard:

> The removal of the sales tax on production machinery and equipment is an important measure to help achieve lower costs of production—

• (4:10 p.m.)

Who imposed that tax? If its removal helps to achieve lower costs, what did the imposition do? It increased costs, and yet the same government imposed it just a few years ago.

Mr. Sharp: We did it because of the mess we found when we arrived.

Mr. Starr: There was no mess. When the Liberal government arrived things were good. All you did was to throw the money of the taxpayers around as if it were water. Now you find yourselves in a mess and you will have to take drastic action by increasing taxation.

Mr. Sharp: We found this country in a financial mess.

Mr. Starr: The imposition of the 11 per cent tax raised the cost of production all along the line and helped bring about a reduction in productivity, about which most authorities in this country and elsewhere, including the International Monetary Fund, are warning this nation in most positive terms.

Mr. Sharp: Has my hon. friend forgotten the exchange crisis in 1962 and 1963?

Mr. Starr: Certainly not, but what did this government have prior to that time? Nevertheless, when it happened we tried to rectify it.

In the report of the Economic Council of Canada at page 259 there is another reference to the economic inequality existing in eastern Quebec and the Atlantic area. This is not something new. We have been speaking about this for three years but the government has not been listening. It has been dabbling with this problem because it has the reputation now of being a government of dabblers. As a matter of fact the situation in eastern Ontario, western Quebec and the Gaspé, the Lake St. John area and in the greater part of the maritimes is a grave national problem. Recently the government locked out the farmers when they came to parliament. This is the first time such a thing has been done in Canada to Canadians by a Canadian government. It almost made one ashamed that a government which has neglected the rural economy should close the doors of parliament.

Unless we are to consider human resources as just so many statistics, what must be done in the eastern area is to restructure the economy completely. The eastern Canadian farmer, the farm worker and the rural and semi-urban worker must be given an opportunity to avail themselves of the kind of training programs that we have made available to the city workers, and that also includes the young people about whom I spoke earlier. I ask the minister, does he not feel that the continuing high rate of unemployment in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces is related to the uncertainty and uneasiness existing in these areas? Does the minister not feel that under the manpower provisions a positive program could be evolved which would produce a higher level of training skills throughout these provinces? Surely this is an area in which the federal government should act positively and give every possible aid to the provincial authorities and not add to their confusion by their uncertainty and their lack of interest. There is no question in my mind but that a continuing deterioration of the rural economy in eastern Canada is a serious national problem which should be recognized as such by the federal government and should be attacked by the establishment of national programs rather than by the present band-aid approach for which this government is noted.

The case of Dosco is a good example. When incidents of this kind arose when we were in office—and I predict we will soon be back in office—those who were opposite us howled to high heaven—as the hon. member for Norfolk is doing now. They howled about the inactivity of the government. Now they sit on their hands. Every lay-off which took place in those days was a national disaster and the fault of the Conservative government—that was the hue and cry of those who now sit on the treasury benches. Today the shutting down of whole industries fails to rouse them from their sleepwalking.

Mr. Woolliams: What complacency.

Mr. Starr: There is a whole section of the report of the Economic Council of Canada which I suggest the minister and his colleagues could read with profit if they have not already done so. It is headed "Policy Implications". At page 261 of the report, the economic council bluntly states:

> These developments have led to a growing uneasiness in Canada about the current pace of the over-all advance in government spending. The council shares this uneasiness.

Surely the government cannot say the handwriting is not on the wall. Here is a government agency pointing out that uneasiness is being felt across the country and that it shares this uneasiness. It is not only a question of the amount of spending being done but the direction which it is taking. The council points to the lack of co-ordination, the failure to define objectives, the fumbling and the multiplicity of programs. It gives guide lines which the Minister of Finance might well read to his colleagues at cabinet meetings when he is trying to get them to cut their expenditures in the present fiscal year, never mind the next fiscal year to which he has given so much publicity recently. Since they are not paying any attention to him they may pay attention to the guide lines of the council which appear on page 263 of the report.

I make these suggestions to the minister because in the field of manpower we are dealing with human beings and at times one gets the impression that the government tends to become a victim of self-hypnosis. The government puts down programs on paper without working out the details and it forgets that the test lies in their application to human situations. This does not seem to bother some of those on the other side. They do not care what happens to the young people who are drop-outs from school. They can join the "hippies" so far as the government is concerned; there are other government agencies which can deal with that problem. I ask the minister to look into that situation and to participate in the planning of training programs which could now be extended to these young people so that they can have faith in Canada and look toward a better way of life.

At this point I should like to deal briefly with immigration. I suggest that the government should not apply the points system too rigourously to human beings. There is a tendency in this modern age to use digits and formulae like the points system in relation to human beings. I suggest to the minister that this country was not built by people who came here under a points system. Such a system was never heard of in those days. Our country was built by all kinds of people, a great number of whom would have had difficulty in gaining admission under the new criteria. I have wondered, since the minister announced the points system, whether John A. Macdonald would have qualified for admission to this country. I have my doubts.

I have a suggestion to make to the minister in this regard. If a prospective immigrant has relatives already established in Canada who are willing to vouch for him, he should be given a great deal better treatment than such people are receiving today. I have a good many immigration cases, as many other members have. I realize that the minister has used his prerogative as often as he possibly could. I hope he will continue to use it and that the kindness and compassion which he possesses will continue to be an instrument of our immigration policy.

If a person has relatives in Canada and the prospect of being self-supporting, surely that person should be allowed to enter. There are a great many cases of hardship caused by the refusal to allow relatives of people already established to come to Canada. I feel that sometimes the government is participating in the separation of families. This is an area where the minister can override some of these rigid regulations. I quite understand that an employee of the branch must apply the regulations, but the minister has a special prerogative. He is full of kindness and it should be applied in these cases. As Canadians and as human beings, Mr. Chairman, we cannot subscribe to a policy of heartlessness in connection with immigration. I ask the minister to consider these suggestions seriously because these matters are weighing heavily on thousands of Canadians today.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Waterloo South is going to deal, on behalf of this party, with that aspect of the minister's speech and estimates relating to manpower. I propose, if I may, to discuss the aspects of the minister's responsibilities which affect immigration. Before I do so, however, I should like to say one word in strong support of the position of the acting leader of the opposition in connection with the three year rule and the hardship it is causing to many of the very people the minister says the policies of this government are seeking to aid. I refer particularly to the immigrants who are brought into this country under a policy which the minister says is designed to add their skills and abilities to the labour pool and to assist not only the people themselves but the whole productive potentiality of this country. However, as the hon. member for Ontario said, under the three year rule the number of people available for training in my city of Toronto has been cut in half. This is a tragedy for some of these people.

It is true, as the minister remarked, that these people are eligible for training, but they are not eligible for any allowances. This means that they have to go on relief. They cannot take any job that is available to them because they cannot retrain themselves so as to gain the skills that are necessary. One aspect of this matter concerns the younger people of high school age who need special instruction in English in order to qualify themselves to go to school. These are the children of immigrants, 15 or 16 years of age, who are wisely invited by the government to come to this country. Naturally they need to brush up on their English. However, the government gives no support at all to the special schools that exist to try to help these younger immigrants to qualify.

This seems to me to be a case of the left hand of the minister having no idea of what his right hand is doing. On the one hand, he tells us it is the policy of his department to aid immigrants who come to this country. On the other hand, his department introduces regulations which result in many of these recent immigrants having no opportunity for training or to become productive members of this country. The minister's actions and his words are totally inconsistent with each other.

I propose to turn now to the question of immigration as such rather than manpower. The minister, with his natural and unassuming modesty, has somehow or other prevailed upon himself to praise the policy of the immigration branch in such glowing terms that even if I had something nice to say about it I would not find it necessary to do so. It is true that the changes in the regulations, the introduction of the points system, the introduction of legislation establishing a new appeal court, are all steps forward. Exactly how they are going to work, no one is quite sure yet. I am still a little dubious about the points system.

As I understand it, you get 15 points if the immigration officer thinks you look as if you may have personal initiative. I do not know if I could ever persuade an immigration officer that I had personal initiative. How is he going to tell? By the gleam in a man's eye? I would hate to be examined somewhere and told: You have passed all the written examinations but I can tell by looking at you that you have no personal initiative and therefore you lose out because of that. In my opinion this is a very unsatisfactory aspect of the points system.

I should like to ask the minister one question. Has the legislation establishing the new immigration appeal court been proclaimed and is it in effect now? I have seen announcements of appointments to the new court but so far as I am aware the act has not been proclaimed. It must be a number of months now since parliament passed that act, and although we did not feel it was perfect we thought it was an improvement. I should like to see it proclaimed and carried into effect. Perhaps I am smarting a little as a result of recent treatment, but with all respect to the present immigration appeal board I think it is high time the legislation was proclaimed so that we could ascertain how the new appeal system works. I hope the minister will mention that point.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I think it is a little early in the day for us to be sure how these new regulations and the points system of assessing applicants are going to work. The points system is fairly complicated. For example, you must have so many points to qualify if you are unsponsored, you must have so many points if you are nominated by a relative, and I do not think you have to have any points at all if you are sponsored by a close relative. This may work very well but I think we must wait and see before we can be sure we have found the real solution.

However, I suggest to the minister that he must not rest at this point. In the white paper on immigration which was published in October, 1966, I believe, and hailed as a new charter of immigration policy, a number of suggestions were made that could be implemented by administrative action, and some administrative action has been taken. There were others which could be dealt with by changes in the regulations, and some of the regulations have been changed. However, a very large number of the suggestions made in the government white paper and a very large number of the suggestions made to the joint committee on immigration can only be dealt with by legislation.

On December 16, 1966 the assistant deputy minister of immigration put before the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on immigration a list of proposals contained in the white paper requiring amendments to the Immigration Act. I suggest that the minister take a look at these and tell us why at this stage we have not at least a revised immigration act in draft form. One year has passed since the white paper was published and these specific changes to the act were suggested.

It is pointed out in the white paper, and very eloquently and justly in my judgment, that the international implications of Canadian immigration policy are important. The following sentence appears at page 17, paragraph 38, of the white paper:

> Any discrimination, in the selection of immigrants, creates strong resentments in international relations.

Then in the next paragraph:

> More will be done to maintain and improve international relations by removing the last vestiges of discrimination from immigration legislation and regulations—

One of the first matters mentioned under the international implications of our immigration policy is the removal of the last vestiges of discrimination from immigration legislation, which the white paper points out is very important to our international relations. Yet, Mr. Chairman, there continues to exist on the statute books a provision in the Immigration Act which confers authority on this parliament to do precisely that, namely, to discriminate in respect of immigration. Let me read section 61:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations ... respecting
> (g) the prohibiting or limiting of admission of persons by reason of
> (i) nationality, citizenship, ethnic group, occupation, class or geographical area of origin;
> (ii) peculiar customs, habits, modes of life or methods of holding property,
> (iii) unsuitability having regard to the climate, economic, social, industrial, educational, labour, health or other conditions or requirements existing, temporarily or otherwise, in Canada or in the area or country from or through which such persons come to Canada—

As I say, Mr. Chairman, this legislative authority to discriminate on ethnic or, to put it bluntly, on racial grounds and on these other grounds of discrimination remains in the statute books of this country. I brought in a private member's bill when I first became a member of the house to amend the Immigration Act in this respect, and I was always told—

Mr. Wahn: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Brewin: Certainly.

Mr. Wahn: The hon. member has indicated that this section of the Immigration Act authorizes the passing of regulations which might be discriminatory. As all members of this committee are aware, regulations have in fact in the past been made under this section which were discriminatory. The regulations which were introduced effective October 1 are not discriminatory. Is the hon. member not familiar with this fact?

Mr. Brewin: I am entirely familiar with it, Mr. Chairman, and I give all credit to the minister and to those who supported him in removing discrimination from these regulations. Members sometimes boasted that the minister's predecessors had done this but they had not. The present minister did it, and I give full credit and honour to him for that.

What I am pointing out—and the hon. member for St. Paul's should be aware of this—is that the white paper says that more should be done to remove the last vestiges of discrimination from our immigration legislation. I am not complaining that the regulations discriminate. I am saying that the act authorizes the governor in council to do so any day he wants to, even though I do not think he intends to do so. I am hopeful that we have got rid of discrimination for good and forever. But as the white paper indicates it is highly important that Canada should not have legislation which is offensive to others and which creates resentment in our international relations. We should amend the legislation to this end.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I have introduced private member's bills to this effect which, as usual, were talked out. However, hon. gentlemen opposite always told me that I would not have to wait very long because this matter would be dealt with. All I am doing now is appealing to the minister to deal with it and to implement the policy set out in the white paper.

Another point stated here is that Canada's willingness to participate generously in refugee programs has important international implications. I think this is correct. We know there are very grave refugee problems existing in many parts of the world, and I think the white paper suggests that legislation is required to enable us to take some action in this regard. I should like to refer to the memorandum dealing with the question of refugees which was presented by the minister's department to the committee on immigration. Paragraph 54 reads as follows:

> Proposals which require other acts of parliament. The government intends to redefine its attitude towards refugees, particularly as to criteria for acceptance as a refugee, responsibilities of the various government departments in refugee programs, measures to aid admission and settlement of refugees, and establishment of a refugee eligibility commission. It is proposed that this new approach be embodied in legislation separate from the Immigration Act.

All I am doing is asking the minister to produce the act that more than a year ago he said he proposed to bring forward. If this is as important as I take it to be, both on human grounds and because of the international implications, I do not know why we should have to wait so long. A whole series of other suggestions is made in the white paper, for example, with regard to prohibited classes. The white paper points out that the definitions under this heading are wrong and unrealistic. Consider, for instance, the reference to people who have been inmates of hospitals for the insane. Every qualified person would say, as does the white paper itself, that this is not a suitable way of dealing with the problem. Then there is the difficulty of dealing with subversion or alleged subversion. If by subversion we mean the activities of someone who is a real security risk I doubt that any member of this house would want Canada to welcome anyone engaged in activities of this kind. But if we really mean someone who at one time or another has been a member of an organization in another country which is not popular with the police there, then I can see no reason for the exclusion of such people at all.

This is not simply a matter of sentiment; it is a matter of great importance to Canada because at the present time, as is well known, we are looking for trained and skilled people from other parts of the world and one of the best reservoirs from which such people can be obtained is central and eastern Europe. Why should we insist on excluding so many people on the ground of vague doctrines involving subversion? We are still making excuses. I know the minister says we are waiting for the committee which is inquiring into security questions to make recommendations. In the meantime West Germany, Holland, France, the low countries, are welcoming immigrants from eastern and central European countries who are adding tremendously to the effectiveness of their labour forces. Surely, Mr. Chairman, the countries I have mentioned are closer to any danger from subversion than we could possibly be in this country. Yet they are welcoming workers from the east in their tens of thousands, disregarding all the stuff and nonsense about whether they appear on the lists of some police department as having been subversive and so on. We are cutting off our noses to spite our faces. In the hope of preventing a few subversive characters from landing we are excluding a whole group of highly trained persons.

Many other suggestions are made in the white paper calling for changes in the old act. It is an act which is out of date and I urge the minister to go on from what is being done now and produce at the earliest opportunity a draft bill to deal with all these matters. If the officials of his department are very busy, as I know they are, dealing with other matters, and if perchance the law officers of the crown are too occupied to draft legislation embodying the suggestions formally put forward as Canadian immigration policy, then I propose he refer the task to a special committee on immigration—I do not know whether it exists now but if it does not it should be revived. On the hon. gentleman's own back benches there are many hon. members who would be perfectly competent to assist in drafting adequate legislation to deal with this situation. I see in their places, for example, the hon. member for Parkdale and the hon. member for one of the Hamilton constituencies. It is possible for committees to draft legislation. The committee on divorce, for example, has drafted legislation. I do not entirely approve of its draft, I may say, but at least the committee has come up with a draft bill. So I do not think it would be asking too much of the members of the special committee if we were to invite them to make their own proposals embodying the legislation which parliament would be asked to pass in order to bring the Immigration Act up to date.

In conclusion—I notice the minister has left the chamber at least for a few moments —I would ask the parliamentary secretary to pass these words on to his chief: If you feel you have done well—and in all fairness I believe you have made some improvements in the field of immigration—do not rest on your laurels but do a real job by cleaning up the legislation wherever change is needed, and at least live up to the proposals made in your own white paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I want first of all to congratulate the minister—his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Munro) will surely inform him—for having given more importance to his department, since its estimates now amount to $312,912,000. It is indeed two departments in one: the department of manpower and the department of immigration.

I would like to make a few remarks on the first, the department of manpower, which is the most important indeed as far as the minister's responsibility is concerned. I think it is the division on which he has set his heart judging by all his statements; in fact, he is well qualified to head this department.

But I notice an increase in expenditures at item 5 which rose from $34,730,000 in 1966-67 to $73,635,000 this year; this can be explained by the increase in vocational training.

However, one thing worries me. Vote 10 shows a decrease from $228 million last year to $206 million this year. If you refer to page 294 of the blue book, you will see that vote 10 is entitled:

> Grants, contributions and subsidies in accordance with the terms and conditions specified in the sub-vote titles listed in the details of the estimates.

Those are payments to the provinces under agreements entered into with the Department of Manpower and Immigration—> —for the organization of workers for farming and related industries, including undischarged commitments under previous agreements.

When the minister gets up to speak, I should like him to give us more detail concerning the amount of money spent on farming. I mean by that the amount of money which his department must spend for the training of young farmers and the orientation provided for farmers in general. I doubt that this item is included here. I am surprised at the smaller amount shown. Perhaps the federal government reduced its help to the provinces or, since this item also comprises the help given to the provinces, perhaps some provinces opted out of joint programs. In any case, I should like the minister to explain why the amount of money allocated for this item has been reduced, for there must be a reason and we should like to be better informed.

Now, as to the manpower training program, everybody knows that it was instituted in 1960 and that, up until then, Quebec had not decided to participate. The provincial authorities were still considering the matter. In La Presse of February 23, 1966—I think it is about that date when Quebec decided to participate fully in the program, with the help of the federal government—I read that the employment office wrote an article entitled:

Quebec will participate in the manpower mobility program.

It was at that time, I believe, that Quebec decided to follow the example of the other provinces and to participate in this manpower training program.

Right from the start, we found—and the hon. minister also, I am sure—the same abuse that existed in other programs, such as the winter works program during the first years of implementation, when abuses took place, mainly because of the lack of orientation and organization on the provincial and federal levels; and I think that the main abuses we are able to mention to the hon. minister here and now are taking place partly on account of this lack of knowledge or orientation.

For instance, we have discovered that many persons registered to take these courses to receive the cheque rather than to get vocational training.

The amendments that the minister presented today, and those that he intends to introduce at a later date, are intended to rectify this quite unexpected situation. Indeed, in some areas, we have seen people aged 60, 65, 70, who dropped out of school in grade 2 or 3, and who are attending retraining courses, along with housewives, mothers of 7 or 8 children, whose sole interest previously was to bring up their children, who had a sudden yen for study and returned to school, leaving their family to the haphazard care of a baby sitter. We had the opportunity to see all kinds of things like that during those courses, and after discussing the matter with some authorized persons, we concluded that the selection procedure should be improved. And I wonder if the three year rule is still in effect today. It stipulates that in order to be eligible for classes, a person must have been on the labour market for three years. I mean to say that an applicant is required to have been registered for three years at the employment office as being fit to work. I want the minister to confirm that interpretation.

Of course, if an applicant were required to have been registered for three years as being fit to work, persons of 60, 62, 65 or even 69 years of age, who up to then had never applied at the employment office, would surely not have been suddenly entitled to attend classes, while other eligible people were being turned down. These elderly persons were taking the place of younger ones, from 30 to 35 years who were eligible for training but who were being refused. Why? Because there was no room; there were not enough teachers to organize another class. That is precisely the problem we faced in our areas and which we faced again last winter. I have some cases. I communicated with the minister and his secretary and it was confirmed that this year all those who were attending these courses last year had to be accepted.

Systematically, the same mistake which was reported to the department last year is being repeated. This winter, in fact, I have checked and the officials of the manpower office tell me they will have to accept all those who came last year, but that next year it will be different, it will be changed. Candidates will be accepted according to new standards. But I believe that if a mistake was made last winter, it is not necessary to repeat it this winter.

And I say once more that the main shortcoming, in our areas, is the lack of teachers. There may be 100, 125 applicants and we cannot get more than two or three teachers. I do not know if the provincial government is supposed to provide the teachers for these courses. Their salaries may well be paid by the Department of Manpower and Immigration, but I cannot understand this lack of teachers, in our areas especially, if we are well enough organized to get them in time and tell them what they have to do. Those courses were certainly set up for the greater good of the people, and they must achieve their ultimate goal: that is be available to whoever needs more training, who needs guidance into other work. That is their main objective. I am sure that through closer scrutiny of the act, and improvements so that it can more readily meet the needs of every region, its application will certainly continue to serve the better interests of our population.

I also noted the problem dealt with before by the members for Ontario and Greenwood (Messrs. Starr and Brewin). I mean the problem of the student, of the young man who has been out of school for 12 months. I too wish to draw the attention of the minister to this point, because there seems to be ambiguity about the subject even in manpower offices. When a youth goes to a manpower office, if he has been out of school for only 10 or 11 months, he is told: You are not eligible and they are right about that. That requirement is vigorously enforced. But the problem arises when a candidate has been out of school for 13 or 14 months. He is then told: You are not eligible under the law; you have not been in the labour force for three years.

I should like the minister to clarify this point, if he can, because it is clear that if a youth has been out of school for 15 months, perhaps for two years, he was not part of the labour force for three years. I discussed the matter with professors, with counsellors who are not connected with the manpower office, pointing out the fact that some candidates were required to have been out of school for three years, and all agreed that it was a misinterpretation of the act. This point should be made absolutely clear especially with the manpower officers, so that the youth who left school, either high school or any other, in the last 12 months, may be eligible because I think that he is best suited for such training. He is ready. He has interrupted his studies only 12 or 15 months ago, and he is ready to carry on either to improve his skill in the same line or to turn to something else.

I shall ask the minister, as did the hon. members of Ontario (Mr. Starr) and Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), to clear up the matter and to give us his interpretation, so that we may advise at least those who write to us and who ask us what to do in such and such case.

I mentioned earlier that I had been a little surprised with regard to the reduction in the appropriations in the farm section. I was going to urge the minister to increase that amount since he has probably received requests from the C.F.U. and every other farm organization in an effort to step up and increase the number of those training courses available to the farmers.

Now, I believe that what is most needed today, especially in my area but also in many areas of the province of Quebec, is the training of our young farmers and even those not so young, because in those areas, in 75 per cent of the cases—and the minister knows this very well—we have some mixed farming. Farming is carried on in an amateurish way and that is the reason why today we are short of truly qualified people in the agricultural field.

But we have, especially among the younger generation, a large group of people who want to take up farming on a full time basis, who are one hundred per cent farmers, and I believe that these courses are well designed to help these people. And I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that this winter we will have them again—I was told that there would be some in my area—but here again we will be short of qualified instructors to train all those farmers. I am aware that this may lie outside the minister's area of responsibility. However, surely the minister can investigate the matter and use his influence or at least help farm agencies to secure the teaching staff and facilities required for these courses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have but a few words to say about immigration. Again, I think that the amendments brought to the Immigration Act will benefit the Canadian people as a whole including the people of Quebec, because, on the primary basis of skills and regional needs of qualified manpower as indicated by the minister, I am sure that we will admit to Canada immigrants that will represent to us not just additional mouths to feed, but real assets, in brief, individuals who will actively participate in the progress and development of Canada.

As for the former conditions about the age, competence and relationship for the arrangements concerning employment, I think that we Quebecers cannot very much criticize the minister. The only criticism we could make concerns discrimination. The hon. member for Greenwood referred to that a while ago when he said that there was some discrimination in the department of immigration. And what has always surprised me, as it must surprise the minister, is the fact that some discrimination is made in the case of applicants for citizenship.

If we want to work to establish unity in Canada, the two founding peoples of Canada should at least be on an equal footing.

One thing has always staggered me, and that is the fact that a British immigrant coming from England obtains his citizenship after two years, whereas someone coming from France or another country obtains it only after five years.

I may be wrong—let the minister correct me; I see him nodding his head now—but that is what I have always been told. As we are here to get information, I should like the minister to dot the i's. Personally, I should be pleased if that discrimination did not exist because that is what I have been told repeatedly. I promised myself I would, at the first opportunity, ask the minister to tell us what the facts are.

In conclusion, we are quite pleased in general with the estimates of the minister this year and we wish him every success in the discharge of his duties.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise a few points in this afternoon's debate. I concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Roberval, who has just spoken, about the complications that arise through the operation of the three year waiting period under the retraining scheme. I think of the older person who returns to the ordinary, academic school to improve his academic qualifications, graduates, and then finds that he cannot apply for assistance which would be most useful to him in retraining as he has not been in the labour force for three years. That sort of situation can create real difficulties. The hon. member who spoke before me went into this matter in greater detail than I shall.

With respect to the various aspects of immigration, I think all members of the house support the new regulations which allow for a wider range of immigrants and for easier entry into this country, though in the area of sponsored immigrants some interesting factors develop. May I quote from page 4 of newsletter No. 3 which deals with the new selection policy for immigration.

> We feel that the relative of a Canadian or of a landed immigrant, coming to Canada as a worker, should have precedence over other workers and should be admissible with fewer qualifications than are required of independent immigrants...
> The greatest preference in this type of immigration would be given to sons and daughters, parents and grandparents who do not qualify as dependents, brothers and sisters and nephews and nieces under 21, if sponsored by a citizen...
> We would also propose to extend the sponsorship privilege to cover nephews and nieces over 21, uncles and aunts and grandchildren. These relatives would not be admitted as freely as the first group but would need lower qualifications than an independent immigrant.

We see a genuine sliding scale in the regulations. The point I wish to bring to the minister's attention has to do with the closeness of family relationships. One factor has been overlooked in the regulations, the factor of the Canadian who has no living relative in Canada but has a living relative outside Canada. I am talking of a Canadian with resources at his disposal to establish such a relative in this country. It seems to me that each Canadian ought to have a basic right to sponsor somebody at some time. We allow some Canadians to sponsor many people for entry into this country. Yet a Canadian who may have been born here and has made a great contribution to Canada and built up a personal fortune may find that he cannot sponsor relatives from outside the country because they fall outside the list that is included in the regulations. As a result he is frustrated in obtaining the admission of his relative because that relative does not fall within the closely related group. Nevertheless, since the Canadian has no other relative his relationship with the relative outside Canada may be as close as his relationship would have been with a brother, sister, father or any of those who receive better treatment under the regulations.

I am concerned about the minister's drive to bring French speaking immigrants to Canada. Somehow I feel that we should not become involved in the numbers game with respect to this area of division within the country. The minister's effort is worthy and I do not think many Canadians would not welcome immigrants from France, Switzerland and Belgium. But I very much doubt that there should be specific latitude for French speaking vis-à-vis English speaking immigrants. The minister is rowing a leaky boat in this regard.

The governments of Switzerland and Belgium are concerned about the increasing use of the English language within their countries. Because of language difficulties which have arisen in both countries English has become very much the second language. We might obtain quite a number of immigrants from those countries without obtaining the balance, or imbalance, which may have been in the minister's mind with respect to French speaking immigrants when he gave us the figures this afternoon.

We can learn something about immigration from Switzerland where, though one-sixth of the labour force comes from outside the country, the economy seems to function adequately. I hope that French speaking immigrants who otherwise would not be admissible to this country will not enter Switzerland for the purpose of using Switzerland as the road that leads to this country.

I know that as strong a federalist as the minister will not wish to see two immigration departments in the country. I hope we will not see two departments and I hope we will not play the numbers game to which I have referred. At this point I might ask, what is the goal for next year? Are we to do better in this regard than last year? Personally I think it would be better not to count separately the numbers of English speaking and French speaking immigrants entering the country. This aspect of immigration might be left unmeasured. I think all immigrants ought to be made equally welcome to this country.

Finally I wish to raise a question about a subject that has been brought to my attention. The hon. member for Greenwood spoke about refugees and their problem. Is the government working on a project to bring to Canada some of the Tibetan refugees who fled from their country when it was overrun by communist China and who entered India, a country that is sorely burdened with overpopulation. I have seen some of these people in the Himalayan region of India where their prospects are extremely limited because the country is overpopulated. At the present time we are taking from India a fairly sizeable number of immigrants who, because of their educational and technical qualifications, are needed in this country. These people are playing a very important role in our development. It might be one way of aiding India in a rather unusual and different direction if instead of simply taking the cream, the best people their educational system offers, we endeavoured to alleviate in some small way their refugee problem.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, most members of the house welcome the helpful and reasoned statement presented today by the minister and his assurance that as soon as possible a new immigration act will be considered and introduced in the house. I am sure the minister will consider all reasonable suggestions made by members of the committee. Those who know the minister and have had experience in dealing with him know that he is a man of strong views but that when reasonable suggestions are made he considers and adopts them.

The hon. member for Greenwood referred to section 61 of the Immigration Act which does permit the making of discrimatory regulations. In the past discriminatory regulations have been made under this section. However, the new regulations introduced by the minister and effective October 1 completely removed all vestiges of discrimination under the law and regulations as they now exist. The hon. member for Greenwood also referred to the section of the Immigration Act relating to prohibited persons. This is another section which, when the new act is introduced, must be considered very carefully and the necessary reforms made.

As the hon. member for Greenwood knows, under the present statute the minister has wide discretion to issue ministerial permits to allow the entry of persons who may fall within the prohibited classes. I believe that this discretion has been exercised by the minister in a very fair and reasonable manner. Nevertheless, it is desirable that as soon as possible a new immigration act should be introduced. Hon. members in the committee today realize the volume of legislation before the house. Perhaps, as one unkind observer has implied, we in this house suffer from legislative constipation and need a procedural enema. In the meantime, however, a great deal can be done under the existing legislation by means of enlightened regulations and an enlightened administration of the law and the regulations. I suggest to members of the committee that we have been getting this from the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wahn: I would particularly like to draw the attention of the committee to the very encouraging increase in the number of immigrants who have come to Canada in recent years. The figures I have indicate that in 1961 the number of immigrants admitted to Canada was 71,689. In 1962 the number was 74,586. In 1963, the first year under the present Liberal government, the number was 93,151. In 1964 the number was 112,606. In 1965 the number increased to 146,758. In 1966 the number increased still further to 194,743. In the period from January 1 to August 31 this year the number increased even more, by 27 per cent, and amounted to 125,836 for that part of the year. It is quite clear that this year substantially more than 200,000 immigrants will come to this country and make their homes here.

Mr. Roxburgh: I hope the hon. member for Ontario is taking note of these figures.

Mr. Wahn: These figures indicate that the rate of immigration at the present time is three times higher than it was in 1961 when a Conservative government was in power. The low figure for 1961 may not have been due to any lack of will on the part of the then Conservative government but may rather have resulted from the massive unemployment which then existed and which the government then in office appeared to be unable to do anything about.

Mr. Roxburgh: Or a mixture of both.

Mr. Wahn: Possibly a mixture of both. I find it difficult to overemphasize the importance and the value to Canada of this large inflow of immigrants. The whole question of immigration was very carefully considered several years ago by a commission of the United Church which studied immigration and its effects on Canada. The commission published a report which contains some very interesting and useful information even though it is now several years out of date. For example, it pointed out that statistics of post-war immigration show that three quarters of the immigrants coming to Canada are adults, one-half are workers and most of the workers are young people in the most productive age group between 20 and 44. For example, the report says that of the 124,700 immigrants who arrived in Canada in 1958 more than 58,000 were between the ages of 15 and 29. Canadian surveys of immigration figures for other years also emphasize the youthful character of immigrants. Not only were they workers, they were young workers and, more important, they have been skilled workers.

A Department of Labour report indicates that about two thirds of the net addition of professional engineers and draftsmen since the end of world war II have been immigrants. Another Department of Labour survey shows that 35 per cent of the skilled and highly skilled trade positions in Canadian industries in 1956 were occupied by immigrants who had received their trades training abroad. These youthful, skilled workers have performed an invaluable function upon which our present prosperity has been largely based.

Not only have these immigrants brought new skills to Canada but they have also brought a substantial amount of new capital. The report by the commission of the United Church points out that between 1946 and 1962 immigrants brought to Canada over $1 billion in capital and almost half a billion dollars worth of settlers' effects. They have established numerous new businesses in Canada which have provided employment for Canadians. The report points out that from 1950 to 1962, 9,850 new Canadians established businesses of their own for which they paid over $116 million. Of this sum they made cash payments in excess of $72 million. These new businesses created employment for almost 45,000 Canadians.

In 1961 the research staff of the department of citizenship and immigration made a survey of 7,000 immigrants who had obtained their Canadian citizenship papers. Of this group about 350 had established their own businesses and created jobs for over 3,400 other Canadians. In other words, these 350 newcomers created new jobs equal to almost half of the entire group of immigrants under survey.

It is apparent therefore that immigrants who seek entry to Canada do not seek entry as supplicants and should not be treated as such. They should be welcomed as guests who are bringing valuable gifts to this country. I believe I saw figures which indicate that almost half of the total number of immigrants to Canada have come to the Toronto area. Certainly Toronto has good reason to rejoice in the number of immigrants who have come to our city. It is upon their efforts and with their help that the post-war growth and prosperity of our citizens have been founded.

Because of the importance of the department, and indeed I can think of few other departments of the government which are of equal importance, it is absolutely essential that the facilities and service provided by the department should be first rate. I wish to congratulate the minister upon the improvement which he has made in the facilities, the staff and the services provided by the department. Many years ago some of us had the impression that the old department of citizenship and immigration was to some extent an orphan, cramped and restricted by its budget and perhaps not given the same consideration as certain more glamourous-appearing departments. The minister has done a great deal to upgrade its status and to improve the facilities and the service provided by the department not only abroad but in Canada. The importance of the department certainly justifies these efforts.

While I am on my feet perhaps I might refer to two difficult problems. I am sure that the success which has met the minister's efforts to date indicates that he will be able to resolve these problems successfully. In the manpower service, which is so essential to our national well-being, I suggest that we should consider very carefully and avoid duplication of any service now being provided in a satisfactory manner by private agencies. I say this not because I think that private industry should have a monopoly in any field of labour placement but simply because the revenues and expenditures of any governmental department are limited and therefore must be spent in the best and most effective manner.

If in fact placement services are being satisfactorily provided by private agencies, then there would seem to be little purpose in incurring public expense and duplicating such facilities. I know, for example that there are many efficient private agencies in the larger centres which specialize in filling vacancies for skilled and white collar employees. If these agencies are in fact doing a good job, I hope the minister will not endeavour to duplicate them at the expense of the ordinary taxpayer.

The second problem, and one which has been referred to by a number of hon. members, relates to the necessity of preventing any gap developing between the federal and provincial programs involving retraining and vocational training. This matter has been referred to by most hon. members including the hon. members for Ontario, Greenwood, Roberval and Okanagan-Revelstoke, and clearly it is of vital importance and concern to most members of the committee. It is a difficult problem because, as all members of the committee know, it involves the most delicate relations between the federal and the provincial governments. It involves co-ordinating the federal responsibility for maintaining full employment with the provincial responsibility for education and social services.

The hon. member for Greenwood in particular referred to the fact that school drop-outs and hippies were not able to benefit from the present federal program. I believe the minister is aware of the necessity to co-ordinate very carefully the federal program for retraining those who have been thrown out of employment as a result of technological change with the provincial programs and the provincial responsibility in the fields of education and social service. It is a very delicate and difficult problem and one which does not admit of any easy solution. It is a question to which the minister will have to devote himself, and I am sure he will work closely with the provincial authorities in solving it successfully.

In the same general field there is of course another important principle to observe. The minister must be very careful that federal moneys which are administered by provincial authorities are well spent. This is the responsibility of the federal government. If federal moneys are provided we must make certain that the provincial government is spending them properly and with the best possible effect.

Suggestions have been made that some of the training programs in the province of Ontario which are administered by provincial agencies are not administered with maximum efficiency. Again this involves very delicate and difficult problems of co-operation between the federal and provincial departments. Sometimes it appears to me that it is very difficult to get proper co-ordination and co-operation at the departmental level between provincial and federal authorities and I have often thought it would be desirable for the minister or for federal ministers in general to experiment with the creation of joint federal-provincial agencies with perhaps community involvement to avoid this particular problem. I believe that the minister's department may perhaps be experimenting with agencies along that line.

There is one extremely important reform for which the minister deserves a great deal of credit and a great deal of support from all members of the house. Under the regulations which became effective at the beginning of this month the principle of racial equality has been finally and completely established in our immigration laws. I believe it was the hon. member for Roberval who referred to the continuing discrimination under the citizenship laws or regulations. If I am correct in my belief, these are not administered by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but by the Secretary of State, so I will not discuss them at this time. Under our present immigration regulations and laws, certainly the last vestiges of racial discrimination have been removed. I believe that they have been removed in practice as well. Sometimes practice is more important than the letter of the law.

To illustrate the fact that discrimination has been reduced in practice over recent years I should like to refer to the figures on Chinese immigration. In 1961, Mr. Chairman, the number of Chinese admitted to Canada totalled 894. In 1962 the number went down to 876. In 1963, the first year of the Liberal government, the number almost doubled to 1,571. In 1964 the number doubled again to 3,210. In 1965 the number increased to 5,234. In 1966 the number was slightly lower, 5,178. From January 1 to June 30 of this year, the number admitted was 3,173 an increase of 32 per cent over the corresponding period in the previous year.

It is apparent, therefore, that at the present time, the rate of immigration to Canada in so far as Chinese are concerned is over seven times as high as it was in 1961 under a Conservative administration. I am particularly interested in these figures because many members of the Chinese community live in my riding of St. Paul's in Toronto. I thought that members of the committee might be interested in these figures as an illustration of what has been done in practice to overcome the racial discrimination which in previous years disgraced the administration of our immigration laws.

I think I should mention also, as an example of what is actually being done in practice, that the present application form for landed immigrants which became effective October 1 deletes any reference to the country of ethnic origin. I believe this is indicative of the intent of the minister in these regulations. Perhaps more important in so far as practice is concerned is the fact that for the first time the factors which should be taken into account by immigration officials who actually assess the intended immigrants are set out very clearly.

The hon. member for Greenwood expressed some apprehension about what he called the points system. He mentioned that in the interview with a proposed immigrant the immigration official is required to make a personal assessment of the character of the immigrant and to take into account such factors as adaptability, motivation, initiative and similar qualities. The hon. member for Greenwood expressed some apprehension as to what might happen if some immigration official had the opportunity of making a personal character assessment of him. I will make no comment one way or the other with regard to his fear. I believe it is unfounded. Instead I simply point out the hon. member for Greenwood that every day each of us is required to make an assessment of the character of people, and immigration officials are no different from the rest of us. In practice I assume they will act fairly. Despite the complaints which are inevitable in a department such as this, the general record of the department has been good.

This completes the remarks I should like to make at this point, Mr. Chairman. In closing I would simply say that I am particularly impressed by the fairness of the regulations which have been introduced by the minister. I welcome those provisions which widen the classes of relatives that can be admitted to Canada, either on a sponsored or nominated basis. This will mean that a great many more families will be reunited, and this is of great social importance. I welcome the new appeal procedure which has been introduced. This is the first time we have had a meaningful appeal procedure in our immigration regulations. The new appeal procedure may be some indication of a move toward a principle which would be of great international importance, namely, that those of us who have had the good fortune to be born in this country cannot expect to monopolize a great country such as Canada. Perhaps those born in other countries who can qualify and who would make good citizens have a right to be admitted which should not be entirely dependent upon the uncontrolled discretion of those of us who happen to live here at the present time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Bow River.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

I notice that the Chair established a rotation in the order in which members who ask the floor are recognized, and I agree that the government party should have priority, that the official opposition comes after, followed by the other parties according to the number of their members. That is priority.

But I do not admit that, having reached the fifth group, the group of independents, or your servant here, is relegated to the 16th or 26th rank, with the result that when his turn comes, he is told, as happened again yesterday and every week: Hurry up, there is not much time, you have to cut it short, because the others will not have time to speak.

It might be said that I take the floor probably more often than any other hon. member, if comparisons are made on the basis of number, but it will have to be recognized also that I am probably more often here than any other hon. member, that I listen with respect and interest to the speeches delivered here and that I even take notes.

I refuse to be considered a 26th class member in this house. In all modesty, I feel that I am as important as any other member. I am ready to withdraw before the ministers, the party leaders; I am even ready to make concessions if some debates require it, and I do so in some cases, for instance, by taking less time than I am allotted to give others the chance to speak, something they could not do if I used up all my time.

I realize there is discrimination there, Mr. Chairman, and I protest against such discrimination. I am willing to go on 6th, or 7th but not systematically and regularly 15th or 16th at impossible times when I am told: "Hurry up, because this debate should be finished, or because something else is happening." We saw it happen again yesterday, Mr. Chairman.

I want to protest strongly against the system I consider unfair and discriminatory. I want everybody to know that my name is "Mongrain" and that I will not tolerate having it translated into English as "Mongrel".

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I listened with some interest to the question of privilege that was raised. I do not want to spend any time on it but I would point out there are 96 Conservatives in the house and so far we have had only one speaker along with one from every other party. If we work the matter out on a pro rata basis we should have the most speakers from the opposition side.

Mr. Mongrain: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Woolliams: No, because I have only a few minutes. I want to make four points. First of all I want to deal—

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege. The hon. member has just said something I consider nonsensical for the intelligent man he is.

If I am speaking 6th, I will not prevent any member of the Progressive Conservative party or any other from speaking. If, anyway, there are 26 speakers, whether I speak 5th, 6th or 25th, they will be speaking more often than I, which I admit because they are more numerous.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, I am going to divide my speech into four parts. First of all I want to deal with debates on estimates generally for a moment. The hon. member for Ontario, the Leader of the Opposition, made an outstanding contribution in this debate and asked certain questions of the minister. I should like to say something as an individual about the new rules. All of us want to get on with the business and to see it done, but one of the great weaknesses in the guillotine method of closing off debate on estimates is that serious questions put to a minister are sometimes never answered. For example, the other day I asked some ten questions of the Minister of Trade and Commerce about the grain problem, which is very important to the farmers of western Canada. The minister sat throughout the debate until the end of the day. Perhaps his estimates will not come before the committee again and I will never get an answer.

The hon. member for Ontario, a former minister of labour who conceived the vocational training program, part of which has been adopted by the government and part forgotten, asked some serious questions based on his experience as minister and on the fact that he is the chief critic on this subject for our party. However, it seems to be somewhat an exercise in futility if we put questions to ministers and never get answers. After all, the idea of debating estimates is not just to make a pretty little speech but to find out ministers' programs.

By way of introduction to this point, Mr. Chairman, this might be a good time to read words which have been quoted with approval by the present Prime Minister, words approved by the former prime minister who sits in this house, words used by Arthur Meighen. Under the procedure which prevailed in the old days we could say to a minister that his estimates were not going to go through until he gave us some answers. I am not referring to this minister personally; I just give that as an example. But now we ask questions which are just left in Hansard and are never answered. How can the members of the opposition do their work if that is the way we in this house have to operate?

Mr. Marchand: May I ask the members of the committee why they believe I am not going to give any answers?

Mr. Woolliams: I hope the minister will, but other ministers have not. I believe that this minister is very congenial and is liked by members on both sides of the house. I can see he is the sort who would be liked outside the house as well, not only in his constituency but in any part of the country, because he is that type of man. But with the greatest respect to him, we have not had from other ministers answers to questions we have put on Hansard.

I should like to tell the committee what Arthur Meighen said. I am not going to read the whole speech but these words were quoted with approval by the present Prime Minister when speaking to one of the clubs in Ottawa. I think they have also been quoted with approval in this house by the former prime minister who sits on this side. Arthur Meighen said:

> It should supervise all expenditures and prevent overexpenditure by exposing to the light of public opinion wasteful expenditures or worse. It finds fault; it suggests amendments; it asks questions and elicits information—

We have been asking questions and trying to elicit information but have been unsuccessful.

> —it arouses, educates and moulds public opinion by voice and vote. It must scrutinize every action by the government and in doing so prevents the shortcuts through democratic procedure that governments like to make.
> The absence of a strong opposition means a one-party state. A one-party state means an all-powerful cabinet.

That is what we have today, Mr. Chairman, an all-powerful cabinet. Perhaps these new rules will be made permanent or they may be changed. But if the new rules mean that questions we ask members of the government are never going to be answered, then they are being used as a guillotine to keep government information in the drawers so it cannot be made public.

The government's expenditures this year are the highest of any government. That has been pointed out over and over again. Compared with the expenditures of the United States government the expenditures of this government have risen 25 per cent, and the United States is fighting a war. The opposition cannot get information about the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars on the part of hon. gentlemen on the front benches opposite. Those, Mr. Chairman, are my words of introduction to the minister and I want other ministers to read them and think about this point. These new rules must not be allowed to prevent us getting the kind of information we require.

To show how important this point is I should like to use this illustration. I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he spoke to the United States government about dumping approximately 100 million bushels of wheat in our eastern markets, and I have not had an answer. I also asked him whether there would ever be a dollar subsidy paid, because we will never sell wheat below the floor price set by the agreement, and that question has not been answered either. We do not know whether we are subsidizing the wheat farmers or what is happening. They are not selling one bushel of wheat and no subsidy is being paid. I want that statement to go across the country because I am tired of the phony nonsense that we are getting from certain ministers.

I am not attacking this minister personally; I know he will likely answer. But we do not get answers from the old school ministers. This minister is a new minister and I hope he will co-operate. I am talking about the old set and you know whom I mean, Mr. Chairman. I imagine hon. members opposite also call them that behind closed doors.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, with the unanimous consent of the house may we continue with my estimates until seven o'clock?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: That request must be made with the Speaker in the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the house makes a decision about what is to be done with private members' hour perhaps I might read the questions on the adjournment motion this evening: the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois)—Indian Affairs—introduction of legislation re Indian claims commission; the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray)—Income Tax, request for forgiveness of interest on tax arrears of pensioners; the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave)—Health and Welfare, inclusion of optometrists in health resources fund teams.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the house I wonder whether we can continue with my estimates.

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that the committee of supply be resumed and that consideration of the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration be continued?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: Until seven o'clock?

Mr. Marchand: Until seven o'clock.

TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before the house returns to committee I wonder whether I could have leave to table copies in English and in French of order in council P.C. 1967-2025 respecting co-ordinates of points from which base lines may be determined pursuant to the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The committee of supply will now resume.

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

1. Administration, operation and maintenance, $4,206,600.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I was talking about my position in connection with the rules. I shall leave that subject now. I have always felt that it is a proper thing to amalgamate or correlate departments of government if greater efficiency is likely to result, so when I heard there was to be a department of manpower which would be able to supervise immigration policies, pools of labour, vocational training and so on, I thought it was a good idea. But the new department will be effective only to the extent that the minister receives co-operation from his fellow ministers. He cannot be successful alone.

My hon. friend from Ontario drew attention to some of the weaknesses of the program which has been put forward. I doubt that the minister will ever be able to implement this program effectively, nor do I believe he will be able to make the changes suggested by my hon. friend. He cannot do so because he will not receive co-operation from the Minister of Finance. That is his problem.

I am one of those who believe we are facing in this country a serious financial situation brought on by the present government. As a result the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will have to bear a lot more responsibility in the near future than he has done up to now. Lay-offs are taking place and we are moving into a future when they will be more frequent. I want to come to grips with one situation of which I have personal knowledge.

On Thursday night and on Friday I was absent from this house. We hear a lot about absenteeism. Where was I? I had been invited to speak to a meeting in Calgary arranged because 400 men had been laid off by the C.P.R. You cannot just sit here in Ottawa if you want to know what is going on. You have to move around.

Briefly, there are between 800 and 1,000 men employed in the workshops at a place called Ogden in the suburbs of Calgary. These workshops have been there for years employing highly skilled people. The payroll is large. What has happened? The labour union cannot get answers from the C.P.R. One morning 400 men were laid off. The company said it was only for a month, possibly for two months. But the men are not sure. I asked the minister to tell us what the situation there is. He was most courteous. He told the house today that those 400 men, or some of them at least, were already back on the job. This was the information available to him through the department. I have checked with the union and they tell me that this is not correct, that in fact there are still 400 men working out of the 800 but that the 400 who were laid off are still without work.

I know the minister would not come into the house and misrepresent the facts as he knew them in any way. He gave us the facts as they were made known to him. He said that many of the men were back, more than half; I have not checked the blues—

Mr. Marchand: On this point, perhaps I did not express myself clearly. I said they had been called back to work. This does not mean they are actually back at their jobs.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, when I hear "called back to work" I assume it applies to tomorrow morning, not to next year. I am told they have been laid off for a month or two months. This matter is within the minister's sphere of responsibility. I believe there is a scheme on foot to move these workshops out of Calgary. What will happen to these men in such an eventuality? Most of them are over 45; some are in their fifties and some are in their sixties. It is all very well for the minister to say they will be able to move elsewhere and find alternative employment. We all know how difficult it is for men over 45 to find work; they cannot, as a rule, find alternative employment today.

We are all familiar with what happened in Winnipeg. We know what happened when Air Canada moved its shops. I believe the same process is going on under the C.P.R. I have been informed that the company is now contracting the repair of its big diesels with General Motors. This is a foot in the door to get rid of its own facilities. Why have these men been laid off? I am talking about correlation and I intend to correlate my speech today. I will tell you why, Mr. Chairman. It is because the Minister of Trade and Commerce has not come clean in this house on the subject of wheat.

The men to whom I have referred are employed repairing cars which are used to haul wheat to Vancouver and the great lakes. Today there is no wheat movement; cars are piled up all over western Canada. Wheat is not moving from the farms and the call for cars has declined accordingly. The Globe and Mail says the farmers are being subsidized. I say the editor should go to western Canada. He would not have to worry about a single dollar finding its way into the pockets of the farmers, because no wheat is being sold. Some tremendous speeches were made on this subject the other night by hon. members from western Canada. It may be that the C.P.R. will use this situation as an excuse for closing down its shops and farming out the repair work to General Motors.

Let me tell the minister that when 1,000 men are thrown out of work in a city with a population of 250,000 it really makes an impact. In the area of Ogden itself it is a matter of economic life or death. Our problem does not affect the Department of Manpower and Immigration alone. The hon. gentleman is, I believe, one of the leaders of his party in Quebec. He is either the leader or the second in command of the Liberal party there. It is a great thing to gather a lot of responsibilities under one roof, but the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce will not come clean. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, for whom I have a lot of affection personally, went to the United States and said: "What are you doing, breaking your word to 52 nations by shipping wheat at lower prices and taking away the export markets of Canada and other countries?" I asked questions day in and day out on this point when the former minister of transport was here and was ruled out of order. That was the great parliamentarian Jack Pickersgill who was able to leave the house and get a job for himself at $40,000 a year. I warned him about another problem. Let me read this to the minister. The hon. gentleman is not to be blamed for it; I am his defence counsel this evening. He is trying to do his job but he is carrying a load placed upon him by these other fellows. Just listen to this from the Financial Post:

The U.S. has won long-term coal agreements from Japan for shipment of coking coal for metallurgical use in the face of competition from Canada, Australia—

Key factor in the United States deal—

What was the key factor? I say to the minister that his colleagues in the government sit around and do nothing.

—it may run to $1,500,000,000 over the next ten years—is the shipping cost which has been "bugging" Alberta-B.C. coal mine operators. Japan has received assurances of stability in freight rates—

It has received those assurances from the United States. What has the C.P.R. done with this contract? I asked Mr. Pickersgill over and over again when he was the minister of transport. He replied that the C.P.R. was a private corporation and he did not want to interfere with it. Now he is gone, having landed himself a big hot-shot job for $40,000 a year. If any Tory had introduced a bill to create a job for himself worth $40,000 a year there would have been headlines about it in every newspaper. Yet now we are supposed to look at him with great respect in his new job.

The C.P.R. carried the coal from Michel, B.C. to Vancouver, but the Great Northern Railway in the United States said, "You allow us to build a line 30 miles long from Michel to the United States and we will ship the coal at one third the cost you are paying now." The C.P.R. sat silent and did not change its rates. Now we have this new transport commissioner. I don't know if he will do anything. He was pretty friendly when he sat in this chamber and I expect he will be friendly when he sits as commissioner, but the fact is that because of what has happened the coal contract has now been lost to Alberta.

In 1957 when I ran in the federal election in Bow River, which takes in Canmore and the hard coal mines throughout the foothills near Banff, the coal miners there were all unemployed. There was nothing but poverty and destitution in the area. Then the Conservative government went to work. The then minister of trade and commerce, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, went to work and made coal contracts with Japan, brought in a subvention of $4 per ton, got the men back to work, got the mines working and got things going. But now the coal operators of Canada are suffering again and some 2,000 or 3,000 men are being thrown out of work, not because of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but because of his colleagues who have been sitting around and have not been doing anything.

Decay has begun in the Liberal government. That is what has happened. Two contracts, the wheat contract which brought in approximately $2 billion of new money last year and the coal contract, are going down the drain. Liberal members may say I am preaching gloom and doom. If I could do that like the Secretary of State for External Affairs used to I would really be a preacher. He went across this nation preaching gloom and doom when there was a recession that we inherited and one would have thought in listening to him that the whole world was collapsing.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration has my sympathy this afternoon because I predict we are going to have massive unemployment within the next six to nine months. Decay has set in because of the government's financial debacle. The minister's own backbenchers admit this. This is what they tell government ministers in caucus. I would love to be a little mouse hiding in the Liberal caucus to hear them beg their government to do something. Our job is to brush the dust away and bring these matters out in the open in this chamber so that the public may know what is going on. I am not attacking the minister personally, but the loss of these two contracts has resulted in Canada's economic health failing.

Now let us get down to brass tacks. What has been going on in connection with the finances of this nation to bring this situation about, and why has the minister such heavy responsibility? Here is the best explanation I have read for a long time, and I think it fits the Liberal government to a T:

[Mr. Woolliams.]

> There were Caesars before Caesar—and after him—who dealt in bread and circuses. Caesar was high priest not only of the corrupted religion of the day, but of a debauched electorate as well. He poured out the public moneys from the treasury for their amusement; he manipulated the price of their bread; he told them always that these blessings came from Caesar. And it was quite a while before the Roman people tumbled to the fact that the big party was on them, after all.

Doesn't this fit the government today?

> Over inflated payrolls, printing-press money, and government largesse for political purposes may corrupt the electorate as surely as vote stealing at the polls, and much more successfully.

What beautiful language, and it fits. A more apt quotation never fit better. It certainly fits this Liberal government. How did they get power?

> Those who seek power beyond the will and intent of the people gain their foothold by winning over the voters with appealing promises; something for nothing, security without work, entertainment without price.

We have lots of that.

Mr. Choquette: Chiefly from you tonight.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, sir, but any time you are on the stage you are the best comedian.

Mr. Choquette: You still look like Red Skelton.

Mr. Woolliams: You enjoy life. You get up and talk just for a laugh. But this is serious. People are out of work. Taxes are high, we are facing a financial crisis, and you joke. I continue with my quotation:

> After all, Mussolini and Hitler were elected at "perfectly legal" elections—

Then they stayed fast in office. Canada, of course, is a democracy and people will have something to say about that. Just the other day I received a letter which is much better than any speech of mine could ever be. I never heard of this lady before but she wrote to the Minister of Finance and sent me a copy of her letter. This is what she wrote:

> Dear Mr. Sharp:
> First it was a compulsory security number, as I so dramatically discovered five months ago. No pay for a week of substitute teaching—not because of lack of effort or lack of ability, but because of a lack of a social security number. You will be pleased to know that I am now a law-abiding citizen.

Second it was a compulsory pension plan. How marvellous that my husband no longer has to prepare for our old age. The government will magnanimously look after him. Where I fit in, your equivocal literature doesn't really say. But why worry? Welfare can always take care of me until I become a widow.

Third is the oncoming compulsory medicare. How wonderful that those unselfish men in Ottawa are going to look after my family's personal health—and all for free. The fact that our municipal and income taxes are becoming unbearable is too mundane to be worthy of mention.

But the Carter commission surpasses them all. It will create a delightful state-controlled country with all the benefits of a planned economy, planned lives and no selfish incentive for individual effort. Our system will become vacuous and brutal as the rewards of work and the thrill of daily living are eliminated. Truly a glorious Utopia for my children.

The letter is signed by Mrs. Mildred B. Chisholm of R.R.4, Calgary, Alberta. I cannot make a better speech than what her letter says.

The government is doing nothing and that is why workers are being laid off in Calgary by the C.P.R. That is why men are being laid off in the coal mines. That is why they are going to be laid off in Nova Scotia. As the quotation I gave says:

There were Caesars before Caesar ... He poured out the public moneys from the treasury for the people's amusement.

The government introduced one telling amendment to the Bank Act. I think it is a cute little change. It offsets the chance of there ever being another Coyne affair. It says that if the governor of the Bank of Canada will not pour out public money, turn a crank and create money, as a certain group in this house used to say, the cabinet can write him a letter and say to him: You are a nasty little governor; we have a dreadful financial problem; we are going to hold another election and we are going to pour out the money even if it brings about greater inflation which in turn will create more strikes and less profits and raise the cost of living for every pensioner in the country; you will do what we tell you. In such a circumstance the governor could not control monetary extravagance.

This minister, Mr. Chairman, has the toughest job because he is looking after manpower. How can he get these people back to work? The fact is that he cannot until the Minister of Trade and Commerce gets out and sells the coal and stops the United States undercutting us so Canada can sell its wheat again. There is no wheat being sold now. Some people are saying to the government: Don't worry about it because in this situation you will not have to pay any subsidy. The farmer is suffering, the labourer is suffering. Yet right across this country when you pick up newspapers you see, except for a few exceptions, articles saying that Canada is enjoying an unusual boom. I forget what the figure is but the old age pensioner is going to get either $1.56 or $1.76 more to offset the rise in the cost of living.

Does the minister know what has happened to rents in Calgary? They went up from $10 to $20 a month. The government pretends to be magnanimous by giving the pensioners something extra. By the same token the cost of living is going up because of inflation and because of continued government spending undertaken without responsibility.

The nation will wish to ask some pointed questions of the Prime Minister. We have gone through a most unusual period in Canadian history involving strikes and management-labour problems which have gone on for long periods without settlements. We have the Pearson formula for 30 per cent wage increases. How can you have 30 per cent wage increases without increasing the cost of living. We are caught in a vicious circle.

Over and over again I have asked the Prime Minister whether the Dean Woods report, which will relate to the problem of industrial unrest, has come to his attention. One year ago the Prime Minister said that an interim report would be ready in two or three weeks. I asked again at this session whether it would be ready soon. He said he would look into the question and that he had asked for an interim report. I doubt whether that report will be ready by the time this session ends. I will keep asking for it and if I am here for the next session I will ask for it then. I will continue to ask for it until it is made available. I doubt that the report will be ready by the end of the next session because the government does not wish to follow the recommendations that it will very likely contain.

The Liberal party wanted the responsibility of governing. They bid a high price for the privilege, as is evident from their literature. They sought the responsibility. All I ask of them is: Please govern. People in Calgary and elsewhere in this nation are out of work because of this government's policies. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration is not responsible entirely. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have not given leadership or direction. I never saw a cabinet before which expressed so many different opinions in so many parts of the country. One cabinet member says in one part of the country that taxes are to be raised. Another says in another part of the country that they are to be lowered. Nowhere do we see cabinet cohesion. Never before since confederation have we seen the degree of irresponsibility which is apparent now.

The minister has my sympathy. He has a tough job but he willingly took that job. I know that the minister undertook his present portfolio because of his humane sentiments and the experience he can bring to his job. That is good. But a government is like a building. You must make sure that the roof does not leak and that water does not run down into the building and crack the concrete foundation. I say to the minister that if he stays in his job he will turn grey in the next month because of the bigger and bigger mess that will result from the government's actions. This government has been completely senseless and irresponsible.

We shall see the results of increasing industrial competition. The United States is crowing about the great agreement that has been signed. But we will see lay-offs in Ontario and much unemployment throughout the country. It is all very well for the government to say, "Good gracious, the United States has doublecrossed us in its wheat dealings." That is nothing. In Ontario especially there will be unprecedented unemployment because of what this government has done. There are Liberals who wish they could sneak out of office and hand the reins over to us so we could clear up the mess.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with the estimates of a department that is as important as any in the federal government today. Manpower and immigration policies are crucial to the continued successful existence and development of this country.

The hon. member who just spoke has treated us to one of his usual colourful displays. I wonder whether he would have dared to make a speech of that kind when this country was really in trouble when his party was in power. I have not had the opportunity of checking Hansard and I am not saying he did not speak, but I suspect that when there was a need to speak up about the lack of action, the lack of activity, about the hundreds of thousands of people out of work, he sat in his place. What counts is what people do when the chips are down, when the need is to do something constructive and effective when one has a chance to do it. Unfortunately for the hon. member and his party the record is there. They did nothing. I suggest to this house that the memory of the Canadian people is not as short as the hon. member thinks it is.

Mr. Woolliams: Read the Gallup poll. The memory of the Canadian people is not short so far as the Liberal party is concerned.

Mr. Gray: We shall see when the time comes. Polls come and go. Though members of the official opposition have themselves commented about this sort of thing, as well in the past. We shall see what happens when the Canadian people have an opportunity to compare the record of their government and this government to make a judgment the outcome of which I am confident will be continued support for this government and this party.

One of the two halves of the department deals with manpower. Certainly this department, and particularly this section, has a key role in improving the productivity of this country. It is not enough merely to build buildings in the way that was done by the party of the Acting Leader of the Opposition and to fill them with people who in many cases were trained for jobs that did not exist. This government has recognized the need not only to see that buildings are built and classrooms are filled but also that workers are matched to skills, that real information is available as to the skills required in this country, and that training of all sorts is encouraged in ways that mean that people who want to do so will be financially able to take courses that are offered across this country.

This is the type of necessary work that is being carried out by this new department as its reorganization proceeds. There are facilities that did not exist before this department came into existence in its present form, facilities to determine the jobs required in this country, to determine the skills required, to match people to jobs, to make sure that we have not only the necessary courses available but that courses match the requirements of this country for the skills of today and the future.

Let us look at some examples. Let us look at the separation of the national employment service from the unemployment insurance commission, the turning of it into an active agency of manpower policy and its transformation, going on at this time, into the Canada manpower centres. This move was undertaken by this government and the minister's department under the leadership of the minister, a move that has been greeted with praise and encouragement by thoughtful observers across the country.

When the Acting Leader of the Opposition spoke on behalf of his party he made some reference to the abandonment, if I have the word correctly, of the productivity council set up by his government. I suggest to this committee that the council was not abandoned; instead, its functions were absorbed by the economic council. Those functions are being carried on by the economic council, the very body praised so fulsomely by the Acting Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bow River who just spoke and quoted from the report of the council.

I ask this committee to remember the criticism by informed and thoughtful observers, of the lack of effectiveness of the productivity council when the previous government was in office. I ask hon. members to remember that, if I am not mistaken, the then president of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. Jodoin, resigned from the council in protest against it not becoming an effective instrument of economic development in the way that the mission sent to Europe under the auspices of the council had urged after studying the experience of European countries.

The recommendation of the mission to Europe, calling for more effective measures of consultation and planning, came during the existence of the productivity council as it then stood. Of course, the useful work of the council has been carried on through the economic council which was created by this government. Even more important, we find not only consultative agencies but bodies designed to actually carry out programs working in the area of improving productivity, the manpower section of the Department of Manpower and Immigration working on the training side of productivity and the Department of Industry working in the area of technology.

There are problems that arise in this period of adjustment when the federal government is taking a somewhat different approach to the question of manpower. I think we should recognize at this time the achievements of and the constructive work being carried out by the manpower side of the minister's department. At the same time, I think we in this house should urge the minister to make sure that the training activity, the retraining work being carried out by his department extends as widely as possible and is as flexible as possible, to make sure that those who actually need retraining, whether or not they are working at present or whether they have been here for only a relatively short period, will be able to have this training in the interests of the economic development and the continued prosperity of this nation.

I should like at this time, Mr. Chairman, to turn to the other side of the minister's department, namely, the immigration branch. Certainly the new regulations for the selection of immigrants, the new points system, is a step forward in the creation of methods for the fair, reasonable and humane selection of people to join with us in building this country.

These regulations broaden the classes of relatives who can be considered. They are aimed at treating people on an equal basis no matter where they come from in this world. The points system provides a flexibility that was not present under the former rigid approach whereby a person either qualified completely on the basis of skill or fell within a narrow category with regard to relatives who could sponsor him, and if he did not fall completely in one area or the other he could not come to this country.

At the present time, under this new system, if a person does not have a very high level of education, complete training in a skill, but there are other factors that can be taken into account, relatives willing to support him, a certain knowledge of our two official languages, these things can be added together in a way that should make it possible for the person who wants to come to this country and contribute to its development to come here and make a better life for himself and his family, to the benefit of all of us.

But while I am praising these new regulations and praising the minister for responding to the suggestions of the immigration committee, of members on this side of the house and the other side who helped bring about this new system, I should say that I do not think the present structure of the points system should be regarded as being engraved on tablets of stone.

A certain period must go by in which the administration of the points system as constituted at the present time should be studied and observed. But I think it would be a great mistake if after a period of study and transition, which should not be too long, the government failed to take into account the actual experience of administering this system and treated the points system as something immutable, as something handed down from above that cannot be changed without threatening the very structure and foundation of this country. This would be a mistake.

Although the program has been in operation for a relatively brief period, we can see some areas of it, some aspects, which I think give cause for concern. I refer particularly to the section of the regulations entitled "Norms For Assessment of Independent Applicants" and in particular to the category "Personal assessment" which reads as follows:

> Adaptability, motivation, initiative, resourcefulness and other similar qualities to be assessed during an interview with the applicant by an immigration or visa officer, the total assessment up to a maximum of 15 to reflect the latter's judgment of the personal suitability of the applicant and his family to become successfully established in Canada.

The minister may well say: The reason we provide this category and assign it 15 points is to help people to come into this country when they may not be able to measure up completely to the other norms of education and training, occupational demand, occupational skill, age, and so on.

I certainly agree with that, but I am somewhat concerned that this particular category can be used in exactly the opposite way. Let me explain why I say this. First of all, 15 points are given for personal assessment. This is almost the same number of points as for education and training, which category provides up to a maximum of 20 points. It is exactly the same number of points as for occupational demand, which provides a maximum of 15 points. It is more than the number of points for occupational skill, for which a total of ten points is provided. It is certainly more than the number of points provided where the applicant has a relative who is not eligible to sponsor him but is willing to assist to some extent. Only five points are given here.

I suggest that as we obtain further experience in administering this points system we may find that too many points have been given to the category of personal assessment. At least the other categories are capable of some degree of objective measurement and objective definition. But this clearly cannot be done with this category of personal assessment, where the officer has to consider such qualities as adaptability, motivation, initiative, resourcefulness, and so on. These are all wonderful words and are qualities we look for in immigrants, but I have some doubt whether any one of them can be assessed by an immigration officer in the course of an interview of 15 or 20 minutes.

These terms have been the subject of consideration and study by social scientists and researchers in universities for many years. I have grave doubts whether even they can provide, even after a period of lengthy research and study, definitions and criteria which can be established and applied to people in a way which permits decisions to be made on the crucial question of whether people being tested have the qualifications to come into this country.

Shortly before the time came when I would be able to speak on these estimates I went into the parliamentary library and found a volume entitled "A Dictionary of the Social Sciences" which was compiled under the auspices of the United Nations educational, scientific, and cultural organization. The book is described as containing terms pertinent to the fields of anthropology, economics, political science, social psychology and sociology. It occurred to me that if the minister has teams of sociologists studying the reasons why immigrants are not interested in coming to this country from certain other countries—and I think this is a very useful work—possibly similar efforts would have been aimed at evolving the category of personal assessment. Therefore I decided to look up the terms in this dictionary. First I looked up the term "adaptability". The term "adaptability" does not even occur in this book; it is not there at all. Since I do not want to be unfair, I would point out that the word "adaptation" does appear, and it is defined as follows on page 8:

> Adaptation may be defined as the process, and the resultant condition, in which changes in an organism, system of social organization, group, or culture aid the survival, functioning, maintenance, or achievement of purpose on the part of an organism, personality, group, culture, or any part thereof.

I wonder if an immigration officer can apply this definition to an individual after an interview of 15 minutes or of several hours, because subparagraph 1 of this definition reads as follows:

> As can be seen the present usage of the term has become so broad as to be diffuse and almost meaningless.

Then I decided to turn to the next term which is "motivation" for which there is a rather lengthy definition in the book, part of which I will read:

> The term motivation refers to any organismic state that mobilizes activity which is in some sense selective, or directive, with respect to the environment. Since a great deal of human behaviour that is obviously motivated, in this sense, cannot be directly associated with any specific, discriminable organismic states, it is necessary to distinguish one motive from another in terms of the goals (q.v.) toward which behaviour is directed, if the term is to have a constant meaning regardless of whether or not the motive in question corresponds to a specific, known physiologic state.

I know the minister shares with me the aim to have our system administered in a fair and equitable way, and he has achieved remarkable progress along these lines. Perhaps he could tell me what training has been given to our immigration officers to assist them to apply the criteria in this definition to an individual in 10 or 15 minutes.

The next term is "initiative". I looked it up and found its definition to be as follows:

> The initiative is a political device—used widely in Switzerland and in state and local governments in the United States—through which the electorate may by petition propose a statute or an amendment to a constitution.

It goes on to define this concept at greater length. I think it is of some significance that the term "initiative" does not even exist as a concept in social sciences applicable to the individual human personality, and yet the department is asking its officers to assess applicants who wish to live in this country on the basis of a concept of initiative which hundreds of social scientists at the level of people like Clyde Kluckhorn, Margaret Mead and Barbara Ward have not been able to define in this volume published under the aegis of UNESCO.

Then I turn to another term, namely "resourcefulness" and this is not in the book either. What I just said about initiative obviously also applies to the term "resourcefulness".

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Gray: Yes, when I complete my remarks. Since I will try not to speak at great length, there should be some time left for questions.

I think it is obvious that while the aim of providing some type of assessment of the personality to help make up for lacks in education and training is a good one, and I am certainly not opposing it in principle the way this has come out in the initial stage is subject to abuse, to subjective decisions and subjective judgment in a way which is not consistent with what I am confident the minister had in mind when proposing this points system. I might add that he is asking officers to apply these concepts who, in spite of the fact that the majority of them are well intentioned and interested in their work, are certainly not qualified to carry out a detailed assessment of the personality, whether they have 15 minutes or 10 hours in which to do it.

I think that I have at least in part made the point that while there is a need for a period of study and observation of this points system there is already one aspect of it which, so far as thoughtful and fair-minded people are concerned—and I certainly include the minister in this category—should be a matter of concern—that is that it will be used to turn upside down what I am sure is the aim of the minister and the government, namely to broaden the admissibility of immigrants to Canada. The purpose of this discussion in committee of the whole is to have an exchange of ideas, and the minister has been most reasonable in taking part in this exchange both in the house and in the special committee on immigration. I would urge him to take my remarks into account, I hope that before much more time has gone by he will see the necessity for some appropriate modification in this points system, so that this situation will not be continued where there are immigration officers, no matter how interested and active they may be, who are not really equipped to carry out an assessment of personality on the basis of criteria which do not even exist as concepts in social science, and if they do exist they do so in a way which permits them to be applied only by highly trained people after the most lengthy and careful studies. I might say that if the category exists, and I say there is a place for it, certainly there is room for a reduction of the number of points given for it, and an increase of the points in the category of relatives. Certainly the fact that an applicant has a relative in Canada willing to assist him in becoming established is worth more than five points. I think it should be possible to put the points which would be taken away from the category of personal assessment into the category of relatives.

I want to deal with another point which has less reference to the points system as such than to the present method of considering the applications of visitors. I understand that a person who applies for an immigration visa while visiting this country is not given any credit for arranged employment in Canada but automatically loses 10 points. It seems to me that if we are really interested in encouraging skilled people to come here we should welcome those who come here on a trip of an exploratory nature to see whether they can fit into our society. It is unrealistic to expect someone who has a home and a good job to give it all up and to come to this country, even after having had the opportunity to read all the leaflets and talk to the immigration officers in his home country, without having a chance to study the situation personally. I certainly think it should be possible for someone to come here as a visitor to see whether or not he likes the country and can find a suitable job, and then file his application in a way which would not discriminate against him. His application should certainly not be considered more quickly than it would be if he were to remain in his home country and file it there, but I do not think he should start out with a couple of strikes against him because he came here to visit and decided he wanted to stay. It is unreasonable to expect such a person to incur the expenses involved in buying a ticket to go back home an amount which may be sufficient for him to pay to bring his family over, and then have to make an application back in his home country.

When the minister will speak later on in the debate perhaps he may provide some clarification with regard to the deduction of points where arranged employment is made. I think it would be most unreasonable if this deduction were to take place after the prospective immigrant came here and arranged for employment, especially if in the first place he did not intend to stay here permanently but, at the urging of relatives decided to apply and told the immigration officer that he has found someone who wanted to offer him a job in his trade. If we can accept the argument of the department that there is something wrong in having a more open acceptance of applications from visitors, one should also possibly be able to accept the argument that some points should be deducted if a person comes here after making prior arrangements for a job here and arrives here ostensibly as a visitor. Certainly this argument cannot be applied to a person who comes here as a visitor and, at the urging of a prospective employer, comes to the immigration officer and says he would like to stay here. I think it is unreasonable, under those circumstances to take ten points from the points available to him. I urge the minister to give further consideration to this aspect as well.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman. I will say that while I have attempted to put forward some criticisms in a constructive vein of some aspects of this points system, I feel it is a great step forward, a great improvement over the previous approach to the selection of immigrants. My remarks are aimed at helping the system work better, at helping the minister achieve continued and even greater success in his responsibility, not only in this department but as one of the leaders of the government of this country. After all, in spite of the criticism that may come from this side of the house, or the other side, I think the memories of the people of this country are not so short that they cannot remember that in the early 1960's when the party now in opposition formed the government, immigration fell to some 70,000.

It was only after this government took office that the number of immigrants rose in a way which reflected the needs of the country, and a better approach to the humane treatment of our fellow human beings. Certainly, there is a great difference, no matter what criticisms I or others may bring forward during the study of these estimates, between the almost 200,000 immigrants who have come this year and the 70,000 who came under the former government. This shamefully low figure along with others was a blot on the record of that government.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I say that I have put forward some suggestions for improvement. I commend the minister upon his willingness to listen to suggestions and to consider individual cases as well. I am confident that the department, under his leadership and the government of which he is a member, will continue the progress that came about only when this government took office, and will continue to provide the necessary increase in immigrants for the benefit of this country and its people.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, after listening to the previous speaker—

Mr. Schreyer: I have a question which I should like to direct to the hon. member for Essex West. The hon. member was critical of certain concepts involved in the new immigration policy. In particular, he stated that the use of certain terms, such as initiative, were difficult to express because they lacked precision. I should like to ask him if he would agree that we have the same problem when this term is used in connection with economics and taxation. This term is used so frequently, that I ask him if he would not agree there is an equal lack of justification for its use?

Mr. Gray: No, I would not accept that statement. There are dictionary definitions, but I think there is a difference between dictionary definitions and the more precise definition required when one operates in the area of the sciences, even the social sciences. I will be the first to agree that the social sciences have not yet achieved the absolute certainty that some of the other sciences have. While I believe that my criticisms are valid in respect of the attempt to use the word "initiative" as a concept in the measurement of individual human performance or potential performance, I think that as a broad general concept related to the activities of people, parties, governments or humanity in general it is capable of continued use. Certainly it has justification in so far as the achievements of this government to date are concerned.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Interesting, indeed, Mr. Chairman, has been the speech of the hon. member for Essex West. He has sought to set himself up as one of the principal critics of the department of immigration, and yet when the chips are down he wants to go along with and be part of the minister's policy. Really, he cannot have it both ways. He puts one foot firmly on each side of the fence, while the wire eats into his soul. This is the type of operation of which the hon. gentleman has been guilty in the joint special committee. In the committee he has set himself up as someone trying to be in opposition to the department, and yet he comes into the house and takes an entirely different approach. Sir, I do not believe I can make any other comment except, "Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel."

Mr. Woolliams: He is having a love-in this afternoon.

Mr. Gray: May I ask a question?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I listened with care to the hon. gentleman and I hope he will listen with equal care to me.

Mr. Munro: Many of these changes are the ones you wanted.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I do not know what the hon. member for Hamilton East is mumbling. He usually sits in his seat and mumbles. I wish he would get up and make a speech.

Mr. Munro: May I get up now, then, and ask a question ?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman may get up and make a speech later, when I have finished.

Mr. Munro: My only comment was that many of these changes are the ones you, yourself, wanted.

The Chairman: Order. Would both hon. gentlemen sit down please. The hon. member for Carleton has the floor.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): During the last session of parliament immigration policy was considered in detail in a joint special committee of the Senate and House of Commons. In my view this was a good committee. It is regrettable that the government and its supporters have not seen fit to continue the work of that committee at this session, so that a proper report could be made to parliament and acted upon.

The committee itself was established on May 18, and the members of the committee were appointed on May 29. There has not been one sitting of the committee since May 29. The responsibility rests with the government whip to call that committee. No one else but the government whip can call it. This is neglect of a very vital issue on the part of the government whip.

The briefs that were submitted to the joint special committee at the last session were of an exceptionally high calibre. They deserved, but have not received, the intensive study of the members of the committee. The house, and I think the nation, are entitled to a detailed and exhaustive study of the provisions of the white paper.

In earlier debates, sir, I have expressed my opinion that the white paper was window dressing. It needs to be strengthened greatly and clarified before it could become an acceptable basis for a long range, genuinely expansionist immigration policy. The evidence taken before the special committee clearly indicates that while the white paper purports to be expansionist it is, in fact, latently restrictive; that while purportedly non-discriminatory it is latently discriminatory.

I suggest to you, sir, that these aspects must be purged from the white paper and from the legislation which presumably will follow it.

The Chairman: Order. It being seven o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, just before the recess I had endeavoured to deal with the inconsistencies of the white paper, equalled only by the jewelled inconsistencies of the hon. member for Essex West. I should like to continue and to deal with some of the briefs which have been submitted on behalf of a variety of organizations and governments to the special joint committee on immigration.

I thought the most impressive brief of all was that submitted by the government of Manitoba. The minister of industry and commerce, Hon. Sidney Spivak, pointed out that each economic region of Canada has special problems related to the need for immigrants, each its own particular potentials, problems and objectives.

While it is certainly true that the more heavily developed and industrialized regions of Canada may require more skilled and fewer unskilled immigrants, the less developed areas of Canada actually require more unskilled and semi-skilled immigrants. I think a brief quotation from the Manitoba brief, as it appears at page 199 of the proceedings and evidence of the special joint committee, will make this particular point:

> The policy proposed in the white paper claims to be nondiscriminatory. It is in terms of geography and race. But it does in fact discriminate against the kind of people Manitoba needs today to enable our economy to expand and grow. The federal "policy" is not expansionist as it claims. Rather it imposes unrealistic standards in a small and highly selective, increasingly competitive skill and education market. It simply does not recognize the facts.

That is the point I should like to make about the white paper, Mr. Chairman: It simply does not recognize the facts. It does not seem to me that the new regulations adopting a points system are adequate enough or flexible enough to meet this point of view. In many ways I would prefer what I have heard described as the old "eyeball" system.

The hon. gentleman from Greenwood was worried that he might not be admitted to Canada if suddenly he were confronted by an immigration officer who, looking him over and applying the points system, sought to describe him. For myself, Mr. Chairman, I like the eyeball system. I believe in the judgment of the individual by the properly trained immigration officer.

I repeat, sir, what I have said before often in this chamber, that if the ancestors of the members of this chamber had had to meet the selection criteria laid down in the white paper, few of us would even be citizens of this country of which we are now representatives in the parliament of the nation.

I venture to put on record, Mr. Chairman, the recommendations of the Manitoba brief, and respectfully to endorse them in full, as they appear at page 200 of the proceedings and evidence of the special joint committee on immigration:

> The following recommendations respecting Canada's immigration policies and programs are submitted for consideration:
> National immigration policy is not sufficiently flexible to meet the needs of each region and province. Programs should be specifically designed to help overcome regional disparities.
> Critical labour shortages cannot be met because of existing immigration rules. Procedures should be established immediately which will permit prompt immigration action to overcome existing and future persistent labour shortages.
> Proposed immigration policy will hamper "frontier" development. Special programs should be created to help encourage "frontier" development—
> Rigid admission standards based primarily on education are unrealistic and do not meet needs of the economy. They are discriminatory rather than expansionist. Education and skill admission standards should be revised to take account of the immigrant's aptitude and potential.

Those words I would adopt in full, Mr. Chairman. I say to the committee that nowhere has the failure of our immigration policy been so evident as in the recruitment of agricultural workers. The extent to which the department of immigration has let down the farmers of this nation is exposed in an answer to a question of mine which appears in Hansard for June 21, 1967 at page 1769. The third part of the question was:

> 3. Of the immigrants who were admitted to Canada in 1965 and 1966 (a) how many were destined for the agricultural labour force (b) what percentage of the total immigration inflow for each of the two years did these represent?

What was the answer, Mr. Chairman? In 1965 the workers destined for agricultural employment numbered 2,362; the percentage of the total immigration was 1.6. In 1966 the number was 3,153; the percentage of the total immigration was 1.6. In each of those years, Mr. Chairman, only 1.6 per cent of the total inflow of immigration was directed to agricultural employment, the industry which still today is the very bedrock of our national prosperity.

Yet every day, Mr. Chairman, more and more farmers are compelled to give up farming or to restrict their activities because of this shortage of labour; and no one knows that better than the man who with such distinction occupies the chair at the present time. The almost total lack of farm labour at this time is verging upon a national crisis as well as a personal tragedy for very many farmers. What plans has the department in this regard? None was outlined. Will the minister when he replies outline the plans the department has in this respect?

Another sufferer from the excessive emphasis upon skill and education is the mining industry. All of us have seen the recent press stories, which I am not going to read into the record, setting up the critical labour shortage in that industry. The department has been dilatory and negligent in its lack of recruitment programs for labour in these two basic industries.

One of the major problems of the department results from the discrimination against the overseas staff which exists in comparison with the treatment accorded the overseas staff of the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Trade and Commerce. The officers of the department of immigration ought, as a matter of right, to enjoy the status and prestige accorded at least to the overseas staff of the Department of Trade and Commerce. They do not. Those men and women who are selecting our future citizens are engaged in work at least as important to Canada as those who are promoting our trade. The just grievances of the overseas staff of the department of immigration should be removed at once.

In his reply, I would ask the minister to tell the committee what action has been taken to promote the immigration of non-communists from behind the iron curtain. We are told there are extensive pools of highly trained and intelligent people seeking to leave some of these countries: Was any advantage taken of the recent and most welcome visit of the Polish parliamentary group to discuss emigration from that particular country? Canadians of Polish origin are among our most enlightened and publicly minded citizens. The Canadian Polish Congress is a great national organization. This country could use many more citizens of the qualities of those of Polish origin.

Again, I should like the minister to tell us what co-operation has taken place between his department and the government of Manitoba in respect of the latter's program under which free passage is offered as a means of attracting immigrants to that province. Is this program a success? Ought it to be emulated on a national scale? Earlier, in the course of another debate, I expressed the view—which I reiterate now—that we should extend broader and more generous inducements with a view to attracting desirable immigrants. The Australian plan has worked; it has attracted to that great country a large number of most suitable immigrants who might otherwise have been admitted to Canada.

Turning to another subject, I submit with great respect that the minister has been less than vigilant, or less than expeditious, in getting the new immigration appeal board into full operation. There was an unconscionable delay in making the appointments, and the actual commencement of operations on a new basis was delayed much longer than we were led to expect. Why has this been the case? The board may well be the white hope in immigration policy. Let us give it every opportunity to build up a new and, I hope, humanitarian jurisprudence in the immigration field.

Mr. Chairman, a concomitant of the failure of the minister and the government to get the special committee into action is the further delay in the total revision of the obsolete, one might almost say antedeluvian, Immigration Act. The target date of the previous government for this revision was two years following the enactment of the new regulations in January, 1962. That target has been missed by 3½ years. My advice to the minister is: Let us get on with this job. The Immigration Act is a hodge-podge of inconsistent antiquities. Let us bring it into the 20th century and make some attempt in its drafting to look forward to the 21st.

I believe the committee is entitled to a full statement from the minister about the progress of the department's program in connection with the granting of immigrant status for persons who overstay their visits to Canada, as outlined in the hon. gentleman's statement of July 8, 1966. At that time, there were certainly between 25,000 and 35,000 persons who were in Canada illegally. How many of these have since been legally admitted? How many new illegal entries have been made since that time, according to departmental estimates? Has the policy of July, 1966 solved this continuing problem, or has it merely settled some individual cases while ignoring the arrival of new illegal entrants?

Many members of this house have been concerned about the presence in Canada of so-called draft dodgers from the United States. The ease with which a United States citizen may enter Canada either as a visitor or as an immigrant is something no one wishes to restrict. I recognize equally that the whole of the North American continent, United States and Canada alike, owes a great deal to dissenters, religious, pacifist and otherwise. But I think this committee needs an assurance that we are not merely lending ourselves to the breach of the laws of our neighbour. We need to be assured, in the second place, that the admissions are legal, and that they are allowed for purposes which would serve our national interest. Third, we should be satisfied that the entrants are not persons of a type likely to engage in illegal or illicit activities while in Canada.

The minister owes the committee a detailed statement. I seek to place no impediment upon the proper and legal entry into Canada of United States citizens, including those who are genuine non-conformists, but I do not wish our country to be a haven for drug addicts, perverts and other escapists from reality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Immigration to Canada from the United States is but one side of the coin. On the other side is emigration to the United States—the brain drain which has plagued this country over its whole 100 years. I welcome the success of "Operation Retrieval", the new departmental attempt to persuade Canadian graduates studying abroad to return to Canada. But much more needs to be done to stem the outflow of needed Canadian population. The pulling force of the United States is a fact of life. I draw attention to a document of the committee on government operations of the United States House of Representatives entitled "The Brain Drain into the United States of Scientists, Engineers and Physicians" published in July, 1967 which demonstrates the immigration into the United States in 1966 of 2,827 Canadian engineers and medical personnel, 246 natural scientists and 62 social scientists, a group of specialists which Canada can ill afford to lose.

One further subject with which I hope the minister will deal in his reply is the present state of the refugee problem and our contribution to its solution. In the Middle East, the peace of the world is threatened by the desperate plight of refugee people. What is Canada doing here and elsewhere in the world?

I close on a note which is familiar to the committee—and it is decidedly my theme song in connection with immigration. I believe in greatly expanded immigration as a genuine instrument of national economic policy; as a technique of stimulating the economy; as a process of achieving national greatness. I reject completely the feast and famine, tap on-tap off policies pursued so frequently by ministers of all parties in this country.

The marriage of manpower and immigration makes me decidedly uneasy. Immigration almost inevitably will be the bottom partner, with obvious results. My approach is to assert for immigration a separate and distinct status as a national stimulant, and to believe that manpower then has the duty and responsibility of finding opportunities equally for Canadians and new immigrants. The actual presence in this country of new immigrants will enhance the opportunities for Canadians, once, twice, thrice or more removed from the immigrant status.

I submit, sir, that what all of us seek is genuine equality for all immigrant people, for that is what we all are, except the Indians and Eskimos. Some of the newer immigrant people have misinterpreted the so-called English-French dialogue as confining them to an inferior status. I repudiate any such thought or any such approach. My own position, as a very proud Irishman, removes me from any English-French conflict—

Mr. Mackasey: Irishman?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): —and resent those who place me on one side or the other.

Mr. Mackasey: How did you become an Irishman?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My people were rebellious when France was sleeping in medievalism. I stand with the third force in Canada which demands total equality with those two races who arrogate to themselves special designation as founding peoples. I ask only genuine Canadianism for one and all in a united Canada.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few words to say in this debate on the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. To begin with I would like to congratulate the minister. Since he came to Ottawa and was made minister in charge of this department he has been instrumental in introducing significant reforms both in immigration and manpower. The new rules for the admission of immigrants are a big step forward because they make a more realistic assessment of the true value of a potential immigrant. Previously too much value was given to the formal training of the immigrant and not enough to the other factors which make a person a good Canadian.

The new regulations have been directed to economic ends to correspond with our manpower needs. This is extremely important, but above this I believe the new rules with the points system are more humane, more just and more orderly. As a member of parliament from a city constituency which has a high percentage of immigrants, I have already found examples where the new rules have provided for a more humane and better flow of immigrants.

But with all new plans there are bound to be a few kinks which have to be worked out with experience. I merely want to mention a few of these and make some suggestions to the minister about them. I believe the most sensitive area in the new method and points system involves the men who interview prospective immigrants and apply the points system. One can easily see how easy it would be for the interviewer to let his personal prejudices influence his granting of points, especially in the areas where quick judgment is required, and where really no quick judgment can be made. It is to be hoped that all interviewers will be properly instructed, and I think they should be given more specific rules for guidance.

It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that too often the interviewers and other officials in the department resolve any doubts against the prospective immigrant. It would seem to me that it would be much better and more humane to resolve any doubts in favour of the immigrant. Too often people have been refused entry or sent back to their own countries merely on what would appear to be the personal whim of the interviewer or of the official in the department. So, whereas I feel the new rules and regulations are a big step forward, and really the right sort of thing, it is most important that they be applied by people who would apply any doubt in favour of the applicant.

Although the new rules have removed any discrimination, they really will not be effective until we have placed more immigration officers and more personnel in countries where the demand for immigration is high, and where the pressures of the population explosions are also high. I have particularly in mind Indonesia, India, Hong Kong and the West Indies. I have encountered problems in my own constituency concerning prospective immigrants from these areas, involving people who have been waiting for years to get into Canada because of lack of personnel or lack of offices, many of them people with high qualifications and who, apparently, could become very good Canadians.

I realize that in the matter of immigrants coming from developing countries we must work in co-operation with those countries, so that we do not take away from them some of their own people who are needed to develop them. It would be ridiculous on the one hand for our government to try to assist the development of these countries through our external aid office and, on the other hand, take the people they need away from them.

I believe the minister has announced his intention of correcting other problems such as those concerned with the handicapped and mentally ill. The sooner amendments are made to the new rules, to allow an immigrant family to bring with them a member of that family who is chronically ill or handicapped, or who has some type of disease which would not permit his admission as an individual, provided the family is willing to take care of that person, the better it will be. It is completely inhumane to allow a family to come to Canada, yet disallow one brother or son merely because he has some type of illness which would bar his admission as an individual immigrant. So long as the family is prepared to take care of him he should be allowed to come to Canada.

With regard to prospective immigrants from behind the Iron Curtain I have personally encountered problems where the security check involved takes too long and is applied with too much rigour against people who, in the long run, are often shown to have nothing against them which should prevent their coming into this country. I say we should allow such prospective immigrants to come into Canada provisionally, if they meet the test on all other points, with the stipulation that if anything shows up later in their security check then they would have to leave the country. I believe a somewhat similar procedure is followed in other countries.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think the new policy we have introduced covering the manpower retraining program and the manpower relocation program is a big step forward in this age of technological change, in which men often lose their jobs in middle life because of new technology and new types of processing. However, I have found that some men who applied for the retaining program were refused admission because they were over the maximum age laid down. One man I have in mind was 56, and another 58.

I have also found instances of people who were refused because they did not have sufficient education under the regulations covering the retraining program. If this retraining program is to be really effective I believe it should apply to men who are in their middle age, even if they do not have grade 11 education. In one case I know that a man was refused because he did not have grade 11 education, and he wrote me about it. He was a man who had a trade, but who lost his job because of new technology. This man was refused retraining because he did not have grade 11 education. In other cases, as I have said, men were refused admission to a retraining program because it was claimed they were too old.

I believe that one of the most difficult areas in manpower is with respect to middle aged workers. Even if they can be retrained those of this age group have the most difficulty in finding jobs. I have found that many men of ability who still have much to offer Canada and to the economic growth of their regions cannot get jobs because of the restrictions many companies impose with respect to age. The department responsible for manpower must work to correct this problem. We should do something to remedy restrictive rules in the department's regulations which prevent persons such as I have mentioned from entering into retraining and relocation programs because of age or education.

As I said at the beginning, the department's difficulties are kinks which will be ironed out. They are natural. I think the minister, in setting up this department and introducing into immigration and manpower new procedures, deserves a great deal of credit.

Mr. McCleave: I shall try to be brief, for two reasons. First, many others wish to talk in this interesting debate and, second, the Leader of the Opposition in an able address covered many points I had wanted to cover. I shall not repeat them, except to urge on the minister the wisdom of letting a committee of the House of Commons examine this program and the work of this department. Probably that could be done next year. That way we could learn more than by having exchanges in the House of Commons. Experts could be called before the committee to testify. One point that could be looked into, for example, is the 25 per cent of unplaced job applicants registered with the former national employment service in 1966. They were male and over the age of 54. Only 1.2 per cent of those who were in training were in that age group. Obviously, those in the 54 and up age group face a serious problem. They may be regarded as untrainable for new jobs, or as not having the inclination at that time of life to take job training opportunities that are available.

On points such as these it would be useful to hear experts from inside and outside the department. The problem is a neglected one and perhaps cannot be solved by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Nevertheless in a sense these people are being forgotten. I mention these matters to the minister in all earnestness, hoping that, say next year, a committee may be set up to examine in depth the operations of his department.

This afternoon, if I heard him correctly, the minister mentioned that the department was not concentrating its efforts in the area of moving people from one part of Canada to another. It preferred, and I hope I have this correctly, for problems to be solved in the provinces in which they occur. The President of the Treasury Board who made a remark some years ago that brought a storm from Atlantic Canada about his ears will no doubt tell the minister that such an approach is wise.

Another aspect the committee could examine is the effectiveness over the last six years of the department's programs. In a powerful indictment published in the Monetary Times for June, 1967, an article entitled "The Manpower Mess", had this to say in part:

> From 1961 to 1966 program 4 (training in co-operation with industry) and program 5 (training of the unemployed) soaked up $100 million. For this figure, the government claims some 200,000 Canadians participated in one way or another. But there is little to show what their participation achieved. The dropout rate may be as high as 60%, and the profitability to those who completed the courses is practically unknown.

I do not know whether these strong words are correct, and perhaps the minister, in replying, can say whether he takes exception to that statement published in the Monetary Times. Such a statement implants a nagging doubt that can be resolved better by an examination in the more intimate setting of a committee of the house than by an examination in this awesome forum.

I continue quoting from the article:

> Even Ontario, which made greater use of the funds than all other provinces combined, heard its own economic council report: "Program 5 lacks well-defined objectives at all levels of its operations: federal, provincial and local. The lack of objectives complicates the development of effective policies and the use of meaningful performance measures. (Its role) has not been defined and continued procrastination could result in a training program for the unemployed which diverges widely from the nation's and the province's real needs."

Again, sir, I say that this is compelling evidence to show the need for such important programs, in all their aspects, to be examined.

I was pleased to hear the minister announce that he would broaden the statistical operations that support the manpower program. Admittedly he spoke in the other language of Canada, and while we have excellent translation facilities one cannot always catch what is being said. If one is too close to the minister he hears him speaking in his original language, which is distracting; and if one is too far away he can hear a buzz coming from behind the curtains, which is distracting, too. I gather the minister said that the statistical information so far available to him and his officials was incomplete and that new statistical devices were to be employed. This is wise.

In the March, 1967, issue of the Canadian Statistical Review a feature article on Canadian manpower statistics supports the need for more and different types of information with respect to unemployment in Canada. There is the labour force survey taken from 35,000 households. It is a national survey, a sort of spot check here and there, but does not examine the problem in detail. As the article I have just referred to says on page 3 of the publication:

> For those in the labour force with a job, some qualitative information is available regarding their industrial and occupational attachment within broad groupings. Similarly, for the unemployed the number of weeks seeking work is recorded. Because of the relatively small size of the sample (about 1 per cent of the population of working age) sampling variability limits the amount of detail from this source. Thus for most series only Canada and regional data are available.

The article, in speaking of administrative records, says that those records are deficient and are limited in usefulness as economic statistics. I am glad to see the minister coming to grips with this problem.

I should like to know about that. Again, I think a committee approach, where one could call in experts and deal with this new type of statistical approach, would be helpful. While the minister can be very frank with us and give certain answers, he is perhaps just filling in Hansard and we are occupying ourselves with technical information that is of interest to only a relatively small number of members.

On the question of immigration, Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the minister for taking, in the Halifax area, a step that has been long overdue. After consultation with the Department of Transport and some urging from Halifax members and the port of Halifax commission, the minister has now corrected the problem. In the past when groups of, say, below 250 immigrants arrived in Halifax it was not feasible to arrange special trains for them, and frequently while awaiting the regular service they had to hang around the immigration sheds. This represented a rather bleak welcome to their new country. Instead of the red carpet that was promised in Rome, say, they found these cold and somewhat institutional rooms of very poor comfort. This was their first impression, quite apart from their arrival in the beautiful harbour of Halifax, upon landing in this country.

The minister has solved this problem by making hotel accommodation in Halifax available to these groups of newcomers to Canada. I should like to put this on the public record. People who are not able to board special trains immediately are provided with hotel accommodation. This was a very humane and very reasonable step, which I presume will be applied in other parts of Canada.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we have had some discussion today about the ten-point system. The hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for St. Paul's wondered how well they would qualify and what criteria would be used. They wondered whether you can judge a man accurately by looking him in the eye. My suggestion is—and this method can be used to test any person, particularly somebody who asks you to endorse his note—that the test should be: Would you buy a used car from this person? I throw that suggestion out as a swift alternative to the laborious setting down and totalling of points. However, I do have reservations about the test I have suggested. I am afraid that were it applied completely it might mean that Canada would become occupied by little old ladies, of both sexes, who drove their vehicles only on Sunday.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, the minister expressed his optimism tonight and hoped that Canada would have one of the best manpower policies in the world. We all agree that this is what we would like to have in this country. However, I do not think we are as close to achieving that desired result as the minister seems to think.

I believe there is little cause for comfort in the progress of the manpower department. Many of the problems of that department are beyond the ability of the minister to solve. I think this has to be stated. I should also like to say that a couple of weeks ago I brought some matters to the minister's attention and was very pleased when he rose at the end of my comments and put some forthright statements on the record for the guidance of people in offices across this country.

We know that the minister has failed to attract the necessary personnel to his department. We understand this is a general problem and applies not only to his department but to others. I believe the minister has tried to attract these personnel and I hope that before this debate concludes he will tell us frankly what are the difficulties and what solutions he has in mind for correcting the problem.

It is also fairly obvious that the minister has had to change his plans with regard to making payments under some of the programs, because of the difficulties encountered at the federal-provincial level, in terms of defining the jurisdiction of the federal government as opposed to that of the provincial governments. Until the government finds a better solution than has appeared up to this time, the whole program will be bedevilled by these strange situations that cannot be corrected and which cause enormous inconvenience to people seeking retraining in this country.

I hope that my remarks tonight will be somewhat more rational than those of the leader of the official opposition. The hon. member for Ontario began by criticizing the minister for his failure to provide enough money for retraining programs. The hon. member said that the absence of funds in this area resulted in the exclusion of people from retraining programs. He then concluded his speech by taking the government to task for spending too much money and for not reducing the tax load on the citizens of this country. I suggest there is room for legitimate criticism in this regard; but this was not that kind of criticism. I believe that the kind of criticism in which the pot calls the kettle black does not help us in the course of trying to solve these problems.

When members of the opposition, whose record while in office contains, amongst other things, a history of the highest unemployment rate in this country for many years, rise and criticize the government for the present level of unemployment, some questions have to be raised. I believe the problem of unemployment is of paramount importance and it is the chief point with which I should like to deal tonight. Before doing so, however, I should like to point out the third difficulty in the minister's department that has not been adequately explained.

I believe the department has been excessively cautious from the commencement of the program to the present time. If we consider the mobility program, for example, we have seen it revised from one stage to another. It started out with loans and grants and has now progressed—I might say, favourably progressed—to a structure of grants and has got away from loans.

From the inception of this program we have pointed out the difficulty of a proposition which included loans and grants. We have now progressed to the grants stage in the program. We have not, however, reached the stage of a clearcut understanding that the grants must be substantially higher than those now proposed by the minister.

The hardcore unemployment in certain areas of this country points up the need for mobility in those areas. The reason people have to be moved from certain communities is not that of individual unemployment, the kind of individual unemployment that occurs in an area that has diversified industry. It results from a complete shutdown of an industry, from the obsolescence of an activity, and it means that the working community suffers greatly. One of the chief obstacles in moving people in a situation of that type is that to move them from the surroundings in which they have become accustomed to living means that they lose everything they have worked for all their lives.

Usually it means the loss of a home. If the community is on its way out and there is no opportunity to sell that home, even giving people an extra $500 under their allowances is not an adequate compensation. The department will have to consider compensating losses of this type in the same way in which society generally has to do it when it expropriates land for the purpose of building a highway or an expressway. It is not enough to say: We will give you something toward your future. That "something" does not go very far. Since the dislocation is part of the over-all price that society pays for change and progress, that price should not have to be paid for only by the victims upon whose shoulders the dislocation falls. The remedy is a house for a house. This should be obvious to hon. members in the opposition.

I have seen people in my own riding being forced to migrate from their homes and the homes of their ancestors, after the most productive years of their life have been spent, and having to start out in new surroundings where, generally speaking, housing is difficult to obtain, at a time when the money they have received does not go very far, and when much of the furniture they have acquired is either no longer useful or too costly to move. What they need is an adequate opportunity for resettlement, and that cost should be borne by society generally rather than by these people in particular. If a mobility program is to adequately reflect the needs of this country, then this is the position that we must take.

It seems that the minister is frequently put in the position of a painter who has to cover the defects of the carpenters who are building the structure in this country. I should like to suggest to the minister that, like any other painter, he could camouflage some of the minor flaws, but if he wishes to preserve his reputation he had better talk to the carpenters and review the structure because there is a limit to what even painting can do.

The threatened closing down of Dosco is an example of the sort of thing I am talking about. Here is an industry which decides on its own and for its own reasons, without regard for the disruption that it creates in the community, to cease operations. The minister of manpower is left to pick up the pieces and to try to patch up the job or paint it over to make it look good. The real failure in this case is the failure of the government to have anticipated this problem and to have done some structural work before the roof fell in. Apparently the minister recognized this, and in the Globe and Mail of October 17 he is reported to have said the following:

> —Change is inevitable in a dynamic economy, but corporations have to accept their responsibilities to the communities in which they operate...and legislation may be needed to enforce the point.

I suggest to him that it is not that legislation may be needed, but that legislation is needed. I would like to hear from the minister as to what he intends to propose to the government by way of legislation to prevent Dosco from abdicating its responsibility, and what he proposes to do about other similar situations.

We may have reached the point where we will start hearing proposals from Liberals and Conservatives to nationalize Dosco. Certainly such proposals have already been made by my own party. I think there is a great danger in such a proposal. It seems that the only time when nationalization is proposed is when the particular industry has collapsed and it becomes the only way to preserve some of the social and human elements involved. In time people will forget about the irresponsibility of the company and will only remember the difficulties it had in operating, and then blame nationalization for what is essentially a fault of the government in not having anticipated the situation.

There was a time when Dosco should have been nationalized, and in the last 10 or 15 years that suggestion has been made to successive governments. However, it was always pooh-poohed. Right until the last minute the impression was left that the people in Cape Breton were in no danger and there was no need for the government to step into the picture. That optimism has not been borne out and a serious crisis is facing Nova Scotia. Referring to the labour government in Britain will not absolve the government of this country from its failure to live up to its responsibilities, for its camouflaging of the circumstances and for waiting until disaster strikes. The government will not impress the people in Cape Breton by muttering about the labour government in Great Britain.

I should now like to speak about some of my own personal experiences and observations as the representative of the riding of Waterloo South. We have a unique riding in the sense that there is a tremendous diversity of industry in our area, all the way from textiles to machinery. It has been instructive to observe what has happened over a period of years. The experience in the riding has convinced me of the tremendous urgency and need for a manpower policy, and this is why I have been such a strong advocate of the upgrading of training and of generally increasing the level of skills to meet the growing needs of an industrial society. However, one conclusion that must be reached when examining the manpower policies is that no manpower policy can be successful unless the minister insists on an economy of full employment. A year and a half ago when the employment situation was better than it is today I had the opportunity to see how readily manpower programs were instituted. Today we find our older workers cannot find employment and people who want to work cannot find work because of their age. We find that part-time female workers cannot find employment, young men out of high school are also in this position and immigrants from abroad as well as people from other provinces who have moved into the riding are experiencing difficulties in obtaining employment. This was not the case when the level of employment was higher. When industry needed workers there was no obstacle to developing special programs for women who wanted to work part time. Immigrants could be absorbed readily and so could people from other parts of Canada.

The minute you get some unemployment, some people are classified as unemployable or only partially employable. Then, the old problems that have faced this country for many years come to the fore. We hear statements from the Minister of Finance, when he expresses concern over inflation, to the effect that something has to be done to take the heat off. The implication in many of the minister's speeches is that we must increase the level of unemployment in this country. I urge the minister of manpower, as a person who knows what unemployment means to the ordinary man, to use all his influence within the cabinet to make certain that this kind of policy does not prevail. Other solutions have to be found to control inflation in Canada. The solution of creating more unemployment is totally unacceptable to our society.

The solution of increased supply is one that should be sought. We have many opportunities for increasing efficiency and productivity of our industry. The solution to this problem is not the sole responsibility of the minister of manpower, but he should use his influence within the cabinet to make sure that the approach of increasing supply and productivity is the one that is pursued, rather than the suggestion that a little unemployment is the answer to our economic ills. Before this debate is concluded, I hope the minister will indicate his position on this question. I see some consultation is taking place between the two ministers in question. I feel that the country deserves an answer from the minister of manpower. He should tell us where he stands on this particular issue, and which position he will support.

We all believe in the programs that are being suggested, such as the mobility program, retraining programs, increased market information, better placement service, improved provincial planning and increased aid to education. All of these things are of the greatest importance. However, they are effects rather than causes. We should never lose sight of the fact that under full employment, even in the absence of a directed program, most of the essentials of this manpower policy find expression.

There is mobility in spite of inadequate government measures. The unemployed in one part of the country find that there are job openings elsewhere. The word does not always come through government agencies but often results from visits back home or through previous migrants. Training takes place in plants that previously refused to consider such programs, once the pool of skilled labour dries up. Individuals who were considered unemployable by reason of age or lack of skill, suddenly become useful when the cream is skimmed off the labour market. The hard core cases no longer seem to be such hard cores. Unemployment amongst the young ceases to be a crisis. Admittedly, a planned manpower program would speed up this process by making the way easier for both management and labour, and for that reason it should be aggressively pursued. Good manpower programs would also do the research and set up the machinery to overcome the guessing and uncertainty of the grapevine. For these reasons, we are all in favour of manpower policies. I would conclude by pointing out to the minister that all of this is conditional and dependant on the philosophy of full employment.

Mr. Hymmen: I am very pleased to follow the hon. member for Waterloo South, because the two ridings, of course, make up the county of Waterloo, one of the most highly industrialized areas in the country today. A great many of our people are immigrants, and they have become excellent citizens. I certainly want to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister upon his initiative in continuing the expansionist policies of this government with regard to immigration. The hon. member for St. Paul's cited some statistics, and I will not repeat them. I will just mention that from the year 1961 to the year 1967 the number of immigrants to this country increased from 72,000 to over 200,000.

The hon. member for Carleton, a former minister of immigration, expressed some concern at the number of agricultural workers who are brought into Canada. I can appreciate that concern. Until there is some change in the economy of our agriculture sector, which of course is one of our more important industries, I am afraid that the agricultural workers brought to this country will soon drift to the urban areas, to which many of our own citizens are going. One interesting statistic indicates that we had 195,000 immigrants in 1966, about half of which were classified as workers and the other half as dependants. One quarter of the working category were classified as professional and technical people.

We need a great many more people in this country in order to develop our true potential. Canada, of course, is a land of opportunity with a land mass slightly larger than the United States of America to the south of us, but with only one tenth of its population. I am reminded of a highly industrialized mid-European country from which many people come to my area, which is not as large as our newest province, Newfoundland, and yet has three times the population of Canada.

I wish to speak to the new immigration regulations and commend the minister upon the introduction of these regulations. I have a very specific interest in doing so because they will provide more uniformity in the consideration of applicants, aside from the two basic considerations of character and health. Up to the present time, these considerations have been left to the discretion of officers. In spite of the points system, which has been criticized by members of the opposition, the new regulations will certainly provide uniformity in the consideration of immigrants from all over the world, and provide what I am sure this government wants to provide, an opportunity for more people to come to Canada. At the same time, these regulations recognize family relationships. This was one of the main questions considered by the standing committee on immigration. They also remove some discrimination from certain geographical areas, to which I am sure the hon. member for St. Paul's was referring earlier.

My reason for speaking briefly this evening is to point out that just about the time when the new regulations came out several questions were asked of the minister concerning an immigration case in connection with which the C.B.C. had broadcast a program. The person in question happened to reside in my riding, one Bertram Peterson. The news media have an important job to do in criticizing government policy, but it is also very easy to find an exceptional case and to magnify it. There is always a certain amount of public support for the exception, but very often the important consideration is the number of cases that are not exceptional. For every exception to the rule there are a thousand legitimate cases of assistance to immigrants to this country.

I have met Mr. Peterson, Mr. Chairman, and had I been an immigration officer—I do not class myself as trained in this connection—I would probably have accepted him. He is a very personable young man who came here for a visit and for the first time except for a short period in 1966, he was given an opportunity to apply for permanent residence while a visitor. Unfortunately, under the new regulations he did not qualify. I understand that as of this week formal notification has been sent to him that he should leave the country. However, he may take his case to an inquiry officer and, following that, if necessary to the immigration appeal board.

Although I support the regulations, Mr. Chairman, I feel—and I think the members of the committee on immigration felt much the same way—that compassionate cases, or cases involving exceptional circumstances, should be considered by this enlarged appeal board. I think the committee on immigration felt that this was one of the most important functions of the immigration appeal board.

It is very difficult to consider all of the circumstances surrounding an application. I know that the hon. member for Carleton earlier referred in laudatory terms to the people who come to this country from Poland. I know many Polish people who have made excellent citizens and who have brought to this country a heritage which is ten times the heritage of the Dominion of Canada. We are, of course, celebrating our 100th anniversary, but the nation of Poland has celebrated its millenium. We are very appreciative of the co-operation given by the Polish government in allowing relatives of people in this country to immigrate to Canada.

I often listen to questions asked of ministers by members of the opposition, and time and time again hon. members opposite suggest that the minister is taking too long in answering, that they should answer a question on motions. Last week the minister of manpower did try to make a statement about the Peterson case, on motions, but was told that that was not the place to do so.

In spite of the fact that I have appealed to the minister in connection with the Peterson case and was disappointed, as I know was Mr. Peterson, that his appeal was not granted, I trust that some way can be found through the procedures which have been indicated to enable this young man, despite his lack of certain qualifications which are necessary under the new regulations, to remain in the country. I say this because I am sure he is the type of citizen we want here.

Just a word about the manpower program, Mr. Chairman. Many problems have arisen in the implementation of this program, the federal government having accepted responsibility for 100 per cent of the cost. I think no area has had more problems than my constituency of Waterloo North, most of them surprisingly enough in the urban centres of Kitchener and Waterloo.

[Mr. Hymmen.]

Under the old shared cost program between the provincial and federal governments new facilities have been provided and the staff has been increased. The program has also been enlarged. As a matter of fact, almost three months before the changeover took place on April 1 last it was indicated to me that there was some concern over the apparent proliferation of activity under the program. I realize members of the opposition have placed on record statistics relating to the lack of trainees under this program, and I also realize it is highly desirable for every citizen of Canada to take part in the program, should they desire to improve their education or training. Nevertheless I feel there must be some control even if all who can benefit themselves and upgrade their skills are given every opportunity to do so.

I do not share the concern which has been registered this evening about the three year restriction on school drop-outs and hippies. In many of these cases there is lack of motivation. I think the provincial departments of education should accept responsibility here. I am sure that some of these people would benefit if they worked for several years and developed a desire which would motivate them to undertake some form of training.

I have one suggestion to make to the minister which I would ask him to consider seriously. Under the present regulations I do not think consideration is given to women recently widowed and with dependants and who, because they have not previously been members of the labour force, are not able to receive the training they can certainly use in order to provide for themselves and their families. This is one area in which serious consideration should be given to enable these people to provide for their needs.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise a question of privilege at the outset, because I will have a few words to say on a subject not necessarily relevant to the debate but which I mentioned this afternoon on another question of privilege when I said that I felt I was a victim of discrimination and segregation within the house on the allocation of speaking time.

[English]

The Chairman: Order. I suggest that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières confine his remarks to the item before the committee.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I should like to remind you that I want to speak to a question of privilege first. I think I am entitled to say what I have to say on the question of privilege. I am an independent member and feel discriminated against when it is time for the Chair to recognize speakers.

The Chairman: Order. Again I suggest to the hon. member that he has been given the opportunity to speak and should confine his remarks to the matter before the committee.

Mr. Mongrain: On the same question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I repeat—

The Chairman: Order, please. A procedure is laid down in the House of Commons for those who have any complaint against the conduct of the Chair. If the hon. member has such complaint I suggest he follow that procedure; for the moment I would hope that he would confine his remarks to the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Mongrain: Since I am a new member in the house would the Chair kindly tell me the rule or regulation that prevents me from invoking a question of privilege at this time?

• (9:20 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that he was not recognized on a question of privilege. He was recognized in order that he might comment on the estimates which are now before the committee.

Mr. Mongrain: Thank you. I will keep to that subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, as far as the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration are concerned, I have some remarks which may not be more brilliant than those which have been made until now but which at least will offer the advantage of not being politically inspired, remarks with no other meaning than: "Because we are Conservatives, we could do better than you; or because we are Liberals, we are doing better than you."

This afternoon, I was among those who felt admiration for the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) who seems to be a brilliant criminal lawyer. If ever I were to seriously break the law out west, I would call on his services, because he seems exceedingly brilliant when he speaks on legal or criminal matters. But when he is being influenced by political partisanship, he is less brilliant, Mr. Chairman. In fact, this afternoon, he gave a speech which, to my mind, settled nothing. He said this: The Canadian Pacific wants to eliminate from Calgary certain operations involving the lay-off of 300 or 400 employees.

I should like to remind the hon. member for Bow River that the city of Winnipeg also at one time complained when Air Canada wanted to remove some of their operations. The city of Montreal could complain at this time that Bell Telephone will be moving 350 or 400 employees to Ottawa. My own city could complain that some operations have to be moved elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, the basic problem is not the fact that industries must move, but if we go to the bottom of things, the problem is that we are entering the age of automation, and as a result we must realize that we cannot expect industries to continue their operations and meet their expenses unless they submit to the requirements of this age of automation.

I say to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that his program is a good one; it is an excellent one in the circumstances and it is not his fault if it is ten or fifteen years too late, but I feel he should arrange for studies to be made about the situation of the labour market and of the Canadian economy in the next thirty or thirty-five years.

I know that the Americans have been able to establish committees which attempt to anticipate our mode of life in twenty, twenty-five, thirty or thirty-five years from now. We are told that in the year 2000, hardly more than 20 or 25 per cent of the people will be employed during a reasonable part of the day. If the present rate is maintained, automation will intensify and this is what should already be anticipated.

Complaining about the Canadian Pacific or Air Canada, or my complaining because enterprises must move out of my town to meet the demands of automation, this does not solve the problem itself. We are merely applying poultices, trying to solve the problem partially; and we have to start all over again the next morning.

I want the minister to understand that I am not saying this to criticize his policy, because what he is doing is immeasurably better than what we have known in many a year; nor do I want to seem to play politics. I feel that if the Conservatives were in power they would probably be doing the same thing, because it is a necessity in this day and age. But unfortunately, the parties in power never manage to put the poultice on the sore before it festers and becomes almost incurable, whereas they should anticipate 10, 15, 20 or 25 years ahead of time and adopt such measures as would keep the situation from becoming so serious.

Nevertheless, I congratulate the minister because I can tell him, on the basis of my personal experience, the experience in my own riding, that our manpower office, with an establishment of about thirty or thirty-five experts, works marvels in difficult circumstances, even though the legislation has just been implemented. I would like to quote some names and the testimony of people who took advantage of its services, and who tell us that the legislation initiated and implemented by him is in the van and gives good results. It would probably be indiscreet to go too far in that field. Nevertheless, I want to congratulate him.

I will repeat also, Mr. Chairman, a thing that I already told the minister. I do not say it to his address but rather to others. I think he is being saddled with too many responsibilities. They would be enough to keep busy a minister of immigration, a minister of manpower and possibly a leader of the Liberal party in Quebec.

I wonder if this habit of putting a crushing burden on a man is not destroying leaders who could give their full measure in another field, but who are expected to give it in three completely unrelated fields with the result that unfortunate things happen, as we have found out. There comes a time when this affects their health; we lose those men and they have to be replaced and others have to be initiated with all the inherent delays, and their loss is to be regretted.

I mention this again, hoping that those whose task it is to choose the leaders know how to divide responsibilities. In saying that, I do not doubt the talent and capability of the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand). I have seen him work with the labour unions for such a long time that I am well aware of his extraordinary vitality.

I know that his responsibilities have just been increased a thousandfold. Knowing him, I know that he, too, would like to excel in his work, but one cannot do so when one is trying to do three things at once. I mention this, because I think it is the sort of thing which only an independent member can mention in committee.

As I said before, the basic problem we are discussing concerns manpower retraining and vocational training, which must be undertaken in the light of the era of great automation in which we are entering. Already in five or ten years excessive automation will make it difficult to find employment for our people, and studies made by the Americans in particular show that in the year 2000, which is not so very far away, only about thirty years from now, only 20 or 25 per cent of the population will be reasonably employed. What will other people do then? A department of recreation and a department of idleness will have to be set up, because all those people cannot be left to starve to death as a result of automation taking their jobs away from them.

For the time being, Mr. Chairman, after listening to all the speeches made this afternoon, and in which there always is something worth remembering—and when I rise to ask the floor, I would not think for a moment that my words could be any better than anybody else's, perhaps just as good but not better—I simply would not want to repeat everything that has been said here, and well said at that. However, I should like to forget the partisan views expressed by the Conservatives when they say: If we had been in your shoes, we would have done a better job; and then the Liberals reply: When you were there, you were unable to do any better.

I am a believer in historical development, and if today I can enjoy television, drive a car, and things like that which were unavailable in my father's and grand-father's time, it is precisely because historical evolution and progress occur independently of us and shall continue to do so.

All we ask from those who have responsibilities, is to do what they can. I think that the Tories, when they were in power, did whatever they could under the circumstances, with the means at their disposal, and I think that the same can be said of this Liberal government. I should like my remarks to be constructive, rather than necessarily destructive, because my personal aim is not to overthrow the government. It is simply to offer my co-operation, so that the duly formed and democratically elected government may under the present circumstances, act in the public interest and provide for all as much of the good things of this world as possible. This is the justification for my remarks.

I will say to the minister, as I have already done, that I feel it would be advisable to give specal directives to the department of manpower to make sure that the so-called old people—that is over 40—may, if they are still in good health, find some employment, or they should be taken care of some way or another.

Now, the minister knows, because he has worked in the labour movement, that over 40 or 45 years of age, it is extremely difficult to find employment due to the requirements of collective bargaining, group insurance and many others, and that Canadians are doomed to idleness despite the fact they could increase the productivity of the country, because they have acquired over the years an experience which helps them to produce more efficiently than younger workers and thereby contributes to the national production. I feel we do not take good enough care of our old people, and one is old at an early age these days. Every week, not only in my riding, but in surrounding ridings, people tell me that at 40, 42, 45, they are too old to work. To my mind, there should be a special section in the department of manpower to deal with the so-called old people. I say that there are old people who, at 65, are much younger than many others, because their morale is good, their health is good, and they could help to increase national productivity instead of becoming a burden on public funds and being condemned to the demoralizing idleness to which they are doomed under our present system.

I repeat to the minister that I want my criticism to be constructive. He has already gone a long way towards improving working conditions, and my remarks are not intended to criticize his administration.

I should like also to repeat a suggestion I addressed very briefly yesterday to the minister of forestry (Mr. Sauvé). I say "briefly" because, as everyone, I had to limit myself to twenty minutes, and as I had been relegated to the end of the list, at the last moment, I was asked to co-operate and limit my remarks to two minutes, and I did so.

I told the minister of forestry, and I repeat it to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), that there should be in the department of manpower a special section to deal with young people still in school and who could work during their two or three months' holidays to pay part of their tuition.

I was saying that a special program, perhaps a widespread reforestation program or something of the kind should be set up; that would be to the benefit of the country and it would also reduced overcrowding in the plants, make room for others and also reduce the budget for scholarships and costs guaranteed by the government. On the other hand, those young people might derive from it an education and salutary discipline.

I feel that in co-operation with his colleagues, the minister should study the possibility of introducing a bill so that all those young people still in school—I am talking about those at the secondary and university level mainly, young people of 18, 19, 20, 21 and over—would be assured of getting a job and an income, without swelling the labour market, and at the same time some discipline.

I would not call that military service. We could give it all kinds of names but if the government intends to set up a similar system, it would not involve much more expenditures since it is already obliged to meet certain needs by various means, such as scholarships and others. Furthermore, it might relieve the labour market.

Earlier, someone talked about womanpower which is too often neglected. When I refer to womanpower, I mean the widows, for instance, who still have children to raise; the wives whose heartless husbands have deserted them without paying them alimony; the ladies who may still be young at heart but not so young in years, who must provide for their maintenance. A special division in the manpower department must be set up for them so that they may earn an honest living, and have a place where they can find out what benefits are available to them, what social legislation has been set up so that they would not have, as it is the case now, to go and fish for themselves, if I may use that term, to avail themselves of all the opportunities of the legislation.

This brings me to repeat another suggestion I made to the minister the other day to the effect that courses in human relations should be taken by all public servants, federal, provincial, municipal and others, who get up one fine morning and think themselves miniature potentates oblivious to everything that is going on in the world and who treat their customers, who are the taxpayers, the citizens who pay taxes, with unmitigated cynicism. I do not say this situation is general but it exists and they probably become blasé by hearing so many problems. But the problems exist just the same, and they should learn what is being taught to employees of private enterprise. They know that if they do not deal properly with the customers, the latter will patronize rival stores.

This does not exist in the public service, but nevertheless, the public servant should be constantly reminded, once or twice a year, that he is dealing with human beings who, after all, are not his servants but his employers, since they pay taxes, since they vote on election day and since they are kings on that particular day, that he must treat them with every possible consideration and not wait until they inquire about all the possibilities of the legislation, in short, that he is being paid by the government to put all his knowledge at the disposal of taxpayers in order to acquaint them with the legislation and help them solve their problems.

I say it is not current enough and, once more, this is no reflection on the minister. I am merely making constructive suggestions. Lectures on public relations should be regularly given not every five years but every year and as often as necessary. Experts should check the way the employees of these offices manage their work; it must be borne in mind that they are dealing with human beings endowed with sensitiveness, with a soul, with personal and family problems and who deserve all the consideration that the public servant should give those who help pay his salary, who elect the people who will decide when he is going to be employed in the service of the community.

Mr. Chairman, this afternoon, mention was made that it was perhaps not reasonable to require that a candidate be out of school for three years. I think that, as in everything else, there are arguments for and against. Of course, I know that manpower services cannot empty schools to absorb the students, but I wonder if it might not be possible to find a compromise, because there are special cases. For instance, I am thinking of a case I witnessed back home: a boy had to leave school to help his widowed mother take care of the family. After working a few months, he became unemployed. He could not avail himself of the services the manpower offices offer ordinary unemployed. If he could then he should have been told.

I see that the minister is protesting and I am happy to hear him protest because I will call someone to order. Someone in the office should think of human relations and tell him: My friend, you are entitled to such and such a thing. Do not compel him to come three or four times to the member's office to say: I went to the manpower centre but without success because I have been out of school less than three years. I repeat my suggestion about human relations.

As far as naturalization after five years is concerned, that is clearly questionable; there are pros and cons. I imagine that the immigrant who is here, even though he is not naturalized after one, two or three years, has all the privileges enjoyed by Canadians, except perhaps that of voting; he can wait three or perhaps four years, that is immaterial, that is not too serious.

French immigration was discussed; that is another problem. It must be understood that, in general, French-speaking people are not prone to emigrate. I think that the minister will not contest that statement.

It should also be said that the province of Quebec is not organized to welcome French-speaking people. I should like to illustrate my point with two cases. The hon. minister will forgive me for using them as examples but I think they are typical.

Some months ago I received in my office a young French immigrant, an orphan who had all sorts of problems. I do not intend to tell his story; suffice it to say that he managed to get into the country. He has been unemployed since then.

In his own country, he had studied what we call mechanics—he worked on precision machines—then he came to Canada and, for some reason or other, the immigration service was unable to find him a job in his line of work. I wonder how he managed to get into the country. At one point, he was given a job as stone mason. He went to work as a bricklayer but he is only so high. He is shorter and thinner than the minister. Think of it. He did not last a day; the contractor fired him. That is obvious. Then the immigration and manpower office found him a job as a welder; he went to work as a welder, but he did not last half a day. He was not a welder.

He is living in dire poverty and he came to my office to tell me so. That is a typical case, Mr. Chairman. He said to me: Listen, I would very much like to work, but this is my trade; I studied at home and that is all I know. I cannot carry cement or cinder blocks on my shoulders, because I am a little over 4 feet tall and I weigh barely 100 pounds. I would not mind working as a welder, but I am not trained for that and I cannot keep a job.

Therefore, there is something lacking in the immigration service.

I want to talk about another case the minister is aware of, as I received a letter from him today; as it is neither personal nor confidential, I can quote it. It is the case of a man from Haiti who came here and took training as an electrician. As everyone knows, to obtain an electrician's license in Quebec, a period of six months training as an apprentice is required. As he is being refused a working permit by immigration, he cannot get his six months apprenticeship permit.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat to the minister that I am not blaming him for this, but some officials who know nothing about human relations. As far as I know, this boy has now been waiting for six months to be allowed to complete his apprenticeship and get his certificate; after that, he is perhaps ready to pack up and go back home, but nevertheless he cannot get permission to work. There is an employer who would like to hire him; in fact, out of kindness, he has paid for his studies. While they lasted, he had to follow a crash course, and because of red tape or bureaucracy, he was unable to work. Now he is inactive, idle, and lives on hand-outs from social agencies. Then I say to myself: there is something wrong somewhere.

Mr. Chairman, as I said, the minister is the last person to whom I would direct destructive criticism, even to whom I would inflict sorrow, for I am greatly impressed with the tremendous amount of work that he does. However, I do mention these things, which probably escape his attention, because I am aware he has too many responsibilities to shoulder.

He has been given the responsibilities of three departments. Amazingly enough, he has assumed them up to now without weakening, but I think some day his burden will have to be eased, so that he can show what he is capable of doing and know what is going on in all his departments.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise another matter, but since I am the first to object when a member speaks one minute beyond the time allotted to him and since I insist on the right to speak for myself and for the others as well, I shall be brief. I find the manpower program, under its present form, an excellent one, at least in the present circumstances. Nevertheless, some thought should be given right now to the fact that within the next five, ten, fifteen or twenty years, we shall be facing an excessive automation which will bring about the lay-off of a great number of workers quite willing to work. The problem will not be settled by saying that the Canadian Pacific has laid off 300 workers, that Dosco has laid off 1,000 others, that Air Canada has dismissed so many and some other company so many. Let us prepare for the coming age of automation—whether we like it or not—and let us try to provide for some legislation which will enable everyone to earn a living some way or other, or else, let us find a means to enable the people to live, although unemployed, if things should come to that. That is where there should be set up organizations likely to anticipate what will happen in the country within the next twenty, twenty-five or thirty years.

If we wait for unemployment to become general, for the sore to fester, it will be too late, Mr. Chairman. We will be putting poultices to relieve the sore, as we are doing with manpower; poultices are being applied and have good results and that is fortunate, because otherwise the situation would be much worse. But we are not reaching the root of the problem.

Having said this, Mr. Chairman, before concluding, I will make another remark which is not in order: In the rotation of speakers, I intend to come back as often as the rules—

The Deputy Chairman: Order please, the hon. member is requested to speak on the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

At the beginning, he made some remarks and was reminded by the Chair that he should limit himself to the estimates under consideration. I will ask him to kindly observe the instructions of the Chair and not to revert to the same line as at the beginning of his speech.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your fatherly advices. I appreciate it—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please, the hon. member's time is up.

Mr. Mongrain: I only wanted to tell you that I had finished.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the perplexity of the Chair in having to choose among three speakers. I am sure that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration appreciates that his estimates will not be passed this evening and that he must bear with members of the House of Commons who wish to exercise their democratic privilege of speaking on his estimates.

Mr. Fulton: Just keep it short.

Mr. Mackasey: This is the first time during the present session, to say nothing of the previous session, that I have taken the opportunity to speak on the estimates of the minister. Realizing that my remarks may continue tomorrow, I wish to pay particular tribute to the minister in question who has been charged by the government with what in future, must be considered perhaps the most important ministry of the government. The ministry of manpower will grow in importance for many of the reasons which the hon. member for Trois-Rivières outlined, also because the growing and pressing problem of technological change will bring about unemployment in more segments of the economy and a scarcity of trained personnel in others.

I think the present minister is particularly suited for the role he has accepted. He has, very wisely I believe, agreed that there is a relationship between immigration and manpower. As the minister of immigration he is sensitive to the desires of many people around the world to come to Canada, and as the minister of manpower he, more than any other person, should be aware of where these newcomers can best be accepted into the Canadian economy. Further, Mr. Chairman, I think the minister is blessed with a very active, objective and sensitive parliamentary secretary—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: —who has long been allied with the labour movement in this country and, as parliamentary secretary, rarely gets any applause or recognition in the house—myself, of course, excepted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: It is very tempting to get into a debate with the hon. member for Waterloo South over the question of Dosco. But being by nature very non-partisan, I shall bypass this temptation. However, when he was suggesting the nationalization of Dosco I hoped the hon. socialist member might have gone all the way and suggested the nationalization of the steel industry in its entirety, rather than a particular segment of it.

I have great respect for those who believe openly in the Regina manifesto, even those who hide this fact and only periodically remove the shutter from their innermost thoughts. When we discuss Dosco I think we must realize that the problem stems from a very selfish, inefficient management, one that leans to socialism in their callous approach to the problems of the maritimes and to the responsibility and moral obligation they have to the people of Nova Scotia. I think the attitude of this corporation to the people of Nova Scotia is perhaps the best reason for the implementation of the very objective recommendations contained in the writings of Judge Freedman.

In concluding my remarks on that particular topic, Mr. Chairman, because I would rather discuss other matters, I think we all agree that many of the problems which have resulted in the particular problem of Dosco arise primarily from the realization that the source of raw materials makes it practically impossible for that industry to overcome the geographical handicaps of its location. This of course is true also of the Bell Island operation. Once again I understand that the minister of manpower has come to the rescue and has done a very commendable job in retraining these workers and making it possible for the wonderful people of this part of the province to adjust to the change.

I wanted tonight to talk not only about manpower but to tie in manpower, the Minister of Finance, and the problem that concerns me, that of national unity and separatism. At first glance there may seem to be no correlation or relationship in these matters, but as one who has lived for 46 years in the province of Quebec and has not hesitated over the last four years to speak on the problem of national unity and separatism, I submit there is a very evident strong relationship between separatism, national unity, manpower and the Department of Finance.

Last week when speaking on the estimates of another department I expressed the opinion that I have expressed many times in the last four years, namely that as long as the question of separatism is confined to the world of the intellectuals, the selfish politicians, the demagogues, and the professors, we have basically very little to fear. I have expressed the opinion before, and I repeat it tonight, that perhaps more than any other segment of the Canadian population, the average French speaking Canadian of the working class shows as great or perhaps a greater degree of responsibility when it comes to assuming his responsibilities and obligations as a Canadian.

I expressed the opinion last week in debate that when, and if, separatism permeates the working class as did the Social Credit phenomena in 1962 we would have something to really worry about and something this country would have to face up to; and I said that perhaps at that moment it would be a little too late to regain the type of Canada that we are all thinking about.

I am looking at the clock, Mr. Chairman, and hoping that I will be able to develop this theme a little more fully tomorrow. But I should like to point out to the members of this house that at the present moment there are, according to the figures released last week, no less than 83,000 people out of work in the greater Montreal area. This is an alarming figure when one realizes that no less than 66 per cent of those 83,000 people are male workers. Of course the balance is their female counterpart. It is an alarming figure when one realizes also that of those 83,000 workers no less than 13,000 work directly in the construction industry. In other words, we now have 13,000 people out of work in the Montreal area as a result of the curtailment of large projects that normally at this time of year would keep them busy in the construction industry.

When one considers also the number of people out of work because they are connected indirectly with the construction industry, the electricians, the plumbers, the bricklayers and all the others, many of whom are new Canadians affected by this recession in the construction industry, one can understand that the prospect in the city of Montreal is not as optimistic and as rosy as it has been in the past, or as it should be in Canada's largest metropolis.

I should like, in the minute or two that I have at my disposal, to put another statistic before those hon. members who may be following me from other parts of the house and want to make an objective contribution to the debate. Recently a poll was carried out in the Montreal area. This bears out my contention of last week, that the potential dangers of separatism come from unemployment. Although a figure recently released by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation shows that only 7 per cent of the population of Quebec endorse separatism, anywhere from 10 per cent to 18 per cent of the population of the greater Montreal area who were canvassed regarding the cause of separatism—and they came from the class of people earning $4,000 a year or under—endorse the philosophy of René Lévesque. This is a significant figure and I should like to repeat it. Although only 7 per cent of the population of Quebec endorse separatism, upwards of 18 per cent in certain areas of the city of Montreal endorse the philosophy of René Lévesque, and these 18 per cent are concentrated in those areas of the city where the income is $4,000 a year or under. This indicates that what I said last week—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I wish simply to point out that under the rules there were only six days left for some 13 departments to be considered in committee of supply. We agreed on an order of priority, hoping we could thereby deal reasonably adequately with the more important departments left, giving one day to each of six departments.

I am simply pointing out to the committee, and for the benefit of the house in considering the rules, that it is quite apparent that members on the government side as well as members on this side find themselves without adequate time to discuss in full the estimates of the departments which it is considered are important to discuss. I hope this committee and the house will bear this in mind when we come to consider this artificial limitation of 30 days for the consideration of the most important things that parliament meets here to consider, that is the spending of public money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fulton: I did not raise a point of order.

Mr. Mackasey: Under what parliamentary procedure did the hon. member participate in the debate? Did he speak on the estimates?

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the government house leader could tell us whether any changes have been made in the plans about which we have been told earlier this week.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will begin consideration of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. The President of the Treasury Board will not be here tomorrow, therefore we cannot call the estimates of that department. If we complete the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs tomorrow we will continue with the Departments of Industry and Public Works and on Monday we will take up the estimates of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Monteith: Could those not be considered on Tuesday? It was my impression from earlier discussions that the estimates of the Treasury Board would be considered on Tuesday.

Mr. MacEachen: I would be quite happy to reach an arrangement to consider the estimates of the Treasury Board on Tuesday, but I will have to have some time to consult the other ministers who might be available on Monday for the consideration of estimates that have not been passed.

Mr. Knowles: Is it certain that the estimates of the Treasury Board will come before us?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

INCOME TAX—REQUEST FOR FORGIVENESS OF INTEREST ON TAX ARREARS OF PENSIONERS

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, back in 1966 a number of people in the country were rather surprised to find notices in their mail boxes from the Department of National Revenue asking them to pay interest on overdue installments of income tax. It is true that the interest requested was in most cases not large, $1.50, $2 or $3, but in spite of the small amounts in question these notices caused a great deal of concern to the people who received them. In most cases these people are retired and their only income apart from their old age security pension is some modest amount of interest from government bonds or from a bank account. Obviously people on limited incomes feel that even an additional expenditure of $2 or $3 could better be used for their own purposes than placed in the hands of the friendly tax collector. At the same time many felt rather disconcerted that somehow or other they were now expected to pay tax in instalments, when they never had to do so throughout their working lives and when they did not receive adequate notice or, in the case of some, did not receive any notice at all of the department's view that they should pay tax in a different manner.

It would appear, possibly because of the department's new computer which I hope is the servant of the department rather than its master, it was easier to determine exactly who would come within the provisions of section 49 of the act. Under it if people receive no income or only a limited amount of income from employment, they are supposed to pay their tax in instalments. I believe this provision was originally intended to apply mainly to people in the professional class or to those with large investments. Perhaps because of the greater efficiency of the administrative forces of the department, people in a much different income category were now found technically to be in the class of people who were supposed to pay their tax in instalments.

I, and I suppose other members as well, wrote to the minister on behalf of a number of people in this group, pointing out that this created a number of difficulties for these people. They would have to pay these additional amounts in interest if they did not pay the tax in instalments. Many of these people were advanced in years and had various infirmities which would make it difficult to make out forms four times a year and to estimate the tax and some of them were able to have only a limited amount of education. They were all accustomed to having the tax deducted at the source by their employers and filling in a form once a year and then paying any balance owing.

As I say, I pointed out to the minister in corresponding with him on behalf of a number of these citizens, the hardships created because if these people did not pay their tax in instalments they would be liable for interest. If they attempted to comply with the regulations, they would have all the difficulties of filling out or finding someone to help them fill out the forms. These are people who have spent all their lives helping to build up this country. They should be spared this hardship if at all possible.

The year is drawing to a close and the time for settling up accounts with the Department of National Revenue will soon be upon us once more. I felt this question was of sufficient urgency that I could bring this matter up in this adjournment debate. I ask the minister if he will not see if something can be done for the people in the category I have mentioned. They are mainly retired people who have a very limited income, even taking into account this interest in addition to their pension. I hope the minister can help relieve these people of this burden. I have had the response made to me by the department: Well, if this was not done the people could rearrange the way they get their income and avoid paying the tax in the year in which it is due.

In most cases, this does not apply to the group in question. I believe Canada savings bond interest is payable only in the fall, and this procedure cannot be changed. Yet the people with this type of limited income to which I have referred are asked to pay taxes in instalments before this interest is due. In conclusion, I ask the minister to take action to help the people in question by removing this burden from them.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Since I became Minister of National Revenue, this has been a very perplexing problem. I think that the requirement that people pay income tax in instalments when they have income from sources other than salary is a very fair provision of the act. The ordinary person who is working for a salary has his tax deducted monthly. This parliament put into the Income Tax Act a provision whereby other people had to pay quarterly, which is a little less onerous than the provision applying to a person earning a salary who has his tax deducted monthly.

In the past, because of the difficulty of computing interest, since it required four computations in order to determine the interest payable by one person in a year, small amounts of interest were overlooked by the department merely as an administrative matter. I may say I am very pleased we have a computer in the Department of National Revenue dealing with personal income tax returns because we process them faster and we save the government of Canada a large amount of money every year. I could quote figures that indicate that 10 or 12 years ago it cost $2.08 per $100 to collect it, and that the cost is now down to something like 96 cents. Nevertheless I have been worried about people who were on a salary, who retire, and then start to receive the old age pension and find themselves suddenly charged $2, $3 or $4 interest.

As a result of this, during the last year I have had a study made in my department of this question, and we have come to the conclusion that the cost of collecting—that is to say, the cost of putting out the information, submitting the bill to the taxpayers, collecting the money, following it up, writing letters and answering inquiries—is not worth the amount of tax that is collected. In other words, it costs more to collect these small amounts than is warranted by the amount of revenue that is received by the crown.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have decided, and I hope parliament will support me—and if I recall correctly the last time my estimates were before the house for consideration, I am sure all hon. members will support me—that we will take action in order to eliminate interest charges of under $5 to the taxpayers of Canada. This means that ordinarily a person with a small income who starts receiving the old age pension but fails to remit the instalments in the first year, even though we have given him warning in his first old age pension cheque that the cheque will be subject to tax, will not have to worry about this in the future. I think that by imposing this $5 limit most of the urgent cases will be taken care of.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—INCLUSION OF OPTOMETRISTS IN HEALTH RESOURCES FUND TEAMS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in a few months time Canada will have a system of medicare—

Mr. Knowles: We hope.

Mr. McCleave: —and the scramble going on to overcome the shortage of trained personnel in the medical health field will become even more acute as time goes by. I understand that in a statement published recently in a Toronto newspaper the minister indicated some of the steps that his department was taking in a commendable effort at least to alleviate this very serious problem.

How acute the problem is we recall of course from the debate on the health resources fund. For example, I have some staggering statistics that my colleague from Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), who himself is a doctor, placed on the record. I am not going to refer to them but they are to be found at pages 6378 and 6379 of Hansard during committee study on the resolution stage.

My purpose in being on the late show tonight is more or less in the form of a fishing expedition. I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) will give us some idea of the co-operation he is enlisting from non-governmental sources in his efforts to help the manpower and womanpower shortage in the health field.

The Canadian Association of Optometrists has issued a statement. They feel that the minister is calling on outside help without calling on them. Their statement says, in part:

> Despite its prominence in the eye care field optometry has not been invited to participate with other health professions in these important studies. This means that decisions which will deeply affect optometry will be made by other health professions, some of which have opposing interests to optometry.

When I raised the question originally in the house I specifically narrowed its context to optometrists, but I was really using them as an example of a particular paramedical group. Therefore when the minister replies I hope he will indicate whether he is calling on others from the paramedical field, as well as on optometrists, to play their part in helping his department and the provincial governments entering into medicare to overcome this very crucial shortage of trained personnel.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the hon. member in this particular study that has been established in conjunction with the health resources fund. We have decided to select a team of persons for the purpose of continuing studies in the health and manpower field. This team will consist of three members. We have selected a physician, representing a very large and important component of the health professions, and we have selected a nurse, since the nursing profession is also very important and represents a large component of those engaged in this work. There will be a third person, as yet unnamed, who will likely be selected from one of the allied health professions. There are a large number of allied health professions, including optometry, dentistry and physiotherapy, for example.

The fact that a profession is not included by representation on this team is not to be taken as indicating any lack of appreciation of its importance. We hope that as our program develops and as we rely on further advice from the professions an opportunity will be given to all the professions to give their counsel. In the case of optometry, let me say this is a very important profession for which I myself and all members of the house have a very high regard.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.19 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 27, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1967-68

A message from His Excellency, the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates (B) for the financial year ending March 31, 1968, was presented by Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

• (11:10 a.m.)

INTEREST ACT

PROPOSED LIMITATION OF RATE CHARGED ON REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-174, to amend the Interest Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to limit the rate of interest that may be charged on mortgages of real estate in Canada. At the present time the great mass of the population are finding it increasingly difficult to acquire homes of their own, to a large extent because of the very high rates of interest that prevail across the country on mortgages of real estate, something that should not be necessary so far as secured creditors are concerned.

This bill is merely an attempt by a member of this house to amend the Interest Act to deal with the situation. Mortgages of real estate in which the principal moneys are made payable to the government of Canada or any crown corporation have had to be exempted from the provisions of the bill in order that a private member of parliament may not be barred by law from introducing the legislation.

I am sure the house will welcome an opportunity, brief though it may be, to have a discussion on the bill as a whole. This is an attempt to discipline a wayward economy—

Mr. Starr: Have the Minister of Labour speak up.

Mr. Brown: —later to be aided—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN BILL OF RIGHTS

AMENDMENT RESPECTING USE OF EITHER OFFICIAL LANGUAGE

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-175, to amend the Canadian Bill of Rights with respect to official languages.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Bill of Rights is silent on the right of Canadian citizens to use both official languages. It appears highly desirable that Canadian citizens feel at home from coast to coast, and the purpose of this bill is to ensure that they be in a position to use either the English or the French language throughout the land. It is not the purpose of this bill to compel anyone to speak two languages, but to declare the practical equality of both languages. It is but one step in the direction of Canadian unity.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, I object to first reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Cowan: I object to this first reading, I will object to second reading, and I will object to third reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ricard: If I understand well, you will object all the way around.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSED REDUCTIONS IN ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the inspired leaks apparently coming from cabinet sources dealing with vast sums of money respecting both the 1968-69 and 1967-68 estimates, would the minister not reveal to the house, either on motions or in some other manner, the details of these alleged cuts and where they have taken place, department by department, as we are now dealing with the estimates?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there were any leaks, but in any case they were certainly not inspired by government members. In due course I intend to state the position before the House of Commons.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. This is a serious situation and may well constitute a point of privilege, although at the moment I am putting it as a question.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member please state his question.

Mr. Monteith: My question is, will the minister tell us where these supposed cuts are to take place? We are dealing with the 1967-68 estimates today.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Monteith: Let the minister answer the question. He seems ready to do so.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, so far as I know the stories that have appeared in the press are pure speculation. I expect to put the situation before the house in a factual manner when the question can be discussed. I will have no hesitation in doing so, but I can only say that these stories which have appeared are pure speculation.

Mr. Monteith: I have one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand that no cuts are being made in the 1967-68 estimates?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Mr. Ricard.]

Mr. Knowles: My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, relates to the announcement by the minister that he would place this matter before the House of Commons. Can he tell us whether he will do so by way of a statement on motions or by the introduction of legislation?

Mr. Sharp: I am not in a position to answer that question today.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, was the supplementary question asked by the hon. member for Perth not in order?

Mr. Speaker: It was out of order.

Mr. Churchill: Then may I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he or any of his colleagues intend to make reductions in the 1967-68 estimates which are presently before the house or will be coming before the house within the next two or three days?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government's intentions with respect to this matter will be made known in due course. I can see nothing to be gained by adding to the speculation.

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer given by the Minister of Finance. We only have four days left in which to consider the estimates of the fiscal year 1967-68, and surely the Minister of Finance cannot put us off by saying "in due course". We have to know now, while we are considering these estimates in the next three or four days what he intends to do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's point is a point of argument and debate; obviously it is not a question of privilege. The hon. member knows that according to the rules of the house an hon. member has the right to ask a question, but he cannot insist on an answer or insist on receiving the answer which he would like to hear from the minister.

Mr. Starr: May I put a supplementary question then, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that there are only four days left for the consideration of the 1967-68 estimates, will the Minister of Finance make a statement on Monday and tell us where the cuts have been made in the present estimates and expenditures?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker; that is not my intention.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether any of the items in the supplementary estimates for 1967-68 tabled today amounting to some $80 million are items which were considered proper to be placed in the 1968-69 estimates.

Mr. Sharp: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not catch the exact significance of the question.

Mr. Baldwin: Are any of the items which appear in the supplementary estimates of some $80 million just tabled by the minister items which normally would have been placed in the 1968-69 estimates?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There have been six, seven or eight supplementary questions asked on this matter. I would now like to recognize the hon. member for York South.

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and is related to questions which were asked earlier. In view of an earlier answer by the minister, and in view of the house leader's announcement last night that the estimates of three departments would be considered today, those being the Departments of Veterans Affairs, Industry and Public Works, involving the expenditure of over $630 million, will the Minister of Finance tell the house whether the spending estimates of those departments are to be reduced?

Mr. Sharp: There will be ample opportunity to discuss that question when those estimates are before the house.

Mr. Starr: Will the minister be in the house?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—FOLLOW UP OF APPEALS FOR CESSATION OF BOMBING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him the following. In view of the continuing escalation of the bombing of North Viet Nam despite the appeal made at the UN general assembly by him and by representatives of other governments, is the government of Canada taking steps to follow up these appeals by some appropriate approach to the United States administration in Washington?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister inform the house whether these approaches that he says are being made are being made jointly with other interested governments and, in general, what is the nature of these approaches?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In this matter, as in other matters, we have consultations with friendly countries and these consultations extend to this situation.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the great differences of opinion between Canada and the United States, what steps is the minister taking to re-establish friendly relations with that country?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am glad my hon. friend, who is generally so helpful, has asked this question. Relations between Canada and the United States are as friendly as they have ever been. I wish to pay this tribute to the United States; that notwithstanding differences that develop with regard to various aspects of the foreign policy pursued in particular instances by both countries, the United States continues to show, as one would expect, appreciation of the value of the friendship it has had with this country for such a long time. I hope no question put by my hon. friend would be directed for the purpose of trying to create a different impression.

FISHERIES

PROTEST BY U.S. RESPECTING NEW FISHING LIMITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government has receive any formal protest from United States authorities over the government's announced intention to proclaim new territorial and fishing limits.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In answer to this question I would remind my hon. friend that in 1964 parliament enacted the 12 mile fishing zone limit with the provision that a straight base line system should be adopted by Canada. This is now the law of the land. This system is being implemented by Canada in a way which takes into account the treaty and traditional fishing rights of other countries, including the United States.

The action taken by Canada follows precedents set by many countries including Norway, Iceland, Britain, Denmark, Ireland and many others. The United States has had consultations with Canada. They knew of the steps we were proposing to take. I understand fully the nature of the statement made by the United States yesterday, but this is a matter in which I am afraid friendly countries may have to disagree.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I ask a supplementary question. I think the appropriate word to apply to the minister's statement is "sinuosity", because it leaves us in confusion. Can the minister say whether consideration has been given to a statement by Mr. Robert McCloskey of the state department that the United States has no intention of recognizing the straight base lines which Canada proposes to introduce?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What an individual may say about the law of another country is for that individual, but the clear fact is that parliament, in the exercise of its sovereign authority, has taken a decision. The law of the land will be observed by Canadians pursuant to an enactment of this parliament.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): In view of the United States refusal to recognize Canada's position, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs consider withdrawing Canada's recognition of United States historic treaty rights to fish within our waters?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): May I ask a supplementary question. Do the United States objections not stem, at least in part, from the doubt of the United States regarding Canada's ability to maintain its sovereignty over some of these bodies of water which would become national waters, and also the precedent from the defence point of view which would be created in some other sensitive parts of the world?

[Mr. Patterson.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that in 1963 the Prime Minister of Canada advised the then president of the United States of Canada's intention to establish a 12 mile fishing zone limit. The government of the United States would have preferred Canada not to take this course, but we have taken this course and parliament has enacted such a measure.

Since then the United States itself has enacted a measure providing for a 12 mile fishing zone limit. We long ago advised the United States of our intention to establish the straight base line system, and this we have done in a particular area that should be non-controversial. We see no reason to apologize in any way for the action we have taken. Our policy is in accord with our view of international law, and is based on precedents taken by other countries in the exercise of what they believe to be international law.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister taken any action to resolve this very difficult problem by some form of international agreement, or by sponsoring the calling of another international conference on this question so there will be common ground? It is easy to say that we believe we are within the law, but is it not true—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should ask a question.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister referred to the law passed in 1964, and he said it would be observed by Canadians. Does the minister not realize that the law enacted by parliament in 1964 was meant to be observed not by Canadians but by foreign countries; and in what way is this government going to enforce that law?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the way that all laws of Canada are enforced.

NOVA SCOTIA

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH DOSCO OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position to report to the house on any results obtained this morning at the meeting in Ottawa of the federal government, the government of the province of Nova Scotia and the officials of Dosco?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. The meeting this morning was chaired by the Prime Minister, and it will continue for part of the rest of the day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING RESUMPTION OF ARMS SALES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in view of the rising and serious tension in the Middle East and the grave situation created thereby, if he can tell the house whether the government of Canada is making any representations against the revived sale of arms by both the United States and the U.S.S.R. to countries in that area. If so, what has been the effect of those representations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I indicated yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that it was our practice not to sell arms to sensitive areas. I stated that we have strongly supported the lead given by President Johnson that there should be a limitation by the great powers in particular on the export of arms to the Middle East. The fact that one large power has been supplying arms to one side undoubtedly has caused a reconsideration of the position of the government of the United States in this matter. I can say no more at the present time than that some discussions are taking place about this matter.

HOUSING

PROPOSED ASSISTANCE TO REDUCE COST OF LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister now in a position to state what consideration has been given to the Vancouver city council resolution of October 3, conveyed to him on October 6 and on which I asked a question of the Prime Minister on October 10, requesting that the principle of the winter works policy be applied to meet Vancouver housing requirements? Has any decision been reached in this matter?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, no action has been taken and no decision has been reached on the suggestion put forward. Yesterday I was in touch with the chairman of the housing committee of the city of Vancouver, and on the previous day with the provincial minister responsible. These discussions are to be followed by others in Vancouver not next week but early in the following week.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister, in view of what he has said, whether the proposal of Vancouver is on the agenda of the federal-provincial housing conference which is to be held in December.

Mr. Nicholson: The agenda has not yet been settled, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Labour, in his capacity as reporting to the house with respect to housing matters, now prepared to answer the related question which the acting house leader took as notice the other day? The question is, since the government of British Columbia has now approved the 12 long delayed public housing projects for the city of Vancouver, could the minister say when they will be approved by the federal government?

