Watches!

Our sales this year have been larger than last, although there has been more competition. A good many who have purchased trashy watches are waking up sorry, and the reaction will have the effect of creating a better demand for reliable goods.
We have no fear to find with honest competition so long as right goods are sold but do think the sale of dishonest goods ought to be prohibited.

SEE OUR NEW WALTHAM WATCHES

Up to date in quality and at fair prices. Gold filled cases warranted from 15 to 25 years. Silver cases lower than ever.

Items of Interest to Catholic Readers in the Magazines.

A Protestant Failure.
(From the Sacred Heart Review.)

Inasmuch as he is plainly writing of non-Catholics—for what he says is not applicable to Catholics—the article which Mr. T. S. Loneragan contributes to the current issue of the Arena, on "The Church and the Masses," may be regarded as an acknowledgment on his part of one of the many failures of Protestantism as a religion. Mr. Loneragan asserts that non-churchgoing among Protestants is on the increase, and he says this is particularly true of the Protestant agricultural and working population, whose members, he adds, are becoming more and more alienated from their respective churches. In illustration of that alienation he cites the fact that when a Protestant church committee in this State, some time ago, asked two hundred labor leaders to discover and report to it what was the attitude of workmen toward the church—the Protestant churches being understood—very few of those leaders vouchsafed any reply to the committee's request. On the other side, he instances the circumstance that when the secretary of a labor union, not long since, sent five hundred circulars to as many ministers asking them to preach against Sunday labor, very few of the preachers paid any attention to the matter. From these two happenings it would seem to follow that if the working classes have very scanty regard for the Protestant churches, those churches take but very little interest in matters which are of paramount importance to the working people. And yet, as Mr. Loneragan pointedly remarks, the Founder of Christianity was Himself a working man, and religion and morality, to inculcate which virtues is one of the principal duties of all churches, are the only true safeguard of our liberty and free institutions; and, in religion and morality, which may be looked for in communities where the people are not churchgoing, stand in the relation of twin sisters.

Down in Porto Rico.

The August Century is largely given up to articles dealing with the lands wherein the American and Spanish forces have been battling with each other this spring and summer, and one of those papers, written by Mr. F. A. Ober, furnishes the reader with some interesting information about Porto Rico and its people. According to Mr. Ober, the present population of this island is 806,000, of whom 306,000 are colored. This population is smaller by 150,000 in round figures, than that given in the statistical report of the diocese of San Juan; but Mr. Ober practically agrees with that report in another item. He says that there are five hundred primary schools in Porto Rico—the diocese report puts the number of such schools at 547—as well as others of secondary and higher grade. All these schools are under the guidance of the Church, through whose influence they were established; and Mr. Ober's figures must be something of a surprise to those individuals who contend that the Church has done nothing for the education of the people in Cuba and Porto Rico and the Philippines. Mr. Ober tells us that the San Juan cathedral is a stately edifice with three apse naves, and that its high altar is constructed of the finest marble. In the church of Providence in San Juan, he also informs us, stands a famous image of Nuestra Señora de los Remedios so rich in adornments that the cloak with which the statue is draped on grand occasions has a value of $1,500, while the jewels it possesses represent $20,000. In view of the interest now attaching to Porto Rico, Mr. Ober's paper is a very timely one.

Life in Manila.

Equally time is the contribution which Mr. Wallace Cumming makes to the same magazine on "Life in Manila," though a perusal of his paper is apt to give people who have learned the real condition of things in that Philippine city the idea that Mr. Cumming's treatment of his subject is not as correct as it might be. He is careful to tell us that the religious orders are strong in numbers in the archipelago, but he makes no mention of the good they have accomplished there, where, according to Professor Blumentritt, whose authority is universally acknowledged, "the Catholic missionaries are unusually active not only in the spread of Christianity and civilization, but also in the geographical and ethnographical exploration of the archipelago." He informs us that all education is in the hands of the priests, but neglects to add that Manila, as Hon. John Barrett, whose long residence in the East qualified him to write on the subject, asserts, "was the seat of colleges, observatories and technical schools before Chicago had existence." He declares that no translation of the Bible—no Protestant version is what he means—and no Protestant church or service are allowed in the Philippine capital. That may be true. Even Protestant Germany found it advisable and even necessary to exclude from one of her eastern colonies certain American preachers.

