by various circumstances which have sprung up from time to time, and there was a strong opinion, in which I myself for a time shared, that this was going to be used for the purpose of strangling the Canadian enterprise. In that suspicion, no doubt, the Board of Directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway strongly participated, very naturally, because they believed that influence was going to be used for the purpose of strangling the Canadian enterprise. Then the hon. gentleman says truly that I omitted, in making my remarks the other night, to say that there had been early a hostile feeling in that regard. No doubt there was, but it was not material to the argument, nor is it material now. The hon, gentleman quoted the prospectus of the Canadian Pacific Railway in September, 1881, in which they declared it was their intention to build a series of branch lines. We must look back to the general inflation in 1881 as in 1879 and 1880, which existed all over this country with respect to railway construction—an inflation so great that it has caused all the subsequent depression and stringency in railway operations on this continent. It has operated against the Canadian Pacific Railway, as it has operated against every other railway enterprise, whether in the hands of Dr. Schultz, or Mr. Stephen, or Mr. Andrew Allan or anybody else. At that time, in 1881, the company believed they would have no difficulty in building the main line, and they were naturally desirous to have as many feeders to the main line as possible. It was their interest, it was also their duty to those who had invested in the company as well as themselves, to encourage the laying out of main lines, and they laid down a very inviting programme as to the best mode of opening up the best sections of the country by building branch lines; but they knew perfectly well, and we knew perfectly well, that no portion of the funds from the proceeds of land grants or no portion of the money subsidy, $25,000,000, could be appropriated to any one of these lines. The whole proceeds of the subsidy and the sale of lands must be and could only be expended on the main line. So, therefore, when the Canadian Pacific Raiway Company published to the country that they intended to complete a number of branch lines, they could only have meant, and the country could only have understood, that, with their influence and with the feasibility and the advantage of these lines, and the prospect of a profit, they would be able scopic review of all the Orders in Council, of all the papers to obtain the confidence and support of capitalists in Europe to enable them to complete these branch lines. Nobody could have supposed for a moment that any portion of the subsidy to build the main line would be appropriated to the building of the branch lines. We know perfectly well how completely that favorable picture faded, we know the dissolving view that took place in consequence of this reaction and in consequence of this railway depression. There had arisen, as we all know, in England the most violent, the most unprecedented opposition to the Canadian Pacific Railway in the English market. No effort was spared to decry the railway, to destroy its prospects, and, in order to do so, to decry the value of the country, the state of the country, the fertility of the country, the climate of the country. It was attacked in every possible way by the Grand Trunk interest in England. That proved to be a very formidable opponent, in consequence of the ramification of the immense quantity of stock and bonds held in the English market, the number of persons, from the poor man who had a bond for $100, up to the millionaire, who were all interested; and the whole stock exchange had been using the different securities of the Grand Trunk as a permanent means of speculation and of generally, that the efforts to build a line on condition of gambling, the whole of the stock exchange and all the vast proprietary of the Grand Trunk worked against this Canadian Pacific Railway, aided by the strongest representations and misrepresentations from the United States and

United States, with the Canadian Pacific Railway, aided, I must say, by the unpatriotic efforts made from Canada, which were quoted largely as being evidence that could not be controverted, that could not be disputed, that the line would never pay, that a great portion of the country through which the Canadian Pacific Railway passed was worthless for agricultural purposes. All these representations, these unpatriotic representations which were used unscrupulously, and exaggerated by the American influences -for there was not an expression, sometimes an honest, true expression of the opinion of a Canadian gentleman, whether mistaken or unmistaken, adverse to that county but was republished, sent to England, exaggerated, used with the most malignant purpose, with a view to destroy the prospects of the Canadian Pacific Railway and of the great North-West of Canada—all these things combined together, the influence of the great proprietary of the Grand Trunk and the whole of the stock exchange in England, almost as one man, and the influence of the rival Pacific railways crossing the continent, who feared the superiority of the Canadian Pacific Railway when it was finished, and the attacks which were made and quoted from Canada, operated to destroy the fair prospects of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to destroy its credit and its prestige. It was driven off the British exchange; no bond could be sold in England; it could not be quoted in the exchange lists in England; and it is wonderful that, under all these adverse influences, under all these fierce, malignant and persistent attacks, that railroad should have, by the energy of those who control its destinies, approach now to completion, and if they have not been able to carry out all that they promised and all their expectations, it is no fault of theirs. Certainly, it will be admitted by friend or by foe of that enterprise, or of the gentlemen who control it, that, whatever may be said of them, though they may be called extravagant or rash, they cannot be called weak men or timid men. They have acted with an enthusiam unparalleled in the history of railway enterprise, and they have pushed that enterprise through at an enormous sacrifice to themselves, and with the utter want of the expected hope, the reasonable hope that we, the people of Canada, as well as they, the railway managers, entertained that, with such a promising enterprise, with such a magnificent country to go through, and with the very liberal and generous aid that Parliament has given them, that road would have been built and there would have been a rush of investors to invest in that great road, and that there would also have been a strong desire to invest in the various branches running through magnificent countries, connecting with that road and acting as feeders to it, growing with its growth, strengthening with its strength, giving and receiving strength, and at the same time settling that country. All these fair promises were crushed, all these expectations failed, because of these hostile influences, hostile influences that men in Canada will regret, and which the gamblers on the stock exchange, who have been endeavoring to ruin this enterprise will feel as a disappointment and a regret that, instead of speculating and swopping jack-knives in the way of bad securities with the Grand Trunk, they had not, like sensible men and honest money brokers, had faith in the Canadian Pacific Railway, and applied their ingenuity and their funds to its support. The hon, gentleman says that the company ought to have built their railway across the prairie, and that the expectation was-if I remember his words, though I do not remember his language exactly —that the company ought to have built the railway across the prairies, and then to have devoted their energies to the building of the branch lines. I know that has been always the policy of the hon. gentleman; I know he always denounced the building of the railway to the north of Lake Superior, and always oppose the extension lic moneys if we granted more than they themselves said through the sea of mountains into British Columbia; I know they required. When the companies, full of hope in the Sir John A. Macdonald.

that he was always anxious to confine the road to running across the prairie. What would have been the fate of Canada, what would have been the value of that railway to Canada as a Canadian enterprise, if it had not been for the construction of the Lake Superior Railway? We would have built a railway across the prairie to run down and connect at all convenient points with the United States system of railways, and all the commerce extending from the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains would have been carried along the Pacific Railway, and safely delivered at some point upon it, Brandon, or Portage la Prairie, or Winnipeg, and then it would have gone by the United States, and all the money of the Canadas, and all the burden of taxation that we have willingly encountered and accepted, would have been applied for the settlement of that particular country certainly, but also to carry off all the trade of that country to the United States. I will say that I know that originally the individual opinions of some of the contractors of the Canadian Pacific Railway were that it was a great task that we were forcing upon them to build the Lake Superior branch. I am at liberty to say that Mr. George Stephen at first thought that might be postponed, but he has said to me that he is now convinced that my obstinacy, as he calls it, in insisting upon the building of the Lake Superior branch, was the salvation of that railway. It would not be anything like what he knows it will be now. If that portion of the railway had not been built it would not have been a Canadian railway, it would not have served to carry off the grain trade of the North-West through the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec to Montreal; it would have been simply an adjunct feeding the American railways. And, Sir, what is the case now? That railway being under one management, having one set of servants, having one description of cars, having the whole road from ocean to ocean under one management, can carry at half-price-aye, I may almost say, at quarter price—and without loss, the products of the North-West to Montreal; whereas the other railways not one of which has control from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and all of which are obliged to pull, with two or three, or four railways, are obliged to make local and disadvantageous arrangements in order to have control, or anything like control, of the traffic across the continent. This single road, under a single management, must and will compete successfully over all other railways across this continent. I will not now allude to the political consequences, and the advantages of building that road. Late events have shown us that we are made one people by that road, that that iron link has bound us together in such a way that we stand superior to most of the shafts of ill-fortune, that we can now assemble together, at every point which may be assailed, or may be in danger, the whole physical forces of Canada by means of that great artery, against any foreign foe or any internal insurrection or outbreak. The hon. gentleman says that the Government has been rash, vacillating and unhappy in their railway policy. Those expressions are very strong, the expletives are very good in their way, but they are rather inconsistent. Vacillating policy is not generally a rash policy. Now, our policy has not been rash, nor yet has it been vacillating. The hon. gentleman used the expression that we were very rash, and at the same time he said we were rather too slow in the arrangements made, in the granting of these various applications of the Manitoba and South-Western Railway. We proceeded cautiously, but we proceeded steadily, and there was no vaciliation in any way. We tried to encourage all these different railways in the hands of different promoters, to the utmost extent that we safely could. granted what they wanted, and, as I said the other day, it would be a profligate waste of the public lands and the pub-

then circumstances of the English market, applied for 3,820 acres at $1 an acre, we said: Yes, you shall have it. They said then that 3,820 acres a mile would be sufficient, but they came afterwards and said: We find this will not help us; we have gone into the market but we cannot, on this security, raise the money. They asked us to give them more, and we gave them more at their request. They asked for an extension of time for the payment of the $1 an acre and we gave them what they asked. This was not rashness, and this, at the same time, was not vacillation. be sure, we became more liberal in our grants; when they showed us proof that our previous grants were insufficient, we granted them what they wanted. Mr. Chairman, I am free to say with the hon. gentleman, this Government is not sanguine of the speedy success of all these railways. Sir, we have had several of them—we have had the Souris road, we have had the North-Western road, we have had the South-Western road, and others roads, still paper roads—we have had them before us, and we have encouraged them all. We have looked at the list of those who promoted these railway enterprises, and we know they are respectable men, we know they are not mere shysters, to use the Americanism, but that they are men, some with more and some with less, means, but all men of character, and all, we believe, with an earnest desire not only to enter into a legitimate and profitable enterprise, but to carry out the enterprise in good faith. But we know they have not greatly succeeded yet, except the North-Western, which, perhaps has been the most successful. Now, Sir, with respect to Mr. Van Horne's statement that he is not sanguine. Mr. Chairman, he could not be sanguine when the Canadian Pacific Railway had been driven out of the market, both in New York and in London, from the various influences that I have mentioned. Sir, as there was a time of inflation, and as there has since been a time of depression, I am glad to see that there is a break in the cloud, I am glad to see the blue sky is appearing again; and I do believe that in the early future the Canadian investments which have been hitherto so depressed are going to take a legitimate position, warranted by their real permanent value, going to take a safe and satisfactory position in the English market. The hon. gentleman says that we are now brought face to face for the first time with these grants. Of course we are, because the application is to give our land. The Government have no power to give away lands, the Government must come to Parliament for power to give away lands. All the previous action has been Executive action, but it has been within the strict lines of the empowering clauses of the various Acts on the Statute Book. The original Dominion Lands Act provides that We insist the land shall be offered at $1 an acre. upon $1 an acre, we hold to that; and as we were obliged to sell to anybody and everybody under the original Act at $1 an acre, that being the original provision of the Dominion Act, and that being the normal price of the land, we could have no hesitation, when we were selling to other persons for settlement at $1 an acre in granting it to railway companies who promised, as a condition of getting the land at $1 an acre, to build a railway which would make those lands valuable. We did that readily whenever we were satisfied of the responsibility of parties applying. Hitherto the enterprises have not proceeded far; yet we hear now that the times are getting better; we see that the Manitoba and North-Western is going on with the road; we see that the railway running from Regina to Long Lake is now in actual progress; and we hope and believe that in consequence of the better times, the South-Western will be completed. It is true that we cannot prophesy, but I hope and believe that if the relief is granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which they have sought, and which is now before Parliament, that will of itself lead to the completion of the was before the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was in road and its complete success; and the marvellous progress of its traffic in its incomplete state will give it such a credit in the market, will give it such a new start, that it will rise superior to the opposition which has so long depressed its energies in England and elsewhere, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other enterprises will have a fair field in the English market. Meanwhile I would say that this grant will, I have no doubt, be given as it ought to be given. The hon, gentleman at the end of his long speech said that he did not oppose it.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well; then all that remains for me to say is, that I fancy it will receive, having his sanction, the unanimous approval of the House. The speech of the hon, gentleman was an attack upon the land policy of the Government. From my general recollection of the facts-not having recently perused the papers so closely and so anxiously as the hon, gentleman, I cannot give them line by line-but from my general recollection I am perfectly sure that throughout the whole of our transactions with these railway companies the Government have not any one single thing to regret. I do not admit, as I do not see, they have made one single mistake. I say they have from the beginning met the reasonable requirements of all the different railway enterprises, and when circumstances became more adverse, and as the clouds over the different enterprises grew more dark and dense, and there was necessity for the companies to apply for additional assistance, the Government granted them additional assistance, and we come now to Parliament and ask it to sanction that assistance. And I believe, after many days and many disappointments, and after some injury to particular individuals, no doubt, to particular settlers, who believed, as everyone believed, that those railways would have made better progress-notwithstanding all these facts, these railways will now take a new life, and we hope to see that country ere long covered with railways which are maintained, and which could not be maintained but for the action of the Government, with the assent of Parliament.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, if the hon, gentleman does really believe that neither he nor his Government has anything to regret in the course they have pursued, more especially towards those unfortunate persons settled in the particular district which this projected railway is intended to serve, all I can say is that his conscience must have been seared with a red hot iron. It has happened to me and to other members of this House to have travelled, years ago, through that district, an exceedingly fertile district, I do not say the best in the North-West and in all Manitoba, but one which may compele with any district there. And to those who traversed that country five or six years ago, and who recollect what promises were then held out, what steps were taken by those unfortunate settlers and by their representatives to secure railway communication, who know how they have been frustrated as the hon, gentleman even to-day has to admit, largely by the direct action of the Government and by causes to which the hon, gentleman has rather alluded than recited in full—I say anybody who recalls the position in 1879, 1880 and 1881 and who knows anything of the present condition of those settlers, and that not only those settlers but all Canada suffered in consequence of the policy of the Government, must have been as much astonished as I and a good many other hon, members were when the First Minister declared that the Government had nothing to regret in connection with their railway policy in the North-West, and more especially in connection with the railway policy in south-western Manitoba. Why, I myself, and I dare say other hon. members were present, remember perfectly—it existence, before a contract was given out—that we had the extraordinary spectacle of a deputation from south-western Manitoba coming down to this Parliament, and asking for leave to construct a railway at their own expense to enable them to cultivate their lands at a profit and settle them with Canadians. They made that application to the present Government. They were refused by Government, and I am bound in justice to Sir Charles Tupper to say that he took the opportunity of expressing his extreme regret at being obliged to refuse them, and, if my memory serves me, he also declared that the Government would make it their special object (this was, we must remember, in the early part of 1880) to take care that, although the Government were obliged for reasons of State policy to refuse to those people the right to construct that railway at that time, they would see that at a very early period they were supplied with railway facilities and railway communication. Since that time five years have come and gone, and those unfortunate people for all practical intents and purposes are no nearer having railway communication, are no better supplied with silways than they were in 1880. And yet the First Minister tells us that he has nothing to regret and his Government have nothing to regret in connection with their conduct towards the South-Western Railway. However, I shall have a word or two to say on that point later on. I desire more particularly at this moment to call attention to some of the extraordinary statements which the First Minister has just made in regard to the total discomfiture which his policy has met with and to the total discomfiture which the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway has met at the hands of capitalists all over the world. The First Minister was perfectly correct in saying that the magnificent promises which were held out in 1879, and on which, as the House knows, the Government built so much, and in consequence of which the Government induced Parliament to entrust to them and to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company such huge subsidies as I venture to say were never given to any other railway under the sun—have been unfulfilled. It is perfectly true that not one of the promises made by the First Minister and his Government has been realised in a single particular; that all expectations which they held out to the people of the country as to the settlement of the North-West have been falsified; that all expectations held out to the people of this country for the relief of their finances, which would arise from the sales of land which were to be made in the North-West, have been likewise falsified; that Canada which that road takes an interest. And that is the reason to-day is burdened to an extraordinary degree in consequence of the profuse and lavish expenditures which starved, why it is impossible to construct branch lines; that between them the Government and the Canadian Pacific is the reason why they have most needlessly drawn upon Railway Company have been guilty of, and for which up them, to their own great injury and the great injury of to this day nothing that at all approaches to a decent Canadian credit, the hostility of the Grand Trunk and its account or to a fair honest statement as between the company and the nation has yet been submitted to us. If it were indeed the case, as the First Minister alleges, that the whole world had entered into a conspiracy against the present Government of Canada and against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and that in consequence of this hostility, this unprovoked hostility, that magnificent and patriotic dream which danced before the mind of the hon gentleman had failed of fulfilment, then I could understand the justice of the plea which the First Minister has now addressed, somewhat unnecessarily and somewhat irrelevantly, in opposition to the indictment of his policy on this particular question which my hon. friend has preferred. But, Sir, as he has chosen to take that line, as he has chosen to tell us that all these difficulties have arisen from the extraordinary and unprovoked opposition to the Canadian Pacific Railway and to Canada, which existed as he says in London, in New York, and elsewhere, I desire to take this opportunity, in reply to I But I say the Government which encouraged this company Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

the First Minister, of calling attention to the reasons why this hostility, if it did exist, had arisen. And Sir, in the first place I may say as respects the whole policy of the Government, I take issue with it from the commencement. I say there never was and never could be a greater mistake than to hand over one quarter of a continent—because practically that is what we did—to the clutches of one gigantic corporation, to give to a monopoly such privileges and powers as those against which we have so often protested in this House. Now, the difficulties the company have encountered result mainly from three fatal errors on their part. First of all, they grasped at a great deal too much. I believe that had they confined themselves to their legitimate enterprise, had they contented themselves with constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway from the point at which it was originally intended to start to the Ocean, and at the same time carried out the policy which they themselves avowed to be their policy, of settling up Manitoba and the adjacent parts of the North-West; if they had constructed a reasonable number of branch lines, we, to-day, instead of seeing 200,000 people scattered thinly over a line of 1,200 miles, would have had a compact, strong, and prosperous Province, with probably its three quarters of a million, in the immediate vicinity of the old Province of Manitoba, and the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been on the high road to thorough success. And what was the course which that company, aided and abetted by the present Government of Canada, saw fit to pursue? Instead of confining themselves to what the hon, gentleman has nightly called the huge and gigantic task which lay which before them, is it not known to every member of the House and every man of intelligence in the country, that the very first thing that these gentlemen did was to plunge into wholly unnecessary and uncalled for railway enterprises all over the remaining portion of Canada; to divert to those enterprises the funds which would have enabled them to bring their legitimate enterprise to a prosperous and a profitable conclusion. That is the cause why the engagements made by them have been broken, why after receiving such enormous grants and subsidies as they did receive, they returned to us last year for a nominal loan, but a real gift of $30,000,000, and that is why to-day, on this table there are propositions for setting aside the security which we were told last year was a security of the first order, and for granting more millions and more millions and additional subsidies and grants, either to the Canadian Pacific Railway directly or to branches and side roads in friends, which the hon. Minister says, whether truly or not he knows best, rendered it impossible to place a bond of the Canadian Pacific Railway on the Stock Exchange of London. Sir, so far from that hostility being unprovoked, I say that no one could well have gone further out of the way to invite hostility than these gentlemen. I say in the broad sense—though individual sections may have benefited by it-that nothing was more injudicious, unwise, or unstatesmanlike than to encourage a company, which had engagements infinitely more weighty than it was likely to discharge, infinitely more than it has discharged or can discharge, to engage in hostility with what the hon, gentleman described as one of the most powerful corporations in England, at any rate as regards its effect on the London Stock Exchange. Now, it is not my present purpose to say anything about the hostility between those two companies. let them fight it out as they see fit between themselves.

in engaging in a great variety of operations, the tendency of which was to withdraw funds which otherwise would have been available for the construction of branch lines and the completion of the Railway is not entitled to come here and talk as if this was an inexplicable conspiracy on the part of the English capitalists and the capitalists of the world against a road which otherwise might have been a magnificent success. Sir, the Government had before them in 1880 a very plain course. Had they chosen to have taken proper precautions for the construction of that line, to seeing that that line when constructed whether by themselves or by the company, should be placed under such restrictions that men forming companies to construct other lines in other parts of the North-West, would have been safe in dealing with them, then the natural result which has followed in many other portions of North America, would have followed there. Other capitalists would have been ready to come forward, ready to construct those independent lines; the North-West would have been filled up with people and we would have had to-day a populous compact and powerful province, probably three quarters of a million strong, from the trade and commerce of which the Canadian Pacific Railway and what is more than that, the people of Canada would have derived immense profits, and by aid of which trade they would no doubt have no difficulty in floating their securities in England and elsewhere. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that in addition to the hostility of the Grand Trunk Railway, they had to contend with the unpatriotic representations of hon. gentlemen opposite because that was what he meant, though he hardly dared to say so. Sir, that is not true. No hon gentleman on this side has decried the North-West, no hon gentleman on this side would decry the North-West; no hon, gentleman on this side has the smallest intention of decrying the North-West. I admit, I have always admitted, that the future of Canada is bound up with the successful settlement of that country, but what we do oppose and denounce, is the unpatriotic and unstatesmanlike conduct which has turned all these many opportunities which the hon. gentleman depicted just now, rather into sources of injury and waste, of extravagance and mismanagement, than of any benefit to the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman tells us that whatever else we may or may not say about the Canadian Pacific Railway, we must admire the wonderful justified in calling on the Government to say whether, in energy with which they have pushed the road. Sir, they have displayed considerable energy in pushing that road. But when I am called upon to admire their wonderful energy, to give credit to them for the way in which that road has been pushed, I call to mind at whose cost that energy has been displayed, out of whose pocket and with whose money that work has been done. I say that if that road was fairly valued from end to end, I for my part do not believe, and I will not believe until I can get infinitely better proof than any yet submitted by the Government to the country—I believe that the money which we have given would have been amply sufficient, and more than sufficient, to do everything that has been done on the line proper of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callender to Port Moody. Sir, we have given these men, besides building 700 miles of road, $25,000,000, then $10,000,000, the proceeds of our own lands, then a loan of $30,000,000, and now we are asked for a loan of $5,000,000 in all, roughly speaking, $70,000,000 have been given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the construction of a work which the late Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, over and over again, in the hearing of members of this House, told us could be constructed for $48,000,000. I am not going, as I said, to anticipate the discussion, which will probably have to be gone into in detail, as to how this money has been employed, or what there is to show for it; but I do protest against the First Minister claiming credit ments, are likely to abandon Manitoba altogether; and I

for these gentlemen, as if great sacrifices had been made and great cost incurred by them in the construction of this line. That remains to be proved. It may be that in their subsidiary enterprises they have risked and lost much; but I do say that the aid which has been given for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway by the people of Canada has been enough to discharge every reasonable expense which had to be incurred for that line; and the onus rests first on those gentlemen who declared that those portions of the railway could be constructed for something like $20,000,000 less than has been actually expended, to show how it is that the company have contrived to spend what appears to me to be a sum vastly in excess of the legitimate cost of such a work in the various sections which were confided to their charge. With respect to the Manitoba and South-Western Railway, as the hon, gentleman knows, there has been a large settlement existing in the country specially interested in that road as far back as 1879. That was a settlement of the very best class. It was composed of Canadian settlers from the most prosperous parts of Ontario, who brought with them very considerable amounts of capital, and it only required a railroad to have brought tens of thousands—I might almost say hundreds of thousands-of people into that region, who would to-day, had the Government done its duty, have been prosperous settlers. If the hon, gentleman wants to know where those people who would have settled there have gone, I would recommend him to go, or to send some trusty agent, to the northern portion of the State of Dakota and there he will find a Canadian settlement, which, had it been planted on the northern side of the boundary line, would have added enormously to the wealth and the prosperity of that country. It is not merely the loss of population which we have to deplore; but the hon, gentleman knows that where you find a very large number of people from a particular section of country settling in the United States, the tendency is to create a constant drain. These people inform their friends, and send for their acquaintances and relatives, and the thing goes on. Therefore it is, as I conceive, in a high degree the duty of the Government, when they find the people of Canada desirous of settling in this quarter, to take steps to open up the country in the only way in which it can be done—by the construction of a railroad; and my hon. friend is perfectly proposing this vote to the Manitoba South Western Railway Company—which neither he nor anybody on this side, so far as I understand, intends to oppose—they have taken due precautions to secure the construction of this road. Nothing could be worse than to set apart large tracts of land without knowing whether or not they will be utilised in a short space of time. Nothing could be more unwise or unpatriotic than for the Government to put 600,000 or 700,000 acres—much more, several millions of acres—into a reservation which they allow no man to settle in or meddle with, and wait, perhaps three, four or five years, before the expectations which are now held out by these companies are fulfilled. When you bear in mind that it was largely due to the action of the Government themselves that those people were disappointed in regard to the construction of a railway—because the Government refused to allow them to secure the construction of a railway at their own cost—in the case of this particular railway the Government are doubly and trebly bound to see to it that the expectations likely to be raised by their action are not again disappointed. Upon that point I speak with knowledge. I have several correspondents in that district, and I have seen several of the persons who have settled there, and they are all agreed on this point, that if they do not speedily obtain a railway, the settlers who have remained there so long, under great discourage.

need not point out to the House that settlers who go to any particular part of Manitoba and afterwards abandon it necessarily exercise a most prejudicial influence on the future settlement of the country. I have always believed myself that a prosperous settler is the only immigration agent of real value. We all know it is the experience of all North America, that when men prosper in a particular locality there is is not the slightest difficulty in inducing a large immigration there; and that those people would prosper I have not the slightest doubt if this road and other roads proposed to be constructed in other localities should be put into active operation; but without them it is utterly impossible to encourage any further settlement or to meet the practical difficulties which always encounter pioneers. There is another point to which I desire to call the hon. gentleman's attention, to which he alluded the other evening. I had occasion, in the course of a speech I made last year at Winnipeg, to say, speaking for myself, that I entirely approved of the idea then afloat in the North-West that the Government should make free grants of land to those roads. I approved of it then, and I approve of it now; but I also thought, looking at the whole condition of the country, that the Government, if they relaxed their claim on the road, ought to take precautions to see that those lands were not locked up for any considerable period of time. I do not agree with the First Minister in saying that by placing a moderate price on those lands, you would be likely to materially diminish the value of your gift. It may be true, with regard to special localities along the line of railway, that the Government would desire to make moderate reservations to create towns and villages; that is not a point I desire to dwell upon now; but if you fix a moderate price under which any bona fide settler may go in and take up land I believe the company would be able to do just as well with the free grant he proposes to give them; and by that means a very great and serious danger to the future of the country would be avoided. I had communication myself with some gentlemen concerned in these roads, and they assured me—I cannot say whether or not they have changed their minds since—that there would be no objection on their part to some fixed maximum price being settled by the Government. The hon. gentleman, of course, having very recently communicated with them, may be in a position to say that their views have altered on that point; but when you recollect that he proposed to give these companies 6,400 acres a mile, and that the roads cannot be particularly expensive in construction, I think that the House will see that no very serious injury could be done to their prospects by fixing some price at which settlers could depend on being able to obtain possession of those lands. I believe that that policy will be in the interests of the railways themselves, as I am quite sure it would be in the interest of the country at large; and that is one of those points on which I think the Government will not act wisely if they refuse to make such a concession, which, as the hon. gentleman well knows, has been loudly demanded in Manitoba and other parts of the North-West Territories. In any case, I believe that although very late, although after sustaining very great loss, it is almost aboslutely necessary for us to secure the construction of branch lines in that country. I believe that had that been done, as I hold the Government ought to have made a point of seeing that it was done, four or five years ago, the population of that country would have been trebled and quadrupled, and I have no doubt the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been enormously improved. Still, it is better to do it even at this very late day than to let that country remain practically locked up, as it has been; but the Government to-day should not make those grants until they are well assured that prompt steps Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a short limit to the grants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know there is a short limit to the grant, but we all know that when that short limit expires, particularly in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, immense pressure is likely to be put on the Government, if it does not suit the convenience of the company to build within the time agreed, to extend the time. It will be extended, very probably, for another short period, and then for another, and then another, and so on. I attach exceedingly little importance to a time limit in dealings between the Government and a corporation in such extremely close relations with it as the Canadian Pacific Railway; I think that something more than that is required in order to insure completion, and I have no doubt that, unless the hon. gentleman does secure completion, very great and permanent evil will be wrought through the whole country in the North-West. We have practically invested one hundred millions of the money of the people of Canada in this enterprise, and it is quite clear that unless we succeed, and succeed very shortly, in throwing a very considerable population into the North-West, that that sum, and the interest we will have to pay for it, will constitute a tremendons millstone around the neck of the whole Dominion. I believe that, at last, the Government are making an endeavor to take some steps that will partly remedy the mischiefs their negligence has caused. I have always affirmed, if you grant monopoly powers to a great trunk railway, you, of necessity, take away from private individuals the power of constructing any branch lines, because, unless under the most extraordinary circumstances, it is very clear that no man or no corporation will ever put their earnings wholly and completely at the power of a huge corporation like the Canadian Pacific Railway. That would be, in almost any case I can conceive, the necessary consequence of building a line of railway from some point in our own territory to some point along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Every one knows what the policy of great railway corporations has been in the past, and will be in the future, towards all these short and subsidiary lines. Unless they are owned by influential members of the corporation, they will be treated as sponges and squeezed to the very last drop; they will be allowed to make only the lowest profit that will keep their roads running, and the invariable result is that the settlers for whose benefit they are to be constructed, the district they profess to serve, will have to pay two rates, one to the branch or subsidiary railway, and the other to the main line. This has been the experience of the past, and will be that of the future. Had the First Minister taken the opportunity to acquaint himself personally with the position and the needs of that country, he would have long since seen the terrible mistake that he had made in giving this great corporation such absolute and uncontrolled powers, and I do not believe the North-West will prosper as it should until these monopoly clauses, at any rate, are blotted off our Statute Book.

man won knows, has been routing dentations and other parts of the North-West Territories. In any case, it believe that although very late, although after sustaining very great loss, it is almost aboslutely necessary for us to secure the construction of branch lines in that country. I believe that had that been done, as I hold the Government ought to have made a point of seeing that it was done, four or five years ago, the population of that country would have been trebled and quadrupled, and I have no doubt the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been enormously improved. Still, it is better to do it even at this very late day than to let that country remain practically locked up, as it has been; but the Government to-day should not make those grants until they are well assured that prompt steps will be taken to give these people railway communication.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am not aware that any hon. gentleman on this side has expressed any desire to oppose the resolutions now before the House. There is no reason why we should. Those resolutions embody the policy of the Liberal party in regard to the construction of railways in the North West for the last ten years. It was the policy of the late Government that branch railways, opening up that vast section of the country, should be subsidised, from view, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), when Minister of the Interior, introduced a Bill into Parliament, the object of which was that large and liberal grants would be made for the purpose of aiding the construction of branch railways. What we complain of, and what we have a right to complain of, is what the people of the North-West, especially the people in south-western Manitoba complain of, that the hon, gentleman has neglected so long to discharge the duties he ought to have discharged years ago. In his report to the Governor in Council, the hon. gentleman admits that a large number of settlers made their homes in south-western Manitoba upon the assurance that the Government of the country would open up that region within a reasonable time, by the construction of railways. The Minister of the Interior so states in his minute to the Governor in Council. We know quite well that the people in south-western Manitoba for years had every reason to expect that reasonable assistance would be given by the Government for the purpose of constructing a railway opening up that vast fertile region. Up to this hour the people of South-Western Manitoba have not been so accommodated. I know that a large number of the people from the counties of Huron and Perth settled in southwestern Manitoba upon the assurance that after a short period of their settlement the country would be opened up by railway communication. I venture to say had hon. gentlemen opposite not so hampered the Winnipeg and South-Western Railway, that railway would have been constructed out to Clear Water Lake long ago. What the Government now propose to do ought to have been done years

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Why did not you do it?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There was then no settlement of the country. You have been seven years on the Treasury benches, doing absolutely nothing to open up that country for settlement. If we had continued to occupy the seats which hon, gentlemen opposite have so unworthily occupied for years, branch lines in the North-West would have been constructed long ago. But the Government of the day have not been alive to the duty that devolved upon them; otherwise they would have assisted to build the South-Western Railway in the way they now propose to assist the Canadian Pacific Railway to build it. But hon, gentlemen opposite, by their sympathy, aid and assistance to the Canadian Pacific Railway, so hampered the Winnipeg and South-Western Railway that the latter was never able to extend their line beyond 58 miles of Winnipeg. What has been the result of this policy? It is apparent to everybody in the country that of the large number of immigrants settled in south-western Manitoba, 50 per cent., I venture to say, have left the country. Why have they left the country?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). No, they have not.

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. gentleman says no. I make no statement on the floor of Parliament that I am not prepared to prove, and I am prepared to prove it from the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, especially the organ published in the city of Winnipeg. I say, without fear of successful contradiction—the hon, gentleman may shake his wise head, but he will not venture to contradict the statement—that owing to the apathy, the indifference, the care-lessness, the criminal neglect of hon. gentlemen opposite, in not opening up the country as they ought to have done, to the large number of settlers in that part of the country, they have left it within the last few years. The hon. gentleman says it is not so. I suppose that he, who follows his leader so faithfully, will accept the statement of the Winnipeg Times, a paper published in the interests of the Government, a paper which reflects the views of the Government, and which would say nothing against the Government unless driven to do so, by patriotic motives. The hon, gentleman knows, if he has taken the trouble to examine the files of the Winnipeg Times, that two years ago it drew the attention of the Government to the way in which settlers in the North-West, and especially in south-western Manitoba, were treated by the Government.

Not once or twice, but over and over again, it drew the attention of the Government, and especially of the Minister of the Interior, the man charged with the administration of public affairs in that country, to the unfortunate position in which those settlers were placed by the policy of the Government, not only their land policy, but the other portions of their policy, to which I do not at present propose to direct my attention. He will find, in the Winnipeg Times of the 17th May, 1883, an editorial article containing the following statement:-

statement:—

"On the lands sold south of the railway belt there are scores of squatters who, at this moment, are planting their crops in blissful ignorance of this fact, that some speculator will soon own their farms and the labo repent on them. It is true the Department professed, some time ago that compensation for disturbances would be given to those squatters who had made improvements, the compensation to be determined by a Government valuator; that as a matter of fact, the buyers at the sale buy not only the land but the improvements; and even within the mile belt the Government will find it a difficult matter to inspect the farms sold and appraise the improvements. South of the belt, this will be utterly impossible. Then all, looking at its pecuniary results, is a failure. To reserve a vest quantity of land in the market at a time when money is exceedingly tight and the richest speculators poor, was madness. It is reasonably safe to say that Commissioner Walsh did not advise the step. It was no doubt taken in pursuance of that incomprehensible policy which the Department has adopted at that suggestion of ignorant or interested friends. But the failure of the sale, in a pecuniary sense, is a small matter compared with the evils it is bringing to the country. A squatter who has gone in upon land, now being sold, and ploughed and sown it, will think himself justified in holding it against all-comers, and his neighbors will think so, too.

"Mr. Metcalf, of Kingston, has an easy task in selling the land, pocketing the commission, but the Department will find, when it comes to evict the squatter, that human nature in the North-West is much the same as in Ireland. If we cannot prevail against the Government and the speculator, the squatter can, at least, leave the country with a curse."

the speculator, the squatter can, at least, leave the country with a

That is the language of the Winnipeg Times, with reference to the land policy of hon, gentlemen opposite.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). You were one of the speculators at the time spoken of.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I bought my land and paid for it second hand. I bought nothing from the Government of this country, except what I bought from this Government. I bought the larger portion of my land from a late Minister of the Crown, whose sons were allowed to speculate in Government land at the rate of about $1 an

Mr. WHITE. Like other speculators.

Mr. CAMERON. That is not the way in which you got your timber limits or your coal mines.

Mr. WHITE. I got my timber limit more honorably than that.

Mr. CAMERON. I say the Government have so hampered the settlers in the North-West, and especially in south-western Manitoba, that very many of them have become dissatisfied and disgusted with the treatment they have received, and a large number have left the country. They have left it with regret; but, as the editor of the Times says, they have left it with a curse, not upon the country, but upon the outrageous and scandalous policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, which drove them out of the country.

Mr. WHITE. It was speculators like you that drove them away.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. CAMERON. If the Government had pursued a proper policy-if they had, three or four years ago, done what they are doing now, that portion of the Province of Manitoba would be settled by a large number of prosperous. industrious and valuable settlers.

Mr. WHITE. Let me say one word. Some hon. MEMBERS, Order.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Never mind; he is only earning another timber limit.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Casey would be better off to-day if your road had been built.

Mr. CAMERON. On the faith of an Order in Council declaring the whole of the odd-numbered sections south of the 24 mile belt open for sale, a large number of settlers went to south-western Manitoba, especially from the Province of Ontario, and settled there. You are aware that, in the eyes of many who have visited all portions of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, the south-western portion of Manitoba is considered to be the garden of Manitoba and the whole North-West. Relying upon the Order in Council, knowing the character of the soil, and the climate in southwestern Manitoba, a large portion of the settlers located upon the lands, and how have these men been treated by the Government? Have their claims been recognised? Have they been enabled to obtain their patents? Has the Government treated them as it ought to treat settlers who are prepared to encounter, and who do encounter, all the difficulties of settlement in a new country 50 or 60 miles from the nearest railway accommodation? I hold in my hand a letter written by a resident of the county of Huron, who, with his two sons, emigrated to the North-West, and located upon land, a portion of which was located upon on the faith of this Order in Council.