Mr. Nicholson: Answering the hon. member's question, may I say that I understand that the provincial government's approval of the program to erect approximately 1,000 houses in Vancouver and elsewhere in the lower mainland area of Vancouver has been approved in principle by an overwhelming vote of the Vancouver city council. Some details need to be worked out, however, since the significance or meaning of the suggested ceiling of $12,000 per unit has not been settled. In my recent conversations with the chairman of the housing committee of the Vancouver city council—conversations to which I have already referred—I was told they were pursuing this question actively with the provincial government. No formal proposal has been made to the federal government because the matter has not been cleared by the two lower levels of government concerned, but I am encouraged by recent developments.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister has announced that a housing conference is to be held, and since there is widespread interest in that conference, is consideration being given to allowing members of the house to be spectators, at least, at this conference? If that is not proper, will consideration be given to releasing to members of the house the various submissions from the provinces dealing with the housing problem?

Mr. Nicholson: Perhaps it is a little early to answer that question. I feel that if we are to really come to grips with this serious and difficult problem then the discussions between provincial and federal governments must be frank, and should be kept out of the political arena. As to what reports ought to be distributed, that is a matter to which further consideration will need to be given.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the widespread feeling that the parliament of Canada has been superseded by federal-provincial conferences in this area, would the minister at least undertake to consider the suggestion that has just been made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED LAY-OFFS IN ATLANTIC REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since the Canadian National has currently announced that it will lay off 450 men in the Atlantic region, or 3 per cent of the C.N.R. work force of that region, will the minister look into the matter with his officials and investigate it with a view to providing employment for these men?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Immediately, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Manpower and Immigration confer with the Minister of Transport and make certain that these men are not being laid off because of recent rate increases and the disastrous falling off of traffic in the area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is related to the one posed a few moments ago by the hon. member for Pictou and to the minister's reply regarding the lay-offs of employees in the C.N.R. Atlantic region. What other measures will be taken to provide employment for these men who are laid off or who will be laid off, apart from providing grants and one way tickets out of the Atlantic region?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a question which can only be answered by way of a general statement, something which should be made on motions rather than by way of an answer to an oral question.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE SALE TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and has to do with the Canadian wheat situation. Has the government any immediate plan to expand our declining wheat sales and negotiate a contract with China? This has not been done up to the present time, as disclosed by Mr. J. B. Lawrie, assistant chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board in a speech to the Manitoba wheat pool.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this cannot be asked as an oral question at this time.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): May I rephrase my question. Has the government plans to negotiate a new wheat deal with China, to help our declining wheat sales?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have plans to endeavour to negotiate a contract with China, to that end.

Mr. Starr: In what year?

Mr. Winters: Recently when I was in Japan with the wheat board the assistant chief commissioner stopped off in Hong Kong. Contact was made with the wheat negotiators from China, and arrangements have been made for a further meeting in Peking.

[Translation]

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question will undoubtedly make the Conservative Orangeman and hon. member for York-Humber happy.

The Estates General of French Canada will meet soon in Montreal and that will be one of the most important nationalist demonstrations ever held. Here is my question and I direct it to the Prime Minister. Does he intend to recommend to the Laurendeau-Dunton commission to delay its report until the results of that meeting are known?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, every other question on this subject has been a request to expedite the report. I think we should get that report as quickly as possible.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

RECALL OF DEFECTIVE VEHICLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): In the absence of the Minister of Transport may I direct my question to the acting minister. Has there been any communication between the government and the motor vehicle industry of Canada relating to the massive recall of defective vehicles from our roads this week?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): I shall discuss that with the Minister of Transport. This entire subject is very high on his priority list.

[Later:]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Registrar General. It is supplementary to the question asked a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. I wonder if the Registrar General, in drawing the attention of the Minister of Transport to this massive call back of G.M. cars, would ask the minister to make an early statement regarding implementation of the vehicle safety program.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister in a position to confirm as government policy the statement made in Winnipeg last night by the Minister of Transport that the government's commitment to keep the Air Canada base in Winnipeg in operation until 1973 will be honoured?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The minister made a statement to that effect, and I am glad to confirm it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Transport will meet with officials of Air Canada to make clear to them this government policy, so we shall have no further misunderstanding.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSED LAY-OFFS OF RAILWAY MAINTENANCE OF WAY EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday just before the end of the question period the hon. member for Nickel Belt asked me whether I had received a letter from the maintenance of way brotherhood with regard to lay-offs in the Calgary area. A similar question was asked a day or two ago by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I intimated that such a representation had been received. It has been replied to by my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

I found it difficult yesterday to understand the reason for a second question, because the answer given by my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration seemed to me to have dealt with the matter. As recorded at page 3500 of yesterday's Hansard the Minister of Manpower and Immigration said:

> Mr. Speaker, yesterday I promised the hon. member for Bow River to give him a report on the employment situation at the C.P.R. terminal shops in Calgary, where 400 men were laid off. Most of them have been called back; they know their return date. If a few of them are not rehired it will be quite easy to find jobs for them, because they are highly skilled labour.

That answer by my colleague accounts for my difficulty in failing to understand the significance of and the reason for the question yesterday.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Ten o'clock.

[Later:]

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The question I asked the Minister of Labour had no connection with the Calgary lay-offs. My question was in connection with a letter which I understood was sent to the Minister of Labour regarding the imminent lay-off of a great number of maintenance of way employees, employed from Port Arthur east, in the eastern regions of the C.P.R. and C.N.R. systems.

Mr. Nicholson: In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I might say I did receive an inquiry some days ago from a local of the maintenance of way brotherhood, I think it was local 414, in which they raised some questions arising from a collective agreement. As the hon. member knows and as I am sure all hon. members know, where you have clauses setting rights out in collective agreements, usually there is provision in the agreement for arbitration of those clauses. In the reply which went out from my office to the local, attention was drawn to the arbitration procedures, with the suggestion that they follow through themselves on the provisions contained in the agreement.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, before asking a supplementary question may I say that possibly the arbitration provisions of the collective agreement do not apply to the matter. I want to ask the minister whether he or his department has given consideration to holding discussions with the management of both the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. concerning their lay-offs of section gangs.

Mr. Nicholson: My reaction to this suggestion, Mr. Speaker, is that I think I should first have a reply from the local concerned to the letter we sent them some days ago before we decide what should be done.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to address to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I am sorry for not having been able to give him notice of it. Last evening when the worthy Marquis of Montcalm was opening the Pageant of Canada he held up Canada as an example of unity to all the world. Was he referring to the reception given yesterday to the Minister without Portfolio at the University of Montreal?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, due to rumours that are current around the house at this time, and in order to reassure those persons who believe in the practice of democratic principles, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Because the hon. member on many occasions has objected to Liberal policy and to the actions of certain Liberal cabinet ministers, is there any truth in the rumour that the hon. member for York-Humber is likely to be expelled from the Liberal party?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

USE OF NOVA SCOTIA LEGISLATION AS FEDERAL MODEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Registrar General. In view of the report in today's press of the great success of the government of Nova Scotia in introducing legislation to give protection to the consumers of that province, is the minister familiar with that legislation and will he give consideration to using it as a model in preparing federal legislation so there may be some teeth in the federal legislation and not just gums?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest it is not in order for the hon. member to ask if the minister is familiar with legislation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ONTARIO REGULATIONS RESPECTING VOTING BY MILITARY PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister discuss with the chief electoral officer of Ontario the antiquated and vague sections of the Ontario elections act dealing with the voting regulations of military personnel, with a view to trying to arrive at some constructive conclusions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question cannot be asked at this time. I suggest to the hon. member that if it is at all receivable it should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Hopkins: Ten o'clock.

CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE OF UNIFICATION ORDERS IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. A considerable time having passed since the minister agreed to consider calling a meeting of the defence committee to review changes in armed forces policies, can the minister now state whether a reference will be speedily introduced so as to enable the committee to meet and discuss changes in defence policies?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, when I first read this question in Hansard I was a little confused. The hon. member referred to changing defence policy. Actually he was quoting administrative decisions; therefore I cannot yet take a decision on the question itself.

Mr. Winch: As a supplementary question, in view of the minister's reply referring to administrative decisions and there now being only one minister with no associate minister, I presume this minister has control over both matters. Therefore I would like to ask if he is going to bring in terms of reference so that defence policies can be considered by the defence committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this particular question, but the original reference was to a change of policy. There is no change of policy.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—PROTECTION AGAINST EXPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he in a position today to answer the question I put to his parliamentary secretary yesterday?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of the hon. member's question was the importation of turkeys. This matter is receiving the attention of the department and a meeting has been arranged for November 1 between the agricultural stabilization board and officers of the Canadian Turkey Federation to review the situation.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question with regard to the importation of turkeys from the United States, is the minister considering going back to the quota system which was in effect a few years ago?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, any conclusions that result from the meeting I have mentioned will be announced in the proper fashion.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INABILITY OF INDIANS ON RESERVES TO OBTAIN ADVANCED TRAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has he been made aware that the department of manpower has discontinued level 4 of its training program, with the result that residents of Indian reserves are now effectively blocked from entering the higher levels of skilled manpower training; and can the minister say whether his department has any plans to offset this development?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order.

[Later:]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Now that the department has decided to discontinue level 4 of its training program, namely the basic literacy course, what plans has the department to offset the effect of this discontinuation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously this question is of a general nature and not of the type which should be asked at this time. Certainly it is not a question which requires a verbal answer during the question period.

Mr. Schreyer: Perhaps I could rephrase my question and ask the minister whether he has received any significant number of complaints from residents of Indian reserves or councillors regarding this policy decision taken by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would place this question on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT APPROVAL OF BILL RESPECTING INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to either the government house leader or the Prime Minister, and ask if either of the hon. gentlemen would provide the sanctity of government approval to the bill introduced earlier today by the hon. member for Brantford regarding interest rates and have it transferred to government orders so it can be dealt with more expeditiously.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING

REQUEST FOR GREATER FREEDOM IN CHOICE OF OCCUPATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration relating to the occupational training for adults program. Before an adult student begins the upgrading course he or she must indicate a goal for which—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his question.

Mr. Hopkins: I am coming to the question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider amending the legislation to give the adult student more flexibility in his choice of occupation at the grade ten level, in order to remove this strait-jacket which now exists?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question seems to be very general in nature and of the type which should be answered by a statement on motions or on the order paper.

FINANCE

CRITICISM BY BANK PRESIDENT OF FEDERAL FINANCIAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Does the minister expect in the near future to answer the charge made against the government by Mr. Neil McKinnon, president of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, to the effect that inflation is the result of the policies of this government which amount to a swindle of the Canadian people?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question has been asked and considered on a number of occasions, and I do not think it should be asked again at this time.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Northumberland was probably not in the house at ten o'clock Monday evening when I did answer this question.

DRUGS

AMENDMENT OF TRADE MARK AND PATENT LAWS TO REDUCE CONSUMER COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Registrar General. Does the minister plan to introduce amendments during this session to the trade mark and patent laws to grant manufacturing rights to non-patent holders as a means of lowering drug costs to the public?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, this item is on the list of essential legislation and I hope it will be dealt with this session.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The house again in committee of supply, estimates of Veterans Affairs for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 will be found on page 572 of the blue book and the details of services on page 574.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $5,702,200.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall this item carry?

[English]

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Chairman, I thought at the outset we would have a statement of some kind from the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Perhaps he has decided to wait until he has heard the remarks of hon. members before making such a statement, but a statement of this kind would be of benefit to hon. members during the consideration of his estimates, and if he should like the opportunity to make one now I will be glad to take my seat.

Apparently the minister does not wish to make a statement now. Members on this side are somewhat disappointed at the lack of factual information emanating from the minister's department. Several days ago I asked the Prime Minister whether it would be possible to have the Wood commission report made available before discussing these estimates. Evidently that was not possible, but the tabling of even an interim report would make the discussion of these estimates easier. We have been waiting for more than a year and a half for the results of this inquiry.

It is my opinion that a general overhaul should be made of pension legislation. This legislation has not been amended for quite a few years. It was originally brought forward in a hurry to expedite assistance to veterans who had completed their wartime service. In light of what has transpired in the last few years a general review of veterans pension legislation should be made.

Hon. members who were members of the veterans affairs committee made suggestions as to how the act should be amended. I am sure the minister has taken those suggestions into consideration, but as of this date nothing constructive has been done in this regard. There has been difficulty in respect of liaison between the minister and his staff, but I understand this situation has been remedied. Perhaps some action will be taken soon.

It was also my thought that following the analytical study of pension legislation in other countries, specifically France and Britain, a new assessment could be made of the available information on our own legislation. I understand there was anticipation that a review of United States studies on veterans legislation would be made, but so far as I am aware this has not been done yet. Perhaps this information could be used in conjunction with the Wood commission report. Certainly some effort should be made to correlate the information which is available at the present time in respect of this important information. I presume the representations and appeals made from time to time to the minister and the department by various organizations have been considered. We would like to hear what is in store for our veterans in the next year. The cost of living has made it imperative that increases in pensions be considered and now would be a good time to let our veterans know what they can expect in the future.

• (12 noon)

I do not intend to cover the whole spectrum of veterans affairs because my colleagues will wish to make contributions. However, when the minister makes a statement I believe he should be somewhat explicit in so far as the control of veterans hospitals is concerned. There has been considerable controversy about the situation at Sunnybrook hospital. I should like to put on record parts of an article written for the Toronto Telegram of September 23 last by Peter Ward, who evidently studied the situation at that hospital. If the situation that has developed there is going to be prevalent at other hospitals, something should be done to prevent this happening. In his article Mr. Ward said:

> You can list grievances by the hundred, many of them chronic complaints from chronic complainers, but an alarming number that are real, legitimate beefs.
> Under D.V.A. administration veterans were issued prescribed drugs at the hospital dispensary and if treatment was lengthy for outpatients, drugs would be mailed as needed to the patient.
> Now the veteran must either convince his local pharmacy to hand over prescribed drugs and bill D.V.A., or pay for them himself and collect later.
> Usually it's much later. Due to staff shortages, it's sometimes more than three months before a druggist, or a veteran who has paid, gets his money.
> Under D.V.A., hospital patients had the option of eating meals either in their rooms or in the dining room, if they were able, with buddies.
> Now they eat in their rooms. They can eat in the dining room only if they pay for their meals.

This writer goes on to list other complaints, and the article continues:

> The daily Sunnybrook patient rate when U. of T. took over was $23.25. It went to $36 daily immediately and is now $40. Treatment of pensionable veterans, or those earning less than $1,296 annually, was free then, and still is.
> Any veteran is guaranteed a bed at Sunnybrook, pensionable or not. If he isn't pensionable, a patient must pay his bill either personally or through insurance. That's still the same, only the rate has changed.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit me to interrupt him for a moment at this time?

Mr. Ormiston: Certainly.

Mr. Teillet: With reference to this story, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it should be allowed to go on the record without some comment. All the complaints received, and there have not been that many, have been investigated and most of this story has been found to be quite unfounded. Nothing occurring at Sunnybrook hospital now did not occur before the changeover. I want that fact to be underlined. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that the story to which he has referred does need correction.

Mr. Ormiston: This article was written just about a month ago. If the Department of Veterans Affairs had been as speedy in investigating other matters as it was in this case there would have been no complaints at all, but obviously there was some ground for complaint. If the situation has been remedied, we appreciate the action that has been taken. There have been rumours that the other hospitals now operated by D.V.A. will fall into the hands of provincial or municipal bodies, and I think this committee is entitled to know whether any plans of that nature are in prospect.

Over the last year and a half many representations have been made to the minister and his department to give us some outline of what can be expected in the nature of veterans legislation. I hope that today the minister will afford himself of the opportunity to deal with this question and will give us some idea of what we may expect in the future.

Mr. O'Keefe: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who has done so much to help the veterans and their families, tell us when the legislation mentioned in vote 17a will become effective, or on what date will the benefits be available to the people themselves?

Mr. Teillet: As I understand the question, Mr. Chairman, it refers to vote 17a, the Newfoundland Overseas Forestry Unit. This is an estimates supplement.

Mr. Lambert: Which supplement?

Mr. Teillet: "A". The effective date, as noted in the text, is July 1, but of course the provision cannot be implemented until parliament has passed the item and accepted the estimate.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I have brief remarks to make on a number of subjects connected with these estimates. First of all I should like to extend to the minister publicly my personal appreciation for his invitation to have me participate in the commemorative exercises this summer on the twenty fifth anniversary of the Dieppe raid. I should also like to commend the officers of his department for a generally well organized program. Admittedly, one had to be flexible here and there, but this is always a rule of life. I must say that everything went off well and the participation by the French government, the Dieppe municipal government and the personnel from the United Kingdom made it a very well-remembered and notable occasion.

There was only one fly in the ointment as far as I was concerned, and I have already spoken to the minister about this. I think he was sympathetic because there has been a precedent set in the past. I know some people will not share my opinion, but I think we could have acceded to the suggestion of the veterans association of the 302nd German division that they be able to lay a wreath at the Canadian memorial in Dieppe and in that way share with us the memory of that occasion 25 years ago.

I think the government of Canada missed a great opportunity in not tendering an open-handed invitation to this small handful of men. Their representatives were there and they did lay a wreath the next day. I know that in 1965, together with British, French and Canadian veterans, they did lay wreaths. We have had a joint laying of wreaths in commemoration of the battle of the Somme last year, at which Canadian, British, French and German forces exchanged wreaths.

This view may run counter to the personal feelings of certain individuals in this country. Of course they may have suffered a lot more than I did and their families may have lost some dear ones in the war. However, I do not think I came out of it scot-free. I went through a certain period of incarceration, and I must say that after 25 years I met some at the Dieppe ceremony who had been imprisoned with me—

Mr. Teillet: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt him at this moment? The point I would like to make clear is that the ceremonies were organized primarily by the municipal authorities at Dieppe and we were only participants. The Canadian government as such did not interfere in one way or another with the participation of German forces at the ceremony, nor do I believe that the French or the British governments interfered. This was left entirely to the local people, who undoubtedly were influenced by the public comments made in Canada.

Mr. Lambert: I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to tell the house why the government did not even acknowledge the letter requesting German participation. I know there were letters asking for this. I can tell the minister privately about some conversations I had in this respect which are of a more confidential nature. We in Canada missed a great opportunity, and that is all I will say about it.

There is another matter about which I would like to say a few words. It also concerns prisoners of war. Some time ago I placed a question on the order paper asking whether the treatment section of the Department of Veterans Affairs intended to call in prisoners of war through the various treatment centres in the country to give them a check-over either there or through the facilities of the Canadian pension commission. I consider this to be treatment of a preventive nature. There is no use waiting for a veteran to come in and say: I am ill and this is attributable to a disability incurred during the war. The minister is in the same position as I am. We are both former prisoners of war. He will recall the agitation on both sides of the house with regard to the Hong Kong prisoners of war. I think that finally the right steps were taken on their behalf and none too soon. However, I suggest to him that the same applies to other prisoners of war whose medical histories after incarceration have followed the same pattern.

Relatively speaking the minister and I did not suffer too much, but I know of many men who had to subsist for long periods of time on raw sugar beets which they pulled out of frozen fields. How has this affected them? We are not able to say whether any of these men who have died may have done so five or ten years earlier than they should have. And yet what do we know about those who are still suffering from the effects of the war? I think that here again we are missing an opportunity. I am sure that the treatment services have learned a great deal from the examinations of the Hong Kong prisoners of war conducted in the past few years. The same could be done with all the other prisoners of war. This is what I would call a form of preventive medicine. Their experiences cannot be duplicated. After all, there are not that many of these men who may serve as guinea-pigs, and experiments cannot be conducted easily with regard to this type of condition. I strongly urge the minister to reconsider the position taken by his department in the reply to my question. I really feel that we are passing up a truly worthwhile opportunity.

The next point I want to make is that I also had the opportunity to visit Vimy this year and, having acquainted myself with some of the problems which exist with regard to the maintenance of the memorial and the park there, I strongly urge the minister, even though he may run into some difficulties with the Minister of Finance, to consider the building of a diversionary road around the park. At present the road going through the park makes the maintenance of the memorial and the surrounding grounds very difficult for the limited staff that we have there on holidays and week ends. Since in France the week end is from Saturday noon to Tuesday morning on long week ends the Vimy park is much like Coney Island. People come from the surrounding villages and towns and gather on the lawns for picnics. They lay out the laundry on the grass and do all sorts of things. If we relocated the road and made an arrangement with the French government so that route nationale No. 37 going through the park could be moved, I think it would make it much simpler for everyone concerned. I think it would also make for less strained relations between the Canadian authorities at Vimy and the mayors and councillors of the neighboring towns.

The next point on which I would like to say a few words is in connection with the War Veterans Allowance Act and the inability of the government at the present time to consider the payment of war veterans allowances to many Canadian veterans living in the United Kingdom who are in great need of assistance and cannot afford to come back to put in the required one year of residence in Canada. There has been an extensive exchange of correspondence between Lieutenant Colonel Jones, the president of the Canadian Army Veterans in the United Kingdom Association, and officials of the minister's department. Frankly, all they are doing is setting up administrative obstacles. I have spoken to some of the officials who were in the department at the time when I headed it and they say this is not so. I admit that there is a division of opinion. It is said that there may be possibilities of overpayments which would create grave difficulties in trying to collect such overpayments. However, surely it is unreasonable to say that the department should not institute such a program because of possible difficulties in having to recover overpayments. I do not think the minister could or would seriously justify such an argument. The basis of that argument is wrong.

Canadian veterans who either served in world war I or world war II and who have in some cases come on more difficult times are not being paid war veterans allowances because they married in the United Kingdom and have not returned to Canada or have remained there for reasons of health. Yet allied veterans who come to Canada and live here for ten years qualify for the war veterans allowance and receive it. They may live here for another year and then decide to take off for Florida, the United Kingdom or France. If they do we in Canada continue to pay them. I do not think there is true justice in such a situation. It is the requirement of one year's residence that is the bogey. I would ask the minister to eliminate this continuing farce because it is truly a farcical situation but in so many instances it has tragic consequences.

This summer when I went to London I took a number of files in connection with widows or veterans who are experiencing difficult times as I wanted to have them examined to see what could be done. The stumbling block was the statutory year's residence in Canada for the men involved. If there is one acceptable principle for the payment of the war veterans allowance it is war service. Evidently we are prepared to pay this allowance to servicemen of our allies who reside in Canada for ten years and then go back to the United Kingdom or elsewhere. We pay it to them there because they served and then came to Canada and spent ten years here. However, if a Canadian veteran stayed in the United Kingdom, married and worked there, he receives nothing. His entitlement to war veterans allowance should not arise from his residence in Canada but as a result of his war service. I believe that should be the principle.

With these remarks, Mr. Chairman, I draw to a close my intervention in this debate. There are some other points I should like to raise on another occasion, but I know that a number of my colleagues want to say a few words. I hope these few points I have mentioned will merit favourable consideration by the minister and his officials.

Mr. Herridge: Before proceeding with my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I want to support the hon. member for Edmonton West in his plea for veterans residing in Great Britain or other allied countries. They should not be required to return to Canada to live for a year in order to qualify for war veterans allowance. As the minister knows we heard representations from organizations in Great Britain as well as in France, Belgium and Holland. They all had the same attitude toward this question. Like the hon. member, I cannot see any reason for asking them to return to Canada when the allowance is awarded on the basis of war service. I do hope the government will give consideration to the representations in this respect.

[Mr. Lambert.]

At the present time the major concern of veterans in Canada is an increase in the disability pension and the war veterans allowance. It is obvious that this does concern veterans and their dependants and veterans organizations. In order to indicate the extent of their concern I show the minister the over 100 letters I have received to date on this issue. There is a regular campaign going on in Kootenay West. We have ten branches of the Royal Canadian Legion. I will give the minister the letters later, but they show the interest in this question and the need for increases.

Our whole system of judging the rate of pension is wrong. In the first instance it was based on the wage of a casual labourer. The increases in pensions have not been equal to the increases received by casual labourers thus far. This is the first reason for discontent. The second reason is the rapid increase in the cost of living during the last two or three years. I believe these arguments are soundly based.

Canada has a generally good record with regard to veterans legislation. However, we are reaching a stage now where we have to approach our problems in this field on an international basis rather than on a strictly national basis. Before I sit down I want to bring to the attention of the members of the committee what has been done in this respect. I happen to be a member of the World Veterans Federation which has done a lot of constructive work in respect of improving veterans legislation generally in all countries of the world. I know that members of the Legion and veterans who will receive a copy of Hansard containing this day's proceedings will want to know something about what has been done. I should like, therefore, to place a few facts on the record.

This organization, one might say, is the counterpart of the International Labour Organization, The World Federation of Farm Women, the World Health Organization and organizations of that type which have resulted from the realization that if we are going to solve our problems satisfactorily we have to solve them almost on the basis of an international set of rules. This is what has been done to date. The organization has held its third conference on legislation with regard to veterans affairs. Under the heading "International Documentation on Benefits for War Victims", the conference recommended the assembling by all means at its disposal, with the assistance of governments and member associations, of the fullest possible data bearing on the establishment of valid comparisons of the purchasing power of national currencies, gross national revenues, national budgets, average wages and the number of war victims in receipt of benefits in relation both to the amount of benefits granted and to modifications of legislation in this field. I believe that suggestion was made as a result of considerable thought.

The second heading was "Co-operation in Promoting Veterans Protection". The conference called upon veterans organizations and competent governmental institutions pursuing humanitarian aims for the protection of veterans and their dependants to develop comprehensive mutual co-operation for the purpose of completing and improving systems of protection of veterans, resistants and war victims.

The next subject was "Indemnification for Damages and Illnesses Resulting Indirectly from Disabilities Already Giving Entitlement to Indemnification". The conference recommended that governments ensure the indemnification of any aggravation occuring in the somatic state of a person disabled in war or while performing military service, not only when it is established medically that his recognized lesions or sicknesses were caused exclusively by a disability previously recognized as being war or service connected but also where a consensus of medical opinion makes it possible to consider that the predominant cause of the new disability is the accepted war disablement. They recommended also the introduction into the legislation of countries concerned of provisions which make possible a benevolent, clear and uniform application of the relevant regulations.

The conference also discussed the discrimination existing against the less severely disabled in the matter of pensions and advocated scales of pensions proportional to disability ratings. There was a recommendation that the governments concerned resist any such tendency, accord to the less severely disabled their true worth and respect their rights and, with this end in view, ensure that scales of pensions are directly proportional to the basic pension related to the medical assessment of the disablement.

The conference then dealt with the influence of age on war pension rates. They called upon governments to introduce, where necessary, legislation whereby the disabled are entitled to the undiminished rate of their disability pension as from the age of 60, or earlier in cases where they have been in receipt of such pensions for a period of ten years.

The next subject dealt with was the adjustment of war victims pensions. The conference went on to recommend that governments establish pensions and other benefits in line with rising national standards.

The next heading is "The Exemption of War Pensions from Tax". The conference recommended that the governments concerned should decide that the compensation provided war victims by legislation should be exempted from tax. Our legislation has always done this so we are ahead of others in that respect.

Then there was a recommendation in connection with cars driven by the disabled. In fact, there is quite a lengthy list of recommendations in this connection, all of which should be given consideration by governments.

The conference then dealt with measures on behalf of the disabled regarding pension revision procedures. The recommendation was that governments go into all aspects of pension revision procedures. I understand that is exactly what the government is supposed to be doing at the present time, devising a formula for the rates of pension to be paid.

The next heading is "Benefits for Dependants of the Severely War Disabled Irrespective of the Cause of Death". The conference called upon governments to guarantee benefits for the dependants of the severely war disabled, irrespective of the cause of the latter's death.

The conference also dealt with benefits for the parents of war victims and recommended that governments compensate them adequately for their loss.

• (12:30 p.m.)

With regard to early retirement for the war disabled, it was recommended that the governments concerned introduce legislation providing for the possibility of applications for premature retirement on pension at the basic retirement age rate.

In the matter of compensation for exclusion from social security benefits it was recommended that governments concerned introduce legislation to this end.

The conference discussed concurrent payment of social security benefits and compensation for war victims and recommended that benefits under the social security system should be paid concurrently with those provided for under war victims legislation in cases where that legislation does not provide for the contingency in question.

They then discussed the reckoning of periods of wartime service for social insurance purposes and made a recommendation in that regard. They dealt with war disabled victims of work accidents and made a recommendation that this matter be given consideration by all governments concerned. The next matter dealt with was social insurance benefits for the severely disabled and dependants and a recommendation was made.

With regard to war-connected death and its effect on social security benefits, they proposed that this should be the subject of study by the World Veterans Federation international legislation information service. In the matter of free medical and pharmaceutical treatment the conference recommended that this treatment be given to all veterans and their dependants. With regard to medical treatment of war victims and disabled abroad, a lengthy resolution was passed.

The conference then discussed the protection of disabled workers and recommended that governments take measures where such cases occur to protect disabled workers and ensure that they are given employment compatible with their disability.

They discussed vocational training for widows and orphans and recommended that governments take appropriate measures where necessary to facilitate employment and vocational training for the dependants of deceased veterans.

They then recommended that the international legislation information service should be given a budget for the purpose of continuing in operation.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, they asked for an international charter on veterans basic rights and made a lengthy recommendation which, in view of the fact that our legislation is known as the veterans charter, I should like to put on the record:

> Recommends that the draft charter of veterans basic rights be referred back to the executive board of the W.V.F. for consideration by an expert committee who, taking into full consideration the draft memoranda already agreed by the members of the charter subcommittee should also take account of the recommendations and conclusions of the third international legislation conference in the preparation of the ultimate draft, and that in its preamble the final draft should specifically define those groups of persons for whom the special rights and privileges are required, noting that the rights of war veterans proclaimed by the charter be equally applied to the members of the resistance as to the category of war veterans.

I have made reference to these recommendations, Mr. Chairman, because this conference was a very interesting one. Assembled there were members of veterans organizations from practically every country in the world and they were meeting together to discuss common problems affecting veterans legislation in their own countries. As I said before, I think that if we are to get some sort of world rule of law in this respect and to do justice to all persons affected by war—veterans, their dependants, victims of war and so on—more and more we must approach the subject from, shall I say, an international point of view.

When the members of the standing committee on veterans affairs were overseas they met with representatives of various veterans groups in France, Belgium, Holland and Great Britain. We also had the opportunity of discussing veterans legislation and its relationship to social legislation with some representatives of the ministry of pensions in Great Britain, and we had a very informative session. I mention this because I am quite sure there are many people in Canada who are unaware of the constructive and co-operative work being done in this regard in order to direct attention to the problems of veterans, their dependants, victims of aggression and so on throughout the world so that they receive justice on a wider and wider scale as the years go by.

I have had considerable difficulty in getting through these few remarks because I am bothered by a bit of a cold. However, I was determined to have my say as best I could. I should like to support what previous speakers have said and I am sure I will be able to support the representations that will be made by others who wish to speak on veterans legislation. Before the estimates are passed I shall be looking forward to a very definitive statement from the minister which will cheer the hearts of all Canadian veterans and their dependants, as well as all veterans organizations, prior to our recognition of Remembrance day.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to a number of the speeches made in the house this morning and I think they reflect the virtual unanimity that prevails within the veterans affairs committee. I regret that I am no longer a member of that committee, but I am entitled by the rules of the house to be present and to participate when the committee is sitting and I fully intend to do so.

I think we all agree with the necessity for increasing veterans pensions. There is no doubt that they have not kept up with the increase in the cost of living. Something must be done and we all hope it will be done quickly.

I also think that when the pension was instituted it was based on a poor standard to begin with, namely, the standard of about the lowest paid government employee. Increases in veterans pensions have not kept pace with increases in pay of even that grade of government employee. This is therefore a matter of considerable anxiety to those of us who are concerned about the veterans and their families.

I am going to be quite brief in my remarks. I want to bring up a point which seems to me to require more attention than is perhaps being given at this time by the department. This is something for which I am going to fight and fight very hard if we do not see greater signs of forward planning than are apparent, to me at least, at the moment. I am referring to the matter of domiciliary care for older veterans.

In my riding of Victoria there is a veterans hospital, and for that reason alone I am very much aware of the needs of the soldiers who require not hospitalization but domiciliary care. They need a place to go to and someone to look after them. Regardless of whether this is a federal or a provincial responsibility, I think we should admit that the responsibility is indeed a national one and that we must do something to take care of these people.

I warn the government that a new generation of soldiers, sailors and airmen is entering this category. The veterans of world war II are beginning to need such care in increasing numbers, but I see no special signs that the federal government is prepared to step in on its own or in conjunction with the provincial governments to take care of this need.

I need not tell the minister what is involved here, but I might remind some of his staff who assist him in his planning that the cost of a domiciliary bed or unit is in the neighbourhood of $3,000 or $4,000 as opposed to the cost of a hospital bed which is three or four times that amount. I say to the minister that he and his officials should devote considerable attention to planning ahead for the provision of such care by one means or another—I do not care how he does it—so that soldiers, sailors and airmen who require domiciliary care will have somewhere to go, some place to stay and some one to look after them. I do not say this is exclusively a federal responsibility but to my mind it is the responsibility of members of the House of Commons to make sure that care is provided.

Becoming parochial for a moment, I wish to raise a matter which I have previously brought to the minister's attention, and I should like him to look into it. In Esquimalt, which after redistribution will no longer be in Victoria riding, there is a beautiful old veterans cemetery which was turned over to his department about 15 years ago. It used to be the old naval cemetery and it needs some attention. The road to it runs through a golf course as well as through Department of National Defence property. Since the road runs through three different domains, so to speak, there seems to be difficulty in deciding who is to look after it. I do not care who looks after it but somebody should get on with the job of seeing that the road is put into proper shape. The cemetery is still used by veterans and nothing upsets the dignity of a ceremonial occasion so much as for the ceremonial party to have to wade through potholes and mud on the way to the ceremony.

I have recently been informed that the Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada is to hold its annual meeting during August next year, in Victoria, British Columbia. I do not have the exact date at my fingertips. I am sure the minister will be welcome there. I retain my interest in this unique group and I appreciate the steps that he and his department have taken to look into the special circumstances of this group and to be helpful to them.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, during the last several years I have, for several reasons, restrained myself with difficulty from participating at length in any discussion when the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs have been before the house. I wanted to give the minister an opportunity during the initial period after he assumed his portfolio to show what he could do. I have also encouraged many able representatives of the veterans on this side of the house to participate in debates and have attempted to keep silent myself, something I find difficult to do in the House of Commons. On this occasion I thought I would say something on behalf of the veterans, something about the Department of Veterans Affairs and something about the interest that Canada as a whole ought to show in her military history.

I am not to be led astray because I received an invitation from the ministerial office to attend the fiftieth anniversary ceremony of the battle of Passchendaele. Naturally I was grateful for the invitation and I attended. This will not deter me from offering criticism of the minister in his capacity of being in charge of the department. I think only two or three members of the House of Commons were present at the battle of Passchendaele 50 years ago, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands being one of them. I am not sure that I like attending fiftieth anniversaries. They bring home to one clearly that time has marched on and that one belongs to an entirely different generation. I was pleased to be there, nevertheless, and I expressed my thanks to the minister. I shall return to the subject of the Passchendaele ceremony in a moment.

The most important topic before us is the care of our pensioners of the first world war, second world war and the Korea war. We do not pay enough attention to our pensioners. Quite properly, we have a standing committee on veterans affairs and that committee works effectively. The minister who heads the department must give leadership in these matters and my criticism of the minister is that in the last three years when he has presented his estimates to the House of Commons he has spoken for about two or three minutes simply to say that as his estimates had been before a committee there was no need to discuss them extensively in the house. It is incumbent on the Minister of Veterans Affairs to make a moderately long statement to show what his department is doing and to indicate to the public generally his interest and the interest of the government in the veterans of this country and in the pensioners.

Mr. Churchill: Unless a minister says something publicly about his department the tendency is to consider it unimportant. Some may think that his department is not receiving the attention it should receive and that the minister of the department is not being influential with his cabinet colleagues. The present minister, whom I have refrained from criticizing all these years, has been singled out for constructive attention.

I hope the minister will rise to the occasion and declare publicly in the House of Commons and elsewhere the vital importance of the Department of Veterans Affairs to the veterans of this country, the importance of that department to the people of Canada and his desires and activities with regard to the fulfilment of his responsibilities. This will be quite a task for the minister because I am not the least bit sure that during the course of the almost four years he has had responsibility for this department he has maintained it as it should have been maintained. If he is not careful the department will fade out and be absorbed by the Department of National Health and Welfare or some other department of that nature. Hon. members do not want that to happen, but it is up to the minister to give leadership and indicate that the Department of Veterans Affairs is an essential factor in the administration of this country. The minister has to do that by more than just a casual, haphazard, careless statement on the introduction of his estimates.

Why does the minister not say to the people of this country: you have a continuing responsibility for the disabled veterans who fought in the wars for freedom for Canada? Let him stress this point. He is the only member of the cabinet who is charged with this responsibility, although I would hope other members of the cabinet share it, but someone has to do this and keep on doing it because human nature is such that we tend to forget when things are not drawn to our attention.

The grave danger which faces the veterans of Canada is that with the passage of time people generally will tend to forget them. There is a new generation coming up. Fortunately it has been free from having to make sacrifices in warfare, but that new generation should be interested in the history of our country, should know something of the fight for freedom that was carried on by its predecessors and should be steeled in its own will to face similar hazards if called upon to do so.

Let us not carelessly brush aside or treat as something insignificant the care of our disabled veterans. The minister should have put the figures on the record to show the number of people still suffering. Why did he not say that of the approximately 33,000 disabled pensioners of the first world war almost 6,000 are men who are in the category of 75 per cent to 100 per cent disability? They have carried that burden for 50 years. Fancy being a 100 per cent disabled pensioner for 50 years. No greater sacrifice has been made by any citizen of this country than that made by the men who have carried that burden. The minister should draw this to our attention.

The minister should also indicate the figures for the second world war and Korea to show that the problem exists, that it cannot be brushed aside, and that it will remain with us for a great many years. First world war veterans, of course, are on the downward slope. There are very few of them under 70 years of age. In another 15 years they will have gone over the precipice. But second world war veterans are going to be around for a long time and the citizens of this country must gratefully bear the burden of sustaining these men who risked their lives in order that Canada would be free. The Minister of Veterans Affairs carries the responsibility of repeating that message time and time again.

I pay my tribute to the officials of the department who have carried on with great dedication over the years and are still doing so, but I look to the minister and to the deputy minister to give leadership, to sustain the department and to retain the confidence of veterans organizations all across the country. I am not sure they have retained that confidence at the present time because of the inexcusable delay in raising disability pensions to the level at which they should be.

The minister is now in the terribly awkward position of facing a minister of finance and cabinet who are greatly disturbed over the financial disaster that is just around the corner for this country. It will be an almost insuperable task for him to get increases for disability pensioners because the Minister of Finance is so clearly in grave difficulty. I hope that the large and increasing deficit of the magnificent world fair which was held in Montreal will not be used as an argument to prevent giving justice with regard to the pensions of our disability pensioners. I read in the papers that there is a deficit of $250 million in respect of Expo and that there may be other deficits in other enterprises, but I hope this will not restrict the activities of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Veterans Affairs when dealing with these pensions. With the country now reaching the point of financial difficulties, the minister's delay over the last two years may have disastrous effects for our disability pensioners. I give that warning at this time.

I see it is just about one o'clock and I presume we are going to live like normal people and have a luncheon break. I would like to say something about the fiftieth anniversary ceremony at Passchendaele and about other ceremonies of that nature which may be coming up in the near future. If it is agreeable to you, sir, I would like to do that after lunch. I now call it one o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, just before the luncheon adjournment I was dealing with some of the problems that affect the veterans of this country and attempting to place some emphasis on the responsibilities which should weigh on the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the government generally. In the few minutes I have left at my disposal this afternoon I should like to stress the importance of the history of this country and this history of the world in which our countrymen have been involved.

We deplore war in any form, but the history of the world is largely a history of warfare and our country has been most active in this history. Whether we like it or not, the type of world in which we have lived during the twentieth century has subjected Canadians to the pressures of international affairs. Canadians have responded in time of danger and trouble and have stood shoulder to shoulder with freedom-loving men from every country.

During this our centennial year nothing has been more appropriate to my mind than the writing and publishing of a book by Hon. Leslie Frost. He is a very distinguished Canadian, a former premier of the province of Ontario and a serving soldier during the first world war. He has accomplished something unique in military history as a result of telling about the part in that war played by men from Orillia. The story of the men from this community can be duplicated in respect of small hamlets, villages, towns, communities and cities from coast to coast in Canada. Men from these areas played a similar part during that war. I commend this book to everyone in Canada. Anyone who reads it will understand what took place in communities across this country like Orillia at the time of that confrontation. The foreword to this book was written by the president of Trent University, Thomas H. B. Symons. I should like to read the second paragraph:

> The book tells the story of a group of men—the 393 members of the 35th Regiment of Simcoe Foresters who came forward for military service from the Orillia community half a century ago—and of the impact of the first world war upon them and their families and their community, and it does so with great perception and understanding. But it is more than a narrative of events. It is a statement of the author's faith in his country and some of his deeply felt convictions about this country.

> One of the great tragedies of Canadian history has been our failure to translate into Canadian pride and loyalty the accomplishments of her men in the tragic period of the war. The achievements of the Canadian Corps from the day of the first landing in France in 1915 until the day of victory, should be a reason for pride on the part of all Canadians. It is a fantastic story. The Canadian Army Corps commenced with the enlistment in August, 1914 of men garbed in red coats and blue trousers. On the 14th of that month Orillia's contribution to the new Canadian expeditionary force marched down Mississaga street. This story was repeated in communities all across Canada. It was the beginning of the organization of an army corps which was second to none on the western front, or any other front. It became an unsurpassed fighting machine. Its accomplishments were outstanding. The bravery, the brain, the brawn and the ability to adapt to unforeseen conditions, should be an inspiration to all Canadians. Unfortunately, in the twenties and thirties, when democracy seemed to lose its purpose and direction, the Canadian people and their governments seemed to play down these monumental achievements of their countrymen. Perhaps, 50 years later in 1967 at the time of the one hundredth birthday of our country, some of the robust sentiments of the past can be regained.

> Children of other days sang with pride and enthusiasm about Queenston Heights and Lundy's Lane, and about their forebears who "firmly stood and nobly died," in defence of their country. There is virtue in these days in remembering the men of Canada who firmly stood and nobly died in an even greater cause, the laying of the foundations of world government, which must exist if mankind is to survive.

Throughout the book one finds the story of these 393 men, their sacrifice, their devotion to duty, the honours they gained, the death and the wounding of many of them, and their return to the homeland. That story of sacrifice and devotion to duty had to be repeated by their sons in the second great world war. This is now part and parcel of Canada's history and we should do honour to these men who made our country.

I grow weary of those people who are now searching for a Canadian identity. As I have said before in this house, Canada's identity as a nation was discovered and proved on the battlefields of Europe from 1914 to 1918. It was then that we emerged as a nation in the eyes of the world. Our representatives sat in at the peace keeping activities leading to the treaty of Versailles and in the formulation of the plans for the League of Nations. So when some people are searching now, 50 years later, for a Canadian identity I wonder at the lack of knowledge of Canadian history among those who write in that vein.

Part of our recognition of Canada's identity is to be found on those occasions when we pay tribute to those who lost their lives in the various wars. We have been doing this now for 50 years in Canada on various occasions. During the last several years we have been participating in commemorative memorial services in Europe, and I think these should be continued. It was only proper that we should recognize, as we did, the twenty fifth anniversary of the battle of Dieppe. I think it is only proper that we should recognize other episodes in the course of the second world war and similarly we should recognize episodes in the first world war.

Of course it will soon be time for a standdown with regard to the first world war. After all, when the fiftieth anniversary is involved there are not many left who can participate in such a ceremony. I recall that a few years ago we held a ceremony here in Ottawa to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of the conclusion of the South African war. Some very distinguished veterans of that war paraded here and participated under government auspices in a ceremony to pay honour to their contribution in that strife. They were then all in the eighties.

So by the time you hit the fiftieth anniversary you are coming pretty well to the end of the road. But it is only right that we should participate in ceremonies of that nature in order to recognize the sacrifices of the first world war and in order to recognize the history of our country. Therefore it was with great pleasure that I heard of the plans for the ceremony at Vimy Ridge in the spring of this year. I was glad that Canada participated in the recognition of the fiftieth anniversary of that battle. I was pleased to be able to attend the ceremony at Passchendaele just a few weeks ago when once again Canada recognized one of the important battles of the first world war. Sixteen thousand young Canadian men either lost their lives or were wounded in that conflict, but they achieved their objective.

From 50 years ago yesterday up to November 10 represents the period when the Canadian Corps was engaged in the third battle of Ypres which culminated in the battle of Passchendaele. We were engaged in that battle 50 years ago, and 50 years ago today a former distinguished member of this house, now the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, Hon. George Pearkes, was awarded the Victoria Cross for his valour in that conflict.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: It was only fitting that we should be there to pay our tribute, together with other members of the commonwealth, to those who fought in that struggle. The British, Australians, New Zealanders, South Africans, representatives from India and other portions of what was then known as the British Empire and Commonwealth, took part in the third battle of Ypres at the excessive cost of 150,000 casualties over a period of about three and a half months.

Just a few days ago there was at Tynecot cemetery in Belgium a ceremony at which we were present. Lord Alexander, former Governor General of Canada, was in charge of the ceremony and gave the address. My only complaint is that although there was a guard of honour provided by the United Kingdom, Belgium and France and a small guard of honour provided by Australia, there was no Canadian guard of honour. My complaint, which I hesitate to raise but I think I must do so, is that if we are to participate in ceremonies of this nature we should do it in the proper fashion.

Canada on that occasion should have had an appropriate guard of honour along with those countries which were our comrades in arms in the first great world war. The flimsy excuse that because the Canadian Brigade in Germany was engaged in NATO exercises and men could not be spared does not make much sense to those of us who have been in the services. It would be very unusual not to be able to spare one officer and 25 men for a guard of honour even if we could not have a guard of honour of 200. But the fact that Canada was not represented there is not, I think, good for Canada's prestige in international affairs.

If we participate in other functions of this nature, let us be very careful to see that we are properly represented, because when Canada is abroad other countries watch and see what we do. At the commemoration of the battle of Passchendaele, which was the Canadian portion of the third battle of Ypres, we did not have the appropriate public recognition by having a guard of honour there. I hope that next year, 1968—this might be the final ceremony for the first world war representing the 50th anniversary of the conclusion of that contest—we will be properly represented at some ceremony in Europe.

I hope there will be a Canadian organized ceremony at the city of Mons which the Canadians entered and seized on November 11, 1918. Others may have other ideas but I throw this out as one which occurs to me as being appropriate. To my mind Mons is the place where we should have the ceremony representing the fiftieth anniversary of the conclusion of the first world war. I hope that in 1969 we will appropriately join our comrades from Great Britain, the United States, France and all other countries that were involved in commemorating the beginning of the end of the second world war when the landings took place in Normandy in 1944. At the same time I hope the activities of Canadians in Sicily and Italy and in other parts of the world will not be overlooked.

These ceremonies are not numerous but they are very important. They tend to focus attention upon the history of our country. They acquaint the younger generation with the sacrifices that have been made in order to maintain freedom, and therefore we should not dismiss ceremonies of this nature just because we are all anxious for peace. No one is more anxious for peace in this world than men who have served in wartime, but at the same time we should recognize the sacrifices which a country makes in times of war.

This is all part of our history. This is how we have become a nation, and every child, every young man and young woman across this country should know the history of Canada. The two world wars and the war in Korea are part of it. There is a psychological effect involved. I hope the young people of today will not have to go through the experiences of the young people of 25 or 50 years ago but perhaps the reminder of these events will instil in them the right spirit if danger threatens so that they will respond in the same way as did their fathers, their grandfathers and their relatives. Thus the strength of the country will be maintained and not dissipated by all the emphasis which is put these days on the dangers of war and the fearful catastrophe which war can bring. We know all that, it is in our history, but at the same time we know that if freedom is to be maintained we have to be strong in spirit and determined to put forth the necessary effort no matter what the sacrifices may be.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of brief matters which I would like to raise today in discussing the minister's estimates. Neither of them is new. We have raised them before but apparently we will have to keep raising them until something is done about them. The first one has to do with the long awaited Woods report. I should like to read two paragraphs from a letter I received today on this very matter:

> Apparently the "two language bit" is still their excuse for delay of this report; but that was their excuse, as you told me, over a year ago.
> If the bureaucracies can use this as a further lot of red tape to delay action on justice, we would be better off without the two languages. I feel quite sure that any veterans in Quebec or elsewhere, who speak French, would gladly accept this report in English—just so its recommendations could be implemented.

The most significant thing about this letter is that it is signed by a Madame Boisvert. Ce n'est pas un nom anglais ça; c'est un nom canadien français. The latest word we have is that we have to wait only another month, but I would like to point out that on March 7 of last year the minister told the house that he hoped the report would be ready before the end of the month. I wonder how much longer we will have to wait before having this report and before some action is taken on its recommendations.

The other point I would like to raise has to do with the treatment of our war veterans allowance recipients who also happen to be old age pensioners. I have raised this matter before; in fact I raised it last spring during the committee hearings, as the minister may recall. I have since heard of a number of cases of veterans of the first world war who were recipients of old age security and also of a partial war veterans allowance pension who have found that the money which the Minister of National Health and Welfare put into one pocket for old age pensions was promptly taken out of the other pocket for war veterans allowances. I think we should remember that the reason the $30 supplement was given to old age pensioners was that this government finally got it through their heads that the old age pensioners were in need and that they were not receiving a sufficient pension to meet their basic needs in view of the cost of living today. Having recognized this, the department proceeded to give them a small increase.

The funny part of the whole thing is that the different sets of rules in the games that the government plays with old people have meant that under the rules of the old age security game they could qualify even though they were in receipt of the war veterans allowance but under the rules of the war veterans allowance game the recipients fell afoul of the law if they received extra money on their old age pension. The most vicious feature of all in many of these cases was that when the department finally got through the red tape in giving the extra $30 a month it was late in the year, July, August or September, and since the increase was retroactive to the first of this year it constituted an overpayment. We found that not only were the war veterans allowances cut by the $30 which they received in addition to the old age security pension but they were cut even more to recoup the so-called overpayments. I cannot think of anything more vicious in the treatment of our veterans.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Teillet: If I may interrupt the hon. gentleman, I am sure that in the cause of truth he will allow me to state the case. I am sure he did not intend to say what he did. He knows that each one of those war veterans' allowance recipients was advised not to do anything until he had checked with his welfare officer. For the sake of truthfulness I hope the hon. gentleman will make that clear.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Yes, they were advised in fine print. I also know for a fact from personal contact with these veterans that they were also advised by their local pension representatives, not their war veterans' allowance representative but the local old age security representative, to apply for the extra $30. I have here a letter which was sent to one of the veterans in question. It reads as follows:

> This is to inform you that, as you have been awarded the guaranteed income supplement of $30 a month, the commission has reviewed your case under a section of the Pension Act which provides that awards to parents are subject to review from time to time and may be continued, increased, decreased, or discontinued in accordance with the circumstances of the pensioner found on review and all income must be taken into consideration.

In view of your present circumstances, the commission has found it necesary to reduce the pension awarded you and your wife—

Of course the only change in the man's circumstances was that he had received a slight increase in his old age security pension. The only comment I can add is that it appears to these harried pensioners as though the government is only interested in setting up different sorts of games to each of which is assigned a snooper who pokes his nose into the business of old age pensioners in receipt of war veterans allowance. These people are trying to keep up with the cost of living today. The government seems to have no interest in the pensioners at all except to provide some people with jobs shoving their noses into their business. This is the picture the pensioner is getting. I do not know why this is so unless the government feels that the war pensioners are a waning force and will have no political influence. This seems to be the only thing this government understands. They seem to be of the opinion that the war pensioners are a waning force and in a few years they will not have to worry about them.

Mr. Chatwood: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs I should like to confine my remarks to one or two points. I do not intend to make a lengthy speech covering all the aspects of this department which plays such a vital role in recognizing the efforts of the men and women who were a part of our armed forces during the various wars in which this country has taken part. All of us recognize the efforts the department makes to meet the needs of these people. It would be difficult, I believe, to speak about veterans affairs without affording recognition to the other organizations and groups that also take a deep interest in the affairs of veterans, particularly the Canadian Legion and such organizations. These organizations, in addition to looking after veterans, take an active part in the community.

I should like to speak briefly about a particular group, the Newfoundland Overseas Forestry Unit which is not recognized as a veterans group or as part of the military forces. During the first world war forestry units were in effect recognized as part of the military organization but not during the second world war. In 1939 there was a serious shortage of pit props in Great Britain which caused a weakness in the war effort of the industries of that country. In order to meet this need and to further the war effort a request was sent to the then governor of Newfoundland, which at that time was not part of Canada, by the secretary of state for dominion affairs. At that time Newfoundland was asked to raise a force of up to 2,000 men to support the war effort in Great Britain by taking part in the forest industry.

Early in 1940 the request was met and a force of 2,000 was moved out as a civilian unit in order to save time and obviate the necessity of supplying military accountrements which were in short supply. The members of this unit stayed overseas during the war years, some remaining there after the cessation of hostilities in 1945. Those who returned found that their rights as people who took part in the war effort were very small. They would like to receive the rights to which they feel they are entitled, rights similar to those accorded veterans of the military forces.

As I mentioned, this unit was raised at the request of the British secretary of state for dominion affairs. Upon the outbreak of war the governor of Newfoundland had indicated that Newfoundland was prepared to raise a combatant force. In reply the secretary of state for dominion affairs wrote:

—position has so developed that coal production here, which is vital to war economy will be jeopardized unless production of home-grown pit props can be rapidly accelerated and any assistance which Newfoundland can offer in this matter would be very valuable.

Therefore a civilian force instead of a military force was raised and sent overseas. Early in 1940 the secretary of state for dominion affairs again raised the matter and indicated there was a problem with the foresters in Great Britain who wished to join the military forces. He asked the governor of Newfoundland to send 1,000 additional men and to take special steps to persuade as many loggers as possible to re-engage with the Newfoundland forestry unit for a further term. Various members of the British government as well as the deputy prime minister visited the camps of these foresters to indicate to them the desirability of remaining as foresters rather than joining the military forces. A message was posted by the secretary of state for dominion affairs which read in part:

> At this time of national emergency, the government is setting every man in the country to do the work for which he is best fitted. The fighting forces are playing their part magnificently, but it is essential that they should be equipped with the guns, ammunition, ships, planes and material of every sort that they need. Without coal this great effort of equipment cannot go on. Our coal mines are producing more than they ever did before. They can only keep this up if the supply of timber is maintained.

I will not read all of it but farther on there were these words:

> I know very well that I am asking many of you to make a great sacrifice but the empire is in peril. At such a time, speaking to you as a member of His Majesty's government, I tell you that you cannot serve the crown and your country better than by remaining at your present work. I know that you will not fail us.

This message was signed by the secretary of state for dominion affairs. These people were volunteers who in time of war wanted to do their part to defend the freedom of their country. They offered to join the military forces or to take part in any way in which they could best help the war effort. They were directed into the Newfoundland forestry unit and while not compelled to stay there they were at least under heavy pressure to do so. The difference between this civilian unit and a military unit was not great. The men had to live in barracks and no regard was given to family commitments. They served overseas in a theatre of war, had to sign a contract and could not transfer from one job to another. They had to work any day at any time, which they gladly did to assist in the fight for freedom. In 1942 the recruiting officers in Britain were advised not to accept foresters in the service.

The foresters who returned home and are now living in Canada are seeking the same recognition as has been accorded to those who were at that time Canadian foresters from Canada. As I have indicated, they feel entitled to these rights owing to the fact that they were not allowed to join the military.

I am pleased to see that the minister has taken action to assist one group of foresters in one respect. The foresters who joined up in 1939 and 1940 signed on for a six month period. This period was renewable and many of them served through the whole conflict until the end of the war in 1945, signing up for successive six month terms. Many of them felt that perhaps the situation would change and that they might be admitted into that branch of military service of their first choice. However, because the shortage of supplies to support the industrial war effort did not ease they were kept in the forestry division.

I am pleased to see that those men who served a term of more than six months and those whose terms were terminated on medical grounds now have the same rights as other foresters, even though these rights are not quite as broad as the men would like. I therefore urge the minister to ask his department to consider further the efforts of these men who gave all their skill and time in service overseas away from their families during the war years so as to see whether or not they can be given the other privileges and rights of those who served in the war effort. I know this would be appreciated by these people and would be more in keeping with the desire of the government to recognize the efforts of many of the people who served during the war years.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I am in a fortunate position inasmuch as nearly everything that I had intended to say has already been said either by a member on this side of the house or by members on the other side. However, I should like to make one or two points in connection with the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

First of all, I should like to repeat what my colleague from Melville and others said, namely, that we are deeply disappointed that we do not have before us at the present time the Wood report so that we can discuss it on the minister's estimates, as well as the departmental study presently being conducted. I have no doubt that when the Wood report is presented it will be most thorough and comprehensive and I expect it will be of great value to the minister to us in parliament and to the veterans of this nation.

The second point I want to make, which I do so with all the eloquence at my command, is that the veterans of this nation and their dependants are deeply concerned about the present level of veterans pensions. All hon. members are receiving a great deal of correspondence in this connection. I have before me a letter addressed to my colleague the hon. member for Royal, signed by a gentleman with whom I served for many years in New Brunswick in the Royal Canadian Legion, Mr. Howard Kierstead. He is a zone commander of the Canadian Legion, Royal district, southern New Brunswick, and he says in part:

> One predominant point that was discussed here—

He is referring to the district rally.

> —was the lack of action on the matter of increasing veterans disability pensions . . .
> Our Dominion president and his staff have presented a most comprehensive brief to the authorities. When may we expect some action?
> We as a group feel that the time has now arrived for a hard approach to the situation and evasive answers should not be accepted.

I think that is the feeling among hundreds of thousands of veterans and their dependants as well as among the citizens of this nation. The time has now come when veterans pensions must be increased. We know the unpleasant economic facts of life in this nation and that inflation is one of the great problems. The cost of living falls most heavily on those men and women on fixed incomes, such people as war pensioners, the dependants of veterans and federal civil service superannuates.

Those who belong to the powerful labour unions can strike, and they do with regularity. In this way they are able to force up their remuneration. But the veterans of this country and their dependants have no one other than the members of this house to speak for them. This is why I make no excuse for pressing this matter in the house upon the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The time has now come when there should be a substantial increase in disability pensions, in war veterans allowances, in pensions to disabled veterans, indeed in the payments to all those who are receiving assistance of this sort.

I notice that the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission, the chairman of the War Veterans Allowance Board and a number of officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs are in the gallery today. These gentlemen are second to none in this nation in their dedication to their jobs and my relationship with them has been a most happy one over the years. I have not always achieved a successful conclusion, if I may call it that, to the cases I have taken to the pension commission or to its very able chairman, to the war veterans allowance board or its very able chairman, or to the department; but I do know that my representations have always been thoroughly considered and sympathetically received and I am deeply grateful for that. I think we are fortunate in the calibre of the people who are doing this work for us.

I hope it is the intention of the minister when he makes a statement later to discuss how the transfer of hospitals to civilian authorities has worked out. As I understand it, many of our veterans hospitals have been taken over by civilian authorities and we have now reached the point where we can assess whether or not this change has been to the benefit of our veterans. I hope it is and that the minister will take the opportunity to discuss the matter for a few minutes because it is of much concern to our veterans.

A year or so ago, following the study made by Dr. Richardson, the Hong Kong veterans received some favourable consideration. I realize that the minister, the hon. member for Edmonton West and others went through the trial during the last war of serving in a prisoner of war camp. However, I would suggest to the minister and to others that the men who were prisoners of war in Hong Kong suffered as none of the rest of us did. I have always felt that I could not have survived as a prisoner of war of the Japanese and I am deeply grateful, as I am sure are these veterans, for what has been done for them in this field. They were certainly completely deserving of it.

The very fine address made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was an inspiration to all of us. This hon. gentleman has a war record second to none in this country and he made an exceptional address, one that should be necessary reading for everyone in the nation. Just a few nights ago I attended a function at the Canadian Legion headquarters in Ottawa at which I saw the film "That Other April" taken at the Vimy memorial this year. I am sure there were tears in the eyes of many that night as they watched that ceremony. The veterans of both world wars were present. Heads are more bowed now than they were 50 years ago, but the veterans themselves are as stouthearted as ever.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre mentioned the battle of Passchendaele. That battle is interesting historically because there Canadians suffered more than anywhere else perhaps in world war I. Few men who survived the mud and filth and despair of Passchendaele are not bitter. For months they held to their positions in the filth and slime of Belgium, and their sacrifices brought little result. What they did is especially worthy of note at this time.

Another group of veterans that it is difficult to do much for are those who became psychiatric cases because of war service. Sometimes it is difficult to know whether a man is swinging the lead. Sometimes a man approaches the pension commission, claiming he is a psychiatric disability case, and it is difficult to tell if that is so. In all sincerity I hope that the minister's department will examine more closely this area of war disability.

I have in mind a young boy who was only 15 when he enlisted in a northern New Brunswick regiment. He came from a broken home. He served four years in the army and landed in France on D day, 1944, was awarded the military medal—as a matter of fact I personally recommended him—and was wounded. He refused to leave the front line. Finally, after several months of fighting, he was withdrawn and put into a mental hospital, where he has been ever since. He will remain there for the rest of his life as he is an incurable case. This is an extreme example. As I said, the danger is that a leadswinger would approach the department and say that he cannot work because of his disability. We must guard against that. At the same time I hope that in the not too distant future a comprehensive program in the field of veterans disability will be undertaken.

The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador spoke about the Newfoundland foresters. His predecessor in the house referred to that body many times on the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Unfortunately, nothing has been done about this group. I only wish to make one point, not to criticize but to correct something for the record. The hon. member is never on sound ground when he compares the Newfoundland foresty unit with the forestry corps of the Canadian army. The forestry corps was a unit of the Canadian army and its men were all attested. They were all soldiers, subject to all the transfers within the army and were in the same position as the men of the corps of Royal Canadian Engineers or the service corps. I commend the hon. member for the battle he is putting up for those people, and I wish him well.

I have said about all I wish to say except that I hope that very soon the Wood report will be made available for study. I am sure that many of its points will be implemented for the benefit of the veterans and their dependants. I hope and pray that very soon the war veterans of this country will hear the good news that war veterans pensions and war veterans allowances are to be substantially raised.

Mr. O'Keefe: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he explain the difference between the Canadian forestry corps and the Newfoundland foresters, especially when the Newfoundland foresters who made an effort to join the services were told that they were more importantly employed as Newfoundland foresters?

Mr. MacRae: I shall be glad to answer that question, if my hon. friend will bear with me for a moment. I had experience with forestry troops in Scotland in world war II, and a fine group of men they were. I can only repeat that the Newfoundland forestry unit was composed of civilians. Several groups of civilians served in a similar capacity. They served with great distinction and were of great value, of course.

I am saying that the Newfoundland forestry unit was a civilian unit in this area of service. In some ways it was similar to the corps of Canadian firefighters, many of whom served during the blitz. Several of them were killed in the course of their service. But one has to start from some basic position and one has to look at whether men have been attested. One must have some way of saying; These men are members of the Canadian Armed Forces. Unfortunately those in the group the hon. member spoke about were not members of the armed forces.

I think a mistake was made right at the very beginning. But it was made 27 years ago and no government has corrected it. Mind you, if the Newfoundland foresters were given the benefits of the veterans charter, other worthy oragnizations should also be given those benefits. I am sure the hon. member would feel as strongly about that as I do. The group that immediately comes to mind is the Canadian firefighters corps. There were 400 of them and when the rest of us went to shelters or underground stations in the blitz they stayed above ground fighting fires. I hope I have answered the hon. member's question.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, any participant in the debate at this stage is almost certain to repeat arguments which previous speakers have advanced. I wish to make several comments, at the risk of being repetitious, in the hope that a repetition of some of the arguments on behalf of veterans may encourage the minister to expedite the fulfilment of some promises which he has made during the past several months.

Of overriding importance to most veterans and those interested in veterans affairs are increases in the various pensions which are paid to our veterans. Perhaps this can best be highlighted by reference to The Legionary for October of this year. On page 9 of that issue the president of the Canadian Legion had this to say in reply to a letter from the Prime Minister:

> Although I am disappointed by the lengthy delays that have occurred, I nevertheless appreciate your statement that, while the Woods committee report has not yet been received and the intradepartmental study on actual pension rates will not be completed for another two months, the matter of pension increases is currently being given active consideration. I take it that your reference, in this context, to Mr. Teillet's remarks in the house on March 13, means that the government is considering an interim increase this fall—in line with the minister's assurance six months ago that such a measure would be taken if the Woods and departmental committee's recommendations did not come to hand in "the fairly near future."

Further on in his letter he wrote:

> An adequate interim increase during the fall session—but for wives and children as well as the disability pensioners themselves—is necessary to help alleviate the immediate need.

I think this clearly sets out the attitude of the Canadian Legion and, as I have pointed out, of all those who are interested in veterans affairs. Real disappointment was expressed following the last increase, which I believe was 15 per cent, when it was discovered that it did not apply to dependants. We are all aware of the protests made at that time and of the request that the minister reconsider the matter in the light of the constantly increasing cost of living and the fact that veterans and their families were placed in such a difficult economic position.

Subsequent attempts to obtain redress have not been successful. However, attempts to gain further increases in the basic pension continue. Time and again we have been told that the government is awaiting the tabling of the report of the Woods commission and the report of a departmental committee which was set up to try to work out a formula for pension rates. We also remember the minister's promise, to which the president of the Legion referred in his letter, that if there was any undue delay in the tabling of these reports he would give consideration to further interim increases. We have heard this so many times, and apparently it formed part of the reply by the Prime Minister to the first letter written by the president of the Canadian Legion.

We can understand the minister's desire to have ample time to study all the relevant factors and to draft a sound formula for the establishment of rates but we in this chamber, as well as the veterans, find it impossible to understand his failure to carry out his promise of further interim increases. It may be that his failure is tied up with the position of the government with respect to the curtailing and cutting back of expenditures. It may be that economies have to be made but they should not be made at the expense of those who did not count the cost which service to their country might entail. Therefore I join with others who have spoken in this debate in appealing to the minister, in view of the long delay in the tabling of the reports, to bring his consideration to a satisfactory conclusion and announce that the government is prepared to recognize its responsibility to those who have served in the nation's forces and is prepared now to make further interim increases in the various pensions payable.

I would also like to support the representations made by the hon. member for Timmins who referred to the fact that there are veterans who find their pensions have been reduced because they are now in receipt of the old age pension income supplement. It seems very strange that although veterans pensions are not taken into consideration in the establishment of people's right to the income supplement, the income supplement itself affects veterans pensions.

Mr. Teillet: If I may interrupt the hon. gentleman for a moment. Again for the sake of the accuracy of the record, the veterans' disability pension is not affected by any welfare supplement and with the exception of W.V.A. at no time is a veteran's pension considered as income in relation to welfare benefits. Those moneys paid to a veteran as welfare, the war veterans allowance and some allowances and payments made to dependants are affected by other welfare payments, but the veteran's disability pension is never affected by payments of that kind. I think this should be made clear for the record. I do not think my hon. friend intended to cloud the matter and I think he will welcome this clarification.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I understand that these other payments are made to veterans because their pensions are not adequate.

Therefore I think the same argument pertains in this situation. The amount which veterans receive from the Department of Veterans Affairs, from whatever fund it comes, should not be reduced because veterans are receiving a little from the income supplement fund. The arguments which have been advanced have made that abundantly clear. I think the minister should take these arguments under consideration and make the necessary changes in the legislation so that payments to veterans from his department will not be affected by the income supplement.

These are the only two matters I wish to raise today Mr. Chairman. As I stated at the beginning, I realize that representations about them have already been made. I only hope repetition of these arguments will convince the minister that some changes ought to be made for the benefit of the veterans.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention in any way to express criticism of the pension commission or the war veterans allowance board because I recognize they have to operate within the terms of legislation and the regulations made under it. I have always received courtesy and co-operation from these commissions and I should like to express my appreciation. Any criticism I make is directed toward the government and the minister who alone have the responsibility for legislation, orders in council and regulations. I make no apologies in respect of some things I intend to say, even though they may be harsh.

In the constituency of Vancouver East live a great many veterans of the first and second world wars and a great many veterans of the Korean war, the firefighting corps and members of the merchant marine. Without fear of contradiction I suggest that the veterans and their organizations in Vancouver, and in the constituency of Vancouver East particularly, consider the present Minister of Veterans Affairs to be the most useless person who has ever held this position. This opinion is based on knowledge of the lack of action on the part of the minister and the knowledge of his procrastination for month after month and year after year. One can use only certain terminology in this house, so I will only suggest that the minister has been guilty on more than one occasion of terminological inexactitude.

An hon. Member: What does that mean?

[Mr. Patterson.]

Mr. Winch: Apparently my hon. friend does not understand that expression. Any dictionary will give the exact meaning of that phrase in parliamentary terminology.

It has been some time since the Woods commission was appointed to study veterans problems, legislation, administration and regulations. A committee was also set up to deal with the financial aspects of veterans pensions. It is not necessary to remind the house that a period of over a year has passed since the minister indicated that the report of the Woods commission would be forthcoming. Because the report had not been received the government, through the minister, introduced an interim increase of 15 per cent in veterans pensions. He pointed out that this was only an interim increase and that the situation would be remedied as soon as the Woods report was received and the committee's fiscal recommendations had been considered. Almost another year has elapsed and we are still awaiting the Woods commission report and the committee's fiscal recommendations.

The priority list of legislative items outlined by the Prime Minister for this year did not contain any mention of veterans pensions and contained not one word in respect of any change or increase on an interim basis between now and the receipt of the Woods report. It is obvious that as far as this government and the minister are concerned the veterans of this country have been forgotten. We all pay tribute to the senior citizens and pioneers of Canada but the government has apparently forgotten those who volunteered and risked their lives for this country. During this centennial year we should remember the hundreds of thousands who offered their time and their lives during wartime not only for this country but to protect the concept of democracy in the free world. These people have now been forgotten.

When criticizing the minister I have used the word "procrastination". I did not accuse him of prevaricating but presumably that means the same thing as terminological inexactitude. Even though the minister may not know what is going on he has misinformed the house and has been buffaloed by his colleagues. For this reason he is responsible for what has taken place. Time after time he has told the house that the Woods report would be received within a short period of time. He began telling us this over a year ago. Some 45 days ago the minister replied to one of my questions regarding this report. In his letter he said:

> Dear Mr. Winch,
> In reply to your question regarding the Wood committee report, I am pleased to say that the chairman of the committee has informed me that the report is now complete, and the English copy should be available to me within the next few days. The French translation will not be available for some time.

That letter was dated September 12, 45 days ago. At that time the minister told me that the report was completed and would be in his hands within a few days. It is my understanding that the report is not available at this time, at least so far as members of parliament are concerned.

Mr. Teillet: Perhaps I could interrupt the hon. member at this point, Mr. Chairman. I do not intend to take exception to all the inexactitudes the member has accused me of, but in respect of this subject I should like to state that the chairman of the committee informed me a few days ago that the report has been ready for some time and is now being translated. If the hon. member does not believe me I should like him to speak to the chairman to ascertain exactly what is the situation. Perhaps I should hasten to say that I do not place any blame on the chairman for the fact that the report has not yet been translated. Let me make that clear.

Mr. Winch: Perhaps for the benefit of the minister I should read this letter again. It states:

> In reply to your question regarding the Woods commission report, I am pleased to say that the chairman of the committee has informed me that the report is now complete, and the English copy should be available to me within the next few days. The French translation will not be available for some time.

That letter was dated September 12, 45 days ago. The chairman of this committee informed the minister that the report was completed and would be made available to the minister soon after September 12. Apparently the translation would take some time to complete but in any event, according to the minister's own letter, the English copy was available at that time. We understand now it will be some time before the minister receives the French translation of the report. This letter was in the minister's own wording and cannot be misundertood. We are now in the position when there is still no report, and therefore still no action.

Miss LaMarsh: Do you want it without a translation?

Mr. Winch: This lackadaisical approach, this procrastination by the minister is a betrayal of the veterans of this country. I think the members of this house are within their rights not only to ask but to demand that the minister make clear to his cabinet colleagues and those responsible in the department that if there is not going to be any change in the regulations or policy because they still have not received the report, we should be told at once. The veterans of this country and the dependants of those who were killed have the right to expect top priority to be given to the introduction of a bill to provide a further interim increase to our veterans. I refer not only to those on veterans pension but those on veterans allowance.

Action should be taken at once to correct this situation, and those on veterans allowance should not be discriminated against as they were last year, when in effect they received no increase whatsoever because of the means test, or to use the polite language of the government, the needs test. More than that, what has happened in this respect from the first world war through to the second world war is now almost a matter of history. There has been a denial of fair treatment by governments of this country to forces which have already been mentioned, namely those who served in the Korean war, the firefighting corps and the merchant marine service, which in many respects was just as much in a firing line as those on active service.

I have personal knowledge of the representations made on behalf of these people over the years. I know in particular of representations made to the Woods commission. I am grateful that I had the privilege of appearing before that commission. But I ask, Mr. Chairman, how much longer will action be delayed? The fact is that there was no mention, in the list of priorities announced by the Prime Minister, of legislation to improve the lot of our veterans. As far as I and the veterans of my riding of Vancouver East are concerned, this minister is just sitting and not acting. I think all of us have the right to tell the minister: Get off your inactive seat. Produce something, or admit that you are not capable of doing the job, that you are not interested in our veterans, and go back to the back benches where the veterans think you belong.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, in entering this debate on the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs may I say first of all that the personnel who serve in that department now and those who have served through the years since its inception have been more than cheerfully helpful in dealing with all the requests made by veterans and others concerned with veterans affairs. I know from my own experience that when I have had problems in this area I have taken them to the department and the personnel have been very helpful. If I have not had the full facts of a case, they have been able to acquaint me of the facts right away. When I have raised a marginal problem I have received helpful suggestions from the department. I know that what I am now saying has been said many times, but I think it bears repeating.

I think the department and the veterans affairs committee have been strictly non-partisan, but I noted today what I thought was a tenseness in the requests put before the minister. We have certainly not been partisan in the house today. Every party has called for action to improve the situation of our veterans. I have listened to every word that has been said in this chamber since the beginning of the debate, and every hon. member who has spoken has asked the minister to do something now. The last speaker put it very strongly. I am wondering whether it could be put more strongly. However, Mr. Chairman, I want to add my views to what has been said and say to the minister that he must use his power and energy to convince his cabinet colleagues that action must be taken, and quickly, in respect of the two matters that have been stressed, namely, the Woods commission report and the study of pension rates.

No one will do anything, let alone translate the report from English to French, if requests made by the minister are not backed up with punch and drive. The minister is in the happy position of being Minister of Veterans Affairs, but he is in the unhappy position of not providing the necessary punch and drive to produce the translation of the report and have completed the necessary research into the situation with regard to pension rates.

I rise in the debate to stress this one point, Mr. Chairman, because I have heard it said that the minister is just sitting, hoping he will not have to give answers to these questions because he will be moved to the Senate. Perhaps this is the reason why action has not been taken. But these important questions should have been answered and the minister should not stall from day to day.

One can go back over Hansard of the last three years to find evidence of stalling by the minister, but I will give a recent example. On September 25 last the minister said, as reported at page 2463 of Hansard:

> The Woods committee report will apparently be in my hands within a day or two, although not translated.

I emphasize the word "apparently." Why in the world does the minister not say: I want that report on my desk, and I am going to get it? I know that a commissioner cannot be ordered about, but the letter sent to the speaker who preceded me said that the minister had the report in his hands. On a subject so important as this why cannot the minister use that energy and drive that we all hope he will use some day to have the report produced? Why cannot he tell his cabinet colleagues that he is in a rough spot in this regard, has been stalling the veterans since 1963 when he was appointed Minister of Veterans Affairs, and something must be done to correct this situation?

I have drawn attention to that one passage in Hansard but I am quite sure that if the minister's secretary, his parliamentary secretary or anybody in his office cares to look back into the record they will find a great many answers which might give the minister the right to the title "the mañana minister". It has always been tomorrow; and if not tomorrow, in just a few days.

I said that we have a non-partisan committee. The only reason I use strong language like that is that I believe the minister has it within his power to act on these matters for the benefit of our veterans. I believe he has to get cracking and do something. All the speeches made today have stressed the fact that action has been requested not only by members of parliament but by those who appeared before the committee in the last three of four years, and from veterans organizations from all over the country. They are demanding that action be taken.

The veterans themselves are writing letters, but the government is stalling and stalling. It says to the veterans complacently, "Tomorrow is the day quite possibly, and if we can, we will try to get down to it and give you an answer". The minister must do better than that.

There are a number of other matters that I had hoped to touch upon today but this committee has been sitting long enough, so I will conclude by making one more request of the minister, namely that he please do something about the matter I raised.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief. First I must say that much has been said on all sides of the house on behalf of the veterans. I am sure the minister and his officials will appreciate many of the remarks, as they always have in the past. There is little more that can be said on this subject but there are two points I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. The first one is to ask him whether any action has been taken on behalf of the handful of veterans who did not have the 365 day qualification. There are very few of these chaps left and many of them are in dire circumstances. I know personally of one case, a chum of mine who was with me all through training. He actually broke down and cried, and appealed to the C.O. to be sent overseas; but he was not sent over. It was certainly not his fault that he did not go overseas. I hope the minister and the department will give some consideration to these cases.

The other matter is one in which I am sure the officials are very interested. Apparently it does not happen in all provinces and in all sections of the country. Under the present regulations a veteran is discouraged from showing initiative and endeavouring to keep himself busy, thereby earning a few extra dollars. In some cases veterans have a few chickens or a cow to supply eggs or milk for their families. Yet when the D.V.A. representative has called on them this has been calculated as income. Also the fact that a veteran owned a decent car to transport his family here and there was deplored by the representatives of the department. Surely this is not the wish of the Canadian people. In my opinion they want their veterans to be treated as well as veterans are treated in any other country. I hope the minister will consider these matters.

Mr. Teillet: I should like to ask the hon. member to supply me with specific information on these cases and I will look into them.

Mr. Webb: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, at this late stage in the debate it is difficult to find something new to say on this subject, as almost everything has been said. Let me just say to the minister that I hope he has benefited from the suggestions made on this side of the house. I also wish to assure him that the entire opposition will support him in resisting any attempt by the finance minister to slash, cut or delay the budget with respect to veterans. There has been some evidence of procrastination and delay in increasing pensions.

One matter which I should like to raise this afternoon is in connection with the possible reduction in the pensions which have already been granted. I think it is possible that this tendency will increase if such is the attitude of the minister. As our stock of public housing units increases, this situation is likely to occur more often. A case was brought to my attention of a person who was in receipt of a pension of $245 a month. This is what a family consisting of a man, a wife and his three children had to live on. I do not know what was the breakdown of this $245 but let it be said that the income of this family consisted only of that amount. This family applied to the Ontario Housing Corporation for low rental housing. Under the National Housing Act the C.M.H.C. provides the money for the construction of these houses, so this is done by another department of the government. This veteran was in fact granted by the Ontario Housing Corporation a rent-geared-to-income home, his rent being based on his pension of $245. Apparently when the department found out that this man had been granted a low rental house—in fact his rent was subsidized to some degree by the government—it saw fit to reduce to $226 his former pension of $245. So in fact one department of the government granted this person a benefit while the other department took it away.

Mr. Teillet: Would the hon. gentleman mind if I interrupt him for the sake of clarity? I think he must be speaking of war veterans allowance and not of a disability pension. I think that a distinction should be made between the two.

Mr. Germa: That is correct, Mr. Chairman, but I consider this to be splitting hairs. This is the man's only source of income and regardless of whether we call it a disability pension or a war veterans allowance it is hardly proper for one department to be trying to help this man and for another department to be taking it away.

Let us suppose that this man was working in industry and was making $245 a month. He would apply to the Ontario Housing Corporation and would receive the same treatment, namely his rent would be geared to his $245 income. The industrialist who employed him would certainly not reduce his wage for the simple reason that he had received low rental housing. I think these veterans should not be treated worse than the treatment accorded an ordinary worker in society. I think the object of rent-geared-to-income housing is to raise the standard of living of these people who are on low incomes. In this case the veteran was not treated in the same way as would anyone else in our society. If this condition persists, and as our stock of government housing grows we will hear more and more complaints about this. I hope the minister will give the matter his consideration.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I also should like to say a few words about the treatment of war veterans allowance recipients. I do not intend to repeat the arguments that have been advanced with respect to the guaranteed income supplement because they have been well put by a number of speakers today. I would remind the minister, however, that when we were debating the legislation respecting the guaranteed income supplement some of us pointed out the unfairness that has now developed. What is most annoying about this is not merely that it happens but the way in which it happens. The war veterans allowance recipient who is an old age pensioner received two documents earlier this year, one of which was an application form for the guaranteed income supplement. It came to him from a department of the government of Canada and it had on it in large red print the information that war pensions or war veterans allowances did not preclude him from receiving the guaranteed income supplement. He was encouraged by the wording of that form, he was encouraged by the wording in the booklet that came with it, to apply for the guaranteed income supplement. The minister has pointed out, quite rightly, that his department advised the same war veterans allowance recipient that he should check with his local war veterans allowance officer. However, that advice was in a much less attractive document. It was typewritten, mimeographed or something like that and it was in fine print. Many veterans did not see that, and I am sure they saw just the red type invitation to apply for the guaranteed income supplement.

The result is that what was given with one hand was taken away with the other. Since this case has been made so often, I need not take time to repeat it. It has been stated extremely well by two or three of my colleagues and I will let it rest at that for the moment. However, I should like to point out to the minister that unless he takes some kind of action the same thing is going to happen in connection with this big increase which is going to take place in the old age security pension in January. I am referring to the increase of $1.50. Perhaps I should have asked that quotation marks be put around the word "big". The people who are writing to me about it are using some pretty strong language about it.

As the War Veterans Allowance Act stands, a war veterans allowance recipient who is receiving the old age pension and who gets the extra $1.50 old age security increase will have $1.50 cut off his war veterans allowance. If he is one of those who has already applied for the guaranteed income supplement and is getting the pension and the supplement to the full amount of $105 per month, and if he has already gone through the indignity of suffering the loss of some of his war veterans allowance, he will get an increase of $2.10 in his old age pension; but $2.10 will come off his war veterans allowance unless the minister does something about it. We are talking about very small amounts, I know—of $1.50 or $2.10. The minister might well say to me, why take the time of the committee to talk about it. However, the fact is that another instance of this kind is going to be a bitter pill for many of these veterans to swallow.

I point out this difference between what will happen with respect to the $1.50 or the $2.10 in respect of the guaranteed income supplement. In the case of the guaranteed income supplement, the veteran who was receiving the old age pension had to apply for the supplement. He could be told, "You did not read all the words, you did not discover in advance what would happen". But he had to apply for it. In the case of the $1.50 or the $2.10, there is no application to be made; it is automatic. It will be there in his January cheque, and as I say, unless the minister does something about it, it will come off his allowance. I am sure, from the way in which the minister has been answering me with friendly facial expressions while I have been talking, that he is aware of how difficult this will be and how unfair it will be. I hope this means he is going to do something about it. If $1.50 is worth giving, and many people are questioning that, it seems to me it is worth giving without taking it away, especially from our war veterans allowance recipients.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister not going to reply?

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, a great many questions have been put to the minister. I think he could answer some of them very easily. It seems to me that at this stage the first item should not carry until we have received some answers to the questions which have been asked.

Mr. Teillet: It had not been my intention, Mr. Chairman, to make any lengthy statement. There are a number of things I could say. For instance I could certainly refer to the latter part of the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre when he dealt with the commemoration of events. This is something I think is well worth covering, but it would take considerable time. I believe the hon. member made the point quite well and I find nothing to disagree with in what he said. Initial conversations have been held to deal with the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the armistice in November next year. Within a few weeks we will be in a position to begin serious talks with the veterans of Canada as to how we will proceed with this event. It is something the department is actively considering now.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the minister a question? Will he consult immediately with the Minister of National Defence to make certain that there is proper representation by the Canadian defence forces at any such ceremony?

Mr. Teillet: On that particular question, Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that we have had excellent co-operation from the Department of National Defence. I believe he knows these matters are discussed between the Department of National Defence, our department and the Royal Canadian Legion. There was some disappointment about the military representation at Passchendaele. All of us shared that disappointment, but it was one of those things that had to occur. I can assure him that there will be adequate representation, just as there was at Vimy. I say this without consulting my colleague because I know in advance that co-operation will be forthcoming.

Mr. Churchill: Let us hear from the Minister of National Defence right now.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I am sorry, but I did not hear the whole of the question. Apparently there was a complaint that there was not adequate representation at Passchendaele, is that it?

Mr. Churchill: There was an R.C.A.F. airplane which dropped poppies, but that was not adequate. There was no guard of honour.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I am sure the hon. member will agree with me when I say that at many of the events this year the armed forces overseas did have proper representation. In the case of Passchendaele, however, it happened htat the date was right in the middle of the time when manoeuvres were held in Germany. It was possible to supply only one airplane to transport the veterans and one airplane to drop the poppies. This was unfortunate, but the manoeuvres were taking place.

Mr. Churchill: Does the minister recognize the fact that Canada's prestige abroad is vitally important in these international or commonwealth events, and we should be properly represented? The battle of Passchendaele was really a Canadian battle and culminated in the third battle of Ypres. There were a few people from Canada at the commemoration of Passchendaele, but no guard of honour. With a brigade over in Europe, sufficient men could have been seconded for that duty. I hope the minister will make sure that in future there are no excuses offered. Even if exercises are going on, there are always spare men for these duties.

Mr. Teillet: Let me make two things clear. First, one of the reasons I had not intended to make a statement at the moment is the fact that pension rates are under consideration. I should like to remind hon. members of the statement by the Minister of Finance the other day. He carefully mentioned the fact that in considering the economies required by the government of Canada, the need to adjust veterans benefits from time to time would be excluded from those considerations. I am not in a position today to say anything more definite than that I can assure the committee this matter is under consideration.

One other question I should like to comment upon is hospitals. I believe the hon. member for York-Sunbury mentioned the fact that a number of hospitals had been transferred to other jurisdictions. The facts of the case are that the only two where a change has been made are through our arrangements with the governments of Alberta and the University of Alberta, and the province of Ontario and the University of Toronto. There is under consideration at the moment the hospitals at Ste. Foy in Quebec, the hospitals at Halifax and the hospital at Lancaster, near Saint John. We have not yet reached the point where arrangements can be finalized, though we are approaching that stage.

In all these cases I made a special trip with my officials in order to ensure that the local veterans organizations, including the provincial command of the Legion, were consulted and made aware of the discussions that were going on.

A number of other matters were mentioned, Mr. Chairman. The question of 365 days service overseas has been considered but we have decided against making any change. However, these questions come back to us for reconsideration. They come up periodically. We also meet at least once a year the major veterans organizations in Canada who make representations to the government. They sometimes make representations to me, and of necessity these questions are continually under consideration.

I regret very much the circumstances surrounding the Woods committee report. Again I wish to emphasize that I do not hold the chairman of the committee, a man we all respect very highly, responsible for the delay. He took a great deal more time than we anticipated, but he took this time in order to complete what I hope will be a pretty full report, and therefore I do not begrudge him the time. I am very sorry about the delay in the translation of the report. Until I have the translation, the circumstances prevent my tabling the report or considering it. The chairman, and quite rightly I believe, does not want to have to report to me twice, once in English and once in French.

Mr. Winch: May I just ask the minister a question, in view of what he has just said. In the letter the minister sent me 45 days ago he stated that the chairman had told him the report was completed. The minister told me he would be receiving the report in English in a few days but that the French version would be delayed. Was there a change in mind, and why could the minister not receive it in English, as he told me he would in his letter of 45 days ago? Why does the minister still have to wait for the French version when he could have had it in English 45 days ago?

[Mr. Teillet.]

Mr. Teillet: For the sake of fairness to all concerned, I am sure that if I were to communicate with the chairman tomorrow and ask him to deliver the report to me in English only, he would do so. But then he would hardly be in a position to take any responsibility for delivering the report to me in both languages. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, in view of the circumstances existing in this country as well as in this house, I have taken the view that I must accept the report in both languages. That is the position in which I find myself. I regret if I misled the hon. member. Perhaps I did use the wrong words when I referred to the report, but in truth the chairman could have delivered the report to me. He could do so today if I requested it from him. I underline this because I do not want to hold him responsible for the delay. The delay is in the translation, over which he has no control.

Mr. Winch: The minister understands the position in connection with the filing of a report in two languages. But this means there has been a delay of 45 days in the minister giving consideration to the recommendations, and this to the detriment of the veterans of this country.

Mr. Teillet: I admit that it has caused delay, Mr. Chairman, and unfortunately there will be more delay. The translation is still some weeks away from being completed. I am appreciative of the expressions of confidence of hon. gentlemen in the officials of my department and of their remarks about the co-operation they have received, and I want to assure the committee that in so far as they can be of help in speeding this translation, they will do so. However, it is not easy to hurry the translation of a report of this magnitude. All hon. members have knowledge of the size of the report; it is a very considerable document and requires great care in translation.

I do not want to labour the point but there have been examples, not only in this house but across the country, of people saying one thing in one language and their remarks being misinterpreted when reproduced in another language. We must allow the necessary time to ensure that a proper job is done in translating this report.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that there is anything more I should specifically take up at this time. I hope we will have an opportunity before too long to meet in the standing committee, which would supply an opportunity to take up these questions again. I want to express my gratitude to the members of the house who took time this summer to assist the department and the country in the commemoration of those events of long ago in Europe. The impression left there was, I think, one well worth while for Canada, and it was one we should continue to leave.

Unless there are any further questions, Mr. Chairman, I think we should—

Mr. Patterson: I should like to ask the minister whether he does not think that the veterans are justified in taking the position that the point of undue delay has been passed long ago; that the department and the minister should take action to implement a promise that was made with regard to these increases? How long is "undue delay"?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated a moment ago, I am not in a position to answer that question at this particular moment. I am trying to be as frank as I can with the house. I am not indicating that there has been any change in the undertaking that was given. I did say that if the report were unduly delayed—and here I am dealing specifically with the study made of pension rates—a pension adjustment would be considered. This is now being considered, and that is as much as I can say at the moment.

Mr. Pugh: In view of what the minister has just said about the consideration of this report, Mr. Chairman, may I draw to his attention his remarks which are reported in Hansard for September 25 at page 2463, where he says:

> The Woods committee report will apparently be in my hands within a day or two, although not translated. It will be some weeks before the translation is completed.

Then I draw attention to these important words:

> However, I hope to make arrangements with the chairman of the committee to enable the department and the Canadian Pension Commission to begin considering the report without waiting for its translation.

The only point I make to the minister now is this: Obviously the report has not been given the Canadian Pension Commission or to the department for perusal. Would it not be reasonable to start things rolling and to hand over the report in English? Most of us are bilingual and understand English. Would it not be a good idea to bring forward the English report while it is being translated into French? I understand why the minister would want for many reasons, political and otherwise, to have the French translation available to table at the same time and to supply the pension commission with both versions at the same time.

Surely this is not good enough. Is the minister to read the report in English and then in French, and say, "This meaning is not quite correct" or "That nuance has not been translated correctly"? Surely to goodness the report could be made to the minister in English and at his discretion the matter could be given further consideration, or sent to the Canadian Pension Commission. The government ought to start formulating policy and say that it will do this or that. At the present rate the matter will take months.

The minister is quite conversant in English and if he received the report in English he could understand it. Why could he not therefore start on the matter at the present time? That is my question.

Mr. Herridge: Before the minister replies I wish to say a word or two. The tabling of reports in the house in both languages is accepted practice and custom, and should continue. I agree with that. Something though should be done to speed up translations. I am informed by my colleague that the report of the committee on the Canada Pension Plan was expected to take six weeks in translation. The government undertook to put a task force on the matter, as it were, and the report was translated into French in less than a week. Could something like that not be done in this instance, so that the report can be laid before the house in English and in French as soon as possible?

Mr. Winch: I do not agree with all that my seatmate has to say. May I ask a question also? Where possible, I think that reports should be filed in the house in both languages. But my point is this: When the report has been ready for 45 days, as the minister says, why in the name of heaven, on an important issue like this, must we wait for a period of weeks before the translation is made available? Cannot the minister study a copy of the report, or say that he is working on it, and then, when the translation becomes available, table it? Why must there be delays when the report is ready?

May I ask another question? The minister mentioned the report of the Wood commission. Would he kindly advise the committee what has happened to the report of the other committee that has been looking into pension rates? When does he expect to receive that report?

Mr. Teillet: I thought I had made it reasonably clear a moment ago that a decision has been taken and that I would not accept the report until it was completed in both languages. As I say, that decision was taken.

Mr. Winch: Why?

Mr. Teillet: I do not want to make a long speech to explain that. We went into the matter seriously and that was the conclusion, and I must stand or fall on that decision.

Mr. Winch: That is the best argument I know against bilingualism: holding up the people's business.

Mr. Teillet: As to the hon. member's other question with respect to the other report, I am not in a position to answer that. I hope it will not be too long before we have that report, but I cannot say when it will be ready.

Mr. Knowles: What about the question of the hon. member for Kootenay West. Could we not have a crash force to work on the translation?

Mr. Teillet: Though I am satisfied that the officials of the department are doing everything possible, I shall make a personal effort and ask them to hurry up the work of the translation.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister might translate it, himself.

Mr. Teillet: That would take a long time.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The minister mentioned the various meetings that he has had with hospital personnel in different areas regarding the takeover of the D.V.A. hospitals. In particular I am thinking of the hospital in Lancaster, New Brunswick. Will the minister assure the committee that the government will stand behind his guarantees to veterans, so that those who are in military hospitals that become general hospitals will receive the same standard of care they previously enjoyed. Unless we can have that assurance, veterans will be placed in an inferior position with respect to hospital treatment, where such takeovers occur.

Mr. Teillet: Answering that question, I have repeatedly given assurances that the principles declared two or three years ago would be upheld. That is, the conditions under which we would transfer veterans from hospitals have not changed. When I have met with veterans organizations I have underlined these conditions. I can assure the hon. member that the principles laid down three years ago have not changed. The steps that have been taken are to improve the treatment of veterans. We do not wish to sacrifice any of the quality of that treatment. What we are doing is in an effort to improve matters.

Item agreed to.

Welfare services, allowances and other benefits—

5. Administration, including the expenses of the War Veterans Allowance Board, $6,452,400.

Mr. Knowles: Before vote 5 carries would the minister comment on the remarks I made about the $1.50 increase in the old age security pension. As the minister may recall, I asked him a question about this on orders of the day on October 18. On that occasion the minister said that an announcement would be made at the appropriate time. Perchance, is today the appropriate time?

Mr. Teillet: I regret to say that it is not. I assure the hon. member that the question is much in my mind and is being considered.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister try to find some way so that those receiving war veterans allowances will not lose the $1.50 that they will get as an increase in their old age pension?

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

10. War veterans allowances, civilian war allowances and assistance in accordance with the provisions of the assistance fund regulations, $115,721,000.

15. Other benefits, including education assistance, hospital insurance premiums or payments in lieu thereof re recipients of war veterans allowance and civilian war allowance, and repayments under subsection (3) of section 12 of the Veterans' Rehabilitation Act in such amounts as the Minister of Veterans Affairs determines, not exceeding the whole of amounts equivalent to the compensating adjustments or payments made under that act, where the persons who made the compensating adjustments or payments received no benefits under the Veterans' Land Act, or where, having had financial assistance under the Veterans' Land Act, are deemed by the minister on termination of their Veterans' Land Act contracts or agreements to have derived thereunder either no benefits or benefits that are less than the amounts of the compensating adjustments or payments, and grants as detailed in the estimates, $2,710,200.

Welfare services, allowances and other benefits—

17a. To provide that, effective the 1st day of July, 1967, the definition of "civilian" for the purposes of part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act be read and construed as though for paragraph (g) of subsection (1) of section 75 of the said act there were substituted the following:

(g) a person who served in the United Kingdom with the Newfoundland overseas forestry unit during World War II

(i) for a period of more than six months, or

(ii) for any period, if the service was terminated on medical grounds, $1.

Pensions—

20. Administration, $3,212,000.

25. Pensions for disability and death, including pensions granted under the authority of the civilian government employees (war) compensation order, P.C. 45/8848 of November 22, 1944, which shall be subject to the Pension Act; Newfoundland special awards; burial grants; and gallantry awards (world war II and special force), $198,979,000.

The Chairman: Shall item 30 carry?

Treatment services—

30. Operation and maintenance including authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year for hospital and related services, $55,703,900.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, members of parliament, no doubt including the minister, recently got a letter from a certain group. They are the corps of commissionaires of Victoria, British Columbia. These men are dissatisfied with the circumstances under which they operate.

It has been suggested that a board should be appointed to inquire into their grievances. I ask the minister, will he consider an investigation into their grievances, or does he suggest that these men make representations before the standing committee on veterans affairs, when it meets next.

Mr. Teillet: This matter came up some little while ago. At the time I believe that information and requests were forwarded to the national president of the Canadian corps of commissionaires. I hope that the hon. member understands that I have absolutely no authority in this matter and that the department has no jurisdiction. This is an entirely private group. We ought to consider whether we have authority, which I doubt very much, before any action can be taken. Another question to be considered is what manner of representation one might make to the corps of commissionaires in order to bring this matter to a conclusion. I am afraid I cannot answer these questions; the entire matter is delicate. I cannot intrude where I have no business—except, of course, that as veterans these men are of interest to me.

Mr. Herridge: I wanted to ask the minister what he is trying to do. I realize that the situation here is delicate and that is why I wondered if the standing committee on veterans affairs could invite this group to present its grievances, as the committee is directly concerned with the welfare of all veterans.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Teillet: I think this would be a matter for the committee itself to consider.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall item 30 carry?

Mr. Winch: There is one question I wanted to ask and I am sorry if I did not raise it at the proper point. Am I correct that the minister has administrative control of veterans hospitals?

Mr. Teillet: I am not sure of the import of the question.

Mr. Winch: They come under your administration?

Mr. Teillet: Yes.

Mr. Winch: One of the finest hospitals that we have for veterans, the Shaughnessy hospital, is in Vancouver. I have received many letters concerning the orderlies there. They are highly trained and if they leave and go to private or general hospitals they are accepted with open arms. Could the minister use his influence to try to bring the wage standards for orderlies in veterans hospitals up to the level in general and private hospitals? These orderlies in Shaughnessy do far more work than orderlies in general hospitals and their experience is greater, yet they receive much less in monetary return.

Mr. Teillet: I agree with the hon. member about the effectiveness of the work of the orderlies in Shaughnessy hospital, but here we are dealing with a local situation. It is again the old question of regional adjustments, regional rates of pay. Until now I have found no answer, and of course it is the Civil Service Commission which must solve that problem.

Mr. Winch: That is why you are losing the orderlies.

Mr. Teillet: I know.

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

35. Hospital construction, improvements, equipment and acquisition of land, $5,947,000.

38. Treatment and related allowances, $2,610,000.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Item 40 is next.

Soldier settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

40. Administration of Veterans' Land Act; soldier settlement and British family settlement; upkeep of property, Veterans' Land Act, including engineering and other investigational planning expenses that do not add tangible value to real property, taxes, insurance and maintenance of public utilities; and to authorize, subject to the approval of the governor in council, necessary remedial work on properties constructed under individual firm price contracts and sold under the Veterans' Land Act and to correct defects for which neither the veteran nor the contractor can be held financially responsible, and for such other work on other properties as may be required to protect the interest of the director therein, $5,338,600.

Mr. Herridge: I would just like to point out that there are still a few veterans around the Arrow lakes who have not settled with the B. C. Hydro and Power Authority, some of them coming under the Veterans Land Act administration. I suggest that the director of the Veterans Land Act and his officials do all they can to make certain that these people receive justice in their dealings with the B. C. Hydro and Power Authority. In one case they actually had their land valued by a former employee of the Department of Veterans Affairs, whose job was assessing land values, and there was quite a discrepancy between what he considered they should receive and what the authority thought it should pay for their land. I urge that a final effort be made in this respect. Some quite reasonable settlements have been made as a result of the efforts of the department, and I ask the minister to do all he can for these people.

Mr. Teillet: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: There is one problem to which I require an answer. If a veteran of the second world war has never taken advantage of the Soldier Settlement Act and the Veterans Land Act is he still eligible to make application and receive the benefits?

Mr. Teillet: I would like to take notice of this question so that when I communicate with the hon. member I can be sure that he will receive a correct answer.

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

45. Grants to veterans settled on provincial lands in accordance with agreements with provincial governments under section 38 of the Veterans' Land Act, grants to veterans settled on dominion lands in accordance with an agreement with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development under section 38 of the Veterans' Land Act and grants to Indian veterans settled on Indian reserve lands under section 39 of the Veterans' Land Act, $130,000.

Loans, investments and advances—

Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

L115. To increase to $530,000,000 the amount that may be charged at any one time to the Veterans' Land Act fund established by section 5A of the Veterans' Land Act, for the purposes of parts I, II and III of that Act except sections 38, 39 and 56 thereof—additional amount required, $150,000,000.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, it only remains for me to express my gratitude to hon. members for their co-operation and to say I know that whatever is said by them is said with a feeling of interest, and it is accepted in that spirit.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The committee of supply will now consider the estimates of the Department of Industry for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 will be found at page 238 of the blue book, and the details thereof are listed at page 239. Shall vote No. 1 carry?

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $10,568,300.

Mr. Winch: In view of the importance of this department is the minister going to make any additional statement on the estimates?

Mr. Churchill: Let him explain the increase of $95 million.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, these estimates were considered at considerable length by the standing committee at various periods earlier in the year. If it is the wish of the committee I would be prepared to make a further statement, a summary statement, rather than answer questions. It would be my hope that we might conclude these estimates today as part of the program for dealing with estimates adopted by the house. I am in the hands of hon. members as to whether they wish a statement from me or whether they would prefer to ask questions.

Mr. Churchill: How long is your statement?

Mr. Drury: The statement will take six minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Churchill: Then let us have it.

Mr. Winch: I think the department is worth six minutes.

Mr. Churchill: Explain the $95 million increase.

Mr. Drury: During the committee meetings to which I referred a moment ago, Mr.

Chairman, a number of departmental programs were discussed. Since it seems to be the wish of hon. members I might mention certain of those activities in order to give the committee an indication of the broad spectrum of programs in which the department is engaged.

In the research and development field my department has a number of programs, including the program for the advancement of industrial technology under which the development of commercial products is assisted, the defence export development program for the development of products of a military nature, the new Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, and the industrial research institute program which has been established to foster greater co-operation between the business community and the universities in carrying out research and development.

Hon. members, I am sure, are most familiar with the automative program, the adjustment assistance program, the area development program, the industry modernization for defence exports program, the shipbuilding program, the design program and our program to improve the productivity of the building equipment, accessories and materials manufacturing industry.

I do not propose at this time to make a lengthy statement on these programs, except to say that the results to date are most gratifying. If hon. members wish to have a copy of the statement I made last June in committee, in which each of these activities is dealt with at some length, I would be most happy to provide it to them. However, I thought it might be more useful if I made a brief statement on the over-all operations of the department in order to provide as much time as possible for any questions hon. members may have.

As an economic department of government with particular responsibility for promoting the establishment and growth of manufacturing and processing industries in Canada on an efficient and competitive basis, the Department of Industry has as its principal mission the enhancement of the productivity performance of Canada's industrial economy.

In our form of economic system the role of government in the industrial development field has traditionally been limited to the application of broad economic policies of a commercial, fiscal or monetary nature. More recently Canada has recognized the need for industry and government to work more closely together in focussing on specific economic and technological problems, and in formulating mutually acceptable solutions which are beneficial to the economy as a whole.

With the establishment of the Department of Industry the government has created an instrument which can contribute directly to the attainment of this objective. With its mandate from parliament to acquire a detailed knowledge of manufacturing industries in Canada, and to develop and carry out programs to promote the establishment, growth, efficiency and improvement of these industries, my department has recruited and developed a group of professionals to formulate and implement imaginative programs to bring about constructive changes in Canadian industrial thinking and practice.

Our initial years of operation were characterized by recruitment of staff, policy and program formulation and the implementation and initial operation of a few important programs. The estimates for the fiscal year 1967-68 reflect the maturing of several programs and their growing utilization by the Canadian industrial community. In addition, the estimates reflect the consolidation within the Department of Industry of existing government industrial development programs. Of the total increase in our estimates for the fiscal year 1967-68 over fiscal year 1966-67 amounting to $95.8 million, almost $70 million is accounted for by transferred programs, while $27 million covers the requirement for increases in existing programs.

These amounts of money, while large, should not be regarded merely as expenditures. Rather, they should be looked upon as investments, of both time and money, in upgrading the productivity and competitive position of our industries. It is from this source, it should be remembered, that will come the improvements in wages and salaries, profits and tax revenues for all levels of government required to pay for all those things in the private and public sectors which Canadians have come to expect from our society.

In examining the estimates of the Department of Industry, it may be helpful for this committee to see them in the context of the department's mission and the basic approach it has developed for carrying it out. My approach and the approach of my departmental managers is to test each and every proposal which comes before us from outside or from within the department with one fundamental question: Is it likely to contribute to improved performance for Canadian industry with a high benefit cost yield?

When it comes to specific actions, of course there is no magic formula, no royal road to improved industrial performance. We must work on many fronts—some modest and others rather ambitious. Some will be quick to take effect—others will be much more gradual in their impact. Our work embraces such diverse measures as working with industry in the rationalization and restructuring of an entire industry, the gathering and dissemination of valuable industrial information, the stimulation of research and development, the improvement of industrial design, the fuller utilization of human and natural resources in underemployed regions, the provision of adjustment assistance of both a financial and technical nature, missions abroad to learn from others, the formulation of more and better industrial standards, informed inputs in the formulation of economic policies generally to ensure that the effects on our industrial performance is fully recognized—and in many other areas.

The estimates before you are intended to finance activities in each of these varied fields. These represent only the beginning of the department's work. I intend that each year we will come forward with new programs—some at least of which will be of major significance. The test that I will apply—and I hope that you will accept it as the right test—is the degree to which they contribute to the expansion of efficient production and the improved productivity performance of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, the minister took some gratification from the success of his department. At the beginning he even said he was gratified, but I should like to take this opportunity to point out that in one area of this responsibility there is nothing he should be happy about. I refer to the non-designation of Saint John under the industrial incentives program. I might also mention that, in addition to Saint John, Fredericton, Dartmouth and Halifax have not been designated. These are the major cities in the maritimes and they have been denied the benefits of this program since 1963.

The non-designation of the city of Saint John has had a drastic effect on the industrial aspects of that community. I could list, and am prepared to do so, eight industries which have left that area as a result of non-designation and the unsatisfactory conditions there. I will not take the time this afternoon to outline the history of this situation, but I should like to point out that various delegations have come to Ottawa from those cities and made representations in an appropriate manner, but to no avail. Let me hasten to add that the minister has been straightforward and co-operative, but he does not seem to appreciate this problem.

Some encouragement was given in respect of alternative assistance under the Atlantic Development Board, but nothing has been forthcoming except in respect of one or two industrial parks. In nearly every industrial park development the provinces have experienced a failure. I am prepared to ask the minister certain questions, and in this way conform with his request. I hope he will be in a position to answer them because the people in these four cities I have mentioned must have answers very soon.

Will the minister indicate whether federal assistance has been a deciding factor in the location of new industries in the Atlantic provinces, or of assistance in the relocation of industries there? I should like to know whether federal assistance has had any effect in the relocation of an industry in the maritimes. I should also like to know how many industrial applications for assistance have been rejected because of the inability to locate in growth centres. Will the minister also indicate his stand or position in respect of these growth centres? Does the minister believe it is desirable to locate these growth centres in the Saint John and Halifax area of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia? Will the minister indicate why Saint John has not been designated and whether there is any hope in this regard? Can this area be brought under the provisions of section 9 (e) of the regulations, and is there any hope for a change in this legislation to alleviate the disastrous effects of this situation in the communities I have mentioned?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock it is my duty to rise, report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, perhaps at this time we could have the government's forecast of the business to be considered next week.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we hope to continue with the estimates of the Department of Industry on Monday for at least a couple of hours. We then intend to move to a consideration of the estimates of the Department of Public Works. As we indicated last night, we will consider the estimates of the Treasury Board on Tuesday. There is some doubt as to whether we will consider estimates on Wednesday because of the desirability of considering the estimates during the longer days. At any rate, the program will be the following: completion of the estimates, the Broadcasting Act and, hopefully, capital punishment.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Has it not been agreed that estimates will be taken on Thursday?

Mr. MacEachen: It has not been agreed, but that is likely what will take place. In the meantime I am working out a program for Wednesday, which will likely be legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING FINE PRINT CLAUSES IN POLICIES AND AGREEMENTS

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-11, to amend the Criminal Code (fine print clauses).

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to introduce Bill No. C-11, which is intended to be an act to amend the Criminal Code (fine print clauses), I want to say that, at least in my opinion, what it proposes is comparable to other consumer type legislation which we have had before us recently, or has come into being in Canada in recent months. I refer to the fact that we have seen the banks of Canada instructed to print in a very plain and clear fashion the interest rate on documents connected with borrowings. Second, we have seen fit to encourage the setting up of a new department of government to be called the department of corporate and consumer affairs. However weak it may seem to some of us, at least the aim of that department is to protect the buyer from the tricks of the marketplace. Third, I think we might also claim as consumer type legislation that dealt with in the announcement made recently respecting a code of motor vehicle safety standards, which will certainly add to the protection of the consumer in that field.

The bill that I put forward this evening is similar in its intent and could be considered auxiliary to the measures I have mentioned. The explanatory notes of the bill say:

> The object of this bill is to eliminate the practice whereby insurance companies, commercial corporations and individuals embody in insurance policies, contracts or deeds, fine print clauses excluding their liability under certain circumstances.
> It is desirable that payment exclusions or exclusion of responsibility be listed plain and clear in the body of insurance policies, contracts and deeds.

In line with that general proposition, the bill—which is a very brief one—sets out that if it were adopted the Criminal Code would be amended by inserting immediately after section 328 the following section:

> (1) Everyone who, with intent to mislead, prints or causes to print in small typographical character in the body of an insurance policy, contract, deed or other document issued by him or under his authority, clauses concerning payment exclusions or exclusion of responsibility is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to a term of imprisonment not exceeding three months or to both fine and imprisonment.

I believe that if legislation of this type were adopted—not necessarily this particular bill—it would ease the troubles and exasperations of a great many Canadian consumers, people who should read but perhaps find difficulty in reading the fine print which has been plaguing so many ordinary buyers of goods and services. There has been so much difficulty in this respect that the term "fine print" has become a byword used in summing up the difficulties under which the consumer labours.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I have it on the word of a lawyer who is experienced in agreements connected with fire insurance policies that the fine print of these policies is very carefully read word by word in the offices concerned. This is done to make sure that any changes, which he says appear in the policy fine print without, necessarily, the insured being told about them, are all noted.

The same lawyer states that it is hardly an exaggeration to say that in some fire insurance policies the fine print is so very fine, and the qualifications so very great, that whereas a policyholder has thought himself protected against the loss of his house or property through fire, he has found he only has this protection if the fire was started at, say, 5 p.m. on a Sunday evening, with a wind velocity of four miles an hour, a temperature of 55 degrees above zero, and was caused by an oil-soaked rag having been ignited as the result of two or more mice chewing on the remains of a candle having a circumference of not less than 3⅜ of an inch.

However, much that may be an exaggeration, I believe that a great many people in our country, as in the United States where similar legislation is being approved or has been approved, suffer from the difficulty caused by fine print being included in insurance policies and contracts. In concluding my brief remarks in introducing this measure, Mr. Speaker, I express the hope that, rather than being talked out, it will be referred to the new department we are setting up so hopefully, the department of corporate and consumer affairs.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member resumes his seat I wonder whether he would allow a question.

Mr. Mather: Yes, sir.

Mr. Basford: I am in sympathy with the spirit of the bill which, as the hon. member explained, is in line with the various pieces of consumer legislation and the "truth in lending" type of legislation which we are considering. I am wondering what would be the effect of this bill if a contract, deed or insurance policy was all written in the same size of type. Would not that be an easy way around this provision? Those wanting to mislead people could easily avoid the penalties contemplated in this measure by simply printing the whole contract in one size of type.

Mr. Mather: I think not. I think that if the type were large enough it would ease the situation. However, if there would be any difficulty of the type envisaged by the hon. member, perhaps the bill could be considered by the appropriate committee or department, when it could be dealt with in detail together with similar proposals. After a consideration in committee we could perhaps find the answer to this difficulty.

[Mr. Mather.]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Mather: Yes.

Mr. Basford: As I have said, I agree with the spirit of the bill but I want to get the hon. member's views on this. Would he not think that a better approach would be that adopted by the Liberal party in British Columbia and put into the form of legislation many years ago, namely that exclusion clauses be printed in large, red type as opposed to black type, thereby making them stand out? By law, exclusion clauses must be in red type in that province. This measure was passed by the Liberal government of British Columbia many years ago.

Mr. Mather: I know that the provinces already have some legislation in this regard. It may be that the hon. member's suggestion with regard to the sort of type used is a good one. Again I say that I do not think my bill is the be-all and end-all on the subject. I would be very happy to have all these questions referred to the appropriate committee or the department.

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-11, an act to amend the Criminal Code (fine print clauses), as proposed and expounded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather).

I believe at first I should compliment the hon. member on the objectives he proposes to attain in his bill. The purpose of the hon. member in proposing his bill is to eliminate the practice under which insurance companies use fine print clauses to exclude their own liability. I cannot but agree with the explanatory notes, that it is desirable that payment exclusions or exclusion of responsibility be listed plainly and clearly in the body of insurance policies. However, Mr. Speaker, even if I do agree with the object of the bill and the good intentions of the hon. member, I doubt very much whether the results he seeks would be achieved by his bill.

It should be noted that the amendment proposed rests on the intent to mislead. As a matter of fact the first part of the amendment reads as follows: "Everyone who, with intent to mislead, prints...". There are already provisions in the Criminal Code relating to fraud, and these provisions can be used to cover the circumstances contemplated by this amendment, since the intention to mislead is an essential element of both offences.

It should also be pointed out that some of the provincial statutes already cover the area covered by the proposed amendment. For example, section 134, paragraph 2, of the insurance act 1964, revised statutes of Manitoba, chapter 126, provides that when there are exclusion clauses like the one referred to in the proposed amendment, there must be stamped in red ink upon the policy the following words? "This policy contains a limitation of liability clause or clauses".

The second point I wish to raise at this time with regard to the proposed amendment is the reference to printing as being an essential element of the offence. The first portion of the proposed amendment reads as follows: "Everyone who, with intent to mislead, prints or causes to print". In my opinion in order to cover the evil and protect the public it should not be necessary that the offender print or cause to print the document in question; it should be sufficient if he simply issues the document. It would appear to be easier to prove that an insurance company has issued a document than to show that it has printed it.

The third point which would be underlined is that the proposed offence is stated to be an indictable offence. However, the punishment suggested is less than in the case of summary conviction offences as found in section 694 of the Criminal Code of Canada. If it is to fall under the Criminal Code of Canada, I submit it should be a case of summary conviction and not an indictable offence.

However, I personally feel this matter should not be dealt with under the Criminal Code, because there is already a proper and adequate civil remedy. Any person who is misled by fine print in an insurance policy or a contract has a cause for civil action and can receive compensation by way of damages. If a person is not misled by fine print, there would appear to be little point in endeavouring to create a criminal offence.

In any event, it is the provincial legislatures that have jurisdiction over such matters as insurance policies, contracts, deeds, and the like. It is therefore the provincial legislatures that should provide appropriate civil remedies where any person is misled as a result of fine print in a contract. Indeed, it might well be said that legislation of the kind contained in the proposed amendment in Bill C-11 will be simply an attempt to control through the Criminal Code a subject which normally falls under provincial jurisdiction.

Perhaps it is not a good policy to attempt to do indirectly what should not be done directly. However, I sympathize with my hon. friend and I agree with him that efforts should be made to curb any attempt to trick the public into buying insurance policies which otherwise they would not buy. The problem was much more acute some 20 years ago. May I refer to an item which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on May 17, 1945, as quoted in a book entitled "Life Insurance Without Exploitation", written by Edwin C. Guillet. I quote from page 69:

> "People," says the eminent columnist J. V. McAree, "have to be ordered and frightened at great cost into buying life insurance and saving their money and avoiding body odour and bad breath ... This is something new in history ... an advertising blitz the like of which no other generation has seen:...mass appeals,...campaigns and drives and massed propaganda ...
> But we think that the total amount of propaganda information tends to debase those who are subjected to this never-ending bombardment ... No doubt we shall outlive it and survive, but the process will be painful and perhaps fraught with danger."

We did survive the insurance propaganda bombardment through better information to an enlightened public and also through efforts of the insurance companies to police themselves. For many years now the Canadian Federation of Insurance Agents and Brokers Association has been pressing hard for stricter controls. May I quote a few paragraphs from an article which appeared in the Financial Post on September 17, 1966, carrying the heading "No More Fine Print, Maybe No Policies".

> Insurance buyers soon may not have to complain about all that fine print in their car insurance policies. Reason: They may not have policies.
> Massive revisions in the uniform insurance act (applying in all provinces except Quebec) make it necessary to redraft the auto insurance policy. Insurance men will be thrashing over a new policy wording at next week's meeting of the superintendents of insurance in Victoria.

● (5:20 p.m.)

> Some experts say the revisions in the act will make the new policy so long and complex (even longer and more complex than it is now) that it would only confuse and irritate insurance buyers.
> Most people look at the front of the policy to see that the amounts of insurance are correct and then put it away in a drawer. They never actually read the terms and conditions, an insurance man says.
> Instead of giving the insurance buyer a complex legal contract that he never reads and would find hard to understand if he did, some insurance people advocate a simple certificate showing the amounts of insurance in force, and a brochure explaining the coverage in simple terms.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, this would be a solution worthy of consideration. In any event, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) should be commended for bringing the problem to the attention of the house and of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-P. Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to congratulate the member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) for introducing Bill No. C-11. He referred, I think, to a point which is most important, in my opinion. More and more, certain companies—I do not want to accuse them of fraud—insert in some contracts clauses written in what is called fine print and which often are important parts of the contracts. I think that the examples given by the member for New Westminster are true and that, in most cases, the contracting parties may not have the legal knowledge necessary to judge the contents of the documents they sign.

I was happy to hear also, and I was not told personally but people in general know, that the department of consumer affairs will look after the protection of the Canadian taxpayer doing business with companies whose amount of business and legal knowledge is much higher than that of the contracting parties.

However, when reading the explanatory notes, one cannot but agree with the hon. member who introduced that bill. In fact, he states that the object of the bill is to eliminate the practice whereby insurance companies, commercial corporations and individuals embody in insurance policies, contracts or deeds, fine print clauses excluding their liability under certain circumstances.

And again in the explanatory notes, our hon. colleague adds that:

It is desirable that payment exclusions or exclusion of responsibility be listed plain and clear in the body of insurance policies, contracts and deeds.

Once again I fully agree with him. Are the amendments proposed by him stringent enough and do they come under the jurisdiction of the federal government?

The bill mentions among others things:

—is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars—

Five hundred dollars—I suppose that amount could be found in the till of a large insurance company...

—or to a term of imprisonment not exceeding three months or to both fine and imprisonment everyone who with intent to mislead—

[Mr. Dubé.]

—and still there must be some evidence. In the case of large insurance company, I wonder who would be imprisoned as I said earlier. And the bill states:

—prints or causes to print in small typographical character in the body of an insurance policy, contract, deed or other document issued by him or under his authority, clauses concerning payment exclusions or exclusion of responsibility—

I am quite willing to believe that the mover of Bill No. C-11 is sincere. But I wonder how, in its application, we can ever evoke the penalties he himself advocates in the bill.

When we speak of fine print, more than insurance companies are involved. We could go so far as to say that the same problem exists where finance companies are concerned. And the same goes for almost all contracts the consumer must sign, either when he needs protection or when he needs a loan.

Once again, I agree fully with the mover of the bill. I trust the new department established to protect the consumer will pay very special attention to this matter, which is of the greatest importance. Even though this bill is brought in on a Friday night, before the week-end, and most of the members are on their way to their riding, that does not lessen in any way the importance of the matter brought up by the hon. member.

I am sure that not only the members of this house but all the Canadian people agree with him.

Now, does the federal government have jurisdiction in the above matter? My colleague from Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé), who is a lawyer—I will not say that I do not have that honour, but rather that I am not in that condition—mentioned that this matter could be within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

For my part, since I come from the province which my hon. colleague from New Westminster knows, I think that if the provinces have jurisdiction over this matter, we would perhaps be wrong in trying to pass legislation before the provinces have had a chance to give their opinion concerning this case.

I think my colleague for Restigouche-Madawaska said that all questions concerning insurance policies, contracts and so on are within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures.

I think that he has also mentioned that the provincial legislatures had the civil power to remedy the problem brought up by the hon. member.

I am not a lawyer, but if this question comes under provincial jurisdiction, the mover of the bill will, at least, have had the merit of having brought up in the federal parliament a most important matter.

And if I say this question is important, it is not simply to flatter the hon. member, it is because I, and probably every member of the house, have had complaints from their electors on this question.

It is true—and I wonder how it happens and it is probably the case of the hon. member—that we are often called upon to sign contracts comprising many pages several of which are illegible, and these pages would be more numerous if the writing was legible and if, let us admit it, the terms were more understandable.

I know, as I said at the start, that the examples given by the hon. members even if they are illustrative may, in certain cases, be real. If a fire starts in a house, for instance, as the hon. member said, the company may disclaim any responsibility if a mouse, unfortunately for the owner, were to chew the electric cable. Or if a condition or a clause of the contract does not provide for the mouse to cut the cable, the owner finds himself simply without a claim with the company even though he has paid his yearly premiums and has complied with the conditions he thought required to have the insurance in force.

I believe that in those cases of insurance, since the bill deals only with insurance, I may be able to give some advice to the hon. member. He could even go further by introducing in other circumstances a similar bill designed to cover finance companies, as I said earlier.

Let us hope, once again, at least I hope so like the hon. member, that the department of consumer affairs will make a point of inquiring carefully in all such situations in order to protect all citizens. It is quite irregular that some companies, more powerful no doubt than the sponsor of the bill and myself, can submit to Canadian taxpayers some contracts that are often misunderstood, but which actually can cause grave prejudice to the contracting party who is acting in good faith.

I should not like what I just said to be construed as an accusation against insurance companies, or against finance companies.

I would not say here that such companies are dishonest, far from it, I just say that the authorities involved, in this case provincial authorities, should see to it that these companies operate in such a way that contracts might be understood by those to whom they sell insurance or finance.

And, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I want to congratulate again the hon. member and I repeat my wish that the new department for consumer protection shall not only be instituted but also become operative as soon as possible.

If I may somewhat digress at this point, though this may not be quite in order, because we are considering a specific bill, I would say that the Canadian people feel, I am sure, that the setting up of such a department is long overdue.

Insurance companies were mentioned this afternoon, and I referred as well to finance companies, but many more areas could be involved. At that time, the head of the department and his senior officials will have the responsibility to protect the people. We are here precisely to protect those who delegated their authority to us, while giving us at the same time the power to amend our laws so that they are better protected.

Again, if we were thereby trespassing on the authority of the provinces and infringing upon their autonomy, as my colleague from Restigouche-Madawaska said, I think it would be not only unfair, but wrong on our part to try to deal with a problem which is not within our jurisdiction.

Therefore, I do not blame the hon. member who introduced the bill, but congratulate him for having drawn the attention of parliament to a case which should interest everyone—for even though the federal parliament is involved here, we are Canadian citizens. The very fact that our attention has been drawn to the problems presented by insurance contracts is already something, and I think it may be a warning of sorts directed to the provincial authorities through their representative in the house.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the principle enshrined in Bill No. C-11. I am and always have been a strong believer in insurance. As a matter of fact, in view of conditions today in this modern world and some of the judgments which have been handed down when matters go to court, I believe everybody must have insurance.

I think it is safe to say that the majority of the people who believe in the principle of insurance and who take out insurance policies do so in the belief that they have a certain coverage which is provided by the clauses in large type that are common to all insurance policy forms. But too many people do not read the very fine print. Even if they do, the print is so fine and the wording so complicated that, if they are like me, they do not understand it.

Some 32 years ago I reached the position where I was able to move from a rented home to a home of my own, with a mortgage. I believed in insurance and I got what I thought was complete coverage of my home. However, a few years ago there was a fire at my home, and when it came to settlement I received about one third of what I anticipated receiving, simply because I had not read or had not been able to understand the fine print on my fire insurance policy.

I also have a relative who believes in insurance coverage, and similarly she thought she was completely covered by her insurance. The diamond in one of her rings dropped out and when the claim was considered the fine print revealed that no insurance was payable, and she still has the ring without the diamond.

I give those two personal experiences of people who believe in insurance. In addition, I believe that people should not only know the extend of their coverage but should also know what the insurance company claims are exclusions. It is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that many people would have a greater understanding of their policies or agreements if the exclusion clauses appeared in large type or, as recommended by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford), type of a different colour, so that these clauses would stand out.

I support the principle of the bill now before us and I hope that the recommendation of the hon. member who introduced it will be accepted, namely that instead of the bill being talked out it be referred for study and possible action either to a committee of the house or to the new department.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I think that on the principle of the bill, we are faced to some extent with a sort of painless operation, since all the hon. members who contributed to the debate so far, have indicated that they supported the bill and they have showered the sponsor with congratulations while raising some objections.

I too believe that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather), is looking for perfection and would want, of course, to see it prevail everywhere in the world. Obviously, his intentions are good, but in spite of all the legislation we could pass here, a great many people will still remain extremely gullible.

I should like now to give a few examples just to show the extent of the general public's gullibility with regard to printed matters sent to their homes, whether it be small print or coloured print, or underlined sentences or words in italics and so forth.

It is understandable of course, because everyone is not an intellectual. Those people who have to take insurance policies, for instance, are workers who are not accustomed to reading and most of the time they get confused when they have to follow a text, a little long and a little condensed.

I remember a rather recent case where, for instance, I sent a questionnaire to my constituents. In a rather large committee, we had studied a most simple questionnaire hoping that everyone would understand it quite well. You would be surprised to see how many people—and my electors are not any dumber than those in other ridings in the country—did not understand it. For instance, there were two cards, one had to be detached and the other on which appeared the questions was to be returned to me. There was nothing complicated about it; all they had to do was to detach the card and mail it. However, I would dare say that 40 per cent of those who answered sent both cards back.

No need for me to labour the point, but it shows that even if we were to pass the bill of the hon. member for New Westminster, requiring that the fine print clauses on insurance policies be printed in larger print, in colour or in italics, some people still would not understand.

You know, it is a law of nature. However hard you try, you will never reach perfection. Somebody, who died a long time ago, used to express this truth in terms that might appear to some as rather crude. He used to say: "There's a sucker born every minute."

Jocular as it may be, it is nevertheless true. There will always be people whose gullibility will get them into trouble. Passing all the laws under heaven will never help in this respect.

Besides, practically speaking, can you imagine how you would apply this suggestion to the hon. member for New Westminster?

There will always be all sorts of objections and there will always remain people who are clever enough to find means of cheating others. There are experts in that field. However, I do not think that we should carry our legislation too far; we should rather try to make it easier to obtain relief through existing legislation. A moment ago, the member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé) said that this is a provincial matter and that people who are wronged should resort to existing legislation.

I would suggest instead that appeal to existing legislation be facilitated to the common people, those I call gullible souls who are liable to be cheated. I speak of gullible souls, but the member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who seconded the motion, said himself that he had been cheated, and yet he is one of the most intelligent members of this house. Therefore, imagine what it must be like for those I call gullible souls. It would be advisable to make it easier for them to start court proceedings, to make it so that they will not have to spend too much money in order to retain a lawyer to plead their case; otherwise in most cases they would not see a lawyer and would incur a loss because they failed to read the small print in the insurance policies they signed.

It has been said that this is a provincial matter. It might be. I am not a lawyer. But if there was only that argument to prevent its passing, I would be in favour of the bill which is good in theory, but I just want to say that respect for what is called provincial antonomy must be kept within bounds, although some must be shown. There are some cases where the provinces are unable to exercise their prerogative, then, the federal government would be justified in stepping in, but the people who feel aggrieved may already obtain relief through existing provincial legislation.

Then, I say this, Mr. Chairman, while I associate with the others to congratulate the hon. member for New Westminster for his excellent intentions, we ought to take steps that will make the existing conditions as perfect as possible in order that the ordinary people may not be aggrieved in the process. If we pass this bill, we will have to pass a hundred more to cope with those who specialize in the art of misleading people, and there would never be an end to it all. Therefore, I say, in spite of its fine objective this bill would be extremely difficult to enforce and even if it were possible to enforce it, it would complicate the situation rather than simplify it. As the saying goes, leave well enough alone, which is obvious. I wonder is this is not a case where this really applies.

I noticed that the member said he was only interested in the principle; that if it was passed, we would discuss its application and then endeavour to have it applied in a practical way. Now, I must admit that I would be at a loss to do so; yet, I have a certain experience of those matters, because I have dealt in insurance and even in the printing business for a while. I fail to see how a recommendation like this one could be applied in a practical way, and especially how the companies could be bound by law to comply therewith.

In conclusion, I feel the sponsor of the bill should be commended for having called the attention of the house to a real problem, but which could be solved otherwise, by making it easier to resort to existing statutes, for instance, and, as suggested earlier by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine), by drawing the attention of the new minister of corporations and consumer affairs to any possible abuse. He may succeed, through methods he will have to devise in the coming months, in preventing excessive abuses, even though everything should not be forbidden in the field of publicity which mislead simple people by all kinds of tricks. Even if it were printed in type as large as this, there are still people to write a formula in such a subtle way that most people would not understand it and in this I am supported by the statement of my hon. colleague who, I repeat, is one of the most intelligent members in the house and who admitted that he had himself been misled. Imagine how much influence can be exerted on people with much less experience and education. Even if the type is enlarged they can still mislead them by changing the wording. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I join with the others to congratulate the mover by saying that his intention was excellent and will have a future, because having brought this to our attention, the new minister will surely be able to intervene and possibly the members may bring to the attention of their voters the fact that there is provincial legislation permitting action.

As a practical conclusion, I suggest that we should strive to make such action before the courts easier for those who are cheated and lack the means to retain the services of lawyers or to make the required deposits to obtain justice in their claims against insurance companies which might directly or indirectly have misled them.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Winch: May I ask the hon. member a question. Considering what he said, what does he think of the recommendation of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, who suggested that exclusion clauses ought to be printed in ink that is of a different colour from the ink used to print the main part of the document?

Mr. Mongrain: In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is a very good suggestion. But it still does not nullify the other objection I mentioned when I said that there will always be people in this world of ours who specialize in fooling other people. For instance, suppose you print it in red, and suppose I am the president of a big company and I am somewhat of a crook and—I hope this will not be taken for granted—I will hire some learned people who are able to construct a sentence in which the average citizen will see nothing wrong. That is a specialty of people in public relations—and I know something about it, because I am in public relations.

I am trying to do things the right way, the honest way, because I work for small fry, and not for big companies which might believe they could pay me enough to convince me that I should act against my conscience and demonstrate what Barnum once said, that there is a "fish" born every minute. Even if you pass laws to prevent trickery there will always be somebody smart enough to find another trick that will fool the public. I suggest that we should tackle the problem in another way.

We have provincial laws. Let us make it easier for people to have recourse to those laws. Let us advise the minister to devise special measures to educate the public so that they will take advantage of the laws already existing.

Mr. Winch: In view of what the hon. member has just said about public relations men and the heads of big corporations drafting things to fool the public, does he not agree that so far as legislation can go we should have legislation in order to protect as far as possible people whom public relations men and corporations are trying to fool?

Mr. Mongrain: I think it is your duty to try to do it, but there is no use doing something with no result. The suggestion is made that the fine print be made bigger or that it be printed in red. But I can give examples, possibly a hundred cases, where instructions were written in big characters, in big print or in colour, and people did not even notice those instructions. I gave one example while I was speaking, but maybe the hon. member did not hear it. I said in French that I had that experience myself a few months ago.

I had a card printed, a double card, which I sent to the people in my riding, some 23,000 of them. They were supposed to tear the card in half and send one piece back. We studied the way that the card should be printed and how it should be presented. We studied this with a committee that specializes in such things connected with printing, and the instructions were in big print. Although I was very sure that everybody would understand—and mind you, I do not think my electors are less intelligent than the average electors throughout this country of ours—of those 23,000 cards that I sent, 40 per cent were returned as the double card, unseparated and untorn. This was done, even though the instructions were given in the largest print that we could put on the card.

Therefore I say there is no use passing dozens or hundreds of laws. The more you pass the more you complicate the problem. Try to solve it with the laws you have now, that is my contention.

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to congratulate the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) for the effort he is making in this bill. In private life we have all seen innumerable contracts, for example those used by door to door salesmen selling household appliances, those used by various household furnishing companies, which contain small print and that are completely misleading so far as the purchaser is concerned, and which usually result in the purchaser acquiring something he never expected.

With respect to insurance contracts, I think that most insurance company representatives have now reached the conclusion that it is poor business to have the public signing contracts that contain clauses which are misleading. However, there are still a number of companies which do not follow this rule, and which without any question of doubt issue policies that are misleading. I tend to agree with the hon. member for New Westminster that possibly the only way one can adequately prevent this happening is to frighten companies by bringing them under the provisions of the criminal law.

The amendment which the hon. member proposes would create an indictable offence where any person, with the intention to mislead, places in the body of an insurance policy, contract, and so on, issued by him exclusionary clauses in smaller typographical character than that used in other portions of the document. Whether this would bring forth the results that he hopes is another matter. I think the new department of consumer affairs, through its consumer protection publicity, should be able to warn the public about the dangers of such contracts.

When the Registrar General (Mr. Turner) the other day gave the house an indication of the wide variety of topics that his department would be interested in, he mentioned the facilities that would be at his department's disposal to publicize various consumer gimmicks by which the public are taken advantage of at the present time. It seems to me it would be a more effective way to deal with this problem if the new ministry of consumer affairs were to launch an immediate study of insurance contracts in general. If the committee, or the person making this study of insurance contracts, were to come up with a number of policies which appear to be unduly misleading, then I would consider it the duty of the new ministry of consumer affairs to publicize this throughout the various consumer organizations in the country. I realize—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the hour for the consideration of private members business has expired. It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until two thirty o'clock on the afternoon of Monday next.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING LABELLING OF CERTAIN COMMODITIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-176, to amend the Food and Drugs Act (labelling of dates on perishable commodities).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to enable the consumer when shopping for food, drugs, cosmetics or other perishables to determine accurately that the product he or she buys will be as fresh as depicted by the advertising, labelling and packaging. It is becoming increasingly difficult, due to modern packaging methods, for the shopper to determine whether his or her selection has been on the retailer's shelf, in storage or transit for some time, thus causing the product to be at best stale and on some occasions injurious to health.

This bill would require all perishable products to be clearly marked as to the date the product was manufactured or produced and the ultimate date to which the product in question may be used without any danger to health.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PUBLIC SERVANTS, ETC., RECEIVING HIGHER SALARIES

Question No. 319—Mr. Lambert:

As of June 15, 1967, how many persons in the employ of (a) the public service of Canada (b) the armed services (c) crown corporations or agencies, were being paid salary or pay and allowances, or emoluments in the following categories (i) $18,000-$20,000 per annum (ii) $20,000-$25,000 per annum (iii) $25,000-$35,000 per annum (iv) $35,000 and up per annum?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): (a) (i) 922, (ii) 576, (iii) 33, (iv) nil. (b) (i) 157, (ii) 53, (iii) 10, (iv) nil. (c) (i) 274, (ii) 162, (iii) 32, (iv) 9.

Air Canada, the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation and Polymer Corporation advise that it has not been considered in the best interests of their respective corporations to disclose data on employees' earnings other than what is available through the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

CHANGE IN COST OF LIVING INDEX

Question No. 398—Mr. Crouse:

Is the government planning to make any changes in the cost of living index from its present 1949 base equalling 100 to a more recent year?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics is planning to update the consumer price index for Canada and the ten regional city consumer price indexes to a time reference base of 1961 equals 100. The change to the 1961 time base is expected to be completed before mid-1968. It will involve simply the arithmetic conversion of the present 1949-based series to the new base year and will not alter the movements of consumer prices as measured in the existing consumer price indexes. No changes in the content and relative importance of items in the indexes are contemplated at this time. The change to the new reference year conforms with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics policy of periodically updating indexes to more current periods.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL, LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 407—Mr. Irvine:

1. In connection with Westminster hospital, London, Ontario, what is the total land acreage of this property?

2. What is the total floor area of (a) patients rooms, etc. (b) operating areas (c) recreation areas (d) dining and lounge areas (e) staff and employee living quarters in main buildings (f) staff quarters in separate dwellings?

3. What was the total cost during 1966 of (a) heating (b) snow removal (c) major repairs (d) general upkeep?

Questions

4. What was the total over-all cost of operating this facility during 1966 exclusive of depreciation factor?

5. What is the estimated value of the hospital including all buildings and equipment?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. 313.94 acres.

2. (a) 183,500 net sq. ft., (b) 2,900 net sq. ft., (c) 30,670 net sq. ft., (d) 28,100 net sq. ft., (e) 66,000 net sq. ft., (f) 29 housing units for family accommodation.

3. (a) $328,081. (b) $16,000 estimated. (c) $79,675. (d) $410,691 (not including housekeeping expenses of approximately $681,000).

4. $8,212,237.

5. Estimated value of: buildings, $18,543,000; land, $446,175; equipment and furnishings, $1,200,000. Total $20,189,175.

ELDORADO MINING CO. IN QUEBEC

Question No. 418—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the government or any crown corporation received from Sidbec or the government of Quebec a request for assistance in financing the Quebec steel complex and, if so, what was the answer?

2. Has Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd. done any prospecting in Quebec to determine if the subsoil contains uranium?

3. If it is not prospecting and has never done so, what is the reason?

4. Have the crown corporations, Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd., Eldorado Aviation Ltd., and Northern Transportation Ltd., official names in French?

5. If so, what is the official name in French of each?

6. If not, is there some reason?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by several departments as follows: 1. No.

2. No.

3. Eldorado's prospecting activities have been limited by direction of the government to the areas immediately adjacent to its Saskatchewan property.

4. No.

5. Not applicable.

6. Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd., and Eldorado Aviation Ltd., do not operate in areas where there is any significant French speaking population. However, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is exploring with the head of these companies the possibility of adopting equivalent French names. Northern Transportation Company Limited does not have an official name in French because the company does not operate in an area where there is any significant French speaking population.

[Mr. Irvine.]

AGREEMENTS RESPECTING ELIMINATION OF RIVER POLLUTION

Question No. 422—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has an agreement been concluded between the government of Canada, the government of Quebec and the corporation of the city of Quebec to share the cost of eliminating pollution in the St. Charles river?

2. If so (a) what precisely are the obligations and undertakings of the government of Canada in relation thereto, and (b) what is the estimated cost to the federal treasury of each of these obligations and undertakings?

3. Has the government considered a similar program of joint action with the government of Ontario, the government of Quebec, the national capital commission and various municipalities in Ontario and Quebec to eliminate pollution in the Ottawa river?

4. If so (a) what discussions have been held (b) with what result?

5. If not, will the government of Canada now consider taking the initiative in anti-pollution measures on the Ottawa river?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Energy, Mines and Resources as follows: 1. There is an agreement dealing with the provision of structures to control water level for navigation purposes between the outlet of the river and the Scott bridge, a distance of approximately three miles. The responsibility for elimination of pollution rests with the province of Quebec.

2. (a) The federal government undertakes to build a dam at the outlet of the river and to share in the construction of retaining walls along the shores. (b) The dam is estimated at $1,500,000 totally financed by the federal government. The retaining walls are estimated at $16,000,000 of which $8,000,000 is to be provided by the federal government.

3. No. The project referred to in answer to 1 above, relating to the St. Charles river, is not to eliminate pollution. The agreement between the government of Canada, the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec, which is in the French language, specifies that:

Whereas the province has agreed to assume all responsibilities with respect to the following field, to wit:

To co-ordinate drainage studies relating to sewage flowing into the St. Charles river and to take the necessary steps in order to eliminate pollution sources in that river.

4. See part 3.

5. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wrote to the responsible ministers of Ontario and Quebec and, in line with a proposal made last May to the Canadian council of resource ministers, stated that the federal government would be prepared to enter into an agreement with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec under which the federal government would pay the full cost of a pilot study of the Ottawa river leading to the preparation of a comprehensive plan for the abatement and control of pollution.

AEROMAGNETOMETER SURVEY

Question No. 441—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How much of the $18,000,000, aeromagnetometer survey launched in 1962 has been completed?

2. What has been the scale of expenditure in each province and in the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories?

3. What significant mineral areas have been located by the survey?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources):
1. Approximately 40 per cent.

2.

Province or territory	Provincial share	Federal share
Newfoundland	—	325,604.00
Nova Scotia	—	—
New Brunswick	14,678.00	14,678.00
P.E.I.	—	—
Quebec	750,000.00	750,000.00
Ontario	721,368.00	721,368.00
Manitoba	618,365.00	618,365.00
Saskatchewan	387,950.00	387,950.00
Alberta	95,565.00	95,565.00
British Columbia	220,196.00	220,196.00
Yukon Territory	—	445,697.00
N.W.T.: Dist. of Franklin (Polar Shelf and Baffin Island	—	549,690.00
District of Mackenzie	—	967,564.00
District of Keewatin	—	483,782.00
Total	$2,808,122.00	$5,580,459.00

3. Exploration of the New Brunswick base metal complex was started indirectly by airborne magnetic surveys. Iron occurrences associated with schists and porphyries coincide with magnetic anomalies which, on prospecting, turned up sulphide deposits.

In northern Ontario, federal-provincial aeromagnetic surveys were responsible for the discovery of the Moose river aeromagnetic belt. Within this belt Consolidated Morrison and Imperial Oil have discovered a carbonatite with a large tonnage of columbium oxide.

In British Columbia it has been reported that the aeromagnetic data led to exploration on Cariboo Bell Copper property where a copper deposit was discovered.

The first diamond drill hole in the Mattagami camp which intersected copper values was drilled by New Hosco Mines Limited in a magnetic anomaly.

GRAIN SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL

Question No. 458—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many bushels of grain have been shipped through Port Churchill each year since 1960, and what kind of grains have been involved and in what quantities?

2. What is the total cost of the diversion charge on these grains, and what is the reason for the diversion charge?

3. What has been the total tonnage of incoming freight through Port Churchill each year since 1960?

Questions

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1.

Loadings of grain at the port of Churchill in international and coastwise shipping, 1960-66

Year	Commodity	International shipping Tons	International shipping Bushels[2] ('000)	Coastwise shipping Tons	Coastwise shipping Bushels ('000)
1960	Wheat	591,224	197,075	1,666	55

2. The total amount of diversion charges paid by the Canadian Wheat Board in respect of grain shipped through the port of Churchill in each navigation season from 1960 to 1966 is as follow:

Churchill shipping season	Diversion charge on country shipments direct to Churchill
1960	$269,310.28
1961	275,183.66
1962	302,032.29
1963	341,486.56
1964	323,259.98
1965	295,367.89
1966	326,877.91

Under terms of a handling agreement negotiated annually with all elevator companies, a diversion charge is paid by the Canadian Wheat Board on wheat shipped by elevator companies from their country elevators directly to the port of Churchill for export.

A diversion charge is a charge assessed by an elevator company when grain shipped from one of its country elevators is diverted from that company's terminal elevator to another destination. Elevator companies consider that their country and terminal elevators operate as an entity, and terminal revenues are an important factor in determining the basis upon which country elevators can be operated. Therefore, it has been a long established trade practice that when a company loses terminal handling on grain as a result of the diversion of a country elevator shipment to a destination other than the company's terminal, a diversion charge is assessed to compensate for the loss of terminal earnings.

WHEAT PRICES AND DELIVERIES

Question No. 474—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

1. What was the closing date of the C.W.B. pool for 1966-67?

2. What was the average weekly price for the following grades from that date to the present time: 1 Nor.; 2 Nor.; 3 Nor.; 4 Nor.; 1 A. Durum; 2 A. Durum; 3 A. Durum; 4 A. Durum?

3. What was the total delivery to elevator from new pool to July 31, 1967, by grades?

4. What were deliveries of each of these grades from August 1 to the present time?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. The 1966-67 Canadian Wheat Board pool has not been closed.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. The Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada reports receipts of 83.0 million bushels of wheat at country elevators in the prairies in the period August 1 to October 11. The grades of this wheat are not established by the Board of Grain Commissioners until it has been delivered to terminal positions and for this reason it is not possible to provide a breakdown of the grades which have been delivered so far this crop year. However, this information will be compiled by the Canadian Wheat Board and included in their annual report for the 1967-68 crop year.

FEDERAL-QUEBEC AGREEMENT ON TOURIST DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 475—Mr. Latulippe:

Is there any agreement between the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec as to tourist developments and, if so, what is the nature of this agreement?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): The one formal agreement concerns encouragement of interprovincial travel. An exchange of correspondence in December, 1964, with all of the provinces sets forth an arrangement whereby the federal government agrees to match dollars with the provinces for advertising programs within Canada to specified amounts. The government of the province of Quebec agreed to the formula and the following amounts were allocated to Quebec: 1965, $25,000; 1966, $33,000; 1967, $33,000.

There is continuing liaison and co-operation between the Canadian Government Travel Bureau and the ministry of tourism in Quebec. The Canadian Government Travel Bureau stocks and distributes Quebec provincial literature, refers all inquiries concerning Quebec, and consults with the provinces concerning advertising and promotion programs in United States and European markets.

CANADIAN AND FOREIGN BUILT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 491—Mr. Forrestall:

What is the current ratio, with figures, between the number of Canadian-built aircraft, of all types, and foreign-built aircraft at present in service with the Canadian forces?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): As of 1 October, 1967, there were 1328 aircraft in service with the Canadian forces. Of these, 945 were built in Canada, and 383 in foreign countries, a ratio of 2.5 to 1.

*OTTAWA RESTRICTION ON BUILDING HEIGHTS

Question No. 497—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

Will the government consider making immediate representations to the corporation of the city of Ottawa to the effect that no amendments should be made to the municipal by-law governing the height of buildings in the centre of the national capital until the proposed special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the national capital has had the opportunity of considering the effect of high-rise buildings upon the architectural dominance of the peace tower and the parliament buildings generally?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the government will not be making representations in the form suggested in the question. However, the government is very much concerned about this subject and is maintaining close liaison with the various persons concerned in the municipal government with a view to maintaining limits on building heights such that the architectural significance of the peace tower and the parliament buildings generally will not be diminished.

MANPOWER RETRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 514—Mr. Allmand:

Is there any law or regulation which limits the manpower retraining program to persons of a certain age or a certain education?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Adult Occupational Training Act provides that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration may purchase occupational training for a person whose age is at least one year greater than the regular school leaving age in the province in which he resides. There are no federal legislative requirements as to education. Many training courses have varying minimum requirements, determined by the educational authorities concerned, as to the qualifications of the trainees who may be enrolled.

POST OFFICE IMPROVEMENTS, ROUYN, QUE.

Question No. 537—Mr. Caouette:

Are any repairs and improvements being considered for the Rouyn post office?

[Translation]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, certain minor interior changes are proposed.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

RESEARCH GRANTS AND SCHOLARSHIPS

Question No. 170—Mr. Allard:

1. How much money was spent in each province, in detail, by the National Research Council in 1966 for research grants and scholarships?

2. What are the other federal research institutions in addition to the National Research Council?

3. How much money was spent in each province, in detail, by the Canada Council in 1966 on research grants and scholarships?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

REQUEST FOR PROCLAMATION OF CITIZENS DAY FOLLOWING EXPO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

[English]

Now that Expo '67 has happily come and sadly gone, and in view of the fact that Expo has brought to Canada the attention and respect of every country in the world, would the Prime Minister consider setting aside one day to honour the one who is basically responsible for its success, the Canadian citizen, by proclaiming a Canadian citizens' day, possibly on Friday, December 29, so that 20 million citizens may wind up centennial year by taking this one day to declare in unison "Je suis fier d'être un Canadien."

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting suggestion indeed, and I shall be glad to consider it.

[Mr. Munro.]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, having to do with Expo. I ask the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Secretary of State, whether any consideration is being given by the government to the use of the building known as the broadcasting centre, the administration building—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It was brought to the attention of the Chair just recently that the type of question now asked by the hon. member is not, strictly speaking, a supplementary question. It is a related question. The hon. member may ask it later on when he is recognized by the Chair.

NOVA SCOTIA

INQUIRIES AS TO NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING CONTINUED OPERATION OF DOSCO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the press release issued last Friday after the conference between representatives of the federal and Nova Scotia governments, can the Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house whether Dosco has agreed to open its books to consultants, as mentioned in the press release, and whether such consultants have already been appointed?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have seen reports to that effect based on conversations with the premier of Nova Scotia. We hope these reports are accurate, but we have not ourselves yet heard from the premier of Nova Scotia on that particular matter.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The press release referred to April 30—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member and remind him that it is not in order to ask about the accuracy or otherwise of press statements. The hon. member should ask the question directly.

Mr. Lewis: I was not going to ask about the accuracy of the press statement, Mr. Speaker; I was merely trying to make my question better understood. Has the federal government made any commitments regarding the continuation of operation of the Sydney plant beyond April 30 next year, or is the commitment limited to that date?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no commitment made. No government could make that commitment. But we are discussing the matter with the provincial government.

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of his answer a week ago, when I asked whether the government was formulating any plans to bring forward at a meeting with Dosco, has the government now completed these plans and when is it meeting with Dosco to put forward any alternatives it might have?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the meetings that are taking place with Dosco are being sponsored by the provincial government, and they are reporting to us the results of their meetings with Dosco.

Mr. Starr: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the federal government intends to initiate any meetings with Dosco and bring forward any plans it might have as a result of what has occurred.

Mr. Pearson: Not directly but through the provincial government. We are being kept informed of discussions with Dosco.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. In these discussions with Dosco is the government taking any steps to make sure that the pensions paid by Dosco to its retired employees will be continued even if the operation is phased out?

Mr. Pearson: I have no doubt that factor is being considered by those taking part in the discussions.

Mr. Starr: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether the federal government has any plans whatsoever to improve the situation.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, or we would not have been discussing the matter with the provincial government for many hours last Friday.

[Later:]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as the minister with whom the provincial authority is keeping in touch with respect to the Dosco situation. Having regard to recent lay-offs and the concern expressed by the Halifax Welfare Council, can the minister advise the house whether Dosco has given any indication, in any of the discussions which have been held, with regard to the future of the two yards at the port?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): This has not been a matter of discussion with the provincial government.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFFS IN QUEBEC AND MARITIMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

The minister is no doubt aware of the proposed lay-off on November 1 by the Canadian National Railways of several hundred employees, including 22 in my riding. Could he tell us whether he and his department have taken steps to prevent these lay-offs?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Immediately on hearing this news I got in touch with the management of the Canadian National Railways, and they have advised me that the current reductions are part of the normal, continuing process of adjusting the size of the work force to meet the varying employment requirements. The fact is that train movements this year are down very substantially below those in the same period last year. Generally speaking, railway employment rises and falls in accordance with the work load resulting from such factors as seasonal needs, weather conditions, timing and progress in respect of capital projects, developing types of competition, operating and equipment requirements to meet traffic demands.

The government and the management of the C.N.R. are sensitive to the hardships which might result from work force adjustments and will take whatever steps are possible to improve the situation. It must be realized, of course, that unless operating costs are kept under control the company's competitive position will be jeopardized and along with it the continuing livelihood of all the employees.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Has the minister contacted the department of manpower in regard to finding jobs for those C.N.R. part time employees who will be laid off in November after 10, 15 or 17 years of service? Is the Minister of Transport in touch with the department of manpower to allow those people to keep on working?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of that situation. At the present time we cannot provide employment or retraining for those people because we do not know their names yet, especially in those places where seniority is taken into account and, in the railways, it is. We are following the situation very closely and all our services will be available to those employees.

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask whether he has received a request from the mayor of Moncton inviting him to attend a citizens meeting in that city tonight with regard to the 450 employees who are being laid off by the C.N.R. in the Atlantic area. If so, is he or are his officials planning to attend that meeting?

Mr. Hellyer: To the best of my knowledge it has not been received, Mr. Speaker. Certainly it has not yet been brought to my attention.

Mr. Coates: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and ask him whether he has received such an invitation?

Mr. Marchand: I have received a wire from the mayor of Moncton.

Mr. Coates: May I ask the minister what are his intentions? Does he or do his officials intend to attend this meeting?

