A foot of straw on the top absosbs the moisture and saves the hay. "One farmer out 12 to 14 tone; of mixed timothy and clover, and carted as fast as cut, with out regard to weather. Straw was placed on the top to absorb the moisture. The straw rotted but the hay turned out good. Another cut four n one day. Threatening rain caused its hurried

The half bent was partially injured by adding other fodder, and thus keeping the steam in. Another knew of 30 to 40 tons of hay being cut and carted the same day. The mow smoked sweat and generated toadstools, but only the top was spoiled. The balance was aweet and good, the blossoms were unchanged, and the catle lapped it down like meal."
