WHEN LOVE Came Too Late.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

A Forgery.

"A little after four," said Seth. "Say twenty minutes, half-an-hour."

"Who was with him? The deceased?"

"She was."

"Alive?"

"Alive."

"Then you saw her killed? Be careful."

"I'm careful," replied Seth, doggedly. "I saw her killed; yes, shot."

"Now, on your oath; who fired the shot?"

"Bartley Bradstone!" was the grim reply.

No pen can describe the sensation which for the moment seemed to paralyze the court. The judge raised his head, the jury craned forward; a murmur that was almost a cry ran through the court.

Faradeane drew a deep sigh, and looked toward Olivia. For a second it seemed as if she were about to fall; but she caught her father's arm, and hid her face on his shoulder; then she turned and looked at Faradeane.

"Bartley Bradstone," said Seth. "I see it all. I knew he was to meet her. I watched 'em from under the brackets; I could have touched 'em a'most."

And in rapid but perfectly distinct words he told the story of the crime. Amusement sat upon every face. Mr. Sewell, himself pale and disturbed, held up his hand as McAndrew whispered in his ear.

"More slowly, please; every word is of importance."

"Do you know the relationship between the deceased and Bartley Bradstone? You know that they were married?"

"They were," said Seth.

"Before or after her marriage with Lord Clydesfold?"

"Before," replied Seth.

Olivia sank into a seat, and hid her face.

"Come away, my poor darling," murmured the squire.

But she made a gesture of refusal.

"Then she was his wife?" asked Mr. Sewell.

"No," said Seth, grimly, "she was neither his nor his lordship's here. She was mine. We were married years ago, quite boy and girl like. She was a reckless one, was Bella. I allus told her that she'd get into trouble with her desperate ways, but she took

Prepare This for a Bad Cough—It's Fine

Cheaply and Easily Made, but Does the Work Quickly.

The finest cough syrup that money can buy—costing only about one-fifth as much as ready-made preparations—can easily be made up at home. The way it takes hold and conquers distressing coughs, throats and chest colds, really makes you enthusiastic about it.

Any druggist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Plinex (40 cents worth). Pour this into a 10-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Shake thoroughly and it is ready for use. The total cost is about 54 cents and gives you 10 ounces—a family supply—of a most effective, pleasant tasting remedy. It keeps perfectly.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the inflamed or swollen throat membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough will disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, whooping cough or bronchial asthma.

Plinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with quinine and is known the world over for its prompt healing effect on the throat membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Plinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded with this preparation. The Plinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

no heed of anybody. She'd have married twenty times over, to get money. She was my wife, true and fast enough."

Faradeane made a strange and involuntary movement; it was the gesture of a man who had suddenly been relieved from an intolerable, galling burden—a burden weighing down the soul, instead of the body.

"What followed when Lord Clydesfold came up?" inquired Mr. Sewell. He used the word "prisoner" no longer.

Seth told them, and the recital of Faradeane's great sacrifice of self, of honor, of life, for the woman he loved, so thrilled the crowded court that it was in vain the usher shouted "Silence!"

"It was for her, the lady, Miss Olivia, he did it," said Seth. "He'd have hung rather than let her be pointed at as the wife of a murderer."

The judge held up his hand to still the murmur of excitement.

"Silence!" he said. "The court shall be cleared if these demonstrations are repeated. Why did you not appear before, and tell us what you have told us now?" he demanded of Seth, sternly.

Seth hung his head, then looked furtively this way and that.

"I'm a poor man," he whined, "and he said he'd give me a thousand pounds. Curse him!" he snarled, with a sudden change of voice and manner. "A thousand pounds! And he did! Yes! And when I takes it to the bank, they laughs at me. He'd drawn all the money, every penny," and he shook the check in the air.

Mr. Edgar deftly seized it, glanced at it, and handed it to the judge.

"Then when I come outside, vowing as I'll go for him and settle him, this gentleman collared me, and brought me down," and he pointed to McAndrew.

The judge passed the check to the jury without a word. There were some among them who had often seen Bartley Bradstone's writing, and they recognized it instantly.

"When did you see Mr. Bartley Bradstone last?" asked Mr. Edgar, springing to his feet.

"At his own house, the night afore last!" said Seth.

Amusement again.

"At his own house!" said Mr. Edgar.

"My lord!"—and he turned quickly to the judge—"I ask for a warrant, for the arrest of Bartley Bradstone."

Mr. McAndrew looked up gravely.

"That's been done already," he said.

"Have you any other evidence?" said the judge. "Can you call some one, produce something confirmatory of this man's testimony?"

Before he could reply a commotion arose in the corridor, and, with much shouting and talking and pushing and fro, a policeman entered, followed closely by Bessie.

He went up to Mr. McAndrew, and said something, amid a dead silence; then Mr. Sewell very gravely and solemnly said:

"I have one piece of evidence more to produce, my lord. It is a letter written by Mr. Bartley Bradstone. It is addressed to Mrs. Olivia Bradstone, and is a distinct and clear confession that he was the murderer of Bella Lee."

"Read it," said the judge.

Mr. Sewell read it slowly and solemnly, then handed it to the judge, who passed it to the jury.

Mr. Sewell then motioned the policeman to the box.

"How did you obtain this letter?" he said.

"One piece of it from the hand of Mr. Bartley Bradstone," he replied, evidently with suppressed emotion;

"the other was on the table just beside him, sir, and near the burnt-out candle."

Intense silence.

"Then Mr. Bartley Bradstone—where is he?" asked the judge.

"At his own house, The Maples, sir. When I went with the warrant Mr. McAndrew had brought this morning from London, I met this young woman—Miss Bessie. She'd got a letter from her mistress to give to Mr. Bradstone, or to leave at the house if he was away. And she and me went into the hall together. The servants said Mr. Bradstone was out—had gone to London some days since. Then I told them that I'd information that he'd been back. They all said they hadn't seen him. But they owned that he might be in the library, which they weren't allowed to enter lately. I went to the door and found it locked, my lord, and me and the butler forced it. The room was quite dark, with the blinds down; but when we pulled 'em up, we found Mr. Bartley Bradstone lying down face downward across the table with the half of the letter clutched in his hands. He was quite dead and stiff. There wasn't no mark nor speck upon him, and the doctor as we fetched says that he died all in a minute of heart disease."