Mr. Marchand: As soon as we know who are the individuals who are to be laid off we will take steps to find other jobs for them, or to help them in any other way. However, I wish to say that in this case what I said concerning private corporations, also applies. I think that in the case of a massive lay-off such as this one, longer notice should be given.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister of manpower say whether he has conferred with the Prime Minister and his colleagues in the cabinet as to whether they will take some strong steps to bring to the attention of these—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: I think my question has been asked.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will have the opportunity later to put a supplementary question on this subject.

[Later:]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration ?

The minister was saying a while ago that the lay-off notice should be longer and I agree with him. Now, since the Canadian National is a crown corporation, is the government or the minister thinking about giving a more adequate notice to the employees now laid off and who will be without a job within one day?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that that was a problem, not only for the C.N.R. but for all companies.

Now, you will understand that, in this area there are several companies under provincial jurisdiction and it is not up to us to set the rules for them. The problem remains nevertheless. It is sure that we cannot act before tomorrow or before November 1.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBER FOR LAPOINTE—RAISING OF FUNDS IN FOREIGN COUNTRY FOR SEPARATISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware of the fact that one of our number, the hon. member for Lapointe, is presently in a foreign country to raise money for the specific purpose of financing the separatist cause which has as its objective the destruction of the nation of Canada, to which he and all of us have sworn our allegiance. If he is aware, what is being done about these seditious activities?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am only aware of what I read in the newspapers. These reports, I must say, are rather unusual in so far as the conduct of a member of this house is concerned.

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette: (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) said that at least five liberal members here would join his movement on November 22.

Is the Prime Minister in a position to give us the names of those Liberal members?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: I am not one of them, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN PROPOSED PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the Prime Minister whether there has been any change in the government's attitude toward federal representation at the confederation for tomorrow conference, and whether he and his colleagues have now decided upon ministerial representation. Would the Prime Minister also be good enough to inform the house of the names of the persons who are to represent parliament and the government of Canada at this very significant conference?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no change in our attitude toward federal representation at this provincial conference. I will be able, I think, to announce the names of the federal observers tomorrow.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I ask a supplementary question. I take it from the Prime Minister's answer that it has been decided finally there will not be ministerial representation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HIGHWAY SAFETY

RECALL OF DEFECTIVE VEHICLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): The Minister of Transport took the following question as notice last Friday, and I put it to the minister again today. Has there been any communication between the government and the motor vehicle industry relating to the massive recall of cars last week from Canadian roads?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am sorry but I did not have sufficient time this morning, because of the urgency of other matters, to check that question. I will try to have a reply for my hon. friend tomorrow.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): May I ask a supplementary question. I should like to welcome the Minister of Transport back, and I notice that he is again dealing with these matters of priority. I wonder if he has had an opportunity to check into the urgent matter of the less than carload rates—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a supplementary question.

INDUSTRY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—SALE OF VICTORIA MACHINERY DEPOT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I address a most urgent question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister been advised of the closing of the Victoria Machinery Depot, the first shipyard in British Columbia, as a result of its purchase by the Burrard Drydock Company? The president made a statement to the effect the closure resulted from the failure of the government to carry through with coastguard construction commitments and the refusal to give contracts to British Columbia shipyards because of lower standards and lower prices in the east. Will the minister please advise us what the situation is regarding shipbuilding in British Columbia and the coastguard contract in particular?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the hon. member is covering a great deal of ground in his question. He is asking the minister to make a general statement on shipbuilding policy. I would not think the question is in order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Winch: May I then ask the question in a different way. Will the minister please advise this house whether consideration has been given to the coastguard construction program, and whether that has any bearing on the sale of the original Victoria Machinery Depot?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): I believe the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East is of very great importance to the people on the west coast.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked for an explanation of an event that has already occurred, and I do not think any answer to the question today would change the situation to which the hon. member has alluded.

Mr. Winch: Then may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Are any coastguard contracts under contemplation for the British Columbia shipyards?

Mr. Speaker: This question should also be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a wire from Mr. Harold Husband regarding sale of shipbuilding facilities at the Victoria Machinery Depot and protesting cancellation of the construction of two coastguard vessels for use on the west coast?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Obviously the hon. member is referring, if I understand the question well, to the matter raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I do not think it is in order simply to ask whether a wire has been received; that matter is not urgent.

Mr. Basford: With all due respect—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member resume his seat and take notice of the fact that, according to the rules, if he feels he has been aggrieved and the matter is urgent he can give notice to the Chair and the matter can be discussed within a few hours, at the time of adjournment.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: My question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and is addressed to him in his capacity as minister of manpower. Can he inform the house of any action being taken by his office on Vancouver island or Victoria for the placement of the 150 skilled employees who are being laid off owing to the sale of the Victoria Machinery Depot Company Limited to the Burrard Dry Dock Company Limited in Vancouver.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire into this matter and report tomorrow or the following day.

FISHERIES

PROTEST BY U.S. RESPECTING NEW FISHING LIMITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the minister of external affairs, but in his absence I will address it to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to state whether he has yet received a formal protest or communication from Washington with regard to the proposed 12 mile limit? If so, can he say what was the nature of the protest, and can he inform the house as to the nature of Canada's reply?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I will have to look into that question to see whether there have been any exchanges since the Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke on the subject last Friday.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister also be so kind as to check with the Secretary of State for External Affairs when we might expect an announcement about the location of the base lines on the Pacific coast?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker. This is a very complicated element in the whole situation, of course.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

POSSIBLE USE OF EXPO BUILDINGS AS MONTREAL HEADQUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I will now ask the Prime Minister about various buildings at Expo, namely the broadcasting centre, administration building and theatre. Is consideration being given to the use of these buildings as a nucleus for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation Montreal complex, thus saving many millions of dollars?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member would not agree that this is a matter which ought not to be asked at this time by way of verbal question. If the hon. member thinks there is urgency the matter can be discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Fairweather: Ten o'clock.

FREIGHT RATES

CREAM—REQUEST FOR RESCISSION OF RECENT INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask him whether he has any information to provide the house about what action the government is taking either to have the railways rescind the recently announced 1,000 per cent freight rate increase on cream shipments or to assist the producers and processors who will be put out of business if no action is taken on this freight rate increase by the railways.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that he is asking a question which has reference to general policy. I think it should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, the urgency of the question stems from the fact that these rates will become effective on November 2; and unless some action is taken immediately, in view of the way answers have been given to questions which are put on the order paper, I believe these producers will suffer hardship.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would like to give notice to consider the matter at ten o'clock this evening.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF NEW NON-CARLOAD RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Can he shed any further light on the questions asked earlier last week about a meeting of the government, Canadian National Railways and those affected by existing l.c.l. freight rates in the Atlantic area?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I was meeting with the railways again this morning, and I think there is some possibility of a suggestion which might be of some usefulness. I think perhaps that it would be better if I did not elaborate until the details of the proposal have been worked out.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Might we expect the minister to be in a position to advise the house of these details this week or early next week?

Mr. Hellyer: I think it would take a few days to be in a position to advise the house, because the matter would have to be referred to the government for decision. That would take a few days, even if the matter were handled most expeditiously.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask the Minister of Transport to ascertain whether the recent C.N.R. lay-offs in Moncton are related in any way to the new rate increase and the drastic falling off of traffic in the maritimes?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, I shall be glad to inquire into that, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—PROTECTION AGAINST EXPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he aware that the United States is flooding the Canadian market with turkeys which are sold here at prices below the cost of production in the United States? Is the minister now prepared to put into effect an anti-dumping duty with respect to these turkey imports?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I have been advised of this. As I informed the house on Friday, I believe, we are meeting with the turkey producers. Other government departments which are directly concerned with questions of trade and tariffs are also investigating the matter to see if special action is warranted.

Mr. Rapp: I hope the minister will not delay this investigation, because if he waits all the United States turkeys which are to be exported will have been exported to Canada.

Mr. Greene: I can assure the hon. gentleman that we shall act as quickly as possible to save his turkey.

Inquiries of the Ministry

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): My question is to the Minister of Transport. In the light of the minister's statement in Winnipeg regarding the Air Canada base, is the minister to meet with the Air Canada management to work out the implementation of the commitment he made there?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): We are working on it, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ADMISSION OF U.S. DRAFT DODGERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, to ask him whether he is prepared to make a statement at an early date about the 600-odd United States draft dodgers in Canada. In that statement will he inform the house whether those draft dodgers came to Canada as immigrants, as visitors, or in some other capacity. Also, what has been the average length of their stay in Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have never been supplied by anybody with a list of draft dodgers who are in Canada.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister has had any communication with Mark Satin, who is himself a draft dodger and director of the Toronto anti-draft program. He could probably give the minister a list of these people.

SASKATOON—INQUIRY AS TO STATION CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): The people of Saskatoon are waiting with bated breath for a reply from the Prime Minister regarding their television station. I wonder whether he has consulted his colleagues and is prepared to reply to the queries about this station.

[Mr. Greene.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am discussing this matter this afternoon. I hope these discussions will be completed tomorrow and that I shall be able to reply on Wednesday. I know my hon. friend has waited for this reply for a long time.

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I hope favourable consideration will be given to satellites for this station.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a representation, and I expect that it has been noted.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROVINCES ACCEPTING INVITATION TO ATTEND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Have the two provinces which, when I raised this matter some two weeks ago, had not accepted his invitation to the federal-provincial conference to be held early in the new year now accepted it?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall have to check to see whether letters have come in. I have been informed verbally that both provinces will attend, but I am not sure whether their letters have arrived yet.

Mr. Harkness: Is the introduction of the universal medical care plan, which was the subject of legislation passed in this house, on the agenda for that conference?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harkness: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the subject is not to be discussed with the provinces at this federal-provincial meeting, when is it to be discussed with them?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the question is not to be discussed that soon, I assume the question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Harkness: It may be that that matter will be discussed in the next week or so. I do not know. That is why I wanted the Prime Minister to inform the house about it.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister arrange to lay on the table of the house and perhaps, as is customary, to have printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings the correspondence there has been with the provinces on this important subject?

Mr. Pearson: I would have no objection. I shall get in touch with the provinces to see whether they will agree to that.

TRADE

WHEAT—REPRESENTATION AT CONFERENCE ON SALE TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): My question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will he or other members of the government attend the conference between members of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Chinese delegation, to be held at Hong Kong for the purpose of selling grain to China?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall certainly attend if my attendance is necessary. However, the negotiations in the first instance will be carried on by members of the Canadian Wheat Board which is the government's official selling agency.

Mr. Woolliams: Since grain is not being moved off farm or elevator points in western Canada, would the minister check to see whether grain can be delivered to the government elevators at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, which have a large capacity?

Mr. Winters: I do not accept the first part of that statement, and I shall look into the latter part.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE AS TO IMPLEMENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of continuing reports in Ottawa that certain forces in the government are at work to postpone the implementation of medicare, will the Prime Minister give parliament and the country an unequivocal assurance now that so far as his government is concerned, medicare will go into effect on July 1, 1968?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is repeating a question which was asked in almost precisely the same terms two or three days ago.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): But was it answered?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED DISCOVERY OF ARMS ON ISRAELI SHIP IN CANADIAN PORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Perhaps he might take it as notice. Can the right hon. gentleman advise the house whether arms have been found on board the Israeli ship Nahariya, which was taking on lumber at the port at Pictou, Nova Scotia, on Friday last? If such is the case has the minister any information to give the house on this matter, and can he tell us what action the government has taken? I ask this in the light of the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to my hon. friend from Kamloops on Friday last.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into the matter.

FINANCE

PURCHASE BY U.S. FIRM OF LAURA SECORD CANDY COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to address a question to the President of the Privy Council. I wish to ask him what steps he has taken to prevent the take-over of Laura Secord by Fanny Farmer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be placed on the order paper.

Hon. Walter Gordon (President of the Privy Council): Pity. I wanted to give the hon. gentleman a sweet answer.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR PROHIBITION OF L.S.D. AND OTHER HALLUCINOGENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): May I ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to answer the question I asked him some days ago in the house in connection with marijuana and psychedelic drugs.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF RESERVE OFFICERS AS LANGUAGE INSTRUCTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Having regard to the severe shortage of teachers at the Canadian forces language school at St. Jean, Quebec, would the minister consider using qualified reserve officers to fill the vacancies?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be placed on the order paper.

GRAIN

REPRESENTATION OF PRODUCERS ON TRANSPORTATION SUBCOMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. On October 11 I asked the hon. gentleman a question concerning the desirability of having representatives of the producers or grain farmers on the special subcommittee which is investigating the operations of the railway companies particularly in connection with grain marketing in western Canada. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman has an answer for me.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I have an answer, but I do not have it with me today. I am sorry; I will bring it tomorrow.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED INTENTION TO REDUCE DELIVERY SERVICE TO FIVE DAYS WEEKLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I had a question for the Postmaster General. In his absence perhaps another minister might reply or take it as notice. Is it the intention, as reported on the radio news this morning, to reduce the postal service to a five day week basis?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the office of the Postmaster General that there is a denial that any such statement was made. However, the Postmaster General will be here himself tomorrow.

WATER RESOURCES

PEMBINA RIVER—REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION ON PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs; in his absence one of his parliamentary secretaries might take it as notice and give me an answer tomorrow. Has the government now received a report of the International Joint Commission on the Pembina river development project and, if so, is the government prepared to ratify the agreement as recommended by the commission in its report?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have reason to believe that the report is now in the hands of the government. The answer could be given orally to me tomorrow, if this were permissible.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the hon. gentleman aware that though many government agencies are compiling statistical data, none of them is compiling data with respect to the growing practice of the purchase of Canadian farmlands by groups other than Canadian, with the intention of operating them as non-residents?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question should be placed on the order paper.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF NEW APPLICATION FORMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): My question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that new immigration regulations came into effect on October 1, and since these regulations require certain applications to be made on special forms prescribed by the minister, is the hon. gentleman aware that many of the immigration offices across the country do not possess supplies of these forms; and will he do something to remedy this situation as soon as possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a representation at the moment. In any event I do not think this is the type of question which can be asked on orders of the day.

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR FURTHER SHOWING OF FILM ON CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, and I do so as a Canadian sentimentalist.

Some time ago I asked the right hon. gentleman what could be done to retain in Canada that most fantastic and magnificent film of Canada which was shown at Expo at the telephone pavilion. The Prime Minister was good enough to say that he had a personal interest in this matter and that something would be done. Four weeks have now passed, and perhaps he could tell us about the progress of negotiations to have this film retained in Canada.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): These negotiations are progressing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Similar questions have been asked by other hon. members and the Chair suggested that such questions could not be asked at this time. I therefore make the same suggestion to the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Winch: My question relates to an answer the Prime Minister gave me four weeks ago; I was asking whether negotiations had been completed.

Mr. Pearson: They are not completed but they are progressing.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I ask the Secretary of State whether she will make inquiries to see whether any negotiations are proceeding for the release of a film relating to Mr. Pearson?

Mr. Pearson: That is progressing, too.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PRINTING OF CLOSING SPEECHES AS "HANSARD" APPENDIX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. This being the day after the closing of Expo, and in order that parliament might take note in its records of the very successful way in which this tremendous project was brought to a conclusion yesterday, would the Prime Minister consider asking the house to have the speeches which were made during the closing ceremonies printed as an appendix to Hansard? I am sure the right hon. gentleman would agree that the speeches were very good.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, I would have no objection. I agree that the speeches were very good. Some, indeed, were excellent.

Mr. Knowles: The last speech was the best one.

MINING

NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO MINING INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Has the minister, who visited the most beautiful constituency in Canada last weekend—namely my own—received any request for assistance from northwestern Quebec, faced at present with a precarious situation in the mining field?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): No, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

HALIFAX—PLACING OF HARBOUR BUOYS IN MACKEREL AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister advise the house whether he has received any representations from fishermen in the area of Halifax harbour with regard to the placement of electronic equipment, buoys and so on, in the middle of the mackerel fishing area?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO REMEMBRANCE DAY HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I have a question I should like to address to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Remembrance day, November 11, falls on a Saturday this year, has a decision been taken to allow a government holiday on Monday, November 13?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): With respect to the civil service no decision is necessary, because if a statutory holiday falls on a non-working day the following working day is a holiday.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Industry for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 will be found on page 238 of the blue book and the details of services on page 239.

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $10,568,300.

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks I should like to address to the minister on this occasion. He may perhaps recall that on November 4, 1964 I brought to his attention the matter of introducing into this country the metric system. He gave me what I thought was a very courteous hearing. I was endeavouring particularly to emphasize the point that if this system is to come into operation in this country, where it is not in use now except very slightly in a scientific way, a great deal of preparatory work will be required. My attention was directed to this matter at that time because Dr. Howlett had written an article which received a great deal of coverage. It emphasized to my mind the necessity for the introduction of this system. I tried to point out that based on my own experience I felt this was a very necessary and worth-while action, that it would simplify scientific work in the nation and would be of great help to the consumers who would find it would be much simpler to compare the cost of cans of food, butter and other articles that are commonly sold.

I had hoped that by this time in 1967, almost three years later, some evidence would be before us that the government had taken some steps to institute this system. I regret to say that I have seen none at all. I doubt that anybody else has either. This does not make the matter any less important. Therefore I should like to emphasize again, without going over all the evidence I did on that occasion, that the metric system is accepted practically all over the world. It would assist us greatly in our external trade and in the operation of business within the country if we used it. It would help the consumer and would help all students in this country because they would not be compelled to learn a very awkward and inefficient system. Instead, students could use a simple and efficient system in its place. I hope the minister will have some comments to make on this matter when he gets up to speak later in this debate.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, earlier this afternoon there was an attempt made on both sides of the house to discuss a serious situation in the province of British Columbia. At the time I thought to myself that it really is closely connected with the business before us now. I should like to deal with it on the basis of the responsibility of this department and the minister for the situation which has arisen in the city of Victoria.

As was pointed out earlier today, the oldest shipbuilding firm on the west coast of Canada is closing at the end of the year having been sold to another shipbuilding firm, the Burrard Drydock Company of North Vancouver. The new owners propose to shut down the firm in Victoria and cease its shipbuilding operations. In the announcement of the closure of this yard on the west coast the president, Mr. Harold Husband, reported he had had a report from a reliable source in Ottawa that the government was proposing to cancel its program for the building of vessels for the coastguard on the west coast of Canada. I do not know whether we shall ever be told what the policy of the government is in this regard or whether, as usual, we will have to wait for the evidence of its neglect to accumulate before our eyes.

What does strike me about this situation, however, is that not only has the government failed to go through with a program which has long been necessary but that there also is a much more serious failure on the part of the government to develop the Canadian economy. There is something fantastic and absurd in the spectacle of this very wealthy country apparently being unable to support a shipbuilding industry and unable apparently to support a merchant marine, when we compare Canada with that much smaller nation, Sweden, whose population is hardly more than one third that of Canada and which is today in the process of constructing new shipbuilding yards. We are not doing this for the simple reason, of course, that this government is not concerned about the development of a mature economy in Canada. It is much happier that the iron ore mined in the constituency of my seatmate, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, should be shipped to Japan. It is much happier not to have a steel industry established on the west coast and apparently is much happier that a gradual contraction is taking place on both sides of the country.

On the east coast the coal mines are being shut down and on the west coast shipbuilding is being shut down because the government has not undertaken its responsibilities with regard to the development of the Canadian economy. I am again reminded of the singular lack of enthusiasm displayed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce when I asked him, at a meeting of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, whether he did not consider that the first duty of the government is to ensure the development of the Canadian economy. The minister said that it was one of the responsibilities of the government but that the government had to be concerned also about our export trade.

I suggest that events such as the one in Victoria indicate it is time the government began to accept the role that government must play in the modern world. It is no longer sufficient for government, as this government seems to want to do all the time, merely to go through the motions of being a referee between contending forces in our society. That age is gone. It now is time for the government to become a player in the economic game of the country.

Yesterday I was interested to learn through the press of a report, which emanated from mysterious sources in the same way all such reports do, to the effect that the government has in mind a role for the Canada Development Corporation which will be very different from that envisaged by the former minister of finance, the present President of the Privy Council. The report suggested that the Canada Development Corporation would play some part in the restructuring of Canadian industry for which members in this party have been pressing for two years now. I shall be interested to see how far the government will go in this regard. It may be that the government at last is awaking to the necessity to take action to develop our own economy.

I would suggest in respect of the closing of the Victoria Machinery Depot, which will take place apparently because the Burrard Drydock Company does not consider it worth keeping open inasmuch as the government has failed to go through with its plans for a coastguard service and is still leaving us dependent on the U.S. coastguard service, although in the face of an emergency it will couple together the air force, the towboat companies and various other interests, that the government should proceed with its program of coastguard vessel construction. I suggest it is time the government took a look at this situation. I suggest that as a first step it should re-establish the shipbuilding industry on the west coast and, for that matter, on the east coast, and that it should go through with the coastguard vessel construction program. It should adopt a program of building new and more up to date vessels to service lighthouses and for buoy marking, which according to the report has also been cancelled. The government should take definite steps to encourage the development of a steel industry on the west coast of Canada where there are the natural resources to support it and where we obviously have a need for the steel that could be produced there.

One of the difficulties the shipbuilding industry of British Columbia has been facing is that in my province the workers commendably have been able to extract more satisfactory wages from their employers than workers in the same industry on the east coast and in central Canada have. Their wages are about a dollar an hour more than wages in eastern or central Canada. Even more important has been the cost of transporting components and steel supplies from central and eastern Canada. This is a clear indication that this government has abdicated its role of governing in the modern age and is going to let the whole economy wither on the vine. It merely exemplifies what a correspondent of mine had to say in a letter I received from him. He is a Canadian newspaper correspondent stationed abroad, and he remarked that in looking at his own country from abroad it occurred to him that the government is allowing the economy to veer like a tank completely out of control from one ditch to another in the hope it will be able to avoid complete catastrophe by doing nothing and by refusing to take the driver's seat in making the economy move forward in the twentieth century and into the twenty first.

It appears that this government is much more concerned about having this country as an adjunct or ancillary to our great friend next door. I am sure it considers there is something wrong in developing a forceful and viable economy of our own because it does nothing whatever to encourage it and everything to discourage it. This is just another example of the results of the government's inaction.

It is my hope that the government will not allow too many more plants to shut down because we are going to see a picture of despair in the form of the minister of manpower who valiantly tries to slip men into new slots as the slots they are now in close behind them. The slots are closing all over the country today and very soon the minister of manpower will be in the position of not being able to place these displaced people in our economy, particularly if his colleagues who determine and control the over-all economy are permitted to have their way.

I hope the warning signals now flying in Nova Scotia and British Columbia alert the Canadian people to the dangers of leaving their affairs in the hands of a government which refuses to govern, a government, indeed, whose philosophy is that government is best when it does the least governing and interferes as little as possible. This is a government which is committed entirely to an outmoded doctrinaire system which no longer exists, that of free enterprise.

The people of Canada are now paying a huge price for this attitude and the people of my province are going to pay a very high price as a result of this example of governmental neglect to stabilize and remedy the situation that resulted in the closing of this shipyard. I am afraid this may only be the first in a series of closures which may result in the most drastic economic decline in Canada. This will surely happen unless the government finally summons the courage and intelligence to start governing and directing the economy, as only the government can in this day and age.

I have received telegrams from people in Victoria who are greatly distressed by this situation and hope we can do something to avert this local tragedy. I do not suppose we can avert it. I have no doubts whatever that the government knew very well it was not going to go ahead with the building program which might have kept this shipyard in existence. I have no doubt it has known this for many months but has done nothing about it. The government has not even warned the unfortunate victims of its folly, as was the case in respect of Dosco. If the government did not know this was going to happen, all I can say is, this is further proof that the government is thoroughly incompetent and unfit to control the affairs of Canada.

Mr. Bower: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the estimates of the Minister of Industry because I believe he is interested in these matters. His estimates have multiplied some threefold during the period from 1966-67 to 1967-68. This would tend to make one believe he is going to work at least three times as hard on behalf of industry.

Last week during the consideration of the estimates of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration the hon. members for Waterloo South and Bow River made points which I think are very significant and have an application to what I am about to say. The hon. member for Waterloo South said that this government has been prone to allow one crisis after another to develop which should have been foreseen and avoided. He suggested that at least mitigating action should have been taken.

The hon. member for Bow River very succinctly called attention to another penchant of this government, that of operating with very little co-ordination between departments. He pointed out how this had an effect on the energetic and well-meaning minister of manpower by making him the patsy or fall guy. Surely there is a relationship between industry and manpower. If industry is not promoted and fostered sufficiently the minister of manpower will have added problems.

My constituency is located in the western end of Nova Scotia. Its economy is relatively weak as is the economy of the general area and the province compared with that in other parts of the country. Fishing, of course, is the major industry in my constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare, but great efforts have been devoted to developing secondary industry in the area and there is an incipient growth in this respect which is all to the good. However, I should like to point out that the average income in my area is much lower than in Cape Breton, for example, about which we have been hearing a great deal lately.

Recently the small enterprises which have been growing and developing in Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare have been faced with the horrendous situation of preposterous freight rate increases. I can think of no other way in which to describe them. I do not wish to go into a great deal of detail but I should like to take a case in point as an illustration of the difficulty small enterprises face as a result of the freight rate increases.

There has been built up in Clare in a small rural area a furniture factory which employs some 70 or 80 men. It has built up markets all over the maritimes, and a particularly good one in Newfoundland. Under the new rates the railroads are proposing the following are some of the increases. From Weymouth, the shipping point for this factory, to Saint John, New Brunswick, the freight rate proposed is $9.38, compared with the present rate of $2.68. To Moncton, New Brunswick, the proposed rate is $15.82 compared with the present rate of $4.29. To Halifax the rate is $11.76 compared with $3.19. To Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, the rate is $16.94 compared with the present rate of $4.60. To Sydney, where the furniture is transshipped to Newfoundland, the rate is to go from $5.36 to $17.78 for a chesterfield suite, that is, a chesterfield and a chair.

Rates like these will put this small plant and others like it out of business. They are not large enough to ship carload lots so they will be subjected to these exorbitant rates. I quote only these figures, Mr. Chairman, but there are in my area many other similar small enterprises which will be equally adversely affected. It seems to me that the Department of Industry should be equally as alert to prevent the demise of industries as it is to encourage new industry.

I come back to my original point, the one made by the hon. member for Bow River. I believe that the Minister of Industry should make it a point to play an effective role with his colleagues in seeing that these proposed freight rates are not put into effect. I again refer to the point made by the hon. member for Waterloo South and his criticism of allowing crises to occur. This is just the sort of thing that should be avoided, and I believe the province of Nova Scotia and probably all the maritime provinces will be very alert in watching to see what is done in this regard.

I should like to spend a moment discussing the fishery, the main industry of my area. Here again, through lack of co-ordination the growth of the industry is being severely circumscribed because of the lack of increased facilities in the infrastructure of the industry. I have here a copy of the Yarmouth newspaper with a picture of the public wharf just after it was built. I believe it was completed in 1964. The picture shows that there was at that time a normal amount of shipping around the wharf. A picture taken during the first week of October shows that you cannot see the wharf for ships. The seiners and trawlers are clustered around it, and in places these ships are six or seven deep. Obviously crowding to this extent inhibits efficient fishing operations. I take this opportunity of calling to the attention of the Minister of Industry the fact that here is an industry whose growth is being impeded by inadequate facilities. I also point out that this is occurring in an area where the economy is fragile.

The laying off of 70 or 80 men in a constituency such as mine, in an area such as the one in which the furniture factory to which I have referred is located, is equivalent to the laying off of thousands in a larger area. I ask the Minister of Industry to make it a point in his dealings with his colleagues to emphasize the need to avoid freight rate increases that are out of all proportion and will have the effect of killing the existing industries that we have. I also emphasize the necessity of providing new facilities and the enlargement of existing facilities where this is necessary because of the growth of industry.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, there are a few brief comments I should like to make in connection with these estimates. One of my colleagues say that is a refreshing change, but I understand there is agreement that these estimates will be passed by five o'clock and I know that other hon. members wish to participate in the debate. Therefore it is not possible, as I would have liked to have done, to review this interesting department, but I know how much the minister enjoys sitting in the house and listening in his genial, friendly and co-operative manner to comments from the opposition.

However, I cannot but hark back to the birth of this department. It was an event likened to the coming of the second messiah. It was the great new department which was going to cure all our problems, rationalize all Canadian industry and implement adjustments in the automotive industry. It would also take care of any trade adjustments under the Kennedy round. In short, it would do everything in a wonderful way.

The minister has learned the great art practised in Otttawa. Not only does he know his way around as a former deputy minister but he has also developed the political techniques of how to build an empire. The size of this department has increased in a completely inverse ratio to its accomplishments. It has trebled in size. No matter what we on this side of the house say the minister goes about in a lively way surrounded by his prize whiz kids and determined to preserve his view that the opposition are a bunch of dunderheads who really do not know anything anyway. He merely tolerates us as his estimates go through the house.

I would have liked to go through his department in detail but we had a good go at it last time and I know the minister must get away. As I said, I am not sure it would be productive or that there would be any real purpose in doing so. As an empire builder the minister is wonderful. He has out-Caesared Caesar himself, at least so far as the growth of the department is concerned.

I want to say a word or two about the automotive pact which, as the minister knows, is my perennially favourite subject. If he does not have an opportunity to answer a couple of points I wish to raise, perhaps some of the departmental officials might send me some information about them if it exists. We are told on good authority that great pressure is being exerted by the United States government, the United States motor car companies and their subsidiaries in Canada for a drastic reduction in the Canadian content under the agreement with the possible goal of eliminating it entirely. If this is true we should know about it. It is not necessarily a bad thing if it is prepared for. If there is a sufficient competitive advantage on each side it may be a desirable end. However, I hope the government will not keep it a secret until the last moment as it has done with everything else under this agreement.

I hope the government will make this type of information available. I realize that at least in the initial years some built-in protection is perhaps necessary under the agreement but it may be that it is possible to reduce it later and perhaps in time remove it. I would like to hear the minister's comment in this regard. However, we know there is pressure from the United States and we should like to know its source and strength and the government's likely response to it.

I think that in one area the agreement has been a total failure. Everyone admits that employment has increased in the automotive industry and that because of changes dislocations are not as great as they were. In fact I think there was only one case this year. It occurred in the Chrysler company and it was not really serious. Of course we do not know whether the general expansion in the automotive industry would have taken place in any event. But in one area, that of prices, the agreement seems to be a failure.

When the agreement was approved by parliament some years ago one of its great selling points, both inside the house and more specifically outside the house as stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, was that it would ultimately result in a reduction in prices and that the advantages given to the companies under the agreement would in a reasonable space of time be passed on to the public in the form of lower automobile prices. We heard of the $50 million which the poor, debt-ridden General Motors Corporation and the others needed to build new plants. They needed it like a hole in the head but they got it just the same. The straw which was thrown to us was the statement that this would bring about lower prices. This did not happen. The public has been sold out by the government. Prices have not come down. The consumer has not benefited in any real way. The disparity in prices has not narrowed, as we were told it would, and the promise that the public would benefit has not been fulfilled.

Why does the minister not take the one obvious step which would accomplish this? For several years now we have asked the government to remove the tariff on automobile imports as it applies to individuals. It is true that the companies have this advantage, but why does he not give it to everyone else? This would be the most effective way of forcing the motor car companies to reduce their prices. If they did not want to do it all one would have to do if one lived near the border would be to drive over to Buffalo and buy a car there and the $200 one saved would give one a good week end while over there. I do not understand why the government continues to sell the public short and will not take any steps to remedy this situation.

The other question I should like to put to the minister is with regard to his position on trade adjustment assistance. To what degree is this matter dealt with by the Department of Trade and Commerce? We have been told for years now that Canada's salvation lies in the trade adjustments taking place under the Kennedy tariff cuts. We also know that in the short run this may well mean a significant hardship for Canadians. Many of our small industries which have grown up behind tariff walls will probably die when these walls are blown away by the new trade winds. We have never been able to get a commitment from the government for a trade adjustment act and genuine trade adjustment assistance. What is the position of the department in this regard?

I know that the Department of Industry has cannibalized many other departments to build its own staff but how will it co-ordinate its work with, for example, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Finance in order to convince not just the business community but labour and the municipalities which have just as big a stake in whatever industrial changes will take place? It is not good enough for the minister to run around the country holding conferences with business alone. Municipalities have great investments in these communities and there is a great capital debt built up. Unions have the investment of their men in these communities. I would like to know how the department will deal with the whole problem of trade assistance under the Kennedy tariff proposals in the next year or two.

Finally, I cannot help but make reference to Dosco in view of the minister's speech the other day in which he spoke about focusing on specific economic and technological problems, etc. These are very nice and good words. We have heard them from him ever since the department was established. I was in Sydney before the last general election attending a nomination meeting. I went down there primarily out of interest in the area. The economic problems of Dosco, its run-down equipment, its lack of proper markets, and the unwillingness of the owners to modernize and to seek other products and other markets have been known for five years. This has been a known fact both in that area and in Ottawa. I should like to know whether the department is taking a look at sick industries and, if so, what kind of studies are being made.

These are the only points I wish to raise and I believe they are relevant to the future of this department. I have never been impressed with the department. I am told that half of the whiz kids sit around in utter frustration because there is no real cohesion, no real direction from the minister in assigning projects. I know that many provincial representatives have given up because they cannot find what the department is studying when they come down here to talk to the department. It is all very hush, hush.

There may be a place for this department. It seems to me that at the moment its status and its co-ordination with other important departments have not been defined, have not been effectively worked out. If we had the time I should like to spend a few hours with the minister asking him for more specific answers to some of these questions. As I say, the minister may be able to satisfy us on these points. I hope he will at least try. With these words we will let the minister go for another year.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a couple of questions to the minister, one of a general nature and one of a more specific nature.

I am bound to say also that in putting the questions I appreciate the fact that all members of the committee are in the same difficult position as I am because of the ridiculous 30-day limitation on the discussion of supply. We find now that we have two and a half days left for discussion of the estimates of several important departments. A number of members make general remarks as well as asking specific questions. These take the whole of the one day now allotted to each remaining department, so the minister is able to ride it out comfortably by simply sitting there and not dealing with our questions. Then, if there are any objections that by the end of the day he has not answered any questions, he says there were so many members who had things to say, that he wanted to hear everything they had to say, and the time allowed expired before he was able to answer questions.

The result will be that members who have had serious questions to ask are left without answers as a result of these rules. Another result of this situation will be that some time Thursday hundreds of millions of dollars, probably billions of dollars of estimates will be passed in a few minutes, the subject matter of many of which have not even been referred to, let alone discussed in committee of supply. Discussion of the estimates will be closed and scores, if not hundreds, of questions that have been asked will be left unanswered.

As I say, the Minister of Industry is not responsible for this rule. However, I feel it is important we should point up the situation as I am doing now, because the position it leaves this committee of supply in has now been amply demonstrated so that it should be obvious to everybody that the continuation of this rule should neither be sought nor acceded to if it is sought. In addition, I should like to suggest to the minister with regard to his current estimates that he should consider following the course of answering questions as they are addressed to him, even although there may be other speeches to be made later and other questions to be asked later.

This brings me to my question. I should like to ask the minister if he can tell us whether any appreciable change is contemplated at the moment in the list or composition of the designated areas across the country? I may as well tell the minister that there have been rumours that he is contemplating making an important statement in the very near future in which he will say that a review has been made and the situation of a number of designated areas has improved to the point where they can now be—how will I put it—de-designated. I am asking the minister whether in fact he is contemplating any such move. If so, will he take the committee into his confidence today by giving us a list of such areas and a summary of the progress made as well as the reasons these areas are to be removed from the list?

Second, I should like to renew a request I made of the minister with regard to my own area of Kamloops and particularly the district of Merritt within that area. In my constituency, sir, we are immediately adjacent to another splendid area of British Columbia, the Okanagan valley. I should make it clear that the Thompson valley in which Kamloops is and the Okanagan valley are contiguous but they are not the same, although their physical, geographic and economic bases are very much the same. However, we find ourselves in my district in a non-designated area whereas the Okanagan—I may say to everybody's surprise including initially that of the premier of the province—is at least the first of not the only area of British Columbia which was designated. I may say that Premier Bennett was greatly surprised to be told that his home town area, including Kelowna, was designated as the poorest or as having a standard of income lower than any other part of British Columbia. However, I believe Premier Bennett has been able to reconcile himself to that designation because it has been found to be of substantial benefit to the Okanagan.

But the result has been that industries which have been contemplating settling somewhere in the interior of British Columbia have, understandably, all gone to the Okanagan area. May I say to the minister in all sincerity that I have been asked to take up this matter by my constituents, not in the spirit of a dog in the manger saying that he should take designation from the Okanagan and give it to the Kamloops area. On the contrary, we are happy if it is helping them, but if you feel you must leave them as they are, then you must also designate the Kamloops area which has the same basic geographic and economic features.

There have been at least two specific instances which have concerned our people in the Kamloops area, where industries which had first been considering settling in Kamloops have been attracted to the Okanagan area by these various incentives. The two areas are only 70 miles apart, but as they have the same access to markets, the same availability of labour and so on, it is only natural that with the incentives the industries have gone to the Okanagan area. Kamloops businessmen are now having to compete with subsidized businesses in the Okanagan area.

Those people on whose behalf I am speaking are not resentful of the good fortune that has come to the Okanagan by virtue of being designated. We do say, however, that it was never the basic intention to create such discrimination between two immediately adjacent areas as results from designating the one area and not designating the other. So I repeat my request to the minister that the Kamloops area be designated. Indeed, early this spring when we had the matter under discussion by way of correspondence, the minister said that the whole basis for designating areas was to be reviewed and that he would be in touch with me after that. I hope that as a result of the review he will be able to tell me that the Kamloops area will be designated.

Within this area there is the particular district of Merritt, which suffers from the economic disadvantage of having had a decline in employment in the area. The town is primarily dependent upon the Craigmont mine, a strip mining operation which has been closed, and upon a number of lumbering industries which will suffer a further decline in employment in the near future as a result of having their allowable quotas cut under the provincial forest regulations. Merritt now has an emergency situation. I hesitate to apply this description to any area but Merritt has an economy which is definitely depressed in relation to the economy of the rest of the interior of British Columbia and with relation to the area immediately surrounding it.

Therefore I would ask the minister and the minister of manpower to get together and arrange that the Merritt portion of my constituency be included within the jurisdiction of a manpower centre in the Okanagan area of designated area thereby including Merritt within an area that has already been designated. That is to say, Mr. Chairman, if we find that there is going to be delay and difficulty in getting the Kamloops area as a whole made a designated area, then I hope the minister and his colleague, the minister of manpower, will immediately get together and work out an arrangement whereby the Merritt portion of this area can be included within an Okanagan manpower centre, so that it will at last get the benefit of being included in a designated area.

These matters have been under discussion with the minister by way of correspondence since the beginning of this year and I recently renewed the request to transfer this area, but I see no indication of any progress. Perhaps something is on the verge of being done. But I bring these matters up now, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my constituency in this commmittee of supply and I press them here, because in my view the situation in these two areas not only demands action now but also indicates the measure of unreality in the methods by which areas are designated and the undesirable consequences that flow from those methods.

And I remind the minister that I couple this request for action in these particular cases with the request for information in the general case, namely, that the minister should let us know if there is under contemplation any substantial change by way of moving areas out of the category of designated areas into the category of non-designated areas.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the minister a question about a matter that I think falls within the purview of his department. It has to do with plans for the economic development of the 11 eastern counties of Nova Scotia.

The other day I happened to be in Calgary at a meeting which was attended by the minister of forestry. In the course of a very eloquent speech about the virtues of economic planning the minister of forestry gave as an example of the economic planning that is going on under the aegis partly of his department, other departments of the government and other provincial departments the extensive surveys that have been undertaken of the potential economic development of the 11 eastern counties—I do not have his speech in front of me but I think there are 11—in Nova Scotia. I might say that this was just about the time of the announcement of Dosco's proposal to shut down the steel plant at Sydney.

The minister said that these surveys had revealed that by far the most promising development in meeting the serious economic needs of the region related to deep sea harbours on the strait of Canso that would be capable of berthing the supercarriers which, according to the rather enthusiastic account of the minister of forestry, would be able to carry ore and potash to every corner of the world. I think the minister mentioned during the course of his remarks that the natural advantages of these harbours far exceeded anything presently available in the United States.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, the minister gave this illustration of the virtue of economic planning by various departments. As I remember, he went on to point out that the various departments of government with which he was concerned in Ottawa could not plan effectively to deal with the problems of agriculture in the area without there being economic planning to deal with other developments in the area, and in this regard he cited this particular prospect in Nova Scotia which I think he described as exciting.

I too think this is a very exciting prospect, but as the Department of Industry would surely be concerned about this question—indeed, every department of government should give its co-operation in view of the prospect the minister of forestry spoke of—I should like to ask the Minister of Industry whether his department is aware of this situation and is co-operating in achieving the co-ordination that will be required with other departments. It seemed to me that the matter did not fall under the jurisdiction of the minister of forestry except as it affected certain aspects of agriculture in the area but that it affected the government as a whole, particularly the Department of Industry and this minister.

It seems to me that either this prospect should be explored with all possible vigour, with full assistance from other departments of the government and the government of Nova Scotia, or if it is just a dream or fantasy and these economic surveys do not evidence the prospect that the minister outlined then this should be made perfectly clear. Otherwise the whole thing is a delusion, a snare, and amounts to a mockery of the people in that part of the country who are so deeply concerned that something be done to deal with their economic problems. I should like to ask the minister to deal with this matter when he replies.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, there are a few comments I should like to make. First of all, may I say how glad I was to see the minister in my part of the country a few months ago. I thought he did a very good job in opening the new building. As a matter of fact, as he went around on tour he looked at this and looked at that and it reminded me of the story about Checkpoint Charlie. I do not say that unkindly. The minister was asking how this was done and how that was done, the reasons for this and the reasons for that, and this was all to the good.

I should like to ask the minister whether there has been any consultation with the provincial governments through his department in connection with sharing the cost of helping industry to establish itself in low growth areas. I refer to programs additional to those now being operated by his department. If he has had consultation, will he tell us what the situation is? If not, when is the department going to conduct consultations on this point?

Many of these slow growth areas have residents who have to travel some distance to work in other towns or cities. These workers commute from their own town or city, which provides them with hospital, school and ancillary services without receiving compensatory taxation, to work in another town. Their own town derives no benefit from the industry but the city where they work does. The views of those who will present briefs on the Carter and Smith taxation studies with respect to depressed areas will need to be considered.

My second question is, what assistance is industry being given to make changes which will eliminate air pollution? Such assistance is most important as air pollution may have a very detrimental effect on the health of Canadians. Is the Department of Industry assisting plants to make those changes which will diminish air pollution? Extensive changes must be made in many cases.

I realize that help is given to industries in acquiring land and in getting rid of refuse heaps that may be lying around and detracting from and polluting the ground. My question is, is air pollution being considered? If not, will the minister say so. Pollution concerns the Department of Industry, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. These three government departments must work together in coping with problems of pollution.

I also wish to ask whether the minister knows what Canadian industries will be hit by the Kennedy round of tariff adjustments. I am thinking particularly of the chemical and shoe industries. What will happen to the chemical, shoe and allied industries once the adjustments come into effect? Have any ground rules been laid down to protect them so that they may keep on manufacturing in this country?

I also wish to ask what the government has done to protect the drug industry? What is the score there? I wish the minister would indicate what steps may be taken to protect our drug manufacturers, what studies have been undertaken, what are the results of those studies, and what the government proposes to do generally to protect our drug industry.

I also wish to ask whether industry has been consulted with respect to building industrial plants in designated areas where there is high unemployment. At present our program in this regard is a hodgepodge across Canada. Knowing of this hodgepodge, I wonder what satellite towns may have been planned, if any. It is all very well to locate industries in certain areas and satellite cities in another area, but transportation facilities must be provided to take the workers from their homes to the factories and back. Otherwise they will use their cars, with all the resulting pollution. Are there guide lines for this problem?

I believe the questions I have asked are of great interest to Canadian industry. Planning to take care of industry's requirements must be undertaken now. We should not wait until problems come crowding in. For these reasons I have asked the minister to give up his ideas and to let us know what has been done in the fields I have spoken of.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have only two very brief remarks to make on the Department of Industry and Defence Production estimates. They may seem repetitious because they have been made already but, as we say, each one must look after his own interests.

First of all, I should like to second what one of the hon. members of the official opposition said this afternoon when he urged the minister to take steps for the adoption of the metric system, or at least to look into he possibility of adopting it here. I second that suggestion for a rather peculiar reason: for two years now, I have had a notice of motion on the order paper recommending to the government that a commission should be set up to study the best means of adopting the metric system in Canada.

It is a rather long process. One can assume that it will take eight, ten or twelve years to implement it everywhere in Canada, but I feel that Canada is already late in this regard.

A few years ago, Great Britain appointed a committee to study the matter which committee recommended that the metric system should be adopted in Great Britain. Recently, the same was done in the United States, and I feel that if the Canadian government delays too much in taking similar steps, we will wake up and find ourselves somewhat isolated amongst western countries with which we deal. As private members, naturally, we can give notice of motions. But we know the process is long and that it would be much simpler if the minister decided to appoint a committee to study how best the metric system could be adopted as soon as possible.

So much for my first comment. I wholeheartedly support this recommendation made by one of the members of the official opposition.

My second observation is somewhat in the same vein as those made by some other hon. members with regard to designated areas. I know that there can be no perfect laws, but I think there is some injustice in certain cases. Take for example the case of my own riding. The towns of Trois-Rivières and Cap-de-la-Madeleine certainly cannot be considered underdeveloped and badly off to the point of being chosen as designated areas. But I think that to establish standards according to the prosperity of the towns of Trois-Rivières and Cap-de-la-Madeleine is unfair because there are many small municipalities around those two large urban centres which are not designated and where there is much unemployment.

Those jobless people are coming to Trois-Rivières and Cap-de-la-Madeleine and taking the jobs away from the citizens there. That creates a difficult situation because many of them come from rural parishes, where farms are so unproductive or the soil so sandy that they cannot be cultivated economically enough to enable them to support their families. Consequently, a great number of municipalities have a very high rate of unemployment and many jobless come to Trois-Rivières and Cap-de-la-Madeleine where they take the jobs away from the citizens of these two cities.

I wonder whether it would be possible, when the departmental officials make surveys to establish standards and determine whether an area can be "designated", to parcel out the area because, if I understand well, an area covered by the unemployment insurance office has better chance of being taken into consideration. Therefore, I think that the areas which are not entities or have nothing in common with Trois-Rivières and Cap-de-la-Madeleine should not be part of that territory. I have in mind, for instance, Baie-Jolie, Trois-Rivières-Ouest, Pointe-du-Lac, Yamachiche, Saint-Étienne-des-Grès, Saint-Boniface, Saint-Barnabé-Nord and a few other small municipalities such as Saint-Thomas-de-Caxton which have no industries but would welcome a few because they are not very far from centres such as Trois-Rivières and would be in a position to offer appropriate services which would enable those people to earn their living at home instead of coming to Trois-Rivières or Cap-de-la-Madeleine, to take jobs away from those who live in those two cities, who pay taxes and who contribute of course to the creation of the services used by the residents.

I am pointing it out to the minister, and I am reminding him that I have taken the liberty of writing him to that effect in the past days, in order to explain the situation, because once again I feel that if the whole area covered by the unemployment insurance commission is reviewed to establish those standards, I think that such a procedure can lead to discrimination. It would be advisable to set aside a part of that area and consider it as a distinct unit and to designate it so that a few medium size or small industries could establish themselves there, benefit from the resulting advantages and, finally, clear the congested industries of Trois-Rivières to enable residents of Trois-Rivières or Cap-de-la-Madeleine to earn a livelihood.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let the estimates of the Minister of Industry and of Defence Production (Mr. Drury) be considered without making a few remarks. But I will be very brief.

I come from a constituency, particularly from a city, where the textile and the shoe industries are the most important. Naturally, the Kennedy Round negotiations did not fail to cause some concern among many of the industrialists in my area and I should like to call the attention of the minister to the importance of these two industries. At home, the textile industry gives work to many people and imports from Japan, Asia, Italy and many other countries should not be allowed to deprive the workers of my city and of my constituency of the wages to which they are entitled.

I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Industry to take the measures required to protect the jobs of these workers.

The same holds for the shoe industry which has suffered considerable losses in the past years. It is known that since 1962, 28 shoe manufactures in the province of Quebec had to close their doors as a result of the competition from countries that are called underdeveloped.

Products imported from these countries into the Canadian market have unfortunate result for Canadian workers and I should like to ask the hon. minister to take measures so that the necessary protection is given to those of my compatriots who get their livelihood from the textile industry as well as from the shoe industry.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief, but before agreeing to the estimates of the Department of Industry and Defence Production amounting to $146,785,-300, which is a rather large sum the minister, I feel, should be reminded that his department must not operate only in one area or in a few areas of Canada but in all of them.

The $146 millions we are asked to vote should not all be spent in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver or Edmonton. Other areas should also be thought of, and among these there is my own area of the northwest of Quebec.

We see here, for instance, in a statutory item, that the department will spend $29,-000,000 to stimulate creation of jobs in industry in certain areas of the country.

Well, as far as my own area is concerned, it has not been recognized as a designated area, because according to the government departments, the number of unemployed does not allow the area to be designated. I want to call the minister's attention to the following fact: When mines are closing—for instance the one that was devastated by fire last week, as a result of which 250 to 300 miners have been laid off—these people are not considered as unemployed. Most of them live on farms and, as farmers or settlers, they are not considered as unemployed. Others who receive social welfare benefits, are not considered as unemployed either, and besides all those, we have thousands of people who, according to the department, are not considered as unemployed.

[Mr. Ricard.]

It does not matter whether the Department of Industry or the Department of Labour is concerned, one fact remains: our area is deprived of industries merely because the departments say that it is an area that cannot be designated, since there are not enough unemployed.

Another point is that several of those miners who are laid off or discharged leave the mines to go to northern Manitoba, northern Ontario or north of Amos which is in our area, but some 180 miles from where we live.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Department of Industry should anticipate those situations —somebody talked about planning—especially when one knows what will happen. The minister must be aware that some half dozen mines will perhaps close down within two or three years in our area, including the Quemont and Lake Duffault mines. In fact, even Noranda may have to lay off from 800 to 1,000 men in seven or eight years, since its production will be reduced. What do we have to replace those mines? Absolutely nothing.

Yet those people have lived in the area for 40 and 45 years and after 40 or 45 years, men of 60 or 65 years of age and their families have to leave the area, when it would be a lot easier to encourage the establishment of secondary industries in our area after all which is a civilized one, and one of opportunity.

For instance, what step is the Department of Industry taking at the present time to assist the exploration for new mines, with regard to prospection? We all know, including the hon. minister, that there are enormous iron, iron pyrites, zinc, nickel and copper deposits in our area. The deposits are there. The question is to locate them, to develop them by opening up new mines.

If it is necessary then to encourage companies by means of a tax reduction. I think this would make it possible for them to employ thousands of people who, in turn, would pay income tax and thus help replenish the federal treasury. But no, nothing is being done. It might be said that the whole matter comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec. That may be, but nothing prevents Ottawa from co-operating and assisting in the locating of those deposits or the possible establishment of new industries.

We have just heard, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Industry, but the minister of energy tell us, for example, that we grant subsidies to gold and coal mining in our region in order to allow these industries to disappear peacefully.

Yet we are sure that we are able to export all our gold production to the United States. The United States undertake to buy all the gold we produce. We are told that we must grant subsidies and that this costs Canada more than to buy gold from other countries and pass it on to the United States.

Mr. Chairman, according to this line of reasoning, it appears that we sell the wheat produced in western Canada below cost. The government has never mentioned the possibility of cutting down wheat production. Yet, we are not sure that we can sell our entire wheat production. In spite of that, the government has agreed to pay for all the wheat produced in western Canada, even if it cannot be exported.

All our gold can be exported, and that is guaranteed. The same applies to Dosco steel in Cape Breton or Sydney. We are certain that our entire output will be exported. I understand that this steel will have to be marketed at the best price, or at prices lower than production costs but, Mr. Chairman, that does not alter my argument to the effect that we can export our total output of these products, because some countries have indicated they would purchase our full production, whereas, in the case of wheat, we have no certainty of exporting all our production.

Mr. Speaker, I come to my point, namely that an area such as mine, where many young people are in fact unemployed, although not considered as such, should be included among designated areas and get government assistance for the establishment or development of new industries.

We should also get aid from the federal government for the exploration of new ore bodies and the establishment of new mining operations in our area.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to see in the department's estimates—even if we hear about funds to help create new job opportunities in industry in some areas of Canada, not even in the details at page 241—any aid for the northwestern Quebec area. It is vague.

We know that the department will spend $146 millions, that is an increase of $95,802,-899 over last year. But long suffering areas are forgotten. I warn the minister that the problem will be tricky, it will be serious in a few years. Now, is the time to prepare for it. A government which is a good administrator foresees calamities or economic tragedies.

If the government does not take a stand at the present time and does not take action to assist certain areas in the northwest of Quebec, or the northeastern region of Ontario which includes Timmins, Kirkland Lake, Cochrane, Hearst, up to Sudbury, we shall be faced, in a few years, with a manpower problem, with an intolerable situation quite inacceptable in a country such as ours.

World markets can be found for the iron produced in our area, which might promote the opening up of four or five important mines for its extraction and, furthermore, its processing at home, in our area.

But markets are not sought, and no attempt is made to increase our production or develop new industries.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the government may not have any solution. Yet, we have one that the government refuses either to apply or to use. When we ask, for instance, that our financial institution called the Bank of Canada should be used to finance the development of our natural resources, the government is at a loss to understand this. If the government rejects our solution, our theory, let it at least offer one. Under our present system, there is still no solution and the government keeps harping on the same string year after year. For the past six years, we have been calling the attention of the Department of Industry and Defence Production to our problems. For six years, we have been passing estimates, and for ten years, we have been discussing——general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada.

Scientific research for what? For the application of what, the development of what? Money is being spent in large centres, true enough, but in centres outside our area. Let us take for instance, the zinc refinery that was built in Valleyfield, Quebec, to treat the ores coming from northwestern Quebec or northeastern Ontario. Why was that industry, which was established with assistance from the federal government, or perhaps at its suggestion, not set up in our area? Had the hon. minister or the government intervened with Noranda Mines, I am convinced that it would have agreed to build its plant at Rouyn-Noranda or Val-d'Or, or in our area as readily as at Valleyfield.

Why, for instance, were the directors of Noranda Mine not told: You will be exempted from taxes or income tax for a period of three years? The mine would thus have employed 800, 1,000 or 1,200 additional workers; it would have created employment opportunities and stimulated the economy of the area which has been neglected for so many years.

Mr. Speaker, I urge upon the minister that action be taken to help the development of the area, since that would encourage the pioneers of northwestern Quebec or northeastern Ontario to stay there. By so doing, the minister and the government would help brave people, who were courageous enough to go and settle in that area and operate those mines which have already been beneficial not only to the region but to the whole of Canada.

Our gold mines have served the monetary system with which the present government is struggling. This is not the time to say to the miners and gold mining companies: Close your doors, get lost, we are anxious to stop paying you subsidies.

If we can subsidize steel production and the wheat which we sell at a loss, we can also grant subsidies to keep our gold mines operating, since we are sure of selling the whole production to the United States, thereby restoring our trade balance. In this way, our gold would at least help to get Canada out of its present financial deadlock.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few thoughts which I wanted to put forward during the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Industry and Defence Production.

I feel that the minister, who knows the northwestern region with its 183,000 inhabitants—yes, 183,000—should take a decision and order his department to make a survey of the economic conditions, in order to include it among designated areas. I hope he will promote the establishment of new industries, in order to keep our people there and to attract others, because we have the available space, some favourable places where families could earn their living, but as long as the governments provide some incentives instead of strait jackets as in the present case.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, I should like to mention two items which relate indirectly to the Department of Industry. The first has to do with the extremely serious labour problem existing in areas of our north where our native people, be they Indian or Eskimo, make up the dominant proportion of our population.

[Mr. Caouette.]

There can be no dispute with the suggestion that between 40 per cent and 50 per cent of our adult male Indian population is unemployed. There can be no dispute that there has been less co-ordination between the department of Indian affairs, the department of manpower and the Department of Industry in seeking solutions to this extremely serious labour problem than is warranted by the seriousness of the problem. The time is long overdue when the three departments should be directly concerned and when their representatives should get together with representatives of northern based industries and provincial labour departments to ascertain how more Indian and Eskimo labourers can be induced to join the Canadian labour force.

The solution will necessitate the payment of subsidies to employers through the minister of Indian affairs and a designation by the Ministry of Industry of all areas in the Canadian north where these people live to enable special tax incentives to be awarded in these areas of Canada. The excuse for non-designation is that these people do not form part of the labour force or unemployment statistics. This is nonsense because these people are unemployed and the statistics in respect of their unemployment are available to the minister of Indian affairs. It appears to me that neither the minister of manpower nor the Minister of Industry has taken the trouble to find out what is the number of Indians unemployed in the determination of their policies in respect of designated areas. Almost the entire Yukon and Northwest Territories, with the exception of those areas where there are active mine developments, should be designated to be eligible for benefits under the terms of the designated area program.

The hon. member for Churchill has often spoken in favour of designating similar areas in the northern part of Manitoba. In view of the extremely serious Indian unemployment problem I find it intolerable that we should allow this situation not only to continue but to grow worse. The educational program of the department of Indian affairs is now producing a number of high school graduates who for the most part are untrained in the industries which operate in the north. These graduates are returning to their reserves and in a very short period of time, because they are not equipped to deal with the basic requirements of their reserves and because they are not equipped to fit into the new industries developing in the north, they become worse off than perhaps they might have been had they stayed on their reserves and continued as their forefathers, spending their early years on the trap lines.

I urge the Minister of Industry to meet with representatives of the department of manpower and the department of Indian affairs to initiate a solution to this problem. The Minister of Industry should, before he announces any further change in the designated area program, give serious consideration to the adoption of a policy to relieve this unemployment. The problem is not as serious so far as the Eskimo is concerned, but there are areas in the north where Eskimo unemployment does exist. Policies of the Department of Industry may not entirely solve the problem but could contribute to a final solution.

The second subject I wish to touch upon today is the Canada Development Corporation. I assume that when this corporation is formed it will come within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Industry and that is why I wish to refer to it for a few minutes at this time. I do not particularly like the name and feel that a more specific name should be adopted. This title has stirred up unnecessary criticism and fear in Canadian business circles because businessmen do not know in which areas it will operate and extend its influence. One area where it should operate and extend its influence is in the area of development and exploration of mineral and oil resources. Perhaps it could be called the Canada natural resources development corporation. In this way there would be fewer fears and apprehensions about its creation.

There is necessity at this time for the creation of such a corporation. The experience of even the last few years demonstrates this fact. If we are to retain any sort of control of our own economy such a corporation must be put into operation. Let me give several examples of recent Canadian mineral developments which might have been retained in Canadian hands had a natural resources development corporation been on the statute books. Perhaps the most dramatic example is the Rainbow oil field in Alberta.

I have here a clipping from the Financial Post of January, 1967. The article deals with one of the men who was responsible for finding the Rainbow oilfield, Mr. J. C. Rudolph. Among other things it indicates that Mr. Rudolph was extremely disillusioned about his inability, after this discovery was made, to find Canadian capital to assist him in developing the field. It turns out that this field is one of the major ones in North America. The cost of production per barrel is fantastically low and consequently the profit will be fantastically high.

Because Mr. Rudolph was not able to find Canadian capital, what has happened? The field is now pretty well owned by a combination of Aquitaine of Canada, a wholly owned subsidiary of Société Nationale des Petroles d'Aquitaine de Paris, which holds 45 per cent, and Mobil Oil of Canada which holds 50 per cent. The original company which Mr. J. C. Rudolph controlled, Banff Oil, is now 44 per cent owned by Aquitaine. I cannot accept that the French government, which controls Société Nationale des Petroles d'Aquitaine de Paris, should control a substantial percentage of our natural resources when, had we had the Canadian Development Corporation, the Canadian people could have had direct participation in this natural resource.

The same thing is true of several other developing mineral deposits in our Canadian west. The Japanese control several. This has its advantages. There are some good features about foreign participation in our natural resources. It creates additional market outlets. I do not want to leave the impression that I am against Japanese or French participation in our natural resources, but I object strongly to the fact that we as a people are not, through our government, being represented in this development. The French people are but the Canadian people are not.

Mr. Herridge: That's the stuff.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Another example of this type of thing is Eldorado itself. This is one of the few Canadian corporations which as a result of the wartime situation was permitted, on behalf of the government, to enter the mineral resources development field. It did so very successfully. But I am informed fairly reliably, although I would have to check my facts more thoroughly, that because of the fairly restrictive action permitted Eldorado, companies directly owned or controlled by foreign governments were able to stake claims around Eldorado holdings. At that time Eldorado was being restrictively administered so far as additional mineral exploration and development were concerned.

Another example is Faraday in the Bancroft area. What has happened there in the last few years? Because we have had no natural resources development corporation, because there was a glut on the uranium market, because no move was made to finance the stockpiling of Faraday's uranium output, and because this company was unable to finance stockpiling and eventually found itself in need of additional capital, an American firm now controls this uranium producer at the moment when uranium sales are again booming. These are just three examples, Mr. Chairman.

Potash development is an example of where the influx of foreign capital was invaluable to the development of a new industry. But had we had at the time a mineral resources development corporation, most surely the Canadian people could have participated more fully in the development of our now booming potash industry. I think we need to get away from the idea that government participation in mineral exploration and development necessarily implies government ownership or control. I would be very satisfied, and the industry as a whole should not have any objection, if the Canadian government had a minority participation in these ventures. It does not have to be majority participation. We can become partners to the extent of 30 per cent, 40 per cent or 60 per cent as the situation demands.

There is no reason why the federal government department responsible for the Yukon and Northwest Territories could not create tomorrow a prospecting and exploration division whose function would be similar to that of any prospecting and exploration division of any of the larger mining companies in Canada. We would tender for geological services and a geological firm would carry out an exploration program. This is what I envisage a natural resources development corporation doing, among other things. It would have a division which would at least be exploring and developing in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon where we have full jurisdiction. At the same time it would provide a reservoir of capital for minority or majority participation in ventures which had already resulted in proven ore bodies or proven oil pools.

If we participated in this manner in no way would we interfere with private enterprise. We would co-operate with private enterprise, and quite obviously it would be an easy matter in most cases to arrange for the preferential participation of Canadians in such developments. But in some cases our partners would be foreign governments or foreign companies. In addition to having a direct participation in the ownership we would also gain a valuable secondary advantage in that we would ensure that Canadian companies would retain ownership of the resources which are being discovered now and will continue to be discovered in the future.

I do not think many people realize that 35 per cent of the Canadian land mass lies within the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Experts predict that not too long from now, with a substantial increase in exploration in these areas, it is reasonable to expect that 35 per cent of Canada's mineral resources will be found in these territories. I would like to see greater Canadian participation in these discoveries. Apart from the very obvious reason that the creation of a natural resources corporation will give the Canadian people a more important piece of the action in this field, we will be able to retain in Canadian hands a much larger percentage of our resources than we do now. Even more important, it will give us a more important sense of participation in our national development.

What is more important is that if such a program by a development corporation is applied with particular emphasis to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories it will dramatize a basis for national unity which far too few people in this country and more particularly in my province of Quebec appreciate, namely, the fact that the natural resources of these two areas of Canada, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, are commonly owned and are the common heritage of all Canadians. Unlike the situation within the provinces where the provinces own the natural resources within their boundaries, all the Canadian people control and own the fantastic natural resources of these two territories.

In closing I would simply like to reiterate what I said earlier, that as a young Canadian I want to see the Canadian people participate much more fully than they have to date in the development of the mineral resources of this country. If we restrict the new development corporation initially to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and to mineral and oil development in these areas we will be able to start tomorrow because the provinces would offer no objection and I cannot imagine any real criticism of such an action by private industry. In fact I think the Canadian mineral industry as a whole, except possibly for the very large corporations which have tremendous capital resources of their own, would be delighted to see the government make funds available for the development of proven ore bodies. It would have no objection to the government entering the prospecting and exploration field with exploration teams hired and paid for by a section of the major development corporation. The latter's role would be the over-all policy.

I hope the minister will impress upon his colleagues the urgency of action in this area. The predicted oil reserves in the Northwest Territories are immense. I am unhappy every time I see new oil leases being granted by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The granting of any further oil concessions in the Northwest Territories should be halted until we have a development corporation of our own. It is urgent that this year the Canadian government set up a corporation which will ensure direct Canadian participation in mineral and oil development not only in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories but I hope also in all the provinces of Canada which are prepared to make the necessary arrangements with such a development corporation.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, there are three or four brief questions I should like to put to the minister. First of all, while I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood I would ask the minister that in any plans the government may have as a result of the representations made to them for the development of a deep water port at Canso he should not overlook the fact that there are already some well-established ports in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

I should like to ask the minister to dispel in his concluding remarks certain fears that are growing in the Halifax area with regard to the destroyer escort program. The comments that are being made—and because they are being made they should be answered—are to the effect that the government may well call for tenders on these four new vessels but then in order to meet its program of cut-backs it will delay awarding the tenders. Any such move would have a disastrous effect on the Halifax area if indeed it happened to one of the yards whose tender was successful.

My second point, which has also been raised by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, has to do with the area incentive program. I should like to ask the minister whether the government, on its own advice or on advice from other agencies or bodies, has now given consideration or is prepared to consider the broadening of, for example, the terms of reference and authority of the development board to embrace all of the extraordinary self-help programs which are aimed at overcoming the very serious economic situation in Atlantic Canada. It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that if there were any merit in the suggestion of broadening the terms of reference of the Atlantic Development Board or establishing one body which would have responsibility for co-ordinating all the government's extraordinary programs in the Atlantic area, it would have the benefit of removing the very real conflicts between the several provincial and federal programs. A reply by the minister to the comments specifically set forth by the Atlantic Development Board would have the benefit of indicating to the people in Atlantic Canada why such a move would not be feasible. If that were the case, then we could stop wasting our time trying to find an answer to our problems in that direction and search for other possible solutions.

Finally, I have one further question to direct to the minister. There are two aspects to the question because it involves research and development funds. It is not prompted by any interest at home but results purely from my own concern for the port of Halifax and what is going to happen in the years ahead. I should like to ask the minister if the government could give sympathetic consideration and, hopefully, approval to a request that must ultimately come from the port of Halifax commission for research and development funds for the construction of the prototype of an integral train or unit train. This train has been referred to as a continuation of the original transportation concept from the point of manufacture to the point of ultimate distribution. The terms "integral" and "unit" are not quite the same but they essentially involve the concept of extremely large trains so that the cost of moving goods becomes less by rail than by water. This program is well advanced and there might be some hope in it for the future of the port of Halifax. It is going to cost some millions of dollars for the engineering and design work on such a train. I hope the minister can urge upon his colleagues in government the viability of such a request. Any delay in this request may well put us pretty well out of the running in regard to the massive movement of goods from one continent to another.

The other aspect that goes hand in hand with this problem is the establishment of a fund to bring about the development of a light, single engine sport aircraft in Canada. The ratio of aircraft brought into Canada as opposed to aircraft designed and built here is widening every year. It widens in direct proportion to the number of people who are turning to flying for both business and pleasure. There are at least five major foreign companies who now control virtually 100 per cent of the Canadian light aircraft industry.

I do not know how the minister is going to get around answering all the requests that have been made of him this afternoon. The questions I put in connection with the area incentive program have already been raised, but I know the people of Halifax would be relieved if the minister could at least make a passing comment on that.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, there are two matters I should like to raise in connection with these estimates. The first one deals with item No. 5 on page 238 which reads:

To sustain technological capability in Canadian industry by supporting—

I want to emphasize this.

—selected defence development programs—

I believe that the house and the people of Canada are entitled to some explanation of this business of selected defence development programs. If my memory and my mathematics are correct, in the past 12 years the federal government has expended in the neighbourhood of $550 million or $600 million on selected defence development covering only three selected programs.

I refer first of all to the Avro Arrow upon which I believe $450 million was expended. We had one plane in the air and one ready to go in the air when the program was cancelled. I have been told in France and the United States that Canada was years ahead and undoubtedly had the finest plane ever known. Millions of dollars were spent on the Bobcat, the armoured carrier. This program was cancelled. Now let us come up to date and consider the hydrofoil. We do not have the figures yet but I am led to believe that when the final bills are paid they will amount to close to $50 million. This program is being cancelled. So we have between $550 million and $600 million expended on three items in 12 years. The point is that this country cannot afford to spend $550 million to $600 million on projects that are cancelled and from which there is no return.

I think we have the right to ask the minister on what basis is the policy on selected defence project expenditure has been and is now being established. In particular, I think we are entitled to know what happened to the hydrofoil project in view of the fact that the United Kingdom and United States were apparently years ahead of us. What has been the return to Canada on the money that has been expended and what is going to be the basic principle that will be applied in the future?

If we are going to spend such large amounts of money on research into defence equipment and armaments, then let us not pour it down the drain as we did with the $550 to $600 million spent on three projects alone in the last 12 years. So far neither this house nor the public has been given any explanation why the hydrofoil project was cancelled, and this I think we are entitled to receive.

I have had the honour of being a member of the defence committee for many years and I am also a member of the public accounts committee. My experience has been that no member of those committees receives much in the way of information from the government. We are always presented with a fait accompli or the government gives excuses. We receive no definitive answers to our questions.

The only point I am trying to make is that if three projects have cost the Canadian people approximately $600 million and produced no return the committee is entitled to know what is in the government's mind when the Department of Industry supports in the future selected defence projects. In this connection I should like the minister to take time to tell us what returns have been received by the Canadian treasury and the people of Canada on the money spent under this head.

My second point is somewhat along the line of the remarks of the previous speaker from the Atlantic region. In time of war there was great interest in industrial development and industrial capability to supply war needs. But now, as the minister well knows from the questions asked this afternoon on orders of the day, the government apparently does not give a damn about what is happening to the shipbuilding industry of British Columbia. I remember that the government was mighty proud during the last war of what British Columbia could and did produce.

Not too long ago the minister made a speech in British Columbia, and basically I agreed with what he said. He told industry to pick up its feet, to modernize itself and compete. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, standards and wages are higher in British Columbia and so, I think, is efficiency. Nevertheless, surely some consideration should be given to maintaining the shipbuilding industry in British Columbia.

Last week the first shipbuilding yard in British Columbia was sold to the Burrard Drydock Company, and my understanding is that this yard is to be closed out. This knocks out 151 skilled employees. I realize, of course, there is competition between east and west and that each has different standards and wages. But I want to emphasize that it is just as imperative to maintain a shipbuilding industry on the Pacific coast as it is to maintain one on the east coast.

I also suggest some consideration should be given to the cost picture on the Pacific coast as it relates to the transportation of steel and other materials to the area. We in British Columbia always seem to get the dirty end of the stick in the matter of transportation costs. Nevertheless my point is that even with the extra freight charges involved it will be a sorry day for Canada if the federal government does not maintain the shipbuilding industry in British Columbia.

The government moves fast enough when an emergency situation arises in Quebec or the maritimes. Subsidies amounting to hundreds of millions are immediately made available. Why does the government not turn its eyes once in a while to the west? I am not criticizing subsidies and help in the case of bankrupt industries such as Dosco, but I do feel that the government should maintain those industries in the west which are essential to Canada in peace as well as in war.

The minister could not have done without the shipbuilding industry of British Columbia during the war. Why does the government crucify it, therefore, in time of peace? I admit we have higher standards and wages, but why condemn us for that? Why should this industry be closed down because of this?

We in British Columbia are not asking for special favours. We ask only for proper consideration, for recognition. The government spends hundreds of millions of dollars in the east and should be prepared to spend a few million to maintain industry in the west when required. Shipbuilding is one industry that requires to be maintained. We in British Columbia ask for equal consideration and equal treatment. Give us that and there will be no more complaints from our province, regardless of which party forms the government in this house.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, owing to the limitations of time I shall not be as articulate as I should like to be. I take comfort from knowing that these estimates, as I said in my opening statement, were examined thoroughly by the house committee in five long meetings prior to the discussion which took place most recently in committee of supply.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert asked a number of questions about the designated area program. He asked particularly about Saint John. His first question was whether federal assistance has been a deciding factor in the location of new industries in the Atlantic provinces or has been of assistance in the relocation of industries in that area. The answer of course is that this program has been a not inconsiderable factor in inducing new manufacturing and processing industries to locate in the maritimes. Figures have already been given. As a consequence of this program, since its inception until September 30 last some 78 projects have been undertaken in the hon. member's province of New Brunswick, involving the expenditure of approximately $202 million. These projects have provided new job opportunities for approximately 4,800 employees.

Whether federal assistance has had any effect on the relocation of industries within the maritimes may best be answered this way. As the hon. member knows, the program is designed to avoid the shifting of existing industries from one point to another. A requirement, if there is to be a benefit under the program, is that 95 per cent of the capital facilities to be installed in any plant which is moved to a designated area must be new machinery and equipment. The purpose of this provision is to prevent the mere physical transfer of old plant and equipment from a non-designated area to a designated area. The idea is that unless an entrepreneur wishes to set up a new plant and equipment he will have no reason to shift. We know of two relocations where industries have moved to designated areas in the maritimes as a consequence of this program.

One instance is the G. E. Barbour Company Limited which was forced to move from its location in Saint John. Because of the purchase of land and buildings by the Saint John bridge authority it was no longer possible for that firm to continue where it was. In seeking a new location they decided to move from an area of relatively good employment to an area of chronic unemployment, at the same time qualifying for benefits.

A similar sort of thing took place in the instance of Marden-Wild of Canada Limited in Halifax. This firm was no longer able to continue in business because of rezoning which was carried out in Halifax and they moved from Halifax to a designated area.

The hon. member also asked how many applications for assistance from industry have been rejected because of inability to relocate in growth centres. I do not know what the hon. member means by growth centres. I cannot think of any manufacturing or processing industry which would have to locate in an urban area such as Halifax or Saint John and, if there were sufficient financial attractions, could not locate outside those areas. Outside these two main centres that I have referred to there are a number of other manufacturing areas which are adequately provided with labour, communications and public utilities.

The hon. member asked why Saint John has not been designated and whether there is any hope that it will be designated. The designated areas program is designed to induce entrepreneurs in Canada who wish to set up new manufacturing or processing industries to set them up in areas of chronic unemployment. The idea is to bring relief to those areas of Canada where unemployment figures are highest. The program attempts to provide more employment opportunities for those who live in areas of chronic unemployment and seeks to induce industry to designated areas rather than to those areas where the unemployment situation perhaps is not so acute.

Saint John is fortunate in terms of relative unemployment. In the past ten years it has experienced a not unsatisfactory rate of economic growth. As the hon. gentleman knows, the average non-farm family income also is at a satisfactory level. Until—and I hope this will never happen—Saint John has the misfortune to register a much higher level of unemployment than is current now, I should not think there is much prospect that it will be designated. I am sure the hon. member shares my hope that designation for Saint John will never be necessary.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a question? I thank the minister for his answers. Has subsection 9(e) of the legislation been used? I am referring to that subsection which has to do with grouping together manpower centres in areas of traditional geographic connection. Is there any chance of including Saint John under that part of the legislation? I merely wish to know whether we should continue our approaches or whether we should desist. The mayors keep coming up here and they ought to know whether their quest is hopeless. That is the pertinent question.

Mr. Drury: We have explored the possibility of grouping. The effect of grouping is to average out or establish a gross figure with respect to employment or unemployment. The conditions in Saint John are sufficiently good to raise the level of the contiguous areas and to take them out of the designated area class. Only if conditions in Saint John became marginal and the conditions in the contiguous areas were to decline would the region be considered. I suggest to the hon. member that representations by the mayors of the region and not likely to lead to the kind of result they wish for. The area development agency carries out periodic reviews of the manpower situation in all designated and non-designated areas and adjustments are made depending on whether the areas concerned fall within or without the criteria.

I shall only address answers to those who have shown a real interest by staying in the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drury: I see that the hon. member for Greenwood is here. He asked a question about Point Tupper and Port Hawkesbury.

Mr. Brewin: No, I am sorry. I did not raise a question about that. I asked about the eastern counties of Nova Scotia. The minister's colleague, the minister of forestry, has an interest in this matter, I believe.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: A port at Point Tupper or Port Hawkesbury.

Mr. Brewin: I did not actually name the ports.

Mr. Drury: I assumed the hon. member knew about this. The minister of forestry, as I believe the house is aware, has a program known as FRED which is concerned with the regional development of disfavoured areas of Canada. In order to put in train a comprehensive development plan for disadvantaged areas it is necessary to conduct basic surveys of all the factors involved. In the speech to which the hon. member for Greenwood has referred the minister cited as an example of how this is being done the survey which had been carried out in Cape Breton and the northeastern counties of Nova Scotia as a result of which certain tentative conclusions had been reached. He did so by way of illustrating the proposition that while there were difficulties there was also one very substantial asset in the area, namely, the presence at the eastern end of the strait of Canso of one of the best potential deep water harbours in North America, a factor which should perhaps be examined with a view to development and exploitation.

There is as yet no formulated plan for the development or exploitation of this advantage but the whole question of the further development of Cape Breton including a deep water port at Port Hawkesbury is now under urgent consideration by a committee of officials made up of representatives from all the departments which have an interest in this matter. The departments concerned include the Department of Industry, the Department of Trade and Commerce in respect of possible exports, the department of manpower, the department of forestry with the FRED program, the Department of Finance, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Mr. Brewin: The Department of Transport?

Mr. Drury: Yes, the Department of Transport. I do not have the complete list but I want to assure the hon. member that a coordinated attack is being made on these problems.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot—made representations concerning the shoe industry.

I have listened to him and I know very well that this industry has had problems, particularly recently, when we noted a reduction or a slight adjustment in the tariffs. My department is currently organizing a group of representatives from the shoe industry to go to Europe to study how things are done over there and to try to find markets, so that the Canadian shoe industry can be made more efficient. The Department of Industry is organizing the tour of the group. I hope that this trip will bring results and that the businessmen who will make up this group will come back with conclusions and impressions likely to be shared with the shoe industry in general.

Mr. Ricard: I thank the hon. minister.

[English]

Mr. Drury: The hon. member for Vancouver East, who was the last speaker, asked what the policy was in connection with research and development and drew attention to three occasions upon which substantial sums of money had been spent on research development, and at least in one case on production or preproduction, in connection with projects all of which were cancelled with no return to the public of Canada.

I might point out that a large part of the expenditures on the Avro Arrow were incurred not in connection with research but for production models. It was only after substantial expenditure had been incurred in connection with preproduction that the government of the day decided not to go ahead with the program. One should not assume that all the sums of money which have been mentioned in connection with this particular program were spent on research and development. The second example the hon. member gave was that of the Bobcat. This is clearly a situation of the kind one must expect to encounter in any developmental program. It did not turn out to be a good guess.

As to the hydrofoil a considerable amount of research and development has been done in connection with this project. The work suffered a setback as the result of a fire which occurred some time ago, but research and development are continuing. If the hon. gentleman has information to the effect that this effort has been cancelled, neither my colleague the Minister of National Defence nor I have any knowledge of it. In any event, the fact that sums of money are spent on research and development in connection with items which do not reach the production stage does not necessarily mean that all the money is wasted. There is in connection with all these programs a considerable industrial fall-out.

There have, of course, been a number of successful programs under the defence export development program to which the hon. member referred. Since my administration of it began, at any rate, we have been spending at the rate of about $20 million or $22 million a year. Since its inception 109 defence development projects have been supported from this vote and expenditures to date amount to $103 million. Of the projects supported, 53 in number costing $53 million have been completed and are achieving sales. So for $53 million we get some results.

I intend to mention some of them. The value of the sales or orders resulting from these projects is $348 million. Here are some figures by way of example: the PT-6 turbine engine, $58 million; the Doppler navaid, $115 million; the GRC-103 radio relay, $18 million; the Buffalo STOL aircraft, $49 million; the twin Otter aircraft, $25 million; the CL-89 Drone, $60 million; flight simulators for both military and civil aircraft, $15 million. So for an investment of some $53 million in these projects resulting sales are in excess of $388 million. This does not mean that every project we bet on is going to turn out well. Some do not turn out well. Either the scientists have endeavoured to accomplish too big a task and been unsuccessful, or they have been unable to move as fast as other people and we have lost a particular race, or the need for a particular object under development has in the course of time, some four or five years, disappeared.

In an effort to avoid this we obtain the best possible advice concerning what is technologically and scientifically a good bet. We try to ensure that this is put into the hands of the most competent developers in the country. All these programs are kept under continuous review. Once there is any indication that a project will be unsuccessful it is stopped. We had occasion to make reference to one the other day. A gas turbine engine was being developed in Toronto. When it appeared clear that further developmental expenditures would not yield a return this development work was stopped and the people were put to work on something else. I suggest there is some management being carried out in respect of these programs.

The hon. gentleman, among others, mentioned the situation in respect of the closing of the Victoria Machinery Depot. This is most unfortunate. It represents perhaps rather more than just the closing of the oldest shipyard in British Columbia. It represents the consolidation of the shipbuilding element of V.M.D. with those of Burrard and Yarrows. It is my understanding that these three units or two, because the control of Yarrows and Burrard is the same, will now be run as one unit.

I think it is a source of regret that in respect of shipbuilding yards which have the capacity to build or repair very large ships we should have lost an element of competition which existed hitherto. It is difficult to generate competition if the entrepreneurs who provide it are not persuaded that it is a good thing.

It has been alleged that the reason for the closing down was the failure of the government of Canada to proceed with its shipbuilding program. I should point out that a little over two years ago we did disclose to the shipbuilding industry in Canada a five year program of government shipbuilding; it was all laid out. It was declared then that competition for this program would be on a national basis. However, in order to enable a transition to be made from the old system to the new, shipbuilding companies on the west coast were guaranteed that the west coast would be free of competition from the rest of Canada for certain ships. This program is being and has been proceeded with exactly as advertised; there has been no change in it.

Reference has been made to a recent report based on the assumption that the Department of Transport should or would build a couple of coastguard cutters which were not included in this transitional program. Now it appears to have been learned from somewhere that these two ships which were not in the plan in the first place are not going to be built. Mr. Chairman, I see that we have now exceeded the allotted time.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be considered at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather), Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—possible use of Expo buildings as Montreal headquarters; the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford), Fisheries—inquiry as to establishment of geographical co-ordinates; the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), Freight Rates—cream—request for rescission of recent increase.

The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED DEDUCTION BY WORKMEN OF EXPENDITURES FOR HAND OR ELECTICAL TOOLS

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act so that workmen may deduct from their taxable income any expense incurred by the acquisition of hand or electrical tools required to perform their work.

He said: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 12 appearing on the order paper could apply to all workers entered on a payroll.

As I have already mentioned on several occasions in this house, we are allowing a general discrimination against workers with regard to employers or to all those who are not wage earners. Besides, one could say generally that tax deduction at the source is a glaring injustice towards workmen, as compared to other groups. Moreover, I have already pointed out in this house that a wage earner entered on a payroll is not given the same advantages, because his income tax is deducted from his gross earnings and he is not allowed the same deductions as a businessman or a professional or any other worker not entered on a payroll.

I have already said, in this house, that the worker has the right, just as anyone else, to file his income tax return at the end of the year without being deprived of the amount deducted each pay day from his gross salary.

I believe it was claimed, at the time, that this would be hard to do but I feel the difficulty has been overcome, due to the fact that the worker still has to file his income tax return at the end of the year to claim the excess money the government has taken from him. In other words, the government paid itself first, and once again the worker has to defend himself, as best he can, against the government that dipped into his gross salary.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I ask the government to amend that famous Income Tax Act to allow workers, and members of the various trades, to deduct the cost of the tools they need to do their work.

I have in mind, for instance, service station mechanics, carpenters, lumberjacks, while professionals, such as dentists and others, are entitled to deduct from their taxable income purchase and maintenance costs for their equipment as well as travel and other costs related to their profession. I feel that this exemption is quite justified, and I approve it.

Similarly, large corporations engaged in developing our natural resources given over to them by our governments for practically nothing, benefit from tax exemptions on all capital equipment, which amount to millions of dollars.

I am not against such tax exemptions inasmuch, and I do say, inasmuch as the same tax privileges are granted to labourers for necessary expenses related to their work. That is why ever since I came to this house I have been asking for a similar exemption, particularly for the workers of the province of Quebec who have to buy a power saw and pay for the cost of parts, and God knows how many they need, for a small machine which works so hard. If one adds to that, the cost of gasoline, oil, and so on, one can easily realize that it costs about $1,000 to $1,500 per season for the purchase and the maintenance of that equipment.

There is also the cost of safety clothes which the governments force the loggers to buy and wear in order to protect their lives. Let us add to that travelling expenses for the long distance they have to cover sometimes to get to their work, and we shall easily reach expenses of at least $2,000 a year for an ordinary bush worker.

If the government wanted to do away with the present discrimination and be fair with that category of workers, it should consider at once an amendment to the Income Tax Act to make deductions possible to the extent I have mentioned.

I do not want to retain the house any longer, since I should like the minister to announce the good news today to the effect that he is finally determined to do justice to the working class, in particular to the bush workers in my area.

We expect nothing else from the minister but a categorical yes to the effect of amending the Income Tax Act.

I chose to proceed by way of a notice of motion to give the government the opportunity to present a bill amending the Income Tax Act.

Indeed, we all know by experience the fate of a bill introduced by a private member, and I do not want to run the risk of having a bill killed.

We have been too patient already; let the government give us proof of its goodwill.

Mr. Speaker, the workers in general, and the bush workers especially need an alleviation of taxes.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act so that workmen may deduct from their taxable income any expense incurred by the acquisition of hand or electrical tools required to perform their work.

The house is asked from time to time to grant employees tax exemptions for the cost of the equipment they need to do their work.

During the debate on the Income Tax Act in 1965, the then minister of finance, the hon. Mr. Gordon, was asked about that. He said that he was sympathetic to the requests and that he was not satisfied with the present provisions, adding however that because of the complexity of the whole matter he felt that a decision should be postponed until the government had at its disposal the recommendations of the royal commission on taxation.

Under the present act, employees cannot deduct the amounts spent on the purchase of tools needed for their work. It would be discriminatory to allow the bush workers to deduct the amounts spent on the hand, electric, or power tools they need for their work without granting the same deduction to all employees.

If such a deduction were allowed, it would imply a review of the whole question of deductions for expenses incurred in the course of employment, for instance, for the purchase of hand, electric or power tools, special uniforms, clothing and equipment needed by a workman to perform his work.

Even though several of those expenses must necessarily be made in the course of employment, in some cases it may be difficult to determine whether a particular expense has been incurred for employment or personal purposes, for instance, in the case of the purchase of special clothing.

This whole matter should be discussed when the fiscal legislation is reviewed following the recommendations of the royal commission on taxation, instead of extending the provisions of the present legislation in a piecemeal fashion.

The proposed amendment, if passed, would be difficult to apply. For example, although the hon. member explained in part what is meant by the word "workmen", does this term include tradesmen, lumbermen, mechanics, carpenters, bricklayers, masons, electricians, plumbers, teachers and the other professions? Why is the proposed deduction limited to expenses incurred by the acquisition of hand or electrical tools? Why does it not apply also to mechanical tools?

In the United States, the employee is generally considered as being in business and, under clause 162 of the internal revenue code, he is entitled to the same ordinary and necessary business expenses as the businessman or the professional who works for himself. The main difference between the expenses of a businessman and those of an employee is that the former can deduct all his ordinary and necessary expenses and still benefit from the ordinary reduction, while the employee who wishes to benefit by the ordinary reduction can claim only expenses falling in the four following categories: Reimbursed expenses, expenses for travel away from home, transportation expenses and travelling salesman expenses.

However, the employee may deduct other ordinary and necessary expenses instead of taking advantage of the ordinary reduction. The returns contain minute and severe conditions.

Mr. Speaker, another aspect of the expenses incurred in earning one's life which should be considered is that of transportation expenses. Many people today have to travel 40 to 80 miles to get to work. Some may say that these people should move closer to their work, but there may be good reasons why they cannot do so: they may be taking care of their parents, they may be home owners, or there may be some other reason.

And so, one finds it harder and harder, in the big cities, to buy a lot at a reasonable price for home building purposes. If income tax law gave a deduction of these expenses from gross income, perhaps many people would act and build themselves a house in semi-urban or rural areas, which would alleviate the administrations of those large cities of many problems and would also make it possible for more people to acquire their own house, at a more reasonable price.

Here, Mr. Speaker, are some observations and related proposals made by the royal commission on taxation in its report, and I quote from page 289 of volume 3:

> We now turn to consider the deduction of expenses by employees. The principle involved is clear enough. All of the expenses incurred in the expectation of generating net gains, other than personal living expenses, should be allowed as deductions from all actual gross gains. Distinctions between the kinds and forms of taxable gains, and considerations of whether a net gain actually resulted from the expenditures, are irrelevant. The major problem would be to allow the deduction of all expenses laid out to generate employment income and yet to prevent the deduction of personal living expenses.

It would be obvious in most cases, Mr. Speaker, as stated by the Carter report, that a given item falls within one category or the other, but marginal cases would be difficult to solve.

In this regard, the Carter report states the following in volume 3, page 316:

> Because of the stringent limitations in the present law, employees are unable to deduct many expenses that are deductible by the self-employed. Skilled manual workers and employed professionals in particular are unfairly treated relative to the self-employed.

On page 312, volume 3, of the report of the royal commission on taxation, we find the proposed rules for deductibility, and I quote:

> We came to the conclusion that the most equitable course would be to treat employment income on the same basis as income from a business or profession.
> Expenses would then be deductible if reasonably related to the earning of income. The prohibition against the deduction of personal and living expenses as set out in section 12 (1) (h) of the Income Tax Act would, of course, be applicable, as would the provision in section 12 (2) that expenses must be reasonable in the circumstances.
> The adoption of such a course would remove the unfair discrimination between the two kinds of income and should not lead to much additional litigation. As we have already stated, the United States does place employment income on the same basis as business income, and all "ordinary and necessary" expenses are deductible for both kinds of income.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Rosthern rising on a question of privilege or a point of order?

Mr. Nasserden: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether that section of Beauchesne which deals with the reading of a speech prepared by someone else could be drawn to the hon. member's attention.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot suggest that another member's speech has been written by a third person. He can bring to the attention of the Chair that an hon. member appears to be reading his speech. That is another matter. It is certainly not in order for an hon. member to suggest that the statement or speech of one of his colleagues is not his own personal contribution.

Having said that, I gather that perhaps the hon. member has been inspired by what are referred to as copious notes. The rule is that as far as possible hon. members should not read prepared speeches and I hope the hon. member for Labelle will take that into consideration. I realize, of course, that when we are dealing with a matter as highly technical as the one before the house, this should be taken into account by the Chair. This is what I am prepared to do in the case of the hon. member. However, I hope he will not overlook the requirements of the rules in this respect.

Mr. Clermont: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, but in answer to the hon. member who asked me that question, I would like to point out that I have heard several of his speeches in the house and I think that he should have written them down before they were delivered because they would have made a lot more sense.

As you stated, Mr. Speaker, I was quoting some extracts of the report of the royal commission on taxation, better known under the name of Carter commission, and I think that it would be risky to quote a 2,600 pages report dealing with various matters concerning taxation without any notes. I venture to think that you will still be indulgent and allow me to use these notes. I could discuss the matter under consideration without referring to these notes, but I preferred to get ready in advance, Mr. Speaker, so that my speech would not resemble those delivered by hon. members who asked me the question.

Mr. Schreyer: What are you reading?

Mr. Clermont: I am going to reply to the member who asked me what I was reading. I have the advantage of understanding him when he speaks English. But when I speak French, I wonder if he understands me.

I quote again from the Carter commission report:

> However, because of the great numbers of taxpayers in receipt of employment income in Canada, and to obviate the need for processing numerous claims for relatively small items, we recommend an optional deduction of 3 per cent of gross employment income, up to a maximum deduction of $500.
> Any employee whose deductible expenses exceeded this figure would be at liberty to claim them in lieu of the optional 3 per cent deduction, provided they were itemized and substantiated. The deductibility of particular itemized expenses would then be determined in accordance with the rules to be applied to business expenses. Employees, like the self-employed, would not be permitted to deduct travelling and entertainment expenses in excess of the limits discussed earlier in this chapter.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I trust that when the time comes to deal with the complete revision of the Income Tax Act, the government will give serious attention to the matter of granting to those who must travel, and to those who must buy tools to earn a living, the right to deduct those expenses, thereby placing him on the same footing as the self-employed.

• (6:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I would find it easier to support the notice of motion put forward by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) if, after the word "hand" he would insert the word "mechanical", and I intend to propose such an amendment a little later.

When I think of the dissertation which has just been made by the hon. member for Labelle—

Maybe I should tell him that in French to assure him I can speak both languages.

When the Income Tax Act comes up for revision, I hope that the changes requested in this motion will be considered, and that the minister will make use of the hon. member's speech, as this will save him a lot of worry and time in making up his mind.

I do not think that the hon. member could give a similar answer in his own constituency, where lumberjacks, skilled men, have to purchase their own tools in order to earn their living. Clerical employees do not have to pay for pens and pencils used in the office, whereas woodcutters have to purchase their own labour-saving, lightweight power saws—

Mr. Clermont: Would the hon. member permit a question concerning power saws? Have they been in use only in the past two or three years or were they not in existence when the party of the hon. member was in power? What did his government do about these deductions?

Mr. Keays: The question of the hon. member is easy to answer because I am not here to defend the previous government but to protect the interests of those who are not getting justice.

Mr. Speaker, the speech of the hon. member for Labelle could go on forever, in fact, it could go on until the study in taxation is completed, which as a result would delay for many years the decision that must be taken on this matter. If that is the way the hon. member wants to decide the question, I hope the government does not share his opinion. We have a current problem to solve and let us try to solve it.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, it is easier for the hon. member to criticize the government now than it was when he was sitting on the government benches and nothing was being done on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Mr. Keays: I recognize the problems which would be inherent in the application of any such legislation, because of the operating expenses of such people as mechanics, electricians and service people, who in many cases are called upon to supply their own tools. In many cases this entails considerable, expense. However, I think the difficulty could be overcome by taking one industry at a time and granting them a flat deduction so long as these particular people practise their trade.

I made reference to the saws used in the forestry industry because this is an industry which, unlike other industries has been adversely affected by some legislation. I am referring to the Unemployment Insurance Commission which restricts the amount of contribution which is deducted from the wages of the forestry worker. This is not the case in other industries. I hope the government will consider the interests of these people, who in many cases, in areas where there are no lumber camps, have to travel 40 or 50 miles in order to reach their place of work. They cannot deduct their travelling expenses, and sometimes they have to invest $600 or $700 in the purchase of saws. Often this must be done annually because these saws are so light that they cannot stand up to two or three years of operation.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Clermont) tried to defend the government. He would be better advised to defend the worker who, as he will find out, does not earn $5,000 or $6,000 but only $1,000 or $2,000 a year. Often this worker in order to earn $2,000 has to spend $1,000 and at the end of the year all he has left is misery, and a lack of sufficient money to keep his family. I hope the hon. member will realize that it is in the interests of all people that these workers be treated justly.

Mr. Clermont: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

When closing my remarks, I asked the government to take into serious consideration the feasibility of that deduction. I ask the hon. member, at least, to be honest about that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no point of order. The hon. member is attempting to assert what he considers as facts. Therefore, this is obviously a debate and the hon. member will have the opportunity later on, when the house again considers this notice of motion, to make a statement and establish the facts.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, I based my statement on the speech that the hon. member for Labelle has just made, when he said referring to the report of the Carter commission that, as recommended by the commission, the deductions should be subject to greater scrutiny and reasonable expenses only should be allowed. Those are the words uttered by the hon. member for Labelle, and I hope that if we implement the word "reasonable", the tools some workers use to earn a living will be included.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, before closing I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden):

That immediately after the word "hand" be inserted the word "mechanical".

Mr. Speaker: I think I should draw to the attention of the hon. member that if carried his amendment would not result in a logical motion. I wonder whether some additional words should not be inserted. The hon. member may review his proposed amendment. It is difficult for the Chair to accept an amendment which is inconsistent with the main motion and which, if adopted, would not result in a grammatically correct sentence.

Mr. Keays: I believe the word "or" should be added so that the sentence would read "by the acquisition of hand or mechanical".

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's amendment would therefore read:

That immediately after the word "hand" be inserted the words "or mechanical".

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion before us, both the original and as amended. If I have any criticism to make with respect to the main motion or the amendment it is that the motion is still not comprehensive enough. Certainly the inclusion of the words proposed by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays) does make the resolution more worthy. It seems to me that in addition to the inclusion of certain categories of tools and equipment mechanically driven, such as chain saws used by pulp cutters, one could go on to make up quite a list. The hon. member for Gaspé might have included one more feature in his amendment, and that would be certain kinds of work clothes that are necessary, such as hard hats, safety boots, and so on as used in certain occupations by construction workers. It is a matter, I suppose of making changes to the definitions in the Income Tax Act in order to cover certain types of safety clothes, helmets and so on.

In the little time available to me, I want to say that the point conjured up by the debate is the obvious one that the existing income tax law seems definitely to militate against the wage earner and salaried worker in this country. It seems to me the act obviously is of benefit to those who earn their income from fees and militates against those who earn their income from wages or salaries. In conversation earlier today the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said his interpretation of the income tax law could be set forth in a few words, namely that there is complete bias in the income tax legislation which has the effect of making it class legislation.

I am not for one moment trying to say that this was the intention, but it certainly has been the result. Our income tax law does not permit these people to deduct their expenses in acquiring the tools that are necessary for them to earn their livelihood. I believe the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Clermont) has already pointed out that the Carter commission report made specific recommendations in connection with this matter. It set forth three basic principles with regard to the new criteria which should be established with regard to determining in the future what expenses should be allowed.

I should like to put on the record these three principles, and I quote from page 83 of the Carter commission report:

> The first general rule is that expenditures should be deductible only if they are reasonably related to the gaining or producing of income.

As a corollary of that first principle there is a second rule stated at page 85, which reads:

> The second general rule is related to the first and would assert that expenditures otherwise deductible should not be allowed to the extent that they are unreasonable in the circumstance.

So we have injected into this consideration the premise of reasonableness of the amount of the deduction. Finally, Mr. Speaker, according to the Carter report, page 85, there is this third general rule:

> The third general rule is that expenditures of a personal nature, that is expenditures made for personal use or consumption, should not be deductible.

No one is disagreeing with that in so far as the motion before us is concerned. Finally, on page 86 of the report there is in a sense a summary of the commission's thinking, which reads:

> We have suggested that there should be a more liberal approach than currently exists to employee expense deductions.

I then add in parenthesis that when the commission uses the word "liberal" I take it the word is not used in a partisan sense.

> We believe that the best way to achieve an equitable treatment of expenses related to employment is generally to apply the same rules to these expenditures as are to be applied to business expenditures.

I pause again to say that this seems to sum it up almost with perfection.

> Thus, the present prohibition on the deduction of most employment expenses should be withdrawn, and the three rules outlined above should apply.

This report goes on to make reference to reducing the administrative problems of accounting in connection with this matter. The report states that perhaps an optional standard deduction of 3 per cent of employment income, with a maximum deduction of $500, could be established. I believe some consideration of this matter indicates that most craftsmen, whether they be journeymen electricians or carpenters, make an initial expenditure of at least $300 or $400 for a basic set of tools necessary to their trade. Considering the inflation factor presently at work, it would seem that the figure put forward in the report is not unrealistic. In fact I believe the proposal before us, coupled with the recommendations in the Carter commission report, is very sensible and worthy of consideration. I cannot understand why these principles cannot be reflected in our legislation. As a matter of fact my colleagues, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) have almost every year for the past five years introduced private members bills or notices of motion calling for the same kind of change in our income tax laws as that proposed by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that, as a layman in income tax matters, when one looks with some detachment at our income tax law he finds there are certain basic injustices. For example professional men such as dentists or doctors are allowed deductions from income tax for the purchase of equipment. Let us take a dentist, for example. When he buys an electric drill which is necessary to earn his income, that expense is deductible, but when a carpenter buys an electric saw, which is equally necessary for him to earn his livelihood, that expense is not deductible. I might add that while some dentists are quite gentle and soothing in their work, it should be said that others lack precision in the use of their drills, just as some carpenters do in the use of their saws.

I should like to sum up my contribution to this debate by saying that we should accept the principle that if occupational necessity demands the use of a tool or set of tools, the capital required to purchase those tools should be deductible for income tax purposes in the same way as are tools used by those engaged in a professional occupation. To do otherwise it seems to me is to help perpetrate an economic injustice today.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to agree that there has been unfair discrimination between the two kinds of income that we might refer to as, on the one hand, employment income, and on the other as business or professional income.

I think all the points which have been brought out so effectively by my colleagues who have preceded me have been considered in the past by the authorities, and the real reason that change has not taken place heretofore is the difficulty of administration, which is a very real problem.

However, Mr. Speaker, we appreciate that while the Carter commission does not declare government policy, it does open up this field to new and enterprising examination. Currently, the Department of Finance is studying all of the Carter commission recommendations, as well as comments made by citizens in relation thereto, which come from all possible sources. I am sure that the debate which has been introduced so imaginatively by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) will contribute to this consideration.

The only commitment made so far by the government as I understand it, is the implementation of tax reform. The actual nature of this reform and the direction it may take is something that is at yet unannounced. I suppose the only question before us is the timeliness of taking remedial action before total tax revision.

There is one aspect that I should like to touch on which relates to the type of equipment that might be deductible from employment income for income tax purposes—what we might call tools of the trade. The hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) suggested a maximum of $500, but personally I think the figure might well be double that.

I should like to mention briefly some of the kinds of items that today would be very appropriate for consideration. Circular saws of six pounds to 16 pounds, in sizes of from six inches to ten inches, range in cost from $80 to $180. Quarter inch to 1¼-inch drills sell for from $12 to $200. So you can see that two or three of these items alone amount to a fairly substantial packet. Jig saws range in price from $20 to $100. Routers, which are rated in horsepower from half-horse to 2½ horsepower, can cost anywhere from $50 to $250. Sanders, belt-type or finishing-type, range in price from $20 to $200.

It is common knowledge, Mr. Speaker, that the best products of this type in the world are made by Black and Decker Manufacturing Limited, who have held a federal charter since 1922 and have their Canadian headquarters at Brockville. This company has plants all over the free world, in the United States, Canada, England, Germany, Italy, Australia and Mexico. They are now specializing in Canada and marketing their products by way of export to all parts of the world.

One might ask who are the end users of these tools. They are carpenters, plumbers, the heating, ventilating and air conditioning trades, the home improvement trades, contractors, the wood craft and light industry shops as well as heavy industry. All of these products to which I have referred are produced in Brockville. The only tools of this type that are imported into Canada at the present time are low-volume products, such as odd-sized machines which would be altogether uneconomic to tool and machine here. What a great advantage it is to be able to draw on the research facilities, expertise and occasional product direct from the parent company.

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. member permit a question before I rise on a point of order. The hon. member's comments are both interesting and informative, but how do they relate to the amount that is specified in the Carter report? I believe the hon. member used that as the reason for digressing.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if we are going to add something to our existing legislation we should know the type of deductible items we are talking about. During the course of this debate there has been reference to mechanical tools, and however meritorious they may be they cannot compare in today's modern world with the electrical hand tools to which I have referred. I think it is clear from the price of these articles that a deduction of $1,000—

Mr. Keays: Would the hon. member take time to tell us about Stanley tools and Snap-On tools, so as to give everyone a fair hearing?

Mr. Matheson: It just so happens, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is now specializing in the production of electrical power tools, and we produce the best product, a product that is now being exported to every continent. As a matter of fact, many of the principles that are inherent in current United States auto pact agreements are now being introduced by this power tool industry. Indeed, as a result of a Black and Decker international directors meeting which took place in Brockville on October 19 last it is planned to expand their export production by the amount of $2 million worth a year.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the point taken by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) is relevant. It does seem to me a little difficult to relate the comments of the hon. member at the present time to the resolution that is before the house.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks by saying that not only is there equity in the proposals of the hon. member for Roberval to reform the tax law, but perhaps more important, the proposals of the hon. gentleman would tend to make Canadians more skilful and competent and would tend to bring about that wonderful spirit of pride in quality ownership which is still the basis of Canadian society and growth.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour assigned to the consideration of private members business has now expired. It being seven o'clock the house will resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Nasserden in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $10,568,300.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Nasserden): Order. House again in committee of supply. It being after 7 p.m. I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order, please. The house in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Industry. Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Where is the minister, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. Rideout: He is on his way down.

Mr. Knowles: What department did you call, sir?

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. MacEachen: It was understood that the Minister of Industry would be available until about six o'clock, and that the committee might wish to pass his estimates. If not, we shall go on with the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The Minister of Industry was in the middle of a speech at six o'clock. I hoped he would complete that speech. We are glad to go on with the public works estimates. But the guillotine is operating and we have only a short time to consider the estimates of any department. I think the Minister of Industry ought to be here in this chamber tonight, to answer the questions of the hon. member for Kamloops and others. I do not understand why he is not here and why we must change departments.

The Chairman: Order, please. The committee of supply will resume consideration of the estimates of the Department of Public Works. These were last considered on Thursday, June 29. Vote 1 is to be found on page 420 of the blue book, with the details at page 422.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $19,734,600.

The Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the estimates of the Department of Public Works were considered by the standing committee on estimates. They were then presented to the committee of supply and discussion was begun on item No. 1. Since discussion was started in June in committee of supply I propose, if it meets with the general wishes of hon. members, not to make such remarks at this time, in order to make time available so that they may make such remarks as they wish and ask such questions as they wish.

Mr. Keays: On page 2134 of Hansard for June 29, when the minister's estimates were before the committee, he undertook to make certain additional information available to the house. Is that information now available to him? I do not know precisely what he was referring to, but I think the subject was the Northumberland crossing. At the top of the right hand column of that page are reported these words:

> —an undertaking was given by me that when additional information becomes available later in the year on one of the main items an opportunity would be provided for the committee to get that information and deal with it,—

Is that information now available?

Mr. McIlraith: The reference there was to information about the Northumberland crossing. It will be recalled that we had not awarded certain contracts for which tenders had been invited. The reasons had been given in the house at about the end of May.

When these estimates were before the standing committee I gave an undertaking to that committee, which has since been repeated twice in the House of Commons, that I would bring the matter before the standing committee in order to permit those members who were interested particularly in that subject to get the most up to date information we had. The reason I said "when the information is available" is that we have named a co-ordinator to act on behalf of the department, to co-ordinate the consultant's work and supervise the contracting later. That was the reference, and that still stands. We are not yet in the position where it would be useful or helpful to recall the committee. As soon as information is ready the undertaking will be honoured.

Mr. Keays: I understand the minister to be referring to the standing committee on public works. On June 29 last when six o'clock was called I was discussing the policy of the department with respect to protective walls. Since then I have wondered whether the department has abandoned its policy of building and maintaining such walls. I do not believe a lack of research is involved. The problem arises through trying to do as cheap a job as possible with respect to the walls. When complaints about them are made, excuses follow quickly.

I notice as I travel through my constituency that the protective walls are not of permanent construction. Land erosion, especially when it is caused by currents, is definitely not a temporary thing, so it appears to me that these walls should be made to last. When I see walls made of concrete no more than eight inches thick, or when I look at walls which are built of two or three inch planking with no backfill behind them it puzzles me how anyone could think of them as being of a permanent nature. They are makeshifts, and this is why it is necessary to go back to the department so often with requests for repairs and maintenance. I hope therefore that the minister will embark on a policy of causing walls of a permanent type to be constructed in future. I shall have something more to say on this subject when we reach the particular item.

Incidentally, while I am on the subject of protective walls, I wonder whether research has ever been carried out in an effort to replace these walls on suitable projects by sand or stone beaches. It is evident that erosion is caused by the power of the waves—the power of the rollers. Have we ever considered other means of protecting our shores, either by use of the tetrapod or jack, as it is commonly called, or by placing large rocks in appropriate positions? Has the building of beaches instead of walls ever been considered? Travelling in other countries we find that stone or sand beaches are made by placing stakes or planking in eight, ten or 15 feet of water; the natural flow of the current then brings the stone or gravel in to the shore. This, it would seem to me, is a much more economical way of protecting our shoreline than building walls of three inch planking with no backfill. I hope some research is being undertaken along the lines I have indicated, because I believe considerable savings might be achieved. It is also worth noting that today, with more hours of leisure at their disposal, our people are increasingly going to the seashore for relaxation. Possibly the construction of these beaches would enable our citizens to spend their time at the seashore more enjoyably.

Even when the department is constructing wharves or quays it appears there is reluctance to take the prevailing current into account. After a structure has been built we often find it is causing an accumulation of sand as a result of which dredging operations are necessary within a year or two. I have seen many wharves which have been responsible for the accumulation of sand and others which have caused the disappearance of sand from the area. In this field alone, further research ought to be undertaken in an effort to secure better protection of the shoreline in so many of these places where public structures have caused abnormal erosion.

May I state now, Mr. Chairman, that my remarks of last June should not be misinterpreted as meaning that in my opinion all engineering and planning works should be done by the Department of Public Works. There are certain projects, particularly those of a more elaborate nature, which should be left to firms of engineers and consultants who have available to them the experience and the training necessary, before undertaking these heavy responsibilities in connection with work which is always, in the end, of benefit to the taxpayers.

Care should be taken however when awarding contracts either to engineers or to consultants on a free basis. These contracts should not be considered as political plums given for services rendered. And while I am talking about political plums, I think the minister will be interested to hear about an incident which happened recently in my own riding. Benevolent, generous and easy going as I am, I was embarrassed when I assisted not long ago at a function during which the Minister of Public Works was to have opened the deep water harbour in my constituency. Naturally, I had been invited to take a place on the stand, and the hon. member for Bonaventure was the spokesman for the minister who did not, in fact, attend. I have now received two intimations from the minister—one this year and one last year—that he intended to visit my riding but to date I have not seen him there. He has accordingly missed one of the most enjoyable trips of his lifetime. In addition to enjoying nature in the raw and nature in its cultured state he would also have been in a position to appreciate people who have been able to survive only after a tremendous struggle. I am sure that on his return from that riding he would have said: "The coffers of the government are open to the people of Gaspé."

Unfortunately, the minister delegated the hon. member for Bonaventure to represent him—and I am sorry the hon. member for Bonaventure is not here at the moment; he left the chamber a few minutes ago. I am sure he will be back. Throughout the ceremony I was seated in my place on the stand, listening to the speeches. The only person who got any credit for getting that deep water harbour constructed was the former member of parliament for the constituency, a man who unfortunately was defeated.

I know the minister would not approve of this. Had he been there he would not have said those things. He is not a politician.

An hon. Member: A statesman.

Mr. Keays: However, I sat there listening to all the great things that had been done by my predecessor.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Keays: I would like to remind the hon. member who was interjecting that if he had been in this house from 1958 to 1962 and seen the work done by the then hon. member for Gaspé he would be in a position to say today that it was a Conservative government which approved the project, and that it was a Liberal government which delayed it for five years because it could not reach an understanding with the company involved.

But hon. members opposite wanted to make a political issue of it. A political issue is made of everything that is done by the Department of Public Works in every riding. This is not the way in which the people of Canada should be treated. I hope that some day the minister will visit my riding and be able to show that he is non-partisan. I have wished to say this for a long time, but this is the first opportunity I have had to do so.

I believe that very soon the officials of the department should begin to prepare themselves for the enormous urban development programs which will be required in the various large centres of this country. This department has a great responsibility. I hope in these days when there is a cutting back on expenditures and the people of Canada are being asked to go easy in their demands, that the minister now at least will begin to plan for a future which is not too far away; because in the future there will be a necessity to institute large and extensive projects in the urban areas of our country.

To this point I have made no request of the minister in respect of any projects in my riding, because I consider this to be something which should be brought up under the different items. I would remind the minister however, that the members of this party believe that the large expenditures on the part of the government must be stopped at this time, and priorities must be established. These priorities must be established in such a way that our citizens will not be deprived of the opportunity to earn income. I could cite a dozen cases where an expenditure of $200, $300 or $500 was refused when this expenditure would have made available facilities which would have enabled our fishermen to practise their trade and earn an income, so that they would not be obliged to go to the social services for help. This is one area in which I believe the Department of Public Works is falling down. It does not seem to be concerned about the small projects. At the present time it would appear that the department is mainly concerned with the large construction projects because small ones, such as the expenditure of $200 or $300 for dredging in order that three or four fishermen might be able to earn their living, are turned down. The type of spending the department is doing is not priority spending; it is spending which is contrary to common sense.

I see the hon. member for Bonaventure has returned to his seat. He did say that I was generous and at that time I said nothing. Today, however, I have taken the opportunity to reply to the credit which has been given to a former member. If members on the other side would be as generous, credit would be given to those who really deserve it.

Mr. Béchard: That is what I did.

Mr. Keays: No, you gave the credit to the wrong people, as you always do. I am a politician; that is the reason I am in Ottawa. However, I am more concerned about the welfare of the citizens whom I represent and I wish to see justice done to all.

Mr. Chairman, there is a long coastline of approximately 300 miles in the riding I represent. Many harbour improvements are required for haul-up plants, slipways, dredging and protecting walls. I do not wish to enumerate these, because as I said before I hope the expenditures can be kept to a minimum. I do believe, however, that necessary expenditures such as those which will help the people earn a livelihood have not been given the consideration they deserve. I believe the time has arrived when some of the large expenditures should be delayed and more consideration given to expenditures for the general overhaul of existing structures such as those which, in the case of fishermen, would enable the fishermen to pursue their trade. Small expenditures of this type often make it possible for a family to have an extra piece of clothing, adequate shelter and food.

Before I conclude my remarks I should like to ask the minister whether it might be possible for members of parliament to be advised about the plans for their ridings. Since a member spends most of his time in Ottawa he does not always have time to travel through his constituency on a monthly basis and therefore is not in a position to know whether a project is being undertaken. The only persons who seem to know this are those who exercise political activities in the riding. Last spring I endeavoured to obtain some information, but was unable to do so. Before leaving Ottawa in the latter part of June, I addressed a letter to the minister in which I asked him whether he would be kind enough to give me a list of the projects to be undertaken in my riding during the ensuing year. On July 24 the minister replied stating that I would have an answer in the immediate future. To this date I still do not know how many projects have been undertaken and how many have been completed. The answer which came was dated August 24 and the minister did refer to some projects such as the one I saw this year on the wharf at Sandy beach near Gaspé. This project was not necessary; it just involved the replacement of a few planks between two rails. I am sure there were more necessary projects which could have been done.

I have prepared a list showing every project which I have asked the minister to investigate. We are always told that they are being investigated, that the expense is not justified or that they will be done next year. Meantime the people are being deprived of a means to earn their living. This is not good administration.

The last request I should like to make of the minister is that he clarify the situation in respect of the labour regulations which exist in his department. An effort should be made to co-ordinate the work done by the department, the parity committees, the syndicated groups, and so on, which work in the different parts of the country. This year one contractor did not receive his payments for at least three months. This was not because he did not pay his employees but rather because he paid them at a higher rate than that provided by the labour regulations of the department. This may sound strange, so let me explain. He paid them a higher rate but they worked the hours allowed by the parity committee in that region. Several individuals who were laid off claimed they were only allowed to work so many hours per week, and worked three, four, or five hours in excess of that time. When one considers the rate they received and the number of hours they were permitted to work under the labor regulations he will find that they were overpaid some $10 to $15 per week. We have been unable to come to any conclusion as to how we are going to pay this contractor who did not underpay his employees. Surely this situation should be cleared up immediately.

Last week I indicated to the minister that I could not understand the reason for the delays in payments to contractors. One contractor had four or five post offices to build. Unfortunately he went bankrupt, did not complete the jobs, and the department let a new contract for the completion of the jobs. I understand the jobs were finally accepted as completed some two months ago. The contractor who completed them does not have the means to pay his bills, and cannot afford to wait 90 days or longer for payment because his creditors are pushing him. He has not as yet been paid. The suppliers who came to the aid of the original contractor have claims against the department but are still awaiting some reply as to when and if they are to be paid. I directed this matter to the attention of the minister on three or four occasions in an attempt to get a satisfactory answer, but I have not yet received one, and that is why I have followed up my threat of last week to raise this matter in the house.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, let me take the opportunity of making a few remarks tonight, during our consideration of these estimates, about a matter of considerable interest to the people of Vancouver. Before doing so let me congratulate the minister on the very fine job he has done this summer in making parliament hill a very gay and attractive place, with many flags and decorations during centennial year. I do not think Nelson at the battle of Trafalgar was more flag conscious than our Minister of Public Works when he decorated parliament hill this summer.

Over the past 20 years there has been a project being carried out by the Department of Public Works in the Vancouver area. This project, the Stanley park sea wall, that has cost very little but is of enormous attraction to the people of Vancouver, was discontinued during the course of this last year. I have received a great deal of correspondence, with respect to it, as have other hon. members who represent that city, from citizens of that area.

Stanley park is a body of land surrounded on three sides by water. It is actually an old piece of naval reserve property which was given to the city on a 99 year lease as a public park about the beginning of the century. Its name is virtually synonymous with the name of the city. Montreal has its Mount Royal; Ottawa has its parliament hill. I am not sure what Toronto has, but Vancouver has Stanley park. About 20 years ago the Department of Public Works began to build a sea wall and a footpath around the park along its shores. This was carried out each year on the suggestion that erosion was gradually chewing away at the cliffs of the parkland. Apparently it was decided that a sea wall would arrest this erosion and justify the project.

Year by year the Department of Public Works in a modest way gradually extended one of the finest walks or footpaths in the world. This footpath extends through some of the most magnificent forest land in Canada, runs along the shore of English bay and around a corner in sight of Siwash rock. Many people who find little or no recreation other than walking have the opportunity of following this footpath and derive from it tremendous enjoyment. This area of Vancouver has in it a great number of older people in residence. The west end of Vancouver in which Stanley park lies is a haven for these elderly people, many of whom find their only activity and recreation in that park. It came as a shock to them this year to find that this project has been discontinued, on the ground, according to the department, that erosion was minimal. Let me suggest that no one in the city of Vancouver ever really felt that this path was being built because erosion was either maximal or minimal.

During this 20 year period Vancouverites have come to believe that the Department of Public Works was building one of the finest scenic footpaths in the world and that it would be continued. This path is something like two miles in length and, if completed, would join with footpaths along the inner harbour. I believe it is commendable to save money, but the Department of Public Works, apparently on those grounds alone, has decided to chisel on this project to the extent of the $35,000 which was to be spent this year. The department has used the excuse that erosion is minimal. I know of no other place where the work of the Department of Public Works or any other federal government works at such a low cost has brought more real pleasure to more people.

To complete this project would only involve the construction of a few hundred yards of sea wall and path. I should not like to think that the government, having almost completed this project, would really discontinue it and place a sign at the end, for the people to see to the effect that anyone who passes that point does so at his own risk. Having started this project 20 years ago I should like to think the department is prepared to complete it, because it is very attractive and has been constructed at very little cost, bringing tremendous pleasure to a great number of people.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make tonight. First of all I wanted to congratulate the minister for what I thought was a very fine display on parliament hill this year. Second, I urge him to complete the few hundred yards of this sea wall so as not to leave us with the idea in Vancouver that the federal government has let us down.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer some of the questions that have been asked. The hon. member for Gaspé spoke about protection walls, mainly on the St. Lawrence. I wanted to indicate that it is quite true that this type of wall has been constructed over very many years. There is in the St. Lawrence a situation whereby some erosion is caused by shipping. In those cases the federal government has felt it has reponsibility and has tried to continue the policy of erecting the necessary protection walls. There may be other reasons, due to the construction of a dock or wharf, where erosion may be caused and a similar rule would be applied. But where the erosion is from natural causes the federal government has taken the position that it is not a federal responsibility.

This is where the difficulty arises, because wherever there is erosion it seems that there is a tendency, and I can understand it very well, for those persons affected to feel that the federal government should immediately put in a protection wall, although the federal government does not have jurisdiction over the resource being eroded. In that case it falls within the provincial or local field of responsibility. This is the reason for the difficulty on the subject of protective works.

The hon. member for Gaspé spoke about my not having been able to make the trip to his area. I regret that very, very much. I share his view about the desirability of making the trip, but so far it has not been possible. No one regrets that more than I do. As for the hon. member's remarks about the project at Chandler, that all-important project, I thought when he began his remarks, and indeed throughout more than half of them, that he was applying a delicious sense of humour and was making a humourous reference. But I fear that some of the interjections indicate that perhaps some members of the federal parliament have those sensitivities that some of us wish they did not have, and the hon. member was seeking to make sure that the people of Gaspé knew who had all the virtues and who had all the vices. I myself would not want to indicate who has all the virtues and who has all the vices because my experience in life has led me to believe that it does not work out that one person gets them all. In any event, I have tried to examine the projects as they have come in from the Gaspé, and I would remind the hon. member, in all modesty, that he should not have made the claim that he did make about the Chandler project. It is true that this project was talked about for many years. It was a Liberal government that took the tough decision to go ahead with it. Whether it is a virtue or a vice, they did it, and it is not a useful exercise to claim here that a government that has been out of office for several years undertook the project, because the record simply does not support that thesis. I will leave it at that.

The hon. gentleman made a point that I think it is well to bear in mind at this time. He said that large government expenditures must be stopped and that priorities must be established. This is the situation in which we are working at the present time. No one knows better than I what is involved in curtailing expenditures. The matter of priorities comes into that consideration. We have had to set our minds very firmly on the path of curtailing expenditures, and we are doing this. It will raise questions of priorities. These have to be detailed very carefully so that those projects which will produce the most benefit to the area or the country are proceeded with, and the others, while important but of a less direct benefit to the community or the population as a whole, are deferred.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman indicate which projects in the present estimates are being deferred?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps I can do it best by taking just one illustration which will make the point. I will give the committee a good example of it, namely, the parking garage on parliament hill. It was due for tender call for next month, November of this year. That is the best example I can give. I could detail others, but a good many were started and they cannot be stopped.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Why does the hon. gentleman pick the worst example?

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member for Carleton can imagine that this hon. gentleman had some feelings on the subject and adopted the course with very great reluctance. He can be very sure of that. The hon. member asked a question, and that is the best way I can answer it. The hon. member for Gaspé referred to the wharf at Sandy Beach in his area. I will look up that particular reference. I will not delay the committee by dealing with it now, because I do not have the detail here.

On the matter of the contractor, I can only assume—and here I am not speaking from recollection of the detail—from the hon. member's remarks that the contractor, after contracting to follow and being obligated to follow the federal labour laws, did not follow them, and that there is a problem because he had his employees work beyond the number of hours prescribed by law and was thereby in breach of the federal labour code unless he paid higher wages.

Mr. Keays: He paid higher wages.

Mr. McIlraith: That may be so. I can only assume what the difficulty is. The correct procedure in such a case was for him to have obtained a permit from the Department of Labour and follow the terms of the labour code to pay time and a half. He presumably has not done this. In any event, I will look into the matter and have it examined in detail.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra made particular reference to the Stanley park sea wall. I very much appreciate all he has said about magnificent Stanley park in Vancouver. That land is owned by the federal authority and given on a $1 a year lease, I think it is, to the city of Vancouver. It is beautifully operated and kept. As all hon. members know, it is a magnificent park. The federal government for many years has been following a policy of building a sea wall along those parts of the park where erosion was caused by shipping. That sea wall was built in such a way that it has come to be used as a rather lovely walk or pathway around the edge of the ocean. We stopped the construction because there is no longer any necessity, on the unfinished parts, to protect against erosion. Shipping is not causing erosion in those parts.

The people of Vancouver have very much regretted the discontinuance of their beautiful walk. This is a matter for the city of Vancouver. Representatives of the Vancouver park authorities were in Ottawa a couple of weeks ago and I spoke to them about this matter. The position is that we have offered to continue the bit that would normally be done this year, if we can obtain agreement with them on a shared cost basis with regard to a long term method of finishing the balance of the wall around the island. That matter is under active consideration at the moment. I do not know whether they will agree to the proposition, but that is where the matter stands.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I will be quite brief because I know there are hon. members here who want to raise certain points of interest to their constituents. In view of the limited time we have for the discussion of estimates I would like to make a suggestion to the minister. Instead of taking 15 or 20 minutes to answer the representations made by two hon. members—which I think is quite normal under usual circumstances—I suggest he listen to hon. members' representations and then write each one a letter later on, when he has more time.

Mr. Howard: Or better still, change the rules to allow more time for the discussion of estimates.

Mr. Herridge: I rise to speak briefly because I have been in close association with this department and I have known the officers in charge of public works in Kootenay for over 60 years. On numerous occasions I have inspected for them wharves which were built on contract, or breakwaters or piles which were driven in, and things of that sort. So this is familiar ground to me. I am more of a builder than an intellectual. What I will say is by way of representations made by an old backwoodsman after meeting his constituents in the summer holidays.

First of all I wish to say that I appreciate the minister's response to any matters I brought to his attention. The same is true of the senior officials in Ottawa, the district officials in Vancouver and the local officials in the district, until they retired a short time ago. I must say that I found the Department of Public Works very fair indeed. I cannot complain of partisanship.

Mr. Whelan: Are they good for a new wharf?

Mr. Herridge: Whether it was the Liberal or the Conservative government that was in office, I have always been treated very fairly. I go around and meet the various organizations and groups and find out what is required. I have never asked for things I do not think are necessary. Then I go to Vancouver and talk it over with the district officers there. Finally I come to Ottawa and make a brief plea here. We treat public works on a non-partisan basis in my district. I do want to mention to the minister that the development of the Columbia river has created an entirely new set of circumstances, so it is only possible to plan for two or three years ahead until the whole matter has settled down and the necessary improvements have been decided upon.

I do urge that in the rebuilding of these facilities a local employee be employed to look after the immediate maintenance of certain wharves and things of that sort. Recently a man who was in charge in the district retired, and someone from the Okanagan is now in charge of the Kootenay area. It meant that in some cases wharves became quite unsafe, a plank would go out on a wharf or a piling would go down, and there was no one to repair it immediately. I understand this matter is being given consideration, so that some local person who has experience will look after these immediate needs in the repair of wharves, the clearing of driftwood from wharves in high water, and things of that sort.

I am informed that a number of wharves have been flooded out on the Arrow lakes and the Columbia river and it is the responsibility of the British Columbia power authority to pay for the replacement of the wharves in the new communities that will be established. I suggest that the department work in co-operation with the British Columbia hydro and that it make certain before coming to any final decision that a wharf is required, because of the number of people left in the community. I have heard that in some cases there was no intention to build a wharf because only a couple of dozen people were left in that community.

I suggest that the departmental officials pay very close attention to the development going on at the present time, and before coming to any final decision make sure that any docks built are built where they are required, even though the population may be quite small under the present circumstances.

I suggest also that in the meantime the dredge on the Arrow lakes be maintained. It is not expected to dredge, in view of the rising of the water, when the High Arrow dam is completed, but I do suggest the department maintain the dredge in the meantime because when the High Arrow dam is completed there may be certain work for the dredge to do in maintaining channels into the new wharves, or possibly dredging certain channels from one area to another. This dredge will also be very useful for rental at a per diem rate to organizations or communities which want to use it in the building of their own projects, such as launching facilities for clubs. It has been usual for the department throughout the years to rent this dredge for around $50 a day to non-profit community organizations developing community projects. I suggest the dredge be maintained at the present time which, under present circumstances, simply means keeping a watch on it, because it may be used when the projects are completed for the dredging of approaches to the wharves which will be rebuilt later under the department's jurisdiction and instruction, and for certain other breakwaters that may be required.

I want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that the development going on in our district will provide a great opportunity for recreational development, and the consequent development of the tourist industry because of the large amount of lake frontage available. I am told that in the Kootenays we have the largest area on the North American continent of front shore property on a lake or a river close to transportation. I can also quote the former leader of the official opposition, who spent several days in the Kootenays during the summer recess. When he left the district the hon. member for Prince Albert said he could not understand why the finest district in Canada was not advertised more than it is at the present time. This is my prelude to further suggestions.

As I said before, I go around and meet the village councils, boards of trade, women's institutes and other organizations. I must tell you that I like meeting women because I have always found them very constructive, especially if they are of the type that understand the things we are talking about. I met the Ainsworth boat club at Ainsworth Hot Springs. They have already commenced building a marina for the tying up of the boats coming in for tourist purposes. The tourist industry there is very large and I think they have already spent something in the neighbourhood of $10,000 or so. I understand that departmental officials have looked at this project and will give them some assistance. This is not a large expenditure. It is a small marina which will be of great advantage in developing the recreational facilities in the tourist area on the Kootenay lake.

Consideration must be given to the construction of a new wharf at Beaton if there is a sufficiently large population there, as well as at Nakusp, at Burton, Edgewood and other points where it is considered necessary because of the rebuilding of new communities as a result of the development of the Columbia river treaty projects. I do urge that in any of this rebuilding the department consider the men who have worked for them throughout the years, and hire the local men with experience in the building of wharves, the driving of piles, the building of breakwaters, and things of that sort, because this is possibly the last time in their lifetime they will have the opportunity to build new structures in that area.

My final word is this. I know the situation in my district is so fluid that no final arrangement can be made as to administration. However, I do hope that when all this work has been undertaken and the department knows the circumstances under which it will be operating in the future, arrangements will be made to have the wharves and facilities of the Department of Public Works maintained from day to day. Then people will not have to land from a boat on a wharf which has two or three planks out, at the risk of breaking a leg or something of that sort. I am not suggesting that money be spent unnecessarily, Mr. Chairman, and that is all I have to say at this time. I am not asking the minister to reply this evening.

Mr. McQuaid: I do not propose to take up too much time of the committee, but I feel I just cannot allow this opportunity to pass without urging upon the minister the importance of trying to impress upon the Minister of Finance that he should not make the Northumberland strait crossing a casualty of operation broadaxe. We know of course that every time the Minister of Public Works speaks on this subject he assures the people of Prince Edward Island that the crossing will not be abandoned. However, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that that is not good enough. The people of Prince Edward Island want to know now when the project is going to be started and when it is going to be completed.

When this project was announced in 1965, the government committed itself to the spending of $30 million a year over a five year period until the project was completed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, neither $30 million nor anything like it has been spent as yet and the people of our province are looking to the government to honour the commitment made to them in 1965. I agree with the hon. member for Gaspé and with the Minister of Finance that, under present circumstances, large public expenditures have to be cut back. I suggest, however, that some system of priorities must be established.

We have to argue the merits of this causeway, and one of the bases of this argument would be that our province requires it economically. I do not believe this would be difficult to establish. If one takes a look at the statistics he finds that Prince Edward Island has the lowest per capita earnings of any province in Canada. Something must be done to close the economic gap between our province and the other provinces of Canada. Everybody who has made a study of the economy of the Atlantic area over the past number of years has recognized that there is a large economic gap. They have looked for the key to close this gap. I suggest the key to close the gap is the construction of the causeway. There can be no real improvement in the per capita income of the people of Prince Edward Island, and that is what we need, unless we have easy and continuous access to the markets of the other provinces.

Prince Edward Island has fought long and hard for this causeway. Prince Edward Island stayed out of confederation from 1867 to 1873 mainly because her transportation problems had not been resolved satisfactorily. In 1873 we did enter confederation on the understanding—and this was written into the terms of union which I will quote—that we would be guaranteed efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers, to be established and maintained between the island and the mainland, winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of the dominion.

Up until the present time, these terms of confederation have not been fulfilled because the ferry service is not adequate to give us continuous communication with the mainland. At one time Prince Edward Island was so dissatisfied she felt she had an action against the federal government for a breach of the terms of union. The province actually sued the federal government for something like $17 million and was able to obtain a judgment for about a million dollars. This judgment is recorded and can be seen by anyone who wants to take the trouble to look it up.

We consider that the terms of union have not been fulfilled. I suggest that this causeway has been a political football for too long, and for too long have we suffered by reason of the fact the causeway has been made a political football. Feasibility studies were commenced in 1956. When those studies were completed in 1962, the then prime minister of Canada, Mr. Diefenbaker, announced that the causeway would be built. I am confident that had the Conservative government remained in power the causeway would be almost completed today. However, this did not happen. In 1962 we had a minority government, and unfortunately in 1963 the Conservative government was defeated and the Liberal government took power.

An hon. Member: Good government.

Mr. McQuaid: Good government? Let us see what happened to the causeway. On July 8, 1965, the present Prime Minister announced that tenders would be called. He called a press conference and I should like to quote from the press report:

> Prime Minister Pearson announced today that tenders will be called later this year for a combined tunnel, bridge and causeway between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.
> Construction is expected to start next April.

I do not know to which April he was referring, but apparently that April has not come as yet.

> Construction is expected to start next April and Mr. Pearson said at a press conference he hopes it will be completed in late 1970.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want the Minister of Public Works to assure this house and the people of Prince Edward Island that the expectation expressed by the Prime Minister in July, 1965, will be fulfilled, and that this causeway will be completed in 1970. The press report goes on to say that when the Prime Minister made the announcement he was flanked by new mines minister J. Watson MacNaught, Prince Edward Island cabinet representative, and works minister George McIlraith, the same man occupies the position of Minister of Public Works today.

Then, they picked the mines minister, Mr. MacNaught, up from the bowels of the earth, brushed the coal dust off his feet and sent him over to Prince Edward Island to announce to the people that the Liberal government was going to build the causeway. Mr. MacNaught flew to Prince Edward Island in a Department of Transport Viscount to make the announcement to the people of Prince Edward Island, and when making the announcement he was flanked by huge diagrams of the proposed project.

We have seen these diagrams ever since 1956. I ask the Minister of Public Works to tell his men to put their crayons back in the boxes and give us something to walk on instead of pictures. We are sick to death of looking at pictures of the proposed causeway. Mr. MacNaught, flanked by these pictures, said at the time this was a proud moment for him to be in his native province and to indicate that finally the dreams of the people were about to be realized. He said a project of this magnitude was above politics and there was absolutely no connection between the announcement and any plans the government may have for an election in the near future. This was in August, 1965, and it just so happened there was an election in November of the same year.

Then, not satisfied with that, and perhaps believing the people of our province were not convinced, the government sent down the master of them all, the then minister of transport. He is a man who in opposition always championed the cause of the people of Prince Edward Island, but who when he joined the government was not listened to so attentively. However, the then minister of transport ran up and down the island like a dog looking for a telephone pole. Everywhere he stopped he assured the people that the causeway would be built. Then in October 1965, exactly one month before the election, he said in Kensington that there would be no further hold-ups. Mark that, Mr. Chairman—no further hold-ups.

Mr. MacEwan: He ran out of poles.

Mr. McQuaid: He said that the work was being pushed ahead. According to him, this was not to be a gift to Prince Edward Island. This was not an election bribe, but a sound economic investment for Canada. We want to know now where this sound economic investment for Canada is.

Mr. McIlraith: It is growing very rapidly.

Mr. McQuaid: If it was a sound economic investment one month before the November 1965 election, I suggest it is a sound economic investment now and must not become a victim of operation broadaxe.

Then the minister of external affairs—yes, Mr. Chairman, they loaded their big guns and sent them down—came to the island on October 26, two weeks before the election, and he told the people of the island that this causeway would do more to stimulate economic growth in Prince Edward Island than anything since confederation. And did that ever go over good, Mr. Chairman.

Then the minister of mines was sent down to the island with his bulldozer, a couple of days before the election, and he started the road; but that is practically all we have heard of this causeway since then.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member should get his facts straight.

Mr. McQuaid: Nothing concrete has been done since. We want some action. Let me say to hon. gentlemen across the way: Come alive, get on to yourselves. They have no seats in Prince Edward Island, and they will get none the next time if they do not do something to build this causeway. We want the causeway before the next election; we want something to be done right away.

I agree there are people who argue against the causeway on the basis that it is too expensive. I am half inclined to believe that the government itself is coming to the conclusion that it will cost too much money. All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that that is not a valid argument. Some people would like to divide the number of people on the island into the cost of the causeway, and to point out that it will cost so much per capita; but I contend that this approach is ridiculous.

This is a causeway that will benefit not only the people of Prince Edward Island but all people in Canada. Even if it did benefit only the people of Prince Edward Island, they are still entitled to it. We are a province of Canada and want to be joined to Canada. There are provinces today asking to be separated from Canada; all we want is to be given the chance to be joined to Canada and to become part of this great country.

When people say the causeway will cost too much, did anybody complain about the $350 million to build the St. Lawrence seaway? For example, who today complains about the Columbia river development in British Columbia? Who complains about the Mactaquac in New Brunswick? Who complains about the atomic power establishments in Ontario and Manitoba. No one. These projects are all part of our national investment. Therefore, no one should complain about the cost of the causeway to Prince Edward Island. We need it, it is necessary for our economic development.

Mr. Churchill, who apparently is now an agent of the Department of Public Works, set the thing out very clearly, I think, when he spoke in Charlottetown a few days ago, and I should like to place on record what he said at that time:

> The cost of building and operating the nine mile Northumberland strait crossing could be recovered within 50 years.

That is true, Mr. Chairman. The ferry is today operating at an annual deficit of $5 million. At a loss of $5 million a year, within 50 years the causeway would be paid for. Mr. Churchill continued:

> But even without such savings, the benefit to the isolated economy of Prince Edward Island, now joined to the mainland by ferry service, could be enormous.
> "I am tempted to believe that there can be no real improvement in income and standards of living on the island unless easy and continuous access to markets is arranged"—

I say amen to that.

> "As a Canadian project, the crossing will rank with construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway,"—
> Although it would cost less to construct than the $550 million Churchill falls power project in Labrador, "the technical problems appear more difficult."
> Despite the difficulties of building in the ocean and despite heavy costs to the federal government, "less tangible benefits might be found in the effect on the general business climate in eastern Canada and the renewed interest that might be shown in locating in the Atlantic region."
> "I think these points are perhaps not given the weight they should have when people consider the economics of providing the crossing"—
> "If the economy of this island is improved to the point where reduction of federal subsidies to the provincial government in the amount of only $5 million a year can be achieved, capital and capitalized operation of the crossing might well be recovered within 50 years—
> Any difference that now exists between the wage earnings in Prince Edward Island and the rest of the region or of Canada will tend to be equalized during the period of heavy labour demand occasioned by the construction itself"—

That is what Mr. Churchill had to say, Mr. Chairman. As far as we can find out, Mr. Churchill is an accredited representative of the Department of Public Works, and he says that the causeway will be of terrific economic advantage to our province.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I should like to urge upon the government as strongly as I can to delay this project no more, because if they do they will be in trouble with the people of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. McIlraith: It has not been delayed at all.

Mr. McQuaid: It has. The minister continues to say that the project has not been delayed, yet when the project was announced in 1965 the government of the day promised to spend $30 million per year over a five year period.

Mr. McIlraith: It did not. See the text of the press release.

Mr. McQuaid: The government promised that $30 million a year would be spent. As a matter of fact, I have the press release here if I can take the time to look it up. The minister now says that the project is not being delayed. We cannot see any real, sincere effort being made to construct the causeway at the present time. Two years have passed since 1965, and although the minister promises that the causeway will be built we want him to announce now when construction is going to start in earnest. Then and only then will the people of Prince Edward Island be satisfied that this government has lived up to the promise it made early in 1965.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Chairman, I have two or three items on the public works estimates that I should like to mention; they are mostly constituency problems.

I am one of the members of this house who has respect for the Minister of Public Works, mostly because of the co-operation I have received from him in the many requests I have made in the house during the short time I have been here. I took the opportunity to say as much when I was given the job of introducing the minister at an official function at the opening of our new arena, a centennial project in Clinton this past year.

Might I say that the people of Bayfield are sincerely grateful for the reconstruction of the north pier, part of the cost of which appears in the estimates last year, the remainder being in these estimates. The job is either completed or close to completion.

The success of the project was marred by an accident in which two local boys lost their lives. We were all saddened. I am sure that the accident was not caused through any negligence on the part of the department.

Another item I wish to speak about is the reconstruction at Snug Harbour, in Goderich. This reconstruction was promised as an election promise in the election previous to that of 1965. Because of the publicity this announcement received at that time I followed it through. I am happy to say that the contract, which was also on the estimates of last year, was finally let on May 17 of this year. It is to reconstruct the Snug Harbour pier, and the estimated cost was $130,000. The actual cost will be over $186,000. Work is under way and should be completed shortly, and for that I thank the minister. I also wish to thank him for another $270,000, to be set beside the original $130,000, which will make up the $400,000 to be spent this year on Goderich harbour.

Goderich is about 20 miles from where I live, is one of the largest towns in the riding, and has a fair volume of vessel traffic. The $270,000 is required for reconstruction of the outer end of the north pier. Steel sheet piling and reinforced concrete are to be used, as this section now is in a state of deterioration, and concrete sections along the south face occasionally are falling into channels. During the spring run-off the Maitland river flows partly underneath the existing structure. The proposed work will consist of reconstructing a 640 foot long section of the north pier in steel sheet piling and reinforced concrete.

I received a press release earlier with regard to the reconstruction at Snug Harbour. It advised us that the contract had been let, at an estimated cost of $270,000. I wish to know when the work is to be completed, or if it has been completed. I have faith enough in the minister to know that if he has not that information, he will advise me as soon as possible when he has it.

I wanted to bring this matter to the minister's attention. I realize that this item is in the estimates, but I am anxious to see this work carried out. I also wanted to take the opportunity of thanking the minister for the co-operation he has extended to me during the short time I have been a member of this house.

Mr. Hopkins: I wish to address a few remarks to the Minister of Public Works, and to clarify something that has arisen recently. First of all, I may say to the hon. member for Kings that, in speaking on this matter for Renfrew county tonight, Renfrew county is larger than Prince Edward Island. If we had four members of parliament and four senators representing Renfrew county, we would have had a majority government from the beginning of this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Webb: Don't be too sure of that.

An hon. Member: They might not have got in.

Mr. Hopkins: During the past several months several meetings have taken place between officials of the town of Pembroke, officials of the Department of Public Works and the minister. The intention has been to demolish the dock that was built shortly after the first world war, the estimated cost of the demolition being between $90,000 and $100,000. This demolition has been badly needed for the past few years, as the dock has presented a great hazard to the area.

Recent estimates show an amount of $50,000 set aside for the demolition of this wharf. So that the officials of Pembroke will be fully aware of the department's plan with regard to this wharf, I wish to ask the minister whether it is the intention to have an additional amount of money included in the estimates for the year 1968-69 to complete this job satisfactorily to both parties concerned.

Mr. McIlraith: The simple answer is yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: My colleagues from Vancouver Quadra asked a question about the sea wall around Stanley park. That leaves only one question that I wish to direct to the Minister of Public Works. Some time ago the announcement was made that a new federal building was to be constructed in Vancouver. That building was required urgently. Many Vancouver organizations—the downtown businessmen's association, Vancouver city council, and others—repeatedly made representations that the new federal building should be constructed either in the Queen Elizabeth theatre area or in the new post office area. I understand that the minister has decided to have the federal building constructed in the old post office area, the Hastings and Granville streets area. That decision opposes the unanimous recommendations of city council and the business organizations of Vancouver. That is the first phase of my question. I want to know how the minister reached this decision.

Let me come to the second phase of my question. If the minister is to stand by his present view that the federal building is to be constructed in the old post office building area, can he indicate what took place to influence him in his decision? Let me make it clear that I have had the opportunity of discussing this matter in some detail with the minister. It is my understanding that the new federal building in Vancouver is to be constructed in three or four phases. I believe it is called a tower structure, and the first tower is to be built on the northern end of property which is owned by the federal government. However, a peculiar situation arises. If my understanding is correct, in accordance with the plan for the development of the harbour area a freeway is to go through the land on which it is proposed to build the first tower. Can the minister tell us whether the federal government is going to build and lease the freeway or whether private enterprise is to build it and the federal government intends to lease the tower? Has a decision yet been reached on this question and, if not, when does the minister believe a decision is likely to be reached? I ask this because until this question is answered construction of the federal building cannot proceed—and we are hoping that construction will not be long delayed.

Mr. Bower: If in the remarks I intend to make I sound repetitive, I make no apologies whatever. On the contrary, I can assure hon. members opposite that I shall continue to hammer away at these subjects until the constituents I represent get some satisfaction and consideration in connection with the problems they are facing.

Speaking on the estimates of the Department of Industry I made an appeal to the Minister of Industry assuming he was as interested in keeping industries from going to the wall, or disappearing for lack of certain facilities, as he was in encouraging new industries. I got no reply. Then, sotto voce, I heard him mention my constituency when he said he intended to reply only to those members who were sufficiently interested to remain in their seats. I can assure the minister that I was in my place when he began his remarks, I was there while he was making them and I was still there when he concluded. I have not heard from him.

Accordingly I intend to start with another minister because it is my purpose to try, somehow or other, to get some co-ordination into the conglomerate government we have opposite—ministers who apparently do not speak to each other or who never bother to relate economic factors in the slightest degree.

Long before the Minister of Finance announced that expenditures should be curtailed, and before it became apparent to him that deficit financing would inevitably contribute to the inflation we are now facing, I was among the first to recognize the realities of the situation. However, when curtailing expenditure I maintain that cuts should not be made where the economy is feeblest. These are the areas which must be sustained, while cuts are made in the more exotic and less fruitful expenditures that I observe going on in the country.

The hon. member for Gaspé said he had hoped to see the Minister of Public Works in his constituency this summer but was disappointed because that hon. gentleman failed to arrive there. Well, I am informed that the minister did visit my constituency. I never saw him, though. When I learned he was there, and went to Yarmouth, he had disappeared although he had in tow a group of political lame ducks and other characters who were liable to become lame ducks because their constituencies would disappear as a result of redistribution. I hope this will ease the soul of my hon. friend from Gaspé in some sort of way: it probably would not have made a bit of difference, to have had a ministerial visit.

My constituency depends principally on the fisheries, on tourism and on the secondary industry which is slowly developing there. I want to place the emphasis now on fisheries. I should like to draw attention to some of the more glaring difficulties which we are at present disenjoying—there are many others, but time will not permit me to go into them—by putting forward a brief catalogue of these highlights in geographical succession. On Christmas day last year the new wharf at Saulnierville was washed out by a very bad storm. As far as I know, nothing has been done to repair it. We are now approaching another winter of storms. Having had some background in engineering and some experience in construction also, I would say this is a bad situation because the storm which wrecked the wharf in the first place may well be succeeded by an even more severe one this year and I hardly think that a damaged wharf will stand up to another severe attack.

I ask the minister what he is planning to do. I look at the estimates, realizing of course that the estimates for the year did not anticipate this brand new wharf going to pieces. I look at the supplementary estimates and I see not a cent for the repair of this wharf. Apparently the minister's motto is that of Wilhelm II of Germany—"Gott mit uns." Mr. Chairman, this wharf is the basis upon which the fishing industry in the northern part of Clare operates. With its disappearance hundreds and hundreds of men will be deprived of an opportunity to earn their livelihood in the one business they know.

I drop down the coast now to the Meteghan river, one of the few semi-natural harbours on the exposed coast of St. Mary's bay. This is the site of a large shipbuilding industry. This port has been neglected. With a relatively modest investment it could be revived and placed in such a condition that the shipyard company would be able to rig their vessels after they are launched and conduct repair jobs. The company to which I am referring has had on the stocks at one time eight big ships, and employs about 180 men. I see nothing in the estimates, supplementary or otherwise, which indicates that any effort is being made to revive what once was a very fine little harbour. This harbour could play a very vital role in the economy of Clare.

There is another matter which I have mentioned previously to the minister, and in the house, and that is the situation in Yarmouth. Some two or three years ago a very fine public wharf was built at Yarmouth. Today it is dangerously overcrowded. Large purse seiners have been built in the last year or two and they are crowded in at the wharf seven or eight deep. If one of these should explode in the middle of one of these clusters, the whole fleet might go up in flames and there could be a real catastrophe. Certainly they are crowded to the point where effective operations cannot be carried out.

Here again we have an example of an industry in this constituency which, although on the point of being developed, is being restricted because of inadequate infrastructure. I have proposed to the minister and also to the house the idea of acquiring the old Evangeline wharf property which has been abandoned for a number of years. The wharf no longer is suitable but the site is one which could be used appropriately for another wharf. I do not see any evidence of any move being taken in this direction. The first thing to do would be to acquire the property. Then a wharf could be built which would enable the people in the area to take part in the fisheries which are being developed in the area. I am always told such things as: Oh, well, we are digging a basin out there. I should like to read about this marvellous basin. This is an article in The Light Herald of Yarmouth dated September 28, 1967:

> The dredging of the inner basin at the public wharf which began this spring, was expected to provide some relief for small seiners by deepening the basin to 12 feet. The depth was made 4 feet only which is suitable only for lobster boats. The construction of a retaining wall along the land side of the basin was to have provided a place where the boats could tie up and have space to work on their gear.
> The wall is not yet built, and the bank of the basin is falling in with every tide and filling up the basin where the dredging was done. Not only is this a matter of too little too late, but the money spent on the improvement has been wasted by the filling in of the basin.
> In the meantime the huge MacNamara dredge sits idle at the public wharf while fishing boats search for berthing space at the wharves, and sometimes find themselves crowded out into the narrow channel of the harbour proper.

In addition to not being dredged to a depth which would be adequate for the purpose of providing a space for the big off-shore boats to anchor, this basin is not satisfactory even for the smaller boats. The fishing industry thus still remains restricted.

The government has informed me that the policy now is not to have a "wharf for every fisherman" but rather to have a number of large strategically located fishing ports. Certainly Yarmouth is qualified to benefit from such a policy, but nothing is being done.

I should like to move on now to Cape Sable island which traditionally for many years has been one of the great fishing areas on our coast. Here there is a real need for a deep water wharf so that the plants on Cape Sable island may be supplied with fish by the big off-shore ships. Cape Sable island has 3,500 to 4,000 people who obtain their living from the sea. About 4,000 more people on the mainland derive their living from the Cape Sable islanders activities. This wharf has been the subject of a great deal of argument, but no appropriations have been made and no building projects have been undertaken. The whole matter has developed into the chicken and egg sort of argument, in which it is said that if the companies put in the plants the wharf will be built, and the companies say they will not build the plants until they see the wharf. In the meantime my understanding is that there is already a surplus fish processing capacity on the island and that this would warrant a start being made on the wharf. If this is done, then we will see the processors move in with additional plant.

In so far as Shelburne is concerned, it has one of the most magnificent harbours on the Atlantic coast. At one time it was a great centre for yachting. Hundreds of yachts from the United States used to put in at this port. Supplies were purchased and this provided considerable business for the merchants in the town. At the present time there is a good public wharf there, but it is utilized entirely by the fishing industry. There is not a wharf at which a yacht could tie up. A breakwater-wharf should be built on the west side of Shelburne harbour. The town has already acquired a shore property and this they would be disposed to turn over to the government if the government would put in the facility I have mentioned.

I should like to point out to hon. members that the constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare is the largest fishing constituency in the whole of Canada. The landed value of the fish is the greatest. We are speaking of a major industry which is being throttled because of the lack of repairs in some cases, the enlargement of existing facilities in other cases and the construction of needed new elements in the infrastructure. I should like to quote again from The Light Herald of September 28. While the statement which I should like to quote refers in particular to Yarmouth, it applies to all the areas I have mentioned:

> The hopes of the town lie with the board of trade, and if their action is not successful in getting action from the Departments of Transport and Public Works for additional facilities along the waterfront, the government can look forward to having the fishing industry of Western Nova Scotia turn into another Cape Breton coal industry where the costs to rescue the area from economic ruin will far exceed that of aiding our fishing industry now.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, there has been much conversation here about cutting expenditures and slashing the estimates. Apropos of this fact I think I should point out that part of the reason for these large government expenditures can be associated with certain cabinet ministers lauding as something virtuous, the large amounts of money under their authority and expended by this departments. I have read press statements in which cabinet ministers have from time to time extolled the tremendous contributions they are making to Canada because of the large sums of money they control. Let me hasten to add that I have not read any such press statements issued by the Minister of Public Works. Some of his colleagues have very hefty propaganda machines in their offices for this purpose.

The government is at fault here for not expressing concern about the value received from the money expended or from what has been accomplished. The members of the cabinet simply refer to the large amounts under their control. References are made to previous years to show the millions of dollars more to be spent by their departments in the current year. They do so in an attempt to develop some sort of political support for the degree to which they spend the public money.

We should expect a different set of responsibilities than those expressed so far, in that the government should cut back on the spending of some of these spendthrifts who are not so much concerned with the welfare of the public as they are in how much money they can spend, in the manner of the often referred to drunken sailor. These huge expenditures seem also to be associated with a claim for political support. The Department of Public Works falls heir to this sort of exploitation. Members of constituencies who happen to be representative of the party in government also laud the virtue of high government expenditure on public works within their own constituencies, and demand such expenditures on the basis of gaining additional political support.

