Poetry.

I Feel I'm Growing Auld, Guide Wife.

I feel I'm growing auld, guide wife—
I feel I'm growing auld;
My steps are frail my eyes are bleared,
My pow is unco lauld.
I've seen the snaws o' fourscore years
O'er hill and meadow fa,
And, hinnie! were it not for you,
I'd gladly slip awa.

I feel I'm growing auld, guide wife—
I feel I'm growing auld;
Frae youth to age I've kept warm
The love that ne'er turned cauld.
I canna bear the dreary thocht
That we maun sinder be;
There's naething binds my poor auld heart
To earth, guide wife, but thee.

I feel I'm growing auld, guide wife—
I feel I'm growing auld;
Life seems to me a winny waste,
The very sun feels cauld.
Of worldly friends ye've been to me
Among them a' the best;
Now, I'll lay down my weary head,
Guide wife and be at rest.

The Mother's Dream.

I'd a dream to-night
As I fell asleep,
Oh! the touching sight
Makes me still to weep
Of my little lad,
Gone to leave me sad,
Aye the little child I had,
But was not to keep.

As in heaven high
I my child did seek,
There, in train, came by
Children fair and meek,
Each in lily white,
With a lamp alight;
Each was clad to sight,
But they did not speak.

Then a little sad,
Came my child to turn,
But the lamp he had
Oh! it did not burn;
He, to clear my doubt,
Said, half turned about,
"Your tears put it out;
Mother, never mourn!"

DICK'S ANSWER.

It was a pretty picture. The long stretch of sand and beach on which the foaming waves broke into spray of glittering light in the warm summer sunshine, the great sea spreading far away, its surface only rippled by the soft, delicious breeze that blew in landward, and the mussy, gray rocks, at whose feet the waters murmured strange stories of the lands they had come from, far away, and on whose jagged summit Lucie Gray was sitting, an open book lying in her lap.

She heard a step upon the rough path leading up the cliff behind her, and turned her eyes that way for a moment, to see who the intruder on her quiet might be.

It was Dick Gorham. A little soft flush crept up to her cheeks as she saw who it was.

"You here, Miss Gray?" cried Dick, in his cheery, pleasant way, as he accomplished the ascent of the cliff. "I did not expect to find any one here, I assure you. A beautiful prospect, isn't it? Sweeping his hand towards the sea.

Very beautiful, she answered, but hardly worth climbing the cliff for, I think. It takes away one's breath so to clamber over the rocks, and makes one so red in the face. I can't help laughing to look at you.

Poor Dick looked still redder in the face as he dropped his eyes before her cool scrutiny, and heard her musical little laugh of amusement at his appearance.

I suppose that's like most things in life, he said, trying to look and appear at ease. We must work for what we would enjoy. The pleasures which cost us most we value most.

Ah! Lucie seemed hardly to comprehend what he was saying. She liked to tease him so.

You were reading, he said. What book was it? This one, she answered, holding up the book which was lying in her lap, and smilingly provokingly.

I know that well enough; but what book is it?—the name of it is what I want to know.

Oh, that is it, is it? she asked, laughing. It is Tennyson's "Search for the Holy Grail."

Let me read to you, please, he said, reaching forward and taking the book from her hand. Their fingers met. He looked down earnestly into her face. Her eyes had been on the sea; but, as if by some kind of magnetism, she lifted them and in this gaze. A soft color suffused her face, and immediately her eyes dropped before his steady glance.

He set down and read to her from the place where he thinned to first open the book. His deep, rich voice fitted the musical rhythm of the poet's fanciful words, and he read on for more than an hour. These were the last words he read ere he closed the book:

The Queen.

Looked hard upon her lover, he on her,
And each foresaw the dolorous day to be;
And all talk died, as in a grove a song,
Beneath some shadow of a leaf of piny;
Then a long silence came upon the scene,
And Mordred thought, The time is hard at hand.

He let the book slip from his hand upon the mossy rock where he was sitting, and there was a little time of silence; both seemed absorbed in their own thoughts. Dick was thinking; not of the poem he had been reading, but of the woman sitting near. He suddenly turned, and their eyes met.

"The Queen looked hard upon her lover, he on her," quoted Lucie. "Are you thinking of a dolorous time to be, Sir Galahad? or shall I call you Pellinor—which would you prefer?"

Call me Dick—that's a good enough name, he answered; or if you'll be Queen, I'll be Lancelot.

Dick blushed at his boldness before the words he left his lips.

But he was the Queen's lover, and Lucie, as though at a loss to comprehend why Dick should wish to be Lancelot if she was the Queen.