Mr. FARROW. What year did he locate there?

Mr. CAMERON. Three years ago. I think my hon. friend opposite has some interest in this matter, too, and I hope he will give his honest convictions upon this subject.

Mr. FARROW. I will.

Mr. CAMERON. This gentleman writes me a letter. I will give his name; it is no secret. It is a communication addressed to me as a member of Parliament, and if time had permitted, I intended to call attention to it in another way. He is Mr. George McKenzie, lately a resident of the town of Wingham-

Mr. FARROW, I know him.

Mr. CAMERON. And formerly a resident in my town. He says:

He says:

"In the year 1881 there was an Order in Council fixing the price of odd-numbered sections south of the 24-mile belt at $2 and $2.50 an acre. There were a great many settled on those sections, beltfe'ing they would get the first chance to purchase, so soon as the agent got instructions to sell. Such instructions never came. There are many settlers who have been on their lands three years and have got no title. Let us see how they used the settlers. I will give you one case. One John Robertson settled on section 33, 5, 19. He broke, back-set and prepared for crop 80 acres, also built a house 25 by 34, two stories high, frame, and made other improvements ambunting in all to about $2,500.

"There was an inspector sent to the country who pretended to be in the interest of the settler, but, to our sorrow, he turned out not to be 80. He put $3 an acre on the half section that Mr. Robertson improved, and $5 on the other half. They notified him to attend the sale at Winningg and he would get the first chance at the upset price; but if he did not attend it would be sold to the highest bidder. He foolishly accepted their terms and made two payments, and then was forced to abandon the place, which is now growing up in weeds and likely to become a curse to the settlers. However, that won't matter much, as I do not think there will be one left in two years but will curse the Government and leave the country as he did. You need not be afraid to mention these facts, as I am prepared to prove every word. My own case, in cennection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, is similar to others."

Now, this man does not leave the country on account of the

Now, this man does not leave the country on account of the climate; he does not leave the country on account of the

Mr. FARROW. I want to ask who notified them to go and buy land?

Mr. CAMERON. He says, the inspector.

Mr. FARROW. Was it the Hudson Bay Company, or was it the Government, or was it the Canadian Pacific policy was fatal to the peace, and progress, and prosperity Company? Company?

Mr. CAMBBON (Huron).

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He says it was the inspector who was sent there. We know they had land to sell at Winnipeg. If the hon, gentleman had read the article from the Times he would know more about it. I say these men did not leave the country on account of the soil or the elimate. Mr. McKenzie goes on to declare:

"There is no finer climate for growing grain and stock-raising under the sun. I have 245 seres under crop. My boys do all the work, within themselves, and they have taken care of their own stock. Where is the country where two boys could handle this amount of crops? Notwithstanding this, we have turned our last furrow in this country, and we intend to allow the land to grow up with weeds, as many hundreds will do in southern Mauitoba."

I say that letters of that kind, coming to members of Parlia ment from men who have been in that country and intending to make it their permanent home, exhibit an extra-ordinary condition of affairs. These men do not complain unless there is some ground of complaint. They went there with a view of living there, and they find that owing to the policy of the Government, owing to the want of railway communication, owing to the land policy, owing to the difficulty of getting their titles recognised and ultimately getting their patents, many men have done as Mr. Robertson and Mr. McKenzie have done, and have left the country never to return there again. Now I say that hon. gentlemen opposite, in dealing with this question, ought to be careful that the rights of the settlers upon these odd-numbered sections are protected. I apprehend that this road, extending to White Water Lake, will pass through a region of country that was opened up under the Order in Council to which I have alluded, and will pass through a country many of the odd-numbered sections of which have been settled upon and improved. Now, before this land is handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway the Government should be careful that every safeguard is thrown about the rights of the settlers and that their present position is made

Mr. BOWELL. Was that letter written by George McKenzie?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes. The letter says he has left Manitoba, and he intends to let his farm grow up to weeds, as Mr. Robertson's was allowed to do. More than that : he says he is prepared to prove before a committee every statement that he has made. Sir, the hon gentleman went further than discussing the policy of this resolution. told us that the member for the west riding gave us a microscopical and interesting history of the difficulties and trials the South-Western Railway had to encounter. The hon. gentleman himself gave us a microscopical, but not a very interesting, history of the difficulties and trials the Canadian Pacific Railway had to encounter in the financial world. He told us, that owing to the combinations between the American railway owners and capitalists, and those interested in the progress of the Western States, and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and that, further, owing to the unpatriotic utterances of Canadians, the Canadian Pacific Pailway Company was not able to complete its financial transactions. If there were unpatriotic utterances by Canadians they were from hon, gentlemen opposite. I challenge any hon, member opposite to quote one word from the Liberal press of Canada depreciating either the climate or the soil of the North-West. I challenge them to quote one utterance of any Liberal member of Parliament that ever depreciated the soil or climate of that country. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that sitting upon this side of the House, in view of our duties and responsibilities to the country, we have occasionally been obliged to criticise, and to criticise sharply and severely, the policy of hon, gentle-men opposite with respect to Manitoba and the North-West. We had occasion to point out, more than once, that their not been fully justified by subsequent events? Have we not seen the North-West council, the only representative body in the whole North-West Territories, protesting, year after year, against the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, with reference to their railway policy, and their trade policy, as injurious and detrimental to the peace, the progress and the prosperity of the North-West Territory. Have we not seen, in the press of hon. gentlemen opposite, for two or three years back, the clearest possible utterances of their antagonism to the policy to which the hon. gentleman committed this country? Sir, if hon. gentlemen will refer to the meetings of the Board of Trade, in the year 1883, in the town of Winnipeg, they will find that the warmest supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, politically, declared, at a public meeting assembled to consider the grievances of Manitoba and the North-West, that the policy of this Government was not in the interests of that country. Do the hon, gentlemen not know that at Moose Jaw, upon this line of railway, two years ago, there was a meeting of Conservatives, who protested, in the strongest possible language, against the land policy, the railway policy, and the trade policy of hon. gentlemen opposite? Do they not know that even this year there have been remonstrances innumerable coming from every part of Manitoba and the North-West Territory excited the policy of hon, gentlemen expression? It is any against the policy of hon, gentlemen opposite? Is it any wonder, then, in view of those protests from the supporters and friends of the Government in that country, that the financial operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should be hampered? Sir, I say that no man in Canada to-day ever did so much to discredit the North-West Territory as the First Minister of this Dominion. I take up the hon, gentleman's own reports for the last three years, and out of his own mouth and the mouth of his officials in the North-West Territory it is capable of the clearest demonstration that the hon. gentleman, in his reports, has so decried that country that no farmer from England or from the continent of Europe would ever think of settling north of the Canadian Pacific Railway, if he had taken the trouble to read the hon, gentleman's own reports. What has the hon gentleman been telling us during the last four years? It is possible that the First Minister, like the Minister of Militia, has not read his own reports; but, if the hon, gentleman has not read them, he ought to have read them, and he ought not to have allowed those statements to have gone abroad, not only to the people of this country, but to the people of the old world, and to emigrants who are seeking homes in our North-West Territories. If those who are opposed to the progress and prosperity of our North-West, if those who wish to cripple the energies of our people and desire that our North-West shall not be opened up, wanted an argument-if our American friends across the line, who have their own north western States to open up, desired an argument to prevent settlers going to the Canadian North-West, the most potent argument they could find would be found in the hon. gentleman's own reports during the last four years. He has been telling the people, solemnly, in the Blue Books submitted to Parliament, over and over again, not one year, or two years, or three years, but four years, not on one page, or in one report, but in innumerable reports, that wheat cannot be grown north of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He has been pro claiming in the Blue Books-and the page and words of the hon. gentleman I have under my hand—that the crops in such and such a locality were all destroyed, owing to frost, in July and August—that the wheat crop was a failure, owing to the early frosts. Not only the hon. gentleman's understrappers but the hon. gentle—Cameron) bought land for $1 per acie in southern Manitoba, man himself, with the responsibility of a Minister of the Crown resting upon him, not heavily, because the hon. cate, at $10 an acre. He is the gentleman who has specugentleman never allows official responsibility to rest heavily on his shoulders, nevertheless, on the responsibility of a Minister who stands up and put his hand on his heart

ister, has declared that the North-West, that portion of the Dominion of which we think so much, is utterly unfit for agricultural settlers, who are leaving the old country in the hope of finding homes on the prairies of the west. The hongentleman told us, in his report, that in August, 1883, the crops of the Sarcees at Fish Creek were cut down by July frosts; that the crops of the Blackfeet band were destroyed, owing to summer frosts; that the crops at the following instruction farms had been badly injured by summer frosts: Way-way-see-cappo, Birdtail Creek; the Gambler, Cote, Fort Pelly; Mus-cow-pe-tung, Qu'Appelle; Day Star, Touchwood Hills; Mosquito, Eagle Hills; Poundmaker, Assiniboines; Blackfeet, Pheasant Reserve; Old Man. Yet the hop, gentleman has charged hon, members on this side of the House with endeavoring to injure the North-West and prevent settlement, when the hon, gentleman himself has published, in his Blue Book, more than enough to destroy the reputation of any country as to soil and climate. In the hon, gentleman's last report similar statements are contained. In his report of 1884 the hon, gentleman himself, not his agents, speaking of the heavy frosts on the morning of 1st July, says: At Way-way-see-cappo's band reserve, "Heavy frost on the morning of 1st July out down all the potatoes." At Kee-see-kouse's reserve, "The frosts struck their potatoes in July." White Cap's reserve, "Summer frosts destroyed their crops." New Pheasant's band, "Crops destroyed by August frost." Lean Map's band, "Crops destroyed by August frost." Lean Man's reserve, "Crops destroyed by August frost." Thunder Child's reserve, "Crops destroyed by August frost."

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). It is not pleasant to offer remarks with respect to personal affairs; but as I have endeavored to steer clear of all matters of personal benefit to myself, I wish to make a few statements, and if the hon-gentleman doubts them, we had better have a committee of investigation. The hon. gentleman has, in fact, asked for a committee. The hon, gentleman has said I have a timber limit, and that I am working for another timber limit. The hon, gentleman's statement is not true. I have not got a timber limit, and I am not working for another one. I applied for a timber limit in the North-West, the same as any other person did. I paid the Government $250 for it. I spent nine weeks in going there, but I could not reach it. I spent $500 in going there. I have surrendered the limit to the Government, and have not therefore now got it. I see the hon. member for Sunbury (Mr. Burpee) smiles. He has been in the House a good while, and he has not known me to be connected with anything improper, and he will not charge me with telling anything that is untrue. I say I have surrendered that limit to the Government. I think I have done nothing wrong. The limit cost me $750, and I have not got it 10 day. Hon. gentlemen who twit me with having a timber limit say what is not correct and what is not true. I wish that to be thoroughly and distinctly understood. That is my position, so far as timber limits are concerned. The Government have received my $250. Let hon gentlemen go and examine the books and they will find such is the case; they have the money and I have a receipt, They have got the timber limit back, after I have spent money in buying it, and have spent nine weeks of my time in respect of it. Did I make anything in speculating in timber limits in the North-West? But what is said about the hon. gentleman? He bought land in southern Manitoba. I have been told by gentlemen from that section of the country that the road now built 50 miles is not paying running expenses. I do not say that is true or untrue, but I heard so. The hon. gentleman from Huron (Mr.

and speak as sanctimonious as a Christian in denouncing others. His bank account shows well; I wish I had speculated as he has done—it would be a good thing for me. An hon, gentleman in this House has been mentioned in the press in a way I am sorry to see, owing to the transaction of the member for West Huron and the gentleman in front of him. I have never been accused of anything of that kind; I have never in my speculations to put any one in the courts. to show why he did not meet his engagements. He says, so far as the Government is concerned, that the Government has not done their duty to the North-West. I contend they have, and that there is no people in the known world who have been so well treated as the people of the North-West. They have got every favor from the people of the older parts of country, and I believe they ought to be satisfied. As to the dissatisfaction in that country, I believe there is no tariff that has done so much to produce dissatisfaction as the speculators-the men who have gone up to lend money, the men who get hold of the settlers' patents. I will be bound to say to-day, that two thirds of the titles in that country are not in the hands of the settlers, because the speculators have got them. How much of the half-breed scrip has been left in the hands of the half-breeds? Half of it has been bought by speculators like the hon. gentleman, yet he talks in a sanctimonious and an apparently honest way about corruption, and in his heart he knows that he has speculated himself, and to his own advantage. He says the policy of the Government has hurt the settlers, and he refers, I suppose, to agricultural implements. Well, Sir, to-day, in Winnipeg, you can buy agricultural implements as cheap as you can in Ottawa, than you could two years ago. I will be bound to say that you can buy articles manufactured in Brantford as cheap in Winnipeg as you can in Brantford, with a difference for freight, and 4 or 5 per cent. extra. I contend that the Government have done everything they could to build up that country, and particularly southern Manitoba. There is no hon, gentleman in this House, hardly, but has friends and relatives in southern Manitoba, and we are all anxious to see the road built and to give it every assistance we can. I only rose to say, that with regard to this timber limit that I have not go it, that it is not in my possession, that the Government have it, and that, whatever money has been lost in connection with it, has been lost by myself.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member for Huron said that the First Minister decried the country, with regard to the frosts and the quality of the soil, and now the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. White) decries his timber limits, and says that they are not worth $250, and that he had to give it back.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I said nothing of the kind. I said that, so far as the limit was concerned, which they said showed that I had speculated with the Government, that sooner than be twitted about it I had surrendered it. I said nothing about the timber or the land. I am as anxious as you are about the prosperity of the country, and if you rose to make that statement you rose to make a statement which is not true.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think anybody would wish the hon. gentleman to be deprived of his timber limit after he got it. He should have stuck to it when he got it, perhaps as a favor, as he might as well have kept the game as he gets the blame. I may say that I, along with those who have spoken on this side, am in favor of every encouragement the Government may see fit to give to this railway, as I believe no road is more needed in that country. I believe that if the Government had done its duty, the Manitoba South-Western Railway would have been built years ago, and that hundreds of dissatisfied people who went across the boundary line from southern Manitoba would have been in the country to-day. I believe that road would have been in built had it not been for the action of hon. gentlemen Mr. Stephen, saying that if certain concessions were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, they would agree to build this road. I believe this deputation wished to have a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway South-Western built. Hon. gentlemen probably know that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have built 100 miles of their south-western line from Winnipeg, and that 51 miles of the Manitoba South-Western are built. I would like to know whether this grant is intended for the old Manitoba South-Western or opposite in aiding the Canadian Pacific Railway to choke off that project. The First Minister stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway found that there were fears that some American capitalists were interested in the Manitoba South-Western, and that they also feared that that road might come to be a competitor with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and therefore he went on to justify the action of the Government in not encouraging that road as much as they should have done. That road was surveyed, in 1879-80, for 285 miles, and the lotation for 51 miles was approved of. Those 51 miles were built within one year, and plans were laid before the Minister of Railways for the rest of the road, but he would not approve of them, and consequently the company could not go on. While this was going on, a little double shuffle took place, which ended in the company, owing, I believe, to some men interested in a rival company, not being allowed to go on with their work. There was some delay took place, during which the Canadian Pacific Railway surveyed their line through southern Manitoba, practically shutting off the other road. The First Minister stated that he gloried in the fact that the railways in that country were under the control of one company. The other day, the hon, member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) spoke of the trunk lines of the country in these words:

"Hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavored to show that the policy of the Government has prevented the construction of branch lines. Well, how is it that this very scheme is now proposed at the request of those branch line companies? Do hon. gentlemen opposite suppose that those companies do not look after their own interests? Do they think those companies forget that there is only one trunk line of railway in Manitoba and the North-West Territory? Do they forget that the branch lines will necessarily have to make freight arrangements with the trunk line? They know, as well as we do, that such is the case; and yet, notwithstanding, it must be admitted that the branch lines know their own interests a little better than hon. gentlemen oppisite."

Now, I believe that is the great reason why branch lines have not been built. If the Government would grant charters to other companies, who would build independent lines, we would have railway facilities without land grants from this Dominion. But, as hon, gentlemen know, the the charters in that Province have been disallowed, for fear there would be competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway. In my opinion, the policy of the late Mackenzie Administration for building railways in that country, was the true policy, and I believe if it had been carried out we would have had railway communication across the prairies long before the Canadian Pacific Railway will have it. As for the need of a railroad in southern Manitoba, it cannot be over-estimated. Settlers who, to my own knowledge, went in there four or five years ago, with the expectation of having railway communication in a short time, broke up large tracts of land and sowed their grain, and have had their grain lying in their granaries ever since, and it is worthless without railway communication. Last year these farmers either left the country or simply rested on their oars, in the hope of getting railway communication. A deputation from southern Manitoba, consisting of Mr. Rogers and Mr. McKay, visited Ottawa and waited on the Government, and also on the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities; and they returned under the impression that such aid would be given to railway companies as would secure railway communication this season. received a letter from Mr. Stephen, saying that if certain concessions were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, they would agree to build this road. I believe this deputation wished to have a portion of the old South-Western and a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway South-Western built. Hon gentlemen probably know that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have built 100 miles of their south-western line from Winnipeg, for the Canadian Pacific Railway South-Western. It is very necessary that we should have some information on this point. During the discussion that took place last night on the road to be built from Medicine Hat to the Galt coal mines, the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) used the same arguments as the hon, member for Provencher (Mr. Royal). • He stated that, having only one railway in that country, it practically governed the price of coal to the consumer; and yet, with such arguments coming from hon, gentlemen opposite, they insist on retaining this power of monopoly in the Province of Manitoba. The hon, member for East Hastings (Mr. White) has stated that there are no people in the Dominion of Canada who have been used as the people of Manitoba. He is perfectly right; I do not think any other people in this Dominion have been deprived of the right to build railways in their own Province. I know, for a fact, that the Emerson and Northwestern Railway, which was disallowed, would have been built. Although it had no land grant, 15 miles of that road had been graded, and it would have been a competing line with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WHITE. Your leader disallowed two Bills. He said there was no use of any Government or any company undertaking to build the Canadian Pacific Railway unless they projected the traffic, and he disallowed both Bills or defeated them in committee. The hon member for West Durham knows that to be true.

Mr. WATSON. I had some experience of that kind of action with a Bill I introduced this Session, for the purpose of incorporating a railway to connect with other lines, to open up valuable timber limits and to obtain closer communication with the Lake of the Woods. I had reason to believe that that Bill would pass. The House had assurances from the Minister of Railways, a little over a year ago, that such Bills would be allowed to pass the House; and resting on that assurance, I introduced that Bill, and was very much disappointed, as were the people interested in it, at that charter not being granted. You cannot expect any men to undertake the construction of a branch line of railway if they have to make terms with the line with which they expect to compete. That is the way people feel in the North-West. However, as it is the policy of hon. gentleman opposite not to allow competition, I suppose we shall have to submit quietly, for a time; but there is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the country. Not only the Liberal press, but the Conservative press of Manitoba, has, at different times, denounced both the land and railway policies of this Government; still, the Government will not yield to the requirements of the people of that country. The hon. First Minister stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company could not be expected to build branch lines, because the resolutions passed a little over a year ago, granting $30,000,000 to them, would not allow them to spend one dollar of that money on branch lines. I voted against those resolutions at the time, and I claimed that it was more important that a portion of that money should be devoted to the construction of branch lines than that it should be devoted wholly to the construction of the main line. The money spent has not yet been enough to complete the main line, as the company are about to ask Parliament for further aid. The cost of, perhaps, one mile of the road north of Lake Superior, would build ten miles in the prairie country, which would be of infinitely greater value to the country, as a whole and to the settlers of Manitoba. However, I have certainly no objection to the Government granting most liberal aid to the construction of any branch lines in the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. FARROW. I desire to say a few words on this resolution, knowing something about southern Manitoba, and the character and circumstances of the settlers there. As the hon, member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has the hon, member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has stated, a great many of them have gone from Huron and Bruce and the adjacent county of Perth. I have a great many relatives there myself. I visited that country in 1880, and I saw the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), and also the hon. member for West Huron, there at the same time.

Mr. WHITE. Both speculating?

Mr. FARROW. I believe they engaged legitimately in speculation. I was a poor man, and had no money for speculation myself. I think their speculations were legitimate; all I think they were wrong in, was in blaming the Government for not building a railway to enhance the value of their speculation. My hon, friend from Hastings is more modest. He has got a timber limit, but he is not blaming the Government for not building a railway to it. I think there is; I say that their speculations were legitimate. I do not blame them. If I had money, I would have speculated in the same way; the speculations were open to any man. I am in accord with this resolution. A great deal has been said about grievances in the North-West. I believe I receive as many letters from southern Manitoba as any hon. gentleman, for many of my own constituents in the east riding of Huron have gone there, with many of whom I am intimately acquainted. I know Mr. George McKenzie very well, and Mr. John Robertson, and I am very sorry that the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has, I will not say intentionally, misrepresented their cases, but I will touch upon that a little later. I have asked these men, personally, I have asked them by letter, what grievances they have, and they said they have no grievance, as regards the price of agricultural implements, for they can buy them there cheaper than they could in Ontario, but they have a grievance, and that is the want of a railway. I have come in contact with them, as they have visited my place on short visits, and I said to them: You have only been out there since 1879 or 1880, but when did you come into the county of Huron? They said: We came there in 1856, when it was all bush; and I asked them: How did you struggle on without a railway for twenty-five years? And yet you complain because you have not a railway out there, although that country has not been opened up for five years? They could not answer me. Why did not you rebel against the Government of Ontario, I said, when you were twenty-five years without a railway? Oh, they answered, we are differently situated now. I know one man who has gone there from my neighborhood, three years ago, and he had 2,500 bushels No. 2 spring wheat in his granary, and it is there to-day.

Mr. BLAKE. Why is it there?

Mr. FARROW. I am going to tell you. He said: I have a team worth $500, but if I take the team to carry the grain to Brandon it would kill the team, and rather than lose the team I would let the grain rot in my barn. The great cry out there is for a railway, and I am glad by these resolutions they are going to get it. But I want to know whether this will build the railway, and will it be built now. These are the two great points: Will this grant of 6,400 acres per mile—

Mr. BLAKE. It is 9,600 acres.

Mr. FARROW. Well, if it is 9,600 acres it will more than build any road through there. If I had the capital, I would, from the knowledge I have of that country, take that land to-morrow and build the road, and equip and run it, inside of a year. There is no question about these men wanting a railway and they must have it. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) is almost equal to any task. I have met bim on political platforms, and some times he thought it convenient to keep away, but he is equal to any occasion; he can make black appear white or white black. Did he not say that George Mackenzie had left the country.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, and never returned.

Mr. FARROW. George Mackenzie has a very fine property in southern Manitoba and he has erected on it a fine building, and has returned to his business in Goderich, as a hardware merchant. I know of a man who was out there for a year; he broke up a small portion of land, some 60 acres, and has rented that clearance for $180 a year, and returned home to Ontario.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). He has not gone to the States.

Mr. FARROW. I will deal with this matter. I know most of those people in southern Manitoba. My friend, Mr. Robertson, is what I call a noted character; he is a relative of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), a cousin of his, and I know of two boys who went there, one of whom unfortunately got an odd number and the other an even number. I suggested: Why did you not both get on an even-numbered section; did you not know the odd-numbered sections are set apart for the railway? But they wanted to be together. One of these boys has made $2,500 worth of improvements on his property, and I would advise the Government that these men who went there as early as 1881, and many of them sold good places in Ontario and put their money into the country, and have borne the heat and the burden of the day, should have their lands at a reasonable figure. I say that the Government, in making this grant, should see that those settlers will have the lands at a reasonable figure. One dollar an acre has been mentioned, and I think ti is plenty for these men to pay. They have been the pioneers, the men who have set a good example, who have shown that this is a country flowing with milk and honey, so far as grain-raising is concerned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The grain must be in the milk.

Mr. BLAKE. No; it is the man who is in the milk.

Mr. FARROW. I know that some of these men have raised 30 to 40 bushels of spring wheat to the acre, and 40 bushels of barley, and 80 bushels of oats; and really these crops are something tremendous, compared with the yield we get in even some of the best parts of Ontario. I was going to say that I hoped the Government will make strong and fast terms with the Canada Pacific Railway, or whatever company is going to get this land. I believe the want of a railway is the only grievance these people have. That is all they have represented to me. As to the hon. member for West Huron saying that 50 per cent. of the people had left the country, I am in a position to say that is a very extraordinary statement. I have made it my business to ask different parties with whom I have come in contact, both personally and by letter, and they have told me that in their special neighborhood, inside ranges 19 to 25, west of the prime meridian, in the Turtle Mountain district, very few have left the country, but the great grievance is the railway. I am very glad this resolution has come down. I am glad it is so liberal. know there is enough in it to build the railway. were a capitalist, I would be glad to take the land and build a first-class road, and I do not see why the money cannot be raised to build such a road. I believe it can be raised, and if the Government stick to the company, no doubt it will be built. The settlers have only this grievance, and if it is built, there will be a happy southern Manitoba.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sure the hon, gentlemen, whom the hon, member for Huron (Mr. Farrow) supports, will have listened, with interest and attention, to some of the observations he made, and which, if he will permit me to say so, senting, in the effort to persuade the committee that there were questions to be considered in reference to this resolution. In the first place, the hon member for Huron said the grievance was the railway, and that was the only grievance, and he pointed out that it was rather an unreasonable grievance. He pointed out that, when he and others went into Huron, they struggled for twenty-five years in the bush without a railway. No doubt they did, but the railway era, the railway age, came on, and had a country which railway those who left accommodation and went into the North-West, in the expectation that they would have railway accommodation there, under the pledges and promises that railways would permeate that country, who were told that in modern times immigration is to be aided by the railway being ahead of the immigrant, and who found that the great distances they were from the market so materially affected the price of their grain that it was absolutely vital to them to get a railway, might naturally be very much aggricved if they were kept five years waiting for a railway, after they were promised it, more than the settlers in Huron would be, who went in there 25 years before, without the promise of a railway, and when there was but little railway accommodation in the country at all But that has nothing to do with the question before us. We are not discussing the conditions under which the old settlers went into the country, but we are discussing the present railway policy in the North-West. We are considering the present by the light of the past, and it is the admitted policy of Canada that the North-West, if it is to prosper, is to have local railways. Therefore, there is no use in discussing the question as the hon. member for Huron did in that part of his argument. He said they were unreasonable in expecting railways. I say they were reasonable; I say that for them the railway was a reasonable and necessary expectation; I say, that without that expectation and without the promise and the public pledge made by persons in whom they had reason to confide, that there would be railways built there, many of them would not have gone; we would not have had them in there, and you will not get more in, except upon the expectation and pledge of railway development. Then he says he wants to see that the railway will be assured, though he thinks they are unreasonable in com-plaining that they have been without the railway for five years, when they were twenty-five years in Huron without one. He admits that it is a necessity, not only for them, but also to ensure settlement, and he says it is wanted surely and speedily. Well, I am with him in that, and my doubt is, that the hon. gentleman, whose knowledge of railway building I do not dispute, whose capacity to value lands I do not deny, whose power to judge of the availability of a railway grant I do not at all depreciate, is, unfortunately, at issue with Mr. Van Horne and with Mr. Stephen on the subject. I have read the statement of Mr. Van Horne, in September last, that if he got the free grant of land he was not at all sanguine that he would be able to build this line. He says: I will try to build it, but I am not sanguine. Mr. Stephen went to England, as I find from these papers, to see if he could obtain the capital, and I find no report from him, and no report from Mr. Van Horne that he had obtained it. I find that in September this took place, and now, in the month of June, I find no information that the effort which was made last fall to get English capital on the basis of this land grant is successful. I would explain to the hon. gentleman how it comes to be 9,600 acres a mile. There was an original grant of 6,400 acres a mile, at $1 an acre, and there were 50 miles built under that. The company has 100 miles to build. The Government has agreed to give 6,400 miles already built. The hon gentleman says this grant will build a first-class railway, but Mr. Van Horne is not sanguine as to its being built. On the 18th March, I find Mr. Stephen saying to the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister laying the letter on the Table about a month ago, that if he gets all he asks from Government and from Parliament, which he does not get, because the proposals made by the Government are different from what Mr. Stephen asks, he will undertake to build the Manitoba South-Western. It is clear that he had not got, on the 18th March, an independent basis upon which he could build the Manitoba South-Western, but if you pour into the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the resources I ask, he says, I will agree to build the Manitoba South-Western. That is the evidence, and in connection with the hon. gentleman, I raiso my humble voice to demand such reasonable assurance, based upon the statements of Mr. Van Horne and Mr. Stephen, and of the two corporations, that we are to get the railway surely, as I agree with him we ought to get it, with this grant. For, what are the prospects of the North-West at large? What can we honestly say about the prospects of the North-West at large, if, in an old settled, a fertile, a favored section of the country, a free grant of 9,600 acres a mile, along the line of the railway, and every acre to be fairly fit for settlement, is not sufficient encouragement to enable you to build a railway in that part? If that cannot be done, what is the future of the North-West?

Mr. FARROW. It can be done.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon, gentleman says it can be done, but those who ask for the aid say they doubt it. The hon. gentleman adverted to another thing, to the low price of lands which he thought ought to exist for the settlers, and he pointed out difficulties that had ensued by reason of these men taking up odd and even sections. What was more natural in that country than that men should desire to be near one another? That men of the same family or of the neighborhood should feel, when they were going into remote country, almost alone, without the advantages of schools or churches and without that usual admixture that they had in the happy county of Huron, as it has been in these later days, with its villages, with its schools, with its churches, with its railways, and so forth, that they should cling to the notion: Well, at any rate, we, old friend, old ally, old neighbor in the bush, brother, cousin, father, will stick together. I feel for those who took the risk of settling on an odd section to get near their brother on the even section, and I always felt that reserving large blocks, under the system of alternate sections, in advance of a railway, in a fertile country, was one, unless there were circumstances to enable individuals to settle together, which would give rise to great difficulties. I want something to be done in connection with this which will ensure that the same difficulties shall not subsist along the line of the Manitoba South-Western and these other The Government are going to give the free grant roads. along the line of these railways, so far as they I want to be assured that the odd are unsettled. sections may be purchased at a reasonable price, so that those people may settle together, and I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that it is reasonable. I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that it is reasonable. Now, Sir, I do not intend to enter into the argument of the First Minister. He gave us a very admirable discourse, delivered with great power of voice, great freedom of utterance, great eloquence, and some latitude of statement, upon the subject of a Canadian Pacific Railway. He argued as to the prospects of that road, as to the position of that road, as to the difficulties of that road, in a manner which, I think, deserves, as it has received, some and sufficient dissection from my hon. friend from Huron. He pointed out the depreciating process that had gone on in many that those people may settle together, and I think the respects with reference to the prospects of the road, as he said, from a hostile press in Canada, and which had been repeated and exaggerated in England. I need not to-day, I suppose, tell this House what I have frequently told it before, of my opinions as to the nature of the contract, and the prospects of the Canadian Pacific Railway under this contract. They have been frequently stated, and I abide by them still, as the condition of things at the time they were uttered. Last Session and the Session before I was obliged to point out how these prospects had been clouded and, to some extent, marred, by what I thought was the mistaken policy of the Government and the policy of the railway company together. But the hon gentleman adverted to the policy of which I spoke—a policy of vigorous action in the prairie, and cautious and tentative action with reference to the ends of the line, and he denounced that as a policy unworthy of a statesman, and that statement is cheered on the other side of the House. He also objected to my saying that the policy of the Government had been vascillating, rash and inconsistent. Well, now, does the hon gentleman recollect what his colleague, the Minister of the Interior, thought of his policy in the year 1873? Does he recollect the view that he took as to the Canadian Pacific Railway policy at that time? Does he recollect the published letters that he wrote with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway policy? Why, Sir, he very much dissented from the policy of the hon, gentleman. I have here an article from the Montreal Gazette, of 12th July, 1873, an editorial article, speaking of the views of Senator McPherson, in the following language:-

"The question of policy could not be affected by the fact of whether he (Macpherson) was president, or Sir Hugh Allan president, of the company to construct the railway; and we have here another illustration of Mr. Macpherson's disingenuousness in the whole matter. So long as he thought there was any chance of securing for himself the chief position in connection with the company, he steadfastly advocated the construction of the railway by means of a company. The very moment that he found that his own vanity was not to be ministered unto, that instant he threw what influence he had possessed—which, thank God, is not very great—in obstructing the enterprise which he professed to desire to promote, and into urging a policy which he did not for a moment think of while the thinking of it might have secured its adoption. The letter will not certainly add much to the personal or public character of Senator Macpherson, while it will expose to the world the motives which govern his extraordinary conduct in the Senate during the last Session of Parliament, and will render harmless any further efforts that he may may make in the same direction.

There was the view of a Conservative newspaper on the subject of Senator Macpherson's views, the gentleman who is now Minister of Interior, with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company policy of the Government in 1873. Now, I come down to the year 1877, when Senator Macpherson had become reconciled to the hon. gentleman, and sustained him in the Senate; and what did he think about the Pacific policy then? Why, Sir, I have here a pamphlet which was circulated by hon, gentlemen opposite by tens of thousands in the year 1878, and was, in fact, their platform at that election. They have even boasted that it was the means by which they largely carried the country, and the Senator was rewarded shortly afterwards by a seat in the Cabinet for his exertions during that campaign. What did he say, in the year 1877, upon that subject?

There, Sir, when an honest effort was being made to construct that line, which was material, in order to give connection between the great North-West and the Canadian seaboard, in order to enable the people, in the season of emigration, to go to the North West by our own lines, through our own country, from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, and in order to enable the grain to come down to Port Arthur and through the lakes to Montreal, that was the statement which the hon, gentleman sent out to the country, endorsed by their imprimatur, written by the man whom they afterwards rewarded, by taking him into the Cabinet, as to the prudence of the expenditure for completing that link in the through line. How good does that look for the great national enterprise? How good does that look for the encouragement of a through line, for the Canadian Pacific Railway to represent to the people that it was an injurious and improper thing to build that link from Port Arthur to Winnipeg? But the hon, gentleman has complained of my policy—which he has not accurately stated. I never proposed to Parliament, nor to any portion of the people, that the Canadian Pacific Railway, as a through line, should be abandoned. I declared that the ends of it should be postponed, and that the centre was the part which demanded our first, our earliest, our most active exertions; and in that view I think I shall be found to be sustained by more than the opinions which I have read. I have shown you that Senator Macpherson was largely of that view in the pamphlet from which I have read to you, in the year 1877, as to the construction of the piece from Port Arthur to Winnipeg.

The committee rose, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee on resolutions respecting land grants to North-West railways.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. When you left the Chair, Sir, I was pointing out that the policy which the Liberal party had advocated, with respect to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was a policy which was not confined to them exclusively. But others, besides themselves, had entertained those reasonable views, and I had promised to give you some proof of that statement. I had referred to the utterances of a distinguished member of the present Cabinet at an earlier period in the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway discussion, namely, in the year 1873. But I pass to a later era, to the period of 1877 and of 1878, when Mr. Mackenzie's policy had been inaugurated, and when both parties were preparing for the struggle which was to take place in 1878, and I ask, what was the policy, at that time, of many distinguished persons, who now, and of late years, have decried the policy which I have alluded to as a sound one, in language something like that which the First Minister employed this afternoon, decrying it and denouncing it as an unreasonable and insensate, mean and contracted policy. Allow me to read a few words which were spoken in 1877:

"But surely the whole expenditure between Lake Superior and the Red River is premature and unwise. That section of the railway will cost not less than twenty millions of dollars; the interest will be one million of dollars a year, and with the loss of working the road (which I shall not venture to estimate), will amount to an enormous sum to be borne by the tax-payers of this Dominion. I may say my own opinion has always been that we should have been content, for a time, to use the United States lines for our all-rail route to Manitoba, and begin our Pacific Railway at Pembina, thence to Winnipeg, and on through Manitoba and the North-West, combining with its construction a comprehensive and attractive scheme of immigration, under which immigrants would be assured of employment and land—employment first, and land afterwards."

Mr. BLAKE.

I hear some hon, gentleman cheer that anti-national sentiment, that unpatriotic sentiment, that United States sentiment, and I might almost say, that annexation sentiment. The words I am reading are the words of Senator Macpherson.

Mr. McCALLUM. You followed in the same channel.

Mr. BLAKE. I was a little before him.

Mr. McCALLUM. And you followed him.