All of this misuse of public funds leads to the situation we face today, in which the Minister of Finance is sharpening his axe to the proper hone in order to slash, slice and slit the estimates of every department; and one he is aiming at is the Department of Public Works. I am sure the minister knows this very well. His department may have relatively little impact upon some urban constituencies. Earlier I asked some of my colleagues in the house from urban ridings what effect public works spending meant to them. They had to grope and think, but eventually arrived at the answer that post offices and federal buildings represent the extent of public works spending.

The expenditures of this department have a tremendous impact on constituencies which I represent and the constituency represented by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare, as well as those of other coastal or maritime areas where the men work in the fishing or shipping trades. In these areas breakwaters, wharves, docks and floats are all of tremendous assistance, both to the economy of the area and the safety of the workers.

Let me give you an example of the value of public works projects to these areas, both from the point of view of the number of projects and the value to politicians in the area. I am sure this is true in certain communities in Skeena and other parts of my constituency. Let me show one example of what I have in mind.

Prior to the 1962 election the public works estimates contained an appropriation for a breakwater at the Indian community of Kitimat. This project was approved in 1962, according to the officials within the department. You will remember that during that year the then prime minister returned following the election and said that things were in a terrible state, and that the government had to curtail public works expenditure. Apparently this had something to do with the extremely dangerous balance of payments situation. Various projects provided for in the estimates of the Department of Public Works and other departments were cut.

The Indian community to which I have referred depends to a great extent on fishing, and depends for safety upon adequate breakwaters. They had a breakwater almost within their grasp in 1962, but lost it because of some financial difficulties the federal government faced. The appropriation for that project did not find its way back into the estimates until this year, five years later. What sort of system of revision and priorities must exist within a department such as this? What sort of planning must take place? How can any community have admiration or respect for a department or government when they realize that a worth-while project such as this, having once been approved, is cut out because of financial problems of the government of the day? Perhaps they accept this as being one of those things which occur, but having to wait for five years before the project comes back within reach is something that should not happen.

Let me say that this project is being proceeded with at the moment, for completion sometime next spring. There do not appear to be any impediments in the way of its completion. Surely there should be greater understanding of the responsibility of government to communities such as the one to which I have referred. I am sure that the situation in respect of this project has been duplicated in many other areas. Many projects have probably reached a certain stage of priority only to be cut back for some financial reason, and presumably lost in the shuffle which goes on within the department.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government house leader what business we will take up tomorrow, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday?

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we propose to take the Treasury Board estimates. Wednesday we will begin with the broadcasting act. On Thursday we are obliged to complete the remaining estimates, and on Friday we will continue with the Broadcasting Act. If it is completed or given second reading we will continue with legislation. On Monday it is proposed to start on the capital punishment bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—POSSIBLE USE OF EXPO BUILDINGS AS MONTREAL HEADQUARTERS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), in the absence of the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), whether any consideration had been given in the city of Montreal to using the very fine Canadian broadcasting centre, the theatre and the administrative building, all having to do with the magnificent Expo '67, for the nucleus of the operations of the C.B.C. in the city of Montreal. First of all I would say that I am not one of those who criticize one five cent piece of the expenditure on Expo '67. I think history will prove this was a magnificent exhibition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: That should be made clear immediately. Neither am I one who is against the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation having a new building in the city of Montreal. It goes without saying of course, because I have raised this question, that neither am I against federal expenditures in the city of Montreal, the most civilized city in Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Don't forget Ottawa.

Mr. Fairweather: I am mentioning civilized cities. I did not think the two were in the same sequence. But there have been doubts about the usefulness of the new building in downtown Montreal. These are not the doubts of those who are anti the expenditure of public money; they are the doubts of people who have seen the techniques of television production overleap the architects' plans for this very large building in the city of Montreal. In other words, the plans were drawn several years ago and the techniques of programming have advanced to such a stage in the intervening years that the architects' plans are obsolete, it is suggested, before the site is cleared or the construction starts.

I think also that there is a second question about the C.B.C. building in downtown Montreal. It is that there is far too much parking space in a very valuable site in downtown Montreal. I think that about one third of the 23 acres is for parking, and this I suggest is an uneconomic use of prime land. So that even without the austerity program that was described earlier tonight as the Sharp broadaxe, the C.B.C. construction in Montreal merits very careful re-examination.

I hope the minister realizes that this is not just a criticism of the plan, but is rather a seeking of information as to whether, in view of the advanced techniques of programming, it would not be a piece of very good housekeeping if we used the nucleus of the buildings which I have mentioned on the site of Expo before we build what may well be a white elephant in downtown Montreal.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the building housing the International Television and Radio Center which was built at the Cité du Havre by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has not been designed—I must say to the house and to the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather)—for the present or even the future needs provided for in the broadcasting complex now under construction in the eastern part of Montreal.

The present building, that is the International Television and Radio Center of the

C.B.C. has been built to enable the corporation to cover this magnificent and colossal event of Expo 67, so properly noted by the hon. member a while ago, and to also enable the various foreign radio and television outfits which came to our country, particularly to Montreal during Expo to broadcast to their country this tremendous achievement and its various events.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation required this permanent building to relieve the pressure on the various premises currently occupied in Montreal and which are scattered in various buildings, until the broadcasting complex is finished.

The C.B.C. intends, I think, to use this building as a training centre for personnel for both English and French networks.

FISHERIES—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, my question on the adjournment proceedings arises out of a statement of the first list of geographical co-ordinates establishing the straight base lines for purposes of demarking our territorial seas and fishing zones. In this matter Canada has acted, in my view, in accordance with the practices and the conventions of international law, and throughout we have negotiated and consulted with the nations that historically have fished within the waters which we will be endeavouring to enclose within our territorial and fishing zones. In particular we have negotiated throughout with the United States and have assured them of their historic and treaty rights. But the United States has protested the Canadian position, and the United States protest and rejection of our position is in my view unacceptable. It is on this matter that my question arose. I hope it is equally unacceptable to the fishermen and the congressmen from the states of Alaska, Washington and Oregon who have as much at stake in the establishment of the concept of straight base lines and territorial and fishing zones as we in Canada have.

Canada has no alternative in this matter but to enforce the law as it has been passed by this sovereign parliament and enacted by regulation of the cabinet of Canada. However, coming from the west coast as I do I am particularly concerned about and interested in Canada's jurisdiction over the Dixon entrance, the Hecate strait and Queen Charlotte sound. First we are entitled to a full and frank statement from the government outlining the future of these waters, and second, before such a statement is made—and this is why I rose the other day—I want once again to impress upon the government that we on the west coast want the fisheries jurisdiction over these waters, and I am quite sure will be satisfied with nothing else. We are primarily but not exclusively concerned with our salmon stocks which spawn in our rivers and range far out to sea. It is essential in the long term that we have a treaty binding all the nations fishing in the Pacific, providing for the protection and conservation of those fisheries stocks. But I am not an optimist and I do not see such a treaty being agreed upon in the very near future. In the meantime we require as an absolute essential fisheries jurisdiction over the waters I have mentioned.

Some internationalists tell me that we will never be able to establish as a principle of international law that these waters can be the territorial waters of Canada. May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we are interested, and I speak for myself, really only in the fisheries protection aspect of these waters, and not the other aspects of sovereignty over these waters, such as the right to defence. We are solely concerned with our fisheries jurisdiction over these waters. If we cannot gain acceptance by international law of these other territorial jurisdictions over waters, may I suggest to the government that they attempt to work out a deal with the other nation involved under which we could draw base lines, including those waters for fisheries jurisdiction only. I believe this would be acceptable to me and to the fishermen at home whose livelihood is related to this question. I believe the Russians and the Japanese will be encroaching upon these waters. We are not so much concerned that they should be the territorial waters of Canada, but we are concerned that they be protected by Canada for fisheries purposes. If we cannot work out a deal one way, may I suggest we try to work out a deal by which these waters become protected for fisheries purposes only?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the hon. member referred to salmon stocks which, as he well knows, are found far beyond the bodies of water he mentioned. The approach which has been given to the introduction of co-ordinates based on headland to headland has been that it is for fishery purposes only.

The last part of the hon. member's question, therefore, has been well covered during the negotiations.

During his remarks the hon. member has been referring to certain bodies of water, and in some cases I must remind the house that if a line is drawn from headland to headland it would be about 100 miles out, which is far beyond the distance normally recognized by international law. At this time I can do no better than to quote the word of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) when he appeared before the standing committee on external affairs on October 26:

> The Canadian government entered into a series of bilateral negotiations with those countries that would eventually be affected by any such establishment of base lines to ascertain whether or not the proposed straight base lines would be acceptable to them from the point of view of international law. Although the drawing of straight base lines is a matter that can only be undertaken by Canada, such a system cannot be implemented unless it is carried out in accordance with the applicable rules of international law.

My colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, also referred to the fact that if agreement could not be obtained by the countries most directly affected, implementation by Canada could give rise to protests and possibly to international litigation. As we all know, this could lead to a case for decision before the International Court of Justice.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs also added that further lists of co-ordinates will shortly be issued. Negotiations are well under way and we are looking for the eventual establishment of a more rational régime of conservation and exploitation of the living resources of the sea through which coastal states would receive greater protection.

FREIGHT RATES—CREAM—REQUEST FOR RESCISSION OF RECENT INCREASE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, if you had been in the habit of travelling from your apartment building by bus, how would you like it if one morning you were told that instead of paying a 25 cent fare normally charged, the fare would be $2.50? If you were in the habit of travelling by car, how would you like to drive to the service station and instead of being charged 45 cents for a gallon of gasoline be requested to pay $4.50 in order that you may continue to use your car? My question this morning was directed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), although it did relate to problems which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) must resolve. I wanted to know what the government was doing about rescinding an order issued by the transport commission which allows the railways to charge a 1,000 per cent higher rate for the shipment of cream. From a charge of 65 cents to deliver a can of cream to the creamery and back, the railways are now allowed to charge up to $6.35 and more. After several trips to and from the creamery you might as well throw away that can. It costs about $11 or $12 for the can, and after four trips, as I say, you might as well throw it away.

They say that power corrupts, and the more absolute the power the more absolute the corruption. That may not be entirely true of the commission, but when parliament authorized the board of transport commissioners to permit a reorganization of the railways and dealt with the transportation bill, I stated at the time that it was not a transportation bill but a railway bill. The bill was not going to solve our transportation problems; it was going to try to solve the problems of the railways.

Perhaps the railways are going to be happy with this new rate, but I suggest that the commission has gone hog-wild in allowing the railways to charge such a ridiculous rate as this. If this rate proves exorbitant to the users of the railway, then what revenue can the railways possibly derive from it?

In Saskatchewan it is estimated there are between 1,500 and 2,000 cream shippers who will go out of business. They will not be able to ship their cream by truck; they normally depend on the railways. They depend on a few trucks to ship their cream and maintain their farm operation.

Many of them pay the fuel bills for their tractors and cars with money earned the hard way. They get up early at dawn to milk the cows, and send off their cream before the kids go to school on the bus. Then after the kids come back from school they milk the cows, well on into the night. These are the people who will have to pay $6.35 on their cream.

The members of the commission who have made this order arrive at their offices at eight or nine in the morning, even ten o'clock, and at four or five o'clock their day is finished. The man who allowed himself to be appointed commissioner receives $40,000 a year. I asked the former minister of transport last July when he was going to appoint a commission which would put some teeth into a provision to retain some rail lines, and more particularly to replace the bridge which had been destroyed west of Chelan. The minister said at the time that he hoped this would be done some time in September. I am sure he was aware then that he was going to be appointed to his new post, and when I asked this question I did not realize that we were going to end up with a commission which had the fangs of a werewolf. I did not realize it would consist of people who were willing to sacrifice hundreds of farmers who were trying to make a living the hard way.

This afternoon we spent a lot of time discussing the estimates of the Department of Industry, a department that does not seem to be aware of Parkinson's law. These are the people who surround themselves with men, whether they are needed or not, to build an empire. In Saskatchewan alone between 1,500 and 2,000 people have been sacrificed; I do not know the figures for the other provinces. When I asked for the commission to be given teeth, I meant what I said.

When the railways made their application they did not heed the needs of many small communities for rail service. The merchants do not want slow deliveries, incomplete arrivals, and payment for compensation. They want service. But when the railways, on top of everything else, apply for a tenfold increase, the only conclusion one can draw is that they wish to eliminate rail services—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Mackenzie has brought a serious matter before the house. It is too serious to be discussed in the language the hon. member has used this evening. To indulge in personalities, as the hon. member has, will not solve any problem.

I wish to tell him that I, too, know something about rising at four o'clock in the morning and milking cows. I have had a good deal of experience in these occupations and am in complete sympathy with the farmers. But this is no way to solve their problems.

I wish to tell the hon. member that the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture of Canada back on October 5. Of course the minister has also corresponded with the farmers, who are still getting up somewhat earlier than the hon. member for Mackenzie gets up.

The matter has been taken up with the Express Traffic Association of Canada by the director of traffic of the railway transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission. The whole question of express rates on cream and returning empties was the subject of a review by senior express officials on October 24 and 25. The Minister of Transport hopes to be in a position to advise further within a week or ten days.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 31, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN PROPOSED PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister pay heed to the strong demand from across Canada for federal government leadership and personally attend the confederation of tomorrow conference as a means of showing some interest in a matter which is of concern to all Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wish to bring to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition that the question is obviously couched in the form of an argument. That is not in accordance with the rules. The question should be asked directly.

Mr. Starr: I shall rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister personally attend the confederation of tomorrow conference that is being held and which is of such great interest to all Canadians?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. This, of course, is an interprovincial conference. I do not know of any such conference which has been attended by the prime minister of this country, important though such a conference undoubtedly is. It has been made quite clear by the premier of Ontario that this is an interprovincial conference at which matters of provincial co-operation will be discussed by the governments of the provinces. Perhaps as a result of that discussion the provinces, or some of them, will be able to put on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference in January some subjects that can be discussed there on a federal-provincial basis.

Meanwhile the government will be represented by observers as is customary at provincial conferences. The four federal observers will be Mr. Jean Beetz, assistant secretary of the cabinet; Mr. Carl Goldenberg, special adviser to the Minister of Justice on constitutional matters; Mr. A. W. Johnson, assistant deputy minister of finance; and Mr. Marc Lalonde, special adviser to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Starr: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister not think Canada's confederation is far too important to be left to officials, and that the sooner he stops making speeches and starts attending these conferences the better it will be for Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pearson: No one is more concerned with the confederation of Canada than I am.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the Leader of the Opposition does not think his question is more an argument than a question formulated according to the custom of the house.

GRAIN

PROPOSED INCREASE IN AMOUNT AVAILABLE FOR CASH ADVANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Now that the pattern is clearly emerging according to which grain delivery quotas will not be opened up significantly, can the minister say whether the government is giving immediate attention and consideration to the request for an increase in the amount available to farmers through cash advance legislation?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been under consideration at a conference as recently as this morning. We are watching developments, and I may or may not have something more to say on the subject in due course.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the recent statement made by Charlie Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, would the government consider advancing credit to prospective wheat importing countries so they could buy wheat now and raise their standard of living, and at the same time improve the Canadian grain situation?

Mr. Winters: There has been no call for that so far. We have a well developed and well recognized aid program around the world. We also have a very aggressive marketing organization. This has been a highly competitive year in the marketing of wheat, but a pattern is developing for a more orderly market now, and our wheat is moving in a stronger flow than it was a short time ago.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the difficulty which the government or the wheat board are having in marketing our wheat, has the government given consideration to following a policy of cash advances on grain such as was brought into effect by the Conservative government a few years ago under similar circumstances?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, we will develop policies to suit the circumstances, but at the moment we are pursuing a very aggressive policy of marketing wheat and I think the activities of the wheat board are bearing some fruit.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of these remarks would the minister advise the House of Commons of the names of the people representing the wheat board either in Hong Kong or Peking, and does he not feel that his own presence at the negotiating table is important?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED INTENTION TO REDUCE DELIVERY SERVICE TO FIVE DAYS WEEKLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. He stated yesterday that, some time in the future, the delivery service will be on a five day week basis, and that this would represent a yearly saving of seven and a half million dollars for the Post Office Department. What are the minister's grounds for stating that there will be such savings?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): I did not make such a statement, Mr. Speaker. I can only say that the department is now looking into this matter following Mr. Justice Montpetit's recommendations.

[English]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a supplementary question, Mr Speaker. Can the Postmaster General tell the house whether the five day week would include the transportation of mail?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): The transportation of mail from where to where?

Mr. Simpson: The first question concerned the possibility of the delivery of mail being put on a five day week basis. I should like the minister to say whether the proposal includes the transportation of mail in Canada on a five day a week basis.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General something which really has to do with a previous question. If his department decides on a five day week for the postal service, is consideration being given to enabling people in rural areas to obtain their mail on Saturdays if they so desire?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question of the hon. gentleman appears to be hypothetical.

UNITED NATIONS

MIDDLE EAST—PROPOSAL THAT REPRESENTATIVE OF SECRETARY GENERAL SEEK PEACE SETTLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he is able to report any progress in his attempts to have the Secretary General of the United Nations granted authority to send a special representative to the Middle East to seek a peace settlement in that area.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the ten non-permanent members of the security council have been meeting this morning and are meeting this afternoon to deal, first of all, with the suggestion that the Secretary General should have a representative in the Middle East to bring the parties together. The difficulties, however, in the discussion arise over the terms of reference of such a representative, and in particular the failure of both sides to agree on certain principles involved in the settlement. The discussions are taking place this afternoon and I continue to hope they will be successful.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question. If this effort fails, and we hope it does not, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether the government of Canada has any further proposals to make to get this matter settled properly?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The discussion that is taking place amongst the ten non-permanent members has to do with a Canadian-Danish proposal. If this proposal does not succeed we shall certainly continue to put forward ideas which we hope might be accepted.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED LAY-OFFS IN ATLANTIC REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question further to the questions that were asked yesterday about lay-offs by the Canadian National in the Atlantic region. Will the minister bring about a stay of these lay-offs until meetings are held in Moncton between railway officials and the government in connection with these lay-offs?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): All I can undertake to do is to continue the discussions with management and with the minister of manpower which have been going on to ascertain in what way we can be most helpful under the circumstances.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Has the minister any more information along the lines of my question on Friday as to when these men will be laid off, where are they located, and what is the reason for this action aside from the rate increases the government brought about recently?

Mr. Hellyer: I have received no additional information. It has been confirmed that the reason for the lay-offs is directly attributable to a reduction in freight loadings. This year the loadings were something of the order of 100,000 cars fewer than last year, which in terms of trains of 100 cars each represents 1,000 trains. This is a very significant reduction in the tonnage carried, and the reduction is directly reflected in the requirements of personnel to maintain the service.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Since the minister of manpower took objection to the short notice in connection with these lay-offs, will the minister see that the notice is lengthened to cover the period during which these meetings may be held?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly bring it to the attention of the management of the Canadian National Railways for their consideration. This is a question which is primarily the responsibility of management, but I will be glad to point out to them the national concern that has been expressed here.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he or other members of the government have received notice of a mass meeting at Moncton to discuss not only the lay-offs on the Canadian National but also the closing of the steel plant at Sydney and the whole impact on the economy of the maritime provinces. Does the minister or any other minister intend to be there so the point of view of the government can be brought to the attention of the meeting?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, on the way into the house one of my colleagues indicated that he had received such an invitation. This was just stated casually on entering the chamber. I have no knowledge whether any other members of the government have received invitations or what their reply will be.

Mr. Brewin: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of this matter to the whole economy of the maritimes, would the minister consult with his colleagues and try to make sure that someone attends the meeting?

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Transport. In view of the short interval between the time the telegrams have been received in connection with the meeting at Moncton and the actual date of the meeting, I was wondering whether the minister would consider meeting with a delegation of railway employees and others interested in this matter before any lay-offs take place.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, we have under constant consideration in what ways we might be helpful; but I can tell my hon. friend that no one has taken a more direct interest in this matter than the hon. member for Westmorland, who has been pressing on every possible occasion for some action to be taken by the government.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have had a number of supplementary questions on this matter. Perhaps we could go to a different constituency and another question. If the hon. member wants to return to the subject he will be given that opportunity in a short while.

Mr. Coates: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I rose to ask the Minister of Transport a question and all he did was to tell me about what the hon. member for Westmorland was doing. I am not interested in that. What I am interested in is what the minister is doing about these railway employees and those who are out of jobs.

[Later:]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in connection with the Canadian National lay-offs in the maritimes. Will the minister discuss with the Canadian National its policy of farming out work, so that further lay-offs in the Atlantic area which result from work being farmed out may be eliminated?

Mr. Hellyer: We have already discussed this at some length, but I would be glad to bring the hon. member's representations to the attention of the company.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): In view of the serious unemployment situation on Cape Breton island, the cloud which at present hangs over the steel industry and the lay-offs by the C.N.R. in the Atlantic regions, would the minister request the Canadian National Railways to delay the implementation of their new facilities at the port of North Sydney for a further considerable period of time in order that further lay-offs at that port may be avoided?

Mr. Hellyer: I will be glad to discuss this question with the management and ask for their comments on it.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSED REDUCTIONS IN ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister use his well known powers of conciliation to persuade his colleagues to agree on the reductions to be made in the present year's estimates so they may be announced to the house before the consideration of these estimates is completed on Thursday?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will use my well known powers to try to persuade my hon. friend not to ask such meaningless questions.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question. If the Prime Minister can set aside his snide remarks for a short space of time would he not consider it important that these reductions that have been talked about by the government for many weeks be announced before the completion of the examination of these estimates?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked is argumentative.

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In giving his answer does the Prime Minister mean that reductions in the present estimates are meaningless?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pearson: I was referring to the hon. gentleman's method of asking questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MEASURES TO MEET ALLEGED MONEY CRISIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and is based on a report appearing in this morning's Gazette, in which the minister is reported as having said that within a few days he plans to make an announcement with regard to measures the government is going to take to deal with the present money crisis.

In view of the fact that this announcement was made outside the chamber, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether we can be assured that when he comes to announce the measures he will do so inside this chamber to this gathering.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I deny that there is any money crisis, but I can assure the hon. member that when the government brings forward its measures, they will be announced in this house.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I wonder if the minister has read the item which I have referred to, which says there is a money crisis.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot ask for a confirmation or denial of a statement appearing in the press.

Mr. Hees: Does the minister not consider the lowest bond prices and highest interest rates to be a crisis?

POLLUTION

ADOPTION BY CABINET OF TRADE MINISTER'S PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will his one man crusade on air pollution be adopted by his cabinet colleagues and become government policy?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was projecting some thoughts into the future which I think will have unanimous approval.

[Later:]

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made by the minister when speaking to the sales and marketing executives club in Toronto recently, at which time he is quoted as having said "The air we breathe is said to be increasingly unfit for human use," can he tell this house what if any steps he plans to expedite pollution abatement legislation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This sort of question has already been asked in the house on a number of occasions.

Mr. Knowles: But it has not been answered.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in view of his concern for the abatement of air pollution, to kindly refer public bills No. C-25 and No. C-171 to the appropriate standing committee of the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Would the minister like to take another look at his answer as recorded in Hansard of October 26 at page 3497, in which he said that incentives are available to industry for air pollution measures? I have checked this, and in the light of the information I have received I wonder whether the minister would not wish to amplify or correct his answer.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Unless I am wrong, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question also referred to water pollution.

Mr. Rynard: No, it did not.

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry. I drew that conclusion when the question was addressed to me and said that such incentives exist in the field of water pollution.

[Translation]

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I have a grave and serious question to put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Could the minister or, in his absence, his parliamentary secretary, inform the house whether the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) had been well inoculated before he left for France, so that he may be immune from attacks of stupidity which might lead him to cry out "Long live free Brittany" on French soil?

[English]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the statement by the Minister of Transport which indicated a decrease of 100,000 freight carloads during the past year. Does the Minister of Finance consider this phenomenon to be a good indicator of the state of our economy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion. His question is not proper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT NEW SHIPS HAVE CANADIAN CREWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. The Canadian Tuna Company Limited has built a tuna cannery at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, and ordered five tuna seiners some 200 feet in length, three to be built at the works of Canadian Vickers in Montreal and two at the Yarrows shipyards at Victoria, British Columbia. Since this entire operation has been heavily subsidized by the Canadian government through the Department of Industry, can the minister say whether his department has made certain that all personnel employed by these ships are Canadians?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No, I have not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Atlantic JAG is already under the command of a Portuguese, Captain Santos, who commands a full Portuguese crew, and since there is unemployment in Canada, will the minister investigate the possibility of hiring Canadian personnel for ships such as the ones I have spoken of which are engaged in deep sea tuna fishing operations?

Mr. Drury: I shall be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED SUPPORT FOR FOOD AND DRUG DIRECTORATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker. In view of the ever increasing role of the food and drug directorate in safeguarding the quality of drugs in Canada, and in view of the Harley committee recommendations that the funds and personnel available to this directorate be increased, would the minister consider rescinding the recent order which cancelled the recommended increase in funds and personnel to the food and drug directorate?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I shall be glad to consider any reasonable request that is made by the hon. gentleman.

[Mr. Speaker.]

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF BILLS RESPECTING CIGARETTE SMOKING AND ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week the minister indicated that he was giving consideration to referring to the appropriate committee the questions of cigarette smoking, cigarette advertising and disease. Is the hon. gentleman now in a position to say whether he has reached a decision?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Consideration of this matter has progressed to some extent since this question was last asked, and I hope I shall be in a position to decide definitely one way or another very soon.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): A supplementary question. In view of the national importance of this matter will the government take steps to ensure that all new types of devices or processes being devised to remove harmful ingredients from cigarettes will be examined, to make certain that if beneficial they will be available to the Canadian public?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a representation.

USE OF SAFETY LIDS ON HAZARDOUS HOUSEHOLD SUBSTANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I believe this question should be directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but the Registrar General may be the minister responsible; I am not sure. In view of the tragic deaths of two Toronto babies this month from internal burns caused by household poisons, is the minister now prepared to enforce the use of safety lids on containers of such substances?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The question of protection from hazardous substances is presently under consideration, and if the legislative program permits we hope to introduce measures this session to deal with the problem.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

INQUIRY AS TO INCLUSION OF BUSINESS COLLEGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it the intention of the manpower department to eliminate business colleges from the manpower training program?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): We have no such intention, Mr. Speaker. I should like a clearer definition of the types of colleges the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. Noble: I may inform the minister that I shall send him a letter which will define them.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ROADS TO RESOURCES—INQUIRY AS TO SUBSTITUTE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Now that the government has reached a decision not to reinstitute the roads to resources program, can the Prime Minister advise the house whether a similar type of program is being considered, as has been suggested on occasions in this house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We are considering the provision of assistance to the provinces of an appropriate kind in this field when economic conditions make this desirable.

INDUSTRY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—SALE OF VICTORIA MACHINERY DEPOT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver East asked the minister whether his officials in Vancouver would attend to the situation which might result from possible lay-offs at the Victoria Machinery Depot in Victoria, and the minister promised to look into the matter and report today. Has he anything further to tell the house?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I thought I could report today, but I am still waiting for some information. I hope I shall get it later and be in a position to report tomorrow.

TRANSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last my hon. friend from Hastings-Frontenac asked the minister to state the intentions of the government with regard to fencing off the Trent canal system. The hon. gentleman said he would take this matter under consideration. Has he an answer to give the house now?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Not at the moment.

Mr. Hees: Would the minister give this matter serious consideration and report to the house as soon as possible in order that the public—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

RHODESIA—PLANS TO DEAL WITH APPARENT SANCTIONS FAILURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has consideration been given to the suggestion made by Mr. Garfield Todd and a number of others that Canada should take the initiative in calling an informal meeting of commonwealth leaders to co-ordinate plans to deal with the apparent failure of sanctions to put an end to U.P.I. and bring about majority rule in Rhodesia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I discussed this matter with Mr. Garfield Todd last Thursday. I would point out to the hon. member that the sanctions committee of the commonwealth countries continues to meet and that there are, of course continuing consultations among commonwealth countries at the United Nations. The Secretary General will shortly be making a report to the security council on the record of sanctions to date. If sanctions are proven to be ineffective there is no reason why they cannot be widened, and this course will undoubtedly be considered by the security council, the body which can most effectively deal with this matter at the present time.

Mr. Brewin: I do not think the minister dealt with the particular point I raised, whether a meeting of commonwealth leaders to formulate plans on this issue was under consideration.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think I did, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF B.C. HERRING FISHERY CLOSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the closure of the herring fishery on the Pacific coast and the demand on the industry for meal and oil, would the hon. gentleman be prepared to introduce an appropriate motion in the house so this subject might be examined by the fisheries committee?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): The closure of certain areas off the west coast to herring fishing is not new. This fishery has been closed from time to time, and I see no overriding reason at this time to accept the suggestion made by the hon. member.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Yesterday I directed a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Today I should like to address the same question to the hon. gentleman. It is as follows. Is the minister in a position to state whether he has received a formal protest or communication from Washington with regard to the proposed 12 mile limit? If so, what was the nature of the protest and of Canada's reply?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There has been no formal protest, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a supplementary question, and I wonder if today the Secretary of State for External Affairs might be in a position to announce the location of geographical co-ordinates on the Pacific coast.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in a statement before the external affairs committee that we had begun this work with regard to certain sections of the east coast. When I am in a position to announce further progress I shall announce it in the house.

MANPOWER

SUDBURY, ONT.—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF MINE LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): I wish to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he is aware that there is an immediate need for one thousand miners and smelter workers in the nickel mines in Sudbury and, if so, what steps he is considering in order to alleviate this shortage of labour.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am aware that there is a need for labour in the mining industry; I do not know whether one thousand or two thousand men are required, but this is a problem we are trying to solve. The mining companies have sent recruiting teams overseas to find miners if we cannot find them here in Canada.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Would the minister ensure that if this recruiting team is successful the men will not be denied employment simply because they do not speak English?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

INQUIRY AS TO ADOPTION OF METRIC SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Industry and Defence Production.

Apart from some inquiries made in the house recently, could the minister say whether he has received requests from other sources asking that he take measures as urgently as possible concerning the adoption of the metric system and if so, have studies been initiated along this line?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Mongrain: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—USE OF WOMEN FOR COMBAT DUTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): I have a question I should like to address to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wish to ask the minister whether his humanist and internationalist values and instincts have impelled him to make representations to both parties in the war in Viet Nam protesting the use of womenfolk for combat duty, or does the minister regard this development with equanimity?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would be glad to look into that.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I put the question to the minister in all seriousness, and I should like to know whether he has any response to make.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did say, though I am sure the hon. member did not hear me, that I intended to look into this matter.

WATER RESOURCES

PEMBINA RIVER—REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION ON PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be good enough to give me an answer to the question I asked in his absence yesterday.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not here yesterday to deal with my hon. friend's question. The International Joint Commission sent its report on the cooperative development of the Pembina river basin to the Canadian and United States governments on October 26. The report is now being carefully considered by the authorities in both countries before any conclusions can be reached on the action to be taken in response to the commission's recommendations.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi asked a question in respect to certain categories of G.M. motor cars that had been recalled. May I say that no formal notice was given to the government of the action taken by the manufacturer in this case. There exist, however, informal lines of communication and the government was made aware of the recall.

As yet there are no mandatory requirements in Canada for the automotive industry to communicate with the government officially. Consideration is being given to including this requirement in the over-all regulations being drafted for consideration in the development of our auto safety program.

GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was asked a question by the hon. member for Kindersley with respect to the representation of producers on the transportation subcommittee. In reply may I say it will be recalled that the grain transportation committee was established under the chairmanship of the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board. Members of this committee include representatives of the prairie wheat pools who speak for the interests of western grain growers. This is a subject, however, that comes more within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his capacity as minister responsible to parliament for the wheat board.

DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the hon. member for Simcoe East asked what steps the government proposed to take in connection with the regulation of L.S.D. and other mind expanding drugs. As my hon. friend will recall, a bill in connection with this matter was introduced in the other place in the last session, and it is hoped that bill will be revived and dealt with in this session.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, will the minister see to it that this is done?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is proposed that it will be reintroduced in the other place this session.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Since the minister has described L.S.D. as a mind expander, is he giving consideration to allowing the use of such mind expanders by other members of the cabinet on a permissive basis?

Supply—Treasury Board

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Treasury Board for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1. This vote will be found on page 560 of the blue book. The details are found on page 561.

TREASURY BOARD

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $4,478,700.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Chairman, I do not intend at this time to make a general statement with respect to Treasury Board activities. I made a rather long statement during the budget debate concerning activities in the area of government administration carried out by the Treasury Board. Due to the limited time available for consideration of estimates I believe it would now be better if I allowed hon. members opposite and on this side to raise any questions they may have with respect to the Treasury Board estimates, and then I will do my utmost to answer them.

However, I would like to pay tribute to Dr. Davidson, secretary of the Treasury Board, who has done a tremendous job in reorganizing the Treasury Board and in obtaining assistant deputy ministers in the persons of Mr. Cloutier, formerly of the civil service commission, Mr. Doug Love and Mr. Don Yoemans, who are looking after the three divisions of the Treasury Board, the personnel, management organization and program branches. I think they are doing a very good job putting into effect the advances in administrative techniques which were suggested first of all in the Glassco commission report and which have been carried further by the introduction of computer equipment in many departments, and by the introduction of finance officers and a new system of financial management in various departments of government.

I would be more than pleased to deal with any questions hon. members may wish to raise with respect to these estimates.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the core of fiscal management and responsibility in government is Treasury Board. This is the afternoon of Hallowe'en, and perhaps it is as good a day as any to discuss our existing financial status. It needs no spooks or banshees, no seers, to determine that something is radically wrong at the core.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Let me put it this way, sir. Government competence or incompetence can be most directly and immediately determined by the activities of that compact group of cabinet ministers who constitute Treasury Board. There, within that small, exclusive body lies the test of fiscal responsibility, of administrative efficiency, of the utility and practicality of most government plans and operations. As well, Treasury Board decisions affect directly all aspects of the national economy in both the public and private sectors.

With no wish to be severe on the genial President of the Treasury Board I submit that Treasury Board has been weighed and found desperately wanting. Its failures, which I intend to describe this afternoon, deserve the outright censure of this committee and in the proper time, the sooner the better, will be repudiated by the country.

There is a variety of reasons; the variety is equalled only by their abundance. I am disappointed by the absence this afternoon of any useful or meaningful statement from the President of the Treasury Board in introducing these estimates. This is the clearest indication of the growing arrogance of the government and its lack of concern for financial responsibility. There is one thing about which I can agree with the minister, and that is his tribute to the secretary of the Treasury Board. Dr. George Davidson is a man in whom I have unbounded confidence. I only wish the ministers who sit on the Treasury Board had the wisdom to follow his judgment and advice.

Last Thursday the Leader of the Opposition, in rather vivid and eloquent terms, exposed the fiscal incompetence of this government. The fact is that mistaken fiscal policies centring on the total failure to establish priorities in expenditures, resulting in an almost complete lack of genuine fiscal or monetary control, are gravely endangering the future of the nation and if persisted in could bring about a disastrous financial crisis. I do not use these words lightly, sir. For these factors the President of the Treasury Board and the Treasury Board itself must share the responsibility equally with the Minister of Finance. It is the function of the Treasury Board to establish priorities, to weigh one requirement against another, to exercise a strong and firm rein upon runaway spenders. My plea this afternoon to the President of the Treasury Board is to change course at once, to set up genuine priorities and stick to them, and to restore adequate control over governmental expenditure. I ask him to do so before it is too late.

I do not wish to sound in any way an alarmist, for I have unlimited confidence in Canada. But informed economic observers are genuinely alarmed, and with good reason. It is not just a case of spend, spend, spend; it goes much beyond that. They neglect even to try to control inflationary pressures; we have actual encouragement of the establishment of the highest interest rates in history, rates which have become unconscionable usury; disregard of what Fraser Robertson describes as "an incipient old fashioned money panic"; failure even to attempt to restore confidence and faith in the investment market. These are all symptoms of the extent to which the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance, as well as the Treasury Board itself, have avoided responsibility and positive action. I suggest they prove that the government is bankrupt equally of ideas and responsibility. The respected London Economist speaks of the massive indifference to the symptoms. My submission is that we cannot afford longer to mask our eyes to the realities of the incipient crisis which this government has brought upon the nation.

The estimates which this Treasury Board has submitted to this committee for this fiscal year, with supplementaries, amount to $9,646 million, to which must be added $645 million in loans and advances for a total of almost $10,300 million. Additional supplementaries for the year will no doubt boost this figure to approximately $10,600 million. This is the amount which must be raised from the taxpayers and from the market.

Mr. Benson: Perhaps the hon. member would permit a question. He tied in loans and advances. Of course he realizes the latter do not have to be raised from Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I did not catch exactly what the minister said, but I think he will find that I said this amount will have to be raised from the Canadian taxpayers or the market. The minister knows perfectly well that he is having even greater difficulty in raising it from the market than in raising it from the taxpayers.

The last full year of the previous government showed total expenditures of $6,364 million, broken down between $6,230 million in expenditures and $134 million in loans and advances. In other words the demands of this government upon the taxpayers and the market over a period of approximately 4½ years have grown and increased by almost four and a quarter billion, or at a rate of almost a billion dollars per year. If this government were to remain in office for two more years, a fate from which Canada should certainly be protected, and the rate of growth of government expenditures should persist, this government will have doubled the level of spending in just six years.

Someone in the government is feeding out leaks about allegedly massive cuts to be made by the Treasury Board in next year's estimates of up to three quarters of a billion dollars. Indeed, I read this morning that cuts of $825 million were to be made. What is not said is that these are supposedly cuts from the estimates as submitted by each department for next year, and not cutbacks from this year's estimates. This three quarters of a billion is just a phony, unrealistic figure plucked from the air. My experience as a member of Treasury Board and earlier as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance indicates that it is very rare that Treasury Board cuts amount to less than 10 per cent of the estimates of the various departments as first submitted. So the alleged three quarters of a billion dollars is not any more and is perhaps less than would be normal in any year as a cutback from the original submission of estimates.

The latest leaked gossip is that $175 million or $200 million is to be cut off the estimates now before the committee of supply. Yet the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board have declined to answer the questions of the hon. member for Perth and others or to say whether these cuts will be made and, if so, where. This, despite the fact that the guillotine will fall on Thursday night and parliament will be deprived of any further right of discussion. In any event, a cut of even $200 million would be less than 2 per cent of these estimates. What a fabulous success that would be—2 per cent.

What I am pleading for this afternoon to the President of the Treasury Board and his colleagues on that board is the establishment of a genuine system of priorities. I am not asking for a cut in all expenditures right across the board. Indeed, there are some expenditures I should like to see increased, and I will mention one before I conclude this afternoon. There is nothing inconsistent in that approach. What I want the President of the Treasury Board to do is to establish priorities and take this house as well as the public into his confidence by telling us what priorities have been established, and the target dates. I suggest that only such action can bring about a restoration of confidence, an easing of the financial uneasiness existing among economists and on all the markets, a halt to inflationary pressures and bring about a rationalization of the interest structure.

The government has its choice; establish priorities and do so now or face fiscal and economic disaster. I use strong words because the times require plain speaking. This is the time to say no to the big spenders. I venture to submit that one of the biggest problems is that the Prime Minister is almost congenitally incapable of saying no. Indeed, if he had been born of the other sex it would have been quite disastrous.

I wish to deal briefly with the government's attitude toward parliamentary control of the estimates and of expenditures. The very bedrock of our parliamentary institution is the absolute control by this chamber of the public purse. The misuse last autumn of the contingency vote and the abuse by transfers from other votes drove a horse and cart through every known principle of responsible parliamentary government. I suggest it was of the most dubious legal validity, but irrespective of that it was constitutionally unacceptable. It was "an erosion of parliament's traditional role in controlling public funds", to quote the words of the Auditor General of Canada.

Professor Norman Ward, on page 1 of his book "The Public Purse", states the theory and practice of parliamentary control of finance to be as follows:

> Underlying all the others are two principles, both of which have to be supported by a number of subsidiary principles and practices:
> (1) The executive should have no income which is not granted to it, or otherwise sanctioned by parliament.
> (2) The executive should make no expenditures except those approved by parliament in ways approved by parliament.

W. Ivor Jennings, in his great work on parliament, indicates that the principle of control of expenditures on behalf of the public is to be found in Magna Carta and therefore existed even before a parliament in modern form was known. R. McGregor Dawson, at page 229 of his book, "The Government of Canada", speaks of these principles and adds:

> —collectively they place the cabinet in a position where its responsibility in all financial matters is complete and ineluctable.

Sir, the contingency item, which until this last year was under the Department of Finance, was intended to be nothing more nor less than the petty cash account of the government to provide for minor unforeseen expenditures of the government. For quite a number of years the amount was $1½ million and the language of the item was very strictly confined. When this government came to office the amount was $3 million. In these estimates the President of the Treasury Board asks that we vote $45 million for petty cash, $45 million for unforeseen contingencies. Poor old Mr. C. D. Howe got into such great difficulty when he said, "what's a million."

Judged by the government's other irresponsibilities perhaps this can be understood, but I suggest it is something to augment an item in the estimates 15 times over in just four years and to change its language and purpose. The change in the language of the item is too clever by half; it is an attempt to deceive parliament. Some of my colleagues will deal with this later in the debate. What I say now is that a petty cash account of $45 million is intolerable. An item worded in the form to which the present item has been changed is a denial of the basis of House of Commons control of the executive. Imagine the arrogance of a government which admits its incompetence in estimating to such an extent that it needs a $45 million contingency fund for minor unforeseen items!

I agree most wholeheartedly that provision should be made for the payment of public service salaries in days of parliamentary warfare, and I introduced a private member's bill last autumn which would so provide. I believe the pay lists should be separated from the other items. Civil servants and their livelihood should never be made the pawn of political infighting and should not suffer from parliamentary brinkmanship. I assert with the greatest confidence, however, that this Commons chamber must now reassert its basic purpose, its right to deny supply and to bring a government to its knees. If we vote a petty cash item of $45 million and if transfers within items are unlimited by the Financial Administration Act, as this government arrogantly asserts, then the Commons has lost its most fundamental purpose. The executive will have made themselves the masters not only of parliament but of the people.

Earlier I mentioned that the establishment of a genuine system of priorities in governmental programming might in some cases require increased spending. I should like to discuss briefly one subject in respect of which I have some difficulty in using measured and moderate language in view of the government's dilatoriness and neglect.

Members of this house have been urging year after year and month after month an adjustment in pensions for retired public servants, including the members of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. Finally, a reluctant President of the Treasury Board and the government yielded to the request and agreed to a reference to the special joint committee on the public service. Last May 8 that committee reported unanimously in favour of such increases. It was a knowledgeable and responsible committee of senators and members. But what has happened to the report? Apparently it has been pigeonholed in the deepest recesses of the east block. A score of times there have been questions on the orders of the day addressed to the Prime Minister, to the Minister of Finance and to the President of the Treasury Board; twice there have been adjournment debates. All this has resulted in the same inconclusive result—"under cabinet consideration", "decision in due course."

"Due course" is so long overdue that it is clear the government is off course. It is an open secret that the President of the Treasury Board would like to adopt the committee's report to which his parliamentary secretary was a party. I thought that when the former minister of transport fixed up his own increased pension by becoming president of the Canadian Transport Commission we had lost the chief enemy in the cabinet of effective action. But no. Somewhere, somehow, there remain in the cabinet men or a woman who oppose justice for our retired public servants. What about the Minister of Public Works, a man who represents so many public servants? I reiterate what I have said previously. He has a special obligation in this matter and he should either persuade his colleagues in the cabinet to accept the just demands of his constituents or he should resign in protest. I suggest that the time for action is long past. Other countries have acted long ago. Other countries, and indeed our own provinces, have instituted a variety of systems of pension adjustment.

Time after time—and I shall not do it again this afternoon—I have placed on the record details of the increases achieved in other countries which face the same problems and are confronted with the same issues with which we are confronted. In Britain a formula increase is and has been for many years an accepted legislative fact; equally is such the case in the United States, in France, in Italy, in Australia and in New Zealand. What these countries have done can be done here in Canada without violation of any principle. I submit that it is a special obligation of the government to be an exemplary employer and to set the example for private industry.

It has been the action, or lack of action, on the part of this government which I described earlier that has promoted the unprecedented skyrocketing of the cost of living and has resulted in the eroding of pensions which frugal persons thought wholly adequate for their retirement. Pensions paid for in hard dollars have been eroded by creeping inflation which has accelerated to runaway inflation. The dollars drawn in the form of superannuation in many, many cases are worth less than 50 per cent of the dollars which were used to buy the pension entitlement. Elderly men and women who gave their best in other days watch hopelessly while their lifetime contributions to superannuation dwindle into insignificance. I submit that precedents for action across the world are manifold and that only the Canadian government refuses to act.

I plead this afternoon with the President of the Treasury Board to end this day this charade of inaction and to bring hope and renewed belief in Canada to the thousands of former public servants who have served her so well.

One of the results of the legislation at the last session regarding the public service has been to transfer classification in the public service to the Treasury Board. I have grave reservations about this. I do not separate so casually the alleged managerial function of classification and the allegedly totally independent function of recruitment and appointment. Perhaps that is because I do not bow down to and worship all of the Glassco report.

The classification review of the public service has been a morale destroyer and a source of major personal tragedies from its inception, and it does not improve. "Red circling" is a familiar term. It bears no sinister connotation to those who have not experienced it. What I am unable to understand is how the very best personnel officials in our country have been guilty of some of the greatest public relations gaucheries respecting their own fellow employees.

We were told at the outset that a complete classification review was a prerequisite to the institution of collective bargaining in the public service—indeed, a sine qua non. Now there has been a total reversal of this argument. According to the return tabled on September 25, 1967 to my question No. 335, the completion of the classification review will depend upon the progress of collective bargaining negotiations. Such a chicken and egg argument I have seldom heard. While this goes on there have been many public servants who have been shifted into blind alleys and allowed to languish in the still waters of official neglect. I suggest to the President of the Treasury Board that the clean-up of the "red circle" program is long overdue. Through the loss in morale Canada has lost much more than if the classification review had never been undertaken. I suggest that a stop to this wastage of resources in the public service should be made now.

However, I want to return to my opening theme, the fiscal incompetence and the financial and economic mismanagement by this administration in general and by the Treasury Board in particular. It has been suggested that a new budget before the end of the year may be required and would be the solution—new taxes, new restraints, something new instead of the old fashioned virtue of thrift. Mark you well, sir, a new budget would mean three budgets in less than 12 months. No wonder there are difficulties when the public and the financial community are subjected to such uncertainties, to so frequent changes of course and pace. What this country needs is not a new budget but a new government.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that we are going to have a very interesting discussion of the estimates of the Treasury Board. I want to support the contention that during today's debate the government should take the House of Commons into its confidence and tell us something about its plans so far as financial and fiscal management are concerned. I think I must also say that during the course of this debate our friends to the right, the members of the official opposition, should zero in and tell us where it is that they think cuts in expenditures should be made. If they are telling us that we should base our financial operations on the basis of priorities, I wish they would come out in the open and give us their list of priorities. I cannot help but have the feeling that the areas in which they would want to save money are precisely those where we think the public has a responsibility, particularly in the fields of health and social welfare. I would feel much happier about the demands of the Progressive Conservatives for cuts in government expenditures if they would pinpoint the places where they think there is waste and in particular if they would have something to say about a department where we feel there is huge over-expenditure, namely, the Department of National Defence.

However, for reasons that I think will be obvious, and taking a position that I am sure would be predictable in every quarter of this house, I wish to spend my few minutes this afternoon on one question, one that the hon. member for Carleton touched upon briefly but effectively. I refer of course to the way in which this government has delayed with respect to increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, including retired R.C.M.P. personnel and retired armed forces personnel.

At the risk of putting on the record something that has been said a good many times but because I think this is the day when we should get an answer from the President of the Treasury Board, may I point out that this subject has been under discussion for a great many years, indeed for well over 20 years to my own knowledge. May I also point out that the President of the Treasury Board ever since June of 1966 has made it quite clear that he is in sympathy with our demands for an increase in the pensions of retired civil servants. He has been good enough to make this clear in private conversation, but everything he has said in private conversation he has said publicly.

It all started in June of 1966 when the President of the Treasury Board expressed his personal willingness to have the matter referred to last session's special joint committee on the public service of Canada. He indicated of course that he would have to get the approval of his colleagues in the government before that reference could be made. He received that approval and the reference was made in January of 1967. I insist that the reference of that question by the government after six or seven months of consideration was a clear indication to the members of the House of Commons and to our retired civil servants that they could count on something being done if that committee came up with a reasonable recommendation.

The committee spent many meetings in the early part of this year going over this problem. We had excellent chairmen in the person of my good friend, the hon. member for Ottawa East, and our good friend from the other place Senator Bourget. The result of our deliberations was that we came up with a unanimous report. Let me emphasize again that all parties and both houses were represented on that committee, and it came up with a unanimous recommendation that increases in the pensions of the three groups to which we have made reference should be made forthwith.

Since that time we have had a succession of assurances by the President of the Treasury Board and by the Prime Minister that this matter is under active consideration by the cabinet. I have the questions and answers here on my desk, but it is hardly necessary to put them on the record again. No one would deny the fact that we have been told the matter is still on the agenda of the cabinet and is still under active consideration. We have been told that a decision would be made soon. In fact we have been given every right to believe that this issue had some importance in the eyes of the government. But despite the fact that we have had all this consideration, nothing has been done.

Hon. members will recall that the report of the committee was made on May 8 of this year, the last day of the old session, and that some of us had hoped and indeed were led to believe that we would get action on it before we broke for the summer recess. We were disappointed in this hope. When during the first week of July and in particular of July 7, the last day before the recess, I pressed for action before we broke the assurance was given from the other side that this was a matter which could not be dealt with then but in very guarded words it was indicated to us we would get action in the fall.

We came back on September 25, over a month ago, and still nothing has been done. We are still receiving answers that the matter is under active consideration and is still on the cabinet agenda. However, it appears as though the whole question has been stalled. I should like to put in a word to other members of the house, particularly some of those who spoke to me outside the house on July 7 asking me why I was so impatient. They said it was only a matter of a couple of months, and why did I feel so dejected because we were not getting action in July; after all, we were going to get action in September. But here it is October, and tomorrow it will be November. Many people who might have benefited from a pension increase have passed away in the meantime. It begins to look as if many more will pass away before the government acts on this matter.

There is involved in this whole matter the word of the government, the integrity of the democratic, parliamentary process. I suggest that for the Prime Minister of the country and for the President of the Treasury Board to give the impression something was going to be done and then to disappoint these people is a disservice not only to the people themselves but to the whole parliamentary process. One thing that is necessary if the parliamentary process is going to work is integrity, keeping your word. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that has not been done in this case.

It is very nice to learn from the lips of the President of the Treasury Board that the matter is still on the cabinet agenda, and that as yet a negative decision has not been taken. However, this subject can remain on the cabinet agenda indefinitely with nothing being done for these people. So, Mr. Chairman, I insist that on this day, before we conclude discussion of these estimates, we should have a full statement from the minister that action is going to be taken, not at the end of the session, not next year, but right away.

I do not believe we need to go into a long argument to justify an increase in the pensions of retired civil servants. The justification for such action is set out in the report of the committee that was filed on May 8. The hon. member for Carleton has added to it in the remarks he has just made. The only argument ever put forward against such action is something like this: If we are going to do it for these people, then it may have to be done for others. Well, I agree. As a matter of fact, I feel this is one of the most important questions with which we are going to have to deal in the whole pension field. The government has begun to move in that direction just a little. It has one eye slightly opened down at one corner. The government has accepted the principle of the escalation of pensions under the Old Age Security Act and under the Canada Pension Plan. It is a rather miniscule escalation people are going to get in January, 1968, but at least the principle has been recognized. I submit the time will come when all pension arrangements will have to include escalation after pensions are put in pay.

A great many people in this country have learned from experience that what looked like a decent pension when they were five or ten years away from retirement, what might even have looked like a decent pension when they went on retirement, was not much to live on five or ten years after retirement. If we are going to maintain the value of the pension principle, if we are going to support the general idea that people in retirement who helped to build up the country have a right to share in what has been built up, we are going to have to go for pension escalation across the board. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the place for the government to start is with its own employees.

As the hon. member for Carleton pointed out, other jurisdictions have done this. It has been done by most, if not all, provincial governments. It has been done by a number of municipal governments and it has been done in other countries. There is no valid argument against taking this course and taking it now.

One of the things that we, as members of parliament, often would like to be able to do is to listen in on cabinet meetings. This is an opportunity we do not get. Do I see the President of the Treasury Board inviting us to attend some of these meetings?

Mr. Benson: No, I simply say you would never sit in on them while you are a member of that party.

Mr. Knowles: I believe that when this subject comes up there must be some pretty strong opposition. I do not mean opposition in terms of a great many cabinet ministers because the only two who have spoken out on the issue have been the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister. Both of them have said they are in favour of it. It is my guess, therefore, that the opposition comes from somebody like the Minister of Finance. This is really no secret because he never was partial to it. I suspect that last spring the Minister of Finance was able to persuade his colleagues to put the matter off until fall just by arguing against hasty action. Now he is using the so-called financial crisis, which he denies but which everybody knows is upon us, as an excuse. He says, we cannot spend money here, we cannot spend money there, so we cannot spend money on these people either.

I find it quite immoral, Mr. Chairman, for a minister to take that position. If he is faced with a financial crisis and he has to be concerned with saving hundreds of millions of dollars, then it is immoral to decide that the people who must suffer will be the little people like our own retired employees living on pensions that they had reason to believe would provide them with a decent living in their retirement. The value of these pensions has been so eroded the people are having great difficulty in getting along.

So, Mr. Chairman, I suspect my guess is not far off, that it is the Minister of Finance who is holding things up, who is making it impossible for the cabinet to give a favourable decision on this question. However, this does not excuse the President of the Treasury Board. After all, this matter does come under his ministerial responsibility. The item in the estimates covering the superannuation account is in the estimates of the Treasury Board. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the President of the Treasury Board having agreed to let this matter be referred to a committee, having given us the assurance the committees' report was being studied, having told us that the matter is on the cabinet agenda and that he has made proposals to cabinet, has a responsibility to get the matter through cabinet or to take the blame himself for having disillusioned and disappointed the 45,000 or more civil servants and their widows, plus the retired R.C.M.P. personnel, plus the retired armed forces personnel.

I submit that unless he is able to get action he is the person who has to take the final responsibility for getting nothing done. He is a very nice fellow. I forget the adjective the hon. member for Carleton used to describe him, but I will go along with it like other hon. members, I like him. He is genial, very easy to talk to about these matters. He answers our questions on the floor of the house. But when it comes down to this issue, niceness and geniality do not count; what matters is the goods one delivers.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, because the President of the Treasury Board has not yet delivered on this issue, because I believe it is so extremely important not only to the people concerned but to all our people, especially to the people who realize that pensions must be escalated, the people who realize that your word given in parliament must be kept, I feel it is time for this committee of supply to express itself very clearly to the President of the Treasury Board with regard to this matter. I realize that the salary of the President of the Treasury Board is provided in the estimates of the Department of National Revenue. He holds two portfolios but he does not get two salaries. This limits us somewhat as to what we can do, Mr. Chairman but as a mark of non-confidence in the President of the Treasury Board for failing to "deliver the goods", for failing to bring in legislation increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, I wish to move:

• (4:00 p.m.)

That Treasury Board vote No. 1 be reduced by $17,000.

That figure, Mr. Chairman, is the amount of the minister's salary and car allowance apart from what he gets as a member of parliament. One recognizes, of course, that the motion itself is a symbolic one. I have moved it to indicate our lack of confidence in the minister over this issue. It may be there are only 45,000 civil servants and widows and a certain number of R.C.M.P. and armed forces personnel who are involved directly. But we are all involved in the integrity of parliament. We are all involved in the importance of this issue, the escalation of pensions to meet rising living costs. I hope that before the day is out the minister will indicate that he is going to be able to bring in this legislation. If so, I can withdraw the amendment. If not, I hope the committee will vote for this amendment as a mark of condemnation of the minister for failing to act on this very important issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is to make the minister walk instead of travelling by car. It is a useless amendment which will be rejected by the house.

Moreover, I would like first to draw the attention of the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre and for Carleton (Messrs. Knowles and Bell), who both praised the minister for his kindness and for being easily available to discuss their various problems, to the fact that neither of them has set forth a plausible and acceptable solution.

Priorities have been mentioned; the Treasury Board was held responsible for distribution of crumbs throughout the country. However, no concrete solution is proposed.

The member for Winnipeg North Centre said: When the time comes for action, the minister gets flustered.

Mr. Chairman, every member of this house would like to obtain the most for his riding, everyone agrees, but it is up to the Treasury Board to decide. For instance, when we ask for the construction of wharves or federal buildings, priorities come into play and it is up to the Treasury Board to distribute the proceeds of taxes levied by the government, income tax, corporate tax or various other sources of taxation. It is a fact that the Treasury Board administers the country in conjunction with the government. And it is according to the amount of taxes collected that the government decides about such and such a project.

For instance, we have heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) maintain at one time that the Canadian people were living beyond their means. What do the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) or the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) mean by "living above their means"? And that leads to the present situation where public works, construction, the country's economic growth and the development of its vast resources are slowed down.

We witness for instance the laying off of C.N.R. employees with 15, 17 and even 20 years of service; they were dismissed barely four days ago. They will lose their jobs, as of tomorrow, November 1. Why? It is alleged that there has been a reduction in the use of freight trains. Well, I dare the government to prove there has been a reduction in the use of C.N.R. freight trains in my area. None has occurred. Yet, 22 employees will lose their jobs tonight. Tomorrow, on November 1, these men will no longer be employed with the C.N.R. Why? Because the C.N.R. wants to cut expenses.

People live beyond their means, according to the Minister of Finance. So, let us discontinue all the services, let us prevent, as I said earlier, the normal economic development of our country, let us shrink down every department to the barest minimum, and we shall create a national problem that nobody wants.

Why this situation? Precisely because the Department of Finance, inspired by Treasury Board and the government, is caught in the system which has created this state of affairs.

I wish to call the attention of the minister concerned, the President of the Treasury Board, to the fact that this year our national product is expected to reach $65 billion, and that this compares with a total national revenue expected to reach approximately $47 billion, which makes a difference of $18 billion between the Canadian national product and the Canadian national revenue. And then the minister will say that we are living beyond our means.

But to realize that we have the physical means, the tangible means, in short, the real means, all we have to do is pay a visit to the various business firms and industries in Canada. At this time, industries are cutting production because they are unable to find buyers. Let us go on a tour of the stores and warehouses; they are bursting with goods but, faced with this real abundance, we see the array of financial restrictions imposed on the whole population by the Treasury Board.

The stores inventories are the highest ever. But the people are unable to buy because they do not have the buying power, and the government has announced a "mini budget" to increase taxes. Why? The President of the Treasury Board admits it, the government only administers taxes and can operate only inasmuch as taxes are collected.

If we were concerned with a municipality, I admit that the question might be discussed more seriously. The same would be true if a province were involved, because a province has no monetary powers. They have taxation powers, but there is a world of difference between monetary power and taxation power. The province is helpless. But to have a sovereign government called the government of Canada content to administer through tax collection, Mr. Chairman, that is beyond understanding.

Who has such absolute control of credit beyond the government? Who has more power than the government? We saw it during consideration of the Bank Act last spring when parliament decided to reduce the bank reserves from 8 to 6 per cent, enabling the banking system immediately to create $4 billion in additional credit without a single cent of additional reserve.

The minister is aware that the situation in which we are living may still hold for some time but that it cannot hold forever. The minister also is aware that when the Canadian government issues a million dollars in bonds, the Bank of Canada buys them and, from that moment, the chartered banks have the power to create immediately a $14 million credit for every million in government bonds.

[Mr. Caouette.]

The government borrows from the banks instead of taking its credit at the very source, that is, from the Bank of Canada. The power to control the whole Canadian economic system is given to a few individuals and these individuals, this year, bill us for a debt on which the interest alone will reach the sum of $1,273,906,400. This represents a slight increase of $88,417,500 from last year, and federal members swallow it. Nobody rises to tell the President of the Treasury Board: Cut down the interest we are paying on the debt. No. Let us rather bear down on the pockets of miners, settlers, on the little Canadian worker. Bear down and crush him, but let us show respect and veneration for the interest on the national debt created out of nothing by a handful of individuals.

Mr. Chairman, the interests on the national debt only have increased by $88 million. Nobody complains, nobody disagrees. But the people are subject to restrictions. It is strange that no minister, no government member rises to protest against that outright theft, the interest on the national debt. And none of them protest against the restrictions and the control of priorities by the Treasury Board that the government is about to lay upon us in a few weeks by means of a mini-budget. On the other hand, that same Treasury Board will cost the Canadian people $183,908,000 this year or $40 million more than last year. Nobody objects to that. We find normal that the government should spend right and left, while failing to face realities in our country. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was talking earlier about pensions and social security. Nobody is against those things. On the contrary, we are all in favour of the most elaborate, adequate and satisfactory form of social security for the whole population.

But nobody asks, for instance, where will we get the money for that. That is the problem. Everybody is willing to grant a pension to our old or needy people, to increase civil service salaries. Everybody wants it, but our financial system does not allow it. Instead of thinking in terms of physical possibilities we have in Canada to develop our resources and produce even greater wealth, we are thinking in terms of dollars.

Our administration depends on the revenues we get from taxation. What a lovely sovereignty for a government which calls itself sovereign. Is it sovereignty to have to kneel before financiers and ask their permission to grant a pension, to raise social security or to increase civil service salaries?

Mr. Chairman, nobody is opposed to these raises but, there again, has the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre told us of which department he would like to see the expenditures drastically reduced in order to allow for the salary increase? Could the hon. member for Carleton tell us later on to what department the government should go to get the funds for one priority or another? Neither of them suggests a solution.

Mr. Chairman, when we suggest a solution —because the Créditistes have one which they have advocated now for thirty-five years—some still attempt to ridicule it rather than try to understand it. Quite often we give them conspicuous examples. If the war were to break out tomorrow, do you think that those restrictions would exist? Of course not. We would then call upon the Bank of Canada to set up war plants all across Canada. There would be no question of any lack of funds. But, for peace, for the security of our fellow citizens, for the safety of the Canadian people, it is immediately a monetary problem and nothing else but that.

Mr. Chairman, what have we been suggesting for a long time? That the whole public sector be financed directly by the Bank of Canada, that a branch of the Bank of Canada be established in every Canadian province so that each one may look after its own administration according to its possibilities, its aspirations, its physical possibilities. And then we would no longer hear anything about separatism or independence, hatred among ourselves in Canada. The whole question of separatism, so topical in Canada today, is due to nothing but an economic, financial and even monetary situation.

That is where the problem lies and everyone will recognize it. In fact, it is the No. 1 problem in any riding but also at the provincial level, and it is so real that the premier of Ontario, Mr. Robarts, said in London two days ago that the discussion at the interprovincial conference on constitutional matters, which will be held in Toronto in the latter part of November, would boil down to a matter of dollars and cents for each of the provinces. Those are not my words, they are those of Mr. Robarts, the premier of Ontario. Are we beginning to open our eyes or are we simply talking through our hat? Are we afraid to deal with the problem, to get to the bottom of the matter, in short, to do as suggested by the great French general: Let us get to the bottom of things.

Mr. Chairman, the Creditistes suggest that the public sector of our economy should be financed by the Bank of Canada, free of interest, so that when a road or a school is built, we do not have to pay three times the cost thereof, twice to finance companies and once for us. That is inflation. There is no need to fear social credit for inflation, because we have inflation right now under the present system. Indeed, that is what we are living now.

Mr. Chairman, we suggest that the private sector should remain as it is; let it finance itself as it does now. If I have a business and I need credit, it is normal for me to pay interest when I borrow from a chartered bank. But how can the public sector, which is non-profit, afford to pay interest to develop or to build something enduring, something which the people need?

Mr. Chairman, the Treasury Board has the responsibility of distribution throughout the country, but until now it has not distributed abundance, just crumbs remaining after financiers have taken what they want. Mr. Chairman, when we come to the point where ⅙ of the national budget constitutes the interest alone on the national debt, it is time for the members of parliament in general and the government to face up to what is going on in the country and the serious situation where we find ourselves.

People are afraid of separatism, of independentists, of this hatred arising between various parts of Canada at this time, but when one travels throughout Canada, one sees that the same problem is facing us everywhere, that is to say, in all the provinces, there are poor people in the midst of affluence. Each province is deeper in debt than it can afford to be, whether it is Quebec or Ontario, in short any province except Alberta and British Columbia which are the only ones without a direct provincial debt.

Mr. Chairman, Canada has no reason for being so heavily in debt. And above all, it has no reason for paying $1,273,906,400 in interest only on a fictitious national debt, on a national debt created by those who have the right to increase fourteenfold the reserves on deposit with the Bank of Canada, that is the chartered banks in Canada.

These points are not dealt with on radio, on television, in the press, Mr. Chairman. No. The financial manipulations of the country must be hushed up.

Those who would cast light on the shameless exploitation of the financial system must be hushed up. Well, let it be hushed up. Such organized and systematic silences have bred revolutions in European countries. To avoid revolution here in Canada, on our Canadian soil, it is high time that we face the problem, not shy away from it, and accept a sensible solution which will, at long last, enable the Canadian people to unite, to see the whole of the country and to realize the wealth it owns. Nowadays, because people are growing less aware of their wealth, they rise against each other. As far as the financial question is concerned, the federal government lacks the courage to settle it, to bring finance in step with reality and have it serve the Canadian people.

Mr. Chairman, I will end on this note: as long as we have a system which forces men to serve money interests, we will be bogged down. But the day when a government, either Liberal, Conservative or Social Credit, decides to make money interests serve human beings, then the problem will be solved and there will be harmony and good feelings right across this great country.

[English]

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak this afternoon on one particular issue. In beginning my remarks, however, I should like to say that if the Canadian people ever had any faith in the ability of the present government to administer in an effective way the monetary and fiscal policy which Canada requires, that faith is being rapidly undermined. The actions of the government have shown clearly that it is either unaware of the effect of its policies on the national economy or that it is struggling vainly and desperately to find an answer to problems which are too great for it to tackle.

I do not intend this afternoon to discuss the whole realm of monetary and fiscal policy. I think the views of this party were put in clear perspective at the time the banking legislation was before us and I shall not repeat the arguments which were used then. However, I believe the time has come for the government to take a realistic view of the economic situation and that instead of continuing to follow old programs and policies which have been tried over and over again and proven futile it should be bold and adventurous enough to try something different.

I recall speaking to a supporter of the government some years ago about monetary and fiscal policy. He said: "We all know that the present system is not satisfactory or adequate to meet modern needs but I am not confident yet that you people have the right answers." So we are suggesting now that the minister and the government be bold enough to try something different. Even if it does not work 100 per cent as anticipated, such a plan, provided it brings advantages to the Canadian people, would be a step in the right direction.

I indicated when I began that it was my intention to deal with one particular matter this afternoon. It is one which has already been raised by the hon. member for Carleton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—the attitude of the Treasury Board and the government in relation to superannuated federal civil servants. A review of the record will show how often this question has been raised in the house and the many occasions upon which the President of the Treasury Board has indicated that the subject was receiving active consideration. It reminds us of what is said by the Minister of Veterans Affairs when we call attention to the need for increases in disability pensions, war veterans allowances and so on. He always said that the government is giving careful consideration to these matters, but so far nothing concrete has been done.

Similarly, nothing concrete has been done with respect to the pensions of superannuated civil servants despite all the recommendations which have been made and all the arguments which have been advanced in the house. I was a member of the public service committee while this question was before it for consideration. At that time there was general agreement that something ought to be done to increase these pensions. I do not recall even the government members on the committee raising any particular objection or questioning the desirability of increasing the pensions of superannuated civil servants. Perhaps I was naïve, but I was of the opinion that after the tabling of our recommendations we could look forward to early action on this matter. However, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, we have waited and waited in vain. Even now we have no indication whatsoever that favourable consideration is going to be given to this matter.

It is not necessary to present all the arguments in favour of such an increase. The minister knows them very well. The government knows them very well. Each hon. member is well aware of the reasons why consideration should and must be given to this matter. Therefore I do not think anything will be gained by repetition of those arguments today. But I just want to add my voice and the voices associated with me in this chamber to the opinions already expressed that the time is long overdue when the minister and the government should give favourable consideration to this request.

During the course of the debate on the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs I said that if the government was considering economies I did not think it proper that those who had served in our armed forces should be called upon to bear the brunt of those economies. If the government is convinced that it must curtail and cut back expenditures I do not think this is an area in which cut-backs should take place. The levels must be maintained and improved.

I urgently request the minister to give immediate consideration to this matter and at least indicate that he is determined that the government will give favourable consideration to it. I hope that within the next few days he will announce that legislation will be introduced in line with the committee recommendations that increases be given to superannuated civil servants, to superannuated members of the armed forces and to retired members of the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this occasion go by without drawing attention to a practice that has arisen within the past few weeks in connection with the consideration of estimates and which first made its appearance last June and July under the so-called allocation of time for consideration of estimates. We have seen a flagrant refusal on the part of certain ministers of the crown to answer questions and arguments put forward until the point of guillotine was reached and they did not have to answer them. I trust this minister will be given and will take the opportunity to answer the legitimate questions and points put forward in this debate. If he is agreeable to this, perhaps he will go to his colleagues and twist their arms in order that they may share the same frame of mind.

I am not going to indulge in the naming of particular ministers—

Mr. Churchill: Why not?

Mr. Lambert: —because we know that a number of them deliberately abstained from answering questions. In fact encouragement was given to other members on the government side to take up the time so that a minister would not have to answer. As a matter of fact it is common knowledge around here that one minister who did want to answer questions had his coat tails pulled by one of his supporters who asked him, "Are you foolish enough to want to get into the debate? Why do you want to answer? The guillotine will fall at six o'clock."

The main purpose of parliament is the voting of supply, and on this there must be no equivocation. However, finding some inspiration in what I think is a misguided view of the Glassco commission of the functions and purposes of parliament, newspaper writers, commentators and other people have started to worship at the altar of that great god efficiency. They say we must tidy things up. We must make the parliamentary process slick and work like the board of a tightly knit, smoothly operating corporation. To those people I would comment—as a matter of fact I say it should be required reading —volume No. 28 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the public accounts committee of November 23 last, and in particular the testimony of the Auditor General.

The Auditor General is not a servant of the government. He is responsible to this house and—

Miss LaMarsh: He is not responsible—

Mr. Lambert: He is responsible to this house, and the Secretary of State need not mumble under her breath that there is something wrong about the position of the Auditor General. Perhaps if she heeded the strictures of the Auditor General a little more, this government would be in better shape.

Miss LaMarsh: But he is wrong all the time.

Mr. Lambert: Oh, the Auditor General is wrong? I am glad to see the hon. lady has that opinion but I will tell her she epitomizes the position taken by the cabinet that the cabinet and Treasury Board are above parliament. This is not so and it must never be so.

Miss LaMarsh: The Department of Justice says he is wrong.

Mr. Lambert: I have known the Department of Justice to be wrong just as often as they are right—

Miss LaMarsh: We have to take their word.

Mr. Lambert: —and there is no question in my mind that the Auditor General is responsible to parliament. There is also no question in my mind that the Treasury Board, by its actions during the past few years, has set itself up as a counter authority to parliament and has sought to take away control of the public purse from the authority of parliament. I make that assertion knowing full well that there may be some opposite who will not share it and it may not even be shared by some of the gentlemen who work for the Treasury Board and whose personal abilities and capabilities I respect. But this spirit has grown up in the Treasury Board, as in the cabinet, that it and it alone shall have the control. That must not be the case.

As an example I would refer to the form of the estimates themselves. In 1963-64 there was a great consolidation of titles of estimates, presumably for the sake of efficiency. If hon. members will but look at what the Auditor General has to say about this, then I gainsay anyone on the government side or elsewhere to say that he is wrong in this particular instance. For example, under the present form of the estimates over 80 per cent of the expenditures of the Department of National Defence appear under one vote. We believe that parliament does have control, but by the proposed step we are giving the ministry a blank cheque. The same applies to other departments.

What has happened to the salary item under the Department of Finance, which is now contained within a contingency item in the Treasury Board estimates? In its present form it is asking the house to give the cabinet and the Treasury Board a blank cheque in order to get away from control of expenditures by parliament.

Let us look back to 1963-64. As my colleague the hon. member for Carleton indicated, there was what he called a petty cash account amounting to some $3 million or $4 million. Let us refer to what this contingency item actually says. It refers to "miscellaneous contingencies or unforeseen expenses, subject to approval of the Treasury Board including the authority to re-use any sums repaid to this appropriation from other appropriations, for awards under the Public Servants Inventions Act". There is a similar item providing for contingencies in respect of salary increases, and that is quite understandable. Salary increases which are retroactive cannot be determined and spelled out in the estimates of a department ahead of time. We know how long it takes to approve the estimates at the departmental and Treasury Board levels and print them in the blue book. We understand this but we do not agree to the transferring of this item to salary account generally in relation to the determination of amounts to make up for deficiencies or impending pay increases for public servants, particularly in the event that interim supply is not granted. Interim supply is in effect one of the means of parliamentary control of estimates.

I feel that such a transfer would be wrong both for the government and for the opposition. We should not in this way make the salaries of civil servants a shuttlecock in a struggle between the government and the opposition regarding government policies. In this way there might come a time when the government would use this lever, which is in effect a blackjack, to force the opposition to allow interim supply in order to pay the salaries of public servants who are the innocent parties in such a struggle. I believe this puts everyone in an unfair position and I do not accept the present wording which is even worse.

What is now being said is: "Contingencies —Subject to the approval of the Treasury Board, to supplement other votes or paylist and other requirements"—it says "and other requirements"—"and to provide for miscellaneous minor and unforeseen expenses." In other words, it refers to petty cash requirements. In 1965-66 there was a supplementary or contingency item with regard to paylists and other unforeseen expenses. At that time $6 million was provided for possible pay increases. However, in 1967-68 we have this new version which refers to other requirements. The item is for $45 million. If we look at the contingency item in 1966, vote 15 of the Department of Finance, we find that in actual fact by the time we had the main estimates and the supplementaries the amount was $110 million.

Let me refer to pages 1260 and 1261 of the committee reports in relation to the Auditor General's statement. In this year's estimates there is a provision for $45 million but we have not seen the supplementary estimates that are to come down.

Mr. Benson: Of course you have.

Mr. Lambert: We have not seen all of them. We will not know how much this contingency amount will be by March 31 next. At that time it might amount to $145 million instead of $45 million, and for this reason I think this method is quite wrong.

Mr. Churchill: Would you permit a question?

Mr. Lambert: Certainly.

Mr. Churchill: At page 560 of the estimates book under item number 5 the estimate is shown as $45 million. Last year's estimate for this item was $29,651,300. In spite of this the Auditor General has pointed out that the item amounted to $110 million.

Mr. Benson: Those were the main estimates.

Mr. Lambert: The main estimates showed a figure of $45 million. I presume this represents a comparison of the main estimates.

Mr. Benson: So there is no doubt, that is the case. I should point out that of the $110 million to which my hon. friend has referred $106,226,670 represented salary revisions. Obviously all but a small amount was used in this way.

Mr. Lambert: We know there are these pay contingency items for revisions. However, as my colleague points out, the blue book is in fact misleading when it suggests there was only $45 million required for last year. The amount required was $110 million. I do not care really what the purpose was but the amount should be shown. The minister has given an explanation but the blue book does not give that explanation.

Mr. Benson: The supplementaries are shown.

Mr. Lambert: That is true, but we are being asked to look at this year's blue book to find the expenditures of last year in order to make a comparison, and this is quite wrong. I intend to quote as extensively as my time permits me from the statement of the Auditor General. Unfortunately the evidence before the committee does not enjoy as wide distribution as his report to parliament. For that reason I think as much of the pertinent sections of his testimony as possible must be put on the record. At page 1254 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the public accounts committee for November 23, 1966 we find the following statement by the Auditor General:

• (4:50 p.m.)

> The straight proposition of reducing the number of votes was and is very important because it touches directly on parliament's control of public funds. It may render life much easier administratively for the management, or the executive in this case—

This is what I said—the executive is the cabinet; the management is Treasury Board.

> —but it also can reduce parliamentary control because fewer votes can result in fewer opportunities being available to parliament to discuss proposed expenditures, e.g., supplementary estimates.

This again is the point I have been making. The Auditor General goes on further to say that he has considered it his duty to follow closely the implementation of the recommendations of the public accounts committee. He said:

> The first results are to be found in paragraph 51 (page 22) of my 1965 report to the house which, as you know, is still awaiting discussion on this committee's agenda.
> From this you will see how the vote pattern actually adopted for the 1964-65 estimates differed in a number of instances from the pattern which had been seen and approved by the committee. You will see here examples of transfers made of funds between services which would not have been possible under the previous vote pattern. Last year it seemed to me important that I bring this to the attention of the house and I may say that similar differences have been noted again this year and will be the subject of further comment in my forthcoming report to the house for 1965-66.

We await this with anticipation. Then, at page 1257 the Auditor General said:

> The Finance contingencies vote as it appears in 1966-67 itself represents a consolidation of votes. Up to and including 1963-64, two of the Finance votes had been vote 70 for the supplementing of salaries, wages and other paylist charges and vote 50 for miscellaneous minor and unforeseen expenses. These were combined by the Treasury Board into vote 15 in 1964-65 under the revised vote pattern I have described, and for that year and 1965-66 the vote was worded: "Contingencies—Subject to the approval of the Treasury Board, (a) to supplement the paylist provisions of other votes; (b) for miscellaneous minor or unforeseen expenses; etc." Now in the estimates and the supplementaries tabled in the house for 1966-67 the wording is simpler: "Contingencies—To supplement other votes and to provide for miscellaneous minor and unforeseen expenses . . . and authority to re-use any sums repaid to this appropriation from other appropriations."

As I have indicated to hon. members, in this year there has been a reversion and also an addition so that we have not only the requirement for paylist but other requirements. This to me is quite unacceptable and I say to hon. members that it should be unacceptable to this house because this form of preparing the estimates is a guarantee of absolute control in the hands of the executive and Treasury Board.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved an amendment which in effect is a criticism of the office of the President of the Treasury Board. This was the only way that was open to him at the time. Had we reached it, I would have moved an amendment to vote 5 to reduce that item. However, for the reasons I have given I shall support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I shall conclude by saying what I think is the purpose of the Treasury Board. The Treasury Board acts within the authority given to it by parliament and must never be permitted to set itself up as an authority in conflict with parliament. I am not attacking personalities within the Treasury Board. However, there has been an evolution, a progression, to more and more centralized control away from parliament. This is a movement which must be reversed if the democratic form of government is to persist and grow. Again I urge hon. members, as I think members on this side of the house will do without question, to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, not only in respect of the discussion of these estimates but also on many other occasions since this house reconvened a number of weeks ago members from all parties on this side of the house have stated time and time again that because of the government's ill-timed fiscal and monetary policies it has consistently destroyed many of the options open to it to move the economy of Canada forward as it should be moved forward at the present time. Nowhere is this statement more true than in relation to what is happening in the Treasury Board under the present minister at this time. Canadians have been told, through a series of leaks planned or otherwise, that the present government is now advocating a number of major cuts in expenditures. I do not intend to argue about this. I believe the present administration will find much agreement on this side of the house and from the people of Canada that major cuts are necessary at the present time.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us where. Which cuts?

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Grafftey: I do not think that is necessary. I do not have any specific cuts in mind at the present time. We will hear the hon. member in due course when he takes part in this debate. I again repeat that it is apparent that major cuts are in order at the present time and apparently are being made. Most members of this house and many Canadians are asking why there is a necessity for wholesale cuts at the present time. They are asking why this disorganization has arisen which has necessitated this activity by the Treasury Board.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I shall not preface my very brief and general remarks on priorities with any notion that government per se is just business, big or otherwise. Far too many people when discussing governmental activities say that government should be run like a big business. I do not agree with this, although I do agree that we need more business attitudes in the running of government day to day. The main question that I want to put briefly this afternoon, one that has already been mentioned, is: What is the reason for this cutting back activity by the Treasury Board at the present time? The simple reason is that the present administration is guilty of a lack of long term or even medium term thinking about where this country is going and how its economy should be planned. How else could the government have found itself in the mess it is in today? Is it the result of long term or medium term planning? Of course not. It is the result of a leaderless, rudderless government going from crisis to crisis. I am sure the hon. lady knows what I am talking about. She has been looking for a president for the C.B.C. for a year now. That is not the result of long term planning.

Miss LaMarsh: Ask the Prime Minister about it. I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. lady is blaming the Prime Minister. He will probably blame her. The surprising thing about this government is that in their state of inactivity they blame everyone but themselves. The fact is that the chaos in the Treasury Board today is the result of a lack of long or medium term economic planning. It is also the result of the government's refusal to allocate priorities in the economic and social fields.

What do we mean when we say this? Let us not bandy this expression about. What do we mean when we say modern-day governments must plan social and economic priorities not only within the federal sphere but in co-operation with the provinces? Many people in public life are saying that modern-day governments must plan economic and social priorities. The government has been asked to give leadership in this regard in the last three or four years but has consistently refused to do so. It is not easy. I would be the first person to admit that planning social and economic priorities in a federal union such as Canada with its different levels of government spread over a large land area and with its small population, where we are trying to evolve year after year a viable federal system, is not easy by any stretch of the imagination. This is where leadership is needed, but this government will not give the people and the house the kind of leadership in this area that is a must if we are going to avoid the sort of situation in which the Treasury Board finds itself today.

If it is important today, as it has been in the past, that the government give leadership in terms of planning social and economic priorities, it will become more and more important in the future. The time has passed when a right wing parliamentarian could get up and be taken seriously when he said the less government we have the better. Everyone in every area of the political spectrum agrees that government will become bigger and bigger. Most parliamentarians agree that certain activities in the economic and social spheres will be allocated to governments. Years ago discussions were held as to who would undertake work in a certain field, the private or the public sector, but now we agree that it is government that must play a part in education, the building of schools, roads and hospitals, and so on.

So while we look forward in the years to come to government playing a bigger and bigger role, it is even more important that the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces and municipalities, start allocating economic and social priorities. Again I wish to underline the fact that this will not be an easy task, but I venture to suggest that if this government would give the kind of leadership that is needed in order to get on with the job of setting priorities, there would be much more basic agreement on what needs to be done first than we realize at the present time.

What do we mean by planning priorities? It is quite simple. There is a certain amount of money in the treasury and we have to use it to do first things first. We might even try to do all things at once to a greater or lesser extent, but when we do so we get into the kind of situation in which the Treasury Board finds itself today with cuts here, cuts there and cuts everywhere. Perhaps the government's heart is in the right place, but this is not good enough. First, your heart must be in the right place and then you have to do the job, and this government is not doing the job.

There is chaos in the Treasury Board today because the government is trying to be all things to all men and do everything at once. This is not the minister's fault. He is a victim of the bankrupt monetary and fiscal policies of the government, a government which has destroyed its options and placed the minister responsible for the Treasury Board in the position in which he finds himself today.

What do we mean when we talk about planning priorities in the social and economic field? We recognize that many things are important. Perhaps we will have to try to do them all at once, but certainly the most important things should get the major emphasis at any one time. When will the government realize this, and what will happen when no priorities are planned and we try to do everything at once?

Many ministers must feel grave disappointment when they see some of their sincerely planned and good programs being cut back because of the lack of planning by the government. Inflation runs rampant. The hon. member for Carleton mentioned that fact a few minutes ago. One of the major reasons for inflation and the high cost of living that we are experiencing today is the fact that there is no priority planning and leadership by the present government. As I have already said, the government's efforts to do all things at once has resulted in the virtual wiping out of the fiscal and monetary policy options that are necessary at the present time to move the economy forward.

What is happening at the local and regional levels? The uncertainty that is engendered by this kind of governmental activity cannot be overemphasized. Many projects are put forward by many associations and groups in the country which have every right to expect certain financial assistance from the government in order to carry out their plans and put them into effect. When a government does not plan either in the medium or the long term sense and does not organize its business, how can one expect people on the local level to follow its leadership?

The program of cut-backs being carried out by the Treasury Board today has a disastrous effect on the local level when people who had individual and collective plans find they will not get the kind of governmental support they had every reason to expect. Apart from that, as the hon. member for Carleton said there is also a likelihood that a third budget will be brought down by the government in a few months. That, plus the fact that the government is cutting here and there because of its lack of planning priorities, has created a high degree of unhealthy uncertainty all over the country.

Mr. Pepin: How can you plan without cutting?

Mr. Grafftey: How can the government cut without planning? If you plan in the first place you will find that you do not have to cut the way the government has been cutting. Can the minister really argue against that? Is that not happening now in the Treasury Board as a result of the government's efforts to do everything at once and to please everyone at once by ill-timed fiscal and monetary policies? All of a sudden it found there was not enough money to go around, and so it has to cut here and there. Will the minister tell me that this does not create uncertainty on the local level? How can citizens look forward in the long and medium term when they do not get the kind of leadership they are entitled to from the central government?

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he realize that when this government was elected there were no targets set for departments? There were no budgets beyond one year. Now, however, every single department of government submits to the Treasury Board a five year forecast. This is long term planning.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Grafftey: If I may paraphrase Robert Burns, did he not say that the best laid plans of men often go astray? The plans of this government have gone astray. There may be planning but there is no planning with the provinces. There is no planning with the people who count in terms of setting priorities.

I want to terminate my remarks by simply saying to the government that I hope we will not have to go through another period of wholesale cuts such as we are experiencing at the present time. I recognize that they are desirable right now because of the facts of economic life. I hope that sooner rather than later, because we have been appealing to the government along with many of the premiers of the provinces, the government will take time out to sit at the conference table with the heads of the different levels of government to get agreement on these things. In other words, there should be plans for priorities in the social and economic field. You will find there is much more agreement, as I said before, than we realize there is. If this is not done sooner or later, then we will be back in the house within another year listening to the kind of reports we have been getting from the Minister of National Revenue today.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I must confess I am a little confused in trying to ascertain what the position of the official opposition is with regard to government cuts, about which I have read in the newspapers. So far as one can determine from the last speaker for the official opposition, the Conservative party hopes the government will put on the brake and drive straight ahead with a foot on the accelerator. This is not usually considered a good method of driving.

Sometimes I am reminded of my long political career. Years ago, before many members of this house were born or were very old, I entered the legislature of British Columbia. At that time I thought, now I am really going to see the cream of the province of British Columbia, the real brains; they have to be here. I am going to see someone who will enlighten and impress me tremendously. I still remember the great shock that overcame me when I began to realize there was no one there any brighter than I was, and I was not very bright.

Mr. Churchill: Was it worse when you came here?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I thought when I came here I was coming to the centre of information. Surely I was going to meet the really bright, intellectual lights of this country. I was ready to take a properly humble attitude toward these people whose names I had been reading in the newspapers all my life. They must be men of tremendous capacity. Again, I had the disconcerting experience of realizing that one after the other of these people I was prepared to set up as idols had feet of clay. They revealed that they were little, if any, brighter than I was, and again I admit that I am not very bright. This was very disconcerting.

There was one person we used to hear about continually, but I had not met him. His name used to crop up all the time but he was almost a mysterious personage. His name popped up everywhere as the ultimate in competence, a man who really knew how to make the economy work, a man who had made it work during the war as one of C. H. Howe's boys. Here was a man who would finally put things on an even keel after the rather bad start that this government had had and the rather distressing experience of the previous government. Finally, of course, this mysterious personage emerged as the present Minister of Finance.

Again, I must confess to a feeling of considerable dismay because I believed the stories that here was competence incarnate. Well, we have to admit that today things are in a very bad mess. Even Peter Newman has had to wash his hands of the Liberal party and the Liberal government. Peter has really been a faithful apologist for this government. Admittedly he has had many disappointments as a great many of his idols have suddenly revealed their clay feet. Only recently has Peter finally thrown up his hands and said that the government is in a mess and does not know what it is doing. There is no doubt about it, things are in a mess.

It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to tell us, as he told us today in answer to a question of mine, that there is no such thing as a money crisis. I was quoting from a report of his speech in Montreal. I do not know whether he used that term in Montreal, but certainly he conveyed the impression to his audience that he considered there was something that could be termed a money crisis. This is a very bad expression, I admit, and one that rather offends my pedantic nature. However, we all know what is meant. Things are in very bad mess financially in Canada.

Our friends in the official opposition appear to think that the financial and economic troubles we are experiencing are caused solely by governmental extravagance. I have no dobut whatever that there is a great deal of governmental extravagance, a great deal of governmental waste. I submit, however, that this cannot be the real cause of the troubles that are now overtaking the Canadian economy.

In the first place, I feel we should be careful not to draw such sharp distinctions between public and private expenditures. They all come out of the same stream of wealth production. It is when you try to spend that wealth in the two places at once that you get into trouble. It is when you try to build the unnecessary sort of buildings that have been undertaken in Canada and at the same time have the government perform the necessary social services it has to look after that you begin to run into trouble. It is when the capital of the country is allowed to behave as it wishes, without any control from the central authorities, that we begin to run into trouble.

We are told almost ad nauseam, and have been for some years, how dependent we are on foreign capital coming into this country to keep our economy on an even keel and to enable us to expand. However, I have two reports here which indicate what has been happening to the Canadian economy and provide an answer to the questions I have been putting to a number of my economist friends who try to tell me our troubles have arisen because our level of investment has been falling. When I suggest to them this is a nonsensical, meaningless statement because investment cannot fall as long as the total money supply is expanding, they retreat muttering in their beards.

It may be that investment is not taking place in the spots in which they are accustomed to finding it. I suggest what we are seeing today is a flight of capital from Canada. This flight of capital in no way differs from other flights of capital in the past and is caused perhaps by the same reasons that have caused flights of capital in earlier times and in other countries. One of the reasons in this country has been that the government simply refuses to control and direct the economy.

There has been a sharp rise in the volume of Canadian trading on the Chicago and midwest stock exchange. Very interesting figures are contained in a report in today's Globe and Mail. These figures indicate that the transactions of Canadian stock brokerage firms who hold seats on this exchange rose from $58 million in 1966 to $325 million this year. These figures indicate where a lot of Canadian capital is going and it has to be replaced, of course, by importation of capital. Then we have the Gazette stating quite unequivocally that there has been a flight of capital from Canada.

• (5:20 p.m.)

In a country already capital-hungry, the need will be intense. Will the capital be found?

It is unlikely to be found until Canada is able to present to Canadians and to the world a more confident outlook. The fact is that Canadian money is itself moving out of the country in enormous amounts, to seek more attractive opportunities for investment elsewhere.

This is an astonishing editorial comment, Mr. Chairman, when one realizes the level of interest rates in Canada. One can only assume it is a profound disquiet over the manner in which the government of Canada has been conducting our affairs that causes these funds to be flowing out of the country. I was warned some months ago by a man in a position to know that there was a serious flight of capital taking place via mutual open-end funds from Canada into the United States, and I presume that this is another example of that same tendency.

This is posing problems for us, Mr. Chairman, that the government is refusing to meet. Not long ago I asked the Minister of Finance whether he did not think that two policies to which this government is committed are mutually incompatible. One policy is the maintenance of a fixed exchange rate and the other is the maintenance of the $2,600 million maximum reserve that we have agreed to keep in our agreement with the United States. My question was prompted by a news item that the Bank of Canada had been obliged to get into the market in order to drive down the value of the Canadian dollar to the pegged level of 92.5 cents United States. It had been pushed up, of course, by the inflow of capital which we are repeatedly told is necessary in order to keep Canada going and to keep Canada expanding.

I am going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is useless to belabour this government, as has been done from the official opposition benches, on the ground that they have brought troubles upon us by their extravagance and not to point out that the cure for these troubles lies much deeper than that. It lies in the fact that the government will not control the operations of our economy. I suggest that before long the Minister of Finance is going to have to make a choice. He is going to have to go to the International Monetary Fund and negotiate us back into a floating exchange rate or he is going to have to abandon the agreement with the United States to maintain only a maximum of $2,600 million in American funds in our exchange reserves. The two policies are incompatible and they are becoming daily more and more incompatible.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Whether the government is prepared to do that is another matter, Mr. Chairman. I would doubt that they are. I think we shall flounder along and probably the government will adopt, as the minister has hinted thus far that it will adopt, the crude method of turning the screws on the economy, allowing unemployment to rise, so as to overcome for the time being the problems that the government is facing. We certainly will not solve these problems by severe government cuts which are not compensated for elsewhere in the economy.

I can see a place where there could be a cut, Mr. Chairman, and I should like to ask my Conservative friends where they would cut. I can tell you where I would cut. I would cut the defence expenditures. It is 14 years since I first sat in this house and every year since then the government of Canada has spent $1,500 million, $1,600 million, $1,-700 million on so-called military defence. No minister of national defence and no government spokesman has ever been able to tell me what defence has been achieved for Canada by these expenditures. So I have no hesitation in saying that I would make cuts there if I thought cuts had to be made.

Even so, Mr. Chairman, I would not make cuts and leave it at that. I would transfer those expenditures to other fields which would develop the Canadian economy in a way in which we can continue to advance, expand and develop. But we are not going to do this merely by turning the screw now in a crude, undifferentiated and unselective way, or by going to departments, as the government is doing at the present moment according to the spokesman of the Conservative party who appears to know—I do not—and whittling a few million off here and a few million off there. All we do by that method is to further the decline in the Canadian economy and increase the problems of the Canadian people.

I hope the government will eventually realize that there is no distinction that can properly be made in an industrial economy between public expenditures and private expenditures, that it is a case of deciding what is best for the Canadian people. Those on the government benches tell us, of course, that they are helpless in the hands of our constitution. We have had pointed out to us several times that provincial and municipal expenditures have been rising above federal expenditures, which I think they did for the first time last year or perhaps the year before. That is perfectly true. But I also suggest that any federal government worthy of the name can reach agreements with the provincial governments without too much difficulty. The fact is that provincial governments are obliged to make their policies conform to those of the federal government if the federal government wishes to ensure that outcome.

I have yet to see this government or any other federal government deal with the problem of reaching agreements with the provincial governments by advertising to the people of the provinces the answers that the federal government has to obstacles that may be put in their way by the provincial governments and thus bring provincial governments to the frame of mind which will induce them to co-operate with the federal government. These things, I am sure, can be done if we have a government that is prepared to govern. And to govern today means more than just holding the ring as a referee; it means direct participation in the economy of the country.

In a news item the other day there was a hint that the legislation relating to the Canada Development Corporation, if and when it comes before us, will be of a very different type from that envisaged by the former minister of finance. His concept of it, you remember, Mr. Chairman, was a sort of vast mutual fund which was to be used for purchasing back minority shares of foreign-owned corporations. The news item to which I refer, which had all the earmarks of an inspired leak, was that the present Minister of Finance has in mind using the funds of the Canada Development Corporation for that sort of rationalization and regrouping of Canadian industry that the members of this industry have been pressing upon him now for a year and a half.

I hope that this is the plan and that it goes beyond the sort of guide lines and pleadings that he suggests in his dealings with the rest of the economy. I hope that this means government participation and intervention in developing and controlling the Canadian economy. If our government will do that, Mr. Chairman, I think we shall no longer have the trouble we presently have of capital shortages, of continually increasing interest rates, of a rising consumer price index, of declining production, of a declining gross national product or rate or growth in Canada. We shall go ahead in the way in which anyone with any common sense realizes that this country can go ahead.

I say this because there are few people on the face of the earth so fortunate as the Canadian people, with resources that are unmatched anywhere on the globe. If we fail to take advantage of these opportunities in Canada to produce a society that will be an example for the rest of the world, then we should be thoroughly ashamed of having elected such an incompetent government.

I hope our Minister of Finance will realize this is an opportunity. I hope that for him this is not merely an unfortunate situation in which he finds himself without knowing how he got into it. I hope he and his colleagues are prepared to do the sort of thing that a modern government in a modern industrial society must do if democratic government is to survive in an industrial age.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am impressed with the interest the members of the Liberal party have shown in this afternoon's debate. Their attendance is an indication of how worried they are about financial conditions in this country. The amendment before us may have induced them to be present. I hope that the minister whose estimates we are considering will not interpret the presence of so many of his party's members as enthusiastic support for his activities. He knows that the reason for their presence here is the amendment. It seems that the members of the minister's party are not sure when the vote is to come.

Mr. Lambert: We know that the vote is coming.

Mr. Churchill: It seems that when attendance of certain hon. members is desirable we should have a vote in committee.

An hon. Member: What about the Tories?

Mr. Churchill: Members of our party will appear at the appropriate moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Members of the Liberal party do not seem to place great reliance on the President of the Treasury Board; they rush in to give him support. The members of my party, on the other hand, are quite capable of looking after themselves and at the appropriate moment they will appear to support the amendment—I hope.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: The amendment is the only means available to us to express our dissatisfaction with the government's failure to take action with regard to retired civil servants and others who have been waiting patiently for the implementation of a certain report. The hon. member for Carleton has drawn this matter to the attention of the house on many occasions and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre followed his example. I support their point of view. I think this amendment is essential in order to drive home to the government that action must be taken in this regard.

Other hon. members have mentioned the ill effects of the stringent allocation of time for estimates. I have spoken on this subject on many occasions. At this time I believe that the mistake in setting a 30 day limit on the discussion of estimates has been brought home to all members of the house. We are facing a financial crisis which can most usefully be discussed on the estimates of the Treasury Board and those of the Department of Finance. Yet the limitation imposed on the house means that we have only another two and a half hours left today for the discussion of these major matters and the time that will be available on Thursday. Then the guillotine will operate and millions of dollars will be voted without a full discussion of whether it is advisable that this money should be spent.

Mr. Knowles: It is hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member says that the amount will run to hundreds of millions of dollars. I do not know. The total may be in the billions of dollars. This demonstrates the weakness of setting a time limit for the study of estimates, especially such a short time limit as 30 days. As other members have said, no subject is of greater importance to the House of Commons than the financial aspects of government. During the last two years these financial aspects have, unfortunately, been shoved into the background. Estimates have been taken on a hit or miss basis; sometimes they have been postponed. Year after year we have voted interim supply so that expenditures may be maintained.

Miss LaMarsh: The last time you were in office you did not call them at all.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Churchill: The estimates have not been subjected to the careful and close scrutiny they should have. Ministers of the crown have not been called on to defend their policies.

Mr. Lambert: The minister is in the house for one day and has a lot to answer for.

Mr. Churchill: Ministers have not delineated their policies. We saw an example of that sort of thing last night. The Minister of Industry failed to return to the house at eight o'clock even though his estimates were before the committee. The chairman thought that the committee was still dealing with the Department of Industry and called for the passing of item No. 1. The hon. member for Carleton properly objected. Then we had a change of business; we took up the Department of Public Works. The estimates of the Minister of Industry may not come before the committee again. Without any answers from him his estimates will go through. The guillotine will operate. The steam roller on the government side of the house will cooperate to push items through.

We talk about reforming parliament. Over the years one of the reforms advocated was shortening the time for the discussion of estimates. I and other hon. members of this party opposed that concept from the beginning. The idea was tried on a trial basis and we have been operating under the concept of limitation of time for discussion of estimates for two or three years. The idea is a complete failure. What has happened this year has shown it up in its stark reality. I am sure that members of the combined opposition will oppose making permanent the temporary rule that set a limit of 30 days for the study of estimates.

Several speakers outlined in considerable detail and with eloquence the financial troubles of this country. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said that we were placing too much stress on cutting back expenditures. I hope he approves of the suggestion to cut back reckless expenditures. That is not our only argument. It is one that we have been stressing today and we have stressed it for a simple reason. During the last three months we have had indications from the Prime Minister's office and elsewhere that great reductions in expenditures were to be made. It was said that hundreds of millions of dollars were do be cut from expenditures. Anyone who has been in the house for any length of time, and certainly anyone who has served on the government side, knows perfectly well that is the phoniest, yes, the phoniest cutting back of expenditures that we have ever heard of.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Normally, preparation of estimates begins in August. Officials in each department are required to put forward for the consideration of their minister and, subsequently, of Treasury Board the estimates which they think are essential to carry out the policies of the various departments. Of course, they set the figures in accordance with the policy dictated by the minister, saying that such and such an amount of money is required if the minister is to do those things that he has been talking about. Long examination of those preliminary figures follows and they are modified and reduced. I suppose that sort of thing has gone on in every year throughout Canada's history. When people tell us in August or early September that estimates are to be slashed by hundreds of millions of dollars, they are saying that simply to bemuse the people of Canada. The estimates that are referred to at that time of year are the preliminary estimates that departments are making with regard to their expenditures.

I think it is not sufficiently straight forward for members of the government to leak information to the press with regard to this operation, which is always going on, and pretend there is to be a substantial reduction in government expenditures. If there were to be a substantial reduction in government spending, that reduction would have appeared in the 1967-68 estimates which are now before us. But we have not heard a word with regard to such a reduction.

If we suggest reductions in expenditures our proposals are voted down. I am glad to see the genial Secretary of State for External Affairs present today paying such close attention to financial matters. Any prospective leader should do that, of course. The hon. gentleman used to be an expert on agriculture. He has had sufficient experience in external affairs now and should leave that field to someone else. The subject matter with which he should concern himself today is finance and I am glad that he is with us this evening.

He will recall that in June when we were looking at the estimates of his department in the standing committee on external affairs I suggested a reduction of those estimates and moved a motion accordingly. I did not want to cripple the activities of the Secretary of State for External Affairs because he has worldranging interests but I did suggest a reduction of $3 million in one item. It occurred to me that the government should have accepted that suggestion from the opposition. We are so frequently accused of asking for increased expenditures, but I was asking for a reduction in the expenditures. I would have accepted an increase through supplementary estimates of the amount I was proposing to reduce. I would have agreed to having it placed in some other category within the estimates of the department.

I refer specifically to a $3 million reduction which I advocated with regard to providing military advice and assistance to Tanzania. I found out that over a period of two years we were voting about $6 million for that country and over a period of five years $10 million to assist the country of Tanzania to develop a military establishment. Apparently we have people there who are training Tanzanians. We are also training some of them in this country and certain aircraft have been provided for them. Out of kindness to the minister I suggested that this estimate should be reduced.

If the money had been earmarked for hospital assistance or medical care I would have been all for it because I think these people need help of that kind. But they really do not need military assistance from Canada. We are a peace loving nation. We provide for our own defence, we do our part as a member of NATO and so on, but to go round the world assisting various countries to develop military power is not what I think should be the policy of the Canadian government. Nevertheless, the minister rejected my advice. His friends on the committee voted down my proposal, although I pointed out that in the capital city of Tanzania insurgents, guerrillas, were being trained for activity against Southern Rhodesia I suggested that we would not want to be mixed up in any way in anything of that nature, not that we were directly carrying out this type of training but the people we were training in Tanzania might perhaps be training other people to take action against Southern Rhodesia.

I thought this was quite wrong, and I still think so. But because of the guillotine which will fall on Thursday night the Secretary of State for External Affairs will not have his estimates before the committee again except for the "chop action" and we shall not have a chance to discuss this problem further. I am sure the hon. gentleman has changed his mind about it and that he would like to get out of this activity in another country. However, this chance will not be given to us because of the operation of the guillotine on Thursday night.

You see, Mr. Chairman, how bad it is to have a set period for estimates. Some subjects which should be discussed cannot be dealt with, and much as I have been looking forward to moving in the House of Commons the motion I moved in the committee on external affairs, I shall not be given that opportunity. Nor will the minister have a chance to explain his position. He will not have a chance to say he was wrong in June, as he was, and that it would be far better to take those millions and use them for medical assistance for Tanzania instead of using them for military training in that African country.

This is just one example of bad expenditure. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands suggested that as a means of cutting down expenditures we should slash the estimates of the Department of National Defence. That department has, of course, been badly managed over the years, certainly under the direction of the minister who has now become Minister of Transport, and if it were not for the fact that a former member of this house, the former member for Bonavista-Twillingate, is securely lodged in the transport field I am sure that the transportation area would suffer from the depredations of the minister who did so badly in national defence.

Despite the mismanagement over the years under his control, the expenditure on national defence, and it is large—a billion and a half year after year—is still in my opinion essential in the light of the experience which Canada and other nations had in the years between 1920 and 1940. We went through a 20-year period then when people talked in terms of cutting down armaments, cutting expenditure on national defence. In 1939 and 1940 we found what a terrible mistake that had been. I hope we never make that mistake again. I would rather spend $1.5 billion every year for another generation provided that in the interval we can prevent another world war.

I believe that if a nation is to play any part in international affairs it has to possess military strength. There are so many nations in this world which, unlike Canada, desire expansion, are careless of human life and will take advantage of weakness. So it is up to us to maintain strong military forces. Over and above that, it is essential that the young men of this country have an opportunity to go through a period of military training so that they will be fitted to play their part if called upon and in order that we may have constantly in Canada thousands of people who have knowledge of military matters and are prepared in time of emergency to take action. Therefore I do not accept the point of view of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands who, I presume, was speaking for his party. I do not accept the view that that is where an immediate reduction should be made. There may be savings that could be effected and still retain efficiency, or restore the efficiency that was destroyed by the former minister of national defence, but that is not the field in which expenditures of the government should be slashed to the bone.

[Mr. Churchill.]

There are other areas where savings can be made. It is up to the government to indicate where those savings will be made. It is not up to the opposition to provide the program for the government. I think members of the government have reached the stage where they would like to hand over the reins to us without too much loss of face because they are in desperate financial straits. They would like the Tory party to carry the burden for four years so they could snipe at us in the midst of our difficulties, because the difficulties at present are immense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has a sense of humour.

Mr. Churchill: My genial friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is paying close attention to me, as he always does. If he would only accept my advice from time to time he would have a much happier life.

Our attention has been drawn to the contingency fund under one item for the Treasury Board. I well recall the fight we had in the House of Commons a year or two ago when this fund was so badly misused. Now the minister in charge of Treasury Board has enlarged the amount. He wants to have a blank cheque for $45 million.

In 1966 we pointed out the background of this contingency item. That story has been repeated today by the hon. member for Edmonton West. The item should be restored to its former position of a contingency fund to meet unforeseen expenditures, and it must be remembered that there are always unforeseen expenditures. Several times the Auditor General has drawn attention to the misuse of this fund and to the change in it with which he does not agree. As recorded in volume 28 of the minutes of proceedings of the public accounts committee for November 23, 1966, the Auditor General drew attention to this fund and made a recommendation which I think should be emphasized time and time again. I quote from page 1289 of the minutes as follows:

> I think in circumstances such as these it would be more meaningful and certainly more helpful to the house in its control of the money supply were the amount of the individual departmental requirements for the additional salary money to be the subject of supplementary estimates put in by each of the departments concerned—in fact it seems to me that this is precisely what the supplementary estimate procedure is for, namely to bring to the attention of the house unforeseen expenses encountered by a department, e.g., retroactive salary revisions. If a change like this were to be made, then the Finance—

It is now the Treasury Board.

> —contingencies vote could be returned to its original concept, namely that of a small fund to be retained for unexpected and unforeseen items.

This is what we are seeking. Let us go back to the proven system of a contingency fund that was used for a specific purpose, not a fund which is so enlarged now that in effect it is a blank cheque to the Treasury Board.

Despite the explanation offered to me privately by the minister in charge I still wonder why in the contingency item for 1966-67, as listed on page 560 of the blue book, there should appear just over $29 million instead of the $110 million that was voted for that item under the main estimates plus the supplementaries. If the minister had been smart he could have shown a reduction instead of an increase, but nevertheless he is badly misusing this fund and, as the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, it is all contained in the fine print which talks about the nature of contingencies. We have objected and we continue to object to three words which were emphasized by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Those three words are "and other requirements." They leave the field absolutely wide open for the minister and the Treasury Board to use this money for any purpose that may occur to them.

Consequently, sir, we feel that these estimates should not go through in their present form. We have given an opportunity to the minister to make a revision which I am sure the committee would quickly accept. In effect he could make a reduction. He could reduce this item by $40 million. I am being generous; he would still have $5 million left for contingencies, much more than used to be the case in the past. This item used to be $1½ million. Then it was raised to $3 million, and owing to the inflation that has taken place under this government I am willing to let it be raised to $5 million.

When we have reduced the minister's salary we could make a reduction of $40 million in item No. 5. Following that the Secretary of State for External Affairs could suggest that we save another $3 million on his military escapades abroad, making a total of $43 million to be saved. This is a saving which I have proposed in less than 30 seconds, and it shows how easily and quickly people can deal with saving money if they want to put their minds to it. That is what I suggest should be done, sir, and I will have great pleasure in voting for the amendment when the vote is called after eight o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair pursuant to section 3 of the standing order 15.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be considered at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), Housing—Toronto—compensation in urban redevelopment project; the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), External Affairs—Viet Nam—reaction to United States offer to cease fire; the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), Pollution—possible health hazard from fertilizer plant at Dunnville, Ontario.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

COMMERCIAL SOLIDS PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford for the second reading of Bill No. C-113, to incorporate Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company.

Private Bills

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as I recall I had been speaking for about two minutes when the time ran out on the last occasion that this bill was before the house. It seems to me that in our centennial year it is very appropriate to recall some of our Canadian history for the purpose of giving us some guide lines for the future in the field of transportation. As I am sure every member of the house recalls from his study of our history, it is about 80 years ago that a transcontinental railroad was finally built across Canada which bound together the various parts of this country. This was a tremendous undertaking and one that was absolutely necessary if Canada was to emerge as a national entity. It was the means by which the very diverse parts of this enormous country could be welded together. One could not expect that at that period the railroad would be constructed in any way except by private enterprise or that the benefits of constructing it would accrue to anybody but private citizens or groups of private citizens. At that time the concept of social and communal rights was rather undeveloped.

• (6:00 p.m.)

After the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway there was a spate of railway construction in various regions of the country which culminated, as I recall, in 1912 with the construction of the line to Prince Rupert on the Pacific coast in the constituency of my hon. friend from Skeena. Many members will recall the sad history of that vast railway construction period in our Canadian history. They will recall how grafting contractors, corrupt governments and greedy individuals and groups contributed to what became almost a national disaster which necessitated the government of Canada moving into the picture and cobbling together all the various ill-fated railway projects which had been constructed without any hope of an economically sound future.

We have not yet recovered from the results of that particular page in our history. Almost every year one hears complaints in the house about the cost of Canadian National Railways which was the result of the government taking over these bankrupt railway projects that had been built in that expansionary period. We still are paying the cost of allowing private interests to move into a field on which the whole of our economy rested, the field of transport upon which our whole national economy relied and depended. We allowed it to be the happy hunting ground for those who wanted to make profits from the development of the new Dominion of Canada. I suggest that this burden has been too hard on the Canadian people and it is only now that we are beginning to get on top of it.

For many years it has been pointed out that the government's action at that time, while in some ways commendable, was also very badly contrived because of its position that the best thing to do was to allow certain groups in our economy to profit from the operation of the economy. Therefore, instead of allowing these concerns to go bankrupt, instead of allowing their bonds to drop out of sight, the government of Canada on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada guaranteed them, and from that day to this we have been carrying a very heavy burden.

We are now moving into a new age with new methods of transportation. Perhaps the most striking and significant is the one outlined in Bill C-113, to incorporate the Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company. The purpose is to transport by modern methods commodities that hitherto have been transported by railroad or water and perhaps to a minor degree in recent years by air. In the main it will be commodities carried by railroads that will be transported.

We can be sure that technological advances will improve the scope, capacity and ability of these pipe lines to transport goods in pelletized or solid form as is now being attempted. I assume there is every anticipation on the part of this company that the operation is going to be very profitable; otherwise it would not have distributed the very expensive brochure I and other members have received from the sponsors of this bill. We can be quite sure that the moment it is demonstrated that pipe lines represent the modern method of transportation and that this is a means by which promoters can make fortunes for themselves, their colleagues and associates, we shall have a spate of pipe line construction as great as the railway construction which occurred 50 to 60 years ago. We may very well experience an even greater disastrous result. It may well be that we will have to come again to the rescue of bankrupt transportation companies because they have built pipe lines as the railroads were built, paralleling each other across this country. In my own province there are two railroads running down the Fraser canyon, one on one side and one on the other, periodically having to hop across and change places before arriving at the same destination, Vancouver.

There has been a scandalous waste of resources so far as the Canadian National is concerned, and of course evidence of that is the very heavy load of debt placed on the Canadian people by the government which decided it had to rescue these bankrupt operators. I plead with the house to be very careful not to permit Canada to embark on another period of wasteful construction of a means of transportation and to realize that in this day and age there is no place in the field of transportation for private interests. This is too important a factor in our economy.

We have seen in recent years the transfer of virtually all electric power production and distribution from private to public hands. We have seen the various utilities across the country falling into public hands because private hands have proved incompetent or incapable of providing the services required. I submit that transportation, particularly transcontinental, which is the means through which our country is tied together, is too important a matter to be left in the hands of private interests or promoters whose concern, quite legitimately and legally, is to make profits by the transportation of goods in Canada.

I hope the house will decide not to pass this bill. I hope the government will thereupon take note of the refusal of the parliament of Canada to embark on what I think is a very misguided project and undertake the sort of research and development which will lead to public investment in a properly integrated pipe line transportation system in Canada. For that reason I move:

That Bill C-113, an act to incorporate Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company, be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, we have just seen another example of the kind of action that will result in a refusal to hear people who are anxious to develop Canada's natural resources. I think it is a pity that it is possible for a very limited number of members to hold up that development, particularly in the field of research and transportation, which is so vital to the economic well-being of Canada as a nation. I say this because the passage of Bill C-113, as all hon. members know, would not in fact give any company the right to build a solids pipe line or any other kind of pipe line. Indeed, all it would do is set up a legal entity which could make application to the Canadian Transportation Commission and thereby have the opportunity to place before the commission its proposal and the economic arguments in favour of it.

If we should at this stage take the action suggested by the amendment the bill would not even be referred to the committee. The sponsors of this company would not have the right to be heard in any forum. I think that would be unjust and unfair. Anyone who has respect for the concept of justice and democratic discussion should at least provide an opportunity to the sponsors to state their case before members of this house. A bill similar to this one has been before the house now for nearly two years without being given second reading. If this bill were given second reading and referred to the committee, the officers of the company could be called before the committee to state their case.

Section 24 of the National Transportation Act which was passed by this house earlier in 1967 provides that subject to subsection 2 no company shall operate a commodity pipe line unless there is a certificate in force with respect to that pipe line. Therefore, even if the bill should pass through all stages in this house this would not permit the Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company to begin immediately construction of a pipe line or go into the pipe line business, in this case the moving of sulphur from Alberta to the west coast.

Other stringent conditions have also been laid down in the new National Transportation Act such as section 25 which provides that the transportation commission before it grants a certificate must study such things as the economic feasibility of the pipe line, the financial responsibility and financial structure of the applicant, the methods of financing the pipe line and the extent to which Canadians will have an opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and construction of the pipeline, and any public interest that in the opinion of the commission may be affected by the granting or refusing of the application.

The company has already stated there will be a public offering of shares when they have reached the stage in their research where they find that the project is probably economically feasible. That, of course, is not certain at this time. I believe that in Canada we must pay far more attention to the modernization of our transportation industries so that we can remain competitive in international markets in respect of many commodities. Wheat, for example, is very important but many other raw materials are produced in Canada, such as sulphur, which fall in this category.

In many other countries sulphur is produced much closer to tidewater than it is in Canada. Unless we find a more economical way to move this material from the point where it is produced to the coast we will be participating in the restriction of the expansion of our world markets for sulphur. Sulphur is a product which is basic to industry. It has been said that sulphuric acid is the work horse of the chemical industry. Sulphur is the major and essential ingredient of sulphuric acid. If Canada is to expand its industrial base, both in respect of the production of raw materials and also its secondary industries, sulphur will become one of our most important resources.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that hon. members will not prevent this bill from getting second reading so that it may be referred to the committee where we will have an opportunity to hear from the officers of the company. There will be plenty of time after the committee stage to disagree with the arguments which may be advanced. It seems to me that it will be a very serious miscarriage of justice in so far as this house is concerned if we refuse them the opportunity to state their case to certain members of this house.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson). I appreciate, of course, that he is pretty well compelled to speak in the way in which he did.

Mr. Olson: Compelled by common sense.

Mr. Howard: He says he is compelled by common sense. That is the compulsion which caused him to be right where he is at this very moment. It was the common sense of abandoning the stupidity of the political philosophy to which he adhered before. His piety, however, seems to have increased since moving from one place to another in the house, a piety which is a bit glossy and does not go very deep because the arguments he has used just do not hold water. The hon. member, who for years has been the official spokesman on procedure for the government, should know the fallacy of his approach when he says that the representatives of the company will be denied a hearing simply because an amendment has been moved which would mean that the bill would be given a six months hoist. There will be an opportunity for all members to vote on this amendment. I cannot conceive that the hon. member for Medicine Hat has prescience in respect of the result of that vote.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: No, but when is it going to be taken?

Mr. Howard: As I said, the hon. gentleman is the official or unofficial spokesman on procedure for the government and has been for many years. He does not need to ask me when the vote is or is not going to be taken. He has knowledge of the rules, as has anyone in the house. The question which he just asked from a sitting position indicates clearly that he was speaking with tongue in cheek when he tried to categorize certain members as participating in a denial of rights simply by exercising their opportunity to move a particular amendment in order to express an opinion about this bill. He said that it was shameful, or words to that effect, to hold up the development of research into the transport of solids through pipe lines.

I was here when the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) spoke on second reading of the bill some time ago. I listened to him at that time and I took the trouble to find his remarks in Hansard because the hon. member for Medicine Hat made some reference to the fact that research was being held up simply by the moving of the six months hoist by my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron). There has been a fair amount of research into the transport of solids by pipe line. Undoubtedly there will be continuing research into this mode of transportation regardless of the passage or otherwise of the bill before us. I should like to quote what the hon. member for Edmonton West, a fellow Albertan of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, had to say on June 1 as reported on page 853 of Hansard:

> I think we should go further into the study of solids pipe lines and recognize that the basic work in this connection has been done, as indicated by the hon. member himself—

The hon. member who moved second reading of the bill.

> —through the research council of the province of Alberta, using not only funds provided by that province—

In other words, tax money.

> —but in addition funds made available by the Department of Industry.

I presume our federal Department of Industry.

The organizations taking part in this research are known as SPRDA—Solids Pipelines Research Development Association—and SPESA, standing for Solids Pipelines Economic Studies Association.

Here are two organizations in receipt of public funds from the province of Alberta, my hon. friend's own province, and from the federal Department of Industry which, according to the hon. member for Edmonton West—and I do not discount his words one bit—has already done the basic research work. With this knowledge, which I am sure the hon. member for Medicine Hat had because he is from Alberta and is knowledgeable about these things, for him to stand up and say that the simple moving of a motion by my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, for a six months delay will hold up research convinces me completely that I should discount his remarks as a lot of froth designed for one purpose only. I believe it is not his purpose to advance the transporting of solids in this manner but to protect some other interests which he did not reveal. Let me read further what the hon. member for Edmonton West said.

Mr. Olson: We all know what the hon. member for Edmonton West said. It is recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Howard: I have difficulty in understanding the hon. member when he is standing up and has the floor but it is impossible to comprehend what he is muttering from his seat. If the hon. gentleman has something to say or would like to ask me a question he knows the rules, having been an expert on the rules for many years, and he can inquire whether or not I want to yield to a question. It is only then that he will be intelligible, although I doubt it.

Let me read further what the hon. member for Edmonton West said.

Let us face it. Not only were government funds involved in these technical and economic studies but a consortium of about ten Canadian companies which are interested in transport was involved. The Canadian National Railways has an interest in SPRDA. So have the C.P.R., Canadian oil companies, and other industries.

Why should the C.N.R., the C.P.R. and the oil companies and other interested industries not have an interest in the transporting of solids by pipe line? They do not deserve to be in business if they do not have that sort of interest because this is a new mode of transport and its impact upon the transportation industry far transcends any knowledge the hon. member for Medicine Hat may have about the matter. Its effect upon the Canadian people may be such that it warrants every possible examination of this proposal, including the basic right of any hon. member to move a motion for a six months' delay without having to listen to the dull mutterings which we heard a moment ago about rights, duties and obligations.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Would the hon. member yield the floor for a question? I should like to say for the sake of the record that it is my information, and the hon. member might comment on it, that the work being done by the Alberta Research Council and the Solids Pipelines Research Development Association is in the field of transportation by pipe line in capsule form and that the proposal before the house is for a slurry pipe line, which is quite a different thing. I believe that the research which the hon. member referred to was research on capsule pipe lines.

Mr. Howard: I am glad the hon. member asked that question because the house will recall that although he is the sponsor of the bill he was, understandably and for a very good reason, absent from the house when second reading of the bill was moved and his colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman), introduced the bill on his behalf. I was hesitant about the name of the constituency because of the redistribution, and I am not certain what the location of the hon. member is. Thus the confusion.

The house will also remember that the last time this bill was before the house, I think it was a week ago today, I took the course of asking whether the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard would like to make some introductory remarks and explain his position with respect to the bill because he did not have the opportunity to do so the first time. I asked him to make that explanation without closing the debate as normally would be the case. The hon. gentleman then got up and said "I did not ask for any such opportunity". I submit to him that he did not ask for the opportunity then, he did not take it when it was offered to him, and members of the house were therefore not acquainted at an earlier time with the information he has now put forward by way of a question. However, I have no comment to make on whether or not the statement made by the hon. member is factual. I do not doubt his word but I am just not aware of that situation.

Mr. Olson: May I ask the hon. member a question? I would like to have his permission first.

Mr. Howard: Nothing pleases me more than to give permission to the hon. member for Medicine Hat to do whatever he likes.

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member tell the house whether or not he believes that all of the research and experimentation necessary to develop an economically sound pipe line for the transportation of sulphur can be done in a laboratory on a pilot basis or whether it is not also necessary for at least one company to find out whether or not it can be done successfully?

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Howard: We all know there is a great difference between theory and practice. It may be necessary to conduct experiments in connection with the transportation of solids, in whatever form they may be, by whatever mechanism there may be within a pipe line. This does not carry with it the implication that we should place in the hands of the Shell Oil Company the sole responsibility for this method of transportation or say that we want this company to have this position in our economy. If the hon. gentleman had been listening he would have heard the parallel that was drawn between the development of our railroads in this nation, as described by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), and the position we are in at the moment with regard to solids pipe lines.

Mr. Olson: The railways are under the transport act.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member sits there muttering, and I cannot hear him. When he sat down here as a Social Crediter he was clear and understandable, but since he has been infected by those who have been vacuumed into the Liberal party he is not so clear. I do not want to delay the vote that may come on this bill. I expressed the view privately to some members who were interested in the bill that I really did not have too much concern about it one way or the other. After looking at the bill initially I thought if we desired to do this sort of thing it would not hurt to go into a few more details about it.

[Mr. Howard.]

Subsequently, and particularly after listening to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, who related to us the historical concept of the development of another mode of transportation in this country which is leaving us in a position of suffering, and after listening to him outline what should be done to preserve the public interest in this particular case, I was influenced to take a second look at the item. I wondered whether or not we should give any endorsation to the proposal at this time.

We have not had a great deal of explanation from the sponsor of the bill. In fact the only words he has uttered in support of it this session were the ones in which he said he did not want to say anything, and the words he uttered in reply to a question relating to the type of research that was being done. In the absence of some announcement of the philosophy behind the introduction of this bill—it may have been given in another session, but we are here now—I wonder whether we should proceed too hastily in the direction of giving the bill passage and referring it to a committee.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I might add that I am not too strongly in favour of the amendment to give six months hoist. In fact at the moment I doubt very much whether I will vote for it. In the light of the way in which parliament has been operating lately we could be sitting here six months from today. Thus, if the amendment passed we would be committed to give second reading to the bill automatically six months from today. This may be an exaggerated interpretation of the rules, but it is an illustration of the way rules are altered in their application. Situations arise which were not foreseen at the time the original concept of the six months hoist was introduced.

I would not want to put myself in the position of supporting an amendment which, if carried, would mean that six months from today an hon. gentleman on the other side might rise on a point of order and say that the house ordered this bill for second reading six months ago. I cannot therefore support the amendment too strongly, although it may be that others who are more knowledgeable as to the rules will convince me it is the thing to do. I simply say that in closing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think we should not have a vote between the hours of six and eight o'clock.

Mr. Basford: In view of the fact the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is not particularly in favour of the amendment, I ask for unanimous consent to have the vote at this time.

Mr. Howard: As I pointed out, I am not supporting the amendment too strongly. However, I may change my mind and I should like to have an opportunity to think about it for an hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It has been moved by Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)—

Mr. Howard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have objected to a vote being taken between six and eight o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I read the standing order that is applicable. Standing order 6, paragraph 7 reads:

> No vote shall be taken between six o'clock p.m. and eight o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays—

The Chair has to decide therefore whether or not there is going to be a vote. The Chair must proceed to the point where the house decides a vote is or is not to be taken. If the house decides a vote is to be taken, then that vote will be deferred until eight o'clock. This is my interpretation of the standing order. I must go along with the usual procedure to the point where the house decides a vote is or is not to be taken.

The question is on the amendment. Those in favour will please say yea.

Mr. Howard: I am still objecting to a vote being taken.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must advise the hon. member the Chair is not taking a vote. The Chair is determining whether the house wishes to take a vote.

Those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it; the amendment is lost.

The question is now on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Private Bills

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on transport and communications.

AETNA CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cameron (High Park) for the second reading of Bill No. C-112, to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Gilbert (p. 1746).

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on June 20, 1967 when this matter was last considered my colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) had the floor for a brief moment. Regrettably he is not able to be here at the moment to proceed with his remarks. I think it is common knowledge that he had the unfortunate experience to be hospitalized while attending a conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, that he is now in hospital in another country and accordingly not in a position to be here to proceed with his remarks about Aetna Casualty Company of Canada.

I spoke on this bill on second reading, as did other hon. members, and I cannot take the time of the house to go into the intricacies of detail in connection with the company because this would necessitate rereading from Hansard some of the thoughts expressed by the sponsor of the bill, and others who spoke at an earlier stage.

One of the interesting points about Aetna Casualty Company is that it is the subsidiary of a company based in Hartford, Connecticut. Most of its business is conducted in Canada, but the interesting point is that its business of insurance is carried on with companies that are also subsidiaries of United States corporations.

This, Mr. Speaker, is one of the very bad features of a corporate structure such as this, because there is a sort of closed circuit. One company sets up a subsidiary in Canada, owns and controls it and makes decisions with respect to it, whether it be a production company, a distribution company or what have you. These decisions are not based on the worth that may accrue to Canada but are based upon influences which are brought to bear upon the parent company in another country, in this instance in the United States.

This company based in Hartford, Connecticut has been operating in Canada through its subsidiary for some years, and its subsidiary in Canada has been carrying on its business of insurance with other United States subsidiaries. In other words, there has been no involvement whatever in the day to day economic life of Canada; it is simply an engagement to insure items with which other U.S. subsidiaries would be involved.

I have remarked on another occasion what this bill covers in the way of insurance, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I may be permitted to relate them to these remarks because they form the principal part of the bill. This company wishes to be incorporated to carry on and transact insurance business in the particular fields and classes of fire insurance, accident insurance, aircraft insurance, automobile insurance, boiler insurance, credit insurance, earthquake insurance, explosion insurance, falling aircraft insurance, forgery insurance, guarantee insurance, hail insurance, impact by vehicles insurance, inland transportation insurance, livestock insurance, machinery insurance, marine insurance, personal property insurance, plate glass insurance, real property insurance, sickness insurance, sprinkler leakage insurance, theft insurance, water damage insurance, weather insurance and windstorm insurance.

I have listed 26 classes of insurance coverage which this company is seeking to have authority to sell in Canada. Presumably they are the classes of insurance that the company has been selling up to now, it having been in existence in this country for some 40 or 50 years. You can see from the recitation of the types of insurance, encompassing the alphabet from A to Z, that almost every type of insurance coverage one can think of is included. In other words this company wants to become involved in the whole range of insurance, with the exception of medical coverage insurance, hospital insurance and the like, and life insurance. Every class of insurance relating to real property is, I presume, included here.

The indication is, Mr. Speaker, that this company wants not only to engage in the full range of insurance coverage but wants this range in order that it may carry on its activities of insuring every type of insurance coverage under the sun with only subsidiaries of United States corporations.

The 1965 premium income of Aetna Casualty increased 17 per cent over the year before, to $665 million. This is a fair sized amount of premium income and I am sure represents millions upon millions of dollars of real property insured, all of it under the cloak of foreign ownership.

We know the position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on foreign ownership. He told us on a nation-wide television broadcast that he is partial to Canadian ownership. We know what is the position of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon); he has clearly said on many occasions that he is partial to Canadian ownership. There are those in the cabinet who do not disagree in essence with the President of the Privy Council but disagree only about some of his methods. However, they too are partial to the concept of Canadian ownership.

As I have said before on a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker, I think it behooves this parliament to concern itself with Canadian ownership. The Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act requires that companies that sell certain classes of insurance, are newly incorporated and do not have an international connection prior to a certain date, must have the element of Canadian ownership in them that puts majority control in the hands of Canadians. This is the philosophy of the statute law of this parliament as it applies to life insurance companies. The government, through the Prime Minister and others, have clearly said that it is their hope, desire and intention that all companies in Canada will become Canadian owned. To this extent we want to assist in every way we can.

A moment ago, Mr. Speaker, we dealt with a company that fell into this category. We did not touch on the ownership aspect of that matter, but this will arise on another occasion.

I cannot conceive of this parliament even considering passage of a bill to incorporate a company which is owned and controlled in the United States. The policies of the company are determined by what is valuable for the United States company. The company is to sell insurance only to other subsidiaries of United States owned corporations.

It is bad enough that we are asked to incorporate a company that has shown no interest in becoming Canadian owned, or in being responsible to the Canadian economy and the Canadian society. Yet we are asked to incorporate a company that has not exhibited one iota of interest in becoming Canadian owned; it is to remain exclusively under the control of Aetna Casualty Company of Hartford, Connecticut. This company which seeks incorporation under the aegis of the parliament of Canada will sell its insurance policies only to companies which also are subsidiaries of United States corporations. These subsidiaries in other words will take out insurance policies for any one of the 26 classes of insurance which the company seeking incorporation wishes to sell.

It may be seen that insurance money will be put into the hands of a company which has no direct responsibility to the Canadian economy, in the sense in which other companies that are wholly owned within the nation have responsibility to the economy. It is too much to ask parliament to consider incorporating such company.

Some time ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) sent a letter to all such subsidiaries telling them what he thought was involved in good Canadian corporate citizenship—I think that is the term he used. The practice of good Canadian corporate citizenship should not involve, I think, one company being the subsidiary of a second company which sells insurance only to other subsidiaries, thus maintaining a closed circuit so far as money is concerned, with control of the company to be incorporated being retained in the hands of those who live in another nation.

Under such an arrangement insurance premiums paid are directed to a company which is controlled in the United States. I submit that we ought to look at a number of recent precedents that act as guide lines for companies that seek to be incorporated by parliament, or for companies that are subsidiaries of corporations of other nations. One example is that of the Mercantile Bank. I shall not go into details, but here was a situation in which the government of Canada expressed itself firmly and with determination with respect to the matter of Canadian versus foreign ownership, requiring Mercantile Bank within a certain period to comply with the rules of the game, so far as Canada was concerned.

Another precedent was that of United Investment Life Assurance Company, which was a subsidiary of a United States corporation. United Investment came before parliament seeking incorporation. After that company ran into the obstacle of being questioned about its good Canadian corporate structure and citizenship the parent company voluntarily said that within a certain period—and it is only reasonable that some time should be permitted for this to happen—it was prepared to divest itself of its ownership of the Canadian subsidiary. Failing that, under Canadian insurance legislation, the shares of that company held in the United States would lose their voting power

In other words, if United Investment Life Assurance Company did not comply with the rules as established for Canadian ownership, the shareholdings in the United States would lose their voting authority. That meant that shares held by Canadian shareholders would be the only ones with voting power; hence control of the company would rest in the hands of Canadians.

As I say, we have had two precedents in recent months. United Investment Life Assurance Company came before the house a few days before the summer recess. It was given third reading in July and went to the Senate. I do not know what the Senate has done, but the example of that company, I suggest, ought to be followed by the Aetna Casualty Company of Canada. I commend such a course of action to this company, through the hon. member for High Park, who follows diligently his responsibility in looking after such matters. I am sure that he will communicate with the company to tell them these thoughts—if they do not know them already—and I hope the company will come forward and say, "Yes, we voluntarily believe that what the Prime Minister says should occur, what the Minister of Trade and Commerce thinks should occur with respect to good Canadian corporate citizenship, and what the President of the Privy Council says should occur, will occur, and we shall become a Canadian owned company."

An hon. Member: Seven o'clock.

Mr. Howard: May I call it seven o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour for consideration of private members business has expired. The house will resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

TREASURY BOARD

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $4,478,700.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The house in committee of supply, estimates of the Treasury Board for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968.

[English]

Mr. Winch: Supporting the amendment which is now before us in connection with these estimates, I should like to add an additional reason for believing that something is wrong and that the minister, the department and the government should be condemned rather than commended.

I make reference to what in my belief is the failure of the government to enforce its own regulations with respect to the terms of employment of civil servants. Information coming to my attention leads me to believe that the government is gypping its own employees—that in many cases it is not paying them for the work they are doing.

I should like to remind the minister of the actual wording of the government's own regulations with respect to the remuneration of employees:

Acting Pay

38. (1) Subject to these Regulations, acting pay shall be paid to an employee from the date on which he is required to perform the duties of the higher position than the one held by him.

(2) Except where the Commission otherwise authorizes, acting pay shall not be paid to an employee for a period in excess of twelve continuous months.

39. Acting pay shall not be paid to an employee who is required to perform the duties of a higher position than the one held by him for a period of less than two months.

40. (1) Where an employee is required to perform the duties of a higher position than the one held by him, he shall be paid acting pay

(a) if there is a scale of rates of pay for the higher position, in accordance with the provisions of section 22 as if he had been appointed to that position; and

(b) if there is no scale of rates of pay for the higher position, at the rate of pay for that position.

That is the actual wording of the regulations with respect to acting pay in the case of federal civil servants. Mr. Chairman, I have received complaint after complaint from members of the civil service that these regulations are not being carried out. Apparently if one is in the higher echelons employed in a supervisory capacity, and if one has to do the work of someone in a higher grade there is no difficulty whatsoever about getting acting pay, but if one happens to belong to a lower echelon—then just try and get it!

The delays go on and on forever. I was told as recently as last week by civil servants in both Montreal and in Ottawa that these people are kept waiting until either they drop their demands because they are fed up or else leave the job. These people tell me it is not only a question of gypping some of the employees—the practice is actually fraudulent; the government is defrauding its own workers by withholding their legitimate pay. I have personal knowledge of civil servants who have worked for more than a year in a higher grade without being paid the increased amounts to which they were entitled. I have in my possession statements signed by their superiors to the effect that they were doing good work and doing it in a responsible way. Yet when they asked for acting pay, they were refused.

I have seen some of the letters sent out by the deputy ministers and I maintain that these letters are full of evasion, endeavouring to circumvent the wording of the regulations and consequently cheating civil servants of their proper rate of pay. I think this is a disgraceful and disgusting situation. I can call attention to statements in my possession in which supervisors say, for example, "This man performs work over his grade in a satisfactory manner and his knowledge is presently sufficient for this type of work."

Again, I have statements such as the following: "Since this assessor works on the same types of files as a grade 3 assessor with satisfactory result, he is entitled to grade 3 pay." But the employee concerned does not get it—and he has been on this job for more than a year.

I saw a letter from the deputy minister about a week ago. I have read it and re-read it. It is nothing more or less than evasion, and I sincerely hope something will be done about this situation. Anyway, since our civil servants are receiving treatment of this kind from the minister, from the government and from the departmental heads I think there is an additional reason for voting non-confidence on this estimate.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I shall probably disagree with my colleague and hon. friend, the mover of the subamendment, for a reason which I should like to explain as briefly as possible.

Day after day in this house, I hear honourable members ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) or the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) for salary increases; others ask for the financing of the Dosco deficits, so that a few hundred or thousand people are not put out of work; I hear other members ask the government to take over a shipyard in order to keep in operation a concern which seems to have a deficit; others beg the government to prevent the Canadian National from laying off some employees because the railway wants to proceed with automation, to renovate its operations in order to do away with deficits.

I hear hon. members ask for higher pensions and generous scholarships; others complain that not enough money is allocated for research; some want protection along waterways; others anxiously await medicare; still others say that Expo has resulted in a large deficit and that centennial celebrations have cost a lot of money. All these hon. members would like to get subsidies for their ridings. Meanwhile, at another moment of the debate or at another time of day, I hear from all corners of the house members blame the government for the rising cost of living and the continuous tax increases and say that it is the fault of the government for allowing taxes to increase.

Hearing all those demands, Mr. Chairman, I conclude there is something wrong somewhere and that if we do not want the cost of living and taxes to go up, something will have to hurt somewhere in the present context.

And when I hear the official opposition chide the government for not fulfilling its duties towards the nation, I tell myself it is six of one and half a dozen of the other, because if the opposition were now in power, it would have to operate within the same financial system as the present government and it would have no more latitude.

Then, when there is talk of priorities, I feel that it is a matter of opinion, that if everyone continues to clamor for increases, as I mentioned earlier, everyone is going to pay for it; someone will have to foot the bill, because you cannot expect miracles.

We might do well to pause for a moment and to ask ourselves where such ever-increasing demands will lead us, while at the same time they cause some people to blame the government, rather illogically, with taxing away with one hand what it gives with the other, which cannot be avoided anyway. Whatever party is in power, I think this is unavoidable.

We might do well to remind ourselves that our national debt now stands at about $15,971 million, and this is our net debt; our gross debt totals about $26 billion, or something like that. This represents $792.22 per capita, not per family, in Canada. Another thing about which we should remind ourselves, this national debt—and I take my province as a typical case—plus the Quebec debt, which stands at $1,524,800,000, plus the total municipal debt, average out at this time to $2,062.83 per capita in Canada.

If we add to this private debts, that is, debts to banks, finance companies and other similar institutions, it would mean a further amount of $7,062,000,000, or approximately $353.10 per capita. Therefore, the total indebtedness of every Canadian would be $2,415.93. And then, I have omitted school debts, since I do not have those figures. I have not referred to mortgages either, because I did not have time to check the figures.

This means, therefore, if it is admitted for the purpose of this discussion that an average Canadian family comprises 4 persons, the father and mother and two children, that every Canadian family would be indebted for $9,663.72, and, with the interests added, that amount could be almost twice as high, at a conservative estimate, especially for long term commitments. This would represent, therefore, something like a $14,000 debt for every Canadian family.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are faced with a case where the question should be asked: Where are we going? How will all this end? Will we be able one fine day to pass the sponge and wipe out all these debts? We, who are responsible for the public weal, are we justified in continuing to ask the government for increases, benefits and subsidies without thinking that tax increases will be required? Or, Mr. Chairman, are we not faced with a drastic situation that will remind us once again that our financial system is becoming obsolete and that we will have to revise it? Please note that I am not trying to blame either the current government or the official opposition; I say that the two parties alternating at the helm are operating in the situation where they have little elbow room.

The question is probably more relevant than it might seem at first. Might it not be time to revise in depth our financial and fiscal systems? Like most of my colleagues, I read the vehement protests that came up after the Carter report suggesting a review of taxation which, in some quarters, was considered as rather socialistic. I do not say that I personally approve all the conclusions of the Carter report, but I wonder if its impact might not open the eyes of all Canadians to this situation which will shortly become a dead end, a catastrophe, if not a financial bankruptcy.

Once again, Mr Chairman, I wonder, and I have said this before, if it might not be time to call what I would refer to in a term applied in other areas, the Estates General of high finance in the country, to ask them to submit to self-reform before the demands rise, before protests become more and more vehement, in short, before the demonstrations become violent in many cases due to the problems facing the Canadian people in meeting the demands of a rising cost of living and the rising taxes. Precisely due to everyone's demands, I wonder if it is not time for the Estates General of high finance to meet, examine their own conscience and say: Together with the government, we will undertake a financial reform from which will possibly ensue a parallel tax reform in depth. Possibly, the government might have to go further and borrow some of the ideas of our friends in the New Democratic party who claim that certain high-yield enterprises should be controlled by the government to help lighten the tax load? In this, I will support them more easily than in their demands to cut the minister's salary.

When I heard that, I was tempted to suggest a double salary for the minister who so patiently listened to everything which was said to him this afternoon, but then he would have to pay too much income tax. I shall be satisfied to suggest a salary increase of $1 as a reward for his patience and his good spirits without too much of a burden in terms of income tax.

Mr. Chairman, we are all serious-minded people in this house and the situation is not going to be corrected by talking like Tories or Grits, with that kind of racing game in order to know who will be in power tomorrow, who will have succeeded in further demolishing the party in power, who will have improved the situation, who will have helped to correct it. It will not even be with those insulting criticisms against the government from some high finance leaders, when in fact they take part in the formulation of the financial policy and share in the responsibility of the situation for which they blame the government.

I say that we are bogged down. All those of goodwill will have to get together and have a close look at the whole financial or taxation system. They will have to decide once and for all to propose basic reforms, fundamental reforms. Conservatives and N.D.P. suggestions will have to be used, and perhaps some from the Créditistes also, as they are not all wrong. Above all, anyone who is entrusted with the common good, all of us here, we shall have to forget our political or electoral ambitions for a few days and decide that we shall get at the root of the problem.

Mr. Chairman, I merely want to recall this: shall we wait till there is a popular uprising to strike at the root of the evil? Let us remember that it is no use preaching to a hungry man. And we already have alarming omens of a revolt threatening every day to generalize, to be increasingly violent.

I think it is time for everyone to sit down and to examine one's conscience, and that will not be done merely by blaming the minister for an alleged carelessness. I for one say that the present minister, who is on the carpet this afternoon, does his utmost, as did his Conservative predecessors—perhaps I was not here to judge them but I was keeping a close watch on the business of the house. I think that all members of this house are men of goodwill who try to do their best, but have to operate within a system leaving them very little latitude.

And I have no desire to blame the minister; I feel inclined instead to extend to him my sympathy and my co-operation, as I would do if a Conservative minister were in his place tonight and would probably be doing his best too, in the circumstances, and would not feel inclined to say that it is because of his inefficiency that things are going wrong.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, in view of the criticism that was raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and others in respect of ministers not answering questions I deemed that before the taking of the vote I should get up and say something about the questions which have been raised during this far-ranging debate.

The amendment proposed, and which will not be passed, really has no effect at all on my salary. The hon. member I am sure knows this very well and realizes that the result of taking $17,000 from my estimates is that 170 salaries will have to be reduced by $100 or that I fire perhaps a janitor, an elevator operator or a couple of secretaries, or something like that.

An hon. Member: That is eyewash.

Mr. Benson: The hon. member for Carleton spoke this afternoon about priorities and asked what are the government's priorities? Since we became the government we have instituted a system involving a five year forecast under which all departments are now submitting their objectives five years in advance. Let me assure the hon. member that when it becomes necessary or when we deem it necessary or in the interests of the country to limit expenditures, this is not done in a haphazard method. I am sure he knows that, having had vast experience on the Treasury Board. What is done is that the proposed expenditures of each department are considered carefully and only selected items of the various departments are removed or revised. This government has decided that it will not have the fiscal mess the Tories had in 1962. It is our responsibility to make sure that the fiscal and monetary policies of this country are handled reasonably and well and we are facing up to those responsibilities.

An hon. Member: When are you going to start?

Mr. Benson: Indeed, in 1963-64 after huge deficits under the previous Tory government we almost balanced the budget. In 1967-68 in the face of what looked to be a possibility of increasing unemployment in the country and a decrease in the expansion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: Everybody across the hall—across the chamber from me—warned us about unemployment more than six months ago.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a great deal of—

Mr. Woolliams: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: Tell the minister to sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Bow River is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Woolliams: I can be very brief, Mr. Chairman. I should just like to remind the minister that he is not speaking in a hall, and we are not all Liberals on this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, if I may continue, this afternoon we heard a great many recommendations from across the hall, but not one except the one from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who is very responsible, included a suggestion as to how to reduce expenditures. He suggested that we take $40 million out of contingency vote number 5. That might be a good idea, but parliament has already granted us $26 million of that amount. He did not bring that to the attention of hon. members.

Mr. Churchill: Have you spent it already?

Mr. Benson: The contingency fund is cleared out at the end of each year by the repayment from other funds, and as everyone here knows, the only charges to that vote last year, except for some $800, were charges for salary and wage provisions, and additional establishments.

I should like to know from hon. members opposite what they would like us to cut. Would they like us to take away increases to old age pensions, which they suggested should be based on a flat rate of $25 a month?

Mr. Lambert: Be honest. That is not a budgetary item.

Mr. Benson: Would they like us to—

Mr. Ricard: It is up to you to determine your priorities.

Mr. Benson: Would they like us to take away the Canada Assistance Plan? Would they like us to take away supplementary payments on old age pensions? Would they like us not to proceed with medicare—and I believe there are many over there who would want us to do that.

Some hon. Members: That's right.

Mr. Benson: Would they like us not to contribute to the provinces the 50 per cent of the operating costs of post-secondary education, which we have taken on? Would they like us to cut off funds to the Atlantic Development Board, simply because they never provided them in the past?

An hon. Member: Hogwash. You are not telling the truth.

Mr. Benson: Do hon. members opposite want us to abolish the retraining program which we have expanded greatly this year at a cost of some $135 million? Do they want us to abolish youth allowances to boys and girls aged 16 and 17 who are continuing in high school?

An hon. Member: We want to abolish you.

Mr. Benson: Do they want us to stop putting funds into ARDA, which we have done to a much greater extent than they ever did?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: Do they want us to stop our aid to industry, which is vital if this country is going to expand.

Some hon. Members: Nonsense.

Mr. Benson: Do they want us to cut back on C.M.H.C. loans—and this is not a budgetary item, but in respect of which hon. members opposite mentioned boastfully this afternoon they had only $100 million in loans some years ago? We have put over $600 million of government money into loans this year for housing alone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: Be honest.

Mr. Benson: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, they would like us to decrease the subsidies to milk producers, which we gave last year after urging from the other side?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why members opposite are so upset. They asked me to reply to their questions, and I am attempting to do just that.

Mr. Lambert: Why not answer them honestly?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, there were a number of references from the opposite side of the house this afternoon to vote 5, and claims about its misuse. Vote 5 was used once last year to meet salaries and wages of civil servants. It was proposed by the hon. member for Carleton, and I agree with him, that civil servants should not be subjected to blackmail. I agree; but I also believe that the employees of contractors, who cannot be paid when the opposition attempts to blackmail the government, should also receive sympathy from the members of this house.

I can assure hon. members opposite that it would not have been necessary to use vote 5, although we did have legal opinion that this was quite proper, if hon. members opposite last fall had not been trying to blackmail the government at a time when they had something going on down at the Chateau Laurier.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Now, Mr. Chairman, there really were not a great many other items raised this evening, except the one raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in respect of which he says he has based his amendment on the matter of pensions for retired civil servants. Members of the house know my position on this matter. They also know the position of the government at the present time is that this is a matter which is receiving consideration by the government. It is a government responsibility and an announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Churchill: You said that last night.

An hon. Member: For the fiftieth time.

Another hon. Member: Give him a hankerchief.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I think I have referred to all the questions that were asked this afternoon. Indeed there were not very many questions asked. There were a lot of very general statements made this afternoon about monetary and fiscal responsibility, and references to other things such as no forward planning, and so on. I believe that if members would look back at the speech I made during the budget debate they will find exactly what we are doing with regard to forward planning. I see no reason to repeat that speech at this particular time.

In conclusion I should simply like to thank the hon. member for Trois-Rivières for suggesting that my salary be increased by one dollar. Indeed, I would not mind having my salary cut by one dollar.

An hon. Member: Oh, how generous.

Mr. Benson: The motion before the house, however, really has nothing whatsoever to do with my salary. It is simply a motion which expresses the dissatisfaction of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with regard to the government's handling of the suggestion from the committee that pensions for retired civil servants be increased. He is perfectly within his right to put forward this kind of motion. I trust the house will make its decision on it.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to participate in this debate on the estimates of the Treasury Board this afternoon and this evening, until I heard this very political speech of the minister. It reminded me of the first budget of the hon. member for Davenport, and the time the Secretary of State, the ex-minister of national health and welfare, introduced the first attempt at the Canada Pension Plan. There was nothing but politics at that time. I should like to say that there is only one thing which matters in respect of this particular situation; that is, the complete incompetence and irresponsibility of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: The government has failed completely in its responsibility to the Canadian people. On June 1 last the Minister of Finance introduced a budget. At that time we told him he was facing a difficult situation so far as Canada was concerned. This situation has steadily developed along the lines we predicted at that time. Although he should have, the minister did not take our advice. He was told what we faced—inflation, a higher cost of living, and all these things with which the Canadian taxpayer is so concerned.

Today we are facing another mini-budget of some kind. As the hon. member for Carleton said, we have had three in less than a year, and this one undoubtedly will increase taxes. I am concerned tonight for Canada. These people across the aisle are not doing what they should be doing. They should be paying attention at this time to the estimates for the year 1967-68 and not for the year 1968-69, which they are only playing around with in cabinet. The Minister of Public Works last night suggested they are dropping a certain amount. How much is it? It is in this evening's Ottawa Journal. I will not take the time to look it up, but the amount I believe is many millions of dollars. He said they would cut off the construction of the garage underneath the hill. This is a presumed expenditure for 1968-69. We do not know what in the world it is all about. He said they would take tenders in November, and that there would not be any money spent on this until next year. There is nothing in this year's estimates.

Mr. McIlraith: The one dollar item was taken out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, it was not in the original estimates.

The Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps members of the committee will give the Chairman an opportunity to hear what is being said.

Mr. Monteith: One dollar in the supplementary estimates was taken out. What ridiculous nonsense; subterfuge and camouflage is all it is.

Mr. Chairman, as I said at the beginning, I had not intended to participate in this debate, but the sham which has been going on across the aisle in this chamber has got my goat; I can't take it. I refuse to accept the sham that is being thrown out by this government, when members of the government are trying to indicate that they are making savings to the credit of the Canadian people. If they want to talk about the 1968-69 estimates, then I say to them: Bring them out; tell us what you are reducing and from what figure. As the hon. member for Carleton said this afternoon, this is something which has been done throughout history; the original estimates are presented to the Treasury Board and they are pruned. Of course they are. As a member of the Treasury Board I know all about this. I should say, as an ex-member of the Treasury Board—excuse me. I would not want to be a member of this Treasury Board.

I shall say nothing more other than this: The government has been trying to bamboozle the Canadian people. The members of the government have been trying to indicate that they are making great savings. Not one saving has been indicated against the 1967-68 estimates. I want to see where they are making savings. It is just subterfuge on their part when they attempt to suggest they are making savings against the 1968-69 estimates. This is nothing but the greatest sham the Canadian people have ever had to face.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the minister. Will he take action to see that the civil servants are paid according to the work they are doing.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I must apologize for not having dealt with this particular question. I have not had any particular instances brought to my attention by the hon. member. I can assure him that if he will bring these instances to my personal attention I will see that every single instance he brings up is looked into.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, would the minister answer a question. The minister stated—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether members of the house are asking for a speech or a question. I will restrict myself to a question. The minister told us that he has already made use of $26 million out of the contingency fund. Would he indicate for what purposes that money has been used.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I did not say I had made use of $26 million. I said that parliament had voted in interim supply $26 million of the $40 million amount.

Mr. Churchill: I have a supplementary question then. Why did the minister ask for a portion of that money in interim supply if he was not going to make use of it? What has happened to the $26 million?

Mr. Benson: I have here seven pages listing the amounts that have been used out of the contingency vote. When the estimates were granted they were repaid out of the estimates approved by the house.

Mr. Churchill: This is a double shuffle.

Mr. Monteith: In other words the minister used it at random.

Mr. Benson: Pardon me. The seven pages of items are from the 1966-67 estimates. As my hon. friend and those opposite who have been in the Treasury Board in the past know, the standard procedure is that items such as payments of $400,000 to milk producers in 1966-67 were financed out of the contingency vote and repaid when parliament approved the estimates. I would be very pleased to go over the whole list or to provide it to anyone who would want to read the 1966-67 items paid out of the contingency vote.

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, if the President of the Treasury Board would undertake as soon as Mr. Speaker is in the chair to ask leave to table this document, so that it would be available to all of us, it would be acceptable to us.

Mr. Benson: I would be very pleased to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Here is the Chinese war lord.

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: They are like crows on a fence, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

In other parts we call them the yapping jackals.

Perhaps the minister may be able to explain where reductions have been made in the increased costs. Yesterday a return was filed to a question that I had put on June 23 last which was formulated in the same way as a question which I had filed in February, and on which the return had been made on March 1. My question was as follows;

> As of June 15, 1967, how many persons in the employ of (a) the public service of Canada (b) the armed services (c) crown corporations or agencies, were being paid salary or pay and allowances, or emoluments in the following categories (i) $18,000-$20,000 per annum (ii) $20,000-$25,000 per annum (iii) $25,000-$35,000 per annum (iv) $35,000 and up per annum?