They let him go on with his tragic story uninterrupted, and, when he had finished, the judge said, solemnly, amid profound silence:

"Gentlemen, this case has been tried by a higher court than this. It still remains for us to humbly put on record man's verdict as made plain by Him who sees all things and weighs all hearts. Do you find the prisoner guilty, or not guilty?"

"Not guilty!" came the quick, sharp response.

A roar burst forth from the hot, parched throats of the excited crowd. Two or three men standing near the dock made a rush for it; in an instant they were followed by a hundred others, and before the police could interfere, Faradeane was torn out of the box and carried through the corridor and into the streets—a free man!

A scene of the wildest confusion followed. Men—ay, and women, too—shouted and danced, as if they had suddenly gone mad. It was in vain for the police to attempt to clear the streets, in which the crowd seemed to grow thicker every moment. Amid the intense excitement, the Grange carriage was seen to be making its way slowly through the throng, and the mob instantly surrounded it, and cheered for the squire and Olivia.

At last they set Faradeane down on the steps of the market-place, and permitted him to speak.

At first he seemed unable to speak, and stood looking at the crowd with his grave eyes moist with emotion; then he said:

"I thank you—I thank you with all my heart for your kindness. I think that many of you believed in my innocence."

"All of us! All of us!" some one shouted. "You're a nobleman all round, that's what you are, my lord!"

"What I have done, any man placed as I was would have done—yes, every man worthy the name of man. And now will you go home quietly, my friends, remembering how dark and heavy a trouble hangs over those both you and I—love?"

"That we will; we'll do anything you ask us, my lord," shouted the man, and the crowd began slowly and reluctantly to melt away.

Colonel Summerford sprang up the steps, and held out his hand.

"Thank God, thank God, my lord!" he said, and his strong voice trembled.

"I can never be too grateful that I believed in you all through."

"And I," said Mr. McAndrew, quietly.

"I have one piece of evidence more to produce, my lord. It is a letter written by Mr. Bartley Bradstone. It is addressed to Mrs. Olivia Bradstone, and is a distinct and clear confession that he was the murderer of Bella Lee."

"Read it," said the judge.

Mr. Sewell read it slowly and solemnly, then handed it to the judge, who passed it to the jury.

Mr. Sewell then motioned the policeman to the box.

"How did you obtain this letter?" he said.

"One piece of it from the hand of Mr. Bartley Bradstone," he replied, evidently with suppressed emotion;

"the other was on the table just beside him, sir, and near the burnt-out candle."

Intense silence.

"Then Mr. Bartley Bradstone—where is he?" asked the judge.

H.P. SAUCE

never varies, good to the last drop.

You need not shake the bottle, there is no sediment.

"I'm afraid your lordship thinks I was rough on you in letting the case go so far. But what was I to do?"

"You did your duty—I am sure," said Lord Clydesfold, holding out his hand.

Mr. McAndrew took it respectfully.

"You see, my lord, I had my doubts from the first. The very first time I saw Bradstone in the squire's library I felt—well, we detectives have our presentiments like other people. But what could I do? I knew you would stand firm and bear the brunt to the last, and I could only wait and hunt up evidence; and it was difficult work. It was all so strong against you; and Bradstone was clever and cunning. If it hadn't been for the egypt Steer tracking him down and getting the check I should have been driven hard. If it hadn't been for the confession, indeed, I wouldn't have answered for the case even now!"

"And he is dead!" said Lord Clydesfold in a low voice.

Mr. McAndrew nodded gravely.

"Yes; they found him as the constable said. He must have fallen across the table almost the moment Seth left the room with the check. Heart disease. The strain that man must have endured—without food, and drinking continually—must have been a perfect hell. And to think that he committed the murder without any real reason. Ah, she was a wonderful woman, and deceived you both. If Bradstone can know what is going on, and is conscious that she was not his wife after all, and that he might have been living still—" He stopped and shrugged his shoulders. "Well, I could almost pity him. Not that he deserves it, my lord, for he was a bad lot. He fairly trapped that poor young lady; got his net round her father, unbeknown to him, and fairly drove her to marry him. When I tell you all we've discovered you'll be surprised, my lord."

"He is dead, now," said Lord Clydesfold, solemnly.

Mr. McAndrew nodded.

"I've a message from Lord Carfield," said Colonel Summerford. "He wishes me to tell you that Lord Bertie has gone home with the squire—poor fellow! and that he—Lord Carfield—doesn't wish to intrude upon you; but that he will feel honored—I repeat his words, Lord Clydesfold—if you will go straight to him and stay with him."

Lord Clydesfold inclined his head, deeply moved.

"Thank him for me, Summerford," he said; "but I will go to my own place. I—I must have time to think. Bertie has gone with the squire?" and he breathed a sigh of satisfaction.

"That is like his thoughtfulness!"

"Yes; he said he knew you would rather he went and took care of him and Miss Vanley than come to you, and now, if there is anything I can do, my lord, I shall be only too happy."

Lord Clydesfold thought for a moment or two.

"This unhappy man who lies dead," he said; "we must not forget that she bore his name, though for only a few days, Summerford."

"I understand, my lord," said the colonel, gravely. "Everything shall be done as quietly as possible. Leave it all to me and McAndrew here, who feels that he owes you something for his part—unwilling one as it was—in the terrible trial you have so nobly borne. And now, will you have my carriage?"

No Patch Declares

Prime Minister Resists Asks for Further Cheer

LONDON, Oct. 11.

This is no time for faltering, or for wavering purpose, said Prime Minister Asquith in addressing the Commons today. This war cannot be allowed to end by some patched-up, precarious compromise, masquerading under the name of peace.

One desires to prolong for a moment longer than is necessary the tragic spectacle of bloodshed and destruction, but we owe it to those who have given their lives, that we preme sacrifice shall not have an unavailing end. The ends of the Allies well known. They have been frequently stated. They are not selfish. They are not vindictive; but they require adequate reparation for the past and adequate security for the future.

