The Vietnamese also circulated to all interested countries at the meeting a document entitled, "Report of the Government of Viet-Nam on Technical Assistance". Copies of this general survey are attached (Appendix 1).† It should be noted that while the submission is entitled, "Technical Assistance", it is concerned to a large extent with equipment as well as experts and training opportunities. The Vietnamese also reminded us of the requests made to us through the Canadian Embassy, Washington, and gave us a copy (attached—Appendix 2)† of a letter, dated September 23rd, under which the Vietnamese Ambassador in Washington had apparently submitted fifteen specific requests with dossiers for candidates.

We made the point to the Viet-Nam authorities that they should not warn their candidates too far in advance of their acceptance by the Canadian authorities, and that all applications for individual training should be regarded as tentative until word of their final acceptance had been received from Ottawa.

J.G. HADWEN
Secretary

[12<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 12]

POLITICS AT THE SINGAPORE MEETINGS

The meetings of the Officials and of the Ministers at Singapore had more political content than at any previous Colombo Plan meeting. This is not to say that political subjects themselves were considered by the meeting or that political considerations affected its discussions, but the period of the Conference coincided with a period of great political change in Singapore itself, which had a considerable influence on the discussions which delegations held outside the meetings. The Canadian Delegation also had discussions of some interest on political problems with the leaders of the Indochinese Delegations. It is interesting to note, however, that according to the Indian Delegation, they had no contact whatsoever with the Indochinese Delegations.

Mr. David Marshall's chairmanship of the meetings also brought the delegations much more closely in touch with Singapore political life than might have been the case if a less controversial figure had headed the Singapore Delegation. Mr. Marshall had rocketed into prominence only six months previously as a result of elections held in Singapore under the new constitution. (Copy attached).†

Mr. Marshall, who is a colourful extrovert, had succeeded just before the Conference opened in securing agreement by the United Kingdom authorities to the appointment by his Labour Front Government of additional Ministers to the Governing Council of Singapore. Marshall had also taken the initiative in establishing closer relations with Indonesia, thus invading the province of foreign relations which had hitherto been reserved to the United Kingdom authorities. Marshall's actions in this respect demonstrated a situation which came as a surprise to the Canadian Delegation, that is that the local governments of colonies are not necessarily subject to much direction from London. The Hong Kong administration is a case in point. The U.K. Treasury has been anxious for some time to close off Hong Kong as a major gap in its network of regulations to protect sterling from the dollar. The Hong Kong administration has simply refused to carry out the U.K. Government's instructions on this issue and as in the case of Singapore, has consistently followed a highly independent course of action whenever the interests of the colony seem to make this necessary.

In his speech to the Rotary Club at Raffles Hotel, Mr. Pearson very clearly stated Canadian appreciation of the difficulties which Singapore was now facing. He commented on the similar Canadian development from colony to nation and went further to express the expectation that one day Canada would have the same relationship with Singapore and the Federation of Malaya that it now has with India, Pakistan and Ceylon as freely associated members of the Commonwealth. The progress towards political independence which Singapore has made has resulted in very recent constitutional changes, but it is clear that the pace of these changes is increasing rapidly. David Marshall has spoken of independence in two years, but the pressure on himself and on his party is already such that he may well have to secure further advances before the two year period is up. He is now scheduled to go to London in the near future to make arrangements for a full-scale constitutional discussion in the Spring.

When David Marshall and the Labour Front first came into power they were faced with considerable opposition from British interests. Now the U.K. authorities and the British community in Singapore cannot speak too highly or too fulsomely of his good qualities. In fact, this very support may prove an embarrassment to Mr. Marshall. As this memorandum is written on Sunday, October 30, Mr. Marshall's party is facing serious internal divisions and it is quite possible that his ascendancy may be brief, unless he is able to control those factions of his own and of other parties that want to proceed much more quickly than is reasonable with the attainment of self-government.

C.C. Tan, a wealthy Chinese lawyer and member of the Singapore Government, until Marshall's victory, had attended the Karachi, Delhi and Ottawa Colombo Plan Meetings. It was natural therefore, that we should be in touch with him and natural also that he should give us his views about politics in Singapore. His was the party which had advocated moderate progress towards eventual self-government, but which when confronted with the more radical and urgent programme of David Marshall's group was heavily defeated at the elections. As one of the U.K. delegates from Borneo remarked, almost invariably the local leaders who successfully cooperated with the British are discarded as soon as independence becomes a practical possibility. It is unlikely that Mr. C.C. Tan, as a moderate Chinese leader, will assume a position of political importance in Singapore again in the near future. C.C. Tan said that his own party had been outbidden in the independence agitation, but had also been defeated because of the division of the right-wing Chinese group in Singapore. He himself belongs to what is termed the "de-cultured Chinese community which acknowledges Singapore as its home. The right-wing group, however, still has some connections with the Kuomintang. This right-wing group was impatient to establish a Chinese university under a most elaborate plan drawn up by Lin Yutang. C.C. Tan says that once the drive towards self-government has begun, it cannot be stopped and that a leader such as David Marshall must be able to ride a storm and keep ahead of dissident elements, if he is to bring the change about without serious conflict. C.C. Tan was bitter, however, at the failure of the British to provide more opportunities for local people to take over positions of responsibility in the Government. "Malayanisation" of the Civil Service might now have to go forward much more rapidly and with considerable loss of efficiency as a result. The Secretary to the Governor of Singapore set this whole conflict in a wider context by referring to the regional and racial problems which condition the pace at which self-government can be attained in Malaya. It was his view that unless the Governments of India and of China work out an amicable basis of understanding, it would not be possible for Singapore to become fully independent. If there remained serious conflict between India and China then Singapore and the Federation of Malaya, as an independent unit, would have to choose between one bloc or the other. He argued that the United Kingdom might have to proceed more slowly than the local population wished in granting self-government, because of the sharp differences which now existed between Singapore, the Federation of Malaya and the Sultanates. The U.K. had contractual obligations of varying types with the different Malaysian units which it could not easily abandon. What is more, the U.K. had a responsibility towards the Malays. Since the British came to Malaya and brought with them over a period of time substantial numbers of Chinese and of Indians, it had been necessary to make special efforts to protect the Malaysians who appeared to be incapable of standing up against these two more vigorous cultures.

It might have been expected at the Colombo Plan Meetings in Singapore that the Simla Conference would have exercised an important influence over the proceedings.<sup>25</sup> This was not in fact the case. There were very few references to Simla, which is apparently regarded by most of the Asians as having been something of a waste of time, following the abandonment of Mr. Stassen's more elaborate ideas by the United States Government. The Indian Delegation in particular was most anxious that there should be no discussion of the Simla meeting and the only reference during the meetings was a brief one on the last day, in which the Indian delegate "drew attention to the summary proceedings of the Conference at the official level, when the Asian members of the Colombo Plan convened in Simla in May, 1955".

The Bandung meetings, however, had made a great impression on all the Asian delegations present at Singapore and were constantly referred to in private discussions. The value of these meetings was described as that of bringing together both Asians and Africans for the first time. From Raju Coomaraswamy we got our most vivid impressions of the meetings which were, he said, "a great show", but a number of other delegations referred to what they described as "the future importance of the Bandung concept". Coomaraswamy reported the Kotelawalla-Nehru incident. Kotelawalla had made an outspoken comment on the necessity of discussing Communist imperialism, if there were to be a discussion of European imperialism in the area. When Mr. Nehru interrupted him with the question "Why didn't you discuss this with me?" (i.e. before raising this question in the full Assembly) — to which Kotelawalla had answered "Why the hell should I discuss it with you?". Raju says that Kotellawala's willingness to cross swords publicly with Nehru on this and on other occasions was a source of surprise to other Asians, and in particular caused Chou En-Lai to have a considerable respect for the Ceylonese leader. Chou En-Lai himself, so Raju says, made a most favourable impression at the Conference being "smooth and educated".

An interesting sidelight on the Bandung meetings was Raju's comment that while the Portuguese and the Dutch were assailed repeatedly for their colonial policies, the British were not even mentioned during the proceedings as imperialists. Raju reported also that, when confronted with the necessity of re-writing their country chapter, the Nepalese Delegation had commented "How can we do this when we have never had the benefits of British occupation?" Incidentally, Coomaraswamy also tells us that the Philippines are regarded as "suckers" by the other Asians, because they have given up more to secure United States' aid than the other Asians have found it necessary to surrender. Certainly the Philippine Delegation made a most unfortunate impression during the meetings, their leader making several totally irrelevant and uncalled for speeches.

The relations between the Indian and the Pakistan Delegations at the Singapore meetings were publicly cordial but privately not too satisfactory. When the Canadian reactor proposal was discussed with the Pakistan Delegation, the Pakistanis understood our decision to place this reactor in India, but were not hopeful that they could secure any real benefit from the international facilities the Indians have agreed to offer. When it comes to questions of prestige, the Indians at the Conference appeared anxious to ensure that their role as a major delegation was emphasized and the Pakistanis appeared to base their own participation on a decision to balance whatever impression the Indians made. When the U.S. atomic centre was discussed, the Pakistanis commented that India was all in favour of Ceylon for the obvious reason that they would like to avoid any possibility of the centre being set up in Pakistan. Similarly, the Pakistanis referred in private occasionally to the apparent close cooperation between Indian and United Kingdom Delegations. As one Pakistan Delegate mentioned, relations between his country and India change drastically from time to time. It was clear during the meetings that relations between India and Pakistan under the Colombo Plan context had not yet reached the stage of amicable cooperation where joint projects might be possible.

<sup>25</sup> Une conférence réunissant les membres asiatiques du Plan de Colombo, ainsi que les États-Unis et le Japon, est tenue à Simla (Inde) en mai. Pour un compte rendu de la conférence, voir United States, Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, (FRUS), 1955-1957, Volume XXI, Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1990, pp. 105-106.

A conference involving the Asian members of the Colombo Plan, as well as the United States and Japan, which took place in Simla, India in May. For a report on the conference, see United States, Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, (FRUS), 1955-1957, Volume XXI, Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1990, pp. 105-106.

The most important political excitement at the Colombo Plan Meetings was, however, created by the United States' proposal to establish an atomic regional centre somewhere in Asia.<sup>26</sup> The United States' proposal, which was the only aspect of their aid programme which was discussed in detail by Mr. Hollister in presenting the United States' section of the contributions chapter, excited great interest amongst all the receiving countries. Because no announcement was made of any decision regarding the site of this centre, the U.S. Delegation was almost immediately exposed to pressure from all sides. The Chairman of the Ministerial Meetings, Mr. Marshall, made a special effort to secure the centre for Singapore, and the Ceylonese Delegation was very much embarrassed by premature speculation in Colombo, to the effect that the centre would be located in their country. The Ceylonese authorities are, however, prepared to go to almost any lengths to ensure that the project is located near Colombo and hope if this were possible, that it might mean the beginning of the end of the prohibition against U.S. aid to their country, because of the terms of the Battle Act.<sup>27</sup> Because the Canadian offer of an atomic reactor for India had been made sometime previously, it was rather overshadowed by the United States proposal.

At no point during the meetings was there any criticism of Canadian policy in any of its aspects. In fact, the reverse was the case, and Canada's position in world affairs, as well as our economic aid programmes, came in for repeated public and private commendation. Some of this was due to Mr. Pearson's presence. He was referred to on a number of occasions as the most notable international figure at the meetings.

Attached is a memorandum† on an informal meeting which the Canadian Delegation held with Mr. Angus MacIntosh, a senior official of the Colonial Office, to discuss British colonial policy.

J.G. HADWEN

<sup>26</sup> Voir/See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXIII, No. 854, November 7, 1955, pp. 747-750.

<sup>27</sup> La Mutual Defense Assistance Control Act of 1951, piloté par le représentant L.C. Battle (Démocrate, Alabama), prévoyait la fin obligatoire de l'aide à tout pays expédiant des armes, des munitions ou des biens stratégiques dans des régions sous domination soviétique. The Mutual Defense Assistance Control Act of 1951, sponsored by Representative L.C. Battle (Democrat, Alabama), provided for mandatory termination of aid to any country found to be shipping arms, munitions, or strategic goods to Soviet-dominated areas.

[13<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 13]

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Attached are some very rough notes arising from the discussions held in the Technical Assistance Working Group (Appendix 1).† Most of the points covered in the attached notes have been reflected in the Report of the Technical Assistance Working Group (Conference Document C.C/55(o)-32 Revised) or in the "Technical Assistance" chapter of the Annual Report. The Canadian Delegation was active in preparing both these documents.

Canadian Paper

The paper which Canada had circulated to all member governments just prior to the meetings was most useful in stimulating discussion. The following is a summary of the discussion on our paper:

(a) It is fairly clear that even the most advanced of the receiving Colombo Plan countries are not prepared to make a special effort to prepare annual priority lists for presentation to Canada. (U.N. programmes are, however, negotiated on an annual basis.) The Government of Pakistan is at present following the procedure most closely in line with that which we have suggested. Some other countries felt, however, that their needs did not arise in an annual pattern and that they would like to feel free to put forward requests whenever new requirements became obvious. It may be that more and more countries will come around to preparing of annual lists as their administration for carrying out the technical assistance programmes improves, but at the present time only a few consider themselves in a position to do so. The Canadian Delegation did not press this point since some delegations misunderstood our position and asked whether Canada would refuse to consider requests which were not put forward on an annual basis. Therefore, the Delegation indicated a preference for annual submissions if possible but agreed that the Canadian authorities would, of course, be prepared to consider requests whenever they were made.

(b) With regard to firm undertakings to re-employ the trainee on his return in the field for which he had received experience abroad, most countries of the area were prepared to do this. However, several specific reservations were made, particularly by the Malayan authorities, who said that the civil service administration of this area in particular was not so designed that openings could be foreseen for individual civil servants two or three years ahead. If the trainee was at a very junior level or in a highly specialized trade, there would be less difficulty than if he were at a more senior level where it was customary to shift officials around in order to give them broad experience. The Canadian view is facing here the different concept of civil service administration which has applied in all the territories once part of the British Empire and which holds that there should be a senior cadre of civil servants capable of being transferred from one job to another as the need arises; e.g., the ICS tradition.

With regard to evaluation, even the Indians and Pakistanis had found that this type of analysis would be premature at the present time and what is more extremely difficult to do. The United Nations Technical Assistance Programme was now embarking on the preparation of an evaluation report, and Pakistan, for example, was also attempting some follow-up procedures and India is considering the establishment of evaluation machinery. The Pakistani experience had, however, been fairly unsatisfactory, and the general consensus of opinion amongst the Asian delegations was that the time had not yet come to devote scarce resources to an extensive programme of evaluation.

(c) In view of the reaction to our points "a" and "b", no particular changes can be anticipated in the nomination procedures and forms used by the Council for Technical Co-operation as a result of our proposals. One alternative idea was, however, pressed by Raju Coomaraswamy of Ceylon and by a number of other delegations.

Proposed Change in Nomination Procedures

Raju's idea was that the donor countries should accept nominations which did not give any individual name but which indicated general qualifications. Both the Ceylon and the Indonesian Delegations felt that a great deal of time and energy was being wasted by the requirement of the donor country that an individual nomination form must be completed in all cases before an agreed training programme could be established. Obviously for highly specialized courses in limited fields of study or for very advanced courses (perhaps at the Ph.D. level), individual names and qualifications would be required before a country, such as Canada, could agree to accept a candidate; however it was suggested that in other cases we might wish to consider arranging a training programme without necessarily knowing the individual trainee's name, providing adequate general qualifications were laid down.

Raju's point was that the donor country in most cases accepts the trainee whose name is put forward by the receiving country if his qualifications on paper are satisfactory; therefore, if we have confidence in the selection procedures of a receiving country, we should not theoretically object to arranging a programme for a geologist without knowing as much as, say, six months in advance what the geologist's name might be.

Both Ceylon and Indonesia had found great difficulty in operating technical assistance programmes because of the requirement exacted up to the present that all nominations would be personal ones. The difficulty arose because individuals had to go through a lengthy selection procedure and, once selected, it was disturbing for them and for the administration in which they were serving to have to wait for as long as six months in an atmosphere of uncertainty as to when they would be leaving. Sometimes it turned out to be impossible to arrange a training programme in response to a particular request with the result that, after an individual had been on the qui vive for a considerable period, the whole procedure had to be started all over again. The receiving governments appear to be developing increasingly elaborate and expensive selection procedures and did not want to overload these channels. They would prefer to start the selection machinery only after approval had been given in principle by a donor government to arrange a particular training course. So far as Canada was concerned, the Canadian Delegation agreed to suggest that Ottawa look into this possibility and, where possible, to consider accepting general rather than particular requests for training facilities.

Regional Training Centres

There was much discussion in the meetings of the possibility for regional training centres. This discussion is reported in the Technical Assistance Group document. What is not reported in that document, however, is the emphasis which many Asian countries placed on national training centres. Pakistan, for example, was afraid that if too much money and time were spent on regional training centres, assistance for national training centres might be affected. The Canadian willingness to consider requests for equipment for training institutions has already borne some fruit, e.g., the Singapore Polytechnic project and the Burmese Technical High School project. It was recognized, however, that the Ford Foundation was primarily concerned with technical assistance to training institutions and that the United Kingdom amongst the Colombo Plan countries was concentrating particularly on this field, for which it was specially suited. Therefore, it may be that a form of specialization is developing both between the Colombo Plan and other donor agencies and within the Colombo Plan itself, as a result of which Canada may not be asked to assist very much in this field.

Experts

In the last paragraph of our brief, we make a plea for better preparation of requests for the services of experts. All the Asian countries seemed to appreciate this point which was made by every donor country, but several countries emphasized that they simply did not have the funds or facilities to make what were elsewhere considered satisfactory accommodation, transportation or counterpart assistance arrangements. Nepal, for example, drew attention to the waiver which it had been granted by the United Nations which absolved it from any responsibility for local allowances for experts. The Australians have decided to meet some of these difficulties by sending prefabricated housing with their experts to Indochina. Indonesia likewise drew attention to the great difficulties it was facing in providing adequately for foreign experts. The general consensus of opinion amongst the receiving countries was that the donor countries under the Colombo Plan should consider providing additional equipment or assist in other ways in meeting the expenses arising from the use of an expert's services. The ICA and the UN programmes, for example, are beginning to find it necessary to provide the expert with more and more assistance directly from his home government and to rely less and less on the receiving countries for these services than was the original intention. This receiving country view was greeted with reservation by the Canadian Delegation.

The receiving countries also asked that donor countries pay particular attention to the personal as well as to the professional qualifications of experts sent to this area since adaptability and reasonable willingness to co-operate were as important as outstanding professional qualifications.

In general, it was also concluded that any time spent by either the receiving or the donor governments in making better preparation either for a trainee's or for an expert's programme would be time well spent. However, most of the receiving countries complained at the slowness with which applications were being considered and, while admitting that much of the fault lay on their side, hoped that increasingly effective administrative procedures would be developed by the donor countries also.

When asked by other delegations during the meetings, we said that we did not think the Canadian authorities wanted formal replies to the memorandum which we circulated. The specific issues raised during the meetings were to be discussed more fully at the next session of the Council for Technical Co-operation in Colombo.

J.G. HADWEN
Secretary

SECTION C

CEYLAN
CEYLON

250.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 130-55

Ottawa, June 7, 1955

SECRET

1955-56 COLOMBO PLAN AID PROGRAMME FOR CEYLON

Consideration has been given, on an interdepartmental basis, to the projects in Ceylon which might be financed from funds available in 1955-56. After discussions with representatives of the Ceylon Government, during the course of which projects totalling several million dollars were examined, Canadian officials consider the following projects to be suitable for Canadian assistance under the 1955-56 programme for Ceylon. As in previous years, the total cost of this programme is approximately $2 million. The programme as outlined below is made up of an estimated $1,235,000 in capital equipment and $780,000 in flour, the counterpart fund equivalent of which is to be used for financing local costs of various projects. (In 1954-55, approximately $850,000 in flour was supplied for counterpart fund purposes.)<sup>28</sup>

The following are the details of the programme which Canadian officials recommend:

(1) School of Practical Technology

As part of the 1953-54 programme for Ceylon, $500,000 was approved for use at this project. This was based on estimates that the total costs of the school would amount to approximately $300,000 and that about $200,000 in capital equipment would be required. Assistance for the rupee costs has already been made available through the shipment of $300,000 worth of flour, which has been sold to provide a counterpart fund equivalent to be used for meeting these costs. Since the equipment for the school would not be required until 1955-56, it was agreed last year that the $200,000 originally set aside for equipment might be diverted in last year's programme to assist Ceylon in its road building programme. It was understood at that time that the cost of equipment for the School of Practical Technology would be included as part of any regular programme of aid to Ceylon in 1955-56, subject to the appropriation of funds in that fiscal year. The Ceylon Government has requested that this item, therefore, should be included in the new programme and that $200,000 should be made available this year to purchase capital equipment. As a result of certain changes in specifications arising out of the recommendations of a Canadian technical expert sent to Ceylon, there has been a revision of the local costs of the school and it is now estimated that an additional $200,000 will be required to meet construction costs. These additional rupee costs could be met by providing $200,000 worth of flour from 1955-56 funds so that the counterpart equivalent of this flour may be applied to the financing of these additional construction costs.

<sup>28</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 410.

(2) Fisheries Project

As part of previous aid programmes, Canada has agreed to make available a total of $1,407,000 for a pilot fisheries project, including the provision of experimental fishing craft and other related fisheries equipment, an ice-making and fish cold storage plant and a fish reduction plant. In addition, Canada agreed to provide out of 1954-55 funds $600,000 worth of flour, the counterpart fund equivalent of which was used to meet local costs at the Mutual Fisheries Harbour, which is an integral part of the fisheries project. In view of the high priority which this project has for the development of the Ceylon economy and because of the direct interest which Canada has in this project, the Ceylon Government has requested that additional aid for local costs at the Harbour should be made available through the provision of flour from 1955-56 funds.

Ceylon has also requested that additional trawler equipment should be provided in 1955-56 for the fisheries project. The provision of this equipment would appear to be in keeping with Canada's original interest in this project.

As part of the fisheries project, the Ceylon Government proposes to set up a system for the collection and distribution of the fish, which will be closely related to the use of the cold storage plant. The Ceylon Government has requested insulated trucks for use in this connection. In discussions with the Ceylon officials, it has been emphasized that the effective use of these trucks would depend on the establishment of a practical and well integrated scheme for the collection and distribution of fish in Ceylon and that, therefore, the Ceylon Government will be asked to give an undertaking that satisfactory arrangements for the use of these trucks will be carefully worked out in consultation with the Canadian technical experts who are now in Ceylon.

As part of their efforts to improve the Co-operative movement in Ceylon in connection with the development of fisheries, the Ceylon Government maintains a Fisheries Co-operative School at Polgalla. Students from other countries in South and South-East Asia are being, and will continue to be, accepted at this school. A Canadian technical expert is now in Ceylon helping the latter Government organize the training programme at this school. The Ceylon Government has requested assistance in connection with the rupee costs involved in the modernization and extension of facilities at the school.

(3) Aerial Survey

Following a request from Ceylon that Canada should undertake an aerial survey as part of the 1955-56 programme, a Canadian expert was sent to Ceylon to report on the need and usefulness of such a project. This report has now been examined by the Canadian authorities and it is considered that an aerial survey would make a very useful contribution to the further economic development of Ceylon.

(4) Port Equipment

As part of the 1954-55 programme, Canada provided equipment for the newly constructed Colombo Harbour in the form of six-ton portal cranes. The Ceylon Government has requested that additional cranes, which are vitally required, might be supplied as part of the new programme.

(5) Diesel Locomotives for the Ceylon Railways

In an effort to help the Ceylon Government replace their supply of rolling stock, which is in many cases worn out or obsolete, Canada has provided as part of previous aid programmes to Ceylon five diesel locomotives. These locomotives have proven themselves to be efficient and economical and well suited to the terrain of Ceylon. The Ceylon Government has requested that additional diesel locomotives might be supplied as part of the 1955-56 programme.

(6) Pest Control Units

As part of the 1953-54 programme, Canada supplied a series of pest control units made up of trucks and spraying equipment.<sup>29</sup> More units were requested at that time than were actually provided by Canada. This project has proven successful in its operation and has made an important contribution to agriculture in Ceylon. The Ceylon Government has requested that additional units should be provided as part of the 1955-56 programme.

Recommendations

On the basis of the programme outlined above, Canadian officials recommend that assistance be provided for the following projects, in the amounts estimated below:

(1) School of Practical Technology

(a) Equipment for use at the school at an estimated total cost of $200,000.

(b) Canadian assistance in the form of flour, to be made available in the amount necessary to provide approximately $200,000, to be used for additional local expenditures at the school.

(2) Fisheries Project

(a) Canadian assistance in the form of flour, to be made available in the amount necessary to provide approximately $400,000, to be used for additional local expenditures at the fisheries harbour.

(b) Trawler equipment up to an amount of $30,000 to be provided for the fisheries project.

(c) The supply of insulated trucks up to a total cost of $50,000, on condition that satisfactory arrangements for collection and distribution of the fish to be handled by these trucks will be worked out by the Ceylon authorities.

(d) Canadian assistance in the form of flour, to be made available in the amount necessary to provide approximately $180,000, to be used for local expenditures at the Fisheries Co-operative School at Polgalla.

(3) Aerial Survey

Canada should undertake to finance an aerial survey in accordance with the recommendation of the report of the Canadian technical expert who investigated this project. The total cost of this survey is estimated at $500,000, and it is recommended that $200,000 should be set aside for this purpose in 1955-56. Authority is to be granted to enter into a contract for the total estimated cost of the project, on the understanding that the balance of the cost in excess of $200,000 will be included in next year's regular programme of Canadian aid to Ceylon, subject to the necessary funds being voted by the Canadian Parliament. It is to be understood also that the balance of these costs will be included with a high priority in any list of projects which the Ceylon Government may propose next year.

(4) Port Equipment

Port equipment in the form of cranes to be provided to Ceylon at an estimated cost of $180,000.

<sup>29</sup> Voir/See Volume 19, Document 615.

(5) Diesel Locomotives

Three additional diesel locomotives, together with necessary spares, to be provided at an estimated cost of $555,000, on the understanding that the Government of Ceylon is prepared to pay the rupee equivalent of these engines and sleepers into a special account, against which expenditures would be incurred for development projects to be agreed upon between the two Governments at a later stage.

(6) Pest Control Units

Two pest control units, similar to those sent to Ceylon as part of the 1953-54 programme, to be provided at an estimated cost of $6,000.<sup>30</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

SECTION D

INDE
INDIA

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

AIDE
AID

251.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 138-55

Ottawa, June 15, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

COLOMBO PLAN AID TO INDIA FOR LOCUST CONTROL

The Government of India maintains an active programme to combat the menace to their agriculture which locusts represent. In addition to locust control operations in their own country, the Indian Government last year sent an anti-locust team to the Arabian Peninsula, which constitutes a source of locust incursions into India.

The Food and Agriculture Organization considers that the locust control programme in the Arabian Peninsula is extremely important and they have invited countries bordering that region to participate in an international anti-locust campaign, and it is anticipated that future locust control operations in the Arabian Peninsula will be co-ordinated by FAO. India has indicated its willingness to participate in this programme. Because of their limited stock of equipment required for locust control, the Indian Government has requested that Canada should supply vehicles and wireless sets up to the amount of $120,000. The equipment which has been requested would be used partly in India to replace equipment which has already been sent to the Arabian Peninsula and partly to supplement the equipment which has already been used in operations in the latter area.

<sup>30</sup> Ces six recommandations ont été approuvés par le Cabinet le 8 juin 1955.
These six recommendations were approved by Cabinet on June 8, 1955.

The cost of this project could be financed without involving the allocation of any new funds since an unspent balance of approximately $146,000 remains from the allocation made to India in 1951-52 for the purchase of trucks and equipment for the Bombay State Transport Corporation.

Recommendation

Canadian officials recommend that trucks and vehicles of specifications to be agreed upon with the Indian authorities should be provided under the Colombo Plan at an estimated cost of $120,000, and that the cost of this project should be financed from the unspent balance of 1951-52 funds earmarked for the Bombay State Transport Project.<sup>31</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

252.

DEA/110381-40

Procès-verbal de la réunion du groupe Colombo

Minutes of Colombo Group Meeting

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 6, [1955]

Those Present:

Mr. R.M. Macdonnell,
(Chairman) Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
Mr. Nik Cavell,
Colombo Plan Administrator, Trade and Commerce
Mr. A.F.W. Plumptre,
Finance
Mr. J. English,
Trade and Commerce

Also Present:

Messrs. Pollock and Sainsbury,
Department of Finance
Messrs. Pratt and Manion,
Trade and Commerce
Mr. Sakellaropoulos,
Bank of Canada
Messrs. Menzies, Bridle, Blouin, Hadwen and Stoner,
Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Escott Reid, the Canadian High Commissioner to India who is in Canada on home leave, attended this meeting to discuss the Colombo Plan programme in India.

At the Chairman's suggestion, Mr. Reid gave his impressions of the results which Canada's Colombo Plan contribution was producing in India. Mr. Reid then went on to underline India's need for external assistance during the second Five Year Plan, which will begin in 1956. He explained that it was difficult for anyone to forecast the exact amount of capital which India would require from external sources, but it was estimated that at least $1 billion, and perhaps $2 billion, might be required. Mr. Reid mentioned that the Indian Minister of Finance, Mr. Deshmukh, had frequently told him that he required some assurance about the total amount of external capital that would be in prospect if he was to be able to plan effectively and boldly the new development programme.

<sup>31</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 22 juin 1955/Approved by Cabinet on June 22, 1955.

Following the general comments of Mr. Reid, the Group then turned to a discussion of the projects which had been proposed by India for inclusion in the 1955-56 programme of aid. Before turning to an examination of the projects which had been submitted during Mr. Cavell's tour in South-East Asia earlier this year, the Group was informed of the status of the negotiations concerning the possible provision of an atomic reactor to India under the Colombo Plan.<sup>32</sup> The original offer which had been made to Mr. Nehru last April by Mr. Reid had not made it clear whether the NRX reactor which Canada was offering would be financed from existing Colombo Plan funds. No definite reply had as yet been received from the Indian Government, although senior Indian scientists had been in touch with their Canadian counterparts in connection with technical details of the reactor. It was presumed that their hesitancy was not due to a lack of interest in the reactor or a lack of appreciation of Canada's gesture, but reflected rather their concern at the possible loss of aid from Canada for other important development projects which might have to be sacrificed if they accepted the reactor from Canada. After further consultation between Ministers, the Minister for External Affairs was recommending that a substantial part of the cost of the reactor should be made from funds supplementary to the present total of Canada's Colombo Plan contribution and that Mr. Nehru might be informed of this in a message directly from Mr. St. Laurent. It was understood that the proposal would be examined in the immediate future by Cabinet. In the meantime, negotiations concerning this reactor were being treated with the utmost security and, for the present, no other country, with the exception of India, was being informed of these negotiations. Since it was agreed if a reactor was to be supplied that it would be financed from funds additional to the present allocation of aid to India, it was now possible to proceed with an examination of the distribution of existing funds to other conventional projects in India.

The Group first examined the project for the construction of a fertilizer plant, which had been raised with Mr. Reid at the end of last year. It had been tentatively suggested that Canada might wish to assist in the construction of a fertilizer plant near the new lignite development at Neyvelli, in the Madras area of India. While the Group agreed with Mr. Cavell that there were some technical objections to this site, it was appreciated that India was planning to build at least three other fertilizer plant as part of their second Five Year Plan. If Canada was to assist in the construction of a fertilizer plant, the Group agreed on the desirability of having power already available at whatever site was selected.

The Colombo Plan Administrator reported that the equipment for a fertilizer plant was available in Canada and there would be a large percentage of Canadian content. Although he and his staff had been in touch with Canadian Vickers, it was difficult to obtain exact comparisons between Canadian and world prices. The United States FOA are presumably building a fertilizer plant in Formosa and UNKRA has undertaken one in Korea, which should afford some comparison between Canadian and U.S. prices. It appeared likely, however, that a plant of at least a capacity of 60,000 tons a year could be built for under $25 million. The Group noted that the Indian fertilizer plant at Sindri was now producing about 1,000 tons a day, but the supply from this source was falling far short of India's needs.

Mr. Reid suggested that because of the shortage of technicians and administrators, Canada might wish to give consideration to the construction of a fertilizer plant on a "package deal" basis; in other words, Canada would assume responsibility for supplying all equipment and supervisory services and, in addition, counterpart funds could be utilized to meet local costs, such as labour, etc. When the Group suggested that this was perhaps not in keeping with the original understanding that each Colombo Plan project was to be a co-operative enterprise in which the Asian Government assumes responsibility for local costs and Canada responsibility for external costs, Mr. Reid suggested that the co-operative aspect principle was still being maintained if the construction of fertilizer plants in India could be regarded as a single project. In other words, if Canada took over responsibility for building one plant, Indian personnel and finance would be freed to build additional ones; in this case, perhaps three others. While the Group appreciated that the "package deal" concept might be attractive for some types of projects, it could not be accepted as a general principle.

<sup>32</sup> Voir la partie suivante/See following section.

It was suggested that the fertilizer plant project should be examined in the light of the other projects which had been submitted to Canada for consideration with this year's programme. Because of Canada's ability to supply hydro-electric equipment at reasonably competitive prices, the Indians had proposed three hydro-electric projects (two of which are to be included in the second Five Year Plan), from which they suggested Canada might select one. The external costs of these projects ranged from $18 million to $25 million. It was clear that the selection of one of these hydro-electric projects or the selection of a fertilizer plant would entail a commitment in principle of most of the funds which may be available over at least the next two years. Mr. Plumptre suggested that any decision which Canada might make concerning these projects was related to the extension of the Plan beyond the first planning phase, which comes to an end on June 30, 1957. He reported that his Minister was prepared to consider that Canada should support an extension of the Plan, probably for a period roughly equalling the life of the second Indian Five Year Plan. Provision of aid by Canada would, of course, continue to be subject to an annual vote of funds by the Canadian Parliament. The Group regretted that there was not available in the Indian "shopping list" projects where the external costs might be in the order of $5 million or less so that the Canadian aid programme might be somewhat more dispersed and diversified. It was apparent, however, that with the exception of an Indian request for two Beaver aircraft and for limited assistance for fisheries, all of the other capital projects proposed by India would probably involve committing most of the funds that might be available between now and 1957. Depending on the decision of the Canadian Government with regard to the extension of the Plan beyond 1957, it might be possible to distribute these costs over even a greater period than two years.

The Group agreed that apart from a limited amount of technical assistance, there was little likelihood of Canada providing capital assistance for Indian fisheries. The Group considered that the provision of two Beaver aircraft for pest control purposes would be a good project, particularly since it involved a limited degree of continuing commercial interest for Canada. It was the Group's view that approval of Cabinet for this project should be sought.

With respect to the selection of the major project for 1955-56, the Group recommended that Mr. Cavell should secure detailed information about the cost and Canadian content involved in the construction of a fertilizer plant; at the same time estimates would be secured in connection with the hydro-electric equipment required for the three separate projects proposed by India. It was agreed that after an examination of these costs (and provided Canadian costs for a fertilizer plant were not excessively out of line with world prices), the Indians would be informed of Canada's position with regard to the relative costs of equipment for all of these projects and the probable delivery dates. On the basis of this information, it might be desirable for the Indian Government itself to make recommendation as to which project they would prefer Canada to assist.

There was a brief discussion of Mr. Reid's proposal that Canada might consider the extension of a line of credit to India. It was pointed out that Mr. Deshmukh desired a cushion of foreign exchange which would enable him to carry out his planning, with a knowledge that he would have something set aside in the event of a bad crop year or other economic pressures. In this respect, however, Canada's previous record of providing wheat gifts (in the case of Pakistan, outside the Colombo Plan) should give Mr. Deshmukh some assurance that a special appeal in the event of some form of economic disaster would be sympathetically considered by Canada. The International Monetary Fund was also available as a form of assistance in the event of pressures on foreign exchange. Mr. Plumptre underlined that Canada felt that loans should be largely undertaken by the existing international organizations, i.e., The International Bank, and the International Finance Corporation which should come into operation fairly soon and to which Canada has already pledged its support.

253.

PCO

Note pour le Cabinet
Memorandum to Cabinet

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 212-55

[Ottawa, n.d.]

SECRET

COLOMBO PLAN PROGRAMME FOR INDIA

As a result of negotiations which have been under way for several months with the Indian Government, it now seems desirable that the Canadian Government should provide assistance from Colombo Plan funds to finance the external costs of the projects described below. It should be explained at the outset that the Indian Government are expected to request that the bulk of their current allocation of Colombo Plan funds (for 1955-56) should be devoted to a large hydro-electric project at Kuhnda which is now being actively investigated by Canadian engineers. Subject to the results of this investigation it is anticipated that Canadian participation in the latter project will be recommended in the near future to Cabinet. Hence, the list that follows involves the allocation or reallocation of certain funds from past years and a relatively small amount of funds from the 1955-56 allocation.

Provisions of Small Diesel Generating Sets to Assist in the Development of Rural Electrification in India

Throughout a number of towns and small villages in India a shortage of power is impeding the maintenance of employment and the development of industry, particularly small scale industry. To remedy this the Indian Planning Commission has approved a plan whereby more power will be made available through the installation of small diesel generating stations. These diesel stations would operate in widely dispersed localities and it is anticipated that the following States — Assam, Vindhya Pradesh, Coorg, Orissa, Uttar Pradesh, Andhra, Bihar, Madras, Bombay, Saurashtra, Hyderabad, Rajasthan and West Bengal would benefit from these arrangements.

The Indian Government have asked whether Canada would undertake to supply diesel generating sets for part of this programme. The generating sets (approximately 190 sets) requested from Canada by India range from 25 kilowatts to 250 kilowatts. Specifications of the proposed sets have been investigated by Canadian technical officials and it is apparent that suitable equipment could be supplied by Canadian manufacturers.

It is estimated that prices in Canada for equipment of this type are roughly competitive with prices in the United Kingdom which has been the traditional supplier for such equipment to India. The diesel generating sets required for the part of the programme which Canada has been asked to finance would cost approximately $3 million.

If it is approved by Cabinet, this project could be financed partially by utilizing the $500,000 remaining in the unexpended balance of the funds approved in 1952-53 for the Mayurakshi project. The remaining $2.5 million could be financed from the uncommitted balance of India's regular allotment of aid for 1954-55. (The only commitment which has been made against the 1954-55 allotment is the allocation of $10.5 million for the steam locomotive project. It is assumed that approximately $13 million of the total 1954-55 Colombo Plan vote should be available for Indian projects.)

Aero-magnetic Survey of Western Rajasthan

As part of its resources development programme the Indian Government considers that an aero-magnetic and a geophysical survey should be carried out in Western Rajasthan which is considered a prospective oil-bearing area. The Indian Government propose to use its own survey services to carry out the photographic portion of the aerial survey of the area and subsequently a geophysical survey. However, the Indian survey services are not equipped to carry out one aspect of the aerial survey which involves the employment of magnetometer equipment. The latter type of equipment is very costly and is available to a limited number of survey companies (including two Canadian companies) none of which operate in India.

On the basis of preliminary estimates, the cost of an aero-magnetic survey of the area in question would be approximately $125,000. This project would make an important contribution to the development of resources in India. Canadian participation seems desirable not only because of the intrinsic worth of the project but because at least two Canadian companies are well-placed from the point of view of experience and equipment to carry out such a survey effectively and economically. If Cabinet agrees that Canada should finance this aero-magnetic survey at an estimated cost of $125,000, this allocation can be made from funds which would normally be available to India for 1955-56.

Provision of Two Beaver Aircraft for Pest Control

The Indian Government has asked Canada to supply two Beaver aircraft for use in their pest control programme. It is expected that these aircraft would assist in the control of malaria, in the destruction of locusts and in other important pest control programmes which are intimately related to the development of India agriculture.

Beaver aircraft have been supplied in the past, under the Colombo Plan, to Pakistan for similar purposes with good effect. It is estimated that two Beaver aircraft could be supplied at an approximate cost of $160,000 and that this project, if approved, could be financed through an allocation from the regular 1955-56 funds available to India.

Recommendations

It is recommended that:

(a) The Canadian Government should provide diesel generating sets to India to assist in the rural electrification programme. The cost of this project, estimated at $3 million, is to be financed through the utilization of $500,000 which remains unexpended from the funds set aside in 1952-53 for the Mayurakshi project and by the allocation of $2.5 million from uncommitted funds available to India as part of its regular allocation of aid in 1954-55.

(b) The Canadian Government should agree to carry out an aero-magnetic survey of West Rajasthan at an estimated cost of $125,000. The cost of this project is to be financed from funds which are available to India as part of its regular allocation of aid in 1955-56.

(c) The Canadian Government should agree to supply two Beaver aircraft to India for pest control at an estimated cost of $160,000. The cost of this project is to be financed from Colombo Plan funds available to India as part of its regular allocation for aid in 1955-56.<sup>33</sup>

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

RÉACTEUR DE RECHERCHE NRX
NRX RESEARCH REACTOR

254.

DEA/11038-1-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], March 21, 1955

ATOMIC ENERGY AND THE COLOMBO PLAN

Officials of this Department have recently had informal discussions on this subject with Mr. Bennett, the head of our Atomic Energy body which are summarized in the attached letter of March 21 from Bennett to Ritchie. From these talks, it seems evident that some activity in this field (including possibly the establishment of a reactor in India) would now be practicable and would have a good deal of attraction for both our atomic energy authorities and for competent Canadian firms which might undertake the work. Not only would such a project appear imaginative and dramatic to the people of Asia — and of Canada — but the point would seem to have been reached at which it could be of very great practical value to both the Asians and ourselves.

2. Despite the very preliminary character of the conversations which have taken place so far, I think it desirable to bring this matter to your attention at this stage in case you might wish to have a word about prospects with Mr. Howe before he leaves for Australia on April 8 and in case you might think it desirable to have Mr. Reid explore the possibilities with the Indian authorities before he leaves New Delhi early in April.

3. From a general political of view, we in this Department have, of course, been impressed for some time with the desirability of making arrangements which would enable the West to cooperate with friendly Asian countries in developing atomic energy for peaceful purposes. Such action might be particularly helpful in countering the impression which is apparently widespread in Asia that the West's only interest in this field is to develop what are regarded as fiendish devices of destruction. The need to counteract this view of our motives has not diminished with the circulation of rumours that the Soviet Union is helping China in the development of atomic energy for constructive uses or by the current fears of many Asians that the first post-war use of atomic weapons by the West might be against Asian populations.

<sup>33</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 19 octobre 1955/Approved by Cabinet on October 19, 1955.

4. The eventual practical importance of atomic energy for the economic development of the Asian countries which are generally so deficient in other energy resources has also frequently been emphasized. In competition with other sources, atomic energy may well be economic in such power-starved countries before it becomes a commercial proposition here. If the people of those countries are to prepare themselves to take advantage of the possibilities of this form of energy in the reasonably near future, it is important that the groundwork should be laid soon, and in the case of those countries which have already commenced on a modest scale (such as India) the process should be accelerated.

5. There seems little likelihood that an effective international agency concerned with peaceful applications of atomic energy will come into being for some time. Meanwhile, it would appear that it is being left to each Western country to determine what it might best do, within the limits of current security considerations, and possibly with a view to the need to fit any such arrangements in with the operations of whatever international agency is eventually established. As you doubtless know, the United States authorities are already making arrangements to receive a considerable number of trainees from various underdeveloped countries at their reactor schools. Similarly, the United Kingdom is apparently providing certain training facilities at Harwell. There have also been indications that the U.S. and U.K. might be contemplating the establishment of one or several reactors in the Asian region. Attempts are apparently also being made to interest the International Bank, possibly in association with some U.S. or U.K. group.

6. In the view of our atomic energy people, it would be most undesirable, especially from the longer-term commercial point of view, for us to lag behind. In addition to the general political considerations mentioned previously, there would seem to be very substantial reasons why Canada might be particularly well placed to take some initiative. The most important of these is probably the fact that some of the Asian countries, particularly India, might find it less difficult and less embarrassing to receive direct assistance from us in this rather delicate field than from either of the larger atomic powers whose motives might be questioned by groups in India as well as by other Asian countries.

7. In view of the nature of our operations at Chalk River, it is not possible for us to help them by introducing a significant number of Asians for training there. In any event, it is doubted that such training (which inevitably would be somewhat diluted) on reactors in Western countries could be nearly as effective as the actual management of a reactor in building up the body of knowledge and of experienced personnel which will be required if the Asian countries are to make substantial progress in this field over the next decade or so. In this connection, it is interesting that the Australians, who have more ready access to training facilities abroad than the Asians are likely to have for some time to come, have decided to acquire a research reactor of their own rather than to depend entirely on the training available to them overseas.

8. The security obstacles to the provision of a reactor to a country such as India would apparently not be serious. If the reactor were to be of the NRX type now operating at Chalk River, there would apparently be no significant security problem. About the only aspect of our NRX project which continues to be classified is the performance data. There might also be some problems to be resolved regarding control over the plutonium produced by any reactor which we might supply, but this presumably could be surmounted, especially if we assume that one way or another a country like India will acquire a reactor from some source (friendly or otherwise) and will be producing this material.

9. In addition to the decline in importance of security considerations, the main factor which has more or less suddenly made such an atomic project under the Colombo Plan seem promising is the active interest — almost enthusiasm — being shown by our atomic energy people and by a considerable number of Canadian firms. As implied above, it is evident that before very long the development of atomic energy and related products is going to become — if it has not already — very keenly competitive. Our technical people and our firms are anxious to gain some experience in order that they may be able to meet such competition in Canada and probably also in foreign countries. When, recently, several Canadian firms were approached concerning the building of a power reactor in Canada, the response was remarkable. Canadian General Electric, Westinghouse, Canadair, A.V. Roe, John Inglis, Dominion Bridge, and some others indicated that they were very nearly prepared to take on that contract at a loss in order to get themselves established in this field. While one or two of these firms will, no doubt, become involved in our own power project and will therefore be too pre-occupied to take on a job elsewhere, the remaining five or six firms would almost certainly be interested in any atomic project which we might sponsor in Asia. For the purpose of strengthening their competitive position for subsequent commercial activities, certain of these firms might feel that such a project abroad would be even more attractive than the one in Canada, since much of the future market may lie in the more difficult overseas countries rather than in Canada where alternative sources of power are available.