I am aware of that, answered Dick; and does not the comparison hold good if I am your lover?

Lucie turned away her eyes from his face, with a strange flutter at her heart. Was he going to propose? She knew he was. And she knew, too, that she loved him; but she liked to tease him too well to tell him so just then.

I do love you, Lucie, Dick said, more bold, now that he had gone so far. You must have seen it this long time, though I have not said anything to you about it before.

Are you talking to me in the character of Lancelot, imagining me to be the Queen? asked Lucie, stooping to pick up the book, in order that she might hide her rosy face.

No, answered Dick, earnestly; I'm talking to you in my own character—as Dick Gorham—and I wish you would answer me seriously, and tell me whether you love me or not.

Lucie was silent for some time. Dick began to think she had not heard him; or was she questioning her heart, to find out whether she loved him well enough to give herself to him. At last she spoke.

I think I like the Holy Grail better than anything of Tennyson's I have ever read before; better than the "Lays of the King" or "Enoch Arden."

What do you say?

There was nothing in her tone or manner that seemed to indicate she had heard him, though he knew well enough she had; she was teasing him. Please, Lucie, answer my question, he said, trying to take her hand; but she managed to keep it out of his reach, as she said slowly, and with a look of mischief upon her face that would not have been there if her thoughts had been wholly absorbed in the epic of the poet's. How grand the climax of this poem is! It is like the end of all things—the battle field, with not a living soul upon it save the King. It makes me shiver when I think of it.

He answered not a word, but turned and walked away down the steep path-way leading from the summit of the cliff. He heard a little tinkle of a laugh as he went down the rocks, and knew that she was enjoying his discomfiture.

Poor Dick was in an enviable state of mind. He had committed himself at last, but Lucie had left him in doubt and uncertainty as to the real state of her feelings towards him; and as he claimed down in the late afternoon sunshine, I am afraid he had some hard, angry thoughts about the woman he had left behind him on the cliff.

When Dick reached the beach he jumped into a boat that was rocking in the surf, and pushed off from the shore. Looking up, he saw Lucie watching him from the cliff. She waved her handkerchief towards him when she saw him look that way, and call out that it looked like a storm in the east, and he had better be careful of himself.

Very little she cared if anything should happen to me! said Dick, bitterly, as he rowed away, not even looking towards the east, where a cloud was spreading with rapidity.

A slight wind was beginning to blow, too; but he was not thinking of wind or water just then; his thoughts were of Lucie, and of the manner in which she avoided a direct reply to his serious question as to whether she reciprocated the love he had expressed for her.

The sun went down in a lurid cloud of flame that evening, and the storm Lucie Gray had foreseen came up rapidly and threateningly.

She stood in front of the hotel at the watering-place where she and her aunt were staying, after returning from her ramble to the cliff, and she watched the increasing commotion of the sea. A fear was tormenting her. Dick Gorham had not come back. The storm had come up so unexpectedly that perhaps he had not time to put into a safe place with his boat, before it might have been impossible for him to do so; and if he had not gained a temporary harbor somewhere, where was he? A frail, light boat, like the one he had gone away in, would stand but little chance of safety among the angry waves of the sea before her.

I'm afraid he'll get drowned, if he isn't already, said Lucy to herself, as she watched the surf which broke in a white line upon the shore, dimly distinguishable through the gloom of the night from the position she had taken. If he had put into shore when the wind first began to blow so terribly, he could have walked home easily enough, for he would know we should be anxious to learn that he was safe. I'm afraid—oh! I'm afraid he's dead; and I was so provoking to him to-day! If I had only answered him as I ought to have done, he would not have gone into that boat, but at least, he would have returned to shore with all haste on the appearance of the storm. If he is lost I cannot hold myself blameless!

And then she began to cry. Poor Lucie! after a dolorous time Dick had real to her about was at hand.

All night long the storm beat wild and dashed the waters against the rocks in wild, terrific glee; but, in the chill, gray morning, it tired itself out, and died, with many moans and shuddering throes upon the shore. And on the beach they found, in the morning grayness, the boat Dick Gorham had gone away in. It was battered and broken, but still enough was left of it to be easily identified.

There's no doubt but he was drowned last night in the storm, the men said to each other. Too bad! He was such a fine young fellow.

Lucie kept her room all the forenoon. She did not dare to go out, where she would be sure to hear from every one she met some conjecture as to the probability of Dick's death, or some sentiment of regret for his untimely fate. How much she reproached herself with being the cause of it, if she had only acted differently—if she had not delighted so much in teasing him, he might have been there with her safe and well, instead of, as was most probable, at the bottom of the sea.