House cheered the Premier when he made these remarks. Concluding his address he moved a vote of credit for £300,000,000. When the Premier moved the vote of credit for £300,000,000, he brought up the total for the current financial year to £1,350,000,000. Parliament, said the Premier, has been asked this vote for war purposes, what was equivalent to the aggregate expenditure for twenty years before the war, although the post included the South African War. When he moved the last vote of credit July, he estimated the average of expenditure approximately at £90,000,000 a day, and that forecast proved to be almost exactly correct. At commencement of the present war the Premier continued, there was in hand £100,000,000, which was carried on the war until October 5. He gave the aggregate expenditure for 113 days of the financial year follows: Navy and

THE WAR.

It was perhaps a little unkind of the U 53 to disappear so completely from the scene of its sensational exploits and American press, but it is something to be able to learn a little once again of the events that are transpiring on the other side. The slight lull that seemed to have fallen upon the military operations in almost every direction has again given place to activity, which, under the circumstances and given favourable conditions, bids fair to increase greatly in intensity.

The topic of chief moment is the British Prime Minister's speech, which cannot fail to be contrasted with that recently delivered by the German Chancellor. In the direct warning to the world that no half measures will be countenanced, no precarious peace thought of, and in the quiet manner in which new and huge loans are asked and granted, we can see reflected the conviction of victory. That is all that really matters, and there is therefore no labouring in the review of the work to do more than recount the bare facts. There is a good deal in the most recent events to justify the optimism that underlies the speech.

A couple of quiet messages, the one from Paris announcing the capture of the village of Boyvet, and the other from Berlin admitting that the German forces at Verdun had been cut off by the French, indicate a gain for our Allies of no little importance. If it is true, Chalones should be in great danger, and with Chalones a good part of the German line south of Peronne. Bad weather has unfortunately interfered with the movements of the Allies on this front and so favoured the defence, but if it can improve for a few weeks, there is every reason to believe that both Peronne and Bapaume will have fallen before winter sets in and the Allies be in a position to continue their advance, moderately and as occasion offers during the winter, and with overwhelming force in the spring.

The one black cloud in the sky is the undoubtedly severe defeat of the Roumanians at the hands of Falkenhayn. By a very clever and bold manoeuvre he got behind their forces at Hermannstadt, and attacking them strongly in front compelled them to retreat almost in a rout. He next took Kronstadt in operations concerning which we have heard little. Nor has much been told concerning the Dobruja operations and the fate of the Roumanian army that crossed the Danube into Bulgaria. Things are not going too well with Roumania for the present, but it is well to remember that her reverses are the result of a very great concentration of the enemy's forces, and that Russia stands behind her.

The best counter to Falkenhayn and Mackensen has been made by Sarrail. We hear that the Bulgarians at Monastir have been strongly reinforced. So much the better. For the present this is an even more valuable object for the Allies to achieve than the conquest of much territory. These reinforcements have come from somewhere, and the enemy's reserves have again been drawn on. Apart from the progress they may make, that the whole of the Allies are on the move in Macedonia means much.

General Sarrail's strategy seems good. The Serbians and British, on the left and right wings respectively, are striking hard and so drawing many Bulgarians to the defence of the threatened positions. When the process has gone far enough, we are certain to hear that the French have struck with great force at the centre of the line. This is the Vardar Valley, up which the advance will certainly be made. With the whole line thus engaged and Greece at the edge of a crisis, the Balkan situation is beginning to show some of the interest it promised.

Meanwhile, the Italians are making headway from Gorizia, and have evidently begun a great drive on Trieste. Military experts are convinced of their ability to take it. The moral and tactical effect of its fall, when it comes, will be great, reacting with much force upon the situation in Eastern Austria. The great Italian armies are still barred by the mountain ranges from the Austrian plains, but they will not be deterred long. Never was the meaning of the continuity of front and its value to the Allies more strikingly apparent than now, when the movements of enemy troops to any part of it is immediately felt in another. This will be seen still more clearly as the pressure grows stronger. Looking round the great circle we see Bapaume and Peronne threatened, Trieste threatened, Monastir threatened and Lemberg threatened.

The fall of any one of them will hasten and make more easy the capture of the rest, however far removed. And what is true of towns is true of the districts to which they are the keys. This is the meaning of the whole situation and the justification of high hopes.

Cardinal Mercier's Great Speech

IN BRUSSELS CATHEDRAL.

All the devilry of the Germans in Belgium has failed to break the spirit of that great people. And of this triumphant evidence is given by that great Belgian, Emile Cammaerts, in a letter to the Spectator, which gives some particulars concerning the way in which Belgians celebrated the anniversary of their independence in occupied Belgium in spite of German restrictions.

The Brave Belgians.

"What I should like to ask the English reader to realise is the attitude of the people on the occasion of our great festival—the crowd wandering in the streets wearing, instead of the forbidden national colours, green ribbons, as the symbol of early deliverance; the suppressed excitement of all these citizens who are keeping an unshaken faith in the final victory, who have heard, in spite of the German Censor, of the good news from all the fronts, and who know that their strength rest in their close union, and their obstinate resolution to remain independent in the face of threats and persecutions.

"Among all these manifestations of the indomitable spirit of the Belgian people, the service held at Ste. Gudule, the Brussels Cathedral, stands foremost. It was known that Cardinal Mercier would preach. Two hours before the appointed time, the great Gothic nave was packed; some people climbed on the pedestals of the statues, on the steps of the altars, on the confessionals. The notables of the town were seated in the choir. It was a mixed congregation; Catholics, Liberals, Socialists had forgotten their old political and religious divisions. They were all merely patriots gathered in God's hospitable house.