10. The conversations with our atomic energy people have not, of course, covered all the details since it seemed unwise to carry this matter very far before Ministers had had an opportunity to consider whether or not it was a starter. In general, however, it might be said that we have been thinking tentatively in somewhat the following terms:

(a) Canada might supply a reactor to India under the Colombo Plan. (India would seem to be the logical location for such an installation since the basic level of scientific knowledge is rather higher there than in most of the Asian countries and at least the nucleus of an atomic energy establishment now exists there.);

(b) the arrangements with the Indian authorities would be such as to avoid any fears or suspicions on the part of neighbouring Asian countries and, if possible, an understanding might be reached that trainees from nearby Asian countries would be brought into the project in order that they, too, might acquire at least some experience in the operation of a pile under local conditions;

(c) the reactor to be supplied might be of the NRX research type rather than a power reactor — although we gather from our atomic energy people that it might conceivably be possible to proceed with a power reactor in India at the same time as we are constructing our own reactor for power purposes;

(The preference for a research reactor is based primarily on the simple principle of learning to walk before attempting to run. An additional factor, which Ministers can best judge, is the possible reaction in Nova Scotia to the provision of a power reactor to India on generous terms when one was being refused to Nova Scotia. This latter factor might not be regarded as determining since, in fact, we have been providing hydro-electric generating plants to Asian countries under the Colombo Plan while refusing Federal assistance to similar power developments in certain Canadian provinces.)

(d) the atomic energy authorities here would be responsible for supplying the necessary drawings and technical assistance to the Canadian construction firm concerned and providing a certain amount of training for Asian personnel who would be responsible for operating the reactor in India;

(e) the Canadian construction firm would be expected to build the structures and instal the equipment at the site in India, presumably under supervision of experts from our Atomic Energy Board and from the Indian research establishment;

(f) on the basis of experience at Chalk River, it would appear that such a research reactor could probably be set up for about $15 million;

(Although prices have gone up considerably since our reactor was constructed, it is believed that such increases in costs as this might involve would be more than offset by the economies which could be made as a result of the fact that we could draw on our previous experience and would not have to proceed by the trial and error methods which had to be relied upon then. If we were to take responsibility for the townsite as well as for the reactor, the total costs would, of course, be higher — possibly by as much as $10 million — but, since the provision of such accommodation might be regarded as an Indian Government responsibility, in accordance with our normal Colombo Plan practice, it is probably not necessary to contemplate the use of Canadian funds for this purpose.)

(g) although the uranium metal required for the operation of a reactor of this kind is not at present available in Canada, it is considered that we might be producing it by the time the reactor would be completed or that no serious difficulty would be encountered in procuring it from other sources at that time;

(h) simultaneously with such activity in India, it might be possible for us to undertake certain more limited atomic energy projects, primarily of a medical character, in other Asian Colombo Plan countries.

(For example, we might find it practicable to meet a request which we have had from Burma for a beam therapy unit and might be able to provide training in the handling of isotopes to other Asian personnel if such knowledge could be used to advantage.)

11. If we were to contemplate going ahead with such activities, consideration would, of course, have to be given to the question of whether additional money could be added to the Colombo Plan Vote for this purpose next year (or in the Supplementaries later this year), or whether work in this field could be undertaken only at the expense of some of the more conventional Colombo Plan projects which have been submitted to us. In this connection, you will doubtless realize that the more ordinary types of projects which are being put forward by the Asian countries are mounting in number and in size. It would seem quite evident already that there will be more than enough of such projects to absorb the same amount of money next year as has been included in our Estimates for the current year. Since many of these projects would yield pretty substantial returns for the Asian countries concerned within a fairly short period, it would seem a pity to sacrifice them in order to start some work in the atomic energy field which inevitably would take a longer time to show tangible results. At the same time, it would seem regrettable to miss an opportunity to make a start in the field which is so important politically now and which can have such great importance for the future. It might be best to leave this difficult question unresolved for the time being and to touch upon it only indirectly in any consultations with the Indian authorities.

12. If you agree that the possibilities of an atomic energy project under the Colombo Plan should be investigated further, as a matter of some urgency, perhaps you would wish to have a word with Mr. Howe before he goes off to Australia. We have mentioned our interest at the official level in this subject to some of his officials (e.g., Mr. Bull and Mr. Sharp), but we understand that they will not pursue the matter with their Minister unless and until you raise the question with him. Since we understand that Mr. Bennett has not discussed the subject with Mr. Howe either, you might wish merely to indicate that, since you had gathered that there was probably an increasing interest from a technical and commercial point of view in the construction of a reactor in India under the Colombo Plan, you wished to let him know how beneficial you thought such a project would be in terms of our general relations with Asia. You might even wish to urge him to have a word concerning the possibilities with Mr. Bennett before he leaves for Australia in order that the matter might be looked into during his absence. You might add that, if he would be agreeable to having the question explored, you would propose to have Mr. Reid raise it informally in the course of his conversations with senior Indians when he is taking his leave of them before returning home.

(You will know best whether it would be desirable to mention this subject as well to any other Ministers, for example, Mr. Harris. We have not gone into it in any detail with officials of such other departments, although I should say that we have referred to our interest in the possibilities in the course of conversations with Mr. Deutsch, Mr. Plumpre and Mr. Rasminsky and have found them all personally responsive to our very tentative and general suggestions.)

13. If, following on any conversation which you might have with Mr. Howe, you felt that Mr. Reid should sound out senior Indians (including possibly Mr. Nehru and Mr. Deshmukh), we might instruct him on the following lines (recognizing that, as indicated in the attached letter from Bennett, the possibility of such a project outside the Colombo Plan may by then have been raised in correspondence between Dr. Lewis and Dr. Bhabha):

(a) in the course of his leave-taking calls, he might intimate confidentially to the Prime Minister and to other senior Ministers and officials concerned that on his return to Canada he proposes to explore with the Canadian authorities the possibilities of an atomic energy project;

(b) he might express the view that at this stage any such assistance could probably most practicably and usefully take the form of a research reactor. (In this connection, he might refer to the public reports that Australia has apparently concluded that such a reactor would be the best way of promoting its development of atomic energy.);

(c) he might enquire how interested the Indian authorities would be in this type of assistance and in particular whether, if that should prove necessary, they would give a higher priority to such a reactor than they would to some of the projects which they have already submitted to us. (Mr. Reid might express the opinion that a reactor of the kind he had in mind would cost about $15 or $20 million, in order to give the Indians some measure of the effect which acceptance of this project might have on other aid expected from Canada.);

(d) he might conclude by asking whether, if such a reactor were to be provided, the Indians would be willing to share its use in some manner with trainees from other Asian countries in order to spread knowledge in this field as widely as possible with a view to facilitating the constructive application of atomic energy to the problems of economic development in Asia in the shortest possible time.

14. If Mr. Reid's soundings are carried out, and if they show a fairly receptive attitude on the part of the Indians, it would then presumably be desirable (and we gather from Mr.

Bennett that it would be practicable) to have a qualified senior official from our Atomic Energy Board visit India for more intensive exploratory discussions.<sup>34</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Le président d'Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée.
au chef de la Direction économique*

President, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., to Head, Economic Division

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 21, 1955

Dear Mr. Ritchie

Further to our recent conversation I have now explored with our people at Chalk River the possibility of Canada undertaking the design and construction of a research reactor for India under the Colombo Plan.

I find that we have available a complete set of plans and specifications for the NRX reactor. While some modification of specifications might be warranted in the light of our experience with the operation of the NRX these would not involve a major effort in design and engineering. The changes in specifications could be carried out by a manufacturer with technical advice supplied by Chalk River.

My suggestion that a research reactor of the NRX type would be of interest to India is based on my information that Dr. Bhabha, the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission of India, is anxious to build up a strong scientific team as a preliminary to the development of atomic power for use in India. Our experience shows clearly that the training of scientists and engineers in the field of atomic energy can best be achieved through the operation of a research reactor. The NRX reactor was designed for this purpose and has proved to be the most useful research reactor of any now in operation. In this regard you may be interested in a statement which was made recently by Dr. Lawrence Hafstad, the former Director of the Reactor Development Division of the United States Atomic Energy Commission. In the course of an appeal to American industry to participate more actively in the development of satisfactory fuel elements for power reactors, Dr. Hafstad had this to say:

"In order to do this, one of the tools you ought to have is what we would call a fuel element testing reactor. It is pretty generally known in the business that we have an excellent research reactor in the materials testing reactor (MTR). In order to get the very high flux that reactor has, it was so designed that none of the holes available for testing samples is large enough to accommodate a full-sized fuel element. We have been depending upon the good nature of our northern neighbour, Canada, to test full-scale fuel elements in her NRX reactor. This has been going on for years."

As I pointed out in our conversation, the design of the NRX reactor has been declassified. Consequently, there should be no security problem. The NRX reactor uses heavy

<sup>34</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

This is a most interesting suggestion. Politically it could do more to strengthen our relations with India than anything I could think of.

Would it not be possible to obtain a special appropriation over & above our present Colombo Plan appropriations? I think such a gesture would receive a great measure of public support. J. L[éger].

water as a moderator and natural uranium, in the form of metal, as a fuel. I understand that India is now considering the construction of a heavy water plant. If this goes forward India would be in a position to supply the heavy water requirements of the reactor from its own resources. As an alternative heavy water could probably be purchased from the United States which will shortly be in a surplus position on this item. While Canada is not producing uranium metal, the Research and Development Division of Eldorado [Nuclear Limited] is now studying the economic feasibility of metal production. The volume of uranium production in Canada is rapidly reaching the point where we believe it would be economic to produce our own metal. I should think that there is a strong possibility that we would be in production at such time as India would have a requirement.

As you are aware, we recently invited proposals from Canadian manufacturers on the design, engineering and construction of a demonstration power reactor. All of the companies involved have shown a very real interest in the project. The degree of interest may be gauged by the fact that each of the seven companies invited to bid has offered to make a substantial financial contribution to the cost of the reactor. It is evident that some of these companies are anxious to get into the game even if their proposal for the demonstration power reactor is not accepted. I think it very probable that these companies would be interested in submitting proposals on a research reactor for India. Since plans and specifications are now available it should be possible to invite firm bids on the project. Assuming that the bids were invited by the International Economics and Technical Co-operation Division, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited would be prepared to accept the role of the consulting engineer.

In our conversation you raised the question as to whether we would be prepared to train Indian operators at Chalk River. There would be no difficulty in making such an arrangement. This is a point which should be stressed in any conversations which our High Commissioner's Office may have with the Indian Government.

I should expect that at some stage Dr. Bhabha, the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission of India, would be brought into the picture. Dr. Lewis has suggested that he might write an informal letter to Dr. Bhabha indicating our interest in providing a research reactor. I should like to have your comment on this suggestion.

Yours sincerely,

W.J. BENNETT

255.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Extrait d'une note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Extract from Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], March 25, 1955

ATOMIC ENERGY AND THE COLOMBO PLAN

In the light of our conversation regarding the suggestions made in my memorandum of March 21, I had an informal meeting in my office on Friday morning attended by Mr. W.J. Bennett, the Head of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Mr. Bryce, the Secretary to the Cabinet, Mr. Sharp, the Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Mr. Plumptre of the Department of Finance.

2. There was general support for the suggested project, and it was agreed that it should be explored further as a matter of considerable urgency.

3. Both Mr. Bennett and Mr. Sharp had discussed our tentative suggestions with Mr. Howe and had found him very much interested and even keen on the whole idea. They felt certain that, if you were to raise the matter with Mr. Howe before his departure, you would find him responsive. Mr. Sharp did not know whether Mr. Howe would be prepared to contemplate proceeding to New Delhi after he had completed his visit to Australia around May 8 in order to complete any talks which might have been commenced before then, but he undertook to discuss the possibility with him.

4. Mr. Plumptre had not consulted Mr. Harris, but thought that he would have no objection, provided it was clear that the cost of such a project could, if necessary, be financed from Colombo Plan funds already in hand or likely to become available before June 30, 1957. If any conclusion were to be reached now which would imply an increase in the Colombo Plan Vote over the next two years or which would pre-judge the question of whether or not Canadian participation in the Colombo Plan would continue after the middle of 1957, Mr. Harris would undoubtedly wish to have the matter considered very carefully and would naturally wish to have a voice in the decision. It appeared, however, that this problem could be avoided, particularly since Mr. Bennett estimated that the total cost would be between $5 and $10 million, rather than around $15 million as suggested in my earlier memorandum. You would doubtless wish to let Mr. Harris know of any significant developments in connection with this project, but it would not seem necessary to involve him deeply in any Ministerial consultations at this stage (especially as he is pre-occupied with the Budget) so long as it is agreed that this proposal is being explored without prejudice to the question of the future scale of our contributions under the Colombo Plan or of the duration of that Plan. Mr. Plumptre was going to mention the subject to his Minister and let us know if Mr. Harris wished to participate in any Ministerial discussions which might take place over the next few days.

5. Since it was realized that the Indians might conceivably be a little disappointed to be offered a research rather than a power reactor, it was suggested that some consideration might be given to associating some Indian trainees with the work of our demonstration power reactor, at the same time as we might be supplying them with a research unit, in order that they might become acquainted with developments in the power field as early as possible. Mr. Bennett was not sure whether this would be feasible, but said that the possibility could certainly be looked into. It was noted that, in fact, the Indians might be quite glad to have a research pile rather than a ready-made power reactor, since the former would enable them to carry on developments fairly independently. The acquisition of a research reactor might therefore be not only the soundest course but also the one most pleasing to their national pride.

6. The general views of the informal meeting this morning were that:

(a) you might wish now to consult Mr. Howe and discuss the matter with the Prime Minister.<sup>35</sup> (A brief memorandum is attached which might be useful for this purpose.† The fuller memorandum of March 21 is also attached in case you may wish to refer to it.)

...

[J.] LÉGER

<sup>35</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I have done this. L.B. P[earson]

256.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM 197

Ottawa, March 30, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram No. 205 of March 29.†

ATOMIC REACTOR

This matter has now been considered by Ministers, and it has been agreed that you should be instructed to:

(i) indicate to senior Indian Ministers (including, if possible, Mr. Nehru and presumably Mr. Deshmukh) that Canada would be prepared to consider providing India with a research reactor of the NRX type now in operating at Chalk River under the Colombo Plan for use in an atomic energy research centre;

(ii) explain that a research reactor would probably be the most useful type for India at this stage, particularly for the purpose of building up the body of knowledge and the corps of qualified personnel which will be required in order to take advantage later of the electric power and other potentialities of atomic energy (as evidenced by our own experience and by the course which we understand is being followed by Australia, Belgium, Denmark and Switzerland who are also acquiring research reactors);

(iii) seek their general reaction to such a suggestion (before your departure, if possible) including the condition that scientists from other Asian countries Colombo Plan should be permitted to receive training such a centre in order to spread knowledge in this as widely as possible with a view to facilitating constructive application of atomic energy to the problems of economic development in Asia in the shortest possible time;

(iv) remark that, if this offer were to be accepted, we would also hope to be able to offer certain training facilities in Canada for those who would be responsible for the maintenance and operation of the reactor;

(v) inform the Indian authorities that this project might be at the expense of other projects, some of which are already under discussion. In this connection, the Indian authorities might wish to indicate the priority which they would attach to this project in comparison with other projects which they have suggested to us. (The total cost would be between $5 and $10 million spread over a construction period of two or three years.);

(vi) assure the Indian authorities of the Canadian Government's desire to cooperate constructively in this new field.

2. We think it desirable that the exploration of this possible project should proceed rather quietly and confidentially at this stage and do not intend to initiate a rushed exchange of letters between the two Prime Ministers with a view to immediate publication. We do not know what, if any, arrangements the Indian authorities may already have underway for similar assistance from some other country. The Indian authorities before definitely and publicly accepting our offer would want to satisfy themselves that, in fact, our type of reactor would be most suitable for their purposes. In this connection, the Technical Director of Atomic Energy here is writing to Dr. Bhabha explaining the features of our reactor (without, of course, mentioning the possibility that one might be supplied under the Colombo Plan). We would also consider it desirable that no publicity be given to this project until it can be presented in a light which would be satisfactory to other Asian countries (by including, for example, a reference to the admissibility of other Asian scientists for training on the reactor). It would be impossible to get advance agreement on these and other points in time to permit an exchange of letters prior to your departure.

3. We, of course, have very much in mind the desirability of effective publicity at an appropriate stage which we would hope would not be more than a few weeks away. At that time, a formal exchange might take place between the two Prime Ministers in the light of the exploratory conversations or some other arrangement might be made to ensure adequate publicity. One of the possible alternatives might conceivably be for Mr. Howe to visit New Delhi briefly after he leaves New Zealand early in May. This possible alternative should not, of course, be mentioned to the Indians.

L.B. PEARSON

257.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 218

New Delhi, April 1, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram No. 197 of March 30.

ATOMIC RESEARCH REACTOR

1. I have explored this informally with the Secretary-General this morning and am this afternoon giving him an informal letter addressed to Prime Minister Nehru so that Nehru may, if he wishes, discuss the matter with me on Sunday.

2. Pillai was delighted to learn of the offer especially since he felt it would be much easier for India to accept this kind of assistance from Canada than from either the United States or the United Kingdom.

3. He saw the reason for the condition that scientists from other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan should be permitted to receive training at the Indian centre. He would look at the list of Asian members of the Colombo Plan to see whether it might be "politically embarrassing" for India to have scientists from any of those countries. He foresaw, however, no difficulty with countries such as Thailand and the Philippines. He thought there would have been difficulty if Formosa had been a member.

4. He said that the question of the use of nuclear energy would probably come up at the African-Asian Conference [Bandung]. If the agreement with Canada specifically mentioned scientists from Colombo Plan countries in Asia, people might ask whether this meant that scientists from other Asian and African countries would be excluded. It might well be that Middle Eastern and African countries, which are not members of the Colombo Plan, would want to have their scientists receive training at a research centre in India.

5. In making this point he was not referring to China. So far as Peking China is concerned, he said it was hard to forecast the conditions two or three years from now, when the plant would be completed. Perhaps relations between Peking China and the Western world might be much better. There was the possibility, however, that Peking China might try to embarrass India by asking that their scientists receive training at the Indian research centre. So long as the public agreement between Canada and India contained no explicit prohibition on the granting of training to Chinese, he thought this problem could be faced at the time in the light of the circumstances then existing.

6. Since the other Colombo Plan countries in the area would benefit from the gift of the reactor to India, I hope that this project might not be wholly at the expense of other projects for assistance to India under the Colombo Plan.

7. Any comments I could have from you on Pillai's initial reactions would be useful for my talk with Nehru on Sunday.

[E.] REID

258.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 222

New Delhi, April 2, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Our telegram No. 218 of April 1.

ATOMIC RESEARCH REACTOR

1. Following is the text of my letter referred to in paragraph 1 of my telegram under reference: Quote

My dear Prime Minister,

I have been instructed to inform you that Canada would be prepared to consider providing India, under the Colombo Plan, with an atomic research reactor for use in Atomic Energy Research Centre in India. The research reactor would be of the NRX type. This type is now in operation at Chalk River, the Canadian Government's atomic energy establishment near Ottawa.

Our experience in Canada indicates that a research reactor would probably be the most useful type for India at this stage, particularly for the purpose of building up the body of knowledge and the corps of qualified personnel which will be required in order to take advantage later of the electric power and other potentialities of atomic energy. This has not only been our own experience but we understand that it is the course which is being followed by Australia, Belgium, Denmark and Switzerland who are also acquiring research reactors.

In order that atomic energy may be applied constructively in the shortest possible time to the problems of economic development of the Asian countries in the Colombo Plan, it is clearly essential that knowledge in this field be spread as widely as possible among them. Canada, therefore, assumes that if India were to accept the Canadian offer, India would wish to permit scientists from the other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan to receive training at the Atomic Energy Research Centre in India where the research reactor from Canada had been installed.

If the Canadian offer were accepted by India, Canada would hope to be able to provide certain training facilities in Canada for those who would be responsible for the maintenance and operation of the reactor.

The total cost to Canada of the research reactor would be between 5 and 10 million dollars, spread over a construction period of 2 or 3 years. This project might be at the expense of other projects for Canadian assistance to India under the Colombo Plan. Some of these other projects are already under discussion between India and Canada. The Indian authorities might therefore wish to indicate the priority which they would attach to the research reactor in comparison with the other projects which they have suggested to us.

The Canadian authorities also realize that the Indian authorities will want to satisfy themselves that the Canadian type reactor would be most suitable for their purposes. To assist in this examination the Technical Director of Atomic Energy of Canada is writing to Dr. Bhabha explaining the features of our reactor without of course mentioning the possibility that one might be supplied under the Colombo Plan.

I have given this communication a high security marking because of its exploratory character and because it is clearly desirable that nothing be said publicly at this stage about the proposed project.

In placing this offer of the Canadian Government before you, I have been asked to assure you of the desire of the Canadian Government to cooperate constructively with the Indian Government in applying atomic energy to peaceful purposes. Unquote.

[E.] REID

259.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM 215

Ottawa, April 2, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram No. 218 of April 1.

ATOMIC RESEARCH REACTOR

In specifying the condition mentioned in paragraph (iii) of our earlier message, our primary concern was that access to the reactor for training purposes should not be unduly restricted. We had in mind particularly the misunderstanding which might arise in a country such as Pakistan if its scientists were to be excluded entirely.

2. We consider Pillai's reaction to be generally sensible. We agree with what is apparently his view that it would be unwise to lay down restrictive conditions at this stage when it is impossible to foresee what the situation might be when the reactor would come into use.

260.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 226

New Delhi, April 4, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your telegram No. 215 of April 2.

ATOMIC RESEARCH REACTOR

1. Prime Minister Nehru discussed this with me after lunch on April 3. He thanks you very much for your offer. He said he is not able to say more at the moment since he is consulting Bhabha. He had thought of giving Deshmukh a copy of my letter to him but decided to wait until he had heard from Bhabha. It is not therefore possible for me to discuss the matter with Deshmukh.

2. The Prime Minister did not abide any other aspects of the question.

3. I shall pass on to Pillai informally your comments in your telegram number 215 on his initial reactions.

4. I am leaving Delhi for Bombay on April 7.

[E.] REID

261.

DEA/11038-1-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 259

New Delhi, April 19, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your telegram No. 232 of April 15.†

ATOMIC RESEARCH REACTOR

When I saw the Secretary General today I asked him what progress had been made by the Indian authorities in considering our proposal. I told him confidentially that Mr. Howe, who will be leaving New Zealand around May 3, might be able to visit New Delhi if the Indian Government could come to a decision sufficiently in advance of May 3 to permit the Canadian authorities to complete their consideration. The Secretary General's reply was disappointing. He said that India was immensely grateful to Canada for its generous offer and that the Indian Government was giving it careful consideration. He then went on to say, however, that before a decision could be reached it would be desirable for Bhabha to have a look at the NRX type reactor and on the basis of his recommendations the Indians would be able to make a decision. He emphasized that he did not want us to get the impression that India was ungrateful for the offer but he said that there was some question of whether the NRX type reactor was not becoming obsolete.

2. In the circumstances he did not think there would be any point in Mr. Howe visiting Delhi in connection with our proposal. He added that, of course, Mr. Howe would be welcome at any time. He wondered, however, whether the early part of May would be the most desirable in view of the number of delegates from Bandung who plan to visit here en route home.

3. Pillai then said (speaking off the record) that if the reactor were an outright gift and India's acceptance of it was not at the expense of other projects for Canadian assistance to India under the Colombo Plan, there would be no difficulty in arriving at a decision. If, however, the gift of the reactor were at the expense of other projects, then it would be necessary to consider it in the light of the projects which the Indians have put forward and in the context of whatever recommendations Bhabha might make after seeing it.

4. There also seems to be another aspect of the proposal agitating the Indians. This relates to the condition that scientists from other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan receive training at the Atomic Research Centre in India where the Canadian research reactor would be installed. Pillai said that India had already made contact with the United Kingdom on atomic research questions and it could well develop that if the Canadian reactor were available for training of non-Indian scientists confidential atomic research information received by India from the United Kingdom might be compromised. This is an administrative problem which perplexes the Indians.

5. As I see it, then the Indians will come to no final decision until Bhabha has had an opportunity to investigate our NRX type reactor. Is it possible for you to invite him to visit Chalk River?

6. If the reactor is an outright gift and not tied to other Canadian Colombo plan aid to India, it is conceivable that arrangements could be made to formalize the gift without Bhabha visiting Canada and thus permit Mr. Howe to participate. This, however, is a question to which undoubtedly you will wish to give very careful consideration.

[B.M.] WILLIAMS

262.

PCO/R-100-1-A

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

[Ottawa], June 14, 1955

In the light of recent developments I think it would be desirable for us to review the tentative offer to consider providing a reactor to India. It would seem that there are very strong political and commercial reasons for making a more definite and more liberal proposal to the Indian Government. This would appear to be a matter on which we should act rather quickly if we really hope to do something. If we are going to proceed, we might try to come to some conclusion in time to make a precise offer immediately after Mr. Nehru's return from his visit to Eastern and Western Europe early in July — and, in any event, well before the Geneva meeting on atomic energy in early August. I would hope that if a new and more attractive offer is to be made, it might take the form of a personal message from you to Mr. Nehru accompanied by a detailed proposal on which the Indian Government could take an early decision.

Accordingly, I am writing to our colleagues the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce putting forward a concrete suggestion. I attach copies of the letters which I have sent to them. If such a project would have your support, and if our colleagues are agreeable, I would hope that it might be considered within the next two weeks.

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au ministre du Commerce*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of Trade and Commerce

SECRET

Ottawa, June 14, 1955

My dear Colleague,

POSSIBLE PROVISION OF AN NRX REACTOR TO INDIA
UNDER THE COLOMBO PLAN

Since the end of March when we authorized our High Commissioner to explore this possibility with the Prime Minister of India several things have happened which would appear to make it most desirable, from both a political and economic viewpoint, that we now make a more positive offer.

This would seem to me to be the case despite the fact that the Indian Government has not yet responded very definitely to our original tentative proposal. I am satisfied that their hesitancy is not due to a lack of interest in our reactor (which, I understand, is well suited to their requirements) — or a lack of appreciation of our gesture — but reflects rather their concern at the possible loss of aid from us for other important development projects which might have to be sacrificed if they took our reactor. So long as they must allow for the possibility that the reactor might come out of their regular allotment of Canadian aid, I think it only prudent for them in their present tight position to consider whether it might not be better to go on taking all of their aid from Canada in more "conventional" forms and try to get a reactor wherever they can get it most economically. I do not feel, therefore, that we should regard it as surprising that they are examining the possibility of securing a suitable reactor from the United States, the United Kingdom, or elsewhere, on more favourable terms. That does not mean, as I see it, that they do not want our reactor very much, or that they would not be well advised to take it. It may well mean, however, that they will get their reactor from some other country if we do not make our offer more precise and more attractive from their point of view.

In this connection, the recent announcements regarding arrangements for setting up a U.S. reactor in Japan (as well as some less ambitious U.S. projects in Latin American and other parts of the world) are probably significant. President Eisenhower's further offer last Saturday in Pennsylvania may also have considerable appeal.<sup>36</sup> In addition we know that the United Kingdom, as well as the United States, is in close touch with the Indian authorities. Moreover, it is conceivable that in connection with the Geneva meeting on atomic energy in August — or on the occasion of Prime Minister Nehru's visit — the U.S.S.R. may be contemplating some dramatic gesture. It is quite possible that India may be attracted by an offer from one or another of these sources.

Such an outcome (except, of course, the Soviet possibility) would not be unsatisfactory if we had no interest in seeing India acquire a reactor from Canada. I take it, however, from the discussions in March, that there are very substantial reasons why we consider it worthwhile to encourage them to secure a Canadian-type reactor and one installed by Canadian firms.

Commercially, I believe you consider that such a project would be very advantageous for us, not only in terms of possible export business later on but also for the purpose of enabling more of our interested firms to get into this field and make themselves competitive for future work in Canada. Nationally, I think we are all aware of the satisfaction which the country takes in the position which has been achieved by Canada in atomic energy matters — thanks in large measure to the direction which you have given — and I am sure that it would be regarded as natural and proper if we were now to duplicate abroad the type of reactor which is serving Canada so well as we ourselves move into the power stage. Internationally, I am convinced that it would be most wholesome and constructive, in a very solid way, for Canada to set up the first experimental and research reactor in India — which is such a key country in Asia and in the Commonwealth, and a country with which we have developed particularly important relationships in recent years.

In these circumstances, and in the light of the very good programmes which India, and Pakistan and Ceylon as well, have submitted for ordinary forms of aid this year, I feel that we should offer all, or a substantial part, of the cost of the reactor over and above the present total of our Colombo Plan contribution.

I believe that this should still be done, however, within the framework of the Colombo Plan and not as an entirely separate venture. The undertaking of such a project would be less likely to be misunderstood in Asia if it was associated with the Colombo Plan. The Colombo Plan in turn would probably benefit from having such a constructive project carried out under its auspices. Furthermore, if we were to act under the Colombo Plan, we might follow the course suggested above without necessarily adding to the burden on the budget this year, since that part of the expenditure falling in the current fiscal year could be met from the existing appropriation.

To my mind, there are several good reasons for making the bulk of this project additional to the present vote. Two have already been mentioned: the special interest which I think we have in encouraging the Indians to adopt a Canadian reactor and the fact that India and the other two Asian countries have already submitted good programmes which would use more than the available amount of funds. Another reason is that this project is more a "regional" than a "national" one since it is envisaged that it would also be used by scientists from countries other than India (including possibly some from Asian countries which are not now receiving capital aid from us, such as Burma and Indonesia). It is, therefore, rather similar to the regional aid to which the United States is expected to devote some $200 million in addition to regular country programmes of some $700 million.

<sup>36</sup> Le président Eisenhower a offert l'aide des Américains aux pays « libres » et « amis » pour le développement de réacteurs nucléaires à des fins civiles. Voir United States, Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower 1955, Washington D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1959, Document 121, pp. 593-600.

President Eisenhower offered American help to "free" and "friendly" countries in developing nuclear reactors for civilian purposes. See United States, Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower 1955, Washington D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1959, Document 121, pp. 593-600.

The kind of proposal which I have in mind is indicated in the enclosed memorandum. I should be grateful for your comments on it.

This would now seem to me to be a matter on which we should act rather quickly if we are anxious to do anything. I would hope that we might submit a definite proposal to our other colleagues very soon and that, if we are going to proceed, we might be in a position to make a precise offer to the Indian Government immediately after Mr. Nehru returns from his visit to Eastern and Western Europe early in July — and in any event well before the Geneva meeting in early August. I think such an offer might best take the form of a personal message from Mr. St. Laurent accompanied by a detailed proposal on which the Indian Government could take a decision.

I am writing on similar lines to our colleague Mr. Harris and I also plan to discuss the matter with the Prime Minister.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

Projet de proposition au Gouvernement de l'Inde
Draft Proposal to Government of India

SECRET

[Ottawa, n.d.]

(a) The Canadian Government is willing to provide an NRX reactor to the Government of India for use by Indian scientists and by scientists of other Asian nations in the Colombo Plan. (The method of keeping the number of scientists from such other countries within practicable limits and any other safeguards which the Indian Government might consider necessary could no doubt be worked out on a satisfactory basis with an appropriate degree of consultation.)

(b) The Canadian Government's contribution would cover all external costs, including designing the reactor and related structures, supervising construction, and procuring, shipping (acceptance of shipping charges in this case would appear to be justifiable, without creating a precedent, in view of the special nature of the shipping arrangements which would probably be required) and installing the operating equipment. (The question of the provision of the fuel might be left open for discussion until the project nears completion.)

(c) The Indian Government would be responsible for providing the site, and all locally available labour and materials required in construction, including the charges of an Indian construction contracting firm if feasible; although the Canadian Government would be willing to agree to the use of existing counterpart funds, and the balance of those not already allocated from the sale of aluminium and copper supplied by Canada under the Colombo Plan, to meet a substantial part of such local costs.

(d) That part of the foreign exchange expenditures falling in the current fiscal year (which would not be large and might be limited to a maximum of, say, $500 thousand) would be deducted from existing Colombo Plan funds and indirectly from the amount which might otherwise have been allocated to India.

(e) The balance of the foreign exchange element in the project, up to a maximum of $7 million, would be covered by additional Canadian Colombo Plan contributions over the succeeding two years as the progress of the work might require, subject to the appropriation of funds by Parliament; such contributions to be over and above what would otherwise have been the total amount made available by Canada for Colombo Plan purposes and not to be deducted from what would otherwise have been the allotment to India for ordinary economic development projects in those years.

(f) In the event that the total foreign exchange expenditures exceeded $7.5 million, the excess might be deducted from any allocation of Canadian aid to India during the year in which any such excess arose.

(g) The Canadian Government would also provide, under the Technical Cooperation Scheme, such training as might be practicable in the operation of this reactor and in related fields.

263.

PCO/R-100-1-A

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, June 14, 1955

I sent you today a memorandum about the possibility of liberalizing our offer of an atomic research reactor to India. It may be argued that this increase (it would amount to about $7 million) in our Colombo Plan appropriations would be over-generous. When these matters come up in Cabinet, comparison is always made with United States contributions. In this connection, I hope you may be able to find time to read the attached memorandum on "Comparison of Canadian and United States Foreign Aid Programmes".† This was written before President Eisenhower's recent offer to share the cost of atomic research reactors with friendly foreign countries. Without this additional assistance the figures show that for the last 3 years the United States aid contributions are greatly in excess of those from this country on a per capita basis and, indeed, on a relative gross national income basis. While, of course, the comparison cannot be exact, during the period in question the United States appropriated nearly $4 billion for non-military foreign aid while our appropriations were less than $100 million. In the field of military aid, the United States appropriated nearly $10 billion, while our figures were close to $1 billion (though $200 millions of this was not spent.) It should also not be forgotten that much of our NATO mutual aid consisted of existing military equipment which was charged on the basis of replacement value, something which is, I understand, not possible in U.S. accounting procedures.

All in all, the record indicates that in so far as comparison with the United States is concerned, Canada is, to say the least, not doing more than its share in this field.

L.B. PEARSON

264.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 11, 1955

POSSIBLE PROVISION OF AN NRX REACTOR TO INDIA
UNDER THE COLOMBO PLAN

1. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 30th, 1955, said that Mr. Nehru had been informed that Canada was prepared to consider providing an NRX reactor for India under the Colombo Plan. The Indian government had hesitated in responding definitely to this proposal, probably because of concern at the possible loss of aid for other development projects which might have to be sacrificed if the reactor were accepted. So long as India had to allow for the reactor being financed out of regular Colombo Plan allotments, it was only prudent to take all aid from Canada in more conventional forms and secure a suitable reactor where it could be obtained economically without the sacrifice of other aid.

It was thought that India was examining the possibility of obtaining a reactor from the United States or the United Kingdom. It was also conceivable that, following the Geneva meeting on atomic energy or as a result of Mr. Nehru's recent visit to Moscow, Russia might make some dramatic gesture of this nature.

There were good reasons why it would be worthwhile to encourage India to secure a Canadian type reactor installed by Canadian firms. Such a project would be of advantage for future export business. It would enable more Canadian firms to gain experience in this field. In terms of international relations, it was desirable that it be Canada which set up the first research reactor in India, a key country in Asia and the Commonwealth, and a country with which Canada had developed close relationships in recent years.

For these reasons, the Minister thought the original offer should now be made more precise and more attractive. It might be suggested that a substantial part of the external cost of the project, estimated at $7 million, be met from funds supplementary to the present total of our Colombo Plan contribution. This figure was based on estimates for installing a similar reactor in Canada, and it might have to be revised when more detailed plans were prepared.

Provision of the reactor could be undertaken within the framework of the Colombo Plan and not as a separate venture. In this context it would be less likely to be misunderstood in Asia, and the plan would benefit substantially from having such a constructive project carried out within it. In such circumstances, it would be possible to suggest that India permit scientists from other countries in the area to use the facilities that would become available.

If the proposal were acceptable, a definite offer could be made to the Indian government on Mr. Nehru's return from abroad, in the form of a personal message from the Prime Minister to Mr. Nehru. Subsequently, a complete proposal could be submitted for consideration.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, July 8, 1955 — Cab. Doc. 144-55)†

2. Mr. Pearson added that he had already discussed the proposal with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance. It might be possible to meet a small portion of the cost from unallotted Colombo Plan funds, but this was doubtful. The project would be a two-year one and expenditures would be spread over this period.

3. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The matter should be settled, at least in principle, before the Geneva meeting in August and before the meetings, to be held in the autumn, on the future of the Colombo Plan. During these latter discussions the Canadian attitude towards the future of the plan would have to be indicated, and probably some general idea given of how much assistance could be expected in the future. The reactor should be regarded as part of Canada's overall contribution to the plan as extended, although it would be additional to the present programme.

(b) The reactor could be a special contribution to benefit all countries in the Colombo Plan area. The information and techniques resulting from its operations should be made available to the other nations concerned. It would be situated in India because of that country's size and technical advancement in relation to other Colombo Plan countries.

(c) If there were practicable peaceful purposes for nuclear energy, it would be gratifying to have Canada play an important part in their development for Asia.

4. The Cabinet noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the possible provision of an atomic energy reactor to India under the Colombo Plan, and agreed,

(a) that a personal message from the Prime Minister be sent to Mr. Nehru, informing him that Canada was prepared to provide a research reactor out of funds supplementary to the present total of the Colombo Plan contributions, but within the framework of the plan as a whole;

(b) that it be suggested that India might permit scientists from other countries in the area to use the facilities which would become available; and,

(c) that this project, if accepted, be taken into account in the determination of Canada's participation in the extension of the Colombo Plan to be considered in the meetings next autumn.

...

265.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM 454

Ottawa, July 15, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

PROVISION OF AN ATOMIC REACTOR TO INDIA

In my immediately following telegram you will find the text of a personal message from Mr. St. Laurent which should be transmitted to Mr. Nehru as soon as possible. The purpose of this message is to inform Mr. Nehru, in general terms, of the decision of the Canadian Cabinet to make a definite offer to India of an NRX atomic reactor, to be financed largely from funds supplementary to those now available for allocation to India.

under our regular aid programme. If an offer along these lines is accepted in principle by Mr. Nehru, we would then be prepared to make a precise proposal to the Government of India, setting out in detail the financial and technical aspects of this project.

2. Prior to the submission of this detailed proposal to India, Ministers have indicated that further consideration should be given in Canada to some of the following aspects:

(a) As accurate an estimate as possible would have to be established for the cost of the reactor, particularly the external costs, for which Canada would be responsible. It would then be the Canadian Government's intention to request Parliament to vote additional funds to the Colombo Plan based on this estimate and which would be spent presumably over a period of two or three years. In order to get the project under way it might be necessary to use existing Colombo Plan funds for certain limited foreign exchange expenditures which might fall within the current fiscal year. This amount would probably be very small and would not materially affect our participation in any of the conventional projects which India has proposed to us for this year's programme. Towards the end of the project it may be possible that the estimate of cost will prove to be too low. Depending on the circumstances, the Canadian Government might prefer to cover any such revisions from existing Colombo Plan funds rather than requesting Parliament for a further special vote.

(b) Further consultation is required before it would be possible to say whether or not Canada would be prepared to assume the costs of freight and insurance involved in the shipping of the equipment for the reactor.

(c) If the offer is accepted, consideration will also be given to the possibility that Canada might propose to India that some of the existing counterpart funds might be used for local costs.

3. These details should not be discussed at this stage with the Indians. Decisions concerning them could be reached fairly quickly if Mr. Nehru accepts this new offer. We hope that the Indian Government will be able to give us a definite reply at a very early date.

4. For your own information, we feel it would be very helpful to reach agreement with the Indians prior to the conference on atomic energy which is to be held in Geneva in August.<sup>37</sup> We also consider that the announcement of this project prior to the Singapore meeting of the Colombo Plan would have a beneficial effect. However, for the moment we are treating this proposal as highly confidential and it has not been discussed in any way with any other government.

<sup>37</sup> Une conférence parrainée par les Nations Unies pour examiner les aspects scientifiques et techniques des utilisations pacifiques de l'énergie atomique s'est tenue à Genève du 8 au 20 août 1955. Voir Canada, Ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, volume 7, n° 11, novembre 1955, pp. 300-303.

A UN-sponsored conference to examine the scientific and technical aspects involved in the peaceful uses of atomic energy was held in Geneva from August 8 to 20, 1955. See Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Volume 7, No. 11, November, 1955, pp. 297-300.

266.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM 455

Ottawa, July 15, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: My immediately preceding telegram.

PROVISION OF AN ATOMIC REACTOR TO INDIA

The following is the text of a personal message to the Indian Prime Minister from Mr. St. Laurent, which you should communicate to Mr. Nehru as soon as possible:

2. "Shortly before our High Commissioner left New Delhi to return to Canada for his home leave, he raised with you the possibility that Canada might supply an atomic reactor to India under the Colombo Plan. Subsequently, I believe, there have been some informal exchanges between scientists of our two countries with respect to the technical details of our NRX-type reactor and its usefulness for research and experimental purposes.

3. "Given the tremendous potentialities offered by atomic energy for the generation of power, which is in all our minds today and which would seem to hold promise of altering radically the economic aspects of power production in India, I believe that Canada might make a valuable contribution to India's economic development by making available at this time the NRX-type reactor, which has served us so well in our own scientific activities and in our preparations for the development of nuclear power. Our experience has shown that working with a reactor of this type is one of the best ways of familiarizing experts with the techniques of developing nuclear power. In addition, of course, a reactor of this type produces materials of great value to various branches of science and medicine.

4. "I am sure that you share my conviction that international cooperation in the development of atomic energy will best serve our mutual desire to promote rapid and durable economic progress in all parts of the world. With this in mind, I would hope that, if you decided to accept the proposal made above, you would be prepared to permit scientists from other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan, who have such a great interest in this field, to benefit from the facilities available at any atomic energy research centre in India where the research reactor from Canada might be installed.

5. "I have had an opportunity to discuss with our High Commissioner the progress you are making in your economic development programme and to hear something of the projects which your officials have proposed to us for assistance under the Colombo Plan in 1955-56. In view of the importance and urgency of these projects in your development programme, I believe that the bulk of the Colombo Plan funds which we were planning to allocate to India this year should be devoted to these projects. It is the view of the Government that any atomic reactor which we might supply should be provided in a manner which would leave virtually unchanged the amount of funds available for assistance to India in financing conventional development projects.

6. "If you are satisfied that an experimental and research reactor of the type which we are able to supply would be of real value to India and to other countries of South and South-east Asia, I am confident that our officials could work out detailed arrangements which would make it possible for this reactor to be provided without materially affecting the volume of assistance in other forms which we are anxious to give to the great efforts which your people are making in carrying out your imaginative and constructive economic development plans.

7. "As I believe Mr. Reid indicated to you in his earlier communication, I think it desirable that this possible project should be explored without any publicity at this stage. Accordingly, I would not propose to say anything about it publicly until after I have heard from you."

8. "With sincere congratulations on the great success of your recent Western tour and warm personal regards. Louis St-Laurent"

267.

DEA/11038-1-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 467

New Delhi, July 18, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your telegrams Nos. 454 and 455 of July 15.

PROVISION OF AN ATOMIC REACTOR TO INDIA

I handed Mr. St. Laurent's personal message to Mr. Nehru to the Secretary General this morning. Pillai said he would give it to the Prime Minister today.

2. Pillai again expressed appreciation for our offer. He was also pleased to learn of the decision to finance the reactor largely from funds supplementary to those now available for allocation to India under our regular aid programme.

3. In paragraph 4 of my telegram No. 259 of April 19 I mentioned an aspect of the proposal which seemed to be getting the Indians. Pillai again today (speaking privately and personally) referred to this condition. He said that he fully understood our position and the need from our point of view for this condition. He went on to say, however, that it posed problems for India in its atomic research activities. This condition undoubtedly bothers the Indians. I suggested that our reactor might be so located that scientists from other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan working with it would not have access to buildings, etc., which Indian atomic research authorities wished to keep secret.

4. Bhabha is in Bombay and Pillai will, I think, ask him to come up to Delhi to speak with the Prime Minister about our offer.

5. Pillai told me that Bhabha has been invited to visit the USSR. Pillai also said that he understood that India was building a research reactor.

6. When Pillai was in the Soviet Union with the Prime Minister he visited an atomic research centre where the Russians are using atomic energy to generate electrical power. Pillai said they are now producing 5,000 kws. but the cost is about three times that of Hydro electric power. The Soviet experts told them now that the technical difficulties had been ironed out, they hoped to be able to produce 100,000 kws. for about the same cost as Hydro electric power.

[B.M.] WILLIAMS

268.

PCO/R-100-1-A

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au premier ministre*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, August 4, 1955

Dear Mr. St. Laurent,

I am enclosing a letter from the Indian High Commissioner to you conveying the personal reply from Mr. Nehru to your message regarding the atomic reactor.

As you will see, the Indian authorities would be willing, if we provide them with a reactor, to allow accredited foreign scientists, including those from other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan, to work with it. This assurance would seem to indicate that the Indians are adopting the kind of attitude towards this proposed project which we had hoped for and would appear to make it reasonably likely that the provision of a reactor would be of benefit to other countries in South and Southeast Asia. Mr. Nehru does not say that scientists from all Asian countries in the Colombo Plan would be admitted but I feel we should assume for the present that his reference to "other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan" is intended to include Pakistan, which appeared to us to be the main one concerned when we prepared the original proposal.