The answer is very illuminating. In the year 1966 there was a total of 1576 persons in that over-all category who were being paid $18,000 or more per year. In the public service category there were 522 at $18,000 or more; 397 at $20,000 to $25,000; 67 in excess of $25,000 and 23 in excess of $35,000. The armed services had 159 persons at $18,000 or more; 50 at $20,000 to $25,000; 12 at $25,000 to $35,000.

In the crown corporations there were 195 persons at $18,000; 116 at $20,000 to $25,000; 28 at $25,000 to $35,000; and 7 earning in excess of $35,000.

To that was attached a rider that Air Canada, the C.N.R., the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation and the Polymer Corporation advise that it has not been considered in the best interests of their respective corporations to disclose data on employees' earnings other than what is available through the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Now comes the answer which was furnished to me on Monday last. May I point out that the total has jumped from 1576 to 2218 in the period of nine months.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: There is a 40 per cent increase.

Mr. Lambert: According to my calculations this is just in excess of a 40 per cent increase in the total number of people in the $18,000 a year category, and over. I am sure this is recorded in yesterday's Hansard but for the purpose of this record I will repeat it today. The answer to my question was as follows with respect to the Public Service: (i) 922; (ii) 576; (iii) 33; (iv) nil. I do not know what has happened in the interval to the 23 who last October were getting over $35,000. The Secretary of State will have to explain how that discrepancy has arisen.

In the armed services we have the following figures: (i) 157; (ii) 53; (iii) 10; (iv) nil. As a matter of fact there has been a slight diminution in numbers in the armed services.

In the crown corporations we have the following figures: (i) 274; (ii) 162; (iii) 32; (iv) 9. I agree that as regards the crown corporations these are not budgetary items but I suggest that all of the others are. Possibly there may be a slight exception where a statutory salary is paid, but most of the salaries are fixed by order in council or at the senior level of the public service. We must consider this answer in the light of the continued refusal to consider the retired civil servants, who have not had an adjustment since 1958, some of them not at all because they did not qualify for the revision at that time. I think the minister was patently dishonest with the house in that he was speaking about non-budgetary items, while we have been talking about budgetary items.

I also wish to refer to the Minister of Public Works. Last night no indication was given of the fate of the items that appear for the Ottawa area or in fact anywhere else that are listed in the estimates for this year. We are not speaking about next year's estimates. It has been repeated almost ad nauseam that it would be possible to work out a system whereby $3 billion could be cut from the estimates for next year. All one would have to do is to indicate to the departments that they bring in everything they have, and then these excessive proposals would be trimmed. This is a simple exercise. The frequent references in the press to the amounts that are cut back in the estimates are pure fluff and propaganda of the worst kind. What is interesting to Canadians as a whole is what the government is doing with this year's expenses, and what it is doing to encourage the provinces to cut back. For instance we want to know from the Minister of National Health and Welfare or from the Minister of Finance what has happened to the Health Resources Fund, the $500 million which was a condition prerequisite to medicare. Everybody had been complaining that there was a shortage of doctors and nurses. The government's answer was to propose the granting of $500 million over a period of, I believe, 15 years to the provinces and universities for the provision of medical facilities.

What has happened? Today the provinces are cutting back on precisely these items. In my home city of Edmonton there was an $88 million medical centre proposed, for the purpose of medicare as it now exists in Alberta. Capital construction programs had been forecast for the universities in Calgary and Edmonton for the next five years at a cost of over $300 million. The province has told the three unversities at Lethbridge, Calgary and Edmonton they will have to get along with $175 million among the three of them. The minister of health for the province has announced the indefinite deferment of most of the medical centre. Alberta is not an isolated case.

What happens now as a result of the deferment of these medical facilities, which are a condition prerequisite to medicare? Are we going to go on blindly, notwithstanding, and institute medicare? I think that would be the height of folly. Until we are ready to institute medicare on a proper basis, it would be better to carry on with the schemes that are in existence in the majority of the provinces. The provincial governments are coping with the facilities they have and doing the best job they can within their resources. In my opinion, this is an absolute must at this time; otherwise we can say to the government what the financial writers have been warning the government for some time. If the Minister of Finance and his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, are unable to hear those warnings the crisis or storm which will occur will make the 1962 crisis appear to be a soft, gentle breeze.

Mr. Gordon: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: The President of the Privy Council dismisses this as airy, fairy stuff. I suggest to him that he should read what many financial authorities are saying. Their knowledge of finance is as great as, if not greater than his. These are the points I wanted to make with regard to the minister's speech.

Mr. Benson: I am sorry, but my hon. friend apparently wants me to hear complaints and not answer questions. I could not gather the exact implication of his reference to civil service salaries. I was wondering if he meant that civil servants were overpaid.

Mr. Ricard: Oh, you are a smart aleck.

Mr. Benson: I certainly don't think they are. I believe civil servants are reasonably well paid, and I think we should continue to be reasonable employers. I believe also the hon. member will find that the number of persons in the income categories he talked about, as compared with private industry, is much lower proportionately than is the case in private industry.

Then he mentioned the statutory items. The statutory items are in the blue book and form part of the budget, but we cannot cut them. The total expenditures include the statutory items.

Mr. Lambert: I am sure the minister did not want to impute a wrong motive to me. What I was talking about was the grossly overswollen numbers in the public service.

Mr. Knowles: Just before the vote is taken, if it is about to be taken, Mr. Chairman, may I say a further word. In the closing remarks of the speech the President of the Treasury Board made a short while ago he correctly described my amendment. The amount of the reduction suggested in the amendment happens to be the amount of his salary and car allowance as a member of the cabinet, not counting his indemnity and the allowance he gets as a member of parliament. The purpose of the amendment, as confirmed by the President of the Treasury Board, is to express the dissatisfaction of the House of Commons over the way in which the President of the Treasury Board and the government have handled a very important matter.

[Mr. Lambert.]

I take issue with him, however, when he refers to that important matter as merely a suggestion made by a committee. Yes, it was a suggestion made by a committee, Mr. Chairman; but to call it only a suggestion is an indication of the failure of the government to take it seriously. As the hon. member for Ottawa East, who I hope is with us on this issue, will confirm, this was a positive recommendation made unanimously by a joint committee representing all parties in this house and representing both houses of parliament.

The committee itself was given the subject by the House of Commons on a motion made by the government. The government took seven months to make the decision to present the motion for the whole question to be referred to that committee, from June, 1966 to January, 1967. The committee considered this matter in all its implications. There were witnesses representing the retired civil servants, the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. There were government people heard. We went into the whole question of the state of the superannuation fund, the cost, and all the rest of it. We considered all the possible ways of dealing with the matter. We came up with a unanimous recommendation which was presented to this House of Commons on the morning of Monday, May 8. That day the President of the Treasury Board said the matter would be given active consideration. Every week, and in fact sometimes two or three times a week, from May 8 until July 7, the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister assured us the matter was receiving active consideration.

I have quotations here on my desk, including most of my questions and the answers I received, but I shall not take the time to read them into the record. The Prime Minister said several times that he hoped a decision would be made shortly. When we rose on July 7 and had to leave the matter over until the fall, we were assured that the matter would be dealt with when we met in September. Here we are in the fifth or sixth week of the fall session and the President of the Treasury Board asks us to accept his assurance that the matter will be dealt with in due course.

This is not good enough. Therefore, I hope the committee will support my amendment, and in so doing will register its dissatisfaction over the way in which the government has handled this important matter. If this vote says anything, I hope it will say to the government, in the name of the people for whom we speak, that we want action on this issue. I hope we will have the support of all those who are concerned about this issue, and in particular the support of members such as the hon. member for Ottawa West, the hon. member for Ottawa East, the hon. member for Russell, and others who are aware of the seriousness of the problem. I commend this amendment to the support of the committee.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Knowles) negatived: Yeas, 76; nays, 87.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Item agreed to.

Government administration—

5. Contingencies—Subject to the approval of the treasury board, to supplement other votes for pay-list and other requirements and to provide for miscellaneous minor and unforeseen expenses not otherwise provided for including awards under the Public Servants Inventions Act, and authority to re-use any sums allotted for non-paylist requirements and re-paid to this appropriation from other appropriations, $45,000,000.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in view of what I have said previously I now move:

That item No. 5 of the estimates of the Treasury Board be reduced by the sum of $40 million.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Lambert) negatived: Yeas, 73; nays 88.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall vote 5 carry?

Mr. Monteith: Just one point, Mr. Chairman. I know that this afternoon the minister was trying to explain to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre why in the 1967-68 estimates the expenditure for the previous year was $29 million, plus, whereas actually $110 million was voted. I am a very humble chartered accountant, as is the minister, and I am wondering whether he could explain this in simple terms so that I can understand it.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the amount that appeared in the original estimates is the amount shown in the blue book. Vote No. 5, which used to be vote 15, is added to each time there is the necessity to make a salary revision or retroactive pay increase. During the year these came to a total of $96,187,420. Establishment additions and underestimates came to $10,039,250, giving a total of $106,-226,670. Each amount was included in the supplementary estimates, which accumulated to the total of $110 million. Allotted, and remaining a charge under this vote other than salaries, was only $808, and there were lapses of $3,772,502.

Mr. Monteith: Am I right in suggesting, then, that the $29 million was something that was not picked up from other departments by reason of supplementary estimates?

Mr. Benson: What happened was that the vote started out at $29 million. Then as we moved along it was added to by way of supplementary estimates as necessary in order to cover items that had not been reimbursed at that point through supplementary estimates. I have a list that I will table when we move out of committee, and I will table the list at the very first opportunity.

At the end of the year all items except the item of $808 and the salary adjustments had been repaid to the vote after approval by the house in the estimates.

Mr. Monteith: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to hold up the committee, but I wonder whether the minister would sit down with me some time and kindly explain the whole situation.

Mr. Benson: My hon. friend is an accountant, and I am too, so we speak the same language. I would be very pleased to do that.

The Chairman: Shall vote 5 carry?

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Item agreed to.

6b. To provide that where a person referred to in subsection (3) of section 4 of the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1966, has made an election referred to therein before the expiration of six months after the coming into force of this provision, such election shall be deemed to have been made within the time prescribed therefor by section 4 of the Public Service Superannuation Act, $1.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is another of those $1 items. Perhaps the minister would explain why the government is using this highly unsatisfactory device instead of following the suggestions which have been made with respect to a statute law amendment act?

Mr. Benson: I also believe that in due course we might consider the Statute Law Amendment Act with respect to such items. This item is to take care of a particular difficulty which, as my hon. friend knows, often arises under the superannuation account. There are some $1 items with respect to it from year to year. This is done to assist those who are unfairly treated in the superannuation law, because of some technicality. At some time in the future some amendments under a Statute Law Amendment Act might take care of this.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Who are those who are being unsatisfactorily treated, and who require this $1 item to take care of them? I do not like to see such problems arising after the amendments made as recently as the last session of parliament.

Mr. Benson: I have not the details of the particular item here, but I shall be pleased to get them and let my hon. friend know what is involved.

Mr. Fulton: Can the minister tell me whether this item will cover those who were supposed to make an election with respect to special benefits? I am talking of a provision that is available to ex-members of the armed forces who have the insurance provision available to them, who joined the civil service and then, after leaving the civil service, were required to make an election within one month. Some of them failed to do so. Will they be covered by this provision?

Mr. Benson: If my hon. friend will wait for a moment I shall try to answer that question.

Mr. Churchill: Why not let that stand and take up item 10?

Mr. Benson: Could we let this item stand, and go on with item 10?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): While the minister is getting the answer to the point that has just been raised will he look at another point and perhaps deal with both at the same time? The item I refer to is the one immediately following item 10. It is also a $1 item and was put in, in order to deem "the expression 'regulations made under...the Public Service Superannuation Act' ". This includes certain regulations under the Financial Administration Act. Why, when we legislate by a $1 item, is it necessary to have in the estimates a situation whereby you take out of the estimates something. It may sound confusing, but does this mean that we no longer "deem". Why does this item arise. What is the reason for it?

Mr. Benson: Perhaps I can first answer the question about vote 6. It involves persons who did not get enough time to elect for civilian war service under existing legislation.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My only point is that we legislate by a $1 in one year; then we come along and, as it were, unlegislate by a $1 item. This is getting to the height of ridiculousness.

Mr. Churchill: This is the only reduction in the estimates for 1967-68.

The Chairman: Shall item 6(b) carry?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. I asked a question. I agree with my colleague for Carleton thoroughly that legislating by $1 items in the estimates is bad practice, and sloppy. It shows that the government has not anticipated those things it ought to have anticipated. Nevertheless, we are asked to legislate by this $1 item.

We are being asked:

> To provide that where a person referred to in subsection (3) of section 4 of the Statute Law—

And this item refers to the Superannuation Act:

> —has made an election referred to therein before the expiration of six months after the coming into force of this provision, such election shall be deemed to have been made within the time prescribed therefor by section 4 of the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Obviously, this provision is designed to ensure that those who have not made an election within the time prescribed by the Superannuation Act, will, if they make an election within six months of the coming into force of this provision, be deemed to have made the election in time.

It so happens that recently several cases have come to my attention involving ex-members of the armed forces. They were entitled to what is known as special death benefits by way of an insurance policy which is made available to the government through the veterans legislation. If such persons join the public service the premiums of that insurance policy, as I understand it, are paid by having deductions made from their salaries as public servants. If they retire from the public service—and I am afraid I do not know the details—there is some provision that they must make an election in order that their premiums may continue to be deducted from the pension they receive. They have to make that election within 30 days of their retirement from the public service.

I have been informed of instances, and I am told that there are other instances, where persons retiring from the public service did not have this provision drawn to their attention. They assumed that automatically they would be restored to their former status and that the deduction would be made from their pension. They now find that, not having signed the form to make an election to be restored to their former status, their right to the special death benefit is being questioned. I wish to know whether the provision we are now being asked to legislate in this manner will apply to those former members of the armed forces who, being entitled to special death benefits, after joining the civil service and retiring from the civil service and not having elected within the time prescribed, are to have the provisions made available to them which appear to be available to ordinary members of the civil service.

Mr. Benson: This provision is not to cover the circumstances referred to by my hon. friend. This extension is to deal with persons who did not get enough time to elect for civilian war service, and is with respect to superannuation accounts. I shall be pleased to look into the situation my hon. friend has referred to, which is a different situation, and we shall see what if any action is justified.

With regard to the other item which was raised, the question was asked with respect to delegislating, as it were, with a $1 item in the estimates. We are not doing that. The $1 item is being shown in the 1966-67 column to record the amounts voted for that year. The $1 item was, in fact, voted for 1966-67 and no corresponding authority is required for 1967-68 since the 1966-67 authority continues into 1967-68. This item is put in for purposes of comparison only.

Mr. Monteith: On a point of order, I take exception to the wasting of the time of this committee while the minister waits for information from the gallery in answer to some of the questions which have been directed to him.

An hon. Member: Cheap.

Mr. Monteith: The minister cannot, of course, be expected to know all the answers and no one has suggested he should. But it used to be the case that a minister piloting his estimates through the committee had his officials before him and answers could be given much more rapidly. I object to the fact that we are wasting the time of the committee purely to satisfy the ego of ministers who imagine they can get their estimates through without any help.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Item agreed to.

10. Government's share of surgical-medical insurance premiums and government's contributions to pension plans and death benefit plans for employees engaged locally outside Canada who are excluded from the Public Service Superannuation Act, to the unemployment insurance fund in respect of government employees paid through the central pay office and to the hospital insurance (outside Canada) plan, $16,980,000.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Before the final item carries may I direct a question to the minister and ask him as simply as possible whether there will be any reduction of any kind in any item of these present estimates? Will the appropriation bill which is to come before us on Thursday night be in the exact amount of the estimates which are before the house, or will there be any of these reductions about which there have been leaks to newspapers to the extent of $125 million or $200 million? If there are to be any such reductions, where will they appear? Will the minister say whether there are or are not such reductions? Will he, on this final estimate of the Treasury Board, take this committee fully into his confidence?

Mr. Benson: We have made it perfectly clear that we are dealing with the 1968-69 estimates in relation to items which are presently being reviewed. We have made it clear on every occasion—

An hon. Member: Except to the press.

Mr. Benson: —and also to the press that we are now working on the 1968-69 estimates. The Minister of Finance has said he feels that the budget of this year was quite appropriate in the circumstances of this year, and this is still our position. The estimates which will be approved tomorrow night or Thursday night, I believe, will be the estimates which have been passed by the house, including the supplementary estimates. If, due to a reduction of programs which would come into effect before the end of this fiscal year, and which would be in March, there is any lessening of the amount, this will of course be reflected in lapses in the estimates.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The minister has now made it evident that there is no attempt on the part of the government to effect any savings with respect to the estimates for the current year—they are to be exactly what they were, and all these stories which were linked with the press, and which appeared in the newspapers about savings of $175 million and $200 million in the current year are total eyewash.

Some hon. Members: Hear hear.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege; no one to my knowledge has ever said that $175 million a year or anything else would be saved in the current year. It has always been clear to everyone involved that we were dealing with next year's estimates.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We are talking about an entirely different situation. The figures which have been mentioned were in relation to the current year.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): All right. Now the minister is telling us that the government is attempting only to cut off $175 million or $200 million next year. Is that right?

Mr. Benson: No, that is not correct. The amount is much greater than $175 million. We started off with cuts amounting to over $600 million in proposed expenditures for next year. That was the first round. The second round of cuts is now in progress.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There. The type of eyewash, the type of propaganda which this government has fed to the newspapers, is now totally exposed. What they have been leaking to the newspapers is that in the current year there were cuts amounting to $175 million or $200 million. They were suggesting that in the next year the amount would be $750 million or $825 million. Figures for next year are totally meaningless because any cut mentioned would represent a reduction from a figure which was nothing more than the original spending proposals of the departments. The fact is, the minister has now made it abundantly clear that the government has no plan for saving and that it will merely carry on a propaganda war.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order: What is abundantly clear is that hon. members opposite have been sitting here and voting without understanding what is going on in the committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board, now that my hon. friend from Carleton has smoked him out with regard to these so-called savings in expenditures, to tell us by what amount next year's estimates exceed this year's.

Mr. Benson: The Minister of Finance has said that in the next fiscal year we should balance our budget on a national accounts basis. He knows that the deficit for this year was estimated as some $740 million. He also knows that the deficit on an ordinary accounting basis will be between $200 million and $300 million if accounts are to be balanced on a national accounts basis.

Mr. Fulton: That does not answer the question. We are being told the government is pruning $750 million or perhaps $825 million off the estimates, which we now find are next year's proposed estimates. What I want to know is the amount by which the proposed estimates for next year exceed the actual estimates for this year. I expect they exceed this year's figures by probably $1.5 billion, so a cut of $825 million will still leave us with a substantial increase in government spending next year as compared with this year. I ask the minister to open up this subject. Let him tell us what was the increase in next year's proposed estimates as compared with this year's estimates.

Mr. Benson: The hon. member will have to wait until he sees next year's estimates, which we shall table in the house in due course as we are required to do when the amount of the estimates is finally determined.

Mr. Fulton: I do not propose to wait until the minister tables them next year. This afternoon—and I suggest it was a breach of the Privy Council oath—the Minister of Public Works made a statement that an item included in next year's estimates had been eliminated. Admittedly, it was not very large—it was a $1 estimate, not in itself a very great saving and a long way from $825 million. Now the President of the Treasury Board has referred to next year's estimates and the subject is before us for discussion. We do not propose to carry this year's estimates until he tells us by how much the proposed estimates presented to him exceed the total of this year's estimates, and thus determine the extent of the bluff attached to the so-called savings drive by this government.

An hon. Member: Silence.

Mr. Fulton: I think the President of the Treasury Board forgets that the government is accountable to the House of Commons and to the committee of supply and that he is required to answer questions put by the committee before his estimates can be carried.

Mr. Benson: I am quite willing to answer any questions on the estimates which are before the committee, the 1967 estimates. I am not prepared to answer questions on estimates which have not been presented to the house.

Mr. Fulton: In view of this unprecedented refusal to answer questions—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: —with respect to matters which the minister himself has brought into discussion, I move that the committee do rise and report progress.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Order, please. May I have the motion in writing? During discussion of vote 10 of the estimates of the Treasury Board, Mr. Fulton moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said motion?

Motion (Mr. Fulton) negatived: Yeas, 32; Nays, 89.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, the only reason I rise is to raise a point of order. One of the members who took part in this debate not too long ago contravened his oath in committee, another committee of the house.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Webb: It is shame on the part of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra who took part a few minutes ago in this debate and I do not think he should have been recognized by the Chair or by the house.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Order, please. This completes the estimates of Treasury Board. The committee will now take up the estimates of the Department of Agriculture for the final year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 1 will be found on page 8 of the blue book, and the details on page 11.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the Canadian agricultural services co-ordinating committee, contributions to the Commonwealth agricultural bureaux, and a contribution to the agricultural economics research council in an amount equal to one-half the contributions to the council from other sources during the fiscal year but not exceeding $50,000, $6,652,800.

The Chairman: Shall Vote No. 1 carry?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, no doubt it will be a pleasant change for the committee to move from the vitriolic fields of the Privy Council to the gentle, bucolic glades of agriculture.

Rather than take the time of the committee at the present time with a detailed review of the specific items in the estimates I feel it might be useful to spend a few moments reviewing very briefly some aspects of the situation in Canadian agriculture. The timing is particularly appropriate in that we now have available some of the data collected by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in the 1966 census.

To me it is of particular interest to note the adjustments that have taken place and are taking place in Canadian agriculture, adjustments which will produce in Canada a more viable and effective agriculture and which should do much to correct the difficulties that have plagued not only Canadian agriculture but agriculture pretty well all over the world in the past few years. I think the generic problem of agriculture in the past few years has been the trend to larger units, the urban trend, the movement of population from the land to urban municipalities. This results not only from new opportunities in urban centres but from the new efficiencies in agriculture which enable a far higher rate of production than was possible in the past and which render a need for fewer people in agriculture than used to be the case in the past.

It is worthy of note that during the five years from 1961 to 1966 Canadian agricultural production has risen very significantly. Returns to farmers have moved upwards and this has all been accomplished with no significant increase of land under production, although there has been a spectacular increase in recent years in the percentage of improved land making up the total land area in Canada's farms.

Cash income from the sale of farm produce in the year 1961 totalled $2.89 billion. In 1966 the figure stood at $4.23 billion, a growth of 46 per cent.

In the same time total net income, that is, realized gross earnings minus operating and depreciation charges and adjustments for the value of inventory changes, rose from $935 million to $1,978 million, a growth of 112 per cent. But perhaps the most outstanding feature of these changes has been that these increases in farm income have been brought about by growth in productivity and efficiency on the part of Canadian farmers. This is well demonstrated by the fact that in 1961 the Canadian consumer spent 23.8 per cent of his or her income on the purchase of food, while in 1966 this dropped to 21.9 per cent, one of the lowest levels of all the countries of the world.

How was this accomplished? As I mentioned earlier, one important factor is the continued adjustment by the farmer himself. While I think it is true that from time to time there has been consumer unrest, when they have complained regarding the increasing cost of food, in fairness to the farm community it should be pointed out, as I have tried to point out today, that the Canadian wage earner is spending a smaller and smaller percentage of his income on food. This can be attributed to the efficiency and greater productivity of the farmer. Surely the Canadian consumer cannot expect to find higher and higher wages in the marketplaces where he or she labours, and at the same time not expect that the farmer should have a commensurately increasing income for his efforts.

Looking first at average farm size, in 1961 the average Canadian farm consisted of 359 acres. By 1966 this had risen by 13 per cent to 404 acres. While the figures vary greatly from area to area, with farms in Saskatchewan averaging 763 acres, all areas showed distinct growth in farm size.

In respect of livestock and poultry products, specialization has continued to be the order of the day. For example the average number of hogs on farms has risen almost 50 per cent in 5 years from 24 head to 35 head. In respect of dairy cattle a like trend is indicated. While adjustments were slower a 20 per cent increase in average herd size was experienced during the period 1961 to 1966.

The importance of this adjustment in livestock production units can best be realized when one notes that returns from livestock make up about 55 per cent of the farm cash income that Canadian farmers received in 1966. Beef production continues to grow in importance, with the percentage of farm cash income from livestock and livestock products attributable to the beef enterprise rising in the past ten years from 28 per cent to 38 per cent.

Although as a result of climatic conditions wheat production has fluctuated, and 1967 represented a downward fluctuation, without exception the agricultural community has been astounded by the actual crops grown. This would not have been the case were it not for the changed technology, the improvements that farmers have wrought and the results of research. Normally western farmers can expect 9 to 12 inches of rainfall during the growing season. This year in Alberta and Manitoba this was down 31 per cent and 27 per cent respectively below normal. Saskatchewan received an average of only 4.55 inches which is 50 per cent below normal. This was lower than our traditionally bad year of 1937 when an average of 5.8 inches of rain fell in Saskatchewan from April to September. That year Saskatchewan farmers produced only 36 million bushels of wheat at 2.6 bushels per acre. This year the average for this big wheat province is forecast at 15.8 bushels per acre.

These adjustments and the technological changes have been assisted by government policies, in part through the operations of the Farm Credit Corporation. In view of some comment the other day in this house I should like to point out that last year Canadian farmers grew the biggest wheat crop in history. While they and they alone can claim the credit for that magnificent production, I suggest that government policy and the general burgeoning of the economy of the country have brought about some effect, and certainly contributed to the farmers' confidence in growing that size of crop.

Also last year the largest wheat crop in Canadian history was sold. Certainly in the past few years the order of the day has been not only for more and more production but greater sales of wheat. When we think of the past I think the largest sale was one of 340 million bushels. Last year we were playing an entirely new game in sales when they exceeded 500 million bushels on the export markets.

Hon. gentlemen opposite were most concerned last year about the price of wheat.

An hon. Member: We still are.

Mr. Greene: Since this government took office the price has been higher than it has ever been, and certainly higher than it was during the administration of hon. members opposite. This year hon. members opposite were concerned about the sales of wheat. I suggest that they should whistle both tunes at the same time, or stop whistling from one side of their mouths on one occasion and from the other side on another.

Very clearly the farmers are not only concerned with price but also with volume sales. Certainly it would be of little benefit to western farmers to have a very high price if that high price pushed them out of the world markets. For those of us who have the responsibility of government and for sales on behalf of the western farmer, our aim must ever be to achieve the best possible price consonant with the maximum volume of sales. That has been this government's policy.

Hon. gentlemen opposite made some suggestions the other day in respect of the Kennedy round and the world wheat agreement. There was criticism of the officials attending the Kennedy round and an implication was made by one hon. member to the effect that a satisfactory agreement had not been arranged. There was also the suggestion that the prior world wheat agreement should have been renewed, rather than negotiating a new wheat agreement under the aegis of the Kennedy round. If the prior world wheat agreement had been renewed there would have been a 21 cent loss in minimum payments to the Canadian farmer. If that is the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, they have changed their minds since last year when they were advocating higher prices. Since hon. gentlemen opposite sometimes express the view that they are the only ones who are in any way concerned with the welfare of the western farmer, let me point out that for all their protestations, during their tenure in office they never did see fit to guarantee payments to the western wheat farmer at the minimum new world wheat price, as this government has done.

An hon. Member: We never had to do that.

Mr. Greene: I might also point out that the agreement has been made at $1.95½ a bushel, not $1.64 a bushel which was the minimum during the tenure of office of hon. gentlemen opposite. Even at $1.64 the government of that day was not prepared to guarantee the minimum payment to the western farmer.

A comparison of data with data from previous census figures gives some concept of the range and pace of the changes taking place in agriculture. The most remarkable feature is the increasing rate of adjustment toward larger farm businesses. For example the exceptional increases can be seen in the number of farms with sales over $15,000. As we can see, these have more than doubled in number in the ten years from 1951 to 1961. This number has more than doubled again in the five years from 1961 to 1966. This is not only a credit to the ingenuity and efficiency of the Canadian farmer, but in some way it must be concerned with the general prosperity and well-being of the country. Surely that had something to do with making this possible within the last five years.

The number of farms with sales between $10,000 and $15,000 has followed a similar pattern. It is also significant, although the total number of farms continues to decline, that all classes of farms with sales of $5,000 or more have increased substantially and the numbers in all classes below this level have decreased. The 1951 census showed over 85 per cent of all farms with sales of less than $5,000. Only 55.2 per cent were in these classes in 1966, the greatest decline being those farms with the lowest level of sales. In numbers of farms, 21.2 thousand had sales of $10,000 in 1951, while 95,000 farms were in this category in 1966.

There are, of course, a great many factors involved in these changes but there is little doubt that the availability of capital on appropriate terms has greatly assisted these improvements in the structure of agriculture. Without indulging in complacency, we have good reason to believe that the operations of the Farm Credit Corporation have been a strong influence in encouraging—and more importantly—facilitating these necessary changes. Without detracting from the essential contributions of improved crop varieties and livestock, better machinery and technology or the improving managerial ability of farmers, the advantages of any of these can only be fully realized if there is capital available so they can be combined into efficiently organized farm businesses.

In this connection it is of interest to note that in the fiscal year 1961-62 the Farm Credit Corporation made a total of just under 6,000 loans in an amount of about $69 million. In 1966, doubtless due to the increased awareness of farmers as to the need for and validity of the utilization of technological advances, the loans had risen to over 12,000, with $248 million being involved—in five years a doubling of the number of loans and an increase to the extent of three and a half times in the amount loaned.

While most of the gains that farmers have experienced in total returns over the past several years have been the result of increased productivity and increased efficiency for many items, prices have shown some upward movement. Perhaps the one that is most in the limelight at the present time, and perhaps the one that is most often quoted because of its implications in terms of overseas trade, is the wheat price. In the five crop years 1962-63 to 1966-67 the average price of No. 1 Northern wheat in store at the lakehead ranged from a low of $1.96⅛ to a high of $2.12 per bushel. During the five previous years, 1957-58 to 1961-62 the range of the annual average was from $1.62⅜ per bushel to a maximum of $1.89⅞.

At the same time the returns to dairy farmers have not stood still. While it is true that part of this has resulted from increased levels of subsidization, it is also true that the basic price received from the marketplace has shown some significant growth. Over all, the increase has been large—currently $4.75 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk f.o.b. factory, less whatever portion of the 11 cent holdback will be used for export assistance, as compared with $3 or less a few short years ago.

Other areas in which significant governmental steps have been taken with a view to stabilizing and strengthening farm income have been an improved support program for sugar beets, a diversion program for surplus potatoes and a supplementary purchase program for shell eggs.

Farmers across Canada have made increasing use of the crop insurance program, government assistance for which was significantly amended upwards, effective this year. In 1961 only some 3,800 farmers paid policies with a face value of $7 million. In 1966, the last year for which complete data is available, some 24,500 farmers obtained protection valued at $52 million under this program.

By all this I would not wish to imply that either I or my department is satisfied with the current position of the farmer. It is evident that in these booming times many sectors of agricultural production have been left behind. Earlier today I met with representatives of farm organizations whom I had called together along with representatives of the indsutry, and the provinces, to discuss with them the future of the Canadian dairy industry and the policies and programs best suited to the development of a dairy industry designed to meet Canada's and the dairy farmers' needs. I may say that there appears to be little difference of view as to where the Canadian dairy industry should be going and what its ultimate destiny should be, but the major problem with which we must grapple is how quickly we can move toward the structure that all believe is needed. Some steps were taken in the implementation of the dairy policy for this year, and we must continue our movement toward the rationalization of this most important segment of Canadian agriculture.

I am sure that this group working with the various segments of the industry—producer, processor, agri-business—will bring into focus the goals and aims toward which we must strive and against which we must measure and align policies in the years to come, whether this be federal, provincial, farm or industry. In the development of this task force and in the discussions that have preceded its formation I have been most heartened by the degree of co-operation that I have received from provinces and all portions of agriculture. I am most hopeful that the discussions and dialogue that will flow from the work and consultations of the task force will be of continuing benefit, will be a focus that will bring together Canadian agriculture to meet its common goals, and will be of assistance in respect of the policy of the government toward greater efficiency, greater productivity and a better income picture through the entire ambit of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader whether there has been any change in the program he announced last night?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker; the program is the same as outlined last night. I should like, however, to fill in the department which we propose to call on Thursday, which is the Department of Finance. It, when completed, will be followed by the Department of Justice.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—TORONTO—COMPENSATION IN URBAN REDEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, a short while ago I asked the following question which was recorded in Hansard of September 25:

> My question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Labour. Have the Minister of Labour and the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approved the formula of compensation devised by the city of Toronto and approved by the provincial authorities for home owners whose homes were expropriated in what is known as the Donmount urban renewal area in Toronto?

The reason for that question was that the commissioner for development in the city of Toronto had devised a complicated formula for additional compensation to owners in the Donmount urban renewal area and had received provincial consent for this formula for which he was now awaiting federal consent. What has happened in the meantime is that on the advice of a city solicitor it has been determined that under the law this formula could not be used in determining the compensation, and that the home owners are bound by the provisions of the expropriation procedures act, which is an Ontario statute.

The reason for my concern is that Donmount is one of the many urban renewal areas across the country which has had to deal with the major problem of compensation to home owners. This problem in the designated areas has arisen because of certain confusion among the city officials in determining due compensation. The owners in these urban renewal areas have found that when they received compensation for the homes they own and have then gone out to the marketplace to find another home they were paying from 15 to 25 per cent more for an equivalent home in another area of the city. Many of them have had to assume larger mortgages than existed on their former homes and have had to pay larger mortgage payments, which include the high interest rates that people have to pay for homes in Canada today.

Of course the people most seriously hurt have been old age pensioners and people on fixed incomes who had no intention of moving and were satisfied to remain in the area for the rest of their lives, but have found themselves forced to move, have received low payments for their homes, and then had to pay high prices for homes in other areas, at the same time having to make payments from incomes on which they could get along quite well in their former homes.

As a result a great public clamour arose not only from the owners in the urban renewal scheme but from the public at large.

As a result, the principle of a home for a home has emerged. This has caused a great deal of concern to city officials, and it needs clarification because many people thought that the term "value to the owner" only meant the market value, and many people were led to believe by city officials and others that this was the basis of compensation for these people.

The principle has been expressly set forth in the Exchequer Court of Canada in the decision on the National Capital Commission v. Millen. There are five main principles with regard to due compensation which must be taken into account. First is the acquiring of equivalent premises, which is why the slogan "a home for a home" has achieved such prominence today; second, the payment for temporary accommodation and storage of furniture during the period involved while finding equivalent premises; third, the payment of moving expenses and fourth, the payment for the almost certain impossibility of utilizing the furnishings which had been acquired for the expropriated property. Then, fifth, and this is the important part, Mr. Speaker, compensation should be paid for personal inconvenience if people have had to acquire this new property, for miscellaneous expenses and for the general destruction of family life incidental to moving a family from one neighbourhood to another.

The question arises, Mr. Speaker, just what is the government doing to give leadership to the implementation of these principles with regard to compensation in connection with these urban renewal schemes? Thus far the onus has fallen on city officials, and there have been occasions when city officials have asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) what principles apply with regard to compensation for these people. The general disruption theory and the theory of a home for a home have not been clarified by the Minister of Labour. I ask the minister just what leadership he has given in connection with this problem of deciding the proper principles for compensation for homes in these renewal scheme areas, so that the schemes may move forward without prejudice or financial injury to the owners, and at the same time ease the housing crisis somewhat?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) primarily asked a question, but naturally he took advantage of the seven minutes to insinuate there had been a lack of leadership on the part of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) in this whole field. This is rather unfair, since I have only three minutes to answer these insinuations, but I suppose the hon. member would be mainly interested in my answer to the main question.

The formula for compensation that will apply to the urban renewal program has been approved by the Minister of Labour. The hon. member shakes his head, but until I am notified otherwise I take it as a fact. I checked this aspect at six o'clock in anticipation of the question, and I was a little perplexed, in view of the answer, as to why the question was still on the late show. I was assured by the department that the answer was, yes.

The question of lack of leadership which the hon. member infers may be more a question of ignorance on the part of provincial and civic authorities, not only in Toronto but across Canada, in not being aware of the legislation available to them. I wonder whether, under his definition of leadership, we are obliged to take the civic authorities by the nose and acquaint them with a law of which their own legal departments should be well aware.

The original formula, which my friend has failed to point out, was unsatisfactory to the people affected. I agree that the principle of market value is not good enough. Some compensation must be paid for disruption, and a home for a home is a fair exchange. If, as a result of inflation or any other factors, the compensation paid is not sufficient to permit a person to acquire another home, then additional compensation should be paid to these people. Certain people in Toronto took such strong objection to the original compensation that they fought the battle for additional funds.

I must remind the hon. member that if the original formula was unsatisfactory it was not the fault of the federal government. We agreed to absorb 50 per cent of the compensation paid. The formula was designed by the provincial and civic authorities, and we had no jurisdiction over it. Provincial law was to establish what the compensation should be and we agreed to go along with it. We waited until the new formula was introduced, and we readily agreed to the new formula and to the additional compensation to which the hon. member has alluded.

I apologize if he has not been notified directly that this additional compensation has been approved by the federal government. Again I assure the hon. member I am giving him the information I received as late as six o'clock. I suggest to him that this is not a question of lack of leadership, perhaps, so much as a lack of understanding of the legislation that is available to civic and provincial authorities. They should take a second look at it and check on what does exist.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—VIET NAM—REACTION TO U.S. OFFER TO CEASE FIRE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on October 12, 1967, as reported at page 3012 of Hansard, I asked this question:

> In view of the minister's statements yesterday and today in reference to the government's position, does the minister take the position that if they do not come to the negotiating table the United States should withdraw from Vie Nam?

Then the Speaker said the question was somewhat argumentative, through an almost identical question was then asked and answered. With respect, any question asked by the opposition that has any potential political sensitivity or that seeks to find out information where a government stands in reference to any domestic or international problem can be categorized as argumentative. I feel that we have been prevented from getting information from a government which refuses informative answers. To say the least, they are evasive. Gag the opposition and no real information will be forthcoming.

To come to the subject, every Canadian, in particular all members of parliament, desires peace with all his heart, and abhors war and all the barbarism that it encompasses, and I firmly believe that so do all Americans. However, world power is in a far different position than a country which has not that status. Difference of opinion on this matter arises as to the method to be used to achieve peace and security in this world. Sir Winston Churchill once said the devastating atomic weapons themselves are the greatest deterrent against war. World war II brought war to the civilian women and children. Those who have seen evidence of attack by bombing are always reminded of the words "man's inhumanity to humanity".

Does the minister believe that the United States of America should not have become embroiled or entangled in Viet Nam? Does he believe if the bombing stopped Ho Chi Minh would come to the peace conference table? Does the minister believe that if Ho Chi Minh fails to come to that conference table the United States would get out of Viet Nam? Does the minister agree with Prime Minister Wilson's position in reference to Viet Nam? Do Australia, Japan and other SEATO treaty members agree with the minister's position? If not, why not? Will Ho Chi Minh come to the peace table if the United States agrees again to the cessation of bombing?

It must not be forgotten in considering all these difficult questions—and I do not know the answers—that in January-February of 1966 the United States did cease bombing for 37 days. And did not Ho Chi Minh and the Viet Cong build up their forces in consequence and infiltrate the South Vietnamese area? Were there not five pauses by the United States in bombing over a period of two years and eight months?

But have not the United States and the U.S.S.R. some common ground in that both believe in some form of containment policy in reference to China? Surely Canada's interest must always be for permanent peace, and international affairs must transcend narrow political partisanship. In considering these questions, may I quote from a statement made by the secretary of state of the United States on October 12, 1967. This is what he said on that occasion, and I am sure these words are well known to the minister:

> President Johnson has emphasized, time and time again, his interest in a prompt and peaceful settlement of the present struggles in Southeast Asia. Just two weeks ago, in San Antonio, he said:
> "The United States is willing to stop all aerial and naval bombardment of North Viet Nam when this will lead promptly to productive discussions. We, of course, assume that while discussions proceed, North Viet Nam would not take advantage of the bombing cessation or limitation."
> Can there be a more reasonable proposal? Is there anything unfair about such a simple proposition? Is it not clear that if Hanoi is interested in peace it could say "yes" publicly or privately to the President's offer?
> A rejection, or a refusal even to discuss such a formula for peace, requires that we face some sober conclusions. It would mean that Hanoi has not abandoned its effort to seize South Viet Nam by force. It would give reality and credibility to captured documents which describe a "fight and negotiate" strategy by Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese forces. It would reflect a view in Hanoi that they can gamble upon the character of the American people and of our allies in the Pacific.

I know the minister will agree with me when I say that the United States, which is our neighbour, is a world leader. It is the leader of the western world, and that country is in a difficult position. But I felt that I asked a reasonable question.

The minister was complimented for taking a firm position. He left the quiet diplomacy about which the Prime Minister and he himself boasted, and took a position against the United States at a very sensitive time. I should like to know what the answers are. Where does the government stand? If Hanoi would not come to the conference table previously when the United States ceased bombing, what evidence has the minister tonight that Hanoi would come to the peace table if the United States stopped bombing now?

Has the United States now taken a hard position, with respect to trade, against Canada? These matters are all interlinked. I also wish to know the minister's position so far as the Prime Minister of Great Britain is concerned?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in three minutes it will not be possible to answer all questions which have been asked but I should like to answer the essential question which was asked of me the other day and again tonight.

I have made it clear on a number of recent occasions that there is no absolute guarantee that a suspension of the bombing will necessarily and immediately bring about a beginning of talks leading to peace in Viet Nam.

What seems to me to be very clear, and what I am convinced of, is that talks of any kind cannot get started unless the bombing is stopped. If it is stopped I believe that an entirely new situation will then exist in which considerable pressure can be brought to bear on North Viet Nam to enter into peace talks. A situation in which the bombing is no longer being carried out would force the North Vietnamese to react, especially since they and their closest friends have placed such overwhelming emphasis on this point. If this point were met, I should think that a number of countries which have particularly close relations with North Viet Nam would use their influence constructively and in the interests of peace.

I think it can be assumed, too, that Canada and other countries like Denmark, Norway and Sweden which have spoken out as Canada and other like minded countries have, would appeal urgently to Hanoi to seize the opportunity opened by the suspension of bombing to meet for talks. An inflexible position on the part of North Viet Nam, and an adamant refusal on their part to show a willingness to break out of the prevailing tragic and destructive impasse would, I think, place a serious responsibility on them for the war's continuation.

If however they did not respond in the way world opinion would urge them to do, I admit that the resulting situation would be serious. As I have said before, it could run the risk of reversion to exclusively military measures of perhaps a more powerful kind and, in this sense, I recognize that there is a calculated risk. If it fails—and in all realism I think it is only right to keep this possibility in mind—there will be new problems and new anxieties to deal with, but it would be impossible to forecast what precise possibilities would then be open to countries which have consistently tried to help to foster the beginning of negotiations.

As I said to the external affairs committee last week, any foreign minister and any government can shape a country's foreign policy only in the light of the actual circumstances before them at the time. In the hypothetical case under consideration this might well include some new factors; much would depend on what had happened in the period immediately following the suspension of the bombing.

POLLUTION—POSSIBLE HEALTH HAZARD FROM FERTILIZER PLANT AT DUNNVILLE, ONTARIO

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity given to me tonight to pursue the question I raised a few days ago in the house about the important issue of air pollution in the Port Maitland-Dunnville area of southwestern Ontario.

The crux of my question the other day was to find out whether the federal government through its responsible officials is investigating the reports of alleged harmful effects to man, livestock and vegetation attributed to fluoride fumes which have been emitted from a chemical fertilizer in the Port Maitland-Dunnville area.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

• (10:20 p.m.)

Serious accusations, charges and counter charges have produced alarm and confusion among the people concerned. It has been reported in the press that the damaging effects of fluoride in the atmosphere over the Port Maitland and Dunnville area were known to the responsible provincial authorities as early as 1963.

It is also known that under an arbitration decision taken last year, the chemical fertilizer plant in the Port Maitland area was ordered to compensate the local farmers for livestock and plant diseases caused by fluoride fumes. Recently local farmers have made serious complaints about damage to human health.

A lung specialist from Detroit has been reported as saying that fluoride fumes are poisoning farmers, cattle and crops. I am interested in finding out tonight whether federal officials are investigating the charges and claims made by the affected parties in the Dunnville area; whether any federal assistance in this matter has been offered or requested; whether any federal monitoring centre has been established in this area and whether any air sampling from the Dunnville area has been studied by federal technicians. We want to know what specific steps have been taken.

I would like to encourage the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) to be bold, innovating, and reformist in the fight against air pollution.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): On behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I wish to express thanks to the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) for bringing this matter to the attention of the house this evening.

I am sure we all appreciate the seriousness of the problems that air and water pollution pose not only for Canada but for almost every country in the world. Air pollution is now a common problem affecting cities in nearly every country of the world, and is the result of human failure to realize that the atmosphere has a limited capacity to receive the impurities we have poured, and still continue to pour, into it. Not long ago we talked of air pollution in terms only of smoke and grime of factories, steam locomotives, and dirt and stench from industrial processes. Even these we were inclined to tolerate as a sign of our prosperity. These still exist but there are additional sources of pollution resulting from the operation of motor vehicles and airplanes, which have appeared on the scene in great and increasing numbers to add substantially to the problem of air pollution.

As to the particular question brought up this evening by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), the emission of fluorides from chemical fertilizer plants, phosphate types, is a well known cause of air pollution problems. Typical effects of such emissions are burning of leaves on trees and vegetables, and bone damage to cattle. The main route of fluoride to the animals is by ingestion of grass which can accumulate large quantities of these compounds without being itself affected. Recent reports of the situation at Dunnville appear to be identical to others concerning cases which have been well documented elsewhere.

In Ontario emissions from such premises are covered by the Ontario clean air act. This is administered by the Ontario government, but the Department of National Health and Welfare would be prepared to assist by advice or active participation if requested by the province. However, to date the Department of National Health and Welfare has not been asked to intervene and it is assumed that the province of Ontario does not consider outside assistance to be needed.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

[The following items were passed in Committee of Supply this day:]

TREASURY BOARD

1, 5, 6b, 10.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 1, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

TABLING OF LETTERS TO PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I should like to table copies of letters dated October 24 that I have written to the provincial ministers of finance. I am tabling one copy of the letters in English and one copy in French of the letter to Mr. Dozois, the Quebec minister of finance.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this correspondence?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SHIPPING

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMISSION ON ST. LAWRENCE PORTS

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two copies in English and two in French of the report of the inquiry commission on the St. Lawrence ports. Hon. members will recall that this commission was established in June of last year to inquire into the size and make-up of work gangs employed in the three major St. Lawrence ports and at the same time to inquire into job security in these ports and related matters.

In tabling the report I should like to thank the commissioner, Dr. Laurent Picard, for the time and effort he put into this important work and more particularly for his patience in the conduct of the inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

LEGISLATIVE RESTRICTION ON IMPORTATION OF CERTAIN FOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-177, respecting the restriction on importation into Canada of certain commodities.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I enter this bill mainly on account of the many representations I have received from farm organizations associated with the products mentioned in the bill which were omitted in the previous bill, No. C-166, which I entered for first reading on October 16.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RESTORATION OF SAMBRO LIGHTSHIP, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 409—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the government received communications from residents of Nova Scotia calling for restoration of the Sambro lightship?

2. If so (a) have the communications been reviewed by the Department of Transport (b) what decision has been reached?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. (a) Yes. (b) Changes and improvements in aids to navigation in the Halifax area are under continuing review, but information gathered to date does not indicate necessity for reinstatement of lightship.

AIR CANADA FLIGHTS, MONTREAL-HALIFAX

Question No. 413—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is a reduction planned in the frequency of flights this fall and winter, by Air Canada, between Montreal and Halifax over last year?

2. If so, what is the extent of the proposed reduction and what are the reasons for such action?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

ROUTE SUBSIDIES TO AIR CARRIERS

Question No. 434—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Are there any air carriers receiving route subsidies or assistance to the route from the Air Transport Board at the present time?

Questions

2. If so, what are the names of the companies and in what amounts?

3. Were these subsidies or assistance to the route approved by a formal hearing before the board?

4. Are there any applications pending before the board at the moment and, if so, what are the names of the applicants and on what dates will hearings be held?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. Yes.

2. TransAir Limited, Winnipeg. Payments for the first half of 1967 are expected to amount to $151,000.

3. No.

4. An application by Eastern Provincial Airways (1963) Limited is pending. It is not intended to hold a formal hearing to deal with this application.

PUBLIC SERVANTS ON LEAVE TO LEARN LANGUAGES

Question No. 446—Mr. Goyer:

1. How many civil servants are now on leave with pay in order to learn the French or English language and what is the sum total of their salaries?

2. How many university graduates were hired by the various departments over the course of the last fiscal year?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission: 1. Civil servants learning the French or English language on a part time basis are expected to perform the duties of their positions and are therefore in no sense "on leave with pay". Those who are learning the French or English language on a full time basis are not expected to perform their regular duties. On October 11, 1967, the number participating on a full time basis for periods of three weeks, three months, or one year was 116, and the sum total of their monthly salaries was about $105,000.

2. The Public Service Commission maintains statistics only on the number of university graduates appointed as a result of the special university recruitment program designed to bring recent graduates into the service. The total number of these recruited in the last fiscal year was 646.

ABILITY OF AIRFIELDS TO ACCOMMODATE LARGE PLANES

Question No. 453—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the government, through any of its branches or agencies, conducting studies on the present capabilities of our large airfields to accommodate movement in the realm of supersonic and jumbo jet travel?

2. If so, have any early or interim conclusions been determined and what are they?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The Department of Transport is conducting studies on the capabilities of our major airports to accommodate the large capacity aircraft and supersonic aircraft. These studies involve numerous other agencies such as inspection services, (customs, immigration and health), community planners, as well as the air lines. The entire system is being examined in relation to this subject.

2. No interim conclusions have been determined as yet.

IMPROVED AIR TO GROUND RADIO FACILITIES FOR AIR LINE COMPANIES

Question No. 454—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the government, through the Department of Transport or any of its agencies, at present studying the need for more efficient air to ground radio facilities for use by our air line companies involved in trans ocean flights?

2. If so, in co-operation with what other countries are such studies being made and when might a conclusion be reached?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The efficiency of air to ground radio facilities is kept under continuous review by the Department of Transport in keeping with the state of the art.

2. Standards for air-ground communications in transocean flights are established through the International Civil Aviation Organization and involve co-operation with various countries on a regional and worldwide basis. Conclusions in respect of specific systems can be obtained from the various reports issued by the International Civil Aviation Organization headquarters in Montreal.

AIRPORT ASSISTANCE UNDER FEDERAL PROGRAM

Question No. 462—Mr. Brand:

1. Have requests for assistance under the federal airport program been deferred until April 1, 1969?

2. If so, what are the reasons for such deferral?

3. Will consideration be given to special circumstances such as the provision of landing strips for ambulance planes even if the answer to part 1 is in the affirmative?

4. Has an application for assistance under the above program, submitted by the village of Neilburg, Saskatchewan, been deferred by the Department of Transport and, if so, for what reasons?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No. The deferment is for an indefinite period.

2. The airport contribution vote is currently limited to one million dollars per annum for all such contributions throughout Canada and is already committed for at least a full year in advance. Therefore, in view of the large number of applications for airport assistance from all parts of Canada which have been received during the past two years, and of which many have yet to be submitted to necessary economic and technical studies, the department placed a temporary freeze on the assessment of applications, effective August 15, 1967.

3. The potential use by ambulance planes is one of a number of guide lines utilized in assessing an application for airport financial assistance, and consideration could be given if special circumstances, supported by federal or provincial health authorities, appeared to warrant such action in the light of funds available.

4. An application has not yet been received from the village of Neilburg, Saskatchewan. If one is received it would be noted for future consideration for the reasons explained in (2) above.

CONSTRUCTION OF C.B.C. HEADQUARTERS, MONTREAL

Question No. 489—Mr. Valade:

1. How far advanced is the work on Place Radio-Canada in Montreal?

2. When did construction begin and what type of work has been completed to date?

3. What contracts, if any, have been awarded to date and what is the amount of each?

4. When is construction to be completed?

[Translation]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Foundation excavation and piling is in progress and detailed working drawings for tendering purposes have been completed.

2. Excavation and piling commenced on October 1, 1966 and this work is scheduled for completion December 1, 1967.

3. One construction contract has been awarded for excavation and piling in the amount of $3,125,000.

4. The target date for completion is early 1972.

*PENSION TO FORMER JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

Question No. 548—Mr. Brand:

1. Is the former Justice Landreville receiving a pension and, if so, how much?

2. If not, was he granted any pension, compensation or ex gratia payment?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): 1. No.

2. No.

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and it is an important point of order which I wish to draw to the attention of the Prime Minister. Last week I asked the Prime Minister if he would prevail upon ministers to pay more attention to the written questions on the order paper and expedite the answers. At that time there were some 138 unanswered questions and today a week later, there are 144. I noticed that on Monday only 12 questions were answered and only 9 questions were answered today. The questions are piling up faster than the answers are being given.

It is true that some answers may be lengthy, but the answers to a great many of these questions could be given very expeditiously. I appeal again to the Prime Minister to ask the ministers to be more industrious in this connection so we can expedite the business of the house.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, is quite wrong. There are outstanding 133 questions, and 440 have been answered. There are 10 outstanding starred questions and 85 have been answered. A large number of these questions will take weeks to answer because of the way in which they have been asked and the information requested, and they will cost thousands of dollars to answer.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wants to rise on a question of privilege I should like to speak to the point of order and wonder whether much can be gained by pursuing the matter. However, if the hon. member wants to rise on a question of privilege I will recognize him.

Mr. Starr: My question of privilege is this. The Prime Minister is not giving an answer which helps in the programming, something the Prime Minister himself has advocated to expedite the business of this house. He is giving me the same answer that he gave last Wednesday.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I speak to the point of order. May I ask the Prime Minister or the house leader if they would look at question No. 131 which was placed on the order paper on May 26. It does not seem to call for a great deal of research, and I ask if that answer could not be expedited.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is one that I think could be answered.

Mr. Starr: And there are many others.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, motions for papers Nos. 25 and 27 are acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers and authorization by the governmental authorities concerned.

Would Your Honour be so kind as to call notice of motion No. 23?

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations that have been expressed by the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State, is it the pleasure of the house that notices of motion 25 and 27 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOME MAIL DELIVERY, PORT ALFRED AND BAGOTVILLE, QUE.

Motion No. 25—Mr. Grégoire:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all official correspondence between the Post Office Department and the municipalities of Bagotville and Port Alfred, and all correspondence relating to the introduction of home delivery service from the post offices of Port Alfred and Bagotville, commencing October 16, 1967.

Motion agreed to.

CONTROL OF POLLUTION, OTTAWA RIVER

Motion No. 27—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, memoranda or other documents exchanged since January 1, 1967, between the minister or any official of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the responsible ministers, boards, commissions or agencies of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec relating to a plan for the abatement and control of pollution in the Ottawa river.

[Mr. Starr.]

Motion agreed to.

TRANSFER OF FISHERIES STAFF, QUEBEC

Motion No. 23—Mr. Keays:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the personnel of the fisheries department in Quebec city and the minister or his departmental officials, concerning the transfer to the Quebec city office of a majority of the Gaspé staff.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): This notice of motion concerns correspondence exchanged within the department between departmental officials. It is not customary to table such correspondence. However, I am prepared to give confidentially to the hon. member all the information available regarding this problem.

Mr. Keays: With the assurance from the minister that he will give me as much information as possible, I am willing that the motion be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion dropped?

Mr. Keays: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion dropped.

FINANCE

TABLING OF NON-PAYLIST ITEMS IN CONTINGENCY VOTE

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the house would give unanimous consent to revert to motions I should like to table the non-paylist payments from vote 5 for the year 1966-67.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Do I understand that what the minister is tabling is the non-paylist payments only? I thought he was going to table everything under the contigency item.

Mr. Benson: Last night I agreed to table the non-paylist items. I think you will find the paylist items in my answers last night, as recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The language the minister used was "I will give everything, the whole list." I do not believe there was any qualification whatever upon it. What the minister seeks to table is not in accordance with what he said in the debate last night.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There should not be a debate. The minister is asking for leave to table certain documents and I have to ask whether the house gives leave.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to give leave and to ask my colleagues so to do, but I point out that this is not in accordance with the commitment that was made.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, if I made a commitment I would be glad to live up to that commitment. We on this side of the house always live up to our commitments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

TRADE

PROPOSED U.S. QUOTA RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the mounting pressure in the United States congress for import quotas to nullify Canada's freer access to the United States market due to Kennedy round tariff reductions, will the minister advise the United States government that Canada has no intention of lowering tariffs on United States products entering Canada from January 1 on unless we first receive a clear cut assurance from the United States government that import quotas will not be imposed against our products?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question that might more properly have been addressed to the Minister of Finance. However, I was in touch with Washington this morning and am therefore able to inform the house that I have had assurances from the United States, which as I say have been confirmed as recently as today, that the United States intends to implement its Kennedy round tariff concessions beginning January 1, 1968.

As regards the bills now before the United States congress for the imposition of import quotas, as the house is aware the Canadian government has indicated its serious concern in a note which I tabled in the house October 19. While not minimizing the nature of these pressures, we have received assurances from the highest levels in the United States government that the administration is doing and will continue to do everything possible to ensure that restrictive measures are not brought into effect.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of our unfortunate experiences in this regard when import quotas were imposed in the past, will the minister make sure that we receive a clear cut assurance that these import quotas will not be imposed?

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT GLUE SNIFFING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Solicitor General. In view of the growing incidence of glue sniffing and its serious effects on young people will the government give consideration to the introduction of amendments to the Criminal Code making glue sniffing an unlawful act, subject to control by law enforcement agencies?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this question I should first point out that the hon. member for Carleton also raised this question with me in a letter. I can advise the house that the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Justice and officials of my department are now giving this matter active consideration.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister ask his department to take whatever measures are necessary to regulate the use of the offending substance, toluene, in products that can be bought by young people and which are the cause of the serious problems being created by glue sniffing?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think a bill was introduced yesterday in the other place—if not it is proposed to introduce such a bill—dealing with the question of hazardous substances, and there is one provision in that bill that deals with the very point that has been raised by the hon. member. It will give us authority to prescribe the conditions of sale and method of advertising such substances that may be harmful.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering whether one of the ministers, be he the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General, would consider setting up a special committee now to review all the terms and conditions of the Criminal Code, since it is some years since it was last reviewed.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there will be an omnibus Criminal Code bill introduced at this session which will contain a great number of amendments. I suggest that to add to those at this time would perhaps delay its introduction. After this omnibus bill has been dealt with, through co-operation with hon. members perhaps we could as the next step follow the suggestion of the hon. member.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INQUIRY AS TO EXEMPTIONS GRANTED TO TRANSPORT INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. As we are approaching the end of the year will he inform the house what are the intentions of his department regarding the exemptions under the federal labour standards code granted to various branches of the transport industry? Will the exemptions that terminate in December of this year be extended?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether this question is of immediate urgency or whether the hon. member is seeking information which should be given by the minister on motions.

[Later:]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, considering the urgency because of the time involved and the complications in respect of the application, I wonder whether I might rephrase my question to the Minister of Labour and ask whether any application has been made to extend the exemptions granted to some parts of the transport industry in respect of the labour code, particularly the 40 hour week.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is a question, which in my opinion, should not be answered on the orders of the day. If it is placed on the order paper I shall be glad to supply the information requested.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PRESENTATION OF ADDITIONAL BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, asking whether he can now announce the date of a supplementary budget to effect a large reduction in the budgetary deficit, as suggested by the governor of the Bank of Canada in Winnipeg today.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously one of those "When did you stop beating your wife" questions. Let me inform the hon. member that no decision has been made and when one is made it will be announced.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that inflation is pushing up the price levels in Canada more than twice as fast as in the United States, with all the associated problems this creates, will the minister undertake to make a statement tomorrow when he introduces his estimates as to what fiscal, monetary or economic policies the government proposes to grapple with this problem?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. I expect that when my estimates are before the house tomorrow I shall be cross-examined and I shall do my best to answer all questions put to me. It is not my intention to make a definitive statement on this matter at that time.

Mr. Douglas: Is it the minister's intention to make a definitive statement to the house in the near future regarding this matter, which is causing widespread concern, particularly in the business community?

Mr. Sharp: As I have said on a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to do so.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WORKERS AFFECTED BY U.S. CUTS IN DEFENCE SHARING PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of his absence perhaps I could direct it to his parliamentary secretary, who was here a moment ago, or to whoever is acting for him, and ask him to take it as notice. Can the minister advise whether anything will be done for workers affected by widespread layoffs in industries as the result of cutbacks by the United States in defence sharing programs?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will bring this matter to the minister's attention for an early reply.

INDUSTRY

GEORGIAN BAY—CONSIDERATION UNDER DESIGNATED AREA PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that the removal of the southern Georgian bay region from the list of designated areas discriminates against the Owen Sound area, which now has close to 2,100 men and women seeking employment there, will he give consideration to restoring this region to the list of designated areas or to making special provision for the Owen Sound employment area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my impression that questions in respect of designated areas should not be accepted, as they have not been previously, and I think the hon. member might consider putting his question on the order paper. If there are special reasons for immediate debate on this question perhaps the hon. member would consider it appropriate to debate the question during the adjournment proceedings.

Mr. Noble: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

SYDNEY, N.S.—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN MAINTAINING OPERATION OF STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, asking whether he can now say that a decision has been reached by the federal government as to its participation in cost sharing with the government of Nova Scotia in order to keep the Sydney steel plant operating.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No final decision has been reached on this matter, Mr. Speaker, but discussions are still continuing on this matter of urgency.

Mr. Starr: Since no decision has been reached, may I ask whether this failure to reach a decision is the result of a split in the federal cabinet on this important matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think the supplementary question is acceptable.

Mr. Pearson: There is no substance to that story, I may say.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM SALE OF VICTORIA MACHINERY DEPOT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Winch (Vancouver East): It had been my wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration; in his absence I should like to direct it to the parliamentary secretary. Last Monday the minister said he would reply on Wednesday to a question I asked him regarding possible unemployment occasioned by the sale of the Victoria Machinery Depot to the Burrard Drydock Company. Since I was told I would receive an answer today, may I ask the parliamentary secretary if he is now in a position to report on the results of the inquiries the department has made.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I can only assure the hon. member that I will try to have an answer ready tomorrow.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Will the parliamentary secretary make efforts to assure us through his minister's answer tomorrow that the team employed by this firm which built the offshore drilling rig called "Sedco" will be maintained so we may be able to build another on the west coast?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SASKATOON—STATEMENT ON STATION CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to take this opportunity to answer a question asked several weeks ago by the hon. member for Saskatoon; I am glad to be in a position to answer his question now. Bearing in mind the fact that the Saskatoon area is already served by a C.B.C. affiliate, and having regard to our efforts to reduce public expenditures, the government has regretfully come to the conclusion that the establishment of a C.B.C. television station at Saskatoon at the present time cannot be approved. Action on the recommendation of the Board of Broadcast Governors, in its report, will therefore be deferred.

I should add that the government does not reject the recommendation of the Board of Broadcast Governors and continues to favour the establishment by the C.B.C. of television facilities in Saskatoon. We hope that, in due course, circumstances will permit the government to authorize the expenditures involved for this purpose.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): In the light of that statement by the Prime Minister may I ask the right hon. gentleman this question. Since the C.B.C. has now been hogtied by the government in this connection, would the Prime Minister consider allowing a private group to set up a television station in Saskatoon instead of the C.B.C.?

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. It relates to the announcement made today of the government's decision to defer the establishment of a C.B.C. station in Saskatoon. Would the Prime Minister tell us whether this decision reflected the advice he received through consultation with Premier Thatcher?

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA FOR PROPOSED CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I have a question for the Minister of Labour in his capacity as part time housing minister. In view of the mounting evidence of a continuing housing crisis, as shown by cases of family breakup due to inadequate accommodation, can the minister now tell us the agenda to be submitted to the important housing conference he intends to hold?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I think I stated earlier in the week that the agenda for the conference had not been settled. The Prime Minister has communicated with the premiers of the ten provinces. Their ideas have been invited and we are now working on the agenda, but it is likely to be at least another two or three weeks before it is finalized.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Scott (Danforth): In view of the differences which exist between the municipalities and the provincial governments about the nature of the housing shortage and its solution, is the minister considering any method by which the views of some of the larger cities and large urban areas might be ascertained?

Mr. Nicholson: Well, for one thing the union of mayors and reeves is presenting to the cabinet some ideas on the subject on Monday morning. Further action, if any, will, I imagine, depend on the nature of the discussions which take place next Monday.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister responsible for the housing corporation. I base my question on the fact that families are being separated because of the housing shortage. In order to help members of the house obtain information as to the psychological reasons that many money-lenders are not putting money into the mortgage market, can the minister say whether the standing committee on housing, urban development and public works will be reconvened soon?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the great majority of the premises included in the so-called question. It sounded to me more like a speech than a question. So far as I am concerned, if the committee wishes to meet to consider this matter there is no reason why it should not do so.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSIDERATION OF BUDGET RESOLUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the light of persistent reports that we are soon to face the semi-annual budget, would the minister prevail upon his colleagues so that we may deal now with the budget resolutions and the bills that follow, as shown in item 2 on the order paper, giving them priority over items such as No. 38? Otherwise we shall be caught up in the nonsense of having a new budget before dealing with the provisions of the previous budget.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this gives me an opportunity of adding a bit of information to that already before the house. It is my intention early next week to table the resolutions dealing with the implementation of the Kennedy round, which will also be placed before the ways and means committee as I indicated in my budget message in June. I have told the house leader that I am ready to proceed at any time with all the resolutions.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EQUIPPING OF MOTOR VEHICLES WITH EXHAUST CONTROLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in view of the speech made a few days ago in Toronto by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the information recently placed before the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I now ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he is in a position to report to the house his department's findings in relation to making exhaust control features for motor vehicles a national standard.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I attempted to give a résumé of the situation in the speech I made to the house a week ago Monday. The situation is that the control devices that have been developed are not fully effective even for the vehicles to which they may be attached. They are not applicable to the larger vehicles which are the greater sources of pollution. Of course it is desirable to use now whatever device is available that can reduce pollution to any extent, but we have to continue efforts in order to get a more effective device for multipurpose use.

Mr. Grafftey: Without being contentious, Mr. Speaker, I would simply ask this supplementary question. In view of the fact that the United States federal authority and the province of Ontario have already ordered these standards as the best we have, would the minister not consider ordering the installation of whatever devices we do have as soon as possible?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In so far as I am able to order any automobile manufacturer to instal these devices I will be quite happy to do so, but I understand that already automobile manufacturers are attaching and propose to attach these devices to automobiles.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of the announced decision of the government to defer establishing a C.B.C. station in Saskatoon—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a supplementary to a previous question. We are now dealing with a question raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi with reference to a matter on which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has made a statement. I believe the hon. member for New Westminster has a supplementary question on that subject.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister consider making an early statement as to the progress being made to implement the motor vehicle safety regulations which were announced a week or two ago?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be prepared to report to the house in due course. It will take some time for the department to determine which steps we should take, but I can assure my hon. friend that we are pursuing this matter with keen interest and vigour and I hope it will not be too long before we have something concrete to report to the house.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INCLUSION OF SAVINGS BOND ADVERTISEMENTS WITH PENSION CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have received several inquiries as to why the letters enclosing the monthly old age security payments also include pamphlets suggesting that the pensioners should purchase Canada savings bonds, and I think this matter should be explained in public. In view of the fact that many pensioners in receipt of old age security have to live on the pension, or little more, can the minister inform the house of the reason for this practice?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the practice of including advertisements for Canada savings bonds was begun in 1960, I think on the occasion of the massive conversion, and I believe the practice has been continued ever since. It is not suggested that all old age pensioners are in a position to buy Canada savings bonds, but a certain proportion of them may be in that position. The practice has continued since that time, and I intend to have it reviewed to see whether it ought to be continued.

UNITED NATIONS

RHODESIA—VOTE ON USE OF ARMS TO ENFORCE SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has a vote yet been taken at the United Nations, in the fourth committee, concerning the subject of Rhodesia? The debate concerns the use of armed force to enforce sanctions against Rhodesia. If a vote has not already been taken can the minister tell us what Canada's position is to be in the matter?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take my hon. friend's question as notice. His questions always deserve careful examination.

POLLUTION

TAX INCENTIVES TO PLANTS INSTALLING CORRECTIVE DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the galloping dangers from air pollution will the government immediately consider granting tax incentives to any plants that instal anti-air pollution devices, similar to what is done already with respect to water pollution?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to draw my hon. friend's suggestion to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED DISCOVERY OF ARMS ON ISRAELI SHIP IN CANADIAN PORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in a position to answer the question I asked on Monday regarding the report of arms being found on board an Israeli ship which called at the port of Pictou, Nova Scotia?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the facts of this situation are that late Friday afternoon officials of the government were advised by an anonymous telephone call that a number of small arms were included in the cargo of a vessel due to leave Pictou, Nova Scotia, that same afternoon. It is, of course, the government's policy not to permit the export of any military equipment to the Middle East area of tension. No export permits have been granted for the export of small arms to the area nor have there been any applications for such permits. This matter is being investigated, and if I have any further information for my hon. friend I will give it to him.

Mr. MacEwan: I take it that the ship was followed by two R.C.M.P. cutters but before it was overtaken it got into international waters. Is that correct?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I believe that is the case.

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR QUICKER ELIMINATION OF LEVEL CROSSINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Transport?

In view of the record number of accidents at grade crossings this year and also of the disquieting findings about the Dorion tragedy reported last night, have the minister and his department tried to convince the railway companies to build grade separations at grade crossings in order to prevent such tragedies in the future?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): As my hon. friend knows there is a continuing program to which the government and the parliament of Canada contribute very substantially. My hon. friend will be pleased to know that the number of level crossing accidents has dropped very substantially over the years. I believe this program should be accelerated. I think it is a matter of interest that the total amount available was not taken up last year due to the fact that the provinces and municipalities were not in a position, for one reason or another, to take up all the funds which were available. I can assure my hon. friend that I will press those concerned to continue with this very valuable program in a determination to reduce the number of accidents both on the highways and at level crossings.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO PROSPECTIVE PRICES FOR SEALSKINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Chatwood (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. I should like to ask him whether, as a result of the discussions the officials of his department had in Europe, he can now give an assurance that the sealers will be able to obtain a fair price for pelts during the coming season.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, it is true that sealskins presently are moving slowly and are being sold at reduced prices. In fact the area where there is the greatest difficulty in selling is in the disposition of white coats. While we expect the production of white coats to be reduced during the coming seal season, I cannot at this time give assurance that the damage done to this industry by exaggerated and distorted publicity will not have some adverse effect on the market in the months ahead.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

FEDERAL REPRESENTATION AT MEETING RESPECTING ATLANTIC REGION LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. As a new minister who is energetic and desirous of learning about the transportation problems of the maritimes, will the minister be attending the meeting to be held tomorrow night in Moncton concerning C.N.R. lay-offs and, if not, why not?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am interested. I try to be energetic and try to learn as quickly as I can, but I regret that I will not be able to attend the meeting tomorrow night.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, can the minister say whether any of his colleagues will be attending the meeting, since it seems to be an important one affecting the economy of the whole Atlantic region.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Westmorland and the hon. member for York South will be attending. I am not sure who else will be able to go, but I do know that the hon. member for Westmorland will acquit herself very ably.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does that mean that the hon. member for York South will be representing the government too?

Mr. Hellyer: It will depend a lot on what he says.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REPORTED LINK BETWEEN CONTRACEPTIVE PILL AND THROMBOSIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wish to bring to his attention a report by a very eminent English coroner to the effect that there is a direct link between the contraceptive pill and thrombosis which causes death.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ballard: When I hear the laughter I wonder whether the same people were laughing when the thalidomide pill was discussed in this house. With that preface I should like to ask the minister to inform the house whether officers of his department are investigating this report in an attempt to determine any detrimental or fatal effects of this pill.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to discuss the question with the officers of my department and report later to my hon. friend.

GRAIN

PROPOSED INCREASE IN AMOUNT AVAILABLE FOR CASH ADVANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which I believe involves a matter of urgency. In spite of the glowing report given by the minister last evening on the state of agriculture in Canada, in view of the dire cash shortage suffered by western farmers due to the loss of wheat markets would the minister give serious consideration to immediately amending the legislation on interest free cash advances on farm stored grain so that double the amount, namely $3,000, can be made available to our hard pressed farmers?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a speech rather than asking a question. I do not think it is acceptable in that form.

Mr. Southam: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say this is an urgent matter. I could put the question simply by asking—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member considers the matter to be urgent and wishes to have his question answered immediately, he should ask the question.

Mr. Southam: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he will make an announcement in respect of amendments to the cash advances legislation.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, at the moment I am not anticipating making any announcement.

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

An hon. Member: Does the minister not intend to make a statement?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for being desirous of hearing my remarks in respect of this legislation. As hon. members know, the bill before us today for second reading represents a further step in what I think can fairly be called a process of legislation by consensus.

In formulating this bill we have tried as far as possible to seek out the views of those most interested and involved in this complex business of broadcasting, and to take those views into account in drafting the precise provisions of this legislation. It has been a very lengthy process, but I submit a very worth-while one in arriving at the bill which is now before the house and which I truly believe incorporates the best judgment not just of the government and its officers but of numerous interested groups both within the industry and within this house. I am sure it is a better bill for the contributions of all these parties.

Our starting point, of course, was the report of the special committee on broadcasting headed by Mr. Robert M. Fowler of Montreal. This bill may differ in detail in a number of ways from the recommendations in the report of 1965, but it does draw much of its basic philosophy from the work of that committee. For this we are very much indebted to Mr. Fowler and to his fellow committee members, Mr. Marc Lalonde, now a member of the Prime Minister's staff, and Mr. G. G. E. Steele, under secretary of state.

I should like to express again my appreciation to the members of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts for their contribution to this consensus. In our discussions of parliamentary reform we hear considerable talk about the role of our committees and the potential which exists within them for constructive work on behalf of parliament as a whole. I think there can be no better example than that displayed by the broadcasting committee during its hearings last spring on the white paper on broadcasting. Because this was indeed a committee free of narrow partisanship, a committee which sought only to find through the experience of its many witnesses the best course for broadcasting in Canada, its report was particularly valuable to us. So I would like to compliment members on all sides of the house who contributed to the work of this committee and particularly those who headed it, the hon. members for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier) and Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) who were its first chairman and vice chairman, and the hon. members for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) and Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger) who succeeded them.

I should like to mention those who gave us very valuable advice before both the standing committee and the cabinet committee on broadcasting, the senior officers of the C.B.C., B.B.G., Canadian Association of Broadcasters and the Canadian Broadcasting League. These men are the experts and without their help during the formative period of this legislation it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to arrive at a bill which we can be certain is, in fact, workable.

From all these sources, and from the many other individuals and groups who have given us their views, we have arrived, as I have said, at a consensus, not on every detail of this lengthy and complex bill but a consensus certainly as to the main principles which should underlie it. Perhaps I might for a moment mention these agreed upon principles as a starting point and try to outline to the house how we have tried in this bill to carry each of them through to fulfillment. The report of the standing committee on broadcasting stated:

> Although the ultimate authority and responsibility of parliament is clear, it is equally clear that parliament cannot administer or supervise broadcasting. Nor do we believe a minister of the crown should have such power. A reconstituted B.B.G. should provide an assessment of our broadcasting system. In order to do so, it must have clearcut directives from parliament as to how it will be expected to act on parliament's behalf.

The bill accordingly sets out in clear language a broadcasting policy for Canada which includes, for the first time, a mandate for the national broadcasting service operated by the C.B.C. It should be clearly understood that this is a new technique in broadcasting policy. The mandate set out is more than a preamble; it is an integral part of the measure, expressing the intentions of parliament, and it will have all the force of law. Thus, the whole of the rest of the bill must be considered in the context of this declaration of policy. The objects of the regulatory authority, the proposed Canadian radio commission, will quite simply be to regulate and supervise all aspects of the Canadian broadcasting system with a view to implementing this policy. Similarly, the objects of the C.B.C. are to provide the national broadcasting service in accordance with the mandate which forms an integral part of that policy. Each of these two bodies can exercise its powers only in furtherance of the policies established by parliament.

The first of these policy principles is that the airwaves are public property and that the broadcasting undertakings using them constitute a single system. There is, I believe, generally widespread agreement that the regulation and supervision of the broadcasting system should be delegated to an independent regulatory authority, and that this body and its decisions should be as free as possible from partisan political influence and the pressures of vested interests. But the system as a whole, including both public and private elements, constitutes a public asset and it is clear, therefore, that the ultimate control of the system must rest with the government, since only the government is immediately—and I stress the word "immediately—answerable to parliament. It is for this reason that parliament is asked to reserve to the government of the day the power to give directions to the commission with regard to the number of channels or frequencies that may be used, and the reservation of channels or frequencies for the use of the C.B.C. or for special purposes such as educational broadcasting.

The standing committee has said "a distinctly Canadian broadcasting system is essential to our national identity, unity and vitality in our second century" and also that "in future, broadcasting may well be regarded as the central nervous system of Canadian nationhood." It follows that the system must be effectively under Canadian ownership and control. It is simple enough to say that a single person owning or controlling a broadcasting undertaking must be a Canadian citizen, but the problem becomes much more difficult when we attempt to arrive at a statutory definition of what is meant by the effective ownership or control of a corporation. In practice, it has been found in other contexts that a statutory definition invariably opens the door to evasion. Consequently, in order to retain flexibility, and as forecast in the white paper, parliament is now being asked to reserve to the government the power to give directions to the commission aimed at preventing foreign control of Canadian broadcasting facilities. These directions will, of course, be made public and will thus be available for scrutiny by parliament.

The third principle embodied in the statutory declaration of policy reflects the opinion of the standing committee that "the privilege of exclusive use of any channel or frequency must be subject to the clear responsibility of serving the public interest as expressed through national policy." Obviously, every broadcaster must conform to the law of the land with regard to such matters as obscenity and libel, and the commission must have power to make regulations, as at present, with regard to the standards of programs and the nature and quantity of advertising that is to be permitted. Beyond these reasonable limitations, broadcasters must be allowed the right to freedom of expression; that is to say, censorship and pre-editing of programs are not only undesirable but impractical.

None the less this privilege of free speech carries with it a heavy responsibility and must be exercised with due regard to the public interest. It will therefore be a function of the commission to observe and assess the degree of responsibility shown by each broadcaster in exercising his privilege of free expression, and to take this factor into account when the renewal of his licence is under review. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has, of course, a very special responsibility to maintain objectivity as a corollary to freedom from censorship and pre-editing of programs. This is a matter of great concern to the public and was raised by several hon. members in the debate on the resolution introducing this legislation as well as at other times in the past few years. Therefore I would like to deal with that problem when I come to the control and management of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation under the new legislation.

One of the most important objectives of the commission will be to ensure that Canadian audiences have a reasonable freedom of choice, and to see that the programming provided by the whole system, but not necessarily by a particular broadcaster, is varied and comprehensive and balanced in controversial matters. The prohibition of political broadcasts immediately before elections is to be continued, with some modifications, and the commission will be empowered to make regulations ensuring that broadcasting time for political broadcasts shall be assigned on an equitable basis. But it has to be recognized that straight political broadcasts are not the beginning and end of the matter. In considering applications for licences the commission will have to take fully into account the relationship between broadcasting and other mass media of communication in a particular area so as to avoid monopoly situations. In cases where a monopoly of communications media cannot be avoided for one reason or another, the commission will have to incorporate into the conditions of the broadcaster's licence a requirement for a balanced presentation of news and opinions.

The conditions of licence will also be used by the commission to establish the obligations of each broadcaster with regard to the quality and variety of programming and the all-important matter of Canadian content. Under the 1958 legislation Canadian content on television has been established by regulation at 55 per cent, and no such requirement has been imposed on radio stations. But in practice the whole concept has become confused with what might be termed public-interest programming, with the result that under the current regulations such events as the world series and Winston Churchill's funeral have been treated as Canadian content while a concert given in New York city by a Canadian artist might not be.

The Canadian radio commission will now have a great deal more flexibility in determining the nature and proportion of Canadian content required from each broadcaster. The reason for this provision is quite simple. The production of Canadian programs is apt to be much more expensive than that of imported programs which are bought here at a substantial discount. It is therefore reasonable to require a greater effort in the direction of Canadian programming from the more profitable stations. The commission will thus deal with each broadcaster independently in setting the conditions of licence, having regard to all the circumstances of profitability and availability of Canadian talent resources. We all know that these vary greatly from one station to another and from one population centre to another.

The over-all percentage formula for Canadian content has failed in practice to implement what parliament clearly intended in the 1958 act when it empowered the B.B.G. to make regulations "for promoting and ensuring the greater use of Canadian talent". Since the only measure from that date to this of Canadian content has been the amount of broadcasting time, many broadcasting stations have seized the opportunity to meet the quota imposed on them by regulation by broadcasting Canadian programs that cost the least possible amount of money at times when the audience is negligible or non-existent, that is, from twelve midnight to one o'clock when they may have some individual playing an organ in an empty studio and this has been able to qualify as a Canadian program. But obviously if we mean what we say as individual parliamentarians and as parliament, this approach clearly is insufficient and under the new legislation the commission will be required to impose licensing conditions which would ensure that the programming of both the C.B.C. and the private broadcasters shall be of high quality, using predominantly Canadian resources.

This means that the standards to be applied by the commission cannot be measured only by broadcasting time. Both the quality and the nature of Canadian content will have to be taken into account as well so that the best possible use can be made of the abundant resources of Canadian talent which in the present unsatisfactory situation is all too often fleeing to New York, Hollywood or London. There is also no particular reason, so far as I can see, why the provisions with respect to Canadian content should not also be applied to commercial messages. The B.B.G. so far has not exercised its statutory authority under the present act for this purpose, but I would expect that the new commission will give this problem close and careful attention.

With regard to licences issued to the C.B.C., there is one important qualification. A private applicant who comes to the B.B.G. for a licence is perfectly free to consider the conditions which the commission proposes to impose upon him, and if he is not willing to accept these conditions to get his licence then he can withdraw his application. This option, however, is not available to the C.B.C. which is required to broadcast the national service, and a conflict of views on licensing conditions might well lead to an impasse between the two bodies. The legislation therefore provides that the conditions of licences issued to the corporation must conform to the requirements of the national broadcasting service as defined in the statutory declaration of policy.

Even so, it is conceivable that the commission might seek to impose a condition that the corporation finds unacceptable or impractical for financial or other reasons. It is therefore provided that if, after full consultation between the two bodies, there is still disagreement, the matter may be referred to the minister for decision. I should tell the house that no minister takes on lightly that kind of reference to him or her with regard to a disagreement between two senior governmental agencies. The standing committee has said:

> We emphasize our conviction that the areas of authority and responsibility of the B.B.G. and the C.B.C., and the nature of the relationship it is intended to establish between them, be fully understood and clearly defined in the legislation.

Unhappily, it is not possible, as we all know, to take care of every possible eventuality in a statute, and it is therefore essential to provide some means to resolve legitimate differences of opinion about licensing conditions in an orderly fashion. I cannot really conceive that the senior officers of two such responsible bodies will indulge in constant bickering on licensing matters, so I do not think this procedure will ever be used or, if at all, it will be very infrequently.

The standing committee on broadcasting has said that it is essential to avoid monopolization of prime time by foreign programs and that public affairs programs should be included among those shown during prime time. I think this is a feeling that all of us in parliament echo. The commission will accordingly be given a new power to regulate scheduling policy in relation to any category or categories of programs. This, we believe, will permit the implementation of the standing committee's wishes in this regard. The commission will not be able to tell an individual broadcaster to put on a particular program at a particular hour, but will be able to require complementary programming by competing stations and to insist on a reasonable proportion of prime time being given over to public affairs programs and true Canadian content.

I should also mention that the legislation indicates that community antenna television systems will also be subject to licensing by the commission. The conditions of licence, which will also be laid down by the C.R.C., will have to take into account the need for comprehensive and varied service. However, —and I think this should be made very clear—C.A.T.V. systems are quite different in many respects from other broadcasting operations, and thus we expect the regulatory commission's requirements for these systems to be quite different from those applied to what are regularly called broadcasting undertakings. It is appreciated that the C.A.T.V. operators are not normally program producers and therefore their obligations as regards Canadian content cannot be more than to carry all available Canadian channels in a particular area. Provision is made for the exemption of certain classes of community antenna from the licensing requirements, for example, the roof-top antenna on an apartment block, but in general the commission, when considering an application for a licence for one of these systems, will have to take the whole local situation into account, including the interests of the local broadcasters.

The wide powers given the commission to make regulations and determine conditions of licence can be effective only if the regulatory agency also has the power to impose significant penalties on those who fail to meet its requirements. Under the 1958 act a breach of B.B.G. regulations is an offence against the Criminal Code carrying a maximum penalty of $500 or three months imprisonment. I cannot foresee a situation where it is likely that a prison sentence would ever be imposed, and in the few prosecutions that have been undertaken the fines inflicted have been no more than $50 and in most cases $25.

Considering the nature of the offences involved and the potential damage to the public interest inherent in the violation of these regulations, we believe that it is necessary to have more adequate penalties if the commission's regulations are to command the proper respect by licencees. Accordingly the new legislation provides for fines on summary convictions up to a new maximum. I do not think it is ever to be expected that the maximum penalty would be levied, and certainly never in cases of minor infractions or accidental violations. But there could be violations of these regulations which are neither minor nor accidental, and if you want to prohibit something then you must impose a fine high enough to show that parliament is serious when it means to prohibit it. In the area of advertising regulations, for instance, I am told by my officials that as much as $240 is charged for a ten second commercial in prime time. One does not have to know much about the new mathematics to show that a broadcaster could make as much as $10,000 a week over and above his ordinary income just by slipping in one additional minute of advertising each day over and above what is permitted under the current regulations.

I am not suggesting for a moment any present licencee is guilty of such conduct. In fact, I am assured by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters that the prosecutions to date in this regard have dealt with minor, accidental infractions of commercial regulations, particularly ones that took place because of the system of measuring time by the "clock hour". They do not believe there is a predilection amongst Canadian broadcasters to deliberately break the law, particularly in order to obtain an illicit profit.

However, the potential for abuse is there and the regulations, I think, must therefore exist. I believe that the commission must possess powers which are sufficiently punitive to make sure no one will attempt to take this way, the short way, to additional profits. It should be noted that it will not be the commission itself, of course, which will impose fines. The commission will have to proceed in the ordinary way through the courts, and it will be the courts that will be called upon to impose whatever fine is decided upon in the circumstances. The commission will be empowered to suspend or revoke licences, but only after a public hearing. It was, indeed, at the request of the C.A.B. initially that a scale of fines was placed within the new legislation, since it was indicated there was too abrupt a transmission from having a licence to suddenly having it suspended.

These are powerful sanctions and, there has been some question as to why they are not applied in the same way to the C.B.C. What would happen if you applied them to the C.B.C., particularly if you suspended or revoked a licence, would be that the public would be deprived in that area of access to the national broadcasting service. The bill therefore provides that if the C.B.C. fails to conform to its licence there will be a report made on the matter by the Canadian radio commission and that report will have to be tabled in parliament. I do not believe we should underestimate the efficacy of that sanction, for, if parliament agrees that the Canadian radio commission report is justified, it is clear that cause will have been established for the dismissal of those responsible within the corporation.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a question? Even if parliament agrees there is no provision, is there, in the legislation which would enable the report to be lifted off the table?

Miss LaMarsh: It would be tabled and the subject would have to arise in debate, I suppose, perhaps on a supply motion. If the infraction were considerable I suppose the government might provide time. There is no such mechanism in this legislation and that would have to be taken care of by the rules of the house.

Mr. Fairweather: It is really meaningless, then?

Miss LaMarsh: And anything in the broadcasting act would be meaningless with regard to the rules of the house.

The bill therefore provides that this report will be tabled in parliament. If it is tabled and it is demonstrated that the commission is correct and the C.B.C. is incorrect then, as I say, it will be indicated that those responsible will lose their positions. We hope that this will mean that the hope of the standing committee that the total delegation of authority over programming will end parliament's frequent involvement with broadcasing matters. If the Canadian radio commission does its job properly it should be possible then to concentrate the attention of parliament as regards programming matters on failure to comply with the broadcasting policy which parliament itself has laid down.

The next principle on which I believe there is general agreement is that all Canadians are entitled to broadcasting service in English and in French and, in particular, to the national network service of the C.B.C. The principal limiting factor here, of course, is cost, for the smaller and more remote the community the higher the per capita cost of providing service. We are still a very long way from achieving complete coverage, although we are steadily moving ahead each year to cover more of the outlying areas. At present the C.B.C. still works on the formula under which an English speaking or French speaking community or group of 2,000 is entitled to television service and of 500 to radio service. The priorities are allocated in accordance with the lowest per capita cost of providing service. Moreover, in saying that the national network services should be available from coast to coast, it should not be supposed that this can be done within any reasonably foreseeable period of time except through the use of affiliate stations. In other words, it is not the intention of this legislation to indicate that the C.B.C. should start out today and set up nationally operated stations in all parts of Canada. Thus the declaration of individual rights to service through this legislation is necessarily qualified by reference to the availability of funds. It will be for parliament to determine the priorities to be accorded to these expenditures in relation to other urgent national needs.

As I have already said, the statutory declaration of policy includes a definition of the national broadcasting service to be provided by the C.B.C. No definition was attempted in the 1958 act, so it was left to the corporation itself to lay down the requirements for the national service, to lay out the rules for itself. This caused a certain ambiguity to be created since the authority of the B.B.G. over the corporation has been vitiated by this division of responsibility. Under the legislation now before the house, both the commission and the C.B.C. will be governed by a common definition for the purposes of the national broadcasting service as established in this legislation by parliament.

Provision is also made to give effect to the recommendation of the standing committee that there should be clearer recognition that the C.B.C. is the principal agency for carrying out public policy through broadcasting. The commission will accordingly be required to give priority to the needs of the national broadcasting service if and when these conflict with the interests of the private broadcasters. I would ask hon. members particularly to look at the wording of that section where the two words "objects" and "interests" are opposed. Any attempt to be precise in this matter would almost certainly be more limiting than a statement of general intention. There is no denying that the commission may from time to time be faced with very difficult problems to be resolved. However, in this connection I agree completely with the statement of the standing committee that the responsibility of the regulatory authority in the first instance should be to amplify the broad principles for Canadian broadcasting laid down by parliament.

There are two other aspects of national broadcasting policy to which I should like to refer very briefly. The first is that the broadcasting facilities which will be provided for educational purposes will be the subject, as I mentioned at the resolution stage, of a separate measure. It will be part of the broadcasting system as a whole and therefore will be subject to regulation and supervision by the Canadian radio commission.

The second point is that the commission should adapt its regulation and supervision of broadcasting to scientific and technical advances, the effects of which cannot be foreseen in detail at this time. In particular, it should be noted that the ground transmitting and receiving stations in connection with satellite operations will be subject to licensing, while an amendment to the Radio Act incorporated in this bill will extend the authority of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) to radio apparatus on space craft under Canadian control. Another amendment to the Radio Act, which is relevant to both these points, provides for regulation of the technical requirements for radio apparatus offered for sale in Canada, as for instance a requirement that all television sets offered for sale should be capable of receiving u.h.f. as well as v.h.f. channels.

I should like to deal now with the constitution and powers of the Canadian radio commission, the regulatory authority which is to replace the Board of Broadcast Governors. However, before I say anything else I might say that the name "Canadian radio commission" seems to have aroused considerable comment. In the view of the government a new name for the regulatory authority is desirable to underline what we believe is an important change in climate and accent. Having decided that, Mr. Speaker, we searched for a name which would best represent the actual functions of this agency and which would be the same, at least so far as its initials are concerned, in both our official languages. I know that some people consider the word "radio" somewhat archaic in terms of today's broadcasting system, even though it can be defined in dictionary terms to embrace both radio and television. It may be that there is a more modern name which will meet our requirements, such as the proposed Canadian radio-television commission that has been suggested to me, or the Canadian communications commission. Suffice it to say, Mr. Speaker, that no one is wedded to the name "Canadian radio commission" and I would be interested to hear any suggestions from the committee with respect to the name. At the same time members of the standing committee or later members in committee of the whole might wish to consider whether it is time to find a new and perhaps more streamlined name for the C.B.C., taking into account the same considerations I have mentioned in this respect.

Whatever the name, Mr. Speaker, the proposed commission will have wider powers than the current B.B.G. and it will be backed up with significant means of enforcement. These powers will be exercised for the sole purpose of implementing the broadcasting policy to be established by parliament in this bill. Obviously the C.R.C. will need a little larger staff than the B.B.G. has, and this is one of the reasons for increasing the number of full time members from three to five.

There will also be a large increase in the number of matters which can be decided only after a public hearing. It is therefore proposed that hearings may be undertaken by small groups of members; it does not necessarily have to be the whole commission. However, no decisions are taken at hearings. They are to provide only the means for public discussion of licensing and other problems in different parts of the country and they would have to be reported back for decision.

Although the white paper proposed that there should be seven part time members and the standing committee recommended six, we have now on more mature consideration come to the conclusion that so small a number of part time members would not be sufficient to provide proper representation of public interests. It is therefore proposed in this bill that there should be ten part time members of the commission but that a quorum has to include at least three of the five full time members.

The government has been giving much consideration to the distribution of powers between the full time and the part time members, ranging from having no part time members to having part time members with the same powers as full time members. It will be recalled that the white paper proposed that the powers of the commission should be exercised by the full time members alone but after consultation with the part time members. The standing committee did not agree with this proposal and recommended that the part time members should have the right to vote. It was never the intention of the government that the part time members should be treated as no more than an advisory committee. After all, their purpose is to represent the public in various regions and walks of life. Having now had regard to the opinion of the standing committee, this bill provides a division of the powers between the full commission and the full time members, and I believe that this will give a balance of authority which will best fulfil the public interest.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the right to make regulations lies with the whole commission. That should not be underestimated as to importance, for the part time members will be sharing in the responsibility for establishing standards of programs, for regulating scheduling policy for classes or categories of programs, for controlling the nature and quantity of advertising, for prescribing the conditions for operating networks, and other important matters including the revocation of a broadcaster's licence.

However, Mr. Speaker, since in making appointments it is necessary to exclude from part time membership those who have a pecuniary interest in broadcasting, the full time members will represent the principal body of expert knowledge on the commission. It is therefore proposed that the regulatory power of the full commission can be exercised only on the recommendation of the full time members. This very practical requirement is designed to ensure that the full time members will never be placed in the position of having to administer a regulation carried against their advice by the part time members which might prove in the event to be unworkable.

So far as the power to issue licences is concerned, the government is convinced that the public interest will best be served by reserving the power of decision to the full time members. As permanent statutory officials with security of tenure they should be in a better position to make objective judgments than the part time members who could be unduly influenced by local and sectional considerations. Nevertheless, the part time members will have an important role to play in participating in public hearings. It is essential that they should have free opportunity to express their views and to make representations on behalf of local and sectional interests when licensing decisions are under consideration. It is equally essential, Mr. Speaker, that the full time members should give full and careful attention to these representations before they arrive at licensing decisions. In licensing matters, therefore, and when suspension of a licence is under consideration, the full time members will be required to consult with the part time members before they conclude their deliberations.

There is one important matter with regard to the licensing power to which I should refer. It was stated in the white paper that the licensing power would be delegated to the regulatory authority—that was a proposal with which the standing committee concurred—but that provision would be made for appeals against licensing decisions to the governor in council. Although it has happened very seldom in the past that the recommendations of the B.B.G. have been rejected by the governor in council, the important thing to remember is that there have been occasions in the past when such recommendations were deemed to be contrary to the public interest, and it is certainly not without possibility that such a situation could occur again in the future.

On closer consideration, Mr. Speaker, it was concluded that formal appeals to the governor in council would not be practical, but it is proposed that the governor in council should have the power, within a period of 60 days after a decision by the commission, to set aside a licensing decision or to refer it back to the commission for another public hearing. It should be noted that this does not give the government any power to issue a licence, nor does it give the government any power to nominate an acceptable licensee.

There is also a provision that any such decision by the government, and indeed any direction by the government to the commission, must be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette. Thus there will be no opportunity for undisclosed misuse of this power or for the exercise of hidden persuasion, since any action taken by the government under the powers accorded to it by this bill would immediately become public knowledge and open for parliamentary or public discussion. Among the matters to which this powerful sanction will apply will be the proposed authority to give directions for the pre-emption of time for broadcasting programs of peculiar Canadian significance or public interest.

On the subject of appeals, Mr. Speaker, the white paper proposed that there should be provision for appeals to the courts on questions of law but not of fact. The bill accordingly provides for appeals to the supreme court on questions of law or jurisdiction.

The transfer of the licensing authority to the regulatory body does not, of course, remove broadcasting from the necessity to comply with the technicalities governed by the Radio Act, for the administration of which the Minister of Transport is still responsible. The present procedure is that the Minister of Transport cannot issue a radio licence to a broadcasting station except on the recommendation of the B.B.G. and with the approval of the governor in council. Under this legislation it will still be absolutely essential that the construction and operations of broadcasting undertakings comply in all respects with the technical requirements of the Radio Act, and this has necessitated a reversal of the previous procedure.

Under the bill now before the house, Mr. Speaker, the commission, before issuing a licence, would have to be satisfied that the Minister of Transport has issued or will issue a technical construction and operating certificate under the Radio Act. That procedure is necessary in order to ensure that broadcasting undertakings in using the airwaves will not interfere with each other or with other radio traffic.

I would like to thank hon. members for bearing with me on such a lengthy statement. I now turn to part III of the bill which deals with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It may be a matter of surprise to hon. members that most of the changes from part II of the present act are matters only of detail or amendments in the interest of clarification or simplification. The reason for this is that there is not very much wrong with the provisions of the present act with regard to the powers of the C.B.C. The principal weakness of the 1958 act is its failure to establish a proper relationship between the corporation, the regulatory authority, and parliament. Thus the changes that will have the largest effect on the operations of the C.B.C. are those relating to the authority of parliament, the government, and the commission, which are set out in part II of the bill and with which I have already dealt.

The most important of these is, without doubt, the establishment of a statutory mandate for the national broadcasting service, a matter which was previously left to the discretion of the corporation itself to the exclusion of the B.B.G. Under the new legislation the commission's authority over the C.B.C. will be clearly defined and will be exercisable only by regulation or conditions of licence, all of which must conform to the broad policy enacted by parliament. The standing committee agreed that the C.B.C. should be subject to such regulation and control on the understanding that this does not imply any power to give directions in respect of specific programming except by general regulation or conditions of licences. The only exception to this is the reserve power to direct the pre-emption of broadcasting time in an emergency or for special purposes, to which I have already referred.

The standing committee also stipulated that the responsibility for programming must rest with the C.B.C. board and management but also recommended that a reconstituted B.B.G. should provide an assessment of our broadcasting system. All these requirements are met precisely in the bill. If the commission is of the opinion that the C.B.C. has not complied with the conditions of its licences—and it is to be remembered that these must conform to the policy enacted by parliament—a report must be made to parliament so that the alleged failure of the C.B.C. in its responsibility to parliament may be openly discussed and adjudicated.

Let us see how this system might work if hon. members were dissatisfied with some particular or general aspect of C.B.C. programming. All that would be necessary would be to call upon the commission, through the minister, to report whether the corporation had in fact failed to comply with regulations or the conditions of its licences. If it has so failed the C.B.C. board and management should be called to account and, if necessary, dismissed. Should the commissioner's report show that the C.B.C. had not committed any breach of the regulations or conditions of licence, then it is clear that the blame, if any, would be attributable to the commission, for the only possible conclusion would be that the commission had failed to interpret the intentions of parliament correctly in framing the regulations or conditions of licence. There is reason to believe that this procedure would eliminate a good deal of parliamentary discussion on programming matters, while still affording more practical means for parliament to assert its ultimate authority over programming, to be fully informed on matters which appear to be contrary to statutory policy, and to pass judgment on whoever may be shown to have been responsible. This is a very complex matter and members of parliament have been concerned about how parliament in that sense can control this important corporation.

What we are faced with here, Mr. Speaker, is a paradoxical conflict between two perfectly legitimate lines of thought. On the one hand, ever since the inception of the public broadcasting system in Canada almost everybody has agreed that the responsibility for programming must be left to the C.B.C., which must be totally protected from outside influences and pressures. On the other hand, almost everybody at one time or another, including many hon. members, has been shocked or infuriated by some aspect of C.B.C. programming, and the natural reaction is to demand that something should be done about it. The plain fact is that in broadcasting, more than in almost any other field of activity, absolute delegation of authority and responsibility is inevitable. In news and public affairs broadcasts, where urgency and topicality are often paramount reliance must be placed on the judgment of the individual producer or announcer, and his judgment must often be exercised instantaneously. On the entertainment side the choice of programs is very often a matter of personal taste, which can never be absolute or tied to precise standards. What is acceptable to you may not be acceptable to me.

For these reasons, for its performance and reputation the C.B.C. as a whole necessarily depends on the judgment and taste of a host of individuals who must be given the maximum practical freedom of expression if the corporation is to fulfil its duty to provide a live national broadcasting service. It is precisely in this area that most of the recent criticism of the corporation has arisen. Perhaps the most important feature of the C.B.C.'s mandate in the new bill is the obligation to contribute to the development of national unity and, as I said before, its employees have an overriding responsibility to be objective and balanced in its presentation of news and commentaries on public affairs. But I do not believe that this can be achieved by legislation or by sporadic interference from this chamber or from outside. The responsibility for this, particularly under the new bill where this is clearly set out in its obligation to contribute to the development of national unity, lies fairly and squarely on the C.B.C. board and management, and that is where it is going to remain. The only other course is to turn to censorship, which I think is repugnant to all of us, or to total pre-editing, which is absolutely impossible.

The late Mr. Adlai Stevenson once said:

> Freedom demands infinitely more care and attention than any other system. It puts consent and personal initiative in the place of command and obedience. How are we to defend freedom if, for the tyranny of external control, we substitute the clattering, cluttering tyranny of internal aimlessness and fuss?

Now I should like to deal very briefly with the internal organization of the corporation. Organization in itself is not an end but a means. Nor is it just a matter of boxes and lines drawn on a chart; it is a framework for personal relationships. In other words, good organization means competent managers and clear communications, neither of which can be secured by prescriptive legislation. I cannot imagine anything more likely to destroy the creative value of the C.B.C. than the rigidities and frustrations that would result from an organization structure prescribed by law.

With one exception to which I shall refer in a moment, the bill therefore has nothing to say about the internal organization of the corporation. It does not, for example, incorporate the recommendation of the standing committee that there should be a senior executive responsible for programming and production in the English and French networks, even though this recommendation subsequently was accepted in principle by the present C.B.C. board. Our view is that it is precisely with that body, the C.B.C. board, that decisions should be left involving the internal organization of the corporation. I am certain that this will be one of the major subjects of consideration by the new board to be appointed under this legislation. Its members will have available to them the recommendations of the standing committee, as well as those put forward by such groups as the Glassco commission and also the president's study group prepared within the corporation itself, although we do not know much about it, and the Fowler committee. It will be for the board, in line with its responsibilities under this bill, to decide which of these recommendations are most appropriate for the kind of corporation required to carry out their own policy decisions. They are in a far better position to do this than members of parliament.

The standing committee also supported the formation of two groups within the board of directors of the corporation, each one to concern itself more particularly with the English or French network. Under the bill the corporation will have full power to establish standing or special committees of the board and to delegate responsibility and authority to them. But a statutory requirement that the board should split itself up into two would, in the opinion of the government, be undesirable. If the C.B.C. is to be an instrument for the development of national unity and the continuing expression of Canadian identity, it must have a clear identity of its own that is neither English nor French but Canadian.

The one matter of organization about which the bill is explicit is the relationship between the two most senior officers of the C.B.C. The standing committee recommended that they should be known as the chairman and general manager respectively, but it has been represented to the government that these titles would have a restrictive effect on the titles available for senior officers of the corporation at a lower level.

It has also been represented to us, notably by the press and by the present president of the C.B.C., that in dealing with other North American corporations it is desirable that the senior officers of the C.B.C. should have titles recognizable by those corporations. It is therefore proposed in the bill before us that they should be known as the president and the executive vice president. The president is designated as the chief executive officer of the corporation, which means that he must take full responsibility for every aspect of the C.B.C.'s activities. The responsibilities of the executive vice president are defined as the management of broadcasting operations. This must be read in the context of the definition of broadcasting which is incorporated in the bill. The effect is that by law the executive vice president will be responsible for all the production and transmission of programs, that is to say, for the technical operations of the corporation and everything that goes out over the air. This is a less comprehensive responsibility than that of the president and does not include such functions as, for instance, public relations and accounting, which can be handled by other officers reporting directly to the president.

It is also worth noting that although the executive vice president is responsible to the president for the management of broadcasting operations, the authority of the president in this regard will be limited by law to policies prescribed by the corporation, that is to say, the board of directors.

When I was addressing the house a week or so ago on the resolution introducing this legislation, Mr. Speaker, I referred to the government's intention to bring in separate legislation later in this session to provide for the financial requirements of the C.B.C. on a five year formula. I should like to take this opportunity to reassure hon. members that there is nothing in the bill now under consideration which commits parliament one way or another on this matter, although the financial clauses of the bill do provide a base on which formula financing could be established.

These, then, are the principles on which this bill is based and the proposals in it by which those principles are translated into action. I should like to thank again all the people who have been responsible—and they have been many in the two years, at least, during which I have been in charge of this slow birth—particularly hon. members of the house and members of the standing committee.

An hon. Member: Midwife, but no mother.

Miss LaMarsh: I think the Canada Pension Plan was my baby and I do not intend to have one every two years. It is too difficult, especially when they are as complex as this.

Perhaps I can say one more word before sitting down. It seems to me that although this is a complex measure we have arrived at something very close to a consensus. I believe the legislation is much clearer than the present act and represents a considerable improvement on it, though it will not, of course, settle the question of broadcasting in Canada for all time.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

For one thing, we are very close to the leap into the future which is foreshadowed by the satellites and all this will entail. We do not know how long the kind of broadcasting which is familiar to all of us will continue to exist. We hope the bill before us will at least last into the new era. The provisions and principles outlined in it will have to be fleshed out by those appointed to the major full and part time positions on both the commission and the corporation. It will be their capabilities, their attitudes and their efforts which will make or break broadcasting in the future.

I know that all hon. members join with me in the hope that we shall shortly be able to announce the appointment of the very best and most qualified people for these positions. This means people who are ready to make sacrifices—not just financial ones—and in the particular case of the president occupy what has for many years been a hot seat, and do this not only for the benefit of Canadian broadcasting, but for the sake of the growth and strength of this country. I believe that if we can obtain the services of such people, hon. members will agree that the bill before us provides them with a clear and positive framework within which to operate and to work toward the goal of a strong and unified Canada with the full co-operation and good will of the House of Commons. It is a goal which we all share as one which will lead to a great future for this country. Having all these things in mind I recommend this legislation to the favourable consideration of hon. members.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to compliment the minister on a most helpful explanation of the legislation. As one interested in the reform of the procedures of parliament I think she would agree it is a mistake—and this does not detract from the merits of her speech—to introduce a bill of such major importance on a Wednesday afternoon when the number of speakers is obviously sharply limited. For instance, unless I as spokesman for the official opposition sit down now, no one else will be able to speak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: A breathtaking response. But this is an important consideration.

I would not be fulfilling my duty if I were to agree with everything the minister said, nor would she expect me to. I do agree with her that the intent of parliament is contained in the objectives of the bill. I should like to say also, without equivocation, that I welcome clause 2 which gives legislative authority for providing broadcasting services in both the major languages of this country. This, I think, is good evidence of the earnestness with which many Canadians pursue the objective of national unity. The cost involved is a very small price to pay on a long term basis if these objectives can be reached. I have not heard about the great city of Toronto falling into dust because of the advent of CJBC. I would hope that when the C.B.C's French service starts early in November in the city of Vancouver, even that outpost of empire will be able to survive the advent of two languages.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The flexibility of the provisions for Canadian content is a good change. I think the nine years that have elapsed have proven that artificial formulae in that area did not work.

As to public affairs broadcasts in prime time, speaking for myself I say, Amen, and repeat, Amen. I hope that the new provisions will bring to an end the scandalous absence of public affairs programming, particularly on the national broadcasting system, during those hours. Even the president of the C.B.C. had to admit a very minute amount of public affairs broadcasting in prime time when he appeared before our committee.

I feel we will have to improve the system for the reporting of infractions by the C.B.C. I think the minister is following her well known generous disposition in thinking that once a report is made parliament will go into high gear and deal with it. I have been here only five years but I have waited a long time for high gear on most matters. I suppose it would be a reform if the minister would agree that there be a reference to the broadcasting committee to deal with such a report. Other speakers will probably have better ideas.

As the minister said, the white paper recommended that licensing be the responsibility of the regulatory authority and the broadcasting committee concurred. But I think we will want the broadcasting committee to examine the minister's words on this aspect in the light of Bill C-163.

I add just one word about the mandate of the C.B.C., the object of which I am sure we all share, and the progress of national unity. I think that this summer the corporation did a very remarkable job in trying to fulfil that mandate. The minister herself, many agencies of government and private people have helped in this evocation of national unity, and I would like publicly to pay tribute to the C.B.C. and the private networks for responding to this surprising evidence of our assurance that suddenly has come upon Canadians. They found it was not such a bad idea every once in a while to look inward on themselves and see that there is indeed a bit of purpose to our nation.

"The most remarkable and most poorly utilized invention since the printing press is television"—so said Walter Lippmann. Douglas M. MacDonald in a recent thesis entitled, "A History of Broadcasting Regulation in Canada," had this to say:

> Generally speaking one can safely state that the first and prime problem of Canadian broadcasting has been solved, that of providing the technical facilities necessary to blanket the nation with an effective Canadian voice. The more difficult one is giving it something to say.

Giving broadcasting something to say has absorbed the time and talents of countless Canadians from the advent of radio through the addition of television, past countless columns, commissions and committees until this juncture in the on-going search for quality. There have been great moments, and many more times a shallowness of performance and emptiness of content. Bill C-163 is not the final word on the subject, as the minister herself admits. In fact, because of a curious absence of study—and I attach no blame here—on such topics as what one commentator has called the potential avalanche of cable television and satellites, it may be dated even before its purposes get fully under way.

I myself rather find that these comprehensive bills—and here I speak as a lawyer—which attempt to amend several acts as well as to invoke new principles, are a somewhat awkward way of dealing with legislation, but that is just a passing comment. I would now like to make a general observation or two about the bill and then discuss television and pay a passing tribute to radio, a much neglected feature of our culture.

I regret that the sensitivities of French speaking and English speaking Canadians are such that the name of the new regulating body is to be the Canadian radio commission. The minister says we can think up a new name, and I will follow her suggestion. As a matter of fact, mine is the same as one of her own. But surely it is puerile in the extreme to use a totally outmoded phrase or series of words as a sop to bilingualism. The type of bilingualism to which we aspire in Canada is surely made of sterner stuff. Surely the ultimate in bilingualism can withstand the use of a modern and relevant phrase. I myself think that "Canadian communications commission" would at least have the merit of being a more accurate expression of the purposes of the commission.

I am troubled by the ambivalent position of the C.B.C. both in its relations to the regulatory authority and to parliament, although I admit that the minister in her speech clarified my mind on some points. It seems to me to be basic that the corporation should not become embroiled in political controversy and should be shielded from improper governmental interference. Yet the appeals procedure which is available to the C.B.C. could well have the effect of embroiling the minister in a clash between the conflicting interests of the new commission and the C.B.C. At the very least the minister becomes a referee or arbitrator between two protagonists both of whose ambitions the minister should share.

Clause 6, dealing with the primacy of public broadcasting, might be strengthened if we added that really the interest we are trying to protect is the public interest. I think the minister agrees that that is the purpose behind the bill and that there may be instances where in fact it would be in the public interest to license a private outlet. Only this afternoon we heard of a freeze on facilities in one of our western cities. I am only making a suggestion.

Other hon. members will deal with the positions of the presidency and vice-presidency of the C.B.C. We in the opposition are concerned lest the very situation which forced governments to appoint numerous advisory committees, royal commissions, Mr. Stuart Keate—and the C.B.C. itself had a president's advisory committee—may be perpetuated in the new bill. The Winnipeg Free Press in an editorial on October 21 said that the proposal could have the effect of perpetuating the two solitudes of bureaucracy and talent which have so bedeviled the C.B.C. in recent times. I am sure it is the aspiration of all of us to end those solitudes.

The House of Commons committee on broadcasting which reported last March 21 on the white paper had this to say about the organization of the C.B.C. board, its officers and management:

> The committee concurs with the proposed composition of the board and the provision for a chief executive officer to be appointed by the board. We have noted with approval the relationship between the chairman and the director-general in the British Broadcasting Corporation which might well be emulated in the C.B.C.
> We recommend that the chairman be known by that title rather than as president. We consider this a position of high prestige and responsibility to be filled by an outstanding Canadian prepared to devote his energies fully to the C.B.C.
> We recommend that the chief executive officer be called the general manager and that he not be a director. We feel he should be a highly respected person experienced in program production administration and finance capable of giving creative and positive leadership in the keystone of our broadcasting system.
> We reiterate the committee's recommendation in its ninth report, dated June 29, 1966, that there should be a senior executive responsible for programming and production in the English and French networks respectively, each reporting to the general manager.
>
> We agree that directors should be experienced in management matters, but we would not wish to see "management" in this context equated entirely with "housekeeping".

These recommendations represent the considered opinion of two parliamentary committees and were adopted unanimously by those committees. I regret that the government has seen fit to fly in the face of them. In my opinion the C.B.C. chairman, and in fact the new head of the regulatory authority, well might have the same relationship to parliament that the Auditor General and, for example, the Chief Electoral Officer have, that is, appointment by parliament and not by the governor in council.

Here may I be permitted to add a word or two about the unseemly backing and filling which I must admit, although I know the minister does not agree, is so characteristic of this government in regard to the C.B.C. senior appointments. The government has gone through list after list of potential candidates and finally, having been rebuffed at every turn, we are informed, is about to settle on a senior public servant for the post of president of the corporation. I am quick to admit that I have nothing but respect for the senior echelons of the public service in Ottawa but, frankly, I would have expected that after a year long world-wide search the government would have met with success in finding a candidate in a location other than under a desk marked crown property here in Ottawa.

All in all it has been a most extraordinary game of tag conducted by a rather dispirited and out of breath Prime Minister whose every move is known in the corridors of power but not always, as the minister admitted yesterday, by the Secretary of State herself. I wish to be fair to her. I think it is time that she should be given a chance to be "it" in the game of tag, or perhaps the name of the game is "blindman's buff" and not a game of tag after all. I sincerely hope that an end will soon come to this most extraordinary search for talent. Indeed, as she interjected in yesterday's debate, the minister placed the blame where I know it belongs, in the office of the Prime Minister of Canada.

In speaking of appointments I should like to say I am sure the public will be anxious to know whether the staffing of the new regulatory commission will be by Canadians who have experience in the field of broadcasting or who have demonstrated that they have a real contribution to make to the board. The grubby antics which surrounded the proposed move of channel 3 from Barrie to Toronto have meant that the public is more than a little suspicious of the true independence of the membership of the Board of Broadcast Governors. Here, of course, I am not criticizing the permanent members and staff, but rather those useful extra supernumeraries who are added to the board at the pleasure of the governor in council from time to time and whose knowledge of broadcasting is rarely extensive.

Part of the reason a helpful discussion of the implications of this bill is difficult is that two major areas—I admit that the minister underlined them but they are still important—educational television and the proposed five year C.B.C. budgeting, are left for future legislative action. This makes the debate a bit unreal. Because the views of the minister and the government on these issues are largely unknown, it is rather extraordinary to be attempting to give a considered opinion on the whole issue of broadcasting without seeing those pieces of legislation. As an example, the minister herself mentioned satellites. Can we be assured—and I hope we can—that the government has by now approached a responsible international agency in order to reserve space in space? In other words, have we taken a lease on a part of a satellite so that Canadian broadcasting purposes can be fulfilled? I hope when the time comes that Canadians themselves have a satellite or a share in one that it will be a public, or a mixture of a public and private, endeavour with control in the public domain.

The white paper states on page 14 that the government accepts the recommendation of the advisory committee that the C.B.C. be financed by way of a five year statutory grant. I do not know why that is not in the bill. I wonder whether the government has had a change of heart in respect of these recommendations. I think that a good many of us, and perhaps the government too, have had serious misgivings about the five year plan because it may well mean a diminution of responsible control. I do not mean narrow nitpicking but rather responsible control of the financing of this corporation on an annual basis by parliament.

Educational television in Canada is at—I was going to say at the threshold of time but that is a cliché which I should like to avoid—the beginning of an exciting era. The subject is to be studied by the broadcasting committee, but it is too bad that the new bill could not have covered this new development also.

As one example of the problem, we do not know whether the government is going to licence v.h.f. or u.h.f.—these notes were prepared before the minister's announcement but I am delighted to see that it will be mandatory for all manufacturers of television sets to provide for ultra high frequency reception.

When the members of the committee were studying the white paper they were deeply concerned about the regulation and supervision of programming. They were of the opinion that the regulatory authority should not be involved in the corporation's day to day decision making or in policy making concerned with the internal workings of the corporation. This must be the responsibility of the C.B.C. board of directors. The responsibility of the B.B.G. in the first instance would be to amplify the broad principles for Canadian broadcasting laid down by parliament and to set general standards following public hearings. I am quoting from the report. The legislation must say, with a good deal of precision, what these principles are as they apply to the various components of the system, both public and private. Obviously the most important of them will concern programming. In the case of the C.B.C., responsibility for programming must rest with its board and management.

The report also states that as "auditor general" of broadcasting the B.B.G. should assess the performance of all components of the system under its supervision, including the C.B.C. In assessing the C.B.C., the B.B.G. should take into account the financial resources available to the corporation, its mandate and its vital importance as the prime instrument of national policy in broadcasting.

The governor in council, rather than parliament, is given too much power in this bill. In legislation dealing with such a powerful medium of information and propaganda it is of the utmost importance, and parliament has a clear duty to insist, that every evidence of unwarranted government interference should be removed. May I cite three examples which come to mind. First, there is the obligation placed on the minister to be arbiter in any conflict between the C.R.C. and the C.B.C. Second, there is the right given to the governor in council to pre-empt broadcast time if it is decided that the program is of special importance to all Canadians. Third, there is the right given to the governor in council to overrule grants of licences. I admit that the minister has given an interesting explanation of this latter provision.

In the case of a pre-emption of the airwaves it is my opinion for what it is worth, that regulations should be prepared which spell out clearly and carefully the circumstances in which this extraordinary power will be authorized. I would much prefer that this be done by the regulatory authority which must be privy to national emergencies and as sensitive to them as is the governor in council.

Another obvious improvement in the bill would be a provision requiring reasons for decisions of the regulatory authority being made public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: I hope the minister, who is a distinguished counsel, will agree with me on this. I hope at a later stage to produce an amendment making that compulsory. It will become increasingly important for those who have applications or matters before the C.R.C. to have some jurisprudence, not in any sense to hamstring the authority but rather to ensure that full disclosure is made of the rationale of decisions. This is a reform that I am sure will commend itself to the minister.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

There is a further serious departure from the recommendations of the parliamentary committee's report in clause 5 dealing with the setting up of the regulatory authority. The white paper, paragraph 4, said in dealing with this subject:

> The extended powers and responsibilities of the board will, in the opinion of the government, require the attention of more full time members than at present, but there should continue to be a number of part time members sufficient to provide a broad cross-section of Canadian opinion.

The parliamentary committee on page 8 of its report said that it approves of the licensing procedure, etc., but it believes that the authority of the board should not only reside in the full time members but part time members should have the right to vote. We also recommended that the total number of members be 11. I am not going to play a numbers game with the minister, whether it should be 7, 8, 10, or 11. I have not given very much attention to the adequacy of the number, but I believe that the full board should be part of the decision making process.

I will be anxious to hear the minister's explanation for ignoring—I suppose she has some explanation—the recommendation of the parliamentary committee which made, I think, a pretty careful examination and study of what I believe to be the essentially undemocratic proposals in the white paper. As an aside, may I interject that it is curious how often governments and their legislative draftsmen prefer the less democratic way of doing things. There seems to be an innate suspicion of parliament itself in a good deal of the drafting of provisions for orders in council and so on. However, I suppose that this statement is made more easily when sitting on the opposition benches than when one is in the seats of power.

The insistence by the committee that the right to vote be given to all members of the regulatory authority was not lightly taken. As was pointed out in a signed article by Mr. Claude Ryan in Le Devoir of October 19, and I have done my best to put this into passable English, "As we know, the bill puts aside this wish of the committee. It comes back, by a 'bias' which will not deceive an experienced observer, to the first idea of the government. As all permanent members of the C.R.C. will be named by the government, and subject to renewal of their mandate, there is evident risk that the independence of the C.R.C. will be reduced as much."

I believe this bill should go back to the parliamentary committee because in so many ways it differs from the report of the special committee. Here I should like to suggest, and I do so quite sincerely, that it be sent to committee before approval in principle. The committee has the competence and ability, I say with respect, to improve this bill and make it a more democratic evocation of what the policy of the government should be. I think it would be a landmark in the long and perilous journey toward parliamentary reform if the Secretary of State would agree to what I suggest is an imaginative and proper procedure. If we really mean that the parliamentary committee system is to be effective, the minister will jump to accept this suggestion. I assure her that it is not a delaying tactic; it is a reforming tactic. It is not a device to kill the bill; it is a genuine attempt to use the latent talent and experience of parliamentarians for the improvement of the bill at an early stage of its passage through the house.

Just as surely as the bill is approved in principle on second reading, we will be told in committee: No, you cannot have any amendments; you have approved this bill in principle; be good boys, go away and don't bother us. The better procedure, and it will come some day—I should like to see it come on this bill—is for bills such as this to be considered before and not after second reading.

I leave it to other spokesmen of this party, and I suppose other parties, to discuss the helpful suggestions of the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists who have such a stake in a program for better broadcasting. The list of artists, writers, actors and other broadcasting professionals who have had to seek employment outside Canada is a veritable honour roll of talent. But unlike most honour rolls, the ACTRA list is made up of living people, people who want to work in Canada and contribute to its cultural greatness, people who seek quality of content and share aspirations for promoting the unique quality of the Canadian contribution to our national expression. If we in parliament, those in the new regulatory authority, in the C.B.C. and the private networks, fail them now—this is perhaps being dramatic—I say that our children will live to rue the day for we shall have dissipated our heritage.

Within the ACTRA submission to members of parliament there are a couple of proposed amendments that I hope the minister will accept without too much debate. One which is to be found at the bottom of page two of ACTRA's submissions is as follows:

> —we recommend the addition of sub-subsection (v) to read:
> co-operate with the Canadian Council, the National Arts Centre, the National Film Board, the Canadian Film Development Corporation and other such bodies in the encouragement of Canadian cultural expression in all its forms.

The minister more than any other person knows of the proliferation of culutral activity in this country. It seems to me it is time this proliferation was harnessed, not in the restrictive sense but in the sense that one area of cultural betterment will know what another area is doing. There should be a cross-fertilization, if I can use that term after the—well, I had better leave it there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: The various agencies should be given an opportunity to serve one another. The ACTRA submission contains another proposed amendment as follows:

> The private element of the Canadian broadcasting system shall offer an alternative choice to the service provided by the national broadcasting service emphasizing local and regional programs and the maximum utilization of local creative talent consistent with high quality programming.

That is a worth-while objective which I think very well fulfils a major responsibility in the private area of broadcasting. Canada is fortunate in having several first-rate television critics. Pat Pearce, Roy Shields and Bob Blackburn come to mind. These people and others through the years like Austin Weir, who spent his life in public broadcasting and has since retirement written the most important book on Canadian broadcasting, Graham Spry, Roger Plaunt, and very many others, knew what E. B. White meant when he said in 1938:

> I believe television is going to test the modern world, and that in this new opportunity to see beyond the range of our vision we shall discover either a new and unbearable disturbance of the general peace or a saving radiance in the sky. We shall stand or fall by television—of that I am quite sure.

He said those words about 29 years ago and I do not think one single phrase or sentence need be changed. The only sad part is that there is so little evidence of saving radiance.

One of the great American broadcasters, Edward Murrow, said in 1958, 20 years after White's statement:

> This instrument can teach, it can illuminate; yes, it can even inspire. But it can do so only to the extent that humans are determined to use it to those ends. Otherwise it is merely lights and wires in a box.

I would have liked to have the opportunity to speak about Canadian radio and about the great contribution to national unity and national sanity made every morning at 8.35 by that great radio man, Max Ferguson, who takes on the sacred cows.

Miss LaMarsh: I will make him pay me a commission.

Mr. Fairweather: We will speak about that later, I expect.

C.B.C. radio at last seems to know its purpose. It seems more free of the fetters of commercialism and it is all the better for it. Sometimes I wonder, when attacks are levelled against public broadcasting, what would happen in this country if very early on a Monday morning all of C.B.C.'s television and radio broadcasting closed down and we then asked those in favour of R. B. Bennett's vision of public broadcasting to stand up. I think we would then have a real understanding of what this great national service has done for the country.

I would also have liked to speak about the great experiment starting this Saturday night in the United States. They are finally catching up with us. Because of the findings of the Carnegie commission on educational television and the $10 million grant from the Ford foundation, the first network series of public broadcasting will take place in the U.S.A. It will take place because the private interests have failed the viewers in that country and because people who are interested in this great facility want to do something to improve its content. I think that Mr. White, Mr. Murrow and hundreds of others have an understanding—and I would like to pay the minister the compliment of saying that I think she also and many others in parliament have an understanding—of the obligation that we have to the country to ensure that by standing for what could be the splendid purposes of this media we help to teach, to illuminate, yes, even to inspire.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the minister was criticized when she introduced the resolution preceding the bill for not giving us very much information and for speaking too briefly. Today she gave us a very full explanation, perhaps too full for my purposes because as a result I have only four minutes left in which to speak today. However, I congratulate her for her speech. It was very comprehensive and explained much of the thinking behind the new legislation.

Let me say first that I think the bill is generally good. This does not mean amendments will not be suggested when we get down to the clause by clause study in committee. There are many points in the bill which I think bear looking into. The whole question of the relationship of the Canadian radio commission and the C.B.C. is certainly one of them. The position of the minister with regard to the C.B.C. and the regulatory authority is another very important one. However, the bill is a good one in many ways. It lays out the objectives of broadcasting in Canada. I cannot find very much to quarrel with there. It also gives the C.B.C. particular responsibilities. One of its responsibilities is to promote national unity in the country, and one can hardly be against that.

However, in that connection there is one fear in the back of my mind. I have noticed that on the part of members of this house, French speaking members in particular, there has been a great deal of criticism of the French network of the C.B.C. We hear the charge that it is riddled with separatism and that these people are promoting disunity in the country. This may or may not be true. I simply do not know. But I would not want to see a witch-hunt started because there is something in the bill saying that national unity must be promoted which would enable the government to go to anyone who was not doing exactly what was wanted and say: You are not promoting national unity; you are a separatist and therefore you are out. There is a possible danger there. However, one cannot quarrel with the aim of promoting national unity in Canada.

There is also the declaration that the airwaves are public property. Legally there has never been any doubt about this, but perhaps those people who are given the privilege of using the airwaves need to be reminded of this. I notice that in Great Britain this year some of the broadcasters were so reminded. A number of the people who had permission to operate under the independent television authority had some of their rights withdrawn. This was a reminder to those companies—

Miss LaMarsh: —that they cannot print money any more.

Mr. Prittie: I also believe a former Canadian lost some of his rights in regard to television in Scotland. However, it is a useful reminder that the airwaves are public property and are subject to review.

I am also pleased to see in the bill the statement which was recommended by the broadcasting committee about the pre-eminence of the public system. It recognizes the existence of the private system. The public part of the system has been important in the past in Canada and I think it will have to be the most important in the future.

There has been some criticism that the new broadcasting authority has too much power. I do not agree with that at all. Experience in other countries shows that a broadcasting authority has to have legal power and, what is more important, has to use its power. The United States had a very sad experience with the federal communications commission and there has been a great deal of criticism of that organization. Some people have wondered why it bothers to exist at all, because it has simply reflected the views of the people in the industry rather than those of the public. I think we have always had a stronger authority in Canada. It needs to be stronger and it also needs to exercise that authority.

Before you see the clock, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one other point. No matter what kind of broadcasting legislation we pass in the house, much of the success of broadcasting in Canada will depend upon the people appointed to carry out the job. That goes almost without saying. I should like to conclude with one comment to the minister. The Ottawa Citizen of October 19 made a very good point in its leading editorial entitled "Can We Keep Politics Out?". In the last paragraph it said:

> In any case the appointments to the C.B.C. must be of the highest quality. The unfortunate precedent set in the Board of Broadcast Governors, where past service to the party in power is the chief qualification for membership, should be renounced from the inception of the new body. Otherwise, we are only playing alphabet soup with a meaningless change of initials.

I commend that to the minister. I will have more to say about this subject when I have the opportunity to resume my speech. In the meantime, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

[Translation]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

PROPOSED PAYMENT OF PENSIONS TO HUSBAND AND WIFE AT THE SAME TIME

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure which would allow the husband or the wife of a person who is entitled to a pension under the Old Age Security Act to become eligible at the same time even if his or her age does not meet the requirements of the act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my purpose in introducing this motion is to enable the house to act on a shortcoming of our social legislation which fails, in certain cases, to grant the wife the same rights as the husband. The motion reads as follows:

> In the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure which would allow the husband or the wife of a person who is entitled to a pension under the Old Age Security Act to become eligible at the same time even if his or her age does not meet the requirements of the act.

It is known that in this country—and the same is true all over the world—it is customary for a man to take as a wife someone younger than he is. It may be a good way to ensure superiority over the other sex.

While I did not make any extensive research on the subject—besides, I do not know of any definite statistical data—in order to determine to what extent the wife is younger than her husband, I made a few phone calls at random, and out of 20 families interviewed, 18 wives were younger than their husbands. This means, therefore, that the ratio of that marital status is quite high.

Since I came to the House of Commons more than five years ago, I have met people from every level of society, but especially those faced with financial problems who find it hard to make both ends meet after retirement, particularly when there is only one cheque at the end of the month to support two persons during the next thirty days.

I have received many letters from my constituents asking me to appeal on their behalf to the federal or provincial governments, as the case may be. We will admit that the $75 cheque received by the husband, and which now, for almost a year, reaches sometimes $105, is inadequate to pay the rent, the fuel, the electricity, the telephone, the food, the clothing, the medical bills, the entertainment, and so on.

When we happen to assist them in their budget, as I have done myself so many times, we easily realize that they cannot possibly live decently with so little, mainly when a retired couple is involved.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that when our workers, farmers, in short all middle class people, get to the retirement age, few of them have managed to set aside a reserve which will allow them to face the difficult years of retirement.

The 1966 December issue of the Canadian Worker reads as follows:

—according to the 1961 Canadian census figures, a third of the 2,720,276 Canadian families, with the head of the family earning a salary, live in poverty.

Also in the May 1967 issue of this magazine, Mr. Émile Gosselin, an incumbent professor at the Department of Industrial Relations in the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Montreal, who headed a survey called "The Third Solitude", defined poverty in the following terms:

"Poverty is the status of people whose needs, as deemed necessary in terms of the standards and values defined by their physical environment, cannot be reasonably satisfied, because of resources insufficiency. Needs and services deemed necessary, under these standards, to minimum adequate living conditions are unavailable to the poor and beyond their material conditions; they cannot, therefore, be provided by means of the resources available to the poor."

A little further in the same article, we can read this:

—1,032,000 people, of 48.6 per cent of the total population of the metropolitan area, who are living in misery, poverty and deprivation, or whose living conditions are precarious or marginal.

And it continues:

More than 55,800 families out of 217,000, or 20 per cent of the families in the city of Montreal are plunged into poverty and more than 27,000 families in the suburbs, or 14 per cent also live in poverty. For the metropolitan area, that percentage is 17 per cent of the families and 20 per cent of the population.

Besides the families living on less than the vital minimum "needed" for a bearable social and human life, there are still in the city of Montreal 50,000 families, or an additional 18 per cent who live in deprivation and which "a simple recession or any unemployment which goes on ever so little can plunge into a state of poverty, which was their lot during the depression". In the suburbs, 29,000 families, or nearly 15 per cent of the population, live in deprivation.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Therefore, this means, Mr. Speaker, that for all those people with a low income—I gave the figures for the Montreal area, but I think that the same proportion could easily be found in practically all urban centres and even in most rural areas in Canada—it is useless to think of saving money for their old age. Besides, in view of the personal income tax and the taxes of all kinds that a worker pays during his lifetime, it seems to me that the government has the duty to give retired people a little social justice, because I think that refusing to recognize the same rights to a married couple at the time of retirement represents a social injustice that should no longer be tolerated in a country which prides itself on its progress in the field of social justice.

If this motion were passed, Mr. Speaker, the resulting act would therefore enable the wife, who is younger than her husband, to receive her own old age pension when he retires, even if she has not reached retirement age as stipulated in the act.

It might be added here that the government could, in agreement with the provinces, pass a similar law with regard to old age assistance when the husband, for instance, is declared disabled or blind.

And so, many financial difficulties would be spared these couples, because women have trouble finding work even at an earlier age than men. At fifty five, and often much earlier, even if work is available, her health often does not allow it.

In a study published a couple of years ago, this is what the National Welfare Council had to say:

The inadequacy of the financial means of old people is even better illustrated by the data on revenue by age group. The average yearly income of men in the high sixties falls by slices of slightly more than $2,000 per year to approximately $1,500 per year when they reach 70 or over, and settles at approximately $900 somewhat before 90. For the women, the situation is even more precarious.

It is already rather precarious for men but for women, the situation is still worse.

They have an average income of slightly less than $500 at the end of their sixties; this income increases to about $800 at 70 and slightly over and remains almost level from then on. The poverty of the average old woman is all the greater in that she tends to live longer than man in similar circumstances; she makes up an increasing proportion of old people in the last 10 years of life. As a result, the situation is particularly difficult for the majority of old women whatever their age group—

It might be objected that if legislation to this end, were to be passed, it would cost several million dollars each year to the treasury.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that it would increase the budget of the National Health and Welfare Department. If we stop to consider the dollar sign, this motion will obviously not go very far, but we should rather consider whether it is possible to supply the goods and services which these new pensioners will require. I have no doubt that Canadian producers could supply and could meet the demand of all those who would benefit from legislation that might follow this motion now under consideration.

So, Mr. Speaker, we must stop and look at the problem of the third age of the females of the species and we should look upon it as a human problem which demands a humane solution.

I do not doubt that hon. members in this house tonight will support this motion and I leave it up to them to express their views.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion we have before us, moved by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) reads as follows:

That in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure which would allow the husband or the wife—

And the hon. member spoke mostly of the wife, but the motion mentions the spouse.

—of a person who is entitled to a pension under the Old Age Security Act to become eligible at the same time even if his or her age does not meet the requirement of the act.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that the motion of the hon. member deserves the attention of this house but I think also that we should study it and consider why the Old Age Security Act has been established in Canada. When this legislation was voted by parliament, it was intended to allow elderly people—at the inception the minimum age was 70 and more, but it is now 68—to have and maintain a definite income.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, that is, since December 20, 1966, the house has granted a guaranteed income supplement to the extent of $30 per month, thus ensuring any person of 68 and over a minimum annual income of $1260.

It is also known that parliament has amended the Old Age Security Act by providing an automatic increase proportionate to the increased cost of living and, as announced recently in a joint release by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), as from January 1, 1968, the old age security pension, as well as the supplementary pension, will go up by 2 per cent, which means that since that legislation was passed in 1952, pensions have gone from $40 to $75; in addition, and as from January 1, 1968, those pensions will increase by $1.50 per month, and the supplement will reach $30.60 per month for certain persons instead of $30.

The house also passed in December 1966 a comprehensive medicare legislation, which will come into force on July 1, 1968.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, some will object that only if provinces are individually adopting that plan according to the provisions of the federal legislation, will that system be implemented. We must remember that since parliament adopted the Canada Pension Plan, residence requirements have been made more flexible.

It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to assess the number of married couples where the wife or the husband does not have the age required by the act to receive this pension. If the motion introduced by the member for Chapleau, were agreed to, would this amendment to the old age security act be on a universal basis, or would it be necessary for the departmental officials to make investigations concerning those families and I would even say in separate homes, to ensure that their request meets the requirements and is justified, because there could be cases where either the husband or the wife—according to figures mentioned by the member—especially the wife, would be 45 or 50 years old only, and would be eligible to a pension under the Old Age Security Act?

Also, if parliament is justified, Mr. Speaker, to agree to the motion of the hon. member, why not include any single person who is not old enough to be entitled to old age security but is in want, since he also would have reasons to expect such a pension?

We could also include in this category widows aged 60 to 68.

As the hon. member for Chapleau knows, I agree that in Quebec a widow or an unmarried woman between 60 and 65 who is in need may receive a welfare allowance.

Mr. Speaker, I also know many couples where the wife is younger, and the families I have in mind right now have urgent financial needs. The scope of the Canada Assistance

Plan was extended in 1966 by the house to help even more people receiving an old age assistance pension, the blind, the disabled or those receiving unemployment assistance, including needy mothers and their families, children getting social assistance payments. Moreover, needy people can benefit from a joint medical expense program, because one knows that under the plan the contribution of the federal government amounts to 50 per cent.

The hon. member told us that we should not only consider the cost of this project but that we should also take into account human misery and the human being. However, I think that consideration of the cost is of prime importance since those cases can sometimes be assisted by other means. Such a motion might be passed and I sincerely admit that I am quite in sympathy with it but, in several cases, it would mean a duplication of effort and it would also add rather heavy expenses to the federal budget. I say then that the cost is very important since, in the 1967-68 budget, the estimated expenditures for the payment of pensions to old people and for the guaranteed supplement, amounts to $1.4 billion. To support those figures, I refer to question No. 485 placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Isabelle) and to which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) answered on October 25 last as follows, and I quote:

• (5:20 p.m.)

1. How many persons are receiving old age pensions (a) in Canada ...

Answer: 1,241,261.

2. How many of the pensioners are receiving the supplement of $30.00 per month (a) in Canada ...

Answer: 435,284.

3. How many are receiving only a portion of this supplement (a) in Canada ...

Answer: 265,967.

As I was saying earlier, if this motion is passed by the house, we should also think of needy bachelors and widows who are not old enough to be eligible for old age security.

I have made inquiries and I have been told that to provide this assistance would cost over $300 million a year. The hon. member for Chapleau might perhaps say that there is no need to raise taxes in order to cover this expenditure, but merely to turn to the Bank of Canada. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to quote two paragraphs from a speech made by the French minister of economics and finance, Mr. Michel Debré, in Rio de Janeiro on September 26, 1967, at an annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. When speaking of additional credit, he said:

It is true that no credit system can ever entirely satisfy the needs of young countries and, generally speaking, of countries whose rapid development has top social priority.

How can one think that the artificial creation of paper money can be a solution? To hand out small amounts of money does not solve anything, and to give out large sums would soon cause incredible upheavals the first victims of which would be the developing countries.

In line with the motion presented by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), there is another aspect of social security which might have priority over that suggested by the hon. member and, even if this priority is very important—

Mr. Laprise: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Clermont: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Laprise: The hon. member has quoted a statement made by a minister of finance of France. I do not know if he wants to connect this statement with the ideas put forth by the Social Credit party. And I will have him know that never, under any circumstances, has Social Credit ever called for the creation of an artificial currency.

Mr. Clermont: No, but Social Credit has called for a national discount.

Mr. Laprise: That is not artificial money.

Mr. Clermont: I have accepted the question. But I remember very well certain interventions in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs last year when we were revising the bank charter. I remember these interventions and to me, that also meant easier money.

I was going to say, before being interrupted by the hon. member for Chapleau, that, in the field of social security, I feel that priority should also be given to the matter of family allowances.

To my mind, a government should assume its responsibilities toward society as a whole, toward every population sector, and this is not always easy. We should not, however, put too heavy a burden on taxpayers who try to provide for their personal and family needs. I sympathize with the motion of the hon. member, but the Old Age Security Act was voted by the Canadian parliament in order to assist the aged, and other means of assistance are actually available for those in need that do not qualify for the old age security program, such as the Canada Assistance Plan, for instance.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the principle of the motion presented by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise). Let me make it clear that if the principle were translated into legislation certain details would have to be worked out and certain limitations would have to be accepted. However, it is not an effective answer to the problem raised by the hon. member, nor is it an answer for the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Clermont) to wander all over the social security field in order to find some basis on which to say that we should not consider this proposition.

I recognize the suggestion by the hon. member for Labelle that without certain age limitations some rather strange situations could develop. We might have the story book experience of an old man marrying a teenager who would then receive the pension. But let us not get deflected by that kind of an argument. The hon. member for Chapleau does not want that; neither is he concerned about the 40-year old individuals mentioned by the hon. member for Labelle. What my hon. friend from Chapleau is concerned about is the standard, usual case in our society where a husband is two or three years older than the wife, or at least two or three years older than her stated age—

An hon. Member: You mean four years older.

Mr. Knowles: Someone has suggested four years older. Are there any higher bidders? In any event the husband is usually the breadwinner, and in many cases the husband can go on pension at age 68. But because his wife is only 64 or 65 there is no possibility of her receiving the old age security pension and, as has been pointed out, only if dire poverty is involved and the wife is 65 can she apply for old age assistance. However, in my experience it is not good to have one member of a couple on a pension without a means test and the other on a pension with a means test.

It is my suggestion that we do not get involved in the unusual cases, that we not become concerned about the details the hon. member has not written into his resolution, but that we look squarely at the normal problem that arises when the breadwinner goes on pension and the other member of the couple is a year or two short of pensionable age. Sometimes it is the wife who is the older one; sometimes it is the wife who is the breadwinner. In all cases it seems to me that there is merit in the proposition that a retired couple, within certain age limits, should get the pension for both of them. This could be achieved by fixing a minimum age perhaps 60, below which a pension would not be paid, or by determining a margin between the husband's age and the wife's age. Or it could be solved by deciding that pensions for women should be paid at the age of 60.

In any event, I agree with the hon. member for Chapleau that there is a real problem here. It is not only a problem of economic need; it is one which relates to our way of life. And just as we have argued in favour of this principle in the past I should like to indicate our support for the proposition that is placed before us in this motion.

I was a little surprised that the hon. member for Labelle should have thought that the way in which to answer these points was to tell us of all the things the Liberal government has done in the old age pension field and, of course, to indicate to us that everything was wonderful. In particular, I was surprised he should have made such a point out of the fact that the government will be increasing the old age security pension in January under the automatic clause in the act. That clause is a good one; it is a good principle to have recognized. But I suggest that when the hon. member's constituents eventually get an increase of $1.50 a month he will not be deluged with mail thanking him for what the government has done. As a matter of fact I had a letter the other day from a woman in Nova Scotia asking for my advice in connection with the $1.50 which she will be getting in January. She says: "I shall be able to buy either a toothbrush or a tube of toothpaste. I cannot buy both. Which do you recommend?"

The hon. member for Labelle also gave as his answer to the request made from this side, the fact that the government had passed medicare legislation. I think any boasting about medicare legislation should at least be delayed until we see whether the provinces take up the legislation on July 1, 1968, or whether they are discouraged from doing so by the kind of talk we are hearing these days from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

Another argument which the hon. member from Labelle used was that if we paid pensions to married women who were two or three years younger than their husbands, why should we not pay them to single women of the same age. Well, why not? On many occasions some of us have advocated setting the eligible age for old age pensions at 65 for men and 60 for women. In other words, the problems which the hon. member raised do not set aside the points which were brought forward by the hon. member for Chapleau. Rather, they simply pose other problems which should be dealt with.

I wish to say, therefore, that I think it was a good idea for the hon. member for Chapleau to raise this matter. I think it is good that we should be called upon to discuss the whole question of the needs and problems of our older people. One of the unfortunate things about parliament in 1967 is that under the leadership of the present government, if you can call it leadership, the idea has been spread around that the pension problem has been solved and that it can be forgotten for at least a few years. It has not been solved. These people need higher pensions; they need pensions free of the means test.

As I say, I think any legislation based on this resolution ought to have some minimum age or certain protective clauses in it. But as far as the principle is concerned it is a good one and I am happy to indicate our support.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, after having carefully considered the resolution of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), we come to the conclusion that it is of course a bill which reflects a magnanimity which is all to the honour of the mover.

Nobody wishes to cast any doubt on the generosity of his intention. I think such a proposal deserves to be seriously examined, but there is a long way to go before we proceed to pass such a bill. There are provisions of the budget which must be considered before we can say whether this proposal can be immediately approved.

• (5:40 p.m.)

It is a good idea to point out in passing, without introducing political partisanship in this debate, that our good friends of the Ralliement des Créditistes are those who advocate most vigourously at all times that taxes must be cut and even abolished if possible. But, on the other hand, they are the first to propose measures sometimes expensive, and prohibitive, and those who are responsible for the government feel a certain regret, a certain nostalgia, because if one day—I cannot see that it will happen—we were in opposition—I repeat that it will not happen—we would be so happy to harass the government with all kinds of requests.

[Mr. Knowles.]

You may be sure, Mr. Speaker, that if, 25 or 30 years from now, circumstances have us in the opposition, we will be the first to beg, to show great generosity, to ask the government without cease to do more for the pensioners and to ease as much as possible the taxpayers' burden. Then also, 30 or 35 years from now, the gentlemen opposite will say: Live up to your responsibilities, be serious, analyse the funds available in the budget, to see whether or not we can afford to make such outlandish promises, to launch out on such costly ventures that they could lead to the bankruptcy of the government.

Mr. Speaker, a very summary analysis of public accounts shows that for pensions, veterans allowances, family allowances, allowances to disabled and blind persons, etc., the government spends $3,350,000 for the disabled and blind persons allowances, and, according to the estimates for 1967-68, $15 million will be paid to the disabled and family allowance payments will reach $610 million.

I wish to bring to the attention of our Créditiste friends, who were shouting across Quebec the slogan: "Double our family allowances", that this would require an expenditure of $610 million for the government and that they have never suggested where such a tremendous amount would come from, in order to pay the cost of ridiculous promises.

Concerning old age security, my hon friend and colleague, the member for Labelle (Mr. Clermont), has clearly indicated for the year 1967-1968 an estimated expenditure of about $1,400 million.

Mr. Speaker, if that does not show how the government is concerned with social security, I wonder what should be done to convince our people that no other government has ever demonstrated such concern for the security of our Canadian population.

As I said a while ago, I believe the steps suggested by our hon friend, the member for Chapleau, to be most generous in spirit but rather difficult to enact in terms of the budget. Of course, the miraculous and key solution which has always been advocated by our friends of the Ralliement Créditiste, is the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada is the answer to unemployment.

One day, I asked the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), who is a dear friend of mine, and a very good, eager and stirring speaker, what would happen to unemployment if, some day, the Social Credit theory were put into practise, and he replied that unemployment would completely disappear in the province of Quebec. I am glad that the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste can delight in such imaginary situations, but I do not think there are, in the world, a great many economists who could accept that theory, namely that once the Ralliement Créditiste would be in power, unemployment would disappear completely and forever.

But there are people who like to dream, who delight in utopia and day-dreams. So let us not disturb them, Mr. Speaker.

So, what is the solution for all those problems? The Bank of Canada: solution for unemployment; the Bank of Canada: solution for governments' debts; the Bank of Canada: solution for individual debts; the Bank of Canada: solution for inadequate productivity; the Bank of Canada: solution for the sterility of women; the Bank of Canada: solution for everybody's problems.

As for us, we are much more realistic and cautious and I must say that some of the theories set forth, namely that in wartime, the required money is found, whereas in peacetime, it is not found, are terrible fallacies. If money is found in wartime, it is because the government borrows it; it borrows because it is an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe): we admire him for fighting in this house and for waging war on poverty. I might tell him that the first to conceive the wonderful idea of waging war on poverty was a representative on the government side, and the slogan of war on poverty was invented by a member on this side of the house. The government appropriated this idea in a recent speech from the throne, in 1965. The government started an anti-poverty program.

We are also extremely interested in this program which could be not only speeded up but intensified as much as possible in order to eliminate poverty. We are also conscious of that problem. However, instead of advocating senseless theories, we remain with the issue, which is to say that we are realistically considering the solutions necessary.

All the measures introduced by the government are certainly meant, one way or the other, to fight poverty, and it is with pride that we, members of the party in power, can say that the whole social legislation of Canada is the work, the exclusive work of the Liberal party.

Mr. Speaker, one could make witty remarks about the hon. member's motion. I wonder whether this would not be a means of encouraging middle-age urge. Some old men are on the look-out for young blond girls, because they know that at 70 or 75, besides receiving a pension, they will be able to double their pension if they find an attractive young wife. That would be encouraging middle-age urge and it would be unwholesome.

But to speak in a more serious vein, let us say that in addition to all the expenditures made by the government in the field of social security, if the measure proposed by the hon. member were passed immediately, the following expenditures would have to be incurred in the following order. First of all, it would be necessary to institute a full inquiry to determine the exact number of married men entitled to old age pension benefits and that of the men whose wives are younger and not entitled to those benefits. According to a rough estimate, I think that such an expenditure would total $150 million. Moreover—there I come to the idea of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) whose answer is this. The widows of the same age, that is those who are not yet entitled to old age security benefits but who are of the same age as the wives of those who are entitled to them, would have to be granted that pension according to the same principle. This would mean an expenditure of about $140 million added to the expenditure I have mentioned of $150 million for a total of $290 million.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the widows, we have to deal with the bachelors and the old maids whose age is between 60 and 65, list them and give them an old age pension to which people aged 68—67 this year—will be entitled. That would be an additional expenditure of about $50 million always approximately. On the whole, this means that the motion introduced by the hon.

member will involve an additional expenditure of $340 million.

Can the hon. member tell us exactly what budget expenditures will have to be cut to find these $340 million. If the hon. member, for instance, who is entitled to post offices this year in his constituency, were to tell us that he does not want those post offices but that the money should be earmarked for the spouse of those entitled to old age pension, that they should be given this money, that the post offices would be cut off, then we are all for it. If the hon. member is asking us to cut down on the building of television stations in his riding, we will. If the hon. member has other works which should be carried out in his riding we shall cut all that. All he has to do is to indicate clearly where he wants us to cut down in his riding. Let him tell us whether he wants to give up his salary and we will be very happy to oblige.

As far as I am concerned, I would be highly in favour of cutting the hon. member's salary. That does not affect me, Mr. Speaker, but it might affect others, because when one has no money, it does not change anything to have less, because one has none at all. Perhaps the hon. member is a rich man; I do not know whether he would accept to have his salary reduced, but I say to him that, personally, I look with favour upon the reduction of hon. members' pay.

I am very frank with the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. The leader of the Ralliement Créditiste was the first to say, on a television program broadcast throughout the province, that $18,000 was too high a salary for members. I wonder when the member gave up part of his indemnity, gave it to charity.

All this to say that demagoguery is easy, that it is easy to say that members receive too high a salary, that farmers are not as well paid. Still, when the time comes for action, we see that those who preach great principles with ardour show far less sincerity in applying them.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I say the member has a very generous idea, which deserves to be studied with care, but those who are responsible for the administration are entitled to make what normal objections come up from the point of view of practical application, of budgetary economic realities. They must make people understand that there are financial problems which need to be tackled, and knowing as I do the goodwill of the hon. member, I am convinced he will be the first to co-operate and to admit that, for the time being, his proposal cannot be taken into consideration, precisely because of the present budget situation.

[Mr. Choquette.]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to second the motion of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise). This motion is rightly called for, in my estimation, because we must ask that a pension be paid to those people who do not receive any, because, under the present system that governs us, credit and full income have been taken away from the people through taxation and assessment, also through unemployment caused, in fact, by the system applied by the hon. members on the other side.

Unemployment was rife for 10, 15 years, for decades, then was followed by the war. After all that, an extreme burden was placed on everyone through various taxes and assessments. Taxpayers saw their whole income taken away from them, and the reason why everyone is penniless and clamours for wage increases, it is that people are no longer able to live, having been fleeced by previous administrations. The Liberals are in power—and when the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) says that it feels good to be with the opposition—well, if it feels that good, I suggest that he resign and come with the opposition. It is easier to be with the opposition? The way things are, nothing can be done. He says that there is nothing for him to do on the government side, and that anything can be done on the side of the opposition? Well, he should come with his wise suggestions to the opposition side.

I do not know what is wrong with him, but anyhow he says there is nothing he can do about the economic situation, to find funds. The Créditistes are talking about the Bank of Canada, he says, but would it not be better to lend money interest free through the Bank of Canada to finance public goods, instead of merely encouraging the big concerns and the big financiers, whose profits amount to billions every year?