No Room for Class Churches.
Mr. Loneragan is especially, but not unwarrantably, severe in his criticism of that phase of Protestantism which builds one church for wealthy and another for poor worshippers. There should be no room, he well says, in this free country for class churches. That statement is, of course, sound enough; but a much more vigorous condemnation of class churches can be found in the character of Christianity itself, which its Divine Founder instituted, not for the benefit of any particular class, but for the salvation of all mankind, and to whose first teachers, to be by them transmitted to their successors, he left the poor as a special legacy. Lamentable as has been the failure of Protestantism in the line of persuading people to comply with their religious duties and attend Sunday services, Mr. Loneragan evidently believes that failure is not altogether irremediable. "When ministers," says he, "open wide the doors of their churches, preach the gospel of Christ, and apply it to the social problems of the day, expose the cause of labor, extend sympathies to the poor and unfortunate, do away with classing criticism, and teach the classes the duties they owe to society and religion alike, then the working people will go to church." This advice is good as far as it goes, but it is capable of being improved upon or, at least, enlarged. There are, of course, not a few Protestant ministers and churches against whom which Mr. Loneragan's criticisms can not justly be leveled. But there is a still larger number to which and whom they are literally applicable; and it is to be feared that his well-meant advice will pass unheeded by such preachers and churches.

Women in Science.

The current Popular Science Monthly has a short article on the above subject, whose author admits that she drew much of the information contained in it from M. Rebiere's "Les Femmes dans la Science," a work giving the names of six hundred women who distinguished themselves in one or another scientific line. Among these feminine scientists was Novella d' Andrea, daughter of a fourteenth century Bologna professor, who often took her father's place in the university lecture room, and was so beautiful that she had to stand behind a screen while lecturing, in order that the students might heed her words and not become lost in the contemplation of her loveliness. St. Hildegard is also mentioned and proclaimed the patron saint of physicians. Lucrezia Bassi, Anna Manzolini and Maria Agnesi are also named, all three being natives of Bologna and honored by the famous university of that city. More modern names are those of Madame Lavoisier, Sophie Kowalevski, Caroline Herschel, Mary Somerville, Maria Mitchell and Agnes Mary Clerke, the well known contemporary Catholic astronomical writer, whose pen frequently contributes to European and American publications. The old Catholic universities of medieval times, this paper tells us, were always prompt to recognize the intellectual abilities of women and gave them every opportunity of gaining and imparting knowledge. The universities had female professors in many instances on their staffs, and the acquirements of those women were far in advance of those of the sweet girl graduates of modern days, whose learning this writer facetiously sums up by saying that she "Knows the great uncles of Moses,

And the date of the war of the roses;
And the reason of things—
Why the Italians wore rings
In their red aboriginal noses."

The humorous side of clerical life in the Church of England is depicted by Ahtol Forbes can not be said to be wholly mirthful. The wives of the bishops are no joke. Very often they are not "given to meddling; and it sometimes happens that a diocese is starved in order to insure that madam and the children shall continue to live in a palace, or the nearest approach. Mr. Forbes has evidently had unpleasant experiences with episcopal dames, and is of opinion that they as well as their husbands should be chosen vessels. "If we are to have married bishops," he says, "will those who bestow bishoprics have also a personal interview with the wife before making an abate offer?" If the clergy are often disappointed to find that their leaders are not fathers in God, the bishop, on the other hand, are sorely tried by members of their own order. We have often made fun of those worthies, but we were moved to compunction on reading a letter written to the Ecclesiastical hierarchy by the Archbishop of Canterbury, quoted by R. C. Gleason in a recent number of the Catholic.