Mr. BLAKE. I am following him now with a sharp stick:

"The lands retained by the Government in the North-West, owing to the settlement of adjoining lands, would have been enhanced in value, and their sale would have provided funds to aid in extending the railway, as required, without over-burdening the Dominion exchequer. In this way the Canadian Pacific Railway, east of the Rocky Mountains, could have been built as fast as required, for very little money, and our prairie country would have become quickly peopled. A similar course, as far as adaptable to British Columbia, might have been pursued in that Province; and when the Government decided to build the road as a rublic work, no reasonable objection could be urged against this policy. Had it been followed, the Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, would have been more prosperous than it is to-day. We should have been free from the heavy engagements that weigh upon us, and free, also, from the financial peril that stares us in the face—imminent if not inevitable. Our expenditure, to this time, upon the railway, would have been comparatively small, and would increase only as might be convenient, for it would be subject to our own control. As it is, the outlay in connection with the Pacific Railway to 30th June, 1876, (according to the Public Accounts), amounts to the large sum of $6,254,280."

With those words, expressive of his policy, with those remonstrances against an enormous and inordinate expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway, with those alarms and apprehensions of the consequences to this Dominion of expending money at so rapid a rate, did Senator Macpherson address the electors of Canada, prior to the general elections of 1878; and with these views distributed broadcast throughout the country did the Conservative party endeavor to succeed, and they did succeed, in carrying the popular vote, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway policy was concerned. It was the common policy, at that time, of both parties, not to increase the taxes of this country or its burdens, in order to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, and, as I have shown, the Minister of the Interior pointed out that $5,250,000 was a very large expenditure, and that the hon, member for East York was going too fast and too far in incurring that expenditure in building the road, from a financial point of view. In his view we ought to limit that expenditure; we ought to proceed, with respect to the ends of the roads, cautiously; we ought to develop the country and ought to make a backbone for the road; we ought to attend to that, in the first instance; and in that view I heartily concur; for, as I have said, it was my view before the hon gentleman expressed it, and it has continued to be my view since. But since that time, how have those alarms and apprehensions been realised in his practice and in the practice of the Government. We have taken, in increased and added taxes, $20,000,000 to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, according to the hon, gentleman's policy, and we have borrowed or are borrowing or engaging for close upon $100,000,000 for their Canadian Pacific Railway policy. Contrast that state of things with the state of things which the Minister of Interior deplored as being calculated to produce serious results to the Dominion, when the hon. Senator felt so keenly about $6,250,000 having been expended during many years on the Canadian Pacific Railway;when he felt so much what is a trifle more than a year's interest on the sum for which we stand at present engaged to pay, or have actually paid, in respect of that enterprise. It is all very well for the First Minister to talk of depression in American railway securities being the reason of the depression; but the cause, and the main cause, of the depression in Canada, to-day, is his policy, and it is very largely due to the Canadian Pacific Railway policy itself, to a policy which abstracted from the Custom house $20,000,000 to build that road, collecting nearly $30,000,000 out the pockets of the people, and taxing our credit and borrowing powers to a very heavy extent, for almost uncounted millions more. Then, the First Minister presented to Parliament an account of the prospects of the railway in his own exuberant style. I think no greater harm can be done to Canada, so far as its interests are bound up in the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to the Canadian Pacific Railway itself, than are such statements as the First Minister made this afternoon. When you find an hon. gentleman occupying the responsible position of First Minister of Canada deliberately declaring, on the floor of Parliament, that the position of that enterprise is such that it will be able to carry freight from one side of the continent to the other, at one-quarter the rates at which other systems of through lines carry freight, you have a statement made which every man, in the slightest degree familiar with the subject, knows to be wholly unfounded, which will be laughed at in railway circles, from one end of the country to the other, if they think it worth while to take notice of it at all. The hon, gentleman knows very little about it, if he really believes that the Canadian Pacific Railway system, in consequence of its being one corporation, from ocean to ocean—but it is not so, and the hon. gentleman's proposal will not make it one corporation—will have the effect of enabling it to save three-quarters of the cost of carrying freight. The arrangements made for carrying throught freight over the various systems, between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, are very complete. At this moment, and for some months past, I have myself seen public advertisements offering to carry freight from an Atlantic port to port Victoria, in British Columbia, ocean freight, European freight of any class, at $2.10 per 100 pounds; and to tell us that the Canadian Pacific Railway can afford to carry that freight for one-fourth of $2.10 per 100 pounds, is to say something which nobody, who has given half-an-hour's attention to the subject, would regard as other than perfectly preposterous. The truth is, that these systems of railway, as to their arrangements for carrying through freight, are involved in little more expense than a uniform system. When a difficulty occurs, of course there may be some hitch in, the whole chain of communication; but so long as the communication lasts, the arrangements are such as to involve very little advantage in that regard. The hon, gentleman gave us, Sir, a very highly-colored account of what the results of the Canadian Pacific Railway would be. He stated that its prospects were of the brightest character, and he has complained of us for doing it an injustice, for decrying those prospects. Well, I have said, and I repeat, that I will invite any person who challenges my statements with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, its contract or its prospects, to point out the speech of which he complains, the language of which he complains, and I will have something to say to him. As to general statements, like those of the hon. gentleman, of course there is no answer to be given, because, in their generalisation, they are not capable of attack. Let us hear the particulars, if the hon. gentleman alluded to me. But I admit that there have been statements made which would be calculated to affect the Canadian Pacific Railway in a different sense from the hon. gentleman's speech of this afternoon. There have been some statements made which, I suppose, the hon. gentleman will denounce as inaccurate, untrue and unpatriotic. For instance, a statement of this kind:

"I do not hesitate to say that the tariff which is now on the Table of the House cannot pay the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and will not pay them, for a considerable number of years. It would be impossible, until a large number of people go into that country, to construct a tariff which would pay them; because the climatic difficulties are such, that I have no hesitation in saying the cost of hauling per ton per mile would be four or five times as great in the North-West, in the present sparsely condition of the country, and the small amount of traffic, as it would be on the Grand Trunk Railway, with the enormous amount of traffic which, I am glad to say, it is carrying and the milder climate in which it operates."

Now, that is terrible language to use. Is it right to declare that it would cost four or five times as much to carry traffic on the Canadian Pacific Railway as it would to carry it on the Grand Trunk?—to declare that neither the tariff of tolls which is on the Table, nor any which can be constructed, will pay the Canadian Pacific Railway for a number of years? Do you mean to say that that is going to be the condition of the enterprise? The hon. gentleman may well denounce the person using that language, but in doing so he will denounce one of his colleagues, Sir Charles Tupper, who spoke those words, when standing beside where he now sits, on the 4th of May, 1883, just two years ago. These are the denunciations, and let the hon gentleman settle his account with his Minister of the Interior, with his High Commissioner, before he comes forward to render an account to the members of the Liberal party. I have no intention of engaging in a general Canadian Pacific Railway debate, upon which we will, perhaps, have a good deal to say when the hon, gentleman's proposal comes down. I would not have touched the matter, but for the hon, gentleman's own statement and attack, which merited just this much reply.

On resolution 3, (Manitoba and North Western Railway Company),

Mr. EDGAR. Are we to hear, from the hon. Minister of Public Works, any particulars about this very important grant, a grant of about 3,000,000 acros of land?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I thought I had already given, on the introduction of the resolutions the other evening, the explanations I had to give about this grant. I stated that the company had already built 78 miles, which have been worked for a year or two; that there were 50 miles beyond that under construction, with a location of 75 miles over and above that distance, which has been approved by the Government, and that the balance of the charter, after that distance, was 250 miles, forming 443 miles, which will bring the road from Portage la Prairie to Prince Albert. Hon. gentlemen will see the importance of the railway if they refer to the map. From Portage la Prairie to Minnedosa, and thence to Prince Albert, as a rule, it passes through a very fine country. A large number of people have settled there; but, as in the case of the Manitoba South-Western, they require a railway, in order that they may bring their produce to market. Under these circumstances, the Government have come to the determination to make this grant, subject to the approval of Parliament, from Portage la Prairie to the crossing of the South Saskatchewan, 23 miles from Prince Albert. When they reach that point we have no doubt they will reach the Prince Albert settlement, which, I hope, by that time, will be a very quiet and prosperous settlement. That distance of 430 miles, with the 23 miles to Prince Albert, makes up 453 miles. The land will amount, in round numbers, to two millions and three quarters acres. The company will have to pay, also, ten cents per acre for surveys and other expenses connected with that portion of the administration of the Department. The land grant consists of the odd-numbered sections at the disposal of the Government, and the tracts are indicated on the map. They are bound to complete a portion of the road year by year, in order to be entitled to the grant. And the whole grant is paid in the same way as the grant to the Pacific Railway—as the road is being built, and as it is reported to be built, in accordance with the contract, by the Chief Engineer of the Department.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether, for that portion of the road already built, the Government intend to grant the land pro rata per mile for the whole distance at once, or for short distances. How is the land grant to be distributed over the 78 miles already built?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. So far as I can recollect, the quantity of land appropriated for those 78 miles will be allotted to the company on the remainder of the road as it is built.

Mr. EDGAR. I have looked at the Order in Council, and the exact provisions of it in this case are, that for the portion that is completed, the 512,000 acres are to be apportioned over the remaining 350 miles, which makes the grant 7,863 acres a mile from the present point to which the railway is finished to the South Saskatchewan, and that acreage is to be conveyed to the company as each 25 miles of the railway are finished. Now, I do not rise at all to object to the Government making this grant. I am very much more disposed to complain because the Government did not make a sufficient grant before now to bring about the completion of this very important line of railway, and I am anxious to see that the grant they are giving now will accomplish that end. This line is a special one; it is not only a large railway in itself-430 miles in length, from Portage la Prarie to the South Saskatchewan-but it traverses the route which was laid out for the Pacific Railway by the present Government; and when it was publicly announced as the route of the great trans-continental highway, settlers flocked in large numbers into that district, and they have been very much disappointed, and have suffered greatly from the absence of the railway communication which they had been led to expect. For that reason, among others, the Government should have taken care that the grants they have made to assist that railway for several years past bore fruit, which they did not. If the Government had taken care that this important line of railway had been constructed within a reasonable time after the route of the Pacific Railway was changed, there would have been very much less discontent in the neighborhood of the South Saskatchewan and Prince Albert than has been lately developed. One of the minor causes which have led to the recent rebellion—the dissatisfaction of the settlers with the lack of communication with the outside world—would have been largely removed; and with a railway in operation to the Saskatchowan, at Prince Albert, an outbreak would have been very easily suppressed. That those settlers have reason to complain is very evident from the papers which have been laid before the House. As long ago as 1881, when this company first applied to the Government for assistance, that fact was represented. The memorial of the company said:

"The line adopted by the Portage, Western and North-Western Railway Company is one which was early occupied by settlers, in the expectation they were led to indulge in by maps issued by the Government and the earlier reports of the Engineer-in-Chief of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and years of deep disappointment followed, and only now removed when, after the Canadian Pacific Railway Company decided on carrying their main line so far to the south, the Portage, Western and North-Western Railway Company undertook to meet their wants, believing they could do so in full harmony with the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the views of the Government."

Now, that was not only represented by the company, but it was represented to the Government on several occasions by representative men in the North-West. The warden of the country of Westbourne, Major Boulton, represented to the Government, personally, and also by memorandum, the same circumstance, and pressed it upon the attention of the Government. What did the Government do? They passed an Order in Council, in 1881, granting 3,840 acres a mile for this road, with the promise that when it was half finished they might give them some more. Then the company went on struggling for a while, and were able to do nothing with that assistance. A new organisation was formed, in December, 1882, composed of the late Sir Hugh Allan and his partners, Governor Dewdney, and a number of other very strong men, who informed Mr. Watson.

the Government that they had undertaken the work; and with a great flourish of trumptes they said that if it were made clear in the Order in Council that they were to receive 6,400 acres a mile on the whole distance, as far as the South Saskatchewan, they would certainly be able to complete the work. I think the Government might have been justified in believing they would. But they did not. After a great deal of delay, from the year 1879, when the company was first incorporated, until 1883, they had only succeeded in building 78 miles out of 430, and I am sure it must have been very gratifying to the First Minister, on that occasion, to receive a telegram from the Premier of Manitoba, as I see by the papers he did, congratulating him on the magnificent feat which had been accomplished by the Government of having 80 miles of this railway constructed after the company had been incorporated for four years. The one thing which the settlers required was a railway, because they had been induced to go there far in advance of settlement, and were disappointed as to the line of railway. To show how earnestly they had this object in view, they had given bonuses for the construction of a line. One bonus was given by the town of Portage la Prairie, to the extent of $100,000, and the county of Westbourne gave a bonus of $75,000. There were many other things which they represented most earnestly to the Government. They represented that when the new company had obtained control of the charter they were trying to get some more bonuses out of them by changing the route. If the Minister would look among the papers he would find several representations by the Warden (Mr. Boulton), and others, strongly urging upon Government to u e their power of fixing the location of this railway at the mouth of the Shell River, and not allowing the company to coerce the settlers into giving them bonuses by threatening to take another route. I would like to ascertain from the First Minister whether he has complied with the views of those settlers or not. I will refer him to one of the many communications upon that question, a communication from Mr. Boulton, the Warden of Russell county. He writes from Ottawa to the Minister of Interior, evidently not having been able to obtain an interview, regretting that he been unable to ascertain the conclusion the Government had come to, and urging on the Government to locate the route by the mouth of Shell River, the one recommended in Mr. Marcus Smith's report, as otherwise bonuses would be exacted from the people which they could not afford to pay. That was written as far back as the 10th March, 1883. It will be very satisfactory for the House to know whether the Government has protected the interests of the people in that matter of fixing the mouth of the Shell River as the route for the railway. The railway was originally chartered to Prince Albert, which is distant about 450 miles from the Portage. Among the correspondence, there is a letter from the secretary of the company to the Government, in which he says, if the Government desire it, the company will forego the privilege of going the whole way to Prince Albert, and will only go to the south branch, which is 20 miles nearer than Prince Albert. I would like information as to how it is proposed the other 20 miles will be built, or why it is the desire of the Government, as expressed in this letter, that the company should abandon the line 20 miles between Prince Albert and the South Saskatchewan. I would like to know what assurances the Government have that this subsidy will ensure the construction of the road. Among the papers, I cannot see any assurance of that kind. One of the conditions of the Order in Council is that the company shall construct at least 100 miles each year; that they shall first construct an additional 100 miles to the 80 miles, before the 1st October of this year, 1835; that they shall construct 100 miles each year after that. I do not see that the com-finishing 50 miles by 1st of October, 1885, and 50 miles a year after. It would be a pity that the House should not know what assurance, at least, the Government got from the company, even if the assurance was not a guarantee that this subsidy will finish the line. In setting apart the land grants for this company the land was specified in two schedules—one schedule, "A," out of which they were to get the 2,700,000 acres in the odd sections, and provision was made that in case of deficiency in that they were to make good the deficiency out of schedule "B;" if the land was found to be unfit for settlement in schedule "A," they were allowed to take it out of the other schedule. I do not know if the Government has any information from the surveys, or from other sources, as to the quantities of land in the general grant that are likely to be unfit for settlement, because we know that that is a new condition entirely introduced in the grant. When the companies were supposed to be assisted by the offer to sell to them, at $1 an acre, certain lands, they were not allowed to examine them and reject those not fairly fit for settlement. Now, by the subsidies in this case, amounting to 7,863 acres a mile, they have the option of claiming what portion is not fairly fit for settlement, and then they have the right to fall back upon the land set out in schedule "B." Has the Government any information as to what portion of these lands in schedule "B" are likely to be called for by the company. I see that a quarter of a million is set apart there in addition to the two and a quarter millions set apart in schedule "A;" and it is a pity to lock up such a large number of townships as will be locked up in this way, if it can be avoided, and the Government can release them for settlement.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first question the hon. gentleman puts, I understand, is whether the Government have any assurance or moral conviction that this grant will be sufficient to secure the building of the road. We have, in this case, what we have in other cases, the knowledge that the company have asked for this, and that we have given what we thought might do. After conferring with the company, we think they may raise the capital and build the road, and therefore we have come to Parliament in order that this grant may be assented to. It is true that that quantity of land is reserved, but it is impossible to say whether it will be absolutely required or not; it depends altogether on the execution of the contract by the company. It is true that it may keep that land without being used for two, three or four years; but it is worth while to run that small risk in order to have the road built. It is the same thing as when we were asked, in reference to the other road, whether it would not be proper to have a security on the land. Either we want to have the road built or we do not. If we do, we must try to put as few conditions as possible, so that the promoters of the undertaking may raise the money on the land. If we put conditions which will weigh on these lands, which will not leave them free, the result will be that the money will not be raised, and these companies will come to us again, and say: We cannot raise the necessary funds, and we ask you to do more. I think, under the circumstances, the land will be sufficient, if we are to take for granted what these companies represent to us, and I have no doubt that, when they make these representations, they are convinced that they will be able to extend their road and build it, at all events, a sufficient distance to warrant the grant of land or porportion of the grant of land that we are asking this committee to sanction. The hon gentleman asks us what about the other end of the road, the 20 last miles. The company have undertaken to build their road to the South Saskatchewan. To Prince Albert is 20 miles further, but I farmers who went from Ontario with a fair amount of have no doubt that, when the road is built to that extent, means have exhausted their means in patiently waiting. the company will feel themselves bound, or perhaps the It is of the greatest importance that every liberality should Prince Albert people themselves will find it to their interest to join together and to get some capitalists to join them. to build the 20 miles to extend the road to their town. If we can obtain with this grant the extension of this Manitoba and North-Western Railway from Minnedosa to the South Saskatchewan River, we will have done very well. and it will be time enough then to see to the building of the last 20 miles.

Mr. EDGAR. 1 am not complaining that the Government is not putting sufficiently onerous conditions upon the railway company. I am complaining that I fear the Government, in this Order in Council, have imposed conditions upon the company which are too onerous, according to their own showing, for them to carry out. In this very document, in the Order in Council, the condition on which, in section 8, this grant is given, is that the company shall complete, adequately equip and have running, not less than 100 miles of the railway, in addition to the 80 miles now in operation, not later than the 1st October next, and thereafter, by the 1st October in each year, shall complete 100 alditional miles in consecutive order, until the whole line is completed, from Portage la Prairie to the South Saskatchewan, and time is made of the essence of the agreement, and the grant may be forfeited if it is not carried out. In this document the application of the company is recited, and the secretary says that he has no doubt the money will be obtained to complete the road at the rate of not less than 50 miles per annum after this year, so that in this very Order in Council in which the application of the company is recited, the company say they think they can complete it at not less than 50 miles per annum after this year, and the secretary goes on to say that the railway is now in operation for 50 miles, but the grading of 50 additional miles is being proceeded with, and that such 50 miles will be completed by the 1st October next, in time for the transport of the crops of 1835, provided the concessions now asked from the Government are granted. What does the Government do for the company? They ask for bread and the Government give them a stone. They are given the number of acres asked for, but when they say they can only see their way to complete 50 miles by the 1st October and 50 miles in each year thereafter, the Government impose a condition, which is inexplicable to me, that they shall build 100 miles by the 1st October, and 100 miles in each year thereafter; otherwise, time being of the essence of the agreement, the grant may be forfeited. I complain that the Government have put the company in a position which they do not pretend they can carry out, and I ask if that is a reasonable way to treat a company, and if that is the way a road can be built. There may be some other communications, but I can hardly think the Government would have introduced this communication into their Order in Council if they have received an offer to build 100 miles this year, in time to take out the crop of 1885, and 100 miles each year thereafter. It makes it a farce if they cannot do this, because they are not to get any grant immediately for the 80 miles they have finished.

Mr. WATSON. This is possibly the most important road embraced in this series of resolutions. This road runs through a section of country which has been opened up for a number of years, and which is possibly more in need of a railway, and has been longer expecting a railway, than any other section in Manitoba. This road traverses the section of country whereon the original Canadian Pacific Railway was located. In 1879 and 1880 settlers located along that line of survey, expecting that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be built on that line. They have been waiting there, expecting a railway, for the last seven or eight years, and be shown to this company, who have exhibited so much push and energy in constructing the 78 miles already. It has been truly said by the Minister who has charge of the Bill that this section of the country is one of the best for general farming purposes throughout the whole North-West. It is eminently fitted for farming, for grain and stock-raising, and has a fair supply of timber for fuel and building purposes, and has also fine water. I believe the section of country that this road will traverse for 400 miles, from Portage la Prairie to Prince Albert, is one of the best sections of country in the North-West for settlers; and if such aid can be granted to this company as will enable them to build a road within a short period, I have no doubt it will lead to a large influx of settlers; and those who are already settled there, and have been patiently waiting for railway communication, will be greatly rejoiced. On account of the want of railway facilities the settlers there have been reduced to somewhat straitened circumstances. They have confidence in the country and in its future, and are only waiting for a railway. As has been stated by hon, gentlemen who have spoken from this side of the House, I think the Government ought to exercise more control as to the location of this line of railway. It is a common saying that railway companies, as well as other corporations, have no souls, and it is well known that railway companies will bleed a municipality all they can, and drag the location of a road from one side to the other, for the purpose of obtaining bonuses from the municipalities. In the county of Russell there has been a fight over the bonus question, and I believe the county has offered a bonus. The same fight has taken place in the county of Shoal Lake, as the First Minister is doubtless aware, as to the location of the railway. At Birtle, a nice, smart little town, there was a good deal of anxiety about the location of the railway. The company stated they were going to run some miles north, and by that means induce the people of Birtle to take upon themselves the burden of granting a bonus of, I think, $30,000, in order to get the railway to run into their town. The town of Minnedosa, of only a few hundred of a population, has given a bonus of $30,000 to this company; the municipality of Westbourne has given $75,000, and the town of Portage la Prairie, $100,000. Now, it is to be regretted that these new municipalities, as yet poor and sparsely settled, comparatively, should be compelled to burden to Marketine. selves with taxation in order to obtain railway facilities. If there is one section of the country in the North-West where the settlers should have a railway, without being obliged to pay large bonuses, it is the section which this road is to traverse. It was the original line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the people settled there expecting, the road would be built on that line. But the present syndicate saw fit to deflect the road south, and consequently these settlers were disappointed. But they are the pioneers of the country, and I think the suggestion laid before the House by Major Boulton, as warden of Russell, and other gentlemen from the western section of the country, should be heeded, and the Government should say where the road is to be located. It should be located, as near as possible, on the old line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as that line has been surveyed and approved by the Government engineer, and consequently must be a favorable one. The Local Legislature of Manitoba, last Session, passed an Act whereby they intended to aid local railways. It is the intention of the Provincial Government, on account of the depression in the value of land, to issue provincial bonds to the extent of $1 per acre for the land grants given by this Government to aid the construction of railways. It is supposed that this will aid the companies in building the roads. The Government will issue provincial bonds and take land grants Mr. WATSON.

years, and it has done a great deal of good. The hon. gentleman who has charge of those resolutions says that the company intend to build 100 miles of that road this year, I believe that the greatest distance they intend to build is to Birtle, somewhere about 60 miles. I was a little surprised to hear the statement made by the Minister who has charge of this Bill, to the effect that the land already earned by the construction of 78 miles was to be distributed over the whole length of the line, from Portage la Prairie to Prince Albert. I was under the impression that the company could not succeed in going ahead with that road this year, unless they got that land grant on some 100 miles of the road, or, in other words, that when the road was built 100 miles farther they should receive the full land grant on the 178 miles. It would be wrong to allow the company to get off any easier than the Government can help, but whatever is done by the Government, they ought to try to ensure the construction of this road for, at least, 100 miles, at the earliest possible moment. because the settlers are there and are getting tired of wait-Any person having visited that country a few years ago and visiting it now must be struck with the improvements that have been made, and the increased attractions for settlers which it now offers. I am glad to see that the Government is giving such a liberal land grant towards the construction of this road, and I hope they will do everything in their power to secure its construction as soon as possible.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Unless the Government have information that we have not, it occurs to me that the points taken by the hon, member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar) are worthy of careful consideration. I have travelled over that line of road and know something about it. The land in the vicinity of Minnedosa presents all the qualities of a fine farming country, and an inspection of the work of the company convinced me that they were endeavoring to push the work through as rapidly as possible, and of the necessity of pushing through rapidly there can be no doubt. I hold in my hand a letter from a gentleman who went from my riding and who lives about 60 miles beyond Minnedosa, a gentleman with whom I have for many years been well acquainted, and whose statements I can rely upon most thoroughly. He has been a resident there for six years. He went into that country with a considerable amount of means, with several grown up sons, and with high expecta-tions. As long ago as four or five years, I heard from him that his crop was, I think, between 2,000 and 3,000 bushels. But he complains most bitterly now, and speaks as a man almost discouraged. He says it is not on account of the soil, not on account of the climate, which are good though at times too highly colored, but on account of the lack of railway facilities, of which he complains. His observation during six years has been that the crops are generally good, and have suffered but once from frost. He says the difficulty is that they have no market, and wheat is consequently of little value. He gives instances in which, as he expresses it, a man wanting a grist could get it at 30 cents a bushel. He has known it to be offered at 25 cents, without finding a buyer. He speaks, also, of the disadvantage of the alternate section plan; and one of the results of my observations in that country, after spending a month there, was that one of the greatest discouragements was that it is still the "great lone land."

Mr. TROW. It is gratifying to know that the Government has decided to grant this aid. I have travelled from one end of the line to the other. The first portion of the road was certainly a great boon to Minnedosa, and has been of great practical use to settlers on both sides of the line. From Minnedosa to Birtle, a distance of some 65 miles, the as security at the rate of $1 an acre. This road has section of country is pretty well settled, more particularly now been in operation, as far as Minnedosa, for about two around Shoal Lake. Birtle is quite an old settlement; it was settled many years ago, and probably the best tract of land in Manitoba, to my knowledge, with the exception of a section round Portage la Prairie, is Silver Creek and Shell River district. These are very large settlements, with very extensive improvements, and they lie some 30 or 40 miles from Birtle. From there to the mouth of Shell River there is the best agricultural section in the North-West. I think it is superior to southern Manitoba. From Shell River district to the Touchwood Hills, a distance of 150 miles, a portion of the land is not so well adapted for agricultural purposes, and the whole route, from Ellice, or the mouth of Shell River, to Carrot River, near the terminus of the line, the land is not adapted for farming purposes on the whole. But the Shell River district, embracing an area of probably two or three good counties, is superior to anything I have seen, and is well settled, by people principally from Untario. The proposed railway will be a great boon to that district, because I know that two years ago the grain grown by settlers there was valueless. It will not pay to team it to Brandon, which is nearly 100 miles distant, and the farmers are so much discouraged that they do not even take their grain to market. Many settlers have had grain stored for years; and there is no encouragement to them to make improvements, in consequence of the want of railway facilities.

Mr. WATSON. I would remind the Minister of Public Works that on the land granted I believe, after the original grant to the company, there are quite a number of settlers on the odd sections in the vicinity of Shell River and Russell. It would be well that it should be provided that settlers on odd-numbered sections should be allowed to retain their lands at very moderate prices. The company have had a man round, with a view to effect a settlement with the settlers; whether this settlement has been effected or not, I do not know; but it would be well for the Government to see to it that the settlers on the odd-numbered sections should be dealt with very leniently by the com-

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I trust, before the subsidy is handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway or other railway company which is to get it, the Government will take care to make provision that bond fide settlers who have located on the land will not be interfered with. I do not know whether the Government propose to give the odd numbered sections in the townships or every alternate township; but it is of the utmost consequence for the welfare of the country that the interest of actual settlers who have gone there and made improvements should not be disturbed by the railway company. I therefore trust the Minister of Public Works, who has visited the country himself, and knows something of the wants of the settlers and the hardships they have to undergo, will take care that ample protection is given in this respect. I had not the pleasure of hearing the remarks of the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Farrow), and I can only refer to his speech from hearsay. I understand that he said that Mr. Mackenzie, whose name was attached to a letter, a portion of which I read to the House, was a hardware merchant who had gone to the North-West, who had subsequently leased his land and returned to business. The hon, gentleman is entirely mistaken. The Mr. Mackenzie to whom I referred never was a hardware merchant, and is not so now. There is a Mr. Mackenzie living in my town who is a hardware merchant, who went to the North West, who leased his land and returned to the town, but the Mr. Mackenzie whose letter I read was not that Mr. Mackenzie.

Mr. FARROW. All I have to say is, that there is a Mr. Mackenzie, at Goderich, who went to the North-West and succeeded there. He has a very valuable farm in southern Manitoba and very fine buildings on it. He resided there two or three years—he never gave up business in Goderich 1st of May, 1885, satisfying them that the line would be and he rented his land and came back to live in Goderich. It must be a brother that the hon. member refers to, and I think he had a brother there. It is very strange that one should succeed in southern Manitoba and the other could not live there.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is no difficulty about it. One brother homesteaded his land. The brother whose letter I read purchased a large portion of land under the Order in Council which enabled parties to purchase land south of the 24-mile belt at $2 per acre.

Mr. EDGAR. I cannot allow this resolution to pass until the Minister of Public Works has informed the committee with respect to these points that have been raised. Does the hon gentleman intend to give this subsidy to the company, and make it a condition of the grant that they shall build 100 miles before the 1st October and 100 miles every year afterwards?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 1 wish to ask the committee to pass the items, and upon concurrence I will be able to give an explanation of that point.

Mr. EDGAR. If they find that they cannot do 100 miles, let them do 50. I also drew the attention of the Minister to the fact that in several places, in the papers before the House, there are very urgent representations about the route of this railway. These petitions give numerous reasons why they appeal to the Government to have the old route maintained. I dare say that this has been done, and that the Government will find that they carried out the views of the settlers and others. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works will bring down information on that point as well as on the other.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The road from Portage la Prairie to Minnedosa is built, and 50 miles beyond that are under contract. Then there are 75 miles beyond that, the location of which was approved by the Government, and I see by the location of the line, as it appears on the map, that the 50 miles now being built pass at Shoal Lake, so that the hon, gentleman will see that the object of those petitions appears to have been carried out. However, I will make further enquiries.

Mr. ROSS. I think there must be some mistake about the 100 miles, because I had a conversation with Mr. Brydges the other day, when he was here, and he informed me then that the condition was that 50 miles should be built this year, and he said the company were going to build 50 miles.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is what I stated. I think there is another Order, changing this, and making it 50 instead of 100 miles.

On resolution 4 (Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamboat Company.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I explained this the other day. The Order in Council of the 50th December, 1834, grants this quantity of land, subject to the approval of Parliament, from Regina to Long Lake, a distance of 20 miles. The land is to be selected from the odd-numbered sections, on condition that the line shall be completed by the 1st of October, 1885, with a steamboat suitable for the service on Long Lake, to be running by the 1st of May, 1836, the company to be permitted to obtain a conveyance of 50,000 acres at $2 per acre, on depositing $100,000 by the 21st of March. I see, by a memorandum sent me to-day, that $50,000 have been paid into the Receiver General on behalf of the company, and are now held in suspense account. The object of that was that those advancing money, that is, those purchasing land, wanted to be sure that the money would be applied in that way.

Mr. EDGAR. I see by the Order in Council that a contract was to be submitted to the Government before the completed, and satisfying them, I suppose, that the steamboat will be built before the 1st of October. I see that some additional pressure has been used on the Ministry with regard to this subject, and that Mr. John A. Mackenzie, of Sarnia, makes a very touching appeal to them, to which I have no doubt they gave proper attention, as he is a gentleman they would like to oblige.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract has been submitted to the Department, and the company have already begun some operations, in the way of importing horses, and so on. The hon. gentleman must see that owing to the delay in obtaining this vote the Government may have to extend the time on the other end, if the company have been delayed in their operations.

Mr. EDGAR. I think, by the papers, that they were quite willing to take the risk, when the Government passed the Order in Council, and the Order in Council was passed on the 30th of December.

Mr. McLELAN. The arrangement was that on the deposit of the money they were to receive lands at $2 an acre; therefore, if the route were not followed, or if the contract failed in any way, the Government would have sold so much land there at $2 per acre. I may say that the contract for the grading has been let, as well as the contract for the delivery of the rails.

Mr. EDGAR. What about the steamboat?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not aware as to the contract for that.

On resolution 5,

Mr. EDGAR. Are the incidental expenses and the cost of survey both included in the 10 cents per acre?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Resolutions to be reported.

HALIFAX HARBOR MASTER.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (p. 2421) to amend the Acts respecting the appointment of a harbor master at the port of Halifax. He said: The object of this resolution is to increase the amount allowed to the harbor master of Halifax from $1,600 to $1,800. The returns of entries at the port of Halifax have about doubled within the last sixteen or seventeen years. In the year 1881 the collections were reduced somewhat by the exemption of coasting vessels from the payment of harbor dues. The expenses of the officer in connection with his office, for rent, boat hire, etc., amount to $600 or $800 a year, which leaves him only from $800 to $900 as a clear salary. Looking at the large increase of labor which he has to perform, it is proposed that his allowance, which is to cover all these expenses, shall be increased to $1,800. It is also proposed to establish a summary mode of procedure before magistrates, for enforcing the orders of the harbor master for the better regulation of the harbor. It is found, in practice, that he has great difficulty at present in enforcing his orders, as captains and others who wilfully disobey his orders are able to leave with their vessels before he can proceed against them in the courts.

Mr. VAIL. Where is this increased amount to come from? Is the fund sufficient to pay it, or is it to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund?

Mr. McLELAN. There is nothing chargeable on the consolidated revenue. The rule is, that where fees are imposed the harbor master collects them, and he is allowed a certain percentage out of what he collects, and the balance goes into the Treasury. In this case, we fix the limit of what he shall receive at $1,800. If he only collects Mr. Edgar.

$1,500 that is all he receives; if he collects $1,900, he receives $1,800, and the remaining $100 goes into the Treasury.

Mr. VAIL. Would the ultimate result of this be to increase the tax on shipping?

Mr. McLELAN. No; we do not increase the fees.

Mr. DAVIES. Will the hon gentleman give the information as to the fees received by the harbor master at Halifax each year, so that we may know whether they are much in excess of the $1,800 proposed to be given him? If the hon gentleman has statistics showing the nature of the increase which the hon the Minister has referred to as the duties of the harbor master, it would be interesting information.

Mr. McLELAN. In 1881, $1,849.50 were the receipts, of which $249.50 were paid into the Treasury. In that year an Act was passed exempting coasting vessels from the payment of fees, but that did not diminish the labors of the harbor master. The tonnage of the port is yearly increasing. During the past ten or fifteen years the tonnage of the port of Halifax has doubled. Although we have exempted small vessels from the payment of fees there is still the same labor required in regulating them, and as the number of vessels increases the accommodation at the wharves becomes more limited and the harbor master has more labor to perform.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain why Halifax is singled out for an increase in the fees of the harbor master. If the general shipping of the port has increased, why does not the increase become general all over the maritime ports? I do not understand, from his explanation, that any increased duties have been cast upon the port officer. He did not explain at all what the receipts were during the last two or three years.

Mr. McLELAN. It would keep the House too long to find out the reasons why there has not been the same increase in all the ports as in Halifax. In all the ports the increase has been large, but at others the shipping has remained stationary. The shipping of the port of Halifax, for a number of years back, has been increasing, so that it is almost double to-day what it was some years ago, and as the number of vessels entering the port and seeking wharfage accommodation increases, the labors of the harbor master correspondingly increase. The exemption of coasting vessels from the coasting fees did not diminish his labor, but rendered the fees less in proportion to the labors done.

Mr. DAVIES. The statement of the hon. Minister is, I presume, based upon the examination by him of tables. He has given a statement of the amounts received for 1881 and the amount paid by the harbor master into the general revenue, after deducting his fees, but he has not given statements of what amounts were received since 1881. I would like, also, if he would put the House in possession of the figures on which he bases his statement that the shipping at the port of Halifax has largely increased.

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the volume here, but know it is a fact. In 1881 the amount received for fecs was $1,849; in 1882 it was $1,629, or $200 less, on account of the exemption of coasting vessels, and in 1883 it was $1,647. I have not the other years, because the memorandum I have is one prepared last year, when I purposed to introduce the Bill.

Mr. DALY. That is an increase, in 1883, over 1882, of $18.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon, gentleman stated the number of sum. In fixing the salary of any harbor master welname vessels had largely increased.

M. McLELAN. I said the tonnage.

Mr. VAIL. That is accounted for by the arrival of large steamers which stopped to get coal. These steamers do not give the harbor masters any trouble at all; they go to their agents, who have large wharves, and the harbor master has no trouble at all with them. Consequently, the increase of tonnage does not add to his duties. I have no objection to his receiving a fair salary, but I am a little afraid that in the future, if the receipts do not amount to a sufficient sum to pay the harbor master, the dues on vessels will be increased. They may be subject to a tonnage charge, from which they have been relieved. I cannot see that the harbor master's duties have been increased in the last two or three years.

Mr. STAIRS. I do not think the member for Digby (Mr. Vail) has any right to assume that this will lead to these duties being reimposed. I am sure the Government see the necessity, as well as some hon, gentlemen on that side of the House, of keeping these fees and all other charges upon shipping coming into our ports as low as they possibly can. Some hon, gentlemen who are not acquainted with the facts may think that $1,600 is an ample salary for the harbor master, but he pays all his expenses out of that, including boat hire and office hire, and it is not sufficient to remunerate him for the work he has to do. I think the harbor master has more trouble with vessels calling for coal than with ordinary vessels. The captains are sometimes very difficult to handle, and cases have arisen which show the necessity for some more summary means of enforcing the law.

