"In process of time, the ascendancy of wealth became complete. Its excellence was universally acknowledged, and power and honor followed in its train. From the same era, the decline of virtue may be dated. Poverty was now held as ignominious. Inno-cence of heart and simplicity of manners were interpreted into a satire on the times. Thus the youth, taught to look up to riches as the soverign good become apt pupils in the school of luxury. Avarice and pride sup-plied their receipts. Rapacity and profusion went hand in hand. Careless of their own fortunes, and eager to possess those of others, shame and remorse, modesty and moderation, every principle gave way. All rushed into a profligacy that heeded no restraint, either divine or human."-Sallust,

We have always considered it an unerring ign of innate vulgarity, when we have heard ladies take particular pains to impress us with an idea of their ignorance of all domestic matters, save sewing lace or weaving a net to en-case their empty heads. Ladies by some cu-rious kind of hocus pocus, have got into their heads, that the best way to catch a husband is to shew him how profoundly capable they are of doing nothing for his comfort. Frightening a piano into fits, or murdering the king's French, may be good bait for certain kinds usually found in very shallow water .--

DESCRIPTION OF A DRUNKARD-A Pious divine of the old schools says, "A drunkard is the annoyance of modesty, the trouble of civility, the caterpillar of industry, the tunnel of wealth, the ale-house benefactor, the beggar's companion, the constable's trouble, the vo of his wife, the scoff of his neighbor : his own shame, the picture of a beast, and the Mill.

The Boundary question, between Maine and New-Brunswick, was the subject of much discussion in England. In the House of Commans on the 20th ult. Mr. Hume asked whether there would be any objection, as great anxiety existed on the subject, to give the House some information respecting the negotiations with America on the Maine boundary question, what present state of those negotiations, and whether a favorable result might be anticipated?

Lord J. Russell said he would answer the question the next day. On the 20th, there was