Man I have known." It is a sad and letter, and to Dean Farrar's that the Archbishop's life was shortened by the vexations he endured. We wondered at the lack of sympathy between American and English bishops until we read these lines: My house is always full of bishops at the Lambeth Conference: every American bishop comes with his family and stays three days. erican preachers, and Mr. Cumming ought to be commended for his Protestant missionaries in Hawaii sent the first Catholic missionaries out of those islands, and so influenced the government that it was not until France sent a warship to Honolulu that Catholic priests were permitted to land and minister to the Catholic islanders. Mr. Cumming finds fault with the number of holidays kept at Manila, whereas one of our daily papers, not long ago, said that one might profitably imitate the people of our new dependencies and add to the number of our own holidays. Then the public processions held on great feast days are not altogether pleasing to Mr. Cumming, with their pyrotechnical accessories. He falls, we think, into a rather ludicrous error when he speaks of the long, loose robes worn by the processions as one of the days of Holy Week as their grave clothes for the probability is that these robes were simply penitential garments worn in deference to the sorrowful spirit of the season. According to this article these Manila religious processions occur chiefly in the evening, and thousands of people participate in them.

ness, begins months before, and depends daily, and leaves one worn out and disgusted. I wonder how many American bishops I can reach through this letter? I beg of them, not to repair to Lambeth palace any more with their families, consisting for the most part of four or five unruly kids with two or three half-grown-up incubations. If our bishops must go where they are not wanted, on the principle that they cease to be men when they become bishops, then let them go as bachelors, and thus lessen by one-fifth the roll of the Archbishop's hospitality. Besides, celibacy is the thing now. If each bishop brings his wife and say only four terrers of children, this would make a company of four hundred persons, for the most part disturbing and disorderly in character, to provide for and entertain during three whole days, the burden being scattered through one month—the Archbishop locking the gates on the blessed 1st of August. There is a difference, which would be plain to the dullest Episcopalian, between this letter and any official circular emanating from a real bishop—Ave Maria.

On the second day of his pontificate, Pope Leo restored their Catholic hierarchy to the people of Scotland; and now from his dying bed, if we are to believe the newspapers, he has addressed to the Scotch people an Apostolic Letter, urging the non-Catholics among them to examine the claims of the Church founded on Peter, and exhorting the Catholics to "recommence the faith which they hold by edifying and stainless lives." The Holy Father also commends the Kirk for the love and reverence which it has ever shown the Bible, saying that in this the Kirk is in agreement with the Catholic Church. Commenting on this, the Scotsman says that the agreement goes much further; and that the need of a living, perpetual magistratum, once set down as one of the "damnable errors of popery," is now universally recognized among the Scotch. "That is pure Catholic doctrine," observes the Scotsman, "subject to the qualification in the mind of the Pope that this church is not the true Church. But once the position is established that the Scriptures must be understood in the sense of the doctrine of the Church, it may well seem to Leo XIII., as indeed it may seem to others, that it is a short step to the recognition of that Church whose authority in the exposition of doctrine has been longest and is most universally acknowledged." If the Holy Father is really as ill as the pressmen say, he seems to be a most energetic invalid.—Ave Maria.

The Standard and Times directs attention to what it calls the "boiler-plate abominations" in Catholic journalism. Frequently these selections are wholly unfit for a Catholic publication, or, indeed, for any decent periodical, no matter what its religious views may be.

MONTREAL advices of the 1st inst., say: Steady to firm about expresses the position of the cheese market at present. There is little sale on spot for fancy cheese, as most of this is grabbed up in the country at prices which place it out of reach here for anything less than 85c. For choice western colored 85c, was paid this morning, and 85c. for white. Sales of Quebec were also made at 75c, and Monday's wheat market resulted in the sale of 8,000 boxes at 75c to 77c, a very large part of them at the latter price. The public cable is unchanged, but private cables offered 85c. for Quebec, and 85c. for western cheese, which will probably result in business, if shipping terms are satisfactory. Western colored, therefore is quotable on a basis of 85c to 87c, with white a shade lower, and Quebec colored at 75c to 85c. The market is not particularly active, as holders are firm on prices. The receipts today were 10,493 boxes of cheese, and 368 boxes of butter. The butter market is a shade softer, but this has not resulted in a quotable change in prices. For finest creamery, in tubs the range is 17c to 18c, while for gilt edge lines higher figures have been quoted as a market. Western dairy runs from 17c to 18c, and eastern from 16c to 18c.