"I want those of my readers who know the great church and who have wandered along its aisles to imagine the spectacle of these thousands and thousands of uplifted faces, men, women, and children, under the lofty arches, around the groups of columns, covering every inch of ground. On such a crowd the Cardinal looked when after the Gospel, he ascended quietly the stairs of the Renaissance pulpit, supported by mighty angels in floating draperies, and began to preach. Look up toward the ascetic figure, robed in scarlet, towards the piercing eyes, the ivory face lined with care, the moving delicate hands, the humorous and eloquent lips, look up and listen:—

"Jerusalem, the strangers are masters within thy walls, thy days of joy have become days of mourning. . . . The Jewish people in captivity at Babylon, sat on the banks of the Euphrates. . . . Its mute harps were hanging on the branches of the willows. Who would have had the courage to sing Jehovah's canticle in a foreign land? 'Jerusalem, my country,' cried the Psalmist, 'if I ever forget thee, let my right hand wither, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth if I forget thee, if thou art no longer the first of my joys.' . . . The psalm ends in imprecations. We will not quote them, we are no longer of the Old Testament which tolerated the law of retaliation: an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. Our lips purified by Christian charity do not utter hatred. . . . National concord associates itself in us with feelings of universal fraternity. But above universal fraternity we place the respect of Right, without which there is no intercourse possible either between individuals or between nations. And that is why, with Thomas Aquinas, we proclaim that the public prosecution of crime is righteous. . . . How can you love order without hating disorder, hope for peace without destroying the germs of war, love your brother without wishing that wily-nilly he will be curbed by the impregnable rigour of Justice and Truth? . . ."

These Courageous Words.

"Think of the effect of these courageous words on the thrilled audience, while the tramp of the German soldiers might have been heard outside, while every heart was made tense by long months of hardships and cruel anxieties. Think of these proud words uttered fearlessly in the prostrated city, and tell me if you would not give up gladly all the security we enjoy over here to have had the privilege of listening to them, of living through such an unforgettable hour, of sharing with the multitude the bitter exultation of spiritual triumph in the face of defeat and humiliation."

ANOTHER YOUNG THIEF ROUNDED UP.—A lad named Deer, who was an accomplice of the three incorrigibles who stole provisions, groceries and confectionery from the store of Henry North, on Hamilton Street, as alluded to by us yesterday, was arrested last night. He was arraigned before Judge Hutchings this morning, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to one month's imprisonment without the option of a fine.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

"By the streets of By-and-By one arrives at the House of Never."—Cervantes. When it was time to pack our trunks and come home this summer, we could scarcely believe (as usual) that the summer was past. "I've felt all the time as if I were just waiting for it to begin," said one.

"And then we chronicled them. All On A Wonderful 'Some Day.' We were going to take a twenty-mile walking trip to D— and come back on the train, some day.

We were going to paddle up the river to that place where honey was sold, some day.

We were going to have at least half a dozen sunset suppers at the point. We did have one and enthusiastically promised ourselves to do it often, but even with the impetus of experienced enjoyment, that some day didn't come again.

We were going to take the machine and surprise a certain dear old lady way back in the country by calling on her, some day.

There Was No Need To Hurry, So We Didn't.

When we planned these things it was the first of the summer, two months and a half stretched before us. There was plenty of time, no need to hurry about anything, no need to set any definite date.

And so we didn't hurry and we didn't set any definite dates. And now the summer had gone without our having done any of these good things. It seemed inconceivable. But it was true. Then someone suggested a plan for that happy comforter of this year's mistakes—next year.

We Had Had Too Much Time.

The reason we had not done any of these things, said she, was that we had had too much time. If we had only been down for two weeks we would have done all of them. To try to find a day in the whole summer to do any special thing was like trying to find a needle in a haystack. It was easier to find a day in a single week. So next summer we would try to do some one special thing each week. And then when the summer has passed we shall have surely done some of these happy things we mean to do.

I wonder how that plan will work. It sounds plausible, doesn't it? Well, maybe I'll tell you at the end of next summer.

You see, it never occurred to me that I might put it into practice now, for winter. Plans are never for now. They're always for next something.

SPARKES-MARTIN.

Mr. Thomas Sparkes, of the Royal Stores, Ltd., and Miss Doris Robinson Martin, daughter of Mr. W. J. Martin, Statistical Clerk at the Colonial Secretary's Office, were made man and wife at the C. E. Cathedral yesterday afternoon. Rev. Canon White officiating. The bride was charmingly costumed. She was given away by her father and attended by her sister, Miss Helen Martin, and Miss Gertrude Sparkes, sister of the groom. The bridesmaids were also appropriately and prettily attired. The groom was supported by Mr. W. Smallwood. Following the marriage ceremony a reception was held at Smithville and the health of the bridal party enthusiastically toasted. Hon. J. R. Bennett, Colonial Secretary, eloquently proposed the health of the bride. A fitting response was made by the groom. The newly-wedded couple left by the 6 o'clock train for Chamberlains, where the honeymoon will be spent, after which they will take up residence in this city.

The groom's present to the bride was a gold pendant set with birthday stones; to the bridesmaids, gold brooches, set with pearls; and to the best man, a pipe. The bride was the recipient of many valuable and useful presents and numerous telegrams of congratulation. The Telegram wishes Mr. and Mrs. Sparkes an unclouded future.

SALTED DOWN.

WALTON MASON

I saved five dollars every week, against the day that's wet and dank. Sometimes it made my spirit shriek, to put that blunder in the bank. For there were nights I longed to see, and junketings I wished to make; to save was such a strain on me, I thought my old tin heart would break. But Susan Jane, my thrifty wife, was always watching at my side; and she would say, "You bet your life, you do not let the kopecks slide. Our strongbox must not spring a leak," my wife would say, in solemn tones; "and at the end of every week, you'll pickle five gun-metal bones." I used to wish that Susan Jane were more like other wives I know, that she would think it safe and sane to let the coin for pleasure go. Then I lay down with divers ills, and spent three weary months in bed, my stomach full of drugs and pills, and poultices upon my head. We paid the druggist and the nurse, the doc, who brought me back to health; and if I dodged the village hearse, it was because I'd saved some wealth. To every man there comes a day when Fortune wears a gloomy frown; and, while you're earning coin, I say, it's wise to salt some rubles down.

Jensen's Lectures.

Private Phil Jensen's lectures at McCallum and Hermitage Cove brought in the amount of $26.59. Of this $3.00 was raised at McCallum and $13.59 at Hermitage Cove. These small districts have responded nobly to the call of the Red Cross, and their response in men will be the same. These amounts will be devoted to the Camp, being put up by their fellow-soldier for incipient tubercular cases, among the Soldiers and Sailors.

ALLIES KEEP SILENCE.

WASHINGTON, To-day. The policy of the States regarding the recent U-boat raid off the New England coast, will not be determined until much more complete information as to all the facts have been received. This was announced by Secretary of State Lansing last night after his return from the conference on the subject with President Wilson at Shadow Lawn. Considerable interest centres in the continued silence of the Allies. Again yesterday it was stated positively by the State Department that no representations of any sort had been received from the Allies as a result of the U-53's visit to Newport or its depredations on the American coast.