I could name institutions which have billions in revenue every year but which pay nevertheless about a quarter of the taxes paid by the small taxpayer. At this time and in the present system—not the Social Credit system—the little people are the ones who pay taxes. The big shots are given the right to all sorts of reserve funds: hidden reserves, direct reserves, indirect reserves. They also enjoy the right to every kind of depreciation. The tax schedule is terribly unfair.

There are great injustices, but the hon. member does not mention them. If he wanted to be honest, he would simply tell us: the money is not to be found. Then, I would answer him: Think about the $18 billion surplus that has been capitalized this year and will amount to $22 billion in 1967-68. It is possible in some places to find a few millions in order to enable certain people to live decently. Under our present system, we would not have to tax everybody in general, to keep on accumulating debts, to increase the budget, to go deep into debt and to have a deficit of over $1 billion this year.

We have had deficits since the end of the war. The member for Lotbinière tells us that it is all right to borrow money in wartime and to spend it. But we should do the same in peacetime. If it is permissible to live in times of war, while killing our fellow-men, it should be all the more so in times of peace when it is the right time to live. When the time comes to live, all we are given is taxes and more taxes.

When old age pensions are increased, taxes are increased also by about one and one-half times what is needed for those pensions, because the coffers of the government must be filled and deficits reduced.

When there is a deficit, when the administration is always financed by taxes, when no solution is found to manage and promote the economy, at least you should have the courtesy of not laughing at those who have found solutions and who can prove it with figures in black and white. I can erase Canada's debt within ten years and reduce taxes by 50 per cent. Is that enough for the hon. member? Can he find such solutions himself? No, but he finds that ridiculous. The present debt is ridiculous and the present taxes are also ridiculous.

Since I do not want to kill this motion, I conclude by saying that I strongly support it. I commend its sponsor and ask that the question be put.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, we have just a few minutes left. I just want to say in those few moments that the attitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who finds in this motion a principle with which he agrees comes as a surprise to me. I should like him to show me what kind of a principle is featured in this motion, which says: If one spouse receives something, his partner must receive the same thing.

For too long, there has been an effort in this house to destroy the basis, the fundamental principle of our social security, which is not the material and financial needs of the individual, but all social security measures considered as assistance, whether they be directly related to our national income, our national product and our general resources.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, when a motion of this kind is introduced, I know they are presented with honourable intent, but it really makes me wonder, and this is directed to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it is quite proper, and also quite easy, to approve everything when one is seated on the other side of the house, it is all in the game.

But I really wonder why, if he has a sense of responsibilities, and above all the ability to set priorities, he did not have the courage to stand and say in this house: This principle cannot be accepted.

The opposition tells us: You spend too much. The N.D.P. tell us exactly the same thing, and I have known it for quite a long time. Every time there is talk of increasing one thing, everything must be increased; increase on the one hand and spend less on the other. Why, he should join the Social Credit party. If that party really wants to set up priorities, what then is it doing with that policy? Of course, it can be quite fair. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, my—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting house leader whether we are correct in assuming that the business for tomorrow, Friday and Monday will be as has already been announced?

Mr. Nicholson: No change is contemplated, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 2, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ROYAL ASSENT TO MARK ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, on Monday, November 6 we mark the one hundredth anniversary of the first sitting in the first session of the first parliament of Canada, and it has been decided to take note of this occasion by holding a ceremonial royal assent.

The house will meet as usual at 2.30 in the afternoon, and I am given to understand that the various party leaders will make suitable remarks following which we will go ahead with our ordinary proceedings, which will be interrupted at about four o'clock for the purpose of proceeding to the Senate and the giving of royal assent.

[Translation]

The hon. members have no doubt already received an invitation which the Speakers of the Senate and of the House of Commons have sent to a reception which will be held today from 6 to 8 p.m. in Confederation Hall.

I am also advised that a film on the parliament buildings will be shown in the railroad committee room at 1.30 p.m. for the English version and at two o'clock for the French version.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

PROVISION FOR NAME OF SITTING CANDIDATE TO HEAD BALLOT

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): I beg leave to introduce Bill No. C-178 entitled: "An Act to Amend Canada Elections Act (Form of Ballot)".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in order to identify clearly to the voters the candidate representing the population of a constituency, this bill asks that the outgoing member be listed at the top of the ballot.

This position on the ballot would help to curtail the tricks of some petty politicians who might try to run in the same riding, an opponent having the same name as the former member.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (2:40 p.m.)

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

PROVISION FOR LIMITATION OF POWERS OF SENATE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-179 entitled "An Act to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (Grants of Aids and Supplies)".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to include, under section 53 of the British North America Act, standing order 63 of the house which stipulates that it would be advisable to insert in the constitution rather than in the standing orders the restrictions laid upon the Senate.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY STATE SECRETARY RESPECTING MANAGEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister believe that the sweeping indictment of the C.B.C. management and board of directors by the Secretary of State on a television appearance, when she accused management of rottenness and the board of having been "buffaloed" will help his efforts to recruit qualified people for the presidency and vice presidency of the corporation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there was anything sweeping about this statement.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Does the minister wish to leave unrepentant her blanket accusation that C.B.C. management is rotten—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had some doubt about the original question. The hon. member knows he can ask questions relating to statements outside the house only of the Prime Minister, and can ask only if such is government policy. I am not sure whether this is what the hon. member wanted in asking his first question, but his supplementary is purely argumentative.

Mr. Fairweather: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that for the past two years she has been the minister answering to the house for the C.B.C., may I ask her when it first came to her attention that there was some rotten management in many places in the C.B.C.; whether she drew these instances to the attention of the C.B.C. officials, and what response she received from them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that the comment I made about the question put by the hon. member for Royal applies equally to this question. Hon. members cannot ask questions about statements made outside the house except of the Prime Minister, and then only to determine whether they represent government policy.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I can readily—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not asking a question about policy. The minister has made a very sweeping indictment regarding the administration of an agency of the government for which she is responsible. I am asking the minister now whether these instances came to her attention during the past two years and whether she drew the attention of this agency to the fact that there was rotten management. I am not asking for a statement of policy, I am asking the minister what she has done and what response she has received from the agency in question.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as restated appears more in order than the question asked in the first instance. I shall allow the minister to answer.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I am not responsible for the C.B.C. in the way that responsibility might be construed from the hon. member's question.

As to the substance of what he is asking I have, as is my responsibility, come to know more and more about this corporation, as about other agencies for which I have reported to parliament, over the past two years. It is really in the past two weeks that from some exceptionally knowledgeable people I have been given some examples which cause the use of language which might otherwise be considered too colourful.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: Such instances have not been brought to the attention of the individuals concerned since the bill is now before the house and there is at least a reasonable probability that within the next few weeks or months there will be some changes in personnel and presumably some very great changes within the corporation's management.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the blanket nature of the minister's denunciation, and since there may be those who are not responsible for rotten management, does the minister intend to be more specific and give the house or the broadcasting committee more information regarding this matter?

Miss LaMarsh: While my present inclination is that when the new appointments are made both as to board and senior management the most efficient course would be for those individuals who have brought me this information to discuss the matter with the new appointees. This is a matter of internal management and should be corrected inside the corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the hon. Secretary of State.

When the hon. minister states that most of the people in charge of programs must be radicals, progressists interested in the lesser values and all that evolves, in short, that type of alert people, does she mean that only radicals can produce interesting programs on television? I would like to know exactly how she feels in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member's question is out of order.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister as a supplementary question whether he approves of the statement of the Secretary of State, which in the meantime smears everybody in the C.B.C.

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend has been in this house for a long time, and he knows that question is out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, it is not half as out of order as the smear by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Fairweather: The indictment of the Secretary of State was out of order and grossly unfair.

Mr. Knowles: And the Prime Minister approves it, too.

[Later:]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State this question. As the C.B.C. is accountable to parliament, would the minister now be prepared to disclose the name of the knowledgeable people she mentioned; and were they working within the framework of the C.B.C.?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry my hon. friend was not listening earlier.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour and arises from the statement by the governor of the Bank of Canada that inflation in Canada has been caused mainly by the high cost of borrowing money, at high interest rates. Following this statement by the governor of the Bank of Canada does the government intend in the near future to lower interest rates for National Housing Act mortgage loans, so that at least in one sector of the economy we can begin to reduce costs?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am glad this question was asked, Mr. Speaker, since I can reiterate that the government has not set any interest rates. The government has set a ceiling under which lending institutions may operate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nicholson: Many of these institutions are lending at rates considerably below the ceiling.

Mr. Grafftey: The minister gets better all the time.

Mr. Nicholson: As a result of government action housing starts are up. As a matter of fact private funds going into housing have increased and there have been more housing starts in the last six months that in any six month period in Canada's history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Then now that the government has got half the job done, would the minister consider lowering the ceiling in order to produce an over-all beneficial effect upon the whole economy?

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): I have a question for the Minister of Labour supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Mégantic. The minister took advantage of the opportunity to make the statement that all is going well in connection with the housing situation. How can he reconcile this with the fact that there have been 30,000 fewer starts than Canada's anticipated requirement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is an argument, not a question.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSED REDUCTIONS IN ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's letter to the provincial treasurers, tabled in this house yesterday, in which he said—

> We in the federal government have already reassessed the spending programs and the lending operations of government departments and agencies for the balance of the current fiscal year and for next year.

Inquiries of the Ministry

—will the minister advise the house when he intends to announce the reductions in expenditures for the present fiscal year which are to result from the reassessment he has made?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): As I have said on a number of occasions, it is my intention to do so shortly.

Mr. Hees: Could the minister be a little more specific and advise us what he means by "shortly"?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now rephrasing the question he has already asked.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Will the hon. gentleman do so today, before the guillotine falls on the estimates tonight?

Mr. Pearson: A 30-day guillotine.

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. Estimates are simply a ceiling on the amounts which can be spent. They are not always spent, and they very seldom are.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister advise the house how we are to reconcile the statement just made by the Minister of Finance that there have been reductions in this year's estimates with the statement by the President of the Treasury Board the day before yesterday that there have been no changes in this year's spending plans?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That reconciliation is quite simply made.

Mr. Fulton: The Prime Minister says it is quite simple. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would help us by giving a short answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is obviously a debate.

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister of Finance has just told us that estimates are rarely all spent. In these circumstances can he explain to us why it is necessary to have deficits?

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH EAST GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him whether negotiations are currently under way, either on the part of the wheat board or any other Canadian agency, with the government of East Germany or any agency of that government for the sale of wheat under a long term agreement.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The wheat board is in communication with agencies of the East German government in connection with our existing contract, but we are not negotiating any new contract at the present time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED INCREASED USE OF SENATE COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister based on letters I repeatedly receive from various persons who suggest that royal commissions be appointed to inquire into this and that. I usually reply that royal commissions are becoming more and more expensive and that a long time elapses before their reports are published.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question, not give us a reply to his own question.

Mr. Herridge: My question is this. Is the Prime Minister not of the opinion that in view of the good work done by committees of the Senate in connection with land use, the Criminal Code and so on, more use might be made of committees of the Senate to investigate problems which arise from time to time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Questions asking for an expression of opinion are not in order.

AIR TRANSPORT

TORONTO—REFUSAL OF LANDING RIGHTS TO ROYAL DUTCH AIRLINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of today's report that the government of The Netherlands has expressed its intention to abrogate its current air agreement with Canada because of the refusal of the Canadian government to grant landing rights to Royal Dutch Airlines at Toronto international airport, will the minister give reconsideration to the government's decision in this regard so that air transport between Canada and The Netherlands will not be greatly curtailed or even terminated? I ask this question because of the many thousands of Canadians of Netherlands origin living within a few hundred miles of Toronto who use this air service constantly.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would be surprised if The Netherlands government terminated the bilateral agreement. If at any time that should be the case notice would have to be given. I believe the service at the present time is quite satisfactory to both parties involved, and I hope in the years to come it will continue to provide the well known connection between our two countries.

Mr. Nesbitt: As a supplementary question, has not the expressed intention of The Netherlands government been brought to the attention of the minister today?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, it was, Mr. Speaker, but the subject is much too complicated to discuss at length on the orders of the day.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINNIPEG—LAY-OFF OF WORKERS AT CEMENT PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and his parliamentary secretary may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government, through the Department of Manpower and Immigration, has any plans to aid in the plight of 112 employees of the Canada Cement Plant at Fort Whyte, in Winnipeg, who learned this week that they are going to be laid off their jobs for the next four months starting at the end of November?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to discuss this with the minister.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—REPORTED CONDITION OF BROADCASTING STUDIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Has the minister received complaints to the effect that the C.B.C.'s studio 43 located at the back of the Laurentian hotel in Montreal looks like an abandoned barn and has been a public hazard for at least three years?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wants to call the attention of the government to a situation which, in his opinion, has been existing for three years, I do not think the question is that urgent.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I am asking this question in the house because I want the press and the public to know that studio 43 in Montreal looks like an abandoned barn.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has now made his representations.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED DELAY IN REFUND OF CORPORATION INCOME TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It relates to the special refundable 5 per cent corporation income tax, which I understand comes to about $220 million. In his attempts to curb inflation has the minister considered postponing the repayment schedule of that refundable tax, which presumably is to start in December?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a question of government policy, and government policy in a matter like this is disclosed when decisions are made.

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA—PROTECTION OF SHAREHOLDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance regarding the position of shareholders in the Bank of Western Canada. In the light of the fact that shareholders are in this position as the result of the granting of a bank charter by parliament, could the minister say whether the government has any plans to protect innocent shareholders, that is those outside the powerful groups now struggling for control with respect to the bank?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have explained to the house, I believe on a number of occasions, the inspector general of banks took special precautions to see that the assets of the bank were protected during this period of uncertainty.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

INQUIRY AS TO NAMING OF APPOINTED COUNCIL MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Northwest Territories legislative council is to sit less than two weeks from now, when does the government intend to name the five appointee members who are to sit on that council, in order that they will have an opportunity to study legislation coming before its next session?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I would hope very shortly, Mr. Speaker, and before the council meets.

NATURAL GAS

CANADIAN OBSERVERS AT U.S. UNDERGROUND EXPLOSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wish to draw to his attention an experiment of vital importance planned by the United States atomic energy commission involving the use of an underground atomic explosion scheduled to take place in the San Juan basin on November 14. If the project is successful the developed natural gas reserves of the United States could be increased by as much as 100 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he has to ask a question. I have the impression that this is more a statement than a question.

Mr. Ballard: I am just at the point of asking the question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the impact this experiment could have on the future production of Canadian natural gas, does the minister plan to send an official of his department to observe and report on this experiment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, an invitation has been received by the National Energy Board and is now being considered by the chairman, who has just returned from hearings in Vancouver.

[Mr. Sharp.]

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF NEW APPLICATION FORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I intended to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but I will address it to his parliamentary secretary who will perhaps take it as notice. Is the purpose of the new form that is being used or authorized by the department, requiring applicants for immigration to Canada to state their social and political affiliations, to open the gates a little wider to immigration from behind the iron curtain and to simplify security screening?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think this question is of general nature and could very well be placed on the order paper.

INDUSTRY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM SALE OF VICTORIA MACHINERY DEPOT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in response to questions raised in the last few days by the hon. members for Vancouver-Burrard and Vancouver East in connection with the lay-off of some 150 workers from the Victoria Machinery Depot Company, I can report that the department's discussions with the company indicate that the employees affected will be phased out gradually.

My information is that given the present level of activity in the shipbuilding industry in the area, it would be very difficult to keep the laid off crew working together on another project. We have made arrangements for their registration in keeping with their individual lay-off dates. The full services of our Canada manpower centres will be available to these men, including training and mobility provision if the workers so wish.

SYDNEY, N.S.—ASSISTANCE OF FEDERAL OFFICIALS IN STEEL PLANT CLOSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether Mr. Harry J. Waisglass, former United Steelworkers of America research director, who I understand is now a member of the Prime Minister's staff, has been selected by the Prime Minister to lend his talents to assist in consideration of the steel problem at Sydney?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware I have nobody of that name on my staff.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria asked me a question a few moments ago. I do not want to mislead him in my reply. Mr. Waisglass is not on my staff. He is a member of the special secretariat in the Privy Council office. I think they report to parliament through me. It is true that he has been transferred to the Department of Labour, where he is now one of the senior officials. I know his qualifications for the work, but I am not yet sure whether he is actually going to be used in the Cape Breton discussions.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Prime Minister for not splitting hairs any longer. Would the Prime Minister do his utmost to have this man who is knowledgeable in steel and steel work put on this most grave problem in Sydney?

Mr. Pearson: I shall be very glad to do what I can in that respect. If we can use him in an appropriate capacity, naturally we will be glad to do so.

FREIGHT RATES

CREAM—REQUEST FOR RESCISSION OF RECENT INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that starting today the dairy farmers and dairy producers of western Canada who ship by rail will be required to pay $6.35 to ship a can of cream, as a result of the increased freight rates; and what plans has the minister to rectify this situation?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A similar question was asked previously by the hon. member for Mackenzie and other hon. members, and the matter was considered during the adjournment proceedings.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO ADVANCED PILOT TRAINING PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Canada's requirements for commercial pilots on our six major air lines will increase by some 1,100 each year, has the transport department initiated any study to ascertain what may be done to establish advanced pilot training programs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is of a very general nature, and I suggest to the hon. member that it could well be placed on the order paper. If there is an emergency in the hon. member's question which escapes me, the hon. member could give notice and have this matter considered during the adjournment debate.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ALLEGED VIOLATION BY RUSSIA OF UNIVERSAL DECLARATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether he has received a letter dated October 31 from national Canadian organizations whose membership is from eastern and central Europe, in which they ask whether Canada will adhere to their request and commence diplomatic action in connection with the violation of the universal declaration of human rights by the Soviet union.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall receiving such a message but I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. After the Prime Minister has had a chance to look at this request will the Secretary of State for External Affairs take direct action through our delegation at the United Nations to bring this matter to the attention of the general assembly?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to immediately look at the problem posed by my hon. friend's question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE LOANS FOR AGRICULTURAL FAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In a press interview the minister stated that legislation for loans to agricultural fairs and exhibitions for the construction of multi-purpose buildings is likely to be dealt with this session. Can the minister inform the house when such legislation will be introduced?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it will be introduced as soon as the financial condition of the country is such that these loans should be brought in, which we anticipate, in view of the government's wise measures, will be soon.

TURKEYS—PROTECTION AGAINST EXPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has any formula been found to protect the turkey producers in Canada in respect of importations from abroad?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met with turkey growers' association representatives from all over Canada yesterday. Representatives of the government are on their way to Washington today to discuss this matter with officials there. I am very hopeful that action can be taken which will alleviate the difficult position in which turkey growers find themselves.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO STAFF HOLIDAY ON REMEMBRANCE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this morning a number of the employees of the house requested that I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask whether the arrangements made for a civil service holiday on Remembrance day will also apply to the employees of the House of Commons.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the house sits on that day, as I hope it will, it will naturally require certain assistance. But we will do our best to meet the point of view expressed by my hon. friend.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

FINANCE

COMPENSATION TO VENDING MACHINE OPERATORS FOLLOWING COINAGE CHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the interest caused by the intention to increase the alloy content of Canadian coins in the near future, in view of reports that have been written in United States and Canadian newspapers, and because the businessmen who employ automatic vending machines will lose money when coinage of a different composition is used, is the government contemplating some sort of compensation to these businessmen while the change in coinage is in process?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I will redraft my question, Mr. Speaker, because it is fairly urgent in that it involves a period of perhaps only a few days. These people will be losing millions of dollars, and they are looking for an answer.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had a number of discussions with this industry. Our decisions will be made known shortly, I hope.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED AGENDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

In view of the appearance on the Quebec political foreground of Mr. Faribault, who convinced the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) and the Progressive Conservative party to recognize the two-nation theory, I should like to ask the minister if the Quebec government has expressed its intention to include, in the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference, the recognition of the two-nation concept, in accordance with Mr. Daniel Johnson's theories?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel that this is an argument rather than a question.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, if I may rephrase my question. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill)—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that the question is in order. If the hon. member believes that there is an emergency, he may give notice thereof.

Mr. Choquette: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would rather answer now than come back at ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the house will allow the hon. minister to answer—

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is very simple, Mr. Speaker. I think the Progressive Conservative party should be given a little time to convince the Union Nationale party to become "bi-national".

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister read the speeches of his leader when the latter recognized the two-nation concept in Canada, and especially his 1961 speech in this respect, at the time he was leader of the opposition?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I feel that the decision I made originally was quite justified, and I suggest that this supplementary question should be considered during the adjournment debate.

TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO HARBOUR DEVELOPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding his recent announcement that the federal government intends to proceed with the development of the deep sea port at Roberts Bank, British Columbia. I sent the minister notice of this question. In view of the fact that his predecessor outlined an extensive program for development of facilities in Burrard Inlet, will the minister assure the house that his recent announcement does not mean the abandonment of that project announced by his predecessor?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure which project my hon. friend is referring to, but I made it very clear at the time of the announcement that the two developments would go forward together as a complement to each other. On that basis I think they can serve the needs not only of British Columbia but of all western Canada in the most effective and competitive way possible to yield to the Canadian taxpayer the greatest dollar value on the investment.

Mr. Douglas: How soon is it anticipated that the expansion and modernization of the facilities in Burrard Inlet will be under way?

Mr. Hellyer: We are proceeding on a continual basis. I announced simultaneously a $15 million development in the inner harbour on the north shore for containerization, and this will proceed immediately. I think the first berth will be available, if the engineers and others are forecasting accurately, about April 1, 1969.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO MEET REPORTED DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that Canada's trade deficit for the month of September as announced this morning is double the trade deficit we had in August, will the minister take the first opportunity on motions to advise the house what steps the government intends to take to reverse this serious trend?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker despite the difference in September this year as compared to last year, our trade performance for the year to date has been good. I believe we will attain the target of $11¼ billion that was set for this year.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question. Was the minister's answer not reminiscent of the answers given by the government prior to the disaster which occurred in 1957?

[Translation]

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Would the hon. minister tell us whether it is true that, following the last transport strike in Montreal, Mrs. Jeanne Sauvé is thinking of leaving the management of the C.N.T.U.?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, in view of our recent experience in the house in having a member of the government front benches desert the service for greener fields I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, asking whether she will assure this house and the Prime Minister that no applications will be received for the presidency of the C.B.C. from members of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFFS IN QUEBEC AND MARITIMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

In connection with the lay-off of 460 employees by the C.N.R. yesterday in the St. Lawrence area, has the Minister of Transport received some complaints from labour unions or from the employees dismissed? Has he also ordered an investigation to learn the reasons of those dismissals?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression that the hon. member is repeating a question already asked in the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Since the lay-off of C.N.R. employees, the minister has contacted the C.N.R. authorities. Further to these talks, is the minister in a position to tell us whether the crown corporation has reconsidered its attitude, so that those people who were fired yesterday may keep their jobs?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the company has reiterated its position, which is that the total decline in rail traffic this year is of such substantial nature that the number of people required to provide the service is less and they feel, therefore, that these lay-offs are essential.

I think the number of lay-offs is just about in proportion to the decline in service. I also know that in some areas of the country, if not all—and I have asked them to provide these figures for me—employment in the railway system today is higher than it was a year ago. But last fall in order to meet the special circumstances of the extraordinary movements of bulk commodities, including wheat, extra men were hired. Now that the movement is less voluminous a smaller number of employees and less equipment are required than previously, and that is really the basic cause of the lay-offs at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Can the minister tell the house if the C.N.R. has given adequate notice to the minister, to the department or to the government before laying off all these workers?

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

[English]

FINANCE

LOANS BY BANKS UNDER FARM IMPROVEMENT ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask whether he has received a significant number of submissions in recent days complaining that because of the escalating interest rates in our economy the chartered banks have become very reluctant to extend loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and can he say whether the government has any plan to deal with this particular problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question is in order. The hon. member is asking whether the minister has received a significant number of complaints, and that to my mind cannot be considered an urgent question.

Mr. Schreyer: May I then rephrase the question. In view of the escalating interest rates in our economy has the Minister of Finance any evidence to show that chartered banks are becoming more and more reluctant to grant loans under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is much too general in scope, and I feel it should not be asked on orders of the day.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Has the government issued a directive to the banks to the effect that they should slow up on the issue of farm improvement loans?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED U.S. INTENTION TO IMPOSE IMMIGRATION RESTRICTIONS ON CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that for the first time in history the United States is preparing entry curbs on emigration from Canada, which at an earlier date were designated by the minister as a regressive step in Canada-United States relations, will the minister advise whether he is holding talks with the Canadian counterpart in the United States to see that these curbs will not be placed on Canadian emigration?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I should like to look at that question to make sure I understand correctly the interpretation my hon. friend wished to give to it.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFORMATION INTO CROWN CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether he can say, as is being reported, that he is giving consideration to the proposition that the post office become a crown corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Now that the minister is in receipt of the Woods report, can he inform the house when veterans may expect some action as a result?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I am not certain, Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. gentleman to say that I have seen the Woods report. Unfortunately I have not as yet seen it.

PUBLIC WORKS

OTTAWA—HEIGHT OF PROPOSED NATIONAL DEFENCE HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Now that the commencement of construction of the national defence tower in Lebreton flats has been postponed, will the government reconsider the question of the height of this proposed building in the hope that it will not be as high as the peace tower?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: I think it might be better to bring it up at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Finance for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote No. 25. This vote will be found on page 142 of the blue book. The details are found on page 154.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Tariff Board—

25. Administration, $358,000.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 25 carry?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, vote No. 25 deals with the Tariff Board, and I trust that in our discussions this afternoon we will be given some latitude because I should like to speak on a wider range of subjects than would be normally permitted. In any event I think it is quite proper that we should come back this afternoon to the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Finance.

First of all, I believe it is expected there will be some discussions concerning the Kennedy round, and I intend at the beginning of my exposé this afternoon to deal with some aspects of the Kennedy round of negotiations and some of the problems which Canada will face as a result thereof. Mr. Chairman, I have some difficulty in competing with the voices all around me.

The Chairman: Order. I wish to bring to the attention of the house that there is a little more noise in the chamber than is usual. This makes it difficult for the Chairman to hear what is being said and for the hon. member who now has the floor to make his remarks.

Mr. Lambert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. May I say first of all that I believe it is apposite for us to discuss these estimates at this time notwithstanding the fact that not so long ago we concluded the budget debate, and we also had a discussion on the estimates of the Treasury Board. However, as has been pointed out, there are some estimates of the Department of Finance to which we must come back.

I do not know how long the debate will take today, but we all know that the guillotine is to fall at the end of the day and there are still a number of points that have not been answered by the government in any way. For instance, the minister has not indicated, even when he had the chance to do so this afternoon in answer to a question put by my colleague the hon. member for Kamloops, what expenditures would be cut back in this year's estimates. In speaking of this business of dressing up the so-called cutbacks in the estimates I am reminded of an article in today's Globe and Mail entitled "Ottawa Not Retrenching Despite Talk of Pruning" written by Fraser Robertson. We find there the following statement:

> On close examination, and it need not be so very close at that, it becomes plain that the government is not really bent upon retrenchment. So far, about all it has done is restrain ministers who were determined to increase departmental expenditure.

This point of view has been put forward in the house time and time again in the last few days.

The real reason I am glad to see the minister here this afternoon is that if we waited until next week to see him we might have difficulty in finding him, because he is likely to be in Edmonton. The house might be interested to know that the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Transport and now I understand the Registrar General are all to be in Edmonton on November 10 and 11. I understand there is to be a Liberal annual meeting there at that time. I rather suspect this will be a trotting out of show horses or an appearance before the public in the light of possible events in the coming year. I would be interested to know whether each of them will have a hand on the wreath which presumably may be laid by one of them at the cenotaph in Edmonton on November 11. It will probably take the combined strength of all three of them to carry it.

To come back to the Kennedy round, I should like to caution the minister against any haste in introducing legislation with regard to any agreements concerning anti-dumping legislation, or any haste in deciding what Canada will do with regard to the Kennedy round. Let us face it; the key to the success of the Kennedy round lies with the United States. Canada, because of its peculiar trading pattern, cannot engage in across the board or straight line reductions in tariffs, and has had to do it on a bilateral basis with the United States or on a commodity for commodity basis.

However, the Kennedy round negotiations were instituted by the late President Kennedy as a result of a presidential election. President Johnson has inherited them. Unfortunately, the presidency does not control everything in the United States. Recently we have seen efforts being made in the congress, and particularly in the senate, toward the introduction of measures which call for the imposition of quotas on the importation of certain commodities in which Canada is very interested. In fact, if these measures reach the status of law, then frankly the whole of the Kennedy round is literally washed out. In connection with steel, oil and a great many other commodities in which Canada is vitally interested, there is no doubt that the action now being taken will frankly sweep away any hope of benefit that Canada may have had as result of the Kennedy round. I say to the minister, therefore, there is no rush for us to get on the statute books those changes which we might be required to make as a result of the Kennedy round.

Having made that point, I would like to go back to some other things I have said in the house. First of all, the other day I asked the minister, in view of rumours, whether it was true a budget would be presented in the next few weeks. Reading between the lines of some of the speeches made by the minister of late, as well as the speech made by the governor of the Bank of Canada yesterday, I think there is a good deal of truth in these general forecasts about a budget within the next three or four weeks. If this is to be the case, then I say to the minister and the government house leader who is present today, it is high time we dealt with the budget resolutions and the bills flowing from them arising out of the June budget before we get into the nonsensical position of having a new budget without having dealt with the measures arising out of the June budget. In the light of economic conditions in the country, these budgetary measures are even more important than some of the other legislation which seems to have been given priority.

For instance, I think of the bill dealing with capital punishment which seems to have been given priority. The question of capital punishment will engender considerable debate in the house. The broadcasting measure is another which will take a large share of the time of the house. There are others, too, in the hopper that are given greater priority than the budget resolutions. I say to the Minister of Finance and his colleagues that immediately upon the termination of the debate on the broadcasting measure, which I think we should complete for the sake of orderly discussion of business, we should then move to the budget resolutions and the bills that flow from them before we do anything else.

Since the minister spoke in the budget debate, a great feeling of uneasiness has developed in the country. I need only point, for instance, to the speech which was delivered by the chairman of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. I trust the minister will see fit to comment on Mr. McKinnon's remarks because they are a damning indictment of government policy. I will not say fiscal policy because there is no such policy. It was rather strange to have the minister tell the House of Commons he was quite sensitive to criticism of government policies, did not think the strong language used by Mr. McKinnon was helpful and rather thought the situation might be worsened. On the other hand, I do not believe Mr. McKinnon said anything much different from what was implied in the speech by the governor of the Bank of Canada yesterday. I am not going to go through Mr. McKinnon's speech, but here it is. I know he has been commenting over a period of years, and I intend to agree—

Mr. Sharp: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member who is beginning the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Finance today was, I believe, fairly relevant in his earlier observations to the item under discussion, namely the Tariff Board. He made some quite relevant remarks about the Kennedy round. However, I believe he is beginning to stray into a much larger subject. The reason I raise the point now, Mr. Chairman, is that if I let these remarks pass it may be suggested I am in agreement that they are pertinent to the item under discussion. As the hon. gentleman himself has pointed out, we have had one day of general debate on the Department of Finance. We have had a budget debate of several days' duration, which was restarted by a statement I made to provoke discussion on the current situation. This statement was debated for the full length of the budget debate. The budgetary resolutions are still to come, at which time all these comments would be quite pertinent. As I have indicated in the house, I intend to make a statement soon. I can assure members that whichever form the statement takes, it will be debatable. In other words, the government itself will see that time is available for debate.

I know some question has been raised in connection with the short time available for discussion of the remainder of the estimates. I raise the question now, Mr. Chairman, whether this is the best use of that time, and I would welcome from you some guidance to the committee on whether the debate should be permitted to go on in this way.

The Chairman: May I point out to the committee that I have been listening to the remarks that have been made. I know we are on vote No. 25 of the estimates of the Department of Finance. Usually there is a rather general discussion on vote No. 1, but on vote No. 25 I would expect the committee to confine its remarks to the item which is before the committee.

Mr. Lambert: I fully realize, Mr. Chairman, that I have strayed slightly but I indicated at the start of my remarks that I might want to stray somewhat from item 25. I was hoping the minister might, under certain tolerant circumstances, perhaps allow a little wider debate. Since he and you, Sir, have called me to order, I am going to comply and I will limit my remarks to item 25 dealing with the Tariff Board. This involves the levels of tariff and perhaps some of the customs procedures. Admittedly, these are under the Minister of National Revenue, but it is rather difficult to separate the two.

Before I was brought back to order I was discussing the Kennedy round. I am hopeful that we will have a further opportunity to discuss the Kennedy round, and I agree with the proposal of my friend that this should be done before the banking and commerce committee or a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons. Here I come back to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kootenay West, that perhaps this would be a good opportunity to appoint a joint committee which could proceed at a rather more leisurely pace, since the house standing committee itself is rather heavily overburdened with work in the future to tackle the Kennedy round. In addition, I believe that as a result of the negotiations certain industries have already made representations to the government with regard to the Kennedy round, and I think any others who are interested should be able to make their representations to the government on the basis of what they see ahead for them.

A number of our industries are going to be rather hard hit. I think primarily of secondary industry. As an indication of this, Mr. Chairman, I saw a report this morning about a very fine secondary industry based in Letbridge, a city in southern Alberta, which as a result of action by the United States government in the imposition of a tariff is now reported to close its doors. This firm says it has lost over $100,000 since the month of September. It manufactures belts for agricultural equipment. The complexities of the United States tariff machinery and its meshing with the provisions governing the importation into Canada of farm machinery mean that in the supplying of belts for agricultural machines brought into Canada from the United States the Canadian manufacturer of the belts is now paying a duty even though the machines are brought back into Canada duty free. With an imposition of about 17½ per cent duty on these belts the Canadian manufacturer is being shut out of the market.

Here again, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make the strongest representation to the minister that in our dealings with the United States there should be some relaxation in the non-tariff barriers imposed on Canadian trade with the United States. It looks as though the authorities are not so assiduous in the application of these non-tariff barriers because there are all sorts of interpretations in specific cases. We observe these on our side as well, and I hope that we can eliminate this as much as possible.

Before closing my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether before he concludes today he could give us a list of the references to the Tariff Board that are still outstanding and tell us when he expects reports on them. He might also indicate to us the commodities that he is thinking of referring to the Tariff Board in the immediate future for examination, so as to see what is their position within our tariff structure and whether certain industries should be protected or certain tariffs should be removed.

Let us face it, Mr. Chairman. In the matter of the importation into Canada of certain productive machinery I feel we are doing a disservice to the whole of the Canadian economy by placing a general tariff on these items. In other words, our approach is negative. The approach is that all machinery shall be subject to a 17½ per cent duty with the exception of certain kinds.

I am wondering whether this philosophy is really pertinent today. One thing we in Canada will have to face in the future is an increase in our manufacturing productivity. Lord only knows, vis-à-vis the United States Canada's relative position has worsened in the past several months as a result of a number of factors. As far as we in Canada are concerned, with our heavy reliance upon export trade and the seemingly competitive market within Canada from foreign goods, we are doing ourselves a disservice by imposing tariffs and taxes on production machinery which only serves to increase the cost of production.

One may argue about the various elements that enter into the cost of production. However, there again, if there is good will on the part of organized labour in accepting improvements in methods of production, if management faces up to the challenge to organize itself, to be creative, to really develop and conduct research into the best methods of production, and if government policy does not saddle industry with a crushing burden of taxation, then it might be possible to maintain our position in the economic markets of the world. If not, Mr. Chairman, nothing we in Canada can do will assist us in this regard. We can provide for the most salutary type of welfare programs based on productivity, etc., but if we are unable to sell our commodities and there is a curtailment in economic activity, our productivity will decline and the whole exercise will have been for nothing.

I have asked for specific information from the minister, Mr. Chairman. I hope he is able to give us some clarification of the government's program with regard to the Kennedy round, and I also hope he will take heed of the remarks that I have made in connection with the taxation of industry and the imposition of artificial customs barriers.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I thought I might answer briefly the specific questions put to me by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He will find an answer to his first question at page 1143 of Hansard for June 12, which he must have forgotten when asking the same question now.

Mr. Lambert: That is possible.

Mr. Sharp: At that time I gave a list of the references to the Tariff Board that were still outstanding. The situation remains unchanged though we have had more of the chemical reference reports in the meantime.

As I said in answer to a question on the orders of the day, it is my intention to table on Monday or Tuesday of next week the resolutions on the Kennedy round which will not only include the tariff changes to which we have agreed but also the timetable for the implementation of the changes. In addition, there will be some other resolutions which will give the government flexibility in dealing with these changes in the event, say, that the United States shows any tendency to delay the implementation of theirs. We hope this will not happen, but I think the committee will agree with me that some such provisions are desirable.

I find myself in general agreement with the philosophy expressed by my hon. friend. Indeed, since we were both born westerners, I am sure that we have inherited some of this philosophy. I agree that wherever possible we should use the tariff, that we should use all means to improve our own costs of production and that wherever possible we should avoid taxing the means of production. That is one of the reasons for the government's step to eliminate the sales tax on production machinery. We did that as soon as we could afford it.

Mr. Lambert: That tax should never have been imposed. May I ask another question? In his answer, and I thank the minister for it, he did not say which committee will examine the government's resolutions. Will that be the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs or a joint committee of the other place and this house?

Mr. Sharp: It had been my intention to refer this matter, of course, to the committee of ways and means. I can say this much now. The resolutions consist of a book of several hundred pages. I am open to all suggestions as to how to deal with the matter when I table the resolutions and move the motion.

Mr. Lambert: Why ways and means?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Edmonton West I had hoped that you would be more lenient in permitting discussion of these estimates on a wider basis rather than confining it to vote 25. After all, the minister has not spoken on these estimates since June 12 last. His remarks of June 12 are interesting reading now. He was more optimistic then than he seemed to be today. Changes have taken place.

Since Your Honour has said that we must confine ourselves to the item under discussion, the Tariff Board, I wish to make some comments about the probable effect of the Kennedy round if, indeed, as the hon. member for Edmonton West has suggested, it will be effective in the face of projected developments in the United States congress. I and other members on this side of the house have told the minister on a number of occasions that while the Kennedy round is welcome, nevertheless we should not overlook the problem that it will create for Canadian industry.

I was interested to see—and I will not say more since I do not know whether the newspaper report I saw was reliable—that the ideas of the present Minister of Finance with regard to the Canada Development Corporation are different from those of his predecessor. Apparently the present minister intends to use the funds that will be accumulated by the Canada Development Corporation to reorganize and rationalize Canadian industry along the lines that I and other members of this party have suggested on a number of occasions in the house. Before long I hope that we shall see legislation regarding the Canada Development Corporation before the house, since it will have a great bearing on our tariff position.

I have said several times in the house that Canadian industry needs to be reorganized and restructured and that the government must take an active part in the reorganization and restructuring. It will not do to rely on guide lines and exhortations. In all probability the investment of public funds will be required in these newly grouped industries if we are to compete in the world and face the winds of competition that the Kennedy round will present to our industry. I hope that before long the minister will be more forthcoming on what his purposes are with respect to the fund.

Before these estimates are passed I hope we shall hear a commitment from the minister about the sort of statement he will make to the house on the economic condition of the country. From what he said today that statement might be made on motions. In that event only two or three of us will be permitted to comment on it. On the other hand, the minister may have in mind the presentation of measures that will enable members of the house to debate the economic condition of the country. That condition, as I said when I began talking, is radically different from that of June 12 when the minister spoke in such cheerful and optimistic terms. I am sure he would not repeat now what he said then.

I expect that we will be taking up another item before long and I hope to be allowed to make some remarks with respect to it without being ruled out of order by Your Honour.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, since we are discussing vote 25 which deals with the Tariff Board we may discuss a number of matters, I take it, which are of relevance directly, indirectly or by implication, to tariffs, trade and trade relations.

If I may deal with a point that my hon. and learned friend from Edmonton West raised with regard to the method of proceeding, I hope the minister will, after reasonable consultation with the opposition parties, provide an opportunity for the entire range of the Kennedy round proposals to be discussed in a committee.

I sometimes wonder whether the minister does not long to return to the relative security of his former portfolio. I wonder whether he would not prefer that to the more exciting portfolio he now holds. During the Kennedy round negotiations I asked him if an opportunity could be provided for the house to discuss them. I prefaced my statement by the admission that we should be careful not to endanger in any way the sensitive negotiations which were then being carried on at Geneva. Had that opportunity been provided for a general discussion and had the various components of industry in Canada had the benefit of a white paper, we would have been better prepared for the final discussions in this house and industry too would have been better prepared.

During the nine and a half years I have been a member of the house I do not think there has been an exhaustive debate on the issue of foreign trade. We have touched on the question when discussing external affairs or trade relations, but such discussion has been the tail of the kite, so to speak. We have dealt with the question occasionally on the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and on the estimates of the Minister of Finance. Nevertheless, this issue has never been raised effectively in a full scale debate.

I know that the great distinction which once existed between the major parties has become submerged in the course of time, and submerged far more deeply than I should like, coming from the place I do. I am strongly convinced that there will never be any certainty about economic conditions within the countries of this world until the whole question of international trade has been placed upon a far more manageable basis. In this light, the operations of the Tariff Board must be carefully considered and the extent to which references are made to the board must be regarded as an indication not only of the inflow of goods to this country but of the amount of exports leaving Canada. Trading relations must always be a two-way street, and in this sense I hope I shall live to see the day when the barriers which have done so much to restrict the free flow of goods to and from various parts of the world will be largely removed.

One of the most serious problems of all relates to the developing countries. Whether or not they can raise their living standards depends largely on the flow of trade, either bilateral or multilateral. Only if they are able to export can they obtain the supply of capital goods required for the development of their natural resources and the expansion of their own industries so that ultimately they are in a position to deal with the developed countries on a better basis than that which presently exists. With this in mind, it is imperative that we, for our part, should be prepared to offer substantial concessions to the developing countries with respect to the products they have to offer and allow them the exchange and the capital which they require in order to proceed with their own development.

I have the impression that the minister sympathizes with this point of view. I, for my part, believe it is an important factor in the preservation of world peace. The troubles which have arisen in Asia and Africa, and which may yet come to pass in South America, could in my view be prevented, or at least reduced to a minimum, if we were to encourage the type of trade relations which would permit a far freer flow of goods from the developing countries to countries elsewhere.

For these and other reasons, I urge the minister to make sure that the terms of reference to the committee are of the widest, enabling it to engage in a fruitful discussion of this whole field, involving consideration of the Kennedy round and the type of legislation necessary to implement it. There should be an opportunity for all those who are interested to make known their views to members of this house. In this way I suggest we shall later be able to benefit from a more intelligent discussion in this chamber as well as throughout the nation. I am hopeful, therefore, that having heard the words of wisdom poured out this afternoon the hon. gentleman will make certain that no unreasonable restriction is imposed on the type of discussion which is to take place within the committee of this house which would be seized with jurisdiction in this regard.

The question of trade relations is predicated upon not only the inflow of goods to this country, something with which the Tariff Board is directly concerned, but with the outflow of such goods, and this outflow of goods must in turn be closely connected with productivity. The question of productivity brings us to one of the main issues which confront the government today, the extent to which the fiscal policies of this country are restraining and damaging the activities of those of our people who are engaged in export.

Reference was made to this subject in the house at question time today. This is not the occasion on which to go into those exchanges in any detail, but I think the question about which our people generally are worrying most at this moment is: What is to be the fiscal policy of the government? President Roosevelt said: "We have nothing to fear except fear itself." This is what most concerns me—the psychology which is taking hold among so many of the influential and knowledgeable people who are connected with industry and labour across Canada.

What does the government intend to do? It is all very well for the minister to say, as he did in answer to a question earlier, that expenditures do not always equal the amount indicated in the estimates. One has only to look at the reports of the Auditor General year after year listing expenditures actually made compared with the amounts contained in the estimates to be persuaded to the contrary. I do not know whether there were instances of this under the former government. In any event I have not been able to find one example during the administration of the present government when expenditures were less than the amount estimated. Perhaps the minister is able to refer me to one.

Mr. Sharp: So that there may be no misunderstanding about this, I said that the government could only spend the amount of money which parliament voted, and governments very seldom spend that much. If we were to spend more than parliament voted it would be illegal.

Mr. Baldwin: I am glad to hear that. I would hate to think that the minister would try to spend more than had been provided by parliament, though I know that in the past the government has done everything possible to spend at least the amounts voted. However, I would point out that the estimates of expenditure shown in the blue book represent merely one phase of the government's expenditures. What we are worrying about now are supplementary estimates. We know that in 1966-67 a certain amount was voted in the main estimates. But we find that the government spent $1,100 million more than that through supplementary estimates. And this was quite legal.

We know how much the estimates amount to. We also know that two sets of supplementary estimates are being brought down. But what do we know about the government's intentions between now and the end of the fiscal year? Can the minister tell us that between now and March 31, 1968, the government will not bring down further supplementary estimates? If the government intends to do so, can he say how much will they amount to?

We know that the government states it is doing this and that in pruning expenditures. Sometimes I think the minister must appreciate the task which Hercules undertook when he had to clean out the Augean stables as he attempts to persuade his colleagues to cut their estimates. Later on we will know how successful he has been when the blue book containing the estimates for the next year is presented. However, we do not want to be faced with the possibility of an extra $1 billion or $1½ billion in the form of supplementary estimates following presentation of the blue book. What the people of Canada need from the government is the assurance that this will not happen, that when the reduced estimates are presented they will not be substantially augmented by supplementaries before the end of the next fiscal year. In my opinion such an assurance would have a great effect in restoring the atmosphere of reason and confidence which the people of the country so badly need at this time.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how the Kennedy round tariff negotiations are going to hit our economy. Are we going to reduce our tariffs and then see what the reaction of the United States, our biggest competitor, will be? Are we going to get our feet in and then not be able to get them out before we are bitten?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I give some reassurance to the hon. gentleman before he begins elaborating on this point. The resolutions that will be brought before the house next week are the result of a negotiation between Canada, the United States and other members of GATT. These are multilateral arrangements which we and the United States are bound to honour, and if we do not honour them then there are penalties involved.

Mr. Rynard: We would all like to see tariffs cut so that there would be free trade, but we know that this may hurt some of our Canadian industries and this causes me a great deal of concern. What proposals are there for dealing with underdeveloped countries? For instance, they manufacture certain goods, they are hard up for money and we have to keep giving them assistance in one form or another. Is there any plan whereby we would be able to accept their goods on a preferential basis and in turn sell them the goods we make?

Another point which bothers me is the position of factories and industries which have come from the United States to designated areas in Canada but which have their parent organizations in the United States. I realize that for every $1 million we put up they put up $4 million, and I support this program because it is a good thing. However, what will be the situation with respect to tariffs on the goods they produce and on the goods their United States counterparts produce? Will the reduction of tariffs mean a cut-back in the products produced by American subsidiaries operating in Canada? I know of one industry which said it would employ 600 people in Canada. Now it has decided to employ only 200 because its parent company in the United States is turning out the same product.

I am also concerned about the fact that Canadians are taxed about 35 per cent compared with the 30 per cent payable by citizens of the United States. Further, our productivity is 35 per cent lower than that of the United States and wages in the United States are about 32 per cent higher. How are these things going to be ironed out through changes in tariffs?

Mr. Pugh: With respect to the Kennedy round, Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal of uneasiness in regard to fair market value for duty purposes in the fruit and vegetable industry. The arrangements under which we operated previously did not take into account cost of production in the country of origin. Fruit and vegetable tariffs were based on average imports to Canada over a period of years. If we start taking the cost of production in the country of origin as the basis for duty what bothers me is that when imports to Canada are harmful to Canadian producers it is almost impossible to find out whether they actually represent the dumping of goods in Canada.

If the duty is to be based on fair market value it will be almost impossible to stop the damage being done once imports start coming in. It takes very little to depress the price of fruit and vegetables. Even a threat of imports will sometimes do it. In manufacturing the flow of goods is more normal, but fruit and vegetable imports are an end of the year operation and they can hit our industry extremely hard. I would appreciate any remarks the minister would care to make on the protective measures that he intends to incorporate into Canadian legislation.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Simcoe East asked me questions about the Kennedy round. These could be more appropriately asked when the resolutions are before the house but perhaps I might make one or two general comments.

The underdeveloped countries of the world engaged in this negotiation and in so far as the tariff cuts related to products that they export it was valuable to them. In addition, however, the underdeveloped countries of the world have been making proposals, particularly in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, UNCTAD, for preferential arrangements. These proposals have been under discussion, not in the Kennedy round and not specifically within GATT but within this new organization.

As for the tariffs that apply to American subsidiaries, Canadian tariffs apply generally to all kinds of enterprises whether they are owned in Canada, in the United States or elsewhere. My general assessment of the Kennedy round is that it is of very great net benefit to industry as a whole, although of course there will be particular industries that will be adversely affected. This I have said from time to time, and in due course the government will be bringing forward some suggestions as to how assistance might be given to such industries to enable them to move into areas of industry where opportunities have been enlarged by the Kennedy round.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary asked about the fair market value for duty purposes on fruits and vegetables. I would prefer to answer that question when we deal with the budget resolutions where this matter would be more appropriately considered and when I will have with me the Minister of National Revenue who is more concerned with the administration. I am concerned with the law and he is concerned with the administration. As the hon. member knows, both of us are involved in this question and I think it would be more satisfactory if I dealt with it later. However, I have taken note of his remarks.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister for some reassurance. Does he think that any changes contemplated will be less beneficial to Canada than is the case under the legislation now in effect? I am referring specifically to fruit and vegetables.

Mr. Sharp: I can only say that in these negotiations we have tried to make everything of more benefit to Canada. But whether everyone in every industry will agree, I am not certain. Certainly the attempt was made to enlarge the opportunities for Canadian industry. I cannot say that everybody will be satisfied. At any rate, the changes being proposed will be before the house very shortly, when there can be a general discussion of this matter.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the minister a question with regard to the possible effect of the imposition of import quotas by the United States. Would that be a contravention of the Kennedy round agreement? The reason I ask the question is that I have had correspondence with Washington and my correspondent, who has been covering the senate hearings on the first piece of such legislation, reported that while it has been headed off at the pass there is a mass of other bills in the hopper to much the same effect, any one of which might slip through at some time when people are not watching carefully. I wondered whether they could go through and not be in contravention of the Kennedy round agreement.

Mr. Sharp: In general, Mr. Chairman, I should think they would be in contravention of that agreement. If they have not been negotiated with us or other countries concerned, any changes that are made which are not in accordance with our agreements would be in contravention of an undertaking made by the United States. I think that is the general answer I must give. I am hopeful, however, that most of the threats to the Kennedy round, or most of the threats to take action which is contrary to the undertakings of the United States government, will not be realized. The information that we have is that since the United States government has made these agreements it will do everything in its power to see that they are observed.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Mint—

30. Administration, operation and maintenance, $3,100,000.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, perhaps before I start to lay out what I presume to be the scope of this vote I should get a ruling from the Chair. The vote concerns the Royal Canadian Mint and thus deals with our currency. Therefore, presumably the protection of the value of our currency is also relevant to this vote. It is on that basis that I should like to proceed to discuss the threats to the value of our currency which have been emerging in recent months and which have caused so much anxiety to the minister and members of the Canadian public. I see the minister looking thoughtful and I wonder whether he is going to raise a point of order on which you could rule, Mr. Chairman, before I proceed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I thought that some member of the house would be tempted to raise a very broad argument based on the fact that the Royal Canadian Mint makes our currency. I should point out to the committee that the Royal Canadian Mint makes only the silver and nickel coinage that serves for hand-to-hand transactions, but the great majority of the currency is of course in the form of bills which are not made by the Royal Canadian Mint. Moreover, the Royal Canadian Mint has no responsibility as such for the stability of the currency. It is concerned only with the making of coins and not with the preservation of the value of the currency. For that reason alone, Mr. Chairman, I would say it would be a very far-fetched argument to base a speech on general financial policy upon the institution that is instructed by parliament to grind out the coins.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I would point out that while it is perfectly true, as the minister says, that the mint produces only a certain proportion of our currency, nevertheless it is part of our currency and it seems to me that a discussion of the protection of the value of that currency would be in order here. For that reason I propose to make reference to the speech of the governor of the Bank of Canada, who is obviously very much concerned about the maintenance of the value of our currency and made a speech just yesterday in Winnipeg on this score. In fact, one might say that the governor of the Bank of Canada has joined the baying at the heels of the unfortunate Minister of Finance, suggesting in more, shall I say, gentle and muted terms than some others that the government's policies of expenditure are threatening the value of the Canadian currency.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I rise on the same point of order that I raised at the beginning today, and really to ask your guidance. I pointed out that there have already been several opportunities to discuss financial policy and that several more will be arising immediately. It is for this reason, and not only because the Royal Canadian Mint is not a very safe foundation upon which to base such a broad argument, that I appeal to the Chair and to hon. members, since they have so little time left to discuss many other departments that have not yet had an opportunity of defending themselves in the house, and point out that it would be a better use of the time of the house if the discussion were to be limited to the obvious intention of the items before us.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

We have devoted a day to the Department of Finance. We have had a budget debate. We still have the budget resolutions to consider, upon which a discussion of this kind would be much more in order. There will be another opportunity soon to discuss this whole matter. I appeal to hon. members as well as to the Chair. If hon. members really believe what they say, that they are being unduly restricted in their discussion of other matters that are still before us, I ask them to limit their remarks to the particular items that are here.

The Deputy Chairman: I notice that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is not rising in his place and I gather, therefore, that he does not want to pursue this point.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not intend to pursue it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, as the minister knows, I have been interested in the production by the mint of centennial coinage. I have been assured that the mint is running full blast and grinding out centennial coins. In answer to an argument I raised at ten o'clock the other night I was assured that the mint was working to its full capacity producing these coins and sending them out through the regular channels all across Canada. I have received a number of letters over the past few months, ever since I raised this question last spring, from people asking where all these coins are that are being produced and are, we are told, being farmed out all over the country.

• (4:30 p.m.)

One simply cannot go into a bank and get a silver dollar, and many Canadians want them. They are not in normal currency use but are wanted as keepsakes of the Canadian centennial year. One always has the opportunity of writing to the crown and asking for a set, but many people do not want to do that because they just want to get a silver dollar. I understand that the 50 cent piece cannot be obtained at all.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): With this government people cannot afford one.

Mr. Pugh: One would think that in view of the fact the dollar is only worth about 50 cents there would be plenty around. Without any levity at all I should like to ask the minister once again if there is going to be any production of centennial coinage after January 1 or are we going to revert to the old familiar coins produced in 1966? I should also like to ask whether there is going to be distribution of any more silver dollars and 50 cent pieces.

Here in the east there appear to be a great many more silver coins of 25 cent value and less but certainly the centennial coinage project, which I admit was a good one, has fallen far short of requirements. There should have been a direction that this currency be distributed quickly throughout Canada. I first recognized the situation when I found I could not get any centennial coins in the west. The minister suggested there had been some fault in distribution. That was in June and any fault should have been corrected quickly. The minister indicated that shipments of new coins this year took exactly the same form as last year, but he did not tell me whether the shipments of new coins also contained old coins of the type available prior to 1967.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the house that there has been an enormous demand for our coinage and particularly for silver dollars and 50 cent pieces. These are no longer being produced for ordinary use. They are being produced in sets which are sold mainly for numismatic purposes. They are no longer being produced for use by the public because the price of silver has gone up to such an extent it would no longer be economic to do so.

Let me give hon. members some figures as to actually how many silver dollars have been distributed this year. I will give the figures in relation to places from which the distributions have been made. In regard to silver dollars, and these are in dollar value, being the same, the figures are: Winnipeg, $249,000; Regina, $287,000; and Calgary, $424,000; Vancouver, $769,000; Toronto, $1,800,000; and Montreal, $1,500,000. A great many silver pieces have in fact been circulated. I am not surprised that it is very difficult to get them. I have no special privileges in this respect but my bank manager the other day asked me if I would like to have one as a memento and I took him up on his offer.

Mr. Pugh: Would you name the bank?

Mr. Sharp: To give the house an indication of the demand for other forms of currency I will give the figures for 25 cent pieces, and I refer to 1967 centennial coins. In Winnipeg the amount was $145,000, Regina, $308,000; Calgary, $372,000; Vancouver, $254,000; Toronto, $554,000 and Montreal, $1,400,000.

To show how much greater the demand was over last year, the Montreal figure of $1,400,000 compares with $355,000 for last year. That is some indication of the enormous demand there has been for coins. I am quite sure it is related somewhat to the fact that there is a special centennial issue. In any event it is not the intention to continue the centennial issue for ordinary purposes beyond the end of this year. Of course, orders put in by dealers and people who want to buy them for numismatic purposes will be filled.

Mr. Pugh: I should like to ask one more question in this regard. The minister stated that because the cost of silver had gone up the cost of producing the Canadian silver dollar had also increased, making it impractical to put these coins into general production. Is it the intention of the government to continue producing a silver dollar for general use or is this to become a collectors' item? I am referring to 1968 and thereafter.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as I have already announced it is our intention to have nickel coinage as soon as possible. However, as has been pointed out by some members, there are problems relating to vending machines. In order to bridge the gap we have issued some of the smaller coins in a 50-50 silver-copper form. As I have said, those coins will eventually, although one cannot tell the difference now, become somewhat yellower looking than the silver coins issued up to that time. Whatever form of coin we issue in 1968, we will discontinue the 1967 design. Even if we continue to mint some silver-copper coins they will revert to the pre-1967 design and the centennial issue will be unique as such. We do not propose to issue dollar and 50 cent pieces until 1968 when we will issue nickel coins. This will be authorized by the amendment to the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act which was placed before the house the other day.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to make any inquiries of the minister as I realize he is perhaps not in a position to make specific announcements about some of these matters. However, I should like to put on record some suggestions about the 1968 coinage.

Let me say at the outset that I understand that both in the United States and Canada it is impossible to predict the demand for coins. On one occasion I understand some consultants were engaged in the United States to advise its treasury department as to how it should gear its production to meet the expected demand. The advice they gave resulted in the production of about 150 per cent fewer coins than were actually demanded. I am sure the same situation exists in Canada. No one seems to be able to say what forces come into play at any given time which soak up the coins produced and distributed.

• (4:40 p.m.)

With respect to what we usually refer to as the silver dollar I should like to ask the minister to consider, if it is not too late, the minting of a silver dollar with a 50 per cent silver content as a special item, perhaps with a special design on it if there is sufficient time to do so. I understand that next year will be an important anniversary of the establishment of the Royal Canadian Mint and this would be a good way of commemorating that event. I suggest that such a dollar, even if made with the 50 per cent copper-nickel alloy that is used now in dimes and quarters, be produced in time for next year and sold by the mint as a special item, in the form of what we loosely call a proof-like dollar in collectors' idiom, for a couple of dollars a piece. I am sure this would result in a number of these coins being purchased by collectors while none of them would actually be in circulation in the business world. As a result we would have two dollars, one nickel and one half silver, with two different values. So far as I know, none of the proof-like dollars issued as single dollars in past years has ended up as currency. They have all been retained as collectors' items and are issued in a special sealed pliofilm holder.

I think that the setting of a price of $2 or thereabouts for such a coin would allow numismatists to add to the series of dollars with a silver content and would be a way of celebrating the anniversary of the mint. There is another reason which might appeal to the minister in his intensive search for income for the treasury. This would be a profitable undertaking for the mint which would not only make money from minting these dollars but also from their sale as collectors' items. I think that the practice of circulating such coins in a sealed pliofilm holder should be continued in the future because this would result in a continuity of items for collectors and would also bring profit to the mint.

I do not particularly wish to have an answer from the minister at this time because the decision would depend on the availability of silver and on whether or not it should be used in coins at all. I believe that we should be able to predict within reasonable bounds on the basis of past experience how many proof-like silver dollars might be required and sold, and we should purchase the silver in advance at its present price of $1.90 an ounce. There is every indication that silver will continue to increase in price in view of its high consumption for space activities in the United States.

The minister is well aware of these facts. However, I wished to make these comments publicly and to expand on what I have written in a letter to him so as to impress upon him the necessity of making a decision in this matter and announcing it at the earliest possible moment in the interests of the mint and of the business community.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to address a question to the minister as a follow-up to the question asked by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. The minister has said that 287,000 silver dollars were shipped to Regina for distribution. Has any arrangement been made for the distribution of these dollars across the province or are they intended only for Regina? I understand there is a great scarcity of them throughout Saskatchewan. I have received many letters with regard to this matter, as has the hon. member for the Okanagan Boundary.

At the same time I hope the minister will answer another question. I have noticed in different souvenir shops both here and in Regina that special mint sets containing a gold $20 piece which were being sold for $40 are now on sale for $72.50. Could the minister tell us the source of these supplies in view of the fact that it is so difficult for individuals to get these sets?

Mr. Sharp: The distribution of coinage is made through the banks which fulfil the needs of their customers. The Bank of Canada ensures that they are made available at various points. The amount available to Regina is presumably the amount that is available for distribution throughout the area served from Regina city.

Mr. Pascoe: They were sent by the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Sharp: That is right. I am quite sure that under the present circumstances the distribution of these silver dollars must have been very difficult because of the enormous demand for them. I gave the figures to show that in fact very large quantities have been distributed. The sets are on sale at the mint which intends to fill all orders as they are received. This is a profitable business for the mint which will continue to supply these sets until the demand is satisfied. Of course, there is no way of preventing people from paying more for these sets than the price for which they would get them from the mint.

Mr. Mongrain: I have a single question for the minister. A few minutes ago the minister indicated there has been a great increase in the sale of coins in Montreal. Has the minister any definite indication that this was due to Expo '67?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Chairman. I think that business has been very good in this country, as the government has pointed out on a number of occasions, and a great deal of coinage is necessary to finance it.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to tell the minister that I have received complaints similar to the ones about which the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre spoke. Several people have written to me and said they were unable to get these sets. Is there a possibility that a racket is being established in this connection? Why are these people not able to get the sets? These are people who simply want a set for their own collection.

Mr. Sharp: The mint has filled an enormous number of orders and it is still accepting them. I do not know whether any racket is involved but I would doubt it very much.

Mr. Herridge: I am not suggesting a racket on the part of the mint.

Mr. Sharp: Certainly not on the part of the mint. The mint does its best to ensure a fair distribution by restricting the number of sets it supplies to any particular individual until such time as the demand is satisfied.

1. Departmental administration, $1,271,000.

Item agreed to.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S OFFICE

1. Salaries and expenses of office, $2,217,000.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the Minister of Finance if he shares the views which were expressed the other day by his colleague the Secretary of State with regard to the Auditor General?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman would have to inform me of the views of the Secretary of State. I may have missed one of her utterances.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Finance for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. We will now consider the estimates of the Department of Justice.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1. Administration, including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, gratuities to the widows or such dependents as may be approved by treasury board of judges who die while in office and authority to make recoverable advances for the administration of justice on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, $13,513,800.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Chairman, as hon. members know, the estimates of the Department of Justice were examined by the standing committee on justice and legal affairs on June 27 and June 29. The standing committee examined the main estimates of the department and its report is tabled. I refer to pages 3 and 4 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence, No. 3, dated June 29, 1967. I doubt that anything I said before the standing committee bears repetition here. I am, therefore, prepared to deal with any questions hon. members care to put to me in this connection.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, in opening my remarks on the estimates of the Department of Justice I am sure that my colleagues would join me in congratulating the minister. This is the first time we have had an opportunity of congratulating him upon his appointment. I believe all of us like to see a young man get such an important portfolio. Of course, I believe it has to be thoroughly understood that when the department was divided there was not a large degree of responsibility left with the Department of Justice compared with the responsibility the department had previously.

The main responsibility of the department, of course, is the administration of justice itself. I want to deal with three points and I should like the minister to give some answers. Before doing so I should like to say a few preliminary words concerning the procedure on estimates. When I spoke on the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration I said that I was one of those who looked with some scepticism on the new rule which applies the guillotine to the consideration of estimates. When one asks the minister important questions about his department, the new rule allows no time for answers. The new gambit is to say, "I could not help it, the time ran out." Then the minister writes letters to various members and those letters are published in the newspapers. Hon. members are then able to read the answers in the newspapers but there are no further questions or explanations.

If this method is going to continue, and I cannot see any way it can be avoided if these rules remain, then so far as I am concerned the real function of the opposition to examine government expenditures is gone. After all, I think the main function of the opposition is to scrutinize every expenditure carefully and get answers from the various ministers. We have failed in our attempts to get the answers on these estimates. When the clock strikes ten tonight the guillotine will fall, since this is the last day for estimates. It will not matter whether ministers have answered questions with regard to expenditures or not; we will just start all over again next year.

So far as I am concerned, these rules really usurp the power of the opposition. I am one who has said privately and in the house that I am against this gagging of the opposition. When you take away the function of the opposition to scrutinize government expenditures you take away the power of the opposition. If we cannot carefully scrutinize all expenditures of the various departments we may as well lock the doors of parliament. Parliament is dead and democracy has actually been destroyed.

Following those remarks I want to deal with three subjects this afternoon. The first is the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada. The second is a review of the Criminal Code and why it should be effected. The third is the important matter of the administration of justice and the increase in crime in Canada.

The first point I want to deal with is the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court. When the Exchequer Court was set up it was set up as a special federal court. It was felt that it should have a special jurisdiction because the other courts were either too busy or not capable of doing the job. What is that special jurisdiction? Apart from practically all matters that affect the crown, the main jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court is in reference to expropriation cases and tax appeals. I want to deal for a few moments with the expropriation jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court.

First of all, it is true the Exchequer Court does meet in various places across the country. However, all applications with reference to any matter that is going to go to trial are generally heard in Ottawa.

Let us consider what happens in expropriation cases. For some reason, generally a public work, the crown takes over certain land owned by a citizen of this country or by a company in this country. Then there is always a period during which the crown negotiates a price for the property. If the crown is unable to negotiate a price, then generally the citizen has to commence the action. In my opinion, this is wrong. The onus should be on the crown. If the crown has expropriated land and cannot come to an agreement with the citizen as to the value of that land, then surely the cost of initiating that action should be on the powerful state rather than on the individual.

I am going to deal with a particular case with which I had some experience. It lasted a considerable length of time and came before the Exchequer Court. The crown offered these people approximately $13,500 for about 60 acres of land near Lake Louise. The three people concerned were between 70 and 80 years of age and were unable to come to grips with the crown with regard to a price for their land. They were never notified when the expropriation took place. All that happens is that the government—this is not an attack on this particular government —passes an order in council and the plans of the land plus the order in council are then filed in the land titles office. The crown is then the owner in fact and in law, unless there is something wrong with the procedure. Finally, the citizen finds out he has lost his land and he tries to negotiate. If he does not take the price the crown offers, then he has to prove the value of the land. He has to hire appraisers, and they do not come at a dime a dozen. They are highly skilled, high-priced people.

If a person loses land which happens to be his only possession and he has no other assets or money behind him, he has to take the price offered by the crown. His only alternative is to find someone who will lend him money to finance a lawsuit against the crown.

In the particular case I am referring to these people had to get an appraiser who understood the value of land in the national park—I am not going to get into that matter—and it cost between $5,000 and $7,000 to get the land appraised. Then three or four applications followed, each of which called for the litigants and lawyers to go to Ottawa from Calgary. The distance by car is 2,600 miles and by air about 2,000 miles, so I am sure the minister will have sympathy for this sort of difficulty.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, the crown refused to produce the director of the park for Examination for Discovery and so counsel had to make an application to a judge and obtain an order to force the crown to produce the director. This application had to be argued in Ottawa, as I say. After the director of parks was produced for discovery he refused to answer some 187 questions put to him. As everyone knows, an examination for discovery is an examination of an officer of a company or of the crown by the other side to the suit.

Following this refusal counsel again had to go to the judge and get an order that the director of parks answer the questions. That was done. Counsel then had to get an order to settle the issue under the new rules of the court. These rules are more like the British rules, not so streamlined as the rules in Alberta that govern the Supreme Court trial division. This all added to the expense.

In most cases, Mr. Chairman, the litigant will withdraw before he finally gets to court simply because he cannot afford the cost. However, if he does take an expropriation case to trial he has to find an appraiser, which as I said in this particular case cost $7,000, and go through all these procedural matters.

I am not blaming the crown for all of the delay in this case, but there was considerable delay. Under the new rules that have been drawn up litigants are now required to file a certain kind of pleadings. However, the two sides have to settle the issue and this is narrowed down by another application. Finally the matter comes on for trial.

To illustrate why the litigants in this case had to have their own appraiser I point out that the final judgment awarded—the matter has been settled and the judgment paid so I can discuss it now—the sum of $85,167.53 for one parcel of land, $8,131.73 for another parcel, $3,696.24 for another parcel and $14,-982.78 for the fourth parcel. To be fair, there is some interest involved in these figures and the judgment awarded approximately $96,-000. However, if the litigant had taken the offer made by the crown he would have ended up with $13,500.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, the litigant had to fight, and it was quite a fight. The crown hired several appraisers. It does not matter to them how much they spend to beat a citizen. They hired a Mr. Robinson of Calgary and he came up with an amazingly high figure. I know what his figure was. They also hired appraisers in the Department of Transport and another appraiser in another department. What figures did they produce at the trial, Mr. Chairman? They came up with $20,000 instead of $85,000, which includes interest, for the first parcel. Actually the principal amounted to $55,000, so there was a difference of $35,000. They recommended $5,000 for a small parcel, $2,400 for another parcel, and $5,800 for the fourth parcel. Their total offer was $33,200 at trial, there having been all this delay, expense and frustration.

When you are a lawyer fighting the crown, Mr. Chairman, let me tell you you are really fighting. Remember that the Exchequer Court is a court set up for the crown; let us make no mistake about that. Therefore my first recommendation is that the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court should be reviewed. I have always maintained that we are overgoverned and that we should make some cuts in our expenditure in governing Canada, and likewise we have too many courts. There is no reason why the high trial courts in the provinces, to which are appointed as judges some very able lawyers, should not have the jurisdiction that the Exchequer Court has in the matter of expropriations.

What would be the advantage of this, Mr. Chairman? First of all, the judges in the provinces have more appreciation of the local geography and the people of the province and more understanding of the circumstances than do the judges of a court that sits in a high and mighty place here in Ottawa. Therefore I would hope that this new and youthful Minister of Justice will review the jurisdiction of that court.

Many great counsels throughout the country whom I dare not name have said to me over and over again that in tax cases, another matter within the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court, it is very difficult to succeed in the Exchequer Court, which I repeat is a court set up for the crown. It is also expensive to go to this court.

Why do I say that the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court should be reviewed and certain aspects of it transferred to the high courts of the provinces. First of all, it would save expense. Lawyers will not have to travels 2,500 miles across Canada to plead clients' applications and cases. The litigant himself would also be saved the expense of coming a long distance for the trial.

I want to be fair to the Exchequer Court and to say that when the judges, particularly the president of the court, became seized with the matter they did everything they could to cut costs and to have the trial held in Calgary. Nevertheless, all the applications had to be heard in Ottawa and the litigation was too expensive.

When dealing with lawyers employed by the Department of Justice, Mr. Chairman, it is much more difficult to get down to the issues than when dealing with lawyers for firms engaged in private enterprise.

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. Schreyer: I simply want to ask the hon. member for Bow River whether he is advocating the abolition of the Exchequer Court and making the superior court of each province the court of final appeal? If so, with respect to what kind of cases? Does he mean only those cases which normally come before the Exchequer Court at the present time?

Mr. Woolliams: My answer to that question is yes, Mr. Chairman, in some fields. I would want to look at this question very closely. I have thought it through and talked to many lawyers, and I think the Canadian Bar Association should review the matter. But so far as expropriation cases are concerned, my answer would be "absolutely yes". The court of appeal in each province could review the case and if the litigants were not satisfied and the amount in issue was large enough, over $10,000, they could go to the Supreme Court of Canada.

That brings me to my next point, Mr. Chairman. If a litigant is not satisfied with the decision of the Exchequer Court, what happens then? I will tell you what happens.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member goes to his next point could I ask him a question? The hon. member mentioned the difficulty of dealing with the lawyers of the Department of Justice. I do not think he had finished that point when another hon. member asked him a question. Could he give a supplementary explanation of that matter?

Mr. Woolliams: I did not say that I personally had had this difficulty. I said that in dealing with others I had found this experience. But when you are dealing as a member of one enterprise with a member of another enterprise, two lawyers who are free enterprisers in the same city, you are able to make decisions over the telephone and reach expedient agreements. The lawyers in the Department of Justice work under a great disadvantage. They are always responsible to some other person and cannot act or conduct their affairs as an average lawyer can when dealing with a local lawyer.

• (5:10 p.m.)

You will find when you get into the higher courts, and I have been in the high courts of the provinces, that the higher the court is the simpler the procedure and the better the quality of justice. In the Supreme Court of Canada you will find the greatest grace in the judges. I am not being critical, but the department's lawyers do not expedite matters as quickly as outside lawyers would. To illustrate what I mean let me say that I wrote to the department of northern affairs over two months ago with respect to some land. They said, "We must refer this to the Department of Justice". It was a matter in which Mr. James Boyce of Banff was interested. I have yet to get a reply. I might have to wait for a year. We are told that they have a great volume of work to do or that the matter must be strained through many fingers before an answer can be given.

An hon. Member: They are not efficient.

Mr. Woolliams: They are not efficient. The department's lawyers have to be very careful. They cannot say as an outside lawyer would say, "Look Eldon, I think this will happen; let us take a look at this thing." Within 24 hours of writing you have the answer. You are lucky to get an answer from the department or from any crown agency within 24 days. Delays like that lead to frustration.

Let me come to my next point. If you are not satisfied with an Exchequer Court decision you may want to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. There is one law for the rich and one law for the poor, and this has never been more apparent than today. You must pay the court reporter at so much per line or so much per page. In the instance I am thinking of where land use was in question and a town was to be built on a tract of land, it was thought that an appeal might help. When the cost of appealing was looked into the appellant said, "We cannot go on; we have no more money."

Let me tell hon. members what it would have cost to buy the evidence, forgetting about the lawyers entirely. The cost of printing the exhibits for the Supreme Court of Canada would have been $2,464. The pleadings would have cost $430 to print and the proceedings at trial were estimated to cost over $2,000. Altogether we had to raise $4,894 to buy the evidence before we could even proceed with the appeal. When they heard of these amounts the appellants said, "We have heard enough." That illustrates what I mean when I say there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. Those without means cannot litigate against the all-powerful state. Those who legislate in parliament and those who draft legislation do so keeping the interests of the crown uppermost in their mind. The poor citizen, the litigant, has everything stacked against him. The onus is on him to buy the evidence. To fight the sort of case I have just spoken of would cost $25,000. I say that the ordinary citizen cannot afford to litigate in the Exchequer Court and cannot afford to go to the Supreme Court of Canada if he is not satisfied with the Exchequer Court's decision.

In all seriousness let me say to the minister that I am glad to have this opportunity, as chairman of the justice committee of the Conservatives, to speak of these matters. The jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court must be reviewed. The fees of court reporters must be reviewed. It cost so much a line or so much a page to buy the evidence of any proceedings recorded in the Exchequer Court.

The criminal courts are administered by the provinces. Judges are appointed by the federal government and paid by the federal government. Over the years a system of legal aid has been evolved whereby those who need legal help are able to obtain it. The attorney general of a province will buy the evidence of a preliminary hearing for someone who cannot afford to buy it. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, that a volume of evidence as thin as this volume which I hold in my hand will cost you from $90 to $100? Not only will the attorney general buy the preliminary hearing evidence but he will also appoint a defending lawyer. That is all very well in criminal cases, but where is the money to come from for those who want to fight the all-powerful crown agencies? What a difference there is in the chances of those who, facing criminal proceedings, have the means to gather evidence and to hire their own detectives to fight the all-powerful crown.

The law is the same for everybody but the cost of presenting a case at law means that the rich have an advantage over the poor. Take the instance of a man with a small company who disagrees with his tax assessment and takes his case before the Exchequer Court. Perhaps the whole matter rests on the interpretation of some unknown regulation he did not know about. He goes to the Tax Appeal Board, after which he appeals to the Exchequer Court. Unless he has money he must either pay the tax or face the consequences. Unless he has money he cannot take the matter higher. Obviously there is one law for the rich and another for the poor.

Let me give another instance that shocks me. In the Exchequer Court, for example, where a court reporter is employed—often you do not realize the court reporter is charging the litigant—you will be presented with an unexpected bill for half the cost of the evidence. That is authorized by some obscure rule. The district courts of Alberta, or supreme courts in some provinces, supply court reporters. The court pays for the reporter's cost for the trial. They are appointed to take the evidence. Clearly, reforms are needed with respect to the employment of court reporters. Again we see that there is a law for the rich and another for the poor.

My next point has to do with the Criminal Code. When the code was reviewed ten years ago Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, now of the Supreme Court of Canada—I think he was then chief justice of Saskatchewan—said that really only certain procedures had been reviewed. Our criminal laws are archaic and I shall deal with some of them in a few moments. The minister was most gracious with me when I spoke to him about setting up a committee of the house to look into this matter. I think all bar associations agree that we should take another look at the Criminal Code to see if we cannot streamline procedures and do away with some of those discriminations which deny justice to the poor while making it available to the rich. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, what section 12 of the Criminal Code says? Laymen who read the section are shocked. It says:

Child under seven

No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was under the age of seven years.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

As soon as a child reaches the age of seven years and one day he may be brought before the courts of this land, provided that he was aware of the nature and quality of the offence, and tried in the same way as adults are tried. Surely the laws of this nation should be set up in such a way that they do not apply to children in the same manner as they apply to adults. Take the famous Truscott case which involved a boy of 14. Then there have been other cases involving, as the department knows, children of 12, even children of seven years of age, including a boy so small that he could not be kept behind the bars. This is all because of an outdated, archaic section going back to the days when children worked in the mines.

We shall shortly be debating a bill with reference to capital punishment, but that is another matter. Let us consider the crime of murder which has now been divided into capital murder and non-capital murder. If it is capital murder, planned and deliberate, and the jury so finds, the sentence is hanging. Of course, such sentences have always been reviewed by the cabinet and, since this government came to office, commuted. But I am not going into that aspect. Then there is non-capital murder. When parliament was dealing with this matter it overlooked the fact, says the chief justice of our province, that the former crime of attempted murder was abolished. It is in a vacuum, so to speak. Is it an attempt to commit capital or non-capital murder? How can one tell? This, Mr. Chairman, demands further review and examination.

I know the Minister of Justice is paying attention. I have talked to him privately and I believe he knows the code must be reviewed. What about the law concerning insanity, the M'Naghten rule. The defence is twofold; it is said on behalf of the accused that either he did not know the nature and quality of his act, which is one defence, or that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong, which is the second defence. In the light of the fact that since the famous M'Naghten case our knowledge of psychology and psychiatry has advanced to such an extent as to give us far greater insight into the nature of human behaviour, surely it is time to bring some of this knowledge to bear on the law as it now stands as far as it governs the question whether the accused was insane or sane.

What about suicide? A person can be charged with attempted suicide. But surely anyone who attempts to take his own life is mentally ill, suffering from some kind of depression. It is true that the courts are generally kind when dealing with these cases, but the law exists and we know what the sentence could be. What usually happens is that the person concerned is charged and taken to gaol. Remember, the person concerned is already ill and depressed. I see that my hon. friend from Athabasca agrees with me. He was a member of the R.C.M.P.; he knows that what I am about to say is correct. He has seen such people incarcerated, and if they are depressed when arrested how are they likely to feel when they are put in a cell? In practice the case is generally reviewed by a judge, the accused goes to a mental hospital and sentence is suspended. Nevertheless, in many cases the person concerned will have been found guilty of an indictable offence and there will be a record against him, preventing him from leaving the country.

What about bail? Again, there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. What usually happens is that a magistrate sizes up the circumstances and sets bail accordingly. If the accused does not have the wherewithal to pay it, he stays in gaol. In many cases the accused should never have been arrested in the first place. I am sure these people would appear at their trial. They may have gone off the rails; may be they have drunk too much. But if they are summoned they will appear. However, unless they get a counsel who can arranged for them to have a speedy trial it is possible for them to be kept in goal from July to September throughout the legal holiday before a judge is ready to hear the case. Recently this was the subject of comment in the Albertan after the accused in a case in which I was concerned did receive a speedy trial while others waited in gaol. I know that perfection cannot be expected, but one look at the bail system should be enough to convince us that it is a case of one law for the rich and another for the poor.

I intend now to mention a few other things which it seems to me are in need of remedy as I see the code through working with it. On summary conviction, in cases where a magistrate has absolute jurisdiction, it is possible to appeal to the district court and obtain what is called a trial de novo, that is, a brand new trial. But there are circumstances involved here which have always bothered me. Why should an appeal from a summary conviction be the most difficult appeal one to perfect? Many possibilities of error or omission are attached to it. Notice of appeal must be filed and served within a time limit, a certain sum must be set aside for costs and so on, the crown must be served with notice within so many days. Failure in any one of these respects means that the case is "out", that it fails for lack of jurisdiction. Surely this section should be reviewed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: The Minister of Justice is no doubt in possession of these facts. The department is probably well aware of what I am saying. I make this case for an early review of the code. Let people with experience, knowledge and intelligence produce a new code to streamline our legal procedure and do away with discrimination—one law for the rich and another for the poor.

I was talking about the steps necessary to secure a trial de novo. Let me point this out. Suppose a man is charged with murder and found guilty. If he did not have a lawyer—in practice the court would appoint one—he could appeal to the court of appeal in any of the provinces simply by writing a letter and asking for the appeal. But the lower the court the tougher the procedure required. This is ridiculous. Hon. members may say a lawyer ought to know how to carry out this procedure. But what about a man who has been convicted and who cannot afford a lawyer? He cannot possibly be expected to be familiar with this process. Indeed, many young lawyers are worried about the procedure. They keep checking what they have done with their senior partners and asking: Am I right? They are concerned because they know that if they do not do everything perfectly, the case is out of court.

Again, expenses in connection with the appeal book are too high. In my own province the attorney general is co-operative. But this is not good enough. We must streamline the code to make it work for our citizens. Expenses generally are too high and the cost of court reporting is too high. Maybe it is time court reporters were paid entirely on a salary basis.

I wish to deal now with one other point. Under the provisions of the code the police court records of young people are registered. A lad of 13 or 14 may get into difficulty and plead guilty; perhaps he has taken somebody's car to go for a joy-ride and pleads guilty to the theft of the car. Many of these pleas are made because the infant does not know his rights. Anyway, he then has a conviction for an indictable offence against him and the consequence is that when he grows up he cannot go to the United States. He may get a big scholarship to attend a university there. But what happens? He bounces into your office or my office, as members of parliament, but he cannot go if he has been convicted of an indictable offence. Surely the time has come in this nation, particularly on our one hundredth birthday, for some kind of reform. We must consider the pressures on youth today and do away with the keeping of records against youth for a long time, yes, even against adults when after a period of time they have proven themselves rehabilitated in society. This is another point that should be looked at and another reason why the code should be reviewed.

Here is another thing that happens. When a boy or young woman who has previously been convicted of an indictable offence comes before a magistrate and seeks bail, up steps a softspoken crown counsel to read out the record. He says that the boy was found guilty of assault at Western high school, he did this, and he did that. If the person involved has any record, up goes the bail. The price of justice rises. What has that to do with bail? The purpose of bail is that somebody will guarantee that a man will appear at the bar of justice on such and such a day to stand trial.

Another matter I wish to mention is the vagrancy section of the code. If any section is being misused it is this one. If the police are suspicious that a boy, girl, man or woman is guilty and they have no evidence, they can hold the person in jail even though they have no evidence. They are not supposed to do so, but they charge the person with the crime of vagrancy. They hold him for two or three days and hope that in that period they will get a confession from him. When they get a confession they have some evidence. Alternatively they will bring a little pressure to bear here and there and build up a case.

I would like to have a record of all instances in police courts across Canada when a vagrancy charge was laid against a man or woman who was not even near the scene of the crime and the charge had to be withdrawn. If we are going to hold people on a holding charge let us tell them that it is a holding charge. Let us tell them the reason for it. Let us say: We have reason to believe you are mixed up in this affair and we shall hold you. But let us not call it vagrancy because a vagrant is a person found in a public street with no visible means of support. There are other definitions of vagrancy but that is beside the point. It is high time that this matter was reviewed.

I now wish to say a few words in reference to drugs. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Cartier has introduced a bill dealing with drugs because this means that the whole question will be reviewed. I am one of those who believe—and I said this the other day—that it would be easy to get headlines by saying narcotics have become a terrible menace for our young people. But I do not know that. There may be more use of drugs per capita, but surely when one reads the article written by a noted doctor in the United States, not published in the best magazine by any means, in which he talks about the difference between marijuana and narcotics, one comes to the conclusion that it is time we took a reasonable look at the Narcotic Control Act.

Is marijuana the same as other drugs such as heroin and so on? I am not going to take the time today to go into that question because it would take too long to refer to the difference, but scientists agree that a person does not become addicted to marijuana. That does not say for one minute that I believe young people should be using it. I think it is eroding the moral fibre of young people who are using it or even contemplating using it. Men in high places are saying that marijuana is no worse than alcohol or tobacco. Young people read such statements. They argue with their parents and say, "Some scientist says it is not dangerous so I am going to use it." That is bad propaganda.

This summer I defended three university scholarship students charged with using marijuana. The judge, a distinguished citizen of Calgary, said that they probably took it for kicks. I should mention that these students came from another country. If they had been charged with importing it and had sold some of it to their friends, the minimum sentence under the Narcotic Control Act would have been seven years. However, they were charged with possession and use.

I pleaded before the judge that they should be fined and not incarcerated because they wanted to go back and finish their term at university. I am not naming the university. But under the penalty section of the Narcotic Control Act our court of appeal has taken the position that on conviction a person cannot solely be fined. The judge must sentence him to some period in jail. In this case we had a very learned and understanding judge, because he has a family of his own. What did he do? He looked at the matter and said, "All right. If that is what the court of appeal says I will sentence them to one day in jail with a $500 fine, and as it is past noon they do not have to serve their one day." I do not know where the provision about it being past noon comes from but it is used. Basically, we got a fine for them instead of prison.

But do you know what happened, Mr. Chairman? Counsel for the federal crown called the immigration department and said, "We now have three people in Canada who have been convicted of an indictable offence and we want them arrested under the Immigration Act." Air Canada was better than usual and we made a quick reservation and got them out of the country.

With regard to a student who is caught smoking marijuana, if we are going to make it an offence let us look at it from the point of view of education and re-education so that he will cease using it. If we are going to make it an offence let us amend the law so that it serves the kind of justice we expect and allows persons convicted to live within the institutions of our society with some kind of dignity.

One last thought, Mr. Chairman, with regard to corporal punishment. I have heard the hon. member for Vancouver East make excellent speeches on this subject and he will probably have something to say about it today. He was bringing this matter before the house long before I became a member. Some 15 or 20 years ago a royal commission dealt with the matter of corporal punishment and thought it was terrible. Here is what section 641 of the Criminal Code says in part:

> Where a person is liable to be sentenced to be whipped, the court may sentence him to be whipped on one, two or three occasions within the limits of the prison in which he is confined.
> A sentence of whipping shall specify the number of strokes to be administered on each occasion.

Have we not reached the time in our civilization when a man should not cause another man, for whatever he may have done, to be stretched out and brutally beat him in the most sadistic fashion? Is it not time to review the details and wording of the Criminal Code? The Minister of Justice is a young man. If he can accomplish this job he will go down in history as one of the best ministers of justice, apart from politics. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, I have had the opportunity to deal with this point.

Before sitting down may I mention one last thought. Ex-R.C.M.P. Commissioner Harvison made a statement the other day. I do not think he is a reckless man. Over the years that I have practiced law I have been more often on the defence side than on the other side, and I have developed a tremendous respect for the R.C.M.P. I do not think there is a nation in the world that has a police force of which it can be more proud than we can be of the R.C.M.P.

Just a week or so ago ex-Commissioner Harvison said that American syndicate criminals are moving into Canada, into Vancouver, Montreal and other big centres. He said they have been doing this for a long time. In this respect I say that the administration of justice is a joint responsibility of the federal and provincial authorities. I ask the Prime Minister if he would set up a royal commission to find out what is going on in regard to corrupt bankruptcies, because there has to be some investigation carried out. I think Lafayette Payette was the name of the man who, because he dared to raise a question about a fraudulent bankruptcy, was found dead in the trunk of his car. This is syndicate crime.

We prosecute the poor girls and boys and men and women who take drugs. But what about the pushers? What about the fellows who are bringing these drugs into the country? The R.C.M.P. have done a terrific job in this respect. They have caught up with people who had several millions of dollars worth of drugs in their possession. These people are making money from the demoralization of our youth and older people. Let us investigate this problem in view of the commissioner's statement. Let us not play politics and say: This is not the way I would handle the matter. I say to the Prime Minister with the greatest respect—he is not here at the moment but I do not make anything of that—that we must do something to solve this extremely serious problem. The Minister of Justice is here. He is a member of the cabinet and I asked him to talk to his cabinet colleagues about it.

Is the minister going to sit idly by in the hope that the officials who administer his department will be more efficient tomorrow than they are today or is he going to be dynamic in this portfolio? Is he going to be an effective Minister of Justice who will look into this problem and get to the bottom of it? This is the kind of action we hope to get from a new Minister of Justice, because a new broom sweeps clean.

I have spoken longer than I should have, Mr. Chairman, but this is a very important subject. I should like to summarize the recommendations that I place before the minister. The jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court should be completely reviewed. A complete review should be carried out in the matter of appeals from the Exchequer Court to the Supreme Court of Canada. I recommend that the Criminal Code be reviewed now, not tomorrow. We must get away from some of these archaic laws which lay down age limits in regard to offences. We must get away from some of the archaic laws with respect to insanity, corporal punishment and attempted suicide. Many of the provisions of the Criminal Code were written under the old, ecclesiastical law. We need a code that fits present day conditions and mankind.

Let us consider the Narcotic Control Act. Let us not back away from amending the act because we may lose some votes if we take marijuana off the list of prohibited drugs. Most of us have families, no matter what position we hold in life, and our boys and girls are getting into difficulty. As a member of the Liberal party said the other day much better than I can, juvenile delinquency today seems to be moving into all strata of society. Let us enact laws that we can be proud of, which will help the youth of today and which will enable them to say later in life that our generation changed the law and gave it a greater degree of dignity. The laws we enact should be tools that serve society. Let us make sure, above all, that we appoint to the bench the very best men available.

Before this session began I noticed in the newspapers that the minister said he was going to talk to the Canadian Bar Association. This has some advantages and disadvantages. We have in the past done a pretty good job in appointing to the bench the very best men with wide experience. However, perhaps the time has now come when judges should receive special training in psychiatry and psychology so that when they hand out sentences they will know something about our youth. We have in this country judges who have never had a family. I am not being critical of that. Some of our judges have been involved in incorporated companies all their lives, and when they have to pass sentence on an accused they tell me it worries them. Perhaps it is time we set up special schools for judges. Let us become progressive and change some of our old laws that have outlived their usefulness.

I appreciate the committee having extended my time, particularly the Minister of Justice who has listened very carefully to my recommendations.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak briefly on the estimates now before us. The remarks I desire to make follow exactly the theme of the previous speaker, namely, that there is a law for the rich and a law for the poor. I admit I am not a lawyer and therefore cannot give the same kind of discourse as the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. But over the years, because I have a great interest in the matter of penology, I have had the opportunity of interviewing hundreds of the inmates of our jails and penitentiaries. I have received correspondence from hundreds of inmates incarcerated all over the country. Very rarely a week goes by without my receiving a letter from an inmate of a penitentiary setting forth his problems and grievances.

It is absolutely heartbreaking to receive one of these letters, investigate the matter and find proof of what the previous speaker called a law for the rich and a law for the poor. I fully appreciate that there is in matters of justice split jurisdiction as between the federal and provincial authorities. However, we must recognize that although the provinces have jurisdiction in the administration of justice, a great many of our laws are made federally. We must also remember that the Minister of Justice appoints our judges. Therefore a responsibility rests on the shoulders of the Minister of Justice irrespective of the question of jurisdiction.

We ofttimes read of meetings of the bar associations across Canada and see what matters they discuss and the views they hold. We know that upon occasion there are meetings of magistrates and judges. I note that these meetings are often addressed by the attorney general of a province or, as a general rule, by the Minister of Justice. Therefore I am taking these few moments to say to the minister that, even though there is split jurisdiction in these matters, I hope the minister will make his views known and will convey them to the judges, magistrates and those in the legal profession in the provinces in the hope that we may to a considerable extent get away from one law for the rich and another for the poor.

It is most disturbing when we find that individuals, juveniles or adults with no previous criminal record or even with a record, charged with a criminal offence for which they could be sentenced to several years' imprisonment if found guilty have not had, from the time of the charge being laid to conviction and perhaps appeal, one minute of legal aid. I have in the files in my office on the sixth floor of this building details of case after case of this sort. I have letters from people serving long terms of imprisonment in our penitentiaries who never had a lawyer from the time they were arrested until the time they were convicted.

We know that in the provinces there is free legal aid, but time after time we receive evidence that although application is made for legal aid these people do not necessarily get it. If their application for legal aid is refused they have to face the judge and the possible loss of years of freedom without having a lawyer to advise and assist them. It is wrong, despicably wrong, that a person faced with a charge, particularly a serious one, should have no legal assistance because he has no money. I believe that federally and provincially, individually and collectively, something has to be worked out in this regard in the name of justice whereby legal aid is supplied when the individual charged is not in a position to afford a lawyer.

Another most important question is the difference in sentences. This matter has been spoken of in the house time after time by members of all parties, but for one reason or another nothing has been done to correct the situation. We find that even for the identical offence there is a terrific disparity in the sentences passed by magistrates and judges. This is definitely not fair. We find a law for the rich and a law for the poor within the same jurisdiction. This is an absolute disgrace which brings the name of justice into ill repute.

Not too long ago in the city of Vancouver a pawn-broker and his companies endeavoured to avoid the payment of $160,000 in income tax. He was charged and found guilty of trying to defraud the federal government of this amount. He was fined $48,000 but there was no jail sentence. The kindly judge told this wealthy man who tried to defraud Canada that he would give him the time he needed to pay the fine.

During that same week in the city of Vancouver a hungry drifter tried to steal two cans of sardines valued at 35 or 40 cents. He was hauled into court, was found guilty and was sentenced to six months in jail. This hungry man who tried to steal two cans of sardines was sentenced to six months in jail but a fine, with no jail term, was imposed on a man who tried to defraud the government of $160,000.

This example can be repeated time and time again in Canada and I have many of them documented in my office. There is no question that there is a law for the rich and a law for the poor, and this is not only related to the fact that some can hire lawyers while others cannot. One's status in our society makes a difference. If you are wealthy and are found guilty of a crime you receive a fine without a jail term. If you are poor like the man who was charged with stealing two cans of sardines you are likely to receive six months in jail.

This situation should not be allowed to exist. I sincerely hope that the minister, newly in this portfolio, will recognize this fact and do everything he possibly can within his power and within his influence to correct this most miserable and despicable situation which now exists in Canada under the name of justice.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would need three minutes only and I must admit that I will not always be in order but as members of the loyal opposition have, in the last two days, spoken freely on the subject that I want to raise and the Chair has been indulgent by allowing them to continue their remarks, I suppose that I will be treated with the same leniency.

First of all, I would like to make a short remark to commend the member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) for what he just pointed out. He did not develop his thoughts because, I suppose, he did not want to take too much of the time of the house. He is so right that I feel bound to support his remarks and say: The minister is not at fault, evidently, but it is high time that legislation should be reviewed, so that there might not be laws for the poor and different laws for the rich. The law is for the poor and the rich, and he is perfectly right.

Mr. Chairman, I am out of order but I noticed that the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) spoke for 50 minutes.

The hon. member for Bow River is a lawyer and an extremely brilliant expert in criminal law for whom I have the greatest respect. He is a parliamentarian and a debater I would prefer to have on my side rather than against me. He is very effective in the way he conducts a debate. Therefore, I would not like my remarks to be taken as a breach of good manners; I am simply raising a matter of principle.

The standing orders stipulate that hon. members may speak for 30 minutes, but in the two years I have been here, no one has paid much attention to them I noticed. I would not object if three, four or five additional minutes were granted to those who have not finished stating their argument, although I think it could be done in one or two minutes, because anyone appearing on radio or television, where time is restricted, at a few seconds notice is cut down to half a minute without any consideration, because time must be limited.

I feel that the attitude of some members is illogical. For example, when I hear members of the opposition speak about the guillotine, I must say that I have always understood that standing orders, even if some provisions are temporary, had been passed with the approval of the leaders of all parties. Therefore, I cannot see how one can rightly say such a thing, unless one wants to stir up the electorate, or kid around, or give the public at large the wrong impression, which to my mind is akin to false pretences. I feel it would be dishonest to say that the guillotine will come down this evening. If the rule is not good, then the leaders of all the parties should meet and say: We are changing the rule, and that will be the end of that.

The same goes for limiting the speeches, Mr. Chairman. I too am opposed to that. The hon. member benefited from the fact that I was out of the house for a few minutes when he asked for the unanimous consent.

I appeal to all the members of the house and say this: Do standing orders exist? If they exist, why are they not adhered to? If the rules are no good, why are they not improved? But if we ourselves disobey the rules, we do not, as parliamentarians, set a very edifying example.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Mr. Chairman, I understand that—again, I should like it to be understood that I do not, in my remarks, necessarily refer to the hon. member for Bow River because I say that he is one of the parliamentarians whom I listen to with most pleasure; I could listen to him for hours, although I am a little blasé as to—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I was trying to see whether his remarks were in order; I do not think they are. Moreover, it is six o'clock and I think it would be wise not to make comments which might be found unpleasant.

Mr. Mongrain: In any event, Mr. Chairman, I had finished.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bill, notices of motions papers, and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

PRINCIPAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-11, respecting Principal Life Insurance Company of Canada.

• (6:00 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of Bill S-11 is to ensure that chapter 21 of the statutes of 1965 will be deemed not to have expired or to have ceased to be in force after the thirtieth day of June, 1967, and to extend the expiry date to the thirtieth day of June 1969.

Hon. members may remember that this company was incorporated by a private bill that was passed in June of 1965 and, according to the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the certificate to commence business must be issued by the superintendent of insurance within two years of the effective date of the charter; otherwise the charter expires and the company must be wound up. However, in December, 1966, a petition was filed, after consultation with the superintendent of insurance, to extend the life of the charter for a further two years. The sole purpose of this bill is to extend the charter until June, 1969.

The reasons for this appear in Minutes No. 6 of the Senate standing committee on banking and commerce and in the speech made by Hon. Donald Cameron in the other place on Wednesday, June 14, when he moved second reading of the bill. I would commend this material to hon. members.

In essence the reason why the company did not apply for its certificate to commence business within two years was the tightening up of regulations within the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Bill S-9 which incorporated this company received royal assent in June of 1965 with the understanding that the company would not commence its business of insurance until at least $500,000 of its capital stock had been subscribed and that amount paid in advance together with a contribution as a capital surplus of $500,000.

The Principal Life Insurance Company is one of three companies controlled by Principal Holdings Limited and is composed of the following companies: First Investors Corporation Limited, Associated Investors of Canada Limited, Principal Savings and Trust Company, and the Principal Life Insurance Company. The company has its head office in Edmonton. It is entirely Canadian owned and its officers are all Canadians living in or around, Edmonton.

The Principal group actually controls assets of some $68 million as evidenced by the consolidated balance sheet of the company dated December 31, 1966. Since the incorporation of the company in 1965 there were a number of developments in the financial world which caused all governments to tighten up and raise their requirements of financial backing before permitting companies to go into business.

The effect of the tightening up of the regulations so far as the Principal Life Insurance Company is concerned can be explained by the following illustrations. One of the member companies of the Principal group is Principal Savings and Trust Company, incorporated with $250,000 of paid-up unimpaired capital. In the spring of 1966, amendments to the governing legislation by the province of Alberta raised this requirement to $500,000. The legislation provides that this requirement will be further increased by mid-1967 to $750,000.

The other two member companies of the Principal group, namely Associated Investors of Canada Limited and First Investors Corporation Limited, both dealing in investment savings certificates and operating in the province of Saskatchewan, were required by legislative changes made in that province in mid-1965 to increase the minimum required net worth to approximately one twentieth of the statutory reserves of the company. This is the value of the qualified assets according to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, less the statutory reserves and other liabilities. In order to qualify under the new standards in Saskatchewan, Associated Investors of Canada Limited required an additional $388,000 and First Investors required a further $112,000 making a total additional requriement of $500,000 additional capital.

The third factor was a change in the capital test under the trustees act of Alberta. In order to be an approved corporation under the amended act, the unimpaired paid-up permanent capital must be increased from $500,000 to $1 million.

The Principal group has been putting into effect these increased capital requirements and reserves. Therefore the $1 million that it had earmarked for the insurance company in 1965 has had to be put into the other funds in order to meet the statutory requirements. Having done so, it is now in a position to proceed within the next several months to apply for its certificate to commence business. It has also had to attend to a reorganization because of better control through computer equipment.

The Principal Life Insurance Company intends to write all kinds of life insurance, but it is to deal primarily with the group security that is attached to its savings certificates.

I have indicated to hon. members what is the purpose of this bill. I wish to point out again that the company is entirely Canadian owned and Canadian operated. The Principal group has been operating for 10 to 12 years in Edmonton and they have another associated company which operates in the United States. It may be of further interest that this group repatriated a Canadian investment company which had been bought by Americans and was repurchased by the new Canadian group in 1962. I am referring to Associated Investors of Canada, a company of which I have thought well and which had been sold, because of our rather odd estate tax laws, to American interests in 1959 or 1960 and was then repurchased by this group in 1962.

I commend this bill to hon. members. As we know, it will go to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for further discussion where, if members of the committee see fit, witnesses may be examined. However, witnesses have been examined in extenso before the committee of the other place and that evidence is available to hon. members.

• (6:10 p.m.)

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have often voiced my misgivings about the incorporation of endless life insurance companies. I may say that my misgivings are increased when we find, as in this case and another case we had, that these life insurance companies are closely connected with other financial institutions such as mutual funds, trust companies and so on. I am particularly concerned at this time, Mr. Speaker, when we are undergoing very severe economic and financial strains in this country, about the investment policies of these private institutions to whom we grant the privilege of collecting the savings of the Canadian people.

As I pointed out the other day, there is right now a considerable outflow of Canadian savings from the country. This raises in my mind, sir, the question of just what effect that has had in promoting and creating the financial and economic difficulties over which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is now scratching his head. There is, of course, a very close connection. A great deal of the troubles of the government and the minister stem from the necessity of adjusting domestic policies in the light of our balance of payments problem and because of our idiotic retention of the fixed exchange rate.

Because of our ill-advised agreement with the United States regarding the maintenance of a certain level of exchange reserves, our government and our financial and monetary authorities have very little room to manoeuvre. When on top of that we have a drain of capital from Canada in the form of investment outside the country, then the troubles of the government and the monetary authorities are compounded. I have no intention of trying to stop the second reading of this bill. It will get second reading. However, when the bill is before the committee on finance and economic affairs we should be given a very clear and honest picture of just where these funds are invested. I get somewhat annoyed when economists tell me, as some of them have been telling me of late, that the level of investment has dropped badly and this has caused our trouble. When the money supply is rising, investment cannot be dropping. It may be changing its locale, and I suspect this is one of the reasons we are in trouble.

It is only two days ago that the Montreal Gazette pointed out in an editorial there is now a serious outflow of Canadian capital to the United States. In the opinion of the financial writer for that paper, this is one of the major components of our economic problems at this time. I should like to stress again, Mr. Speaker, what I have stressed in the past, the great danger of allowing this vital function in our econony, the pooling of the savings of the Canadian people, to be left in private hands. I had occasion a few months ago to speak about the investment policy of mutual open end funds with a man who is very closely involved with the investment policy of a large one as an officer of one of the major chartered banks. He was concerned about the investment policy and called it to my attention. He informed me that this could be duplicated right across the board with these trust investment funds. I say, therefore, it is a dangerous principle to allow private individuals to have control of pooling the savings of the Canadian people and deciding where they are going to be invested because direction of investment is another of the factors that creates economic and financial problems for the Canadian government.

I know, of course, that a government such as ours and an official opposition such as we have in this house are both wedded to a doctrinaire view of the economy which abhors the idea of this function being assumed by the public authority. Again I put in my plea which I make periodically, sir, for a complete change of attitude toward the control of the savings of the Canadian people. I urge that parliament should look with a very dubious eye on the continual expansion of the number of life insurance companies in this country. It is a fragmentation of the same pool of savings; you do not increase it at all. It cannot be considered for a moment that this proliferation of life insurance companies is likely to result in cheaper insurance for the policy-holders of Canada. On the other hand, there is every reason to suspect it will increase the cost because you add to the body of personnel who are engaged in selling life insurance policies throughout the country. I plead with parliament and with the government to adopt a more reasonable method of pooling the savings of the Canadian people by expanding the operations of the Canada Pension Plan to offer options to the Canadian people of every variety of life insurance, which the public authority could do at a fraction of the cost of this horde of commission agents. I say, therefore, that I am not going to stop second reading of this bill, but I do want to point out the dangers of continuing along this path.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill. First of all, I should like to give my endorsation to the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron). I must frankly confess that I am not an expert in this field. There was a time some years ago when I had an opportunity of gaining a little more knowledge of this field, and I should like to relate that experience to underline the remarks made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. This experience goes back some years, in fact to a time before I had the privilege of entering this august chamber. At that time I was the president and chairman of the bargaining committee of the firefighters local. A pension plan had been shoved down the necks of the employees of our municipality by an insurance company along with the council of the day. We did not like it. We did not know too much about pension plans but the more we read about this plan the less we liked it. We proceeded, therefore, to get together to study it and various departments of the municipality raised certain objections. Finally we were treated to a display by the district troubleshooter of this insurance company. He gave us a real pep talk. However, we had delved deeply enough into the plan that we were not impressed and our questions got him into some pretty tough sledding.

The upshot was that he came around the next day to offer me a job with his insurance company. I was not too interested but I was curious. I asked him what they had in mind. He said that they would take me and train me for six months and while I was being trained they would pay me something like $100 a month more than I was receiving at that time as a firefighter, first class. At the end of six months the company would open a local office. They did not have a local office in my community. I would service the various pension plans they had, pick up any new ones I could and start selling life insurance. They said they would pay me a salary for the first six months, plus commission. At the end of six months I would go on straight commission. I asked him what the commission was and he informed me the commission would be 90 per cent of the first year's premium, 15 per cent in the second year, then 5 per cent per year for five years and 2 per cent as long as the policy was in force. This seemed to me to be completely out of line. Perhaps I overestimated my ability, but I thought I had enough selling ability that if I had gone out and really "turned on the steam" for a few years I would be able to retire on my 2 per cent.

I discovered after searching further into the matter that this was not exactly the case. The company had another little scheme which prevented this state of affairs occurring. It seems that the company set a quota each year. The quota was the amount you sold the year before plus a certain percentage. For example, if a salesman sold $100,000 of insurance this year, next year his quota would be $150,000. When he reached $500,000 his next year's quota would go up to $600,000. If he really had ability and got his sales up to $1 million his quota would be raised again the following year. I also found, that the 2 per cent or 5 per cent or 15 per cent applied only as long as you met your quota. That possibly explains why there is such a tremendous turnover of salesmen in life insurance companies.

One matter referred to by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, which I believe almost amounts to false pretences on the part of insurance companies in this country, involves the fact that when a policy is sold to a customer the 2 per cent is supposed to be the salesman's commission. But once a salesman ceases to work for the company the 2 per cent does not revert to the customer but goes into the coffers of the insurance company. I have seen cases time and time again of men who were top salesmen and had worked for years for a particular insurance company all of a sudden moving to another company and not obtaining any credit for previous sales.

What angers these salesmen is that the customer does not even get a rebate on his policy, and to me this amounts almost to false pretences. This is one of the causes of proliferation to which the hon. member referred. The more companies there are in the insurance field, the more 2 per cents will be taken from the customers, the people of Canada, and piled up in the pockets of various companies.

In speaking to the bill, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) listed some reasons to account for the two year delay. I was looking through the transcript of the proceedings of the Senate standing committee on banking and commerce for Wednesday, June 28 last, No. 6, and I noticed that different reasons were listed. For example, as reported on page 24 the president of the Principal group, Mr. D. M. Cormie, Q.C., said:

> Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I might just point out that the basis under which the original charter was granted has continued in force. I should like to run over the development of the group since the time of the granting of its original charter in 1965 for the life insurance company.
> The Chairman: Does that development relate to the delay in completing the organization of this company?
> Mr. Cormie: Partially.
>
> The Chairman: Well, to the extent that it does, it is relevant.
> Mr. Cormie: Well, we found in 1965, shortly after this charter was granted, that it was desirable to have a little tighter and neater organizational pattern in the group, so it was decided to organize in the same pattern as the Investors Group in Winnipeg with primarily a holding company that was at the same time a principal management company—

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I am a novice in the field but that is not the same reason.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, on a point of information, would the hon. member look at the reasons given by the mover in the Senate, which preceded the testimony given by Mr. Cormie? The hon. members of the Senate banking committee had already been given the reasons by Senator Cameron. These are additional reasons. Mr. Cormie's reasons are not being discounted at all.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I see. I also noted the reason given on the following page where Mr. Cormie is reported as follows:

> We have just introduced an I.B.M. 360 system, and the programming on this for the life insurance company is estimated by our accounting department to take from six to eight months.

So the period will run into next year.

One point which does puzzle me is that, as reported on page 23, Mr. Humphrys, the superintendent of insurance, said:

> Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I have very little to say about this bill. Its purpose is to extend the life of a bill that was adopted by parliament two years ago to incorporate this company, and under the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, which is an act of general application to insurance companies, it is provided that if a company is incorporated and does not become registered under the insurance act to transact business within two years, then its act expires. This company was incorporated in 1965, effective June 30, but the company was not able to get organized—

To my reckoning, Mr. Speaker, this bill is now null and void as of July 1 of this year. I do not know. Perhaps the introduction of the bill in the other place extended the life of the previous bill, but I should like to know what is the position. If the bill is dead, then why are we discussing it today?

Mr. Lambert: On a point of information, Mr. Speaker, may I tell the hon. member that the petition to extend this bill was dated December, 1966, and I believe was filed in February, 1967, with the full consent and agreement of the superintendent of insurance. As a matter of fact, the procedure that was adopted was the procedure suggested by the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Like my colleague from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, I have no intention of holding up the bill but I did want the few points I have raised to receive some attention.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I receive with gratification the applause of the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) and others at my recognition. I take it to mean that in anticipation of my remarks hon. members are endorsing them.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I will not endorse them unless they make sense.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) pointed out that the purpose of this bill is simply to extend the deadline by which this company that is seeking to be incorporated can obtain its certificate, licence, or whatever the correct word is, from the Department of Insurance. It seeks to extend the life of the bill that was assented to on June 30, 1965, being chapter 21 of the statutes of that year, when the company was incorporated by parliament.

• (6:30 p.m.)

It might be interesting to note that the classes of insurance which the company has permission to sell are life insurance, personal accident insurance and sickness insurance. I mention that because, as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has said, the company is Canadian controlled. As I understand the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the company by law must remain under the control of Canadians. Apart from looking at the investment policies of insurance companies we feel, as the Prime Minister has said, that it is desirable to bring insurance companies which are controlled in other countries under Canadian control, so far as their share ownership is concerned. That matter is not germane to this bill because this is a Canadian owned company and, from my knowledge of the law, it must remain under Canadian control.

It will be interesting to put on the record the ability of this company, or of the group of which it is a part, to increase its assets. Speaking on June 15, 1965, when he moved second reading of the bill which became the act to incorporate the company, the hon. member for Edmonton West said:

> Let us look at some features of this group.

He was talking of the whole complex of companies which are involved in these arrangements:

> First of all, what is the management team? This group, in operation for about 11 years, has shown itself to be quite a successful one. Its assets have increased more than 2,400 per cent since 1956 and in fact they amount to some $56 million according to its 1964 balance sheet. In eight years the number of holders of the group's investment contracts has risen from 4,700 to more than 63,000. The group has its own selling, administrative and investment divisions.

Then he makes other references to the company, saying that the administrative ability of those in the group is high with respect to the demands of the business world. He gave us some understanding of the investment policies which a group such as this follows. I believe the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) also spoke of this matter.

There is one difference between this company and other insurance companies. Shares of the company are not to be sold to the public. If the hon. member for Edmonton West made a contrary statement today in his remarks on second reading, they escaped me. I assume that what he said previously is still true. The public will not be invited to participate in any capitalization or shareholding with respect to Principal Life Insurance Company of Canada. The company, as I understand the matter, is to be a wholly owned subsidiary of the holding company which also has the words "principal holdings" or similar words in its name. This brings me to the matter of the intimate relationship which may exist between the two insurance companies which, I understand, are held by the same holding company. Indirectly, a trust company and a mutual fund management company, from my reading of the record with respect to the bill in the other place, indirectly are held by the same holding company.

This at once raises the question of so-called arm's length dealings between companies which are of the same family, or of the same ownership. This matter was raised before the standing committee on banking and commerce of the Senate, when this bill was being considered. There is extensive reference to it. It was initiated by a question of Senator Leonard, and answered by Mr. Cormie who is president of Principal Life Insurance Company of Canada, and by Mr. Humphrys, the superintendent of insurance. The remarks of Mr. Humphrys, a highly qualified and extremely knowledgeable public servant, as they relate to these so-called arms length dealings, are of interest. On page 26 of the minutes for Wednesday, June 18, 1967, Mr. Humphrys says:

> I would say that the investment contracts as such bear a contract under which the purchaser pays a series of instalments over five, ten, fifteen or twenty years and the contract promises to return the purchaser the face amount at the end of the period. They are not the kind of investment instruments that will be used for investment of funds of a life insurance company, and I do not think that we could find anything in the life insurance act which would render them eligible. The mutual fund in so far as it isuses shares, and they can be regarded as common shares and have a dividend record, might be technically eligible under the provisions of the act; but as a matter of good practice the department—

And here is the declaration of public policy in this regard:

> —very strongly discourages any life insurance company from investing its funds in a circumstance that is not completely an arm's length one. We would be critical of a company that invested funds in the affairs of an associated or affiliated company.

Mr. Humphrys had made similar pronouncements on other occasions. After being asked whether something stronger than the disapproval by the superintendent of insurance might be brought to bear, he went on to say:

> Mr. Chairman, to date we have felt that we have been able to avoid any serious problems in this area. I may say, however, that my own feeling is that one of the principal dangers that we now face in these growing financial groups in Canada is this question of investing in public funds, that is, money that has been borrowed in situations that are not arm's length, where people making investment decisions cannot be sure that they are making the best decision for both companies concerned. That is a matter which should be recognized more specifically in the legislation dealing with companies of that kind than is now the case.

In other words Mr. Humphrys says that this is the principal danger. The danger is to the investing public, to those individuals who have a contract, whether with a life insurance investment or with respect to mutual funds, with any company that is part of a group or closely related complex of companies. Mr. Humphrys went on to say that he was making recommendations to the minister who had authority over the department for the introduction of law to deal with this matter.

I hope that such law will be introduced before this house soon, because the danger of which Mr. Humphrys speaks has not arisen during the last week or the last month. It has existed in this nation for many years and, were Mr. Humphrys' words not heeded, the result might be the collapse of any one of the intimately involved trust and insurance complexes that exist in this nation.

This may be one of the features involved in the collapse of such groups. I do not think we can simply trust to the hope of the department of insurance that its highly critical view of such arm's length dealings should be relied on in the future to carry the weight which Mr. Humphrys says it has done in the past. This is a very real danger.

When the bill was considered earlier there was an injection of politics into our discussion. I would only say in passing that the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) also spoke on June 16, 1965, and since this is an Edmonton based company the hon. member for Medicine Hat pointed out that this was obviously the result of farsighted policies on the part of the government of Alberta, and that no company could possibly go broke under those conditions. I say this in passing. I do not see the hon. member for Medicine Hat here today and I doubt whether he would have the same remarks to make today, in any event.

I wish to follow up some of the remarks made by my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) about the state of our economy and the effect upon it of the activities of groups such as the one whose affairs are before us now, carrying out a certain type of investment program, a type of program which my hon. friend has clearly stated to be injurious to Canada's interests. By this, I mean purchasing policies which result in an outflow of Canadian savings for investment in other countries. This is one of the most important factors contributing to the difficulties we are experiencing in this country today. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) would only pay more attention to this aspect and less to slashing expenditures, raising taxes and introducing price and wage controls, we might be better off. Let me quote from the proceedings in the Senate committee in connection with investment outside Canada. Senator Isnor raised this matter, as reported on page 26:

> Mr. Chairman, perhaps what I am going to say has no direct bearing on the bill itself, but I am wondering about the mutual funds statement. I notice there are $2 million in various securities—common stocks, and that of a total of $7 million, $5 million is invested in common stocks. Is this the usual percentage that you use?

To which Mr. Cormie replied:

> Well, no; I would say this varies according to the recommendations of the investment advisers, the name of whom at present is Davis Palmer Company, New York, and this will vary according to the judgment of the investment advisers. There is a tendency to move more heavily into United States stocks.

So there is a group of investment advisers in New York upon whose judgment the investment policy depends. The report continues:

> Senator Isnor: Yes, in stocks in a mutual fund.
> Mr. Cormie: Yes.
> Senator Isnor: In other words, you have 80 per cent investment in common stocks?
> Mr. Cormie: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Lambert: Mutual funds.

Mr. Howard: Yes, indeed. That is why I quoted Senator Isnor's original question—because he talked about mutual funds and $5 million of the $7 million being in common stocks. The report goes on:

> Senator Isnor: That struck me as very high.
> Mr. Cormie: This will vary. It has moved up. I believe six months ago it was close to 62 per cent in common stocks. Now it has moved up recently to the time of this statement—

June 28, 1967.

> —and you will notice in November a big change in the proportion in common stocks between November 1966 and February 1967, so that would indicate I believe what we are saying that the movement into common stocks has only occurred recently.

Then the committee goes on to discuss the percentage guide lines and so on. As we see, Mr. Cormie himself indicates that the company's investment advisers are a firm in New York and that there was a tendency recently to move more heavily into United States stocks. We have been aware of this for some time. I would be reluctant to go too far in discussing the purposes of this particular company in the investment field. I have no objection to the formation of the company or to its operation. We have been trying to buttress the position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and to help him in every way we can, because we know he is encountering difficulties in his cabinet with regard to some of these things.

This is a Canadian-owned company and since it is a life insurance company it is required by law to remain one. We take the position that this bill should proceed to the committee, but that these aspects of its investment policy to which I have called attention should be examined in a great deal more detail than has been the case up to now, with a view to ascertaining whether they could not have a damaging effect upon the economy.

• (6:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, once again, I shall speak only three minutes.

I must say that the arguments of my colleagues of the New Democratic party have a considerable impact on me in the financial circumstances facing the country at this time.

I have had the opportunity of mentioning several times that the government should be inspired by certain suggestions provided by certain parties. I mean especially the third parties, because I have the impression that the two traditional parties are being guided in their legislation by the existing financial situation and do not seem inclined to get out of their environment or, to use a more up-to-date expression, to swing to the left.

I think this is a case where the government should definitely swing to the left and seriously consider whether it would not be of considerable benefit for the government in solving the difficult financial circumstances in which the Canadian people find themselves at this time, to require as a strict minimum all such companies to invest to a very high degree in the economy of the country.

I simply want to say that, on this point, I support unreservedly the remarks of my colleagues of the New Democratic party that there is a weakness here and that a review, a reorganization of the fiancial situation is necessary in that field, as in some others, precisely to relieve the fate of Canadian taxpayers and put a stop to the flow of our capital into American investments simply because they are more profitable for the company.

Some consideration must also be given to the finances of the country which are at stake and which require those people to invest more in the country.

I emphasize this part of my remarks to say that I support them completely, even if I do not object in principle to the incorporation of this company. I suggest that the government should look closely into the remarks of members of the New Democratic party and keep them in mind when the basis of our whole financial system is revised. Furthermore, it is very urgent that the major companies such as these should sit around a table and consider our financial situation in the light of its social repercussions.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time, and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

BRITISH NORTHWESTERN INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-14, respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. Prior to 1964 there were four insurance companies belonging to the Eagle Star Insurance group operating in Canada. All these companies carried on a general insurance business. One of these companies was British Northwestern Insurance Company, which is being considered in this bill. The other three companies were Eagle Star Insurance Company, the Security National Insurance Company and British Crown Insurance Corporation Limited. Eagle Star Insurance Company Limited was an English company, and was the holding company for the other three companies. Since 1964 the Security National Insurance Company and British Crown Insurance Corporation Limited have transferred their business to the British Northwestern Insurance Company, and the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the British Northwestern Insurance Company to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada. Once that is done the holding company, which is called the Eagle Star Insurance Company Limited, will also transfer its business to the company under consideration so that there will be only one company under the name of the Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada.

The reason for keeping that name is because it is a well known name in the insurance business. It is a business that has been carried on under that name for years. The only other purpose of the bill is to increase the number of shares to allow the one company to carry on the business that was previously carried on by four.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, with all respect to the direct explanation given by the sponsor of the bill and the relative brevity of the proceedings before the Senate committee on banking and commerce on June 28, there are a couple of aspects of this bill that need a little more exploration. Because of the structure of the company, because of the fact that it falls within that class of companies which is foreign controlled, foreign owned—at least that is my understanding—and the fact that it is one that is exempted from the provisions of the public law relating to Canadian ownership, I think we should not be hasty in giving the bill passage and referral to a committee.

I was reading the proceedings before the banking and commerce committee of the Senate, held on June 28, with reference to this company, and quite frankly I am a bit confused. I think there is obviously a typographical error in the report of the proceedings. I think it is necessary to read a few statements from it in order to point out where the confusion arises.

As recorded at page 29 of the proceedings, Senator Leonard asked Mr. Humphrys, the superintendent of insurance, the following question:

> Mr. Humphrys, what happens to the British Eagle Star in Canada?
> Mr. Humphrys: Its insurance will be either allowed to run out and be re-written as it comes up for renewal, in this company, or there will be a portfolio transfer where this company will take over the policies which have been written by the Eagle Star.

Then comes this important question by Senator Leonard:

> The Canadian people will not be offered an opportunity to insure in either a British company or a Canadian company by the name of Eagle Star?
> Mr. Humphrys: No. My understanding is that the activities of this group in Canada will be channeled through this company alone.

I do not know whether Mr. Humphrys was saying no to the negative sense in which the question was posed, in other words saying no to the proposition that the Canadian people will not be offered an opportunity to insure in either a British or Canadian company, or saying no and meaning that they cannot insure through a British company by the name of Eagle Star.

I say that because the bill seeks to change the name of British Northwestern Insurance Company simply to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada, and in the French version Eagle Star Compagnie d'Assurance du Canada. Either the Senate committee printed proceedings in this respect must contain a typographical error, or the question was posed in an incorrect way by Senator Leonard, because the reading of the proceedings would lead one to believe it is not possible to have any insurance through a British or Canadian company called Eagle Star once this bill receives passage.

The other aspect of the bill is the one I mentioned earlier, namely that it is not a Canadian company at the moment, and the public declarations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon), and others on the government side indicate that it is government policy to have companies achieve and maintain a Canadian identity. Because there is no procedure at the moment for this to happen with respect to this company, except the procedure followed in the precedent set by the Mercantile bank group, and another investment company bill which passed through the house this year, I do not think we should give second reading to this bill until some of these assurances can be provided.

Mr. Allmand: For the information of the hon. member this company is a Canadian company, originally incorporated in Manitoba in 1906, and subsequently incorporated under chapter 70 of the statutes of 1910. The original company, Eagle Star, was a British company.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think you should note what is being permitted here. It is difficult to have two hon. members proceed at the same time. If the hon. member wants to ask a question and incorporate this in his question I shall be very glad to allow him the opportunity, but it being seven o'clock I think it might be better to wait for another day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for consideration of private members business has expired. The house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. The house again in committee of supply. It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The house in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, my first words will be to pay a well deserved tribute to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) and it is always a dangerous business to do that in view of his great humility. I do not think it is too much to say that he is one of the most brilliant newcomers to government in recent months and we are proud to see him work in public life in such an effective and dynamic manner.

Here are the few questions I want to ask. First of all, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice to what extent the federal government is willing, while respecting the jurisdictions concerned, to take the initiative or to suggest to the provinces to set up a compensation system on behalf of the individuals or families who have been the victims of criminals.

In recent years, several measures have been proposed to alleviate the lot of criminals, of prisoners. It is clear that science, like sociology, has made enough progress to indicate that certain steps in that direction are imperative.

Furthermore, or rather along the same lines, we should have generous thoughts for victims of criminals.

Often we see films and television programs showing the acts that weigh on the conscience of a convict shortly to be led to the scaffold. But never are we shown in such films or programs the sorry fate of the families of policemen who died on the field of honour, in the accomplishment of their duty.

So I urge, with all possible energy, the government to take the necessary steps to have in Canada a system of compensation to help the victims of criminals or the families of those victims who died as a result of a crime being committed.

My second question to the minister is as follows: he is aware that the province of Quebec recently established a commission to inquire into the administraton of justice? Could he tell me to what extent the Department of Justice is co-operating with the commission recently appointed by the provincial government in this connection?

Thirdly, could he tell me whether in the master legislation he intends to bring before the house shortly, for the purpose of revising the Criminal Code, it is considered to abolish section 149 of the Criminal Code, thus following the example of the British parliament when it passed a legislation regarding homosexuality? And I can speak about it with complete objectivity since I can never lay myself open to malicious criticism.

Mr. Chairman, another quesion I should like to put to the minister deals with the constitutional problem. The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé) announced some time ago the intention of the federal government to show the greatest possible latitude during the forthcoming federal-provincial conference and to accept discussion on the widest possible subjects necessarily related to the constitutional problems. Proceedings will not be restrictive but rather made as general as posible.

I should like to know if since its new intention has been announced through the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development the federal government has received from the various provincial authorities recommendations or suggestions regarding the subjects to be discussed at the federal-provincial conference in January of next year.

This afternoon, I had the opportunity of asking the minister if the famous two-nation concept, which is the basic policy in constitutional matters, has become the major theory of the Conservative party. The member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and the others supported the two-nations theory. I should like to know to what extent the provincial governments have indicated to the federal Minister of Justice their intenton of undertaking the study of that matter and the eventual application of the two-nation concept.

For my part, Mr. Chairman, in reading from cover to cover the book written by the premier of Quebec, Mr. Daniel Johnson, I found some very interesting suggestions and a truly exhaustive definition of the two-nation concept. However, I would like to know to what extent the Progressive Conservative party endorses the views of Mr. Daniel Johnson, who maintains that federal-provincial conferences should be replaced by others where representativs of the French-Canadian nation would join representatives of the English-Canadian nation. This is a theory of the Conservative party, and I would like to know to what extent this problem will be considered at the next federal-provincial conference.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, with regard to capital punishment, the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) has informed the house of the gist of the bill he intended to introduce. Up to a point, if the bill of the Solicitor General is passed, this could bring back the death penalty, as it has now been abolished for all practical purposes.

We know the cabinet majority philosophy in that respect. The cabinet has shown its majority to be against maintaining the death penalty, and it would be against their principles not to proceed with the commutations we have seen since 1966, when the bill was introduced in the house, which decided in favour of maintaining the death penalty. But if the bill introduced by the Solicitor General is passed, it will mean that the death penalty will not be abolished, as it would be applied in the case of those who kill or murder a policeman.

I wonder if the minister is able to tell us, as this is a government measure, whether capital punishment will be reinstated or whether commutation practices will be systematically continued. Should the latter be the case, that is, if death sentences are to be automatically commuted, I fail to see any need for reintroducing in the house the motion of the Solicitor General. I would only suggest that provincial justice authorities be requested to exercise as they see fit this royal prerogative, instead of the governor in council. This decision would be left with the lieutenant governor in council; thus, we would be relieved of this constitutional burden. This would be quite logical, since, as I said earlier, the administration of justice is a provincial responsibility.

[Mr. Choquette.]

Now, I refer all those questions to the attention of the minister. In addition, I say that if the bill introduced by the Solicitor General is passed by the house and if the government really intends to enforce the legislation as drawn up, that is to impose the death penalty for the murder of a policeman, then I will be pleased to support the bill which the Solicitor General wishes to submit. Otherwise, I think it is useless to have the house waste its time and ask it to vote on a legislation which, for all practical purposes, will be inexistent.

• (8.10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to follow the hon. member for Lotbinière in speaking in this debate. A few moments ago I had the pleasure of meeting his brother, and I was pleasantly surprised to find that hon. gentleman to be a very agreeable sort of fellow. I am sure the whole committee will be very pleasantly surprised that not only is he an agreeable chap, he is also sensible.

Mr. Choquette: He is not a politician.

Mr. Nugent: I hope I will have more pleasant surprises about that family. Perhaps if the hon. member for Lotbinière took a few lessons from his brother we might hear a little less nonsense from him from time to time in this chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not have to know the brothers of the hon. member to know that he is unpleasant and that his behaviour is disagreeable.

[English]

Mr. Nugent: I am always pleased to note that the hon. member maintains his usual standard of intelligence, so that we can always hope for improvement.

I only wish to intervene for a few moments this evening because I have been greatly disturbed in the house to hear what I consider an unwarranted attack on the system of justice in this country, and what I consider to be an irresponsible attitude not only on the part of many citizens in the country but certain members of parliament regarding the administration of justice. I am one of those who has always felt it to be the duty of members of this house to uphold the institutions of this country, the system of justice, and our duty to back to the hilt our method of doing things until we find them in error, and then searching as assiduously as we can to correct those errors.

What has really disturbed me is the Truscott case, and I wonder whether members have really thought about the amount of damage that has been done to public confidence in the system of the administration of justice in this country. Being a courtroom lawyer I am familiar with the public's attitude toward the winners and losers of court cases, and I am quite familiar with the expressions of opinions about the presiding judge, the parties and the lawyers when they win or lose. I have been damned for losing a case when I thought I had carried out my duty to the best of my ability and have done a good job, and I have been praised to the skies for winning when I really thought I had not done very well but that the opposing counsel or the prosecutor had made a glaring error. Yet I was considered a great counsel because my client was acquitted. These are human and natural feelings.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Our system of justice is not faultless. In every case where the judge has to make up his mind on the balance of probabilities as to whether there is guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, there certainly is room for questioning his judgment and ability. But after it goes through the court of appeal of a province, and after it goes through the last court of appeal, which in this country is the Supreme Court of Canada, where it has had the attention of some of the most brilliant legal minds of the country, men who take their duties very seriously and who work very hard, surely those of us who have any respect for our system of justice have the very stern duty of trying to uphold their judgment. Of course, there is always room for reservation of opinion concerning their judgment; but surely anyone knows that the market gossip, the sort of story that is repeated from house to house, and the housewives' gossip, can only be an amplification or a minimizing of the true facts.

This is the sort of thing that can demoralize the people. This is the sort of thing that, taken out of its proper context and not handled with that reserve of judgment which members of parliament are supposed to have, can do untold harm to the system of justice in this country. I know for instance, as does any practising lawyer, about the common suspicion among ordinary people, who have little or no occasion to resort to law, that a case was cooked because the defence counsel and the prosecutor were having lunch together, being such good friends. We insist on the adversary system in our courts. I know that when people are not familiar with the courts they find it very difficult to understand how two lawyers on opposing sides can go into court and wholeheartedly give of their best ability, experience, judgment and hard work for their respective clients. They find it difficult to understand how one counsel can fight very hard against a fellow counsel who in turn does his best for his client, even as we in the house who may be close friends outside the house can sometimes hit very hard at our friends, pulling no punches. We do this because it is our duty to do so. Some people can perhaps understand it better when it happens among politicians because we receive greater attention from the press than do the courts, and because this aspect of our lives is better known. The work of the courts is usually known to the public only for the spectacular, and the courts are talked about only by those who have a rankling sense of injustice.

I was therefore shocked and dismayed by the conduct of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the Truscott case. A book was written about the case by someone called LeBourdais. Anyone who read the book must have seen immediately with what inflamed passion it was written, and how unfair so many of her criticisms were. In fact many of her arguments were fallacious and one-sided. The hon. member then, on the basis of a five minute conversation with the accused, said: I will stake my seat on his innocence. He said this after the boy had been convicted by a jury of honest citizens doing their best to bring in an honest verdict. The verdict was upheld by the very competent court of appeal of Ontario, and then carefully reviewed by the Supreme Court of Canada. What sickens me even more is that after all this agitation, and because there is a fear that justice has not been done, the government made arrangements so that the Supreme Court of Canada could once again review the case. Arrangements were made to hear the added evidence which those on the side of the boy think should have swayed the jury so as to reach a different decision.

A very exhaustive hearing ensued, and after hearing the added evidence a judgment was delivered stating that the boy had a fair trial, that he was guilty and that in fact, except for the opinion of one dissenting judge, the added evidence only reinforced and made stronger the case against him. To make doubly sure there was no miscarriage of justice, even after all this took place representations were made and voices were heard suggesting that this was a terrible thing and that something should be done.

I am very disturbed when I see petitions being passed around asking that something be done for the boy. As you know, I am not inhuman. I am one of those who has always been opposed to capital punishment. I do not believe in revenge for the sake of revenge. I do not believe in being extra tough or harsh; but I have always said that we should not mollycoddle anyone who has done harm and that justice must be justice, although I think it should be tempered with mercy.

We have a basic system of justice in which all our citizens place their faith and confidence. As I said, it is not faultless. Anyone who has been to the courts knows that there are many small factors which may sway the mind of a judge or a jury; but this is part of our life. These are the considerations with which we have to live day by day. These are things which we must and will accept because we have not arrived at a finer system and we know no finer system. We as citizens of this country realize there might be a slight miscarriage of justice here or there, or a certain feeling that a decision should have gone the other way, that mistakes might be made, but at the same time we know it is the best system we can devise and each of us must put up with slight mistakes. Each of us must bear any slight miscarriage of justice that might occur, because we know that by and large we can arrive at no better and no fairer system. Surely this is the attitude of any citizen of this democracy who wants to see our way of life continued and improved.

How much stronger then is the duty of a member of parliament who, because I believe he must, represents the finest of citizens, to make sure that he carries out his duty and to be wary of taking cheap political advantage of a situation which may build up his name but will at the same time shake the confidence of the people of this country in the system of justice which we have tried to make as good as we can.

I am glad to see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is sitting in his seat. The judge and jury as well as the court of appeal, all dedicated people who try to be fair, gave weeks and perhaps even months of study to the facts of the case. I found it most repugnant, reprehensible and repulsive to hear this hon. member say, after five minutes conversation with that boy, "I will stake my seat on his innocence." It shows either such complete contempt for our system of justice that we cannot believe that a member of parliament is guilty of it, or such contempt for his position as a member of this house that we are surprised he is still sitting here.

[Mr. Nugent.]

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nugent: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Is he aware of the fact that I did not make the particular statement which he attributes to me; I think it was another member who said that, but I too believe Steven Truscott is innocent. I visited this young man not just for five minutes, but twice for an hour each time.

May I ask the hon. member also if it is not in keeping with our system of justice that a man is not guilty until he is proven guilty, and that when he has a jury trial the verdict must be unanimous? In view of the fact that one of the Supreme Court justices of this country felt this young man had not had a fair trial, does it not serve the interests of justice best to take the position that there is reasonable doubt and that this young man's case should be reconsidered?

Mr. Nugent: I want to apologize to the hon. member for misrepresenting his case. In fact, I understand that perhaps it was the hon. member for Kootenay West who said he would stake his seat on the young man's innocence. I withdraw any suggestion the hon. member only had a five minute conversation. However, I do not believe two one hour conversations make that much difference. The essential point is that the hon. member is putting up two one hour conversations against the patient hearing of all the evidence by men and women of the jury, plus the judges on appeal, judges who certainly cannot be suspected of the political motives, the jumping on the band wagon for political achievement, that we may suspect in this case, not only of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre but of the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member for Kootenay West had no connection with this case so far as I know; it was the hon. member for Kootenay East.

Mr. Nugent: I do not want to labour the point. I just thought it was worth while drawing to the attention of the members of this house certain facts, and asking them if we could not remember our responsibility to our system of justice, to judges and juries who try to do their job as best they can. Surely we must understand that whenever we have a winner and a loser we are going to have grumbling. We must live with this, and it is our job to make sure that since this system of justice is an integral part of the society in which we believe so much, we are wary of criticism.

I recall the Coffin case, for instance. There was an investigation in that case. It is very easy to arouse public opinion. I think perhaps it is a good thing that in our society public opinion can be aroused as it was in the Truscott case and the Coffin case, and that it is possible to have this sort of investigation. I have no quarrel with this. I think the Department of Justice did the right thing in trying to clear up these doubts. My only quarrel is with those who, even after the very careful investigation and after everything that was done to reassure us, still try to make our system of justice suspect.

They say, obviously it must be wrong. This can do nothing but harm to our country. I should like to go on to another subject for a few minutes. I come from the province of Alberta in which we have six man juries. This system was initiated at a time when the west was sparsely settled. It is true that even now we do not have a large population—only about a million and a quarter, I believe. However, it does seem archaic to me that the city of Edmonton, for instance, with a population of approximately 400,000, is still tied to the six man jury. The difference between a six man jury and a 12 man jury does not seem very much. Perhaps it only impresses counsel who has found one dissenter on a 12 man jury and who says that if he had had six they would have been unanimous whereas, having 12, there was a hung jury or a disagreement.

It is not strictly the defence lawyer who says: Give me another six men so that I have one more chance to get someone who disagrees. This statement comes from a defence lawyer who says that everything must be fair. I do not believe those who are charged with criminal offences in the province of Alberta should be treated any less reasonably or any differently from those in the province of Ontario who are charged with criminal offences. I do not believe that human nature in Alberta is any different from human nature in Ontario. If it is necessary to have a 12 man jury in Ontario, then it is necessary to have a 12 man jury in Alberta. I simply suggest to you that today we have enough people in Alberta to enable us to go to the 12 man jury system. I simply suggest that we should now pretend that the west is inhabited, and ask whether it is not time that we were all treated equally in Canada.

You know, this question of jury trials is not too simple. There is a certain penalty attached to asking for a jury in criminal cases. I am not sure that I have any solution to this problem. I can recall the dean of our law school saying no lawyer who has a case should want to pick and choose between judges if he has confidence in his case and his client. This may be good theory, but it is lousy practice. If you ask for a jury trial when you could have had a trial by judge, and if your client is found guilty, then your client is going to get double the sentence because you have insulted the judge by asking for a jury trial. I am not saying this applies to all judges, but it certainly does to many. In fact I feel that the human element is so prevalent among our judges that perhaps we should take another close look at the Criminal Code and at the provision for election for trial by judge alone rather than by judge and jury. Perhaps the only time a man should be allowed trial by judge alone should be by the speedy trial method, so that there is no connotation of lack of faith in the judge. It would be just a matter of formality.

I do not know whether I am guilty of what I accuse the public of, namely not having enough faith in our system of justice, and perhaps in our judges. However, I have always felt duty bound to advise my client, in the event that he asked for a jury trial, that if he is found guilty the odds are that his sentence will be much higher than if he were tried by judge alone.

Mr. Brewin: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nugent: Yes.

Mr. Brewin: Does he not think that by suggesting that judges would habitually double or increase sentences out of mere pique he is expressing a very great disrespect of the judiciary, much more so than the disrespect that he expressed when he castigated them earlier in his speech?

Mr. Nugent: I thought I had expressed my own hesitation about this. I am not sure whether my revealing this practice does not make me guilty in a way. But I feel it my duty to apprise my client of the prospects for his future, rather than to achieve the cheap political gain of which I accused the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I think there is a difference there which should be apparent even to the hon. member for Greenwood.

Perhaps the hon. member for Greenwood finds that the judges who try his cases are all perfect. I do not think I suggested that the judges double the sentence every time; I simply said this was possible. I know that this factor I have mentioned works on the mind of a judge to such extent that I feel it necessary to warn my client that the sentence might be more severe if he asks for a jury trial. I will go so far as to say that I know of one judge in Alberta who told me—no one will get his name out of me—that if a client of mine was found guilty in a jury trial he would give him double because, as he put it, "we can't waste time with juries".

Judges are only human and this does happen infrequently. However, I did suggest to the Minister of Justice that having weighed these human elements and other factors which unfortunately do come into the situation, whether we like it or not it might be as well to have the option of a speedy trial by judge alone. If you want a speedy trial you ask to be tried by a judge alone; but certainly any case going to the supreme court should be tried by judge and jury. This procedure is not so expensive in Alberta where we use six man juries.

I do not pretend to have much experience of jury trials, Mr. Chairman. In fact I was on the first and only murder trial in the history of Canada that was tried by judge alone. I remember I found it rather amusing in our last debate on the subject of capital punishment in this house, being an exponent of the abolition of capital punishment, to realize that the vote on the matter was held on a Tuesday evening and that the man I had defended was due to be hanged on the Wednesday. So many of my friends accused me of fighting a little beyond the court of last resort, to which most lawyers usually go in order to save a life. But it did not matter, because this government commuted the sentence.

I should like to say something about that subject. I appeared on a television program with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands—he will forgive me if I have mistaken him for somebody else—and we were asked about the commutation of sentences. The hon. member said: "Well, you know, if you break down the vote and see those who voted for abolition and those who voted against, you will find that those who voted for abolition represented the more populous constituencies and therefore represented the most people, and that really the popular vote was for abolition".

I remember that I rejected that out of hand. I think it is ridiculous for hon. members of this house to look behind the qualifications of any member of this house in the sense of how many people he represents. I remember that on that program I went so far as to say that when parliament has spoken with a majority voice, if we have responsible government—and there is much reason to doubt it these days—a government that believes in being responsible to the people, then the government must obey. On the last vote on this question parliament said "We want them to hang". But the government said "Parliament be hanged", and that is all.

I am an abolitionist but I would rather abolish this government. I think the welfare of this country necessitates the abolition of this government. I would not care if the house spoke against what I hold nearest and dearest to my heart. I would urge the government that they must obey parliament—and I have nothing but contempt for this government that, in turn, shows contempt for this house, which represents the voice of the people.

Hon. gentleman opposite say we are going to have a free vote on the next bill to come before us. Let me tell you what I think of that free vote, Mr. Chairman. Let me tell you what I think of the honesty of the people over there who support such a dishonest government. How can you expect an honest vote?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nugent: I will vote for abolition, but I am going to be ashamed to vote when I see the switch in voting that takes place over there. I am sure they are going to vote, not from the heart but for political considerations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: Fanaticism, fanaticism.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we are studying the estimates of the Department of Justice, which department, in the mind of the people, is of prime importance. When looking at the total amount requested, namely $13,514,000, we note that, in terms of government expenditures, this is one of the less costly departments.

This, Mr. Chairman, is due to the fact, as mentioned a while ago by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), that the administration of justice falls more within the jurisdiction of the provinces than that of the federal government. We have a Department of Justice here for the whole of Canada, which leaves to the provinces the administration of justice within their jurisdiction and their boundaries, whether they are out east, out west, or in central Canada.

In fact, the Civil Code comes under the provincial government, whereas the Criminal Code comes under the federal government. I should like to point out to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) actions now being perpetrated in the province of Quebec which, to my mind, are absolutely of a criminal nature.

For instance, when driving around in the province of Quebec, we read on the viaducts we have to follow signs such as these: Vive le Québec libre! Vive le R.I.N.! We even see them on private properties. I wonder then, whether there is any law whereby those organizations, those political parties could be forced to pay the damages caused by their members. It is not that I want to keep anyone from becoming a member of the R.I.N. if he so wishes. Not at all. That is not my goal.

If those who shout: Long live free Quebec, long live freedom, take the liberty of damaging the property of others, of committing vandalistic acts throughout the province, I really wonder what kind of freedom we would enjoy under the administration of R.I.N. supporters in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Boulanger: It would no longer be freedom, but slavery.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, besides, I was myself the victim of such an act. During the night of October 12 to 13, after I stated that we were a single Canadian nation made up of various cultures and that both official languages should be recognized throughout the country, some members of the R.I.N. wrote on the foundations of my Hull home in letters about a foot and a half high, the words: "Caouette, colonized, defector and traitor".

I stated that I held the members of R.I.N. responsible for this act of vandalism. The next day, in Le Droit, there was a reply to the effect that it was probably members of the R.I.N. but that they had no orders to act in this way even if they had reasons to do so. They had reasons to deface with paint not only private homes but overpasses, streets, roads, the great traffic highways in the province of Quebec paid for by the taxpayers. Then, they have motives.

Mr. Chairman, obviously all kinds of reasons can be put forward. But I feel that the government should pass legislation to force these people to pay for the damages. If they lack the courage and the guts to give their names, to sign their names or show their faces, at least let them respect other people's property in the country and in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Loiselle: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Imagine a province like ours being administered by such irresponsible hot-heads.

Mr. Boulanger: More than that, extremists.

Mr. Caouette: Yes. more than that, extremists and madmen. This goes a little beyond extremism, they are anarchists. There is no authority for these people. They want to rule, and they talk eloquently about freedom, while failing to recognize the freedom of others. If we do not happen to think like them, if we do not want to make a mess of our country, if we do not want Quebec outside of confederation, we are colonized turncoats, traitors to our nation.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of justice in Canada—and I say it here, in parliament—I do not think any French Canadian within the R.I.N. party could give me lessons in French-Canadian principles or patriotism, either in my province or in my country. However, one can be a French Canadian and patriotic without making virulent speeches, without trying to crush one's neighbours.

We have seen in Algeria experiences such as those the R.I.N. would like to put us through in Quebec. In fact, I met not so long ago a senior official from Algeria, where mutual hatred was spread, where they were at war for seven years and blood was running in the streets, to get independence. They got independence, but this official told me this: We are worse off than before and 90 per cent of our economy is still under French control. That is the kind of independence they now have in Algeria, after a bloody seven-year war.

This is the kind of fight the R.I.N. would like to start in the province of Quebec and we refuse, in Canada, and specially in our province, to follow the example of Europe.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Mongrain: Does the hon. member, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste include in his remarks the Ralliement National, or does he speak only of the R.I.N?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, if the Ralliement National has dispositions identical to those of the R.I.N., I put it exactly in the same group as the R.I.N.

Whether one is called the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) or any other name, it is not by shedding blood that we shall save Canada. That is not true. We shall save the country by good understanding, comprehension; not by understanding only in one corner of the country, but by understanding in every corner of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, the English speaking members from the west or from the maritimes should try to understand our point of view, as we in the province of Quebec understand theirs, and we will then see that everything will be fine even in the York-Humber constituency.

Mr. Chairman, it is a point on which—

Mr. Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) did not understand.

[English]

Mr. Caouette: I just said one thing. I said that when our English speaking members of parliament from the west, from central Canada and from the maritimes understand those of us from Quebec as we understand them, we shall have co-operation and understanding—even in the riding of York-Humber.

Mr. Cowan: You have that co-operation and understanding in York-Humber now.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to some conditions prevailing in the province of Quebec. No protection is granted to those who are molested or assaulted by those new modern savages: there seems to be a lack of interest in such behaviour. Public and private property is damaged but this is overlooked.

• (9:00 p.m.)

I think action should be taken. I do not, I repeat, wish to prevent anybody from joining the R.I.N. if he wants to do so—if someone wants to waste his time, let him join—but I do not think anyone should be allowed to tamper with the property of others. We do not want dictatorship, from the R.I.N. or from any other organization.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I wish to add that I agree with what the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), who spoke before me, said a while ago on the subject of capital punishment. The hon. member said that he himself was in favour of abolishing capital punishment but that a vote had been taken here in parliament, a free vote, and that the house had declared itself to be in favour of retaining capital punishment. It is a fact that the government did not care a rap about the vote taken in the House of Commons. So little store is set by the free vote that another has been announced in the house, to take place in a few weeks.

Are they now trying to prepare a free vote which would not actually be one? I, for one, am having in my riding a referendum on the matters of capital punishment and separatism, so as to know the opinion of my constituents.

As far as capital punishment is concerned, out of 856 answers received, 475 were in favour of maintaining capital punishment, 310 were for its abolition and 71 were undecided. That is the result to date. This means that opinions are rather equally divided; 475 against 381, the difference is less than 100 between those who are in favour of maintaining capital punishment and those who want its abolition. However, the fact remains, Mr. Chairman, that when a vote is taken here in the House of Commons, a free vote, when parliament decides by a majority vote to maintain capital punishment, then the government should take this result into account. We are told that we will be called upon to consider an amendment providing that if a policeman or a prison guard is killed, then the murderer of that policeman or prison guard could be executed.

Mr. Chairman, I know that being a policeman or a prison guard is a dangerous, delicate and exacting job; I know that. However, my wife, my children, the hon. members' wives and children, any Canadian citizen is a human being just as much as a policeman or a prison guard. If we accept the principle of hanging the murderer of a policeman, I would like the murderer of my wife to hang also, because he would have killed a human being.

I feel that the principle is false even if we are told that for five years, we will try that method, we will not impose capital punishment on the murderers of ordinary citizens but we will execute the murderers of policemen or jailers. Let us be logical; why have one law for the rich and another for the poor? We are equal citizens, we are all Canadians, regardless of our situation. Now, if the population is for maintaining capital punishment, let us maintain it; if it is in favour of its abolishment, let us abolish it. But let us not overlook the wishes of our fellow citizens, of the electorate. And when parliament—

Mr. Mongrain: Would the hon. member allow me a question.

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I presume the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste is talking about the maintenance of the death penalty for crimes proved beyond any doubt and not on circumstantial evidence.

Mr. Caouette: Quite so, Mr. Chairman. I say to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) that quite obviously in the past, there have been some terrible miscarriages of justice; innocent people have been hanged, it is true. But some evolution must take place necessarily.

Whether it is capital murder to the first degree, if there is no shadow of a doubt that we have the true murderer, I feel he should hang. We should maintain capital punishment for those people. But if a single doubt arises, if we have one single doubt, the least doubt in our mind, then no capital punishment but imprisonment, possibly life, 25 or 20 years, according to the doubt the jury may have. It seems to me that it would be the logical way to apply capital punishment in Canada, not only for one class of society, not only for a few civil servants, but for the whole of Canadian citizens.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) was saying a minute ago that to all practical purposes, capital punishment was already abolished. It is true. There have been horrible cases and not only in one province, in Quebec. What has happened in these typical cases is that the government has not acted upon the will of the House of Commons. This, it seems to me, is an insult by the government to parliament, not to take the vote of parliament into account.

Another question I wish to bring to the attention of the minister is that of the rehabilitation of those who have been, let us say, for two years or five years in prison. You know that it is very difficult nowadays for a prisoner to get rehabilitated into society, because if he is a criminal, his record will accompany him for the remainder of his life.

We have at this time 18, 19 and 20-year old youths sentenced to five year or ten year terms. Once their sentence is served, they will leave the penitentiary dragging along their record until they breathe their last. Endless problems are encountered when trying to rehabilitate them. Who is going to trust a prisoner, a ex-convict? Who can expect him to become a good citizen after he has been in jail for two, five or ten years? There is a vicious circle here which prompts the ex-prisoner to commit other offences because nobody believes in him. We see that after six months or a year, the same man has reverted back to the same habits, because he was given no chance of rehabilitation.

I think that the Department of Justice or the government should set up a program to facilitate the rehabilitation of prisoners, of these people who have served a term, whether it be one, two, five or ten years, in a penitentiary or a prison. I think this would eliminate relapses into crime, the temptation or sometimes necessity for most former prison inmates to commit the same offences and continue to behave criminally, as happens today.

Mr. Chairman, parole also comes under the Department of Justice. I must confess to the hon. minister that all the discussions which I have had with the parole board have been very warm and the officials of the board are kind. They give good answers, their investigations to know whether so and so can benefit from a parole are cleverly carried out. I have but congratulations to offer to the department in that respect.

The situation is examined; serious inquiries are made before anyone is paroled. This, I have found out. There have been mistakes. But anyone, just like us, can make mistakes. In fact, as long as we are human, we will see mistakes made and we will make some ourselves. Those who never make any are not here with us, but in another department in Montreal.

Mr. Chairman, all this brings me to say to the Minister of Justice that his department is important, because when we speak of justice, in Canada or in a given province, justice in my view means the basis of a social structure that can stand up on its own, of a social structure that can gain in value, and that basis, which is equal justice for all, must be applied at all levels throughout this large country of ours.