But, by afternoon, the confinement of her room grew oppressive; and she put on a dark wrap, and threw a thick veil over her hair, to hide her swollen eyes, and went down to the beach. She at least expected to see his white, dead face looking up at her reproachfully from every pool where the sea-wood had collected, or that a wave would come dashing in, and toss his dead body at her feet.

If they only knew how guilty I am up there, she said, looking towards the hotel, they'd call me a murderer, I know; and I feel like one. If I had only answered him as he wanted me to, poor Dick! And I did love him! Oh, dear! If it were—Oh, oh!

For a pair of strong arms had clasped themselves about her, and a bright, glad face—not much like the face of a dead man—looked into hers, laughing at the flight the sudden embrace caused.

Oh, Dick, is it you? cried Lucie, her face telling more than her voice how glad she was to see him living, when she had thought him dead. I thought you were drowned!

I am not dead yet, answered Dick, kissing her plump on the lips.

Oh, Dick, I am so glad to see you again. I had almost despaired of this pleasure. I should never have forgiven myself if you had been drowned. But tell me how you escaped.

I got ashore on Fisher's Island, and the storm blew my boat away in the night; so I had to wait till the afternoon before I could get off to the mainland. That's all there was about it; but I am glad it's happened, for it it hadn't, I might never have found out that you cared for me. But I heard you say you did, and I'm perfectly satisfied with the adventure.

But I thought you were dead when I said that, she said archly.

Dead or living, it is the same, answered Dick. You said you loved me and that's enough.

So Dick got his answer at last.

LIFE-INSURANCE, like every other good thing, may be abused. It is the beneficent science of medicine to be discarded because there are quacks? Life Insurance does not profess to be a guaranty against death, but to secure something to the benefit of the survivors in case of death.

Progress of Music, &c.

There are certain things though apparently small, which give to a shrewd observer a clear perception of the remaining conditions of which these form a part. For example, from the character of the coffee and butter at a hotel, a ready conclusion may be reached as to the character of the entire accommodations afforded. The principle here involved, will be found to be equally applicable to a private house, city or country. An acute observer might almost undertake to judge of a whole people from one of their festivals. A few minutes' observation would reveal to him the coarseness as well as refinement, for both doubtless, would be openly manifest on such an occasion. Dickens, for example, did not require to see much in order to arrive at a correct judgment of things, where perhaps a million of other Englishmen would have seen nothing worthy of notice. There is, probably no way by which the real character of a people can be so easily ascertained, as by comparing their amusements with those of others. The rapid and astonishing development of this country, in extent of area, in population, in wealth, in strength, and, we are happy to add, in their amusements also, exceeds that of any other country in the world; a most agreeable and convincing proof which we had at the opening of the Handel and Hayden Society. Some thirteen years since we listened to a concert of this society consisting of a dry, monotonous, and intensely uninteresting oratorio from Handel.

We have all due respect for Handel as one of the fathers of music; but we object to hearing it in a concert, as much as we object to the old "blue laws" in society. This last concert was the contrast to the former, not only in the selections of the programme, but in every thing. If this society improves in the future as rapidly as during the past, it will not be long before it will compare most favorably with any other in the world. We were also much pleased with the improvement of the audience as with the music, being glad to miss the disagreeable noise of "whistles" and other quite unnecessary unmusical exhortations of a popular. We will remember the time when the hissing or applause by the multitude in nearly every place was enough, almost, to drive a person with sense to madness.

A concert like that of the Handel and Hayden Society, does one good, soul and body, and from which we think no one would leave either unhappy or displeased. Good music is the only excitement which does not expose one to repentance; and the improvement of the musical taste of the American people during the last fifteen years is truly most surprising.

With regard to the advancement of general science, we cannot say much; and in reference to medical science, we will only remark that it is much more gratifying to hear, and to criticize music in this country, than to do the same of medicine. [From Good Health, for June.]

Widowhood.

"I think it must be a jolly thing to be a young widow!" I heard this remark, the other day, in a group of laughing girls. I think I remember saying such a thing myself in the careless girl's time.

Do you know, girls, what it is to be a widow? It is to be ten times more open to comment and criticism than my dearest could possibly be. It is to have men gaze at you pass, first at you, then at your black dress, and then at your widow's cap, until your sensitive nerves quiver under the infliction. It is to have one ill-matured person say, "I wonder how long she will wait before she marries again?" and another answer, "Until she gets a good chance, I suppose." It is now and then to meet a glance of real sympathy, generally from the poorest and humblest women that you meet, and feel your eyes fill at the token, so rare, that it is, alas! unlooked for.