The main problem raised by Mr. Nehru has to do with the difficulties which may be encountered in operating an NRX type reactor in Bombay where only salt water from the harbour would apparently be available in adequate quantities. In view of these difficulties, Mr. Nehru indicates that his advisers would prefer to receive the NRU model which they understand can be cooled with heavy water and thus reduce to a minimum the technical problems involved in cooling the operating part of the reactor under Bombay conditions. Mr. Nehru observes that the Indian Government would gladly meet any difference in cost which there might be between the two types of reactors.

We have raised these questions with Mr. Bennett, the President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and he will discuss them with Dr. Bhabha in Geneva during the next week or so. Mr. Bennett's immediate reaction is that it would be quite out of the question to provide the Indians with an NRU model. I understand that Mr. Bennett has discussed the subject with Mr. Howe and that Mr. Howe is writing you today concerning some of the obstacles which stand in the way of our providing an NRU reactor.

It may well be that after our people have had an opportunity to discuss the various aspects with the Indian scientist in Geneva, they will reconsider their preference for the NRU reactor and that some way will be found of overcoming the problems anticipated in operating an NRX type reactor in Bombay. In any event, I think you will agree that it would be desirable to defer a reply to Mr. Nehru's message until after we have a report on these conversations in Geneva. I am sending copies of this letter and enclosures to both Mr. Howe and Mr. Harris.

Best regards

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Le premier ministre de l'Inde
au premier ministre*

*Prime Minister of India
to Prime Minister*

[New Delhi], July 31, 1955

"I thank you for your message of the 16th July conveying the generous offer of your Government to make an atomic reactor available to us, under the Colombo Plan, in addition to the funds for assistance in financing our conventional development projects. I warmly welcome the proposal and assure you of our willingness to provide facilities for working with the reactor to accredited foreign scientists including those from other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan.

Whilst I am convinced of the great value that an experimental and research reactor would be to India, I am advised to indicate our preference for the NRU model, which you now have under construction, as being better suited than the NRX to the physical conditions of Bombay where the reactor would have to be located in a part of the Atomic Energy Establishment.

The technical reason for this, I believe, was mentioned in those informal exchanges between Scientists of our two countries to which you have made reference. As we shall have nothing like the waters of your Chalk River with which to cool the NRX reactor, we will either have to cool the cooling water which flows through the reactor in cooling towers, or by passing it through a heat exchanger in which the secondary circuit will contain the salt water of the Bombay harbour. With this arrangement, it would be better to use heavy water than ordinary water in the primary cooling circuit. If this is done, the reactor will approximate more, I understand, to your NRU reactor than to the NRX.

I would indeed appreciate your giving some thought to this aspect of the matter and venture to add that we would gladly meet any difference in cost that there may be between the two Canadian models. Perhaps when our Scientists meet in Geneva next month, for the Atom-for-peace Conference, they would take the opportunity to continue informal discussions about these reactors. In any case, it would be convenient if sketch plans and data sheets for the NRX and including, if possible, for the NRU reactor could be supplied to Dr. Homi Bhabha by the Canadian delegation.

I am very happy to receive your congratulations on my recent tour and your personal good wishes. With my sincerest regards, Jawaharlal Nehru."

269.

PCO

*Le ministre du Commerce
au premier ministre
Minister of Trade and Commerce
to Prime Minister*

PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, August 4, 1955

My dear Prime Minister,

Regarding Canada's proposal to supply a research reactor to India, I have read Prime Minister Nehru's reply to your message of July 14th. It would appear from the reply that India's preference is for a reactor of the NRU type rather than the NRX type. For the reasons set out hereunder, I regret that we are not in a position to supply a reactor similar in design to the NRU reactor.

Our original proposal was based on the assumption that India was anxious to develop a research programme in the field of atomic energy. Experience in Canada and in the United States and the United Kingdom indicates clearly that a reactor which can be used for research and experiments is essential to such a programme. The NRX reactor, which went into operation in 1947, has certain unique characteristics as a research and experimental reactor. It is largely because of this that our research and development effort has reached its present advanced stage. It was our view that such a reactor would be of great value to India in the training of scientists and engineers and in the carrying out of research and experiments necessary for the development of atomic power. We are in a position to undertake the construction and installation of such a reactor with a minimum of delay, because a full set of plans is now available. Moreover, we would have no doubt as to its successful operation, inasmuch as we have accumulated eight years' operating experience. We are also in a position to make a reasonably accurate estimate of capital and operating costs because of our own cost experience. The NRU reactor, on the other hand, is still under construction and it is not expected to be in operation until late in 1956. Apart from the other objections which I shall mention, it would be most unwise to undertake the design and construction of a second reactor of the NRU type until we have had some operating experience.

The NRU reactor is quite different from the NRX reactor in several important respects. This reactor was designed primarily for the production of plutonium which will be sold under contract to the United States Atomic Energy Commission. The reactor will also have a large capacity for testing and experiments. In addition, it will be capable of producing large quantities of radioactive isotopes for sale in Canada and abroad. The reactor is much larger in size than the NRX reactor and much more complicated in design. This is reflected in the difference in cost. We estimate that the NRX reactor, including the building and services, could be built to-day for $8,000,000. The estimated cost of the NRU reactor is $48,000,000. There is a similar difference in the annual operating costs of the two reactors. The annual operating cost of the NRX reactor, including the uranium fuel, is approximately $2,000,000. It is estimated that the annual operating cost of the NRU reactor, including the uranium fuel, will be $10,000,000. Because of the complexity of its design, it is expected that the NRU reactor will require a highly-trained group of engineers and scientists for its operation. Such a group will be available in Canada because of our experience in operating the NRX reactor. My officials are convinced that no comparable group exists in India. In this connection you will recall that we have agreed to train Indian operators for the operation of the NRX reactor.

While there has been much declassification of information in recent months, there is still a large body of information which remains classified under our classification agreement with the United States and the United Kingdom. Included in this are certain design features of the NRU reactor. Under the existing classification arrangement we are, therefore, not in a position to communicate to India the full details of the design of the NRU reactor.

The NRX reactor, because of its unique facilities, has been used extensively for experiments by the United Kingdom and the United States. This arrangement has been of great benefit to Canada on three counts. First, it has enhanced greatly our position in the field of atomic energy. Second, we have derived valuable information from the United States and United Kingdom experiments. Third, it has been an important source of revenue. Since the NRU reactor will provide better research and experimental facilities than those in the NRX reactor, we anticipate a corresponding increase in the benefits indicated above. In fact, we expect that the NRU reactor will be the finest research and experimental reactor in the world. Considering the amount of our investment, we would hope to be in a position to exploit the advantages of the new reactor to the fullest extent.

For the reasons stated above, I recommend that you advise Prime Minister Nehru that we cannot consider the proposal that a reactor of the NRU type be supplied to India. I suggest that no reference be made to the classification problem, although this must be an important factor in our decision.

W.J. Bennett, the President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, has arranged to see the Indian atomic energy officials at Geneva next week. Mr. Bennett will state our position without reference to the classification problem. He will also provide the further information which has been requested with respect to the NRX reactor. Similar information about the NRU reactor cannot be supplied because of classification. Perhaps you might consider deferring your reply to Prime Minister Nehru until Mr. Bennett has reported on his conversations at Geneva.

Yours sincerely,
C.D. HOWE

270.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour P.M. Dwyer, Bureau du Conseil privé*

Memorandum from Secretary to Cabinet to P.M. Dwyer, Office of the Privy Council

SECRET

[Ottawa], August 24, 1955

RE DISCUSSION ON INDIAN REACTOR AND RELATED MATTERS

At Mr. Bennett's request, I went over this morning to his office with Messrs. Léger, Plumptre, Cavell and one or two others, to hear the results of his discussions with Bhabha in Geneva on this subject and we covered a number of other matters as well. You should see the top few items in file No. R-100-1-A.

Bennett had two meetings with Bhabha — one on the Monday immediately after he got to Geneva and another about ten days later. He also had a number of meetings with the Americans and the British on the International Atomic Agency and the relation of it to the proposed meeting now going on in Geneva following the conference.

In regard to the Indian matter, after some discussion with Bennett and Lewis — several others apparently were also present — Bhabha came to the conclusion that probably it was not necessary to go to an NRU type reactor rather than an NRX type because of the problem of cooling it, as set forth in Nehru's reply to Mr. St. Laurent. Apparently the Indians will have to locate their reactor in Bombay and rely upon sea water there for cooling it. This will not only be salt water but will be at a temperature of 80 odd degrees. However, it appears that this can be used for cooling an NRX type circuit, where the cooling water (light rather than heavy water) circulates directly around the fuel elements within the reactor itself. As a result of these conversations, it now looks as though our proposal to give them an NRX type is acceptable to Bhabha and he will so advise Nehru. On the other hand, he wants his real experts to have a look at NRX and discuss it in some detail. Consequently some experts are coming from Geneva and some from India to be at Chalk River about September 15th. As a result of this visit they will come to a technical decision as to whether this is the type of reactor that will be suitable for their purposes.

Bhabha told Bennett that they had made arrangements with the U.S. to get a "swimming pool" type reactor from the U.S., apparently under an arrangement whereby the U.S. will pay half the cost. They visualized this as the first stage in their reactor programme. They were then going to go, as a second stage, to an E-443 type reactor from the U.K. This is a heavy water moderated reactor that apparently uses partially enriched fuel. It is much larger than the small "swimming pool" type. They thought the NRX type might be their third stage. Now they are revising their thinking and Bhabha feels that perhaps they could go straight to NRX as their second stage. It is this they must investigate further technically.

Apparently there have been some discussions with the U.K. about an E-443 reactor, but no commitments or definite understandings. Bennett did not learn what sort of financial arrangements might be involved, but presumably the Indians would pay the U.K. for it. Bennett understood that the next step in this matter was probably a further message from Nehru to Mr. St. Laurent after Bhabha has reported back to Nehru. I gathered that this would be before the visit of the Indians in September.

In his discussions with Bhabha, Bennett touched upon the financial arrangements, indicating that he understood the Canadian government was prepared to provide the costs of the reactor and its assembly, but not of the building for it apart from foundations for the reactor itself. All this would be provided up to a total of not more than $7 million outside of the regular present Colombo Plan programme of funds. He indicated that Canada would not propose providing either the heavy water or the fuel charge (on this see below).

The U.S. at Geneva, in a statement that appeared to be using the conference for propaganda much to the disgust of the British, indicated that they were prepared to sell uranium at $18 a pound and heavy water for reactor purposes at $28 a pound. Apparently they also indicated they were willing to sell U-235 at a certain figure for research purposes. This has some relation to India acquiring the heavy water and fuel charge.

On the basis of the encouraging reaction from Bhabha, we discussed the next stages if we were going ahead. It was decided that a contract for the reactor to the NRX design and specifications should be let by the Colombo Plan administration. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited would be their consulting engineers and would in fact employ a consulting firm itself to do the detailed engineering work, although it would be necessary for Atomic Energy of Canada to put two or three of their own people on the project full time. They thought that the design should not be altered in any but the most minor particulars from the reactor as it is at present. One of the minor particulars would be to have somewhat larger holes in the upper surface of the reactor so that the calandria tubes can be removed, and also the control mechanism in the design would be in accordance with the new mechanism now being made for NRX by an American company. It was definitely understood that no physicists would be permitted to look at the design at this stage, but only engineers whose work would be necessary to make any minor adjustments. They will have to have a group of engineers or tradesmen work on the preparation of a new set of drawings and specifications, reflecting the present design of NRX and these will be used for calling for firm bids for the manufacture of the reactor. Bids will probably be invited from four or five Canadian firms or combinations of them, but perhaps C.G.E. will not be invited to bid in view of its work on the new power reactor. It is thought it would take a couple of months to get the new drawings and specifications ready before calling for firm tenders. We decided that this work should not be commenced before the Indian group arrived in September, but perhaps the engineering firm to do this work will be selected and one of their men invited to come along at the same time as the Indians, so that he will be aware of any special problems that they raise.

One of the most important problems arising out of this proposal to provide the reactor to India is what conditions we should attach to the arrangements relating to the control over and use of the plutonium produced in it. The NRX type and size reactor produces enough plutonium each year to make several weapons apparently — that is, the quantity produced is significant enough to take into account in the control over the potential production of weapons.

It appears that the control over plutonium produced in research and power reactors is one of the most important purposes that the Americans and British have in mind in sponsoring the International Atomic Energy Agency. It appears that the Russians also see this as a virtue in the Agency. This was made evident by the fact that the Russians requested the special meeting in Geneva this week, following the conference, in order to study the possibility of a technical accounting for and control over plutonium production under the Agency arrangements proposed by the Americans. The inference certainly is clear that the Russians regard this as one of the most important aspects of the Agency's work. It looks as though the three major powers now producing nuclear weapons have in mind the importance of preventing their production by others, particularly one may assume by relatively small countries with unstable and perhaps from time to time irresponsible governments. This is a problem that Norman Robertson adverted to last year when visiting Ottawa. It is obviously a serious long-term question, as there are many countries in the world whose government structure is so unstable and various governments from time to time so irresponsible that one would see grave danger in their producing or having nuclear weapons with which they might not only cause serious damage to their neighboring or rival small countries, but perhaps in one way or another use them to initiate a major war.

If out of the setting up of the International Agency we are going to get some effective control over the use of the byproduct plutonium, then we should make our arrangements with India consistent with this. To do so, however, raises a most delicate political problem as it would be necessary to spell this out in some fashion, and yet do it in a way that would not be an insult to the Indians, either by assuming that they might have warlike intentions or might be prey to the instability or irresponsibility that we fear in others, or might supply the plutonium to others in this category.

I hazarded a suggestion that perhaps we could take the general line of principle that where uranium or other material (thorium?) is provided by any country to another for research or power purposes, the resulting by-product plutonium or other fissile material (e.g. U-233) should be controlled and accounted for and sterilized in effect to non-military uses by any party. It seemed to me, and the others were inclined to agree, that perhaps India would find this general principle acceptable and it might also be acceptable as the basis of policy in regard to the International Agency. Such by-product fissile material could be used for enriching fuel for power reactors or could be used to a smaller degree for research purposes. It would, however, take an elaborate accounting and control organization to enforce this but it would look as though this were possible.

It was agreed that this was a problem of first-rate importance and we should think about it and meet again in about a week's time. We will also review the other aspects of the Indian reactor question at that time, including the possibility of our sending an interim reply to Nehru based upon the report Mr. St. Laurent will receive of the discussion with Bhabha.

We shall also want to think about this general question of the control of by-product plutonium in connection with the setting up of the International Agency. This is the question which the Americans, Russians, British, French and Canadians are discussing at the special meeting in Geneva this week. Barton has gone over to join Lewis at this meeting and we should be getting word on this from them. If you see anything of this among the telegrams, please let me know. I wish you would give some serious thought to this question, both in relation to the Indian proposal and to the International Agency.

In regard to the Geneva conference generally, Bennett had a good deal to say that was interesting but I shall not endeavour to go into it all here. It was a very large conference with the sessions each day commencing at 9.00 a.m. and running to 5.30 p.m. In addition, there was a great deal of informal contact between delegates of all nations, including the Russians who talked surprisingly freely. There was no endeavour by the Russians to use the conference for propaganda purposes, although the Americans did so. The Russians gave the first paper on a power reactor in the plenary session on the second day of the conference but it was a cold dispassionate technical account of a reactor that seemed to have been rather quickly built without frills in order to get into the field of power without delay in designing refinements. This design is so like NRX as to lead one to suspect that Bruno Pontecorvo must have contributed substantially to its design from what he saw and did at Chalk River.<sup>38</sup> Incidentally, they indicated that Pontecorvo had worked in their atomic energy programme but was now engaged in other work in the field of physics.

The Russians showed a considerable competence in the field of theoretical physics and reactor technology Bennett said, in reply to a question from me. They also showed a great interest in and knowledge of the field of biological effects of radiation control and safety measures, etc. Their standards of radiation were similar to our western standards, but their procedures for inspecting and checking were apparently much more severe than ours and this gave some concern to Cipriani.

As I told you this morning, one surprising feature was that the Russians provided almost no information on, nor asked any questions about raw materials and their treatment. They said very little about uranium occurrences and gave no information as to location of occurrences in Russia. What they said and talked about in the field of geology was quite general. Bennett did not know whether Lang had any conversation with our correspondent Ditmar. I shall have to ask Lang myself.

<sup>38</sup> Bruno Pontecorvo était un scientifique italien qui a travaillé dans les laboratoires de recherches atomiques du Conseil national de recherches de 1943 jusqu'en janvier 1949. Il a fait défection en Union soviétique en 1950.

Bruno Pontecorvo was an Italian scientist who worked in the National Research Council's laboratories on atomic research from 1943 until January 1949. He defected to the Soviet Union in 1950.

Bennett said that the Canadians, and I gather the Americans and British, felt there was some significance to this Russian avoidance of this field, but they cannot guess what the significance is — for example whether it indicated they were hard up for raw material or that they had ample supplies and did not wish to disclose this. This is perhaps something we should follow up on the intelligence side.

In general, it was the judgment of the British and Americans, as well as the Indians, that the Russians had made very real progress in the field of atomic energy.

The above has been dictated just from my memory of the meeting, as I made no notes and I may have omitted some matters. I am sending a copy of this note to Léger in the hope that if there is something I have overlooked that External Affairs consider important, they will let me know.

I think perhaps we should raise with the Prime Minister and Mr. Pearson the question of some interim reply to Nehru next week.

R.B. B[RYCE]

P.S. I forgot to mention one important point. In order to get control over the use of plutonium produced in the pile to be given India, it might well be desirable for us to provide the fuel elements on loan, to be returned to us for replacement and we would treat them to recover the "plute" and re-use the partially spent uranium. The value of the plute would perhaps be nearly enough to compensate us for what was used up, and the investment in supplying the fuel would be justified by the measure of control achieved.

This led us to consider the desirability of aiming at various degrees of processing of uranium in Canada. Bennett now thinks (as I do) that we should at least create the facilities to produce pure natural uranium metal in billets. Perhaps we should do more in due course.<sup>39</sup>

R.B. B[RYCE]

271.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour P.M. Dwyer, Bureau du Conseil privé
Memorandum from Secretary to Cabinet
to P.M. Dwyer, Office of the Privy Council*

SECRET

Ottawa, August 30, 1955

Léger and Bennett held another meeting on the Indian atomic reactor this morning to which I went on practically no notice at all, so I was unable to take you with me.

We discussed further with Finance, before Plumptre left for the east, the financial arrangements and costs. The estimated cost of the initial charge of fuel rods is about $600,000 a year, of which about one-fifth is the cost of fabrication and cladding and the remaining four-fifths the value of the uranium at $22 a pound. The rate at which this fuel charge is used up depends on the power at which the fuel is run and a number of other factors. In the case of NRX, they use up about the amount of the initial charge in one year. There are about 196 rods at something around 120 pounds each. The freight in shipping rods to India would not be substantial as they do not need any special treatment. Returning them, however, it is necessary to provide shielding, which might be as heavy as the rods themselves, and also some arrangement for cooling them with water. This should not be too difficult on a ship.

<sup>39</sup> Il y a des notes marginales illisibles au verso de ce document.

There are some illegible marginal notes on the back of this document.

Operation of the pile at full power should produce something like 8 kilograms of plutonium a year but only a few grams of this would be needed by India for research. If the uranium is irradiated for more than 600 megawatt days per ton, a unit of measurement of the intensity of the radiation of the fuel, it develops isotopes of plutonium which make it unsuitable for weapon purposes unless greatly diluted (it explodes prematurely). In normal operation, the fuel rods would be irradiated 2,000 to 3,000 megawatt days per ton.

We discussed the arrangements for controlling and disposing of the plutonium and financing the furnishing of fuel which are somewhat interrelated. We also discussed the arrangements for taking up these questions with the Indians.

In regard to the substance of the arrangements, we were pretty well all in agreement that Canada should furnish and India should undertake to obtain from Canada the fuel elements for this reactor. If and when the International Agency is in operation, conditions on which the fuel would be furnished would be consistent with those established by the International Agency. If it is not in existence, the conditions of furnishing the fuel elements would be in accordance with a bilateral agreement to be made between Canada and India. This agreement would provide that the fuel elements would be returned to Canada, that Canada would furnish fissionable materials to India in research quantities for research purposes, and that Canada would undertake that the remaining fissionable materials would be held and used only for peaceful purposes. If the Agency were in existence when these materials became available, they would be contributed to the Agency or disposed of in accordance with its controls.

In regard to financing, we came to the conclusion that we should undertake to provide the fuel elements and to renew them for the first three years of operation. The cost of this provision and renewal would be charged to the Indian allotments under the Colombo Plan, of course assuming that India agrees. It will be difficult to say what the annual cost of renewal is because the costs of processing are very uncertain at this stage and the value to be attributable to the contained plutonium is most uncertain in the present outlook. It looks as though the annual cost as we might determine it would be $1/2 million at the outside and perhaps considerably less. There was general agreement that if the International Agency was in existence, Canada and India might jointly contribute the plutonium to it. In any event, we would agree to restrict its use.

We did not get into the question of inspection, but it is possible that we might agree to inspection of our disposition of the plutonium if that were necessary to make it acceptable to India to submit to some inspection of their disposition of the rods.

In regard to the next steps, it was agreed that Bennett should send a message to Bhabha suggesting that he should send with the group visiting Chalk River in mid-September a man who could discuss the terms of a bilateral agreement between Canada and India on this subject, including for example arrangements for the provision and disposal of fuel elements and possibly the relation of the bilateral agreement to the International Agency. It was also agreed that it should be suggested to the Prime Minister that he should send an interim reply to Mr. Nehru, acknowledging Nehru's letter, noting that useful talks had taken place between Bennett and Bhabha, expressing appreciation of what he said in his reply in regard to admitting scientists from other Colombo countries and indicating that the government here would be pleased to have a group of Indian scientists visit Chalk River in mid-September for detailed discussions on the possibility of implementing the proposal. External Affairs would also hope that the Prime Minister might express the hope that it would be feasible to complete arrangements in time to make some announcement about the project within the following few weeks (they have in mind Mr. Pearson announcing it at the Singapore meeting on the Colombo Plan). It may be difficult to make the necessary arrangements by this time.

I am going to draft out something with External for an interim reply to Nehru. Bennett will draft and inform us of a proposed message to Bhabha. Finance and External will try to put down the sort of terms that we might put into an agreement with India on this matter.

It was suggested by External Affairs that the cost of the Indians coming to Chalk River from India in September might be met out of Colombo Plan funds. Finance was willing to go along with this, although they were clearly a little reluctant to see us suggest this at this stage.

R.B. B[RYCE]

272.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le premier ministre de l'Inde
au premier ministre*

*Prime Minister of India
to Prime Minister*

TOP SECRET

New Delhi, September 2, 1955

"You were good enough to make an offer of a reactor to India and I expressed my gratitude to you for this generous offer. I suggested then that it would be advantageous for some of our scientists to discuss this matter with Canadian scientists at the Geneva Conference on Atomic Energy. I learn now from Dr. Bhabha that he and his colleagues had some discussions with Mr. Bennett, President, and Dr. Lewis, Vice President of the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, regarding the Canadian offer of a NRX reactor. These talks resulted in a friendly agreement between them and I am now writing to you formally to accept your kind offer of a NRX reactor for India. I am grateful to you and your Government for this and I am sure that this will not only bring about close cooperation between the scientists of our two countries but also be another link between us.

Some of our scientists including Dr. Bhabha will be visiting Canada about the third week of September.

Kind regards."

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

273.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM 590

Ottawa, September 2, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

ATOMIC REACTOR

Would you please deliver the following personal message from Mr. St. Laurent to Mr. Nehru in reply to a message which Mr. St. Laurent received on Friday through the Indian High Commissioner here. Message begins:

I was extremely pleased to receive your message of September 2 in which you indicate that you formally accept our offer to provide an NRX reactor to India under the Colombo Plan.

I was also pleased to learn from your earlier message of July 31 that you are willing to provide facilities for working with this reactor to accredited scientists from the other Asian countries in the Colombo Plan.

Our officials are looking forward to the visit of Dr. Bhabha and the other members of the party which will shortly be visiting Canada to discuss the details of this project.

Until they have had an opportunity to discuss the details of these arrangements I would suggest, if you agree, that we might refrain from making a public announcement. I would hope, however, that we could proceed during the next month to secure agreement on these details. There might be advantage in having the announcement made at the time when Mr. Pearson will be visiting your part of the world in connection with the Colombo Plan meeting.<sup>40</sup>

With best personal regards,
Message ends.

274.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM E-662

Ottawa, October 7, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

NRX REACTOR

There have been discussions in Chalk River and Ottawa with Dr. Bhabha and a team of Indian scientists concerning the terms of the agreement for the provision of the NRX reactor to India as well as the technical arrangements relevant to its construction and erection. Dr. Bhabha leaves tonight and the remainder of his team are staying on for several days.

<sup>40</sup> Voir/See Canada, Department of External Affairs, Press Releases, 1955, No. 71.

2. We proposed to Dr. Bhabha that Canada would lease to India the initial fuel element required for the reactor and replacements for a three-year period. According to our proposal the irradiated rods from the Indian reactor would be returned to Canada where plutonium and other byproducts would be extracted. Such byproducts as India might require for its research programme would be returned to India. Rental and other costs involved in these arrangements would be charged against India's regular allotment under the Colombo Plan, although we were prepared to consider that the rental charges of the initial fuel element might come out of the extra allocation which parliament will be asked to vote. It is evident that there will be strong Indian resistance to any arrangements for providing them with an atomic reactor which would not give India complete ownership and control of the fuel elements and byproducts (particularly plutonium).

3. Dr. Bhabha first suggested that India was considering establishing its own processing plants but later admitted that objections to leaving fuel elements and byproducts under Canadian control were essentially of a political nature.

4. Because of our agreement with the United States and United Kingdom we must consult these countries before we could agree to any proposal which would transfer complete ownership and control of the fuel elements and byproducts to India. Bennett proposes to discuss this next week at a meeting in Washington with Plowden and Strauss which had been called to discuss other questions. Bennett will press discreetly for more liberal view on part of United States with regard to control arrangements which rely on ownership of fuel elements and byproducts remaining in Canadian hands. Dr. Bhabha has indicated that his Government will give an undertaking that no fuel elements or byproducts supplied from Canada will be used for other than the peaceful development of atomic energy.

5. Although Dr. Bhabha has adopted a strong position with regard to this aspect of the project we are still very hopeful that satisfactory arrangements can be worked out that will enable us to provide India with the reactor. Bennett will have an opportunity to see Bhabha in Washington after his meetings with Plowden and Strauss. Negotiations concerning other aspects of this project have gone very well.

6. On the basis of preliminary estimates it looks as though the external costs for which Canada would be responsible will fall within the $7 million estimate. The preliminary estimate of the cost for India is the rupee equivalent of about $6 million. Dr. Bhabha suggested that if rupee costs exceeded this estimate they would like to use Canadian counterpart funds. We explained that we would have no objection to this and that we would be quite prepared to consider the use of counterpart funds for some or all of the rupee costs of the project. We will send you by bag a more detailed explanation of the financial understanding that have been reached with Dr. Bhabha.

7. It is our view that details of this project should be incorporated into an agreement which as in other Colombo Plan projects would be carried out in an exchange of notes between yourself or Mr. Pearson during his visit and the Indian Government. Dr. Bhabha indicated that Mr. Nehru would probably sign any such exchange on behalf of India. We will shortly forward to you a draft agreement for presentation to the Indian Government some parts of which have already been discussed with Dr. Bhabha.

8. Apart from discussions concerning fuel arrangements Dr. Bhabha has been extremely co-operative and he has made a good impression on officials and ministers in Ottawa. Negotiations have been carried out in a very wholesome atmosphere and we are reasonably confident that we can solve the difficulties over the supply of fuel.

275.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1726

Washington, October 13, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your E-1720 of Oct 7/55.†
Repeat New York No. 7.

NRX ATOMIC REACTOR TO INDIA

Yesterday I attended with W.J. Bennett a meeting in the atomic energy commission which discussed only the plan for providing to India an NRX reactor. Sir Roger Makins attended with Plowden.

2. We explained that while some advance notice had been given to the State Department, there had been a leak in the Canadian Press. However, the actual discussions with Dr. Bhabha had begun only last week.

3. Bennett outlined the attitude which Bhabha had taken towards the Canadian proposal under which the title to the fuel elements would be retained by the Canadian Government and the processing done in Canada. The arrangements for fuel elements were designed to be temporary, this to avoid any arrangement which might prove to be in conflict with the agency at a later date. As had been anticipated, Strauss raised objections to the Indian terms. His general comment was that such an arrangement would create a precedent and run counter to the draft plans for the international atomic energy agency. He indicated two particular objections to the Indian proposals:

- (a) that they would create in India fissionable material available for atomic weapons;
- (b) that they would provide for Indian processing.

He appeared to regard the second of these two as the more important.

4. I explained the importance which the Canadian Government attached to the plan for providing the reactor. It would be an appropriate contribution by the West and fit properly under the general purposes of the Colombo Plan. I did not dispute Strauss' comment that the Indians were criticizing the terms of a gift. I said that we were not unfamiliar with Indian sensitivities, but this was an element which had to be accepted.

5. Finally, I suggested that there were two considerations which appeared to be conflicting:

- (a) that the Indian proposals would, admittedly, involve arrangements which we would all like to avoid;
- (b) that a collapse of the plan for providing the reactor would, in our view, be more than unfortunate.

6. Makins was not in a position to support the Canadian position. He had telegraphed to London but was informed by the Foreign Office that this important matter would have to be referred to Ministers.

7. Strauss had little to say except as indicated above, and seemed unready to look towards an escape from the present dilemma. He said that the question was one for the Secretary of State who would, no doubt, seek the views of the AEC.

8. This discussion developed from meetings between the A.E.C. and Plowden and Bennett, representing respectively the British and Canadian atomic energy authorities. The particular item on their agenda which had been held over until yesterday so that I could attend related to the exchange of information (between the three parties) concerning bilateral arrangements which any one government or authority might be making. Bennett and I had been in touch with Bryce before yesterday's meeting to make sure that the position we took reflected the views of the Prime Minister and the Government in Ottawa. We also reported to Bryce by telephone after the meeting.

9. From yesterday's discussion I would judge that the A.E.C. will oppose our yielding to Bhabha's insistence on Indian ownership of the fuel element. We have, however, made it clear that in the Canadian view the larger considerations tend to outweigh any risk involved. We admitted the difficulty of such a precedent but suggested that this might be overcome satisfactorily by a provision emphasizing the interim character of the arrangement pending agreement upon a new international régime.

10. Presumably Strauss will now consult the Department of State. But in this area of Government here we cannot be sure. In any event it seems to Bennett and me that we should allow time for United States comment before negotiations with the Indians are completed. Bennett will be in a position to report much more fully on his return.

A.D.P. HEENEY

276.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1744

Washington, October 15, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our telegram No. 1726 of Oct. 13.
Repeat Permdel No. 95.

NRX ATOMIC REACTOR FOR INDIA

Following for the Under-Secretary, Begins: Our telephone conversations with you and Bryce, October 13 and 14, following our meeting at the Atomic Energy Commission (reported in our telegram under reference) enabled you to comment on the situation as it had developed and to indicate to us further the attitude of the Prime Minister and the Government in Ottawa. You instructed me yesterday to take the opportunity of my interview with the Secretary of State on other matters to explain to him the general position we took and the importance we attached to concluding an arrangement with India.

2. When I raised the subject with Dulles in terms similar to those Bennett and I had employed with the Commission, the Secretary told me that Strauss had already mentioned the matter to him. Without commenting on our assessment of the "political" value of our proposal he said at once that he had for some time been concerned at the slow progress made by U.S. authorities in giving practical effect, with appropriate safeguards, to the President's proposals for making atomic energy available for peaceful uses. Now he foresaw the danger of other nations — perhaps some with irresponsible governments — acquiring atomic weapons unless we were able to make rapid progress in some means of international control. What would the situation be, for example, if the Peron Government had had atomic weapons? The United States and the United Kingdom might be able to hold the line in agreement with the Soviet Union but if access to nuclear weapons were wider we would be in great difficulty.

3. I said that Canadian authorities agreed with him completely that it would be exceedingly dangerous to allow a situation to develop such as that he had described. As I understood it the quantity of weapon material involved in our deal with India would not in itself be serious; the point which seemed to worry the A.E.C. was the acquisition of processing techniques and the precedent which the transfer of ownership of nuclear fuel might create. The Indians were insistent on title. They would quite evidently regard our refusal to transfer ownership as an evidence of lack of confidence in our good faith. If our agreement broke down on this issue the general result would be serious not only for relations between Canada and India but for relations with Asian countries generally.

4. I told Dulles that we would hope to work out some formula which would satisfy the Indians and at the same time avoid the creation of a precedent which would be embarrassing in dealings with other Governments. We would insist upon the provisional nature of the agreement pending the establishment of an agreed international régime. We might be able to transfer actual title and yet retain the right to reprocess the fuel elements. In any event it could be agreed that the rules of the international agency when set up would replace any arrangements we made with the Government of India on an interim basis. It seemed to me that the essential problem was to weigh the risk involved against what we regarded as the serious political consequence of failure to complete our agreement.

5. To sum up, I made it clear that we hoped and expected to be able to complete our agreement with India on terms calculated to achieve the substantial political as well as material objectives we had in mind. Secondly, I made it clear that we hoped to do this in such a way that no serious intrinsic risk would be involved and no pattern set which would hamper the establishment of a general régime under which an international agency would have effective control of critical materials. Dulles made no attempt to give any final expression of the attitude of the United States Government. He contented himself with pointing out the difficulties mentioned above, showing some interest in the development of some formula along the lines I had described.

6. Horsey was present at this interview and I took the opportunity afterwards of making quite sure that he understood our position as I have no doubt that the State Department will be reporting the result of this exchange to the Atomic Energy Commission. Heaney. Ends.

277.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*La délégation auprès de la Conférence du Plan de Colombo
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to Colombo Plan Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 10

Singapore, October 17, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

VARIOUS ATOMIC PROJECTS

Following from the Minister: We do not foresee serious problem for us at this meeting in connection with the U.S. regional project. We are not being asked to co-sponsor and would not expect to have to comment beyond confirming the hope that these different ventures might complement each other and indicate our general desire to be cooperative within practical limits. We doubt necessity of any working party. In view of leak here regarding U.S. proposal and competition over location it seems clear they will have to determine site themselves and preferably include definite decision on this point in their announcement if they are to avoid provoking controversy which would undo any of the wholesome political effects of the project.

Regarding our own idea we propose to handle in terms of original press release from which we would not be justified in drawing back at this stage. We are aware of continuing difficulties in Washington talks on which the U.K. have been keeping us informed but we do not see these require any playdown of our proposed project. I can not imagine these difficulties will not be overcome by one side or the other giving a little and compromise being reached or by whole issue being deferred in hope it can more readily be resolved nearer to the time of the completion of the project especially if international agency in being by then. U.S. would seem to have considerable reason to be accommodating in view of the importance of their own general relations with India countenanced by possibility that if we do not supply, Russians may and in view also of U.S. proposed project in this area which would be greatly strengthened by existence of our unit in India. Indians also would seem to have reason not [to] persist in objections of our terms. I would propose to bring out some of the relevant considerations as I see them in my talks later in New Delhi if this would fit in with your discussions with the U.S., and others.

In talks with Nehru and others I would propose to point out:

- (a) our proposal would enable the Indians to acquire powerful and versatile reactor on most economical possible terms which is not unimportant, in view of problem of finding resources for their economic development programme;
- (b) proposed U.S. centre elsewhere in the area might reasonably make the Indians more anxious than before to have our advanced type of unit on their territory;
- (c) we have shown our confidence in India by offering them this kind of reactor;
- (d) they should now show at least some trust in us and be ready to rely on us to release adequate quantity of plutonium and other products (to reassure them somewhat perhaps we might try to reach agreement now on minimum quantities of these materials which would be returned to them);
- (e) they should share our interests, not prejudice prospects, for establishment of an international agency which would be able to exercise effectively the kind of control which India would undoubtedly wish to see applied to other countries (in this connection we have always envisaged that our suggested conditions would be reviewed later and brought in line with agency's rules).

Please let me know in New Delhi whether this approach would be suitable and useful.

278.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à la délégation auprès de la Conférence du Plan de Colombo

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Delegation to Colombo Plan Conference

TELEGRAM E-26

Ottawa, October 18, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram No. 10 of October 17th.

VARIOUS ATOMIC PROJECTS

Following for the Minister: This morning I met with Bennett and Bryce to discuss the results of Bennett's discussions in Washington with the Atomic Energy Commission and Heeney's interview with Dulles.

2. Your telegram No. 10 was most helpful to us and it is our intention to recommend to the Prime Minister that he should send a message to Mr. Nehru suggesting that you should discuss these questions when you visit New Delhi. Because decisions concerning the provision of fuel for the reactor and the disposal of its byproducts are so intimately connected with the prospects for the establishment of an effective system of international control we expect that the Prime Minister's message will recommend that they be discussed in that context.

3. As requested by you I shall send you in New Delhi my comments on the approach which you suggest should be made to Mr. Nehru. I assume that at the time you sent your message you had not had an opportunity to see telegram No. 1744 from Washington (which was repeated as No. E-23 to Singapore) reporting on Heeney's conversations with Dulles. I understand from the United Kingdom High Commissioner here that the Foreign Office has instructed their Delegation in Singapore to show you copies of their exchange with Washington concerning the conversations between Bennett, Plowden and Strauss last week. You will be particularly interested in the Foreign Office telegram No. 4698 to Washington of October 14th.

4. You may consider it desirable to take Ritchie with you to New Delhi for these discussions. He is fully familiar with the background of the discussions which preceded Dr. Bhabha's visit to Ottawa.

5. In addition to the comments on your telegram No. 10 we will send to New Delhi a summary of the most recent developments in New York and elsewhere concerning the creation of an international agency. If you agree that Ritchie should accompany you to New Delhi you may wish to have him reach New Delhi a few days before you so that he will have an opportunity to study these messages before your arrival. Léger.

279.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM E-704

Ottawa, October 21, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL IMMEDIATE

Repeat London E-1748; Washington E-1799; Singapore E-38; Permdel E-459.

1. Would you please convey to Prime Minister Nehru the text of the following message from Mr. St. Laurent.

Text Begins

I am sure you have been interested to learn, as I have, that our officials have completed their discussions with Dr. Bhabha and his associates concerning the arrangements to provide an NRX reactor to India under the Colombo Plan. I understand that the officials have reached general agreement on the financial and technical aspects of the project, apart from one point I will note, and we have now put in hand the design and engineering work that will be necessary.

One important point of policy has arisen out of these discussions which appears likely to affect the future pattern of relations between other countries on matters of this kind. The arrangements we make concerning the provision of the fuel elements and the disposal of the byproducts in them are likely to constitute an important precedent which will influence the policy of the international agency now being established. There should be no difficulty in arranging this matter as between ourselves but we also have to consider the principles involved in the broader context.

With this in mind, I would like to suggest to you that Mr. Pearson might discuss this aspect of the matter with you when he visits New Delhi early in November. I should hope that by then Dr. Bhabha would have returned to India and you would have had an opportunity to review the subject with him.

The widespread interest which this project has aroused in the public of both our countries has strengthened my conviction that we are cooperating in a most promising endeavour towards the peaceful application of atomic energy. Text ends.

2. Our views concerning the points which the Minister may desire to raise during these discussions are being sent in a separate telegram. I hope they will reach you in time for you to take them with you to Calcutta to discuss with the Minister on his arrival.

280.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM DL-709

Ottawa, October 24, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

NRX REACTOR FOR INDIA

Following for the Minister on arrival. Developments since you left Canada have emphasized the close relationship between the problem of supplying fuel for the Indian reactor, and the prospective role of the International Atomic Energy Agency as a device for ensuring that fissile materials made available by one nation to another for peaceful purposes will not be diverted to the production of weapons.

2. All the great powers are concerned about the possibility that smaller countries with unstable governments might come into possession of atomic weapons. For this reason the possibility of using the agency as a control mechanism is one of its most attractive features, not only to the Western atomic powers but also, apparently, to the Soviet Union. As you know, this question was discussed in some detail at a six-power meeting in Geneva last summer. It now appears that the price of assistance through the agency will be the acceptance of a control system consisting of strict accounting and inspection procedures, coupled with a requirement that irradiated fuel elements be processed either in a plant belonging to the agency itself or that of a donor country. Every effort will be made to discourage countries not already possessing processing plants from building them. The draft statute for the agency provides a framework to make such a policy possible.<sup>41</sup> It does not specifically preclude the transfer of title of fissile material to a receiving country, but it does give the agency authority to demand the return of any material it has supplied. We shall comment further on the processing problem in a separate telegram.

3. The development by the agency of the principles described above into a practical system of control is clearly going to be a most difficult task. Under these circumstances it is most important that on the very eve of the agency's creation we do not make any bilateral agreement establishing an important precedent which would seriously compromise the basic concept of agency control. We would be doing just that if, at this time, we accepted the Indian position that it must have clear and absolute title to the fuel charge for the NRX reactor.

4. You will have seen from Heeney's reports on the Bennett-Plowden-Strauss discussions and his subsequent conversation with Dulles that the problem outlined above is regarded as serious both by the United Kingdom and the United States. We believe that their concern with the importance of the NRX reactor project as a precedent is genuine and that they are not trying to obstruct it. Strauss, for his part, is apparently quite willing to supply India with the heavy water for the reactor.

5. You will also have seen telegram No. 1396 of October 15 from the Foreign Office suggesting a compromise proposal and putting forward the view that an approach to Nehru would be justified. It may be useful for you to know the background of the United Kingdom-Indian arrangements referred to in paragraph 3 of the telegram. Plowden had originally intended to sell 10 kilograms of enriched uranium to Bhabha, but subsequently realizing the problem this would create he changed the offer to a lease only. The United Kingdom-Indian agreement includes a statement to the effect that the terms of the arrangement will be reported to the agency when established. It does not provide either for a review of the arrangement in the light of agency procedures or for consideration of the possibility of putting the arrangement under the aegis of the agency.

<sup>41</sup> Voir/See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXIII, No. 852, October 24, 1955, pp. 666-672.

6. I discussed our problem with Bennett and Bryce and later with the Prime Minister and we agreed that there is no point in pursuing the issue further with Bhabha, who in any event is returning to India in the next few days. It seemed to us that the most useful move would be for you to discuss the situation with Nehru. For this reason the Prime Minister sent a telegram (which you will have seen) to Nehru proposing such discussions.

7. In view of the considerations set out above, we suggest that you might wish to discuss the matter with Nehru in the following terms:

(1) Canada believes that India will rapidly become a major atomic power and therefore appreciates the reasons for India's desire to have clear title to the fuel charge for the NRX reactor. Canada recognizes, moreover, that India could produce its own uranium and establish its own processing facilities;

(2) At the same time both Canada and India as responsible nations are morally obligated to do everything in their power to ensure that the international agency, when set up will be able to establish effective safeguards to prevent the diversion of fissile material made available for peaceful purposes to the production of weapons;

(3) Although it is clearly understood between Canada and India that the NRX reactor project is for peaceful purposes only, nevertheless the arrangements for the provision of the fuel charge will establish an important precedent which other less responsible nations will take full account of, and which undoubtedly will influence the procedures adopted by the agency;

(4) For these reasons, the Canadian Government earnestly hopes that the Government of India will share its views that it would be unwise to make a firm agreement at this time as to the basis on which the fuel charge for the reactor should be provided. We hope the Government of India will agree that it would be wiser, pending the establishment of the international agency, to proceed on an interim arrangement whereby Canada would lend the fuel charge for the reactor to India and in due course would extract the plutonium from the irradiated rods and lend this plutonium to India for its research programme. As soon as the international agency was functioning effectively, the arrangement would be recast and made firm in accordance with the principles established by the agency;

(5) In actual fact, we have every confidence that the agency will be in operation long before the reactor is completed and that accordingly the interim arrangement proposed above will not have to be implemented. However, at this moment the agency does not exist and it is most important that we take no action which might prejudice the delicate negotiations now under way which we hope will lead to the successful establishment of the agency. In the meantime it is necessary for us to reach an understanding on supply of fuel for the reactor in order that the project can advance as rapidly as possible. The Canadian Government, therefore, hopes that the Indian Government will be willing as an interim measure to accept the arrangement described above.

[J.] LÉGER

281.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM DL-721

Ottawa, October 27, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Reference: My telegram No. DL-709 of October 24.
Repeat Permdel DL-89; Washington DL-1824.

ATOMIC REACTOR

Following for the Minister on arrival. In telegram No. 16 of October 21† from Singapore you asked if authorities in Ottawa shared Strauss' concern at "risk" Indians might develop own processing facilities if they retained used fuel.

2. Experts are agreed that the processing plant is the key point for a control system. Before it goes into a reactor, uranium can be kept track of by a relatively simple accounting procedure. When it is in the reactor it is in a kind of vault which makes it inaccessible. But when the irradiated fuel charge goes to the processing plant the control problem becomes much more complex. First, it is at this point that the material ceases to be a discrete mass; second, the processing system is not completely efficient so that there are "losses" of fissile material which are difficult to account for; thirdly, it is here, for the first time, that material which could be used in weapons is obtainable.

3. An important related fact is that for the production of electric power from atomic reactors at an economic rate, processing plants should be built on the basis of not more than one plant per million kilowatts. In other words, processing plants on a national basis will not be justified economically for many years in most countries.

4. It is for this combination of reasons that the United States and the United Kingdom are hopeful that through the mechanism of the agency it will be possible to deter the establishment of processing plants by nations not now having them. Instead, processing would be carried out in plants operated by the agency or by countries already possessing them. The Soviet attitude at the six-power meeting in Geneva last summer would suggest that it too is attracted by such a scheme.

