Writen especially for the Miramichi Advance. FEL MULLEN'S WALK AND TALK.

A BIRD FINDER OF FACT—By George J. Forbes. Southwold, Ontario.

CHAPTER—II. HOW OLD FRIENDS WILL COME TOGETHER.

IN PAR OF AMERICA PHIL MURPHY WITH JERRY HOGAN'S FRIEND OF HIS FATHER—SHOWS HOW JERRY IN HIS HEAD BENEVOLENCE IS EVERY MAN'S FRIEND (WELL HIS MONEY LASTS).

—A "BARAK DOWN" AT JERRY'S.

One next scene unfolds itself at a village in the Maritime Provinces which we will call Mt. Pleasant, but which was known through the surrounding country as "the Bridge." It was situated at the head of a noble estuary and was full as straggling as the average of villages anywhere. The site furnished no excuse for irregularity, approaching rather to a tolerable level without the intervention of any marsh or abrupt ravines. The approaches to "the Bridge" were easy. On both sides of the road leading thereto, the various shop keepers and artisans had chosen to build in the free and easy style which indicates the absence of corporate supervision. On one point all seemed to be agreed and there was the entire destruction of all the noble trees which had grown and flourished for centuries around this chosen domicile. With the primeval forest largely as a background, the place looked bare and unwelcoming to the traveller whatever character it might have possessed in the eyes of the denizens and the surrounding farmers, whose ideal of beauty was an unbounded area of clear and unbroken surface. The latter in his haste to get rid of a serious obstruction had forgotten that trees possess any beauty whatever, and was only reminded of his error on passing the grounds of a few who thought differently and who had not yet been converted to a more liberal view of the matter.

From ten to twenty-five ships were launched annually, there furnishing employment for many men. It was also the shipping center for the entire region and the place at which the people thereof made their purchases. There were several shops with well assorted stocks, a couple of taverns, a Doctor's office and many boarding houses for the accommodation of the single men, with the usual proportion of family cottages. Provisions were cheap and the farmers, having little to do in winter, hauled all kinds of timber at marvellously low rates. It will thus be seen that circumstances tended to favour the builder, but the latter shared his prosperity with his workmen by paying them good wages. Twice a week a steamer ran up from a very considerable town eight miles distant. By this conveyance any product might be turned into cash, between the rising and the setting sun, provided the sailing was not disposed to be contented with local prices, consequently there was no scarcity of that, the love of which is "the root of all evil."

A lot of choice spirits made these ships make the scene of their labors. They followed the Scriptural injunction of taking "no heed for the morrow" a trifle more closely than the inspired author ever intended. Monday morning always found the honest son of toil ready to take a fresh start in the world. After the wild orgies of Saturday night his spirit was bright and his body healthy, and he had had his fill of the good things of life.

He had been unable to eat any breakfast till his stomach was stirred up, very liquids and he found it necessary to repeat the dose just before dinner. When evening would come a quiet game of cards for the "drinks" secured him at least three or four more "squanders." If he needed any programs it was in the shape of an increase in the evening stimulant and the culmination would be reached with the end of the week. It will thus be seen that a certain portion of humanity about this place was continually in a highly indolent state, only needing a small addition of fuel to break forth in our fearful drunken configuration. For this, there were times and seasons, such as a raffle, a dance, launch, or the annual fair and races. At such times not less than three or four days were required to finish the debauch; nature becoming exhausted with the means of the jolly minded individual.

On a certain fine day, nearly twenty years ago, a thin-limbed, active looking man might have been seen approaching the Bridge with a trim bundle suspended from the end of his stick. Though he had walked eighteen miles that forenoon, he did not show any signs of weariness. His step was springy and his person erect. A look of good-humored expectancy was indicated by his countenance, as if a good dinner would be far from unacceptable. It was Phil. He has been for some months in the city, and is glad to get to some place where his identity is not entirely lost. Hearing of the brick times here, he has come out to try his fortune, without any particular predilections as to what he will term his hand. Among the diversities of occupation he thinks that surely he will find something to suit him. Casting his eyes up and to one side, he notices that Jerry Hogan has accommodations for man and beast, and is loomed to sell liquor. The name is familiar as his own, and is that of a countryman, which is a recommendation to a stranger in a strange land. He will go in. Jerry is behind the bar, and is quick to discern Phil's nationality. Enquiring his name, the worthy landlord is so glad to see him. With much heartiness he is invited to take a drink while dinner is getting ready. A confidential confab is soon entered on.

"An' ye're from New Brunswick, Mr. Mulloy," said Jerry. "This may say I'm meetin' a brother, altho'—Sore I know your father well, honest man. I'm from Clonmel, myself. You must have heard of Phadrick Hogan of Philaloo farm."

"Deed and I did," said Phil—"I'm born to luck yet. How glad I'm to meet ye, Mr. Hogan."

"No gladder than myself," responded Jerry, "and how's yer father, a fine man, an' in every way respectable. Ye come of decent people anyhow."

"Thank ye for the compliment, an' I may say that I can return it on yer part," replied Phil.

"An' how's times in the old country, are they at the old fashion fight yet."

