Though life we spend in sunny howers, Mid laugh og meads and scented flowers, And bliss attends our tranquit hours, Yet we must die.

Tho Love's bright torch may gladly blaze; Though teem with joy our ha, py days;
Though beauty's suite designs our gaze.
Yet we must die.

Though oft by fancy borne away, We bask in regions bright and gay; Where pleasure grows with constant ray, Yet we must die.

Though circled with the pomp of siste, Our word the law, our winsper fate, Our halls must soon be describe. Yet we must size.

For we must part with love's bright ray, Our gayest dreams must fit away, Wealth, beauty, pleasure art decay; And we must die.

PRAYER.

There is an eye that never sleeps Beneath the wing of night; There is an car that never shuts When darkness shrouds the light.

There is an aim that never tires
When human attempth gives away;
There is a love that never lails
When earthly loves decay.

Thateve is fix'd on straph throngs,-That car is hird with engel's songs,-That love is thron'd beyond the sky

But there's power which man can wield, When mor'al aid is vain. That eye, that arm that have to reach, That listening car to gain.

That power is prayer—supendous boon!
To said beings giv'u. A
It moves the Mind omorposent.
That rules o'er earth and heav'n.