5. There is room for argument that a control system of the type envisaged is of questionable value since it is so vulnerable. National aspirations could lead many countries, India among them, to develop low-grade ore bodies and establish uneconomic refining and processing facilities. Even if the control system is established, it is liable to be overwhelmed when atomic power becomes general and fissile materials are being produced in large quantities throughout the world.

6. Nevertheless, there is general agreement among the atomic authorities, in Canada as well as in the United States and United Kingdom, that the dangerous situation which would arise if there were no control system would be so serious that every effort must be made to develop such a system while the problem is still small enough to cope with. Furthermore, it is not unreasonable to hope that control procedures established under the aegis of the agency would set a pattern which would continue to be followed by member nations even though any sanctions which could be invoked by the agency might have ceased to be effective.

7. In the light of the circumstances described above it is clearly most important for us to convince the Indians that we must avoid establishing any precedents at this time which might jeopardize the possibility of an effective control system. This task is made more difficult by the uncertainty of the Indian position on the control question. Bhabha (in conversations with Canadian officials) and the Indian delegation to the General Assembly, have both expressed agreement with the view that it is necessary to ensure that the facilities of the agency, and fissile material placed at its disposal, are not diverted to other than peaceful purposes. But Bhabha also told Bennett that India wanted clear title to the fuel charge for the NRX reactor so that it could do its own processing, and when pressed admitted that the reasons for so doing were entirely political. Bhabha also asserted that India would only accept an agency control system if it applied to all nations, including the United States, the Soviet Union, and the United Kingdom. It is to be hoped that Bhabha's assertions do not reflect unalterable views held by Nehru.

[J.] LÉGER

282.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Inde*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in India*

TELEGRAM DL-734

Ottawa, October 31, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Reference: My DL-721 of October 27.
Repeat Permdel DL-98; Washington DL-1846.

ATOMIC REACTOR

Following for the Minister on arrival. Since sending you my message under reference I thought you should know that we received a message† from Mr. Martin reporting conversations which he had with Bennett and MacKay. Bennett has reported that Admiral Strauss holds the Canadian delegation primarily responsible for the concessions made to the Indian views regarding the draft resolution on the agency. Although this is not borne out by the facts, certain United States authorities have expressed concern about what they regard as excessive concessions to India.

2. Apparently even Menon feels that our delegation was helpful to him during the negotiations on the U.N. resolution.

3. Both our delegation, New York, and our Embassy in Washington now feel that we should take a strong line in the negotiations regarding the reactor. Mr. Martin assured Bennett that he would urge upon you "to take a strong position" in your talks with the Indians concerning the reactor in New Delhi, because "we have in this particular instance been most cooperative with their delegation here" i.e. in New York.

[J.] LÉGER

283.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 771

New Delhi, November 9, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our tel No. 767 of November 8.†

MINISTER'S VISIT: CIR PROJECT

The Minister brought up the difficulties concerning the reactor project at this first meeting with Mister Nehru on November 4. Nehru immediately requested Bhabha to join us and the Minister and Bhabha had a talk in which Nehru did not participate. Nehru made clear that he had complete confidence in Bhabha and that any agreement we could reach with Bhabha would be satisfactory to him. At this suggestion, the Minister and I had a meeting with Bhabha on November 5.

2. In order to avoid misunderstanding on a matter on which neither of us are experts, the Minister gave Bhabha an informal memorandum reproducing paragraph seven of your telegram DL-709 of October 27.

3. Bhabha said that the difficulties which we were having in reaching agreement over the reactor project reflected differences of opinion on the powers of the proposed International Atomic Energy Agency. He therefore gave us an informal memorandum setting forth the Indian views on the subject. The text is given in my immediately following telegram.†

4. The argument in the memorandum is that it will be impossible for the International Agency to prevent nations from owning their own fissile material unless "all nations are prepared to surrender such ownership to the Agency". It is further contended that this is not feasible at present nor is it necessary since an international agency can operate an inspection and control system which can ensure that no nation can clandestinely organize major production of atomic weapons and the clandestine manufacture of a few atomic weapons cannot be considered of any military significance in the international context.

5. Bhabha went on to say:

(a) India is now processing 1,500 tons of monazite a year for the purpose of producing thorium. A by product is the production of four and one half tons of uranium salt. India is contemplating doubling the production of thorium. This would give them nine tons of uranium salt per annum.

(b) About a year ago India was on the point of taking a decision to set up a small plant on the solvent extraction process which could purify the uranium and then process it into billets. This would produce almost exactly the amount of rods required for the research reactor.

(c) There is also in India low-grade uranium ore which, if developed, could produce 100 tons of concentrate at cost of between 10 dollars and 15 dollars a pound. India, however, does not wish to have to develop this low-grade ore since it assumes it would be cheaper in the long run to purchase its requirements of uranium from Canada.

(d) If India were to go ahead with the pilot plant, it could send the billets to Canada for rolling into rods.

(e) India has decided to set up a plant for converting 100 tons of uranium ore concentrate per annum to metal for use in reactors. The plant will be built in two stages. A pilot plant will be set up immediately to produce about 10 tons of metal per annum by the solvent extraction process. In the meantime the details of a 100 ton plant using the ion exchange process are being studied.

(f) Thus, if Canada continues to believe that provision by Canada of the fuel element in a way satisfactory to India would establish an undesirable precedent for the International Agency, India could itself provide the fuel element.

6. (The above paragraph contains secret information on India's atomic energy programme. Bhabha stated that the Indian programme is being constantly revised and the information set forth above may differ from that given Bennett.)

7. The Minister and I confessed that we were [out] of our depth in a discussion of this nature but we indicated that we were impressed by Bhabha's arguments. The Minister, however, frankly stated that unless United States misgivings were removed, Canada could be put in a most difficult position because of its dependence on the United States market for Canadian uranium and the commitments the Canadian Government had made to the Canadian uranium industry. He hoped that we would shortly be able to reach complete agreement with India on the reactor project but he assured Nehru and Bhabha that inability to reach such agreement would not (repeat not) hold up initiation of the project.

8. Bhabha likewise insisted that India had no desire to injure its relations with the United States on atomic energy matters. These relations were excellent.

9. Bhabha's tentative suggestion is that the Canada-India agreement should contain no clause relating to the provision of a fuel charge. The agreement should be silent on this point. The rods will not be needed until about three months before the completion of the project — i.e. about two years from now. In Bhabha's opinion, long before this two year period is up we will know whether there is going to be an International Atomic Agency and what the powers of this agency will be.

10. This means that the agreement would not contain what you have called "an interim arrangement" on the fuel charge. It could therefore be argued that the agreement would not establish any precedent which would affect the principles or procedures of the International Agency.

11. I had hoped that one of Bhabha's men who is going to the United States shortly for discussions on the International Agency could represent him in discussions in Ottawa on the Canada-India Agreement. Bhabha informed me yesterday, however, just before his return to Bombay, that this man would not be competent for Ottawa discussions. Therefore the discussions will have to take place with Bhabha himself either through me or the Indian High Commissioner in Ottawa.<sup>42</sup>

[E.] REID

<sup>42</sup> Pour un compte rendu général de la visite de Pearson à Nehru, voir le document 293.
For a general report on Pearson's visit with Nehru, see Document 293.

284.

DEA/11038-1-13-40

Note<sup>43</sup>Memorandum<sup>43</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 21, 1955

PROVISION OF FUEL FOR THE CANADA-INDIA REACTOR PROJECT

During the discussions which Mr. Pearson had in New Delhi with the Indian Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru did not seem to be disposed to deviate from the position which Dr. Bhabha took in Ottawa concerning the arrangements for the provision of fuel for the NRX reactor. In fact, Mr. Nehru did not actively participate in these discussions.

We did not make much headway with our suggestion that title should not pass to the Indians because transfer of ownership might create a precedent that could jeopardize the future of the international agency. The discussions in New Delhi revealed that the Indians are still opposed to committing themselves to an arrangement which might obligate them to accept at a later date a control system imposed by the agency which was not equally applicable to the present atomic powers. What is not clear, of course, is whether India's intransigence would be maintained if it became apparent that she would be admitted on a basis bringing her nearer to the inner circle of an international agency.

Dr. Bhabha suggested in New Delhi that the agreement which should be reached at this stage for the project should contain no clause relating to the provision of the fuel charge and that some understanding on this aspect could be reached before the project is completed towards the end of 1957. He suggested that since the agreement would not contain an interim arrangement for fuel it could be argued that the agreement would not establish any precedent which would affect the principles or procedures of the international agency.

It is obvious that we cannot delay determining under what arrangement we would be prepared to proceed, since work must begin immediately on the site in India, if a full construction season is not to be missed.

On the basis of what we have learned in these negotiations there would appear to be two alternative courses which Canada might pursue. We can either accept Dr. Bhabha's proposal with some modifications that will be suggested later in this memorandum or we can seek, either independently or in conjunction with other Commonwealth powers, to persuade the Indians into accepting an arrangement at this time, which would stipulate that Canada would retain title until such time as the future of the agency was settled. The latter course itself offers two possibilities in that the Indians might either reluctantly give into our pressure or they might decide to reject the project.

It is worth examining in some detail the various political, security and economic considerations which may be involved in each of these alternatives. In such an examination of the various alternatives it would seem desirable to have in mind such considerations as the following:

- (a) consequences for international security;
- (b) the effect on the prospects for an international control agency;
- (c) possible repercussions on U.S.-Canadian co-operation in the atomic energy field;
- (d) effect on relations of India (and other Colombo Plan countries) with Canada and West generally;

<sup>43</sup> Cette note ministérielle a été remise à Pearson./This departmental memorandum was given to Pearson.

(e) importance of early progress in atomic energy to economic development of Colombo Plan countries in Asia;

(f) effect on domestic public opinion in Canada; and

(g) consequences for future Canadian commercial possibilities in the atomic energy field.

If we press India and she decides not to accept our offer because she feels that this might inhibit her own freedom to negotiate concerning the agency or because she feels that her national pride is involved in the question of ownership, we face the risk of grave political consequences. This might have the most serious consequences for Canadian—Indian relations and India's relations generally with the West. It would be hard to imagine that the U.S.S.R. would not take advantage of this to make an offer themselves from which they could reap considerable political benefit and propaganda. In fact, it may not be unfair to assume that the U.S.S.R. may make an offer to help India in the atomic field when Krushchev and Bulganin are in New Delhi. If the Canadian offer stands, an offer from the Soviet would put the West a little on its mettle and any Soviet project might be neutralized. However, if our project were to fail, the U.S.S.R. could have a field day.

A decision by India to withdraw from the project at the present time would also have very serious repercussions on the negotiations for an international agency. It would almost certainly have the effect of pushing India into a more stubborn position as regards the agency and the net effect (on India and others) would be unlikely to be helpful during the crucial period of agency negotiations over the next few months.

A breakdown of the project at the present time would also have some serious consequences as far as opinion in Canada is concerned. This project has been acclaimed by the press as an imaginative undertaking and it has helped to meet some of the criticism that Canada was not playing its full part in helping the economic development of South and Southeast Asia. The Colombo Plan is closely associated in the public mind with the Commonwealth and with holding back Communism in Asia and if this project were to fail and the U.S.S.R. were to move in on such a project in India, Canadian public opinion is certain to be greatly disturbed. Moreover, in Canada increasing pressure is being exerted on the government to look for new markets for uranium. The commercial aspects of our reactor project has not escaped a number of observers, particularly those in the industry and there is bound to be great disappointment if potential commercial possibilities in South and Southeast Asia should suddenly appear to be closed off to Canadian interests.

There is, of course, a possibility that Mr. Nehru, who kept himself somewhat detached from earlier discussions, might respond to pressure to accept our original proposal. However, on the basis of the Minister's reports, from the discussions that were held in Ottawa with Dr. Bhabha and from what we know of India's motives, it is reasonable to suggest that chances of reaching agreement on the basis of the Canadian proposal are very slight.

If we decide not to press our original proposal and we accept India's suggestion that the arrangements for the provision of fuel be left undetermined at this time, there are obviously substantial dangers, most of which Mr. Heeney has referred to in his telegram 1897.† While our political relations with India might benefit, our relations with the U.S. in the atomic field might be strained. There, of course, is also the danger that as the project reaches a stage when we would have to settle the fuel question, an agency may have come into being to which we were committed but India was not. In these circumstances, we would have no alternative but to stipulate that the fuel be provided to India on terms which were in accordance with the agency. The Indians might not be disposed to accept these terms and we would then be faced with the position where we had built an expensive reactor for which some other country might have to supply the fuel. However, for any agency to be able to exercise effective control, it would be necessary for the U.S.S.R. and all the other potential major suppliers to be members. In these circumstances, India might have to acquiesce and accept fuel from us on the terms of the agency since there would really be no alternative source accessible to her on less restrictive terms.

If the issue of the fuel were left open and an effective agency had not come into being by the time that the project was completed then presumably Canada should be in as good a position as any other country, including the U.S.S.R., to supply the fuel in an atomic free-for-all.

If we do not insist on a firm arrangement being made now but go ahead with the project, the Indians might feel that they had us at their mercy. They might then think that we would be more or less bound to support them in their position with regard to the agency negotiations. However, we should be able to resist this pressure if we made it clear that we could never agree to provide fuel under any terms that would not be in keeping with the obligations we may assume under the agency.

We can expect that there will be some resistance on the part of the United States Atomic Energy Commission to a formula which would leave the supply of fuel undecided at this stage. However, we suspect that the United States may shortly be pressed from within and by other atomic powers to take a more liberal view of the supply of uranium. In fact, their offer to establish an atomic centre in the Colombo Plan area means that they themselves will have to find a realistic formula for the provision of fuel for this power reactor. It is, therefore, reasonable to hope that the United States and Canadian thinking will move along together in determining a solution to this problem and that chances for finding an acceptable formula will be better at some stage over the next couple of years.

It can be assumed that the largest part of the United States objections to the Indian compromise would be based on security considerations. However, India indicated a willingness to give an undertaking that this reactor and any fuel supplied for it would be used only for the peaceful application of atomic energy. It is not asking too much that the United States Government should assume that Canada as a responsible power would not undertake any arrangement when the time comes for the supply of fuel to India which might be questioned on security grounds. In any event, within a few years and quite apart from possible assistance from the U.S.S.R., India would be in a position to build her own reactor (particularly since the NRX reactor and considerable related data are on the unclassified list) and possibly produce her own fuel. It is, therefore, unrealistic to represent that there are any basic or substantial new security risks involved in our project. In fact, when India becomes an atomic power, as inevitably she will, the relationship which has by then been built up between the West and India in the atomic field will be the only real guarantee of security. Canadian assistance at this early stage of India's atomic development, in keeping with the objectives of the Colombo Plan, would help them to benefit from the peaceful use of atomic energy earlier than might otherwise have been possible and should enhance the chances for future co-operation and understanding in this field.

The proposal suggested by Dr. Bhabha in New Delhi has obvious disadvantages but it is not beyond modification which might put it into a form which would still be acceptable to India and which might reduce substantially Canadian objections. We might agree to accept the basic Indian premise that agreement on the way in which the fuel should be provided will be determined at a later date, before the construction of the reactor is finished. We might suggest that a general reference in the present agreement should be made to the provision of the fuel along the following lines:

(a) when the reactor is ready to operate, Canada should be given the first refusal rights by India for the supply of fuel;

(b) we will not be under any obligation to supply fuel under terms which might not be in keeping with any obligations we may accept under an international agency; and

(c) the financial arrangements for the supply of the fuel will be worked out in a way which would be compatible with the Colombo Plan.

A proposal on these lines would leave it open for India to seek the fuel elsewhere if they could not come to a satisfactory agreement with us. However, we would have respected our commitments concerning the principles of the international agency and we would have made every effort to safeguard the security aspects of the operation. For reasons explained earlier in this memorandum if an agency was in existence or seemed imminent Canada is almost certain to be the source of supply for fuel. If no agency were in prospect, Canada would be at least as free as any other country to provide fuel.

It is apparent that whatever course is followed some risk will be involved. In fact, a few months ago very grave risks were involved if Canada and the West had not taken the initiative to help India and the Colombo Plan countries generally in the development of atomic energy. Of the courses now open to us the greatest risk lies in the danger that this project may fail immediately unless we are able to work out a satisfactory understanding with India. The compromise suggested in the previous paragraph offers perhaps the greatest number of advantages and the fewest risks of all the possible courses open to us.

285.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT 239-55

[Ottawa], December 5, 1955

SECRET

PROVISION BY CANADA OF AN NRX ATOMIC REACTOR TO INDIA
UNDER THE COLOMBO PLAN

It would seem desirable to outline the developments which have taken place over the past few months in connection with the Canadian proposal to provide an NRX atomic research reactor to India under the Colombo Plan.

In accordance with the decision taken by Cabinet at its meeting on July 11th, the Prime Minister in a message to Mr. Nehru redefined the Canadian offer of an NRX reactor which had been originally made to India earlier in the year. In this message Mr. St. Laurent made it clear that although the reactor would be provided within the framework of the Colombo Plan, the project would be financed in such a way that the regular amount of funds available for conventional Colombo Plan projects in India and other countries in the area would remain virtually unchanged.

On September 2nd, Mr. Nehru formally accepted the offer from Canada on behalf of his Government and the two governments jointly announced this project to the public on September 16th. The announcement reiterated Mr. Nehru's undertaking that in accepting the offer, his Government would be prepared to allow accredited foreign scientists, including those from other Colombo Plan countries in South and South-east Asia to use the facilities which will be available at the atomic energy centre in India where the reactor will be located.

Subsequently, Dr. Bhabha, Chairman of the Indian Atomic Energy Commission, came to Ottawa to discuss in detail the arrangements under which this reactor would be provided to India. Agreement was reached on technical details and a timetable was established for the project which calls for its completion by the end of 1957.

During these discussions tentative agreement was also reached at the official level concerning the financial aspects of the project. In determining an estimate for the cost of this project a figure of $7 million was mentioned as the amount which might be required to meet the Canadian costs of this project. Local costs which would normally be the responsibility of India were estimated at the rupee equivalent to $6 million. Canadian officials informed Dr. Bhabha that on the basis of the previous decision which had been taken by Cabinet, Canada would not necessarily expect to stick rigidly to the $7 million ceiling if it turned out that external costs exceeded this amount. Dr. Bhabha was also informed that Canada would be prepared to consider the allocation of existing counterpart funds to help India finance the local costs.

The discussions with Dr. Bhabha did not resolve the question of how the fuel element should be provided for the reactor. The manner in which the fuel elements are provided and later reprocessed has a bearing upon the international arrangement for the control of fissile materials.

It was initially proposed by Canadian officials that the fuel element required for the reactor and replacement for a three-year period would in effect be leased by Canada to India. According to this formula the irradiated rods which would have been used in the reactor would be returned to Canada where plutonium and other byproducts would be extracted; it is, of course, the plutonium and other byproducts which are fissile materials and can be used in the production of bombs as well as for peaceful purposes. Such byproducts as India might require for its research programme would be returned to India. Dr. Bhabha resisted any arrangement which would not give India complete ownership and control of the fuel element and byproducts. He based his opposition on the desire of India to establish its own processing plant but later revealed his objections were largely of a political nature in so far as it might reflect on India if they were not granted ownership of these fissile materials. However, he emphasized that his government was prepared to give an undertaking that the reactor and any fuel supplied for it would be used only for the peaceful development of atomic energy.

There is a close relationship between the problem of supplying fuel for the Indian reactor and the prospective role of the proposed international atomic energy agency. Because of the political implications, it was agreed that further discussions on this question should be deferred until I saw Mr. Nehru in New Delhi during my trip to South and Southeast Asia. It was considered important that on the eve of the international atomic energy agency's creation no bilateral agreement should be undertaken by Canada which would establish a precedent which might compromise the basic concept of agency control.

During my visit to New Delhi I raised the fuel question with the Prime Minister and discussed it with Dr. Bhabha. It was suggested to me by the latter that because of the difficulty involved in reaching agreement at this stage on the provision of fuel the agreement which would be concluded at this time between Canada and India concerning the reactor should not specify any arrangement for fuel. Fuel for the reactor will not be needed until about three months before completion of the project, that is about two years from now. It was also suggested that since our agreement would not contain an arrangement for fuel it could not be argued that it would establish any precedent which would affect the principles and procedures of the international agency.

This Indian proposal has now been examined very carefully on an interdepartmental basis by Canadian officials, and with some modifications suggested later in this memorandum they consider that it might be accepted. It has also been suggested to me, and I agree, that we should not delay in any way the construction or engineering plans for this project which are now well under way. In fact, construction work at the site in India is likely to begin early in January so that as much progress as possible will be made during the current construction season before the monsoons.

The intergovernmental discussions concerning the agency are likely to affect any final decision which we may take in connection with the provision of fuel for the reactor. At this stage, it is my inclination to recommend that we should proceed immediately to conclude a bilateral agreement with India for the reactor and that while this agreement would not specify the arrangements by which the fuel would eventually be provided, it would stipulate:

(a) the reactor and any products resulting from it will be used by India for peaceful purposes only;

(b) when the reactor is ready to operate, it is India's intention to turn to Canada for the supply of the fuel and it is Canada's intention to provide the fuel;

(c) arrangements for the provision of any fuel to India from Canada will be agreed upon by the two Governments; if an international agency acceptable to both Governments has come into being or is in prospect at that time, the terms of such agreement will be in keeping with the principles of that agency.<sup>44</sup>

[L.B. PEARSON]

SECTION E

PAKISTAN

286.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 57-55

[Ottawa], March 16, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

COLOMBO PLAN AID TO PAKISTAN — WARSAK HYDRO-ELECTRIC PROJECT

The Warsak project in Pakistan is designed to provide urgently needed hydro-electric energy for West Pakistan and to irrigate a major portion of the North West Frontier Province. This scheme has been thoroughly investigated by Canadian engineers and is considered to be highly suitable for assistance by Canada under the Colombo Plan from an engineering point of view. A summary of earlier Cabinet decisions concerning the Warsak project, by which $8.9 million in Canadian funds and 10 million in rupee counterpart funds have already been set aside, is contained in Annex I† to this submission. Following the Cabinet decision of March 26, 1953, (the first on Warsak), the Government of Pakistan was informed that additional allotments would be made for this project in subsequent years within the limits of the amount available to Pakistan out of funds appropriated by Parliament for Colombo Plan purposes.<sup>45</sup>

<sup>44</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet, le 7 décembre 1955/Approved by Cabinet on December 7, 1955.

2. The present submission requests authority for the allotment of an additional $5.5 million to Warsak, from funds which would in any case be allocated to Pakistan, to meet the foreign exchange costs of the civil works contract for Warsak Dam and the construction machinery which would be necessary in that connection. A number of important developments since Cabinet last considered the Warsak project in April 1954 have made it necessary to consider the provision of this additional assistance.<sup>46</sup>

3. In the first place, on November 11, 1954 the Canadian High Commissioner in Karachi formally signed on behalf of the Government of Canada, with the Minister of Finance for Pakistan on behalf of his government, a memorandum of agreement and exchange of notes setting forth in detail the responsibilities of the Canadian authorities, of the Canadian consulting engineers (H.G. Acres and Company), and of the Pakistan authorities. In this memorandum provision is made for supervision of the project until completed by the Canadian consulting engineers, in terms which are satisfactory to all concerned.

4. Secondly, H.G. Acres and Company after further investigation recommend that in order more fully to utilize the available potential at Warsak for satisfying the urgent power requirements of the area, the civil works should be prepared for an eventual installed capacity of 240,000 kilowatts (six 40,000 R.w. units) instead of the 150,000 kilowatts mentioned in the original submission to Cabinet. However it is clearly understood that as far as Canadian aid is concerned we will be expected to provide the generating equipment for the first 160,000 kilowatts (four units) only. The Canadian consulting engineers have also recommended changes in the design of the power house, proposing a concrete instead of a rock filled dam, and a surface instead of an underground power house as originally planned. Without any new commitments on the part of the Canadian Government these proposals have been considered by the Pakistan authorities who have approved them, principally on grounds of lower construction costs and increased potential for the generation of electric power.

5. Thirdly, the foreign exchange position of the Pakistan Government has become increasingly acute. Pakistan's dollar reserves have fallen to the lowest level in the country's history and the balance of payments deficit for 1954-55 is expected to be at least $100 million. Reports received confidentially through the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and through the High Commissioner for Canada in Karachi have stressed the seriousness of this situation. As a consequence the Pakistan authorities are not in a position to meet, as they had originally intended, the heavy foreign exchange costs of the construction contract for Warsak Dam even with the substantial Canada aid already voted for other parts of the project. Consequently a new proposal originated in Karachi during January 1955 by which Canada would assume responsibility for the foreign exchange costs of the contract for the civil works at Warsak and for the necessary heavy construction equipment which would have to be imported from abroad in addition to the undertakings which we have already given with respect to generating equipment, dam gates, structural steel, light construction equipment and supervisory engineering services. This would constitute further aid for a particular project and would not imply a willingness on Canada's part to use Colombo Plan funds for general balance of payments relief. The Canadian consulting engineers have strongly recommended against allowing the contract for the civil works to be let to any existing firm of Pakistani contractors all of which are ill equipped and inexperienced, (this would be the only possibility if Canada were not prepared to finance this element of the project). Canadian officials support their view that for a development of this magnitude a competent and experienced construction firm from outside Pakistan should be engaged. It is proposed therefore that to cover these additional costs totalling $5.5 million, the uncommitted $2.5 million (this figure allows for the additional $500,000 for Shadiwal recommended in another memorandum submitted to Cabinet today) of the funds now set aside for the Punjab hydro-electric installations as approved by Cabinet for the 1954-55 Canadian Colombo Plan programme in Pakistan be transferred to the Warsak project. The Pakistan authorities have indicated their agreement to such a transfer. This would leave a further $3 million which would have to be met by transfer from funds already allocated to other projects in the 1954-55 programme, or from the 1955-56 Colombo Plan vote shortly to come before Parliament for approval.<sup>47</sup>

<sup>45</sup> Voir/See Volume 19, Document 620.

<sup>46</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 424.

6. This proposal would have substantial incidental advantages from the point of view of the efficiency of our Colombo Plan operations in Pakistan. It would also provide further employment for Canadian industrial skill, personnel and equipment in the construction industry. In addition the Pakistan Government would not have to be counted on to meet large foreign exchange expenditures, which to judge from the present position they would almost certainly find themselves unable to meet now or even at a later and possibly more difficult financial period. By appointing a Canadian contractor for the civil work we would also acquire further control over the development of the project and thus be better able to ensure its success. It has been ascertained that there are Canadian firms capable of undertaking this work.

7. The Pakistan authorities would still be expected to supply all local labour and material and to meet other rupee costs. In fact the Pakistan Government would be financing from their own resources about one-third of the total cost of Warsak even if the present proposals for an additional allocation of $5.5 million are approved. It would appear that the Government of Pakistan will be able to finance these local costs from its domestic rupee resources.

8. After allowing for this present submission and taking into account previous allocations to Warsak there would still remain $11.2 million which may be requested from the Canadian Government in the light of its earlier agreement to meet additional costs at Warsak if funds become available from Pakistan out of future Colombo Plan votes. This figure of $11.2 million is an outside estimate including allowance for a small increase in the costs of the civil works to make it possible for them to accommodate an eventual generating capacity of 240,000 kilowatts, and $2.5 million for cement, a large part of which the Pakistan authorities may be able to provide. Therefore the final total for additional Canadian aid to Warsak may be below this figure. The entire $11.2 million could be financed out of the remainder of the Pakistan portion of past votes together with the normal Pakistan share of the 1955-56 vote if no other projects are undertaken.

<sup>47</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 400.

Voir aussi Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1955, volume 6, p. 7005.

See also Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1955, Volume 6, p. 6694.

9. It should be added however that Pakistan has indicated that it may wish Canada to proceed urgently with a project for construction of a high tension electric transmission link between Dacca and Chittagong in East Bengal at a cost of approximately $4 million. While there has been no formal commitment to the Pakistani authorities to proceed with this project as authorized by Cabinet on April 29, 1954, extensive consultations have taken place with Pakistan, the International Bank and the FOA looking toward ultimate construction of the link.<sup>48</sup> This project, if undertaken, would necessitate spreading the additional expenditure expected on Warsak beyond the $5.5 million covered by the present memorandum over the entire period of the Colombo Plan now scheduled to end on June 30, 1957. This would be consistent with the original Cabinet decision on Warsak and would have the advantage of permitting a more flexible Canadian Colombo Plan programme for Pakistan.

10. In short the whole of the possible future Canadian expenditures on Warsak could be financed out of past votes plus the vote for 1955-56; however, if it is decided to provide a further vote in 1956-57 (which is still within the 6 year period of the original Colombo Plan) it may well prove preferable to allocate some of that year's contribution to Warsak thus releasing some of the 1955-56 vote for other purposes.

Recommendation

With respect to the immediate problem of the construction contract it is recommended:

(a) that Cabinet approve the allocation of a further $5.5 million to meet the foreign exchange costs of the contract and the equipment necessary for the construction of Warsak Dam, $2.5 million to come from funds already set aside for the Punjab hydro-electric schemes and the remainder from funds to be voted in 1955-56 or from funds already earmarked but not definitely committed from earlier votes;

(b) that the contract for Warsak dam be let by the Canadian Government in accordance with established procedure for similar contracts in Canada. The firm selected must be capable of carrying out the project efficiently and economically and should employ a high proportion of Canadian personnel in key posts at the Warsak site in Pakistan. It is anticipated that the equipment to be purchased in Canada for the construction work would be of approximately 65 percent Canadian content.<sup>49</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

287.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 58-55

Ottawa, March 17, 1955

RESTRICTED

COLOMBO PLAN AID TO PAKISTAN — SHADIWAL

Cabinet approved on July 28, 1954 the allotment of $2 million to the Shadiwal Hydro-electric project of the $5 million which Cabinet has set aside in principle for electric power development in the Punjab on July 29, 1954, as part of the 1954-55 programme for Pakistan.<sup>50</sup> This amount of $2 million was intended to cover the cost of Canadian electric generating equipment, other materials and services required for the project, on the understanding that the Pakistan authorities would be responsible for the costs of the civil works including certain construction equipment.

<sup>48</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 424.

<sup>49</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 18 mars 1955/Approved by Cabinet on March 18, 1955.

2. Since Cabinet last considered Shadiwal it has been further investigated by H.G. Acres and Company, the Canadian consulting and supervising engineers for the project who have satisfied themselves on technical grounds that it is now possible to proceed with construction. However because of the cost of the necessary construction equipment and because of the severe shortage of foreign exchange currently being experienced by the Government of Pakistan, which is described in the separate memorandum submitted today regarding Warsak, the Pakistan authorities have advised us that they cannot meet the foreign exchange costs of the equipment which would be needed from outside sources for the construction of the civil works.

3. The Pakistan authorities have agreed to undertake through the Punjab Government department concerned the construction contract itself. This would be agreeable to Canadian officials and is approved by H.G. Acres and Company. The Shadiwal project, unlike Warsak, is relatively small and considered to be so similar to other schemes successfully undertaken by the Pakistan engineering departments that there would be no technical reasons why they could not complete the civil works satisfactorily and on schedule. However it has been estimated that an additional $500,000 of Canadian aid to that already set aside for Shadiwal will be required to provide the necessary extra construction equipment available from Canadian sources in particular a well point system and concrete batching machinery. The provision of this additional aid would also promote greater efficiency through increased Canadian control over the entire project.

Recommendation

In view of the importance of the Shadiwal hydro-electric installation to the power system of the Punjab and to the plans which have been made for extending the irrigation systems of the area, it is recommended that Cabinet approve the allotment of a further $500,000 to Shadiwal to meet the costs of construction equipment required for the civil works, thus making a total of $2,300,000 assigned to this project, against the $5 million already earmarked for Punjab power projects out of previous appropriations.<sup>51</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

<sup>50</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 424.

<sup>51</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 18 mars 1955/Approved by Cabinet on March 18, 1955.

288.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 112-55

Ottawa, May 24, 1955

SECRET

COLOMBO PLAN AID TO PAKISTAN

Dacca-Chittagong Interconnector Link

At its meeting on April 29, 1954, Cabinet agreed, subject to further technical investigation, that the Canadian Government should provide the electrical equipment and material required for the Dacca-Chittagong Interconnector Link in East Pakistan, together with engineering services to include all engineering, supervision of designs and drawings, supervision of installation and assistance to the Pakistan engineering authorities in the preparation of foundation of installation specifications.<sup>52</sup> The estimated cost at that time for this equipment and these services was $4 million and, in accordance with the decision of Cabinet, this amount has been set aside out of Colombo Plan moneys voted prior to the fiscal year 1955-56.

This project has now been investigated by Canadian engineers and Canadian officials have recently visited East Pakistan where they held discussions with the Pakistan authorities and with representatives of other aid-giving agencies interested in hydro-electric development in that area, including the United States FOA and the International Bank. In the light of their findings it is now considered that, in accordance with the conditions established in the Cabinet decision of April 29, the Canadian Government should provide assistance as soon as possible for this project and that the $4 million already allocated in principle out of Colombo Plan funds voted prior to 1955-56 should be used for this purpose. It should be appreciated that the figure of $4 million represents only a preliminary estimate and it is possible that the total external costs may exceed this figure before the project is completed. However, if additional funds are required for financing external costs of this project, expenditures could be arranged in such a way that no more than the $4 million already earmarked would be required in 1955-56 and any balance could be met in 1956-57, subject, of course, to a vote of Colombo Plan funds next year by Parliament.

Warsak Hydro-Electric Project

In a memorandum dated March 16, 1955, sent to Cabinet in connection with the Warsak project, it was suggested that if the Dacca-Chittagong Link was undertaken the additional expenditures anticipated for Warsak should be spread over the period ending June 30, 1957. On the basis of this memorandum, Cabinet agreed at its meeting on March 18, 1955, that $3 million from the 1955-56 Colombo Plan vote should be allocated to Warsak to meet the foreign exchange costs of the civil contract and the equipment necessary for the construction of the Warsak Dam. As explained in the memorandum to Cabinet dated March 16, there still remains approximately $11.2 million in external costs to be financed before the completion of the entire Warsak project. This figure is an outside estimate and includes a contingency of $2.5 million for cement, a large part of which it is hoped the Pakistan Government may be able to provide itself.

<sup>52</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 424.

It is considered that $4 million should now be allocated from the 1955-56 Colombo Plan vote to cover a portion of these remaining external costs which, as explained in the last paragraph, are estimated at a maximum of $11.2 million. Assuming that there will be a further Colombo Plan vote in 1956-57 (which is still within the six year period of the original Colombo Plan), it would be possible to allocate some of that year's contribution to finance the remaining external costs at Warsak (estimated at $7.2 million maximum). This would be consistent with the original Cabinet decision on Warsak and would leave room for the financing of any additional expenditures for the Dacca-Chittagong Link which might arise in 1956-57, as indicated in paragraph 2 above.

Other Projects for the 1955-56 Programme

On the basis that roughly the same proportion of the Colombo Plan vote as in previous years will be allocated to Pakistan in 1955-56, Canadian officials have been proceeding on the assumption that approximately $9 million will be available for Colombo Plan expenditures in Pakistan this year. Of this amount, Cabinet has already authorized $3 million for the civil contract and construction equipment at the Warsak Dam; and it is suggested in paragraph 4 above that another $4 million should be allotted to Warsak out of 1955-56 funds. If this suggestion is approved, approximately $2 million remains for other new projects in Pakistan this year.

Canadian officials are at present investigating a request from Pakistan that Canada should assist in the financing of a steam thermal plant at Khulna in East Pakistan, the external costs of which are in the order of $2 million. After a more detailed investigation it is likely that a recommendation will be made to Cabinet that Canada should assist this project. If this project is approved, all of this year's funds for Pakistan would then be committed and the balance of the external costs at Warsak and at Dacca-Chittagong, which would be in the order of $8-$9 million, would be sufficient to absorb most of the funds which may be made available in 1956-57 if the Government decides to have a Colombo Plan vote in that year of approximately the same size as this year.

A number of other requests for assistance in 1955-56, totalling several million dollars, have been submitted to Canada by Pakistan. These include the provision of several short interconnector links, three separate thermal plants in addition to the one at Khulna referred to above, and a request for $2 million in commodity assistance in the form of aluminum and copper or steel sheet. On the basis of the assumption set out above, there would be no funds in prospect for meeting any of these requests this year and the Pakistan Government have been so informed.

Recommendation

It is recommended:

- (a) that Cabinet approve participation by Canada in the Dacca-Chittagong Interconnector Link and that the $4 million already earmarked for this project should be employed for this purpose. If at a later stage further amounts are found to be necessary, the approval of Cabinet will be sought for an additional allocation to this project from subsequent votes;
- (b) that the balance of the external costs of the Warsak project, estimated at a maximum of $11.2 million, should be spread over the period up to the middle of 1957, subject to the voting of funds by Parliament and that $4 million of this amount be allocated from the 1955-56 vote.<sup>53</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

289.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 191-55

Ottawa, September 15, 1955

SECRET

COLOMBO PLAN AID TO PAKISTAN — WARSAK PROJECT

For the Warsak Project, Cabinet has approved the allocation from existing Colombo Plan funds of:

March 26, 1953	$3,400,000	(Permanent Electrical Equipment)
Sept. 5, 1953	3,500,000	(Permanent Electrical Equipment)
April 29, 1954	2,000,000	(Engineering Services)
March 17, 1955	5,500,000	(Civil Contractor Fees and Salaries and Construction Plan)
May 25, 1955 [sic]	4,000,000	(Permanent Electrical Equipment)
	$18,400,000
Estimated balance of external costs	7,200,000
		$25,600,000

2. On the basis of estimates originally prepared by the Canadian consulting engineering company, H.G. Acres and Company, the total estimated external costs of the entire project was in the order of $25.6 million of which approximately $3 million represented the estimated cost of construction equipment and $2.5 million was the estimated cost of the contractor's fees. The remainder of the original estimate given by the consulting engineers was made up of the fees of the consulting engineers, the cost of purchasing generating and electrical equipment required for an installation of 160,000 kilowatts, a small amount of light construction equipment, and a contingency of $2.5 million for the purchase of cement in the event that Pakistan was unable for some reason at a later stage to provide cement. When authority was sought on May 24 for another allotment of funds for this project, it was indicated that approximately $7.2 million remained to be allocated by Canada in later years if we were to continue participating through the duration of the project. It was understood that such an amount could be deducted from the normal allocation of Colombo Plan aid to Pakistan from funds which might be voted prior to June 30, 1957.

3. In addition to these external costs, the local costs payable in rupees, to be borne by the Pakistan Government were originally estimated by the Canadian consulting engineers at the equivalent of approximately $24 million. (It was agreed that the counterpart equivalent in rupees resulting from an earlier gift of $10 million in wheat to Pakistan was to be used to cover part of these local expenditures.)

<sup>53</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 26 mai 1955/Approved by Cabinet on May 26, 1955.

4. Following the decision by Canada to assume responsibility for the civil construction work at this project, a Canadian contracting company, Angus Robertson Limited, was selected to undertake the construction work on the understanding that a contract would be negotiated after the contractor had made a detailed examination of the site and working conditions in Pakistan. Angus Robertson Limited have now completed this examination and they have submitted a revised estimate for the construction work which is set out in Appendix A.† This revised estimate actually represents a reduction in the original total cost of the project combining local and external costs. However, the external costs, which Canada has indicated its willingness in principle to assume, have increased by approximately $11 million, largely resulting from a necessary shift from local to external costs of a number of items involved in the civil construction work. The most significant changes are the following:

(a) The 2.5 million provided for in the estimates of the consulting engineers for salaries and fees to the contractor has now been calculated at approximately $5,370,00 by Angus Robertson Limited, primarily because of the need for more Canadian supervisory personnel than had originally been contemplated.

(b) An amount of $900,000 was set aside in the estimates of the consulting engineers for indirect costs of construction. This is now estimated by Angus Robertson at $1,980,000. This includes such items as transportation of personnel, medical equipment, field equipment instruments, etc.

(c) Only a limited amount of funds ($690,000) were set aside in the initial estimates of external costs by the consulting engineers for providing materials such as explosives, fuel, steel and other materials required for the construction work. Most of these items were provided for in the estimates of the consulting engineers as local costs but a further investigation has disclosed that materials totalling over $9 million will have to be paid for in dollars.

5. As explained in the memorandum sent to Cabinet on May 24, the amount which had originally been estimated as necessary to complete the Warsak Project (approximately $7.2 million) would absorb the largest part of Pakistan's share of any Colombo Plan funds voted by Parliament in 1956-57 if that vote were to be roughly of the same magnitude as the 1955-56 vote. It is therefore apparent that the additional funds now required on the basis of the new estimates could only be found by either an increase in the size of the 1956-57 vote or by Cabinet agreeing in principle to spread the allocation of required funds over a period extending up to at least the end of the fiscal year 1957-58, rather than merely through 1956-57 as envisaged up to now. This further spreading of the costs might be desirable even if the total vote were to be increased, in order to leave room for other small projects over the next two years or so. (The question of the size of next year's total Colombo Plan contribution is discussed in a separate memorandum.)<sup>54</sup> Failing approval of either of the above two proposals, the only alternative would be to discontinue Canadian participation in other projects in Pakistan or reduce our participation in Warsak. Either of these latter courses would involve serious economic and political consequences for Pakistan and undoubtedly have an adverse affect on Canadian-Pakistan relations.

6. In view of the substantial increase in the estimated external cost of the civil construction work, it is considered that prior to the conclusion of a contract with Angus Robertson Limited, Cabinet should be consulted again on whether it is prepared to approve, in principle, Canada's acceptance of these additional external costs, based on the revised estimates, on the understanding that the balance of the costs might be spread over the next two or three years. Since the Warsak Project is of major importance to the development of Pakistan's economy and since Canadian control of both the civil construction contract and the consulting engineers' contract seems essential to the rapid and efficient progress of this project, such a decision appears to be highly desirable. (Any suggestion that Canada might wish to shift the responsibility for the cost of the civil construction contract to Pakistan might force the latter, because of a serious shortage of foreign exchange, to award the construction contract to local Pakistan companies which are not regarded by the Canadian consulting engineers as being competent to carry out a project of this magnitude and importance. Moreover, it seems most unlikely that Pakistan would be able to meet the heavy foreign exchange expenditure which would be involved even if a domestic firm could be engaged).

<sup>54</sup> Voir/See Document 247.

7. The new estimates are based on the assumption that work could begin on the site this October and every effort is being made by the authorities of both Pakistan and Canada, as well as by the consulting engineers and by the Canadian contractor to ensure that this target is achieved. If, however, further delays were to prevent work beginning by October first, it is likely that the estimated costs (both local and external) would be further increased.

Recommendation

It is recommended that, in keeping with its original decision on the Warsak Project, the Canadian Government should:

- (a) agree, subject to appropriation of funds by Parliament, to meet the revised balance of the external cost of the Warsak Project, estimated at $18.2 million,
- (b) agree that the financing of these costs may be spread over Colombo Plan funds which will become available up to the end of the fiscal year 1957-58,
- (c) proceed to conclude a contract for the civil construction work based on the estimates in Appendix A.<sup>55</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

290.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 213-55

[Ottawa, n.d.]

SECRET

COLOMBO PLAN AID TO PAKISTAN — KHULNA PROJECT

In a memorandum dated May 24th, Cabinet was informed that Canadian officials were investigating the possibility that Canada might assist in the financing of a steam thermal plant at Khulna in East Pakistan, the external costs of which were estimated to be in the order of $2 million. It was pointed out at that time that if this project were eventually approved, all the 1955-56 funds for Pakistan would be committed (allocations totalling $7 million had already been made to Warsak from 1955-56 funds available to Pakistan).

<sup>55</sup> Approuvé en principe par le Cabinet, le 16 septembre 1955/Approved in principle by Cabinet on September 16, 1955.

At its meeting on September 17th, [sic] Cabinet agreed that Canada should assume the increase in external costs for the Warsak project arising out of a revision of the estimates. The additional external costs in excess of the balance of $7.2 million (which Cabinet had agreed on May 24th to finance out of funds becoming available before mid 1957) are to be spread over the next three years, subject, of course, to the vote by Parliament of Colombo Plan funds in those years. In view of the decision to spread these additional costs over a three-year period, sufficient funds (i.e. $2 million) still remain from the 1955-56 allocation to Pakistan to enable Canada to provide assistance to the Khulna project.

The industrial programme planned for East Pakistan will demand power far in excess of what is now available. It is considered that the most economical addition to power in the Khulna area could be made through the erection of a steam thermal station.

Following a request to Canada for a steam thermal station, of 10,000 kilowatts capacity, Canadian officials learned that a steam thermal plant of a capacity of 20,000 kilowatts now in operation at Scarboro was shortly to be dismantled by the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission. This thermal plant which is still in excellent condition can be purchased for about $1 million and it could be transported to Pakistan and re-erected at Khulna at a cost which would fall within the $2 million originally estimated for the Khulna project. These estimates are considered to be firm. (At the time Khulna was originally proposed, it was not anticipated that a thermal station in excess of 10,000 kilowatts could be installed at the estimated cost of $2 million). However, because the Scarboro plant is being dismantled in any case, the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission are prepared to sell at a greatly reduced price. As a result of investigations with East Pakistan authorities Canadian officials are satisfied that the full capacity of the Scarboro steam thermal plant (i.e. 20,000 kilowatts) would be readily absorbed by the increasing industrial needs of the Khulna area over the next few years.

The purchase of the Scarboro steam thermal plant and its subsequent re-erection in Khulna would be a relatively uncomplicated and economical project, which would make an important contribution to the development of power in East Pakistan.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the Canadian Government should agree to provide a steam thermal plant to Pakistan for erection at Khulna in East Pakistan. It is also recommended that authority be granted to enable the Colombo Plan administration to purchase the Scarboro thermal station and to make the necessary contract with a firm of Canadian engineers to provide for the design and supervision of the erection of this station at Khulna.