Mr. Chairman, we shall certainly pass the estimates of the Department of Justice. However, I should like the minister to take into consideration the representations which I have just made with regard to our vandals in the province of Quebec, and also the rehabilitation especially of our young people or not so young who come out of prison or out of the penitentiary, not to mention the matter of capital punishment which must be voted on seriously, without partisan politics and in the best interest of the Canadian people who deserve all the protection we can give them, as their elected representatives, here in the House of Commons.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I intend to direct my remarks through you, chiefly to the Minister of Justice, but before doing so I would like to make a brief reference to the contribution of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I am sorry he is not in the chamber at the moment but I have no doubt he will read what I have to say. The hon. member made an attack upon certain other hon. members in connection with the Truscott case. I do not propose to discuss that case, but I do want to suggest to the hon. member that respect for the courts of justice does not mean that one does not and cannot criticize in a respectful way the decisions of the courts, even of the very highest courts.

If a member has a profound conviction of the innocence of somebody, even though it may be that the courts have held him guilty, then it is the duty of that member to do all he can in the interests of justice to see that justice is done, even though this may involve something that some people may regard as disrespect for the courts. I would remind the hon. member, as I think has already been done, that one of the eminent judges of the Supreme Court of Canada took a different view of the Truscott case. I would also remind the hon. member that it is not just a few freaks and strange people who are still concerned about the Truscott case. I would call his attention to an editorial in the Montreal Star of October 28, again appealing for another look at the Truscott case and for his early release on parole.

The Minister of Justice, Mr. Chairman, has many important responsibilities. I agree with the implications of the speeches by the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Vancouver East when they indicated that in their view there was a great need for the fresh winds of reforming zeal to sweep through the Department of Justice, and a very great need for that reforming zeal to be translated into modern, up to date and enlightened legislation, particularly in the field of criminal law, and no doubt in other fields as well.

The minister, as has been said, is a young man. He is an able minister. He has the reputation, which no doubt is well earned, of being a liberal with a small "l", and the more of those there are on the treasury benches the better it will be. I would like to say we all wish him well, in his very important task as Minister of Justice. However, Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss tonight what I think is the most important of all his duties. I refer to his responsibility as the principal constitutional adviser of the government. This is always important in a federal system, but it is absolutely crucial at the present time.

On September 28, speaking in a television interview, the Prime Minister said that the current national unity crisis is a threat to the survival of Canada, and he appealed to all political parties to follow the precedents set in wartime and to unite on basic objectives. Mr. Chairman, that is precisely what we in this party would like to do, but it is quite useless to expect us to unite on these issues and then deny the house any reasonable opportunity to discuss them.

Make no mistake about it, the current crisis of national unity has constitutional implications. These cannot be ignored. They cannot be avoided, shoved under a rug, or dealt with in a piecemeal way. They must be faced and the one place to face them is right here in parliament. I am going to invite the Minister of Justice, who has spoken to the Canadian Bar Association on these transcendent and important issues, to speak to the house on these constitutional issues. Let him speak here and tell us where he and his government stand on the constitutional issues of the day. I want to tell him that in the minds of many Canadians they think there is a vacuum at the centre.

Quebec, as we all know, is seething with demands for constitutional change and the rest of us have no right to say now, as we used to say, that we do not know what Quebec wants. Naturally there is a multiplicity of voices. In fact, Mr. Chairman, as I am speaking there is a multiplicity of voices in the chamber. However, I understand that the Quebec Liberal Federation has demanded a new constitution, with a special or particular status for Quebec. The premier of Quebec has made it clear that in his opinion the future of Canada depends on constitutional change. I notice that he has recently taken on a special adviser to the cabinet on constitutional issues, a very respected businessman, Marcel Faribeault, who, in collaboration with Mr. Fowler has written a book on the vital importance of a new constitution, and just the other day repeated that he would not back down from anything he had said in that book.

As some hon. members know, Le Devoir on June 30 issued a special anniversary issue containing 23 articles, all but two written by people in the province of Quebec, setting out in detail the changes which the authors think are desirable. As we all know, the premier of Ontario has called a conference to discuss the future of confederation. Everyone will be at it but the people who should be there, who should be the most important of all, the elected representatives in the government of Canada. This conference is something like playing Hamlet without the prince of Denmark. I think it is absurd to discuss the future of the constitution of the country without representatives of the government of Canada being present, not just as observers but as the elected representatives to participate in the discussion that takes place.

I say there is an ugent need for the formulation of a federal Canadian point of view. I am not saying that the points of view of the various provinces are not Canadian, but I am saying there is a need for the federal authority to express its point of view, and this point of view, I suggest, should be definite, and about certain essentials it should be absolutely firm, although, there is room for flexibility in some matters.

Again I say that this chamber is the place where we have the right to know where the government stands on these matters. Speaking to the Canadian Bar Association on September 4 the Minister of Justice said that the federal government declares it is ready to discuss any constitutional changes proposed. I suggest that that is not good enough. The federal government must itself put forward its own proposals. In my view the proposal to discuss a constitutional bill of rights is just not good enough.

As the minister probably knows, I am enthusiastic about the general proposal to incorporate a constitutional bill of rights into the written constitution of the country. But if it is put forward in isolation, if it is put forward as a first and only step, I suggest it will be shot down. I think it should be part of a package deal.

I expect that the minister has read the article by Professor Edward McWhinney of McGill University. I do not seem to have his article with me, but I will invite the minister to reread it.

Mr. Trudeau: I have read it but I do not think I would care to reread it.

Mr. Brewin: Further, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it is not good enough, as some ministers have been doing, to talk about educational and cultural rights alone. No doubt they are vastly important and I hope all English speaking Canadians, including the premier of British Columbia, will give a resounding yes to legitimate demands that the educational and cultural rights of French speaking Canadians be given precisely the same generous treatment in the provinces that are predominantly English speaking as the English speaking minority has enjoyed for some time in the province of Quebec.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I simply do not want to underestimate the importance of that, but I do suggest that this alone is not enough. In an admirable editorial in Le Devoir of September 26 Mr. Claude Ryan dealt with this matter. He said that two things were necessary. If the minister will forgive my poor pronunciation, I will read in French part of what Mr. Ryan said:

[Translation]

At the level of the whole federation, they want, within the fullest possible measure, to have the assurance that their language and cultural rights will be recognized and respected, that they will not be treated as second class citizens because they speak French.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Ryan goes on to point out that in addition to this it is necessary to deal with the problem of the constitutional position of Quebec within confederation. In this respect the contemptuous remarks by the minister in a press conference a few days later, or perhaps while he was still at the meeting of the Canadian Bar Association, directed to all those who saw a solution to some of these constitutional dilemmas in a particular status for Quebec, were not at all helpful. Once again I turn to an editorial of Mr. Claude Ryan on September 8 under the heading:

[Translation]

The deplorable attitude of Mr. Pierre-Elliott Trudeau.

[English]

I will read the last paragraph, although I am sure the minister has already read it and no doubt it has increased his humility to the proper extent, but I will read it again:

[Translation]

Basically, we blame Mr. Trudeau because he sets himself up as an outside judge, arrogant and unbending, when he should humbly, like everyone else, be seeking. What we deplore, in his case, is a hateful tendency to judge from on high and from afar, problems of which, if he were somewhat more humble, he might suspect that the understanding escapes him. Mr. Trudeau claims to serve the cause of Canadian unity by speaking as he does. We claim that he does a disservice by extreme language, to this cause which in our eyes remains worthy. He makes more difficult the task of those who seek, through actual moderation, effective solutions to very real problems which they have not invented but, which stem from history and life and are only aggravated by the blindness of some people whose first duty would be to realize it with seriousness and truth.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: I commend those words to the minister. I hope he will forgive my pronunciation. It is not quite what it should be, but I hope it is improving.

I want now to say a word about this matter of particular status. Of course it is possible to give a definition of that so confined that it does not mean anything more than we have at the present time in the British North America Act. It is perfectly possible, as some of the opponents of this idea have said, to give it such a broad and sweeping content that to talk of a federal system and to confer such a particular status on any one province would be absurd, and would destroy the whole federal system. Both these propositions are true. But I agree with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration when he said at the Montmorency conference in September—I do not agree with all he said; I simply agree with this—that the time had come for us to set aside slogans, to sit down and discuss concrete proposals. With that I entirely agree.

The device of a particular status is not regarded, by us at any rate, as a sort of concession made so as to please Quebec and denied to other provinces. It is merely a device whereby, if Quebec desires decentralization on certain matters that affect her language and culture, she may insist on that decentralization. But if the rest of Canada, the other nine provinces—and for very good reasons, I may say—want centralized administration of certain matters they, too, can insist on that without being held to the degree of decentralization that appears attractive to the province of Quebec. This is only a device; it is not a sacred formula or anything like that.

Our function is to discuss and work out what should be done. I say that the minister is doing a disservice—I am sure he does not mean it—when he waives a particular status aside and rules it out in a rather insulting way, as he did before. Perhaps he did not say what he was reported as having said; I do not know. I do not even understand the full significance of his words. They were translated from French. His words were translated as stupid but I understand that he used an even stronger adjective than that.

I want once again to appeal to the minister, and through him to the government, to bring these constitutional issues and the problems facing us to a committee of this parliament. I suggest that because I believe out of this parliament can be chosen, from all parties and all regions, a group of people who can sit down in good faith, intelligence and sense, consider some of these problems and perhaps arrive at the consensus which the Prime Minister said is so important to the unity of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Brewin: Yes.

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid I may not have enough time to answer many of these questions but I should like to deal with this one. As I understood him, the hon. member for Greenwood quoted Mr. Claude Ryan, and I should like to know whether the special status which the hon. member described and which his party has asked this house to adopt is, in content, the one that Mr. Claude Ryan has spelled out at some length.

Mr. Brewin: I would not say it was exactly what I have read from Claude Ryan's article in the issue of Le Devoir from which I have quoted. We do not agree with all of it holusbolus. On the other hand, I thought it stated a perfectly reasonable negotiating position which I would be glad to discuss with Mr. Ryan, the minister or any other Canadian.

Mr. Trudeau: Is it the position of your party?

Mr. Brewin: It is not the position of my party. Mr. Ryan speaks for himself. We make our own statements. There is much that Mr. Ryan said with which I would agree, and there are certainly some things he said with which I would not agree.

An hon. Member: What about what Mr. Cliche said?

Mr. Brewin: I certainly agree with Mr. Cliche. I have no trouble at all in agreeing with Mr. Cliche.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member aware that Mr. Cliche said that Mr. Levesque's thesis was defensible, and is the hon. member ready to defend it?

Mr. Brewin: I dare say he said that. I think Mr. Levesque's thesis is worthy of discussion. It was discussed by the Quebec Liberal Association. They did not agree with it. We have the right to agree or disagree with Mr. Levesque, who is a very able Canadian, and I have no doubt that Mr. Levesque can defend his thesis perfectly acceptably. I do not happen to agree with him. But I agree with Mr. Cliche that Mr. Levesque's thesis is certainly defensible and very well put, although I have to disagree with him.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

He has said that we should make Quebec independent as soon as possible.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to conclude my remarks, I hope without further interruptions.

Mr. Choquette: Those who support the N.D.P. are almost separatists, and that is something this house should know. Those who support that party in the province of Quebec are, I repeat, almost separatists.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There has been no question of privilege raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Brewin: There has been no question of privilege and I should like to assure the hon. member that we will soon have some members in this party from the province of Quebec to explain their point of view here in this house. I am sorry they are not here at this time to do so.

Mr. Choquette: There are many republicans in Quebec who are not separatists.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, again I am going to try to make the rest of my speech, if possible, without further interruptions.

Mr. Woolliams: Andy, you have irritated them tonight.

Mr. Brewin: I have said a few things that have disturbed hon. members opposite and I am delighted to have done so, but let me now get back to the plea I was making. This parliament should have a chance through committee procedure to make a thorough examination of these constitutional issues.

What have we heard so far? We have heard the Prime Minister inviting the premiers of the provinces to come to a conference to be held in January or February to discuss a constitutional bill of rights. We in this house are not told what this bill of rights is to be, or what it might contain. We do not know what the discussions are going to be about. I suggest that with the crisis facing this country and with the Prime Minister calling on all of us to get together as in time of war, the time has come to use the procedures of this parliament to invoke a serious discussion and dialogue in respect of these constitutional issues.

At this point I should like to read into the record a letter I wrote to the Prime Minister on this subject. This was a public letter and I am sure he would not object to my reading it at this point because it expresses precisely what I think is important.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

You will recall that over the course of the last two or three years I have written to you personally about the urgent need for a special all-party parliamentary committee to review the constitutional issues facing Canada in the light of the threat to Canadian unity.

The tenor of your replies has been an approval of the proposal, linked with an expression of opinion that the time had not yet arrived to set up such a committee. Questions in the house put by myself and others have elicited a similar response from you.

I am encouraged by your words on the TV program "Twenty Million Questions" on September 27th, to raise the matter once again and to urge you that it is now both timely and imperative to appoint such a committee. The time has come to take the initial steps towards seeking a concensus from the elected representatives from all parties and regions on the main lines of an adequate federal response to the insistent demand for constitutional change.

In the interview you said that the current national unity crisis is a threat to the survival of Canada and you urged political parties to unite on basic objectives to meet the crisis and to form a common political front on national unity.

This is a laudable, indeed a highly important objective, but how can it be achieved unless the real problems that are involved are carefully looked at together by the representatives of the different parties? An all-party parliamentary committee would be the means whereby the basic issues could be clarified, and perhaps a concensus arrived at as to the changes necessary to meet the aspirations of French-speaking Canada without undermining the essentials of functioning federal systems.

I am certain you could count on such a committee to adopt a non-partisan approach on a matter so vital to Canada's future existence.

I know that you have said that it is necessary for your government first to formulate its own approach, and for that purpose to await the recommendations of special advisers appointed to the Department of Justice.

But I suggest there is no time to lose. Mr. Claude Ryan, in an admirable editorial in Le Devoir of the 26th of September, entitled "Les conditions d'une solution federale acceptable et durable", adopting the English expression, "Time is of the esence," has said that there is scarcely a moment to lose.

He adds "It is not excessive to affirm that there remains no more than a few years—two, three, or four at the most—to find the essential elements of a moderate solution to the "Canadian Problem".

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this parliament and the members of all parties have a part to play in finding these essential elements of a moderate solution which requires to be found, by Mr. Ryan's estimate, within two, three, or four years at the most.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I went on in my letter to the Prime Minister to say:

You have recently announced a proposal to discuss a constitutional bill of rights with the provincial premiers in November. May I urge that this proposal should be discussed with the House of Commons first, if you are truly serious about a non-partisan approach at the federal level to constitutional problems.

I urged that this proposal should be discussed in the House of Commons first, if the Prime Minister was serious about a non-partisan approach at the federal level in respect of constitutional problems. I will not read the rest of the letter but hon. members will see that it expresses what I am trying to say in the house to the Prime Minister, to the Minister of Justice and to his colleagues, that surely the time has come for the elected representatives of all regions of Canada to be given an opportunity to wrestle with these problems and to evolve if possible, and I believe it is, a concensus as to the federal point of view. It seems absolutely ridiculous that we have conferences called by provincial premiers and demands made by provinces, political parties and a key province in Canada, while at the same time we have no means in this parliament to dig into this problem in an attempt to deal with it.

In closing my remarks, I suggest to the Minister of Justice, that notwithstanding his other responsibilities of importance, such as the whole administration of justice, it is absolutely vital to the future of Canada that the elected representatives have a chance to look at this problem. I am sure they will do so in a non-partisan way so that we may contribute, not as a party or a group of parties, to the solution of the problems which the Prime Minister has said threaten the very existence of Canada. I ask the minister to state what is his position. I hope he agrees with the Prime Minister that even though the time is not exactly ripe, and perhaps we should wait until after the Ontario conference, the time is coming soon when the matter must and indeed should be dealt with by parliament. Anything less I suggest would create the danger of wrecking confederation, with the electing representatives having no chance to contribute their share to the solution of these grave problems.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, for a good many years I have sat through the estimates of the Department of Justice without making any comment. Tonight my time is limited, my interest is great and my anxiety broad. I should like to begin by doing something I did not think I would be doing for a few years under any circumstances, and that is commending the hon. member for Villeneuve. He hit several nails firmly on the head tonight and I congratulate him. He is becoming a very perceptive spokesman for his part of the country, and a very perceptive person in reference to the whole of the country. He is quite right in suggesting you do not have to be a regional barrel thumper to be a good representative of any particular region.

I share too with the hon. member a feeling of unhappiness, or worse, about the question of capital punishment. I am not one of those so dedicated as being incapable of changing his mind on a question so important and so difficult of solution, while so far removed from certitude as this question. But I do resent very much any device by which members of parliament, no election having intervened, can be presented a second time with a similar question, the implication being that since a government measure is concerned, our disposition with regard to the subject might somehow be altered. I take this as a reflection upon our integrity. Indeed, to suggest that we are free agents when we vote, that we are simply seeking the best solution to the question before us, is not greatly conducive to the acceptance of the idea. All this disturbs me, and I quite agree with the hon. member for Villeneuve. I should have thought that in these critical and crucial times a better way might have been found when dealing with this very important question.

I wish there was an opportunity to discuss many other matters. Some of them have been touched upon by the hon. member for Greenwood who, I notice, is becoming quite a linguist. Some have been discussed by my hon. friend from Edmonton-Strathcona. The whole question of the laws in our society, and the judiciary as an institution, is one to which we should apply ourselves. The judicial institution in our free society is one of the great forces working for stability, and indeed, as a God-fearing Presbyterian, I might say, for enforced righteousness. But perhaps at times stability may seem to the body politic to be excessive conservatism with a small "c", and perhaps in a society, which is seemingly a very permissive one but also a restless and troubled one, the role of the judiciary and the courts is one upon which we should direct a little more thought.

As a layman in the field of law I am sometimes concerned about the variety of sentencing. I am speaking here in an academic and abstract sense, but when I see a bright young man who stole a boat being sentenced to four years in penitentiary, and another man, bright or otherwise, who ended the life of a couple of his fellow citizens, getting three years, I wonder. Sometimes I feel that there is often too great a regard for property and that the offence against property seems to be more heinous than the offence against life. Sometimes I wonder if in our present society we are concerned, as we certainly should be, about the life, the future and the prospects of rehabilitation for the offender and for the person who takes the life of his fellow man, but may be a little less than sensitive about his victims. In this field the hon. member for York-Humber, with whom I disagree on several things I may say, has shown some initiative and some sensitivity.

I wonder also if we are not at the stage where we should be giving some careful thought to and preparation in the whole realm of labour relations. I know that the history of labour courts in many parts of the world has been uncertain. There have been some great successes and some failures. But, as I have looked over the activities, the episodes, the incidents and the anxieties in the labour sector of society, I wonder if we should not be giving more thought to the judicial and institutional aspects in dealing with this important problem.

There are other fields which cause me great concern. As one who used to be involved in the field of sociology I am appaled at the great need for more adequately trained personnel in our corrective institutions. I often wonder about those who believe that the worst punishment that should be inflicted on anyone is life imprisonment, and are so disinterested in the establishment of adequate facilities in which to maintain these erring citizens. It is a long time since we looked in depth into our corrective institutions. We have passed the age of merely making a punishment fit the crime.

We have passed the retributive stage. But as I look at our institutions and as I hear stories of what happens in some of them, I wonder if in fact our preachments are not far beyong our practices. In this age, when we are looking again at our constitution, we should be looking at our role in the international scene and perhaps we should be doing some fundamental thinking in some of these areas.

At one time I had great expectations for prospects in this field under the minister who, I had thought, was a man of great spark, great ability and great intellectual capacity. I hope that he still has all of these qualities and I hope he will emerge as a progressive, aggressive and reforming Minister of Justice. I have not yet seen evidence of that, but I am not yet prepared to say he is not capable of producing some signs of this. I hope we will soon see evidence of it.

I will not deal with the subject mentioned by the hon. member for Greenwood, except to say that had the great province of Ontario in these difficult years been headed by a man such as Mowat or Hepburn, the frail fabric of confederation would have been tattered indeed, and Premier Robarts is to be commended. I hope we can move forward in this direction after the important conference which he has called.

The clock directs me to leave my remarks in the preliminary stage, and I hope my electors will leave me here long enough to go in greater depth into some of these matters which I think are of great importance.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, so as not to delay the comments of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau), I shall resume my seat and put off my questions to another time.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take only a few minutes on the occasion of the consideration of the estimates of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) to discuss a matter that is surely of local interest. Since the minister has come here after 1965, in order to help him understand the situation. I should like to say a few words on the history of the matter I wish to deal with.

I would like for a few minutes, Mr. Chairman, to entertain the house and the minister, especially, about the proposed building of a penitentiary in St. Pie de Bagot.

When the minister arrived here, this project had been cancelled and, for his information, I would like to tell him that, because of a lack of space in penitentiaries, it had been decided to build one in St. Pie de Bagot. In fact, four farms where this minimum security penitentiary was to be built, had been purchased at a total cost of $85,000.

A survey had also been carried out on the site to ensure that the soil was appropriate for the proposed construction and that there was an adequate supply of water. Finally, all arrangements had been taken. Enough water had been found on the site itself for the needs of the institution. As far as the remainder of the water needed is concerned, an understanding had been reached with the local municipal authorities which had agreed to supply it under conditions then acceptable to the department.

The plans and specifications were prepared and everything was ready to get under way. Then came the 1963 elections when we were defeated and a Liberal government took over here on parliament hill.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier was then appointed minister of justice and the first thing he deemed necessary was to reverse the previous decision and cancel the building of the said penitentiary.

That decision was surely unjustifiable, since the officials and the administrators of the Departments of Public Works and Justice had reached an agreement on the desirability of the project. That decision taken by the former minister of justice, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, represents in fact an injustice toward the people of the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, and particularly of the municipality of Saint-Pie.

With that institution hundreds of workers would have had a job. Besides, goods would have been bought in the area and services would also have been used, which would have been in the interest of the people concerned. Because of the partisan decision—I say this without fear—of the former minister of justice, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, the people of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot have been seriously discriminated against.

I strongly appeal to the minister who has all the necessary qualifications to properly assume his responsibility. I know that he wishes to act fairly and that he wants to be considered as a fair man. He has a wonderful opportunity to correct a very serious and gross injustice that the people of my riding have asked me to bring to his attention.

I know the disposition of the minister and I am sure that, when he has the opportunity to consider all the aspects of this matter, he will want, as soon as possible, to correct that injustice for which his predecessor, Hon. Lionel Chevrier is fully responsible.

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: I would be glad to yield if the minister wants to reply.

Mr. Trudeau: I thank the hon. member for his courtesy, but I can hardly reply in three minutes.

Mr. Fairweather: May I ask him one question, then? He and I have been carrying on an exchange about an individual by the name of Edward Somers. I know the matter has received a great deal of attention. I know the minister's great interest in civil rights. I know that Mr. Somers has made some sort of complaint to the Governor General of Canada, the Prime Minister of Canada, the commission for the administration of justice in Quebec, to the minister and others. I consider myself in distinguished company. Can the minister assure me that the files in this case, which involve a bankruptcy some years ago, will receive very careful consideration by the minister or departmental officials?

Mr. Trudeau: It is hardly fair, Mr. Chairman, to try to deal with all these questions and complaints in the time left. With regard to the last one, I can only say extremely briefly that these files have received that attention. Basically, the question boils down to where the administration of justice lies and where the redress can be obtained, at the federal level or at the provincial level. I would welcome a chance to discuss this at greater length at some other time.

For the time being, I can only try to touch on the very broad subjects that have been broached tonight. I want to thank hon. members for the level at which they have placed this debate. We have gone all the way from the philosophy of law and the sociology of law to concrete proposals for law reform. I must congratulate hon. members for their very constructive proposals. With regard to a great number of them, I should say they will find we have anticipated their desires. They will find that in the omnibus Criminal Code bill, which runs some 50 printed pages in length and which I understand will be brought before the house very soon, many of the points which they have raised have been settled. I would only add that we are, in the Department of Justice, insisting very strongly on the function of law reform which is one of the fundamental tasks of the Department of Justice. This subject of law reform will be applied not only to the criminal law but to many other areas.

A lot of the complaints which were made in the house tonight, as hon. members recognize, had to do with the administration of justice and cannot be solved by action at the federal level alone. Many of the complaints centred around unequal justice to the rich and the poor, and in this respect not only is there a problem of provincial jurisdiction, but I should add that under the type of constitutional bill of rights which we intend to discuss with the provinces, the question of access to counsel is one with which we hope to deal.

I see the clock is moving fast, and this brings me to the whole constitutional question. I am sorry that at this time I will not be able to reply to the remarks made. I must point out to members that I spoke at some length on the constitution before the standing committee in the month of June. The answers to many of the questions asked by the hon. member for Greenwood will be found there. Let me just say that he, and many other people inside and outside of this house, are labouring under a very grave misconception. Perhaps the fault is mine for not having explained frequently enough what we intend by this bill of rights.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Ten o'clock.

Mr. Trudeau: This is the rule of the game, I suppose.

An hon. Member: You made the rules.

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to the provisions of special orders adopted April 26 and June 26, to forthwith put every question, without amendment or debate, necessary to dispose of the main and supplementary estimates now before the committee of supply. Accordingly, the Chair proposes to continue with the department now being considered and proceed in alphabetical order through those departments remaining.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, it is ten o'clock and the rules do not provide for the continuance of this house after ten o'clock? I am submitting to you that the provisions of standing order 6 are mandatory that the house shall rise at ten o'clock. There are no exceptions made in relation to it by any special order and without a special order, the house cannot continue to sit. The special order of April 26, in paragraph 5(c) simply gives the number of days which may be allocated to the business of supply during the session. It does not, in any sense at all, abrogate the order dealing with the hour of adjournment.

This becomes quite clear, sir, when you consider the special order of June 26. This special order of June 26, which has no application tonight, I submit with great respect, should not have been referred to and has no relevancy to our position as it now stands. The order of June 26 was designed to meet precisely the type of situation with which we are confronted. It provided:

That on Thursday, July 6, 1967, at 9.30 o'clock p.m., the proceedings of the house or the committee of supply or ways and means, as the case may be, shall be interrupted, and every question shall successively be put forthwith that may be necessary to dispose of the estimates of ten departments and any resolution or bill based thereon, and also such resolutions and bills as are necessary to provide for a fourth month interim supply;—

● (10:00 p.m.)

That paragraph was inserted into the special order of June 26, with great respect, Mr. Chairman, just because of a recognition of the total weakness of the order of April 26, 1967. The order of April 26 makes no provision whatever for the putting of the various items successively, as did that special order.

I venture to suggest to you that there is no provision whereby this house may extend its sittings beyond the time which is set forth so clearly under standing order 6, which provides that the house will rise at ten o'clock. It is ten o'clock, sir. The government has got itself into this box by its attempt to impose this type of guillotine on the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The government has put itself in this situation. I submit that it is now ten o'clock.

Mr. Starr: Are we to submit to the arrogance of this government?

An hon. Member: It is the new look.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): It is the old gang spoiling the new look.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): When the Postmaster General has finished with his snide remarks I will continue, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Carleton has the floor.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am putting to you clearly and directly, sir, that there is no special order that permits the house to sit beyond ten o'clock. There has to be such a special order. The Minister of National Health and Welfare well recognized that on June 26 and that a special order was so adopted then. Without such a special order we cannot sit beyond ten o'clock tonight.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

I quite agree, sir that consideration of the estimates is now ended. We have had every hour that we can have on the estimates. However, under standing order 6 (5) (b) this house has no further authority to continue its sitting.

Mr. Starr: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Olson: —speaking on the point of order may I say I am sure the hon. member for Carleton will have recognized that the Chair did in fact interrupt the proceedings at exactly ten o'clock and called the vote for that purpose.

An hon. Member: One minute after ten.

Mr. Olson: One minute, 30 seconds, that is not important.

Mr. Starr: It is not important to one who can move from Social Credit to the Liberal ranks.

Mr. Olson: There are dozens of precedents in this house showing that the vote has been called, and during the proceedings with respect to that vote the clock has gone past ten o'clock. Something like that happened a few days ago and no objection was raised to completing the vote being discussed while the clock went past ten o'clock. That is precisely the situation we face tonight. The vote was called. There are precedents in our history to show that votes, once they are discussed, are not necessarily interrupted at ten o'clock.

The Chairman: Unless there are further comments on the point of order may I read to the committee standing order 6(5) (b):

When a sitting is extended pursuant to section (6) of this order, or when it is provided in any other standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded, the adjournment proceedings in that sitting shall be suspended and that sitting shall not be adjourned except pursuant to a motion to adjourn moved by a minister of the crown.

May I also refer hon. members to Votes and Proceedings of June 24, paragraph 4 which, referring to paragraph 3 of the recommendations of the special committee on procedure adopted on June 26, says:

—the operation of paragraph (3) of this order shall not in any way preclude the adoption of all items in the committee of supply and the enactment of supply bills based thereon within the thirty-day period prescribed therefor in sub-paragraph 5 (c) of the resolution adopted April 26, 1967;

There was a further amendment changing that 30 day period to a 38 day period. I am advised by the officials at the table that the 38 days had expired.

Mr. Starr: No, thirty days only.

The Chairman: I should have said 30 days had expired. In carrying out the standing orders, therefore, with which the house has provided the Chairman, it is my duty now to proceed with the estimates that remain for all departments.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): With the greatest of respect, would Your honour be good enough to indicate where there is an order that business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded. Respectfully I suggest there is no such order of the house. There is the order that 38 days shall be allocated to consideration to the business of supply. There is nothing else. Because of this weakness the Minister of National Health and Welfare—and he knows this very well—included paragraph (6) in the order of June 26. Without that, he knew that it would be impossible to carry the estimates as was done.

With respect, sir, I suggest that you owe it to the committee to set forth where there is an order of this house that conforms to the clear provisions of section 6(5)(b). I shall repeat part of that:

> When a sitting is extended pursuant to section (6) of this order, or when it is provided in any other standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded—

We must find somewhere in a standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded. That provision exists in no standing or special order of this house.

Mr. MacEachen: The Chairman ruled on a point of order raised by the hon. member for Carleton. I suggest that the committee should accept the ruling which is before us on two special orders of the house. The ruling is supported by the earlier paragraph which the Chairman read.

I wish to say that the house order specified that the vote would be taken at 9.30. That time was chosen so that all business of the house would be concluded at ten o'clock of that evening. That was not done, to avoid the pitfall that the hon. gentleman mentioned.

Mr. Churchill: It was not concluded until 10.19.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Where is the standing or special order which permits us to carry on?

The Chairman: Perhaps I could refer hon. members to page 49 of our standing orders where it is stated, on the right hand side, that standing orders 56 and 57 are subject in the second session of the 27th Parliament to recommendations Nos. 5 and 7 of the second report of the special committee on procedure of the house adopted on April 26, 1967, as follows:

> That the house adopt the following resolution with respect to supply procedure:
> That for the duration of the second session of the 27th Parliament standing orders 56 and 57 shall be provisionally amended and interpreted in the light of the following procedures which shall govern the business of supply—

Then follows an enumeration of the various items recommended by the committee on procedure and adopted by the house on April 26.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman? Have 38 days been given by this house to the business of supply?

Mr. MacEachen: I rise on a point of order, or to speak to the point of order. A ruling has been made by the Chair, and the hon. member who has just resumed his seat knows it is quite improper to ask questions of the Chair. We have had a ruling.

Mr. Churchill: Well, if a ruling has been made, what is the hon. gentleman doing now? Is he raising a second point of order on a point of order?

Mr. MacEachen: What I am doing is to suggest to members of the committee that the ruling of the Chair be accepted and that this improper procedure be not continued.

Mr. Churchill: If the minister of health and welfare can stand up and lecture the house on accepting the ruling of the Chair, I can get up and suggest that the ruling of the Chair be not accepted. If this type of debate is permitted I must be allowed the same privilege as has been accorded to the minister of health and welfare.

The Chairman: I am advised by the officials at the table that we have already had 30 days of supply. We have had six days of supply motions and there are two days remaining for another special purpose, making a total of 38 days referred to in our standing orders.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, with the greatest of respect for you, and the sincere affection I have for you personally, I must appeal the ruling and ask that you call Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the Chairman of the committee made the following report:

Mr. Speaker, in committee of supply the Chairman interrupted proceedings and stated that in accordance with the provisions of special orders made April 26 and June 26 last, he intended to proceed to put forthwith the question on all votes now before the committee of supply.

Whereupon, the hon. member for Carleton raised a point of order to the effect that no provision could be found in any standing order which would permit the committee of supply to continue sitting beyond ten o'clock p.m. The Chairman ruled that in his opinion the authority to sit beyond ten o'clock p.m. and to proceed with the business of supply was to be found in the provisional amendment to standing order 56 and under the terms of standing order 6(5)(b).

Thereupon, the hon. member for Carleton appealed the Chairman's decision to Mr. Speaker.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): The point has been stated with clarity and brevity and I appreciate the manner in which it has been presented to Your Honour. I shall endeavour to present my point of view with equal clarity and brevity because I believe an issue of very considerable significance related to responsible parliamentary government is at stake. My position, sir, is that the rules governing the adjournment of the house are mandatory and absolute. They are to be found in standing order 6. May I read subsection 4 of that standing order:

Subject to the exceptions stated in section (5) of this order, at 10 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays—

I do not need to point out that this is Thursday.

—and at six o'clock p.m. on Wednesdays and Fridays, Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the house, without question put, until the next sitting day.

The exception is in section 5 of the standing order. Section 5(a) reads:

When, pursuant to standing order 39A, a motion to adjourn is deemed to have been proposed at ten o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays, the house shall not be adjourned until the said motion is deemed to have been adopted.

I venture to suggest that section is irrelevant for our particular purpose, but subsection (b) is relevant, and especially so.

When a sitting is extended pursuant to section (6) of this order—

[The Chairman.]

I venture to suggest section 6 is not relevant.

or when it is provided in any other standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded, the adjournment proceedings in that sitting shall be suspended—

It is the adjournment proceedings that are to be suspended.

—and that sitting shall not be adjourned except pursuant to a motion to adjourn moved by a minister of the crown.

What we must find in this issue is whether there is any other standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded. Now, where is that? So far as I can see, the only place that it could possibly be would be in the special order of the house adopted April 26, 1967, which appears in our text of the standing orders opposite standing order 56. I go immediately to subsection 5(c), which reads:

• (10:40 p.m.)

Subject to the conditions specified below there shall be an over-all limitation of thirty eight days allotted to the business of supply during the session. For the purposes of this order the business of supply shall consist of supply motions; main estimates, interim supply with the exceptions noted below; supplementary and additional estimates with the exception noted below; and supply bills based on the foregoing.

I do not think any of the exceptions noted here are relevant at all to the argument that is before the chair at this time.

I venture to submit to Your Honour that in no way does that standing order provide that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded. It simply specifies a certain number of days. Clearly the number of days have elapsed, the house has reached ten o'clock, and that is it. My colleague from Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) points out to me that 38 days have not elapsed, that in fact 36 days have elapsed; but I think that matter is probably governed by a special order of the house and I make no particular point of that.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do make a point of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), in attempting to meet exactly the point that has been raised, on June 26 prepared a motion which was adopted by the house. Subsection 5 of that motion reads:

That on Thursday, July 6, 1967, at 9.30 o'clock p.m., the proceedings of the house or the committee of supply or ways and means, as the case may be, shall be interrupted, and every question shall successively be put forthwith that may be necessary to dispose of the estimates of ten departments and any resolution or bill based thereon, and also such resolutions and bills as are necessary to provide for a fourth month interim supply;

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, if there was a provision in the order of April 26 such as was inserted in the order of June 26, there would be no argument at all. The fact that this provision is absent makes it clear that nothing here comes within the very clear exception under standing order 6 (5) (b), which states there can only be an interruption of a mandatory adjournment if it is provided under a standing order that the business shall be disposed of or concluded.

That is putting the matter as simply and as plainly as it is possible to put it. It is put for a deliberate purpose, namely to demonstrate the fact that 171 votes totalling a billion and a quarter dollars have not had any consideration at all in this house, and that the guillotine is falling without there being any possibility of the House of Commons doing the basic job its members were elected. We have failed to do what we were sent here to do.

I am not taking advantage of this situation from any technical point of view but on the basis that we must achieve proper rules, rules which will govern and bring this House of Commons back to the type of institution that the Canadian people want to see.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I feel a bit out of character coming to the defence of the government, but it is late at night and I suppose anything has to be anticipated.

Mr. Fulton: Get back into character.

Mr. Knowles: I accept the correction I heard from the other side. I am supporting the position taken by Mr. Chairman in committee of the whole, and I am not out of character in doing that. The issue before us tonight is not whether we should or should not have a time limit on supply; that is a matter to be decided by the House of Commons. The issue is not how many departments we have finished and how many we have not finished.

An hon. Member: That's a good red herring.

Mr. Knowles: The issue is simply, do we finish the business of supply by taking the formal votes tonight or do we adjourn and take the votes tomorrow or on some other occasion.

I wish to point out that provisional standing orders 6(4) and 6(5) should be read in the light of standing order 6(4) of the old rules which existed before we adopted the present, temporary rules.

An hon. Member: Oh?

Mr. Knowles: Just a moment. Do not say "oh" so quickly. Standing order 6(4), before we adopted the temporary rules, read as follows:

When it is provided in any standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment be forthwith disposed of or concluded, Mr. Speaker shall not adjourn the house until the specified proceedings be completed.

The point I wish to make is that it is a practice of long standing that when there is an order that something has to be concluded on a particular day, the adjournment time is ignored until that completion has been effected.

When we wrote temporary standing orders 6(4) and 6(5) we put together that old standing order and the provisions that we have made for the adjournment proceedings. If one will compare the language of the old standing order, which I have just read, with the exception that the hon. member for Carleton has read, temporary standing order 6(5)(b), one will see that this is what happened. It reads:

When a sitting is extended pursuant to section (6) of this order—

Which we are doing:

—or when it is provided in any other standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded, the adjournment proceedings in that sitting shall be suspended—

Of course, they are:

—and that sitting shall not be adjourned except pursuant to a motion to adjourn moved by a minister of the crown.

My point is that the new, temporary standing orders at that point combined the general practice, that we do not adjourn until we have finished the day's business, with the special provisions relating to debates on adjournment proceedings.

I think, sir, it is therefore clear that you should rule that we continue to sit under the basis of standing order 6(5)(b), provided some other order says that this is an item of business which should be finished.

That provision, I believe, is set out for us in paragraph 5(c) of the special order of the house that was adopted on April 26, 1967. That order provided us with our rules for the second session of this twenty seventh parliament. I hope the house will forgive me for reading paragraph 5(c) again; the hon. member for Carleton I know read it a few moments ago:—

Subject to the conditions specified below there shall be an overall limitation of thirty-eight days allotted to the business of supply during the session. For the purposes of this order the business of supply shall consist of supply motions; main estimates; interim supply with the exceptions noted below; supplementary and additional estimates with the exception noted below; and supply bills based on the foregoing.

I submit that this is the order that says —subject to what I shall say in a moment —that when the 38 days are over all the things set out in that paragraph must be done.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It must say so, surely.

• (10:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Now, Mr. Speaker, that provision was modified by this house in the special order which it passed unanimously on June 26 when it said, in paragraph 4, that the operation of paragraph 3 should not in any way preclude the adoption of all items in the committee of supply and the enactment of supply bills passed thereon within the 30-day period prescribed in the resolution adopted on April 26, 1967. I mention this because there is a reference to 30 days provided in the earlier order. How did 38 become 30? The reason is that in the meantime we had had two days on a supply motion, and we provided on June 26 that we would have the other six days at certain specified times in the fall. The combination of these things, however labyrinthine they may appear, means that we end with an order which says we must complete the business of supply, that is the estimates and the bills based thereon, in 30 days.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) agrees that we have had 30 days; they ended at ten o'clock tonight. Are we not, therefore, bound by an order made unanimously by the house which says that at the end of 30 days of supply, in view of what is provided in 5(c) of the order of April 26, 1967, we are bound to finish all these things including the supply bills?

I would be the first to admit that the order could be written a lot more clearly and I hope our committee will straighten this matter out. I admit there is an argument about the 30 days, but no one denies we are under an order this session to complete the work of supply in 30 days.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Churchill: It says 38.

Mr. Knowles: Shall I go back and go over that ground again for the benefit of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill)? My hon. friend behind me wants me to dispense.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member read out the section which says 30 days?

Mr. Knowles: The special order of June 26 in paragraph 4 makes a reference to the 30 days provided for supply. It makes this reference to 30 days in a paragraph which actually speaks of 38. What happened to the other eight days? Two of them had already been used and the other six are provided for in paragraph three of the resolution of June 26.

As I say, it would be hard to make things more complicated, but if one takes time and patience to look at it, it is all here. We have agreed by unanimous decision of the house that we were to have 30 days on supply this session and four supply motions of two days each. We had one of these motions before the summer recess. We have had another two of them already. We are to get the last within 45 days after we came back following the summer recess. So I submit the 30 day limit is there. The hon. member for Carleton does not argue about this. All he says is that there is no provision for sitting late to do it tonight. So, if there is an over-all limitation of 30 days on the supply resolutions and the bills based thereon, it seems to me we should deal with them during those 30 days, and that means dealing with them tonight.

I am afraid that I do not see this as a major parliamentary issue. If the hon. member for Carleton wins his point, all that happens is that we will take these formal votes on the resolutions and on the supply bill tomorrow or some other day. He, or no one else would argue that there is room for any more debate. I am not just relying on common sense, Mr. Speaker. You do not get very far in this house by arguing on the basis of common sense. It seems to me that the putting together of these various rules and orders does result in the clear indication that we are supposed to do all of this work, including the supply bills—I emphasize that to the hon. member for Carleton—within 30 days. Unless we do it tonight we will not have complied with our own order adopted unanimously by the house.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to repeat in a short form the argument made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), with which I agree fully. The first point arises from the decision taken by the house and recorded in Votes and Proceedings of April 26, 1967, that there be established an over-all limit of 38 days for the business of supply. There is no debate or doubt about that.

In Votes and Proceeding of June 26 there is recorded a further decision of the house that the supply motions be segregated from the remaining business of supply, and because of that operation the time for supply, exclusive of supply motions, was limited to 30 days. There is no doubt about that. It is a matter of counting to decide when the 30 days are finished, and the count showed that the 30 days were finished at ten o'clock tonight. The hon. member for Carleton says that because there is another rule saying that the house adjourns at ten o'clock, this other rule supersedes the continuation of proceedings beyond ten o'clock and therefore we cannot proceed with the vote. That is the issue.

I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is correct when he refers to standing order 6(4) in the regular standing orders which says:

> When it is provided in any standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment be forthwith disposed of or concluded, Mr. Speaker shall not adjourn the house until the specified proceedings be completed.

In other words this particular general standing order supersedes the operation of the normal adjournment proceedings because there is a business before the house to be completed.

I think it is made even clearer in provisional standing order 6(5)(b) which has already been read by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and which seems to me to provide the answer to the question raised by the hon. member for Carleton, which was: Are we entitled to continue beyond ten o'clock to dispose of all these resolutions? The answer is provided in this standing order, which reads:

> When a sitting is extended pursuant to section (6) of this order—

That is irrelevant, as the hon. member for Carleton says.

> —or when it is provided in any other standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded, the adjournment proceedings in that sitting shall be suspended—

That provides the method by which the house is enabled to supersede the ten o'clock adjournment and to continue with the motions that are involved in the passage of the resolutions and the supply bills based thereon.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): For the purpose of clarity would the minister indicate to me whether he is arguing that the old standing order 6(4) is still in effect? As I understand the situation that standing order, which was also referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), is gone. It has been nullified completely. Such substance as it has is now in standing order 6(5) (b).

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not think anything turns on that point. I think that 6(5) (b) provides for a resolution of the dilemma raised by the hon. member for Carleton, namely that this particular provision provides for the continuation of business beyond ten o'clock in order to dispose of the business that has been laid down under other standing orders.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, surely something turns upon the quoting of a repealed standing order as an authority?

An hon. Member: What about standing order 6(4)?

Mr. MacEachen: Nothing turns upon standing order 6(4), which has been read. It follows completely upon the standing order in effect now.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, has not the language of the old standing order 6(4) been completely incorporated in the language of the new rule?

Mr. MacEachen: I said it was a foundation.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two on this matter. I am surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the government house leader have to attempt to bemuse the house by reading standing order 6(4), which was revised and is no longer in existence. Their case is very weak indeed when they must rely on something which they, in their work in the committee, struck out. It is quite obvious, too, that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who was so anxious to amend and restrict the rules of this house, is attempting to bail out the government in the mistake they have made. They have failed to bring into this house an order such as was presented on June 26 of this year, an order which I was responsible for proposing to the hon. member. I thought that with his experience he would be able to carry on this fall, and consequently I did not go to him yesterday and tell him what he should do. But he cannot now extricate himself from this point.

The sensible thing, in order to save the position of Mr. Speaker, and the Chairman, is for the government house leader to admit his error and say that he will straighten this matter out with the various house leaders tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no other contributions to this interesting debate I will attempt to bring some light to a very difficult situation. I must say that I have a great deal of sympathy for all hon. members who have tried to piece together the rules as they are now. This is nobody's fault. I think an honest effort has been made in recent months and years by hon. members to attempt to improve our rules. Whether we have succeeded is a matter of opinion.

I can readily see that it is not easy in a circumstance such as this to find out exactly what our rules say. I followed with interest the opinion and argument of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), when he made it originally with the Deputy Speaker in the chair and again when he stated it so clearly later on. He argues, among other things, a point which is of interest, that is, that when a similar situation arose previously, on June 26 last, it was required to be settled by an order to allow that all matters dealing with supply be concluded on that day.

It has been brought to my attention, and I believe this has been mentioned by hon. members in the course of the discussion, that in the original order of June 26 it was impossible to complete the 30 days that were allowed then until all departments had been called and the supply motions completed. It was then specified that one department would still be outstanding even if the fourth order was called. Under the order of June 26 as adopted, this provision was suspended, allowing the house to call all departments even before the four supply motions were called. Therefore, it seems to me we could complete the 30 days considering supply and even have one supply motion outstanding which perhaps could be called anytime between now and December 6.

[Mr. Churchill.]

While it was necessary on a previous occasion to have an order, this is no longer necessary since the 30 supply days could be called even before the four supply motions have been called.

Having dealt with this point to the best of my ability I have to refer hon. members, as has been done by the Deputy Speaker and by hon. members, to standing order 6(5)(b) which states, beginning at line 3 on page 5:

> —when it is provided in any other standing order that the business under consideration at the ordinary time of adjournment shall be disposed of or concluded, the adjournment proceedings in that sitting shall be suspended and that sitting shall not be adjourned except pursuant to a motion to adjourn moved by a minister of the Crown.

There must be a purpose for saying that the adjournment proceedings in that sitting shall be suspended, and that purpose in my mind is not just to allow members to go home at ten o'clock. Surely it must be for the purpose of doing business, and the business that has to be done at that point is the business of supply. I base my view in this regard on standing order 56 which deals with supply proceedings.

Standing order 56 was the subject of a suggested amendment in the report of the procedure committee which was concurred in by the house on April 26, 1967. In this resolution of the house there was a 38 day overall limitation during the session for the business of supply. This included four two-day debates on supply motions, leaving the balance of 30 days for supply. I shall not go into the question about the 36 days rather than 38 days because that has been explained quite clearly by hon. members who have taken part in this debate on the point of order.

If hon. members will now turn to page 50 they will read in the annotations to standing order 56, in the precise wording of the report and concurred in by the house, in paragraph (c):

> Subject to the conditions specified below there shall be an overall limitation of thirty-eight days allotted to the business of supply during the session. For the purposes of this order the business of supply shall consist of supply motions; main estimates; interim supply with the exceptions noted below—

As the hon. member for Carleton has said, these are not relevant here. It continues:

> —supplementary and additional estimates with the exception noted below; and supply bills based on the foregoing.

To my mind these words are extremely relevant; that is:

—supply bills based on the foregoing.

This means we must complete supply bills when the days expire. The standing order does not say we shall give consideration on supply during 30½ days, 30 days and one hour or 31 days, so the extra day can be used to vote on supply motions when supply motions may be discussed and passed. It simply says within 30 days, and this is the decision of the house.

Having regard again to standing order 6(5)(b), the provision is that the house shall not be adjourned except pursuant to a motion moved by a minister of the crown. I have not heard a minister of the crown make such a motion. Having read and considered the standing orders as objectively as I can I have no alternative than to sustain the judgment of the Chairman of the committee.

• (11:10 p.m.)

And the house having resumed in committee:

The Chairman: Order. The question before the committee is on Vote 1 of the Department of Justice.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Transport. Shall I rise, report certain resolutions, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, that toward making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1968 the sum of $1,134,395,455.83 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Benson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-180 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March 1968.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Churchill: No, not until the bill is in our hands. We want to see whether it is correct, or whether the enormous sum of $1 billion should be passed without full consideration.

An hon. Member: Start reading.

Mr. Churchill: I hope the bill I have been given is in both languages.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: I have two English copies. I wish to compare the English with the French version.

Mr. Hellyer: Read one with each eye.

Mr. Benson moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. House in committee of the whole on a bill entitled an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1968.

On Clause 2—$1,134,395,455.83 granted for 1967-68.

Mr. Choquette: How is the French version?

Mr. Churchill: I think there is a mistake in the French.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Will the minister assure us that the bill is in the usual form and contains nothing which is not customary in such bills?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to on division.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to on division.

Schedules A to C inclusive agreed to on division.

Clause 1 agreed to on division.

Title agreed to on division.

Preamble agreed to on division.

Bill reported.

• (11:30 p.m.)

Mr. Benson moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon R. A. Bell (Carleton): I believe I have a right to make a speech this time to point out what a travesty of parliament we have experienced in the last hour and a half.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Tomorrow we shall be considering the broadcasting bill, and if that measure gets second reading we shall move it to committee and take up capital punishment on Monday. If we do not complete second reading of the broadcasting bill I should like to have some consultation with the house leaders tomorrow on the question of whether we ought to continue with that bill or go on with capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker: I understand this is the point at which, according to the rules, a minister of the crown should move that the house adjourn.

Mr. Drury: I move that the house do now adjourn.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Mr. Speaker: Carried on division.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 3, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

FISHERIES

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESTRICTIONS RESPECTING LOBSTER FISHERY

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as the result of a general demand among lobster fishermen I am announcing today a program of limitation of the number of lobster traps per boat which will be introduced in all lobster fishing districts in the maritime provinces commencing with the 1968 lobster fishing seasons. The number of traps will be reduced further in most districts in 1969. I also wish to point out that the majority of lobster fishermen in all districts favour some limitation of the numbers permitted to engage in the fishery and, in addition to the trap limits consideration is being given to means of restricting entry into the lobster fishery in an equitable manner.

Earlier this year I made it quite clear that lobsters are a vital resource for thousands of Canada's inshore fishermen. It is imperative that this resource be managed as wisely as possible to ensure its continuance on a profitable basis to the fishermen.

I wish to make it very clear that this trap limit, as well as the restrictive measures which will be introduced, will not affect before 1968 the fishermen in district No. 3 where the fall season opened on October 15, in district No. 1 where the season will open on November 15 and district No. 4 where the season will open on December 1. These three areas will be affected, as will other areas in the maritimes, at the opening of their 1968 fishing seasons next fall. I thought it advisable to warn the fishermen now of the restrictions which will be imposed on them next year.

As the description and the variation of trap limits are different in different areas and would mean a rather lengthy report to give on motions, I would appreciate it if I could receive unanimous consent of the house to have a release which I am issuing today tabled and printed as an appendix to Hansard for this day.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of release referred to above, see appendix].

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, the announcement the Minister of Fisheries has just made is one of great importance to the lobster fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces. It stems, of course, from the fact that this is a limited resource and in recent years the product has become high priced, tending to attract into the industry a greater amount of equipment and personnel than is rationally needed to harvest the crop.

• (11:10 a.m.)

When government steps into a field and decrees regulations governing how private citizens may earn their living, the regulations must be drawn with great caution. I know and fishermen will recognize that if there is little regulation of the numbers of men and the amount of equipment to be used, the problem facing their industry in the overexploitation of their resources and the difficulty of controlling and harvesting that resource in an equitable and efficient manner will worsen. I trust, nevertheless, that the minister will exercise great caution. I hope the fishing industry and the department have co-operated in every possible way in deciding what the limitation should be and how limitation of entry into the industry is to be brought about so that undue hardship will not result for any individual. I presume the experiment to limit gear in some areas has been satisfactory.

We note with consternation that the lobster fishing industry in some areas has had a difficult and unproductive year. We hope that this measure, if it is wisely and carefully implemented, will result in benefits to the industry generally.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, probably more than any other group in our society, fishermen over the years have come to accept governmental impingement on what one normally considers the right to pursue one's vocation. The impingement I refer to here is the impingement by the government on the right of lobster fishermen to fish when and how they see fit.

Conservation in the fishing industry is of paramount importance, and exploitation of any fishery resource may only be allowed within the bounds permitted by conservation. The minister indicated that he thought it wise to warn lobster fishermen as far in advance as possible that there would be a curtailment of the numbers of lobster traps which could be used within the next couple of years. Warning the fishermen as far in advance as possible was a commendable action.

Some years ago Dr. Sol Sinclair of Manitoba undertook an extensive examination into the prospect of limiting licences of certain fisheries on the west coast. While the lobster fishery on the west coast is not what it should be at the moment there is an expectation, because of transplanting of lobsters, that this resource may be expanded and developed. Dr. Sinclair's report dealt with limiting licences on the west coast. I hope, in one sense, that the minister's statement about limiting traps in the lobster industry is not a prelude to a proposal to limit licences with respect to lobster fishing on the west coast. Other measures, we feel, could be undertaken far more sensibly, namely the proposition to expand the fishing fleet, thereby allowing fishermen to travel farther in their quest for different sorts of fish.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO DEFINE EXPRESSION "PUBLIC OR OFFICIAL BUSINESS"

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-181, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (days of attendance).

He said: The purpose of this bill is to define the expression "public or official business" appearing in section 36 of the Senate and House of Commons Act so as to allow members of parliament to execute with a clear conscience the necessary affidavit of attendance each month.

"Public or official business" is restricted to work of a member as representative or work related to the matters coming within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. This subsection means that any time spent on private or professional business or on any recreational activity will not be considered as public or official business.

[Mr. Howard.]

This amendment will require the redrafting of the present antique statutory declaration on attendance as it does not conform to the present act or the proposed amendment.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

RESIGNATION OF ACADIA UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT AS DIRECTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a question for the Secretary of State. Has the hon. lady received word of the resignation of the distinguished president of Acadia University, Dr. J. M. R. Beveridge, as a director of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and have any other directors indicated their intention to resign?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I think Dr. Beveridge indicated six months or a year ago that he was desirous of resigning and maybe he has done so.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON COMPETENCE OF ADMINISTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister with reference to a statement made on national television last night by the Prime Minister, who said he had congratulated Mr. Ouimet, president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, on the work of that organization and thanked him in the course of an interview for the great services he had rendered.

In view of a statement by the Secretary of State during a previous broadcast that there had been "rotten management" in the C.B.C., I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether there is a divergence of views within the cabinet with respect to the competence of the administration of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think it is in order to ask the question the hon. member has just posed in that form. He asked whether there is a divergence of views within the cabinet and I do not think such a question is acceptable.

Mr. Douglas: Then may I ask the Acting Prime Minister what is the government's view with respect to administrative competence within the C.B.C?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the last question contains the same formula but does not lend itself to the kind of answer which should be given on orders of the day.

Mr. Starr: Never mind analysing the question. Give an answer.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a very serious charge has been levelled at the C.B.C. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister if he does not think that in fairness to those members of the corporation who are doing a competent job, the government should make a statement at an early date with respect to whom the Secretary of State had in mind when she described the administration as being rotten.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister will be very pleased to note what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): As a supplementary question I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he considers there is a female George Brown within the cabinet.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State. It is similar to three or four questions which have been put, except that I want mine to be more objective.

Has the minister any details to give the house further to the visit made by Mr. Alphonse Ouimet yesterday to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson)?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timmins.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I have the impression that the minister has possibly not grasped my question through the translation. May I repeat my question in English to make sure that the minister understands it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hardly think that it is permissible for an hon. member to repeat and translate from French to English, or from English to French, a question he has put solely because he is under the impression that it has not been understood by the minister concerned.

[English]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I did not catch all the question. I should like to thank the hon. member for sending me a note concerning what he intended to ask, but it is hardly appropriate for me to comment on the Prime Minister's visitors.

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN STEEL AND NICKEL PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to put a question to the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but in his absence I shall address it to his secretary.

Does the government intend to give some assistance with a view to increasing the production of steel and nickel in Canada? An increase would allow us to reduce our imports of stainless steel.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that his question is much too general in nature to be put at this time, and that instead, it should be put on the order paper.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WINNIPEG—THEFT OF ARMS FROM MINTO ARMOURIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Can the hon. gentleman tell the house how it was that Minto Armouries in Winnipeg proved vulnerable a few days ago to thieves who escaped with seven army machine guns and a quantity of ammunition?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not in order.

Mr. Sherman: Then may I rephrase my question and ask the Acting Prime Minister what steps are being taken at national defence establishments across Canada to ensure that military arms and ammunition will be safe from raids by thieves, vandals, and possible subversive elements?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is very general in nature and should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Sherman: Then I direct a related question to the Solicitor General. Has he any information to support the view that the arms and ammunition stolen from Minto Armouries might be ticketed for delivery to separatist groups?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to confirm the suggestion made by the hon. member. I can only add that the R.C.M.P. are co-operating with the municipal authorities in the city of Winnipeg.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINNIPEG—LAY-OFF OF WORKERS AT CEMENT PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg South inquired of the Prime Minister whether there were any plans to assist in the plight of employees of the Canada Cement plant in Manitoba who had learned that they were to be laid off, and the Prime Minister undertook to look into the matter and discuss it with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

As acting minister I would like to say that the Department of Manpower and Immigration knows of this impending lay-off which it is intimated may last for a period of four months. Plans are being laid for alternative employment for these men. It has also been suggested that our manpower counsellors be brought into the picture and, where possible, the men will be referred for retraining courses, with provision of course for usual training allowances.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for London.

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I had a question I wished to pose but in the absence of the Minister for Manpower and Immigration I shall defer it until the start of next week.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS WITH RAILWAY MANAGEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport; in his absence may I direct it to the acting minister. In view of a statement made by the hon. member for Westmorland in Moncton last night that within a week the Minister of Transport was going to announce a change in freight tariffs by the C.N.R., would the minister inform the house when we may expect such announcement; and at the time it is made would the Minister of Transport inform the house fully of his discussions with railway management with respect to railway lay-offs, particularly in the Atlantic region?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, because of the nature of the announcement I think I had better leave it for the minister himself on his return to the house.

PARLIAMENT HILL

DISPOSITION OF COINS COLLECTED FROM FOUNTAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Is it true that only one third of the coins collected in the fountain on parliament hill are going where they are supposed to go, that is to the Canadian Association for Retarded Children?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe the question is appropriate at this time. It should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I believe, Mr. Speaker, that because of the publicity in this regard there is a reflection on the government and on parliament itself.

Mr. McIlraith: I should perhaps explain that there was a piece of misinformation published yesterday on this subject. All the coins in the fountain are going to the Canadian Association for Retarded Children.

EXTERNAL AID

VIET NAM—REPORTED ABUSES RESPECTING MEDICAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister and has to do with an important subject which is currently very much in the public domain, namely Canadian medical aid to Viet Nam. In the light of the very serious allegations made by a most experienced medical man, Dr. Hall, can the Acting Prime Minister assure the house and the country that he and the officials of his department are taking advantage of Dr. Hall's knowledge in an effort to find out how they can improve the situation in this area and whether they are making every effort to correct the serious abuses which Dr. Hall pointed out?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a well known rule of the house, of course, that it is not open to hon. members to comment on what is transpiring in a committee of this house. My hon. friend is a member of the committee and was present this morning. He put some questions himself—

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. I understand that the Leader of the Opposition is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that a perfectly legitimate question, not a comment, was asked of the minister of external affairs as to whether he would take advantage of and profit by the experience of a certain noted individual who is an expert on this matter. All we are getting from the minister is a repudiation of this question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a point of order. The hon. member is being argumentative. The minister expressed an opinion about the rules of the house. I do not think this should be the basis for a point of order raised by the hon. member at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure my hon. friend, for whom I have the greatest esteem, that the assurance he is seeking from me was very ably given this morning by the external aid director, Mr. Strong, supplemented by me.

Mr. Starr: What did you supplement?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to simply say to my hon. friends opposite, in the kindest way, that the impression of urbanity and civility of the new Tory leadership does not jibe with the noisy and carefree attitude of some hon. members of the official opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the minister postpone the answer to the question asked by the hon. member.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. While we recognize that any minister may decide not to answer a question, I do not think he should couple a refusal to answer with the suggestion that an hon. member is out of order. The committee had before it a document, namely the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on foreign policy. If this interpretation by the minister were carried through there would be no question on any aspect of foreign policy which would be allowable in this house.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—POSSIBLE RETURN OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, having so successfully dealt with that matter in a friendly way I should like to deal with another question asked by the hon. member for Chapleau.

[Translation]

Now, I want to answer the question which was put to me the other day by the hon. member for Chapleau which I had promised to answer right away.

The hon. member for Chapleau asked me on October 26 whether, in my opinion, the situation in Cyprus was such that we could expect our troops to return at the end of the year, when the present commitment expires.

Although the situation in Cyprus has slightly improved during the last months, no progress has been made towards a political solution and serious tension still remains on the island. Therefore, I shall expect a continuing need for the peace-keeping force when, on December 26, of this year, the present commitment comes to an end.

However, I must say to the hon. member that a final decision on this matter will have to wait until the next report of the UN secretary general is filed with the security council on Cyprus.

[English]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question in respect of the answer the minister gave having regard to the situation in Cyprus. May I ask the minister what steps are being taken by the government of Canada to effect a political settlement in Cyprus.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the security council Canada now has both the opportunity and I think the obligation to try to bring about a political settlement. We have taken the view up to now that as a country contributing to the force we should not enter into support of one side or the other. We will not change that view, but we believe the time has come when certain steps should be undertaken to try to encourage a settlement. We are now discussing with the country concerned and certain other countries a proposal which would have to carry their support in order to be adopted. I am not in a position to report acceptance of our idea as yet; however, we are putting forward certain proposals.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to ask the minister whether this proposal of the Canadian government is being discussed by the security council.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This proposal is one which will have to be resolved by the security council if it is put forward. Whether it will be put forward will depend on consultations which are now under way.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to ask the secretary of state whether Canada is still paying the full cost of her peace keeping force in Cyprus?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, Canada is one country that is paying for the support for her troops in the United Nations force in Cyprus. We are doing this because the United Nations does not have the necessary funds. I think this is a useful kind of contribution to make in an area where we want to strengthen the peace-making role of the United Nations.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether there has been any request for assistance from the government of Cyprus other than for military aid and whether Canada will provide it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think that I should take this question as notice. I am not sure, but I will answer next week.

[Mr. Douglas.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—MEETING WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING IMPLEMENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I intended to pose this question to the Acting Prime Minister, but in view of the fact that he has not given answers to a majority of the questions posed to him today I shall direct this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What is the date of the meeting between the provinces and the federal government to discuss implementation of the medicare program?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the question to relate to a possible meeting, there has been no date set as yet.

Mr. Starr: Have there been no requests from the provinces for such a meeting?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the premiers met in the summer and a letter was addressed to the Prime Minister suggesting a meeting on medicare. The Prime Minister has told the house that his reply to Premier Robichaud, who made the request on behalf of the premiers, was under consideration.

Mr. Starr: When will a decision be rendered for a meeting to take place prior to the date now set by legislation for the implementation of medicare?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, no date has been set for any meeting and no decision has been taken in respect of such a meeting. I gather the Prime Minister will be able to report on his reply to Premier Robichaud next week.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address another question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the powerful policy statement made last night by the President of the Privy Council, is the minister now prepared to give the assurance to this house and the country that medicare "will not be sacrificed on the altar of economy"?

Mr. MacEachen: The greatest assurance the hon. member could wish to have is the fact that the law of the land clearly states the commencement date of medicare.

QUEBEC—APPLICATION OF FEDERAL FUNDS FOR HOSPITAL PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare of which I have given him due notice. The annual report of the Montreal Children's Hospital contains this statement by Eliot S. Frosst, president:

> We are facing the worst financial crisis in our hospital's history.

The report also contains this statement by Douglas Lennox, the honorary treasurer:

> This means for the bulk of our suppliers, that we are now ten months behind in paying for goods and services without which the hospital cannot continue to operate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. Cowan: I simply wish to ask the minister whether he has yet been able to persuade the minister of health for the province of Quebec to apply the federal funds provided them for hospital purposes.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss this matter with the Minister of Finance and make a reply later.

Mr. Cowan: Perhaps the minister and I could discuss it at ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUESTS FOR MEETINGS OF COMMITTEES ON CROWN CORPORATIONS AND CONSUMER AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as house leader. In view of the government's announced desire that committees function efficiently, does the government intend to refer anything at all to the committee on crown corporations so we might have an opportunity to meet and examine these very important bodies?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the suggestion made by my hon. friend to see whether anything at all can be referred.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question but I do not know whether I should address it to the house leader or to the Registrar General. Will steps be taken shortly so that the special joint committee responsible for investigating consumer credit may resume its activities?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, I recently discussed the terms of reference of this committee with the former joint chairman, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) and with hon. Senator Croll, and I think that we will be able to reconstitute the committee soon, with terms of reference quite interesting for the country.

[English]

IMMIGRATION

REQUIREMENT THAT IMMIGRANTS STATE PAST POLITICAL AFFILIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In order to protect the good name of Canada as a country of freedom of political expression, will the government give immediate consideration to changing the immigration policy in effect since October 1 which requires prospective immigrants to declare their past political affiliations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question was asked yesterday, I think, and it has been referred to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I thank my hon. friend for asking it again.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—NON-PARTICIPATION IN REFUGEE SETTLEMENT PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I ask the minister whether a statement can be made as soon as possible as to why the province of British Columbia is not participating with the department to bring handicapped refugees and their families to Canada this year, as is the situation with eight other provinces.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will see that the matter is taken up with the minister right away. The minister's parliamentary secretary is here and he will follow through on the question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

MILK—INQUIRY AS TO NATIONAL SCHOOL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the government taken action, and if so with what success, in introducing a milk program for schools?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is again a question that has been asked on a number of occasions in previous weeks and months. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is much too general in scope and cannot be asked again.

Mr. Webb: I realize the question has been asked, Mr. Speaker, but it has not been answered.

Mr. Knowles: So what's new?

[Translation]

EXPO '67

SUGGESTED ERECTION OF MONUMENT TO HUMAN FRATERNITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Prime Minister but in his absence, I shall put it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the wish expressed by a large proportion of the people of Canada, is it the intention of the parliament of Canada to recommend the erection of a monument to "The Brotherhood of Man" at the entrance of Expo 67?

Mr. Speaker: The question of the hon. member should be put on the order paper.

[English]

HOUSING

ATTENDANCE OF OPPOSITION MEMBERS AT PROPOSED CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour in his capacity as Canada's part time housing minister.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): What is wrong with that?

[Mr. Nicholson.]

An hon. Member: It's true.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): He is our part time housing minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask the question.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Well, protect me from these people. How can I protect myself against this type of conduct? Maybe they don't care about the housing crisis, but we do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member will not ask the question I will call orders of the day.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I will ask the question, but I was just appealing for some sort of order on the government benches.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, can we have order in the house on the government side?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly ask his question and not make a speech.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): That is what I am trying to do.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I should like to ask our part time housing minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Ricard: Noise is their contribution. They cannot do anything else.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the disorder on the government benches this morning.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: The disorder is in your mind.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Starr: The Minister of Justice is getting disorderly in the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have lost what I suggest is precious time in the House of Commons. The hon. member has been on his feet for a few minutes to ask a question and has not yet asked it.

Mr. Starr: There is too much noise from the government side of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member resume his seat. There is not perfect order in the house at this time, but I am sure the hon. member will be heard by the minister and the Chair if he asks his question now.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to ask a question in my usual unprovocative manner.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I should like to ask the minister whether, in view of Canada's continuing housing crisis and in view of the coming conference, the government has given any consideration to our request that members of opposition parties have a right to attend that conference if only in the capacity of observers.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the part time member for Danforth—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: —I will say that his suggestion will be considered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I as a corollary suggest to hon. members that this type of appellation is not in order. I suggest it is very close to being offensive to call a minister a part time minister or an hon. member a part time member. I suggest that all hon. members keep this in mind.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, when I call the minister a part time minister I do not wish to suggest that I am casting any personal reflection whatsoever on him. We all know he is the Minister of Labour. We have objected to the fact that we do not have a full time minister of housing. It is no reflection by me, nor would I wish it to be so taken, upon the minister himself.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Rock (Jacques-Cartier-Lasalle): Mr. Speaker, concerning the by-election in Nova Scotia, has the Secretary of State received any information on bribery charges?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

BANKRUPTCY

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Under the former ministers of justice, the Bankruptcy Act was to be revised. Can the minister tell the house what progress has been made in this regard?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the matter of bankruptcies now comes under the Registrar General.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR EARLY CONVENING OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. Now that the other place has reconvened would the minister give his support to the joint committee on penitentiary matters being called together at an early date, as I understand that both co-chairmen would support an early meeting?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, following an earlier appeal by the hon. member I contacted the chairmen and was given assurance that the committee would be convened in the very near future.

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, November 1, consideration of the motion of Miss LaMarsh for the second reading of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to summarize briefly a few of the things I said on this subject before the debate was adjourned on Wednesday. I referred to the new broadcasting act having in clause 2 (g) (iv) a reference to national unity. This is what the clause says:

> the national broadcasting service should . . . contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity;

One can hardly argue with that as an aim of the broadcasting system, but it will have very many meanings; national unity means so many different things to so many different people. I expressed the other day one little fear at the back of my mind. I have heard a great many complaints about people in the C.B.C., particularly the French network, supposedly being leftists, separatists and so on. I do not know whether this is true, and I am not sure that the people who make the accusations know whether it is true. But I would not want this phrase "national unity" in the legislation to be used as any sort of excuse for witch hunting within the corporation.

While the object of the national broadcasting system in its public and private sectors should be to promote national unity I hope we will always allow for dissent in this regard; that is, allow for other ideas on what kind of country we should be. I see the hon. member for Lotbinière is in the house. The hon. member believes that Canada ought to be a republic. That is a view held by a number of people in the country. There should always be room for that view to be expressed on our broadcasting system. So let us watch this particular point about national unity which is now written into the new act.

We have this rather difficult problem, Mr. Speaker, of running a public broadcasting system which has not become a state system. There are many countries in Europe, and I am not referring to just eastern Europe, in which the broadcasting systems are obviously state systems dominated by the government. We do not want that here. This leads me back to another point I was discussing the other day, having to do with the kind of persons appointed to be in charge of our broadcasting system, those people who will be members of the Canadian radio commission or whatever name the regulatory authority will have and the people who will run the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Just before adjournment of the debate on Wednesday, I quoted an editorial from the Ottawa Citizen of October 19, I believe it was, which was to the effect that these appointments should be non-political. I quite agree with that. I feel very much about these appointments as I do about the appointment of judges. This does not mean that anybody who has been identified with the party in power is automatically ruled out. There has been some criticism of the present board of directors of the C.B.C. The broadcasting committee has an opportunity to meet all these people last year or earlier this year. Some of these people, I think, might well be on the new board.

The point is that people of the highest quality who have stature in their own particular regions or nationally in this country should be considered regardless of their political background. If I may just take an example, I should think Mr. Robert Fowler would know a great deal about broadcasting now as a result of all the experience he has gained investigating it. I am told that Mr. Fowler is a Liberal. I believe Mr. Fowler would make an admirable appointee to one of these agencies, either the Canadian radio commission or the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We have to try to avoid the suspicion which can be aroused in the public mind if all the appointments come from one particular point of view.

I am not going to labour at any length the statements made by the Secretary of State about the management of the C.B.C. I thought the title of the editorial in La Presse of November 2 was very apt; it read "Une Déclaration Bizarre". I am sure the minister has heard a great deal about it both from this side of the house and the other side. I should simply like to say that presumably the new act will be invoked very shortly and new appointments will be made. It would have been better leave these things unsaid. It would have been better to make the new appointments, have the new people get on with the job and make whatever changes may be necessary. As it is, reflections have been cast upon some innocent persons. Perhaps the minister did not intend that, but this is inevitably what has happened.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to one particular aspect of broadcasting which I think is a very important one which we have to face. I stress this important principle of broadcasting, and it is this question. Do Canadians want Canadian programs on Canadian television stations? This question has been asked quite recently by a number of people who comment on radio broadcasting in this country. On October 21 the Toronto Daily Star had an article written by Mr. Roy Shields entitled "Satellites and cable TV threaten networks". I should like to quote briefly from it:

> Within five years CTV may be out of business and the C.B.C. reduced to the status of educational television in the United States.
> This is the threat from new horizons opening to cable TV and the imminent arrival of domestic satellite broadcasting.

These fears were expressed openly to me by Gordon Keeble, president of CTV and Murray Chercover, general manager of the private network. Furthermore, they are echoed by other major broadcasters.

What it means simply is that all the American programs available on CTV and the C.B.C. may soon be available everywhere in Canada via a combination of cable TV and domestic satellites and later directly by satellites to home receivers. The possibility of CTV existing on its Canadian programming alone then becomes remote.

These fears have been expressed by other people. Mr. Dennis Braithwaite, who writes on television in the Toronto Globe and Mail, has expressed the same fears and in effect has said "Canadian content, who wants it"? Again in the Globe and Mail Ian Porter recently had an article from which he wrote:

We buy from Britain, France, commonwealth countries and most of all from the United States. For business reasons the figures are never released, but it is a safe bet that last year the C.B.C. alone spent more than $5 million importing U.S. programs. By comparison, the C.B.C. happily announces it made $220,000 last year peddling its own TV goodies abroad.

The article goes on to mention that Canadian viewers prefer United States programs. Mr. Blackburn of the Toronto Telegram made a comment on a speech by Dr. Andrew Stewart of the Board of Broadcast Governors, and said that Dr. Stewart was not too worried about this question of Canadian programs and Canadian talent.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might do something which I would not ordinarily try to do. I know the column to which my hon. friend is referring, and Dr. Stewart sent me a transcript of that he had said. There seems absolutely no basis in the transcript for the comment. I have a great deal of respect for Mr. Blackburn, but in this case he seems to be quitte wrong. I am often enough attacked for things I have not said, and I do not believe this should happen to Dr. Stewart in this case.

Mr. Prittie: I thank the minister for that information and the information about Dr. Stewart. I therefore withdraw any reference to him, but the other references still stand. We do have this expression of opinion that Canadians do not want Canadian programs.

We also have the point of view that you cannot keep Canadian talent in Canada, that it will inevitably go somewhere else. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a new situation. In the area from which I come, the lower mainland of British Columbia, the first television broadcasting available came from United States stations. Later we had a C.B.C. station, and still later a private station. Now cable television is widely available in the area. I think experience has shown that about one third of the people watch C.B.C. during prime time, about one third the private station and about one third United States stations. In other parts of Canada such as Toronto, Winnipeg and Montreal, United States programs are available. This does not bother me one bit. We hear the view that eventually there are going to be satellites, and these satellites will broadcast directly to the home receiver. Presumably when that day comes we will be able to see programs directly from Great Britain. I think this is interesting, and I am rather looking forward to that experience.

I believe people watch the television programs they like. They watch good programs. If they want to watch a comedy program they want a good comedy program, and the same may be said of drama. If they want to watch public affairs programs they want good public affairs programs. They want good mystery programs, good country music programs or whatever the case may be. I believe it is the quality of the program, not where the program originates, that is the key point. I suggest that we can produce programs in Canada of a quality which Canadians will want to watch and which will stand up in competition with programs which originate elsewhere.

• (12 noon)

What is the obstacle to more Canadian programs with Canadian talent? I suggest that we have been lacking the will to make them, and perhaps the money as well. Many of these programs which come from the United States are quite frankly dumped into this country at a very low price. I should like to quote briefly from an answer in the broadcasting committee made by the president of the C.B.C. This answer can be found in the minutes of the committee No. 28 for November 22, 1966.

The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) asked the president of the C.B.C. this question:

You say 7 to 8 per cent of the original American cost, which I realize would not be much, but what would it be in comparison to an equivalent program? I know it is hard to assess these things because you really cannot put two programs side by side and say they are equivalent, but what would 7 and 8 per cent be as a figure?

In reply Mr. Ouimet said:

If we take a one hour program, we can get the best American ones for less than $10,000, probably around $8,000. On the other hand, this represents an original cost of the order of $100,000 to $125,000. A Canadian program which we could place at the same time of sufficient polish and attractiveness would probably cost $30,000 or $40,000. Therefore you have to compare the $8,000 with the $30,000 or the $40,000.

This is what I mean, Mr. Speaker, when I say that United States program producers are dumping programs in this country. We have laws against dumping of other commodities and I suggest we should also have a law in this field as well. By all means let them sell programs in Canada, but not at cut rates. I suggest that Canadian broadcasters should have the same kind of protection that publishers of Canadian periodicals have as a result of the O'Leary report, except, of course, the two most important competitors, Time and Readers Digest. Nevertheless, I think this kind of protection of Canadian broadcasters is quite justified.

The C.B.C. is not the only broadcaster that is buying United States programs on the cheap. The private stations do it as well. Perhaps the Board of Broadcast Governors felt in the early days of private stations that this was justified when they might have had difficulty making ends meet. I should like to quote briefly once again from the minutes of the broadcasting committee, No. 31, for December 15, 1966. Dr. Andrew Stewart, the chairman of the B.B.G. was giving evidence at the time and I asked him this question:

May I ask if this has been the case in the past few years concerning the private television stations? Let me put it this way, were you rather easy on them in the first few years of their earnings, because you felt they may not have been able to do the things that they promised to do concerning Canadian talent, Canadian content?

Mr. Stewart replied:

The brief answer is, yes. If you want me to elaborate on it I can do that. Yes, this is so.

I went on to point out that the earning position of the private stations in the major centres of Canada had increased considerably and that they were now in a financial position to do more Canadian programming and employ more Canadian talent.

If I may return to the bill, Mr. Speaker, in clause 2, which defines broadcasting policy for Canada, subclause (d) states:

the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should be varied and comprehensive and should provide reasonable opportunity for the expression of conflicting views on matters of public controversy, and the programming provided by each broadcaster should be of high standard, using predominantly Canadian resources;

[Mr. Prittie.]

So again it is stressed that we should use predominantly Canadian resources. I suggest that if we want to do this and are willing to pay the price we can produce good, predominantly Canadian programs that our people will want to watch.

Let me point out that we can retain talent in Canada. I am not ignorant of the fact that talented Canadians will always leave the country to work elsewhere. If your name is Lorne Greene and you are offered several hundred thousand dollars a year to go to Hollywood to make Bonanza, I suppose it is difficult to refuse. This sort of thing will always happen. Some people will go to London and New York. But there are others who are very competent and quite willing to stay. There are also people who have made a name in broadcasting and the theatre in other countries but have chosen to keep their homes in Canada and at least work part time in this country.

The obvious examples that come to my mind in this connection are Wayne and Shuster, who have their homes in Toronto and make programs in Canada and also in the United States. The very talented actress Kate Reid, is also in this category. Again, Barry Morse makes programs in Canada in addition to the United States and the United Kingdom. These well known people do this sort of thing, and we also have many lesser known people who will remain in Canada if there is opportunity in Canada for them to make programs. However, before this can happen the major broadcasters, the C.B.C. and the C.T.V. network, have to spend more money on Canadian talent. If they do this they will be able to produce programs that Canadians will watch, but they will have to be programs of quality.

We in parliament have a responsibility in this regard. We provide the C.B.C. with money for this sort of thing. One of the complaints of the corporation is that they have to take much advertising revenue and that the sponsors, the advertisers, want many of these United States programs. We frequently hear from members of this house of the tremendous cost of the C.B.C., but I do not think the cost is so tremendous. It amounts to about $5 or $6 per head per year, which is not too much to pay for a system which should do a job of broadcasting, Canadian broadcasting, for Canadians.

I suggest too that perhaps we should have legislation to encourage Canadian advertisers to back Canadian programs. Whether we do this by special tax incentives for sponsors of Canadian programs or by way of tax penalty if programs of non-Canadian origin are sponsored I do not know, but there is room for something along this line so as to encourage sponsors to back Canadian programs. I am sure that if the programs are good and the Canadian people watch them, advertisers will be quite ready to do this sort of thing.

I have mentioned this subject particularly because I think there is a growing cynicism among the people who comment and write about television that Canadians do not want Canadian programs. I am convinced that if we produce good programs Canadians will want to watch them. In this regard our situation is not unique. Popular United States programs such as the Bonanza are shown in Britain, France, Italy and Japan, and there is nothing wrong with that.

An hon. Member: Don't forget The Beverley Hillbillies.

Mr. Prittie: Yes. The Beverley Hillbillies and Hogan's Heroes too. Other countries produce a significant number of programs that their own people like and I am suggesting that we must do the same thing in this country.

There are one or two other points I should like to make about the bill. The minister has said that consideration is being given to a five-year budget for the C.B.C. This provision is not included in this legislation but will be brought in later. I was interested to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) the other night, who expressed for the first time some doubts on this move, though he was quite agreeable to it when the matter was discussed in the committee. However, if hon. members do have some fear that this will remove somewhat the necessary parliamentary supervision of the broadcasting system, I would remind them that two opportunities are provided to exercise control. First of all, the Auditor General examines crown corporations and makes a report which is considered by the public accounts committee each year. He can if he wishes examine the accounts of the C.B.C. and, knowing parliamentarians, I point out that members can discuss almost any aspect of the C.B.C. under that heading.

I would also remind the house that the broadcasting committee made this recommendation concerning the C.B.C. and the regulatory authorities, as found on page 8 of the committee report on the white paper:

> As creatures of parliament, both the B.B.G. and the C.B.C. should continue to report to parliament annually and the members of each board should be available to this committee for a review of their reports when their estimates are under consideration.

The next point is also important.

> A major parliamentary inquiry into broadcasting should not be necessary more than once every five years.

So there is still ample opportunity for a parliamentary review of the work of the Canadian radio commission and of the C.B.C. each year even if the C.B.C. is granted a budget for a period of five years.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the hon. member a question? With regard to the Auditor General's report and the public accounts committee, I think the hon. member has raised a legitimate proposal, but does he not realize that when the public accounts committee deals with the report of the Auditor General it is always at least one year late? In other words, not until next year will the public accounts committee have the opportunity to deal with this year's C.B.C. spending habits. That applies to any other crown corporation, for that matter. On that basis, the opportunities of the public accounts committee are strictly limited. They will continue to be limited unless arrangements can be made or legislation enacted under which the expenditures of the current year also may be examined.

Mr. Prittie: I will not argue with the hon. member on that point. He knows more than I do about the operation of the public accounts committee. What he says is true. We have just finished examining the spending estimates for the current fiscal year and it is more than half over. I suggest that if the annual reports of the Canadian radio commission and the C.B.C. were referred immediately to the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts when they are tabled in the house, hon. members would be given an earlier opportunity to question the directors of these two bodies.

In the last little while the C.B.C. has come in for a good deal of criticism from a number of sources. We hear charges of mismanagement and bureaucracy. These may or may not be true. I am not a management analyst and I do not know whether they are. But I do say this that despite the charges of mismanagement and bureaucracy the corporation has done an excellent job during this centennial year.

Miss LaMarsh: Hear, hear.

Mr. Prittie: I have watched many of the corporation's programs and they are, as they should be, interpreting Canada to Canadians. Last evening I watched the program about the Yukon and I gathered much new information.

Miss LaMarsh: How did you manage that? The house did not rise until late.

Mr. Prittie: In the past I have been critical of the private broadcasters. It is true they have not done as they promised they would. One year ago the C.T.V. network changed its organization; nevertheless, they have not done everything they promised to do. But they too have made an effort to broadcast more programs with more Canadian content than they did before. Of course, our centennial year prompted them to do this. They and the C.B.C. covered that great entertainment, the Tory convention, which took place in Toronto in September. Both networks did a good job.

We understand that the bill is to go to the broadcasting committee for clause by clause study. In my opening remarks on Wednesday I said that the relationship of the minister, the regulatory authority and the C.B.C., among a number of other aspects of the bill, ought to be examined carefully. We must look hard at the entire field of relationships.

Today I deliberately dealt with the use of Canadian talent. We must make the effort to create Canadian programs which will be of a quality that Canadians will want to watch. If we spend our money, make the effort and then find after five or six years that Canadians do not want Canadian programs, that will present us with a situation that we must then examine. In the meantime I think we ought to make the effort and I do not think we have done so in the past.

[Translation]

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to sit on the committee that considered the reforms, the improvements and the radical changes which are the purpose of the bill we have before us.

Before coming to the core of my remarks, may I be permitted to congratulate the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) and to remind the house that he has chaired these informative sittings with remarkable tact and understanding.

Since its inception in Canada almost fifty years ago, broadcasting has originated as much with private as with public enterprise. For almost half a century now, it has been extending its services and, at the present time, radio services reach 98 per cent and television services more than 92 per cent of the Canadian people.

To become such an integral part of the daily life of the people, broadcasting has to adapt to public needs, so as to learn to serve them according to the language and the separate culture of each ethnic group, without weakening the concept of national unity. It is not an easy task to achieve this accomplishment in a country extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

It was necessary to set up 360 radio transmitters and 221 television and satellite stations to reach a population spread over 4000 miles of territory. The combination and connection of radio and television stations enable almost all Canadians to listen to or witness events of national interest at the time they are happening. Such achievements have contributed to make our radio network one of the most highly considered in the world.

• (12:20 p.m.)

But our effort should not stop or be limited there, because there are certain values to be protected at the C.B.C. Fortunately, the present government has taken the worthy initiative of amending and changing the Broadcasting Act. We hope they will proceed objectively, always taking into account the best interest of the people who are always waiting for the reforms suggested in the bill.

Reading the resolution preceeding Bill No. C-163, I took particular note of the interventions by the hon. members for Chapleau and Trois-Rivières (Messrs. Laprise and Mongrain).

In his speech reported on page 3180 and 3181 of the French version of Hansard for October 17 last, the hon. member for Chapleau recalled the numerous protests sent to the C.B.C. because of the deceptive character of some programs shown in the past. In a petition addressed to the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), 76,000 Canadian women have jointly expressed their strong disapproval of some programs shamelessly displaying morbid immorality, injurious to the soul and spirit of our young people especially.

Other authorized persons have called for a more effective censorship to suppress, at least on our state-owned networks, programs which condone crime, violence and all types of immorality.

I endorse the words of the hon. member for Chapleau and I earnestly ask the C.B.C. to revise its philosophy and, particularly, its desire to offer Canadian taxpayers programs and newscasts that they have a right to expect from a corporation supported and financed by themselves.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières limited his remarks to one specific point, namely the right every candidate to an election should have to speak over the air regardless of his financial means. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, like the member for Trois-Rivières, I am not ready to give a diploma for competence and smartness to a candidate, just because he has a fat pocket-book or because his election is financed by abundant election funds, often, of doubtful origin.

I support whole-heartedly the attitude which spurred the hon. member for Trois-Rivières into restating the question appropriately, giving it the hall-mark of the most elementary equity and social justice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are we to think of the omnipotence of the Board of Broadcast Governors? At this point, I feel it might be very useful to mention or to refer to what Mr. Frédéric Côté, assistant legal adviser to the B.B.G. had to say.

This is the article published in Le Soleil on October 13, 1966 under the title:

The B.B.G. is accused of hostility towards French Canadians.

The Board of Broadcast Governors was strongly attacked yesterday when a lawyer which it employed published a letter of resignation in which he criticizes the intellectual dishonesty and attitude towards French Canadians he says he found there.

Mr. Frederic Côté, barrister, native of Smooth Rock Falls, Ontario, was hired by the B.B.G. on November 1, 1965 as assistant legal adviser. Since December last, he had been the only lawyer working for the B.B.G., the chief legal adviser having resigned.

During all this period, Mr. Côté says that he single-handedly did all the work in the office, both in French and in English.

Mr. Côté admits that part of the reason for his resignation is the fact that he has not been appointed chief legal adviser, but he maintains that "this was only the straw that broke the camel's back".

In his letter to the B.B.G., he declares that he is resigning because he "can no longer stand" the following things:

1. "The anti-French Canadian atmosphere and attitude of the B.B.G.

2. "The behaviour, attitude, decisions as well as the indecision of the B.B.G. with regard to myself as an employee.

3. "The ignorance, the lack of interest and the unfairness of the B.B.G. as far as French Canadians and the province of Quebec are concerned.

4. "The fact that the province of Quebec has really no representation on the B.B.G.

5. "The intellectual dishonesty, if not the unlawful acts, of the B.B.G.

6. "The serious offence committed by the B.B.G. against natural justice."

Mr. Speaker, here is an example which confirms the charge made by Mr. Frédéric Côté. Radio-FM-Saguenay-Lac-St-Jean Ltée is the name of a business firm established in my constituency for the purpose of operating an FM radio station.

On April 27 last, two shareholders of this company appeared before the B.B.G. and applied for a licence or a permit to operate this kind of a radio station. During the same hearing, the B.B.G. heard an indictment of the local station manager against the issuance of this licence; in this case, the spokesman for those opposing the issuance of a new license found nothing better to do than to downgrade the Saguenay country and its inhabitants, on the grounds that, because of the precarious economy of this area designated as economically depressed, there was an exodus of people going to try their luck in big cities such as Quebec or Montreal.

I would not be surprised if this kill-joy had the gall to insinuate that an FM radio station would prove uneconomical, due to the low cultural and intellectual level of the Saguenay people.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to protest vigorously, and to brand and stigmatize, by my contempt and disgust, such a false argument advanced by men who are supposed to help, like and publicize their area and their community and present them in a true light on the air.

As a result of this fierce suggestion, tainted with the lure of easy gains and profits, the B.B.G. rendered its verdict: Refusal.

The reasons ascribed are shown in the report. It reads:

In the estimation of the board, this application was not well prepared.

I would interpret this to mean: People of the Saguenay and Lake St. John area, you are incompetent.

Mr. Speaker, are all the competent people in their place? I doubt it very much, because I imagine that certain of these so-called competent people owe the key positions they hold to well-lined purses or strong political connections.

Useless to say that this decision of the B.B.G. was not warmly received by the people of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area because all the towns in the area had fully supported this project conceived by a team of progressive and dynamic young people.

I conclude my remarks here, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to assure the house that we will follow carefully the consideration of this bill, with the intention of suggesting amendments, if necessary.

• (12:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are stark and convincing reasons why this bill on Canadian broadcasting, and the C.B.C. in particular, should be both clear and unequivocal, and why the new heads of the C.B.C. must understand fully the intent of parliament in passing the bill.

Sir, on invitation and speaking entirely on my own behalf, I addressed the Canadian Club in Winnipeg on December 8, 1966. I said at that time:

> The problem which I wish to place before you today, after a long period of developing concern and heart searching, I believe to be of the greatest possible importance to Canada.

I expressed the conviction that the communications media is the nervous system of nationhood, that any defect or illness in this nervous system can be just as crippling to a country as to a human body.

I tried to develop in my thoughts at that time the importance of the Greek idea of balance to liberty and to the democratic idea. The Greeks were not content to leave things as they found them, but they employed restraint in the process of improvement and the result has been distinguished by the quality of balance and completeness. Then I made this point:

> By way of direct contrast to this Greek view of balance a "new" philosophy is now being expounded by a determined group in the communications media.

That was the one point that I developed, that Canadians were now being subjected to propaganda and, even more serious, to censorship by exclusion.

My address was made to a large room full of people but later there were thousands of requests for the address and I became quickly seized of the fact that this was one of the primary concerns to Canadians at large.

I had been told that this is a subject a politician does not discuss, that a man may pull down Canada, the church, the family, anything, but the one thing he cannot put his finger on and hope to survive is the real establishment in Canada, the opinion-makers who direct broadcasting output. I was told that if he does he is finished. I do not believe this at all.

The most important thing as we look at this bill is not to consider only the organization of this most important industry—this has been done thoroughly and very well —but to deal with the basics, the final product, the question of output. I am extremely proud of the government that I have the honour to support, of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), for what I think is courageous leadership at this time in this direction. I believe that this great Canadian creation, the C.B.C., is in very truth the nervous system of nationhood. It has stirred us with tremendous contributions during the last three decades. I can think of the compelling reporting of the war years, our recent centennial triumphs, the poignancy of the Vanier funeral, the excellence of its sports coverage, its over-all technical brilliance—these have all contributed to our becoming a nation. In many respects our C.B.C. is the finest national system in the world, and I have visited a number of national systems in Europe and Asia.

This past year has proved on many occasions just how good Canadian broadcasting can be at its best. But at the same time within the C.B.C. we have become aware of pockets of positive danger in important sectors of programming. Sir, I feel we dare not return now to the cynical defeatist, nation-dividing atmosphere of the immediate pre-centennial, pre-Expo era. Journalists tell us Expo has spelled the end of cynicism. I think Canadians are determined to move forward together from the celebrations of 1967 to new triumphs in a great new century.

Turning to the bill I particularly want to address myself to those clauses under Part I. I am delighted with the structure of the bill. It speaks of preserving and strengthening "the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada." I think Mr. Lubor Zink suggested that the operative words might be "to safeguard, enrich and strengthen." Then, in clause 2(d) the bill goes on to speak of varied and comprehensive programming, providing "reasonable opportunity for the expression of conflicting views on matters of public controversy." How absolutely vital this is to any viable democratic system.

In clause 2(g) (i) the bill speaks of a "balanced" service of information, and in paragraph (iv) it says that the system should "contribute to the development of national unity."

I refer to the language used by the Secretary of State when she said:

> Perhaps the most important feature of the C.B.C.'s mandate in the new bill is the obligation to contribute to the development of national unity.

Then she said:

> —the C.B.C. has an overriding responsibility to be objective and balanced in its presentation of news and commentaries on public affairs.

Later she referred to Adlai Stevenson's comment that freedom demands infinitely more care and attention than any other system.

That is why this bill is one of the most important that I have ever tried to discuss since entering parliament. Sir, I agree completely with the solid foundations laid by R. B. Bennett. I have read carefully the debates which took place when the bill was introduced originating the C.B.C. where, financed by the people of Canada, we produced an entity independent from government. This bill, I think, is an attempt to make broadcasting more truly the servant of the Canadian people, the perfect mirror of truth and culture.

When I use the word "culture" I like Somerset Maugham's statement:

> The value of culture is its effect on character. It avails nothing unless it ennobles and strengthens that. Its use is for life. Its aim is not beauty, but goodness.

Sir, in the 15 odd years of television we have had four voluminous volumes of evidence studying this problem, the Aird commission, the Massey commission, the Fowler commission and the Glassco commission, in addition to parliamentary committees at an average of one every two years. Yet today there is a widespread concern about the state of broadcasting in Canada.

The conclusions drawn by the Aird royal commission are still relevant. The first of these was that broadcasting should be carried out in the interests of Canadian listeners and in the national interest. The second was that where religious broadcasting is allowed there should be regulations prohibiting statements of a controversial nature. This is still important. I do not want to dilate on this point now but I think it is a matter of concern to many Canadians. The third was that broadcasting of political matters should be carefully restricted under arrangements mutually agreed upon by all political parties.

• (12:40 p.m.)

May I touch on what is one of the most grievous aspects of the general problem, the problem of national unity. When I came to the House of Commons as an opposition member in 1961 I was deeply concerned to discover that there were increasing misunderstandings and tensions between English and French Canadians. Having been brought up in Quebec and having many friends in that province, I found it difficult to understand how people who live together and love one another as much as the people of Canada do could become involved in such a family tangle. I started to examine the reasons for it. One thing which shocked me was that a man who appeared to be rather undistinguished, Dr. Chaput, the separatist, had more time on the national network than the then leader of the government, Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. I could not comprehend this. Then I found that for a period of months after my leader became Prime Minister the same thing obtained. Marcel Chaput, who appeared to represent virtually nobody, was more important to the media than either the former prime minister or the new prime minister. He stimulated a series of programs which seemed calculated to rake the French-English issue.

I received a letter from Quebec city dated May 26, 1966, written by one of the most progressive and highly qualified leaders in French Canadian university life today. I would prefer to withhold his name, but I may say that he is a man who is very greatly respected thoughout this country. He said:

> Far from being interested in seeing these grievances settled, they—

He is referring to the broadcasting producers.

> —are using every means possible to create friction between English and French Canadians. They are attempting to show a false image of the English Canadians even to the extent of distorting all that comes from Ottawa—the more animosity there is between the two ethnic groups, the more the success of their course is assured—this instrument that lives on our citizen's taxes is a far cry from contributing to national unity—certain proposals put before the parliamentary committee are purely anarchist when one reads between the lines.

He added this warning:

> Chaos can only increase—and the only ones to gain from the situation are those who wish the destruction of democracy and the confederation.

Some time ago the then prime minister of Quebec, Hon. John Lesage, planned to make a trip to western Canada. This, I believe, was a little embarrassing to some federal politicians because there was a federal election brewing at that time and reactions to such a visit could cause difficulty in many constituencies. I took the trouble to read very fully what Hon. John Lesage in fact said whenever he was in the west. I read this carefully in the western press. I was amazed at the difference between what appeared on national television and the reports which appeared in the daily press. They were not the same reports at all. This bothered me. Actually, by press reports Mr. Lesage got an excellent reception everywhere he spoke. I should like to go back a short period in order to show that there appears to be a pattern in this regard. A feature article by J. B. Lamb appeared in the Toronto Star of April 3, 1964. Mr. Lamb said:

> There is a very real need for some measure to be instituted which would bring the viewpoint of Canada's national broadcasting service closer to that of the people it purports to serve and represent—all kinds of programming is in effect unconsciously slanted to the left.

These are strong words coming from the Toronto Star. The lead article continues:

> Perhaps the most eloquent testimonial to the slanting of programming by the C.B.C. was Roger Lemelin's recent admission that Quebec separatists had been able to infiltrate the C.B.C. and had "succeeded in making the term private enterprise almost a dirty word of C.B.C. transmissions." Mr. Lemelin chuckled over the success of his friends in using C.B.C., a federal instrument, as the "unwitting vehicle for separatist sentiment".

I should like to remind hon. members that the date of that article is April 3, 1964. Now coming up to date, I have a letter which I received from the head of the department of communication arts of Loyola College dated October 21 last which takes strong exception to Mr. Patrick Watson's treatment of the Quebec Liberal convention on the production of The Way It Is on Sunday, October 15. I suppose one might have reasonably supposed that the almost unanimous rejection by Quebec Liberals of the separatist Levesque would have been received with sympathy on a Canadian network.

How did Mr. Watson handle this most important news item? I should like to quote from the letter of Rev. Dr. John E. O'Brien. He said:

> —what emerged finally was a most sympathetic treatment of Rene Levesque, a rebuke to the Quebec Liberal party for supposedly packing the convention, and the statement reiterated several times that with Levesque's departure the party in all probability had lost its dynamism.

In his letter to me he went on:

> Does not freedom of speech demand that there be no censorship by exclusion? In my opinion the public has been shortchanged consistently for the past few years through the informal censorship exercised by production teams who have been writing their own ticket—and policy be damned.

And that from the reverend gentleman, who incidentally holds his Ph.D. in the field of communications.

I should like to refer to an article by Frank Howard entitled "A Very Political Press" which appeared in the Globe magazine in which he discusses the annual convention of the Rassemblement pour l'Indépendance Nationale and says that it showed clearly the extent to which Quebec's separatists influence the news media. He said:

> There were at least half a dozen delegates to the R.I.N. convention in Trois-Rivières earlier this month who hold key positions in the French language media. Most of these came from Radio-Canada (the C.B.C.) but a few daily newspapers were also represented on the convention floor.

This, of course, does not take into account those who were official delegates.

It is not only the French language side but also the English language side of the C.B.C. which is involved in this. The English language network had more working representatives at the R.I.N. convention than the French network. I ask the question, what is this in aid of? Bruce West in the Globe of October 20, 1967, calls it the "numbers game" and shows a picture of Levesque at the mike. He says rather innocently:

> I am sure that there are many who would agree with me when I say that to my unstatistical eyes and ears the C.B.C.'s emphasis upon French Canadian hopes and aspirations and demands and charges has far outweighed that devoted to the principle that Canada should remain one strong and undivided nation.

He said:

> —one might be justified in asking the ridiculous question of how many times Quebec's Rene Levesque appeared on the C.B.C.'s national network as compared, say, with any politician of similar rank in Ontario?

I have taken a little trouble to work that out. I can assure you that there is absolutely no comparison. Nor has C.B.C. been fair to the real representatives of Quebec.

I believe that every one of Canada's bogeymen has been created by television.

I should like to quote from a column in the Montreal Star headed "Television And Radio" in which Bernard Dubé, under the heading "Levesque's Separatism A Thorn For C.B.C.", says:

Levesque was employed under a 13-program contract as an interviewer-commentator on The Public Eye last season. Public Eye executive producer Richard Nielsen had spoken to him about rejoining the program this season.

The article continues:

It is no secret that separatist feelings are held by many employed in French C.B.C. here.

Then we find a lead article by Frank Howard in the Globe and Mail of September 15, 1967 under the heading "Separatist Element Of Radio-Canada Draws Bitter Attack". He mentions the contribution of a member of the Laurendeau-Dunton royal commission and writes that this commissioner said:

• (12:50 p.m.)

—somebody has to tell Radio-Canada that it has a duty to support Canadian unity.

If you will forgive me, I say thank God for Judy. I hope the whole country will join with me in respect for this gallant lady who served her country once in uniform and who is now doing her level best for the unity and freedom of Canada today.

Mr. Prittie: Would the hon. member permit a question? What is he driving at? Is he suggesting that Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon should not be allowed to appear on C.B.C. radio or television in future?

Mr. Matheson: No, by no means. I think as my argument develops it will be obvious that I believe we have the kind of society which is strong enough to withstand every shade of political, ideological and social opinion. However, I do not want to hear just one side of an argument all the time, and therein lies the problem.

This article then states:

Mr. Gagnon's suggestion that the French network is being taken over by separatist sympathizers or sensationalists, is an accurate reflection of the things being said about C.B.C. news—

The article states that Mr. Gagnon said:

—the essential vice of radio Canada is that it has escaped public control.

The strange thing is that everyone in this house agrees that politicians should keep their hands off broadcasting. We do not want to censor broadcasting, nor do we want the people in this media steering Canada in directions that may be against Canada's interest in regard to either domestic or international policy. I think this is vitally important. Let me refer to the Montreal Gazette of October 26 which had this to say under the heading, "Person To Person":

Rene Levesque gets another chance to air his separatist views when he is interviewed on the Pierre Berton show come next Monday.

Don't we make great stars of these people.

Miss LaMarsh: They don't make a star of me.

Mr. Matheson: I have an editorial from CKMI-TV in which they speak of the danger of reporting only one group's opinion:

—Jean-Louis Gagnon stated in a speech ... at Montmorency House ... that the French network should not be a propaganda machine for clandestine groups.

The editorial continues:

Mr. Gagnon recalled a director from the network saying that: "he never believed and did not believe that the corporation owed allegiance to the cause of Canadian unity." This has all the earmarks of the Goebbels era.

A head of one key section of French language C.B.C. told Professor J. E. O'Brien recently that only a very small number of French Canadians agree with separatism. This is precisely what he said:

Our job is to educate and lead the rest to become separatists.

The Saturday Citizen of October 14, 1967 contained an article by Bruce Phillips which was carried by all Southam newspapers in Canada. The heading is, "Are Programs Being Slanted?" The subheading is, "Now It's Separatism Inside The C.B.C.". We have learned to respect Bruce Phillips who has been reporting for some time. He has this to say:

The presence of separatist sympathizers, and in some cases separatist party members, is an acknowledged fact. It is accepted as fact by Marcel Ouimet, vice-president in charge of the French language network, and has long been common knowledge inside the province.

Mr. Phillips then writes:

One current figure is that about 60 per cent of the news department is separatist-oriented.

Mr. Phillips continues:

—Roland Dugre, newly-elected president of the Quebec chamber of commerce, said in a speech last Saturday that C.B.C. programs are being slanted toward promotion of separatist and socialist ideas.

Canadian Policy on Broadcasting

"It seems completely illogical that the C.B.C., a public corporation functioning through taxes imposed on all Canadians, should become an instrument for destroying Canada"—

All this is backed up by current copies of newspapers just available.

The Montreal Gazette of November 2, 1967 carried an article by Claude Arpin about this same subject. He writes:

It's one of the first things you notice on entering Radio Canada's newsroom on the fifth floor of the C.B.C. building on Dorchester Blvd.

—the sign is one of those mini-plates introduced last February by Le rassemblement pour l'independence nationale.

Later in the article he states:

—after sticking around a few hours you learn that the sign is fairly representative of the feeling among the 40-odd French and English speaking writers, editors and newscasters in charge of C.B.C.'s Montreal news operation.

Then Mr. Arpin states that the vice president has said:

A thorough investigation into the matter has already been initiated.

If anyone would like a well documented story about this he should read the article in the Montreal Gazette of Thursday, November 2 under the heading "Radio-Canada Separatist Charges Make Purge Possible." The article sets out ten distinct incidents which seem to document the fact that the C.B.C., which is paid for at a pretty high price by all Canadians, is being used surreptitiously and clandestinely to destroy that which all of us here support, namely, Canada.

Mr. Laniel: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware of the fact that not long ago the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Blouin) was asked by Pierre Bourgault, the leader of the R.I.N. party, if he was interested in appearing on C.B.C. programs and on Radio Canada in Montreal? The two were in a restaurant in Sept Îsles in that part of the province of Quebec where Mr. Bourgault ran for provincial election. Mr. Bourgault told Mr. Blouin that any time he wanted to appear on the Radio Canada network all he had to do was ask him because all his friends were there.

Mr. Matheson: That seems to confirm the conclusion reached in this article in the Gazette which says:

—on the French network, in the prime viewing time following the hockey game, we saw, in order, Francois Aquin, Rene Levesque, and the hon. member for Lapointe—

[Mr. Matheson.]

The latter is now trying to enlist sympathizers from outside Canada for the destruction of this country. The article in the Gazette then carries this statement:

No one here has forgotten how skilfully Dr. Marcel Chaput used his firing from the civil service several years ago to win sympathy for the separatist cause in Quebec.

John Steinbeck tells us that the changes of the last 20 years have been enormous but we have come finally to the entrenched core of rebellion which must be removed before we can travel on into a liveable future. He is referring to the continuation of our free democratic society.

Carl Mydans is one of the great photographers of our time. He is also something of a philosopher. He writes something I picked up in Bangkok.

One of the hackneyed phrases used about photography is that the camera never lies... it is far from true. Once a man has been attached to it, the camera immediately has a point of view. And once it has a point of view, we are all free to question what it says. The moment the photographer selects a position from which to take his picture... the mood he chooses to convey reflects his personal point of view. Indeed, he may utilize one of the most effective methods he knows to express himself... he may elect to make no picture at all. He just passes up the photograph which would present what he does not want to present, or which is in contradiction to what he has been presenting.

My criticism of the C.B.C. is summed up in three words—censorship by exclusion. May I call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. It being one o'clock this house is signing off until 2.30 this afternoon.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, before the luncheon adjournment I was speaking about the importance of presenting, particularly in the realm of public affairs, truth; and truth involves the state of being complete, whole or unbroken. The Prime Minister gave an address in November, 1966, in which he spoke about Canada's aspiration to achieve not so much the great society but the good society, a nation not dedicated primarily to bigness and power but to more enduring values, a nation devoted to excellence in all things.

I covet for Canada excellence in communications based on the principle that our airwaves are, as this bill declares, public property. The view that there should be in the presentation of public affairs balance and completeness is, I regret, not shared by everybody. In fact there are well known personalities who express quite the opposite view. May I refer to an article which appeared in the Toronto Star Weekly of November 26, 1966. In that article Mr. Patrick Watson wrote:

> The C.B.C. now describes its public opinion responsibility as some kind of fantastic juggling act designed to produce balance among extremes whatever their value.

He added:

> A better job to undertake would surely be to destroy or confuse, or upset public opinion.

The hon. lady in her important policy speech declared:

> The C.B.C. has, of course, a very special responsibility to maintain objectivity as a corollary to freedom from censorship and pre-editing of programs.

Again I refer to the views of Mr. Laurier Lapierre. In an article which appeared in the spring, 1966, issue of Actra he indicated that he would have the immense resources of talent and energy which the C.B.C. possesses put to the task of questioning Canadians and their leaders on his oft-repeated theme, "our endorsement of the United States role in this dreadful affair, Viet Nam", and also of providing an analysis of what he described, from his party's viewpoint, as "the bankruptcy of Canadian political leadership." He proposes that the facilities of the C.B.C. be mobilized to convert public opinion throughout the nation to the views which he regards as socially desirable.

Farmer Tissington, who has been in the press gallery for a number of years and is a friend of many of us, speaking over the air in a report from Ottawa on May 27, 1966, described the trend in television programming which "has alarmed and dismayed many Canadians." He went on to say:

> The C.B.C. is, after all, a publicly owned and tax supported medium and yet it has been used increasingly to espouse moral, religious, social and political beliefs which are surely almost wholly at odds with those of a great majority of Canadians.

The minister declared in her speech:

> But this privilege of free speech carries with it a heavy responsibility and must be exercised with due regard to the public interest.

Let us not overlook the importance of prime time and what can be done with prime time in nation to nation broadcasting. There have been, we know, in different western countries persistent attempts to subvert our society. Let us never forget that Guy Burgess, a committed spy who delivered his country's most intimate secrets to Russia while serving in the foreign office and later as assistant private secretary to the foreign secretary, Mr. Hector McNeil, started out his career with three years' service in the B.B.C. The program feature he handled was called This Week In Westminster. It was the inspiration for a later British program called That Was The Week That Was.

Our C.B.C. Seven Days format was largely a follow-up of That Was The Week That Was. I have wondered, and I have heard this question asked in England, whether Burgess did more damage to his country by acting as an espionage agent or as a broadcaster. Time and Tide of October 3, 1963, called this program sinister. This article says:

> It is now sinister. To turn Catholics against the Jews is no service to the Jews or to the country. The young men let loose in "That Was The Week That Was" will find it easy to sow in shallow minds distrust of British institutions whether royalty, religion or morality. Does Mr. Carleton Greene realize the power he is letting irresponsibles use? If he does not, someone should tell him.

The problem continues to be serious in England. I have been interested in the development of that sad situation and read the London Sunday Express of September 17, 1967, in which there is very serious criticism of the television and radio programs in Britain, which appear to many people intended to undermine that country. The article states:

> The fact that news bulletins and current affairs programs have a left-wing bias is hardly disputed . . . Day after day by omission, slant, innuendo or even a tone of voice, news is far from objectively presented.

I would commend this full-page article on the British situation to anybody who is interested. In the earlier part of my remarks I referred to what we know to be one of the major problems in Canada, the English-French problem and its television development. This is only illustrative of many other subjects in respect of which we have been subjected to quite unbalanced treatment with regard to public affairs, both domestic and international. I have been disturbed when listening to the news from Washington, which is delivered daily by Mr. James F. Minifie. Upon making detailed comparisons afterwards to ascertain the extent to which these reports harmonized with reports in the New York Times and the key Washington press, I find that there has been a substantial and disturbing difference. Our influence on many problems, our ability to cope, is influenced by how much we know. It was Chairman Mao in his celebrated speech at the Yenan forum who declared that today the media is the greatest revolutionary weapon in the world. If we rely on this media to cover public affairs we must use it fairly and with balance.

I must speak now, sir, of the representations we have had from ACTRA. Of course, every Canadian wants more Canadian talent to be used. I think it is very important that the ACTRA people—I notice some of them in the gallery—as a group realize regarding this wonderful broadcasting team that has been developed with all their skill, that their future as well depends on the integrity with which their skills and abilities are actually used. The Toronto Telegram speaks about the C.B.C.'s strategic position for propaganda and refers to precious people like LaPierre, Watson, Haggan and Leiterman. "Without them in the strategic positions the indirect but very effective left-wing manipulation of public opinion in Canada could suffer a temporary setback". I feel that Canadians deserve to understand these influences and are entitled from now on to the fullest and fairest treatment of public affairs.

The great David Sarnoff, suckled on the Old Testament and the prophets, truly believed in his new country, America, in her people and goodness. He ushered the United States into the electronic age. Indeed, his faith helped build the modern United States. I would beg our C.B.C. producers to think better of themselves and their potential worth to our own good society. I would invite them to give leadership in the creation of what may become the first modern, technological, prosperous, humane and reverent civilization. They have a unique part to play in tracing the grand design for Canada, the design in which wholeness becomes holy, in which love leads to the mountain top. We would invite our producers to experiment, to risk, to be alive and to be relevant. Above all, we urge them to become involved in their country and to show by their works their faith in Canada and its people.

I recall the very moving message of the new president when President Kennedy was assasinated. He asked all who speak, all who teach, all who preach, all who publish, all who broadcast and all who read and listen to reflect upon their responsibilities to bind up our wounds, to heal our souls, to make our society well and whole for the task ahead of us. As a visitor to Expo declared, Canada's prospects are far greater than her problems. Now we must venture on to far greater achievements, confirmed by faith and hope in the search for ever larger freedom. Thus may we continue in that love of mankind and that loyalty which Ruskin said was the noblest concept that man had found in his long wanderings through the wilderness.

[Mr. Matheson.]

[Translation]

Mr. Roger-E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): I thank you, Mr. Speaker. The few comments which I would like to make are not exactly a criticism of Bill No. C-163 but are the thoughts coming to my mind now that the bill is before the house.

Due to the special character of my comments, allow me to continue in English.

[English]

When a member of this house rises to speak on the subject matter of a bill, especially as comprehensive as Bill No. C-163, his natural temptation is to try to cover every point made in the bill in order to offer his ideas and comments on each one which he accepts or rejects. I should like to resist that temptation, sir, and limit my remarks to two specific points, not because no more could be said but rather because I believe that other speakers will cover the other points adequately. My decision is made much easier by the fact that the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) in her opening statement and the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) in launching the opposition's stand have already pinpointed, and very creditably so, the main areas of agreement and disagreement and have also indicated the kind of treatment to which this legislation will be subjected in the ensuing stages of the debate.

My remarks, which will be brief, are almost entirely inspired by clause 2, subclause (g), paragraph (iv), which reads as follows:

> The national broadcasting service should . . .
> (iv) contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity.

A quotation from the objectives of the bill as detailed in the white paper reads as follows:

> The determination to develop and maintain a national system of radio and television broadcasting in Canada is an essential part of the continuing resolve for Canadian identity and Canadian unity.

A statement from the standing committee's unanimous report, already quoted by the minister, reads:

A distinctly Canadian broadcasting system is essential to our national identity, unity and vitality in our second century.

My first point, Mr. Speaker, I admit is a delicate one, and perhaps more so at this particular time. I hope all members will approach it in the same rational, realistic and patriotic spirit that I have. My point is illustrated in clause 40 of the bill, although many hundreds of other examples could be given to illustrate the same point. Clause 40 reads:

(1) Except as provided in subsection (3) of section 38, the corporation is, for all purposes of this act, an agent of Her Majesty, and its powers under this act may be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty.

(2) The corporation may, on behalf of Her Majesty, enter into contracts in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the corporation.

(3) Property acquired by the corporation is the property of Her Majesty and title thereto may be vested in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the corporation.

(4) Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the corporation on behalf of Her Majesty, whether in its name or in the name of Her Majesty, may, subject to subsection (3) of section 42, be brought or taken by or against the corporation in the name of the corporation in any court that would have jurisdiction if the corporation were not an agent of Her Majesty.

The words "Her Majesty" are repeated nine times in 18 lines. Not once do the words "Canada" or "parliament" or "government" or "Canadian people" appear in this clause dealing with agencies; yet this is a bill which has the avowed intention of promoting Canadian identity, Canadian unity, Canadian content and Canadian vitality in our second century. I feel very much at ease in speaking on this matter, Mr. Speaker, because I am a monarchist. I am happy to be one because I believe it is the best system under which we can develop our particular diversity. I do not feel archaic in my belief when some of the most prosperous economies and stable democracies in the world today follow the same system. I refer to Great Britain, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, The Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Australia and New Zealand.

I am satisfied to offer allegiance to the Queen of Canada, but I do not feel that I need to be reminded of my allegiance nine times in 18 lines in a bill, or each time I go to the movies, a hockey game or a football game. Indeed, I need to be reminded no more than I need to be reminded at every opportunity that I am the son of Léo Régimbal and Emma Frappier, or that I adhere to the Catholic faith, or that I reside in Quebec, or that I am a French Canadian, no matter how dear each of these facts is to me or how proud I am of each of them.

In speaking about this to many of my colleagues, I was told that this was strictly a matter of form and quite acceptable as such. This would be a good occasion, to my mind, to verify whether it really is so acceptable to everyone or whether it is not a denial of identity and even a source of impatience. If it is simply a matter of form, I would like to suggest that we re-examine the form, and an appropriate place to do this would be in committee. Therefore I would hope that the minister will find this another valid reason to justify our suggestion that the bill be sent to the standing committee before second reading in order to give members an opportunity to find a better form for our second century of Canadian confederation, without our having to follow the usual procedure of amendments which must be voted for or against. I believe we have attained a sufficient degree of maturity to agree on certain changes without questioning our allegiance to the crown.

I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, of my visit to the British pavilion at Expo where, after two hours of deliberate search for a picture of Her Majesty or even a reminder of royalty, there was no trace to be found except in one reproduction of a typical old British home where an elderly woman, sitting in an antique rocking chair with her pot of tea and her pet cat, is watching the coronation ceremonies on her six inch "telly". I am also reminded of that very dramatic moment during the opening ceremonies of our party's national convention when 15,000 people in Maple Leaf Gardens, in full view of four to five million Canadians, listened very respectfully to our guest artist sing "God Save our Queen" and very spontaneously, wholeheartedly and naturally joined her in singing "O Canada". This is the very point I am trying to make, sir.

Second, in seeking what Bill C-163 calls "the continuing expression of Canadian identity", I would like to speak on the question of Canadian content and the use of Canadian talent. In her opening remarks, as recorded on page 3749 of Hansard, first column, first paragraph, the minister had this to say:

> This means that the standards to be applied by the commission cannot be measured only by broadcasting time. Both the quality and the nature of Canadian content will have to be taken into account as well, so that the best possible use can be made of the abundant resources of Canadian talent which in the present unsatisfactory situation is all too often fleeing to New York, Hollywood or London. There is also no particular reason, so far as I can see, why the provisions with respect to Canadian content should not also be applied to commercial messages. The B.B.G. so far has not exercised its statutory authority under the present act for this purpose, but I would expect that the new commission will give this close and careful attention.

This part of the minister's statement is an obvious reference to the excellent report presented to members of parliament by the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists entitled "A Program For Better Broadcasting."

The fears of ACTRA are reflected in a letter to me from one of my constituents, Mr. Joseph Schull, of Cité des Deux Montagnes. Mr. Schull is a member of that association and a writer well known for his evocations of the drama in Canadian life. Without quoting the ACTRA report of Mr. Schull's letter of September 25, in order not to abuse the house's time and patience may I be allowed to paraphrase or summarize their viewpoints, which most members and the Secretary of State have already had an opportunity to study, and to offer my comments.

The report deplores the fact that more and more American programs are invading our Canadian network. Mr. Schull points out that "a Canadian national consciousness is not being fostered by this material; it is being dulled and deadened". He points to a C.B.C. press release on this season's programs on the English network which showed that there were to be less Canadian programs and more from the United States. The Canadian programs included ten in the series Hatch's Mill which were shot last year but not released until now, ten new Wojeck programs and none of the series Quentin Durgens, M.P., although ten are being made for release in the fall of 1968.

A full list of United States programs would take too long to recite, so I will give only some of them: The Danny Thomas Show, High Chaparral, Everywhere A Chick-chick, The Mothers-in-Law, Dundee and the Culhane, He and She, Gentle Ben, Moby Dick, Shazzam, Dragnet 1967, Mission Impossible, Walt Disney Presents, Green Acres, The Ed Sullivan Show, Bonanza, Search for Tomorrow, The Guiding Light, As the World Turns, The Edge of Night, Hogan's Heroes, The Man form U.N.C.L.E., Get Smart, Bugs Bunny, The Beverly Hillbillies.

Both Mr. Schull and the ACTRA report point out, among other things, that American sponsors are getting a good deal in cornering great segments of our prime radio and television time, that we as Canadians could tighten up on our allocation of prime time without losing the big advertisers, and that special allotments of time and money should be made available by the C.B.C. to encourage, foster and promote Canadian talent. They suggest a sliding rule of tax deductible expenses according to the degree of Canadian content in programs and commercials, and other incentives. All of these observations are well made and deserve our close attention, and I trust that the minister will take them into account.

I believe, however—and I am sure members of ACTRA would agree—that money and time and proper concern are not the only solutions to our ills. I believe they are willing to look at this whole situation very objectively and realize the very great effort which they themselves must put forth in the fostering of their own worth-while cause and the improvement of their outlook and of their craft.

As far as money is concerned, centennial year was the occasion of more grants and allotments than ever before. But outside of the very many valuable documentaries which were produced, do we find a proportionate increase in valuable cultural production? Did we get better plays for it? What happened, for instance, to the Canada centennial play? Is money the only answer?

So far as prime broadcast time is concerned, do we have the machinery and the facilities and the bodies to fill these item slots with entertaining, artistic Canadian products? Or can we hope to compensate for United States film-making facilities with a $10 million film development board? Will provision of a budget devoted to the development of new Canadian material be the end of our problem?

I have no doubt whatsoever that Canadian producers, actors, designers and technicians need not take second place to anyone in the world. As a matter of fact, wherever they go their talent matches the best in the world, only more so because they bring to their new environment that special Canadian characteristic of being able to adapt to new circumstances and understand the point of view of others.

I believe that their greatest challenge today—and I am sure that they can pick up the challenge—is their professional proficiency. The best incentive to creativity, to new expressions, to higher quality, must be their own desire to perfect their art, their trade and their craft for their own sake. They must be culture-oriented much more than money-oriented. Their greatest endeavour must constantly be the production of beauty and entertainment, more than the saleability of their talent, and they must resist the financial appeal of the United States market which everyone seems to agree is not over-culturally inclined.

The experience of French speaking artists could be a good example to follow. They have had to ignore outside attractions because the market was not readily accessible to them. They had to concentrate on their own development to find new expressions which were attractive to their public. As a consequence, the result has been beneficial to them, to their art, to their public and to their culture.

For the closer consideration of both points which I have tried to make as well as for other points which have been made and will be made by other speakers, I appeal again to the hon. lady to refer the bill to the standing committee before which, in a clause by clause study, amendments might be moved without the partisan pressures of house votes. If that is done I am sure, as was the case in the study of the white paper, that unanimity will prevail and that the bill will have the enthusiastic and confident launching it deserves and which we all so earnestly desire.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter before us interests all of us because of the all-pervasive influence of broadcasting in modern times. Before going into details as to why I think this bill is excellent and why all members of the house should support it, I wish to deal with some points raised by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Matheson). Hearing my colleague talk of the influence of separatists in Radio-Canada, and hearing other criticisms directed at the operations of the C.B.C, its programming, and especially that programming in the public affairs area, I felt fortified in what I had concluded for some time, that the two solitudes in the C.B.C., the division between management and the creative people in the corporation, are the crux of the problem.

Our conduct in this house shows that we do not accept the axiom of two solitudes in the corporation. Rather, we hold management responsible for what the producers do, and we should pay more than lip service to this view. Over the years as well as recently there has been much talk about the independence of the creative people. Much sympathy has been extended to the producers who have claimed that there has been unwarranted interference in their activities by management. In my mind it is impossible to reconcile—and I am talking about the C.B.C.—how one can hold management responsible for what the C.B.C. does by way of programming or anything else and on the other hand agree with the producers that management should not interfere in the creative side of productions. Anyone espousing these two viewpoints in my opinion holds views that are irreconcilable. From now on we must hold management responsible for all phases of C.B.C. operation. If we do that, and I see no alternative to this, then when we criticize the French network of the corporation, Radio-Canada, for its alleged attitude in allowing too many with separatist viewpoints to express their opinions over its network, we are obviously holding management responsible.

The C.B.C. has had a difficult time. Over the last eight to ten years there have been a series of investigations, parliamentary committees, commissions, and reports by bodies such as the Glassco commission with respect to the corporation. The time of the top people in C.B.C. management must have been largely devoted to supplying information, preparing briefs and appearing before such investigating bodies.

After this debate and when the bill becomes law perhaps we can draw the line and not investigate the corporation any further. Let us hope that the new management will take over the C.B.C. and that the corporation will operate under the new law without excessive interventions by politicians.

Mr. Nielsen: Speak to the minister.

Mr. Munro: It is crucial at the same time, if we believe that C.B.C. management is responsible for programs such as Seven Days and for alleged separatist influences in Quebec, that from now on we desist from undermining management. If the general public thinks that we as parliamentarians and politicians have little confidence in C.B.C. management, it is unreasonable to expect management to deal adequately with contentious questions having to do with staff, programs such as Seven Days—I have used that example again—and the permissive attitude of Radio-Canada in allowing those with separatist viewpoints to express them. Our lack of confidence, if it becomes apparent, will not be hidden from the public or C.B.C. employees.

If it is evident that we lack confidence in the corporation, management will be undermined in dealing with those matters for which we hold it responsible. We must return to the position of many years ago. When there was disagreement in parliament about matters pertaining to the C.B.C., they were referred to the minister who reported for the corporation and he in turn took up the grievance with the C.B.C. That, so far as the public was concerned, was the end of the matter. Parliament showed it had confidence in the discretion of C.B.C. management that appropriate action would be taken with respect to the grievance and no further discussion was required.

If we are not prepared to follow such procedures we shall continue to undermine management. On the one hand we talk about the independence of producers and on the other we hold management responsible for the conduct of producers. We must return to our former attitude. Parliament must let all C.B.C. employees know that we have confidence in management, that we expect management to be responsible for productions, for programming, and for everything that comes over our television screens.

That brings us to the next logical step. If we are not happy with what is going on, parliament can indicate that it has no confidence in management. Management personnel may be fired and replaced. But it seems to me we cannot do this if we continue to display a schizophrenic attitude to public broadcasting.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I should like to deal for a few minutes with an article which has been referred to by my hon. friend the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister. He drew attention to an article by Mr. Gordon Pape which appeared in the Gazette on Thursday, November 2 and went to some length quoting various paragraphs from it indicating infiltration of the C.B.C. by separatists or by those who desire a far greater degree of independence for Quebec than exists at the present time. He indicated that this tendency must be stopped. I wish my hon. friend had had time to read the remaining parts of this article which indicate that management has been and is now taking what it feels to be appropriate action in this regard. To quote from the article:

> It appears, however, there is now action on two fronts aimed at improving the situation that M.P.s are complaining about.
> First, there is the inquiry which has been ordered by the top brass at Radio-Canada into the charges that some of their employees were delegates to the R.I.N. convention. C.B.C. employees, like civil servants, are not prohibited from belonging to a political party, but the feeling among top management is that a certain amount of discretion is required.
> "The value of an employee can decrease considerably if he takes a public position in favour of the N.D.P., the Liberals, the Conservatives, the separatists, or anyone else," is the way Mr. Ouimet puts it.
> Presumably then, if the report finds that some employees did take such a public position at the R.I.N. convention, their value will be found to have decreased to the point where they are no longer assets to the corporation.
> The second line of attack has been increased "consultation" in the past six weeks between Ouimet and the Radio-Canada production centre in Montreal—consultations clearly aimed at assuring better balance in programming, although no one wants to say so explicitly.

I go on now, to quote another part of this article which I believe to be worthy of note.

> But overriding all other considerations, and standing as the main obstacle to the kind of action the Quebec M.P.s want, is the fear that any strong action on the part of Radio-Canada management will create martyrs out of the separatists.
> The image of the oppressor is one neither the C.B.C. heirarchy nor the cabinet wants to assume. No one here has forgotten how skillfully Dr. Marcel Chaput used his firing from the civil service several years ago to win sympathy for the separatist cause in Quebec.

We all appreciate the problems which the C.B.C. management must be experiencing in this area. I, for one, am convinced that the separatist point of view has in fact received a disproportionate amount of coverage over Radio-Canada, and I agree with hon. members who point this out.

At the same time, before we become too critical we should recognize that any wholesale removal of these people would likely make martyrs of them and would certainly not improve the cause of unity in Canada. There is, of course, a further consideration.

Wholesale dismissals or demotion of people alleged to hold separatist views might well lead to protests that politicians and parliament and C.B.C. management, for that matter, were interfering along lines which have often been criticized in the past and were, in fact, imposing some kind of state control over news by undermining the independence of the disseminators of news. This is something which should be borne in mind.

There is a further element involved. I submit it is possible for a reporter, whether for television or a newspaper, to hold certain views which he is able in his own mind to separate from his attitude to his job as a newsman.

In the same paper, the Gazette of Thursday, November 2, there is an article by Claude Arpin in which some views are expressed on this question—Radio-Canada and Quebec.

One English speaking newsman said "I wouldn't hesitate a minute in hiring a separatist if he were a top reporter."

"And as far as this place is concerned," he continued, "I'd worry if we didn't have a few separatists on the French side; after all, we need intelligent, sensitive and inquisitive people in news and that kind of person is usually desperately involved in life around him. And if he happens to be French Canadian, he'll most likely be involved with the preservation of his culture and language."

The writer comments:

This kind of solidarity on the part of English speaking C.B.C. employees in the face of current criticism against Radio-Canada seems fairly widespread.

Granted this is a conclusion drawn after speaking with the rank and file personnel; editors and programme directors—because of their vulnerability to public disapproval—won't venture opinions. They refer you to the corporation's PR men who repeat what vice-president Ouimet has said about separatists and their alleged presence at Radio Canada: "A thorough investigation into the matter has already been initiated."

He is quoting authorities within the C.B.C. The writer goes on:

That there are French Canadians at Radio-Canada who hold nationalistic, "independentiste" or even separatist views is highly probable.

What isn't as likely, however, is that these people successfully use the corporation's broadcasting facilities to diffuse their propaganda across the province.

Then the writer gives an example.

"Suppose I'm a militant separatist," argued a French Canadian writer. "My assignment editor gives me a job and I come back and write it for broadcasting over both radio and TV. Now my story, before going out to the public, has to be approved by a news editor and by a program director for both media. That means four people look it over.

"So by the time my original story reaches the newscaster, it has been edited into a straight news item. The newscaster reads what is on the paper and then the paper is sent to Ottawa where it is filed. That incidentally—the filing system—is ample incentive for editors to make sure our newscasts aren't separatist propaganda."

The article goes on to say there are many competent people in the news department of the C.B.C., people who are proud of their role as newsmen and who recognize their obligations. So all these factors have to be considered. If retaliatory action is taken to clean out separatists and sympathizers without regard to the considerations I have mentioned, more harm would be done than good. Martyrs might be created. This brings us, again, to René Levesque to whom reference was made earlier. It seems to me that the C.B.C. strike some years ago was the big happening which launched him upon public awareness. We should not forget that it is possible to make martyrs of these people and win sympathy for the views they espouse. There is also the factor that we must not appear as though we are trying in a militant, dictatorial way, to restrict one viewpoint and have some type of censorship exercised at the top.

The third point we must recognize is that some of these men against whom allegations have been directed are men capable of separating their two functions, their personal beliefs from the role they fulfil. When confronted by these problems it is not difficult to see the hesitancy that not only the C.B.C. but we as politicians must and are exhibiting.

It is always a nice thing to look into our own house and put it in order before we are excessively critical of somebody else's. For instance, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) sits in this house as a member of parliament; yet he is espousing the separatist cause which, if successful, would totally undermine and destroy our country. As I say, he sits in our House of Commons. He has probably broken every major principle of his oath as a member. What have we, as politicians in this house, done about it? He is over in France preaching what is tantamount to treason in terms of inviting outside influences to assist him in the destruction of this country. What type of housecleaning have we done in our parliament to take care of this situation?

Mr. Prittie: On reflection would the hon. member not consider that the word "treason" is a bit strong in this case?

Mr. Munro: Well, perhaps in terms of parliamentary proprieties I could use a weaker word. I do not know how else to explain some of the statements made by the hon. member which I have read.

In any event, to get back to the bill in question, I think we have all agreed that broadcasting must have some distinction in Canada as one of the most investigated and studied areas of national concern in the past decade. Royal commissions and parliamentary committees, all involving hundreds of sessions, have filled thousands of pages. It is difficult for any member to say anything in this debate that has not been said before by a great many people.

The studies leading to the introduction of the present bill have been exhaustive. The Fowler committee, the many hearings and deliberations of the broadcasting committee, the numerous reports and briefs submitted to these bodies and to the government, and the sometimes enlightening, sometimes discouraging public debate that followed the introduction of the government white paper, have all played a major part in bringing us to the point we are at today.

Regardless of how any of us may feel about the contents of the bill before us and regardless of the reactions of the broadcasters of Canada, all of us, parliamentarians and broadcasters, must share some pleasure in the fact that we now have the long-awaited bill only a short distance from final passage. For myself I can only express my agreement with the principles laid down in the bill and the means by which they are to be implemented. And we can do little more than discuss principles and possibilities for no act, no piece of legislation, is capable of determining the final product that appears on our television screens. We cannot legislate programs; we can only set down those fundamental guide lines which will establish the broad concepts within which we shall expect those who determine programming to act.

The major point of this bill is the strengthening of the principle of public broadcasting in Canada. The bill reaffirms our faith in the ability and the opportunity of public broadcasting to act as the basic foundation of our broadcasting system. It means that the C.B.C., which in the past has earned distinction throughout the world for both programming and technical achievement, is to carry on its role as the kingpin of our national service. This is a highly desirable feature. We in Canada have no national press as do many of the European countries. We have no means by which a national viewpoint may be communicated to all of our citizens except through a coast to coast broadcasting system, radio and television, French and English, whose mandate above all is service before profit.

Broadcasting in Canada serves other purposes than the mere coverage of events which are of political significance. It serves not only as a reflection of the thinking of Canadians but indeed as a vital link in the actual existence of the country. It remains the greatest single means for fostering Canadian talent, the greatest single outlet for the creative energies of artistic persons in Canada, the vital link in the development of a national consciousness that supersedes provincial and parochial boundaries. It is the greatest single common experience of all Canadians. My reading of this bill leads me to believe that it is the strengthening of all of these responsibilities which the government has set down as the task of Canadian broadcasters, but particularly that of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Only the C.B.C. can accomplish these aims, and largely only the C.B.C. can be expected to do so. The private broadcasters have their responsibilities and their role to play in the broadcasting system. But they are limited in the extent of the kind of achievement I am talking about by economics and by the simple fact that the only other television network in Canada, the Canadian television network, C.T.V., has no French operation.

There is only one organ of truly national broadcasting character in Canada and that is our public system. I have argued on other occasions that the 55 per cent Canadian content regulation now in existence may be a mistake. It may be better that the private broadcasters produce a few truly good programs than that they produce a host of mediocre American copies that are neither Canadian in anything but name nor as good as the original foreign product.

There will be those who will see a serious fault in the absence from the bill of a clear statement respecting the purposes to which private broadcasters must address themselves. I do not entirely agree. All sectors of the private area affected by this bill have different capacities. There are many television stations in large markets in Canada which are abandoning their potential for public service and wallowing in the mire of relatively unrestrained profiteering. There are others that are conscientiously fulfilling their role as best they can, and there are still others that are overextending their capacities with the result that in the process the communities they are serving are put at a disadvantage.

The best course for dealing with the private broadcasters is to judge them individually on the basis of the performance that can reasonably be expected of them, and penalize them severely if they do not reach such standards. Whether this means that they should be penalized to the extent of $100,000 is a matter on which I am sure there is less than unanimous agreement in the house. But the point is there in the bill as we have it that private broadcasters are to perform well or suffer. There is certainly nothing wrong with this concept.

The strength that has been assigned to the new Canadian radio commission should ensure that this policy is carried out. The commission—I do not propose to examine whether or not this name is suitable; that seems to me the least important of all the bill's aspects—is empowered not only to regulate with teeth the operations of the private broadcasters but has also some additional responsibilities which I am very pleased to see added.

First, the commission will have the sole authority for the granting of licences. While the government may refuse the recommendations of the commission it cannot, as is the case with the B.B.G., award the licences to someone else. This removes the stigma of political patronage or the allegation of political patronage from the granting of what are, after all, one of the most lucrative of all plums in this country. One can only applaud this step. While it might have been desirable for the bill to carry this principle to its full conclusion and remove power over licences entirely from government veto, it might also be argued that to do so would be to place too much power in the hands of the commission and eliminate any possibility of reversing what could be a bad decision. On occasion boards and commissions have been known to make mistakes. However, certainly any government is now forced to have very solid reasons for rejecting any recommendation from the commission.

Second, and of crucial importance, the C.R.C. is to have control over cable television. Had this not been included in the bill I for one could not have accepted it, because in the past we have grossly underestimated the potential role cable may play in the future of Canadian broadcasting. At the present time cable television serves to bring to the communities of Canada the signals of television transmission stations that, without cable, Canadians could not receive. What that means essentially is that cable brings United States television to Canadians. With such a function we cannot argue, whatever our personal preferences may be. Canadians want United States television and it is unfair that some should receive it while others cannot. So long as all Canadian signals are carried by community antenna services we shall have to accept the fact that more and more Canadians will have access to United States channels through cable.

In referring to the tremendous recognition of cable television we must look at the field of educational television. If educational television moves into the ultra high frequency channels, it will be unavailable to Canadians with regular television sets. It is possible that the only means through which they will be able to receive e.t.v. signals will be cable which can transfer the u.h.f signal to the v.h.f. home receiver channel. Conversion adapters are available, but the experience in the United States in the last decade does not lend optimism to the belief that the public will necessarily pay for them. Even if it is made mandatory, as it should be, that all set manufacturers include u.h.f. in all new sets, it will still be some years before Canadians will be fully able to receive u.h.f. signals without assistance of some kind, and cable is the most likely helper.

Given all these points and many others of a similar nature it seems to me it would be wise and forward-looking to include all cable operations under the terms of reference of a broadcasting commission. In all the private areas of concern, then, the C.R.C. is to have wide-ranging powers. I have yet to read of any real opposition to this principle. Indeed, I have been encouraged by the very favourable reaction which this bill has received from editorial writers across the country and from private broadcasters who, while disagreeing with minor provisions of the bill, have nevertheless greeted it without the severe words which they have employed on other occasions.

I repeat, however, that important as all these aspects are it remains that the singular feature of this bill around which our system is to be built is the role of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the public system. To it has been assigned the challenge of maintaining and improving the functions I mentioned previously. I have some suggestions I should like to make to the C.B.C. in this regard, because it is not entirely fulfilling its present role, let alone what we hope will be its new one.

Before I mention these, however, I believe it is important that we recognize the achievements of the C.B.C. in the past year. Much as we may consider public affairs programming to be of overwhelming importance and our own appearances on such programs as the highlights of the television week, I think we also must recognize that these programs have very low audience participation, not only in Canada but in every western country, and that the standard of a television system should not be judged on public affairs alone, which too often is the tendency here. Often more social attitudes are communicated through entertainment programs than will ever seep through the ponderous proclamations of public affairs quality broadcasting.

Apart from public affairs the C.B.C. has done a remarkable job in the past year. Its continuous and superlative coverage of Expo '67 and all the centennial events, its special coverage of such events as the visit of the Queen, its special centennial variety programs, and its general entertainment performance have indeed been of a very high standard. No broadcasting system anywhere has ever had so much to cover and done it so well while in the same year the conversion to colour had to be made which by no means is a simple operation. C.B.C. programs have continued, as in the past, to quietly receive international awards of excellence in all fields. C.B.C. radio has earned a quiet place in the lives of many Canadians as the only alternative to the mind diversion which in general is the function of other radio stations in Canada.

The C.B.C. has done a good job. It has done a better job than most of us give it credit for, primarily because we become concerned with the C.B.C. usually only when it has done something we consider to be wrong. Certainly it has far surpassed anything the private broadcasters have done, as of course it should, given its public financial support and its mandate. If it has not been sufficiently Canadian in content, that is something which has been incumbent upon it because of the old act. If it has not produced a public image of internal efficiency, this has a great deal to do with the amount of time spent—and I have referred to this—by its senior executives responding to the numerous demands of all those people investigating it and also has to do with the uncertainty with which the corporation has had to contend in awaiting this bill and, more important, the new officers.

At this point I should like to pay tribute to Mr. Ouimet who soon will retire after a lifetime of service to the C.B.C. He has made mistakes during his presidency; he would be superhuman if he had not. We all make mistakes. He has sometimes acted in a way which those of us who know less than he have condemned through our public statements. But I know of no Canadian anywhere in this country who is more passionately and sincerely devoted to a simple love of Canada and the cause of national unity than this very honourable man. He is one of the few who can live in either a French or English Canadian atmosphere and feel at home. He has led the C.B.C. through its most difficult periods of development and adjustment to new circumstances. He has served with a modest integrity which I find superlative. Above all, he has been a committed devotee to the concept of public broadcasting and its responsibilities; he has given his life to a realization of that concept. We owe him a debt of gratitude which cannot be repaid in words.

We must now look to the future of the C.B.C. I hope that somehow this beleagured corporation can now look forward to a few years of peace during which it can put its house in a new order, because a new order is called for and it must take place with swiftness. Too many people in positions of responsibility, whose motives are above reproach, in recent times, have indicated that the C.B.C. French network has strong separatist tendencies in some areas. This is evident from the programs which appear on the French system. I dealt with this at the beginning. With reference to the criticism in this area, I do not see how it will be possible for the C.B.C. to cope with this in a constructive way unless the present C.B.C. management and the new C.B.C. management have the complete confidence of parliament and of the government, because if that type of confidence is not established I reiterate that this fact will be swiftly known to the Canadian people and to the employees of the corporation. It is beyond me how one can govern a corporation with 8,000 employees and be held responsible for their conduct in respect of all these programs when the employees themselves are all too aware that the management does not have the confidence of the government and parliament.

What must be said to the C.B.C. now is that we all expect that changes will come in the foreseeable future and that the responsibility which is being entrusted to the corporation will be lived up to and respected. Commercial considerations and high ratings should not be the motivating factors in the C.B.C.'s re-thinking in respect of its programming. Under this bill the C.B.C. will come under the general supervision of the C.R.C. but it, unlike the private broadcasters, will be free of the penalties which the C.R.C. has the power to impose on others. Rather, the C.B.C. will remain responsible to parliament. I agree with this aspect of the bill. There are some who, with what they consider to be good cause, would have the C.R.C. take responsibility for the C.B.C. in all matters. They would have the C.R.C. be the final body with control over C.B.C. operations. There are objections to this and, I think, realistic objections. First, I cannot imagine any morale surviving the complete emasculation of the C.B.C. An emasculation would be the result if the C.B.C. were to have its freedom of action and freedom of decision given to another body. Further, it would make meaningless the C.B.C. mandate, because it would be little more than a guide line to a puppet of a senior body, the C.R.C. Whatever may be the faults of the C.B.C., it has at least 30 years of experience in programming for Canadians and dealing with the demands that a mandate for national service implies. The C.R.C. has no such experience.

Second, much as I approve of the idea of a stronger regulating body, I would have serious objections to the C.R.C. having control over every outlet and thus every programming principle that is available to broadcasters and to Canadians generally. The power which would be delivered into the hands of this board, were it to have control over the C.B.C. as well, would be enormous. That type of enormous power I could not look upon gladly.

These arguments are academic, for the fact remains that the price that must be paid for the public broadcasting system, with the service that is the motivation and the rationale for such a system, is the inevitable responsibility of parliament for its performance. If we are to pay public money for the establishment and maintenance of a public system, if we are to give to a public system a mandate for national service, if we are to make a public service the paramount keystone of our broadcasting policy, then we cannot but accept the responsibility for what it does. There is no means by which we as parliamentarians can divest ourselves of the consequences of what we do.

For these many reasons I commend this bill to hon. members and I commend the minister for bringing it forward.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a bill which has as its purpose to lay down the broadcasting policy of the government and it is upon this policy that we have to render our judgment. Certainly that is the manner in which I have looked at the provisions of the bill. As I have looked at the bill in this light I believe it has presented a number of features which should cause grave anxiety to those who believe in the free expression of opinion in this country. What actually has happened here, I believe, is that the government has been unable to control the C.B.C. and unable to make it a rubberstamp and is now trying to create a new device for the purpose of gaining that end.

Miss LaMarsh: Did you make it a rubberstamp?

Mr. Nielsen: I will have something to say about what the Conservatives did when they were in office in respect of the C.B.C.

I listened to the parliamentary secretary laud the president of the C.B.C. He suggested what a great Canadian he is and what a great job he has done. He went on to leave the impression that all members on the other side have great confidence in the president and the management of the C.B.C. Yet we were treated to the spectacle of the minister appearing on television and calling that management rotten. She was obviously embarrassed yesterday morning and this morning when attempting to deal with the questions directed to her. Some of her replies were astonishing.

Miss LaMarsh: They should not have been.

Mr. Nielsen: I call them astonishing. I cannot understand how members on the other side can stand in their places, laud the president of the C.B.C. and tell us about the great confidence they have in the management when the minister responsible for reporting to parliament can refer to the management in the way she has done.

By this time she has no doubt received the letter Mr. Ouimet has sent in connection with her statement. It is one of the strongest letters I have ever seen or which has ever come to my attention.

Miss LaMarsh: "Arrogant" is the word.

Mr. Nielsen: The letter may be arrogant and I can find some sympathy with the minister here because I remember when this gentleman, as great a man as he is, appeared before the broadcasting committee and was asked questions concerning the implementation of the recommendations of the Glassco commission. He told us that the C.B.C. had a Glassco commission of its own. In his letter to the minister I believe Mr. Ouimet has been quite fair in requesting the minister to explain her charges.

Miss LaMarsh: Would the hon. member answer a question? Is he now suggesting to this chamber that any head of any agency who is responsible to parliament through the minister can require anything of the minister or the government? Is he now suggesting that the president of this or any other agency is above the elected representatives of the people?

Mr. Nielsen: I believe the minister will realize that I am the last person to have that kind of an idea, having said what I have said in the past in this house.

Miss LaMarsh: Let us at least be in agreement on that point.

Mr. Nielsen: Surely the minister does not believe that of me after what I have said in this house about bureaucracy and the dangers of the increasing control of that bureaucracy in respect of our way of life. However, in these circumstances the charges which have been levied by the minister require explanation. We have asked for an explanation here in the house but it has not been forthcoming. I believe the president of the C.B.C. and the entire management of the C.B.C. now have a right to a clarification. Indeed, it would seem that the Canadian people as a whole would require that a responsible minister should give explanations of the statements she has made.

Having referred to this letter to the minister dated November 3, perhaps I should preface any further remarks on it by reading the last paragraph. It appears to bear the signature of the president and the paragraph reads in this way:

> Because you have made your charges public I deem it essential that the corporation's positions also be made public and I am sending copies of this letter to the news media.

The letter has become public. If I have a copy of it, for heavens sake, it has to be public.

An hon. Member: Not necessarily.

Mr. Nielsen: In any event, this is what the president says:

> My purpose in writing is to request that you provide the corporation with all the information in your possession on which you base the charges of "rotten management" within the corporation.

He is not asking this in respect of himself, the president. He then writes:

> When serious charges of this nature are levelled against the corporation or its people, it is our practice and duty to ask for substantiation of the charges by those making them, so that the corporation may take immediate steps to verify or disprove the charges and to take appropriate action.

There is nothing unfair about that sort of request being made by Mr. Ouimet, not as an individual but on behalf of the whole corporation. The president then writes:

> You will understand that the corporation cannot allow your public charges to remain unsubstantiated.

I draw the minister's attention to all the questions put to her in the house since the charges. The president then writes:

> Such accusations are capable of destroying public confidence in a national institution which must have the respect and confidence of the people it was created to serve.

Let me remind hon. members of the remarks just made by the parliamentary secretary when he was speaking about confidence. The letter then states:

> Further, such accusations cast serious aspersions on the entire management group of the corporation throughout the country and may do irremediable harm to the personal and professional reputations of all those within this group. If your charges are correct, they must be confined to those responsible and the corporation will take appropriate action.

Surely that is a highly responsible statement on the part of the president. The letter continues:

> If they are not justified then the reputation of the corporation and its people must be cleared at the earliest possible moment.
> The news reports state that you have had in your possession for two weeks or more the information "that there are some absolutely appalling things that have gone on in the corporation" on which you presumably based your "rotten management" charges.

● (3:50 p.m.)

I am astonished that in the light of your particular responsibilities you did not see fit to immediately impart this information to the corporation so that your charges could have been proved or disproved and appropriate action taken. It is essential that the corporation be given all relative information which may be in your possession.

There is nothing arrogant about that request.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? He may have said it, but I did not hear him. When was this letter sent?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know when the letter was sent but the copy in my possession, which is a photostat, is dated November 3, today. One of the quotations in it from the minister's statement, particularly "that there are some absolutely appalling things that have gone on in the corporation," was made this morning on the orders of the day, I believe, or yesterday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask my hon. friend, is this a letter he got from the press gallery? Could he tell us the source?

Mr. Nielsen: There is a sheet attached to this letter headed "C.B.C. Information Services." The date is November 3, 1967, and this sheet says:

Attached for your information is a copy of a letter sent today to the Secretary of State by the president of the C.B.C.

C.B.C. Information Services.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you.

Mr. Fairweather: This is the minister's charge.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister should give the house answers to the legitimate queries she has raised. If she wishes to do that now, I will gladly resume my seat.

Miss LaMarsh: Finish your speech. Don't deprive us of that.

Mr. Nielsen: I think the minister really put her foot in it.

Miss LaMarsh: You and the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) seem to have the same phrase.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry for the minister because she is obviously one who is fed up to the teeth with politics. We all get that way once in a while. She has already announced her intention to resign, so perhaps she does not care what she says.

Mr. Turner: Did you not say the same thing, that you were not going to run again?

Mr. Nielsen: If hon. members were up on their reading of the press they would know that statement was refuted as soon as the opportunity afforded itself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All politicians get frustrated, even the hon. member for Winnipeg South.

Mr. Nielsen: The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) must be the most frustrated politician in the house. He has ceased being a politician.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I never get frustrated. I am always amused.

Mr. Churchill: I sustain his interest in politics.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You helped me this morning.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I think when the minister made his reference to frustration he meant to refer to my colleague, and not the member for Winnipeg South.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the hon. member's colleague.

Mr. Nielsen: In any event, Mr. Speaker, if this bill embodies government broadcasting policy, then I believe, and it is a personal belief, that it appears to be an extremely dangerous policy indeed. The bill sets up a commission with the archaic title of Canadian radio commission. To this commission it gives absolute powers over broadcasting, including the granting and revoking of licences. To make matters even worse, it delegates those powers to a five-man executive committee. The powers of this executive committee are indeed frightening. I am not going to say anything about program content because I do not think that is relevant to the deeper principle involved in the bill.

There are many, and I sometimes count myself among them, who believe there is nothing really wrong with the C.B.C. that reincarnation would not cure. The parliamentary secretary said that the whole purpose of the bill was to take broadcasting away from the realm of political intervention, so it could operate freely and not be subject to political pressures. I wonder whether he has forgotten the provision whereby appeals from the decisions of the commission can be taken to the minister. This leaves matters in a very unsatisfactory position.

A national broadcasting policy is referred to in the bill, but nowhere is this co-called national broadcasting policy defined. Anyone in conflict with the aims and objectives of the so-called national broadcasting policy can be speedily punished. And what a provision for punishment is contained in the bill—a fine of $100,000. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what private station will dare go against a decision of the executive committee, or the minister in her directions to that committee or the radio commission, if they have hanging over their heads the penalty of a fine of $100,000? What inducement is that to free speech and free programming in the country?

Miss LaMarsh: Read the act.

Mr. Nielsen: I have read the act. I have read it from cover to cover. The minister has one version of it and I have another.

Miss LaMarsh: Everybody in the country has one and you have another.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not believe I am alone in the views I hold.

Miss LaMarsh: Nobody in broadcasting agrees with you on this.

Mr. Nielsen: In effect what the act does is give the C.B.C. a mandate. That is what hon. members opposite have been saying. It gives the C.B.C. top priority over the private sector of broadcasting in this country. Hon. members opposite speak of that private sector as though it has a job to do, too, but that it is really incidental. This I believe is not the way to look at it at all.

This mandate is spelled out in clause 2 (h) of the bill, where the following words are used:

—where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, the objectives of the national broadcasting service must prevail;

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Nowhere are the objectives clearly spelled out; nor is it spelled out who or what body will establish that such a conflict has indeed arisen. Who makes, for instance, a decision, and on what basis is a decision made, as to what constitutes a "balanced", and I think that is the word used in clause 2 (g),—service of information? Who makes the decision as to what is balanced and what is unbalanced?