I'm out of practice entirely. Ye'll hardly believe me, but I've had it at these thirty years."

"Ye're no great loser. Sure it's a barbarous fashion anyhow. Sorra the foot I'd ever have put in this country only for them kind of doings."

"Ye don't say so? Killed a couple maybe and brought down the whole fation on ye?"

"No indeed," said Phil, "I didn't believe in scalpin' a man or breakin' his bones to say nothing of the chances of killin' him. In takin' the part of a poor devil of the opposite faction who was about to be killed, against my own flesh and blood, I brought down the hell ginstation on me, and had to live. Even me own father wouldn't speak to me."

"Too bad! too bad indeed!" mused Jerry. "Let me see, the factin' yer part of the country used to keep yer blackthorns polished as was the Maguire, O'Rourke, O'Brins. Couldn't ye write home that ye've killed two Maguires out and out, with two or three of the others given over by the doctors and recavin' the last rites at the Church. I'm a Justice of the peace and will certify to the truth of the whole thing. The old gentleman ud send a stammer for ye right away."

"Bad luck to the one of them I'll ever trouble again, or let them know I'm in the land of the livin'." said Phil stoutly.

"Well, well, every man knows his own business best. They didn't turn ye off honest handed? queried Jerry.

"Sorra a copper, but fifty pounds I handled, an' him with his thousands; the whole fation being provided for," said Phil.

Mrs. Hogan now comes in to announce dinner, when Jerry duly introduces our hero as a son of his father's blood friend at home and throws in any quantity of complimentary phrases on his behalf.

Mr. H. is so kind and so glad to make his acquaintance. It does her heart good to see any one fresh from the old sod. He'll have something to drink. No—Oh, he must for the sake of dear old Ireland and that that's left behind. This last appeal is irresistible. Phil does drink and goes to dinner; and while he is eating it, we will have something to say of the worthy landlord.

Jerry Hogan was well known throughout the surrounding country. For many years he had followed the occupation of digging wells and cellars, and he would do him the justice to say that none performed his work more faithfully. But the good man had a soul above such petty considerations. He saw that many men with no greater ability than himself had amassed a fortune and why should he not try and do the same? Having no family he had saved quite a considerable penny. "The Bridge" was a rising place, so that a man who started in the right way could not fail to do well. A tavern was wanted near the accommodation of the surrounding country, so many parties had informed him. Seeing that he could hardly be a loser, a house was secured for a term of years, with the privilege of purchase.

From the beginning he did well. Affable, goodnatured, and ever as ready to give as to take a treat, his popularity was unbounded. No better and purer stock of liquors was to be found in the country and as he received them, so he sold them. In a few years the house was paid for and furnished with every needful article. A heavy deposit in the Bank of the neighbouring town, increasing in a satisfactory ratio soon followed. In fact Jerry was making money rapidly. He had followed this line of conduct his name had never been brought into these pages. His friends soon began to remark his uncommon keenness for filthy lucre. The more pounds (we had no decimal currency then) he received the more anxious he seemed to be in multiplying them. A man who spent a pound, if it was his last one, was a good fellow, while he who did the same and yet took away a well filled pocketbook jeopardized his reputation in the tenderest point. For the average shipyard men, Jerry was, indeed, a stumbling block. A week's credit was never refused for liquor, even if Jerry was morally certain that it would never be paid. Cards and dice were always ready to play and shako for the drinks, and there was a dance every fortnight which was free to all. A good fiddler, (who played for his whiskey) was always in attendance.

Every man who had had experience or exercised his power of observation closely, must have noticed that dancing is dry work. The man who applies himself vigorously to this pastime, finds his thirst increasing as the square root of numbers. Having one drink he desires two, and getting the two, he must needs have four, and so on. It was no doubt close observation on this phase of the liquor question which induced the Dutchman to venture the trite remark, "The too much whiskey ye took; too much Lager Beer yer good," handing him down to future generations as one whose name is worthy of a place among the men of science and discovery. It was long since Jerry had been fully enlightened on this point and he was never slack to take advantage of any weak spot thus exposed.

Farmer Murphy, a man who drinks rarely, has come to the Bridge to sell two loads of oats, for which he has received ready money. He has paid for his dinner and is only waiting for his horses to finish their, in order that he may go to his home, some ten miles distant. There is no sign of his calling for anything. In a few minutes he will be off with the crisp Bank notes in his pockets, and will be gone forever from "the Bridge." Jerry is equal to the occasion. "Och! I'm not far gettin', said he, "I've some of the most illigant Irish whiskey ye ever tasted; ye must taste some of it from me. Mr. Murphy, are ye too, Shanah, for the sake of the place where yer father is buried?"

Murphy is by no means willing, but the landlord will not be refused and his efforts are ably seconded by Shanahan. The liquor is of the very best, and soon after the glass is swallowed, the latter who is a "copper" for Jerry, at a wink, orders another round only too willingly, knowing he will have the drink and never be called on for the pay. This soon tells on the honest farmer and, not wishing to appear mean, he calls on another round. Not being used to strong waters, he soon loses all control of himself.