Mr. DAVIES. It is not a question whether $1,600 is sufficient pay or not. If the amounts received by the harbor masters in the different harbors of the Dominion are not sufficient, that is a reason for considering the whole question of an increase to their pay all round; but I asked why the harbor master of Halifax was singled out for this increase. If there had been an abnormal increase in the shipping coming into that port there would be no more to say. The hon, member for Digby has explained that the tonnage has increased, but that is owing to an exceptional cause—the arrival of large iron ocean steamships; and if the number of vessels has decreased, the work of the harbor master has decreased, and I think the committee have a right to the information which the Minister is not in a position to give. He has stated that there was an increase of $16 in one year, but he will not contend that that is a justification for increasing the salary of the harbor master

Mr. McLELAN. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows that almost every harbor in the Dominion has its own regulations, and that in most cases the Act relating to the harbor fixes the maximum sum which we can pay the harbor master. The Act respecting the harbor master of Halifax limits the amount we can pay him to $1,000. The work performed by the harbor master of Halifax, and the expenses incurred by him for boat hire and office hire, and in various ways, in preserving order among the shipping in that port, justifies the Government in giving him $1,800, provided he collects the sum. The tonnage in the port of Halifax has largely increased and is still increasing, and in 1831, previous to the abolition of harbor dues upon coasting vessels in that harbor, $1,847 was collected, out of which the harbor master received $1,600 and paid over $247. He has been complaining, and showing that his exponses were very large, that his duties required the whole of his time, and were sometimes very difficult to perform, and presented such a case that I think he is entitled to receive $1,800, provided the shipping of the port furnishes fees sufficient to meet that ernment of the North-West, $1,460,000; improving the the amount he should receive out of the fees collected, and in many cases we have authority to vary that from time to time, and increase it if we find the labors have increased. Halifax is singled out because the Act defines $1,600 as the maximum the harbor master can receive, and I ask the House to allow me, if the money is collected—and if it is collected, there is labor in connection with the collectionto pay him $1,800.

Mr. VAIL. The Minister says that in some years the amount collected has exceeded the harbor master's salary. What has become of the excess?

Mr. McLELAN. It was paid into the Treasury.

Mr. VAIL. It would be very unfair, if the amount received in fees fell short of the amount fixed for the habor master's salary, to refuse to give him the amount, when there is a sum standing to the credit of that fund in the Treasury.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon, gentleman is determined to go one better.

Mr. DAVIES. The reason given by the Minister of Marine for increasing the salary of the harbor master at Halifax would apply to every other harbor master in the Dominion. The Minister has not shown that there has been an increase in the special work at that particular office, and if you increase his salary without showing any special reason, how can you withhold an increase of salary from all the other harbor masters? I do not say that this man is not entitled to an increase, because I do not know the facts, and the Minister does not seem to know them, and until the House is put in possession of the facts we ought not to vote the money. If it is voted, the result will be that the increase given to this harbor master must be given to every other harbor master in the country.

Mr. PAINT. Why should it interest the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) so much? We know very well that the harbor of Charlottetown is frozen over six months in the year, while the harbor of Halifax is open twelve months, and has a great deal more shipping, both in winter and summer.

Mr. DAVIES. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman has only just made that discovery. Did not that exist some years ago, when you fixed the salary at $1,600. The reasons of the hon, member for Richmond (Mr. Paint) are, perhaps, little better than the reason given by the Minister.

Resolution to be reported.

THE GOVERNMENT LOAN.

Mr. BOWELL, in moving that the report of the Committee of the Whole be received, on resolution to authorise the raising, by way of loan, of such sum or sums of money as may be required for the purpose of the floating indebtedness of the Dominion, and for carrying on the public works authorised by the Parliament of Canada, said: In answer to the question put by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), I desire to call the attention of the House for a moment to the powers to loan which he said still apparently existed, and which might be considered available as per the Supply Bill of last year. It will be seen that most of the items have been taken for specific purposes, and they are balances of the loans which were formally authorised for the purposes indicated in the Supply Bill, and consequently not available, the most of them, not being for the purposes for which the present loan is asked. There is, for instance, for the Intercolonial Railway, about $2,500,000; opening communication and administration of the gov-

River St. Lawrence, $2,680,000; Quebec harbor, $1,825,000; Quebec graving dock $600,000; the Canadian Pacific Railway, $4,866,000, and the item for general purposes of being for savings banks withdrawals, Dominion stock redeemed, sterling bonds redeemed, etc., making a total, in round numbers, of $22,080,000. I may also mention that these loans were available when the Finance Minister asked for his last loan, and I presume, therefore, he did not consider that they were available for the purposes for which he required that loan, as they are not available, I take it, except in a few small sums, for the purposes for which the present loan is asked. After investigating more closely the purposes to which the present loan is to be applied, I find from that the statement placed in my hands the last time the question was before the House, while partially accurate in itself, was not as clear as it ought to have been. The statement I desire to lay before the House now will be more satisfactory, and it is this: to cover the temporary loan made, both in Canada and in London, is $15,819,000, for capital expenditure, as per Estimates and Supplementary Estimates, 1883-84-85, $6,699,000. The amount that will be required to pay the expenses of putting down the insurrection of the North-West and for losses which we shall have to meet, I fear will be about $4,000,000. Of course, as I before stated, this $4,000,000 is, to a certain extent, guess work, as it is utterly impossible to say whether it will all be required, and perhaps we may, though I hope not, require a little more. Then the present loan proposed to be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, $5,000,000, and subsidies, $750,000. Then the probable expenditure on railway subsidies, as indicated in the other statements, $2,500,000, making a total of $35,049,000. Now, if the House should not grant the $5,000,000 proposed to be advanced to the Canadian Pacific Railway, to assist them to complete their road, the amount would be about $30,000,000 to be covered by the loan. But if that advanced to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should be authorised, then the amount that will require to be covered will be $35,049,000. The amount given to me as available under the late loan that still remains unborrowed, is $4,800,000, or about $5,000,000. This is the purpose for which the loan is now required. In regard to the $15,000,000, some of the items formerly given in the more detailed statement, I may mention have been paid. The hon, member for West Durham asked the question as to the probable amount that will be required for the payments on the railway subsidies which have already been voted by this House. I am unable to say how much of those subsidies will have to be paid. As the hon. gentleman knows, it will depend, in a great measure, upon the ability of the different railway companies to which we are paying those subsidies to go on with the work. There may possibly be required but $1,000,000 or probably the $2,500,000, or not half that amount. Some of the enterprises are likely to lapse, while others will be carried through, and it is impossible, under the circumstances, to give even an approximate estimate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the details of the capital expenditure as per Estimates and Supplementary Estimates for 1884-85 and 1885-86, those amounts aggregating roughly $7,000,000? There is, independent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, about $2,360,000 asked for 1885-86, and about $4,000,000 asked for 1884-85, approximately, independent of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But I conclude that a very large portion of that has been paid.

Mr. BOWELL. Some of it. There will be Supplementary Estimates coming down for 1884-85, up to 30th June, in which the hon. gentleman will find other sums which that is proposed to cover. I am not able to give the different items just now.

Mr. Bowell.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The amount is considerably larger than I should have anticipated.

Mr. BOWELL. This statement agrees precisely with the statement I made last night.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The $7,000,000 is not put in any part of the temporary loan, as I understand?

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would involve additional Supplementary Estimates, to the amount of some $3,000,000. This last item of probable expenditure on account of railway subsidies, under 46 and 47 Victoria, is what the hon, gentleman expects to expend out of the $8,700,000 of which he spoke the other day.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the sum given me. It may reach that, and it may exceed it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This sum, then, of $35,000,000, as we have it here, would appear not to include the proposed loan of $5,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; it is there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Canadian Railway land and subsidy—is it part of that?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. The $5,000,000 covers what is termed the amount of loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and the other amount is for subsidies earned or to be earned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon, gentleman includes in the sum of $6,979,000 what is still due to the Canadian Pacific Railway on subsidy account—

Mr. BOWELL. I was in error in stating that the amount included the $5,000,000 proposed to be loaned. It does not. The $5,000,000 odd is to cover loan and subsidy already granted by Parliament.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, speaking in round numbers, what is required to be borrowed now, in order to put us quite clear, would amount to $40,000,000.

Mr. BOWELL. That is including the $5,000,000, in case it should be voted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is in addition to the $25,000,000 refunded the other day, making in all about $65,000,000. So far as I can judge, that would cause an increase in the amount of interest to be paid of not less than $400,000 or $500,000. Has the hon, gentleman any information on that point?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not prepared to answer that, because the Estimates and Supplementary Estimates have not yet been laid before the House. I might mention, for the information of the House, that if the $5,000,000 which it is proposed to advance to the Canada Pacific Railway be granted by Parliament, it will be paid in Exchequer bills, to be covered at the expiration of the loan.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGAT. Those Exchequer bills, as is the custom in England, will bear interest—4 per cent., or what rate?

Mr. BOWELL. They will bear interest at 4 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You propose to issue them for one year?

Mr. BOWELL. For one year; that is the time of the loan.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. One year is a little long for Exchequer bills. That amount you calculate to be repaid by the Canada Pacific Railway at the expiration of that time?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Positively.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Without fail?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Without fail.

Mr. BLAKE. We are going to give our note to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for a loan.

Mr. BOWELL. The Premier says he will endorse it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon, gentleman thinks he settles the payment when he gives an Exchequer bill for it. This is a style of financing on which we are now entering for the first time, in order to assist the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand, then that the whole of the existing floating debt is intended to be paid off—$16,000,000, in round numbers.

Mr. BOWELL. It is intended to pay it off.

Mr. BLAKE. There might be some further detail of the amount of two and a-half millions which the hon, gentleman conjectures is the amount which will be required in respect to the railway grants. It seems to me to be a very small proportion to calculate upon, considering the large sum of railway grants which we have voted and are voting.

Mr. BOWELL. This is the proportion, under the Railway Subsidies Act. It is hoped that the revenue will justify us in doing what has been done in past years, that we will, in fact, be able to pay these subsidies out of revenue. And if the revenue will justify the payment of all these grants annually, I take it for granted that they will be so paid. But, under the circumstances, it is deemed advisable to ask for a sufficient amount to cover these grants in case it is required. The hon, gentleman knows that in the past three or four years many of the subsidies which have been granted to the different railways have been paid out of the annual surplus.

Mr. BLAKE. My question was rather in an opposite sense from that which the hon, gentleman has suggested. I understood him to be asking for enough, in his view, to cover railway subsidies, assuming that he would not be able to pay them out of Consolidated Revenue Fund, and on that assumption it seemed to me to be rather a small amount to demand for that purpose. I was anxious to learn what was the detail upon which he bases this calculation, to which of these roads, and to what amount does he expect to have to pay it.

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot inform the House upon that point because it is almost impossible to say which roads will go on. Experience has taught us that all these roads will not be built, but it is deemed advisable to provide a sufficient sum to cover all the claims which are likely to be asked for and earned. As the hon, gentleman very properly said the other night, some of these subsidies run over a number of years, and under the circumstances, it may not be necessary to take a sum to cover all, as all will not fall due for some years to come. It is believed, however, that this sum will be sufficient to cover all demands which may be made, perhaps, for two years, because they have a certain time in which to commence operations, and a certain time to complete, and they are not entitled to receive these grants until certain work has been performed.

Mr. BLAKE. It is in effect a conjectural estimate.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; it is.

Mr. BLAKE. Does it include the additional sums in the resolutions on the Table, notice of which was given the other day?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; that sum includes all these roads that it may be supposed will ask the Government to pay them any portion of these subsidies. There are good hopes that the road, from River Ouelle or River du Loup to Edmonton, to make connection with the New Brunswick system, may possibly go on. I think there is every probability—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A certainty.

Mr. BOWELL. The Premier says a certainty that this road will go on, which will form one that will make a claim upon us.

Mr. BLAKE. As the hon, gentleman seems disposed to apply the prospective surplus to the payment of railway subsidies, and the diminution of the amount charged, which otherwise would be created a permanent charge, had he not better—perhaps it is a hypothetical discussion, upon which it is not worth while to waste much time—but had he not better apply the surplus to the payment of the war debts.

Mr. BOWELL. Well, when the accounts are balanced, I do not think it will make much difference where it goes—to the war or to the railway. We hope the war debt will not absorb the whole $4,000,000; and if not, of course it will not be used.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Speaking roughly, as I understand, the total amount that they required to add to our debt within the last twelve months will be about $65,000,000, irrespective of the $25,000,000 which have just been refunded by exchange.

Mr. BOWELL. I suppose that will be the effect of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And that would leave us still, if I correctly apprehended the hon. gentleman's statement the other evening. $5,000,000 unborrowed, after allowing for the Exchequer bills and this loan of $30,000,000, which would leave us, roughly speaking, a liability of about $6,250,000 for these miscellaneous railways, which may or may not become due within the next two or tiree years.

Mr. BOWELL. That is about the position.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But that does not include the capitalisation of the grants for $170,000 and $30,000, which would amount to a couple of millions more.

Mr. BOWELL. To $2,550,000.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to this Exchequer bill operation, is it expected that we shall raise the money ourselves in cash, and hand it over, or that we shall give them our notes?

Mr. BOWELL. We give them the bills and they raise the money themselves.

Mr. BLAKE. And the Canadian Pacific Railway will themselves finance the Exchequer bills of Canada?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I assume that some care will be taken not to allow any discredit to be cast on the general credit of Canada, by allowing those bills, under any circumstances, to be parted with below par, or so nearly at par that it would be equivalent thereto. It would be rather a serious reflection upon us if our Exchequer bills should be, by any unlucky chance, disposed of for the emergencies of a railway at a rate below par; and I call the attention of the Government to that, because nobody can exactly tell what may be done with them after we are through with them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Without going into particulars, I may say that these bills will not be allowed to float in the market, but will be kept intact until restored to the Government.

Resolutions read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. BOWELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 145) to authorise the raising, by way of loan, of certain sums of money for the public service.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon gentleman include in that Bill provision for the two votes of credit for war purposes?

Mr. BOWELL. No; it does not include them. It only covers the $30,000,000 we propose to borrow.

Mr. BLAKE. They must be put in a Bill. The hon, gentleman knows what was done in England with Mr. Gladstone's Bill for the recent vote of credid, and it will be impossible to get these sums through the regular Supply.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I remember the hon, gentleman asked the Minister of Militia the question, whether he intended to introduce a Bill, and he said yes. I supposed the intention was to put the amounts in the Appropriation Bill; but I do not know but it would do very well to put these two sums in this Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps it might complicate the loan transaction to introduce them in this Bill.

Mr. BOWELL. I have the other Bill ready.

Bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, and read the third time and passed.

CONSOLIDATED INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (p. 2421) to amend the Consolidated Inland Revenue Act, 1883. He said: The amendments we propose to ask the House to make are comparatively few. It is considered advisable, for the sake of convenience, to dispense with the marks that have hitherto been required to be placed on boxes of cigars that have been warehoused. The previous Act charged the duty on the weight of cigars as well as on the number. It is proposed to amend that, as we charge the duty on the number of cigars, requiring that the number shall be marked on the outside of the box, so that the clearances from the warehouses can be made much more conveniently than before. In order to prevent the unlawful sale of malt as well as spirits, it is proposed to apply all the regulations hitherto applied to spirits to malt. Section "c" provides for preventing fraud by the use of packages that have already been used. The old Act simply declares that the vendor shall see that the old stamps upon the package shall be obliterated; we propose that it shall be the business of the vendor of the contents to see that the stamps shall be obliterated before the packages pass from his control. Paragraph "d" relates to the enforcement of penalties. In paragraph "e" it is proposed to allow an abatement of duty on spirits for shrinkage by evaporation, allowing the Governor in Council to impose an additional duty of 5 cents a gallon on spirits, and prohibiting spirits being entered for consumption before a specified time after manufacture. It is found that by retention of spirits there is an evaporation. It is proposed that the Department, under Order in Council, shall be permitted to have these spirits, after manufacture and distillation, tested, and the duty fixed; then, at a certain period afterwards, they shall be tested again and allowance made for evaporation in quantity and strength. This is the system followed in England and the United States. It is proposed to fix the maximum per-centage of reduction that may be made, under Order of the Governor in Council, not exceeding 6 per cent. the first year, 4 per cent. the second year, 2 per cent. the third year, and 2 per cent. the following year, up to seven years in all. The keeping of whiskey unused for a certain time will improve its condition, and renders it less injurious to the health, and with that careful consideration for the health of the community which this Department has always manifested, it is intended that the whiskey will be purified by age, as far as possible, and in that view it is proposed to provide that after the 1st July, 1887, no spirits shall be removed from the warehouse for sale until they are one year old, and after the 1st of July, 1890, none shall be removed unless two years old.

Mr. BLAKE. Is that, also, English or American legislation?

Mr. Bowell.

Mr. McLELAN. I am not prepared to say that it is English legislation, but in some cases we are in advance of English legislation, and if we can improve the quality of the liquor it will be a benefit to the community.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad to accept the opinion of a good judge of whiskey.

Mr. McLELAN. I am not prepared to say whether I am a good judge or not, but the opinion of the hon. gentleman can be given of this. It is claimed to be the effect of age that improves whiskey, whatever it may do with other things. As the allowance of a reduction for evaporation would result in a loss of revenue, it is proposed to impose 5 cents a gallon additional duty to compensate for that, so that the improvement by age may not be at the expense of the revenue. We propose to allow an increase in the number of sizes in which tobacco may be packed. We propose to allow manufacturers to use 10, 25, 35, 45, 60, 100, 110 point packages. The present regulations prevent the manufacturer from having in the show room a sufficient number of packages for the inspection of customers; we propose to allow him to cut open a larger number, stamped and duty paid. We propose to reduce the number of cigars that may be entered for ex-warehouse; under the present law the number of cigars that may be entered at one time is specified, and it is proposed, now that the duty is increased, to reduce that number.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As regards the minor features of this Bill, probably they had better be discussed in committee, where we can debate them in a more conversational fashion than we can now, but this clause "e," allowing the Governor in Council to impose an additional duty of 5 cents on each gallon of spirits, has either, designedly or accidentally, been used for the purpose of borrowing a very considerable amount of revenue from next year for the benefit of this year. Whatever construction may be put upon it inside the House, or in the Department, it appears that the trade have looked upon this as a statement absolutely that the Governor in Council would, at pleasure, impose an additional duty of 5 cents, and have, consequently, ex-warehoused, everything they possibly could and paid it in. That may be very convenient, but it is a very questionable piece of financiering. It is not very desirable to borrow, in the eleventh month-because I see these resolutions were introduced on the 7th May-a million from the natural revenue of 1886 and put it into the year 1885, and it is very likely to cause very considerable further injury to the public credit, and to the revenue, a little later on. As the hon, gentleman has explained it, the matter is not quite so objectionable as it looked at first, because, undoubtedly, the permission to the Governor in Council to impose a duty at any moment to be selected by themselves is one I should feel disposed to oppose to the uttermost, unless very strong reason was given for it. It is very inconvenient, and it opens a very serious door to possible fraud. In any case, there is very little doubt, as I said, that about a million dollars have been taken out of the revenue of next year and put to the credit of this; and this description of practically cooking our accounts is not likely to improve our credit anywhere. This has been done once or twice before, and in the whole of the accounts which have been submitted to us this year it is tolerably clear that a good deal of pains have been taken to cook them. Items, like the items for receipts on account of public lands, have been placed, or are to be placed, to the credit of our ordinary revenue, while the charges for those same public lands are charged to capital account. Now, that kind of thing does not help Canadian credit, either at home or abroad; and I do not think the result of this particular experiment—even if it does, to some extent, help our credit this year—is likely to be particularly useful to the state of our revenue next year.

It seems to me that these resolutions ought not to have been placed on the Notice Paper a whole month and more before the time came for putting them into law. It has never, heretofore, been our practice to give notice of changes in the revenue to the trade for a period of something like five weeks and more in advance of the time when they can possibly come into effect, and I think the practice is exceedingly objectionable.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not suppose that could have been the effect upon the manufacturers, to induce them to take these goods from bond, because of so small a duty as 5 cents. when there will be connected with it a rebate for evaporation caused by age to the amount of the percentage I have

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The proof of the pudding is in the eating.

Mr. BLAKE. It may be that the Department was very much disappointed and the Government very much grieved when they found over $900,000 of an excess of Excise revenue received in the last month over the corresponding month of the preceding year. It is possible that they felt alarmed at these results of their action, and that they did not at all contemplate them; but, if so, it must have been because they were very short-sighted, because the trade has taken a different view. Else, how does the hon. gentleman account for the very large excess in the receipts of the Inland Revenue Department in that month? It was not the passing of the Temperance Act in a great many counties that did it. What cause is it attributable to, except the hon. gentleman's notice? It seems to me a most objectionable thing to have put this notice upon the Paper in this way. The presumed rule of Government with reference to tariff changes, in the Excise, particularly, is that they are brought forward without prior notice of any kind, that the previous negotiations and discussions are conducted in the highest confidence; the telegraph wires are taken possession of, as a rule, in order that there may be no chance to affect the revenue injuriously by the intended alteration, and that there may not be that speculation and those possible advantages obtained by individuals which would accrue if such proposals were placed upon the Paper.

Mr. McLELAN. There could be no gain to the manufacturer, because, in connection with this 5 cent duty, there is a rebate.

Mr. BLAKE. It may be that the manufacturers are very stupid. I believe they generally are. They are not acute persons at all; they do not know their business very well; the hon, gentleman finds it difficult to persuade them to pay all the revenue they owe, and he does not find it necessary to have gaugers and detective officers to secure the transaction of business in proper time; they are an innocent, soft, stupid, dull class of the community, who, doubtless, did not appreciate the hon. gentleman's resolutions, and consequently took a large quantity of spirits out of bond and paid a large sum into the revenue. That is the story the hon, gentleman wishes the House to believe. I do not very well know what the object of the hon, gentleman was, or of his colleague, whose place he so well fills upon this occasion, in bringing forward this resolution, in the shape of giving this notice and leaving it upon the Paper for a long time, nor do I know what the object of the Government was in bringing forward this notice in the way in which it is brought forward, asking that the Governor in Council may be permitted to impose this duty. I certainly object entirely to entrusting the Governor in Council with power to increase the charges upon the people. The character of the charge is a matter of indifference; the principle is that so long a time, it has had the result of greatly augmenting which is involved. The hon, gentleman may say this is the receipts of the Dominion for the present year at the not really going to be an increase, because, upon the averence of the revenue for the next year. Whether age, it will be a decrease; but that is no matter. His designed or not, it has accomplished the gathering in to proper duty to Parliament was to have prepared his plan, and, if his plan involved an increase of duty in the first instance, in respect of which there was to be a rebate in respect of this allowance for evaporation and the loss of alcoholic properties, to have brought down the whole plan. We are determined that we will make these allowances. We are determined that we will increase this duty. We take parliamentary authority for increasing the duty and making the allowances, for it is Parliament that must increase the duty in this as in all other cases. It is not the Governor in Council who is to be entrusted with the power of increasing a duty. Therefore, in point of form, and apart, altogether, from the question of policy, I object to the form of this resolution, and maintain that it must be so moulded as shall make the Act which creates a greater charge upon the people the Act of the Legislature and not the will of the Executive. Now, with reference to the hon. gentleman's particular proposal: Of course, we have one great advantage in the absence of the Minister of Inland Revenue and in the presence of the hon, gentleman in his place. We have an hon, gentleman who is able to speak to us with knowledge, skill and experience, on the subject matter of the resolution, who is able to explain to us the degree of strength which these spirits will lose from being kept in the depository of the bonded warehouse or of the manufacturer, instead of going to their ultimate and unfortunate destination, the stomach of the people. I say, we have the advantage of having the hon, gentleman's statement, which has been clear, distinct and intelligible, as to the operation of this, as to the greater salubrity, the greater healthfulness of his proposed mode of drinking whiskey. I see he likes his whiskey old. I dare say he is quite right. I have seen some advertisements in the newspapers, in which the advantages of old whiskey are highly lauded, and I dare say the hon. gentleman is quite correct. Now he says that the Government is so anxious for the welfare of the population that from sanitary considerations, the same high views which have induced them to propose measures to prevent the adulteration of food, drinks and manures, induced them to propose to render whiskey a more healthful and satisfactory drink for our consumption. The statement of the hon, gentleman is that it is proposed to make allowances of 6 per cent. for the first year and 4 per cent. for the second year, and that no whiskey shall be sold after a certain time. This would make the maximum allowance of 10 per cent. for the two years. The hon, gentleman is adding 5 per cent.—I think the duty at present is $1—he is adding 5 per cent. to the duty. The allowance, at the end of two years, is to be 6 per cent., and cent. You get at the end of one year, 4 per a reduction of 10 per cent. and an increase of 5, so that you make a loss of 5 per cent., according to the hon. gentleman's statement, if the whiskey is sold at the earliest period at which it is proposed, after 1890, that the whiskey shall be capable of sale at all. So that the proposition is in effect for a reduction of the duty on whiskey instead of an increase. Of course the whiskey will probably cost the public as much, because a few years holding involves interest, warehousing, etc. I presume it is to be kept in a bonded warehouse, and therefore the duty will not be paid until the end of two years. The result will be that the public may pay nearly as much, but as far as the revenue is concerned, it is clear it will not be so effectually provided for by the spirit daty under these arrangements, when it assumes its regular form, as it is under the existing plan.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There can be no doubt from this resolution having been placed on the Notice Paper for the public Treasury during this year, of about a million of money that would not have come into it, in the regular course of trade, until the next year. It is not usual to give notice of changes whereby the revenue may be affected, as has already been pointed out. When the Minister put this notice on the Paper we were engaged in discussing a measure which necessitated several weeks' discussion, and he must have known that all other business must stand until that Bill had been put through committee. Now, as he must have known that, the putting this resolution upon the Paper does seem, upon the face of it, designed by hon. gentlemen opposite to bring into the public revenues a million dollars this year which will be that much towards balancing the accounts of the Dominiou, if it does not enable the Government to show a surplus. The Acting Minister of Inland Revenue says no; there could have been no design of that kind, because the manufacturer would have no object, because he proposed to allow him a rebate, by way of evaporation, while he proposed in this notice to charge him 5 cents a gallon additional by proclamation of the Governor in Council; and he would not at all be alarmed by that because the same notice tells him that we intend to make an allowance of a certain percentage for evaporation, and therefore it does not inrease the duty upon spirits at all, because the extra 5 cents he will have to pay will be more than counterbalanced by the amount of the percentage that would be allowed him for evaporation. I dare say this notice, if it had contained only those two clauses, would not have resulted in the extra million of revenue coming in, but the Minister has put in another little notice, and it was that which led to the additional million, and it is this:

"For allowing the Governor in Council to impose an additional duty of 5 cents on each gallon of spirits, and for prohibiting spirits being entered for consumption before a specified time after manufacture."

This, it was, that led the manufacturer to take his liquor out of bond. If he had an intimation that he would be allowed to remove any of it from bond or put any of it in the market for two years from the present time, he would want to avail himself of the privilege of disposing of it now. If the Minister of Customs can say it was not so, I shall stand corrected, but he cannot deny that the result has been to add a million additional to the revenue, which we should not otherwise have had. That has come no, doubt, largely from spirits. As a result of the Government leaving this notice on the Paper, they have obtained $1,000,000 more revenue than might have been expected during the fiscal year, and that amount properly belongs to the next fiscal year.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not propose to discuss the matter now, or refer to the chivalrous impulse which induced the hon. member for West Durham to attack a Minister not in his place, which he does not find it a very safe thing to do when that Minister is in his place. What I desire to point out is this: Hon. gentlemen will remember that after the troubles broke out in the North-West there was a popular impression in the public mind that an increase of duties would be necessary in order to obtain increased revenue. Even in the matter of that, there was a very considerable movement in the large marts, such as Toronto and Montreal, on the part of merchants, who believed that the Government would be compelled to increase the duties in order to meet the necessary expenditure. It will be found that this was the motive, and not anything in the resolution, which the hon, gentleman says is something to make a deduction on one side and an increase on the other, and which induced the distillers to pay a large amount of revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That might be true, with respect to such an article as tea, of which there was not a Mr. Paterson (Brant).

brought some distance. It could not occur in regard to an article that was in bonded warehouses at the time, and could be removed at the shortest possible notice. The notice has been on the Paper nearly six weeks, and the distillers took the precaution to remove their goods.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committe.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. During what period has this increase of the revenue taken place?

Mr. McLELAN. I understand that the increase took place during three weeks. It was not only on spirits, but there was a large increase on tobacco. A large proportion of the spirit was old whiskey, which is less injurious than new spirit.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman has given us to understand that the object the Government had in view was that old spirits should be used, which are more healthy.

Mr. McLELAN. I said it was less injurious.

Mr. PATERSON. The result of the action taken was that 1,000,000 gallons more of whiskey was let loose on the people, to the great injury of their health. In that case alone, there was ground for complaint against the Govern-

Mr. McLELAN. I should much regret if that quantity of new spirits had been sent among the people, but hon. gentlemen opposite know it could not be manufactured in the time. In this temperance age it could not be supposed that 1,000,000 gallons of spirits could be consumed within the period in question.

Mr. PATERSON. Then, what a mistake the distillers made, in paying this extra amount of money into the Dominion Treasury.

Mr. BLAKE. The mistake was, to suppose that the distillers would take out the old whiskey and leave in the new, for old whiskey could be taken out after the hon. gentleman's order had been passed.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon, gentleman knows it is impossible for 1,000,000 gallons of new whiskey to be made in the time. A large proportion of that taken out

Mr. CASEY. That depends on what you call new whiskey. If you only include whiskey made within a month or so it would be impossible, but if you include all that was made within the year, I think it is very possible that they should have 1,000,000 gallons of it on hand. On the other hand, I do not think that the manufacturers would be foolish enough to take out any old whiskey at all, even at the end of the first year. Taking the rebate and the increase together, they give at the end of the first year a bonus of 1 per cent. to the distiller; at the end of 2 years, 5 per cent.; at the end of 3 years, 8 per cent.; at the end of 4 years, 10 per cent.; until, at the end of 7 years, there is a total bonus of 16 per cent. given to the manufacturer. A man would be very foolish to take out 7-year old whiskey when, a short time afterwards, he might get it out for 16 cents less per gallon than he can now, and the chances are that it is new whiskey alone which was taken out. The Minister has not given us any other means of accounting for the great increase in the consumption of whiskey. The hon. member for Cardwell has given an explanation, drawn from the war in the North-West and the apprehensions of an increased duty, but that explanation was rather raw, and I think we may leave it in bond for the present. Is it in consequence of the great temperance boom in the country? Is it because the Scott respect to such an article as tea, of which there was not a Act went into force in so many counties in the month of great stock in the country at that time, and which had to be May? I do not think the strongest opponent of the Scott

Act would say that is the reason. There is nothing in the special or general circumstances of the country which will account for it, so you must come to the conclusion that it was the hon, gentleman's resolutions that did the mischief. Though the circulation of so much raw whiskey may do harm to the people, it may do good to the Government, by saving them from having a deficit for this year and next year too, just as in the case of the extra revenue brought in by the adoption of the National Policy. The Finance Minister claimed the revenues paid in anticipation of the adoption of that policy for the year 1879, and claimed them the next year, as well, because, he said, they belonged to that year, and had been forestalled the year before. The plan is certainly a very ingenious one, and does great credit to the hon. Minister who devised it, whether it was the Acting Minister or the de jure Minister. It was very clever, and no doubt it meets with the hearty approval of the Minister of Finance, who will know so well how to make use of it.

Mr. BLAKE. As the hon, member for Elgin has pointed out, this notice to the manufacturers of whiskey was drawn with great care and caution, as certain circumstances would induce the manufacturers of whiskey to believe that they would save money by leaving the whiskey in bond. The hon, gentleman prescribed the amount of the charge he was about to impose on whiskey, and he gave them other particulars, but what was to be done in the case of whiskey which was kept in bond for age, was left out. If he had disclosed the whole plan, it is possible that certain unexpected results would have taken place. These persons, however, being in ignorance of how soon he might propose to prohibit the ex-warehousing their stuff, and not being aware what the allowance was going to be, they adopted what they thought was the prudent step of taking out their whiskey. With the hon, gentleman's strong temperance views, I have no doubt he is rather glad that he has played them a pretty smart trick; he thinks it is a clear gain, and if their bank accounts are much depleted if like an even more representable. much depleted, if, like an even more respectable corporation, they have to use Exchequer bills, and put them in the hands of the banks, he will say, at any rate, that the Dominion of Canada may as well get an extra share of these unhallowed gains. I dare say that is his feeling, but whether it is participated in by his colleagues, whether the First Minister equally rejoices in the game which has been played on the manufacturers of spirits, I do not know. I do not know what the feelings of the member for London are on this subject. We know it is not the drink he is particularly interested in, but still, no doubt, he has a kind of fellow feeling for his other friends, the manufacturers of spirits, as all the Ministers, no doubt, have for Senator Smith, their colleague in the Government. Whether these manufacturers feel equally pleased at the turn of affairs which has taken place by the notice to the trade I cannot say, but I have no doubt that, as for the hon. gentleman himself, he feels rejoiced at having had a chance to spoil the Egyptians.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it the intention, in the Bill, to fix the schedule of abatement, or to leave that to the Governor in Council?

Mr. McLELAN. That is to be provided in the Bill.

Mr. PATERSON. If 5 per cent is the basis of that, why not make a statutory declaration of that as well?

Mr. McLELAN. That would involve our going into Committee of Ways and Means, but we may have an opportunity before the Bill passes through.

Mr. BLAKE. I must say that I do not think the Bill will go through very rapidly if this is left to the Governor in Council. The hon, gentleman had better face the difficulty now.

Mr. PATERSON. If the Government had not determined upon what would be a fair abatement for shrinkage, there might be a shadow of reason for asking that they should have the power to do that by Order in Council, and, as a consequence, that the increase of duty might be left in the hands of the Governor in Council; but the Government having determined on the abatement that was to be made, I see no reason why the Governor in Council should have anything to do with it. If one is determined, the other should be determined.

Mr. McLELAN. I will move that the resolution be amended in that respect.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the proper way would be to leave that out altogether, and bring a resolution into the Committee of Ways and Means to provide for that duty.

Mr. BOWELL. Of course, it does not follow that these reductions will be made. These percentages are maximums, and the reductions will depend altogether on the evaporation that takes place during the time.

Mr. McLELAN. I move that the words, "for allowing the Governor in Council to impose an additional duty of 5 cents on each gallon of spirits," be omitted.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the next stage of the Bill, I hope the hon, gentleman will give us the date at which the bulk of that money came in, now that the clause which brought it in has been struck out.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do the returns made to the Government show the date when the liquor was placed in bond?

Mr. McLELAN. They do.

Mr. PATERSON. Then, I think it would be well, when the other information is being brought, that the Minister should also give us the date at which the liquor was put in bond and taken out. That will enable us to realise whether it was old or new whiskey, and what damage was done to the community.

Mr. McLELAN. It would be too bad if it was old whiskey.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the whole thing will be complete if he brings the resolutions of thanks of the distillers.

Amendment agreed to, and resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McLELAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) to amend the Consolidated Inland Revenue Act, 1883.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11:55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 15th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CANADA TEMPERANCE AOT AMENDMENTS.

Mr. JAMIESON asked, Is the Government prepared to name a day for the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 92) "An Act further to amend The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," and 'The Liquor License Act, 1883?'"

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Having ascertained from the hon, gentleman that he is desirous that the matter should be disposed of quickly, and as I am informed that some of those who are in favor of the amendments are also anxious to have it disposed of, I would suggest to the House the expediency of allowing this matter to be fully discussed on Thursday, if that will suit hon. gentlemen.

Mr. BLAKE. Had it not better be made an Order for that day?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps that would be better.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Government had better put a notice on the Paper to that effect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well.

SALE OR SETTLEMENT OF LANDS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, Was there any Order in Council passed in 1880, 1881 or 1882, respecting the sale or settlement of land south of the twenty four mile belt reserved to Canadian Pacific Railway, in Manitoba and the North-West Territories? If so—1. When was the Order passed; 2. What were the terms of sale or settlement; 3. What was the price fixed for odd-numbered sections; 4. What were the terms of such Order?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes. (1.) The date of the Order in Council was the 5th July, 1882, but it was not enforced until the 1st September following, and therefore did not affect settlement made during that season. (2.) The lands affected by the Order in Council—namely, the even-numbered sections between the southern limit of the Canadian Pacific Railway belt and the international boundary—were to be offered for sale by public auction, at an upset price of not less than $2.50 per acre, and any of such lands disposed of while the Order was in operation were disposed of in this manner. (3.) The odd-numbered sections between the southerly limit of the railway belt and the international boundary were not sold at any price, but were reserved for the purpose of aiding in the construction of colonisation railways. (4.) The Order in Council will be brought down.

RAILWAY SYSTEM OF NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. STAIRS asked, Has the Government received from any person or persons any proposal for the consolidation and completion of the railway system of Nova Scotia; and if so, what steps do they intend to take respecting it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government has received such an application, and it is now under the consideration of the Government.