GERARD'S DENIAL.

WASHINGTON, To-day. Jas. W. Gerard, U. S. Ambassador to Germany, who returned here on Monday, issued a formal statement late yesterday in which he denied that his home-coming had been the result of need of warning the administration at Washington of Germany's intention to resume indiscriminate submarine warfare against neutral as well as hostile shipping.

GREECE TO HAND OVER FLEET.

LONDON, To-day. Vice-Admiral Darigo Du Pire, Commander of the Anglo-French fleet in the Mediterranean, presented an ultimatum to Greece demanding that Greece hand over the entire Greek fleet, except the armoured cruiser Averoff and the battleships Lemnos and Kiriki, to the Entente Allies by 1 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, according to Reuter's Athens correspondent. Demand is also made for control of the Piræus-Larissa railway. The Minister of Marine, in a respondent continues, says that Vice-Admiral Fernet's demand will be complied with, and that the fleet will be handed over before the present time. The demands are a precautionary measure to ensure the safety of the Allied fleet.

FRENCH COMMENT.

PARIS, To-day. The newspapers continue to discuss animatedly the situation created by the operations of the German U-boat fleet in American waters. All of them evince a lively interest in what the Washington Government is likely to do in the matter. The Times today concludes a leading article on the subject as follows: It is doubtful if American exporters will be disposed to allow the organization of a blockade of their coast, if the country will allow the Germans to trifle with American neutrality. As to the Germans, one would have a wrong idea if one thought they will confine themselves to these first exploits, even if there is an interval before renewing.

CARSON'S ENCOURAGING WORDS.

LONDON, To-day. Sir Edward Carson, Ulster Leader, commented briefly in the Commons on Premier Asquith's declaration that he would sell the operations the Premier had detailed demonstrated that Britons need have no fears of the valor, courage, persistence and success of the new army which had been tried against the best German trained troops and found superior. Sir Edward said the fight will be carried to a finish, but declared there was no concealing the fact that the task before the army was a herculean one. The whole nation, he declared, was determined to gain a decisive victory. The question, he asserted, of more men power, especially from the reserve, must be raised before long. The House agreed to the credit asked for by the Premier, virtually no criticism being offered of the Premier's statement.

WAR SUMMARY.

LONDON, To-day. The Italians have again taken the offensive against the Austrians in their endeavour to reach Trieste, Austria's chief port on the Adriatic. At several points south and south east of Gorizia they have made good progress, and in addition taken nearly 6,000 prisoners. To the south of Gorizia the Austrian line was broken between Tobar and Vertolba, according to Rome. On the Carso front, encroachments between the Vipacco River and Hill 208 were captured. Here the town of Nova Villa, a strong position around the northern part of the Hill, fell into the hands of the attackers. Trenches in the Trentino region have been won by the Italians and 530 Austrians made prisoners. In Transylvania the forces of the Teutonic Allies are continuing to drive the Roumanians along almost all the front. Bavarian troops which captured the Hothenthurn pass, have now crossed the border into Roumania, according to Bucharest, which admits the retirement of Roumanians around Kronstadt. Fierce Teutonic attacks were repulsed south of Hermentul with heavy casualties to the attackers. Berlin concedes the capture by the French of the German salient near Vermendovillers south of the Somme river in France, also by the British of the first line of trenches in the valley north of the Somme. Violent counter attacks by the Germans on the newly captured positions of the French at Chaumes Wood have been repulsed. In the Vosges mountains the Germans invaded the French trenches but were later driven out. On the Struma River in Greek Macedonia, the British made a further advance and occupied the towns of Papalova and Fosentli while the French have taken trenches on the heights west of Devedjili, which lies on the Greek-Serbian border southwest of Doiran. Fierce fighting is going on between the Bulgarians and Serbians on the front below Monastir, the Bulgarians having received reinforcements. Berlin says that along the Corna River west of Vardar the Entente Allied attacks were repulsed.

2.00 P. M.

PORTUGUESE VICTORY IN EAST AFRICA.

LISBON, To-day. The General commanding the Portuguese forces in East Africa reports that after an engagement in which he repulsed the German troops the Portuguese advanced nineteen miles north of Revuanu.

INSANE KING DIES.

LONDON, To-day. Former King Otto, of Bavaria, who has been insane for many years, has died suddenly, according to Copenhagen despatches. Quoting a Berlin official communication: The mad King died at Fuersterried Castle near Munich where he has been confined since 1873.

THE GREEK NAVY.

LONDON, To-day. The Daily Chronicle's Athens correspondent, in announcing that Greece has accepted the demands of the Entente Powers, says that the Greek Government added a protest to its notification of acceptance. A telephone message received at Athens from Pieræus says that the handing over of the Greek navy to the Allied naval authorities has already begun. The lighter craft will be handed over immediately, so as to enable them to be dispatched to the provisional government at Salonika.

2.15 P. M.

THE TRANSFER OF THE GREEK NAVY.

SALONIKI, To-day. The heavier vessels will be disarmed and left where they are in the Gulf of Korinthi, according to the Chronicle's correspondent. The Greek crews have already been removed from some of the warships and are being landed from others. French crews were placed on the small ships and all guns on the larger vessels rendered ineffective and placed under guard. Quiet is reported at Athens and Pieræus.

ROME DISTURBED OVER SUBMARINES.

ROME, To-day. The resumption of the Austro-German submarine attack is causing grave concern in Italy, where the prices of coal, wheat, lumber, scrap iron and other imports have trebled within the year owing to prohibitive freight rates.

THE ULTIMATUM TO GREECE.

PARIS, To-day. Details of the demands made on the Greek Government by the Commander of the Allied Forces at Piræus, which have been made public here, show that the ultimatum was much more comprehensive than was understood at first. In addition to her fleet, Greece was required to permit Allied control of all material for naval operations as well as mails, telegraph and radio stations. The ultimatum set forth that such control was necessary in order to render impossible the use of the navy, railroads and so forth to the detriment of the Allies.