TOBACCO HEART.

HAVE you a good deal lately and feel an occasional twinge of pain round your heart? Better take a box of two of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and get cured before things become too serious. Here's what Mr. John Jones, of California, Ont., has to say about them: "I have had serious heart trouble for four years, caused by excessive use of tobacco. At times my heart would beat very rapidly and then seemed to stop beating only to commence again with unnatural rapidity. This unhealthy action of my heart caused shortness of breath, weakness and debility. I tried many medicines and spent a great deal of money but could not get any help. Last November, however, I read of a man afflicted like myself being cured by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I went to Hoper's drug store and bought a box. When I had finished taking it I was so much better I bought another box and this completed the cure. My heart has not bothered me since, and I strongly recommend all sufferers from heart and nerve trouble, caused by excessive use of tobacco, to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a fair and faithful trial." SOLITUDE

BY FREDERICK GEORGE LEE, D. D.

Not where the seedling grass is tinged with gold, By sleeping waters, and the warm air still;

Not where I lie upon the sward at will, To scan the blue hills or the brownling fold;

Or weary of the Old Grange library, And silent, close-clipped lawn, from which I mark

The ever-shifting shadows of the park, Does solitude reign round about, on high,

But in the city's busy, well-thronged street Strange faces ever hurrying to and fro, Where none can mate with truth

When more than four conflicting currents meet: Where I read nought of what is passing round, And none can gauge my thoughts nor tread my ground.

The Truth Too Late.

(Liverpool Catholic Times.)

It is pleasant to record that at length English papers are beginning to do justice to poor Spain. Before the outbreak of the war, certain journals in this country, following the lead of the hysterical American press, were never weary of abusing Spain and Spaniards.

Tranny, murder, superstition, organized outrage, any and every crime was laid at the doors of the proud nation which was engaged in a death struggle with its rebellious colonies. As our readers will remember, we entirely dissociated ourselves from those calumnious misrepresentations. While admitting that Spain had no doubt misgoverned her dependencies, we would not bring ourselves to credit the outrageous assertions that Spanish officers and soldiery had been guilty of wholesale murder and flagrant outrage. Now, at last, the truth is coming out, and both this country and America will be by no means pleased to learn how thoroughly they were deceived by the irresponsible newspaper correspondents who made Cuba their happy hunting ground just before the war.

The Times has a special correspondent in the blockade of Havana. He has succeeded in sending a letter to the office of his paper. It is a letter which will mark a revolution in English feeling, as regards the character of the Spanish forces cooped up in Cuba.

Of Havana the correspondent says its population is most orderly, and the police force excellent; the men being as good-tempered and forbearing as those of London. Yet these are the very men described by American journalists as ruffians and terrorists to the law-abiding. With regard to the poor and those thrown out of work by the blockade, the Government issues a certain amount of food; their distress is also relieved by private charity, the Spanish officers themselves contributing largely, for, says the correspondent, incredible though it may appear to many good people outside this island, these officers are humane men and Christian gentlemen. As to the reconcentrados, the poor wretches who suffered first from the insurgents before they became the innocent victims of the drastic code of evil war, everything possible is done by the city authorities. He does not deny the terrible sufferings they have undergone. But he asks: "Is Spain alone to blame? Only one side of this question, that of the American Jingos and the Cuban insurgents, has made itself fully heard. A large section of the American press, bent upon bringing about a war, has employed gross exaggerations and misstatements in order to inflame the passions of the American people. Trading on the Anglo-Saxon hatred of injustice, cruelty and oppression, these papers shouted for war in the name of humanity—and not in vain. They likened the officers and soldiers of Spain (whom I firmly believe, to be as humane as those of the United States) to the murderous Bashi-Bazouks of Turkey, while the Cuban rebels were compared to the Armenian martyrs and were represented as having been slaughtered, tortured and mutilated wholesale by the inhuman butchers of Spain. The majority of the American people, well-meaning, warm-hearted, but credulous and ignorant, became the ready dupes of these agitators. They hurried their country into war, I think, will be recognized later as an unjust and foolish war." And the correspondent says the foreign colony in Havana is bitterly indignant at the hypocrisy and the injustice displayed by those who have fomented this war in the name of humanity.