It is to have your dear fashionable friends conclude with you after the following fashion:—"Oh, well! It's a dreadful loss. We knew you'd feel it, poor dear." And in the next breath, "You will be sure to marry again, and your widow's cap is very becoming to you."

But it is more than this to be a widow. It is to miss the strong arm that you have leaned upon, the true faith that you knew could never fail you, though all the world might forsake you. It is to miss the dear voice that uttered your name with a tenderness none other could give it. It is to hear never more the well known footsteps that you flew so gladly once to meet. To see no more the face that, to your adoring eyes, seemed as the faces of the angels of God! To feel no more the twining arms that folded you so lovingly; the dear eyes that looking into your own, said, so plainly, whatever it might seem to others, yours was the fairest face earth held for him. It is to fight with a mighty sorrow as a man fights with the waves that overwhelm him, and to hold it at arm's length for a while, only to have—in hours of loneliness and weakness—the torrent roll over you, while—poor storm-driven dove! you see no haven of peace in the distance but heaven!

But, thank God, it is yet more than this to be a widow. It is to feel that the soul which was part of your being on earth is an angel now; to know that in the spirit-land he yearns for your voice, your touch, your presence; that even there his lips have not forgotten to syllable the sacred name of "wife," that his memory, pure and true, guards and wraps you in its mantle of protection; that if you, too, are good and true, the Good Father will send for you after a while, to the far country, where your lover waits, and where the hearts that have been severed on earth will be reunited in heaven, where God shall wipe away all tears from your eyes, and there shall be no more sorrow, or weeping, for behold! the former things have passed away.

—Mrs. P. Y. Cutler.

FAT MEN.—It is a striking fact that most persons want to weigh more than they do, and measure their health by their weight, as if man were a pig. The racer is not fat, a good plough horse has but a moderate amount of flesh. Heavy men are not those which export erect contractors employ to build railroads and dig ditches. Thin men, the world over, are the men for endurance; are the wiry and hardy; thin people live the longest. The truth is, fat is a disease, and as a proof, fat people are never well a day at a time—are not suited for hard work. Still, there is a medium between fat as a butter ball and as thin and juiceless as a fence rail. For mere looks, moderate rotundity is most desirable, to have enough flesh to cover all angularities.

To accomplish this in the shortest time, a man should work but little, sleep a great part of the time, allow nothing to worry him, keep always in a jolly, laughing mood, and live chiefly on unadulterated, such as boiled cracked wheat, and rice, oat meal, and corn, and barley, with sweet milk, and buttermilk, and fat meats. Sugar is the best fattener known.—Trade Journal.

THE TEETH are said to have a higher of life than that commonly assigned to them—namely, that of merely crushing or masticating food. They are to be regarded as endowed with a tactile sense, a discriminating faculty corresponding to that possessed by the muscles and nerves of the eye and ear. Teeth have no extreme delicacy of discernment, both as to whether the objects committed to them are to be crushed, or such as will irritate the delicate lining of the oesophagus. They speedily detect the smallest particle of food that has found its way into a freely baked biscuit, and yet both are pulverized with much the same force of soul.

M. Fraud, the English historian, eloquently says, alluding to the Darwinian theory of the descent of man: "It may be true—I for one, care not if it be—that the descent of our mortal bodies may be traced through an ascending series to some glaucous jelly, foamed on the rocks of the primordial ocean. It is nothing to me how the primal Maker of man has been prepared to construct the organized substance which I call my body. It is mine, but not me. The intellectual spirit being as essence, we believe to be an imperishable something engendered in us from a higher source."

"Sam," said a late minister of Drumbledale one day to his man-of-all-work, "you must battle the cask of whisky this forenoon; but as the vapor from the whisky may be injurious, take a glass before you begin, to prevent intoxication." Now, Samuel was an old soldier, and never was in better's spirits than when bottling whisky; and having received from his master a special licence to taste, went to work most heartily. Some hours after the minister visited the cellar to inspect progress, and was horrified to find Sam lying full length on the floor, unconscious of all around. "O Sam!" said the minister, "you have not taken my advice, and you see the consequence—rise Sam, and take a glass yet, it may restore you. Sam, nothing left, took the glass from the minister's hand, and having emptied it, said, "Oh, sir, this is the thirteenth glass I've taken, but I'm the better!"

The new Plague.