TEMPORARY LOANS TO THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. CHARLTON) asked, The total amount of temporary loans obtained by the Government from banks or other sources in Canada, Great Britain, the United States or elsewhere, on the 31st May, 1885, and at that date unpaid; but not including savings bank deposits or Dominion notes in circulation; the date and amount of each loan, from what source obtained, and when payable?

Mr. BOWELL. The temporary loans on the 31st of May, 1885, in Canada, were $4,400,000, and in England, $11,419,067.23. The other information asked for in the question is such, as was stated in the House when asked for before, as it is not deemed, in the interest of the country, should be answered, on the ground that the banks, particularly in England, object to their transactions of this kind being made public. Mr. JANIESON.

SUPERANNUATIONS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the office of collector of Inland Revenue, filled by G. C. Longley, collector, who was superannuated during the last year, has been filled? If so, how, by promotion or new appointment, name and salary allowed, and date of appointment? If not filled, is it the intention of the Government to fill it? Who is performing the duties at present, and what salary or per diem allowance is paid?

Mr. McLELAN. The position of collector, which became vacant by the superannuation of the late G. C. Longley, has been filled by the appointment of John Dumbrille, of Maitland, by Order in Council of 16th April, 1885, at a salary of $1,400 per annum.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the office of first-class clerk, filled by C. McCarthy, Public Works Department, who was superannuated the last year, has been filled? If so, how, by promotion or otherwise, name and what salary, also date of appointment? If not filled, is it the intention of the Government to fill it? Who performs the duties at present, and what salary or per diem allowance is paid?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This office has not yet been filled. The duties are performed by several officers of the Department, who draw their ordinary salaries.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the office of chief clerk, Secretary of State Department, filled by W. H. Jones, who was superannuated during the last year, has been filled? If so, how, by promotion or otherwise? If filled, by whom, salary and date of appointment? If not filled, is it the intention of the Government to fill it? And who performs the duties of the position at present, and what salary or per diem allowance is paid?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The vacancy has not been filled and will not be filled, and the duties are performed by other officers of the Department, without additional salary.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the office filled by N. McLeod (Indian Affairs), who was superannuated last year, has been filled? If so, by promotion or otherwise, name and salary allowed, and date of appointment? If not filled, is it the intention of the Government to fill it? And who performs the duties of the office at present, and what salary or per diem allowance is paid?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The office of Indian agent at Fort Macleod, formerly held by Norman Macleod, who was on sick leave for some time previous to his retirement, was filled, by the transfer, in January, 1882, of Mr. C. E. Denny, Indian agent at Fort Walsh, to Fort Macleod, at the same salary received by him at Fort Walsh, namely, $1,200 per annum. Mr. Denny subsequently resigned, and was succeeded, on the 10th of March, 1884, by Mr. W. B. Pocklington, who had been Indian sub-agent at the Blackfeet Crossing. Mr. Pocklington's promotion was by Order in Council of the 6th of September, 1884, and he received the same salary as his predecessor, Mr. Denny.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the office of chief clerk, Department of Interior, filled by A. Russell, who was superannuated last year, has been filled? If so, by promotion or otherwise, and name, salary and date of appointment? If not filled, is it the intention of the Government to fill it? And who performs the duties of the office at present, and what salary or per diem allowance is paid?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; it has been filled by the promotion of Mr. William M. Goodeve, who was next to Mr. Russell in rank in the Patenting Branch of the Department. Mr. Goodeve passed the promotion examination prescribed by the Civil Service Act, and received his appointment as chief clerk of the Patents Branch of the Department from the 1st January last, at the salary of $1,800 per annum.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the office of Surveyor General, filled by L. Russell, Department of the Interior, who was superannuated last year, has been filled? If so, by promotion or otherwise, name, salary allowed and date of appointment? If not filled, is it the intention of the Government to fill it? And who is performing the duties of the office at present and what salary or per diem allowance is paid?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, it has been filled by the promotion of Mr. Edouard Deville, who as chief inspector of surveys was next to Mr. Lindsay Russell in rank in the Surveys Branch of the Department of the Interior. Mr. Deville's appointment as Surveyor General dates from the 1st January last, and his salary is $2,200 per annum.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the office filled by G. Grant, as second-class clerk of Militia and Defence, who was superannuated last year, has been filled? If so, by promotion or otherwise, and name and salary? If not filled, is it the intention of the Government to fill it? And who performs the duties of the office at present, and what salary or per diem allowance is paid?

Mr. CARON. Major Wainwright has been appointed by promotion to fill the vacancy created by the retirement of Lieut. Col. Grant, at the minimum salary of second-class clerks, namely, $1,100. Major Wainwright has been removed since to the Adjutant General's office, and it is intended to appoint another clerk in his place. At present the duties are performed temporarily by the other officers of the Department, who are not receiving extra salary or per diem allowance.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether the office of Doputy Collector of Inland Rovenue, filled by D. Lindsay, who was superannuated last year, has been filled? If so, how, by new appointment or promotion, name the salary allowed? If not filled, is it the intention of the Government to fill it? And who is performing the duties of the office at present, and what salary or per diem allowance is paid?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Lindsay's vacancy has not been filled up to the present. Mr. J. S. Clute, Collector of Customs at New Westminster, B.C., is performing the work, and receives a 5 per cent. commission on all Excise duties he collects, and $100 per annum for performing the duties of surveying the malt houses and breweries.

EXCISE REVENUE—MAY 1884 AND 1885.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, How much of the revenue from Excise received during the month of May, 1885, was obtained from spirits and how much from tobacco, respectively? 2. How much from spirits and tobacco, respectively, in May, 1884?

Mr. BOWELL. Spirits, May, 1884, $280,217.65; spirits, May, 1885, $1,140,973.62; tobacco and cigars, 1884, $141-035.13; tobacco and eigars, 1885, $208,532.86.

PUBLIC SERVICE—STATISTICS.

Mr. TASSE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to reorganise the system of statistics and to publish each year a volume containing a statistical summary in relation to the working of the several branches of the public service?

Mr. POPE. The Government has that matter under consideration.

ADMINISTRATION OF NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES

Mr. CARON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to-morrow, to consider the follow ing resolutions :-

1. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor General to appoint 1. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor General to appoint in the manner provided by the fifth section of the North-West Territories Act, 1880, an additional member of the Council for the said Territories, and an additional stipendiary magistrate in the manner provided by the seventy-fourth section of the said Act, and for the purposes mentioned in the said Act.

2. That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of the Interior may, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, make such arrangements with the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba as seem reasonable as to the compensation to be made by Canada to that Province for the care and maintenance of persons detained in the Selkirk lunatic asylum, or in any temporary asylum in the said Province.

Motion agreed to.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to-morrow, to consider the following resolutions:-

It shall be lawful forthe Governor in Council to grant the further subsidies hereinafter mentioned towards the construction of the railways hereinafter described; that is to say:

herematter described; that is to say:

For a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway at Rivière du Loup or Rivière Ouelle in the Province of Quebec, to Edmunston in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $2,800 per mile for 75 miles, and $6,000 per mile for 8 miles, not exceeding in the whole $258,000. The said subsidy to be in addition to the subsidy authorised to be granted in aid of the construction of the said railway, by the Act 45 Vic., cap. 14, constituting with the subsidy so authorised, a subsidy not exceeding in the whole $498,000. The said subsidy to be granted to the said railway upon the terms and conditions specified in the said Act.

Also for a line of railway connecting Montreal with the harbors of St. John and Halifax, via Sherbrooke, Moosebead, Lake Mettawamkeag, Harvey, Fredericton and Salisbury, a subsidy not exceeding $80,000 per annum for twenty years, forming in the whole, together with the subsidy authorised by the Act 47 Vic., cap. 8, a subsidy not exceeding $250,000 per annum, the whole of which shall be paid in aid of the construction of such line for a period of twenty years, or a guarantee of a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds of the company undertaking the work.

struction of such line for a period of twenty years, or a guarantee of a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds of the company undertaking the work.

The said last mentioned subsidy to be so granted upon the terms and conditions specified in the said last mentioned Act in respect of the subsidy thereby authorised in aid of the said line of railway.

And whereas it is essential in the interest of Canada, generally, as well as of the Province of Quebec, that free access to the port of Quebec be obtained by the Canadian Pacific Railway as contemplated by the said last mentioned Act, and such access has not been obtained, and it is necessary to make further provision for the purpose of procuring such access; therefore it is hereby resolved as follows:

The Governor in Council may grant a further subsidy to aid in procuring free access as hereinafter described for the trains and traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from St. Martin's Junction, near Montreal, or from some other point on the said railway to be selected by the company, to the harbor of Quebec, in such manner as shall be approved by the Governor in Council, to wit: An additional subsidy not exceeding $340,000, constituting together with the subsidy authorised by the said last mentioned Act to aid in procuring the Canadian Pacific Railway at Jacques Cartier Junction with the North Shore Railway, which subsidies shall be applicable to the said first mentioned purpose: a sum not exceeding in the whole the sum of $1,500,000.

But if the said Canadian Pacific Railway Company fail within the $1,500,000.

But if the said Canadian Pacific Railway Company fail within the period of two months from the passing of an Act based on these resolutions to obtain such access to the harbor of Quebec, either by purchasing or obtaining control of the said North Shore Railway, or by making with the owners of the said railway such arrangements, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, as will enable the said company to obtain such access thereto, and allow the trains thereof to pass as freely to and from the said harbor as if the said railway formed part of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway; then and thereupon sections 4, 5 and 6 of the said Act shall come into force and be acted upon in accordance with their terms.

That in so far as any further authority is required to enable the Canadian C

That in so far as any further authority is required to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to carry out the provisions of the said 4th, 5th and 6th sections of the said Act, 47 Victoria, cap. 8, as hereby modified, the said company be authorised and empowered to do with the authority of the shareholders, evidenced as provided by their charter, all matters and things that may be necessary or expedient in the carrying out of any arrangement herein contemplated, including the leasing in perpetuity of a second line of railway between Montreal and Quebec, the application of the rental to be agreed upon in the lease thereof to the payment of the interest on the bonds or stock of any company to be formed for constructing such second line, and the use of such subsidy in whole or in part as a provision for interest or dividends upon the cost of such construction or otherwise as may be found expedient in making the financial arrangements for meeting such cost; and that such authority in all the foregoing respects as may be needed That in so far as any further authority is required to enable the Canby the Company to be incorporated under the said Act be also granted to such company by the terms of its charter.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BOWELL moved the following resolution:-

That towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty for the service of the year ending 30th June, 1885, the sum of $1,700,000 be granted out of the Consolidated Fund of Canada.

Mr. MILLS. It would be reasonable that the Minister should give the House further information with regard to the expenditure connected with this military expedition and the suppression of the rebellion. The hon. gentleman knows that his colleague (Mr. Caron) asked the House for a vote of $700,000 in the first instance, and then for $1,000,000. Now it is proposed to carry through an Act to grant this amount of $1,700,000. We know from the information of the hon. Minister of Customs that this will not by any means be all the expenditure that will be required in connection with the matter, and the Government may be in a position to give the House more definite information than they could when this vote was formerly asked.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not anticipate a detailed statement of expense would be asked for at this stage. The arrangement was, when the first vote was taken, that a Bill should be introduced to cover the amount, and after the second resolution was passed asking for an additional million, I promised to bring in a Bill, and have done so.

Mr. CARON. I am not in a position to give any further information to the hon. gentleman to-day, but I received a very heavy looking parcel from the Hudson Bay Company, containing vouchers and estimates, on Friday night. The officers of the Department have been kept very busy ever since investigating that, and within two or three days I hope to be able to lay before the House the information which the hon. gentleman is anxious to get, and which I am very anxious indeed to bring down.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the best way will be to get the information before we take committee on the Bill.

Resoluton to be reported.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BOWELL. Before moving the third reading of this Bill (No. 20) to modify the application of the Consolidated Insurance Act of 1877, I may say that there have been grave doubts expressed as to the right of this Parliament to exercise the powers given under the 7th section, and, as that doubt exists, I will move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole to strike out the 7th section, and to add in the 8th clause the word "registered" after the word "licensed" in the 19th line. It is contended by many gentlemen that that is a question exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures and not within the purview of the Dominion Parliament. In looking over the decision in the case to which my attention was called, I do not find that the Privy Council gave any positive opinion on that question; but, rather than have any doubt or any further debate upon it, I think it is advisable to strike out that clause.

Mr. IVES. I do not quite understand whether the Minister takes the responsibility of giving it as his opinion that Ives) has said, as a sort of compromise, and this clause was Sir John A. Macdonald.

this clause which he proposes to strike out is ultra vires of this Parliament. He says that a number of gentlemen, whether members of this House or not he did not state, but I presume they are members of this House, have doubts about the power of Parliament to enact this section. I would like to know, if that particular section is not within our power, bow these other sections which refer to what may be endorsed on the policy and what the policy shall contain and shall not contain can in common sense come within the power of this Parliament. If we have any power at all over an insurance company that we incorporate, to fix the terms upon which they shall do business with the public, and the public shall do business with them, I am at a loss to know how we should not have the power to enact this seventh section. This is a very important question. I do not see how we can go into committee and strike out the clause without knowing the view of the Government in reference to the other parts of the Bill. The hon. Minister refers to the case of Parsons and the Queen. As I read the decision of the Privy Council in that case, so far from deciding that we have not the power in this matter, it abstains from deciding that matter altogether, and so far as you can draw from it the opinion of the court, it was that we had the power, and that the powers of the Local Government and of the Dominion in reference to a matter of this kind were concurrent. The only point in the case that I can find out is that conditions affixed by the Local Legislature as to insurance companies doing business within their Province were held to be within the powers of the Local Legislature. The Legislature of Ontario passed an Act which prescribed uniform conditions to be inserted in the policies of fire insurance companies doing business within the Province. The Privy Council held that that was within the powers of the Legislature of Ontario, but they expressly say that they refrain from giving any opinion with reference to the point which the hon. Minister proposes to assume has been decided against the powers of the Parliament of Canada. If we do not defend our own rights, prerogatives and privileges, it is hardly to be expected that the Local Legislatures will do it for us, and it is going a long way to acknowledge that we have not the power which we have over and over again assumed, namely, to enact this clause, not because the Minister of Justice or the Government say we have not the power, but because some one says we have not the power, or that there is a doubt about it. If we have not the power in regard to the 7th section, we cannot have it in regard to several other sections. This Bill is far from commending itself to a large number of the members of this House, though I do not say the majority. It went before the committee and was discussed for weeks, and this particular condition in section 7 was adopted as a sort of compromise, and to propose to strike it out now and so to emasculate the Bill seems to me almost a breach of faith to those members of the committee who consented to the Bill in that form. I trust the Minister will reconsider his inclination to strike out this clause. The other day the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry) was not satisfied with the clause, and held that information given in answer to questions should not invalidate the policy, unless it was fraudulently given. Now, what will he and others who think with him say if the whole clause is struck out and the Bill is deprived of that provision entirely?

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would be unfortunate to make any material alteration in this Bill before the third reading without some preliminary notice. I do not profess to understand the merits of the controversy which took place at such length and earnestness before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, but the Bill was ultimately settled, as the hon member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) has said, as a sort of compromise, and this clause was the result of that compromise. I think at the third reading it would be but reasonable not to make a change such as this. I do not at all dispute the propriety of the hon. gentleman's proposed change. But as we have got a thin House just now, and this measure has excited a great deal of interest among the members, and as you have got a clause which, as it now appears, was the subject of an adjustment, we ought not to eliminate it without giving some degree of notice, and I would suggest to the Minister to postpone the debate upon this amendment until to-mor-

Mr. BOWELL. I have no objections that the debate should be adjourned, and there will be of course no objections to other amendments.

Mr. BLAKE moved that the debate be adjourned. Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

RAILWAYS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the resolutions affirming the expediency of authorising the Governor in Council to grant lands to certain companies in the North-West, be now read the second time.

Mr. BLAKE. Upon a former debate with reference to the first resolution, a good deal of exception was taken to some points which the hon. gentleman will remember, with reference to the question of the coal supply, and that of the narrow gauge railway, and there was a well nigh unanimous expression of opinion on the part of all those who participated in the discussion, that it was regretable that the railway should be on the proposed gauge. Upon that occasion my hon. friend said he had taken note of the various points that were raised, and would subsequently give some information to the House upon them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman spoke of the relative quality of the coal. I am not prepared to answer that; I have not the information. I know that the company is now working at the Galt mine, at the end of the railway. When first opened that was considered the best coal, but I understand that other coal as good as that has been found farther west; in fact, it seems that the farther west you go towards the mountains the coal improves. If the Medicine Hat coal had been considered as good as this, I have no doubt the company that is formed would not have built a railway 110 miles long in order to obtain that coal. But what shows that the coal of that mine is better than the coal at Medicine Hat and the coal between the Medicine Hat and the Galt mine, is this: That the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who must know what is in their interest, have made a large contract for five years with this company for their coal, which is considered the best yet found. True, it is stated that coal of good quality can also be found at the crossing, but these mines have not been worked. The hon, gentleman also spoke of the gauge of the railway, and there did not seem to be any difference of opinion amongst the members of the House about the propriety of having the ordinary standard gauge of the country applied to these branch railways. Well, the fact is I believe the Government were of that opinion themselves; but when this company applied for aid for their railway they were pressed very much by the Minister to adopt the standard gauge of the country instead of the narrow gauge, and the answer was positive that the capitalists who were ready to put their money into a narrow gauge railway, were not disposed to put it into a broad gauge railway, even with the increased subsidy in land that the Government were disposed to offer them. Under these circumstances we thought that we might ask Parliament to sanction this narrow gauge railway and obtain the coal as soon as possible from that mine. It is retained by the Government, subject to a charge of $1.06 per acre, as a now stated that a large area of country there is a coal country, according to the surveys made in that region. As this is the first company that has proposed to go into the working of coal mines to that extent, as we thought it would be the beginning of work in those mines, and as these capitalists were investing their capital there—on a land basis, if you choose-nevertheless, they were investing their money there, we thought it would induce others to do the same later on. But coal is not confined to this region of 10,000 acres; I have no doubt that, as my hon. friend indicated the other day, there is a long seam of coal extending from the frontier towards the north and north-west across the railway, and that many other companies will go into the coal mining. It may be said that other companies will have less trouble and expense in working those mines than this one. Well, of course, it will be the business of the company that is now asking for this aid, to see whether it would pay them, whether they would have to work the coal that way, or reduce the price of coal. I have no doubt that competition will bring down the price of coal. I remember the time when coal was very high at Winnipeg and in Manitoba generally, and if people had then been told that the time was not far distant when they would be able to obtain coal for $6.50, they would have been very much pleased, even when they were paying $10. If the Government could have arranged for the company to build the road with broad gauge the Government would have much preferred it; but this was found impossible under the circumstances, and weighing all the circumstances we thought it better to accept the proposal and have the narrow

Mr. EDGAR. With respect to the resolution granting land to the Manitoba and North-Western Railway, the Minister will remember it was pointed out that the Government had imposed a condition upon the railway company that they should build 100 miles before the 1st October of this year, and 100 miles, at least, during each subsequent year, otherwise the grant would be forfeited; that is to say, that the company would not receive a single acre unless they built 100 miles this year. The Order in Council itself showed that they only expected to build 50 miles by the 1st of October, and 50 miles each year hereafter. It will be necessary either for the Government to show that the company has made a mistake in their calculation, and give some other assurance, or reduce the number of miles to be built each year to 50.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I stated the other evening, when we were considering this subject, that I thought we had passed an Order in Council since 1st October, the terms of which would agree with the wishes expressed by some hon, members, and that the length of line to be built was reduced from 100 miles to 50 during each period. obtained a copy of the Order in Council, which is dated 6th May, 1885. I need not read the petition of the company, but I will give the decision of Council:

"The Minister, believing that it is of great importance to the settlement and development of the district to be traversed by the Manitoba and North-Western Railway, that the extension of the line should be proceeded with, and being very anxious to facilitate the financial operations of the company, so as to enable them to prosecute the work with despatch and vigor, being satisfied also of the bond fide intention of the company to complete the line as rapidly as their resources will permit, and further, with a view to furnishing employment to those settlers who will be unable to follow agricultural pursuits during the present year, recommends that the Order in Council of the 4th October last be amended in the following particulars, namely:—
"First.—That the mileage to be constructed annually be reduced

"First.—That the mileage to be constructed annually we reduced from 100 miles to 50 miles.

"Second.—That the company be conceded the right to the conveyance at the rate of 6,000 acres per mile, as each section of 10 miles is completed, during the construction of the next fifty miles of rallway, of 300,000 acres of the 512,000 acres earned on the 80 miles of constructed road, on reimbursing the Government therefor at the rate of 10 cents per acre, as provided in the Order in Council of the 4th of October last, and on the understanding that the remaining 212,000 acres should be retained by the Government, subject to a charge of $1.06 per acre, as a guarantee for the completion of the said 50 miles by the 1st day of October next, and also as a guarantee for the further construction of the line, until the same is completed, equipped and running to the west bank of the Assiniboine river, being not less than 100 miles from Minnedosa, when the company shall have the right to the conveyance of the said 212,000 acres, upon reimbursing the Government the amount of 10 cents per acre.

212,000 acres, upon reimbursing the Government the amount of 10 cents per acre.

"Third.—That the land grant upon the extension of the line from Minnedosa, the point to which it is now completed, about 80 miles from Portage la Prairie, at the rate of 6,400 acres per mile be conveyed, to the company, when applied for by them, on the completion of each section of 10 miles, upon their reimbursing the Government the amount of 10 cents per acre.

"Fourth.—That in the event of the company desiring to obtain the right to a conveyance of the 212,000 acres to be retained by the Government, or any portion thereof, before the completion of the line to the west bank of the Assiniboine River, they be accorded such right upon first depositing with the Receiver General of the Dominion not less than $1.06 per acre of the said 212,000 acres, or any portion of the same, the money so deposited to be repaid to the company with interest same, the money so deposited to be repaid to the company with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, less the amount of 10 cents per acre, when the whole line is completed, equipped and running from Portage la Prairie to the west bank of the Assiniboine River.

'The Minister further recommends that the provisions of the Order in Council of the 4th October last, except in 50 far as the same are expressive modified by this minute, he and remain in full force.'

sly modified by this minute, be and remain in full force.'

Mr. BLAKE. Then the company will receive 11,520 acres per mile for the 100 miles now completed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Resolutions concurred in.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 147) authorising the granting of certain subsidies of land for the construction of railways therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

HARBOR MASTER AT HALIFAX.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the resolution respecting the appointment of a harbor master at the port of Halifax be read the second time.

Motion agreed to.

On motion that the resolution be concurred in,

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to point out that the statement made the other day by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in regard to the increased business consequent on the increased tonnage at the port was not exactly accurate. I find that in 1882 the tonnage was 601,000; in 1884, 565,000, or an actual decrease of 35,000 tons. I do not object to the amount of salary, but I desire to correct the statement made by the Minister.

Mr. McLELAN. My statement was, that going back for a number of years that was the general effect, though, of course, there may be some years in which there was a fall-

Mr. McLELAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No.148) to amend the Act respecting the appointment of a Harbor Master for Halifax.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CANNED GOODS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 142) respecting Canned Goods.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. DAVIES. This would appear to apply to goods going abroad as well as to those sold in Canada for consumption. If so, that was not what was explained to be the intention of the Minister last year.

Canada, whether for consumption or otherwise.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. BLAKE. That is certainly contrary to the policy stated last year.

Mr. McLELAN. I believe the general impression of the House last year was that it should be confined to goods sold in Canada, but I suppose it would do no harm if these labels were put on goods for exportation as well.

Mr. BLAKE. They might do that for themselves.

Mr. McLELAN. I would move that after the word "Canada," in the 9th line, the words "except for exportation," be inserted.

Mr. BLAKE. That will read very queerly. It will read "sold, or offered for sale in Canada, for exportation, after the first day of January." Better say "offered for sale in Canada for consumption therein." Then, is it intended to apply to imported goods sold in Canada?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Because it does.

Mr. STAIRS. I think lower down it excepts certain classes of foreign goods.

Mr. BLAKE. It is a Governor in Council clause—we do not take much stock in that. It would be additional prohibtion in reference to all goods manufactured abroad which might be brought into Canada for sale.

Mr. McLELAN. Let it read, "except in the case of goods packed in Canada previous to the passing of this Act."

Mr. BLAKE. That will not do. That leaves it still quite open. That would extend to goods packed abroad and sold or offered for sale in Canada.

Mr. McLELAN. Add, after "Canada," the words "for consumption therein."

Mr. BLAKE. That is worse and worse. That would prohibit the case not merely of goods packed in Canada but packed outside.

Mr. McLELAN. Those goods are expressly exempted by the Act.

Mr. BLAKE. No; the 6th clause only applies to a particular class of goods, namely, those of a description not put up in Canada at all. We put up in Canada goods of a character similar to those put elsewhere, such as lobsters, corn, and a good many kinds of fruit, and this clause does not extend to them at all.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. "Except in the case of goods packed previously to the passing of this Act, every package of canned goods packed in Canada and sold or offered for sale in Canada for consumption therein, after the 1st day of January, 1886."

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that this Bill is ultra vires. It is not simply a regulation of trade; it is an interference with the right of property and of civil rights. If the hon. gentleman can go so far as to say how certain kinds of property shall be prepared for market, he may do so with reference to every kind of property. He might interfere with the production of stock; he might say what kind of cattle, horses or sheep the farmer shall produce, or what kind of fruits he shall raise, how the fruits shall be picked and prepared and packed for market, as well as provide how this particular kind of fruit shall be prepared. There is a difference of degree, but no difference in kind or principle. If we go on legislating in this way with regard to personal property, simply because personal property may become an article of merchandise, what remains to the Local Legislature under the head of property and civil rights? Civil Mr. McLELAN. This would cover all goods sold in rights are rights regulated by law, about which there are certain and a, whether for consumption or otherwise.

late is a civil right, and simply because it may be an article of merchandise, you cannot make that regulation under the assumption of regulating trade. This is not a regulation of trade at all in any sense. You are undertaking to say what shall be done in order that property may be preserved from destruction, or that the purchaser may be protected from fraud on the part of the vendor. All that has to do with the ownership of property and with its transfer. Now the transfer of property, its purchase or sale, is a matter relating to property and civil rights, not a matter relating to commerce. The law of customs, or what we understand by the expression, is wholly different. We undertake to say how trade shall be carried on with a foreign state; we may establish certain laws of quarantine; we may state what taxation it may be subject to; we may make regulations of this sort under the head of regulating trade, but the provisions of this Bill are civil regulations, the regulations of civil rights and of relations between the vendor and the purchaser, and it seems to me there is no difference in making these provisions and going a step further, stating that a certain kind of property cannot be held, or that certain regulations must be complied with before the owner of certain property can part with it. Now whether he will part with it by law, whether he may assign it in a particular way, whether he will make a written or a verbal contract with regard to it, how and upon what condition it shall be delivered, what shall be the relations between the vendor and the purchaser, are all civil relations and belong to the Local Legislatures, and are not matters with which we have anything to do.

On sub-section 3, section 2,

Mr. BLAKE. You will observe the clause as it stands makes it an offence, in case the retail vendor should sell, although there has been originally this stamp which is required printed legibly, but which from the accidents of handling, of transport or wear and tear, it has become illegible. That seems to be going rather a long way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the stamp has become illegible, the vendor can easily have that rectified.

Mr. DAVIES. What is the real object the hon, gentleman has in view? I can understand the object for passing an Act for the adulteration of food, for it furnishes protection to the public, but it seems to me this is a vicious interference with trade without any direct ostensible object that warrants the interference. What especial object is there in putting some illegible mark upon the package?

Mr. McLELAN. To establish the character of the goods that may be offered for sale; the name and the address will be a guarantee to some extent.

Mr. BLAKE. In so far as the clause proposes to provide for making the word "soaked" on goods which are prepared from dried materials, there is, of course, a possible advantage in it, although my opinion is against the clause even so; but that is only a small restriction. As to the rest of the clause, it is, in my opinion, but a survival of an abortive effort to do something which was attempted to be done without success. If I rightly understand the moving cause of the legislation originally, it was an intention to compel the date to be put on, with a view to let the public know whether they were getting fresh canned stuff or not. That has been abandoned, and I think, when you do not compel the date to be put on, you are really, in regard to all these matters to which the word "soak" does not apply, passing a law that no canned goods shall be sold without the name and address of the packer legibly placed thereon without sufficient reason. Let us trust to the people themselves. Those who want to make a reputation will put their names and addresses legibly on their goods. | precaution except that of opening the goods, and the law,

Mr. McLELAN. Manufacturers of almost every description of goods, manufacturers of hoes, and soythes, and agricultural implements, put their own names on the best qualities, and on the inferior qualities put some other name. It is therefore desirable to provide that the manufacturer shall put his own name on these goods.

Mr. BLAKE. The provision in the Bill originally introduced that a man should be compelled to put the date on these cans was abandoned. Now we are face to face with an interference with the operations of trade. The hon. gentleman drew his illustration from other classes of goods than canned goods, and he thereby admitted the same principle would apply. He says that agricultural implements, hoes, scythes and so forth, are marked with one name for the first class of goods, and with other names for the second class. Are we going to stop that? Why should we confine this to canned goods? Why should we allow people to put false names on the second and third class descriptions of hoes, and soythes and shovels?

Mr. McLELAN. You can discover the quality of those better than you can of what is contained in a can.

Mr. BLAKE. Oh, people cannot be so easily cheated. But, if the hon, gentleman wishes to protect the buyers of canned goods, why should he not protect the buyers of other goods. He will find it extremely difficult in this age of the world, I am sorry to say, to prevent inferior qualities being put on the market, and that is really the object of the clause as it how stands. I think the clause will not meet the object. Many houses do business under more than one name. I think the hon. gentleman is entering into a very unwise course which will not protect the public, while it will hamper the trade. It is better that the public should learn to respect the label that is put upon the goods by experience.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The great object is to hold somebody responsible. You must have some name on the goods in order to know whom to proceed against. If the goods are worthless, there is no means of ascertaining that, except by opening the can. There ought therefore to be some person responsible, either the wholesale dealer or the dealer who puts these goods on the market. I remember an Arctic expedition being frustrated and some lives lost because a quantity of these goods were obtained which were worthless, and they did not know who should be prosecuted.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a new reason. The Minister in charge of the Bill says it is to prevent inferiority of quality. The First Minister says it is to prosecute those who sell goods which are absolutely bad.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is one reason.

Mr. BLAKE. That is misleading. Various questions arise as to the degree of inferiority. I may be a retail dealer and may buy from a first-class house articles which are represented to be all right, I may mark them with my own name in good faith, I cannot open the goods as that would spoil them, but I have taken every precaution, and they turn out to be bad. Am I to be criminally liable for

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The person who sells the goods will not put his name on them if he finds the person who bought them in the original package has his name on. But if they are put in the market without any name on, he puts on his name at his peril.

This statute does not impose upon a Mr. BLAKE. person a new penalty by virtue of his having put his name on the goods. All this statute does is to say that certain consequences shall follow if he does not put his name on. He buys goods from a high class house and he takes every providing the goods shall have upon them either the name of the house or his own name, would not reach this case at all. Then there is the case of impairment of the goods, which have got into a state of decay which makes them dangerous to health, although they were thoroughly well put up. If you bought them originally with all due precautions, and then you sell them to the public, I apprehend you are not criminally liable unless there be some special law to make you so. You are liable by a penalty if you do not put your name on, but you are not liable for the bad quality of goods if you do.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The clause does not say that a party shall be liable for the inferiority of the article. The object of having the name on is to aid in getting at the party.

Mr. DAVIES. Putting on the name of the man who sells does not make him in any sense liable whether the article turns out good or bad. John Smith keeping a grocery in Ottawa, sells goods brought from the Maritime Provinces. The goods bear the name in ink "John Smith, Ottawa." He sells those goods, and he relieves himself from any penalty under this Act. The object, I think, the Minister may have had in view was to prevent a man from putting the wrong name on. If that is so, you have a law already upon the Statute Book which makes it a misdemeanor for a man to use another man's trade mark.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This Act certainly does not say that the penalty is for the goods being bad, but it says the party's name must be on the article. The general law of the land provides that parties selling goods prejudicial to health, or are fraudulently put up, are liable to be indicted at common law. But this is merely for the purpose of identifying the party, and then he would be made liable under the general criminal law.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman surely does not contend that a man who sells goods in a can hermetically sealed, and he has no means of ascertaining whether the contents are pure or impure, is liable to criminal prosecution because the goods afterwards turned out to be impure. There must be knowledge, or the means of knowledge, before you can prosecute him successfully.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course; and this gives us the means of identifying him.

Mr. McLELAN. If John Smith had put up a can of peas, for instance, the color of which was gone, and if he put in deleterious substances to restore the color to the peas, and put his name upon the can, you would have a means of prosecuting him for the adulteration of food.

We have not heard why that portion Mr. FAIRBANK. of the proposed legislation which would really be a protection to the consumer has been abandoned, namely, the date. It is well known that the quality of canned goods depends very much upon the date at which they are put up. The date would be a positive protection against fraud to the consumer. Suppose you buy a can of goods which turned out to be bad, and you seek a remedy against the person selling them, the person would say: Those goods were good when I put them up; if they are bad now, it is not my fault. There would be no means of reaching him because the can lacked the date.

of Inland Revenue introducing this measure to the House. The functions of that Department relate to the excise law. We had the distilleries and breweries interfered with and regulated to a certain extent in order that the Government Mr. BLAKE.

of the revenue law, and not for the purpose of interfering The interference with or regulation of with the trade. trade necessarily arose from the necessity of the Government in dealing with the subject of revenue. This interference which in those two branches of business arose not because the Government had any right to interfere with the industrial pursuits but solely because it was a necessary interference in order to protect the revenue against fraud. This interference which in those cases was necessary has been extended to almost every industry, and the same rules which the necessities of the revenue imposed on the Government in regard to distillers and brewers have been applied to almost every other business. The First Minister told us that one of the principal grounds of this action was that it was necessary as part of the criminal law and in order to be able to identify criminals, so that if poisonous goods were purchased the party from whom they were purchased might be known. This law goes further than merely taking precautions against crime. We learn from the British North American Act that Local Legislatures have power to impose such penalties as may be necessary for the proper enforcement of their own laws, and we are told by the Privy Council in an important judgment that we are to look at the principal matter of the Act in or ler to determine the question of jurisdiction, because if the principal matter falls under the rule of Local Legislatures the punishment necessary to enforce the laws belongs to the Local Legislatures and must be enacted by them. We look at the nature of the Act to see whether jurisdiction belongs to this Parliament or not. The First Minister talks about parties marking goods. A man may mark his goods in a particular way, and he gets a property in the trade mark. Is that obtained from legislation here or legislation in the Provinces? The very same rule which would give him a property in a mark put on goods also gives to the Legislature where regulations similar to what we propose here to adopt should have originated if they are to exist at all. We might have the same regulations all. We might have the same regulations with respect to the products on a farm. imposed Take a farmer engaged extensively in raising cattle, he might go into manufacturing canned beef upon his estate. What right would this Parliament have to interfere with the manner in which he puts up his goods for market, any more than with the manner in which he may carry his grain or fruit to market? Anything of that kind relating to the products of the farm or factory are matters relating to his property and civil rights, and are determined and regulated by the Province to which he belongs. It is a regulation made as in incident to property, and it applies just as much to a case of property that might be transferred from father to son and disposed of by gift as to property disposed of by contract. We have no right to interfere with one more than the other. The law of contract is regulated by the laws of the Province where the contract was made or where the goods were manufactured and sold; and when the goods are transported into another portion of the Dominion or to a foreign country we make regulations in regard to them; but in regard to the production and sale by one party to another, that is a civil right under the control of the Legislatures. The Legislatures in some of the Provinces have recently adopted regulations to secure the manufacture of a better article of butter, just as a few years ago they adopted similar measures to secure a better article of cheese. The regulations we propose to enact are regulations of a similar Mr. MILLS. This Bill is a good illustration of a Departsort. We are interfering with the functions of the Local ment in search of employment. We have the Department Legislature in this particular. The First Minister has said that if an article is poisonous the party may be prosecuted under the general law, and it is important he should be identified. But he has committed a crime, and the principal act falls clearly within the domain of the criminal law. might protect itself against frauds on the revenue. Those That is not the case in regard to this subject under consideregulations were all subordinate to the proper enforcement eration. The manner in which a man may can the product of his farm or fisheries is an innocent act in itself. Any regulation is for the purpose of enhancing the value of the property and promoting the well-being of the country, and is not in itself criminal and cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of this Parliament by providing that unless the goods are put up in a particular way the act shall be treated as an offence. The rule laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which I have cited, is perfectly clear and is a common sense one. You cannot exercise your jurisdiction and exercise a criminal jurisdiction as an incident to the power that belongs to a Local Legislature. It is for that Legislature to enforce its own regulations and to impose the necessary penalties to secure the observance of its own law. This Bill is altogether beyond our jurisdiction.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not know so much as to the power of this Legislature to deal with the question, as does the hon. member for Bothwell; but this Bill has very little power in it. It is a Bill with a great many provisions, supposed to remedy an evil, that persons sell goods which have been kept so long a time that the acid has acted on the tin, and thereby the health of the persons consuming the goods has been endangered. We would have been glad, when the Minister was moving in that direction, if he did not interfere with the trade too much, if he could have found a remedy, but I suppose from the changes in the Bill he has found it impracticable, or at least he hesitated about giving it effect at that time. I would not like to say anything offensive, but it does look to me like a farce to put this law on the Statute Book, because it accomplishes nothing. The goods cannot be traced, as the packer might have an irresponsible agent whose name he might put on the goods if they were inferior in quality. This man might cease to be employed by the packing company before anything could be done in the way of enforcing the law. There is no necessity for having a law requiring a man to put his name on the goods. The trade will regulate that, as all manufacturers will be anxious to get a good rame for their own goods, and there would be no use of a retailer dealing in goods except of brands with which the public were conversant. I think that especially if there is any difficulty about our interfering in a sphere which does not belong to us, it is hardly worth while dealing with the matter in this way, seeing that it practically will accomplish nothing.