Ditches 750 Miles Long

The World's Biggest Digging Job. To-day a man who could obtain permission from the military authorities, and who was possessed of ample leisure and abundant patience, and who did not mind dodging shells and bullets, might walk underground across Europe from the North Sea to the Alps. He would follow a zigzag course of approximately 750 miles, this being the length of the original first-line trenches constructed by the Allies, and which are still practically intact. Opposite to this gigantic ditch, and running more or less parallel to it at varying distances, is another similar semi-subterranean passage, representing the German first-line trenches; and behind each of these opposition ditches again are others, and still others extending back in some instances for many miles. Moreover, each of these 750-mile-long ditches—the first, second and third-line trenches on either side, together with the "alternatives" as they are called—are connected on one another by a perfect labyrinth of communication trenches, representing many thousands of miles of digging and tunnelling. Entire nations have toiled for long months in order to scar the face of Europe with these immense ditches. Taken collectively, nothing like them or even remotely approaching them has ever been accomplished by human agency.

The digging of the Panama Canal has been generally regarded as the biggest thing of the kind yet undertaken, necessitating, as it did, the excavation of just over 250 million cubic yards of earth and rock. But it is estimated that not less than 1,000 million cubic yards have been excavated for our and the German trenches. A similar excavation would be sufficient to make four twin parallel tunnels through the centre of the earth, each 14 ft. in diameter and 3,000 miles long, capable of accommodating four "tube trains" while the concrete used—approximately twenty million cubic yards—would construct a wall 8 ft. thick, 12 ft. high, and more than 1,000 miles long, from Land's End to John o'Groat's.—Tit-Bits.

Violent Storms on Labrador.

Many Vessels Lost—Capt. Burgess, of S. S. Neptune, Praised by Passengers.

The recent voyage of the S. S. Neptune to the Labrador, summarized as a continuation of heavy storms, the like of which Captain Burgess and crew say they never experienced before on the coast. On the night of September 25th, when the big storm storm raged here, the Neptune was at Rigolet and got the full force of a heavy gale. The gale was felt, we learn, all along the Labrador coast and many fishing schooners were lost. Five of the shipwrecked crews belonged to Harbor Grace and were brought home on the Neptune. Passengers who came to St. John's on the ship spoke glowingly of Captain Burgess, who remained on the bridge for seven days and nights during the stormiest weather. The round trip occupied 26 days. The whaler Cachalot had captured 62 whales up to Oct. 2nd, only a few behind last year's total catch.

400 Huns Found Hidden in Tunnel.

Capture of Chilly Cut Off Retreat and Forced a Surrender. With the French Army on the Somme Front, Oct. 6. (Via London).—How the village of Chilly was taken from the Germans in one brilliant dash by French regiments was related to-day by participants in the action to the correspondent of the Associated Press when he visited that position which is one of the most important on the allied line. The artillery preparation was unrelenting, the shower of projectiles of all calibres lasting for two days. Then the French who had assembled in the most advanced dugouts dashed out. The first wave reached and cleared the German front. The wave of French then partly crept, partly ran in short bursts at the second German line, and the second wave of French troops advanced in support. Meanwhile, from somewhere underground, a large body of Germans came between with machine guns and grenades. The French hesitated an instant but were not stayed. They bayoneted some of the Germans, the rest of whom disappeared into a tunnel. Calls to surrender availed nothing and it was an impossible task to follow. Then the French built a sand bag redoubt around the tunnel and waited.

The first French wave went on and took the second and third German lines within Chilly itself. There from the other end the tunnel began to disgorge troops, whose exit was brought to an end by a French detachment. Germans in an unknown number were still in the tunnel in the rear and obstinately refused to surrender. A wounded German was sent in to inform them that the French would shell them out. Thereupon they were sorted in groups until more than 400 men and ten officers were captured. The Associated Press correspondent to-day went through the tunnel which is nearly 1,000 yards in length, with an eighteen inch railroad track running from beginning to end. Within a depth of 12 yards, were sleeping quarters, munition depots, an infirmary, with the most modern surgical instruments, fresh water wells, tons of equipments, electric light, and ventilation pipes. The sides and roof were shored up and it was possible to walk nearly upright although at some places it was necessary to crouch, and many parts were inundated.

The entrance to the tunnel was toward Maucourt, the exit in the centre of Chilly, where was found the German commandant's apartment of several rooms with painted walls, solid doors, chairs, tables, beds, and telephone system. At a depth of forty feet was an excavation sufficiently large to hold a whole company of soldiers, with hoists for machines.

An American Boy Who Died For Us.

"Yes, My Dearest Folks, We Are Indeed Doing The World's Work Over Here, And I Am In It To The Finish."

"I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement, and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn promise that must be yours to have paid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom."

—President Lincoln to Mrs. Bixby, of Boston, who lost five sons killed in battle, November 21, 1864.

"That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

—Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg, 1863.

"The Almighty has His own purposes."

—Lincoln's Second Inaugural Address, March 4, 1865.

Those great sayings of the great Abraham Lincoln fittingly precede this moving story of an American boy of 24 who laid down his life for us a few days ago.

His marvelous tale is finely told by the Observer. But the spirit which moved this young hero to take up the sword for England and for Freedom was cherished for ever by himself in a letter which is one of the finest statements of the Allies' case yet penned.

To My Dearest Folks,

It was written last January, and has added light now that its writer laid down his life, as he was willing to do, to help "the world's work."

Here is the letter, which says all there is to say of it. It was written to "my dearest folks."

An Immortal Letter.

"I am now no longer untried. Two weeks' action in a great battle is to my credit, and if my faith in the wisdom of my course or my enthusiasm for the cause had been due to fall it would have done so during that time. But it has only become stronger; I find myself a soldier among millions of others in the great Allied armies fighting for all I believe right and civilized and humane against a power which is evil and which right we prize and the freedom we enjoy.