We are glad that the truth is coming out at last. No one who knows the chivalrous people of Cuba or who had any doubt about the calm, cautious nature of the current accusations of cruelty, massacre and murder. Spain's faults have not been those of her soldiers or sailors. These knew how to die, whether in the trenches before Santiago or in the rotten tubs which went down under the American fire at Manila. The Spaniards had no government, no policy. They drifted on from defeat to defeat, and every stage of the war has made only more evident the stupidity of the administration which misruled Spain.

Spain is crushed with an army of "emphatic" Government functionaries who wield great political power, and whose influence, naturally, is not in favor of progress. It is progress that Spain wants, not the progress which its Freemason liberals rave about, but the progress which lifts up the people and washes over their interest.

With a Government that would deal with monopolies, and would open out the country to trade and commerce, that would teach railway stations clean, Spain would rise from its sleep and take its position once again among the nations of the world. We have always been of those who look forward to a great future for the land of the Old, but we confess that the great future will be achieved only by seriously modifying some of the notions of the present. Spain is behind the times.

Spain is behind the times. Some Home Opinions of the Late War. (From the Ave Maria.) There was much genuine patriotism when the war began; but now, at the close, it is principally politics. Most of those who were simple enough to believe that our Congressmen were actuated by no other motive than the liberation of Cuba, and that the insurgents there were deserving of the support of this country, have probably modified somewhat their opinion by this time. Those who were so sure that the war would cover the nation with glory must realize now that there wasn't enough glory to go round.

(From the Philadelphia Catholic Standard and Times.) The case is pretty much alike both in Cuba and the Philippines. Experience has proved that we were lavishing our sympathies upon a set of people good for nothing but to make trouble, and we have very obligingly taken the trouble off the hands of Spain and shifted it to our own. We shall know how to deal with it, no doubt; but for the future we shall be chary in believing all the tales told by travellers, by Senators or professional writers-up of horrors, employed by philanthropists like Mr. Hearst. We are overwhelmingly gratified that the war is at last over. While it lasted Catholics gave an unwavering and whole-hearted support to the Government in bringing it to a successful and a glorious termination. They fought for it, they prayed for it with all the courage and all the earnestness of their nature and their religious faith, as the highest patriotic duty. This they did, moreover, despite the savage nagging of implacable bigots all over the country. But now that it is over we are free to discuss every thing connected with the episode, and to warn the people against being drawn into similar enterprises by means similar to those by which the quarrel just closed was brought about.

(From the Cleveland Catholic Universal.) Tidings of an arrangement for the amicable termination of our violent controversy with Spain were received with manifest satisfaction by the people of the United States. This feeling, which has found expression in various ways, demonstrates most conclusively the aversion entertained by the people for war in general, and particularly for the unnecessary combat that was, according to common belief, primarily precipitated by the hypocrisy and sordidness of certain selfish and disreputable newspapers. The half-hearted way in which public opinion acquiesced in a resort to hostilities for the final settlement of a difficulty that was very largely created by the real or fancied power of a press, has been apparent from the beginning, to all who possess even a limited faculty of observation. After the die was cast, and war was on, public criticism of the course of the government and open discussion of the equities of the proceeding came to an end. But throughout the contest, the disapprobation of the whole unfortunate transaction made itself very distinctly felt. In private circles, among all classes and in all parts of the country, the conviction prevailed that war could have been averted and the same results attained by a earnest and patient employment of peaceful weapons of diplomacy. The President and his immediate official and unofficial advisers made it quite plain to the country that they entertained abiding faith in the possibility of an amicable adjustment of the trouble. How they were overruled and the manner in which it came about are matters of history.