The total cost of this project (including the purchase of the Scarboro thermal station) which is estimated at $2 million is to be financed from funds available to Pakistan for its regular allocation of aid in 1955-56.<sup>36</sup>

[ROCH PINARD]

<sup>36</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 19 octobre 1955 / Approved by Cabinet on October 19, 1955.

3<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 3PAKISTAN : POSITION AU SEIN DU COMMONWEALTH PAKISTAN: POSITION WITHIN THE COMMONWEALTH

291.

DEA/50312-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au PakistanUnder-Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in Pakistan*

LETTER NO. K-65

Ottawa, January 28, 1955

SECRET

Reference: Your Telegram No. 24 of Jan. 26, 1955.† Position of Pakistan within the Commonwealth.

COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS' MEETING—1955

I attach for your own information only, a copy of the brief prepared for the Prime Minister on Pakistan's request to be accepted and recognized as a continuing member of the Commonwealth after it becomes a republic.

2. After this brief was prepared and approved, a message was received from the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations recounting a conversation he had with Mr. Mohammed Ali on January 21, in which he explained his intentions in respect of the Pakistan constitutional issue.<sup>57</sup> During a press conference in Ottawa on January 24, Mr. Mohammed Ali made these intentions public. A copy of Lord Swinton's message, and a covering memorandum to the Minister are appended to the brief.†

3. It is evident that Mr. Mohammed Ali is now in a position to give a firm timetable for the steps to be taken to introduce a republican form of government in Pakistan. The principal points are:

(a) A brief draft constitution containing only a minimum of provisions and providing for the appointment of a President is under preparation and will soon be ready.

(b) The Government of Pakistan will proceed with the establishment of a unitary government in West Pakistan within a few weeks.

(c) A Constituent Assembly composed of representatives of East and West Pakistan will meet this spring, possibly in April or May, to adopt the constitution.

(d) The constitution will provide for an interim period during which a President will function and a later period commencing in early 1956 when elections will be held for a central parliament in East and West Pakistan. The elections to the central parliament will either confirm the existing President or elect a new one.

<sup>57</sup> Lors de son entretien avec Lord Swinton, Mohammed Ali a confirmé son désir de voir la position future du Pakistan au sein du Commonwealth faire l'objet de discussions à la Réunion des premiers ministres. In his discussion with Lord Swinton, Mohammed Ali confirmed that he wished to have Pakistan's future position in the Commonwealth discussed at the Prime Ministers' Meeting.

(e) The constitution will contain definite dates for its coming into force, the appointment of the President, the duration of the interim period, and the date of the elections to the central parliament.

4. Mr. Mohammed Ali apparently intends to raise the whole issue at the Prime Ministers' Meeting and to obtain approval of Pakistan becoming a republic within the Commonwealth. He will make it clear that Pakistan repudiates any idea of neutrality and will be an active partner in defence. According to the Prime Minister, the great majority of the people of Pakistan want a republic and only a small minority want to leave the Commonwealth. Acceptance of a republican Pakistan as a continuing Commonwealth member now would strengthen public feeling in Pakistan for the Commonwealth.

T.H.W. READ
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Bref pour le premier ministre

Brief for Prime Minister

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 7, 1955

POSITION OF PAKISTAN WITHIN THE COMMONWEALTH

Summary

This paper reviews developments in connection with Pakistan's request to be accepted and recognized as a continuing member of the Commonwealth after it becomes a republic.

It proposes that if Pakistan seeks a decision from the meeting, Canada might take the following position:

(a) Canada regards it as important, particularly at this period of international stress, that Pakistan should remain in close and friendly relations within the free countries of the West as well as the East; the Commonwealth connection is an important element in these relations; it is therefore desirable that Pakistan should remain formally a member of the Commonwealth.

(b) Canada is fully satisfied with the existing basis of Commonwealth relations both as regards our link with the Crown and our relationship with other Commonwealth members.

(c) If Pakistan does not find it possible to accept a continued link with the Crown, Canada is prepared to accept and recognize Pakistan as a continuing member of the Commonwealth on the same basis as agreed at the Prime Ministers' Meeting in April, 1949, in respect of India. Canada is of this opinion for the reasons stated in (a) above, because any less favourable consideration than that accorded India is incompatible with the principles governing the relations between members of the Commonwealth, and because of the conclusion recorded at the 1949 Meeting.<sup>58</sup>

If the Prime Minister of Pakistan makes merely a declaration of intention, it suggests that the Prime Minister may wish to make a sympathetic statement along the above lines and suggest to the meeting that Mr. Mohammed Ali be given an assurance that a favourable response to his formal request could be recorded in a public declaration at the appropriate time following consultation through ordinary channels.

<sup>58</sup> Voir volume 15, document 814 et Canada, Ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, volume 1, N° 5, mai 1955, p. 13.
See Volume 15, Document 814 and Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Volume 1, No. 5, May 1955, p. 13.

On October 8, 1954, Canada was informed that the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan had adopted the Basic Principles of a new Constitution including one stating that Pakistan should be a sovereign independent Republic. The principles were to be incorporated into a draft Constitution Bill which it was intended to place before the Constituent Assembly at the end of November in the expectation that the Constitution would be approved by December 25 and brought into force at a date to be determined by the Assembly.

2. The Prime Minister of Pakistan informed the Prime Ministers of Canada and the United Kingdom that the Government of Pakistan had decided that even after becoming a republic, Pakistan should continue a full, free, and equal member of the Commonwealth and expressed the hope that Canada would choose "to accept and recognize Pakistan's continuing membership of the Commonwealth in accordance with the terms of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Declaration of April 28, 1949 in regard to a similar decision by India."

3. Sir Winston Churchill sent a message to Commonwealth Prime Ministers on October 14 which, after stating that the United Kingdom Government considered that a republican Pakistan should be accepted as remaining a full member of the Commonwealth, proposed that the views of member governments should be obtained before formal replies were made to Pakistan and suggested that the decision should be placed on record by means of a public declaration. Mr. St. Laurent stated that Canada also favoured Pakistan's remaining in the Commonwealth after becoming a republic, and indicated Canada's agreement with the suggested procedure and the terms of the proposed declaration. The Canadian Prime Minister also sent an interim reply to Mr. Mohammed Ali on October 18 stating that while he would not be in a position to send a formal reply until the completion of consultations with other Commonwealth Governments, he hoped that there would be unanimous agreement to accept and recognize Pakistan's continuing membership of the Commonwealth in accordance with the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Declaration of April 28, 1949 in respect of India.

4. The Prime Ministers of India and Ceylon have indicated their agreement with the procedure suggested by the United Kingdom Government and the terms of the proposed declaration. Dr. Malan of South Africa, while agreeing in principle to Pakistan remaining within the Commonwealth and a declaration in the terms proposed, has advanced the view that changes in the constitutional status of a member or the admission of a new member to the Commonwealth should be discussed at a meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers and any declaration should follow that meeting. Australia has taken a similar line; after stating Australia's willingness to accede to the substance of Pakistan's request, Mr. Menzies suggested that a decision be taken at the forthcoming Prime Ministers' Conference which would enable an event of historic interest and importance to be dealt with in a more suitable form and atmosphere than by cabled communications between governments.

5. We have received no official indication of the views of the New Zealand Government. We understand, however, that Mr. Holland is not enthusiastic about a republican Pakistan continuing as a "full, free and equal member of the Commonwealth" and is not entirely convinced that a republic ought to be equal with a non-republican member of the Commonwealth.

6. On October 24, before the draft constitution bill had been introduced into the legislature, the Governor-General of Pakistan declared a state of emergency and in effect suspended the Constituent Assembly. At a meeting of High Commissioners in Karachi summoned by the Prime Minister in his capacity as Minister of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations on October 29, Mr. Mohammed Ali said inter alia that the question of Pakistan remaining in the Commonwealth as a republic would be placed in cold storage for the time being.

7. The United Kingdom Government suggested on November 3 that in view of the interval to be expected before a new constitution emerged and a republic could be declared, Commonwealth Governments should regard Mr. Mohammed Ali's earlier message and the United Kingdom proposals for responding to it as in abeyance. Canada said it agreed with this but observed that if sufficient progress were made, no doubt Mr. Mohammed Ali would wish to raise the matter at the forthcoming Prime Ministers' Meeting.

8. Early in December, the United Kingdom approached Pakistan in an effort to ascertain whether Mr. Mohammed Ali wished to have the question of Pakistan's constitutional status raised at the Prime Ministers' Meeting in London. In doing so, the United Kingdom High Commissioner pointed out that it would be inappropriate to ask the conference to record a decision on so important a question except on the basis of a formal request made in the light of a decision already taken or immediately imminent in favour of an early change of status. In drawing Mr. Mohammed Ali's attention to the difficulty of getting a decision in a hypothetical situation, the United Kingdom pointed out what seemed to them the wisdom of resting on the record of the April 1949 Prime Ministers' Meeting rather than seeking to obtain a decision in the absence of a factual situation.

9. We understand that Mr. Mohammed Ali is not sympathetic to this suggestion and has stated that he wishes to have the constitutional item on the agenda. Mr. Mohammed Ali observed that in April 1949, Mr. Nehru obtained a declaration by Commonwealth Prime Ministers on the basis of a draft constitution which had been approved only by the Congress Party caucus, and a time-table calling for the consideration of the constitution by Parliament during the summer with a tentative date for entry into force of August 15. This contention is open to question since a memorandum given by Mr. Nehru to Mr. Pearson on April 21, 1949 stated that the draft constitution was then before the Constituent Assembly of India.<sup>59</sup> According to our present information Mr. Mohammed Ali does not at the moment have agreement even by a party caucus. He has said, however, that he will want to make at least a declaration of Pakistan's intention to adopt a republican form of constitution and would hope to have a provisional time-table to present to his Commonwealth colleagues. The decision whether or not to seek a declaration at the London meeting will to some extent depend on the progress made before the meeting begins and the reception accorded his explanatory statement of intention at the meeting itself.

10. The United Kingdom think it unlikely that a final decision on the constitutional issue will be sought in London since time will be required for implementation of the constitutional changes already launched or under consideration in Pakistan. A recent report from the United Kingdom High Commissioner mentions the winter of 1955-56 as a more realistic date for the fruition of the plans under consideration. The United Kingdom are not adverse to delay for the following reasons:

(a) there is some possibility that the drive for status for a republic might lose its impetus if the matter were let rest for a period. The United Kingdom officials are of this view because they consider some of the stronger members of the new Pakistan Cabinet less republican-minded than Mr. Mohammed Ali.

<sup>59</sup> Voir/See Volume 15, Document 803.

(b) an attempt to obtain a decision at this stage might be unwelcomed by South Africa, Australia and New Zealand, and

(c) it is wise to make haste slowly in constitutional matters.

Additional significant factors are that present constitutional changes in Pakistan are not sufficiently advanced to enable their nature or acceptability to be assessed; as far as we are aware, they have not been formulated or approved by a party caucus on which the government can depend for support as was the case in India, and the method of their enactment into law, now that the Constituent Assembly is no longer sitting, has yet to be clarified.

11. While the Canadian Government would probably not wish to oppose an attempt to obtain a decision from the meetings it need not encourage Pakistan to make the attempt. The right of each member to modify its constitution in the way it thinks best derives from the sovereign status of members of the Commonwealth and any infringement of this right by attempting to bring pressure on members is contrary to the basic principles underlying the Commonwealth relationship. Since the 1949 decision that a republican India would continue as a full, free and independent member of the Commonwealth, the possibility of other members becoming republics has been recognized and accepted. Any departure from this stand would call into question India's position as a full member equal in status with the other members and might create doubts and difficulties in the minds of the Asian members. In 1949, Commonwealth members went a long way to meet India's position; to raise again the issues which were decided over five years ago is unnecessary and would be manifestly unfair to Pakistan. Moreover, the minutes of the 1949 meeting (P.M.M. (49) 4th meeting page 1) contain the following paragraph inserted at the request of Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan;

"In answer to the question whether another member of the Commonwealth could continue membership of the Commonwealth under conditions identical with those which have been accepted in respect of India, it was finally agreed that it should be put on record as the opinion of the meeting that, while it was not possible to bind future meetings of governments, it could be logically assumed that a future meeting would accord the same treatment to any other member as had been accorded to India by this meeting."

Although this minute contains loopholes, nevertheless it may be said to impose some obligation on members to give sympathetic consideration to requests from members similar to that made by India in April 1949.

12. The only significant constitutional change since India became a republic has been the adoption of the individual forms of the Royal Style and Titles in 1953.<sup>60</sup> Since the accession of Queen Elizabeth II, Pakistan has been careful to avoid giving positive form to the status of the Crown. On the Queen's accession, the proclamation issued in Pakistan merely stated that "Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II is now become Queen of Her Realms and Territories and Head of the Commonwealth." The new form of Royal Style and Titles for Pakistan reads: "Elizabeth II, Queen of the United Kingdom and of her other Realms and Territories, Head of the Commonwealth". These formulae are consistent with the minute recorded at the 1949 Meeting at Pakistan's request. It is clear that for almost six years, successive governments of Pakistan have been careful to adopt a position which would facilitate the transition to republican status within the Commonwealth at the appropriate time.

<sup>60</sup> Voir/See Volume 19, Document 1.

13. If Pakistan seeks a decision from the meeting along the lines of Mohammed Ali's message of October 8 we might take the following position:

(a) Canada regards it as important, particularly at this period of international stress, that Pakistan should remain in close and friendly relations with the free countries of the West as well as the East; the Commonwealth connection is an important element in these relations; it is therefore desirable that Pakistan should remain formally a member of the Commonwealth.

(b) Canada is fully satisfied with the existing basis of Commonwealth relations both as regards our link with the Crown and our relationship with other Commonwealth members.

(c) If Pakistan does not find it possible to accept a continued link with the Crown, Canada is prepared to accept and recognize Pakistan as a continuing member of the Commonwealth on the same basis as agreed at the Prime Ministers' Meeting in April, 1949, in respect of India. Canada is of this opinion for the reasons stated in (a) above, because any less favourable consideration than that accorded India is incompatible with the principles governing the relations between members of the Commonwealth, and because of the conclusion recorded at the 1949 Meeting.

14. If Mr. Mohammed Ali makes merely a declaration of intention in London, the Prime Minister may wish to make a sympathetic statement along the lines of paragraph 13. He may wish to suggest to his colleagues that in view of the remarks of the Prime Minister of Pakistan, and the discussion to follow, the meeting should consider whether it would be possible to give the Prime Minister of Pakistan an assurance that at the appropriate time his Commonwealth colleagues would consult together by ordinary channels of communication and, having reached agreement, place their decision on record in a suitable public declaration. The declaration might make reference to the consideration given to this question at the present meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers. The assurance to be given could only apply as long as the change contemplated did not involve departure from positions earlier agreed or introduce new elements bearing on the constitutional position of other members of the Commonwealth.<sup>61</sup>

<sup>61</sup> Pour un compte rendu de la discussion de cette question à la Conférence des premiers ministres, voir le document 246, appendice B.

For the discussion of this question during the Prime Minister's Conference, see Document 246, Appendix B.

4<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 4RELATIONS AVEC DES PAYS PARTICULIERS RELATIONS WITH INDIVIDUAL COUNTRIES

SECTION A

INDE

INDIA

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

VISITE DE KRISHNA MENON AU CANADA, JUIN 1955

VISIT OF KRISHNA MENON TO CANADA, JUNE 1955

292.

DEA/50052-40

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministreMemorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], June 10, 1955

Krishna Menon has now left Ottawa for New York and Washington after a very crowded and, I think, a useful visit, during which I saw him three or four times and must have spent four or five hours in conference with him. It was at times an exhausting business as he has a tendency to wander away from the subject under discussion, into the philosophic stratosphere where he can become mystical about contemporary problems. He is not exactly what you would call a practical or completely objective negotiator, but he is, I think, sincere and means well, and is trying to be helpful.

He is more relaxed and more sure of himself than he was a year or so ago, but he will never, I think, be a successful mediator between China, or indeed any Asian country, and the United States. His sympathies are too instinctively Asian and socialist to allow him to be as impartial as his present activities require. No doubt he thinks that I have the same disqualification in reverse for the kind of work which he is now doing. One thing, however, is quite certain and that is he is very friendly indeed to Canada and to Canadians. I think we are well advised to make the most of this feeling, especially while he is so close to Nehru and, therefore, so influential in forming the foreign policy of the greatest Asian democracy.

In addition to the talks I had with him I had lunch, dinner and lunch successively, which is a somewhat trying experience in view of the fact that Krishna eats practically nothing that other people eat, and drinks even less. Our visitor also saw the Governor General, had a press conference, a radio and television interview, and helpful discussions with the senior officials of the Department. Mr. Martin, for whom Krishna has a very warm regard, helped very much in entertaining our visitor, as did the Indian High Commissioner. Mr. Martin and I saw him off this afternoon.

Immediately on his departure I telephoned Mr. Heeney in Washington and asked him to telephone the State Department to let Mr. Dulles know that if he would like me to, I could give him at once an informal oral report of the visit. Mr. Dulles then called back immediately and I had five minutes or so with him on the telephone. I told him that Mr. Menon had very little to tell us that we did not already know, but that in my view the Secretary of State and the President would find it rewarding to have a good talk with him in Washington. I told Mr. Dulles that we would send them a report on our conversations. He seemed grateful.

The substance of our conversations can be divided as follows:

- (1) His mission to Peking and Chinese-American relations;<sup>62</sup>
- (2) Indochina, and the work of the International Commissions.

So far as the first is concerned, it is clear that Chou En-Lai in particular, and other members of the Chinese Communist Government whom he met, made a strong and favourable impression on Menon; an impression which has not yet been removed. I asked him more than once for an analysis of Chinese Communist policy and attitudes. He is apparently convinced, and becomes very emphatic on the subject, that they have no aggressive intentions and have neither the will nor the power to dominate the rest of Asia as the agents of either revolutionary communism or Chinese imperialism. Menon's views on Asian affairs generally spring from this basic assumption. If he is wrong here, he is wrong in nearly everything else. On the other hand, if he is right in this fundamental matter, then he has cause for the discouragement and alarm about American policy in the Far East, which he undoubtedly feels. He was carefully restrained in his references to the United States and United States policy and emphatically disclaimed any but a friendly feeling for Americans. However, he does obviously believe (though it is not possible to get him to say so without equivocation) that American policy in the Far East is more aggressive than Chinese policy in the sense that it is taking action in Asia, a long way from the United States, which can only be interpreted by people like Menon as evidence not merely of a desire to keep the Communist menace as far away as possible from North America, but of a determination to destroy the Communist régime in Peking. For that purpose Menon feels that the Americans are not only relying on their own strength, but are trying to line up what he would consider to be the reactionary elements in Asian countries to support them.

Menon admits, however, that the situation has improved and that there are pacific elements at work both in Peking and in Washington, notably President Eisenhower, who may bring about an easing of tension and eventually a negotiation of differences. It is to this end that he claims to be working, and he is certainly sincere in his claim.

When you question him as I did as to what he thinks might be done in concrete terms to bring about further improvement, he becomes vague and has not very much that is specific to suggest. In a negative sense he is, I think, wise in his approach because he realizes that to force the pace now would be useless and that nothing much can be achieved at the present time and in the present atmosphere in the direction of formal negotiation through an international conference at any level and however composed. What he is hoping for is a continued improvement in the atmosphere by such measures as the release of American airmen and, on the United States side, a less belligerent attitude toward trade with China, and less support, at least less public avowal of support for Chiang Kai-shek. He mentioned in particular the desirability of a statement from Washington to the effect that not only can Chinese students in the United States go home if they so desire, but that if any persons or agencies outside the United States wish to facilitate their return the United States would put no obstacle in the way. Menon apparently has been told in Peking that while technically permission to return has been given, in fact it is not possible for many hundreds of

<sup>62</sup> Voir aussi les documents 745-747 / See also Documents 745-747.

Chinese students who wish to go to get out of the country. (This might be worth following up in Washington to see if some such declaration could be made. Menon was sure that it would be helpful).

He is also anxious that there should be no fighting in or over the Formosa Straits while diplomatic contact is being established. He does not feel, however, that there will be any possibility of persuading the Peking Government to accept a solution based on the "two Chinas" theory, nor does he think that they will accept indefinitely without using force Chiang Kai-shek's occupancy of the off-shore islands. He very much hopes, therefore, that the Americans can secure the evacuation of these islands. This would have a good effect in Peking, but only if that evacuation is not accompanied by the scorched earth policy as was the case in the evacuation of the Tachen Islands.

So far as the easing of tension is concerned, Menon had few concrete suggestions to make but felt it was important that diplomatic contact should be established. He thought that the best way to do this would be to have the Americans meet Chinese Communist representatives in Delhi (under the sponsorship of India), in London (under the sponsorship of the U.K.), and in Moscow (under the sponsorship of the Soviet Government). He thinks that before real negotiations can begin contacts of this kind should be established.

He also hopes that some Americans — and especially Canadians — will be permitted to visit Communist China and see for themselves what is going on there.

Once or twice he brought up the desirability of letting relatives of imprisoned Americans go to China and visit the prisoners. I told him that I could not see much point in this if, as we must hope, the prisoners are soon to be released. However, he said that the Chinese Government attached considerable importance to it. They had their own public opinion to worry about, and it would be far easier for them to release the prisoners (apparently in accordance with some old Chinese custom) if the families had first visited them. I merely murmured to Menon that the United States also had public opinion which was more vigorous and free than that of China, and which put a limit on what the United States could do.

Finally, and he attaches great importance to this, the time must come soon when the Peking Government is recognized and given membership in the United Nations.<sup>63</sup>

Indochina

We talked at some length about the situation in Indochina, and more particularly the position of our two governments on the International Commissions.

In Vietnam the main problem is to get negotiations started between the southern and northern governments in order to bring about free general elections. I repeated to Menon the Canadian position — along lines that are now well known — regarding the responsibilities of the International Commission with regard to supervision of elections. He seemed to accept our position, though he felt that we were being a little too legalistic, but he was very suspicious of the efforts of the United States with the Diem government to prevent elections. I tried to remove some of his fears in this regard and also pointed out that both the United Kingdom and France were doing their best to bring about the preliminary but essential contact between the two governments. I told Menon that so far as I was concerned I was not nearly as optimistic as he was about satisfactory results from any such discussions, or that free elections in any accepted meaning of the word could be held in the near future. I emphasized that this was the only kind of election for which we would take any responsibility whatever. Menon thought I was too pessimistic.

<sup>63</sup> Pour la discussion sur l'évolution de la question en 1955, voir les documents 95-97.
For a discussion of the evolution of this problem in 1955, see Documents 95-97.

He also thought I was too pessimistic about the situation in Laos where he was inclined to criticize the position of the Canadian member of the Commission as being unduly legalistic.<sup>64</sup> His information led him to believe that the Pathet Lao would accept integration into the national community, but that they would not accept any position which restricted them in the north, pending such integration, to the occupancy of a few camps. He did not think that the Pathet Lao was dominated by the Chinese or the Vietminh.

So far as Cambodia was concerned, Menon felt that all that was required was an election where all members of the community would have a chance to vote. He was critical of the present government because it was attempting, through electoral reform, to disfranchise (he felt that this was also true of Laos) progressive elements which were opposed to it.

Menon was also critical of the United States-Cambodian military aid agreement.<sup>65</sup> He could not accept our view that this agreement did not conflict with the Geneva armistice agreement. Their legal people felt that it did. In any event, it was unwise and provocative and had aroused real resentment in the Indian Government. It was not long ago that Mr. Nehru had been asked to take greater responsibility for Cambodia, both diplomatically and militarily. He had had great difficulty in persuading his colleagues in the Cabinet that they should accept any such responsibility, especially for military training, but he had been successful. He was then informed by the Cambodian Government that the Government would not require either Indian or American aid in the field of military training because it would be more convenient and satisfactory to continue to use French assistance. Mr. Nehru accepted this decision in good grace, but was surprised and annoyed to learn later that, without any further consultation, the French had also withdrawn from the field and the United States-Cambodian agreement had been signed. This seems to rankle.

L.B. PEARSON

<sup>64</sup> Voir le chapitre 7, première partie, section c./See Chapter 7, Part 1, Section C.

<sup>65</sup> Voir le chapitre 7, première partie, section b.

See Chapter 7, Part 1, Section B.

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

VISITE DU SECRÉTAIRE D'ÉTAT AUX AFFAIRES EXTÉRIEURES
EN INDE, 24 OCTOBRE-6 NOVEMBRE 1955

VISIT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
TO INDIA, OCTOBER 24-NOVEMBER 6, 1955

293.

DEA/12278-40

*Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*High Commissioner in India
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 768

New Delhi, November 8, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: My immediately preceding telegram.†

MINISTER'S VISIT: TALKS WITH MISTER NEHRU

The Minister had two talks with Nehru. I accompanied him to both. The first talk on November 4 lasted for about one and one half hours, and the second on November 5 for about two hours. Bhabha of the Indian Atomic Energy Board was present for the last half-hour of the first talk and Dutt was present for all but the first twenty minutes or so of the second talk which was concerned almost entirely with Indo-China.

2. I am reporting in separate telegram on:

- (a) the invitation to Mister Nehru to visit Canada;†
- (b) atomic energy;<sup>66</sup> and
- (c) Indo-China.<sup>67</sup>

3. I am sending by despatch the two documents which the Minister gave Nehru on his visit to the Soviet Union. The first is [a] slightly expurgated version of the memorandum which he sent to Mister St. Laurent<sup>68</sup> and the second is a very slightly modified version of the telegram reporting on his talks with Khrushchev.<sup>69</sup>

4. Nehru was very relaxed, affable and unhurried. The first day he listened carefully and with interest to what the Minister had to say but volunteered almost no information or comments himself. The second day he was a little more forthcoming but he left Dutt to make the running on Indo-China.

5. At the first meeting, the Minister expressed his appreciation of Indian hospitality, particularly at Gangtok, and of the Indian generosity in calling the Mayurakshi Dam after Canada. He extended the invitation to Nehru to visit Canada, and made the formal offer of

<sup>66</sup> Voir/See Document 283.

<sup>67</sup> Voir/See Document 634.

<sup>68</sup> Non retrouvé./Not located.

<sup>69</sup> Pour le rapport complet sur les entretiens de Pearson avec Khrouchtchev, voir le document 537.
For the full report on Pearson's talks with Khrushchev, see Document 537.

an emergency flood relief contribution.<sup>70</sup> He also gave his impressions of Russia. The first meeting ended with the Minister discussing the NRX reactor with Bhabha, a discussion in which Nehru did not participate. The second meeting was devoted almost entirely to the situation in Indo-China. In addition, the Minister brought up the question of our recognition of Peking China and said that we were thinking of moving in step with Belgium, Australia and New Zealand.<sup>71</sup> As far as recognition by the United States was concerned, the Minister said that it seemed probable that recognition would not take place until after the U.S. presidential elections and then presumably by Democratic régime probably under Stevenson.

6. Nehru thoroughly enjoyed his talks with the Minister. I think the talks have helped Nehru to clarify his own mind on Indo-China and perhaps to correct distortions in his picture of the Soviet Union.

[E.] REID

SECTION B

ROYAUME-UNI : CHARBON
UNITED KINGDOM: COAL

294.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], May 31, 1955

COAL; EXPORT TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

5. The Minister of Finance, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 8th, 1955, recalled that proposals to assist the export of coal from eastern Canada had not been accepted because of objections in principle to subsidizing exports pending the outcome of discussions on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade taking place at Geneva.

The Dominion Coal Company had now received a firm offer from the National Coal Board in the U.K. to purchase 100,000 tons of slack coal for delivery from July to October 1955. The purchase price offered would work out to $14.12 per net ton delivered C.I.F. Rotterdam. The total cost of such coal, as calculated by the chairman of the Coal Board would be $17.02. The Coal Board recommended that assistance to the extent of this difference of $2.90 be provided in the form of a subvention. There was only a limited market available in central Canada for Nova Scotia coal under the present subvention limits of $4.75 a ton, and it was probable that the present market would decline further. Production per man day was beginning to show some of the increase expected from the mechanization programme, but this increase, together with the limitations of the market, would reduce the number of men employed. It was important that such a reduction be made gradually, and the proposed export would help to cushion the decline. If the movement were successful in creating future business, it was possible that the laid down cost of N.S. coal and the rate of assistance required might decline due to lower freight and production costs. The additional expenditure required could be met within the present item in the estimates.

<sup>70</sup> Le 5 novembre 1955, le ministère des Affaires extérieures a annoncé qu'il allait remettre 100 000 dollars à la Croix-Rouge canadienne pour l'achat de fournitures d'urgence destinées aux victimes des inondations en Inde et au Pakistan, chaque pays devant recevoir la moitié de cette somme.

On November 5, 1955 the Department of External Affairs announced that it would give $100,000 to the Canadian Red Cross to purchase relief supplies for flood victims in India and Pakistan. The money was to be divided equally between the two countries.

<sup>71</sup> Voir Chapitre 7, 4<sup>e</sup> Partie./See Chapter 7, Part 4.

(Memorandum, Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys from Chairman Dominion Coal Board, May 31, 1955).†

6. Mr. Harris added that the company's large 1B colliery was to have been closed the end of May. It was now to be kept open during June. It was an inefficient mine, and the subsidy on exports to the U.K. should not be tied in with keeping it in operation. The slack coal should come from other collieries. The government would be paying $8 million this year to the company. A subsidy of $300,000 for the sale was a small proportion of the total payments to the company. If no assistance were given, the possibilities of the U.K. market might not be adequately tested.

7. Mr. Winters said that, some days before, he, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, provincial authorities and officers of the company had attended a meeting on the Nova Scotia coal problem. These talks had been inconclusive with neither the union nor the company having anything to suggest. While the discussions were being held, an accident had occurred at one of the company's mines which would lead to some suspension of its production. He had asked officers of the company if they could keep the 1B colliery open to help the immediate employment problem caused by the closing of this other mine. He thought the proposed export subsidy worthwhile on experimental grounds so that the British might learn to use this type of coal. This was the only basis on which he would agree to the suggestion and he would not wish to assist exports in this manner as a regular practice in the future. The unemployment situation in eastern Nova Scotia was worrying and it was desirable to maintain, somehow, the confidence in the future of the people in that area.

8. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It was doubtful if this sale would make much, if any, difference to the employment situation in Nova Scotia. There would be a market in the U.S. for imported coal for some time. It was not economical at the moment for that U.K. to use low grade oils in plants for the production of electrical energy and, until atomic energy was available in some quantity, coal would be used in increasing quantities. Assisting this sale to the U.K. was a gamble to demonstrate that N.S. coal, with its sulphur content, could be used for the purpose.

(b) A readjustment appeared to be inevitable with more production per man and reduced employment levels. The time might come when the coal would be used as a chemical rather than a fuel and its value increase. But that was a long way off. Meanwhile, the only return for the subsidies being paid was the maintenance of employment.

(c) The G.A.T.T. discussions did not have as much bearing on subsidized export sales as expected earlier. There were provisions in the G.A.T.T. relating to the use of export subsidies but they would not prevent Canada entering into this subsidy. Except for a small subsidy on western coal, this would be the first time there had been a direct subsidy on a Canadian export. The U.S. subsidized export sales of coal and some other products indirectly.

(d) If assistance were to be given, the largest amount should be $2.00 a ton; it should not cover such things as administrative costs, interest, selling expenses and profit. The company should itself contribute, in part, towards making the experimental sale possible.

...

295.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], August 16, 1955

COAL SUBVENTION; FURTHER EXPORTS TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

19. The Prime Minister, referring to discussion at the meeting of May 31st, 1955, said the Dominion Coal Company had now accepted a firm order from the United Kingdom for a further 120,000 tons of slack coal, with the possibility of an additional order for 10,000 tons later on. The Dominion Coal Board recommended that similar assistance be extended to these new orders as was provided for previous shipments to the U.K. and Europe. This slack was in excess of home demand. It would remain unsold and later be moved to points in the St. Lawrence River Valley at a possible maximum subvention of $4.75 a ton if not sold overseas.

The assistance provided earlier had been approved on an experimental basis only, in the hope of developing markets in Europe. While these additional orders were perhaps not of an experimental character, the slack had to be sold by one means or another.

Consideration of the matter might be deferred until Ministers more directly concerned were present.

20. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) Unless better arguments than the experimental one could be made for this sale, assistance should not be given. The slack should be sold to the U.K. for the best price obtainable.

(b) The import of coal into the U.K. from Canada had been reasonably well received. The U.K. was facing great difficulties in getting sufficient numbers of men to work in its coal pits. The suggestion had been made in the U.K. that some N.S. miners might go there to work in U.K. mines. Whether any would be willing to do so was another question.

(c) It was inadvisable to pay subsidies which led to the use of a mineral for secondary purposes which might be a real asset in the future for more useful purposes.

21. The Cabinet noted the report of the Prime Minister on the proposal to extend to a larger tonnage the export subsidy on coal for the United Kingdom and Europe, and deferred consideration of the matter to a meeting at which those Ministers most directly concerned would be present.

296.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 21, 1955

COAL SUBVENTIONS; FURTHER EXPORTS TO THE UNITED KINGDOM

11. The Prime Minister, referring to the discussion of August 16th, 1955, drew attention to the recommendation of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys that the subvention payable on exports of coal to the U.K. be applicable to a larger tonnage, and said it would be difficult to justify assistance for additional shipments on experimental grounds. About the only remaining reason that could be given for subsidies on the additional amount was that they would help to maintain employment in the coal mining areas of Nova Scotia.

12. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It would have to be decided as a matter of policy whether the coal industry should be supported on a continuing basis through export subsidies. It was inadvisable to take an ad hoc decision at this time on the one isolated proposal.

(b) The Dominion Coal Company said this further assistance was required because the price it had obtained for the export order would not cover costs. The company did not regard the sale as an experimental one but rather as a substitute for the slack being shipped up the St. Lawrence River Valley at a possible maximum subvention of $4.75 per ton.

(c) Reasonable progress was being made in the adjustment of the Nova Scotia coal industry to reduced markets but there was no other major source of employment than coal mining in the Glace Bay area. Nevertheless, only 200 people were out of work in that area although a considerably larger number had become unemployed when the 1B Colliery closed. To some people, there seemed little doubt that the bringing of natural gas to the east would still further reduce the markets for Nova Scotia coal. While the United Kingdom and Europe might not be entirely satisfactory alternatives, these markets should not be overlooked in deciding on future coal policy.

(d) A careful study should be made of the size of these coal subsidies. The largest payments by far were received by the Dominion Coal Company, a subsidiary of Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation. The latter enjoyed substantial profits on its steel production but it obtained fuel for this operation from its subsidiary at prices below cost. There seemed, therefore, little doubt as to the destination of much of the federal assistance for coal production.

(e) Before reaching a decision on the proposal to assist further exports to the U.K., a more substantial explanation of the reasons for it should be made, including details on costs of production, shipping costs, prices in England and in Canada, the size of the present subsidies in relation to costs, etc.

13. The Cabinet deferred consideration of the proposal to extend to a larger tonnage the export subsidy on Nova Scotian coal and requested a full justification of the proposal, including details as to costs of production, shipping costs, prices, the size of subsidies, etc.

...

297.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], October 5, 1955

...

COAL SUBVENTION; FURTHER EXPORTS TO THE U.K.

4. Mr. Winters, referring to discussion at the meeting of August 16th, 1955, said he had now obtained further information on the proposed sale of more coal to the United Kingdom and some details on recent sales made by United States companies. Subject to the provision of a subsidy, the Dominion Coal Company had agreed to supply a further 220,000 tons to the U.K. Of this total, 130,000 tons would be delivered before March 31st, 1956. The transaction would require a subvention of $2.50 per ton if costs of production and transportation were to be realized.

The U.K. had purchased coal from the U.S. of considerably higher quality than the Nova Scotia coal, and at a lower price. Costs of production in the U.S. mines were much less than those in Nova Scotia. However, the company had stated that its pithead costs would be reduced over the next few months. The U.K. agent of the company thought that as much as 400,000 tons of Nova Scotia slack might be sold to the U.K. in 1956 and at higher prices than were being paid at present. The Dominion Coal Board now recommended that assistance of up to $2.50 a ton be extended to cover the additional 130,000 tons which would be moved during the balance of the present fiscal year.

Explanatory memoranda were circulated.

(Memoranda, Chairman, Dominion Coal Board to Minister, Sept. 26, 1955,† and attachment, and Oct. 3, 1955—Cab. Docs. 200† and 202-55†).

5. Mr. Winters added that it should be decided as a matter of policy, whether or not sales of this kind should be subsidized on a continuing basis. There would probably be more unemployment in the mining areas of Nova Scotia if no such aid were forthcoming. Many in the province believed that, when western gas reached the east, it would displace as much as one million tons of coal in central Canada. It would be helpful to find an alternative market elsewhere. However, the industry should be told that costs would have to be reduced and it could not expect subventions at the proposed rate forever. On balance, he recommended that the assistance proposed be extended.

6. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The assistance should be regarded as part of the programme to encourage winter employment. The slack was produced as a by product in mining sized coal; it would pile up if not sold and some collieries would have to shut down.

(b) If there were future sales, as seemed quite possible, the subsidy should be on a reduced scale in each case. In the present instance, it might be set at $2.30, with the company absorbing some elements of the cost, which it appeared able to do. The company should also reduce its production of slack when possible.

(c) Further subsidies would be a violation of the G.A.T.T. It seemed unlikely, however, that the U.S. would complain about unfair competition as the U.K. market appeared to be expanding. Relations with our G.A.T.T. partners would be improved if it were known that future assistance would be on a reducing scale.

(d) The money involved represented interest on a substantial capital sum which might be usefully invested in a self-supporting programme. The continuing drain on the treasury of subsidies for these export sales could not be maintained forever.

7. The Cabinet noted Mr. Winter's report on further exports of slack coal to the United Kingdom from Nova Scotia and agreed:

(a) that assistance at the rate of $2.30 per ton be provided for a further 130,000 tons; an order in council to be passed accordingly;

(Order in Council P.C. 1955-1495, Oct. 5) and,

(b) that the Dominion Coal Company be informed that, while assistance might be provided for future shipments, this would be only at a reducing rate with a view to it being eliminated altogether, and that the company should consequently make every effort to place its export programme on a self-sustaining basis.

...

SECTION C

ANTILLES : IMMIGRATION
WEST INDIES: IMMIGRATION

298.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], May 6, 1955

...

IMMIGRATION; ADMISSION OF DOMESTICS FROM JAMAICA

30. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration said that Mr. Isaacs, Minister of Trade and Industry of Jamaica, while on a recent visit to Ottawa, had enquired whether the Canadian government would be prepared to agree to an arrangement under which a certain number of Jamaicans would be admitted to Canada, not as immigrants but on a temporary basis to serve as domestics for a period of one or two years, at the conclusion of which time they would return to Jamaica. The Jamaican government would be prepared to establish an agency in Canada with responsibility to make sure that the Jamaican domestics honoured their commitments and were returned to the island following their period of service in Canada.

Mr. Isaacs was fully aware of the government's policy on immigration from the British West Indies and he did not suggest that this policy be changed, but it would help Canada-Jamaican relations if some scheme such as he had outlined could be put into effect.

31. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The prohibition against immigration from the British West Indies seemed somewhat anomalous in view of the fact that Indian immigrants were admitted to Canada on a limited quota basis. There might be some merit in establishing a quota for the B.W.I. If this were agreed, the best time might be when the Federation of the British West Indies came into being in the next year or two.

(b) The temporary entry of domestics from Jamaica could give rise to a number of problems. It might be difficult to establish fully effective controls on the movements of these persons. There were the added problems of possible marriage and birth and the reluctance of employers to lose good servants at the end of the stipulated period.

(c) As a gesture of good will and in the interest of Canada's important trade relations with Jamaica, it might be advisable to agree to an arrangement along the lines suggested by Mr. Isaacs, at least on a trial basis. Any such scheme that might be established should perhaps be under the administration of the National Employment Service of the Department of Labour rather than under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

(d) It was suggested that the Ministers of Labour and of Citizenship and Immigration might investigate the possibility of working out an arrangement with the Jamaican government under which, say, 100 domestics would be admitted to Canada as non-immigrants for a trial period of a year or two.

32. The Cabinet,

(a) noted the report by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on a suggestion made by the Minister of Trade and Industry of Jamaica, Mr. W.O. Isaacs, that an arrangement be worked out under which the Canadian government would admit, as non-immigrants, a certain number of Jamaicans who would be employed exclusively as domestics in Canada for a period of one or two years, following which they would be returned to Jamaica;

(b) agreed that the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration investigate the possibility and desirability of working out an arrangement along the lines suggested by Mr. Isaacs for a trial period of one or two years; and,

(c) agreed that further consideration be given to the desirability of establishing an immigration quota for the British West Indies, perhaps at the time the British West Indies Federation came into being.

299.

PCO

*Note du ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration et du ministre du Travail
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and Minister of Labour
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 131-55

Ottawa, June 7, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

ADMISSION OF DOMESTICS FROM THE B.W.I.

1. Representations have been received from the Governments of Jamaica and Barbados asking that Canada give some consideration to controlled immigration from these areas, thereby giving a measure of relief to their problems of unemployment and over-population which are extremely acute.

2. Under Canada's present immigration policy, immigrants of coloured race from the B.W.I. come within paragraph 4 of Section 20 of the Immigration Regulations. Those who have relatives in Canada to assist them in becoming established may come forward on submission of an application in Canada. Applications may be submitted for residents of the B.W.I. by residents of Canada who can receive and care for them, provided they come within the following classes:

(a)(i) The husband or wife;

(ii) The son or daughter, brother or sister, step-brother or step-sister, half-brother or half-sister, together with the husband or wife and unmarried children under 21 years of age;

(iii) The father or mother;

(iv) The grandparents;

(v) The single (excluding divorced) orphan nephew or niece under 21 years of age.

(b) Fiancé(e)s.

In addition, special consideration is given to any individual case of an applicant who appears to have outstanding qualifications or where admission would appear to be warranted on humanitarian grounds.

3. A study has been made of the proposal to admit workers from the B.W.I. and it is considered that the Government could, as an experiment, allow the admission of 100 such workers during 1955. It is suggested that the best field for immigration of this sort is that of domestic service, and that the experiment should be confined to workers in this category. Attention is drawn to the fact that while the present proposal originated out of discussions with the Jamaican Government, officials from the Barbados were the first to approach us in the matter and it is felt that if approval is given to the admission of 100 unsponsored domestics, 25 should be selected from Barbados.

4. Regarding the selection of these domestics, arrangements should be made to have this done on our behalf by the responsible Government agencies in Jamaica and Barbados. Selection should be made from suitably qualified single girls in the age group 21-35 years, having regard to health, character and training. Those selected would be required to sign an undertaking to remain at domestic employment for a specified period. It is to be understood that the Government of Canada will not advance transportation on behalf of persons admitted under this scheme, and an effort should be made to conclude an arrangement with the countries of emigration whereby they will provide return transportation for those domestics found to be undesirable.

5. Responsibility for the placement of these domestics upon their arrival in Canada will rest with the Department of Labour.

6. Consideration has been given to the conditions under which these girls should be allowed admission to Canada and in this regard two proposals are submitted, namely, to allow entry as non-immigrants, or to grant landing upon arrival.

7. The first course of action would involve non-immigrant entry for a stipulated period of time, departure from Canada to be made upon the completion of contract. This course of action would appear to afford a measure of control to ensure compliance with the undertaking to remain at domestic work, however, there are practical reasons which militate against it. Termination of employment at the end of the stated period would be difficult for it is unrealistic to suppose that the employer of a girl who has given satisfactory service, the need for which still existed, could be convinced that she should be returned home to be replaced by another girl of unknown quality. This would result in representations for extension of temporary stay which may be difficult to refuse and as it would be contrary to Canadian views on equality to allow the girls in this category to remain in Canada for an indefinite period without the benefit of permanent status, the matter of granting landing would have to be considered.

To deprive those coming forward under this plan of the status of landed immigrants would be interpreted by many as an attempt at forced labour and charges of discrimination would inevitably result.

Another reason is that in the course of two years or more residence in Canada, these girls will have become accustomed to a standard of living superior to that of their own country of origin and it would be regarded by many as an injustice to insist upon their return.

8. The second course of action — if this alternative is pursued we would eliminate the possibility of charges of discrimination against this group which is a major objection to the first proposal. If granted landing upon arrival, then domestics admitted under this scheme would enjoy the same benefits as other immigrant domestics in that their residence in Canada would count towards the acquisition of domicile and ultimate Canadian citizenship. There is no reason to believe that these girls, once admitted, will leave domestic employment to seek higher wages in industry. Furthermore, the Immigration Act and Regulations, together with such controls as may be exercised administratively, would provide sufficient sanctions to prevent abuse of the scheme.

9. On balance it is considered preferable to regard domestics coming forward from the British West Indies as immigrants and to deal with them as such upon their arrival in this country.

THE UNDERSIGNED, THEREFORE, SUBMIT THE FOLLOWING RECOMMENDATIONS FOR CONSIDERATION:

(a) THAT Cabinet approve the admission of 100 domestics from the British West Indies on an experimental basis, the scheme to be reviewed one year hence; 75 domestics to be selected from Jamaica and 25 from Barbados;

(b) THAT the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the Department of Labour be authorized to complete arrangements with the responsible Government authorities in Jamaica and Barbados respecting the selection of domestics and the return to their country of origin of those domestics found to be unsuitable;

(c) THAT such controls as are needed be exercised administratively by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the Department of Labour;

(d) THAT domestics admitted under this scheme be granted landing upon arrival in Canada;

ALTERNATIVELY,

(e) THAT domestics admitted under this scheme be allowed entry as non-immigrants for a period of one year on the understanding that they will remain in domestic service, provision to be made for an extension of temporary entry for a further period of one year, departure from Canada to be made at the expiration of this time or upon completion of contract.<sup>72</sup>

J.W. PICKERSGILL
Minister of Citizenship and Immigration
M.F. GREGG
Minister of Labour

<sup>72</sup> Les recommandations a, b, c et d ont été approuvées par le Cabinet le 8 juin 1955.
On June 8, 1955, Cabinet approved recommendations a, b, c and d.