"It may seem to you that for me this is all quite uncalculated for, that it can only mean either the supreme sacrifice for nothing, or at best some of the best years of my life wasted; but I tell you that not only am I willing to give my life to this enterprise (for that is comparatively easy except when I think of you), but that I firmly believe—if I live through it to spend a useful lifetime with you—that never will I have an opportunity to gain so much honourable advancement for my own soul or to do so much for the cause of the world's progress, as I have here daily defending the liberty that mankind has so far gained against the attack of an enemy the price of a few boxes of Zam-Buk better than you can afford to pay a doctor's bill. The Rev. A. D. McLeod, of Harcourt, N.B., says: "I am confident, if Zam-Buk were kept in every home, it would save many a doctor's bill." He continues:

"I know of nothing that can compare with Zam-Buk. Having charge of an extensive mission, I meet with many sick and afflicted people, and I have been amazed at the speed Zam-Buk is doing daily. For bad ulcers, old wounds, eczema and skin diseases of all kinds, the healing powers of Zam-Buk are simply marvelous! It is also excellent for piles."

who would deprive us of it and set the world back some centuries if he could have his way.

"I think less of myself than I did less of the heights of personal success I aspired to climb, and more of the service that each of us must render in payment for the right to live and by virtue of which only we can progress."

"Yes, my dearest folks, we are indeed doing the world's work over here, and I am in it to the finish."

The Writer.

"That is a magnificent letter in the height of character, the earnestness of thought, the steady strength of mind and heart it reveals," says the Observer. "None of us can read it without being moved and fortified. That phrase about 'honourable advancement for my own soul' is one that deserves never to die. Rarely has the cause of the Allies been vindicated with more moral force; never was that cause sealed by a purer sacrifice."

Now for the story of the 24 years which went to the making of Second-Lieutenant Harry Butters, American citizen of California, and officer in the British Army.

"We hope that the readers of the Observer will bow their heads in honour and in reverence of this splendid young American citizen," says the Editor. "He has laid down his life for England, the country he loved next to his own and for the Allies' cause he held to be the best and greatest that had ever been at stake in the world. At the age of 24 he was killed on Thursday night, August 31, by the same shell that killed his battery commander. He was no ordinary man."

"As his example and purpose are better understood, his memory will win more than a passing thought from many on both sides of the Atlantic who never knew him. Those who did know him on this side mourn with deep sadness his early death, and will always hold him in mind with affectionate pride. He is to be honoured not only like our own, but with especial gratitude. Our own boys go forth in a temper that makes dross of all careful egotism in respect of their safety or any other personal interest. But they go forth in duty.

This American Boy.

"This American boy—and what a straight, unspinning pattern of youth and strength he was—owed us no duty and he gave us all. He gave it not impulsively nor in adventurous recklessness, but with a settled enthusiasm belonging to the depth and not the tumult of the soul. How much he gave is worth considering. His personal endowments and opportunities were such that when he made up his mind to quit everything in his bright California and to come into the war, his choice was heroic in the fullest sense of that word.

"Born in South Africa, where his family had business connections, he was the only son of the late H. Butters, of Alta Vista, San Francisco, who had large interests in mines and railroads. He was the nephew and heir of the well-known mining engineer, Mr. Charles Butters, who is still resident on the Pacific slope. The boy who was to die in action as a British officer was educated at first in California, but then came to this country and went to Beaumont College, Old Windsor. There he learned to know the meaning of England, her scenes, her history, and he was enchanted. He was devoted to his school. That devotion, one thinks, played its part in bringing him back when he thought that the old land was in the fight for all her centuries, that she, too, might have kept out of it, but that her cause was pure and glorious, that her entry into the struggle was a saving decision in the everlasting choice between right and wrong.

The Choice.

"When he went back to America he was a young man of mark, framed to excel both in sport and affairs. He was very tall, supple, active, frank and comely of face, as gay as he was good-looking. You saw by a glance at his hands, that he had a born instinct for management and technique. He had been a good deal at sea. He knew all about horses and motor-cars. He was a crack shot and a fine polo-player. His business ability was shown as soon as he took over the management of his father's estates.

An American Citizen.

"Like so many of our own young soldiers in their attitude towards politics, he was not content with either of the old parties in the United States. He thought that his own generation, if it was earnest enough, might make a better hand both of social problems and world relations. He had hoped to play his part. Though he always thought of himself in a fine spirit as 'an American citizen,' he wanted the United States to take a full share in the wider life of the world, and especially to work as far as possible for common ideals with the whole-English-speaking race.

"So when the news of the war came to San Francisco he put aside as fair a prospect of wealth, success, happiness and a long life as could well open before a young man, and determined to throw in his lot with the old country and the Allies in the fight for civilisation against all the might of lawless iniquity which had flung itself on Belgium.

"He was then 22. He arrived in England in the early part of 1915 to join the British Army, and no military eye could doubt that the British Army had got a rare recruit. Harry Butters got his first commission in the 11th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. Afterwards his technical faculty found more congenial scope when he transferred to the R. F. A. While training he stayed a good deal at the Rectory, Stow-on-the-Wold, Glos. The Rector writes: 'He was a warm-hearted, fearless young officer—as fine an American gentleman as ever crossed the Atlantic.' It is much to say, but it is true.

"In It to the Finish."

"His Captain writes after his death: 'He was with his guns and no one could have died in a nobler way. . . . He was one of the brightest, cheeriest boys I have ever known, and always the life and soul of the mess. . . . We all realised his nobility in coming to the help of another country, and fired by his own free will, and understood what a big heart he had. He was loved by all.'

"He is 'in it to the finish' indeed with comrades of his adoption who have passed with him," adds the Observer. "He takes his last sleep out there with so many of the brave and true, where none was braver and truer than he, and amongst the recollections of the great war his name will not be forgotten. Beaumont will take care of that. In his old college we doubt not he will have his permanent memorial. In our thoughts the flags of Britain and America cover his heart with double honour. We shall never see them entwined again without thinking of him."

"No American can read these lines without being proud of him. No Briton can read them without feelings deeper, more moved, than can be said in any words. We are grateful, as he would have liked, to his America that bred him. We are grateful to his 'dearest folks,' though they were not all with him in his course, for no man could be what he was without being the scion of a strong stock.

"Saying 'Come'—
"Since he came from California what epitaph can compare with these verses of Bret Harte, which might have been written for Harry Butters and never suited better the life and death of any Californian of them all, though it is a gallant State:—

"Hark! I hear the tramp of thousands
And of armed men the hum;
Lo! a nation's hosts have gathered
Round the quick alarming drum—
Saying, 'Come,
Freemen, come!