Mr. McLELAN. We prevent a false date being put upon the goods, which I think is very important. It sometimes happens that a new date is put on old goods.

Mr. DAVIES. In your resolution of last Session you contend that there were two essential things which should be marked on the can, in order that the public might be protected; one was the date when the can was sealed, and the other was the weight. Now, you propose to repeal both, and what do you propose in lieu of them? I would like to know what information the Department has to give the House to justify this change.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 1 would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the date comes up not on this but on a subsequent clause.

Mr. DAVIES. We are now discussing the penalty which should be put on any man selling goods without having the name of the packer or the dealer on the can.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is passed.

Mr. DAVIES. Now, you are going to fix the penalty, and I contend that the offence is not one which justifies the imposition of a penalty, as it secures nothing to the public.

Mr. MULOCK. It seems to me that there is some discrimination against our own people in this measure. The scope of the measure is limited to Canadian manufactured goods, and I understand that the reason assigned was that criminate against our own packers, but we made an amend-318 we could not control the manufacturers of foreign goods. Quite so; but we can affect the goods which are endeavored to be imported into Canada, and why should we allow foreign goods to come in without an endorsement of their character to displace our own goods? In fact, you are not placing the restrictions on them which you now propose to place on our own goods. If it is possible to see that the vendor of manufactured articles in Canada shall be bound to put his own name on the goods, why cannot you require that that shall be done, whether he is selling goods manufactured in Canada or out of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. The Minister perhaps fancies that the foreign manufacturer never puts on a false name, or sells inferior goods, but by experience, he finds that his own countrymen require greater restrictions.

Mr. MULOCK. I cannot admit the soundness of that view. I hope the committee will not impose a penalty on the dealer in Canadian manufactured goods that they do not intend to impose on the dealer in foreign manufactured goods.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon, gentleman has not seen some amendments that were made in the 2nd clause that will require also an amendment in the 5th clause. To meet the views the hon, gentleman has expressed, the 5th clause can be so amended as to bring in all imported goods.

Mr. BLAKE. The 2nd clause has been amended so as to lcave out imported goods. Surely the hon, gentleman does not propose, when he gets to the 5th clause, to reverse the operation and put them in again?

Mr. McLELAN. The 2nd clause has been amended so as to leave out the goods for exportation.

Ma. BLAKE. It is true, the 2nd clause omits Canadian manufactured goods intended for exportation, but it does not operate upon foreign manufactured goods imported into Canada for sale in Canada. It applies to Canadian goods for consumption in Canada. It is only persons sending goods from our country who are exposed to these penalties.

Mr. McLELAN. Having made that amendment in the 2nd clause, it will be necessary in the 5th clause to include all imported goods.

Mr. DAVIES. Had my hon. friend from North York been in at an earlier period, he would have learned that the object of this section is only to put information in the hands of some person to enable him to prosecute the person who has done wrong.

Mr. MULOCK. I am unable to see on what principle the Minister proposes to place restrictions upon the sale of goods manufactured in our own country and not put similar restrictions on goods manufactured abroad. Surely we have more reason to trust our own manufacturers than foreign manufacturers. Under this Bill a penalty is proposed to be put on the vendor of goods manufactured in the Dominion if he does not put his name on the package. What is the reason for this? Is it not that the purchaser shall have some means of tracing back the package of goods to its source? Why have you not the same restrictions in regard to foreign manufactured goods?

Mr. BLAKE. According to the First Minister's explanation, the object is to secure evidence against persons who may have been guilty of an offence against the criminal law, and we could not convict the foreigner who put up goods in Cuba or the United States. It is only Canadians who are exposed to this.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we have to look at the object of the Bill, which is not to punish any person, but rather to secure a good article.

Mr. McLELAN. Certainly it is not the intention to dis-ment in the 2nd clause by inserting the words, "packed in Canada," which rendered an amendment necessary in the 5th clause; but if those words were struck out, I think that would meet the whole case, without amending the 5th clause.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is wiping out an amendment that was solemnly adopted by the committee a little while ago. It is very irregular.

Mr. McLELAN. It reads better.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon, gentleman says it reads better that way. Of course he has the partiality of a parent for its offspring. The hon, gentleman stated that he did not want the clause to be applied to goods that were manufactured abroad, but only to goods manufactured in Canada. I do not know whether he has truly mastered the clause or not.

Mr. McLELAN. I stated that it was not intended to apply to goods manufactured for exportation, but to apply to almost any goods sold for home consumption.

Mr. BLAKE. I pointed out, when the hon member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) referred to the 5th section, that it was inapplicable to the object. The hon gentleman said the intention was it should not extend to goods packed abroad. Now he proposes to make the Bill apply to goods packed abroad. He had better take the measure into further consideration, and finally decide upon the policy of the Government. Only last year the Government introduced a Bill which they now propose to repeal, with reference to names. It does not appear there is any decided intention on the part of the Government.

Mr. McLELAN. I stated it would not apply to foreign goods not put up in Canada, but to all goods put up in Canada, although not imported, this Act should apply.

On section 3,

Mr. VAIL. It is a great mistake to pass this clause, in view of the one passed last year. What people wanted to guard against is being cheated as to weight. The clause last year was much more satisfactory.

Mr. STAIRS. The objection against the clause last year is that it was found impossible to carry it out. It is impossible to pack canned goods hermetically in such a way that the weight can be absolutely decided. The present clause is very much more in accordance with English practice, and meets the difficulties of the case.

Mr. VAIL. The hon gentleman will see that to a very large extent the matter will settle itself. Three per cent. is allowed which is quite enough to cover evaporation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the weight is not marked on the cans, the party will buy without regard to the weight.

Mr. VAIL. The goods are sold in packages supposed to contain 1 lb., and the purchaser never thinks of asking that it may be weighed, he may lose a couple of ounces on each package. The parties have guaranteed that the full weight is in each package, and the public may be deceived in that way.

Mr. STAIRS. There cannot be any fraud in regard to the weight, because no weight need be put on. There is another point. It is understood that this does not apply to goods for export, but it will be impossible for large packers to distinguish between the goods they pack for export and those they pack for home consumption, especially in the case of lobsters in the busy season. If the law makes them strict enough to comply with the English law on the subject, that should be sufficient for us.

Mr. McLelan.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the hon, gentleman mean to say that this is a transcript of the English law?

Mr. STAIRS. It contains about the same provision.

Mr. DAVIES. I think there is a difference. Last year we provided that every hermetically sealed can should have the weight marked upon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That was deliberately abandoned.

Mr. DAVIES. That is what I complain of. The member for Halifax says it is because it is impossible to have the weight put upon it. I thought at the time it was an injudicious clause, which would operate injuriously upon lobster packers especially. Now you come in with a new clause which is very little less objectionable. You do not give any guarantee to the purchaser that, when he purchases a pound package of goods, he is going to get a pound, and you do not punish the man who has a package marked a pound which does not contain a pound. A grocer in Ottawa may sell a package of canned goods in which there is only half a pound of fruit or meat, and he is not liable, because the clause only says that the person who places it in the package is liable, so the object is not attained at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The party who placed the label on can be prosecuted.

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, if he is the packer, and places the wrong label upon the package.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The person who places the label on it is liable to be prosecuted if he states a false weight. Then the person who sells it is liable, if he sells a package as being of a certain weight which is not of that weight, and the purchaser can recover from him the difference in the value.

Mr. DAVIES. Is there anything in the Act which indicates that he can do that? The Act does not assist him, if half a pound is sold to him when it should be a pound.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But the crico mali can be punished.

Mr. DAVIES. If he can be found.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, if he cannot be found or dies or has nothing, it is different, but this section punishes anyone who puts a false weight on the can.

Mr. DAVIES. You are punishing the wrong man. It should be the man who sells half a pound for a pound, knowing that it is not. It may be some third party who puts on the label. The original packer may have sold the goods to a broker.

On section 4,

Mr. FAIRBANK. The question has not yet been answered why we are abandoning that particular feature of the Bill in which the purchaser was most interested. The value of these goods depends more upon their age than upon anything else, and many persons have been injured and have even lost their lives by using goods which have been kept too long. Why was this abandoned?

Mr. McLELAN. After consultation with the trade, with those who sell and with those who pack, we considered that this was as far as it was desirable to go. False dates are often put upon packages, and sometimes false weights. This was an advance which we thought was sufficient to take at the present time, to prevent false weights or dates being put upon the packages. It is not proposed to go beyond that now.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I cannot understand how a false date can be placed upon a can. The date is first stamped into the can, and no date can be put on again, and surely the manufacturer will not date his packages years ahead.

Mr. DAVIES. The Minister sees that this section is open to the same objection I raised to the other. You do not propose to make a man who knowingly sells a package containing a false date, liable at all, but you propose to let him go scott free. The packer need not put the date on; some intermediate person may put on the date, and he would be the person liable. But the seller who knowingly sells an article with a false date on it, you propose to let off scott free, and some imaginary man is to be prosecuted.

Mr. McLELAN. The only case in which a false date is likely to be put on is where the manufacturer has a large stock of goods unsold that he has had on hand for years, and he puts on fresh labels with false dates; or the retail dealer who has carried a large stock of canned goods over from year to year, who finds them a little out of date, and he puts on a fresh date. These parties would be liable in a case of this kind.

Mr. DAVIES. It does not throw the onus upon the retail dealer, then, of making any enquiries about the date at all. He may sell with impunity goods which he knows to bear false dates.

Mr. VAIL. An importer can import goods from the United States under this Bill upon which a false date has been put and can sell them in this country, and the only recourse you would have would be to go to the foreign merchant. The seller is not liable at all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has the Minister considered whether it would be safe to go so far as to prohibit putting a new label on a package? You can about as effectually deceive the public by putting on a new label as by any other means, as the new label might cover the old one altogether.

Mr. BLAKE. Suppose a fine, large, fresh label was put on in inviting colors, with the words "fresh packed."

Mr. McLELAN. If that falsely represents the date he can be punished. Suppose a man has goods packed five years ago and he puts on a new label to-day, saying they were fresh packed; that would be false representation.

On section 5,

Mr. BLAKE. Why is it proposed to give the Governor in Council some authority in this matter?

Mr. McLELAN. It is difficult to find what line of goods may be packed in Canada three months hence, or years hence. There may be a description of goods that are not now packed in Canada, but three months hence somebody may start a new industry in those goods.

Mr. BLAKE. If the intention is that the Act shall only apply to goods of those descriptions which are not put up in Canada at the present time, it is not necessary to give the Governor in Council any authority at all. All you have got to say is: The foregoing provisions of this Act shall not apply to foreign goods of a description not put up in Canada. The moment goods of that description are put up in Canada, then it applies to foreign goods.

Mr. McLELAN. It is better to have them defined—what particular line of goods this Act shall apply to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Suppose a particular description of goods has not yet been packed in can at all, and a person commences to engage in the industry of canning those goods; this is for the purpose of informing the public that this description of goods is now being packed in can, that this business has become a Canadian industry.

Mr. BLAKE. The power of the Governor in Council is to except out of the operation of the Act some goods which are not put up in can, but if any are put up in can they are to have no control at all. If the hon, gentleman wants to exercise still further grand-motherly control over the operations of trade, he will have to extend the powers of the Governor in Council still farther than he proposes to do here.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I hope this clause will be dropped altogether, for the reason that there is only one obligation imposed upon persons, either for putting up canned goods or dealing with them, and that is the obligation to put the name of the maker, or the packer, or the dealer, upon the goods. If they put anything on the cans that turns out to be incorrect, the parties should all be subject to a penalty. That being the case I cannot quite understand why foreign goods, even though not put up in Canada, should not be subject to the same obligation. If a dealer chooses to bring in foreign goods and take the responsibility of selling them and places his name on the goods, then he fulfills the obligation required under section 2. As to the placing of the weight or any other mark on the packages it does not appear that there should be any exemption given to foreign goods. The clause seems to be unnecessary.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). To say that the provision shall not apply to foreign goods, even though not put up in Canada, in certainly a dangerous provision. Why should not a provision with respect to placing the date on the package not apply to goods put up in the United States.

Mr. McLELAN. I beg to move that the second clause be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 6,

Mr. BLAKE. Why is the section which was deemed so important last Session now proposed to be struck out?

Mr. McLELAN. It has been found in practice that great inconvenience arises on account of packers being compelled to carry out its provisions. The larger proportion of the canned goods of Canada are exported, It is therefore proposed to repeal the section in question.

Mr. BLAKE. As the Act only came into operation on 1st June, there cannot have been much practical experience. I know there was a little interview between the head or deputy head and the packers, and it was intimated that the officers of the Department would wink at the default of the packers in not placing the weight on packages. This change is made, no doubt, on the remonstrance of the trade. What is important is that in legislation of this kind the Government should obtain the views of men of practical experience before they propose legislation. It is not to be expected that the Minister of Inland Revenue or the Acting Minister, unless he happens to be a merchant or engaged in that particular line, should know about such matters, and we are all aware of the earnest desire of permanent heads to increase the importance of their office and find more kingdoms to conquer. Time and again we have proposals made to the House, which are at the time defended as being in the public interest, and the Bill is amended or repealed next Session.

Mr. McLELAN. Last Session a clause was appended to the Weights and Measures Act to enforce the placing of the weight on cans. It was not in the original Bill as it came from the Department, but was the suggestion of an hon. member which met with the acceptance of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon, gentleman may be right; but my impression was that the idea originated with the Government and was a Government proposal. At all events it was a suggestion adopted by the Government. Mr. McLELAN. It was not the suggestion of the Government, but it was the opinion of the House, and the Government are always ready to adopt what appears to be the views of a majority of the House.

Mr. DAVIES. My recollection is directly opposed to the statement of the Minister. I spoke very strongly against the clause. It has been declared that it is not necessary to put the weight or date on the cans, but there must be a name, and it may not be the name of the original packer, but of any vendor who chooses to sell the goods. Very well. In another section he provides that it is not necessary to put the date or the weight on, but if anybody does put a date or a weight on the label, he shall be liable if he puts a wrong one. The man who sells a package without a date or weight, and knowingly does so, goes scot free; he wilfully deceives the persons who purchase from him; and then you put on penalties and you have not provided any mode of recovery.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Interpretation Act provides for that.

Mr. DAVIES. You can recover by a very expensive mode. You are driven to a qui tam action, a civil action in the name of the Queen, in the Province in which the offence was committed, and there is no summary procedure as there is in most penalties of this kind. I suggest, in view of these considerations, whether it is worth while to bother with the Bill at all.

Mr. BLAKE. I find by page 1,242 of Hansard of last year that in place of the clause struck out, the Minister of Inland Revenue accepted an amendment moved by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), though I was mistaken in saying that he himself moved it. The Minister of Inland Revenue said:

"Since the introduction of this Bill, I have received several communications complaining of frauds in connection with the sale of canned fruit and vegetables, owing to cans professing to contain 3 lbs., actually containing only perhaps 2 or 2½ lbs., and cans professing to contain 2 lbs. containing perhaps only 1½ lbs.; and it has been suggested, in order to meet such cases, that all hermetically sealed packages should contain as much as they profess, for the security of the public. I have no objection to accepting this amendment as clause 10 instead of the one which has been struck out."

I asked the hon. gentleman whether the complaints to which he referred were made with reference to home manufactured goods or to imported goods? He said:

- $^{\prime\prime}$  Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the complaints are more on account of imported goods than the home manufactured.
- $^{\prime\prime}$  Mr. BLAKE. Is it the home manufacturers who are making the complaints?
- "Mr. COSTIGAN. No; the complaints come from persons who are not interested in the manufacture of these goods at all. If the clause should affect goods for exportation, the wording of it might be changed.

Then, I suggested that he had better not include in the operation of the clause, goods for exportation without careful consideration. Then the Minister of Inland Revenue proposed to amend the clause by adding the words "not to affect such goods for exportation." Then after some conversation the First Minister said:

"I should be sorry to see any alterations in this clause which would render it inapplicable to the export trade. The alteration proposed is simply this, that we should insist on full and correct measure being given to our own people, but be free, if so inclined, to injure the foreign purchaser. The effect of such a course is evident from the English trade with China where English goods have been almost driven out of the market in consequence of the untrue, to use the least offensive word, marks on goods to China."

The Minister of Inland Revenue said:

"I do not think there will be much difficulty in carrying this out. It will be easy to ascertain the weight of the packages which are made of certain regular sizes, and the dealers in foreign markets will have more confidence in trading with this country when they know to a certainty they will receive the full measure as stamped on the packages.'

Mr. Blake.

Then Mr. Weldon suggested that the matter had better stand over, in order to have the Bill re-printed as it was a very important matter to the canning industry in the Lower Provinces. That was not accepted and the amendment came on. Then, on the order for the third reading, the Minister of Inland Revenue moved the discharge of the order, and that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole, and proceeded to provide that the addition to the clause which was made in committee, should not go into force until the first of January. He said:

"I am informed by telegraph that several manufacturing firms have on hand a supply of cans for the year's operation, and it might be inconvenient to put this clause into operation at once. Another question has arisen with regard to this interpretation of the labelling or marking and I think the word "permanently" should be struck out so that manufacturers can either stamp the cans or label them."

The word "permanently" was accordingly struck out So you see the amount of consideration and information which the Government obtained with reference to the clause which they now propose to repeal. Although I was mistaken in saying that the Minister of Inland Revenue proposed the amendment, it is quite clear that there was some talk of an arrangement-I do not say an improper oneunder which consultation might be had with some of his supporters, and one of his supporters moved the clause and he agreed to accept it, and the Government therefore, took the responsibility. What I say is, that it is quite impossible to expect a House like this to deal with the subject intelligently, unless there is an opportunity of communicating with the trade, and it is the duty of the Government, before accepting the responsibility for an amendment of this kind, to have such communication, in order that we may be fairly assured that we are going in the right direction. It is quite clear that that precaution has not been taken.

Mr. STAIRS. I think that possibly the amendment was accepted without due consideration, and it was found afterwards impossible to carry it out. For the reasons I have already explained, in this case it would be much better to adopt the English practice. One of the difficulties in applying it to goods for export was the very strong penalties imposed in England, which rendered it impossible for our lobster packers and others to send their goods to England, for if there was the difference of an ounce or the fraction of an ounce, the exporter would be liable to get into trouble. I am very glad indeed that the Government have seen fit to amend this provision. I feel sure that the matter will settle itself so that the public will know that they are buying by the can, and no harm can be done in this way.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest that the fourth section be amended before the third reading. I do not think that any person who puts a false date on should be liable unless he also offers the package for sale. A case of that kind might happen by accident, but if not offered for sale I do not think there should be a penalty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It should not happen.

Mr. MULOCK. It is a possibility.

Mr. MILLS. How are the penalties to be collected?

Mr. DAVIES. If the penalties are worth imposing at all, they are worth collecting. Does the Minister intend to say that if a man wants to sue for $2 he will have to sue by qui tam action in one of the Superior Courts, and that one dollar shall go to the Consolidated Revenue and the other to the informer? Where are the costs to come from?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not think there will be much danger of any penalties accruing through this section, because you will notice by the first section that this Act will only apply to goods which are hermetically sealed. It is not the can that is to be hermetically sealed, but the goods that are put into the can.

Bill reported.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD. &c.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 143) respecting the Adulteration of Food, Drugs and Agricultural Fertilisers.

(In the Committee.)

On section 13.

Mr. McLELAN. The question arose whether it should not be made compalsory for the Minister to report the names of the vendors of articles which had been analysed and found to be adulterated. This is done in practice, all the names being published in the annual report of the Minister; and I propose to provide that the names of the vendors shall be printed and laid before Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. Would it not be much more important to have the names of the manufacturers? What we want to know is, who is making bad goods.

Mr. McLELAN. We may add the words "and the manufacturers when known."

Mr. DAVIES. The word vendor would not apply to a person from whom the articles were obtained if they were not sold. Would it not be better to say "the vendor or person from whom the sample is obtained." For instance, the analyst goes to a shop to examine coffee, and gets a sample, but he does not buy it.

Mr. McLELAN. He purchases a sample and divides it into three parts, if that can be done; and if that cannot be done, he purchases three samples.

Mr. BLAKE. The difficulty is that this clause seems to make a distinction between two kinds of acquisition. The 7th clause says that the officer may "procure" samples. The clause seems to consider that that is not a purchase, and if not a purchase not a sale. And if not a sale, there is

Mr. McLELAN. In that case, it would be as well to put in the words the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) suggests, "or the persons from whom obtained."

Bill reported.

REMUNERATION OF PUBLIC ANALYSTS.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider a certain proposed resolution (p. 2497) to provide for the remuneration of analysts to be appointed under the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Adulteration of Food, Drugs and Agricultural Fertilisers.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I entirely object to this mode of providing for charges upon the public Treasury and the remuneration of officers. I maintain it to be the duty of the Government to decide, before they come down to Parliament, what the proper remuneration is to be, and the method of that remuneration. It does not do to tell us, as we are so often told: we cannot make up our mind yet, but we will make it up in the recess, after we have got rid of you. I maintain it to be their duty to ascertain beforehand, to make those enquiries beforehand, which they have got to make some time-because a decision has to be reached on this subject some time or other-and to bring down the results of those enquiries and ask us to assent to them. Parliamentary supervision over the public charge, over the expenses of the Treasury, is, by these means, entirely destroyed. We have no means of judging what the Bill is going to involve; we have no idea of what the charge upon the trade of the country is to be, or of what the charge upon the public revenue is to be. We are told the Governor in Council will see to all that. I say the legislation that is to be brought down to Parliament! they were never uttered by me. I do not understand that ought to be brought down after the Government have made those investigations that were required to be made as regards the money cost which the Bill is to involve, and we ought to know what the estimate cost shall be. But to pass a Bill in this way, with this clause, is to pass it blindfolded as to the expense. Then the salaries ought to be fixed by the Act for other reasons. It is expedient that Parliament should consider whether these salaries are just or not; but we have no statement in this Bill limiting the number of analysts, we have no statement limiting the fees, or any salary that may be paid. We are authorising the Government to do whatever they will in the matter of money. It does seem to me the resolution is objectionable on principle in the last degree, and I do trust the hon. gentleman will do, what in the earlier and better days of this Government, they were accustomed to do, namely, consider what salaries or remuneration it is proper to affix to this office, and let us know, and let us consider and decide whether it is right or not, and take the view of Parliament as to the proposition and insert that in the Bill,

Mr. McLELAN. The principle the hon, gentleman has laid down is, in general terms, a sound one, and it would be wise to fix the salary, in every case, if possible. But in respect to the chief analyst, the House sees that it is possible and quite probable that he may be residing in a place where he can act as local analyst and receive part of his remuneration by fees, and it will only require an additional amount to be paid by the Government to make up a reasonable salary for him. It is proposed to provide, under this resolution, that Parliament shall be consulted from year to year, and informed of the amount of that salary. It is possible that the chief analyst may be located where his business will grow upon him, from year to year, to such an extent that he will not be able to act as local analyst, and will require to receive the whole of his salary from the Government; so the House will see there is a difficulty in fixing the amount and putting it in the Bill. What we propose to do is, if possible, to employ the chief analyst as a local analyst, and dispense with the appointment of local analysts, and in that case the chief analyst will receive fees, apart from his salary, and Government will only require to supplement those fees by a sum sufficient to make altogether a reasonable salary.

Mr. BLAKE. The defence is illusory. If it is possible that the chief analyst may be appointed local analyst, it is easy to fix the salary in the two cases, to say that the chief analyst, if he be not a local analyst, is to receive his whole remuneration from the Government, and that it shall be so much, but in case he is also to receive the appointment of local analyst, his salary shall be so much less, and then we will know. We have been told that the salary is to be paid out of a vote by Parliament; but what is the use of discussing the question of salary after an Order in Council has been passed fixing the salary? It is well known that the House always pays it after the Government have fixed the amount. What we want is to know the sum beforehand, and that Parliament shall have an opportunity of fixing it at the proper time.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLAKE. I find in the revised edition of the Hansard, of the 8th inst., I am made to say that the Highlanders of 150 years ago stole cattle. The words are: "They stole cattle." I wish to say that I never used those words at all; that no such reference appears in the original Hansard; that those words have been interpolated, although the rules of the House upon the revision of the Debates permit members to interject observations of other hon. members when they do not appear in the original report. It seems rather an unreasonable thing that words can be put into the mouth of an hoor member which he never spoke. I shall ask the members of the committee on Debates to see that those words are expunged from the sheet, which, I faucy, must be still in type, or whether it is in type or not, because I do not desire that such an interjection should appear for all time to come in the official Debates without any authority from me or from the reporters. I did make an interjection on that occasion. What I said was this: The hon. member has been speaking of the progress of development, and when the hon. gentleman in part of his speech announced the progress of his own ancestors 150 years ago, I said progressive development. Those words were the words I used. It was a compliment to the hon. gentleman, not a reflection on his ancestors—of whom the worst thing I know is that they were responsible for begetting the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOWELL. I think the hon, gentleman is quite correct in saying that he did not make use of the expression to which he has referred. I was listening very attentively to the debate, and can say that expression was made use of. I do not think the hon, gentleman used it.

Mr. BLAKE. I said, progressive development.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not denying what the hon, gentleman has just said. The expression was used from the other side by some hon member; but by whom I am not prepared to say.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot tell whether it was used or not; I did not use it.

Mr. BOWELL. It was used by the other side.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the absence of the hon, gentleman referred to, I must say that I do not think the course pursued by the hon, gentleman who has just given this explanation is a very fair one, the hon, member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) not being in his place. His concluding remarks certainly are very insulting.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I say the hon. gentleman's remarks are very insulting. They are not fair to the hon. gentleman who is absent. I think if that hon. gentleman were present, perhaps the hon. gentleman would not be so ready to utter those expressions. To say the least, it is in very bad taste, in the absence of the hon gentleman (Mr. Macmaster), to use such a remark as that the worst thing I know of the hon. gentleman's ancestors is their begetting him.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not wish to lose a moment in making this explanation, and I see that the press of hon. gentlemen opposite have already alluded to this statement, this alleged statement made by me. I did not wish to lose a moment, because I did not wish it to appear in the permanent edition of the Debates. I do not think the statement I made just now—a jocose observation—is an insult at all, or any reflection. I said that was the worst thing I knew of the hon. gentleman's ancestors, of whom I had been speaking as a remarkable instance of the progress of development. I was pointing out how his ancestors had developed from the time when they stole cattle, and I said the worst thing I knew about them was their begetting him. That is not an insult to him or to them.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has a very extraordinary way of being jocose—he has an elephantine way of displaying his jocularity. I must repeat that I think it was very improper for the hon. gentleman to make such observations in the absence of the hon, member.

Mr. BLAKE.

REMUNERATION OF PUBLIC ANALYSTS.

House again resolved itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution respecting remuneration of Analysts.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. At six o'clock I was pointing out that the general rule adopted was one which the hon, gentleman did not favor. The hon, gentleman said it was difficult to fix the salary on this occasion, because the analyst might be in such a position as to receive fees. I have pointed out that the statement was at variance with the custom and wholesome practice. I also desire to make the observation that it is no satisfaction to us to know that the money is afterwards to be voted by Parliament, because if we give authority to the Governor in Council to fix the salary, and an officer is appointed under this authority, we know that the money will be voted. The duty of Parliament is to know beforehand what the cost to the country will be, and therefore I press the necessity of maintaining and adhering to the wholesome and customary rule of fixing the salaries in the clause.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How many analysts are to be appointed under this Act?

Mr. McLELAN. Eight.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the hon, gentleman be kind enough to give us an estimate of the number of officers created by the Government during the recent Session?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood the other night that the Minister stated that the chief analyst had been appointed. If that is the case, I would ask his name and his salary.

Mr. McLELAN. He will get $2,000 from the Department of Inland Revenue, and he will be paid $800 for certain services in connection with the Department of Customs in analysing articles imported.

Mr. BLAKE. Is he to be paid extra for that?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, $800; the $2,000 to be made up by fees or salary.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who is to act as local analyst in the city in which the chief analyst lives?

Mr. McLELAN. He may himself.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has not that been determined upon?

Mr. McLELAN. No; and that is the reason the salary is not fixed, because he may not be appointed as local analyst, and he may receive part of his salary from local fees, the balance to be provided by the Department coming down to the House and asking for a vote.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Supposing there is an appeal taken from his decision as local analyst to the chief analyst, how will the hon. gentleman manage in that case?

Mr. McLELAN. I suppose he will not act in that case.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is there any objection to mentioning his name?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Sugden Evans is the gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. Can there be any difficulty in stating the salary in the Bill. Seeing that the whole arrangement is made, what difficulty can there be in drawing a clause which will cover the salary and how it is to be paid?

Mr. McLELAN. The trouble is, that the local fees may vary from time to time, so that we could not put any fixed supplementary amount in the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The remuneration is to be $2,800, and of that the country is to pay certainly $800, through the Customs Department, and also the difference between $2,000 and the amount he may receive from fees from year to year. Why not draw a clause to that effect, and then Parliament could be asked to agree to that proposition. At present, Parliament is asked to assent to the proposition that the Governor in Council may do what they please. I do not think the hon, gentleman has given any reason for departing from the wholesome and customary rule.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can the hon. gentleman state where the analysts are to be stationed?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot. The third clause provides that districts may be laid out, with such limits as may be assigned to them by the Governor in Council. These districts may vary.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How many altogether?

Mr. McLELAN. Eight in all.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What will be the probable cost of analysis in those eight districts?

Mr. McLELAN. The local analysts are to be paid by fees.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Collected from the people?

Mr. McLELAN. They are to be paid by fees in proportion to the amount of work they perform, and the salary will be paid from a sum provided for that purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. They are to be paid by the public, then.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The money clause of the Bill says they are to be paid partly by salary and partly by fees, and I had supposed that was the intention of the Government. I was about to ask if the Government had arrived at the stated sum they were to be paid.

Mr. McLELAN. They are to be paid by fees, and these may be supplemented by a charge. It is provided that we can make up their salary to a reasonable amount according to the amount of fees they collect.

Mr. MiLLS. Is there any maximum sum fixed as the salary of the other analysts?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. MILLS. There is no particular sum yet determined upon?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. MILLS. Have the Government made enquiries as to the fees to be charged, and for what purposes they are to be charged? I suppose they have some idea of the materials that will require analysis. The whole subject has no doubt been enquired into by the Department and information obtained before this subject was introduced at all; and I think the committee are entitled to the information on which the Government are proceeding.

Mr. McLELAN. This system has been in operation for a number of years, under fees fixed by Order in Council.

Mr. MILLS. What sum have the Government heretofore received from fees?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not prepared at present to state the amount of fees.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended to depart from the scale and mode of remuneration of the analysts at present?

Mr. McLELAN. There is no intention to make a change. Of course, the matter is open to change by Order in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon, gentleman said, as I understood, that the existing analysts were paid fees, partly from the Government and partly from individuals. It is now proposed to pay them partly by salary from the Government and partly by fees from individuals. It is important that we should know what that salary is to be, because there are seven of them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to know what the probable cost of this Bill is going to be. I think we have a right to know that before it passes. This Session, a great many new offices have been created, involving a very heavy outlay on the people.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon gentleman is speaking as if we were adopting a new system entirely. The only change is the appointment of the chief analyst. There was provision in the old Bill for the appointment of a chief analyst by Order in Council, and under that a chief analyst was appointed six or eight months ago, and he works for the Department of Customs as well as for the Department of Inland Revenue. For the present, he is at Ottawa. His salary has been paid during that time, and this clause provides for its payment. There is really no new office created, and no increase involved by the Bill caused by the Bill.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am aware that this is not a new Bill; but I am asking the probable cost of this one. We have created a great many new offices, and the country wants to know what they are going to cost, how the money is to be expended and what is the necessity of the increased expenditure?

Mr. McLELAN. We are not asking any increased expenditure. The chief analyst now receives a salary of $2,800, of which $2.000 is chargeable to the Inland Revenue Department and $800 to the Department of Customs. This is not a provision for a new expenditure; it is only a repetition of a clause in the old Act.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the hon. Minister say what objection there is to stating the salary in this Bill, since it has been distinctly arranged? Why not follow the old custom, whenever offices are created in the Civil Service?

Mr. McLELAN. This is an office requiring a great deal of technical skill and knowledge, and it was under exceptional circumstances that this gentleman was obtained for the sum stated.

Mr. MILLS. Where is he from?

Mr. McLELAN. He is from Montreal. It may be, in the demand for gentlemen of his exceptional qualifications, that $2,800 may not be sufficient to retain him; or he may be, by accident or other circumstances, removed, and it may not be possible by any sum we may fix now to obtain a man with the necessary qualifications to discharge the delicate duties of that position. There has been so little experience had in the matter that it is better to leave the fixing of the salary to the Governor in Council.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the reason assigned by the Minister is a wholly unsound one, and I am satisfied that a fuller enquiry on his part will convince him that there is no dearth whatever of persons qualified to fill this office. What are the qualifications required in a public analyst? A knowledge of theoretical and practical chemistry, principally organic chemistry; and it is idle to say that there is any probability of there being any dearth of material of that kind. In England there are more persons qualified to do this class of work than there are positions for them; Germany is turning out far more chemists than can be utilised; and in our own Dominion there are institutions turning out excellent men every day. I know the qualifications of the public analyst of the Province of Ontario, and the duties he performs are just such as are proposed to be assigned to the chief analyst here; and I know very well that when he applied for that office, he only obtained it after the keenest competition among a great many very qualified men; and it is idle to tell us there is any dearth of men fit to fill the office. I say that the salary proposed to be given to this officer is far in excess of the salary paid to-day, and which has been for years paid by the Province of Ontario. I do not know what duties you are going to assign to this gentleman in connection with the Department of Inland Revenue, but I suppose they will be in some proportion to the salary. If I heard aright, the hon, the Minister says the salary will be $2,800 a year, $800 of which are to be chargeable against the Customs Department and the other $2,000 are to be charged in respect of his duties as public analyist. Then, I suppose that as public analyst his duties will represent about two-thirds of all his duties, if they are to be in proportion to the salary attached to that branch of his services. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the duties assignable to the public analyst for the Province of Ontario are not sufficient to occupy one-tenth of his time; in fact, so little of his time is required as public analyst that he discharges, besides, very high duties in connection with the public service, as professor in a school. I think that the Minister has not given that full attention to this question it is entitled to receive. There is no necessity, in my opinion, for creating an office to be filled solely by an entitled to receive. analyst, nor can there be any justification for the statement made by the Minister that he is obliged to give a special salary in this particular case, on the ground that the number of persons qualified to fill the position is limited.

Mr. MILLS. I think that the House is entitled to more information than the Minister is disposed to give. What is now proposed shows the impropriety of proceeding in this way. What the Minister proposes to do is, that the House shall abandon its duty and hand over to the Government, for the time being, the regulation of the amount of the charge to be imposed on the public revenue. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I read the resolution: "That the Governor in Council may cause such remuneration as he deems proper to be paid to the analysts, and such remuneration, whether by fees or salary, or partly in one way or partly in another, may be paid to such analysts out of such sums voted for Parliament for the purposes of the Act." Now, the hon. gentleman may see that whether the Government will pay these parties, other than the chief analyst, more than the the amount they receive for fees, is entirely left to the Government itself. What the Government should do is give to the House the information it has, and make a proposition to the House as to what amount it thinks reasonable to pay. Then it will be for the House to determine whether it will grant the amount the Government asks or not. It does not matter whether the payment be by fees or in some other way; the charge is a charge upon the people, and it will be possible for the Government to make these fees a part of the public revenues and to fix the amount of salary, if they think proper. What the Government should do is to inform the House as to the amount already paid, the amount that is derived from these fees, and give some information as to the duties these men will have to discharge, how much of their time their duties will occupy, and how much they are likely to receive for the year. The hon. gentleman has told us, so far as the chief analyst is concerned, that he is to receive a fixed sum of $2,800 per year. If he does not receive this sum by fees, then the deficiency, whatever it may be, must be made up out of the ordinary revenue. Now, I say that is not sufficient. The Ministers should inform this House generally with regard to the proposition they submit to Parliament; they should make themselves conversant with the measure they propose to ask Parliament to sanction. This has not been done. If it has been done, the hon. gentleman has not been frank with the committee in not imparting to it the information he possesses; and if he has not the necessary information, he Mr. Mulock.

should tell us what he expects to derive from these fees, the amount of salary he expects those parties will receive for the year. If he does not do that, he has no right to ask us for this money, and the committee will be derelict in its duty if it should give the power this Government asks us to place at its disposal.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What are the qualifications of the chief analyst? Who has been appointed? Is he a druggist and chemist?