The Chicago Tribune thinks the present year promises to be one of unusual activity in the insect world. The locust in the North and the Hessian fly in the Southern wheat fields, the club-bug to the Westward, and the poisonous potato bug almost all over the country, will do immense damage.

Their appearance in such unwonted numbers is supposed to be due to the greater heat of last year, and the deficient rainfall, which was scarcely more than three fourths of the average, all over the civilized world.

The much dreaded seventeen year locust has already appeared in Illinois.

But the invader which there is most reason to dread in New England is not the locust but the potato bug which are now marching eastward from the Rocky mountains.

When Colorado began to be settled, a wild potato was found on the eastern slope of the mountains, which was infested by the larvae of a species of beetle.

This insect soon attacked the cultivated potato, and under the name of the Colorado potato bug, began its eastward advance. It entered Wisconsin at the southwest corner, in 1862; Northern Indiana in 1867; Southern Illinois in 1868; and is now moving on, with its front forming an irregular line, extending from the north-western border of Ohio to places south of Indianapolis.

Within seven or eight years, at most, it threatens to reach the Atlantic coast, and to destroy or seriously limit the culture of the potato, throughout the northern states.

No official remedy against this insect appears to have been discovered. Some farmers assert that common sawdust, sprinkled on the vines, will drive away the bugs. But the methods by which they are to be finally exterminated, do not seem to be satisfactorily ascertained.

SAD CASE OF DROWNING.—Mr. Samuel King, aged 22, son of S. T. King, Esq. of the firm of S. T. King & Son, was drowned at Merquito Cove, in the Parish of Lancaster, between 9 and 10 o'clock on Saturday morning.

He was on a single log in the mill pond, in the act of bringing it to the slip when he was seen to fall from the log into the water, and before assistance could be afforded he was drowned. After sinking the first time he rose to the surface twice and then sunk to rise no more. His body was grappled for and recovered in twenty minutes, and Medical assistance was procured as soon as possible, but every means resorted to, to resuscitate proved in vain.

The Standard.

SAINT ANDREWS, JUNE 14, 1871.

FRANCE.—The situation in France has been improved since the fall of the Communists. The people who have the interest of the country at heart, are working with might and main to bring order out of the late terrible confusion. The form of government to be adopted is still uncertain—whether it will be a republic, a kingdom or an empire. The Bonapartists are alive and active; they are to a great extent popular—the House of Orleans and the Bourbon cause is in the ascendant. Count Chambord appears to be by consent of two powerful parties "the coming man." It is not probable under all the circumstances, that a Republic will be adopted; the French are too equitable a nation for that form of government; they require a more aristocratic system; whatever may be determined, we hope that France may be preserved from further bloodshed and trouble.

The New Hotel.

Is the scheme of which we heard so much during the winter, and which gave such flattering hopes of success to end where it began? On Paper! or, are our people going to put their shoulders to the wheel and carry it out to completion? Are we not all tired of hearing, reading or even writing the fact patent to all who have eyes in their heads, that St. Andrews is a place destined by nature for a sea-bathing summer retreat? To which the parched up, semi-smothered denizens of the smoke-begrimed cities of the Dominion will hasten during the heat of summer as to a terrestrial paradise. Have we talked about and waited so long for this flood of strangers and money that we now believe ourselves to have been the victims of delusion, and that either our town does not possess the advantages which we fondly imagined it did, or else that those who were wont to patronize the Saratoga of the continent must have given the practice up, or have gone on a new route to Europe, Asia, or the cool shades and mesquites of Greenland or Labrador.

To a greater or less extent our people are the victims of this delusion. We are too apt to believe that all the world knows of our town and its advantages, when the fact is that the world does not know of our existence. If the inhabitants of Boston one and all knew just what we know about these matters, we venture to predict that no $3000 would be wanted from the town for the erection of a hotel. The demand for accommodation would surely follow the knowledge of our climate and privileges as to end in the erection of Hotels by those speculators ever ready to indulge in an assurance.

What is wanted of us then is this:—We must let people know of our beautiful town, of its healthiness, its easy accessibility, and the delicious coolness of our climate. We must let them know of our quiet security, and the absence of riots in our streets, drunkenness, murder, thefts, and those other disgusting crimes which are daily being perpetrated around them in their city home, being here almost unknown. And we must ask them to come, and get ready to receive them. The Hotel must be built. As all will be benefited by its erection each should contribute according to his ability towards its erection. The Country people who find here a market for their produce will be benefited perhaps as much as any other class of the community, and as their credit at the Savings Bank is very large, they cannot should throw it in their mite. It is useless to plead that those only should invest who can afford to lose their contribution. Our rich men are no more able to build it than our poor. Co-operation is what is wanted. How many of those who can afford to lose $20 are unwilling to invest that amount. But who can say that money so invested will be lost. Similar investments in other places prove very good paying ones, and if our advantages are so much superior why should not our reputation be surer. The promoters of the scheme ought now to come to the front, and let the public say whether the town shall pay that $3000 or not. Should that donation be refused by our citizens, we say forever after let them hold their peace concerning our advantages and the good time coming. The hope of our future, we believe with old Noll—Trust in Providence, but keep your powder dry.