Ere your heritage be wasted,
said the quick alarming drum.
"Let me of my heart take counsel;
War is not of life the sum;
Who shall stay and reap the harvest
When the autumn days shall come?
But the drum
Echoed, 'Come!
Death shall reap the braver harvest,
said the solemn-sounding drum."

We hope every American paper will honour itself and the dead by printing that fine tribute to one of America's finest sons.

Restoration of Speech.

(From the Westminster Gazette.)
Almost daily we hear of some new instance of the restoration of speech lost by shell-shock. In discussing the subject a week ago the Observer gave the following list of strange cures which it had noticed:

- (1) Grew excited over a game of cards.
 - (2) Fell downstairs.
 - (3) Had a tooth pulled out at the dentist—without anaesthetic.
 - (4) Choked through inhaling cigarette smoke.
 - (5) Underwent a flash-light photograph.
 - (6) Put the wrong end of a lighted cigarette into his mouth.
- And, strangely enough, in the same issue of the paper was set out another cure occasioned by seeing the Somme film. This morning we read of a speechless soldier who was tendered twopenny change from a waiting after buying a twopenny article, and at once blurted out: "Here, I want twopenny change, not twopenny." All the cures have in them some element of surprise—a shock is the antidote to the consequences of shock—but to the infliction of the worst shock of all would probably be that of receiving insufficient change. We are gathering a long list of harmless remedies which it will be possible to try in succession.

"Cascarets" for a Cold, Bad Breath or Sick Headache

Best for liver and bowels, for biliousness, sour stomach and constipation.

Get a 10-cent box now. Furred Tongue, Bad Colds, Indigestion, Salivary Gland and Mucous Membrane Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental tears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then to keep their stomach, liver and bowels regulated, and never know a miserable moment. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

year he saw heavy fighting in the British offensive of September, 1915. He described that action with graphic directness in a long letter which was printed in the San Francisco Argonaut last January (quoted above).

LARGE AUDIENCES SEE "GREAT RUBY."

The Nickel Theatre was crowded at both performances yesterday. The principal film was the great melodrama "The Great Ruby," but the other pictures were also splendid and were watched with the keenest interest by all. "The Great Ruby" is a most sensational story and has been a great success wherever played or exhibited and it is not surprising that it met with favor here. "Mismates" was also an impressive subject. Marguerite Landis played the leading character and was greatly admired. Those who were unable to attend yesterday should be sure and go to-day.

Mr. H. C. Thomson

Lectured at Seamen's Institute Last Night.

Last night at the King George Seamen's Institute Mr. H. C. Thomson gave an interesting lecture on "The Shortage of Fish in the United Kingdom, and the practicability of obtaining a supply from Newfoundland." The lecture was under the distinguished patronage of His Excellency the Governor, who attended accompanied by Hon. Robert Watson, Rt. Hon. Sir E. P. Morris occupied the chair and in a brief speech introduced the lecturer, who pointed out that at present a large number of people who live in the thickly populated centres of Wales and the north of England were unable to obtain their usual supply of food or fresh fish, owing to the North Sea fishery being greatly hampered, and he was of the belief that those markets could be easily supplied with food fish from Newfoundland. "All," said Mr. Thomson, "that is necessary is the establishment of cold storage plants and means of conveyance." The different kinds and grades of fish would also have to be considered. In speaking of the efforts made by the Government and others to build up a fresh fish industry, he pointed out that the objections raised would be easily overcome.

Mr. W. B. Grieve proposed a vote of thanks and in doing so expressed the opinion that no permanent market could be established with the Old Country on the lines laid down by Mr. Thomson, in view of the fact that the Icelandic and other nearer fisheries would have an advantage over us, owing to the great distance we would have to ship our products. As an instance, he showed the failure of the Dundee sealers coming here. The shipping of salmon from Labrador to Europe had been a failure. Our markets lie in the other direction, in Canada and the States. As a patriotic movement, however, to supply fish to the Motherland during the war, the idea had his approval, and he hoped that practical steps would be taken as the result of Mr. Thomson's lecture.

Mr. W. F. Coaker, M. H. A., who seconded the vote of thanks promised the help of the body which he represented in establishing a fresh fish industry to supply the Old Country, and made reference to the gigantic storage plant which is to be completed at Catalina in 1918 at a cost of $35,000. The fish will be collected in motor boats from the various fishing stations in that vicinity. Matters in connection with the project have already been discussed with Canadian experts.

Rt. Hon. Sir E. P. Morris in moving the vote of thanks spoke of the failure of establishing cold storage plants in the past owing to the guarantors not standing by their agreements. While in England he visited Grimby and there spent four days with Mr. T. Robinson, and with him discussed matters relating to the fishery. Sir Edward was of the opinion that our fishermen would benefit greatly by the project, as they would obtain a greater price for the green article than they are now getting for the dry cured fish, while the time now lost in salting and drying could be utilised in catching more fish. It would mean millions to the country and it would have the support of the Government.

Mr. A. McDougall supported the vote of thanks which was passed by acclamation. We understand that Mr. Thomson is leaving shortly for England.

Ship Owners Fight Strike.

The firemen strikers held another emergency meeting last night to consider the subjoined communication received from shipowners:—

"We, the undersigned, beg to notify you that if the strike which you have called on our boats is not raised before noon to-morrow, Thursday, Oct. 12th, we will not in future sign on any Union Firemen on our steamers. (Sgd.) Reid-Nfld. Co., per H. D. Reid; A. H. Murray, Bowring Bros., Ltd., per Eric Bowring; Crobble & Co., Jas. Baird, Ltd., per Hugh Baird; Job Bros. & Co., per Robert B. Job; Murray & Crawford, per Balne Johnston & Co., Agents."

After a lengthy debate the firemen decided not to go to the present terms offered and would go to Sydney or Halifax to look for employment. If their request for an increase was not acceded to. The stokers on the Cabot Strait and Bay steamers have quit work. The coastal steamer Portia is still hung up, but the S. S. Eagle was supplied by the Reid Company with men and sailed for Sydney last evening.

What Are You Doing for that Eczema?

"Nothing; I've about given up trying to cure it."
"That is not wise. Do as I did and you will probably be cured in a short time. I used Zylex and Zylex Soap with it and my Eczema began to improve at once. A couple of boxes cured. You can get Zylex at your druggists."