Miss LaMarsh: Parliament.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister says parliament makes that decision. I respectfully submit to her that if this is her belief, she has not read the bill. The executive committee makes that decision, and the decision of the executive committee will be subject to political influence. The private sector of broadcasting is placed in a clearly disadvantageous and inferior position, not necessarily because it is less responsible than the C.B.C. but simply because it is private. This has long been one of the tenets of the bureaucrats in the Liberal hierarchy. That is why they are always going off the rails on matters of policy of this nature. They did it with respect to the minister of consumer affairs, as he has almost come to be known.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is not questioning parliament's decision on second reading of that bill, is he?

Miss LaMarsh: He is the same old hatchetman.

Mr. Nielsen: By gosh, Mr. Speaker, if I am a hatchetman I should take lessons from the minister, because I have not seen a better job than that done on the C.B.C. management in the last couple of days by the minister.

Mr. Churchill: The hatchetwoman.

Mr. Nielsen: We have had many examples of the awful urge of the Liberal party to control and regulate. I think they have a pathological compulsion to bureaucratize society. Under this bill they will make the C.B.C. supreme. The Conservative Government created the Board of Broadcast Governors in order that the C.B.C. might not be an uncontrollable octopus. I think that board has done a very good job. I may be alone in that opinion.

Miss LaMarsh: You are.

Mr. Lewis: You are.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Had it not been for the Conservative government under the former prime minister, there would be no private television in this country today. However, many of the best programs are broadcast over the private sector. We gave private television the opportunity to exist, and I believe private television is doing a good job in this country. This bill, if it is accepted in its present form, would relegate private television and private broadcasting to the back rooms in the decision making process. Indeed under this bill the private sector may be required to program anything that the executive committee might, to use the words of section 18, deem of special significance to Canadians. Who makes that decision? The executive committee does.

Mr. Churchill: Or the cabinet.

Mr. Nielsen: Or the cabinet, or the minister. The executive committee can literally tell any station in the private sector, "Well, we believe this program to be of special significance to Canadians, so you carry it." If the station does not, the result may be a $100,000 fine. Private television and radio are placed in the position where they must first come with their hats in their hands and placate the C.B.C. Then they must go on their hands and knees to this all powerful commission to which the members are appointed for seven years and from which they cannot be dislodged for seven years.

Private radio and television must appeal for mercy, for the right to live or the right to perform a service that I believe is on a great deal higher level than the parliamentary secretary, who spoke last, indicated. If these private stations do not do as they are told, if they are recalcitrant, then they can be fined $100,000. This is the big stick that will be wielded over private broadcasters, so they will not talk back. They will not even breathe back at this all-powerful executive committee.

Where does the power reside in this commission? It resides in the five members of the executive committee; that is where the power is, and they are in close consultation with the minister. We have the possibility and the strong probability under this set-up of direct intervention by government in every aspect of broadcasting. This of course is the dream of the Liberal party, to take over control, to regiment. This bill, if passed, will do nothing more nor less than set up a system of thought police in broadcasting. Not even the N.D.P. in their wildest dreams of a socialist heaven would dare lay the heavy hand of direct government control so heavily on the communications facilities of this nation.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the hon. member a question? He will not object if we quote this generous statement of his?

Mr. Churchill: It just means you are not as bad as the Liberals.

Mr. Nielsen: Why are they calling it the Canadian radio commission? I believe the answer is very simple. It has nothing to do with bilingualism, as one of our members said the other day. If bilingualism rests on anything so shallow as the change in name from the Board of Broadcast Governors to the Canadian radio commission, simply because that name sounds the same in both languages, then we are in even more serious trouble than I thought. This change is sought because this government knows, and I believe the Canadian people know, that the most powerful medium of communications in Canada today, indeed in any country today, is television. This government wants to avoid any hint or any shadow of a suggestion that it is setting up a device which will in fact allow it to exercise supreme and total control over television broadcasting in this nation. That is exactly what this bill does. This is why the word "television" does not even appear in the title of the bill. It should be called the television control act, in my submission, because that is precisely what it does.

Mr. Turner: What is that in French?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know what it is in French. I readily admit that I do not know how to speak French. I know what is being said about me when I am in the elevator, so things are not said now when I go in and out of the elevator. And now that the Registrar General (Mr. Turner) has raised the matter, I do not believe it is shameful to admit a lack in the other language. I would dearly love to be able to speak ten languages, but I cannot do that. I speak two languages.

The granting of licences, the revoking of licences, the renewal of licences, indeed the very programs which will appear, the scheduling of programs and their content, political broadcasts—all of these are under the direct control of this five man broadcasting junta; that is what it is. If they do not like I Love Lucy, off it goes. More important, if they do not like a program which they consider to be political or partisan, off it goes. Under section 16 of the bill, these powers reside in the executive committee. This committee is given power to regulate and control the whole political character of national broadcasting patterns. The recent national convention of the Conservative party would have been subject to a broadcasting veto by this five man group, not only on the C.B.C. but on the private system as well, because section 18 clearly states if they deem it of special significance to broadcast The Twilight Zone, then it will be broadcast.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, nothing has presented such a challenge to freedom of speech and freedom of expression in this country as the provision in this bill for a fine of $100,000 for a breach of these regulations. Power of this kind, unusual, abusive and extreme penalties of this kind, are totally inconsistent with the existence of free speech in a free society. I agree that a broadcasting licence is something that belongs to the people, but so are trucking licences, so are newspapers, an air transport licence, and many other things. The newspapers of this country buckled under to the infringement of press freedom embodied in the press legislation passed two years ago. The broadcasting industry will no doubt, with the passage of this bill, buckle under to it. While I am in complete agreement that the licence to exploit a natural resource, and that is what we are talking about, is a privilege and not a right it must be subject to regulation. Once the privilege is granted the exercise of control, in my view, should remain within the purview of the people and not be subject to direct intervention by the government.

It is not the control to which I object, it is where the control is vested. In fact, the control will be in the hands of the minister who, through the five man executive committee, will be able to guide and to influence, to direct and govern broadcasting to his heart's content. How can anyone in the private sector object with the spectre of a $100,000 fine hanging over his head? The chain of authority leads directly to the minister's office. The power is absolute and there is no appeal beyond the minister.

Do not the minister and the government, in view of all their pious pronouncements about the sanctity of the national broadcasting service, feel that the private sector and what appears on it is equally important to Canadians and for that reason should have equal rights and treatment? Under this bill the private sector does not get that equality.

I am not prepared to accept the thesis that the C.B.C., simply because it is a state controlled network, is in some way more responsible than the private network. This has not been the case. The C.B.C. has been floundering for a lack of leadership and direction. There has been some improvement, though very little, in the last few months; but now even that appears in danger. The C.B.C. has become honeycombed with little fortresses and administrative cells which are completely beyond control.

We had an experience of this, Mr. Speaker, in the parliamentary committee last year when we heard the apostatizations surrounding the attempt to exercise internal control over one program, This Hour has Seven Days.

Miss LaMarsh: Would the hon. gentleman answer a question at this point. I wonder whether what he is describing is not an obvious manifestation of bad management?

Mr. Nielsen: Bad management? It is a lack of control and direction. I believe the finest example of this is the manner in which the minister has been replying to questions. No information has been given to us. I do not know whether this is because the minister has a lack of knowledge and does not know what is going on in management in the C.B.C., or whether it is typical—as indeed it is—to expect of the treasury benches that they do not care to give this house information. I do not think that the C.B.C. management, the president of which was so eloquently lauded by the parliamentary secretary, is the fundamental factor to be blamed here; it is a lack of direction and control.

Miss LaMarsh: He is charming but not always well informed.

Mr. Nielsen: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker—

Miss LaMarsh: Just as the hon. member—only he is not so charming.

Mr. Nielsen: —I am in the group, regardless of the expressions to which the minister has given public expression concerning myself in my own riding, who think she is a very charming lady, and I should like to see her shut of this trouble she is in now; but she is in it, up to her neck.

Mr. Churchill: We do not want her as head of the C.B.C. though.

Mr. Nielsen: For months, Mr. Speaker, Canadians were treated over the C.B.C. to an unending parade of drug addicts, black power advocates, prostitutes, purveyors of filthy literature, Nazis and pseudo-Nazis. All of the scrapings and leavings of society sooner or later turned up on the C.B.C. No one in the C.B.C. apparently was able to exercise any control over what went on.

According to the Auditor General, even elementary financial controls are lacking in this organization, which is now on its way to gobbling up $100 million and more of the taxpayers' money, providing in many cases very dubious return. In this regard I have already made reference to the treatment by the president of the Glassco commission's recommendations, and his attitude toward them.

This is the organization, Mr. Speaker, that the government in this bill wishes to place in an even more privileged position than it now enjoys, with even less possibility of any control being exercised over the conglomeration of little kingdoms that have grown up within its great corporate structure. It is not more but, in my view, less administrative freedom that the C.B.C. needs.

While viewers of the English network have been treated to the scrapings and dregs of society, while every crack-brained apostle of a hair-brained cause has been given air time at the taxpayers' expense, we have had on the French network a parade of separatists and advocates of the destruction of Canada. Last summer the French network featured half an hour or more of Fidel Castro explaining in detail how revolutions should be mounted and opposition should be put down in order to bring into being the kind of "people's paradise" that exists in Cuba.

Is this the kind of responsibility from which the minister and the government wish through this bill to remove any last vestige of control by parliament? A great deal of good work is being and has been done by the C.B.C. Their news programming has generally been exceptional. The artistic talent that has appeared on the C.B.C. has usually been of high calibre. C.B.C. radio has a well deserved and world wide reputation, as pointed out by previous speakers. But no organization can exist without leadership and direction, and this is what the C.B.C. has been doing for four years. No organization can operate without administrative control, without clear definition of purpose and visible, definite goals. Yet this is what the C.B.C. has been doing. No organization can allow within its administrative framework the spreading growth of self-contained and self-governing units, pre-empting government facilities and public funds to put forward their own views and their own pet projects. But this is what has been happening in the C.B.C.

These are some of the reasons for my being unable to accept any measure designed to add to the power and privileges of this group at the expense of the private sector. Comparatively speaking, the private sector has been doing a good job for Canada within the limits of a considerably less massive budget. It is time, I think, to take a realistic look at some of these questions and not allow ourselves to be lulled by the pretensions of the few against the interests of the many.

The assumption underlying this bill, Mr. Speaker—and this is what galls me—is that when Hogan's Heroes appears on the C.B.C. it somehow contributes to the national destiny and unity, whereas I Love Lucy does not, because it is on the private network. That stretches credulity a bit too far, even for me. If the provisions in this bill are applied in their present form, broadcasting freedom will disappear.

Mr. Munro: Oh, stop it.

Mr. Nielsen: The parliamentary secretary says "Oh, stop". Obviously he has not seen the letter dated November 3. If he had, his speech would have been designed a good deal differently from that we heard this afternoon.

Mr. Churchill: The minister says he is not well informed anyway.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right. If this bill is passed, the government will have the power to exercise direct control and regimentation, and in my view this should be resisted. This commission should be scrapped and its present functions should remain with the B.B.G. which should be continued, in my view, in its present form. This parliament should not participate in making broadcasting a bureaucrat's paradise, as they have with everything else.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it will not surprise you if I inform you and other members of the house that with the exception of part of the reference of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to some recent remarks made by the minister, I entirely disagree with everything the hon. member said. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to know that the hon. member for Yukon has as colleagues people like the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather); otherwise his party would be a pretty dismal group. Using some of the language of the hon. member for Yukon never in my wildest experience as a lawyer have I heard so extravagent and unjustified a distortion of a statute from the mouth of another lawyer as I heard this afternoon. Nothing in the bill before the house justifies one thousandth of the extravagances which the hon. member adopted in making a case for private broadcasting. There is no evidence for his contentions, other than the fulminations, frustrations and ignorance to which he gave vent this afternoon.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: That is his style.

Mr. Lewis: I wish to deal with matters relating to this bill and I wish to remind hon. members, and particularly the minister, that however good the principles of this bill may be, their implementation depends entirely on the quality of those who are appointed to the positions this bill creates.

Miss LaMarsh: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I am speaking of positions on the commission and positions in the corporation. The Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) says that she agrees. Well, so far as a minister of the crown can be, she has been in charge of matters relating to broadcasting for about two years, two years during which the state of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has been reduced to a painful low. They have been two years during which she made some of the appointments. What has been the record?

The minister says that she agrees. Before this debate ends I hope she will tell this house, not only on her own behalf but on behalf of her cabinet colleagues also, that the sort of action she has indulged in, in the past, will not occur again.

Miss LaMarsh: Such as what?

Mr. Lewis: The Vancouver Sun of September 5, 1967, dealing with the Board of Broadcast Governors, says this in an editorial:

> The board has large powers over television and radio licences. It can make men's fortunes, or it can deny them fortunes. Under such circumstances, it ought to be as non-political as possible. But it has not been so, under either Conservative or Liberal governments.
> Its personnel has rarely been distinguished. At present it has 15 members, three of whom are full-time, the remainder part-time. All are appointed by the federal cabinet. Of 10 part-time members named since the present government took office, eight have been Liberals.

The Globe and Mail of August 2, 1967, says the same thing; the same thing was documented in a column in the same newspaper by George Bain. In a television interview on November 1 the minister said that herself. She had this to say, according to the transcript I hold in my hand:

> Oh, we've got some really first rate people, people like Coyne in Ottawa.

When I heard that, and also when I read the transcript of the interview, I could not help feeling depressed that a minister would know only one member of a board of 15 members. She could name only one member during the interview.

Miss LaMarsh: I think my hon. friend should realize that almost all of 14 agencies have boards which report to me.

Mr. Lewis: We were not dealing with 14 agencies; we were dealing with this one board. This is the board with which the minister ought to be intimately acquainted; she ought to know what has happened in broadcasting in the last two years, and particularly in the last year. If she is suggesting that she does not now know the personnel of the board and their qualifications to sit on it, I can think of no greater condemnation of her stewardship in this area of public activity.

During this interview, according to this transcript, she said:

> Oh we've got some really first rate people, people like Coyne in Ottawa. You couldn't have anybody better. This is one of the brightest men in Canada on this job. There are some that are at the other end of the pole, and there's no question of it, and I've been as guilty as other ministers I think in putting them on, because I haven't met them or known very much about them.

Can one think of a more cavalier way of dealing with one of the most important institutions in the country. Obviously, the minister did not say—and I am not exaggerating when I put this to you, Mr. Speaker—that those who were chosen were chosen as the result of conversations with party leaders or party hacks in the various regions of the country, instead of as the result of conversations with those elements in our society which could bring to bear some intelligent judgment as to the qualifications of those who were to sit on the board to which they were appointed.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member answer a question? What assurance have we that the same procedure will not be followed in the future by other ministers, or by the same minister?

Mr. Lewis: My answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is that precisely the same condition existed when he was a member of a government. Emphasis on political appointments to the B.B.G. was just as prevalent in the previous government as it has been in this government. We shall not rid ourselves of this situation until we rid ourselves of what I call perhaps the most evil, although small, remnant of patronage in our federal set-up, the political appointments to important agencies.

Mr. Churchill: But how will the hon. member correct that?

Mr. Lewis: We cannot correct it by legislation, Mr. Speaker, because there is no alternative to the appointments being made by the governor general in council. The position could be corrected soon if this parliament in a unanimous voice were to say to this government and all future governments that it is time to end this cheap and shoddy patronage for positions of power and importance in the country and that appointments to the bench, the B.B.G., the C.B.C. and other similar bodies should be made on the basis of qualifications and quality only. Whether the appointees happen to be Liberals, New Democrats, Conservatives or of other political persuasions, they should be qualified for the job. This is the answer. I say that this is the most important consideration before this parliament, before this government, and this is why I raised it as the first point in my speech.

The new commission will have greater power than the Board of Broadcast Governors set up by the previous government. Its powers will not be as great as suggested by the hon. member for Yukon; nevertheless they will be considerable. It will be able to impose stiffer penalties than the old board could. The hon. member for Yukon did not draw my tears when he told this house that the poor, private stations will not be able to do anything because of the $100,000 penalty that will be hanging over them. If that is the only way to keep them from breaking the law, then that is how big the penalty ought to be.

Mr. Nielsen: That remark shows the difference in our characters.

Mr. Lewis: There is no reason to criticize this provision. Because the commission will have greater power than the old board had, because the penalties will be stiffer than before, appointing to that commission men and women who are qualified to do the job for which they are appointed, who are free of political encumbrances and parochial and regional prejudices, who are capable of acting as cultured Canadians concerned with this country and its culture, is a matter of the utmost importance.

I proceed to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, under the same head. What about appointments to it? What about appointment to the board of governors of the C.B.C.? From the evidence it seems that there has been a lesser curse of political patronage in the appointments to that board than was the case with respect to the other board to which I referred. It is apparent that in the last year or so the C.B.C. has been the victim of having had no appointments at all. For this the minister and the government are responsible.

If this seems strange to the minister I will make the point clear to her. First, everyone in this house, perhaps with the exception of the hon. member for Yukon, regrets that the C.B.C. seems to have fallen upon evil days during the last couple of years. Whose fault is that? I suggest it is the result of the failure of the board—not of the president and vice president only—but of the failure of the board to act decisively in moments of crisis. This would seem a clear indication that the members of the board were incompetent in their job, no matter how nice they are, or how great their academic learning. Again, the minister agrees with this, I think; I do not want to put words into her mouth, but in that same television program, in the course of the same interview, she said this:

> Most of the people we have now are academics on the C.B.C. and you know—take a look at them—every one of them is first rate; got good education, good background, good everything. But they just don't seem to manage.

What is membership on the board of the C.B.C. for if it is not to manage the C.B.C.? It is not to recite Catullus to one another, or to discuss Milton, although this is a delightful thing to do, I am sure. It is to manage the C.B.C., and if these people cannot manage it, what right have they to be there?

The low ebb in the affairs of the C.B.C. at the present time is also a result of the failure of the government to make appointments to top positions in the last year or so. The government has had the resignation of Mr. Ouimet in its hands for some considerable time. Another of the senior officers has resigned, and a third has gone somewhere else. Yet no appointments have been made, the consequence being that during a difficult period the corporation has been led by caretaker officers who have necessarily felt a sense of insecurity and transmitted that feeling to the lower echelons, with the result that morale in the organization has been very low.

What I am trying to say is that the government cannot escape responsibility for this situation. Having failed to make these appointments, the minister announces a couple of days ago, on the eve of a new régime being established, that there was "rotten management" in the C.B.C. I have been critical of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, although I believe, as I shall say later, that there has not been an institution which has made a greater contribution to Canada. But what kind of compulsion caused the minister to make that statement at the present time, when a new régime is to come on the scene? What was she trying to accomplish? I do not wish to be too hard on the minister. All of us in politics make gaffes and unless the hon. lady is in a defensive mood I am sure she will be ready to admit that this was one of hers. However, I suggest that this particular gaffe is revealing in the light it throws on the attitude of the government toward broadcasting.

Let me analyse it briefly. The minister said she did not learn about this until a couple of weeks ago. I say to her that as the minister answerable to parliament in the field of broadcasting she had no right to be ignorant until two weeks ago. It was her duty to have some form of liaison with the C.B.C.—

Miss LaMarsh: Oh, I have lots of that.

Mr. Lewis: —and it was her duty to speak to the president and to the vice president and find out what the situation was. And it was also her duty to make sure she did know what the quality of management inside the C.B.C. was like, not to go to the country and say "I knew nothing about it until two weeks ago".

Miss LaMarsh: I did not say I knew nothing about it. Nobody who was ever in this house, nobody who ever spoke on broadcasting, could fail to know about the management problems of the C.B.C. They must have been aware that there was the Glassco commission report, which condemned management. Nothing was done. Then there was the Fowler report which condemned management. Nothing was done. Then there was the white paper and discussion of the whole subject in house committee. It could be no secret to anyone who knew anything about broadcasting that there was a problem of management. But what I learned about in the past few weeks was very much worse than that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is quite right. There was the Glassco commission report, the Fowler committee report, one other report and the inquiry in committee. The important words used by the minister are: "and nothing was done". If the minister means that nothing was done by the president of the C.B.C., that is one thing. But now I am speaking as a member of parliament on legislation before us, and I say it is much more reprehensible that nothing was done by her; and if she tells me she hides behind the fact that she does not interfere with the daily management of the C.B.C.—as I agree she should not—I say to her that if the president did not do what she felt ought to be done, he should have been fired. She has no right to retain in office people she believes are not doing their jobs as management of the C.B.C. This is a body to which we are voting more than $100 million a year—in my opinion even more would be justified—and it is a body which is carrying a tremendous responsibility. Any government which permits an unsatisfactory situation to develop even worse aspects is a government which is failing to carry out its responsibilities. They have not even accepted the resignation given voluntarily by the president.

Mr. Churchill: Who is head of the government?

Mr. Lewis: I will allow the hon. gentleman to answer his own rhetorical questions.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member is blaming the minister, but it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who is the boss.

Mr. Lewis: I am not blaming the minister alone. I am blaming the government. I wish I did not have to blame the minister. She was given a hot potato, and the fact that she has not been able to hold it with equanimity is not entirely her fault.

An hon. Member: It is the Prime Minister who will not let her do what she wants to do.

Mr. Lewis: I say that if the minister and the government responsible let this thing develop and did not know the details of this thing, which was worse than the hon. lady had ever heard until two weeks ago, this is proof of a breakdown in liaison, a breakdown of contact, a breakdown of responsibility on the part of the minister and the government for broadcasting in general, and the C.B.C. in particular. There is simply no sense in discussing and passing a bill if this kind of attitude is to prevail in the future as it has in the past.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I say to the minister in all kindness that she should either make her charges of rotten management stick, or drop them—charges which, Mr. Speaker, she has just made worse by what she said a few minutes ago. She not only says now that there is rotten management in the C.B.C., the kind of undesirable or inadequate management about which some of us have heard over the last year or two, but she claims that within the last couple of weeks she heard things much worse than she ever heard before.

That makes me wonder what she is talking about, and makes every person throughout C.B.C. management, from the president down to the supervisor, wonder what she is talking about. It makes every member of management from the president down to the supervisor in British Columbia or Newfoundland wonder what she is talking about. No responsible person has a right to throw a cloud of suspicion, of incrimination and insult over an entire body of men and women, hundreds of whom have done a good job—

Miss LaMarsh: That is preposterous.

Mr. Lewis: It isn't.

Miss LaMarsh: How does the hon. member suggest that some supervisor in Newfoundland has anything to do with the way the corporation is run?

Mr. Lewis: I am not trying to suggest this. The minister's jumping up is merely the result of her sense of guilt. I have seen management charts in the corporation when I acted as counsel for unions dealing with the C.B.C., in the years when I was not a member of parliament. I have seen such corporation charts and they go all the way down, not to the supervisor in every case, but all the way down from the president to those who have responsibility and power over the regular staff.

I am not exaggerating. If the minister does not want to go down the chart as far as the supervisor, there are still hundreds of people against whom her remarks may be thought to be addressed. Every time this kind of general accusation is made, everyone is under a cloud. Either the minister ought not to have made her charge—and in my respectful submission she should not have—circumstances permit, so as to clear those not guilty of that particular charge.

Miss LaMarsh: Is the hon. member actually saying he believes I should have pretended there was nothing wrong with the management of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows very well I am not suggesting that. She could have said, in the mellifluous tones she occasionally uses, that of course she has known there has been inadequate management in the C.B.C. and that there has been a great deal of criticism of some aspects of management, and no one would have questioned her. But what she has now said is that within the last two weeks she became acquainted with facts which led her to declare that there was rotten management in the C.B.C. Rotten is a particular kind of word; and today she added that what she learned was much worse than she ever learned before. Those words have a certain implication. I am sorry to have to press this on her, but I think that implication throws a cloud on a lot of people, and it is her duty to be more specific so that the cloud is lifted from those over whom it hangs unjustifiably.

Because of certain aspects of the C.B.C. that latterly have not been thoroughly desirable, there has been a tendency, particularly on the part of hon. members in this house to be very critical of it. In order to save time I merely wish to say that I was in thorough agreement with most of the statements made by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro).

I have watched the C.B.C. with very close interest since it was established, not merely since I entered parliament but throughout all the years of its existence, and indeed before the particular name C.B.C. came into existence, when the Canadian radio commission, a name being revived in this bill, preceded the C.B.C. I do not believe I am using extravagant language when I state my belief, and the belief of many Canadians, that no institution in this country has done more to develop Canadian talent, to give an opportunity for Canadian talent to make a living, to give an opportunity for expression of opinions, for the development of the entertainment industry, for the whole gamut of human interest to be heard and seen by all the people of Canada, than the C.B.C.

Some private stations do a decent job occasionally, but anyone who knows musicians, actors, writers, press gallery members, all the people who have an opportunity to appear on radio and television to express their views, show their talents, or participate in some exciting cultural experience, also knows that without the C.B.C. Canada would be immeasurably poorer than it is now, in the cultural and spiritual sense of that word.

The hon. member for Yukon always reminds me of the kind of person who says: I have an open mind, but don't think you will ever change it. That is the kind of open mind he has, but I would ask even him to be just a little contemporary. I do not expect him to be 100 per cent in the twentieth century; but even 10 per cent in the twentieth century would help. I ask him to note that after years of only private and commercial television and radio in the United States—what do we find in 1967? We find in 1967 that the President of the United States recommended to congress the establishment of a public television corporation. We find in the United States that an act to that effect was enacted a little while ago, after only five or six week's study by a senate committee.

We find President Johnson, when recommending the legislation to congress, saying that what he wanted was a corporation for public television authorized to provide support to non-commercial television and radio. We find that the ex-chairman of the federal communications commission, Mr. Henry, said when that law was passed—and I commend these words to the hon. member for Yukon, and even to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill):

> What makes this corporation most exciting is the possibility of a live network unfettered by commercial considerations.

If the great free enterprise country of the United States of America can recognize the value of a public corporation that is not commercially controlled, I should think anyone in this house, who is in 1967 instead of 1767, ought to recognize the value of the C.B.C. What I am worried about, Mr. Speaker, is that recent events have led many of us to believe that there ought to be some tight control over programming in television in general, and in C.B.C. television in particular. I suggest that we ought not permit ourselves to be carried away.

The late Mr. Brockington, who was chairman of the Canadian radio commission, when he appeared before the select committee on radio broadcasting on March 24, 1938, said in his customary fluent and moving English:

> We believe that censorship is undesirable and perhaps impossible beyond the limits of decency and the minor and necessary prohibitions which we have fixed in our regulations. We have always, and shall continue always, to take care in the selection of network speakers to see that they are competent to discuss public problems within recognized amenities. We deprecate any tendency on the part of the owners of private stations to allow their own political or social opinions to affect broadcasts from the station which they control.
> Censorship itself depends on the opinion of an individual possibly no better qualified to express an opinion than the person he censors.

• (4:50 p.m.)

There is no doubt about the truth of that.

> We believe radio speech should be allowed to be forthright, provocative and stimulating. In controversial matters we have tried, and shall try, to allow for the free expression of varied and opposite opinion. Perhaps on occasions, enough varieties of opinions have not been expressed. We believe that national problems and international problems should be discussed by Canadian citizens without restriction or fear. It may be that some opinions largely held, have remained unvocal. This situation will be remedied.

Then Mr. Brockington went on to say:

> We are opposed to, and shall resist, any attempt to regiment opinion and to throttle freedom of utterance. We have not the slightest reason to believe that the government is desirous of such regimentation. Rather we have every reason to believe that the contrary is true. We are prepared, of course, to recognize that in times of war, or perhaps during the imminence of national peril from external sources, some government control might be necessary. Until that occasion arises, the corporation having selected competent commentators and speakers does not propose to interfere with the right of free expression.

What was true in 1938 is true today. I was a little concerned by some of the statements made by the minister on the same television interview which I heard, and the transcript of which I have studied. I am referring particularly to the statements about separatists. I am opposed to the separatists in this country. Indeed, in order to make the point clear and because I cannot escape the temptation to say "I told you so", I should like to point out that I criticized René Lévesque more than a year ago for the extremist statements he then made. I indicated in my criticism that the statements he made suggested to me that he was travelling the separatist road. This appeared in the public press, particularly in Montreal, in both French and English. Mr. Lévesque replied that he never had heard a more idiotic statement. The idiocy is made clear by the way Mr. Lévesque has gone.

I believe, however, that it would be a travesty of freedom of speech if Mr. Lévesque did not receive an opportunity to express his views to the Canadian people. Only a sense of insecurity and a lack of confidence in the people of Canada would prompt one to suggest that the expression of that opinion would do Canadian unity harm. I have greater confidence than that. But, whether it does one thing or another, I emphasize that we ought not interfere with the expression of opinion and indeed with the selection of entertainment or with the work of people of talent either in the corporation or in the private network agencies.

I should like to come back to where I started. The solution is to appoint good people and let them do the job, to keep a close liaison with the new commission and the C.B.C., to watch carefully what the developing situation is, and to become aware of it in time if anything goes wrong. If those who have been appointed do not do the job, then they must be replaced and we must have the courage to do this quickly without dragging it out for two or three years until the situation becomes almost irremedial. I just pity the man or woman who will have to take over the duties either with the corporation or with the new commission after what we have done.

In the remaining few minutes which I believe are left to me I should like briefly to make two or three points. First, I would hope that the minister would give consideration to the suggestion that the president of the new commission and the president of the C.B.C. each should appear annually before a parliamentary committee on broadcasting to make a report, just as had been done in the early days of our broadcasting situation in Canada. I am entirely in favour of the five year budgeting for the C.B.C. That, however, need not prevent the president of the C.B.C. appearing before a parliamentary committee every year in order to give an account of his stewardship and to give members of parliament an opportunity to question him as to whether the funds we have voted have been expended efficiently. This would also give us an opportunity to discuss with the president of the C.B.C. particular aspects of his programming and the philosophies of the C.B.C. and to discuss with the president of the new commission the policies of the commission in its day to day operations.

I think it is very important that we do this because when we vote a large sum of money annually or over a period of five years in particular to the C.B.C. and when we vote money to the new commission to carry out a certain function, it seems to me that as a parliament we have a duty to make certain as far as possible that the job which parliament wanted done is in fact being done and that the money which parliament has voted is in fact being expended judiciously and carefully. One way in which to do this is to revert to what I am sure was the situation in the late 1930's; that is, an annual appearance of the head of the corporation and the head of the commission before a parliamentary committee.

The final point I should like to make relates to the use of Canadian talent. Many things have been said about this already, but I suggest that every time one looks at some statistics on this point he cannot help but be extremely depressed. Mr. Fowler in his report makes an analysis of the expenditures directly on talent, both in the private and public sectors. I should like to quote just a sentence or two:

> The amounts shown—

This is in reference to the private sector.

> —in the analysis for artists' and other talent fees, and especially the trend of these amounts, indicate an alarming situation.

The full details are given, and then he points out that between 1961 and 1963 there was, in respect of private radio stations, an expenditure of over twice as much on advertising, promotion and travel as there was on Canadian talent. He then adds the words, "These figures are a disgrace."

Then, when he comes to the C.B.C. it is the same thing, even though he says the C.B.C. has a much greater expenditure on Canadian talent:

> Apparently financial stringency produces the same result in the C.B.C. as with private broadcasters; the easiest place to cut is in the employment of creative talent. This is a question of priorities. We do not suggest that talent budgets be limitless; however we do suggest that this should be one of the last parts of the budget to be cut. It seems that this policy has not been followed by the C.B.C. during the last five years.

Mr. Speaker, I urge parliament, the minister and anyone else who may be concerned with broadcasting to consider my suggestion that there is no real excuse for the existence of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in particular, unless we make it possible for the corporation and the leaders of the corporation to use funds to advance Canadian talent, and there is no use setting up the commission unless it is given power to insist that there be a large proportion of Canadian talent in Canadian television broadcasting.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. It being five o'clock, this house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO REDUCE VOTING AGE TO EIGHTEEN YEARS

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-12, to amend the Canada Elections Act (Age of Voters).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to reduce the voting age in federal elections from age 21 as at present to age 18. The present situation in Canada is rather mixed and there seems to be no concensus in various provinces as to what should be the proper age for voting. In the four provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Manitoba the voting age is 21. In the three provinces of Newfoundland, Alberta and British Columbia the voting age is 19, and in the three provinces of Quebec, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan, the voting age is 18.

I might point out that even though the official age for voting in federal elections is 21, there is an exception. Those who are in the armed forces may vote at age 18. There seems to be no concensus at all in Canada about this voting age.

I suppose in discussing this issue one first has to make clear just what voting means, and its significance. Perhaps, primarily the granting of the vote is an admission into full citizenship. In a democratic society it requires the responsibility of voting or not voting, the responsibility of participating in elections or not participating. There is an active and passive responsibility, and it is up to the person concerned to participate as he sees fit.

Basically in a representative democratic society voters do not vote on each particular issue. Federal elections involve a variety of issues and the voters tend to elect a person either by means of political designation or, in particular rural areas, they may vote for an individual and trust in his judgment. In any case under a representative democratic system it seems to me that the judgment of the elector is called into being as he makes a decision regarding the representative he wishes to elect to office.

Why is the present age in federal elections 21? There does not seem to be any particular reason. Age 21 was the legal age, when one came of age, and it was probably easy for the legislatures at the time to designate this age as the age when one came into full citizenship. Twenty one was also the age when an individual had usually completed his education, was out working, probably married and presumably carrying his share of the burden in the community. In short, at age 21 a person was considered to be an adult member of the community, as compared to somebody such as an adolescent who was dependant upon the community. Like all these types of measures it was created perhaps out the conventional wisdom of its time, but times have changed and no longer is it correct.

For example, under the type of education which we have imposed upon our younger people today, they are not finished at age 21. I was age 26 when I was finally released from university. In point of fact, I am still paying fees to the University of Toronto to remain eligible for my degree. I am still a graduate student in the eyes of the University. Age 21 is no longer the age when one has completed the apprenticeship that he must complete before coming to full citizenship. It seems that we have to take a look at the new conditions under which we are living and devise proper voting regulations so that all those who should have the right to vote will be given that privilege.

The first question that comes to mind when one talks about lowering the voting age is the question of responsibility. Let me quote briefly from the report of the Ontario legislature's select committee on youth. At page 294 we find the following:

> Young people at age 18 to 20 today are generally more educated and more knowledgeable than any previous generation at the same age. One of the great weaknesses noted by the committee in its many contacts with young people was the inability of adults to give youngsters responsibility commensurate with their knowledge and capability. Probably this has stemmed from the unfortunate image that has been created by those few irresponsible, often immature teenagers who all too frequently come to public attention. Certainly they do not typify nor represent the large numbers of stable and good living young persons who make up our great body of youth.

Let me point out, that the series of articles which have been published in so-called respectable papers in Canada dealing with birth control and what not as applied to the Yorkville situation have been most unjust. The articles which appeared in the Globe and Mail give examples of the type of undesirable situation that comes to the public eye. If it is not undesirable, it certainly is sensationalism brought to public attention in an irresponsible manner. In any event this does a great injustice to the majority of young people, particularly because of the way in which these things are presented. This is only a very small group.

The question of voting comes down to a question of responsibility. One difficulty facing young people today is that they have few opportunities for training in responsibility. It was never my fate, but my father assures me that he had to haul the coal and water, and do chores around the house every day. In those days we did not have electric heating, water brought to our door and that sort of thing. It is very difficult to give children responsibility around apartments and in the type of housing we have today. There is nothing for them to do, and if the parents are going to instil a sense of responsibility in their children they have to wrack their brains to find responsible tasks for them.

The educational system in which we rear our youth today almost of necessity results in making them parasites living off society. We deny them any possibility of participation in community affairs by virtually putting them in a system which locks them out of the mainstream of Canadian society. These children go to school, and go to school, and go to school, to the point where the student in this society feels that he will spend his life doing nothing but going to school. They are given little opportunity to produce or to contribute to the community.

It is no wonder then that we find communities such as Yorkville, made up of youngsters who are alienated from today's society. They feel there is no role for them to play in the greater part of Canadian society. This is not strange in our society because we virtually push them out and cut them off. We almost completely forget that some of these youngsters are sensitive and creative and cannot hack it under the present circumstances. These people will be forced into this alienated existence for several years, or perhaps for their lives. This problem has always existed, but today in our society we seem to encourage it, perhaps not willingly but in a backhand way. We do not pay enough attention to the problem.

In a democratic system I think that responsibility is the key to its survival. We can bring youth into the political system, into the mainstream of Canadian society, provided we are willing to give them a role to play. The easiest way to do that is to bring them into perhaps the most important function in a free society, that is the political function, and give them a role in the political process. They would then become participants in this process. I believe young people want to participate in this area, they want the chance to accept responsibility, and we can help them to become more involved in society by lowering the voting age from the present 21 to 18.

If we did this it would provide leadership for those provinces which have not taken any steps to lower the voting age. It should be pointed out, though, that to date the federal government has not been a leader but a follower; it has done nothing as yet in this regard. I hope this bill, and similar bills and resolutions appearing on the order paper will be sent to the standing committee on privileges and elections in order that the committee may have a full discussion of the implications of these measures.

I should point out that the select committee of the Ontario government recommended that the voting age be reduced to either 18 or 19. There was some debate whether 18 or 19 was the proper age. The important thing is that the principle of a reduction in the voting age was accepted by all parties in the Ontario legislature.

One of the advantages of modern youth is that they are much better educated, even at the age of 18, than were their forebears at 21. The old standards applied when making the legal age 21 are, I think no longer valid. For example, in Ontario one is not supposed to drink alcoholic beverages until he is 21, a regulation more honoured in the breach than in the observance. Why should one want to drink booze when he can easily get L.S.D., "pot" or any of the variety of drugs that are apparently readily available in our larger cities and universities?

The sophistication of modern youth has increased. It seems to me that youth should be given responsibilities commensurate with their knowledge and abilities. They are more knowledgeable today than were their forebears some years ago. Television, radio and the other communications media bring them more information about national and international events than their forebears ever had. What is more important, they are in a better position to digest and understand this information than their parents, who were raised under another type of educational system and in a different kind of world.

This brings me to another point, Mr. Speaker. The time honoured traditions, the qualifications that one had to have to hold responsible positions, that one had to be experienced, one had to be well known in his profession in order to advance, have gone by the board. It is no longer necessary to hang around for years in a profession, even in the House of Commons, before one gains eminence in that profession. I think it is necessary that we no longer place much value on just hanging around, but should recognize sheer ability and the will to survive. I believe that what we are looking for is quality and ability, not just being of a certain age, being in the right place and available at the right time. It seems to me that in all the appointments we make we must seek quality.

This brings me to another point, Mr. Speaker. Even granting, which I do not, that there is some value in a person hanging around and serving a long apprenticeship before reaching the top, that person's training and hanging around do not really help because of the type of environment and the fast moving world in which we live. This is a world of constant change. Because of this and the fact that things change so quickly, this type of experience is not as valuable as it once was.

We see that progressive companies and organizations are today putting youthful people in more important jobs. These companies are progressing because of it. It seems to me that in this country we are cutting off a generation and are going from the 60's to the 40's. Those in the late 40's and early 50's are being passed over. You have to do this because things have changed so much and our way of thinking and doing things is different.

If we are to survive it is necessary that we follow this practice in politics and bring our young people into political existence as full fledged participants. Another matter I wish to refer to is parliament itself and the type of legislation with which we are dealing. Ever since I became actively involved in politics in 1963 I have been impressed by one fact of parliament: we are dealing with the past, we are plugging the dike when the flood has passed; we are dealing with things that are no longer current. But we have to deal with them because we did not have the foresight or imagination to deal with them when the problem was upon us. We did not have the foresight or imagination to see that this is the way we were going and therefore we should take certain action. In other words, what we have been busily doing is trying to plug the dike after the flood has gone.

I think that if we were to bring youth into the political spectrum it would result in a different attitude. Members of all political parties, it seems to me, have suffered from this problem. All political parties would be strengthened if youthful people came into this sphere, because they would be participating more enthusiastically and providing their knowledge of what is going on in the world today.

Young people are much more able to grasp the environment around them than we are. Perhaps I should change that, Mr. Speaker. I should like to dissociate myself from other hon. members because I, and I think one other member, am still under 30 years of age. I am therefore a friend of the young people because hon. members over 30 are classified as enemies by the young. The slogan of the young people is: Don't trust anybody over 30.

To buttress this argument I should like to quote the words of the long time premier of Alberta, Mr. Manning, and read from page 27 of his very interesting book entitled "Political Realignment":

The younger generation of Canadians is capable of political thought and action at a level of maturity much higher than that characterizing party politics in this country at the present time. Youth today is quick to detect, and is strongly repulsed by, sham and superficiality. Young people who are looking for purpose, conviction, inspiration, and leadership in matters of private and national concern will not, nor should be expected to, be satisfied by gimmicks and slogans, clichés and promises, and slick but shallow promotional campaigns. There will be little room in the Canada of tomorrow for elections without issues, politicians with philosophical standards, parties without relevant policies, or citizenship without definition and purpose.

Underneath the rhetoric that passage is really saying that young people, the people for whom we are presumably governing this country, can recognize what the truth is behind a great deal of what goes on in political debate and politics in this country. We want to bring them into this field. We want to infuse others with their knowledge and vitality. We want to inject his knowledge and vitality into our political system. I think the only way we can do that and eliminate a great deal of the alienation of our youth is by extending to them the franchise and asking them to accept the responsibilities of citizenship.

The last point with which I shall deal, and very quickly, Mr. Speaker, is that youth is to some extent an interest group. I am informed that 50 per cent of the Canadian population are under 25. A great deal of the money collected at the provincial and federal levels is spent in solving the problems of youth —departments of education, for example, are almost wholly youth oriented—to say nothing of the family allowances paid by the federal government.

Since we are spending so much money on our youth, and all this money is not necessarily being well spent, I think youth have a right to be consulted by boards of governors of universities and politicians and given a role to play even though they are an interest group. The whole political spectrum is made up of interest groups. It seems to me that in the last two years we have spent a great deal of time dealing with the special problems of an interest group, our senior citizens. We have had votes of confidence, bills presented and a whole number of things. There is no reason why equal representation cannot be given to another interest group, the up-and-coming ones, the ones who have a future. It seems to me that as an interest group they have the right to have their voice heard.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to send this bill to the standing committee on privileges and elections so that a committee of the house may look into all its implications.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) for the excellent case he has made for the bill now before us. I am glad to see that the government house leader is with us just now, and I am particularly pleased to see him going over to congratulate the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. Perhaps this strengthens our hand. I should like to support the plea that this bill and the other two like it, as well as the three resolutions on this subject which are now on the order paper, be sent to the committee on privileges and elections.

Perhaps the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River will not mind if I point out that he and two other members of this house, one a member of the Progressive Conservative party and one a member of the New Democratic party, made a pact at the beginning of this session. I hope that their efforts succeed.

Mr. Churchill: Disclose their names.

Mr. Knowles: With pleasure, and indeed, I congratulate them. They are the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River who is—well, let us call him a Liberal although he uses another designation.

Mr. Churchill: He cannot get elected as a Liberal. He has to be a Liberal-Labour in order to get elected.

Mr. Knowles: I believe he is a member of the Liberal caucus. Then, there is the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald), who is a Progressive Conservative and the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer), who is a New Democrat. They all have before the house precisely the same bill. We have before us today Bill No. C-12. The bill in the name of the hon. member for Prince is Bill No. C-14, and the bill in the name of the hon. member for Springfield is Bill No. C-26. In addition to these three identical bills, the same three members have three identical resolutions on the order paper under the heading, "Private Members Notices of Motions".

Mr. Fane: Collusion.

Mr. Knowles: They are No. 15, No. 24 and No. 28. My young friend from Vegreville calls out "collusion", but I prefer to call it co-operation. It just so happens that these three members who have presented these three bills are younger chronologically than some of the rest of us in this house, but we who may be a little older chronologically like to feel we are just as young as they are in spirit.

I do not want to take up too much of the time, Mr. Speaker, for that could defeat the bill, which is so easily done in this private members hour. I do want to support the argument the hon. member has made and I earnestly appeal to the government house leader, either at six o'clock today or the earliest opportunity, to refer the subject matter of these three bills and the three resolutions to which I have referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

May I point out to the government house leader that it is the usual practice for us to review the Canada Elections Act after each election. This review generally results in amendments being made to that act in the light of the experience at the most recent election. I believe there has been no such amendment of the Canada Elections Act since the election of 1962. I agree that the period from 1962 to 1963 was rather short, and so was the period from 1963 to 1965.

Unless we act soon, we are going to find ourselves going into another election without having had this customary and desirable review of the Canada Elections Act. I believe this question of the age of voters is one subject that ought to be referred to that committee so that it can be dealt with before the next election. I believe too that the report of the committee on election expenses should be referred to that committee. I think the question of the names of the political parties being put on the ballot and other matters of that sort should be dealt with. These are very important matters. It is not good enough to tell us an election is not coming next month or so, because under this government time has a way of slipping by without things getting done. These issues related to the Canada Elections Act are important, and the one that is before us today is extremely important. I should like to indicate my support for the principle of the three bills and the three resolutions to which I have referred, and I urge that their subject matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections at the earliest possible moment.

[Mr. Fane.]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are surprised that I should be participating in this debate. According to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), I surely must belong to a generation that is so far removed from the 18-year-olds there is no contact or discussion whatever. I happen to be a person who voted when I was just 18 years of age, so I have had experience in this matter. Yet, even in that period, which the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River would consider to be a period of rather "Middle Age" darkness, I understood what I was doing, and so did all the other people who were with me of similar age. This was in the election of 1917, over in France. Since I was in the army, I had the privilege of voting when I was under 21 years of age. I have had this experience. We were competent at that time and understood what was going on in the world. We did not know anything about television or ministers who were in charge of television. All that was beyond our ken. We knew nothing about sputniks. We did not have radios. However, we knew something about life, and we understood something of human nature. We knew there was a parliament in Canada and we knew people were elected to that parliament.

We were just as competent to cast a vote then, as long ago as that, as these modern era types who are supposed to be so much better educated than the people of the long distant past. I spent 17 years in the field of education attempting to bring along the younger generation. Most of the people who came under my jurisdiction have done rather well in life. However, I must say when I see them now I say to them, "You are all middle aged and to me you look just like all the rest of the middle aged people in Canada; I wonder why I spent so much time trying to bring you along when you were in high school?" I do not see any difference in them now.

I do not raise any objection to this bill or the other bills that are similar. I hope the subject matter is referred to the committee. The time is going to come when the age limit will be lowered. Perhaps, as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) pointed out to me a little while ago, it should be done in conjunction with setting the age of legal liability of people. There is a move on foot now in various jurisdictions to consider whether or not age 21 should not come down to 18 from the standpoint of legal status. The hon. member thinks these things go together. When that is done, then this age of 18 may be satisfactory.

Perhaps the hon. member approves of the change at the moment, I do not know. I am not so seriously concerned about that. I think we tend to get a little excited about when we should vote. Unless I misread some of the articles in the newspapers, the young people who had the opportunity to vote in the Ontario provincial election, in the opinion of some people, did not take full advantage of that opportunity. Whether there is a great demand amongst young people for the vote, I do not know. It is up to them.

Mr. Reid: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Reid: Did the hon. member read the correspondence in the columns of the Globe and Mail from the various presidents of the students unions outlining just what had gone on and the statistics that were used incorrectly?

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: I did; I keep closely in touch with these young people in university. I am very fond of them. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is attempting to say that because he is 30 years of age he is more closely in touch with the young people than we are. I may tell him a true story about that. Two 17 year old girls in the city of Ottawa were having a conversation about a new teacher who had been appointed to the school. He was a young man who had been appointed science teacher. One of these girls had been away and had returned to town. She was talking to her chum and they went through the whole story about this man who had been appointed science teacher, giving a description of him, what he was like in class, his appearance and all that sort of thing. Then finally the girl who had been away said to her chum: "How old is he?" The girl who had been in town said "He's 25, but he's young in spirit". If the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River played hockey when he was 30, as I did, he would be considered an old man by the 17 and 18-year-olds on the team and would be called "Grandpa", as I was in my day. So I am sorry to say to the hon. member that he is really out of touch with the younger generation.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River mentioned that half the population of Canada is now under 25 years of age. This has appeared in the papers and has been spoken of on public platforms. Apparently everything in Canada has now changed, they say, and Canada has become a youthful country.

I would suggest to those who write these stories and also to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River that they call up the head of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, as I did, ask him for the census figures starting with the census of 1871, right down to the present as they relate to this age factor, and then they will get the same information that I got. It appears, sir, that Canada was a young country in 1871, when 62½ per cent of the people of Canada were under 25 years of age. Then as the years went by the percentage began to drop a little, and it is only now that it has picked up, according to the census of 1961 and the estimate of 1966.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new in the fact that half the population of Canada is under 25 years of age, even though this has come to my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River as a great revelation, as though something new has happened in Canada. When I was 18 years of age, sir, there were more people under 25 years of age in Canada than there are at the present time, keeping in mind the proportion of population. That was the youthful period of this country, so there does seem to be some confusion.

I tell my politician friends not to get led away by this information. If they are looking for people to vote for them, then those people are the 21 year olds and over. About 10 per cent of the voting population comprises people in the age group of 21 to 24 years. Those who are 70 years and over represent about 10 per cent of the voting population. If hon. members want other figures, those between the age group 21 to 34, the vigorous, active part of the voting population, represent 33⅓ per cent, while those who are 35 and over and who are getting so old and enfeebled constitute 66⅔ per cent. So to the politician who is interested in the people who are going to vote for him, I suggest he pay just as much attention to those who are over 70 as he does to those who are between 21 and 24 years of age.

If the voting age were lowered to 18 years of age, this would not make a very great percentage difference. The voting power in Canada would still rest with those people whom it is now customary to condemn—those who are 35 years of age and over. It is really too bad these people are around and we cannot get rid of them very easily. The young people will just have to wait their turn.

Even if the voting age were reduced to 18, what position would the young people be in if an election were called? Let us suppose there is an election in 1968—and I think there should be so that we can get a change in government. Let us assume that elections will now, occur every four years. There is a sort of changed idea with regard to politics these days, so let us suppose that there will be four-year gaps, as there used to be. A youngster who is 14 years of age in 1968 will have the chance to vote in 1972. But the poor lad who is 15 years of age next year will not vote until he is 19. The chap who is 16 years of age next year will not vote till he is 20, and the person who is 17 years of age in 1968 and who does not get a chance to vote next year will have to wait until he is 21 to vote in 1972. So why do we get so worried about this dropping of the voting age?

Then, Mr. Speaker, how many elections can people vote in? Starting at age 21, if you cast your vote then and live until you are 71 there are 12 opportunities to vote in general elections if they come every for four years.

That is about how the position stands. You do not get as many opportunities to vote as you would like, and some people unfortunately do not take full advantage of those opportunities when they do come. We all know how trying and frustrating it is to a politician when, after all the effort put into a campaign, the election results are turned in, you read of your success or failure the next day, and then find to your astonishment that 20 per cent of the voters did not even bother to go to the polls. These are the people whom you visited and shook hands with, knocked on their doors and said "It is so nice to meet you" and "Is there anything I can do for you?" Some politicians say all these things. Then you find these people just sit at home and look at television to see what sort of program the minister in charge of television has put on at that particular moment.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear from the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). I am sure I am in their class as well. I will pass over the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) when I say that we may be old in age, old in bones and old in body, but my goodness, after hearing us today everyone ought to realize we are mighty young in heart.

In rising to speak I want first to associate myself with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River who has brought forward this bill, for which I commend him. I feel it is certainly time that the voting age were lowered from 21 years to 18 years and the Canada Elections Act amended accordingly.

In the recent elections in New Brunswick the people in the province voted two to one against 18-year-olds having the right to vote. I feel sure that every member of this house, be he old or young, feels that these voters would not have voted as they did had they known the facts concerning this group of young people. There is litle doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that the decision of the voters in New Brunswick was affected by the antics of a few long-haired galoots who, by the way, are receiving publicity by means of television, radio and press, far beyond their importance.

As one who has had the privilege of spending a good portion of his life with young people, I have always had a high regard for their ability and over-all balance. Only because of news media and other publicity have we heard so much about irresponsible youth; they are in a minority, just as irresponsible adults are in a minority. Heaven only knows we have plenty of irresponsible adults around these days. There always have been and there always will be the DePoe's, the hippies, and others like them in the world.

Not long ago I had the privilege of appearing before a large group of students at the Annandale High School at Tillsonburg. I spoke for only five minutes and, for the other 55 minutes, to the best of my ability answered questions put to me by these young people. They asked intelligent, practical and sound questions. One could not help being impressed by the thinking behind these questions. On returning home I said to Mrs. Roxburgh, "There is one thing I know for sure, that if the students at the Tillsonburg high school are representative of students in our schools across Canada—and I see no reason why they should not be—we don't need to worry about the future of Canada."

As recently as yesterday my colleague for the constituency of Dollard (Mr. Goyer) and I visited the Port Dover composite school in my riding, where approximately 600 students attended the gathering. We also visited the Simcoe composite school, where over 1,100 students attended. The main topic of interest for the students, of course, was Quebec. The interest was so keen that we were kept by the students well beyond the time limit for our discussion. Here again, as during my visit to the Annandale High School, the questions were intelligent and thought provoking. The hon. member for Dollard was as impressed as I was. There was no question about the intelligence of the young people we faced. I think we should give them the responsibility they are equipped to assume and eager to have.

We must realize that the young of today are better educated than we were at their age and that in experience they are better prepared for life than we were. I could cite many examples. Mr. M. Moir, a school teacher in my constituency, had this to say about the matter:

A person may graduate from grade XIII at the age of seventeen. At this time he has more education than the majority of Canadians. Usually, this person will go on to university, but not always. Many young people—girls, especially—go on to teachers college and begin a profession at the age of eighteen. Should they not have a vote?

Take my case, for example. I graduated from high school just after I turned eighteen. I went on to teachers college and earned $3,200 while I was 19. I was entrusted with the education of 30 pupils directly, and another 200 indirectly. If I was responsible enough to be entrusted with the moulding of the minds of these children, tomorrow's adults; if I was responsible enough to be able to contribute to their formal education, was I not responsible enough to be able to make a sound choice as to whom I wanted to represent me as my member of parliament?

Obviously, when he became a teacher he must have been in his nineteenth or twentieth year. He goes on to say:

When I turned twenty-one, I had taught school for two years. I had, during the second year of my teaching career, acted as principal of my school on a couple of occasions. I had to make some decisions, during these few occasions when I was acting principal, which affected over 200 pupils and six other teachers. If I was responsible enough for this job, was I not responsible enough to vote in a federal election?

There are many more people who have been, or are, in similar positions. Are they not responsible enough to be trusted by our government? Even though they are not twenty-one, are they not adults? Do they not contribute just as much, if not more, than the next person toward our society? Do they not deserve a vote in a federal election? Are they not better qualified to make a sound decision than some alcoholic or marijuana addict who doesn't even know, or care, who is the Minister of National Health and Welfare, yet has a vote because he is a citizen and is over twenty-one? Are they not Canadian citizens with just as much right to voice an opinion as the next fellow? I think they are.

There is little doubt in my mind that youth can play a big part in the present and in future in the political life of Canada. With the enthusiasm of young people and their new ideas, we shall see created a greater general interest. More important, however, is the broadminded approach that our young will bring to the political arena. There will not be that biased, political "like father, like son" outlook that was evident in the political scene of the past and which, to a lesser extent, is evident in the present.

Let us turn to the armed forces. Since September 9, 1950, the regular forces have, in effect, been on active service. Subject to qualifications such as citizenship, every member of the armed forces regardless of his age, may vote. Does it not seem unjust that because one is a member of the armed forces he can vote regardless of age, when a similar privilege is not extended to other Canadians.

We support the law permitting those of the armed forces to vote. Not everyone, however, is in the armed forces. Is it fair to deny a youth of 18 the privilege of voting because his eyesight is not quite as good as the other fellow's, because his heart is weak, or because through no fault of his he cannot join the armed forces? Is it fair to discriminate against him because he can serve his country better in an occupation outside the armed forces? Is this just? I think not.

Consider the 18-year olds in the armed forces who are responsible for expensive equipment, for aeroplanes costing millions of dollars, and for other young lives in their care. Except for the order in council of September 9, 1950, which placed the armed forces on an active service footing, the responsible young Canadians of whom I have spoken would not be allowed to vote.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has already drawn our attention to the ridiculous situation provincially where the voting age is 18 in some provinces, 19 in others and 21 in the rest. The federal voting age is currently 21 years. Surely the young people of one province are no better and no worse than those in another province. After all, they are all Canadians, are they not? Some individuals term the lowering of the voting age from 21 to 18 years a radical reform. But is it really such a drastic transition? Let us look into the matter more closely.

What does lowering the voting age to 18 years mean to an 18-year-old? It gives him three extra years in which he might conceivably exercise the franchise. Since usually federal elections occur once every four years—and I hope this will continue to be the case—his chances of voting once more in his lifetime are from 60 to 75 per cent. It should further be considered that, of the newly enfranchised voters, the 19 and 20 year olds would have had a 60 and 80 per cent chance of voting in the next election, even without the lowered age. Is this change so drastic?

What of the present injustice? Take the case of a young man who is 20 years old at the time of an election. He will not vote until 24 years of age, perhaps 25. Fate has deprived this individual of the exercise of the franchise as effectively as would a 24 year limit. If the voting age were 18, such a person would vote at 22 at the latest. His greatest opportunity of voting would be at 20 and 21, the odds being 60 and 80 per cent, respectively. Would this not be a more effective way of administering present policy?

My final few words have to do with a matter which does not come under the jurisdiction of the federal government. I believe it to be so important however that I would like to talk about it now. It has to do with the program of political education within our schools. Some attempt should be made by the departments of education within our provinces to ensure that at least a survey of basic political theories be offered to high school students, such as a careful study of the major types of governmental systems, outlining the advantages and defects inherent in each; a thorough analysis of the parliamentary method of democracy, and more attention to the historical aspects of Canadian politics. Model parliaments and model United Nations groups should be permitted and encouraged in our high schools.

There can be no doubt that our high schools have not encouraged as they should studies in politics, political science, and in government. Many more people are going into science. We are moving right up to the moon. But what is the advantage in being a science graduate if one knows nothing at all about parliamentary methods? Such a person, when it comes to voting, is in no better position than the fellow who has no education, if he keeps within his own sphere and never moves out of it. We need this base of education within our high schools.

These are just a few ideas on the subject of education, together with a few other thoughts. I believe that if they were put into force they would go a long way toward preparing our young people for the responsibilities of citizenship. As others have done, may I urge that this bill be sent to committee for study and further consideration?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I realize the hour is late. I believe that at this moment we are talking about extending voting privileges to a particular group of Canadians, the group between the ages of 18 and 21. I concur with the proposal as set out in the bill put forward by my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River. Upon examining our order paper, I find that within the next day or two there will be an opportunity once again to discuss this subject; it seems to me that if we are to talk about extending voting privileges we ought to look closely at the Canada Elections Act and at the situation of those people who are at present disfranchised because of certain peculiarities in the law as it stands.

I hope to have an opportunity later on to speak on this subject and I hope that during the next few days the government, through the leader of the house, will consider referring to a committee the subject matter of the bill before us, together with that of similar bills, so that hon. members may have an opportunity to express their views in connection with ensuring that every Canadian who is entitled to vote shall have the opportunity to do so.

Too often today when a federal general election is called there are people who are disfranchised because of circumstances over which they have no control. I believe the interests of this group of people are as important as are the interests of the group between 18 and 21 years of age. I, like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), am one of those who had the opportunity of voting in a federal election at the age of 18. I did so when I was in the services in 1945.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the leader of the house if he would consider asking the house to refer the subject matter of these bills to the committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will consider that.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: I should like to advise the house that we shall continue with the second reading of the broadcasting bill on Monday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING LIMITATION ON LOBSTER FISHERY

As a result of a general demand among lobster fishermen a program of limitation of the number of lobster traps per boat will be introduced in all of the lobster fishing districts in the maritime provinces commencing with the 1968 lobster fishing seasons Fisheries Minister H. J. Robichaud announced today. The numbers of traps will be reduced further in most districts in 1969.

A limit of 375 traps is to be applied in Districts Nos. 1, 6B, 7A, and 7C, and in that portion of District No. 4 between Burns Point and Baccaro Point off the southern coast of Nova Scotia. In these districts the limit is to be reduced to 300 traps at the commencement of the 1969 lobster fishing seasons. This year there was a 500 trap limit set in the northern portion of District 7B.

In District No. 3 there will be a limit of 300 traps, and this will be reduced to 200 in 1969.

In District No. 5, and in that portion of District No. 4 between Baccaro Point and Cole Harbour a trap limit of 250 has been set for 1968, with a reduction to 150 in 1969.

In District No. 6A there will be a limit of 300 traps in 1968 with a reduction to 200 for the 1969 season.

In District No. 7B there will be a limit of 400 traps in 1968 and this will be reduced to 300 traps in 1969.

In District No. 8 there has been a lobster trap limit of 250 for the past two years, and this will remain for 1968.

These lobster trap limits are based on extensive studies by both the department and the Fisheries Research Board of Canada. Mr. Robichaud pointed out that the majority of lobster fishermen in all districts favour some limitation of the numbers permitted to engage in the fishery and, in addition to the trap limits, consideration is being given to means of restricting entry into the lobster fishery in an equitable manner.

Earlier this year Mr. Robichaud pointed out that lobsters are a vital resource for thousands of Canada's inshore fishermen. This made it imperative that this resource be managed as wisely as possible to ensure its continuance on a profitable basis to the fishermen.

The lobster fishing effort has greatly increased in the past several years, and thousands of small boats are engaged in harvesting this lucrative crustacean. Last year there were 25,000 lobster fishing licences issued. This was 200 over the previous year. In 1966 more than 30 million pounds of lobster were landed, and a total of $18,000,000 was received by fishermen.

The areas covered by the different districts are as follows:

District No. 1—In the bay of Fundy off the New Brunswick counties of Charlotte and St. John.

District No. 3—In the bay of Fundy off the Nova Scotia counties of Annapolis, Kings, Hants, Colchester and Cumberland, and the New Brunswick counties of Albert and Westmorland.

District No. 4—Off the Nova Scotia counties of Digby, Yarmouth, Shelbourne, Queens, Lunenburg and part of Halifax county.

District No. 5—Off the Nova Scotia counties of Guysborough and that part of Halifax County east of Cole Harbour.

District No. 6A—Takes in that part of the southern-eastern shore of Cape Breton island from Pointe Michaud to Indian Pt.

District No. 6B—That part of Cape Breton from Indian Pt. to High Capes.

District No. 7A—Off the Nova Scotia counties of Richmond and that part of Guysborough between Ragged Pt. and Pointe Michaud.

District 7B—Takes in Nova Scotia counties of Inverness, Antigonish, Pictou, Colchester and part of Cumberland, and the P.E.I. counties of Queens and Kings and the north shore of Prince county.

District 7C—Off the New Brunswick counties of Restigouche, Gloucester and Northumberland.

District 8—Off the New Brunswick counties of Kent, Westmorland and part of Cumberland, also off the western side of the P.E.I. county of Prince.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 6, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House, Ottawa, November 6, 1967

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable J. R. Cartwright, M.C., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on November 6, at 4 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. J. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST SESSION OF FIRST PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker we are marking a most important occasion in our history, the opening of the first session of the first parliament of Canada. To use a phrase from the Commons Journals of that day, this first sitting was "begun and holden" exactly a century ago today. The great Canadian parliamentary political debate began, the vigorous expression of free democracy which has continued to this moment, or to the moment that will shortly follow this one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Politics could be contentious in those days with a vigour of conflict both in debate and in election that would hardly be tolerated today. Indeed, there was proof of this in the fact that when the first sitting was opened on November 6, 1867, there already was a vacant seat in the house. The returning officer for Kamouraska had been unable to conduct the election in that constituency. "The hustings" which, in his words, "I had caused to be erected on the gallery of the sacristy" had been destroyed. He had himself been attacked by the mob and had been told by a delegation that unless he gave up the writs of election, his house would be demolished and he would be in danger of personal molestation.

The election was postponed.

But if politics was more lively in some areas in that confederation year, it was less so in others. Of the 181 seats in the commons for its first session, some 40 had been filled by acclamation. Perhaps one reason may have been that the sessional allowance for members was only $600.

Ottawa was a lively town for the occasion of that first opening. As some kind of portent, perhaps, of things to come the new capital had been hit by the worst windstorm in years a couple of days before the opening.

Mr. Knowles: It has never stopped.

Mr. Pearson: It has been blowing ever since. The sitting opened at the hour which has long since become the usual hour for the opening of new sessions, 3 p.m. The military were out in splendid ceremonial force; flags flew from public buildings and many private homes; all carriages coming to the hill for the event had to be here by 2.30 because at that time the gates were closed to all but the Governor General's.

But not everyone in the capital came up to the hill for the occasion. At 2 p.m. that day a lacrosse match was started in another part of the city and was reported to have been very well attended. The night before a group of visiting United States gymnasts and acrobats opened at Her Majesty's Theatre, where later in the week they were replaced on the bill by "The Fakir of Vishnu", a magician. The cynic might say that the character of the week's entertainment was not inappropriate to mark the parliamentary occasion. It was certainly appropriate that the great song of the day advertised by a local music store the day before the first sitting should be entitled "Put Your Shoulder to the Wheel".

• (2:40 p.m)

It was a momentous week, for earlier the till of a certain barroom had been robbed twice in three days; and the governor of the local jail had surprised a would-be intruder—a would-be intruder at the jail—whom, according to a news report "He belabored with his blackthorn at a most unmerciful rate."

Less amusing, then or now, was the fact that in New York that week interest rates on call loans were 6 to 7 per cent, and discounts were 7 to 9 per cent. Railway shares were dropping, the stock market was unsettled, but government issues were "steady".

A sombre portent of critical things to come was noted on the eve of the opening by the Ottawa Times when it reported that "several representatives of the fourth estate have also entered an appearance" in the parliamentary premises. It was soon too late to do anything about this intrusion, which persists until this day.

The main business for the first day of the first Canadian parliament was, as today, the selection of a Speaker. Even at that time the newspapers engaged in speculation, one forecasting on the morning of November 6 that it would either be James Cockburn from Ontario or John Grey from New Brunswick.

As it turned out, that afternoon Sir John A. Macdonald nominated Mr. Cockburn and he was seconded, in French, by Sir Georges Etienne Cartier.

The events of the first sitting were almost —but not entirely—harmonious. It was another portent of things to come that the first recorded division of opinion in the Canadian House of Commons was over bilingualism. Mr. Joseph Dufresne, the member for Montcalm, objected, in a speech described in news reports as "lengthy", to Mr. Cockburn's appointment on the grounds that he was not sufficiently acquainted with the French language to fulfil his duties.

Cartier replied, along lines which have become courteously normal, that while Mr. Cockburn's French might not be as good as his English, the new Speaker nevertheless understood French—he had learned it at school—and there should be no inconvenience on that score.

But this was the only ripple of division on that first day. To quote the Ottawa Times again:

> So far the utmost harmony has characterized the intercourse of members and, from all we can hear, the reign of faction has received a wholesome check from the extention of our national existence and the consequent enlargement of the views of the statesmen of the Dominion of Canada.

The speech from the throne for that first session of our first parliament was not read until the second sitting day, on November 7, 1867. It would appear, however, that government "leaks" could happen even in those days. In a morning newspaper of November 7, published hours before the speech from the throne was read, much of its content was forecast in paragraphs beginning with such phrases as "It will very likely be stated that..."; "It is also very probable that..."; "The attention of the house will also, in all probability, be invited to..." All that was missing on that occasion was the "informed sources."

On November 7, when the opening ceremonies were finished in the Senate chamber, the throne speech was read a second time in the House of Commons, a precedent that was not followed for long, and Canada's first parliament was under way. A newspaper concluded its comment on this historic moment with the admonition:

> We hope, therefore, to see a session of practical work rather than party bickering.

This admonition, Mr. Speaker, echoes the words of the speech from the throne itself, in which the Governor General prayed that the parliamentarians might be endowed with a "spirit of moderation and wisdom." The Governor General in that first throne speech also referred to the estimates to be laid before parliament. His words sound familiar, because he asserted that:

> —they have been framed with all the attention to economy which is compatible with the maintenance of efficiency—

The amount required in those first estimates was $521,593, and there were complaints of extravagance.

Since that opening day, Mr. Speaker, the parliament of Canada has grown in importance, in power, and in the scope and nature of its responsibilities. It has grown, as the country has grown, and it has reflected the troubles and the triumphs of that growth which has brought Canada from a partially self governing colony to a respected and strong independent and united state in the world; which has brought parliament from an assembly with limited requirements and desire to intervene in the lives of its citizens no more than was absolutely necessary for the discharge of its duty to ensure peace, order and good government in the narrowest sense, to a parliament which has accepted almost every kind of responsibility for the life and welfare and progress of the citizens.

Parliament, Mr. Speaker, up to the present has been able to ensure that the growth of bureaucratic power, which has inevitably accompanied these developments, has not destroyed the basic rights and freedoms of the individual citizen. Our parliament has led the nation through the sacrifice and the agony of war. It has been the effective agency for the expression of public opinion in the recurring crises of peace.

I know that parliamentary institutions are under fire these days, but let it be said once more that no alternative form of organization for the development of political society has ever been discovered or developed which has been able to make half so well the essential reconciliation of liberty and order, of free enterprise and public responsibility, necessary for a healthy, democratic state.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Conditions have changed with breathtaking speed these latter years, and to be able to play its traditional role as the agency for expressing best the people's will, parliament must change too, adapting its way and rules to new requirements without losing its essential effectiveness as the protector of the people's rights and liberties. To make this change without weakening this purpose—that, Mr. Speaker, is now our responsibility, and a serious one indeed. Perhaps it is well to remind ourselves of this responsibility as we commemorate today the first session of the parliament of Canada, opened at this place 100 years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the proper thing to do today is to express our faith, first in our parliamentary institutions and then in the future of our country.

If it is true, as some people claim, that we have come to a cross-roads, it is more urgent than ever for everyone of us to make a wise choice. The immediate task of our second century involves urgent reforms of parliament and a careful study of our constitutional problems. The opportunities provided by parliament to solve our problems must not be overlooked. National unity should remain our essential and prime objective. Without that unity, nothing lasting will be built, either within provincial jurisdictions or throughout Canada.

I am convinced that the only possible choice remains national unity. It is the only thing that will enable us in this exceptionally bountiful part of the world to achieve the unique human experiment of brotherhood in social peace and prosperity.

In this continuing dialogue, Mr. Speaker, our heart must share as well as our mind and our reason. We have in common a unique heritage which is Canada. That is why I make bold to say that it is as important for our heart to share as for our mind. Let us then continue profitable discussions, but let us always keep Canada as an ideal.

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition I welcome this opportunity to associate our party with the remarks of the Prime Minister with regard to the significance of the anniversary which we mark here this afternoon. The official record of the debates of the House of Commons for November 6, 1867 bears the following heading:

> First session of the first parliament of the Dominion of Canada called for the despatch of business on the 6th day of November, 1867.

Canada then had a population of four million people. Travel was slow and laborious. I believe it took as long to go from Ottawa to Montreal as it would take today to go from Montreal to Rome.

Speaking in the house on that day, Sir John gave the qualities required of a good Speaker. He said:

> He should be a man of parliamentary experience, well acquainted with the practice of parliament, versed in the mode of conducting the business of this house and able to decide promptly and correctly the various questions of practice and order which would come before parliament. His demeanour at the same time, must be agreeable and courtly.

These requirements have not changed. Parliament in that day possessed those attributes in the presence of Hon. James Cockburn. Parliament today, Mr. Speaker, possesses those attributes in the person of yourself. No office is more important for the proper conduct of parliamentary business, sir, than the one you hold. You have held it with courtesy, firmness—sometimes we in the opposition feel with a little more firmness than necessary—address and ability. You have been a worthy successor to your distinguished predecessor, Hon. James Cockburn.

Anniversary of First Session of Parliament

The throne speech the Prime Minister referred to of 1867 dealt with the foundation of a new Canadian nationality which, it was hoped, would extend its bounds from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. It has done so. At the same time the bounds of this nation have been extended from the United States border to the Arctic sea. May we in this parliament display the same care and determination in maintaining those boundaries as they did in establishing them.

The throne speech, representing the views of Sir John A. Macdonald's government and his own, pointed out that in the drafting of the British North America Act the representatives of the Canadian provinces had every freedom in arranging the kind of union they wished to establish. The union bringing about confederation made of those provinces a free and self governing people. It is noteworthy that this union in confederation has also brought to this nation of ours the greatest prosperity of any nation in the world today. Canada is a prosperous nation; Canada is a free nation, and Canada must remain a united nation. No nation on the face of the earth enjoys the advantages in peace and freedom which we have today, search where you will. In Europe there is no peace and freedom to compare with what we enjoy here. The history of Europe is one of hundreds of years of mutual aggression based on division. The United States is a federal union covering half a continent. There is prosperity and freedom there not enjoyed anywhere else on earth with the exception of Canada. Canada is a federal union covering half a continent. That union and that unity have brought peace, plenty and prosperity. That peace, prosperity and plenty shall prevail, even though there are some who would surrender it for division and dislike.

The history of the development of this nation is the history of parliament. Parliament has played its part every foot of the way from the building of the C.P.R. to the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. The people have had their say through their representatives in this chamber. Parliament must be made more efficient and must be adapted to the times. This cannot be done by stifling the voices of those representing the Canadian people. The parliamentary system is the system of the common man. It is not the system of the experts, the powerful or the privileged. It is the only system ever devised in which the majority of citizens can make known their wishes and in which the minority can be protected. It is not and cannot be a system for crushing out minorities or placing the weak at the mercy of the strong. Parliament must at all times be in the service of the people.

This Canada of ours is a great nation. It is a magnet and beacon to those from other lands where freedom has been crushed out, where hope has died and where misery has become a way of life. Hundreds of thousands have come and will come to join their lot with ours, to become Canadians and to preserve in this land that light of freedom which in so many countries flickers feebly or has gone out.

We in this parliament must act on behalf of Canadians and strive for unity in this land and for the strengthening of our institutions. We must act for the assertion of our territorial sovereignty from coast to coast and from ocean to ocean. The nation which sleeps sometimes fails to rise again. We have a responsibility to protect and defend this nation so that freedom under God shall not perish from this land.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Few nations have done more in one hundred years, and in few countries has parliament so fulfilled its role. Were Sir John and Hon. Mr. Cockburn able to be with us this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I am sure they would be well satisfied with the work they started so ably 100 years ago today.

[Translation]

Mr. Roger-E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, when speaking today of 100 years of parliamentary life under confederation, we cannot readily ignore, due to tactfulness or unconcern, the fact that, at this very moment, some people in Canada speak of 100 years of injustice. Because of this, which concerns all Canadians, I should like to speak on that particular point.

One needs but read the parliamentary annals and Hansard to see that throughout our parliamentary history, French Canadians from Cartier and Laurier on, have made a positive contribution to our federal system that no one should be ashamed of, but on the contrary that is a source of legitimate pride.

On the other hand, if we go back to the first days of confederation, particularly the few years preceding it, we cannot avoid noticing that the activity of the French-speaking national group was inspired by and directed to its very survival within the English-speaking majority of the community. Our families, our communities, our institutions concentrated their energies on this survival. This activity then, operated within the group and such efforts necessarily resulted in the alienation of the majority feelings towards us, not so much wilfully as through ignorance or lack of interest in the French fact.

It is only in the last twenty or twenty-five years that the French-speaking group has acquired enough confidence in itself and in its own survival to assert its presence and concentrate its efforts on its development in all areas of Canadian life.

Since then, its institutions are packed with first-rate candidates in every professional, economic, political, social and national sphere. This presence is more and more tangible, and it is not surprising that the English-speaking majority wonders about this new self-assertion, because until then, it had shown no interest and it still offers a certain resistance.

That this resistance will be interpreted as opposition and intolerance in some quarters seems inevitable, just as it is inevitable that some elements of the minority will express very vigorously their impatience and their desire to participate fully.

If we realize that the constitution is good enough to allow at least the survival of the French-speaking minority, all our efforts must now be directed towards creating the climate that will facilitate its full maturity and its full development; there is no doubt that this Canadian identity we are all anxiously looking for will come out of it. From then on the French participation will be less deeply felt by the strength of its claims than by the worth of its contributions, provided of course that it is given by all the instruments which the French fact will need to ensure its own development.

This would be specified in a revised constitution that would be more closely in contact with Canadian reality.

In the same way that, throughout the world, forces built on the single premise of class warfare will wane, the day people of the world merge into one class of free citizens with equal opportunities, the minority that speaks of 100 years of injustice will be forced into silence when such equality is effectively provided both in our minds and our statutes.

A hundred years ago, governor general, Viscount Monck, stated before the house, which numbered 180 members at the time, that legislation had to be enacted to put this constitution, which was quite new in some respects, to a full, reasonable, prejudice-free test.

The present parliament is only taking over in performing that task, by finding the legislative measures which will give the best chances of success to modern-day realities.

Let us put an end to the pessimism of a small number by reminding ourselves of the quotation of a youth of 23: "Confederation will be the grave of the French race and the ruin of Lower Canada", said that prophet of doom. Yet, he himself proved his saying wrong by later becoming Prime Minister of Canada. I quoted Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

And so, on this one hundredth anniversary, let us, members of parliament, live our act of faith by making of Canada our top priority.

[English]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic party are happy to associate themselves with the other parties in the house in noting this historic occasion, the one hundredth anniversary of the meeting of the first parliament of Canada. It is not without significance that this anniversary should follow so closely upon Guy Fawkes day. A former member of this house, the ebullient Gerry McGeer, once said that Guy Fawkes was the only person he had known who approached parliament in the right frame of mind.

The newspaper reports of that first parliament in Ottawa on November 6, 1867, say that after having selected the Speaker, the House of Commons went into closed session. While no records were kept as to the decisions reached then, the newspapers said it was their opinion that a decision had been made to close the bar in the House of Commons. I have no doubt this was in order to give effect to Sir John A. Macdonald's plea for a sober second thought.

In taking note of this important anniversary I think we have to remember that the problems which face this parliament are vastly more complex than those which faced Canada's first parliament. We live in a technological society, in the midst of growing urbanization, in a world which, as McLuhan has said, has become a global village. While the instruments at hand are most sophisticated, the problems are much more far reaching and terrifying. Yet I should like to submit to the house that the basic problem, the problem of human relations, the problem of people learning how to live together, is still the same.

Anniversary of First Session of Parliament

The fact that the first debate in the first parliament had to do with bilingualism indicates that we could have a similar debate today, and that the problem of finding ways and means by which two great cultures could live together in harmony and unity is still with us. The Greeks have an old saying that the more things change, the more they are the same. The problem which faces Canada today is much the same as the problem of 100 years ago; that is, how those of us who are English speaking and French speaking Canadians can work together to make this the great nation that our forefathers dreamed it might be.

If there is any common purpose which binds us together in this house, irrespective of party, it is the desire for a unified and a vibrant Canada. We hear talk of separatism. I think the talk is much more vociferous than the extent to which that sentiment is shared by Canadians. But I think we have to say, and say it repeatedly, that in the opinion of the great majority of the members of this house any kind of separatism is unthinkable, unnecessary and undesirable.

This parliament, of course, deals with a much larger area and many more regions than did the first parliament. In 1867 Upper and Lower Canada and the two maritime provinces came together in a confederation, but the great western area was untouched. Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland were still outside. British Columbia and the prairie provinces, Prince Edward Island in 1873, and Newfoundland in our own lifetime, joined confederation so that now it stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the forty ninth parallel to the Arctic ocean.

This means that we have more diverse problems, and that we have regional problems which must be recognized and met. One hundred years ago national unity mainly centred on the problem of bilingualism, but today if we are to have national unity the solution of biculturalism by itself will not be sufficient. National unity today must also be founded on equality of opportunity for every citizen in Canada, irrespective of where he or she may live and irrespective of their race, colour or religion. Unless we can provide social and economic opportunity and security for Canadians in every region of this country, we will not be able to build the kind of unified and vital Canada that all of us desire.

One of the problems which faced our forefathers in that first session of the first parliament was the growing desire for independence, because although in 1867 Canada was to have control of its own affairs it still was tied to a very considerable extent to the apron strings of Whitehall and much of its foreign policy and its military affairs were in the hands of the government of the United Kingdom. Even in the first world war Sir Robert Borden had to fight hard to retain the identity of the Canadian army and to prevent Canadian units from being dispersed throughout the British army. It was not until 60 years after confederation that we got the Statute of Westminster making Canada completely sovereign in its own right.

In this year 1967, the change in economic, trade and investment policies has altered the direction of the threat to our independence. We no longer have to worry about breaking the shackles of colonialism with Great Britain. We are now in danger of becoming an economic satellite of our great neighbour to the south. This poses a new set of problems and demands a new set of solutions. We pride ourselves that we have lived in friendship with our great neighbour to the south and we want to continue to do so. But at the same time, as Canadians we must continue to assert the kind of independence that our forefathers had in mind when confederation was established.

On this important occasion it seems to me this is the time for us to do two things: first, pay tribute to the members of that first parliament, to those men who "saw beyond the lean horizon of their days," and say of them that they built better than they knew; and the second, for us to so conduct ourselves in this parliament that we shall be worthy of those who went before us and earn the gratitude of those who come after us.

[Translation]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, although unfortunately I am not of French Canadian origin, may I be allowed to say a few words in French on behalf of our party.

When we remember the problems with which the members of parliament were faced a hundred years ago, we notice with some surprise that many of them still remain. National unity, bilingualism, equality among the various parts of the country, the true independence of the new nation, all those problems still require our attention and our wisdom. We have made tremendous progress but the basic problem, of human relationship still remains.

We are all proud of our parliament, our advances and our democracy. In my opinion, we have the duty today to revise our rules and parliamentary procedure, to modernize our practices and even our ideas so as to solve our serious problems and particularly the problem of national unity.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention a while ago to the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who told some stories about the first session of the first Canadian parliament. I think that there were only two parties in the house at that time, the Conservative and Liberal parties. Now, we must admit that parliament has grown richer these past years, since there are here good Social Crediters.

Mr. Speaker, nobody mentioned that, in 1867, the sovereign government of Canada which was sitting for the first time and which had to pass some legislation was tackling the same problems which we are now experiencing. But then, the Bank of Canada did not exist. It was created later. And we are still facing the same problems as in 1867.

And when, in 1934, the government decided to establish the Bank of Canada, it was to achieve financial independence in order to make it possible to gain economic independence. Now, we have parliamentary independence. We are using it after a fashion. The fathers of confederation did not know what we know today and could not anticipate that we would now face productivity and development problems. Canada was vast; means of communications were non-existent and it took ever so long to cover a constituency. There were no automobiles, no railroads, no airplanes. People did not know each other at all.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Times have changed a lot; the problems too have changed and solutions must change. Yet, we have not achieved our economic independence.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, let us revert to the more serious concerns of today, the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the first sitting of the first session of modern Canada.

Since this first session, where only four provinces were represented, many things have changed. Six provinces have been added to the four original ones, in addition to two territories, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories which have joined Canada, and our beautiful and vast country has since undergone stupendous, I might even say miraculous, development and progress.

During one hundred years, our country has experienced glory but also many blighted hopes. It has been in constant evolution involving concrete and happy achievements but also many cases of injustice which should not repeat themselves at the dawn of a new century.

Everyone knows that we have a constitution which confers rights and imposes duties to the federal as well as to provincial governments. The most elementary justice, understanding, tolerance should not be the responsibility of only one sector of our country, and that is why I say to the Canadian nation that the letter and especially the spirit of the Canadian constitution have, until now, been respected only in the province of Quebec. That is why, Mr. Speaker, on the commemoration of our Canadian parliamentary institution, I urge the leaders and the people of all Canadian provinces to treat in their respective boundaries our French-speaking minorities as Quebec has treated and is still treating the English-speaking minority within its boundaries. It is on that condition only that we will be able to achieve fully the understanding, the friendship and the unity so necessary to the development and the maturity of our wonderful country.

Co-operation and tolerance are not one-way streets. An English-speaking Canadian must feel at home everywhere in Canada, even in Quebec, but a French-speaking Canadian must feel at home not only in Quebec but in all the provinces of Canada. That does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that all English-speaking Canadians must learn French, no more than all French-speaking Canadians must learn English. No. But that means that within their respective provinces, if Canadians really accept the fact of co-existence or the circumstances in which they should live, they ought to learn, at all costs, to respect others who do not speak their language, who do not have the same culture, and I say that not only in my own province but in every province.

I think that the central government which has no business interfering with provincial matters, could at least make suggestions when federal-provincial conferences take place. It could suggest to the provinces which have trouble understanding the situation, to exert at least tolerance, fairness and understanding towards French-speaking or English-speaking Canadians.

This means that steps must be taken so that all Canadians may be fully respected everywhere all across Canada. Reference is often made to unity in diversity and that is possible only if, in Vancouver as well as in St. John's, Newfoundland, the same treatment is given to the French minority, one of the founding peoples, as is often said of Canada in 1867.

That unity, Mr. Speaker, will ensure peace, security and freedom to all our people.

[English]

Since 1867, Mr. Speaker, this country has twice been defended by Canadians of all origins.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: While our young Canadians have had to serve both in this country and abroad to protect the things the Canadian people as a whole believed in, they have been forgotten too often. I think our parliamentary institution has the obligation and responsibility to think a little more about these Canadian youngsters of all origins who have served their country.

Our country is an outstanding one; everyone agrees with that. Our parliamentary institution has been given the task of maintaining in this land of ours peace and prosperity, and is responsible for creating an economic climate that will permit the realization of true national unity. I do not mean unity in words alone, but a true national unity which will serve the best interests of our people and the future of this great country of Canada.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, during the past months we have had a great many activities and events across this nation which have reminded us of the fact that 100 years ago the Canadian nation was born through the act of confederation. All of us have been inspired, and I am sure we are all glad we are Canadians. All these events were of great significance, but I believe this particular event we are commemorating is possibly of the greatest significance to us as Canadians. Therefore the members of this party join in recognizing and acknowledging the benefits and accomplishments of the parliamentary system which we have in Canada today. This is indeed an historic occasion, Mr. Speaker, and it is an honour to be a member of this parliament as we pause today to remember that 100 years ago the first session of Canada's first parliament was convened.

[Mr. Caouette.]

If the only criterion for determining whether or not an institution or a system should or should not be continued is newness, this institution which has served us for 100 years would now be discarded. If, however, durability and proven worth are the determining factors, I believe we should jealously guard our parliamentary system today and for generations to come.

Appreciating the heritage established by the mother of parliaments, and challenged by those who laid the foundations well and strong in this our own land, it is our hope that we who participate in this twenty seventh parliament of Canada will maintain standards of sincerity and service that will enhance its worth in the eyes of the nation and work effectively in the interests of Canada and the world.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members of this house I listened with interest to the stirring words which have been spoken on this momentous occasion, words which have emphasized that the most important matter concerning us today is national unity.

As one whose paternal grandfather was a member of the first parliament of Canada I should be remiss in my duty if I did not now say a few words about an important subject which has not been mentioned. Wemyss Mackenzie Simpson, who sat in the first parliament of Canada and later became, as I recall, commissioner for Indian affairs, was given the task of drawing up many of the treaties with our native people throughout western Canada and particularly in Manitoba.

Much has been said about the rights and privileges of minorities in our country. I am sure you will understand that I and other hon. members of the house are concerned that the rights and privileges of some, particularly our native people, have been not only abrogated but done away with. Though the Indian people of Canada today have received many benefits which are not theirs by right under any treaty, rights and privileges which were granted to them under treaty are being abrogated.

This historic centennial event is an opportune occasion for members in this house—and I hope hon. members who follow us will feel this way also—to urge the government to discontinue acts by which treaties which were made earlier with these people are being abrogated. Should parliament on some future occasion feel that doing away with treaty rights might be beneficial for our native people, I hope any such action that may be taken will not be taken until there has been full consultation with and agreement of our native people in order that their rights and privileges may be preserved.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that these speeches be printed, as delivered, in Votes and Proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

First report of standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts—Mr. Stanbury.

[Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings:]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

TABLING OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS UNDER KENNEDY ROUND

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I seek permission of the house to table at this time ways and means resolutions proposing amendments to the customs tariff to implement Canada's commitments under the Kennedy round agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: There are eight resolutions which when printed will fill a volume of more than 100 pages. They are additional to the four tariff resolutions which were presented in the budget and which are now before the committee of ways and means.

The longest and most important of the new resolutions sets out in detail the reduced rates of duty which are to come into effect either in a single step on January 1, 1968, or in annual stages over a period not to exceed four years commencing on that date. The other resolutions provide for a number of consequential changes in other tariff provisions: for a broadening of the item providing for duty free entry of certain machinery and equipment for grading fruits and vegetables; and for the implementation of the results of negotiations which were conducted concurrently with the Kennedy round in order to permit action on tariff board reports relating to mining machinery and certain electronic apparatus.

Chemicals are not dealt with in these resolutions, nor are anti-dumping duties. Legislation relating to these matters will be introduced in due course, with a proposed effective date of July 1, 1968.

The resolutions I am tabling propose that our Kennedy round tariff concessions be implemented by statute. However, in order to safeguard Canada's position in the event that one or more or our trading partners should not be in a position to implement their commitments in accordance with the agreed timetable, it is proposed that the statute empower the governor in council, by order, to postpone the coming into force of the concessions provided for therein.

I suggest that these resolutions should be printed and appended to today's Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the official opposition welcomes the presentation of these resolutions to parliament. We shall examine them carefully once they come up for discussion. We are glad to see that the government has retained considerable flexibility in the implementation of these tariff reductions, as it is obvious that flexibility will be required in the months ahead.

As we know the purpose of these tariff reductions is to increase the flow of trade by removing impediments to trade among the countries of the world. It has become obvious nevertheless in the past two weeks that some in the United States would nullify the advantages that should rightly accrue to Canada when, as the result of greater flexibility in trade, the United States reduces its tariff on our products. Some in the United States would nullify any advantages Canada would enjoy by seeking to implement import quotas against our goods. Such quotas would nullify any advantages which might accrue to Canadian industry through lower United States tariffs.

Senator Everett Dirksen, the minority leader in the United States Senate, said this at a press conference on Friday afternoon:

> Congress will impose at least some import quotas, despite threats of a presidential veto.

Senator Dirksen, in other words, as minority leader has good grounds for believing that congress will obtain the two thirds majority that is necessary to override the presidential veto. We must persuade those in the United States who wish to carry out such an action, the imposition of import quotas, not to do so. We can persuade the government of the United States not to impose its quotas if the government of Canada says to the United States government and to the United States people that we have no intention of lowering tariffs with respect to any goods coming from the United States if, on similar goods coming from this country, the United States imposes import quotas. A clear cut statement to this effect by this government will deter those in the United States who seek to impose quotas.

We sincerely hope these quotas will not be imposed. We hope the great benefits which President Kennedy thought would flow from a reduction in tariffs will be achieved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words on behalf of our party. Every forward looking person has greeted the idea of freer trade in the world with enthusiasm. I share the concern of the hon. member for Northumberland, and no doubt the minister and his colleagues feel an equal concern about certain proposals in the United States. I wonder whether we could empower the governor in council not only to postpone the coming into force of any resolution but, as well, enable him to withdraw any cutbacks in our tariff if, later, quotas are set against the importation of Canadian goods.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I should also like to say that as is the case in other such situations, the ancilliary legislation which I understand is to follow is just as important as are these resolutions. I refer to the legislation which will deal with the transitional period during which industry and workers will be adjusting to the cuts made following the Kennedy round, legislation which will, I hope, make provision for the capital and retooling required by industry as well as for opportunities and funds for retraining and relocation of employees. All of this, to us, makes one package and we are looking forward to discussing these measures as well as the resolutions.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I would only say on behalf of this party that we welcome the announcement by the minister with regard to the resolutions which are to be introduced.

[Mr. Hees.]

Surely this action is urgently required; one can but agree with the hon. gentleman that it is wise to retain with the governor in council the prerogative of determining when the Kennedy round concessions should come into effect, especially when one hears repeatedly about the attitude of the United States in implementing its own policies and the Kennedy round agreements which have been referred to earlier. It may also be necessary for the governor in council to retain the prerogative of withdrawing from some of these agreements should circumstances justify taking such action.

The disastrous effect on Canadian agriculture caused by the shift in United States wheat marketing policy following failure to renew the international wheat agreement is evidence that Canada must stand firmly on her own feet. In this regard I will only say I regret that Canada did not take a firmer stand earlier on this issue. It is certainly imperative that we safeguard our position in the future vis-à-vis other nations in respect to the Kennedy round agreements.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*DISMISSALS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS FOR SECURITY REASONS

Question No. 381—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Pursuant to section 7(7) of the Financial Administration Act, as enacted by section 3 of chapter 74 of the Statutes of Canada 1966-67, has the Governor in Council promulgated regulations providing for the conduct of an inquiry into the dismissal of any public servant in the interest of the safety or security of Canada?

2. If so, on what date?

3. If not, what consideration has been given to the matter?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): The answer is as follows: 1. No regulations have been promulgated, and no case has arisen which would require provision to be made for such an inquiry.

2. Not applicable.

3. As a result of consideration by the officials responsible, the matter was referred to the royal commission on security as one falling within its terms of reference and on which it would clearly be desirable to have the advice of the commission.

CONSCIENCE CLAUSE IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT

Question No. 386—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. In the conduct of collective bargaining negotiations with bargaining agents as defined by the Public Service Staff Relations Act, has any employer, as defined in subsection (i) or (ii) of section 2(o) of that act (a) requested, or (b) insisted, upon the inclusion of a so-called "conscience clause" in the collective bargaining agreement which would relieve those persons who object on religious or conscientious grounds from the provisions of the agreement on condition that they make equivalent fees contribution to a recognized charity?

2. If so, with what result?

3. If not, will consideration now be given to this problem?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. No.

2. N/A.

3. Consideration will no doubt be given to the problem of appropriate forms of union security, and to the views of conscientious objectors, during the process of negotiations.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 388—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has the government taken any action to implement the recommendation of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada that an advisory committee be established to consider the salaries and other terms and conditions of employment of persons excluded from bargaining units?

2. If so (a) what is the nature of such action (b) who are the members of such committee (c) what are its terms of reference?

3. If not, when may action be anticipated?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board:) 1. Yes.

2. (a) An announcement was made on September 13, 1967, that the government had decided to establish an advisory group on executive compensation in the public service. (b) Appointments to this group, which will be composed of five eminent Canadians, will be made soon. (c) The advisory group will from time to time make recommendations to the government on: (1) the rates of pay and conditions of employment in the public service; and (2) the principles that should govern determination of the rates of pay and conditions of employment of other public servants employed in a managerial or confidential capacity.

MEDICAL PAYMENTS, NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO INDIAN AGENCIES

Question No. 420—Mr. Reid:

1. In each of the past five years, what has been the total moneys paid out by Indian medical services of the Department of National Health and Welfare in the Indian agencies of Kenora, Sioux Lookout and Fort Frances?

2. What was the total amount in each of the past five years submitted by the medical practitioners of the Indian agencies of Kenora, Sioux Lookout and Fort Frances to the Indian medical services of the Department of National Health and Welfare?

3. What was the budget for these services in each of the five years, and if there was a deficit, how was it made up?

4. What is the length of time between the issuance of the cheque in payment for services and the submission of the account by medical doctors in the Indian agencies of Kenora, Sioux Lookout and Fort Frances?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. 1962-63, $80,803; 1963-64, $91,374; 1964-65, $ 99,660; 1965-66, $112,250; 1966-67, $158,722.

2. 1962-63, $91,299; 1963-64, $99,638; 1964-65, $107,799; 1965-66, $138,234; 1966-67, $182,832.

3. Although budgets are established for professional and special services in northwestern Ontario identification of the amounts in these budgets to be paid to the medical practitioners in each agency is not possible because budgeting has not been on an agency basis.

4. Elapsed time between the submission and payment of physicians accounts averages six to eight weeks.

NATIONAL JOINT COUNCIL IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 423—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Have there been any changes in the role of the national joint council since the report of the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the public service?

2. If so, what are they?

3. If not, are any changes contemplated?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes.

2. In the light of the new collective bargaining relationship that now prevails between the government and its employees, the national joint council, of its own initiative, proposed a revision to its constitution that would be appropriate to this new relationship. The main effect of the new constitution is that the council will not consider matters that are normally subject to collective bargaining procedures or arbitration, although the council may consider such matters if it is so agreed by the parties engaged in bargaining.

3. N/A.

CONTINUATION OF PAY RESEARCH BUREAU

Question No. 436—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has any consideration been given by the government to the recommendation of the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the public service of Canada, appearing at page 1333 of the committee's proceedings and evidence, "that the government consider legislation to continue the pay research bureau and to provide for the data collected thereby to be available to the bargaining parties..."?

2. If so, what are the intentions of the government in this respect?

3. Has the pay research bureau been continued in existence as recommended by the committee by other than legislative action?

4. If so (a) by what techniques or methods (b) what is its present status?

5. Are the data collected available to bargaining parties?

6. If so, upon what conditions?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (President of the Privy Council): 1. Yes. The government concluded however that legislation was not required.

2. See (1) above.

3. Yes.

4. (a) By establishment action. The positions approved by the Treasury Board for the pay research bureau were deleted from the establishment of the public service commission and added to that of the public service staff relations board. (b) The pay research bureau, which now operates under the administrative jurisdiction of the public service staff relations board, continues to function as an independent agency with responsibility for obtaining and presenting objective information on rates of pay, employee earnings, conditions of employment and related practices prevailing both inside and outside the public service.

5. The chairman of the public service staff relations board advises that the data collected will be made available to the bargaining parties as determined under the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

6. The chairman of the public service staff relations board further advises that bargaining parties will have access to pay research bureau data required for negotiations related to the respective bargaining units. However, the confidential information provided by the private employers has been obtained from them by the bureau on the understanding that the pay research bureau reports based on such information would be released only to persons involved in the establishment of pay rates, social benefits and conditions of work in the service and to the employers providing the basic data to the bureau, but would not be distributed for general public consumption. This understanding was reached with the private employers several years ago and has continued to this date. As a consequence of these conditions, the confidentiality of the information was also agreed upon by the advisory committee on pay research comprising employer and employee representatives. However, in view of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, the advisory committee will be reconstituted as soon as a substantial number of bargaining agents have been identified and the present understanding regarding the distribution of pay research data will be reviewed at that time.

[Mr. Benson.]

GRAIN SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL

Question No. 458—Mr. Dinsdale:

Revised

1. How many bushels of grain have been shipped through Port Churchill each year since 1960, and what kind of grains have been involved and in what quantities?

2. What is the total cost of the diversion charge on these grains, and what is the reason for the diversion charge?

3. What has been the total tonnage of incoming freight through Port Churchill each year since 1960?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Transport and Trade and Commerce as follows:

The National Harbours Board advises as follows:

1.

	Wheat (bus.)
1966	22,192,976
1965	25,002,972
1964	22,067,711
1963	23,262,463
1962	21,845,124
1961	19,696,812
1960	19,793,906

2. The total amount of diversion charges paid by the Canadian Wheat Board in respect of grain shipped through the port of

Churchill in each navigation season from 1960 to 1966 is as follows:

Churchill shipping season	Diversion charge on country shipments direct to Churchill
1960	$269,310.28
1961	275,183.66
1962	302,032.29
1963	341,486.56
1964	323,259.98
1965	295,367.89
1966	326,877.91

Under terms of a handling agreement negotiated annually with all elevator companies, a diversion charge is paid by the Canadian Wheat Board on wheat shipped by elevator companies from their country elevators directly to the port of Churchill for export.

A diversion charge is a charge assessed by an elevator company when grain shipped from one of its country elevators is diverted from that company's terminal elevator to another destination. Elevator companies consider that their country and terminal elevators operate as an entity, and terminal revenues are an important factor in determining the basis upon which country elevators can be operated. Therefore, it has been a long established trade practice that when a company loses terminal handling on grain as a result of the diversion of country elevator shipment to a destination other than the company's terminal, a diversion charge is assessed to compensate for the loss of terminal earnings.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING

Question No. 479—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What was the amount paid to each province for the occupational training of adults?

2. Regarding these grants, what help is being given by the federal government for the construction and purchase of centres to provide adult pre-employment and retraining courses and continuing education for adults?

3. What are the future plans of the Department of Manpower and Immigration in this respect?

4. Has a study been made of this subject?

5. What is the estimated expenditure for (a) 1968 (b) 1969 (c) 1970?

6. Is each province required to make a report to the federal government regarding federal grants received and, if so, what were the expenses incurred by each province for the years 1966 and 1967?

[Translation]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Payments to the provinces for occupational training for adults have not yet been made, since the program is new this year.

2. The federal government will make contributions to the provinces or territories in respect of capital expenditures for the construction and equipping of vocational training facilities: (a) 75 per cent of the province's expenditures after March 31, 1967, up to $480 per capita of the 15 to 19 age group (1961 census) less the federal government's previous contributions paid under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act for capital expenditures. (b) 50 per cent of the province's expenditures after March 31, 1967, up to $320 per capita of the 15 to 19 age group (1961 census) less the federal government's previous contributions paid under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act for capital expenditures.

3. To continue grants on the above formula and also to provide loans to provinces wishing to use the money to construct or purchase capital facilities for providing occupational training to adults. The appropriate part of the amortization of principal and interest on these loans may be included in the cost of occupational training courses purchased by the department.

4. Yes, a number of studies.

5. Estimates have not yet been approved.

6. Each province submits claims against expenditures incurred. The federal capital grants were:

Province	Fiscal Year 1965-66	Fiscal Year 1966-67

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN, TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Question No. 481—Mr. Crouse:

1. Was there an advertisement placed in any newspaper or any other medium for the position as chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission?

2. If so (a) what were the qualifications set out in such an advertisement (b) how many applications were received (c) what was the result of the considerations of such applications (d) if no advertisement was issued calling for applications, under what arrangement was the position filled?

3. Did the successful appointee have any role in establishing this commission?

4. Did the Minister of Transport, at the time the decision for appointment was made, examine the list of applicants, or in any other manner assist in the determination of the final selection?

[Mr. Munro.]

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. No.

2. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable. (d) The president was appointed by governor in council in accordance with the National Transportation Act, statutes of Canada, 1966-67, Chapter 69.

3. Not applicable since the commission was established by act of parliament.

4. Not applicable in view of the answer in 2(d) above.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

Question No. 483—Mr. McIntosh:

1. With reference to the statement of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, as reported at page 2463 of Hansard, September 25, 1967, is it the intention of the minister to give the Canadian Pension Commission, which is the subject of the Wood commission inquiry, an opportunity to deal with provisions of the report before the report is tabled in the House of Commons?

2. If so (a) will such action permit the Canadian Pension Commission to exercise opposition to provisions of the report (b) would the minister give consideration to having the advance study referred to in his remarks of September 25 carried out by members of his staff not connected with the Canadian Pension Commission?

3. In the absence of the present deputy minister of veterans affairs on leave from the department, would the minister advise the house the names of departmental personnel he has selected to carry out the above study?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. It is my intention at the moment to submit the report for study by the commission and the department at an early date.

2. (a) Yes. I will be interested in the comments of officers of the commission as well as those of the department. (b) Members of the staff not connected with the Canadian Pension Commission will be asked to study the report.

3. I do not know the names of all the persons who will be asked to study the report, but it is my intention to ask the acting deputy minister and the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission to do so, and I have no doubt they will ask members of their respective staffs to assist in this work.

INVESTIGATION INTO UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS

Question No. 487—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Were any formal investigation conducted by the Department of National Defence or any other agency of government relative to the reported sightings of unidentified flying objects in eastern Manitoba, which reports originated during the months of May and June, 1967?

2. If so, were any such investigations conducted with the joint co-operation of the United States Air Force or any other U.S. government agency or academic institution?

3. Is the Department of National Defence or any other agency of the federal government now in possession of a report on any such investigations?

4. If so, will the report be made public?

5. Has a government committee been established to review this subject-matter?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, the Department of National Defence, together with the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police conducted an investigation into the alleged sighting of an unidentified flying object by Mr. Stephen Michalak at Falcon Lake, Manitoba.

2. No. However, representatives from the Universities of Colorado and Arizona conducted an informal independent investigation.

3. Yes.

4. It is not the intent of the Department of National Defence to make public the report of the alleged sighting.

5. No.

COPIES OF B.N.A. ACT PROCLAMATION

Question No. 499—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Is the reproduction of the proclamation issued by Queen Victoria that formally brought into force the British North America Act of 1867, a true copy or photostat of the original?

2. Is the French language version of that same proclamation a true copy or photostat of the original, or is it a composition?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): If this question refers to the proclamations prepared by the centennial commission for use in connection with the confederation train and caravan project, the answers are as follows: 1. The English language version was reproduced by a photo offset process from the original proclamation.

2. Research uncovered no French language version. The centennial commission arranged for the English version to be translated and then set in type approximating as closely as possible the type face and style of composition used in the English version.

CONSTRUCTION OF THERMONUCLEAR PLANT, QUEBEC

Question No. 512—Mr. Mongrain:

1. Did the federal government have preliminary discussions with the government of the province of Quebec or the management of Hydro-Quebec concerning the thermonuclear plant being constructed at Gentilly, a section of the new town of Bécancour, Quebec?

2. If so, does the federal government contribute financially or otherwise to the project?

3. What is the exact nature and cost of this contribution?

4. What organization will be responsible for the distribution of that power and for the determination of the cost?

5. Will some power be exported to the United States?

6. What is the approximate date on which this plant will be effectively put into operation?

7. Will the federal government have any decision in the management or future policy-making of the plant?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is building the plant at their own expense on a site provided by Hydro-Quebec. The cost of the plant is estimated to be $106,000,000. When the plant has been in satisfactory operation Hydro-Quebec will purchase it at a negotiated price based on a formula set out in the agreement between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Hydro-Quebec.

4. Hydro-Quebec.

5. No information.

6. On-power date: 1971.

7. Yes, until the plant has been purchased by Hydro-Quebec.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Question No. 539—Mr. Caouette:

Is there a list of present members of the company of young Canadians who are (a) part-time (b) full-time members?

LOANS FOR INDUSTRIAL WASTE PURIFICATION PROJECTS

Question No. 542—Mr. Grégoire:

1. Since December, 1960, what sum was loaned by C.M.H.C. by virtue of part VI-B of the National Housing Act for the implementation or expansion of industrial waste purification projects?

2. What is the interest on these loans?

3. What is the breakdown of these loans by province?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): 1. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has made no loans under part VIB of the National Housing Act for sewage projects intended solely for treatment of industrial wastes. The effluent being treated by many municipal plants assisted under this program does, however, include industrial waste.

The total loans committed from the inception of the program in 1960 to September 30, 1967 is $233,017,000.

2. The interest rate applicable at various periods during the operation of the program are as follows:

Period	Interest rate %
Dec. 1960 to April 12, 1961	5 1/8
April 13, 1961 to Sept. 30, 1961	5 3/8
Oct. 1, 1961 to Nov. 4, 1963	5 1/8
Nov. 5, 1963 to Jan. 21, 1964	5 1/4
Jan. 22, 1964 to Jan. 9, 1966	5 3/8
Jan. 10, 1966 to April 25, 1966	5 3/4
April 26, 1966 to Oct. 27, 1966	5 7/8
Oct. 28, 1966 to Jan. 19, 1967	6 1/8
Jan. 20, 1967 to April 12, 1967	6
April 13, 1967 to July 12, 1967	5 3/4
July 13, 1967 to Oct. 11, 1967	6 1/4
Oct. 12, 1967 to present.	6 3/8

3. The breakdown by province of loans committed to September 30, 1967 is as follows:

Province	No. of loans	Total loan commitment ($000)
Newfoundland	22	2,029
Prince Edward Island	13	242
Nova Scotia	13	1,789

AMENDMENT OF VETERANS' LAND ACT

Question No. 544—Mr. McCleave:

Would the government give consideration to amending the Veterans' Land Act to make eligible those service personnel who have had long careers, for example, of twenty years or more?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The Veterans' Land Act is one of the major components of the numerous legislative measures comprising the veterans charter which were enacted by parliament to assist in the return to civilian life of those who saw active service in world war II or with the special force in Korea. The benefits of the Veterans' Land Act are alternative to those provided by the War Service Grants Act and the Veterans Rehabilitation Act.

Members of the regular forces of Canada who have had long service careers are eligible to apply for the benefits of the Veterans' Land Act if they served on active service in either of the abovementioned conflicts. However, it would not be in accordance with the purpose and intent of that act to make its provisions applicable to those who did not so serve.

SALE OF OXENDEN DOCK, ONTARIO

Question No. 547—Mr. Noble:

1. Were tenders called for sale of the Oxenden dock?

2. Has the Oxenden dock been sold and if so, to whom and at what price?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned, the answers are as follows:
1. Yes.

2. Yes, Mr. Lloyd Ruffett, Wiarton, Ontario $510.

*EXPENDITURES ON SMOKING EDUCATION AND ASSISTANCE TO TOBACCO INDUSTRY

Question No. 554—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the 1966 amount, in dollars, which the Department of National Health and Welfare spent on the promotion of public education in the field of cigarette smoking and disease?

2. What was the 1966 amount, in dollars, which the Department of Agriculture spent in assisting the research, maintenance or development of the tobacco industry?

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Agriculture as follows:

1. $129,612.

2. $465,609.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, QUEBEC

Question No. 557—Mr. Godin:

1. How many persons receive old age assistance in the province of Quebec?

2. What was the federal government's share of this assistance for each year from 1960 to 1966?

[Translation]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. 22,784 as of September 1967.

2. 1960-61, $10,977,064; 1961-62, $10,896,302; 1962-63, $13,793,745; 1963-64, $13,860,075; 1964-65, $16,589,045. 1965-66*

*In accordance with an agreement under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act, no payments were made to Quebec in 1965-66.

*ROYAL CANADIAN MEDICAL CORPS

Question No. 579—Mr. Lambert:

1. What is the October 31, 1967, strength of medical officers of all ranks in the Royal Canadian Medical Corps?

2. Of this number, how many possessed post-graduate and/or specialist qualifications?

3. How many medical students are pursuing their studies under R.O.T.P. as of the same date?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The answer to part 1 is, 390; to part 2, 189, and to part 3, 165.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CAPITAL EXPENDITURES OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 149—Mr. Godin:

1. What are the capital expenditures of each of the proprietary corporations as defined in the Financial Administration Act, for each of the past three years?

2. Does the government exercise any supervision over the capital expenditures of the proprietary crown corporations?

3. When making capital expenditures, are crown corporations required to take industrial decentralization into account and, if so, what precisely is their policy as to industrial decentralization?

4. If not, does the government intend to issue directives to the said corporations ordering that they take industrial decentralization into account?

Return tabled.

SUBSIDIARIES OF PROPRIETARY CORPORATIONS

Question No. 285—Mr. Caouette:

1. In what companies do proprietary crown corporations, within the meaning of the Financial Administration Act, own shares, and in what amounts?

2. Who appoints the directors of the subsidiaries of the proprietary corporations?

3. What is the share capital of these subsidiaries?

Inquiries of the Ministry

4. What is the function of each of these subsidiaries?

5. Are these subsidiaries subject to municipal, provincial and federal taxation?

6. Who approves the operating and capital budgets of proprietary corporations?

ESTABLISHMENT OF FOUNDRY IN QUEBEC

Question No. 445—Mr. Hamilton:

1. Has any member of the government or any government department or agency had any correspondence since May, 1963, with Becnet Foundries or Becnet Industries of Quebec concerning the planning, development or financing of a new foundry?

2. Has any member of the government or any government department or agency had any correspondence since May, 1963, with Mr. James Doherty, Mr. Roy C. Bowes or Mr. Bernard Rider in respect to the planning, development or financing of a foundry in the province of Quebec?

3. Has any member of the government or any government department or agency had any correspondence with the government of Quebec, officials or agencies since May, 1963, in respect to the planning development or financing of a foundry in the province of Quebec?

4. Has any member of the government or any government department or agency had any correspondence with any member of the Quebec legislature since May, 1963, concerning the planning, development or financing of a foundry in the province of Quebec?

5. Has any member of the government or any department or agency had any correspondence since May, 1963, with the government of Czechoslovakia or the firm of Skoda of Czechoslovakia concerning the planning, development or financing of a foundry at Louiseville in the province of Quebec?

6. Did the premier of Quebec inform the federal government prior to June, 1966, that there would be a 200 ton a day foundry constructed at Louiseville, Quebec, to be completed by April, 1969?

7. Is Louiseville, Quebec, within a designated area?

8. Has the government of Canada or any of its agencies received any communications since May, 1963, from the United States government or United States corporations concerning a $9.69 million contract to Skoda of Czechoslovakia to supply engineering services and plant equipment to a new foundry that was to be constructed at Louiseville, Quebec, with the financial support of the federal government and the government of Quebec?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE RESPECTING ALLEGED MISMANAGEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. I wish to ask the hon. gentleman whether the government has obtained from the Secretary of State the evidence of mismanagement within the C.B.C. to which the Secretary of State referred on Friday, and which she described as worse than the Glassco commission had referred to.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I would be pleased to take this question as notice, unless the Secretary of State would like to add anything.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): As I told the house on Friday, it was my intention to give this information—not, indeed, second hand from me as I have had it from others, but to bring together those who gave me the information and the new management.

Mr. Starr: I would ask the Secretary of State whether she has given to the Prime Minister and to her other colleagues, the members of the government, the evidence of mismanagement to which she referred last Friday.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Starr: I should like to know whether the government has been informed of the details of which the hon. lady is aware, or whether she is keeping this a secret.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Ontario is reiterating the question he asked in the first instance. It may not have been answered, but it is still a reiteration of the question he asked.

Miss LaMarsh: It was not answered simply because the hon. gentleman knows, having been a member of a cabinet, that it is not permitted to ask questions concerning conversations between privy councillors and their leader.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Would the hon. lady give consideration to making a statement to the house indicating the general area in which the misconduct, or misbehaviour, or whatever it may have been, occurred? Without necessarily specifying the people involved, would she indicate the general area in which the "rotten management" occurred, for the benefit both of parliament and of the people so we may know what it was the Secretary of State learned about?

Miss LaMarsh: I have thought about that for the last couple of days, but it is very difficult to pass on any of this information without doing one of two things, either pointing to the person or persons within the corporation to whom reference is made, or to the persons who have been the sources of information I have received. I feel that if I were to disclose the names of any of the sources—and here I must take an example from the fourth estate—no secretary of state hereafter would ever get any information about what was going on within the corporation. I do not, therefore, propose publicly to name any of these individuals, now or at any time.

I do not believe anything further can be gained from speculation about the individuals who are responsible, or who appear to be responsible, for some of the things I have already mentioned or described and, unless I am completely specific, to say anything more about it would narrow it down to some individuals but still touch those who might not be responsible.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Why did you start it, then?

Miss LaMarsh: Any suggestion I started anything obviously shows only the ignorance of the man who said that, because the reports which this government and earlier governments have commissioned over the past few years have indicated exactly the same thing. It comes as some surprise to me that any member of this house who previously interested himself in this particular subject was surprised at the charge at all.

Mr. Nielsen: It was a charge?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I would direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister, and ask him whether the government will accept the responsibility to act immediately to make public the allegations that were made, in order that any such management errors may be made public and speedily rectified.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything I can add at the moment to what the Secretary of State has said. She has taken this on in her responsibility as a member of the government, and I do not think anything I could say would be useful.

Mr. Starr: As a supplementary question, would the hon. gentleman prevail upon the Prime Minister to take part in the debate on the broadcasting bill which is before the house at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this question should not be asked when the debate is under way later today.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. With regard to the information which has come to the attention of the minister, not the information which appears in the Fowler report or any other report but the information which has come to her, which is strictly confidential and which, according to the minister, is worse than that in the Fowler report, may I ask if this information has been transmitted to Mr. Ouimet and the top management of the C.B.C.? If not, why has it not been brought to their attention so they might take some remedial action?

Miss LaMarsh: No, I have not brought it to their attention, the reason being that I felt the only way it could be cleared up was by bringing it to the attention of the new management.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the hon. Secretary of State.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I agree with the Secretary of State's comments concerning the C.B.C., but I would like to know if she has answered the arrogance of the former president of the C.B.C., Mr. Alphonse Ouimet? Has the hon. minister answered his arrogant letter?

[English]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): As a supplementary question to the Secretary of State, further to her statement that this information would be turned over to the new heads of the C.B.C., can the minister inform the house whether the Prime Minister will announce the appointments of the new heads today, or some day later this week?

Miss LaMarsh: I would think this is dependent upon the passage of the legislation now before the house. Those appointments, I understand, are to be made after the legislation has been dealt with in committee, has gone through the House of Commons and before it has passed the other place.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED APPROACH BY RUSSIA FOR GREATER CO-OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I wished to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence I would like to direct it to the Minister of National Defence. Can he advise the house whether Canada has received overtures from the Soviet union for bilateral military contacts or co-operation, similar to arrangements between this country and France?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe the proper answer to that question is that there is no foundation for it.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Was an invitation received from the Russian government to send a senior military officer to Moscow to attend their fiftieth anniversary celebrations, and was Canada the only NATO country to receive such an invitation?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my information is that no such invitation was extended to any Canadian officials.

Mr. Harkness: Does the minister mean there was no invitation extended at all, contrary to what has been reported? He says there was no invitation to any officer, but did any general invitation come to the government?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I cannot answer for other departments of the government, but so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned there was no invitation received.

TRADE

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister but in his absence may I direct it to the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the Prime Minister's statement in Toronto on Saturday to the effect that if the United States follows through on trade restrictive proposals, Canada will have to re-examine the concessions which it granted at the Kennedy round talks in Geneva.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether he or the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the government generally have received any assurance from the United States government that all effective steps will be taken so there will be no restrictive proposals or any quotas imposed on Canadian goods, particularly those affected by the Kennedy round.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can answer that question by quoting the President of the United States himself. Addressing the Consumer Assembly in Washington he said:

> I think those protectionist bills just must not become law. And they're not going to become law as long as I am president.

That is the best answer I can give to the question of whether we have received assurances on this matter, but may I add that there should be no doubt whatever in the minds of those in the United States who are advocating these restrictions on imports, in contravention of trade agreements, that such action would cause damage to the trade interests of the United States. Surely the United States, which has done so much to advance the cause of freer world trade, isn't going to withdraw into a policy of protectionism, a beggar thy neighbour policy.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether there will be sufficient flexibility in the legislation he is introducing which will give the governor in council not only power to postpone the implementation of the Kennedy round agreements but power to withdraw them in the event that any of the other signatories resort to import quotas which would nullify all the benefits of the Kennedy round agreements?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to give a categorical answer on the question of the law. I would have to refresh my memory, but I can assure my hon. friend that I will be looking at our law in the light of that possibility.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that a majority two thirds vote in the United States congress can nullify the presidential veto, and therefore although President Johnson is determined that import quotas shall not be imposed congress can override him, would the government consider making representations to the United States that we will not lower tariffs on goods against which import quotas may be imposed?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether that would be effective action, but what I do think is that we should be prepared to withhold concessions on imports into Canada of value to the United States if they do in fact withdraw concessions of value to us.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In the light of the evaluation made on October 13 by the United Nations conference on trade and development, UNTAD, that the Kennedy round "will contribute to a further decline in the relative share of the developing countries in world trade," what steps is the government taking to make sure that consideration is given to the position of the developing countries?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Kennedy round concessions are available to all countries of the world, the developing as well as the developed countries. The developing countries want to get additional concessions by way of special preferences, and that matter is under discussion in UNTAD.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO BILATERAL AGREEMENT WITH FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Did Canada and France last week conclude a bilateral agreement of co-operation in the establishment of programs for defence production, research and development?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this question be directed to the proper minister, who is the Minister of Defence Production.

Mr. Lambert: Then I will direct it to the Minister of Industry in his capacity as Minister of Defence Production. Did Canada and France last week conclude a bilateral agreement of co-operation in the establishment of programs for defence production, research and development?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert: As a supplementary question, did this agreement or accord arise within the framework of Canada's relationship with France under NATO, or is it a purely bilateral agreement arising out of, shall I say, our direct relations with France?

Mr. Drury: Unquestionably the fact that France is a member of NATO had some bearing on the negotiations leading to the agreement. It is in fact an agreement moving toward increased co-operation between Canada and France in the matter of research and development in the defence equipment field. It is bilateral rather than part of the general NATO agreement.

Mr. Lambert: As a further supplementary question, would the minister be prepared to table a copy of this agreement at the earliest possible opportunity?

Mr. Drury: I regret, Mr. Speaker, this cannot be done, as it is in the field of defence equipment. As the hon. member will understand, a number of provisions are classified; consequently it will not be made public.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that France now has militarily withdrawn from NATO, and in view of the fact that there are reports that country has entered into a joint training scheme with the Soviet union, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence what position Canada now is in in relation to the other NATO partners as a result of this treaty we have entered into with France.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I have said this particular agreement is not part of the NATO agreement; it is a separate bilateral agreement. We have separate bilateral agreements with other countries along similar lines. This does not necessarily have a direct relationship to the level or scale of French participation in NATO.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister understood the import of my question. I will rephrase it in a little different way. In view of the fact that France now is looked upon as somewhat of a security risk—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: That is the general purport of the reports which have appeared in the newspapers.

Royal Assent

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that these supplementary questions are developing into a debate. The hon. member might ask the question directly.

Mr. Harkness: Once more may I ask in what position this leaves us in relation to the other members of NATO, in view of the risks which may be involved in an exchange of military information, technology and weaponry with France.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think one could accept the premise of the hon. gentleman that France has suddenly become a security risk. In respect of all such agreements there are the usual considerations for the protection of national security in both the military and intelligence sense. This agreement makes such provision, and administrative arrangements have been made to take care of this.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the minister whether the other NATO allies were consulted before this agreement was signed.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think our other NATO allies were aware of the discussions leading up to this agreement.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable house attend in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

• (4:30 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

An act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

An act to amend the Canada Corporations Act.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1968.

Mr. Speaker: I also have the honour to inform the house that when the house did attend His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, His Honour was pleased to make a speech to both houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable senators, honourable members of the House of Commons:

We are assembled here today on an historic occasion to participate in an act which is rooted in tradition.

On this day, one hundred years ago, the first Governor General of Canada, Viscount Monck, opened the first session of the first parliament of the newly formed confederation. The new national capital had witnessed on July 1, 1867, a ceremony which was the culmination of the discussions that had taken place in Charlottetown and Quebec. Deliberations could now begin on bills which, in due course, would become the first statutes of Canada.

Federal union had been accomplished and the members of that first parliament were called upon to address their attention to the complex problems of nation building. A century later and in the midst of the twenty-seventh parliament, we reflect with gratitude and with justifiable pride on what has been achieved.

With courage, imagination and brawn, Canadians have come to grips with the challenge of geography and economics. Incredible distances have been spanned and the vast and rich resources of the land have been extensively developed. The problems of environment have obliged us to be preoccupied during the greater part of the past 100 years with physical needs, but recent years have witnessed a cultural explosion in Canada, bringing with it a flowering of creative talent.

We have many things to celebrate in this centennial year. Not the least of these is the effectiveness of our form of government. It is our good fortune and our proud boast that we in Canada enjoy a long heritage of freedom. Our democratic process is at once a recognition and a safeguard of the dignity of man.

The origins of parliament lie far in the past, but the process of law-making as we know it today was not realized at a single stroke. Successive generations struggled to gain a commanding voice in their own affairs and to bring an end to the exercise of arbitrary power. Our forefathers had a lively awareness of that struggle and the determination to preserve what had been so dearly won.

We inherited the institution of parliament from Great Britain but we have made it in all respects Canadian. Laws are passed "by and with the consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada" and take effect when formally assented to by the Governor General in his exercise of the power of the Sovereign. In recent years the post of Governor General has been filled by the appointment of Canadians. Thus, everything done in this land in the name of the Queen is done by Canadians at the behest of Canadians. The giving of royal assent to bills is not merely an ancient custom but an integral part of our own legislative process.

With the passage of the Statute of Westminster in 1931, Canada took her full place in the arena of world affairs and became one of the founding members of the commonwealth. Within the framework of the commonwealth and in the greater family of nations, the example we offer of a half continent of people living and working together in a spirit of mutual respect and goodwill does not pass unnoticed.

By resolving our problems in this manner and by diligently striving to bridge cultural and regional differences, we have succeeded where not a few societies in the past have failed. This experience has equipped Canadians to play an important and responsible rôle in healing the divisions among people everywhere.

Like all the institutions of men, parliamentary government is not without its imperfections. But it stands unchallenged as the most successful method of democracy. We share this great legacy with others, and this is as it should be, for the ideals and concepts which we cherish are not confined by national boundaries.

It has been said of democracy that it is "based upon the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people." As the instrument of democracy parliament puts a corresponding faith in its individual members. This is a heavy responsibility which obliges you to put duty before personal ambition. Your compensation is the opportunity you have of service to your country and to the cause of freedom everywhere.

In marking, today, the hundredth anniversary of the opening of the first session of parliament, we are not only saluting a moment in history. We are recognizing, as well, the enduring significance of a whole way of life. It is in the nature of parliament that it mirrors the soul of a nation. It is no exaggeration to say that as parliament goes, so goes a people; as parliament projects the principles of the nation and the aspirations of its citizens, so are those principles preserved and those aspirations realized.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WINNIPEG—THEFT OF ARMS FROM MINTO ARMOURIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister inform the house concerning the reported theft from the Minto armouries at Winnipeg of seven complete machine guns and a quantity of ammunition and tell the house whether or not the report is accurate and what steps are being taken to ensure that arms and ammunition are kept safely by the members of the defence forces?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no basic objection to the question asked by the hon. member but it seems to me that it has already been asked in the same terms last week by a few hon. members including the hon. member for Winnipeg South. However, if there is a new element in the question I have no objection to it.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the new element is that the Minister of National Defence is present in the house and he was not the other day.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I understood the question put by the hon. member, he asked me whether the report was correct. I wish to say to him that it is not quite accurate. The machine guns were stolen, as he said, and so were the blocks, but no ammunition was stolen. In so far as the accuracy of the report is concerned, I wish to say first of all that all this happened on the night of October 30. As was stated in the report, a casual reference to a possible invasion of the city by eastern criminals was made to the security officer. On hearing it he immediately doubled the patrols.

Mr. Pugh: Did he do that after the horse was gone?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): No, before. Many of the circumstances of the theft appear to be peculiar. First of all, in order to have access to the particular area of the Minto armoury the thieves had to scale a high fence, saw off the bars on the windows and cut the chains which held the machine guns to the walls. This had to be done also in another place where the magazines were stored.

So far as security is concerned, let me say that in this case the normal security measures were taken which are usually taken in any armoury in Canada, and it is of course unfortunate that this particular theft took place. I might also say to my hon. friend that banks expect robberies to take place and they prepare for them; yet they do occur.

Mr. Churchill: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think what took place is slightly more important than the taking of money from a bank. Will the minister inform the house, not today necessarily but some time very soon, whether additional steps toward insuring greater security are being taken by the armed forces because, as he will recall, this incident is a repetition of thefts that occurred three years ago at which time the house was assured that adequate precautionary steps were being taken?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): We are investigating the possibility of taking additional security measures. That is all I can say at the moment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS WITH RAILWAY MANAGEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the Minister of Transport a question which I put to him last Friday when he was not in the chamber. I do not know whether it has been drawn to his attention, but in view of the statement made by the hon. member for Westmorland in Moncton last Thursday night that the minister was going to make a statement with regard to changes in the freight tariffs of the C.N.R., would the minister inform the house what announcement he has to make, and if he cannot make it today when can we expect it?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at this moment I am still optimistic. I am not in a position to make a statement today but I am pressing on with this matter in the hope that I can make a statement within a very few days.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inform the house whether this is a matter to be considered by him or his department, whether it is before the transport commission, or whether it is to be the subject matter of discussions between him and the railways?

Mr. Hellyer: I think that in cases such as this premature information is more likely to misinform than to inform. As soon as a decision has been taken I will be pleased to inform the house in the usual way.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary question. If that is the case, can the minister inform the house whether or not the hon. member for Westmorland, when she made the statement, expressed policy which the minister had authorized her to express?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure how a statement made outside the house by the parliamentary secretary is relevant and can form the basis of a question, but I will allow the question asked by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Hellyer: All the reports from the meeting indicated that the hon. member for Westmorland acquitted herself ably and capably, as I had predicted she would. I was also pleased to hear the hon. member say such nice things about her and I think they are well justified. I can tell the hon. member that if her representations, which are persistent and meaningful, on behalf of the people of that area produce the results that I hope they will, my hon. friend will be pleased with the announcement when it is made.

[Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne).]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on the matter of lay-offs. Has a wire been received from the Canadian Railway Labour Executive Association referring to the job security agreements between the unions and railways, and is the minister prepared to see that the 90 days' notice clause therein is complied with in connection with the recent railway lay-ofls?

Mr. Hellyer: I received a telegram and indicated that the government of course, would insist that the terms of the agreement between the union and management be fulfilled and suggested that the procedures which are set out in the agreement be undertaken if there are violations, as the unions allege. On their part the railways allege there are no violations. This is the extent of the information available at the moment.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STEPS TO AVOID POSSIBLE RAILWAY STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Following the disappointment caused to the railway employees by a new offer by the railways, providing for an 8 per cent increase over a three-year period, is it the intention of the minister to take the necessary measures to prevent any possible strike?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we always do everything we can and take those steps that are within our jurisdiction to prevent strikes, but it is not always possible to do so. However, whenever our good offices can be of service we try to make them available.

AIR TRANSPORT

TORONTO—REFUSAL OF LANDING RIGHTS TO ROYAL DUTCH AIRLINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which relates to the question I asked the minister last Thursday concerning the threatened abrogation of the air agreement between The Netherlands and Canada. Has the minister any further information or details on the reported threat by the government of The Netherlands?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Nothing that I think could add to the situation, Mr. Speaker. If there are further negotiations with The Netherlands government in this matter they will be conducted in the spirit of co-operation that has always existed between our two countries. I can tell my hon. friend that we will be as co-operative as we can within the framework in which these international agreements are made, which basically provides that the interests of Canada are protected equally with those of our friends and allies abroad.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, Has the government of The Netherlands in fact threatened to abrogate this air agreement?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, there have been indications that public statements have been made to this effect. I do not think I would wish to comment beyond that at the moment.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO MEDALS ISSUED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could the hon. lady tell us if it is true that she has sent out Canada's silver medals to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and also to Mr. René Levesque for services rendered to Canada? I should like to know if that is true.

[English]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, centennial medals have been sent out, the first of these last week, to all Canadian civilians in the table of precedence for Canada and to all individuals in the federal public service for whom nominations have been received. They were also sent out where provincial nominations have been received for individuals in the provincial public services, education, the judiciary and municipal services.

I am informed that this medal is to be worn on the left breast and will take precedence after any commemorative medals previously granted, such as the coronation medal, and before long service, good conduct or efficiency medals.

I know there has been some suggestion that perhaps the hon. member for Lapointe and other hon. members, notably provincial members, might not have been recipients of these medals, but the regulations provide that those to be honoured include those in the federal table of precedence. I am informed that this is in accord with the precedent some years earlier when Mr. Henri Bourassa was awarded a coronation medal. Since it did not meet his expressed political beliefs he returned it to the government and that option, of courses, is open to anyone who does not wish to receive this medal.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY INTO RAILWAY COSTING METHODS IN PROPOSED LINE ABANDONMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which relates to the public hearing by the Canadian Transport Commission into railway costing methods for proposed rail line abandonments. Will the minister give an assurance that all interested groups and individuals will have full opportunity to present arguments and briefs? To make this possible will the minister request the commission to hold at least one hearing in the west, where any curtailment of rail service will have the greatest adverse effect?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been assured by the commission that they will take the necessary steps to see that all points of view are adequately expressed and represented before them. I cannot recall whether this included the possibility of holding hearings in the west. I suspect it did, but I will certainly bring this suggestion to the attention of the president of the commission.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Following the completion of this inquiry into the cost accounting techniques, as suggested by the minister in his current press release, will the minister assure the house that the standing committee on transport and communications will be called together to review the recommendations of the inquiry before any of the suggestions are incorporated into amendments to the present legislation?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr Speaker, I am not in a position to give that assurance as the standing committee is a creature of the house. However, I am sure that if it wished to review the final order there would be no reason it could not do so. I hope that by the time the commission has completed its hearings everyone will be satisfied with the decisions that are taken.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REPORTED PEACE OFFER BY KING OF JORDAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on what seemed to me to be a matter of importance in the international field, but instead I will address it to the Acting Prime Minister.

Did King Hussein of Jordan present to representatives of the Canadian government, as he is said to have done to western diplomats, an offer to recognize the right of all in the Middle East, including Israel, to live in peace and security? Did King Hussein also state that President Nasser of the United Arab Republic was ready to grant Israel free maritime access to the Suez canal and gulf of Aqaba if the right conditions were reached through a general settlement?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs might wish to comment on this question.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the report in the newspaper of King Hussein's statement, which I think was made in a television interview, but no such offer or proposal has been made to the government of Canada.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of this proposal to a settlement in the Middle East and the reported further statement by King Hussein about the urgency of a political solution, probably at the level of the security council, within a very short space of time, will the Canadian government make inquiries into this matter and, if deemed advisable, bring it to the security council?

[Mr. Southam.]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the house will be aware that the government has been pursuing very actively indeed any useful means to secure peace in the Middle East. In so far as the proposal of King Hussein is useful and can be followed up, it will be.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

INQUIRY AS TO NAMING OF APPOINTED COUNCIL MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that the Northwest Territories legislative council sits next Monday, and in order to give its members sufficient time to study legislation to come before that body, will the minister now announce the appointments of the four members who are still to be named, if they have not already been, to the council?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this is a question that I would have expected to hear from behind me instead of from the other side of the house. I know the hon. member's fears will be allayed when I tell him that those who are going to be appointed have already been alerted.

Mr. Nielsen: Is the minister prepared to announce the names of those who have been appointed to this legislative body?

Mr. Laing: No, sir, not today.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO INFORMATION ON RUSSIAN SPACE BOMB

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister had any discussions with Secretary McNamara or any defence officials of the United States with regard to the announcement of the secretary last week of a Soviet orbital space bomb?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have had no particular conversation with regard to this subject but I can say that we were briefed some time ago on this possible development. Some of our officials who actually share the command in the NORAD organization were aware of this possible development.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): A supplementary question. Is the government making any study of the implications of this development as it affects Canada-United States defence policy?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Yes, Mr. Speaker, of course we are.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether the minister or any of his officials are sitting in with United States officials on discussions with regard to the planning of the anti-ballistic missile screen which the United States is now proposing to construct?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Not just now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister said "Not just now". Have they been invited to participate in any such discussion and are they planning to participate in any such discussion?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): To my knowledge, we have not been invited and I do not think we plan to attend. When I said, "Not just now", I meant that remark to refer to the orbital system. Some months ago we received an intelligence report in which the possibility of the existence of such a system was referred to. It is in that context that my remarks should be viewed. We were made aware of the possibility of such a system many months ago.

AIR CANADA

REPORTED DUMPING OF POLLUTANTS INTO LAKE ST. LOUIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Rock (Jacques-Cartier-Lasalle): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister inquire into charges made by the city of Lachine that Air Canada at Dorval airport dumped 300 gallons of phenol into lake St. Louis on October 23, causing serious pollution and making the drinking water of the inhabitants of the area taste bad? Would the minister also inquire about the number of times Air Canada has poured industrial waste into the pluvial sewer which drains into lake St. Louis via the Bouchard river?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a representation which I assume has been noted by the minister. As he is referring to something which apparently happened some weeks ago, I wonder whether the question is urgent today.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as government house leader. In view of the fact that when we were in the other place a short while ago the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General delivered a speech from the throne, will the government be presenting a motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne, will there be a debate on it and will it be subject to the usual amendments and motions of non-confidence?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not if we can avoid it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are we not to be courteous enough to thank the Deputy of His Excellency for his gracious speech?

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would he clarify a statement he made at the University of Toronto last Friday? In his remarks the minister advised students to be careful of becoming overly moral with respect to the war in Viet Nam.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I finish? I am just coming to the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not like to interrupt the hon. member but I must remind her that when referring to statements made outside the house she may inquire of the Prime Minister only whether such statements represent government policy. The hon. member may frame her question in that way.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I try again, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: The minister is the Acting Prime Minister at this time.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Can the Acting Prime Minister say, since in his speech to the students at the University of Toronto he said that part of their university education is paid for from proceeds of the sale of Canadian goods including arms to the United States, some of which have been used in Viet Nam, whether the government considers it wrong for students to protest against this situation?

Mr. Speaker: The question as asked is not proper, and is not acceptable to the Chair.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Since this country has sent an increasing amount of war material to the United States and since that material has been used partly in the escalating war in Viet Nam, does the government plan to increase its financial aid for higher education? I ask that question because these two matters seem to have some relationship in the mind of the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Since the question asked by the hon. member is of a general nature, I think it is out of order. I do not think it can be answered at this time of day during the question period. I suggest to the hon. member that if a statement is made on motions he can make his remarks at that time.

Mr. Schreyer: Is it in order to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he is going to make a statement with respect to the subject matter of his remarks before the students of the University of Toronto?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of making such a statement. My advice to the hon. lady who raised this subject in the first instance —I see she is not here—is not to take too seriously everything she reads in newspapers. I could be glad to discuss with my hon. friend what I actually said and the context in which I said it. There was a wonderful exchange of words with a great group of young students, and I enjoyed the occasion thoroughly.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government house leader in his capacity as Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Mr. Nasserden: Would the minister use his good offices to make the one hundredth anniversary of parliament's first meeting a truly memorable occasion for the senior citizens of our country by providing them with a bonus of $100 each for this year?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall draw that suggestion to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: How unkind can you be.

Mr. Douglas: How naïve.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO BUSINESS FOR BALANCE OF WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the government house leader. To allow the opposition to plan its work in advance, can the government house leader say what business the house will be expected to discuss tomorrow and for the next few days after that?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if we complete second reading of the broadcasting bill today we shall take second reading of the capital punishment bill tomorrow and continue with that for several days. Later in the day I shall be better able to judge what tomorrow's business will be. Much will depend on whether we complete second reading of the broadcasting bill by the end of the day.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EARLY MEETING OF HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I direct another question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will he use his good offices with the chairman of the standing committee on Indian affairs, human rights and citizenship and immigration to have that committee meet at the earliest opportunity? Will he also refer to the committee the report "Indians and the Law" which was prepared for his department by the Canadian Corrections Association?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have had a discussion with the chairman of the Indian affairs committee. We hope to see that committee set up soon. I wish to obtain an assessment of the report "Indians and the Law" before referring the report to the committee.

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

The house resumed, from Friday, November 3, consideration of the motion of Miss LaMarsh for the second reading of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, some days ago when Bill No. C-163 was first introduced I read its provisions carefully. I am sure most other hon. members of the house also did so. With some of its provisions I could not disagree; others, I am afraid, gave me pause for thought.

There has been much talk in this country about whether parliament should continue to allow the existence of the crown corporation known as the C.B.C. or whether we should turn all broadcasting over to private interests. Some suggest that private interests could do a better and more efficient job in the broadcasting field than the C.B.C. could.

To do so, of course, would be to turn against the views of the broadcasting committee which stated that a distinctive Canadian broadcasting system was "essential to our national identity, unity and vitality in our second century", and went on to say that broadcasting might well be regarded as the central nervous system of Canadian nationhood. Although the report does not spell it out, it clearly indicates a desire for the continuance of a national broadcasting system such as the C.B.C. If, therefore, we decide that the C.B.C. should continue—and the bill before us certainly makes this clear—then it is our duty in parliament to try to fashion a bill which will provide adequate direction for those in the broadcasting field together with adequate protection of the public who are, after all, our primary concern.

This is a serious and important task, one which we in the opposition have approached with a concern no less great than that professed by the minister. We do not, of course, necessarily agree with every provision contained in the bill. My hon. friends, the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), have eloquently expressed some of our doubts and fears with regard to it. But we have offered our criticism in an attempt to improve the measure, to make it a better instrument with which to serve the public in the vital field of broadcasting.

I can assure the minister it was with these aims in mind that proposals have been advanced to have this bill considered in the standing committee on broadcasting prior to second reading. We feel this is a worth-while aim and in this connection I believe it would be useful to refer to what was said by my hon. friend from Royal when he spoke on this bill, as reported at pages 3760 and 3761 of Hansard.

> I believe this bill should go back to the parliamentary committee because in so many ways it differs from the report of the special committee. Here I should like to suggest, and I do so quite sincerely, that it be sent to committee before approval in principle. The committee has the competence and ability, I say with respect, to improve this bill and make it a more democratic evocation of what the policy of the government should be. I think it would be a landmark in the long and perilous journey toward parliamentary reform if the Secretary of State would agree that what I suggest is an imaginative and proper procedure. If we really mean the parliamentary committee system to be effective, the minister will jump to accept this suggestion. I assure her that it is not a delaying tactic; it is a reforming tactic. It is not a device to kill the bill; it is a genuine attempt to use the latent talent and experience of parliamentarians for the improvement of the bill at an early stage of its passage through the house.

This we in the opposition sincerely believe, and the disturbing events of the past few days have been a powerful force in underlining and reinforcing our suggestion.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

> That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "This bill be not read a second time until the subject matter of the bill has been referred to the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts for review and until the committee has reported to the house."

This amendment has been necessitated by the incredible spectacle of the past few days. On the one hand we see the minister making charges of "rotten management" in the C.B.C. and on the other we find the president of that corporation demanding that the minister substantiate the serious charges she has made against management. Strangely enough, even as the minister is making her charges the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the leader of the government, is publicly praising the C.B.C. for the excellent job it has done. Further complicating the situation is the fact that the president of the C.B.C voluntarily resigned over a year ago but was urged to stay on by this same government.

Here we have a situation where a minister in charge of a crown corporation is being challenged, most unwisely, I believe, by a man who is responsible not just for the C.B.C. but to the minister herself and through her to the parliament of Canada. It is clear that the minister herself has been most unwise in the type of blanket charges she has made, particularly since she has not specified those charges for the information of those to whom she is responsible, not the management of the C.B.C. but the parliament of Canada and, through its members, the people of Canada.

I was astonished, as were many other hon. members, to hear her say in reply to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) the other day: "It could be no secret to anyone who knew anything about broadcasting that there was a problem of management." I agree with that. Then the minister went on: "But what I learned about in the past few weeks was very much worse than that." It is the last part which concerns us most. What are these unknown things which the minister has learned about in the past few weeks? Surely we in this parliament as well as the people of Canada have a right to know. On behalf of the people of Canada this parliament provides more than $160 million annually for the C.B.C. and I believe our people have an inalienable right to know how their money is being spent.

Perhaps the minister spoke out of sheer frustration the other day. It is surely clear that all the blame for this unsavoury situation cannot be laid at her doorstep. It is the Prime Minister who has continually frustrated attempts to name a new head of the C.B.C. and who has continually expressed views directly opposed to those of the Secretary of State, making her position at times untenable. The Secretary of State may have been indiscreet but there are many people in Canada who believe that at least she was honest in what she said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brand: I would commend that particular view to members of the press gallery.

[Mr. Brand.]

How can we in this context hope to understand or improve the bill before us unless we have an opportunity to hear the full story as it should be placed before members of the standing committee on broadcasting? It is for this reason I have moved my amendment and I urge the house to give it consideration realizing that on this side we are totally sincere in our efforts to expand and improve the legislation before us. I repeat that by this manoeuvre we have no intention of trying to kill the bill. But we cannot do a proper job until we know what the facts are, and this will be one of the results of bringing the bill before the committee prior to second reading.

While hon. members are studying the amendment, perhaps I may make a few of the remarks I had intended to make prior to the occurrences of the last few days. When the Prime Minister finally answered my question regarding C.B.C. coverage in Saskatoon the reaction of the citizens of that city was entirely predictable. The Saskatoon Board of Trade, through its commissioner, Mr. Bert Saltoum, said it was inconceivable that the federal government should shelve the plans and expressed extreme disappointment about the decision.

• (5:10 p.m.)

As reported in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of November 2 he said:

> In the light of all the facts, the board cannot understand the government decision. It notes that the longer the project is delayed the more it will cost when eventually built.

The report continued:

> Mr. Salloum said a cut-back on government spending was carried on on this project until the freeze was lifted last year and the C.B.C. applied to the Board of Broadcast Governors for the Saskatoon station. "The B.B.G. approved the application and since then the matter has been awaiting cabinet approval."
> "Saskatoon, it was said, would have a second television outlet by the fall of 1968?

The article went on to quote a statement made by the minister in charge of the C.B.C. in which she said:

> I concur that a proposed C.B.C. television outlet for Saskatoon is of critical importance and I can assure you that utmost consideration is being given to it.

Commissioner Salloum added:

> In the light of all the facts, we cannot understand the government decision.

The mayor of our city, Sidney Buckwold, also got into the act and, as reported in the article, termed the postponement of the C.B.C. station "shameful." He said:

I fully appreciate the financial problems of the federal government, but I believe it is shameful that this project, promised by the C.B.C. to the citizens of Saskatoon for several years, should be postponed.

He said a second television station in the city is urgently needed and the general reaction of the public has indicated a preference for a full C.B.C. station.

There are many other comments by people from my city. There is no question but that the people of Saskatoon want alternative service. When we consider that they pay the same amount of taxes as any other region of Canada for support of the C.B.C., we believe they should be entitled to alternative coverage, the same as is now being received by many other cities of comparable size in Canada.

We believe it is mandatory that the government should reconsider its decision and at least as a temporary measure provide alternative service by a C.B.C. transmitter without studio facilities or allow private broadcasting to fill the void that will be left by this decision of the government. The decision to cancel the station is another example of how the leader of the government has frustrated the wishes of the minister in charge. It flies in the face of the recommendation in the white paper on broadcasting, and in the report of the committee on broadcasting which on page 9 reads as follows:

We recommend ... wherever practical, in areas now receiving only one Canadian service, if the service is through a private outlet, the alternative should be provided by C.B.C. If C.B.C. is now the sole service, the second service should be private.

Then there appears this significant sentence:

Where there are serious obstacles to such parallel development, however, these should not prohibit the extension of alternate service by other means, at least on a temporary basis.

This is the recommendation of the committee that we would like to see invoked.

At present there are rumours going around in the city of Saskatoon about the premier of Saskatchewan having visited the Prime Minister just before this announcement was made. It is being said that he discussed and made some sort of arrangement to allow a private station in Saskatchewan, incidentally a station which has some feeling for the present government, to put a satellite in the Saskatoon area, thus helping the private station out of an uneconomic situation. It is up to the government to kill this type of rumour before it gains too much credence in the minds of the people in the city I represent.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I could be permitted to make a few general remarks about some other facets of the bill before us. The white paper issued in 1966 stated one of the objectives of the C.B.C. as follows:

The determination to develop and maintain a national system of radio and t.v. broadcasting in Canada as an essential part of the continuing resolve for Canadian identity and Canadian unity.

The report of the broadcasting committee in March, 1967, put it similarly but in different words which I quoted earlier, namely:

A distinctively Canadian broadcasting system is essential to our national identity, unity and vitality in our second century.

Speaking personally, I am happy to see that the bill before us agrees with these two proposals, but I say that I will support this concept only as long as the private sector of broadcasting is also fully available to every Canadian. I will support it so long as those areas not presently covered by the C.B.C. will receive C.B.C. service. I will support it so long as the provisions in this bill are meaningful so far as the full and varied use of Canadian talent—writers, producers, actors and so on—is concerned. I will support it so long as it is truly Canadian and so long as its prime objective is the fostering not only of a distinctive Canadianism but also the encouragement of those Canadians involved in the arts.

The C.B.C. should be an instrument not of propaganda but of education. I must confess that I share the deep concern of the hon. member for Yukon when he referred to that clause in the bill which gives the cabinet power to pre-empt any program and broadcast any other program that either the executive committee or the governor in council deems to be of special significance to Canadians generally. The minister has said, and I note that the distinguished advocate from York South has also said, that the government would never take advantage of this provision for propaganda purposes. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, then this clause should not be in the bill at all.

A truly distinctive Canadian broadcasting system should be an instrument not only of entertainment but of enlightenment. It should be a means of communication between various regions to promote better understanding between them. It should not become the agent of any one group seeking to promote its views and its views alone. Rather, it should be the means to provide stimulating and thought-provoking discussion.

It should be a cohesive factor in Canadian life. Earlier I quoted the aim of a national system of radio and television, and in this regard may I say that unity should be the result of a good broadcasting policy on the part of a viable C.B.C. and should not be a means to an end. The C.B.C. should not be used as an instrument to forge unity. Rather, as it helps one region of Canada to understand the others better, as it helps one racial group to understand and appreciate others, it will have done its work well and will have helped immeasurably in forging a united Canada, proud of its different origins and confident despite its diversity.

Presuming that we accept the above premises, certain other consequences become apparent. I have mentioned some of them previously. First, to achieve such lofty aims C.B.C. radio and television must reach every citizen in our country and, as I pointed out before, this is not yet a reality. Consequently the C.B.C. must have sufficient funds in order to provide the kind of service required. It is meaningless to put these words on paper and then not provide the means to give the type of service we hope to see.

The C.B.C. must also have sufficient flexibility and stability in regard to the moneys appropriated to allow meaningful, long-range planning. But it must also be responsible to the people of Canada and the parliament of Canada who provide the money with which it operates. At the same time authority must be permitted to allow good corporate management with the proviso that artistic freedom be given prominence, because only in this way can the C.B.C. mature and its influence increase. As I said before, allowing the C.B.C. to be used as an instrument of propaganda for any pressure group is to be mentioned only to be condemned.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer once more to the amendment I have placed before the house. Once again I ask hon. members on both sides to consider how we in the official opposition view this amendment. Certain allegations have been made by the minister. Counter-charges have been hurled back by the C.B.C. This unseemly situation must not be allowed to continue.

• (5:20 p.m.)

As I have said before, it is the right of every taxpayer in this country to know exactly how the money provided to the C.B.C. is being spent by it. If the minister feels that her responsibility is to the management of the C.B.C. only, then I must in all honesty say that I disagree most heartily with this concept. It is the members of this house and the people of Canada who should know what is rotten in the management of the C.B.C. As parliamentarians, before we discuss the bill and before we propose amendments as the minister has invited us to do, we must know what is going on.

In the last few weeks factors have come to light which we did not have an opportunity to discuss in the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts. In many ways this is a new kettle of fish. We must have an opportunity to hear what these charges are. The Canadian people must know what the charges are. When we have this information we would hope to be able to come up then with a bill that will provide for the Canadian nation the type of guidance and control that all of us would like to see in this vital area of broadcasting which affects every facet of Canadian life.

Mr. Speaker: Before the amendment moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon is placed before the house I should like to say I have had an opportunity to look at it from a procedural standpoint. I would certainly appreciate having the views of hon. members in respect of whether this amendment in its exact form is acceptable from the procedural standpoint.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am glad you have raised this point because it provides a very useful opportunity, both in respect of this bill and the general practice, to deal with this matter. As Your Honour is aware, I believe there is ample precedent in the customs and practices of this house for the moving of the type of amendment by which the subject matter of a bill may be referred to a committee before second reading. I believe it is perfectly proper to move such a motion.

It is true we have changed what in the past has been the formal wording of such an amendment. At this time, however, when so much is being said about the reform of parliament I think we should be free, when we the members of the house and Your Honour see an opportunity to change the substantive practice of the house, to seek out ways and means by which we can make our motion conform to what is the intent of hon. members. I submit there should not be a continued slavish adherence to a certain type of form which might have been acceptable to a Speaker generations ago.

In his amendment the hon. member for Saskatoon is suggesting that there should be a condition attached to the second reading of this bill. Instead of saying, as has been the custom in the past, that the bill be not now read a second time and that the subject matter be referred to a committee, he is saying that the bill be not read a second time until this condition has been fulfilled. In each case precisely the same result would be achieved. Since hon. members on this side, and I assume many other hon. members, feel that a real issue has arisen which should be considered in view of the fact that it arose since the bill first was presented for second reading, we believe hon. members should have the right, either by themselves if they are not members of the committee or through their colleagues who are members of the committee, to make a thorough and searching inquiry into certain aspects of the bill.

Unfortunately, as we all know, too often it becomes necessary for members of the opposition to move a motion of this type because they seek valid and important information before being placed in the position where they must vote either yea or nay on a bill of this kind. This is precisely the reason we are doing this today. I should like to say that originally, upon reading the bill and listening to the presentations of the first several hon. members who spoke, I felt that in committee of the whole I would have an opportunity to discuss the many specific aspects of the bill. I could see no valid objection to the broad principle that there should be a continuation of the private and public sectors and that there should be a regulatory board which would have certain rights with regard to both the public and private sectors. Now, however, because of what has arisen over the week end I am in the position, as I am sure many other members of the house are, that I should like to know, before I am called upon to vote yea or nay on second reading, what the facts are which have been the subject of this controversy. Because of what has occurred there may be clauses in this bill to which we would take serious objection.