Mr. BOWELL. He is a druggist, a chemist and a doctor.

Mr. McLELAN. It is well known to all the public, except the hon. gentleman, that he is a leading chemist, and well fitted for the situation. He has been secured at this salary. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says I have not informed the House of the position of affairs. I think I have stated clearly and frankly it is proposed to pay this gentleman $2,800, and I further stated that, year by year, the Government will have to come to Parliament for the money to pay his salary, and all the expenses in connection with the office. It will then be in the power of Parliament to demand the fullest explanations of every dollar that may be asked for.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like the hon. member to explain the qualifications this gentleman possesses for the office.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman, from his profession, ought to know what are the requisite qualifications the public analyst at the head of the service requires.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I quite well understand that; but what I want to know is, what are the qualifications possessed by this gentleman? What degree does he hold? Is he merely a practical druggist? What is he? I am asking something quite proper. I have heard he is a druggist, but I have heard of other druggists, whose names are much more familiar than his, not only in Montreal, but in Ontario. I am asking a proper question, and I think the Minister should give a proper answer.

Mr. McLELAN. He is a doctor of medicine, and has given special study to the science of chemistry, and is recognised as an authority.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Have the other analysts any fees to collect from their office? Is there a salary to be fixed for them? I am not asking this in a factious or captious spirit at all. I want to find out, because I think the time has arrived when we should put a stop to the multiplication of offices.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not a multiplication of offices. The practice that has obtained in the past is this, speaking particularly of the Customs Department: When it is necessary to ascertain the components parts of an article imported, which the officers at the different ports are not able to decide, for instance, quack medicines and other articles, which are composed of different ingredients—some are 50 per cent. ad valorem, others are $1.90 per gallon-we send them to an analyst, and, after he reports, the duty is fixed in accordance with the report he makes. He then renders his account for the work done for the Department, and we pay it. As far as Mr. Evans is concerned, during the eight months he has been at headquarters we have saved more than the amount we formerly paid at the different ports of the Dominion. In Montreal in particular, we were constantly referring to Mr. Evans or to Mr. Edwards, or to some other eminent chemist in that city, to report on these matters. In Toronto, and particularly in Halifax, and in all the large ports in the Dominion, it was continually necessary to refer questions in dispute between the importers and the officers of the should not ask us to proceed until he has obtained it; he Department, to eminent chemists, in order to ascertain the correct duty at which these articles should be entered. After the Bill was passed last Session, giving the Government power to appoint a chief analyst, having his headquarters in Ottawa, it was decided that he should receive $2,000 per annum from the Inland Revenue Department and $300 from the Customs Department. That $300 is taken from the appropriation voted for the board of appraisers and the detective service. Mr. Evans occupied a position at the head of his profession as a chemist and analyst in the city of Montreal, and came with the very highest recommenda-tions to the Government, and the Minister of Inland Revenue selected him as having the best qualifications of any who made application. Whether the salary is too large for a gentleman of that character and his eminent abilities, is for the House to decide. It is very difficult to find a man in whom the Government can place implicit confidence, particularly for the work he has to perform, unless they pay him well for it. His own income as a druggist was such—as my hon. friend says, he was carrying on a large business in Montreal-that he could not be induced to accept the situation here unless he was given the salary which he has obtained; and, judging from the services he has rendered to the Customs Department, I can assure the House that, judging more particularly from a pecuniary standpoint, it has been a saving.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then, if he takes the place of the board of appraisers, I should like to know if their services have been dispensed with?

Mr. BOWELL. I am surprised at the—I will not say the absurd—question the hon, gentleman has asked. I said nothing about his taking the place of the board of appraisers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman does not seem to draw the distinction—perhaps, because he does not know—between the board of appraisers at headquarters, and the appraisers who are appointed at each port in the Dominion. I was speaking of the appraisers in the different ports where entries are made of all the different articles which are brought into this country, and where disputes arise with the importers. I was not speaking of the board of appraisers here, at headquarters.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why did you not say so before?

Mr. BOWELL. I did say so.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No.

Mr. BOWELL. I must apologise to the hon. gentleman for being so stupid. I thought I was sufficiently plain in my statement, and I only regret that I was unable to make the hon. gentleman understand it. The board of appraisers here, I must tell the hon, gentleman, are not chemists. Their knowledge relates more especially to dry goods, and hardware, and groceries, and matters of that kind. If I proposed to add a chemist to the board, the hon. gentleman might complain of the extra expense.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will not object to any expense required for the public service of this country. I cannot understand—

Mr. BOWELL. I believe that.

Mr. LANDERKIN—why so many additional officers have to be created in this present Session, when our expenses are becoming alarmingly great. We have added, I should think, nearly 1,000 new officers during the present Session, and we have increased the salaries of those officers to an amount which cannot be less than $1,000,000.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, say two.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Probably I am lower than it really is. We have all the officers who are established under the Franchise Bill.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Question.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is bearing upon it. Then we have the additional Librarian. Then the Postmaster General applied to have superintendents appointed for the mail carrying service, and we have an additional officer of this House, and additional officers elsewhere, and I cannot understand how it is that the public service did not require these officers until the present Session, when the needs of the country are greater than they ever were before. I am in earnest in saying that it is about time that the Government should be given to understand that we will not submit to the multiplication of offices which is placing such a heavy burden on the people of this country. Whether my protest is valid or not, I will omit no opportunity of protesting against the unnecessary and reckless increase of the expenditure in order to maintain friends and favorites of the Government in places.

Mr. MILLS. The Government have already analytical chemists in their service, those connected with the geological branch, and the assay department. No doubt these men, with high scientific attainments, and with all the appliances for analysis, could give to the Government all the assistance they require, with a very small additional compensation. It seems to me that the appropriations which the Government ask are unnecessary, and that the power is an improper one to seek—when the information which the House is entitled to, at the hands of the Administration, is not given. We have the Ministers coming down, day after day, confessing that they are unable to give the House that information which it is entitled to possess, and which it would be derelict in its duty to the Government if it failed to demand, before agreeing to the resolution which the Government has submitted. The analytical chemists in the geological service could act for the other Departments of the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says no; I say yes; and I say that, if an enquiry was permitted, we could show that that is the case. The very same kind of analysis required from the analyst the Government propose to appoint is that which has to be carried on in analysing minerals, which these men are obliged to test in the Geological Department. The Minister has not given the information which we ought to have. What fees have been collected during the past twelve months for work of this kind? How much have the Government paid; what fees have they charged? What work has been done by those whom they employed to make these analyses heretofore? We are entitled to know what work these men will be called upon to discharge, how long they will be employed, whether their whole time, or what portion of their time, is likely to be occupied. We are entitled to the fullest possible information, and yet we have a Government, professing to be statesmen of superior capacity, who show themselves to be notoriously unacquainted with every proposition they submit to Parliament for its consideration. Before another step is taken the hon gentleman ought to impart to the committee the information which we are entitled to receive from him. If the people's representatives have one duty paramount over all others, it is to control the public expenditure, and yet the hon. gentleman proposes that we shall abandon that control and leave it entirely in the hands of an Administration that has increased the cost of the Government of this country at the rate of over a million a year. Before these gentlemen came into power they complained of their predecessors' extravagance, who governed the country at a cost of twenty-three and a half millions a year, while our annual expenditure has now reached the sum of thirty-five millions a year. And here we have another proposition to increase the expenditure.

Why, these gentlemen have not the courage of their convictions. They will not come down to the House and tell the people what additional burden they propose to put upon the country. They are afraid they would so alarm their friends behind them that they would not have the courage to support them in the present condition of the public revenue. Yet they propose to ask us to vote this money blindfolded, to put into their hands the control of the public funds of the country, so far as it may be necessary to satisfy those whom they propose to appoint to these offices. I say these appointments are unnecessery, that the Government have now at their disposal men capable of making these analyses for a very small additional charge to the country. But they wish to satisfy a certain number of friends, and the whole Bill bears upon its face the marks of a job.

Mr. McLELAN. Then the job was commenced in 1875, and the hon, gentleman is responsible for initiating it. A Bill was passed by the hon, gentleman, in 1875, with this very same clause, with this very same provision. All that we have added to it was done last year, when Parliament was asked to provide for a chief analyst, and the House re-enacted the clause which the hon. gentleman and his Government put in the Bill in 1875, and which has been in operation up to the present time. We proposed no change last year in the mode of operation from what the hon. gentleman provided for in 1875. But last year, after due consideration and discussion of this matter, the House agreed to provide for a chief analyst, and to provide for him in the same mode that the hon, gentlemen opposite had provided for the local analysts they had appointed, and to pay him in the same manner. There has been no provision for new offices, and no arrangement to create a job. If there be any jobbery at all, it was initiated by hon. gentlemen opposite, and continued by them during the time they held office.

Mr. MILLS. It is being initiated now.

Mr. McLELAN. It is not a new thing. The whole Act is being reconsidered and re-enacted, and we are not asking you to go one step farther than the old Act provided.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have not got the old Act before me, but I was under the impression that the fixing and giving a salary to the analyst was a new feature in the Bill.

Mr. McLELAN. Section 4 of the old Act reads:

"The Governor in Council may cause such remuneration to be paid to such analysts as he may deem proper, and such remuneration, whether by fees or salaries, or in part by both, may be paid to them out of any sum voted by Parliament for the purposes of this Act."

The only word that we have added is the word "chief."

Mr. MULOCK. I have already asked the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what objection there was to setting forth in this resolution the outside salary that this officer was to receive. He gave a certain answer, which I think does not supply a reason, and I would ask him now, whether, in view of the farther discussion and light that has been thrown upon this point, he is now willing to put in the Bill the outside salary of this office.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not think it would be well to fix a salary in the Blll, because it might be impossible for us to obtain the services of a competent man to discharge the important duties of analyst for a sum we might now name. But the House have it in their hands to control, because we have to come down every year and ask whatever sum the Governor in Council may think well to fix. When the Estimates are before the House the fullest information will be given, and all details will be submitted to Parliament.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman has stated that the chief analyst and the analysts are not to be paid any salary at all, but are to be paid entirely by fees.

Mr. McLELAN. I did not say that. Mr. MILLS. Mr. MULOCK. Then he says that the chief analyst is to be paid a fixed salary, but the sub-analysts are to be paid by fees. If they are to be entirely paid by fees, why do you provide that they are to be paid otherwise than by fees in the resolution?

Mr. McLELAN. They are to be paid for the work they do for the Department, by a scale of fees fixed by the Governor in Council. Suppose a person goes into a district and purchases some goods to be submitted for analysis. He gets the report of the analyst upon it, and pays him a certain fee for that service.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister has stated that the class of person required to fill this office efficiently is so limited that there is considerable risk of his being unable to fill the office from time to time; in other words, that he is to arrange the salary to suit the applicant himself—that the applicant is to fix the salary, and not the employer. That is a statement which, I venture to say, public opinion will not endorse.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has there been any salary paid to any analyst, quite apart from fees, hitherto?

Mr. McLELAN. No; not yet.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is not this Bill, then, new in that respect?

Mr. McLELAN. The matter has not yet received the consideration of the Government. It is possible it may do so hereafter.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The country has a right to know what the charges are that are going to be imposed. In view of the fact that the Act has been on the Statute Book a long time, and that it is now proposed to pay the officers salaries instead of fees, the Minister should be able to say what is the maximum amount of salary intended to be paid. The hon. gentleman is proposing to fix the salaries, by Order in Council, of seven officers.

Mr. McLELAN. We have not arranged that they will be paid permanent salaries.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is so stated in the Act.

Mr. McLELAN. They may or may not be so paid. If one of the local analysts has much work thrown upon him by the Government, it may be better to pay him a round sum rather than fees.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On looking back at the Act of 1874, passed on 26th May, 1874, an Act intituled: "An Act to impose license duties on compounders of spirits; to amend the Act respecting the Inland Revenue, and to prevent the adulteration of food, drink and drugs." The 14th clause provides:

"The Governor may appoint in each Inland Revenue division one or more persons possessing competent medical, chemical and microscopical knowledge, as analysts of food, drink and drugs, purchased, sold or offered for sale within such division, and may cause such remuneration to be paid to such analysts as he may deem proper."

Mr. LANDERKIN. How many public analysts have been appointed since that Act was passed?

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think the citing of a bad Act justifies this measure. Moreover, I believe the Government that passed that Act are not now in power, and I dare say that the measure was a measure which induced the public to change the Government. At all events, I was not a member of the Government or of the House at the time, and I repudiate any responsibility for any measure prior to my accession to this House.

Mr. DAVIES. I cannot see that the Act quoted is a precedent. When the legislation was initiated the Government could not be aware as to what the duties of the officers would be, and that would afford very good justification for leaving the amount of salary in abeyance. Eleven years have passed, and the Government have had experience as to the duties of those officers. The remuneration of the analysts should depend on the character of the work they have to perform, and on the quantity of work. We have leen waiting to know what duties they discharge and what fees have been received.

Mr. McLELAN. These officers are paid by fees for work adone, and the results of their labors have been published in the Blue Books from year to year.

Mr. DAVIES. Can you give any approximate idea of the fees received by them?

Mr. McLELAN. When we come down to ask the money vote, we shall be able to give some information on that point.

Mr. MILLS. The proper time to give that information is now, when the subject is being considered in committee. Why has not the Government submitted a specific sum? The Act has now been in force eleven years, and the First Minister has read a provision from it. The Government passed it as a tentative measure, they not possessing all necessary information. Information has been collected during the last eleven years. Now, they propose to provide for the appointment of a certain number of analysts; they know what duties they are to discharge and what fees they are to be paid, and I say the Minister ought to be in a position to give the House information on this subject, and without that information he has no right to expect the committee to vote for these reso-We have a right to know why we are not called upon to vote a specific sum. The hon. gentleman proposes to fix the salary of one party, but he does not fix the salaries of the rest. What compensation are they to receive? the fees are enough for the others, why does he not pay the chief analyst by fees, and fees alone? I say we are entitled to information on this subject, which the Minister has not given to us.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member for Bothwell is not in harmony with his leader, because just before six o'clock the leader of the Opposition stated that he had always condemned the principle of putting in the hands of the Governor in Council the power of appointing men, and saying what salaries they should receive. The hon, gentleman says that when the party is proposed, the Government should also submit to the House the amount of salary. Now, the hon, gentleman is one of the parties that initiated that law; yet he and his leader are two of the strongest to condemn it in this House, and other members on that side are supporting him, and they appear to debate it with that kind of viciousness which is one of the characteristics of the worst kind of opposition, an opposition without any special object in the way of serving the country or doing any good. When it was recognised by some hon, gentlemen on that side that the Bill had been initiated by that party, they very quietly sat down and said no more.

Mr. MILLS. It may be impudent on the part of any hon, gentleman to ask that information should be given to the House; the hon, gentleman who has just spoken may be ready to take a leap in the dark, when necessary, but there are some hon, members here who do not propose to follow his example. Here is an Act which has been in operation for eleven years; the Government know what has been done under that Act; they have been administering it for the greater portion of that time; they have the necessary data, and we ask simply that the House shall be given that information which the Government has in its possession, and we say that having that information, if they chose to take the trouble of mastering the details, they are in a position to propose a specific sum instead of an indefinite resolution.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. member for Bothwell, and most hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken on this question, have discussed it from the supposed standpoint that an officer was to be appointed in each of the seven districts into which it is proposed to divide the Dominion for this particular purpose. Now, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who has explained the question to the House, has stated the facts over and over again. He has stated that it is not proposed to make any new appointements, and that the law in the past has provided for the appointment of analysts in different sections of the Dominion. Those analysts exist to-day; they are appointed to-day. I call the attention of the hon. member for Bothwell to the gentleman who occupies that position in the city of London, and whose qualifications for the work he will not dispute.

Mr. MILLS. A very competent man.

Mr. BOWELL. We may desire an article analysed in the western section—take tea dust, for example; I have no doubt that the hon, gentleman remembers that a large quantity of that article was stopped a short time ago, on account of its supposed deleterious character. A sample of it was sent to Mr. Saunders, of London, to analyse, with the request that he would report to the Department the particular ingredients of which that so-called tea was composed, and what foreign matter it contained which made it unhealthy to the people. He made that report, for which he made a specific charge. That charge was paid out of the general revenue, and if he is not asked to do any more work in twelve months, he gets no more pay. That is Mr. Saunders' position, and that is the position of every analyst in the Dominion to-day. But, after some years' experience, it was thought that a large sum might be saved by having a man possessing superior qualifications, located at headquarters, at Ottawa, receiving a certain salary, so that, in cases similar to the one to which I have referred—instead of sending to Mr. Edwards, of Montreal, or Mr. Saunders, of London-I send the sample to Mr. Evans, in the Inland Revenue Department, who would tell me of what it was composed, and whether it came within the meaning of the Act for the protection of the people, in providing them with healthy food. Now, I called the attention of the committee, a few moments ago, to the fact that in my own Department I know that the amount we are paying through the Board of Customs has been more than saved since Mr. Evans has been here; and I am convinced that instead of this being an increase of expenditure in this particular labor, throughout the Dominion, it will be a saving to the revenue. The hon, member for Brant said that this clause was imperative; that the word "shall" was used, implying that he must receive a certain salary. Now, I have read the clause through, and I cannot find the word "shall," from beginning to end. It is as permissive as it can be written. If these men were to be paid by specific fees, those fees would be paid out of consolidated revenue. In the Customs Department it is charged to contingencies at the different ports where these questions arise, and it is reported every month to the Department under that head. There is no question that the information which the hon. member for Bothwell asks can be obtained, but it would require an investigation of the whole contingencies account for the past year. I do not say that the House should not receive that information, but I can assure the House that, so far as the Customs Department is concerned, it will be a saving to the general revenue for the whole Dominion, rather than an extra expenditure; and I am quite sure that so far as the Inland Revenue Department is concerned, the same result will follow, from the fact that the gentleman who is at headquarters at Ottawa will perform the labor which has been done in the past by the different local analysts in the different cities, such as Charlottetown, Halifax, Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Hamilton or London, because in all these large ports we have occasionally, and continually, in fact, to keep referring questions of this kind to this particular class of officers, so that the House may be under no misapprehension as to the expenditure which is to be incurred by the passage of this Act. The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says that we should use the officers of the Geological Department. Most of these gentlemen are fully employed in the particular work which they have to perform. Questions come up in my Department with reference to the geology of the country; such questions, in fact, often do rise; certain parties claim that a particular kind of clay should be treated as foreign, that asbestos does not exist here, that another mineral does not exist here, and so on, and applications are made to place such articles on the free list. When I require information of that kind, I send samples to the Geological Department, asking for a report, so that the Government may be in a position to come to a correct decision as to whether a certain and particular article should be placed on the free list or be made dutiable. In that way the Geological Department has been utilised. But as to its being utilised in the manner suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell, I am satisfied, if he were on this side of the House, he would not attempt it, and if he did he would not succeed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). While the hon. Minister is correct in stating that the word "shall" is not here, according to the interpretation of the First Minister, the word "may" has the full force and effect in the statute that the word "shall" would have. There is no doubt that the word "may" is permissive as between fees and salary; but we have been informed by the Minister in charge of the Bill that he proposes to pay the chief analyst partly by salary and partly by fees, and it was but a fair inference that he intended to pursue the same course with regard to the other analyst; and what we, on this side of the House, have been endeavoring to find out is, what the maximum amount of salary to be given was. When the Minister has told us that he has not made up his mind to give them any salary, but may allow them to go on and be paid by fees, we cannot expect him to give us any information on that point; but if he intended to put them partly under salary, the same as the chief analyst, Parliament was entitled to know that amount.

Mr. VAIL. I observe, in the report of the Inland Revenue Department, that the vote for the adulteration of food last year was $12,000 and the expenditure $11,780. I notice in the details that the London man, for instance, received in fees $1,366, a retaining allowance of $200, and $100 for rent. It appears to me the hor. Minister might have taken these figures, and told us whether he intended to change these salaries, or what he has done with the appropriation of $12,000; and whether the fees are paid into the consolidated fund, or what is done with them. I think the hon. Minister might have given us this information in a few words.

Mr. McLELAN. I presumed that the hon gentleman had that information before him. The Order in Council fixing the scale of fees has been before the House for some time.

Mr. VAIL. In Halifax $1,468 are down for fees; $200 as a retaining allowance, and $100 for rent.

Mr. McLELAN. The $1,468 are paid out of the $12,000. Mr. VAIL. Then, I take it for granted that the fees go into the consolidated fund.

Mr. McLELAN. We pay the analyst fees for whatever he does for the Department.

Mr. VAIL. Then, the salary might have been fixed, because the books show what he has been paid.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. McLELAN. No. A special amount of work might be thrown on the officer in one year, under this scale of fees, and the next year he might not be paid one-third of the amount. If he is only called upon to make one analysis during the year, we only pay him for that analysis $8,0° $10, or $20, as the case may be.

Mr. WILSON. I think the first suggestion was only a reasonable one. It is very easy for us to say that the salary of the chief analyst should be fixed, and that it should not be left to the Governor in Council at any future time to increase it. The reason offered by the Minister, that we might not be able to keep the present man or to get another for $2,800, will hardly convince this committee. Judging from the duties he has performed, it is quite evident that the Government are aware what the compensation should be; and if circumstances should arise, rendering it impossible to keep him, it will be a very easy matter to obtain an equally efficient man from some of the educational institutions in the country. The duties are not onerous or difficult, and we ought to stipulate in the Bill what the salary is to be, so that we shall know what we have to pay. The principle of government by Order in Council is a dangerous one, and should not be recognised by this House, except in cases of extreme necessity; and before this Bill passes, I think we ought to insist that the salary of the chief analyst should be fixed in it. Reference was made to the fact that the Act was passed when our friends were in power. That was a long time ago. The circumstances then and the circumstances now are very different. You know definitely now what the duties of those officers are. Then it was a new measure, and we could not say what their duties would be. Having had the experience of eleven years, you ought to be in a position to say what the services of those analysts are worth, and more especially what the services of the chief analyst are worth. By leaving it in doubt, and implying that on account of the great importance of his duties you may have to pay more, you place a chief analyst in the position of being warranted in applying for an increased salary. The Government ought to make up their minds what the position is worth, before they submit a proposition to the committee.

Resolution to be reported.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT, 1874.

Mr. McLELAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 135) further to amend the General Inspection Act, 1874, and Acts amending the same. He said: The changes are comparitively few, and relate chiefly to the inspection of fish, hides and grain. Hitherto, the inspection was, under certain circumstances, compulsory. Under the old Act, when any district desired to bring that Act into force, it made application to the Government, and inspectors were appointed, and in all the districts which were embraced in the application the Government inspection then became compulsory. As regards pork, beef, butter and flour, the inspection was voluntary, and under this system there were less complaints than under the compulsory system. It is proposed now that the inspection system shall be voluntary in every case.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. DAVIES. I did not understand the Minister to explain the meaning of the first section:

"The Governor in Council may appoint a chief inspector of any of the articles hereinbefore enumerated, who shall hold office during pleasure, and shall perform the duties hereinafter assigned to him."

The Act of last year did not contemplate the appointment of a chief inspector. This is to be a new appointment, with a proportionate salary, and we ought to be told what necessity there is for this appointment. What has transpired to justify it? What are the duties to be discharged? What is the salary to be given, and out of what fund will it come?

Mr. McLELAN. It is not proposed we will pay him a salary. He shall be paid by fees. The different Boards of Trade have asked that an inspector shall be appointed mainly for the inspection of grair, and it is proposed to appoint an inspector who shall have a general oversight, if this uniform system is put in force.

Mr. DAVIES. The Act of last year provided that there should be inspectors appointed, from time to time, in the several cities named in the Act, and they should inspect, not only grain, but flour, meal, pork, etc. You propose to amend that by authorising the Governor in Council to appoint a chief inspector of all the articles. Where is he to reside?

Mr. McLELAN. It is mainly called for with respect to grain. The chief inspector of grain will be appointed in the west, and a chief inspector of fish and other articles may be appointed in another district, probably the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the Minister contemplate the possible appointment of seven inspectors?

Mr. McLELAN. The Bill says, of any of the articles.

Mr. DAVIES. I should like to know where the chief inspector, say, of beef and pork, or of fish, is to reside, and what are to be his duties, as distinct from those of the ordinary inspector?

Mr. McLELAN. If there is no necessity for either of these chief inspectors, none will be appointed. I think, however, a chief inspector of grain will be found necessary to go from place to place and see that the inspection is uniform. The services of chief inspectors are to be paid for by fees from the vendors or the persons requiring the inspection.

Mr. DAVIES. Then the Government have not received any information which will justify them in supposing that a chief inspector of any article will be required? It is merely an experimental measure.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; we have received representations from the Boards of Trade of Toronto and Montreal, asking for the appointment of an inspector of grain.

Mr. DAVIES. Have the Government determined to act upon those representations?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES. Have the Government decided what the fees are to be?

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman will find that in the Act.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not see it.

Mr. BLAKE. It is rather a large thing, our territory being so vast, to talk of one chief inspector for the Dominion of Canada, and if he is to be called upon by individuals to inspect, from time to time, in different parts of the country, it will involve large travelling expenses and very heavy costs in that way. Is it intended that the travelling expenses shall be paid, as well as the fees, by the people who call upon him to inspect, or by the Dominion?

Mr. McLELAN. The 6th and 7th sub-sections of section 11 provide for that.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see that this is going to be very workable. The applications which the hon. gentleman speaks of from the Boards of Trade of Montreal and Toronto for the appointment of a chief inspector of grain may be a justification for that appointment, but they do not seem to me to be a justification for appointing six other chief inspectors of different articles. The hon. gentleman says they may or may not be appointed, but I think the Government ought to have decided whether the trade required the appointments, and should not come to us upon speculation. Why should we be asked to give the Government thauthority to appoint these officers when the Government have not themselves determined that it is fitting that they should be appointed. The first thing for the Government to do is to decide that this is fitting to be done; the second is to ask us to legislate on the subject, and the third is to give us the information in their possession, and ask us, upon that information, to concur in their conclusion.

Mr. McLELAN. The present law states that there shall be no inspection in any district unless it is ordered by the Governor in Council, and gives the Governor in Council power to declare that there shall be inspectors appointed in any district they deem fit. Now, this is going a very little beyond that. As soon as one of these inspectors is appointed for a district, then inspection becomes compulsory in that district. It goes beyond the power we are asking for in this Bill. We are not asking the House to go so far now, but all we do here is to provide that when a chief inspector of grain for the west is asked for by one of the great cities, like Toronto and Montreal, he is to be appointed. I omitted to mention that representations have been made from the city of Halifax for the appointment of a chief inspector of fish there; and it may be that other districts may think it desirable, in the interests of trade, to have an inspector. It may be necessary, in the interests of trade, that a fish inspector should be appointed in one district, or an inspector of flour in another district. so that there may be uniformity in the inspection of all that is brought into the market.

Mr. BLAKE. The principle of inspection proceeded on the notion that it was desirable there should be a process by which, when a locality desired the creation of an inspection district, it should make its representation to the Government, and upon this representation the Government would create an inspection district. Now, the hon gentleman proposes here to establish a chief inspector for the whole Dominion in each of the seven different classes of articles.

Mr. McLELAN. Oh, no; not for each inspection district.

Mr. BLAKE. For how large a district?

Mr. McLELAN. We do not fix the area. The inspection will practically be for different articles of the same line in each locality—for instance, for grain and flour in the west, and for fish in the east.

Mr. BLAKE. But they grow grain in the east as well as in the west, and they catch fish in the west as well as in the east; but this question is not to be determined by the separate wishes of only two localities in the Dominion, but by a general apprehension of what the interests of the whole Dominion require. I say that upon such a question the Government's first business is to make up its mind what the interests of the country require, and then ask us to legislate upon such information as it may bring before us. This proposition is simply a delegation of our legislative powers to the Governor in Council.

Mr. McLELAN. Not to so great an extent as in the old Act.

Mr. BLAKE. Two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not say that an inspector, for instance, of fish, should be appointed upon the representation of any one locality; but if representation is made from a number of districts, asking for a chief inspector of fish, it will be the duly of the Government to yield to those representations, and make the appointments, to meet the wants of trade.

Mr. BLAKE. I say that as soon as these representations get strong enough, and the Government has determined that it is expedient, in the public interest, to appoint a chief inspector, then they should come down here and ask authority, and show a reason for asking us to give them authority; but to give them this authority now is to bargain away our own power to decide in these matters. There is a constant course, on the part of the Government, of taking power after power, and of depriving Parliament of its legislative functions, in order to accumulate them in the hands of the Government of the day. The Government of the day says: We have no proof that the public interests of this country require the appointment of a chief inspector in any one of these articles, but it may be so in the future, and we ask you to surrender your legislative functions, and to allow us to make the appointment if we think it is expe-

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention to appoint deputy inspectors under the chief inspector in each Province?

Mr. McLELAN. The deputy inspectors are already provided for under the old Act, and this is only providing that a chief inspector may be appointed for any of these articles that are now in the Bill.

Mr. WATSON. I am aware that there are not inspectors at prominent towns in Manitoba, where wheat is brought. There are troubles about the grading, and this has especially been the case at Port Arthur, where the grading has not given entire satisfaction.

Mr. McLELAN. Inspectors will be appointed at those districts where the trade requires them. It has been the practice, whenever a locality required an inspector, that an appointment be made.

Mr. WATSON. The Minister who introduced the Bill is, no doubt, well aware that the inspection at Port Arthur has not given satisfaction to the people of Manitoba. Wheat was sold at a certain price for a certain grade, the farmer selling it on the understanding that it would grade No. 1 and No. 2 hard. When it reached Port Arthur it was graded away down, and consequently the farmers received, in some cases, 10 cents per bushel less than the price they had expected to receive when they delivered it to the

Mr. McLELAN. That has been provided at page 5. Inspectors and chief inspectors will agree upon standards, and see that the grading is uniform at the different points

Mr. WATSON. I see, at page 5, there are a number of classifications of wheat. Under those classifications the same trouble will exist in the future as has existed in the past, unless they are changed.

On section 3,

Mr. DAVIES. There is here an entire reversal of the Government's policy since last year. The Act last year expressly provided that the inspector and deputy inspectors should not have any interest, direct or indirect, in the articles inspected. It is now proposed to be provided that the inspector may be a dealer in the article inspected.

Mr. McLELAN. The first reason of the change is because the inspection is not compulsory. The second is, that the Bill provides that the deputy inspectors shall be responsible power to do so. Last year a difficulty arose with respect to the inspector, and when a deputy inspector inspects his to the classification of Manitoba wheat; there was no Mr. BLAKE.

own goods he must brand them with his own name, and the words "inspector and owner." In regard to fish, it has been found, in many cases, almost impossible to obtain inspectors who were not engaged in the business.

Mr. BLAKE. I have heard some reason of this kind given, but it does not answer the question to say the Act is not compulsory. It is presumed to be a great advantage to the trade to have an inspection. The deputy inspector may grade the fish of his rivals too low or grade his own fish too high. As to the suggestion that a deputy inspector should mark his own goods with his own name, as inspector and owner, the proposition is almost ludicrous.

Mr. STAIRS. In some cases it has been found absolutely necessary to have such a provision in the Act to secure any inspection whatever. It happens, at some of the fishing villages, to be impossible to get any one who understands the inspection of fish, unless you take a man who is engaged in the business of catching and curing fish. None of the difficulties suggested by the hon. gentleman can arise. A man who is not in the trade is just as likely to grade fish too high or too low as is an inspector, who, at the same time, is engaged in the business of catching and curing fish. The present provision has the advantage that it is honest. the community will know that the deputy inspector can catch and cure fish himself; and if dealers were to find that the deputy inspector graded their fish too low, they would not go to him again. As to the inspector's own fish, it would soon be found whether he graded them too high or not, and if he did grade them too high, he would find difficulty in disposing of them.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, every fisherman should be an inspector of fish, and brand them "inspector and owner."

Mr. STAIRS. The hon, gentleman has just stated what is the only thing in fish inspection that amounts to anything, that the very best safeguard is for a man who packs them to try and make his own reputation for the brand. Fish exported are generally sold on the reputation of those who put them up. If you rely on the owner, I believe it is just as good as to rely on the inspector.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon, gentleman has delivered a very good argument in favor of not having an inspection of fish.

Mr. McLELAN. The chief inspector of fish for a locality is not expected to deal in the article himself, although his deputies, who are responsible to him, may do so. There are to be no deputy inspectors of grain, and none of the inspectors are allowed to deal in the article, for the reason that grain, after it is once mixed, cannot be identified.

Mr. WATSON. The chief inspector appoints the deputy inspectors?

Mr. McLELAN. There are no deputy inspectors appointed for grain, and the same power that appoints those officers, say, at Winnipeg, appoints them at Brandon or other places.

On section 7,

Mr. DAVIES. By the Act of last year the classification of the articles was provided for by Parliament. Now, you propose that the Governor in Council may modify the inspection. You propose that the Governor in Council may change that from time to time. We wish to know why the Governor in Council should take that power.

Mr. McLELAN. It is possible that the necessity may arise, in the interest of trade, for modifying the classification without waiting for the meeting of Parliament to get power under the Act to classify it or to fix the standard as high as the wheat would bear, and consequently injustice was done to the trade of Manitoba. I think it is desirable, in the interest of the producer, that this power should be given to the Governor in Council.

Mr. WATSON. I think, if every member will pay attention to his duty in this House, in looking after this Bill, it ought to be made so perfect that it would not require to be changed in one year. It is of the greatest importance, when we once establish a grade of wheat, that it should not be changed, so that the buyer, when he buys a certain grade of wheat, may know what kind of wheat he is getting. Of course, there have been mistakes in the past, owing to the absence of grades for Manitoba wheat; but so far as that article is concerned, I think we can perfect this Bill so that it will not require any changing.

Mr. McLELAN. I admit that no change should be made in this matter unless on the strongest representations and under the most urgent necessity; but from the experience we have had it is possible that an emergency may arise, when, in the interest of trade generally, there should be some modification. I am not wedded to this clause, and, in fact, hardly desire, personally myself, that this responsibility should be thrown on the Governor in Council. It was placed here for the consideration of the House. If it is the wish of the House that it should remain there, I am content; if it is the general wish of the House that it should be struck out, I am willing that that should be done.

On section 8,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think this differs from the resolution. The wording of the resolution was to the effect that a chief inspector of the seven classes of articles might be appointed, who should have power to decide disputes between inspectors and others, in regard to articles inspected. I approve of the change here, but in the previous discussion I pointed out how difficult it would be to refer matters to these inspectors. For instance, an inspector of leather and hides might be appointed, living at Halifax; and instead of having a dispute referred to him, it would be better to retain the old machinery of Boards of Trade in cities where they exist, and three disinterested persons appointed by magistrates in other districts. I see that the Bill retains this power, and yet provides for the chief inspector. Therefore, the question occurs, what particular need is there for this chief inspector?

Mr. McLELAN. An expert must be appointed. Especially in the article of grain, the chief inspector will be called on to decide disputes, instead of the old machinery being acted upon.

Mr. DAVIES. The idea of the Bill seems to be a very fair one, that in case of disputes between an inspector and the party owning the article inspected, a justice of the peace will have power to appoint three parties to settle the dispute; but no machinery is provided in the Act for bringing the owner before the justice of the peace. The summons is to issue, in the first place, to three persons, of skill and integrity. I think provision should be made for summoning the owner before the justice of the peace to appoint arbitrators, and then failing that, power should be given to the ustice of the peace to appoint them.

Mr. McLELAN. Sub-section 2 of section 11 provides for that. One shall be named by the inspector or deputy inspector, another by the owner or possessor of the article in question, and a third by the justice of the peace, who, failing the attendance of either of the parties in dispute, may name a party for him.

Mr. DAVIES. The whole difficulty can be seen on man be reading the words "failing the attendance of the parties in this?

dispute, shall name a person for him." How is he to know? When? Where? Supposing the inspector differs with the owner of some grain, and applies to a justice of the peace for arbitrators to be appointed, how is the owner to know he is to appoint an arbitrator, and when?