CHAPITRE IV/CHAPTER IV
RELATIONS AVEC LES ÉTATS-UNIS RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1

VISITE DU SECRÉTAIRE D'ÉTAT DES ÉTATS-UNIS À OTTAWA,
LE 17-19 MARS 1955
VISIT OF THE UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE TO OTTAWA, MARCH 17-19, 1955

300.

DEA/11049-40

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

Ottawa, March 17, 1955

CONVERSATION WITH MR. DULLES

Mr. Dulles called on me this afternoon, accompanied by the United States Ambassador and Mr. Douglas MacArthur, Jr., the Counsellor of the State Department. Mr. Léger and Mr. Arnold Smith were with me.

Yalta Papers

Mr. Dulles said that he expected the furore over publication of the Yalta papers would die down in a few days.<sup>1</sup> Virtually all the items which the press seemed to consider sensational had already appeared in books, e.g. the memoirs of Mr. Stettinius. He also said that the British authorities had had the text of the papers which it was proposed to release, for two months before they gave their consent to publication. Mr. Dulles added that the State Department had made a few deletions in the transcripts before publication — e.g., a statement by President Roosevelt that he despised the Jewish vote.

I suggested to Mr. Dulles that to put the quietus on any recriminations about unwarranted release of confidential conversations, it might be useful if his people were able to point out to newsmen details of when and where the various items had previously appeared.

WEU—NATO

Turning to more important current matters, Mr. Dulles said that he had been giving considerable thought to a long-term problem which would arise regarding relations between the West European Union, which he expects to come into existence shortly, and NATO. Closer West European cooperation was desirable: so is trans-Atlantic cooperation. For a period, there would inevitably be duplication between the WEU and NATO forums, but sooner or later choices will have to be made as to which forum should be used for particular purposes. Where should the United States throw its weight on this matter? I said that our own policy has been and is to stress the primary importance of the North Atlantic framework, with WEU having a subordinate role within it. I said that I understood the British had come to a similar conclusion. One factor to be considered is that if WEU plays an increasingly important role at the expense of NATO, Denmark, Norway, Greece and Turkey would unquestionably press to enter it.

<sup>1</sup> Voir/See United States, Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States, The Conferences at Malta and Yalta, 1945, Washington D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1955.

Formosa

Turning to Formosa, I made clear to Mr. Dulles our own position, and also stressed the distinction which Canadian opinion makes between Formosa and the Pescadores on the one hand, and the off-shore islands on the other.<sup>2</sup> Mr. Dulles said that the relevance of the off-shore islands was in his view largely psychological, relating to the morale of the Nationalist Chinese troops on Formosa. Chiang Kai-shek fully realized that there could be no question of his returning to the mainland, but his troops did not recognize this, and he dare not tell them. Most of his troops are from the mainland, and their overriding ambition is to return there, where their families, their homes, and the graves of their ancestors are. The danger is that if they did not think they had some hope of returning by conquest, they would subvert to return. The real problem is therefore, as Mr. Dulles put it, that "the morale of the Chinese Nationalist troops is based on a fiction". Little by little the soldiers who came from the mainland are being replaced by younger men who are native Formosans, and whose interest lies in defending Formosa, but Mr. Dulles said that this process will take a considerable time to work itself out and this improvement in the morale problem will at best be only gradual. I said that this morale problem would exist quite apart from the position of the off-shore islands.

Consultation

I told Mr. Dulles of the uneasiness which Canadians feel (as I am sure the people of other countries which are not great powers do, likewise) when they come to realize that the facts of interdependence are such that involvement is not necessarily related to commitment, and that decisions taken by others may lead to hostilities in which they would be expected to play a part. Though I recognized the difficulties, the feeling that people who would be involved in the results of defence policies should have a voice also in the decisions which might bring these policies into play, was an important political fact.

Mr. Dulles replied that he attached importance to consultation, and weighed carefully their associates' views in reaching their decisions. The U.S. were, he said (and I agreed with this as far as Canada is concerned), consulting a great deal with their leading associates, particularly the United Kingdom, but also Canada, Australia and New Zealand. "We are consulting less lately with France," he added, "because she has been acting rather irresponsibly."

Atomic Weapons

Mr. Dulles referred to statements which President Eisenhower and he have made during the past week regarding the use of small atomic weapons against battlefield and tactical targets, and the distinction between these and the big hydrogen weapons.<sup>3</sup> He thought it important that the public should come to recognize this distinction.

<sup>2</sup> Voir/See Document 709.

He mentioned that in a recent discussion he had with President Eisenhower about the availability of military aircraft in the Formosa area, Eisenhower remarked on the small number of planes — four or five hundred, recalling the days in Europe when he could order 5,000 planes into the air in a single area. The difference, Mr. Dulles continued, is in the power of the weapons. A small atomic bomb can knock an airfield out for a considerable period of time, whereas peppering it with a lot of conventional bombs merely makes potholes which can be repaired overnight.

American defence forces and policy, Mr. Dulles observed, have been shaped on the predicated use of small atomic weapons. If the Americans had to prepare also to fight only with conventional weapons, this would involve having, in addition to atomic facilities, something like a hundred times as many aircraft, at prohibitive cost. The U.S. would in any case have to have forces capable of atomic warfare to use if the other side used such weapons, and to duplicate this with forces which could operate with conventional weapons would involve such financial and economic strains that the U.S. would have to introduce all-out economic and political controls for an indefinite period, and thus sacrifice many of the free values for which they stood. The decision therefore to rely on atomic weapons was more than merely a financial one.

Defence Priorities

Mr. Dulles went on to say that if war came, he expected that it would start by Communist air attacks on North America: either on the industrial centres, or the airfields from which retaliation could come, or more probably both. Sir Winston Churchill found it hard, he said, to recognize that the United Kingdom would not be the primary target, but this was nevertheless in Dulles' view unquestionably the case. The U.K. might even be bypassed. This meant that the primary field for America's defence resources would be North America. Maintenance of some forces in Europe would continue to be necessary, but chiefly for psychological and political reasons.

Trade: Oil

Toward the end of the meeting I brought up the subject of exports of oil from Western Canada to the United States, and stressed the great concern which we felt about the action contemplated by the Americans to curb this trade.<sup>4</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

<sup>3</sup> Pour la déclaration initiale de Dulles sur ce sujet, et sa conférence de presse suivante le 15 mars, voir United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXII, No. 821, March 21, 1955, pp. 459-460 et No. 822, March 28, 1955, pp. 526-527. Pour les remarques du président Eisenhower à une conférence de presse le 16 mars voir United States, Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower 1955, Washington D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1959, p. 332. Voir aussi le document 733.

For Dulles' initial statement on this matter, and his subsequent press conference on March 15, see United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXII, No. 821, March 21, 1955, pp. 459-460 and No. 822, March 28, 1955, pp. 526-527. For President Eisenhower's comments at a press conference on March 16, see United States, Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower 1955, Washington D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1959, p. 332. See also Document 733.

<sup>4</sup> Voir/See Document 378.

301.

L.B.P./Vol. 32

Les conclusions du CabinetCabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], March 18, 1955

Full record of that portion of a meeting of the Cabinet held in the Privy Council Chamber on Friday, March 18th, 1955, at which the Secretary of State of the United States was present.

1. The Prime Minister welcomed Mr. Dulles to the meeting and referred to the genuine common interest Canada and the United States had in most international problems. Any remarks which Mr. Dulles might care to make on the grave situation facing the world, particularly in the far east, would be listened to with interest.

2. Mr. Dulles said he was honoured to meet the Cabinet and give Canadian ministers some of the thoughts in the minds of those charged with the administration of U.S. foreign policy. The relationship between Canada and the U.S. was such a close and special one that it was important for those in public life to keep in close touch with each other. Members of the U.S. government were most alive to the importance of explaining their views and possible courses of action to their friends and allies. Before making decisions they took into account the opinions of their associates, and particularly those in Canada, on the various matters before them. The free world was held together by common ideals and common standards and its unity depended on respect for those ideals and for the wishes of others, in contrast to the enforced "monolithic" character of the communist world.

At the moment, Asia was the area which gave him and the members of the U.S. administration the most concern. The situation created by the attitude of the Chinese Communists could only be described as grave. He had always felt, in his dealings with the Russians, that they were ruthless and coldly calculating and, consequently, were not likely to push their actions to the point which might bring war. They reasoned well. He did not feel the same way about the Chinese Communists. He thought this was partly due to temperament and to the fact that they were riding the crest of their first revolutionary wave, during which they had already secured what they regarded as victories over the west. They interpreted the results in Korea as a victory because they measured the change from the time they intervened. Then there was the victory over the French in Indo-China, climaxed at Dien Bien Phu. Now, with the withdrawal of the Nationalists from some of the coastal islands they were pushing towards Formosa. Both their propaganda and what information it was possible to secure from other countries indicated strongly that peaceful overtures would only be met with contemptuous rebuffs. The U.K. had endeavoured to ascertain if the Chinese Communists would stop short of an attack on Formosa if the remaining coastal islands were evacuated by the Chinese Nationalists. The suggestion had been rejected out of hand. Krishna Menon, who seemed to have the ear of the Chinese Communist administration, said there was no solution to the problem except the exile of Chiang Kai-shek and the handing of Formosa over to authorities on the mainland. Mr. Dulles felt the Chinese Communists wanted control over the whole arc of the western Pacific outer defences, from the Aleutians through Japan, the Philippines, etc. to Indonesia and perhaps even to Australia and New Zealand. This was perhaps understandable. The régime had been most successful thus far and had much momentum behind it. He doubted if the Chinese Communists would renounce any of their ambitions until they were forced to give them up. He was sure they resented the close proximity of what they regarded as an unfriendly power, namely the U.S.

All of this amounted to a highly explosive situation. Would war be made less likely or more likely by further retreats on the part of the U.S. or the Chinese Nationalists? The matter must be considered not only in relation to the military situation but also in relation to the morale of those on Formosa and in Japan. The latter was the key country in the area. If it became communist and its industrial power was allied to the manpower and raw material of the continent, there would be a formidable combination that would constitute a vast shift in the balance of power in Asia. This would be comparable to combining Germany with the U.S.S.R. In such a case, western defences of North America would be moved back from the Pacific islands off Asia to the shores of North America itself.

The threat in all this was great and the stakes were great. The U.S. government was doing its best to preserve the stakes with a minimum of general war risk. The situation was just as vital for Canada, though the U.S. did have greater commitments by far in the area than her neighbour. He had returned from this last trip to Asia with a sense of foreboding. Other nations in Asia were fearful and he sensed that the situation would collapse unless there was resolute support from the west, and particularly from the U.S., for the non-communist world. There seemed to be a general feeling in the countries he visited that the Chinese Communist régime represented the future.

The Japanese were watching the situation carefully and saying little. The new government there undoubtedly would feel its way towards a closer relationship with the Chinese government on the mainland. It would try to find out who would likely be the dominant power in the area in the future and if it concluded that this would not be the west, Japan would quite quickly accommodate itself to the new situation. In this connection, it had been difficult to convince the Japanese that they had a bright future, economically, in association with the west. The measure to extend the Trade Agreements Act in the U.S. was now before the Congress and the principle obstacles to its passage would be the trade negotiations currently under way with Japan. If the U.S. did not take a sufficient quantity of Japanese goods to enable the Japanese to live, they would find opportunities for export elsewhere and much of their goods would inevitably go to the communists. The latter's standing offer of ample supplies of raw materials was attractive to the Japanese.

In summary, the situation was extremely dangerous both militarily and economically. He was confident, however, that western efforts to secure a lasting peace and stability in the area would be successful, but nothing could be taken for granted and serious efforts were needed for the purpose.

3. The Prime Minister said he thought Canada appreciated the seriousness of the situation and he was sure Canadians appreciated the sincerity of the U.S. in their quest for security. He thought that Canadians would understand the enthusiasm of the communists in China and their desire to become the dominating influence in Asia. Canadians, however, were worried over possible chain reactions that might begin with specific incidents. The situation would be dark indeed if the Russians concluded that it would be in their interest to join forces openly with the Chinese Communists and blatantly undertake the occupation of areas now held by the Chinese Nationalists.

4. Mr. Dulles said it was quite possible that the Russians were encouraging the Chinese to engage the U.S. in Asia so that great possibilities would be opened up to the communists in Europe. He was sure the Canadian government and people appreciated that the U.S. were not approaching these matters with any desire to accelerate conflict. They had been engaged in a war with the Chinese Communists in Korea which they could have enlarged without too much difficulty. There was, in fact, a large area of responsible opinion in the U.S. that thought this should have been done. The most difficult negotiation he had ever gone through was that with the Korean government in trying to settle the Korean war and its consequences. The cost to the U.S., apart from the cost of the war itself, had been over a billion dollars, and it had had to undertake very serious commitments.

The U.S. as the principal western power, faced today the most difficult problem any nation can face, — that is for the government to decide precisely when concessions failed to secure the cause of peace. In the 'thirties', many people thought that, if the western European democracies had drawn a firm line sooner, war might have been prevented. If one conceded too often, the potential enemy might come to expect more concessions when the vital point was reached. The U.S. administration felt they were close to the point when such a line might have to be drawn in respect of the Chinese Communists. The final decision, of course, would be up to the President. It would not be taken lightly or before every other alternative course had been examined in the light of the most complete information available. There was no desire in the U.S. to precipitate any fighting. The views and judgments of others would also be considered carefully. It might be that the Chinese were not so bellicose as appearance led one to believe. It was possible that they were carrying on a war of nerves, but one could not be sure. The statement they were said to have made to the Finnish ambassador about possibly losing 100 million lives sounded like a war of nerves, and was really somewhat encouraging.

In response to a question, he said that, if Quemoy and the Matsus were to be properly defended, it would be necessary to bombard certain Chinese Communist positions on the mainland.

5. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said there were many people who felt that the line upon which the U.S. and friends would stand should not include these two coastal islands. Many people felt their occupation by the Chinese Communists would just be a cleaning up process incidental to a civil war, and that this could not be regarded as aggressive intervention. The liquidation of the situation by withdrawal of the Chinese Nationalists from these islands might even be a strengthening of the position of those opposed to the Chinese Communists as the point of conflict would be removed to Formosa itself, where the strategic situation was different and the political position more defensible. A great part of Asian opinion would not agree that attacks by the communists on the coastal islands was an evidence of aggression. Formosa, however, was a different matter.

6. Mr. Dulles agreed that a case could be made for the proposition that the occupation of Quemoy and the Matsus by the Communists was only cleaning up the remaining details of the revolution. But that was not the case made by China. Efforts had been put forward to find out if this view were true, and the Communists had said quite firmly they were aiming at the liquidation of Chiang Kai-shek in Formosa. The U.S. government had made clear they would not endeavour to hold Quemoy and the Matsus if there were any assurance from the Chinese that they would not go on to attack Formosa. The U.S. had succeeded in getting an agreement with Chiang Kai-shek not to conduct offensive operations against the mainland from those islands. From a military standpoint, it would not be too serious if these islands were abandoned except from the point of view of the morale of the forces on Formosa, in which aspect it would be serious. The Nationalists had absorbed about as much bad news as they could in recent months. If they were forced now to abandon Quemoy and the Matsus, the effects on morale would, he judged, be very serious. The members of the Chinese army from the mainland, on Formosa, were only interested in getting back to the mainland. The U.S. had now given up supporting them in that objective. The U.S. had confined its treaty to Formosa and the Pescadores. They had also endeavoured to arrange a cease fire in the United Nations. They could not do much more without leading to the danger of grave defections by nationalist forces if an attack should come. He recognized that this was the sort of thing on which it was hard to reach a judgment, but the U.S. government felt that further time was required before administering any further shock to the Chinese Nationalists. One of the last things the U.S. wanted was to put several hundred thousand soldiers in Formosa. This would be a clear indication of the bankruptcy of their alliance with the Chinese Nationalists. One encouraging feature was the fact that Formosans were being brought into the army there and, as this went on, the situation would be gradually improved.

7. The Prime Minister thanked Mr. Dulles for his statement on the situation in the far east and assured him that the Canadian government were confident that the President of the U.S. and the Secretary of State were working for peace in the manner which they thought best.

R.B. BRYCE

302.

DEA/11049-40

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

[Ottawa], March 19, 1955

SECOND CONVERSATION WITH MR. DULLES

Mr. Dulles called on me again yesterday (Friday) afternoon, again accompanied by the Ambassador and Mr. MacArthur. Messrs. Léger, Heeney and Arnold Smith were with me.

Formosa and the U.N.

I asked Mr. Dulles what his views were about any further United Nations action on the Formosa situation in present circumstances. He referred to his own inclination to go ahead with the resolution which had been worked out some time ago by the U.S., U.K. and New Zealand.<sup>5</sup> He thought that Sir Leslie Monroe of New Zealand was inclined to agree, but the U.K. Government were opposed to this for various reasons. Mr. Dulles referred to the President's public commitment to take action in the United Nations about Formosa: it was doubtful whether this obligation could be ignored.

Mr. Dulles also said, in this connection, that the matter of the American airmen was by no means forgotten.<sup>6</sup> It might be necessary soon to admit that the U.N. could do nothing on this: which would raise the question of other methods. Mr. Dulles added however that Hammarskjold had obtained letters from the next-of-kin addressed to Chou En-Lai, which he hoped might do some good. He said that the Americans had also been persuaded to turn back to the Communists a special group detailed in Korea, in the hope that this would lead to some reciprocal action, but there had been no response.

Mr. Dulles asked what I myself thought about the desirability of further United Nations action on Formosa. I said that we were not a member of the Security Council at present — it was rather agreeable not to have responsibility just now in that matter. However, while we could appreciate the pressures on the U.S. Government, and the disadvantages of doing nothing, it seemed to us that the disadvantages of tabling a resolution in the Security Council would be greater. The resolution would almost certainly be vetoed, and there would then be pressure for some further action, though no satisfactory further action seemed possible under present circumstances. I suggested that U.N. action that failed to accomplish anything was even less satisfactory than no U.N. action at all.

<sup>5</sup> Voir/See Document 717n84.

<sup>6</sup> Voir/See Document 719n86.

Mr. Dulles said that he certainly did not contemplate asking the General Assembly to take any action, e.g. under the Uniting for Peace resolution. If the Assembly dealt with the matter, he said, those who knew least about the situation would be sure to put forward the most ideas.

There was some discussion about the evacuation of the Tachen Islands. I referred to the impression made in India and Burma by Communist propaganda assertions that the civilian populations on these islands had been kidnapped, and I asked whether any of the inhabitants had in fact been forced to leave. Mr. Dulles said that though there was a natural regret at having to leave their homes, none of the inhabitants had wished to be left behind. He had enquired about this point.

Neutralized Strip in Formosa Straits?

The conversation then turned to the idea of neutralizing a strip of water down the centre of the Formosa Straits, which had occurred to us as a possible step forward.<sup>7</sup> We had passed this idea on in confidence to the State Department. I said that though the idea seemed to us to have some merit, I had decided not to refer to it in my statement in the House of Commons, as it might be better kept in reserve for the present. Moreover, we certainly would not want to be tagged with anything that could be known as a Canadian proposal, which could lead to any suggestion that we had some special responsibility for enforcing it. Canada had all the international commitments we could presently undertake in view of our limited resources.

Mr. Dulles said that the main objection which he saw to putting forward the idea of a neutralized strip of water at this time is that it might transfer the issue from the simple question of using force to endless examination of details, and could therefore make it possible for the Communists to obscure the situation. If however some private indication could be obtained in advance that the Chinese Communists would accept some solution along these lines, then the situation would be different and a detailed proposal could perhaps usefully be worked out and put forward.

Laos

I said that according to our information the Royal Laotian forces were not strong enough for a showdown with the Pathet Lao forces in the northern provinces. Mr. Dulles commented that when he was there his people had the impression that the Royal Laotian forces could win in a show-down, and Mr. Dulles was therefore in favour of bringing the issue to a head militarily. But since then, Mr. Dulles said, his military intelligence people had made a further assessment and now concluded that there had been such a build-up of Pathet Lao forces that a show-down could not be successful. I said that according to our information the Pathet Lao build-up was in trained men rather than equipment, which they already had. Mr. Dulles said that in particular there had been a serious deterioration in morale among the French. The French were responsible for training the Royal Laotian forces, but in fact they had reduced their own forces from 5,000 to something between one and two thousand men, and because these people had had to give up some of their housing, and for other reasons, they were very dispirited; this poor French morale tended to spread to the Laotians. The Laotian troops needed training, and the American problem was to see that this was provided, without weakening French prestige, on which France was so very sensitive. He hoped a way would be found to do this, by arranging that the French military mission would be responsible for training, under the King's instructions: while the King would have an American adviser, who would advise him personally on training methods. These the King could pass to the French mission. Mr. Dulles hoped that something along these lines could be worked out and accepted.

<sup>7</sup> Voir/See Document 712.

Mr. Dulles said that the Americans had arranged to send seven helicopters to Laos, and this should make the International Supervisory Commission's task of supervising the situation in the northern provinces much less difficult. I said that our people would be gratified at this.

Mr. Dulles stressed the importance which he attaches to having the commission vote clearly to uphold the principle of the Royal Laotian Government's authority over the northern provinces. I said that our Commissioner was hoping to do this, but that the Indian Chairman's desire to avoid a split vote and to prevent controversial questions coming to a head, was quite a problem. We had taken various steps, including discussions in New Delhi, and hoped that the delays would be minimized in future. I also referred to the problems created by delaying tactics employed by Polish members of the Military Teams. I emphasized too that the Commission's task was naturally made more complicated when conditions in the south were such that the Polish Commissioner readily found conditions which he could claim needed investigation.

Canadian Participation

I told Mr. Dulles that if there were any honourable way out of the very complicated and difficult responsibilities which we had on the Commissions in Indo-China, we would be glad to get out. Mr. Dulles expressed the heartfelt desire that we would do no such thing, and emphasized the importance which he attaches to our presence on the Commissions.

Elections in Vietnam

The conversation turned to the subject of elections in Vietnam. I said that according to my information there had been a significant change in the situation. Some months ago, if there had been genuinely free elections in Northern and Southern Vietnam, our estimates were that the Communists would win. But the situation in the north had begun to deteriorate, with the flush of victory wearing off, and popular resentment at ruthless oppression beginning to take its place. At the same time, the situation in Southern Vietnam had begun gradually to improve. It now seemed quite possible, therefore, that if genuinely free elections could be held, the democratic candidates would win against the Communists.

Mr. Dulles said that his information strongly confirmed this impression. He recalled that he had stated in a public speech on his return from the Far East that the Communists would be defeated in any genuinely free elections.

Mr. Dulles said that he had told Diem, who previously had been opposed to the idea of holding elections, that as a matter of principle he must be prepared to hold free elections if the Communists would agree. However the chance of Communist agreement was, Mr. Dulles added, slight or non-existent. Something would of course depend on just what "elections" meant. If there were a plebiscite on choosing between Ho Chi Minh and Bao D'ai, as such, most people would choose Ho. Bao D'ai was discredited, to say the least. But if the vote was to elect representatives for a National Assembly, the result could be very different.

Before elections could be held, Mr. Dulles went on, agreement would have to be reached on a wide variety of very complicated questions. For example, what would the vote be for? Who could vote, men and women, or just men? What would they be electing — a National Assembly? How would constituencies be demarcated and organized? There was no kind of groundwork or tradition. If there were to be free elections, there would have to be thousands of inspectors. Mr. Dulles referred to the peripatetic system of taking votes in India, where elections are spread over a considerable period of time. But when the problem was the threat of reprisals if the vote went "the wrong way" in a particular district now under Communist control, such a system of timing would obviously not be satisfactory.

We agreed that an effort must be made by those concerned to reach agreement on free elections: but we also agreed that we didn't know how such an agreement could be obtained.

I told Mr. Dulles that Canada had, thus far, never been asked to take any responsibility for the elections. The invitation from the Geneva powers referred only to the Supervisory Commissions, though the terms of the agreement, which we had noted but to which we were not a party, did of course also refer to the supervision of elections.

I asked Mr. Dulles what he expected to happen if in fact no agreement were reached on elections. He said his guess was that indefinite de facto partition, as in Korea and Germany, would prove to be the solution. This might however make the life of the Commission an uncomfortably extended one.

Korea

I told Mr. Dulles that while we had been opposed to hasty action by the democratic side as regards the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission, we had great sympathy with the United States problem here, and had come to recognize that they were entitled to do what they reasonably could to put an end to a situation whose advantages were solely on the other side.

Germany

Mr. Dulles asked whether we would not reconsider our decision that we could not appoint a chairman for the allied negotiating team to draw up an agreement with the Germans on the status of forces.<sup>8</sup> I asked him why he attached importance to this, pointing out that we were short of qualified personnel. Dulles gave three reasons for particularly wanting a Canadian:

- (1) the Canadians, he thought, had uniquely good relations with the Germans;
- (2) the Canadian troops had the same kind of problems as the United States forces, and could therefore understand their problems;
- (3) a Canadian would be likely to approach the very difficult and complicated issues in a pragmatic spirit, what he called a "common law" approach.

If the chairman were a national of The Netherlands, Belgium or a Scandinavian country, none of these advantages would apply.

I said that we would re-examine the situation in the light of Mr. Dulles' remarks.

United Nations Anniversary Meeting in San Francisco

Mr. Dulles said that he wanted to look into the possibility of playing down, or calling off, the San Francisco meeting of the Assembly proposed for this summer to commemorate the tenth anniversary of signing the Charter. If the meeting were held, indications were that it would be a fizzle, and serve to spread disillusion rather than to enhance the U.N.'s prestige.

<sup>8</sup> Voir/See Document 190.

Continental Defence

At the end of the meeting, the subject of continental defence came up again, and reference was made to the recent United States request for four additional stations in connection with the early warning line, each to have air strips and a couple of hundred American personnel.<sup>9</sup> I mentioned the political problems and unease inevitably caused in any country by the stationing of foreign troops on its territory. Hitherto, these had been relatively slight in Canada, partly because the installations were mainly in northern and relatively uninhabited areas. Newfoundland was an exception to this. Undoubtedly the American forces had behaved extremely well, and were respected and liked there. Mr. Dulles made no request for further facilities, or the stationing of further forces, in Canada. It was of course recognized that the joint Canadian-United States Military Study Group might well in due course be making further recommendations for military requirements, in the common interest. If and when such military recommendations were made, they would have to be considered by both Governments on their merits. I said that the Canadian Government would I thought wish to meet any future requirements as far as possible by Canadian forces. This would of course have its effect on our ability to maintain forces in Europe at the present levels.

L.B. PEARSON

2<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 2
QUESTIONS DE DÉFENSE DEFENCE ISSUES

SECTION A
CONSULTATIONS STRATÉGIQUES STRATEGIC CONSULTATIONS

303.

DEA/50219-AE-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, November 30, 1955

MEETING OF CONSULTATION — DECEMBER 5, 1955

As you know, a meeting of consultation is to be held in Washington next Monday, December 5. Hoover, Radford, Grey (Assistant Secretary of Defence for International Security Affairs), Robertson, Elbrick and Miner will be taking part on the United States side. Bryce, Foulkes and I, with Heeney, will be the Canadian participants.

<sup>9</sup> Voir/See Document 338.

2. The Americans have agreed to our suggestion that the main topics for discussion should be (a) continental defence, (b) Soviet intentions and the effect of the Geneva conferences on Western defence programmes, and (c) the situation in the Far East. We may also refer to the disarmament problem, principally in order to elicit, if we can, some information about the conclusions of the task forces set up under Mr. Stassen.

3. On topics (b) and (c) we shall, of course, try to get some further indication of United States thinking and intentions and I would propose that we should comment along lines which you have already approved. It is topic (a), however, which I expect to occupy most of our attention, and I should like to outline briefly, for your approval, the approach which we propose to take on this subject.

4. We had thought that we should begin by emphasizing our desire to discuss the general trends in North American defence and to take a long-term view. We would then focus attention on three particular aspects of the problem.

5. First, we would raise the question of anticipated developments and programmes for the North American early warning system during the next five years in the light of the probable budgetary situation. We would seek to get their views on the magnitude and nature of continental defence, and would probably hope to get some light on whether any budgetary reductions would affect the United States contribution to it.

6. Second, we would refer to developments in the weapons system in the next five years. This follows directly from our initiative at the last meeting of consultation in September 1954.<sup>10</sup> You may remember that at that meeting General Foulkes suggested that the stage was rapidly being reached where the development of a suitable weapons system for the defence of North America must be a joint operation in almost every respect. He proposed a series of joint studies with a view to finding a joint approach to the implementation of a revised weapons system. Radford later assured Foulkes that as soon as the legal difficulties had been overcome (by the conclusion of an Agreement for Co-operation in the Field of Atomic Defence)<sup>11</sup> such studies could be included in the regular joint machinery for continental defence planning, or could be carried out as a separate operation. I understand that General Foulkes will press at this meeting for an understanding that there will be no restrictions of any kind on the exchange of this sort of information between the forces of the two countries.

7. Third, we intend to discuss the problem of alerts procedures in relation to North American defence arrangements. The general problem, of course, is how to reconcile the necessities of military planning with the ultimate responsibility of governments for decision; specifically, it is how to ensure that the Canadian Government has the information it would need to arrive at independent conclusions in an emergency regarding the operation of the continental air defence system and the deployment into or over Canada of the Strategic Air Command. The meetings of consultation themselves were instituted in 1951 in order to discuss developments in the international situation which might give rise to the necessity for the use of atomic weapons.<sup>12</sup> Though we should certainly continue to make use of this good informal channel whenever occasion demands, the meetings of consultation were not designed and would not be suitable to deal with the specific and urgent problems which would arise in an emergency. The technical arrangements which were worked out in 1952, to ensure prompt consideration by the Canadian Ministers concerned of United States requests for overflight of Canada by certain types of military aircraft, also have a limited usefulness but are clearly inadequate to meet Canadian requirements especially in the light of our growing interdependence on air defence. What is needed is an arrangement for the exchange and evaluation of strategic information of a kind which might lead to a decision to take emergency measures or even to go to war, and a firm understanding on the necessity for consultation at the highest political levels of the two governments on the action to be taken as a result of that information.

<sup>10</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 493.

<sup>11</sup> Voir/See Document 454.

<sup>12</sup> Voir/See Volume 17, Document 699.

8. We believe that the time is propitious for raising this matter in Washington. The United States Government has just agreed in principle, after six months consideration, to the procedure which was proposed by the United Kingdom authorities, after consultation with us, for dealing on a tripartite basis with indications of Soviet aggression in the NATO area.<sup>13</sup> The essence of this procedure was, you will recall, that such information would be exchanged automatically, and that the heads of government or foreign ministers of the three countries would then consult as to their assessments of the situation, and discuss possible action, before proposals for action were put to other friendly governments. It was the intention of the United Kingdom authorities, if the United States Government agreed to the principle, to propose working out an urgent or telescoped procedure between the three parties to deal with surprise attacks, and also to propose elaborating later a parallel procedure for other areas of the world such as the Middle East and Far East. The United States reply, however, says that "no decision should be taken at the present time about the possible adaptation of these procedures to other areas of the world", and proposes that there be further exploration between the State Department and the two Embassies in Washington of "the procedures for political consultation".

9. We would not wish to get involved at the meeting of consultation in a discussion of the tripartite procedure, or to prejudice in any way the talks which we will no doubt wish to have later with both parties on this procedure. It might help to avoid any possible unfortunate impression if we were to explain frankly to the British after the meeting that the question of alerts was discussed in our consultations with U.S. officials in relation solely to our joint continental air defence arrangements.

10. On the other hand, the growing interdependence of Canada and the United States in the air defence field makes it essential, in my view, that we seek to obtain now a firm understanding on the procedures to be adopted in this context, not related (as the tripartite procedure is) to the NATO system of alerts or to any particular set of circumstances. We propose, therefore, if you agree, to put to the Americans for their consideration a formula in the terms set out in the annex to this memorandum.<sup>14</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

<sup>13</sup> Voir/See Document 185.

<sup>14</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I agree L.B. P[earson]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa, November 30, 1955]

ALERT PROCEDURES

The general problem is how to reconcile the necessities of military planning with an ultimate responsibility of governments for decision. From our point of view specifically a formula must be found to ensure that the Canadian Government has the information it would need to arrive at independent conclusions in an emergency regarding the operation of the continental air defence system and the deployment into or over Canada of the Strategic Air Command.

2. The technical arrangements now in operation were worked out in 1952; these are related to United States requests for overflight of Canada by certain types of military aircraft. In this field they are useful but are clearly inadequate to meet Canadian requirements especially in the light of our growing interdependence on air defence.

3. With the setting up of our radar lines in northern Canada, we will eventually obtain most valuable tactical information; what is needed now is an arrangement for the exchange and evaluation of strategic information, information of a kind which might lead to a decision to take emergency measures.

4. We welcome the acceptance by the United States of the procedures for tripartite discussions on indications of Soviet aggression in the NATO area. We are not concerned, however, with this aspect of the problem of alerts but solely on the more restricted aspect of the question related to the problem of alerts on continental defence.

5. We believe that the growing interdependence of Canada and the United States in the air defence field makes it essential in the interest of both countries that we obtain a firm understanding on the procedures to be adopted in this context, it being understood that they are in no way related to the NATO system of alerts or to no particular set of circumstances.

6. Attached is a formula which might be considered in this respect.

[T]o be left as a working paper.<sup>15</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

AnnexeAnnex

TOP SECRET

[November 30, 1955]

[FORMULA]<sup>16</sup>

1. The United States and Canadian Governments agree that they will invariably and immediately inform each other when they receive information of a kind which, if <sup>15</sup> Léger a ajouté cette phrase à la main./Léger added this sentence by hand.

<sup>16</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

We are setting up tactical information; this deals with strategic [information] [Jules Léger] examined, might cause either to conclude that there was a possibility of hostilities occurring.

2. The criterion for passing information of this kind between the two Governments might be defined as the receipt of information which could call for rapid action on the part of the intelligence authorities in Canada or the United States,<sup>17</sup> this could, although not necessarily, coincide with the calling of a "crash" meeting of the United States Watch Committee or Intelligence Advisory Committee, or the Canadian Joint Intelligence Committee.

3. Under such a criterion, the Governments agree that, for the duration of the incident calling for such action, the United States and Canadian authorities, particularly the intelligence authorities, will automatically pass to one another all the relevant information, including the background necessary to understand the problem and their respective assessments of the problem.

4. Where consultation at a higher level, including Ministers, also became necessary, such an arrangement should ensure that Ministers would be fully in possession of the necessary facts upon which to base their consultations.

304.

DEA/50219-AE-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM DL-2039

Ottawa, December 2, 1955

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our letter number DL-1647 of December 1, 1955.†

MEETING OF CONSULTATION, DECEMBER 5

Following for the Ambassador from Macdonnell: The Minister has approved the general line proposed in the memorandum of November 30 which is included in the binder attached to our letter under reference. He thought however that the word "possibility" in paragraph one of the formula annexed to the memorandum was perhaps too vague to indicate the nature of our requirements. Bryce and Léger, who had a preliminary discussion of the whole problem yesterday afternoon, were inclined to feel that the word "likelihood" might be more appropriate in this context. They would like to discuss with you and Foulkes before the meeting the best way to raise the question of alerts, and particularly to have your views on the advisability of tabling the formula at the meeting. You might have a few extra copies of it made with the suggested change.

<sup>17</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

Intelligence Agencies [providing?] they will do it [Jules Léger] 305.

DEA/50219-AE-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM DL-2081

Ottawa, December 10, 1955

TOP SECRET

Reference: Your telegram No. 2016 of December 9, 1955.†

MEETING OF CONSULTATION

Following from the Under-Secretary, Begins: The amendment to the formula which I made in the text as you have it occurs at the end of paragraph 1, which should conclude with the words "in which North America would likely be attacked", following the words "hostilities occurring".

2. In the memorandum on alerts procedures, covering the formula, I changed the first sentence of paragraph 4 to read "we welcome recent developments for tripartite discussions on indications of Soviet aggressions in the NATO area."

3. Having in mind the desirability of making progress in tripartite discussions, I wonder what you think about explaining frankly to Makins that the question of alerts was discussed in our latest series of consultations with United States officials (on which I believe that we have kept them informed in the past) but stressing that the alerts question was raised solely in relation to our joint continental air defence arrangement. ends.

306.

DEA/50219-AE-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 2044

Washington, December 15, 1955

TOP SECRET

Reference: Your telegram No. DL-2081 of Dec. 10/55.

MEETING OF CONSULTATION: ALERTS

We gave yesterday to Miner in the State Department the formula as amended. We found that Miner (who was the recording Secretary at the consultation meeting) regarded this formula as clear and definite and therefore as helpful. He also understood that the consultation meeting had agreed that each side should appoint a civil and military representative to discuss bilateral alerts on the basis of the Canadian formula.

2. We suggested that a meeting between these four people might usefully take place in January in Washington. When Miner asked for any suggestions about the type of persons, we suggested that they should not be such as would make the conversation too technical, but should be adequately informed on intelligence structures and channels of exchange.

3. For the Canadian representatives, we would be inclined to suggest that the Chairman of the JIC and a representative of General Foulkes might come for the meeting rather than that the Chancery and the Joint Staff should supply representatives. The reason for this suggestion is that such officials from Ottawa would be fully aware not only of the Canadian requirements, but of the exact results which were desired.

4. We have now informed the British Embassy that this discussion on bilateral alerts was held at a meeting primarily concerned with continental defence. We made it clear that our concern for bilateral procedures did not in any way lessen our interests in the tripartite suggestion.

5. It seems to us that the procedure agreed for the bilateral problem might usefully be applied, and probably later, to the tripartite scheme. We would also suggest that it be left to the British Embassy here to consult with the Foreign Office, although you may wish to keep Canada House informed.

6. When we talked to the State Department earlier about their aide mémoire of November, it was indicated that the lack of clarity was in part due to the nature of the United Kingdom paper to which it was an answer. We have, therefore, explained this to the British Embassy and suggested that it would be helpful if they could get their proposal more complete by covering points which you have covered in your formula for the bilateral plan. This, of course, need not necessarily result in a further formal document, but should be available when tripartite discussions are planned.

7. From the various conversations we have had here we would suggest that a formal reply to the United States aide mémoire should not be made at this time, but that we should look forward to discussions between officials modelled on the bilateral discussions and with more complete proposals prepared by the United Kingdom (and acceptable to ourselves).

A.D.P. HEENEY

307.

DEA/50219-AE-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 2047

Washington, December 21, 1955

TOP SECRET

MEETING OF CONSULTATION OF DECEMBER 5

The meeting of consultation with the United States authorities took place on December 5. I attach for your information four copies of our record of the meeting. The record follows the customary pattern in that it is as close to a verbatim account of what was said on each side as it was possible to make. It is not an agreed record with the United States side. The records which each side kept have, however, been compared in draft and there are now no significant differences in them. I should be grateful if you would let me know of any revisions which may be considered necessary in Ottawa.

2. While the preparatory arrangements were being made we sensed a lack of any real enthusiasm among United States officials for the meeting of consultation. There was, however, a definite and evident change of heart in the two or three days immediately preceding the meeting. Certainly, a first-class team was fielded on the United States side. We have reason to believe as well that the discussion at the meeting served to sustain the interest of senior United States officials and to confirm them in the belief that periodic consultations of this sort between our two countries were important.

3. We believe that the meeting served a useful purpose even though some of the same deficiencies as characterized earlier meetings of consultation were apparent. The most obvious of these was the inclination of the participants on the United States side to read from prepared briefs. The discussion of the Far Eastern situation, and particularly of policy towards China, however, represented a welcome break in the pattern. We would hope that the kind of exchange which took place on this subject could come to be representative of the kind of exchange which future meetings of consultation might provide. There was relatively little discussion of Soviet intentions and capabilities, particularly in the political field. There were probably two reasons for this — the broad measure of agreement between us and the time involved in discussion of the other main items on the agenda.

4. This most recent meeting again confirmed us in the belief that what we get out of these meetings of consultation bears direct relationship to the strength of views we bring to the meeting. It is not essential that the Canadian participants attempt to supply new information on specific topics of international concern. It is important, however, that the Canadian side have a definite and logically argued view on a specific subject if we hope to get a significant response from the United States side. The presentation of our views at this meeting on the matter of the recognition of China and the situation in the offshore islands is a good example of what we have in mind. As we have suggested in separate correspondence since the meeting (our telegrams 2051 and 2052 of Dec. 16),<sup>18</sup> there is much to be said for developing further with the State Department the views on China which were briefly exchanged at the meeting.

5. Specifically, this most recent meeting of consultation provided us with an opportunity—(a) to reveal the concern of the Canadian Government at the cost in terms of money and manpower of our joint programme for the air defence of the continent and to indicate our need for United States understanding and assistance in specific aspects of our joint programme; (b) to put to the United States side our views on the necessity of further examination of a bilateral system of alerts procedures; and (c) once again to point up the differing views of the Canadian Government on certain aspects of the China problem. Discussion of these topics was not of course exhausted at the meeting but we think a sound groundwork was laid for further discussion of the topics in the months ahead. We should mention too that the meeting led to separate conversations between the Under-Secretary and interested State Department officers on Indochina and on Europe-after-Geneva. These talks might, of course, have been arranged whether there had been a meeting of consultation or not, but we are inclined to believe that they were the more useful because they followed up general points raised at the meeting of consultation.

6. As you know, I have at times been somewhat dubious of the value of continuing these periodic meetings of consultation. With this last meeting in mind, however, I would recommend that we do continue the practice. The Under-Secretary invited his United States colleagues to hold the next meeting in Canada and we think there is much to be said for this. A meeting in Canada, we hope, might serve to free the United States participants from their overly-intimate attachment to briefing papers, psychologically at least, and this would be a good thing. Our purpose, it seems to me, should continue to be that of making the meetings into an informal and free exchange of views among senior officers of both governments rather than simply a meeting where formal briefs are read or tabled. The only danger we foresee in making arrangements for a meeting outside the United States lies in the possibility that the pressure upon senior officials here might lead to the fielding of a United States second team. Finally, I think one procedural suggestion might be considered before another meeting of consultation is planned, and that is, that the discussion period should perhaps be divided somewhat more definitely than has been the case. Continental defence will continue to be a subject of prime importance for discussion at these meetings. There might be something to be said, therefore, for planning the meeting so that continental defence could be discussed prior to, or following, a lunch period. Other topics in the field of international political problems could then be taken up somewhat separately from this concrete bilateral problem.

<sup>18</sup> Voir les documents 752-753.
See Documents 752-753.

A.D.P. HEENEY

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Compte rendu de la réunion de consultation entre les représentants des Gouvernements du Canada et des États-Unis

Record of Meeting of Consultation between Representatives of Canadian and United States Governments

TOP SECRET

December 5, 1955

The meeting which was held in the State Department under the chairmanship of Mr. Herbert Hoover, Jr., the Under-Secretary of State, was attended by:

Admiral Arthur W. Radford,
Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff
Mr. R. Douglas Stuart,
United States Ambassador to Canada
Mr. Walter S. Robertson,
Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs
Mr. Livingstone T. Merchant,
Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs
Mr. Gordon Grey,
Assistant Secretary of Defence for International Security Affairs
Mr. C. Burke Elbrick,
Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs
Mr. Charles Sullivan,
Chief, Policy Division, Office of Foreign Military Affairs, Department of Defence
Mr. Robert G. Miner,
Officer in Charge of Commonwealth Affairs for the United States Government, and by

Mr. J. Léger,
Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
Mr. A.D.P. Heeney,
Canadian Ambassador to the United States
Mr. R.B. Bryce,
Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary of the Cabinet
General Charles Foulkes,
Chairman of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff
Mr. G.P. de T. Glazebrook, Minister, Canadian Embassy, Washington

Rear Admiral H.G. DeWolf,
Chairman of the Canadian Joint Staff, Washington
Mr. J.J. McCardle,
Canadian Embassy, Washington

for the Canadian Government.

2. The agenda of the meeting consisted of three items:

- (a) Continental Defence
- (b) Soviet Intentions
- (c) The Situation in the Far East.

3. Mr. Hoover welcomed the Canadian visitors. Mr. Léger expressed his appreciation at having the opportunity to discuss matters of mutual concern with his United States colleagues. Mr. Hoover suggested that he might lead off with a few general remarks. Mr. Léger agreed.

Introduction

4. Mr. Hoover thought that the timing of this meeting of consultation was most propitious in that the meeting followed upon the Geneva meeting of the Foreign Ministers and came just before the NATO ministerial meeting. Before the meeting got to the agenda, he would like to speak briefly of the Geneva meeting and the forthcoming NATO ministerial meeting.

5. There had been no specific progress on the individual agenda items at Geneva. No solution had been achieved of the problems of the reunification of Germany. It was made apparent at Geneva that the USSR would not release its hold on East Germany. What bothered the Russians was obviously not concern for Soviet security but the prospect of a relaxation of the Soviet grip on East Germany. The Soviet stand on disarmament was essentially negative. Molotov repeated the arguments set out in the Soviet paper of May 10 and was extremely critical of the proposals for aerial inspection made by President Eisenhower at the Summit Meeting. Consideration of the question of East-West contacts was stymied by the Russians. They rejected the concrete proposals put forward by the West. Their real fear seemed to be the effect which freedom would have on the peoples under their control. They would only consider a narrow field of contacts which would offer advantage to them.