A Peculiar Case. Strange as it may seem to the inexperienced, it is nevertheless true that hundreds of Catholic converts living today owe their conversion, under God, indirectly to anti-Catholic lecturers, whether apostates or the ordinary ignorant, sensational lecturer. A peculiar case has just come under our notice in Blackburn, the accuracy of which we can vouch for. A Protestant workman of Blackburn attended one of Slatery's lectures, wherein he made serious allegations concerning the Catholic confession. Wishing to test for himself the accuracy of Slatery's statement he went as a Catholic to three different priests and made a mock confession to each, the last one being made to Canon Maglione, St. Joseph's church. At the conclusion of his third confession the confessor was totally different to what it had been represented to be the apostate lecturer, the man explained to the astonished Canon the purpose he had in coming to the confessional, and made an earnest request to receive instructions prior to being received into the Church. As the man is the head of a family of ten, most likely all will be eventually received into the Catholic Church. A day or two after the above event took place the Canon received a sum most to attend a Protestant sick man living in St. Joseph's parish, but totally unknown to him, who expressed a strong desire to receive instructions in order to become a Catholic before he died. In the other parishes there are always throughout the year numbers of non-Catholics receiving instructions who have been attracted to the Catholic Church mostly through the disgraceful attacks made upon Catholics at different times by salaried and other slanderers.—Liverpool Catholic Times.

Orthodoxy in New Zealand. The New Zealand islands now form an ecclesiastical province consisting of an archbishopric and three suffragan sees. Of the progress of Catholicism there an indication is given in the following statistics concerning the diocese of Dunedin, in the Otago district. Bishop Pompallier went ashore to celebrate the first Mass in Otago in 1840. In 1850 the whole province counted only ninety Catholics—a bare dozen of them in Dunedin, the rest scattered far and wide. Father Pettibon travelled among his scattered flock, carrying his rude swag as he went. The first Mass in Dunedin was celebrated in a small wooden house in the North-East Valley; the next—a shabby alley; then in tents; next—after some opposition—in the court-house. Then from the North Island came Father Moran, the perfect missionary. He built the old brick church where for years the people worshipped. The venerated Bishop Moran reached Dunedin in 1870. He tended the Church in his diocese while it grew like a millet-seed from a population of 6,499 in 1871 to 18,130 in 1886. In the first fifteen years of his episcopate the enormous sum of $401,340 was spent in church and school extension in his diocese. In the remaining ten years there was a proportionate expenditure. He has left behind him the memory of every episcopal grace and a cathedral which now outshines any yet erected by any denomination in New Zealand. The Catholic Church in the province now counts fifteen missions, fifty-one churches, twenty-two priests, seven religious Brothers, more than one hundred nuns, three colleges for girls, nine superior day schools, twenty primary schools, one orphanage, more than 3,000 children attending Catholic schools, and a Catholic population of more than 20,000.

SCROFULA.

"My little boy, aged 7 years and 10 months, was a victim of Scrofula on the face, which all the doctors said was incurable. To tell the truth he was so bad that I could not bear to look at him. At last I tried a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and before it was half used he was gaining, and by the time he had three bottles used he was completely cured. I cannot say too much in recommendation of B.B.B. to all who suffer as he did." JOSEPH P. LABELLE, Manawake P.O., N.S.W.

There can be no question about it. Burdock Blood Bitters has no equal for the cure of Sores and Ulcers of the most chronic and malignant nature. Through its powerful blood purifying properties, it gets at the source of disease and completely eradicates it from the system.