Mr. McLELAN. The second clause of section 11 provides that when any difference arises between the inspector or deputy inspector, and the owner or possessor of any article inspected, with regard to the quality or grade of the article, such dispute shall be referred to particular arbitrators. That is provided for in the old Act. Now, you provide a new board. I am not objecting to the mode, which, I think, is a very good one, but I submit that the machinery is not framed so as to enable a justice of the peace to carry out the provisions.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What I wanted to bring before the Minister is this. He said it was desirable to appoint a chief inspector for grain, as he would have more authority. This is to provide for the appointment of a chief inspector for different articles; one for flour and meal alone, another for wheat, another for grain, another one for beef and pork, another for pickled fish and fish oil, another for butter, another for leather and rawhides. You appoint seven different sub-inspectors. The question is, whether there is necessity for that, when we do not make it imperative for the chief inspector to settle all disputes. We are adopting the machinery of the old Act, availing ourselves of the Boards of Trade in cities, and of the services of magistrates in calling in three different parties to settle disputes. Is it likely they will appoint chief inspectors?

Mr. McLELAN. I think not, except in the case of grain. I thought it would be advisable, in the interest of the trade, to have a chief inspector, well up in the business, who would instruct the various local inspectors and decide upon standards.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is of grain alone.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is he to be salaried?

Mr. McLELAN. No. The dealers in grain may call him in to decide a dispute, and if they employ him they will pay him. It makes no charge on the revenue of the country.

On section 11,

Mr. WATSON. The first three grades, on page 5, I think, will be quite satisfactory, although there may be some chance for dissatisfaction. For instance, No. 1 will be extra Manitoba hard wheat, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and composed of at least 85 per cent. of red fife wheat, grown in Manitoba or the North-West Territories of Canada. The other 15 per cent. might be wheat very objectionable to the millers and dealers, such as goose wheat. With reference to the other grades, I think the classification might be made more simple. Instead of having Nos. 1, 2, 3 northern spring wheat, you might make it simply Nos. 1, 2, 3 spring wheat. Take No. 1 northern spring wheat, not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and composed of at least 50 per cent. of red fife wheat, grown in Manitoba or the North West Territories; the balance might be goose wheat, or some other very objectionable wheat.

Mr. McLELAN. On page 7 it is provided:

"Any mixture of rice wheat, otherwise known as "goose" or "California" wheat, or of red chaf wheat, with other descriptions of wheat, shall exclude the parcel from regular inspection."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose the hon. gentleman has availed himself of the judgment of grain men in this?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; the members of the Boards of Trade were consulted, and a great deal of care has been exercised in the preparation of this measure.

Mr. WATSON. Since the resolution was passed, upon which this Bill is framed, I have made enquiries from wheat dealers in Manitoba, and have received a number of letters. They are perfectly satisfied with the three first grades for Manitoba hard wheat. I understand that all the grades, except the last, on page 5, are intended for Manitoba wheat. If that is the case, I would propose to strike out or to change No. 1 Canada hard wheat, and to strike out No. 2 Canada hard wheat altogether, and to strike out No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 northern spring wheat, and instead of those grades I would suggest that there should be No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 spring wheat:

No 1 Manitoba spring wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least 85 per cent. of hard wheat grown in Manitoba or the North-West Territories of Canada.

That will provide for hard wheat of either white fife or red fife wheat. We have a grade of wheat that no provision is made for at all in this Bill, a grade of white fife wheat, which is bought by the millers and dealers in Manitoba at about the same price as the red fife wheat, and is of a superior quality to any other wheat grown in Canada, with the exception of red fife. This should be simplified to No. 1, 2 and 3 Manitoba spring wheat. No. 3 Manitoba spring wheat would cover all mixtures:

No. 3 Manitoba spring wheat shall comprise all wheat fit for warehousing, not good enough to be graded as No. 2, weighing not less than 56 pounds to the bushel.

This would give general satisfaction in Manitoba. I have considerable knowledge of handling wheat myself, and the Farmers' Union, who, though some people think they go outside of their jurisdiction occasionally, should be recognised in connection with the grading and handling of wheat, recommend these changes. There is the extra hard wheat, and the No. 1 hard wheat should be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and composed of 85 per cent. of fife wheat; No. 2 Manitoba hard wheat should be fairly well cleaned, with 58 pounds to the bushel, and 85 per cent. of red fife wheat. Those grades, with three grades of spring wheat, would cover all the grades out there. I have had representations from the west that other grades should be added, two grades for Manitoba hard white fife wheat, which is recommended highly by the Board of Agriculture in Manitoba, as well as by the Farmers' Union, and which ripens about a week earlier than the red fife wheat and yields fully as well. If it is a good quality of wheat, the Government ought to encourage it, by making a special grade for it. I move that these two grades be added to this Bill:

Manitoba No. 1 hard white fife wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of not less than 85 per cent. of hard white fife wheat, grown in Manitoba or the North-West Territory of Canada;
Manitoba No. 2 hard white wheat shall be sound and reasonably cleaned, weighing not less than 58 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least 85 per cent. of hard white fife wheat grown in Manitoba or the North-West Territory of Canada.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not know whether my hon, friend thinks the whole country is contained in Manitoba. Did the Minister state that all the grades on page 5 referred to Manitoba?

Mr. McLELAN. We want to provide for other portions of Canada, but we give Manitoba the honor of heading the list. There is a good deal of wheat in the west which will require grading as well as Manitoba wheat, and we have provided for it. I think that, considering the care and attention which has been bestowed upon this, and the information which has been gathered from the various Boards of Trade throughout Canada and the North-West Territories, the various grades have been made with as careful consideration for the requirements of the business as would be possible. If you amend the Bill in one particular you may damage it in some others, and if, in any case, this grading should be found insufficient in practice, we have asked the House to give us the power to amend these special cases in some slight degree. I think the hon gentleman cannot do better than to allow the classification we have made to stand for the present, until we see the result in practice.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. WATSON. There could be no objections to entering these grades of white fife wheat. They cannot interfere with any of the other grades or classification.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a great mistake to make so many different grades of wheat. I have often heard complaints by the farmers that there were so many grades of wheat they did not know what the value of their wheat was. There are fifteen different grades here in spring wheat, and now you propose to add two more. Another thing is, that it encourages a grade for every distinct kind of grain which may be grown. I think there is no difficulty at all in classifying those different kinds of grain under some of the grades already mentioned. If I were to urge anything at all, it would be to diminish instead of increasing the number. It leaves you with scarcely any knowledge of the value of your wheat in the outside market. If you look at the prices of wheat in Chicago, Montreal or England, they are so mixed up in the grading that you cannot tell what is the value of your own wheat.

Mr. FARROW. I rather like the classification that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has proposed, as to first, second and third. But I think that in Manitoba it would require an extra class than his first class, because he proposed 15 per cent. mixture in the first class grade of spring wheat. Now, to my own knowledge, they grow a class of wheat there without any mixture.

Mr. WATSON. That is provided for—the Manitoba

Mr. FARROW. I agree with the simple classification of first, second and third, and an extra class, and I thought that was the Bill. I agree with my hon, friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule), that the fewer the classes and the less complication you can have, the better. Farmers will understand what they are doing, and buyers will understand what they are doing, and it would simplify the thing very much.

Mr. WATSON. I quite agree with both hon, gentlemen who have spoken. The information I have from Manitoba asks that the grading of wheat be simplified. There are so many grades in this Bill, and different mixtures, that it is almost impossible to tell what grade of wheat a man is selling. The first three grades are all right, one to be composed of red fife wheat and the other two grades are to have 85 per cent. red fife. There is a difference between the first and second of 2 pounds to the bushel, which is quite reasonable. Then the other grades of northern spring wheat, I understand they refer to Manitoba. 1 do not understand that, as a rule, Manitoba wheat will be mixed with Ontario wheat. It is well know that we grow a superior grade of wheat in Manitoba, and we get an extra price for it. Manitoba wheat on the market in Ontario is worth about 5 per cent. a bushel more than any other wheat grown in Ontario, and it is for the protection of the grades of Manitoba wheat that I would ask to have these changes made. I am sure the proposed system will be very unsatisfactory to buyers, because they would not know what the wheat was mixed with, one half Manitoba wheat, or not. The classification for spring wheat grown in Ontario comes at the bottom of the page-"Spring wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel." I should put on those spring wheat grades the numbers 1, 2 and 3; after the No. 3 Manitoba hard, I should put Manitoba spring No. 2, and No. 3 Manitoba spring wheat. No. 1 would provide for grain that might be fixed after white fife and after red fife. No. 2 would be the same quality of wheat, but 2 pounds lighter on the bushel. No. 3 would be of wheat not fit to be classed as No. 2. I think it would simplify the grading of wheat and would give better satisfaction to both the buyer and the seller. A merchant in Ontario buys wheat in Ontario according to a certain grade, but he will not know, by this description of wheat, what he is getting. It might be 50 per cent. of one kind of wheat and 50 per cent. of another very inferior quality.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. Watson) is thoroughly qualified to speak of Manitoba wheat, but his judgment, as I understand it, is not that of the Board of Trade of Winnipeg. No. 1 Canada hard wheat and No. 2 have been put in here, I presume, with a view to getting uniformity of grade between Manitoba wheat and the wheat grown in Ontario and other parts. Of course there is some strong fife wheat grown in parts of Ontario yet. There may be no objection to putting in these two qualities to cover the white wheat, perhaps, in Manitoba.

Mr. HESSON. I would not change the classification made here. I made enquiry of some gentlemen who have been dealing in grain for many years, what they thought of the present classification of grains, so far as Ontario productions are concerned, and they expressed themselves as quite satisfied with the grading, as not only adapted to the Canada hard white, but also for the fife wheat. As to the Manitoba product, I think the market is thoroughly satisfied with the provisions there. First, the extra Manitoba hard, which is a red fife, and the first and second qualities following, No. 1 Manitoba hard, also the red fife, and No. 2 Manitoba hard. It provides for a better quality of wheat, known as the red fife and Manitoba hard. Now, of the other two classifications, No. 1 Canada hard, I presume, would apply to almost any wheat, because it does not say it shall be red, or white, or fife. But there is a class that provides for it, called goose wheat, a mixture; consequently, I think, these two gradings for Canada hard would apply to Ontario and Manitoba for any class of wheat that is not set out as either red or white. I should not change it for the reason that, so far as I have been able to ascertain, after having submitted the matter to a good judge, I thought it a very good classification. The hon. member for Marquette's suggestion would simply add to the present wording the words "hard fife wheat."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. member for Marquette wants to cover hard white wheat.

Mr. McLELAN. In the correspondence and consultation with various Boards of Trade the reasons given for this grading and classification were that it might be used in comparison with the grading of wheat on the other side of the line. No. 1 Canada hard requires 85 per cent. of hard wheat, either white or red. I think it will be in the interest of the trade to adopt the classification as submitted.

Mr. WATSON. I have no objection to the first clause. I was proposing to insert Manitoba hard wheat in it; that is the only change I suggested. There is another classification which, I suppose, refers to spring wheat grown in Ontario. I understood that most of the classes were intended for Manitoba wheat. I suggest that to insert first, second and third Manitoba spring wheat will cover the whole grading more simply. The hon member for North Perth has said this covers all the wheat in Manitoba. It does not cover the hard white fife wheat. I think that is grown nowhere else, except in Manitoba. We grow it there, and are entitled to a special grade for it. Our white fife wheat is very much superior to the Canada hard wheat of Ontario, and we should have all the benefit we are entitled to, by giving the hard wheat of Manitoba special classification.

Mr. McLELAN. We have done pretty well for Manitoba in these provisions. Manitoba is distinctly brought out in six grades; and there are two grades in which Manitoba wheat can be mixed with Canada hard wheat. There are other places in the Dominion where wheat is grown, besides Manitoba; and we want to publish the fact that we can grow elsewhere good hard wheat, whether white or red.

Mr. WATSON. I do not see any objection to inserting Manitoba hard white wheat. It cannot interfere with the grades of Ontario or other Provinces. With all due respect to the Board of Trade of Winnipeg, it is right to say that Winnipeg handles probably less grain than any town of 200 or 300 inhabitants in the North-West. There are very few markets along the line of railways that do not handle more wheat than does Winnipeg. There is not, in that city, a puplic warehouse for the handling of grain. With all due respect to the Winnipeg Board of Trade, and any information furnished by it, I consider the sources from which I have derived my information more competent to judge as to what grades should be adopted even than the Winnipeg Board of Trade. I feel satisfied, however, that that Board of Trade will be in accord with the grading I have proposed.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member for Marquette is entirely wrong. While, no doubt, not much wheat is brought into Winnipeg, the buyers largely go out from there. I think it will be a great mistake to increase the number of grades. You have six out of fifteen applying to Manitoba. What does grading mean? It means giving a value to wheat in certain localities. People in the general markets know very little about what wheat is worth in other parts of the country. Although equally good samples of wheat are grown in other parts of the country, there is no index as to its value. In my opinion, there are already too many varieties of wheat graded, and too many for Manitoba. I consulted several wheat buyers, and that was the complaint they made. It is impossible for farmers to know what their wheat is worth, according to the large number of grades quoted. Another objection raised was that the grading is given for wheat raised in circumscribed areas. If possible, the grades should be made to apply all over the country. We have a very fine hard spring wheat raised in our part of the country, white wheat and red fife. I do not know why they should not be graded as high as Manitoba wheat.

Mr. WATSON. Why, then, is Manitoba wheat, worth 10 cents more per bushel?

Mr. SPROULE. Manitoba wheat does not bring 5 cents a bushel more than the wheat to which I am referring. We are living on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Manitoba wheat was brought down last fall and ground there, and it sold at only 2 cents more than the wheat raised in our part of the country. Therefore, it should not be made a separate and distinct class.

Mr. WATSON. I object to the remarks of the hon. gentleman, as all grain dealers know that Manitoba hard wheat is worth 10 cents more per bushel than is any wheat grown in Ontario. Under the new system of milling, the miller cannot make a high grade of patent flour without Manitoba hard wheat. I am sure that the hon. gentleman is wrong. Manitoba white wheat may not have been sold at more than 5 cents more than Ontario wheat, but perhaps it was a poor grade; but Manitoba hard wheat, weighing 60 pounds to the bushel, is worth 10 cents more to the miller in Ontario, to make patent flour, than any wheat grown in Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. No; it is not.

Mr. WATSON. I know it is.

Mr. SPROULE. That is your opinion.

Mr. WATSON. I know it is the fact.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. WATSON. It is borne out by the facts.

Mr. SPROULE. I know it is not, in my part of the country.

Mr. WATSON. It is known all over the world, almost, that Manitoba grows better wheat than anywhere in the world, and that it is worth 5 cents a bushel more than Ontario wheat. I am in favor of simplifying the classification of grain, and if the Minister will accept my suggestion it will have that effect. I do not understand that dealers will buy half cargoes of Manitoba wheat and mix it with Ontario, and then sell it as No. 1, or No. 2 northern. I think consignments from the North-West will be sold at Manitoba if it comes from Manitoba, and that is the reason why the Manitoba people insist on special grades for their own wheat, because it commands a higher price than Ontario. We do not want it mixed with Ontario wheat, as it will probably injure the character of the North-West as a wheat growing country.

Mr. McLELAN. We have given you five special grades.

Mr. WATSON. I do not see the force of the hon. gentleman's explanation, because hon. gentlemen in this House claim that No. 1 or No. 2 northern may be half Ontario and half Manitoba. That is not a Manitoba grade, and what we want is a pure Manitoba grade.

Mr. McNEILL. Does the hon, gentleman say that white fife wheat is as good as [red fife? I am speaking of Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON. In my opinion it is not quite as good, but many buyers and millers appreciate it just as highly, and give the same price for it. It is a fine wheat, recommended to be grown by the Board of Agriculture for Manitoba, as it ripens a week earlier, which is an important thing, especially for grain which is sown late in the season.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not think that because the Board of Agriculture have been trying it as an experiment we should adopt that as a grade. We should fix a grade that is accepted by the trade. We have given you extra Manitoba hard, No. 1 Manitoba hard, and No. 2 Manitoba hard. Those grades are known, and will be carried out under that name. We have given you five special grades, three of which are wholly Manitoba, and the others 50 per cent., and surely the hon. gentleman should not object to that much of an admixture.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). If I understand, in the grading of this northern spring wheat there must be a large quantity of Manitoba wheat grown which does not go into either. It says it shall be 50 per cent. of red fife wheat, but there are considerable quantities of wheat grown in Manitoba and brought to Ontario which will not grade as red fife, and still comes from that country. But Manitoba having had its innings, I would draw attention to one or two matters affecting other portions of the Dominion. If you come to grading winter wheat, you find that No. 1 white winter wheat is put at 61 pounds to the bushel, which is a fancy grade, as Manitoba spring wheat No. 1 is only required to weigh 60 pounds to the bushel. I think every farmer in the House will bear me out in saying that for No. 1 wheat, in the western Provinces, it is a very fair article which will stand 60 pounds to the bushel, and to put No. 1 at 61 pounds will exclude the great bulk of white wheat grown in the western Provinces. The extra grade of 62 pounds will be so extremely limited that while it may be quoted on the market very little wheat will come up to this Mr. Sproule.

standard. Again, if you look lower down, you will find that No. 1 red is only required to weigh 62 pounds, while every farmer knows that reds are at least 2 pounds heavier than whites. Then mixed winter wheat, red and white, is required to weigh 62 pounds. I would like to know the source from which those grades were made, because I think it will be found in practice that the great bulk of our white winter wheat, instead of grading No. 1, will be graded No. 2, which is down to 59, and that I conceive is unfair. I think No. 1 white winter should be placed no higher than this much famed No. 1 Manitoba hard, which is only required to go 60 pounds.

Mr. McLELAN. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that this provides for the Imperial bushel, while the Winchester bushel, which is what has usually been used as a standard, has been on the scale of the Winchester measure.

Mr. BAIN. But you would apply the same bushel to both grains.

Mr. McLELAN. No. If it is the Winchester measure there is quite a difference in it, and 62 pounds by the Imperial bushel would only be about 60 pounds by the Winchester measure.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). The hon. Minister has misapprehended me. No. 1 Manitoba wheat is only required to stand 60 pounds to the bushel, while No. 1 white winter has to stand 61; and I suppose both are to be measured by the same bushel. Mixed winter wheat is open to the same objection. You require mixed winter wheat to weigh as much as pure red wheat, whereas, every farmer knows that pure red is a heavier wheat than white wheat.

Mr. McLELAN. No. 1 red winter wheat is to weigh 62 pounds to the bushel, the same as extra white winter wheat. I am told that winter wheat is heavier than spring wheat, as a rule.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I was desirous of finding out from the Minister who supplied him with that information, for certainly he did not get it from the man who grew the wheat. I have grown both red and white wheat, ever since I can remember, and I think I can claim the right to speak with reference to the growth of wheat in western Ontario, and I think every miller will bear me out in saying that, as an average, there are generally 2 pounds difference in weight between the same quality of red and white winter wheat. The real difficulty will be, if this grading remains, that the great bulk of our white wheat grown in western Ontario, instead of grading No. 1, will be graded No. 2, and will be placed at 59 pounds to the bushel, which will be an unjust grade. I think it should be placed at 60 pounds to be placed on a fair level with the other grades.

Mr. McLELAN. I may say, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that the opinion of the Toronto Board of Trade was taken on this matter, and if the hon. gentleman, being a practical farmer, says that a grade of 61 pounds to the bushel for No. 1 white winter wheat would exclude a great deal of the wheat that would otherwise pass as No. 1, and that 60 pounds would be a high enough standard, we may venture to make that change.

Mr. WATSON. In that case, would it not be well to make No. 2 58 pounds?

Mr. McLELAN. Very well; we shall do that.

Mr. WATSON. The Bill does not provide for the weight of oats.

Mr. McLELAN. I think that is provided for in another Act.

western Provinces. The extra grade of 62 pounds will be so extremely limited that while it may be quoted on the market very little wheat will come up to this bushel. I think it should be provided that they should weigh 34 pounds We have heard members advocate in this House that 32 pounds should be fixed as the standard.

Mr. MoNEILL. If they are clean and plump, and free from dirt, I think they will weigh 34 pounds.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

THREE RIVERS' HARBOR COMMISSIONERS' LOAN.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House go into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (p. 2497) to provide for the raising, by way of loan, of a sum of money to be advanced to the harbor commissioners of Three Rivers to redeem the outstanding debentures of the commissioners, the interest accrued thereon and payment to be made on account of their works now under contract. He said: The resolution is to enable a sum of money to be borrowed to assist the harbor commissioners of Three Rivers to complete the works they have already commenced. Under the present Act, 45 Vic., chap. 52, the commissioners have the power to borrow $300,000, at an interest of 6 per cent., for the purpose of carrying on harbor improvements in that city. They have already borrowed $63,600, and issued bonds at 6 per cent, for that amount, and they require $18,400 to complete the works, making a total of $82,000. The present resolution provides that the Government may borrow the $82,000, bearing an interest of 4 per cent., in order to redeem the $63,600 of debentures now bearing 6 per cent. interest, and to loan the harbor commissioners the balance of $18,400, to enable them to complete the works. This sum of $82,000 is to be secured by bonds of the harbor commissioners upon the works in that city, being the first charge on all the revenues they may derive from the construction of those works. The object is to enable the commissioners to complete the harbor improvements, and to pay 4 per cent intere upon the money instead of 6 per cent. A clause in the Bill will provides for the redemption of the 6 per cent.'s, giving a certain time for persons either to exchange them for the 4 per cent.'s or to take the money in lieu thereof.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was this money advanced by private parties?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; I so understand it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it overdue now.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If not, how do you propose to induce them to exchange 6 per cent.'s for 4 per cent.'s?

Mr. BOWELL. I said it would be optional for them to accept the money on the face of the bond, with the interest at 6 per cent., or to exchange for 4's, if they desire. The Bill will provide for the bondholders to come and take their money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand they are debentures. You cannot call them in before they are due, or is it that they prefer the Government security to the harbor commissioners'?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose everyone would prefer that, but the whole question is one of interest. The harbor commissioners could not pay 6 per cent. of the amount and pay their expenses, and therefore they have asked to be put on the same footing, in that respect, as the Montreal harbor commissioners and the Quebec harbor commissioners. They will have quite enough to pay the 4 per cent., and a small sinking fund, and their ordinary expenses. Those debenture holders will feel that it is to their interest either to take the 4 per cent. of the Government or to receive their money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They will, no doubt, if they are not quite satisfied as to the security; but if they were satisfied as to the security, I do not know that they would take 4 per cent. instead of 6.

Mr. LANGELIER. What is the nature of the works that it is contemplated to construct with this money.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount that has been expended and the amount to be expended, the $18,000, is for constructing a pier at deep water, in order that the lumber which comes from the St. Maurice and the Ottawa, may be shipped there at deep water. Since those wharves have been built the trade has largely increased; but the intention is, that in accordance with the Act of incorporation, they will not be allowed to continue the work until the trade has sufficiently increased to produce a large surplus over and above the present expenses; therefore, they must wait until that trade increases before we can allow them to proceed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would enquire of the Minister of Public Works, after the statement of the Minister of Customs, that $300,000 was authorised, whether the Government had an option in the matter?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that this $34,000 is all that will be advanced to them, unless the Government is satisfied there is general need for it, and that the revenues are ample.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; so the law provides. I think $63,000 is expended and the balance is to complete the contract.

Mr. DAVIES. What is the income from toll, which is to be the security for the payment?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $6,000. They have quite enough to pay 4 per cent. and their expenses, and will have a surplus.

Mr. DAVIES. Is this to be a first charge on the revenue and before the expenses?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; before anything else.

Mr. DAVIES. What length of time has been mentioned in the bond for the re-payment of the money?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the ordinary figure is twenty years, but we may make it shorter. It will be in the Bill.

Resolution to be reported.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider a proposed resolution (p. 2420) respecting a provisional contract entered into between Mr. Andrew Allan and the Postmaster-General of Canada, for a weekly service of ocean mail steamers.

Mr. CARLING. The object of the resolution is to extend the contract to Andrew Allan for five years, from April last, and that the standard tonnage of the vessels shall be that of the contract now in existence. Another alteration is that the company shall carry the mails on their steamers running from Montreal to Glasgow, and also on their vessels from Halifax to Newfoundland and Liverpool, and shall also carry the mails free of charge. The chief object is to extend the contract for five years, as it has been in previous contracts, and to allow them to build larger vessels and to dispose of those of smaller tonnage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. CARLING. £500 per trip, the same as the previous contract, and $126,533 is the total amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister will recollect that at the time the previous contract was renewed some objection was taken to renewing it for so long a time as five years. There was an expression of opinion on both sides of the House that it might be expedient to renew these contracts from year to year, at any rate, not so long a period as five years. Although I am bound to say that the Allan line has been a very good line, and well conducted, still I think, at this time, five years is rather a long period to renew a contract with any particular line, and, to some extent, a little unfair to the other lines, which may become competing lines, and might reasonably expect that they should be allowed to tender for it at a shorter interval than five years. The hon, gentleman knows that there has been some feeling in mercantile circles on the subject, and it seems reasonable that we should not tie ourselves up for a considerable period by a special contract, without there being apparent any very strong reasons therefor. There was good reason, no doubt, in former days, when there was practically only this one line, but it does not appear quite so clear at present, that we ought to give the contract to any particular company for five years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon, gentleman will see that the St. Lawrence line has to fight a hard battle with the New York and Boston lines, especially with the New York companies. In order to enable them to retain their position, they are anxious to build larger vessels; but to enable them to do that with prudence, they would like to have a contract for five years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Postmaster General did not state that fact, that in this next contract special terms had been made to secure a higher rate of speed and increased size of vessel. The hon, gentleman supposed the Allan company would do that, but I understood from him that it was a one-sided contract. If the company are prepared to undertake to build a larger vessels and run them at a high rate of speed, then there would be force in the argument used by the First Minister. But that was not stated to the House as a part of the bargain with the Allan company for a renewal of the contract.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the Postmaster-General stated that the vessesls were to be larger.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He left that for the company to determine.

Mr. CARLING. It is in the contract.

Mr. CARLING.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are going to get larger vessels, and, of course, they will have greater speed, for it would be a losing game to have crawlers.

Mr. LANGELIER. Unless the company undertake to provide new and larger steamers, there is no advantage in giving the contract for more than one year. The First Minister is perfectly correct in his statement, that the St. Lawrence lines have a severe battle to fight with the lines going to New York and other American ports. That applies not only to the Allan line but the other lines. The Dominion line has shown a good deal of enterprise and has built fine steamers. It is important that the Government should take such action that the Allan line is not placed in a position to make an unfair competition with other lines not subsidised by the Government. It is within the to be substantially the same as the one which has subknowledge of some hon, members that the Dominion line sisted for the last twenty or twenty-five years, the standard steamers as fine as the best of the Allan line. The think the Sardinian, although a very good boat for times

Vancouver is as fine a vessel as is to be found on the St. Lawrence, and is as fast as the Parisian, which is considered the best of the Allan line. This spring, as we all know from the papers, so soon as the Allan line heard that the Dominion line intended to send the Vancouver on a particular date, they advertised that whatever that date might be, they, the Allan company, would send the Parisian. If that system is to be pursued, the public will suffer. We have to compete with the American lines, and the better and quicker our steamers are, the greater is the chance to secure a number of passengers. If there were several fast and fine steamers we would have more chance in the competition. If the Allan line sends the Parisian, which is the best steamer they possess, to compete with the steamers of the American lines, on the same day as the Vancouver sails, it is a disadvantage to the St. Lawrence route, for we have the two finest steamers leaving on one Saturday, and the following Saturday we have only fourth-class steamers, as we have seen during the season. Although the Allan line is, as a general rule, a very good one, yet, with the exception of the Parisian, it possesses no steamer to compete with the vessels of the Guion, White Star, or the new steamers of the Cunard line. That is to say, that the Vancouver and the Parisian are the only steamers coming to the St. Lawrence which are acknowledged to be in a position to compete with steamers sailing to American ports. Some provision should be put in the contract, giving power to the Postmaster-General to decide as to the particular steamers that are to be sent with the mails at different dates, in order to prevent the unfair competition of which I have spoken.

Mr. McNEILL. The Government should bring pressure to bear on the Allan line, to prevent their unfairly endeavoring to run other vessels off the route. No doubt, it would be of greater service to the public if the Vancouver, in place of sailing on the same day as the Parisian, were to sail two wecks afterwards.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Com-

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be convenient. when resolutions specifically refer to Orders in Council, that printed copies of such Orders be placed in the hands of members. It is not possible for us, at a moment's notice, when a resolution of this kind is put in our hands, to ferret out, from the manuscripts, which have probably lain three, or four, or five months on the Table of the House, the information we require. Has the hon, gentleman the Order in Council?

Mr. CARLING. I have a copy of the contract, which I will show the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No tenders have been asked for, I suppose?

Mr. CARLING. No. .

Mr. DAVIES. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will say if any provision was made in the contract with reference to the new and improved vessels, which were spoken of as one of the inducements for giving this large subsidy. I think we should be guaranteed that within a reasonable time after entering into the contract the company should place larger, better and more improved steamships on the route. We know that while some of the Allan boats are good boats, and well provided, others are very inferior, and these latter should be replaced by new and improved ones.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This contract appears has got some fine steamers—not the whole fleet—but some of size and power being the steamer Sardinian. I do not gone-by would now be considered a first-class vessel. The outward passage from Liverpool is not to exceed fourteen days, and the homeward passage thirteen days, on the average, which is certainly not a very high rate of speed. It appears to me that by the contract, although it may be that the Messrs. Allan may find it to their interest to give us larger vessels and higher rates of speed, there is nothing to compel them to do so. The obligation is all on our side; we have to find the money, and they are to perform the service to-day much as they used to do. I notice, however, that the Governor in Council is to fix the time of the departure of the steamers. It appears to me that, before we reach another stage, this contract would warrant a further examination, and that we should have the Order in Council as well as the contract.

Mr. CARLING. I might say that the standard is to be the Sardinian. The standard of the present contract is 3,440, while the Sardinian is 4,640, and it is the intention of the company to contract for larger steamers, the tonnage of which is not to be less than 5,000. The company are negotiating now, and are determined to put on a better class of steamers.

Mr. DAVIES. As I understand, there is no provision that the boats shall be first-class, but merely a voluntary state ment by the company that they intend to be so.

Mr. CARLING. By the contract they are bound to increase the tonnage to the standard of the Sardinian.

Mr. LANGELIER. There are some of these large steamers which have been cut in two, and an addition of some 60 or 70 feet made to them, but they are much too slow, as they have the same engines they had before they were enlarged. They may have 2,600 more, and still they may not be sufficient for that service. The system in the United States is to give short contracts to the best lines, and this system has been very successful. In England the Government has ceased to give permanent contracts, and they give the service to the most rapid steamers. There is no question that this contract gives a certain amount of prestige to the company, and it should be well deserved. When a company is advertised as being the mail line, people who do not know the various lines naturally believe that it is superior to any other line. I think we should not give such encouragement to a line that does not deserve it. I do not wish to say anything against the Allan line; it is a very good line, I admit, and if it was only to compete against the American lines I would say this arrangement was very well, but we must not forget that this subsidy may be used against other local lines, which deserve as much encouragement from us as the Allan line. I spoke of the Dominion line, but there may be other lines established within the next four or five years, and within five years I have no doubt we shall see on the St. Lawrence much better ships than we have just now, and we should try to encourage them.

Mr. DAVIES. I think it is to be regretted that the Postmaster General did not require better steamers than this contract calls for. While, ten or twelve years ago, thirteen or fourteen days would not be considered a long passage across the Atlantic, it is now an enormously long time. So many improvements have been made that New York vessels cross sometimes in six and a half days. Eight days is considered a long passage, and nine a very long passage; and yet all we ask is that they shall cross in fourteen days. And when we are bound up to that arrangement for five years, it seems to me there is some remissness in the matter. I think this contract is a little more important than the committee are aware of.

general satisfaction to the public; I know that they have standard as that of twenty years ago, fourteen days, is still given entire satisfaction to the Post Office Department; and, although the time fixed in the contract is thirteen or fourteen days, as a general rule they make the passage in nine days, and sometimes less, and in this contract they guarantee to make the standard of tonnage higher than it was before —to increase it from 3,440 tons to 4,650 tons.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true; but it does not entirely answer the question whether the Postmaster General, under existing circumstances, ought not to have had recourse to a tender. Other things being equal, I would myself be disposed to give the preference to an old established line like the Allan line, and all the Postmaster General has said is true, that they have given satisfaction. But it must be remembered that they have received a considerable amount of public money. Their original contract was, I think, $430,000; for many years they received $216,000; and now they have $126,000, which is the interest, at 5 per cent., on $2,500,000; and I suppose $400,000 or $500,000 would about represent the cost of one of the finest vessels. It is a matter of very great importance to us that the Canadian line, which is considerably shorter than the New York line, should be efficiently supplied with ships. We might establish a passage of six days with ease, I should think, from such a point as Rivière du Loup, which is about 400 or 500 ocean miles nearer to Liverpool than New York; and when New York vessels are making the distance in seven days habitually, it is not too much for us to expect that corresponding speed, at any rate during the summer, should be attained by Canadian lines. There is nothing in this contract to indicate that the company are to be bound, and it is quite clear that the other lines have had no show. The Minister has not attempted to enquire whether the Dominion line or any of the lines now being established were prepared to compete with the conditions he has proposed for the Allan line. It may be that they would not be able to perform the service, but it appears to me that the time has come when they ought to have the chance, or that we should not give the contract for five years at a time.

Mr. LANGELIER. There are two clauses in the contract that seem to be curiously worded—clauses 4 and 5.

Mr. CARLING. There is no change. The only change is to substitute Andrew Al an for Hugh Allan.

Mr. LANGELIER. Still, the contract leaves it free to the company to stop either at Quebec or Montreal. Under it the steamers might pass in front of Quebec, without stopping. They may not do it, but the contract allows them to do it. It is actually being done by some other companies the Beaver line, for instance, which constantly passes Quebec and goes direct to Montreal.

Mr. CARLING. The contract is not at all changed.

Mr. LANGELIER. There was no reason to make that change a few years ago, because it was not thought that a steamer would pass by Quebec without stopping, but that is now actually happening. Some goods intended for Quebec are actually being carried first to Montreal by the Beaver line. It would be much to be regretted that our mails should pass to Montreal and come back to Quebec again. I cannot understand the Postmaster General consenting to

Mr. DAVIES. What was the date of the contract? Mr. CARLING. 1882.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman seems to be under the impression that he has really secured something better in this contract when he put in the Sardinian as a standard, her tonnage being larger than that of other vessels; but although the tonnage standard has been increased, no effort Mr. CARLING. I think the Allan Company have given has been made to secure an increased speed. The same retained. It is, I may say, a misfortune that we have not a clause in the contract stipulating for quicker passages, when entering into a contract for five years, which is no small matter, when we consider the improvements in steam navigation that are being made every year.

Mr. McNEILL. If the Government take care that the fast vessels of the other lines are not shadowed by the fast vessels of the Allan line, the contract is all right. The natural competition among the different lines competing for traffic across the Atlantic will give us a fast vessel. The Allans cannot afford to let any company outstrip them, either in appointment, size or speed.

Mr. DAVIES. They do.

Mr. McNEILL. I think not. The Allan line is at present as good as any other Canadian line. The Parisian is at least as good as the Vancouver. I am satisfied that if a fair competition is allowed among the different lines, so far as this difficulty is concerned, it will right itself. What I object to is that fair competition does not exist now. The Allan line has an advantage, by reason of its contract with the Government, and takes advantage of it to deal unfairly with their competitors.

Mr. DAVIES. Their competitors are handicapped $126,000 a year.

Mr. McNEILL. The Allans are taking an unfair advantage, and the Government should take care to prevent that, as far as possible. I understood from the remarks of the hon, member for Huron there was a provision in the contract enabling the Government to prevent any such unfair dealing on the part of the Allans—that the Government could arrange the days on which the vessels sailed.

Mr. DAVIES. Not particular vessels.

Mr. McNEILL. They can so arrange the days that they will not compete with the days of sailing of other vessels. On those grounds, the thing will work right in the long run.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know whether the hon gentleman does not think that, in order to carry out this principle, the Government should have asked for tenders from the other companies?

Mr. McNEILL. There is a great deal of force in that, but, at the same time, there is a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman himself said a short time ago—that is, that an old company, such as the Allans, which has done so much service to this country, should be dealt with differently.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not say differently. I said, other things being equal.

Mr. McNEILL. I think it is only right they should get a certain preference, although I think the time must come when that must stop. In the meantime, I do not think we have much to complain of in that, though I think we have very much to complain of in the course the Allan line adopts with reference to other lines. That should be put an end to.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not agree at all with the hon. gentleman, that because the Allan line carried out their contract fairly, and were well paid for it, we should now give them $126,000 a year for mail service without calling for tenders. I am sorry the matter came up so late, as I would have liked to have had an expression of the opinion of the House on this point. It is against the interests of the country that other lines should be so handicapped. If they are driven off the field in consequence, what would the hon. gentleman have to say? My hon. friend is a political optimist. He thinks everything will be done all right. If his view is correct, there is no necessity for a contract at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must correct my hon. friend on one point. What I said was, that I thought the Allan Company should not get the contract without competition, but if other things were equal, and they were willing to do the work as cheaply as other people, there might then be fair ground for giving them the preference, always provided tenders were had. While they have served the country, they have received many millions of public money for the services rendered.

Resolution to be reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1 a.m., Tuesday.