6. It was Mr. Dulles' general view that the Russians had been more unyielding at Geneva than might have been anticipated. They showed no willingness to offer even minor concessions. This unyielding attitude suggested that the "Geneva spirit" was on the whole regarded by the Communists as a relative liability to their cause. The relaxation of tensions implicit in the "Geneva spirit" created difficulties for the USSR in dealing with its satellites. It seemed clear that the Soviet Union had come to the conclusion that any weakening of its hold on East Germany would have a bad effect on its position with respect to the satellites. It was Mr. Dulles' view, however, that in spite of the lack of progress at Geneva, the meeting had been useful. It had provided for a confrontation of views in such a fashion that there could be no misunderstanding of each other's views. By revealing the positions of the parties most clearly it had provided the basis for a more accurate judgment of the future than would have been possible if the meeting had not been held. There was effective tripartite co-operation at the Geneva meeting, probably more effective than at any other such meeting. There had been no agreement to another meeting. In the United States view there would be no purpose in scheduling another meeting unless there was a change in the world situation or in the Soviet attitude. The United States anticipated that there would be another meeting of this sort sometime in the future but at present the United States had no idea as to the timing of such a meeting. The meeting had re-enforced the United States view that the strength of the free world partnership must be maintained. The maintenance of this strength was likely to be the only thing which would bring about a change in the Soviet attitude.

7. Turning then to a brief consideration of the NATO ministerial meeting, Mr. Hoover said that the United States would carry to that meeting its belief that the Soviet purpose of securing world domination remained unchanged. The Russians were pursuing less crude methods than they had employed in the past but their purpose remained the same. Against this background it was apparent that the preservation of NATO was an essential need. It seemed more than ever important that NATO military strength should be maintained. The long-haul concept was a valid concept. It seemed equally clear that NATO should play its part in bringing about an awareness in the free world that current Soviet tactics did not represent a change of Soviet objectives. These tactics should be resisted and the members of NATO should stand together wherever that was possible.

Continental Defence

8. The meeting then turned to consideration of the first item of the agenda, continental defence, and Admiral Radford spoke first. He said the probable development of the early warning system for the continent could be considered under two major headings—(a) warning of attack from the air, and (b) warning of attack from the sea. So far as the first was concerned, the United States envisaged no major changes in the next five years in the early warning systems currently being constructed. There would have to be, however, technical improvements, one of which would be with respect to automatic alarm systems. It was estimated that the land-based system could be brought to 100% efficiency in the next five years. On the other hand, the seaward system could probably only be brought to 80% efficiency and would have even less efficiency in bad weather. It was apparent that other means beyond those already planned were required for the seaward detection of an enemy force.

9. At present the seaward extensions of the Early Warning System in the Pacific were planned to run from Kodiak to Hawaii and in the Atlantic from Newfoundland to the Azores. The United States Joint Chiefs were considering changes in both seaward extensions. In the Pacific it seemed likely that they would recommend the line running from Adak to Midway Island. This would provide for greater protection. It would also allow the use of the Aleutians as a land base for part of the system. This change in plan had not yet been approved by the United States Joint Chiefs and before approval in its final form the change would be discussed with the Canadian authorities. So far as the Atlantic extension was concerned, he was aware that the Canadian Chiefs of Staff were not satisfied with the present plans. There was some difference of opinion as well among the United States military. The USAF had favoured a line running from Greenland to the Azores. The U.S. Navy was not happy with the choice of Greenland. Alternatives to the current plans were being studied. The U.S. Navy preferred a completely different plan which would run the line from Greenland to Iceland to the island chain off the northern United Kingdom. The main objection of the Continental Defence Command was that such a line was open to "spoofing". Admiral Radford said he himself had some preference for the Greenland-Iceland-U.K. system. It did emphasize the political importance of keeping Iceland in the free world camp and recent political developments there troubled him a great deal. In time, consideration would have to be given to the detection of long-range missiles. Admiral Radford said he believed it would be possible to do this with additional equipment.

10. Submarine-launched missiles presented an even more complicated problem and at the moment the best defence against them seemed to be the destruction of the submarine itself.

To achieve this purpose improved airborne, surface, and subsurface detection methods were required. With the advent of nuclear-powered submarines significant technical advances would be required. Anti-submarine operations would continue to be less effective in the higher latitudes because of winter weather and the band of poor SONAR conditions. By 1960 LOFAR would be installed in the ocean areas. There would, however, be serious deficiencies in the system. CODAR might help to remedy some of these deficiencies and it was expected that this technique would be in operational status by 1960.

11. In general terms then, in the next five years completion of the early warning systems which are now being established was the goal. Qualitative improvements in the systems should be the major objective.

12. In the field of research and development of weapons employed in continental defence, the inadequacies of present radar detection systems was of the greatest concern. To overcome low altitude inadequacies, the USAF had programmed 64 low altitude radar gap fillers scheduled to begin operations by June 1956 with 161 additional gap fillers to begin operations by June 1957. So far as high altitude radar problems were concerned, there was a programme for a high-powered FPS-3 radar to begin operations by June 1956 to provide overlap coverage in the system at approximately 60,000 feet by mid-1957. A new radar programme (AN-FPS-7) now in production will become operational in late 1957 and be completed by late 1959 with radar to provide coverage up to 100,000 feet at 160 nautical miles. By 1960 it was estimated that airborne early warning and control aircraft would have a detection range of 150 nautical miles covering the horizon from sea level to 60,000 feet and with a capability of controlling 10 interceptions simultaneously and of integration into the land-based SAGE system.

13. The U.S. Navy had also programmed improved equipment both airborne and shipborne. In addition to the same types of airborne equipment programmed by the USAF, plans existed for the installation of a limited number of ultra-high frequency radars to enhance detection capability in conditions of high sea and stormy weather. Cruisers and larger vessels would also be equipped with search radars having a range of 200 nautical miles against a B-47 target and a range of 50 miles for destroyer escort and smaller vessels. Submarine radar ranges should be 35 to 50 miles. Admiral Radford spoke next of improved aircraft and control equipment. The USAF was planning to integrate the SAGE system as part of Continental Air Defence commencing in 1957 and to be completed in 1960. The schedule provides 70 sets by the end of fiscal year 1956, 80 additional sets by end of fiscal year 1957, and a further 18 sets by the end of fiscal year 1958. The U.S. Navy was improving the intercept capabilities of picket ships by development of the Electronic Display System. The link in the acquisition and control system represented perhaps the most serious deficiency, and accelerated programmes are under way to improve the situation mainly by increasing radar power output and employing larger antennas. The USAF contemplated a change-over to the time-divided link during the period 1958-60.

14. Admiral Radford turned then to consideration of the aircraft programme for the next five years. The following new all-weather interceptor aircraft would be integrated into the Continental Air Defence System to replace current subsonic all-weather interceptors:

(a) The F-102A, a supersonic single place all-weather fighter which would be operational by mid-1956, with a combat ceiling of 53,500 feet and a speed of mach 1.2 and equipped with 6 FALCON missiles and 36 2-inch rockets;

(b) The F-102B, due in late 1958, with an effective combat capability at 60,000 feet, a speed of mach 2, and approximately the same armament as above;

(c) The XF-103, an experimental plane whose first flight would be made in late 1957, with a performance ceiling of 80,000 feet, a speed of mach 3.7, and a combat radius of 375 nautical miles;

(d) The F-100C, a superior fighter-bomber equipped with the FALCON or SIDEWINDER missile which would be used to augment the regular air defence forces and which should be operational by mid-1957;

(e) The F-104A weapons system to provide daylight and limited night defence against enemy fighter and bomber aircraft. It should have a combat ceiling of 60,000 feet, a speed of mach 2, and a radius of action of approximately 815 miles. The first operational squadron was expected early in 1957.

15. There was in the planning stages a long-range interceptor aircraft with a radius of 1,000 nautical miles and a combat ceiling of at least 60,000 feet, which would not be operational before 1960, and a mid-range interceptor with a combat radius of 350 nautical miles, a combat ceiling of 75,000 feet and a speed of mach 2.5. The U.S. Navy was developing a fighter aircraft with a speed of 1130 knots and a combat ceiling of from 35,000 to 55,000 feet.

16. In the field of aircraft armament the following developments were included in the programme:

(a) The FALCON missile (USAF) with a speed of mach 3 and a range of one to five miles; expected to be operational in 1956.

(b) The F-8V3 (USN) equipped with 4 SPARROW missiles and SIDEWINDER missiles, both of which were difficult to jam electronically; the missiles were expected to be effective against targets flying well below 1,000 feet.

17. In the field of surface-to-air missiles, the following were planned for integration into the air defence system:

(a) Nike "B"—with a range of 50 nautical miles, a ceiling of 80,000 feet, and capable of bearing an atomic warhead. It could be ready by 1958 to 1960;

(b) "Hawk"—with a range of 13 nautical miles and capable of engaging 1,000 knot targets at altitudes from 50 feet to 45,000 feet. It was estimated to have a kill rate of 80%;

(c) "Terrier"—with a range of 10 nautical miles and a ceiling of 40,000 feet. It was also useful for low altitude kills since it will be able to engage targets at altitudes down to within 1.5 degrees from the horizon;

(d) BOMARC—a long-range missile now under development. Initially it was to have a range of 125 nautical miles and a ceiling of 60,000 feet, which it was hoped could be extended to 250 nautical miles with a ceiling of 80,000 feet. Its speeds would range between mach 2.65 and mach 3;

(e) TALOS (USAF)—a land-based missile which was regarded as an interim development to that of the BOMARC. It could be equipped with a nuclear warhead and should be available in 1958; it was hoped the missile would eventually have a range of 100 nautical miles and an altitude capability of 70,000 feet.

18. Considerable work was being done in the field of mines and by 1960 there should be a new family of such devices which were capable of being launched from supersonic aircraft as well as from surface vessels and submarines. It was planned as well that by 1960 an improved under-water sound surveillance system would be in operation. Added to these developments would be the "Betty", an anti-submarine atomic depth charge, and "Lulu", another 1200-lb. atomic depth charge. It was expected as well that homing torpedos would be developed to a greater extent.

19. Admiral Radford said that he preferred not to deal with the question of alerts at this time since he had discussed the problem in general terms recently with General Foulkes,<sup>19</sup> and the matter was under consideration by the two Air Staffs.

20. General Foulkes said he had no substantial comment to make on the programme outlined by Admiral Radford. Canadian authorities were somewhat anxious about the sea wings of the Early Warning system. They were not happy at the termination in Newfoundland of the three land-based Early Warning Systems. At present the important bases in Newfoundland had a maximum of four minutes early warning. This gap occurred on the most logical route for bombers from the Murmansk area. The Canadian authorities liked the look of the Greenland-Iceland-U.K. line.

21. Admiral Radford repeated his concern over the situation in Iceland. Political developments there, he thought, might create a real difficulties.

22. General Foulkes expressed the opinion that the early warning system devised to offer warning of air attacks should not be isolated from the system devised to warn of seaward attacks. It seemed to him that there was a possibility of combining the systems devised for sound surveillance, the picket ship system and the air defence warning systems.

23. General Foulkes then outlined current Canadian thinking on continental defence. He said that the progress on both the DEW line and the Mid-Canada line had been mentioned at the last meeting of consultation. There was no need to go over the same ground again. He would simply repeat that both lines were expected to be in operation by 1957. There had been difficulties last winter, particularly in the matter of sea transport. A thorough study of the problem of resupply, particularly of the western section of the DEW line, was required and a group of experts from both countries had it under consideration. Last winter's experience made it clear that as much use as possible should be made of the Mackenzie River system. An early warning operational group had been set up in New York to work out operational plans and procedures which would ensure that the DEW, Mid-Canada, and the PINETREE systems were fully integrated. Some changes were being recommended in the security policies covering the system. It was the Canadian belief that reasonable and wise publicity about the early warning system would add to its value as a deterrent. Amendments were being suggested which would allow for conducted visits of members of the press and it was hoped that the first visit would take place in March or April of next year.

24. Agreement had been reached on the agencies for operating and maintaining the early warning system for the first three years. The civilian organizations which built the lines would be allowed an opportunity to make them work. It was expected that a contract for a civilian organization to operate the Mid-Canada line would be negotiated shortly.

25. There seemed to be no outstanding bilateral problems in relation to the early warning system except the possibility that the enemy might be able to "spoof" these lines and create alarms which might bring the system into disrepute. He had raised with Admiral Radford about a month ago the question of arrangements for assessing and clearing alarms which might be created in the system. It was always possible that flights of geese might trigger parts of the system. It seemed essential that procedures should be worked out so that these alarms could be cleared at a fairly high level to avoid alarming the general public. The danger that more panic than assurance might be created in the public mind had to be avoided.

<sup>19</sup> Voir/See Document 184.

26. The Air Defence Commanders in both Canada and the United States were authorized to call a simple alert. Under existing arrangements the calling of a simple alert in one country would automatically call an alert in the other. In the Canadian view it seemed a bit too risky to allow this decision to be taken in isolation. There should be clear association with other items of intelligence such as "Y" reports on signal activity in the air-fields in Siberia and Murmansk and by consultation. In the Canadian view it seemed that the possibility should be investigated of consultation on at least the Chiefs of Air Staff level before action was taken to declare a simple alert. There was a clear association between tactical information and strategic planning. There was room for joint endeavour in this field and there should be some preparations made to deal with the problem in the not too distant future.

27. Admiral Radford interposed to say that the Chiefs of the two Air Staffs were reviewing the details of the calling of alerts. He believed, therefore, that detailed examination of this question might be put off until the consultations between the Air Chiefs had been completed.

28. General Foulkes went on to say that a reappraisal of the Canadian air defence efforts had just been completed. The reappraisal had been necessary because of the considerably increased costs of developing in Canada a supersonic fighter to come into service some time around 1962. It was found that the development of this fighter would cost approximately $3 million a copy. This, along with other requirements for continuing to modernize the air defence system, had created some alarm within the Canadian Government regarding the future costs of air defence. To continue with the present plans would seem to require a doubling of the air defence budget in the next five years.

29. Some of the major points which emerged from the Canadian reappraisal should be mentioned for they had an impact on the joint plans for the defence of North America. They created, as well, serious problems for the solution of which United States assistance might have to be sought. The basis of the reappraisal was the assumption that by mid-1959 the USSR could by a major effort launch an attack on North America which would be much more damaging than had been considered possible heretofore. With a major effort the USSR could launch approximately 600 long-range bomber aircraft against North America, including 200 jet heavy bombers and about 400 medium bombers, perhaps not all carrying atomic bombs. While little was known of Soviet capability in the field of air-refuelling which would be essential in such an operation, it was considered that this technique was one with which the Russians could soon become familiar. It appeared evident that the deterrent and war-making capacity of the North American continent could not tolerate more than 50 to 100 thermo-nuclear bombs. This meant that more than 500 of the potential Soviet bombers would have to be destroyed en route, in the perimeter regions beyond the built-up areas of North America.

30. These facts had the effect of greatly expanding the area to be defended from the original conception of defending the heavy industrial heartland of Canada and the United States. The vital target area was now a continuous zone extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific and penetrating deep into the southern regions of the United States. Furthermore, long-range capability of the latest Soviet jet bombers was so increased that attacks on the North American continent could come not only from the north but also from the east and west, and perhaps some day from the south. It was obvious that there was now a requirement to achieve a marked increase in the probability of inflicting destruction on an attacking bomber force. One of the most promising ways of achieving this appeared to be the introduction into the air defence system of guided missiles both air-to-air and surface-to-air. The development of the air defence system was affected by two prime considerations:

(a) the immediate need for substantial improvement in the protection afforded vital target areas; and

(b) the need to ensure to the maximum possible extent that any expenditure of resources in the immediate years ahead should continue to serve a useful purpose after the introduction of long-range missile defences.

In other words, any new air bases, especially in Canada, should be established with a view to the possibility of their being converted to ground-to-air missile bases at minimum expense. The air defence of North America required that forces in being at war stations in peacetime as well as in war be at a high standard of training and in continuous readiness. The air defence system must be such that it would convince the Russians that we had the ability to preserve and protect the retaliatory capacity of North America. The task of defending these bases should take priority over the task of protecting centres of population because the bases were essential to the deterrent which we hoped would be the sure way of avoiding catastrophe.

31. The most urgent requirements in Canada stemming from these concepts were:

(a) the extension of the base complex across the country from which defending forces could intercept, identify and destroy enemy bombers or other weapon carriers well in advance of the vital target area and where possible beyond the settled parts of Canada in order to minimize the effects of fall-out;

(b) the extension of contiguous radar cover and the introduction of suitable automatic data handling facilities to allow the forces of this base complex to perform their tasks efficiently;

(c) the improvement of the present all-weather fighter (CF-100) to give it increased altitude; and its re-equipment with an air-to-air missile (SPARROW II) which would give it a capability against Russian bombers until a supersonic fighter can be produced.

32. These conclusions required extension of the Canadian base complex to a total of 15 bases across the country and would require additional squadrons and radar. It had been decided not to rely on auxiliary forces for the front line defence of North America. This decision would involve the introduction of further regular squadrons to the Canadian air defence system. Joint studies now showed that it would be necessary to introduce 26 additional heavy radars into the system, of which 13 would be introduced between now and 1958. This would give us the capability of intercepting beyond the settled part of Canada and would provide high cover from 20,000 to 60,000 feet. However, it would still leave a considerable gap below 20,000 feet in low cover between the mid-Canada line and the PINETREE system. This would involve the introduction of 120 unmanned gap-filler radars behind the mid-Canada line.

33. The likelihood of mass attack on the continent necessitated the abandonment of the manual system of control and the introduction of the semi-automatic guidance devices and computers to provide a semi-automatic ground environment. This ground environment, known as SAGE, was well advanced in the United States and it would appear advisable to adopt SAGE in the areas of Canada contiguous to the United States. It was expected that a combination of SAGE and BADGE, a less sophisticated and cheaper system which could be used in the northern regions would have to be introduced by Canada.

34. Finally, it was the Canadian belief that there should be greater collaboration between Canada and the United States in developing counters to electronic counter-measures, i.e., highly effective radar jammers which might be used by the enemy. This was a highly classified subject. It was a vital matter, however, to Canada as it was to the United States, and a solution to the problem should be worked out together.

35. General Foulkes said that the following requirements would have to be met to give effect to this revised air defence concept:

(a) six additional regular fighter squadrons; it was hoped that three could be created in 1955-56 and three in 1956-57;

(b) an increase of 10 interceptor bases to cover the whole of Northern Canada, to be sighted and planned so as to be capable of handling surface-to-air guided missiles as and when they might be introduced into the system sometime after 1962;

(c) introduction of 26 additional heavy radar units plus more than 120 gap fillers; 13 of these heavy radars should be introduced by 1958 and would give a capability of carrying out initial interception about the Mid-Canada line;

(d) the introduction of a semi-automatic ground environment tied in with the U.S. system of SAGE with a less sophisticated system in the more isolated parts of Canada;

(e) the further improvement of the present all-weather fighter (CF-100) to give greater altitude, and the introduction of an air-to-air guided missile into this aircraft; it appeared that the U.S. Navy SPARROW II missile met Canadian requirements and it was hoped that this missile could be introduced into both the present fighter and the supersonic fighter now under development; Canada could not afford the luxury of several types of air-to-air missiles;

(f) the continued development of the supersonic fighter (CF-105) equipped with air-to-air guided missiles capable of carrying atomic warheads; it was hoped to have the supersonic fighter introduced into the system sometime after 1961;

(g) the introduction into the Canadian air defence system sometime after 1962 of ground-to-air long-range missiles of the BOMARC type;

(h) the much closer integration of the air defence system of Canada with that of the United States and the introduction of a system of command and control which would be politically acceptable to both countries; Canadian military authorities were convinced that the operational control of the whole system should be vested in one commander; consideration was being given on the military level to the working out of a system of operational control which would avoid the use of the term "command"; "command" implied control of logistics, which was not necessary and created a great many political difficulties, particularly in peacetime.

36. The programme was exceeding expensive and almost beyond Canadian capacities in financial, technical and scientific skills. It was the Canadian desire to do as much as possible of this programme without outside assistance but this might mean the curtailment of Canadian defence activities in Europe. The Canadian Government was loath at this particular time to suggest a cut in its commitments in Europe to make way for further developments in North American defence. It was aware in addition that, because of the accident of geography, Canada was perhaps spending more on continental defence than would otherwise be the case. Canadian authorities considered that the first step that should be taken was to ensure that there was no duplication of effort in the field of air defence development so that more funds would be available for actual procurement. This meant that there should be a readiness to share completely development secrets which affected air defence. Besides working out joint operational plans, Canada and the United States should be working out joint integrated weapons systems for air defence. At senior levels it was perhaps accepted that all development information on air defence should be freely shared but this did not always hold true at the working level.

37. General Foulkes said that the specific assistance which was required by Canada was the following:

(a) all possible assistance in the adaptation of the U.S. Navy missile SPARROW for use in the present Canadian all-weather aircraft; (Admiral Radford agreed that this assistance would be provided);

(b) access to all the plans, specifications and manufacturing know-how so that these missiles could be produced in Canada;

(c) at a later stage information and specifications on atomic warheads for this type of weapon;

(d) further help in the introduction of the SAGE system especially in areas contiguous to the United States;

(e) close collaboration in the field of electronic counter-measures;

(f) since Canada would be unable to devote any facilities to ground-to-air guided missiles of the BOMARC type and would have to rely entirely on the United States for the introduction of these guided missiles into the air defence system of Canada some time in the future, information on sightings and layouts would be required earlier so as to ensure that any new bases built in Canada could be such that they could accommodate and use this type of weapon.

38. The necessity of an effective air defence system was fully recognized by the Canadian Government. Almost 50% of the Government's budget was devoted to the Air Force and the bulk of that amount was ear-marked for air defence. At the same time the Canadian Government was conscious of its commitments to NATO. General Foulkes believed that Canada might be able to offer some help to its NATO partners in the building of an integrated air defence system in Europe. About two years from now when the time came to begin the production of the supersonic fighter (CF-105) the Canadian Government would, however, be faced with some awkward decisions.

39. Mr. Bryce said that many Canadians thought it curious that United States servicemen had to be brought to Canada while at the same time Canadian servicemen were being sent to Europe. There was no present disposition on the part of the Government to change this state of affairs but a real problem existed.

40. Admiral Radford said that the United States problems were similar to those outlined by General Foulkes. He said in addition that the NATO problem concerned him and he at times wondered if NATO could have an effective air defence system.

41. General Foulkes said he thought that an early warning system could be put across Europe relatively easily and at a cost not much above $100 million. The area to be covered was after all not larger than the Province of Ontario. Perhaps North America could provide the electronics equipment for such a system. The object would be the introduction of guided missiles into the European system. He thought the Germans would not spend money simply to provide for interceptions at the Rhine. The European air defence system would probably be based not on interceptor fighters but on guided missiles.

Alerts System

42. Mr. Léger said that the Canadian authorities welcomed recent developments for tri-partite discussions on indications of Soviet aggression in the NATO area. His present concern, however, was with the problem of alerts procedures in relation to North American defence arrangements. The general problem, he pointed out, was how to reconcile the necessities of military planning with the ultimate responsibility of governments for decision. The technical arrangements which were worked out in 1952 between Canada and the United States had a limited usefulness but were inadequate to meet Canadian requirements especially in the light of our growing inter-dependence in the field of air defence. Mr.

Léger said that he planned to leave a brief working paper for consideration by the United States authorities. The essence of this paper was that the United States and Canadian Governments should agree that they would invariably and immediately inform each other when they received information of a kind which, when examined, might cause either to conclude that there was a likelihood of hostilities occurring in which North America would likely be attacked.

43. Mr. Heeney said that the immediate and practical problem in relation to the air defence of North America and the inter-dependence of Canada and the United States in this field was a bilateral one. A strong case could be made for the necessity of setting up arrangements between us for the exchange and assessment of indicator intelligence. If the Canadian Government did not have the necessary background information it would be more difficult to get the kind of decision in an emergency which the United States might wish. Mr. Heeney added that the Canadian authorities remained interested in the consideration of alerts procedures on a tripartite (United States-United Kingdom-Canada) and multi-lateral (NATO) basis.

44. General Foulkes said he thought that indicator intelligence was vital in order that the Canadian air defence system could operate at peak efficiency.

45. Mr. Heeney said it was hoped that the Canadian working paper mentioned by Mr. Léger would provide the basis for a discussion of the principles of an improved alerts procedure between the two countries. Such discussions could perhaps best be confined to two representatives from each country. He was inclined to believe that the subject could be most effectively examined in an atmosphere of informality and would not require the presence of specialized intelligence experts. Mr. Hoover and Admiral Radford agreed that there would be value in consultation of this kind and each agreed to appoint a representative.

46. The meeting then moved on to consideration of the next item on the agenda. (Mr. Grey had to leave at this point.)

Soviet Intentions

47. Admiral Radford said that until the 22nd of November 1955 there had been no concrete evidence that the Soviet Union had detonated a true thermo-nuclear device. It now, however, had to be conceded that the Soviet Union had the capability of a device of a yield up to one megaton. Taking this information into consideration it could be estimated that the yield of the Soviet stockpile of atomic bombs was increased by a factor of 10. By mid-1956 it was estimated that the Soviet stockpile would include bombs with yields from 1/2 kiloton to 10 megatons. The Soviet Union had now to be credited with the ability to equip weapons with nuclear warheads. In addition, there was evidence to indicate that Russian capabilities in the field of missile development was a good deal more advanced than was the case when this matter was considered at last year's meeting of consultation. It was estimated that by 1960 an inter-continental ballistic missile could be in the hands of one Soviet operational unit. These estimates of Soviet weapon development were a matter of dispute among the various intelligence agencies of the United States.

48. So far as the Red Army was concerned, the one change of significance since our last discussion had been the broadening of its doctrine to include the use of tactical nuclear weapons.

49. A greater stress had been laid on the offensive capabilities of the Soviet Navy. The Soviet submarine force was growing at the unprecedented rate of 70 submarines per year. Such a growth made the United States effort look small indeed. It was estimated that the Soviet Navy had 300 submarines available now. The possibility existed that most of these had missile-launching capabilities. This growth of naval strength made more important recent developments in Iceland which could only be thought of as discouraging.

50. The Soviet air force had been rebuilt since World War II. By 1960 it could be in a position to challenge allied superiority in the field of nuclear air power. It was estimated that the Soviet air force had 10,000 jet fighters, 3,000 jet light bombers, 1,100 piston medium bombers, 200 jet medium bombers, 20 to 30 jet heavy bombers, and 20 to 30 turbo-jet heavy bombers.

51. It was the United States estimate that in the next five-year period there would be no substantial change in the Soviet objective of world domination. It was estimated, however, that this objective would be sought not by military action but by covert subversion and infiltration. If, however, war were to come as a result of Soviet miscalculations, or through a series of counteractions which were not intended to lead to general war, it was estimated that the pattern would be along the following lines: the primary thrust would be nuclear air strikes against the SAC carrier force and other elements of the retaliatory power of North America; key industrial atomic and industrial facilities of North America would also be prime targets; the Soviet Union was credited with the capability of clandestine detonation of nuclear devices in key facilities in the United States; there was a good deal of argument among United States authorities as to how this latter problem should be handled; submarine-launched missiles might also be used and by the end of the period the Soviet Union might have the capability of the limited use of an intercontinental ballistic missile; an attack on North America would probably be coupled with an attempt to overrun Europe, seize Korea, seize or neutralize Japan, overtly support the Communist régime in Indo-China, overtly and covertly gain control in Burma, Thailand, Malaya, and possibly Formosa, and possibly action in the Middle East; the possibility of sneak attacks on United States bases abroad could not be ruled out; the element of surprise in this case would be uppermost in the minds of the Soviet planners and their plan would be to strike a quick knock-out blow.

52. In attempting to erect a defence against these Soviet capabilities, we would face a problem of tremendous complexity. Since the element of tactical surprise would be of prime importance to the success of a Soviet attack, the requirement existed for an air warning system which could not be broken. It should extend from surface level to beyond the known range of any Soviet bomber. It must be backed up with an improved weapon system which would have more depth than currently programmed. It was required that our weapons have a range of 1,400 to 1,500 miles at all altitudes and that they be capable of causing the maximum attrition to an enemy force before it reached the continental shores. This was essential to avoid the hazards of fall-out. More effective measures were required to counter the submarine threat. The object must be to destroy the submarine rather than the missile it carried.

53. The Soviet threat was such as to call for the virtual elimination of all present deficiencies in our joint air warning system and the building of a weapons system to extend 1,500 miles out from the prime targets in Canada. The weapons system must be made invulnerable to electronic counter-measures and consist of a family of weapons which would complement and supplement each other. Missiles should be equipped with nuclear warheads. Even with maximum progress it would not be possible to make North America invulnerable. The necessary defence would be extremely expensive both in terms of money and manpower. Nor could it be such as to weaken offensive capabilities.

54. General Foulkes said he had no general comment to offer on the views put forward by Admiral Radford. Mention of the submarine threat, however, did bring to mind a difference of view which existed between the Canadian Chiefs of Staff and SACLANT. It was the view of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff that our defence should be related to the immediate threat of submarine-launched missiles rather than to defence against the enemy's use of submarines in a war of attrition. Admiral Radford said he knew there was some disagreement in this field and he was personally inclined to a view close to that of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff. General Foulkes thought that, if this view was sound, consideration should be given to the effect which it would have on what our naval potential should be. This raised the question of priorities in naval development.

55. Mr. Hoover asked Admiral Radford whether it was his estimate that our capabilities were not such as to prevent a surprise attack from the Soviet forces. Admiral Radford said he was not entirely satisfied with our capabilities in this respect. It seemed likely that we would have warning of a Soviet massing for attack but he could not be certain. General Foulkes said that he thought that in this context the study of traffic on the Soviet airfields was of great importance. Increased efforts must be made to analyze this traffic.

56. Admiral Radford said the Russian defence effort was continuing at an unprecedented rate in the fields of matériel, aircraft, ships, tanks, etc. They were building a number of heavy cruisers which would not make a significant contribution to the kind of war we were talking about. It was possible that these cruisers were being built for cold war purposes, i.e., for impressive visits to uncommitted states. Soviet shipyards were engaged almost entirely on naval building. The Soviet merchant marine could only be increased if it was built outside the Soviet Union. For this reason therefore there should be no relaxation of strategic controls. Mr. Hoover commented that the importance of strategic controls was evident not only in this field but in such subsidiary fields as copper wire. Any outside assistance which relieved the pressure on the Soviet economy of the immense defence effort was not in our interests.

57. The discussion then turned to the third item on the agenda.

The Far East

58. Admiral Radford said that, since he had to leave the meeting shortly, he might give briefly his appreciation of the situation in the Far East and especially of the Chinese Communist threat. During 1955 the Communist Chinese had started ten new air bases between Shanghai and Canton. Three of these had been completed and it was estimated that all would be completed by April 1956. The thickest concentration of these bases was in Fukien province directly opposite Formosa. The techniques employed by the Chinese in building these bases were modern. The rate of progress of the building indicated that the Chinese were giving high priority to their construction. If this rate of progress was continued, the Chinese Communists could gain control of the air over the Formosa Straits from the Nationalist Chinese and, indeed, could present the United States with a major problem. It was not certain that all of the air bases under construction had been detected.

59. The Chinese Communists' early warning system was excellent and in some specific aspects was even better than that which we were developing jointly in North America. It was becoming increasingly difficult for the Nationalist Chinese, even when supplied with modern U.S. planes, to make survey flights over the mainland. The Chinese Communists had shown the capability of tracking planes flying at up to 50 thousand feet. There was increasing evidence of a Chinese Communist ability to make interceptions.

60. The Chinese communists had an air force of 2,000 planes, some 1,100 of which were MIG types. A few MIG 17's had been sighted in the Shanghai area. They had more than 300 Soviet jet bombers (IL-28's), some 240 piston bombers, and a few TU-4 Soviet bombers. They were credited with having 13 submarines. Chinese Communist ground forces between Shanghai and Canton were estimated at approximately 600,000. This total was made up of over 500,000 field forces and more than 80,000 public security forces.

61. The situation in Korea was becoming increasingly difficult. The United States was being forced to withdraw air squadrons because, under the terms of the Armistice Agreement, they could not be re-equipped and brought up to date. The Communists had not abided by the terms of the Armistice and in the matter of aircraft alone had introduced more than 400 modern aircraft into North Korea. At the moment the Armistice terms did not hamper the re-equipment of ground forces in South Korea but the same problem would occur in future with respect to the ground forces as was now occurring with respect to the air forces. Numbers of forces alone did not give an accurate picture. It was true that Chinese Communist forces had been withdrawn but they had been withdrawn only into Manchuria. The Chinese Communists therefore had the capability of rapidly reintroducing large ground forces into North Korea. At the moment it was estimated that there were between 350,000 and 400,000 Chinese Communist ground forces in North Korea.

62. Mr. Bryce asked Admiral Radford if he estimated that the Chinese Communist build-up was directed only against Formosa.

63. Admiral Radford replied that the Chinese Communists were getting into the position of being able to challenge even the United States in the Formosa Straits. He went on to say that he felt certain that the Chinese Nationalists would want to strike at the airfields if aircraft were put on them. At the moment there did not seem to be any permanent stationing of aircraft on two of these three completed fields. The Nationalists had been pressing all along for agreement to strike at the fields in the process of construction.

64. Mr. Robertson interposed to draw the meeting's attention to a recent statement by Communist Chinese Vice-Premier Chen Yi in an interview with the press in East Berlin. He had indicated that there were two ways that the liberation of Formosa could be achieved—(a) by the voluntary evacuation of United States military power from Formosa; and (b) by Chinese Communist armed attack on Formosa. He had then gone on to outline the Chinese Communist build-up on the mainland opposite Formosa.

65. Admiral Radford said that, while he had stressed the build-up of Chinese Communist air power opposite Formosa, this was only part of the Chinese Communist build-up. Heavy artillery was being installed in large quantities. Amphibious craft were being built and a submarine force was being developed with Russian assistance much more quickly than had been anticipated.

66. Mr. Léger asked whether there had been any increase of military action around Quemoy and the Matsu Islands.

67. Admiral Radford said that there had been artillery duels recently. The Chinese Communists were building a causeway to one of the smaller islands north of Quemoy as a supply route for heavy artillery which was being installed on the small island. The Nationalist forces had fired on the causeway and as a result there was a four- to five-hour artillery engagement on December 4. In general terms there had been a stepping up of artillery exchanges recently.

68. In response to a further question from Mr. Léger, Admiral Radford said that almost one-third of the Nationalist Chinese army was disposed on the island groups. Approximately 7 divisions of Nationalist troops were on the islands. This was an increase from the number on the islands early this year. Mr. Léger asked if this would not make the problem of the eventual withdrawal of the Nationalists from Quemoy and the Matsus even more difficult than it had been.

69. Admiral Radford gave it as his opinion that the Nationalists would not withdraw their forces from the islands. For reasons other than military reasons, he believed they could not afford to do so.

(Admiral Radford left the meeting).

70. Mr. Robertson said that the Communist Chinese had never indicated any interest in Quemoy and the Matsus except as stepping-stones to the liberation of Formosa. There were those who had argued that, if the offshore islands were turned over to the Communists, tension in the area would be relieved. It was the United States view that a turn-over of the offshore islands to the Communists would not deter the Communists from continuing their campaign to liberate Formosa. The prime objective of the Chinese Communists was to remove the military deterrent to their plans to dominate Asia which now existed on Formosa by reason of the presence there of Nationalist Chinese and United States armed forces. Evacuation of the offshore islands would not therefore relieve the tensions in the area.

71. Mr. Heeney said that some allies who took a different view of the offshore islands did so on the grounds that there was a political distinction between their status and the status of Formosa.

72. Mr. Robertson said that the United States made a political distinction in this respect and had not included the offshore islands in the territory covered by the U.S.-Nationalist China Mutual Defence Treaty. It was Communist China and not the United States which had given the offshore islands a special status. The Communists constantly referred to them as stepping-stones to the prime target, the liberation of Formosa. It was in these circumstances that the President had asked Congress for authority to engage United States forces in defence of the islands if necessary. Mr. Robertson went on to say that United States policy with respect to Formosa had two legal aspects. There was first the fact that the juridical status of Formosa had never been settled. The Japanese gave up the title to it in the Peace Treaty but the title had not been passed to China. Even George Yeh, the Nationalist Foreign Minister, had said recently before the Legislative Yuan that the Nationalists had "possession but not title" to Formosa. Up to 1949 the Chinese Communists had never claimed Formosa but had supported the idea of an independent Formosa. It was only after the Nationalist Government had gone to Formosa that the Chinese Communists changed their tune. It was quite clear that they were interested in it only in order to get rid of the military deterrent which it posed to their expansionist policies. The second thing to be borne in mind was that the United States recognized the Nationalist Government as the government of China and had with the Nationalists a mutual defence treaty covering the area which was under the control of the Nationalist government.

73. The primary objective of the United States in the discussions with the Chinese Communists at Geneva, Mr. Robertson continued, was to avoid war in the Formosa Straits. The other important objective of these talks was to gain release of U.S. nationals held in Communist China. What the United States was seeking was the agreement of the Chinese Communists to a renunciation of force in the Formosa area. It did not ask the Chinese Communists to change their objectives but simply to agree not to pursue those objectives by force. The Communists insisted that the liberation of Formosa was a domestic matter and refused to move from that view. The United States believed, however, that nothing could be more international than the problem of Formosa, since that problem involved the possibility of war.

74. In response to a question from Mr. Heeney as to whether or not the Chinese Communists were likely to continue the negotiations at Geneva, Mr. Robertson said that there was every indication that Peking did wish the talks to continue. The Chinese Communists at Geneva were using the normal Communist tactics (tactics which they employed in the brain washing of prisoners-of-war), alternating between the tough and conciliatory line. At last Thursday's meeting, for example, the Chinese Communist representative had been very conciliatory. This had followed other recent meetings in which he had been unbending and vituperative. The United States intended to hold to its primary objective — that of seeking to avoid war in the Straits.

75. Mr. Hoover said that no one situation in the area, whether it be Korea, Formosa, or Indochina, could be isolated. Dealings with the Chinese Communists over any one issue affected the whole Far East. The object must be to keep Japan, the Philippines and South-east Asia free. The Chinese Communist objective was to gain control of free Asia. No situation therefore could be viewed in isolation from another on the rim of Asia.

76. Mr. Léger recalled that on February 16, 1955, Mr. Dulles had informed Mr. Pearson that he thought the United States would be able to persuade the Nationalist Chinese to evacuate Quemoy and the Matsus in due course, that is, in six months to a year.<sup>20</sup> Admiral Radford's information with respect to the increase of Nationalist forces on the offshore islands suggested that this hopeful line was no longer valid. Indeed, the problem of the offshore islands seemed more acute now than it had been earlier this year. If present developments in Canadian policy continued, there could be very disturbing consequences.

77. Mr. Robertson thought the problem of the Formosa Straits would not be settled by Nationalist withdrawals from the offshore islands. It was not possible for the United States to dissociate its policy from the policy pursued by the Communists. So long as the Communists treated the offshore islands as stepping-stones to the liberation of Formosa, the withdrawal of Nationalist forces from the islands did not make sense. He did not believe that Chiang Kai-shek would agree to withdraw his forces, nor did he believe that in present circumstances President Eisenhower would recommend such a withdrawal. He emphasized that there had been no suggestion from any Chinese Communist sources at any time that a relieving of tension in the Straits would result from a withdrawal of Nationalist troops from Quemoy and the Matsus. This matter was not being talked about at Geneva since the United States had indicated that it would not discuss there the interests of third parties.

78. Mr. Heeney said it seemed then that the United States view was not now what it had been when Mr. Dulles spoke to Mr. Pearson in February. The Canadian view had been and was that the extremely dangerous feature of the situation in the Formosa Straits was the face-to-face confrontation of opposing forces in the offshore islands. It had been the Canadian hope that withdrawal of the Nationalist Chinese would reduce the tension in the area sufficiently to make progress possible on the task of reaching a settlement of the final status of Formosa perhaps as an independent country. It was a shock to find that Nationalist withdrawal seemed now less likely than it had been earlier this year.

79. Mr. Robertson said that in the intervening months the threat from the mainland had increased. The Chinese build-up on the coast opposite Formosa had gone on apace throughout these months and the obvious objective of the build-up was an attack on Formosa. All evidence pointed to a most aggressive intention on the part of the Chinese Communists. The United States did not consider that the turnover of the offshore islands would satiate the Chinese Communists. Developments then in the ensuing months had altered the United States view. Developments had certainly altered Chiang Kai-shek's view and the United States was having the greatest difficulty in restraining the Nationalists from taking action in the face of the Chinese Communist build-up.

<sup>20</sup> Voir/See Document 720.

80. Mr. Léger said that his United States colleagues would be familiar with the Canadian position as to eventual recognition of Communist China. It had been stated a number of times in public and in private by Mr. Pearson. If the relative quiescence of the Chinese Communists was to continue, that is, a lack of aggressive action on their part, it was possible that in the months ahead the Canadian Government would be closer to a decision to recognize. When one related that process of Canadian thinking to the United States exposition given at this meeting of the military build-up both on the mainland and in the offshore islands, the contradiction was flagrant. It seemed essential that our two governments should get together to straighten out this contradiction. In the meantime, he said he had wished to bring up the subject at this meeting in order that there would be no misunderstanding on the United States side as to how Canadian minds were working.

81. Mr. Robertson said that it seemed to him that one of the differences between the views of the two governments in this context stemmed from their evaluation of the situation. In the United States view, the Chinese Communists were being anything but quiescent. There was no indication of the Chinese Communists having abandoned their objective of taking over Asia. They continued to maintain up to 400,000 troops in North Korea and had sent in modern combat matériel. In North Vietnam since the Geneva Conference the effective force of the Vietminh had been doubled, with equipment and assistance from the Chinese and other Communist sources. In Laos there was evidence of Communist Chinese and Vietminh direction of the Pathet Lao. With respect to Formosa, the Chinese Communist objective of liberation remained. It was extremely disturbing to hear of the possibility of Canadian recognition of a régime which showed every intention of continuing its aggressive policies.

82. Mr. Sullivan interposed to point out that the United States was particularly concerned by the activities of the Chinese Communists among the overseas Chinese in Southeast Asia. Among this community the Chinese Communists exploited the threat of their military strength. It seemed to United States observers that the collapse of Southeast Asia would follow quickly upon the fall of Formosa. It was certainly a fact that Chinese Communist activity in Malaya amounted to para-military operations.

83. Mr. Hoover said that it was in Malaya where the wealthiest overseas Chinese community lived that Chinese Communist blackmail was most apparent. The Communists there pressed the argument of the inevitability of Chinese Communist military control being exercised in Malaya and called on these local Chinese to make their peace with the Chinese Communist régime now. The effectiveness of their arguments could only be heightened if Communist China were recognized by important Western powers.

84. Mr. Robertson said he wished to clear away any misapprehension that might exist (and did exist in the minds of friendly powers throughout the world) that the United States was planning a deal with the Chinese Communists at Geneva. This was not so. The United States Government did not contemplate the recognition of Red China and was not approaching contemplation of recognition. There was no pressure from anyone in the United States Government to this end nor was there any difference of opinion between the political parties in the United States on the matter of the recognition of Communist China in the present circumstances. Reverting to a remark by Mr. Heeney earlier that Quemoy and the Matsu Islands belonged to the Chinese mainland, Mr. Robertson said he believed that the view that one took of this question depended largely upon whom one recognized as the government of China.

85. Mr. Heeney said it seemed then that the Geneva talks could not in the United States view lead to a political settlement.

86. Mr. Robertson said the United States had entered the talks at Geneva in the hope that they might lead to a reduction of tension. It was not impossible that they could lead to a conference — not a bilateral conference between the United States and Communist China — but a conference of interested parties. There was no evidence so far, however, that the Communists were seriously seeking a reduction of tension in the Straits.

87. Mr. Heeney said that there could be no misunderstanding of United States views on the subject.

88. Mr. Hoover said that he thought that the objective of the Communists in the Far East as elsewhere was to cause political difficulties between the Western partners. A difference of view between Canada and the United States on the matter of recognition would be high on any priority list of Chinese Communist objectives. It seemed essential to him that Canadian and United States views on this vital matter should not diverge seriously.

89. It was agreed that there was much to be said for continuing the discussion of the Far Eastern situation, and particularly the role of the International Commissions in Indochina. Arrangements were agreed upon for a further meeting on December 6 between Mr. Léger and Mr. Robertson. Arrangements were made as well for Mr. Léger to discuss German matters with Mr. Merchant.

90. The meeting ended with expressions from both sides of the value of meetings such as this. It was agreed that the matter of publicity would be handled as on past occasions. The response to any questions from the press would be that the meeting had provided for routine consultation between the two governments on matters of common interest.

91. Mr. Léger said that he hoped it might be possible to hold the next such meeting of consultation in Canada.

308.

DEA/50219-AE-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 2064

Washington, December 27, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

MEETING OF CONSULTATION — DECEMBER 5

At the meeting of consultation of December 5 (our despatch No. 2047 of December 21) it was arranged that Mr. Léger should meet separately with Mr. Robertson, the Assistant Secretary for Far Eastern Affairs to discuss the work of the International Commissions in Indochina. The meeting took place on December 6 and the highlights of it were covered in our telegram No. 2010 of December 7.<sup>21</sup> We thought you might wish to have for your records a fuller account of what was said. This despatch, therefore, includes a more detailed account of the meeting. I accompanied the Under-Secretary together with another officer of the Embassy; Robertson had with him three officers of the Office of Southeast Asian Affairs.

<sup>21</sup> Voir/See Document 641.

2. Robertson expressed the appreciation of the United States Government for the Canadian work on the International Commissions in Indochina. It was hard to imagine, he said, what the state of affairs would be if it had not been for the patient and objective work of the Canadian Commissioners. The United States Government had been disappointed in the Indian attitude displayed in the Commission. While the State Department had not expected Mr. Nehru to sanction his representatives to take a strong anti-Communist line, it had hoped that Indian policy in the Commissions would have been more objective than it had turned out to be. The attitude of the Polish representatives on the Commissions came as no surprise. They were following the dictates of their Communist masters. In spite of some of the disappointments which had been experienced, it was the United States view that the Commissions should be kept functioning until they finished their tasks.

