THE NAMELESS KNIGHT. It is at the appointed place
The knight awaits the prize,
And mirrored in the Raine's fair face
The sun has nearly run his race,
Yet none have shown the lady grace,
For there the gauntlet lies.

Now, lovely Elsc, raise your prayer, There is no earthly aid, No champion for the lady fair To cope with Teiramonde will dare, But silently behold despair Seize on the hapless maid. For of all Christendom, what knight As Telramonde is bold? He slew the drazon by his might, The dragon grim that put to flight The Swedish host arrayed to fight The monster in his hold.

But hark! Far up the winding Rhine Is heard a bugle note, The dying rays reflected shine From glittering shield of silver fine, Where spreading forth the battle sign, Appears a dainty boat.

Drawing the boat by ropes of gold,
There swims a swan, snow white,
And to the breeze its wings unfold
Like sails, and so the course control
The boat is on the waters rolled,
And safely bears a knight. A silver shield is on his breast,
With gems his sword-hilt beams;
The peacock feather in his creet
His royal lineage doth attest;
And covering low his purple vest
His hair all golden gleams.

To where poor Elsa stands in fear, 'The boat and Knight are brought, 'I come to scourge this traitor is to the falsehoods to the ear Of Henry he has dared to bear; 'And bring his claims to naught." And then upon the grassy plain Steps forth thegallant knight; And Teiramonde the bold is slain; The first blow cleaves his head in twain, His guard against the stroke is vain— So Heaven defends the right.

"Now by my faith: 'the Emperor cries,
"Thou art a worthy knight:
And if we may believe our eyes,
The maid will give to you the prize
For which Sir Telramonde now lies
In such a sorry plight."

* * * * * * * * *

One day they walked the river-side,
The nameless knight and she.
"Here first I saw thy shallop ride
Upon the smooth Rhine's quiet tide;
Since all those years I've been thy bride,
And you unknown to me." "I am the son of Parcival
Who found the holy Grail.
And with my sire I guard the hal
To see that harm may not befall
The sacred relic. And they call Me, Lohengrin, farewell."

Then down the Rhine was seen to float. Drawn by a swan, snow white,
Upon the buoyant flood, a boat:
And ti rough the air a bugle-note
Called to Mount Salva, far remote
To Guard the Grail, the knight. Then while his wife in sorrow wails,
The knight has left the shore,
Again are spread the feathery sails
To win the aid of favoring gales;
And never in those pleasant vales,
Is Lohengrin seen more.

bankruptcy and sudden death, it is pleasant to encounter occasionally the record of an active and successful business career. Such a life was that of the late lamented Cochise, who was a leading member for many years of the rifle and scalping-knife trade on the Westers border. His success in his peculiar line had been so great that, according to a writer in a Western paper, a table was made the Maid passed the half in 1.07. From that point she never flagged in her fast for an instant, and scarcely left the work information of the War Department. From this it appeared that by a strict attention to business, getting up early, going to bed late, and lying low generally, Cochise had succeeded in disposing with his own hands of 49 Mexicans and half-breeds, 27 Americans, 4 Apaches, 3 Germans, 2 Englishmen, and 1 Frenchman. Very edifving reading this mast have been for the War Department. If to this pretty total of 86 murders there could have been added the work of this indefatigable chief during the last few years, we should have had some very instructive statistics. The worder is that he never shot and chopped his way into Congress. Prebably, however, the men of the border, much as they must have admired him, did not care to become constituents of a man who made acquaintances to scalp them.

Judge Lynch's motto has been long supposed to be "an eve for an eve a supposed to be "an eve for an eve a supposed to be "an eve for an eve a supposed to be "an eve for an eve a supposed to be "an eve for an eve a supposed to be "an eve for an Judge Lynch's motto has been long supposed to be "an eye for an eye, a

In that land of justice and severity, they demand a whole set of teeth in reparation for the loss of a single molar. In 1872 one Box was suspected of entering a store in a fit of temporary forget ulness, while the owner was absent, and naking away with some of its contents. Mr. Box was caught and hanged. And that is not all. Three other citizens, named Stegall, Cook and Fraker, have at various times since been suspected of the robbery, and, necessarily it seems according to border jurisprudence, have been hanged also. There can be no doubt that this course consistently pursued will finally bring the guilty man to his rope's end, if he has not already reached it; but c unidering the fact that two years have elapsed between the robbery and the last execution, and remembering, too, that the unfortunate Fraker is pronounced innocent by all of his neighbors, people are beginning to ask whe her these stern avengers of Cedar County, whose devotion to law is such as to induce them to hang suspected men and rob them while they are dying, are not in danger of run-

An old man and his wife who came yes terday from Sussex by the train saw about 30 hackmen shouting "hack" at them. The man took it all as a high compliment, and turning to the old lady, he said: "I tell you, mother, they think we are something great, or they'd never had all these carriages down here to meet us. I wonder how they knew we was coming."

Harrisburg, Pa., has just witnessed an extraordinary fecundity of legal proceedings. Let us state them according to the order of their chronology. 1. Maggie Bennett charged several young men with having broken into her shop. 2. Then a Miss Amanda, friend of the young men, caused the arrest of Maggie for selling "O be joyful" without a license. 3. Next Maggie caused the arrest of Amanda and her young man for immorality. 4. Amanda retaliated by having Maggie arrested for selling cigars without a United States license. She has been taken to Philadelphia for trial, and so the little game is for the present suspended. Moreover, her father, who was wont to retire at nine, now sits up because he cannot sleep on account of the continual "banging" in the armory.