The Hon. Mr. Tilley, and the Hon. Dr. Tupper and family are expected here on Friday next from Ottawa, and it is probable that Sir John and Lady McDonald will be guests of the Minister of Customs during the summer. Several other distinguished Canadians will pay St. Andrews a flying visit, as at present there are not accommodations for their families, a difficulty which it is hoped will be removed ere another season comes round. Several families we heard of, who desired to spend the summer here, have been obliged to adopt Digby and other seaports, as they could not obtain lodgings here.

We learn from the "Globe," from which paper by the way, we are frequently indebted for the latest telegrams, and news items, that the ST. STEPHEN elections took place on Monday, when the following persons were returned:—

Mr. JAMES DOW, Mayor. Messrs. Henry Hutten, John Short, John F. Grant, G. N. Lindsay, Wm. Vaughan, and A. L. Todd, Councillors. We congratulate Mayor Dow on his election

We are inclined to believe that the Hon. Mr. TILLEY, has not accepted the Governorship of any Province in the Dominion, and that from the time he was offered the appointment of Governor of New Brunswick up to the present, he has uniformly refused these offers.

THE COUNTY COURT was opened here on Tuesday, His Honor Judge Stevens presiding. There were only two causes entered for trial.

His Excellency General Doyle, arrived at St. John, with his suite, on Monday evening, and is staying at the Waverley.

We are happy to state that Mr. A. D. Stevenson has so far recovered, as to be able to be driven out to day.

RAIN.—On Sunday last rain began to fall, and continued at intervals until night. Monday morning it commenced again and continued all day, thoroughly soaking the parched ground.—The grass crop promises a fair return, and the grain and root crops look well and thrifty. Tuesday afternoon was showery and the ground is now sufficiently moist, for the crops generally. The hearts of the farmers have been cheered by the timely and refreshing showers.

A Sad Story.

A sad romance of real life culminated a few days ago at the Tomb's Police Court. Major Gen. Charles Munday, late of Tallahassee, Fla., an officer who had graduated at West Point, been in the army for over twenty years, and served with distinction in the Union army during the war, left his Southern home some weeks ago to attend the reunion of the Army of the Potomac, and the annual meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic at Boston. There he met with many of his former comrades in arms, and the revival of old army associations and incidents, tending naturally enough to rather hilarious conviviality, General Munday prolonged his stay in the North longer than he intended. Going to New York on his way to Florida, where he owned a large cotton plantation, General Munday spent some days in company with friends and army acquaintances whom he casually met, and was in some way induced to buy an interest in a drinking saloon at No. 110 West street, for which he paid $250. Whilst there he was arrested for grand larceny, on some unfounded charge, brought by some looters who frequented the saloon, and was taken to the Tombs. He decided to communicate with his friends, and on Saturday was taken out of his cell in a fit. In twenty-five minutes afterwards he died, although everything was done for him that could be done by Dr. Nealis. His friend, Col. T. B. Hamilton, of the Sixty-second New York, became aware of the circumstances, and gave evidence yesterday morning at the coroner's inquest. The body was removed to the Astor House, from whence the funeral took place.

Profits on Patent Sewing Machines.

We condense the following from an interesting article in the "Scientific American":

The organization of a large sewing machine company—capital, five hundred thousand dollars—is being agitated at Chicago, for the manufacture of the Sewer machine. The following statements in regard to the past and present progress of the sewing machine business are furnished by the projectors of the new enterprise:

Up to 1860 there had been manufactured and sold in the United States only about 104,000 machines, of which Wheeler & Wilson made 21,000; Grover & Baker, 10,000; Singer & Co. 11,000; Willcox & Gibbs, 7,500; all others, about 5,000.

The business was still in its infancy, still $5,000,000 were invested in the manufacture; and these leading manufacturers have, since that date, so increased their great establishments that in the year 1870 there were turned out more than 500,000 machines, a half million in a single year, and yet the demand could not be supplied. It is stated as a fact, that orders come in upon these factories much faster than even with all their facilities, they can turn out the machines.

In 1870 Singer & Co. made and sold the enormous aggregate of 140,000 sewing machines, and the others kept up their proper proportion.

These machines have not only become a necessity in every family, but they are largely used in all the factories of boots and shoes, clothing, hats and caps, etc., so that the mere domestic demand does not amount to one fourth part of the entire trade; some of the large factories of New York and England have in constant use from 200 to 1000 machines each.

There is no limit to the demand for all first class machines, and it has been estimated that before the expiration of the next ten years, 1,000,000 sewing machines per annum will be required.

The old companies accumulated their vast capital of millions out of the business, and the principal companies have declared and paid dividends for years, of from 75 to 400 per cent upon their capital stock, besides accumulating a reserved fund of an equal or larger amount, for the extension of their works and offices throughout the country.

Of the value of the stock in the principal companies, we would illustrate by stating the fact, that the par stock in some of the best companies five years old cannot be bought for 2,500 per cent premium, and the value is entirely unknown to the outside public.

The transfer of the capital of Italy from Florence to Rome is fixed for the 1st of July.

The new Plague.

The Chicago Tribune thinks the present year promises to be one of unusual activity in the insect world. The locust in the North the Hessian fly in the Southern wheat fields, the chinch-bug to the Westward, and the poisonous potato bug almost all over the country, will do immense damage.

But the invader which there is most reason to dread in New England is not the locust but the potato bug which are now marching eastward from the Rocky mountains. When Colorado began to be settled, a wild potato was found on the eastern slope of the mountains, which was infested by the larvae of a species of beetle.

This insect soon attacked the cultivated potato, and under the name of the Colorado potato bug began its eastward advance. It entered Wisconsin at the southwest corner, in 1862; Northern Indiana in 1867; Southern Illinois in 1868; and is now moving on, with its front forming an irregular line, extending from the north-west to the south-east of Ohio to places south of Indianapolis.

Within seven or eight years, at most, it threatens to reach the Atlantic coast, and to destroy or seriously limit the culture of the potato, throughout the northern states.

No effective remedy against this insect appears to have been discovered. Some farmers assert that common sawdust, sprinkled on the vines, will drive away the bugs. But the methods by which they are to be finally exterminated, do not seem to be satisfactorily ascertained.

SAD CASE OF DROWNING.—Mr Samuel King, aged 22, son of S. T. King, Esq. of the firm of S. T. King & Son, was drowned at Mesquite Cove, in the Parish of Lancaster, between 9 and 10 o'clock on Saturday morning. He was on a single log in the mill pond, in the act of bringing it to the slip when he was seen to fall from the log into the water, and before assistance could be afforded he was drowned. After sinking the first time he rose to the surface twice and then sank to rise no more. His body was grappled for and recovered in twenty minutes, and medical assistance was resorted to, to restore life proved vain.

An inquest was held by Coroner James Robinson, of Lancaster, and a verdict of accidental death by drowning returned.—Mr. King was a young man of fine appearance, and was much respected by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance.—Daily News.

SAINT ANDREWS, JUNE 14, 1871.

FRANCE.—The situation in France has been improved since the fall of the Communists. The people who have the interest of the country at heart, are working with might and main to bring order out of the late terrible confusion. The form of government to be adopted is still uncertain—whether it will be a republic, a kingdom or an empire. The Bonapartists are alive and active; they are to a great extent popular—the House of Orleans and the Bourbon cause is in the ascendant. Count Chambord appears to be by consent of two powerful parties "the coming man." It is not probable under all the circumstances, that a Republic will be adopted; the French have too extensible a notion for that form of government, they require a more aristocratic system; whatever may be determined, we hope that France may be preserved from further bloodshed and trouble.

The New Hotel.

Is the scheme of which we heard so much during the winter, and which gave such flattering hopes of success to end where it began? On paper! or, are our people going to put their shoulders to the wheel and carry it out to completion? Are we not all tired of hearing, reading, or even writing the patent fact to all who have eyes in their heads, that St. Andrews is a place destined by nature for a sea-bathing summer retreat? To which the parched up, sun-baked, and feverish of the smoke-brimmed cities of the Dominion will hasten during the heat of summer as to a terrestrial paradise. Have we talked about and waited so long for this flood of strangers and money that we now believe ourselves to have found the victims of delusion, and that either our town does not possess the advantages which we fondly imagined it did, or else that those who were wont to patronize the Saratogas of the continent must have given the practice up, or have gone on a new route to Europe, Asia or the cool shades and mosquitoes of Greenland or Labrador.

To a greater or less extent our people are the victims of this delusion. We are too apt to believe that all the world knows of our town and its advantages, when the fact is that the world does not know of our existence. If the inhabitants of Boston and all knew just what we know about these matters, we venture to predict that no $5000 would be wanted from the town for the erection of a hotel. The demand for accommodation would so surely follow the knowledge of our climate and privileges as to end in the erection of Hotels by those speculators ever ready to indulge in a sure thing.

What I wanted of us then is this:—We must let people know of our beautiful town, of its healthfulness, its easy accessibility, and the delicious coolness of our climate.—We must let them know of our quiet security, and the absence of riots in our streets, drunkenness, murder, thefts, and those other disgusting crimes which are daily being perpetrated around them in their city home, being here almost unknown. And we must ask them to come, and get ready to receive them. The Hotel must be built. As all will be benefited by its erection each should contribute according to his ability towards its erection. The Country people who find here a market for their produce will be benefited perhaps as much as any other class of the community, and as their credit at the Savings Bank is very large, they can and should throw in their mite. It is useless to plead that those only should invest who can afford to lose their contribution. Our rich men are no more able to build it than our poor. Co-operation is what is wanted. How many of those who can afford to lose $20 are unwilling to invest that amount. But who can say that money so invested will be lost. Similar investments in other places prove very good paying ones, and if our advantages are so much superior why should not our speculation be surer. The promoters of the scheme ought now to come to the front, and let the public say whether the town shall pay that $5000 or not. Should that donation be refused by our citizens, we say forever after let them hold their peace concerning our advantages and the good time coming. The hope of our future, we believe with old Nill—Trust in Providence, but keep your powder dry.

The Hon. Mr. Tilley, and the Hon. Dr. Tupper and family are expected here on Friday next from Ottawa, and it is probably that Sir John and Lady McDonald will be guests of the Minister of Customs during the summer. Several other distinguished Canadians will pay St. Andrews a flying visit, as at present there are not accommodations for their families, a difficulty which it is hoped will be removed ere another season comes round. Several families we heard of, who desired to spend the summer here, have been obliged to obtain Digby and other resorts, as they could not adopt lodgings here.

We learn from the "Globe," from which paper by the way, we are frequently indebted for the latest telegrams, and news items, that the ST. STEPHEN elections took place on Monday, when the following persons were returned:—
Mr JAMES DOW, Mayor. Messrs. Henry Hutten, John Short, John F. Grant, G. N. Lindsay, Wm. Vaughan, and A. L. Todd, Councillors. We congratulate Mayor Dow on his election.

We are inclined to believe that the Hon. Mr. TILLEY, has not accepted the Governorship of any Province in the Dominion, and that from the time he was offered the appointment of Governor of New Brunswick up to the present, he has uniformly refused these offers.

THE COUNTY COURT was opened here on Tuesday, His Honor Judge Stevens presiding. There were only two cases entered for trial.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY THE GREAT REMEDY FOR CONSUMPTION, LUNG COMPLAINTS. This well known remedy is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years; and when resorted to in season, seldom fails to effect a speedy cure of Coughs, Colds, Croup, Bronchitis, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Pain of Throat, and all the Chest and Wind, Bleeding at the Lungs, Liver Complaints, &c. The medicinal success that has attended the application of this medicine in all cases of PULMONARY COMPLAINTS has induced many physicians of high standing to employ it in their practice, some of whom are to be seen on the enclosed list. We have space only for the names of a few of them:—ALEX. HAYDN, M.D. A. A. GRAM, M.D. R. H. WOOD, M.D. W. H. WOOD, M.D. Wm. A. BRY, M.D. W. H. LEWIS, M.D. E. FELLOW, M.D. A. FISKE, M.D. Such testimony CANNOT BE DISCREDITED. From the mass of evidence in our possession we select the following:—FROM L. F. RATINE, Esq., of La Motte, Montreal. "Having experienced the most gratifying results from the use of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I am pleased to express the great confidence which I have in its efficacy. For some months I was most severely afflicted with a severe and obstinate cough, accompanied with acute pain in the chest, which did not leave me, morning or night. My expectations increased accordingly, and so reduced was I that I was unable to get up, and almost ready to give up the struggle. At length I procured a bottle of the Balsam, from which I found immediate relief, and after having used four bottles, I was restored to health. I have used the Balsam in my family, and administered it to my children, with the happiest results. I am sure that every Canadian who has the Balsam in his medicine chest, will be glad to acknowledge its efficacy for various ailments."