3. Léger thanked Robertson for his flattering references to the work of the Canadian Commissioners. He said he was certain that the State Department was aware of the general attitude of the Canadian Government towards service on the Commissions. Canadian representatives would stay in Indochina as long as they were able to contribute something; on the other hand, the Canadian Government would willingly withdraw its representatives if such a withdrawal served the common cause. He went on to speak of the current activities of the Commission in Vietnam. The nature of the work of that Commission was changing. The military phase of the Commission's work was over. There was not much further that could be done on the freedom of movement issue. The Commission now had to be concerned with problems arising out of relations between the governments of North and South Vietnam. It seemed evident that if the Commission in Vietnam were to continue, ways and means would have to be found of keeping the Indians on the Commission. The Indian Chairman of the Commission was most unhappy with the lack of co-operation offered by the Diem government. This was a matter which was not alone of concern to the Indian Government. Indeed, the United States Ambassador in Saigon had more than once urged on Diem the desirability of offering the maximum co-operation possible to the Commission. In spite of all that had been done by other interested governments, it was conceivable that the Indians might declare their intention in the next few months to withdraw from the Commission. If, therefore, it was in the common interest to retain an international Commission in Vietnam, it was equally in the common interest to do all that was possible to keep the Indians on the present Commission.

4. The Under-Secretary went on to say that Canadian experience on the Commissions in Indochina, taken together with the recent discussions between Mr. Pearson and Mr. Nehru on the future of the Commissions,<sup>22</sup> made it evident that there was a link between the problems of the Commissions in Vietnam and Laos, "a link which was closer than you would like". The Canadian Government would like the Commissions to operate under their separate terms of reference. Other interested parties, the Chinese and the Indians, saw the problems in the three Indochinese states as inter-related. Whatever one's view might be then on the separation of the three Agreements, the fact that the Chinese and the Indians linked the settlements in the three states could not be ignored.

5. Against this background, Léger went on, it was possible that certain decisions taken in Laos would precipitate a crisis in Vietnam, Indian withdrawal from the Commission, a stepping-up of subversive activities in South Vietnam, or even the renewal of hostilities by the Vietminh. The Canadian Commissioners in Vietnam and Laos would continue to press for as satisfactory settlements as were possible in the two states. The Canadian Government was, however, hesitant to go too far too fast.

<sup>22</sup> Voir/See Document 634.

6. Robertson said that the United States Government did not see any legal justification for connecting the Vietnam and Laos cease-fire agreements. United States officials realized why the Communists might wish to link the issues in the two countries. Their object was the subverting of all Indochina by whatever means came to hand. Robertson pointed out that, even at the Geneva Conference, there had never been any question but that the Royal Government's authority should extend over a unified country. For that reason, the terms of the Laos agreement were quite different from those of the Vietnam agreement. The hard fact was that the Pathet Lao had defied the agreement reached at Geneva. It seemed regrettable that the Commission in Laos could not find it possible to make a strong statement upholding the Royal Government's rights. Developments over recent months had all tended to place the Pathet Lao on an equal basis with the Royal Government when in fact the Pathet Lao were nothing but rebels. A de facto division of Laos would fit the Communist book completely. The two northern provinces, bordering as they did on Communist China, constituted a classic Communist forward base. The recent Russian attitude with respect to Berlin was analogous. Communist strategy the world over was to get whatever toe-hold was possible in an important area and then gradually to extend their influence into neighbouring non-Communist territory. Robertson expressed the hope that the Indians could be influenced to join with Canada in support of a Commission resolution endorsing the Royal Commission's right to administer all of Laos and censuring the Pathet Lao for their failure to live up to the Geneva Agreement.

7. Turning then to Vietnam, Robertson said that the Canadian Government would be familiar with United States efforts to convince Diem of the desirability of offering to the Commission whatever co-operation he thought possible. It had to be borne in mind that Diem had grown in stature in part at least by defying Western advice. It was a fact too that Diem did not accept the Geneva Agreement and had made his stand in opposition to the agreement at Geneva. The division of Vietnam which had been settled upon at Geneva was the work of Mendes-France and Chou En-Lai. Not even Dong, the Vietminh Foreign Minister, had been present when the armistice line was drawn. The bargain reached at Geneva had been one which gave North Vietnam two million more inhabitants than it should have had and further provided for national elections which would have resulted in the automatic turn-over of all of Vietnam to the Communists. Diem and his associates saw clearly the nature of the bargain and were almost psychopathic in their opposition to this division of Vietnam by alien powers. Diem had not the slightest intention of falling into the trap set for him at Geneva.

8. Robertson went on to say that there had been an exchange of views between the North and the South through the medium of letters and radio broadcasts. Even the Geneva Declaration had not specified that North-South consultations had to be face-to-face consultations. Throughout most of the past year Diem had been concerned with the gigantic problem of establishing himself. At the same time he had had to do battle with the sects and to deal with the immense refugee problem. The recent referendum had given Diem some breathing space. Robertson did not believe, however, that Diem would make any further decisions on the matter of electoral consultations until after an Assembly had been convened in South Vietnam.

9. The United States Government, Robertson said, had faced many difficulties in attempting to convince Diem of desirable courses of action. Diem was not amenable to other people's opinions when he thought he was right. This stubborn quality had been both an asset and a drawback to Diem. The United States Government had no power to force Diem to certain courses of action and in any case did not deal with allies in that way. The ultimate United States sanction was of course the withdrawal of United States financial support from Diem. Such an action, however, would lead to a collapse of non-Communist power in Vietnam, which would not serve United States interests. Diem was well aware of this fact.

10. Robertson said the State Department would like to see Diem consult with the Vietminh about the machinery of nation-wide elections. It was certain that Diem would insist on free elections. There never had been, however, free elections in a Communist-dominated area. So the prospects of nation-wide elections in the foreseeable future were not bright. The United States hoped at the same time that Diem would find it possible to co-operate with the International Commission in matters of administration and security. In the United States view, the Commission performed an extremely useful service and no opportunity was lost to convey this view to Diem. The essential problem facing interested free world governments in this area was to work out some plan which would avoid handing Vietnam to the Communists. If the Communists gained control of Vietnam, it would be their first step towards gaining control over all of Southeast Asia.

11. The Under-Secretary said that it seemed to him that the Canadian and United States Governments did not hold separate views on the basic issues. We would both insist on free elections in Vietnam. We agreed on the desirability of Diem offering co-operation to the Commissions. We both saw the value of his consulting with the Vietminh so that the latter could not win the propaganda battle by default. It seemed that we did not really even disagree on the fact that a link existed in the minds of other interested parties between the settlements in Vietnam and Laos. Our agreement would be complete if we could agree that the Canadian representative should always go as far as the Indian traffic would bear. The Canadian worry was that, if one went further, the Indians would withdraw and the Commissions would collapse.

12. Robertson ended the exchange of views answering a question I put to him as to whether it was the United States view that the continued presence of the Commissions in Indochina contributed to stability in the area. He said it was indeed the view of the United States Government that the Commissions were a constructive and contributory factor to stability in the area. The main objective of United States policy in Southeast Asia as elsewhere was to avoid war so long as honour and principle could be maintained. The mere presence of Commissions on which there were Communist representatives made it less likely that Communist forces would renew open hostilities. The United States would be disturbed if the Commissions were to go suddenly from the scene. The question remained, however, as to "how far you can go". (Robertson did not elaborate further on this statement). Perhaps, he said finally, the free world could only play for time. He was reminded in this context of an old Chinese proverb: "What is the cure for muddy water?", and the answer, "Time alone".

A.D.P. HEENEY

SECTION B

DÉFENSE AÉRIENNE CONTINENTALE
CONTINENTAL AIR DEFENCE

309.

DEA/50209-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 11, 1955

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS EYES ONLY

AIR DEFENCE OF NORTH AMERICA

I attach two papers on the air defence of North America. The first, which you have already seen but have expressed a wish to see again, outlines the plans of the USAF with respect to the continental air defence programme for the period 1955-60.<sup>23</sup>

2. The second paper reports on the current thinking of the USAF and RCAF Air Defence Commands on a possible combined command structure and the development of installations and communications for continental defence as outlined in discussions which took place at the meeting of the Canada-United States Military Study Group at the United States Continental Air Defence Command Headquarters, Colorado Springs, on February 7 and 8. I suggest that it might be useful for you to re-read the first paper before going on to the second.

3. As you know, officers of this Department have been aware for some time of the far-reaching implications of these plans, including the adequacy of the existing 1947 joint Canada-United States declaration on defence cooperation, as a framework for future continental defence arrangements.<sup>24</sup> It was our intention that these matters should be a subject for consideration in the proposed study of national security policy.<sup>25</sup>

R.A. M[ACKAY]
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

<sup>23</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 486.

<sup>24</sup> Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1947, volume 1, pp. 350-353 et Canada, Recueil des traités, 1947, N° 43.

See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1947, Volume 1, pp. 345-348 and Canada, Treaty Series, 1947, No. 43.

<sup>25</sup> Voir/See Document 789.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

NoteMemorandum

TOP SECRET

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS EYES ONLY

THE AIR DEFENCE OF NORTH AMERICA — II

In the preceding paper on the air defence of North America an account was given of the air defence plans and programme which the United States proposes for the period 1955-60. The purpose of this paper is to report on the most recent developments, as evidenced in the discussions which took place at the meeting of the Canada—United States Military Study Group (MSG) on February 7 and 8, 1955, at the U.S. Continental Air Defence Command Headquarters, Colorado Springs, and to comment on the implications for Canada arising therefrom. General Chidlaw, the Commanding General of Continental Air Defense Command (CONAD), and his senior staff officers, participated in most of the discussions.

2. The proceedings opened with a briefing by Major General Bergquist, Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations, CONAD. He outlined the U.S. air defence concept and programme for the next five years in almost exactly the same terms as were used in the External Affairs paper which preceded this one. In particular he drew attention to the plan to extend the interceptor control area (by the installation of 27 heavy radars) until it reaches the tactical early warning line, thus extending the combat zone by about 400 miles to the North and from 400 to 600 miles off both the Pacific and Atlantic coasts of the United States. The capacity of the interceptor control system is to be increased by the installation of expensive semi-automatic electronic "tracking" equipment. Mention was also made of the intention to utilize long-range interceptor aircraft and guided missiles to take advantage of the increased depth of the combat zone and to engage hostile aircraft at the greatest possible distance from their targets. (See Charts Nos. 1 and 2 attached.) General Bergquist emphasized that the RCAF Air Defence Command had been consulted in the development of the plan, and that both the United States and Canadian ADCs were in general agreement as to the military necessity for the measures proposed. The United States Joint Chiefs of Staff were in agreement with the concept, and funds for part of the programme (21 heavy radars) had been included in the 1956-57 budget.

3. Before proceeding to an account of the next phase of the MSG discussions it is necessary to recount a bit of past history. About 8 months ago the Canadian Chiefs of Staff, aware that the United States was likely to propose a major expansion of the North American air defence programme, authorized the RCAF ADC to enter into planning discussions with the USAF ADC, it being understood that no commitment was involved on either side.<sup>26</sup> It was only at this time that the RCAF learned the full details of the USAF programme. The position of the RCAF was made more difficult by the fact that for some time the USAF ADC, assuming that Canada would not likely be willing or able to increase its commitments, had been developing plans in the expectation that the United States would have to provide and man all air defence installations required south of the Mid-Canada line (55th parallel) between the east end of Lake Superior and the western ranges of the Rocky Mountains.

<sup>26</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 462.

4. The RCAF ADC, in approaching the problem, recognized the case for the establishment of large military installations and the development of elaborate and costly communications facilities in Canada in order to meet the threat of jet bombers armed with thermonuclear weapons. The ADC considered however that if this were done in accordance with the United States assumptions regarding the level of Canadian participation, the resulting position would be intolerable for Canada. It would make a fiction of the existing command arrangements, based as they are on the concept that each country maintains command and control over all forces operating within its own territory. If the existing arrangements were continued they would nominally give control to the Canadian air defence commander over operations in Canada, but the absence of any Canadian air defence machinery in large areas of the country would make it impossible to exercise control effectively. Moreover the philosophy expressed in these arrangements does not provide for the situation which will develop when, in the course of the next four or five years, guided missile installations are established in the United States which will be aimed at potential targets over Canada.

5. As a consequence of the RCAF analysis of the situation from the Canadian point of view, the two ADCs launched a new command study, ignoring the existing arrangements and basing their work on two fundamental military percepts; the first, that the air defence of North America is an indivisible responsibility and that operational control should therefore be vested in a single commander; and second, that the forces assigned to the task must face in the probable directions of enemy approach and hold positions in sufficient depth to fight effectively.

6. The second phase of the MSG discussions consisted of a presentation by Air Commodore Annis, of RCAF ADC, of the plan which had been jointly developed by the two ADCs to reflect the concepts described above, it being understood that the proposals it incorporated represented the planners' views only, and had not as yet been "bought" even by the Air Defence Commanders, let alone by any higher authority.

7. The plan envisages a Combined Air Defence Command Headquarters, headed by a U.S. officer. In peacetime he would be responsible for the operational standards of the air defence forces, and for planning of training exercises. Disposition of national forces and forward planning would continue to be under the control of U.S. or Canadian authorities as appropriate, and would be carried out in consultation with one another as at present. The RCAF describes this by the phrase "planning in unison" as contrasted with "integrated planning".

8. Under the Combined Air Defence command there would be three Combined Air Defence Forces, North, East and West (see Chart No. 3†). The Combined Northern Air Defence Force would be under command of a Canadian with an American deputy commander, and the area for which it would be responsible would embrace all of the settled parts of Canada with the exception of the British Columbia coastal area and the Eastern Townships—Maritime Provinces area. These areas would of course be parts of the Combined Western and Eastern Air Defence Forces respectively. The Northern Air Defence Force would consist of from 40,000 to 60,000 men, of which from 10,000 to 30,000 would be stationed in Canada. It would incorporate most of Canada's existing air defence forces, the balance being made up either of Canadians obtained from some other source, or of U.S.A.F. personnel. The numbers of personnel to be stationed in Canada would hinge on the question of whether fighters can operate effectively from south of the international boundary or whether additional bases are required in Canada. In the opinion of the RCAF planners there should be ten additional fighter bases in Canada in order to ensure that the air battle would be fought north of, rather than over, the heavily populated parts of the country. This would mean that the number of forces in Canada would be nearer the upper limit of 30,000 than the lower limit of 10,000 mentioned above.

9. The Western and Eastern Air Defence Forces would be commanded by United States officers with Canadian representation appropriate to the extent of participation by Canadian forces in these areas. The general principle that when an officer of one nation was in command, his deputy would be from the other nation, would extend throughout that part of the command structure in which Canada would have an interest.

10. A number of significant points emerged from the discussion which followed this presentation. First, and possibly the most important, was the conviction of the American representatives that, irrespective of the organization to be adopted, the physical programme must be carried through substantially as planned. Their text was the recent statement by President Eisenhower that maintenance of the deterrent effect of Strategic Air Command and the development of an effective continental air defence were the two highest priority items in the United States military programme today,<sup>27</sup> and they made it clear their views on air defence requirements were those of their Government.

11. A second point was that the Americans made no secret of the fact that the [United States] Continental Air Defence Command, which was created only last autumn, is a shaky edifice, and that there were strong differences of opinion between General Chidlaw and his army and navy deputies on the air defence tasks of the three services, and their coordination. This became particularly evident to the Canadians in the course of the discussion on the role of short range guided missiles such as Nike, and their deployment around heavily populated industrial areas, including such border cities as Detroit, Niagara Falls and Buffalo.

12. It was clear that although the U.S. ADC recognized the military logic of the proposed combined command structure it anticipated that it might have considerable difficulty in convincing its Government that it should accept the necessity for vesting responsibility for the protection of a large area of that country in a Canadian air defence commander. The Canadians pointed out that this was a kind of difficulty with which they were not unfamiliar. General Chidlaw expressed the personal opinion that sooner or later some form of integration was inevitable, although he hoped that before it came he would have some time to put his own house in order. He added that in any event he thought that the initiative for any such move should come from Canada. This view was reiterated by a number of the other U.S. officers present.

13. There was considerable discussion of the time-relationship between the adoption of a combined command structure and the development of the installations and communications in the two countries over the next few years. The planners argued with conviction that a decision to establish a combined command structure, or at least to work in that direction, should be taken at once. They asserted that if this were not done the communications, combat direction centres, and other items of "infrastructure" would not be able to be adjusted at a later date except at very large expense and dislocation. In other words the communications and related facilities required for the semi-automatic operation of the air defence system which are now in the early stages of installation would have to be drastically re-arranged if the system of command were to be changed, and the longer the delay the greater the difficulty (and the greater the opposition). As the RCAF ADC sees the situation the existing command arrangements, organization, and plans for the deployment of weapons would not be the best for the air defence of the United States and Canada, although it is probably sufficiently effective that in the face of internal difficulties, the United States authorities will not, of themselves, seek to change them. If Canada considers that the situation is developing in a manner detrimental to her interests (and the RCAF ADC believes that it is) then she must take the lead in pressing for a change.

<sup>27</sup> Voit/See United States, Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower 1955, Document 17, p. 117.

14. It should be understood that at the present time the above views are held by RCAF ADC only. RCAF Headquarters has not yet made up its mind as to the position it should take. The ADC plans, if adopted, would require additional resources which presumably could be supplied only at the expense of some other commitment, e.g. the Air Division in Europe. RCAF HQ, in making recommendations to the Chiefs of Staff and the Government must therefore seek to balance the importance of its various operational responsibilities. Its judgment is bound to be affected by its reluctance to put itself in a position where its primary, if not its sole operational role is one of home defence.

15. Now that the subject has been raised in the MSG, the Chairman of the Canadian Section, who is the Vice Chief of the Air Staff, proposes to tell the story to the Air Staff and then to the Chiefs of Staff Committee. If the Chiefs of Staff give no indication of acting, or if, as they have sometimes done in the past, they take the position that unless or until the ADC plan is put forward as a formal requirement there is nothing for them to consider, then perhaps the Department of External Affairs should consider what it might do to have the matter considered by Ministers.

310.

DEA/50209-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 11, 1955

AIR DEFENCE PLANNING POLICY

Further to the two papers I sent to you today on the subject of North American Air Defence, I thought you would wish to know that the Chiefs of Staff, at a meeting held January 28, considered a recommendation from the Chief of the Air Staff that the United States Strategic Air Command air base system in North America (including Strategic Air Command refuelling bases) should be recognized as the top priority target system for protection by air defence, with a lesser priority assigned to the other vital targets which embrace the resources and industry necessary to the continuation and successful conclusion of a war.

The Chiefs of Staff agreed as follows:

(a) Air defence plans should be based upon the concept that the air defence of the Canada-U.S. region is a single problem and that plans for the deployment and use of the air defence resources of Canada and the United States must be developed on a combined basis so as to provide the most effective defence possible for agreed vital targets.

(b) Because the threat of massive nuclear retaliation is now the major deterrent to war and the Strategic Air Command at this time is the primary agent by which retaliation may be effected, the protection of the Strategic Air Command becomes one of the first priority tasks for the air defence commanders of both countries.

(c) The present listing of vital areas (which is based on the assumption that the Russians will bomb North America without warning with two objectives in mind — first, to disrupt the North American war making potential for an extended period, and second to destroy as far as possible the Strategic Air Command retaliatory forces) which was approved by the Chiefs of Staff in February of 1954 remains a valid statement of the vital areas in Canada.

(d) The deployment of Canadian air defence forces must remain a matter of decision by the appropriate Canadian authorities.

The Chiefs of Staff instructed the Canadian Section, Military Co-operation Committee, to attempt to have the above views incorporated in the next revision of the Canada-United States Emergency Defence Plan.

At this stage, the decision of the Chiefs of Staff Committee goes no further than to provide certain planning assumptions to guide the Canadian Section of the Military Co-operation Committee and the planners of the R.C.A.F. Air Defence command in their further work. The implications, however, of this planning as it materializes will obviously involve far-reaching political considerations.

J. L[ÉGER]

311.

PCO

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], March 3, 1955

...

Present

The Prime Minister (Mr. St-Laurent), in the Chair,
 The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe),
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney),
 The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson),
 The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson),
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris),
 The Secretary (Mr. Martin),
 The Military Secretary (Commander Solomon).
 The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes),
 The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice Admiral Mainguy),
 The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemon),
 The Acting Chief of the General Staff (Major General Sparling),
 The Chairman, Defence Research Board (Dr. Solandt).
 The Deputy Minister of National Defence (Mr. Drury),
 The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Léger),
 The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance (Mr. Deutsch),
 Mr. T.E. Stephenson, (Department of Defence Production).
 The Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Robertson).

I. PREPRODUCTION PROGRAMME FOR SUPERSONIC FIGHTER AIRCRAFT (CF105) AND ITS POWER PLANT

1. The Minister of National Defence said that in December, 1953, a development and production programme of a supersonic all-weather fighter, the CF105, had been approved to the extent of building two prototype aircraft.<sup>28</sup> In the interval, the early appearance of Russian long-range jet bombers and nuclear weapons had accentuated the threat to North America. From the commencement of the CF105 programme, careful watch had been kept on all aircraft and guided missiles projects in the United States and the United Kingdom with a view to modifying or discontinuing the CF105 if the project was being duplicated or overtaken in those countries. However, it had been demonstrated more clearly than ever that it was necessary to proceed with the CF105 to fill a gap which no other similar aircraft with the required performance would adequately fill at the right time. Guided missile programmes had been disappointingly slow in their development, but it could be expected that as they were produced satisfactorily they would be integrated with manned fighter aircraft defences. Because of the increased Russian threat, it was desirable to accelerate the CF105 production programme and to order a substantial number of preproduction aircraft instead of only two prototypes. A programme of such a character would substantially reduce the time consumed in contractor and service testing, with the result that aircraft would enter squadron service much earlier than had been contemplated. It entailed higher expenditures in the early stages, but the overall cost would be reduced. Accordingly it was recommended that a preproduction programme for 40 CF105 aircraft at a total cost of $191 million be approved.

When approval had originally been given to proceed with the development of the CF105, it had been contemplated that the aircraft would be powered by an appropriate engine from an external source built under licence. Careful analysis of all engine development programmes in the U.K. and the U.S. had revealed that none of these engines approached the required power output. The J75 produced by Pratt and Whitney would come closest to meeting Canadian requirements. In the meantime, Orenda Engines Limited of Toronto had designed and developed an engine — the PS13 — as a private venture, investing in it $9 million. This engine appeared to be more advanced than any other type in the U.K. or in the U.S. and was in fact the only one likely to be available on time that would give the CF105 its required performance. Having regard to the urgent need, to the desirability of the development and production of an engine in Canada and to the gaining of vast technical experience, it would appear sensible to encourage this programme. Accordingly it was recommended that a PS13 engine development programme of 14 engines plus production tooling, at a cost of $70 million, be approved.

Explanatory memoranda had been circulated.

(Minister's memoranda, D6-55 of March 1,† and D7-55 of February 25†).

2. Mr. Campney added that he was satisfied that the CF105 was the type of aeroplane required to meet the threat envisaged. He emphasized that the programme could be halted at any stage, if this was found necessary because of development of suitable aircraft elsewhere.

3. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It was possible that the programme proposed would mean it would not be necessary to provide a successor aircraft to the F86 with which the air division in Europe was presently equipped. The advantages of having the Air Force equipped with one type of aircraft were obvious and substantial. It could be expected that a decision on this point would be made within the next few months.

<sup>28</sup> Voir/See Volume 19, Document 671.

(b) It seemed that the CF105 would be better than any other type available at the time it would come into service in quantity. The U.S. might have an aircraft, a prototype of which was flying at the moment, which could deal with the threat to North America up to 1960. The U.S. were not, however, contemplating production of an aircraft for the period from about 1960 to, say, 1964, but they did have in mind an aircraft which it was hoped might fly at speeds as high as Mach 3, for the period beyond that for which the CF105 was designed. It seemed highly doubtful that the U.S. would purchase any CF105's produced in Canada. Of the 40 to be ordered, the cost of airframes and engines would total $261 million, but once in production the unit cost would amount to $2 1/2—$3 million. It was impossible to estimate at this time how many might be manufactured. Up to the present, 180 CF100's had been turned out and more would be made. Depending upon the success of the U.S. in aircraft and missile development and the decision on the rearming of the Air Division, and on the number of types and rate of production of aircraft in the Soviet Union, the production of the CF105 might run anywhere from 100 to 500.

(c) The cost of the programme was exceedingly heavy and if it did not work out well, or if for a variety of reasons it had to be abandoned, embarrassment and criticism would be severe. Nevertheless, the only way to provide an effective deterrent to aggression was to improve, modernize and develop the warmaking capacity of the free nations. It was to be hoped that in five or six years there might be some improvement in the prospects of avoiding suicide otherwise than by the present very expensive means, but there was no guarantee of this and therefore no alternative but to proceed with the maintenance of suitable deterrent strength.

(d) The CF105 was designed as a defensive aircraft. However, atomic weapons were being reduced in size and it might well be that the aircraft could carry one of these and have a valuable offensive capability, albeit at relatively short range. On the other hand, there had been no suggestions that Canada provide offensive aircraft and, in any event, under present U.S. law atomic weapons from U.S. sources could be handled only by U.S. citizens.

(e) It could be anticipated there would be a more northward extension of fighter defence facilities and therefore additional cost for the provision of airfields, housing and the like. If the expenditure on the aircraft proposed would be within the defence estimates presently contemplated for the next few years, there could be no serious concern from the financial standpoint, but if it meant an overall expansion of defence expenditures, assuming no change in the international situation, this would be a serious matter to which strong exception would have to be taken. On the other hand, the programme under consideration was supposed to be fitted in to present contemplated expenditures. It seemed unlikely that much hope could be held out for a steady reduction of defence expenditures year by year. The Chiefs of Staff put the highest priority on the defence of North America and if this programme, together with other items required for that defence, meant increased expenditures, other commitments would have to be examined and reduced or eliminated.

(f) The incorporation of guided missiles with manned aeroplanes in the defensive system of North America would mean added problems and additional costs which at this point could not be measured but about which notice should now be given. The missile programme had been disappointingly slow and it was not possible to say what effect ground-to-air missiles, for example, would have on the programme under discussion. It could be that about the time this reproduction project was completed and the squadrons were acquiring the aeroplanes, Canada might then be embarking on a missile programme.

(g) From the scientific point of view there was a constant race with the Russians. Because of developments in progress, the effectiveness of the deterrent was always only temporary. The Russians and the U.S. were equipping their forces with subsonic and supersonic bombers and the latter were contemplating an unmanned bomber. Beyond that was the intercontinental ballistic missile. If the Russians succeeded in getting that missile into large scale production before the U.S., there would be a major shift in the balance of power since there was nothing available that could deal with it. The date of this was so uncertain, however, that the West could not afford to gamble on having no deterrent at all in the intervening period. Scientifically, the outlook until approximately 1960 was not too alarming from the Western point of view. An elaborate overall defensive scheme for North America was now being studied which would, so it now seemed, be reasonably effective up until about that date. However, for geographical reasons, the percentage of defences contemplated under this system in Canada would be increasing at what could only be described as an alarming rate.

4. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed to recommend:

(a) that a preproduction programme for 40 CF105 aircraft in controlled phases be approved, at a total estimated cost of $191 million, the expenditure to be allocated as submitted, from 1954-1960, and to be met from defence estimates presently contemplated for the next few years; and

(b) that a development and tooling programme for the PS13 engine amounting to 14 units at a cost of $70 million, to be spread over 1954-58, be approved; the cost also to be met from defence estimates presently contemplated for the next few years; it being understood that the programme for both the air frame and the engine could be halted or abandoned at appropriate stages if this was found to be expedient or necessary.<sup>29</sup>

...

312.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], March 23, 1955

...

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE; DEVELOPMENT OF CF-105

40. The Minister of Finance, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 8th, said that the Department of National Defence had now sought Treasury Board authority for the expenditure of $40 million to proceed with the first stage in the development of the new CF-105 supersonic all-purpose fighter aircraft. This sum would cover the cost of the first eleven aircraft as well as the cost of tooling. The overall programme would involve construction of forty aircraft, and the development and procurement of engines for them, at a total expenditure of some $260 million.

<sup>29</sup> Les recommandations formulées à l'alinéa 4 ont été approuvées par le Cabinet en séance plénière le 8 mars 1955.

The recommendations in paragraph 4 were approved by the full Cabinet on March 8, 1955.

41. The Minister of National Defence pointed out that the total expenditure of $260 million for the completed project would be spread over a six-year period. It was anticipated that the magnitude of annual expenditure would be of the order of $15 million the first year, $47 million the second, $61 million, the third, $66 million the fourth, $40 million the fifth and $30 million the final year.

42. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) There was no doubt that, at the drafting-board stage, the CF-105 appeared to be a very useful aircraft well suited to the long distances and severe atmospheric conditions of the Canadian north, which would serve the R.C.A.F. as an effective weapon against long range supersonic bombers flying at high altitudes. This development involved the expenditure of very substantial sums of public money and constituted what some might consider expensive insurance against an emergency which might or might not occur.

(b) Good as this aircraft might turn out to be, it was unlikely that other N.A.T.O. governments would adopt it for their own use. One of the reasons for this was that the aircraft was designed to meet conditions peculiar to northern Canada and might not be entirely suitable for use in western Europe; another was that we could not expect the U.S. and U.K. to adopt a Canadian plane rather than develop one of this importance themselves.

(c) It was understood that the $260 million project could be fitted within total defence expenditure on the present scale; it was hoped that the long-term commitments in this development would not prevent further cuts being made in the overall defence budget during the next few years, if the international situation at that time made such reductions possible.

(d) Without questioning the desirability of proceeding with the CF-105 project, it was suggested that sufficient attention was not being paid to the abandonment of obsolete weapons, formations and strategic concepts in the light of recent developments in the field of nuclear fission. The answer to the problem was perhaps not to curtail new developments, such as the CF-105 project, but rather to make sure that long established methods and weapons were not continued through sheer force of habit and tradition even though they had become obsolete and ineffective. This might require a review of our military commitments in the light of the latest developments.

(e) It should be borne in mind that many million dollars would have to be spent before there could be any assurance that the CF-105 was as good in actual operation as it was on the drafting board.

43. The Cabinet approved the entry into a contract with Avro Aircraft, Ltd., of Toronto for the design development and supply of 11 airframes, and the supply of production tooling, for the supersonic fighter aircraft, CF-105, at an estimated total cost of $40 million; a Treasury Board minute to be issued accordingly.

...

313.

DEA/50045-A-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité des chefs d'état-major
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Chiefs of Staff Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], April 6, 1955

Present

The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes)
 The Chief of the General Staff (Lieutenant-General Simonds)
 The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice-Admiral Mainguy)
 The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemon)
 The Chairman, Defence Research Board (Dr. Solandt)

Also Present

C.M. Drury, Esq., Deputy Minister of National Defence
 R.B. Bryce, Esq., Secretary to the Cabinet
 R.A. MacKay, Esq., Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
 Air Vice Marshal Dunlap, Chairman, Canadian Section, Canada-US Military Study Group
 Air Commodore Annis, Air Defence Command
 Air Commodore Hendricks, Chief of Telecommunications Group Captain Austin, Air Defence Command
 Squadron Leader Bayne, Directorate of Air Intelligence
 Air Commodore Rutledge, Co-ordinator, Joint Staff
 Secretary, Chiefs of Staff (Commander Solomon)
 Assistant Secretary, Chiefs of Staff (Lieutenant-Colonel Rutherford)

I USAF-RCAF BRIEFING ON THE AIR DEFENCE OF NORTH AMERICA AS PRESENTED TO THE CANADA-US MILITARY STUDY GROUP ON 7 FEBRUARY, 1955

1. The Chairman, Canadian Section, Canada-US Military Study Group in introducing the subject of organization for the air defence of North America to the Chiefs of Staff, said that the original terms of reference of the Canada-US Military Study Group were to examine the air defence of North America in general and early warning in particular. The briefing which was to be presented represented the current US Continental Air Defence Command and Canadian Air Defence Command planning as presented to the Canada-US Military Study Group in February 1955. The portion which was to be presented only covered the proposals for the most effective organizational arrangement for the air defence of North America. It was not a final plan but was merely an indication of the present thinking in the Air Defence Commands of the two countries.

2. Air Commodore Annis, who conducted the actual briefing, said that the Air Defence Commands recommended the re-organization of air defence as a particularly urgent matter. At the present time Canada faced two main problems; one was a threat to her security imposed by Russian military potential; the other was a threat to her sovereignty resulting from the US reaction to the Russian military threat.

3. The proposal presented to the Military Study Group for a combined Continental Air Defence command did not include consideration of the matter of sovereignty. The proposal to the Military Study Group only mentioned those supporting arguments common to both commands which involve military security and efficiency against the Russian threat to North America.

4. Both the US and Canadian Air Defence Commands saw definite trends in the Russian strategic air threat to North America. These trends include the continuing development of Russian strategic air carriers of a range adequate to approach North America by a wide variety of routes. Another trend was the widespread devastation and fall-out area potential of fusion bombs which would make it imperative that air battles should be concluded outside the areas of population. This trend would result in a general movement of radar cover and defensive weapons bases outward from the target systems. The third trend was that increases in bomber speeds would call for a general physical depth in the combat zone surrounding the target system. A fourth trend was the tremendous destructive potential contained in the small high performance raid of between 35 to 70 jet bombers which would arrive at the continental defences with no previous warning.

5. The presently planned US programs may possibly infringe on Canadian sovereignty due to the range which US based interceptor weapons would have for operating over Canada. Certain radar equipment and defence squadrons which were physically situated in US territory were now capable of being used in combat over Canada entirely under US control.

6. The US were now actually completing headquarters and operation rooms and a communications network leading to their next stage of organizational structure. This building program, because of its complexity and cost would possibly result in freezing the organization and control channels into a more rigid structure. It was this factor which made a decision on an alternative to the presently US planned organization urgent at this time.

7. The present form of operational control in the US and Canada was non-automatic and was known as a manual system. The US were now in the process of converting to an advanced form of control system which was largely automatic. This system was called "semi-automatic ground environment" (SAGE). The SAGE system organization would enlarge the size of sectors, reduce their total number and would introduce and employ subsectors which would largely centralize in one location the functions currently being performed by several individual radars at their individual radar sites.

8. The importance and complexity of the problem of the possible detection and identification of a small raid could not be over-emphasized. For this reason it was considered very important that a single commander should have surveillance and the control of identification forces, including interceptor fighters necessary to the identification, across the entire northern front. The present US plans are for three US air defence forces under the control of Commander-in-Chief, Continental Air Defence Command. This would result in there being three US and one Canadian air defence force commanders for the North American area. In so far as defence of US against attack from the north was concerned both the US and Canadian Air Defence Commands agreed that if certain weapons and bases now intended to be in the US were relocated at selected points in Canada it would improve the air defence of Canada considerably as well as materially improve the air defence of the US. The improved deployment of weapons has been restrained until now by the absence of a mutually satisfactory organizational arrangement for exerting command and control over such forces under all conditions.

9. The threat to this continent has increased to such an extent in the past two years that even the best air defence possible may not be sufficient. As a result, exploratory planning was begun by both Air Defence Commands with a view to devising the best single air defence of North America under current Canada-US defence arrangements. From these studies it became increasingly apparent that observance of the Canada-US political boundary as a dividing line of military responsibility imposed limitations which made it impossible to achieve the best air defence arrangements.

10. The strategic picture at the present time was that there were three probable avenues of approach to the target areas of Canada and the Continental US; one was from the north, one from the west and one from the east. Under present arrangements one commander could not exercise control of the air defence arrangements along the whole of any of these fronts, including the full breadth of surveillance which may be necessary to enable timely recognition of the small raid. In addition the problem of depth arose in the case of the northern front. In addition to the forces in Canada, the forces located in the northern US were deployed there primarily for defence against attack from the north. It was not now possible for one commander, responsible for defence along the northern strategic front, to command in depth all the forces deployed to defend against attack through that front. Although the area of Canada and the US together now in fact comprise one air theatre there was not now one overall air defence commander who had the entire strategic picture or who had freedom to manoeuvre any or all of the available air defence forces in accordance with the requirements of the overall strategic picture. This limitation imposed a fundamental weakness in the area defence capability.

11. In the exploratory study of the best defence arrangements for a single air defence system for Canada and the US, ignoring the international boundary as a military dividing line, the following principles were accepted:

- (a) In a single air theatre there should be one overall air defence commander;
- (b) The major fronts of such a theatre should be subdivided into air defence regions in such a manner that,
  - (i) one commander had control of the air surveillance and air battle along the whole of each broad strategic front,
  - (ii) this same commander had command in depth of all forces deployed primarily to defend against attack through that front,
- (c) Each air defence region should be sub-divided into sectors consistent with the following principles,
  - (i) the sector areas should be as large as was practicable,
  - (ii) sectors should be oriented in the most probable direction of enemy approach in order to minimize the necessity for handing over uncompleted intercepts or air battles from one sector commander to another,
  - (iii) the shape of the sector should facilitate the best possible conduct of an air battle passing through it and not necessarily the best possible defence of individual targets lying within it,
  - (iv) a sector boundary should not lie just short of a major target on the most likely route of approach to that target,
  - (v) with the advent of nuclear air weapons the decisive portion of the air should be fought beyond heavily populated areas,
  - (vi) maximum use should be made of existing facilities and communications and there should be a minimum of disruption with the air defence system during a transition period.

12. As a result of this study and based on the above principles it was proposed to subdivide Canada and the Continental US into air defence regions and sectors. The three regions have been designated Combined Northern Air Defence Force, Combined Eastern Air Defence Force, and Combined Western Air Defence Force respectively and the whole has been designated as the Combined Air Defence Command. It was considered that the air defence forces of the two countries should be integrated operationally but in the main should be kept separate logistically and administratively.

13. On the question of command and organization the broad aspects only have been studied. It was believed that there should be one overall air defence commander not only in war but as long before a war as possible. Integration could only be accepted if the overall commander was responsible to the governments of both Canada and the US for the proper conduct of air defence operations. Both countries should have an equal voice in the determination and approval of combined requirements, costs, manning, commitments, etc.

14. The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff requested clarification of the position of Northeast Air Command which appeared to have been omitted in the plans for an integrated air defence command as presented.

15. Air Commodore Annis said that at the present time Northeast Air Command was under the operational control of the Canadian Air Defence Commander and would logically become one sector in any scheme for a combined or integrated command.

16. The Chairman, Defence Research Board observed that it did not necessarily follow that the further north the defences were put the more effective they would be. With limited forces there would be a tendency to thin out the protection and there would then be a practical rather than a theoretical problem to contend with. Our forces should be used where they were able to provide the greatest defence. The SAGE concept would raise serious communications problems. In addition, the system was very vulnerable to jamming. Its adoption by the US would present Canada with the problem of deciding whether something simpler for the short term would be preferable.

17. The organizational problem appeared to be geographical rather than technical. The principles of area responsibility would not be altered by the choice of type of defensive weapons.

18. The Chief of the General Staff said that a realistic technical study in relation to the time factor was needed. It was possible that the command system envisaged would be made obsolete by technological advances by the time it was needed.

19. The Chief of the Air Staff observed that the briefing was the first indication which the Chiefs of Staff had received from the Canada-US Military Study Group on US thinking on this subject. Before the RCAF proceeded with a further detailed study of the proposals it would be desirable to have an indication of whether such proposals would be acceptable to the government.

20. General Foulkes said that it would not be appropriate to present the re-organization plan to the government in its present shape. There would have to be compelling military advantages to an integrated air defence command system to counterbalance political disadvantages. The trend desired in future discussions with the US should be indicated to the government.

20A. The Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the briefing indicated very serious political issues for the government whether or not any action were taken on the proposal for a continental air defence command. If accepted the proposal would entail modification of the basic Canadian policy of Canadian command of defence forces in Canada; if no action were taken, United States plans for thickening air defence installations, including guided missile bases, below the border would probably become frozen, with the result that, in the event of war, the air battle would probably take place over the settled areas of Canada. He thought, therefore, that the Cabinet Defence Committee should be briefed about the situation without undue delay.

21. It was agreed that the Chief of the Air Staff would prepare a detailed study of an integrated unified command for the air defence system of North America for the early consideration of the Chiefs of Staff.

314.

DEA/50309-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], April 8, 1955

At the Chiefs of Staff meeting on Tuesday last, we were briefed on continental air defence plans. I don't think there would be much point in summarizing these plans here but I hope you will have an opportunity to see the volume<sup>30</sup> produced by the U.S. Air Defence Command and the text of the lecture† we had at the Chiefs meeting. Mr. Barton has a copy of each.

2. The Chairman of Chiefs was disposed to delay bringing the matter up to Cabinet Defence Committee or Ministers individually until the Chiefs had made up their minds on the policy to be recommended to the Government. I pointed out that undue delay might result in American plans being "frozen" with the consequence that the Canadian Government could do little to modify them — A./C. Annis had given us his opinion in his lecture to the Chiefs, that U.S. air defence plans might be frozen in a matter of months. The conclusion of Chiefs was that the Chiefs individually should study the plans at the first opportunity and that a briefing should be given to the Cabinet Defence Committee as soon as possible. Perhaps this means not until after the NATO Council Meeting because the Chiefs or some of them will be in Europe a good deal of the time until after that.

3. The basic issue as I see it is whether we should continue with completely separate air defence Commands which would mean substantially more U.S. installations in Canada and a considerable number of guided missile bases along the Canadian border, or whether we should set up some sort of a joint Command which would mean:

(a) a Supreme Commander for Air Defence who would be American;

(b) possibly three regional Commands under him, one on the U.S.-Canada Pacific coast under an American Commander and possibly a Canadian Deputy, a similar Command on the Atlantic coast and a Central Command under a Canadian Commander with a U.S. Deputy which would cover most of Canada and the northern part of the Central United States.

The main argument for the first course is that we could continue to maintain the fiction of sovereignty; the main arguments for the second course are that it would be much sounder militarily and that we could hope to push the perimeter of air defence farther north so that in the event of war the main battle might be fought over the uninhabited rather than the settled areas of Canada; an important consideration if atomic weapons were employed as they likely would be.

4. I do not think that any action is likely during my absence but I thought that you should be warned of this in case anything should arise.

R.A. M[ACKAY]

<sup>30</sup> Non retrouvé./Not located.

315.

DEA/50209-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], June 14, 1955

CANADIAN DEFENCE COMMITMENTS IN NORTH AMERICA AND IN EUROPE

The situation which is arising out of the conflicting demands on our defence resources is very disturbing. On the one hand, the thermonuclear threat to North America is obliging us to devote ever larger sums of money and numbers of men to continental defence, and we have now reached the point where, unless we are prepared to obtain additional resources of men and money from some other source, we shall have to accept the necessity of handing over in increasing measure to the United States forces the effective control and manning of defences in our territory. Early warning lines are only the first and by no means the most difficult of these new continental requirements. We are daily learning of new projects which will involve the establishment and operation by the United States of additional defence facilities in Canada.

2. On the other hand, there is mounting evidence that the Soviet Government has embarked upon a determined campaign to bring about the withdrawal of North American forces from Western Europe, or from Germany initially, as the price for German reunification. The disruption or the serious weakening of the Atlantic alliance would be the probable result of Soviet success in this campaign, accompanied by renewed agitation for "Popular Front" governments in France and Italy.

3. It is doubtful that the present German Government would accept reunification on such terms at this stage; but it may be that an offer of reunification will be linked with some Soviet scheme for European "security" and disarmament. The proposals for a European Collective Security Pact made by Mr. Molotov at the last Four-Power meeting in February 1954 were flatly rejected by the Western ministers on the ground that they involved the dissolution of the Western security system while leaving intact the military power of the Soviet bloc in Europe. In the milder atmosphere induced by the new Soviet tactics, however, it may be difficult for European public opinion, and indeed for North American public opinion, to weigh such proposals dispassionately and to give NATO its due weight in the military defence of Western security.

4. In a situation of relative euphoria in Europe any major reduction in our defence commitments there would be likely to have political consequences out of all proportion to the size of the forces involved. By the Europeans it would be taken to signify a lessening interest on our part in the security of Western Europe; for the Americans it might provide an excuse to reduce their own forces overseas; from the point of view of NATO as a whole the withdrawal of any North American forces would entail the very weakening of the alliance which it is a major objective of Soviet policy to achieve.

5. Moreover, if there were to be a withdrawal of United States forces from Europe, this would not (in the absence of an international agreement radically changing and effectively controlling Soviet military capabilities) diminish the apprehension of a possible surprise atomic attack on North America. Indeed, the greater the North American withdrawal from Europe, the more Canada would represent if not the only at least the main buffer area between the United States and the Soviet Union; and in this continental isolation, American apprehensions would tend to lead for some time at least to ever-increasing demands upon us for further measures of defence. We would find ourselves locked in the embrace of the United States in a continental fortress of North America, bristling with atomic armament as its main means of defence. This situation could only be changed as a result of the acceptance of a fool-proof disarmament plan.

6. In handling specific current requests from the United States Government for facilities in or over Canadian territory or for Canadian participation in joint defence measures, we have been taking the position that Canada should at least have some part in continental defence measures, and should reserve the right in all cases to assume responsibilities for defence activities on our soil. If this approach to the handling of specific U.S. requests were pressed to the point where it would necessitate a substantial withdrawal of Canadian forces from Western Europe, it would be essential to examine very carefully the effects of such a course not only on Canada but on Western security as a whole.

7. This is one of the subjects which will be discussed during the first meetings with National Defence on our national security policy. Meanwhile, in view of the rapid and fluid developments in Europe during the next few months, I think it would be most unwise to suggest publicly or even to our NATO partners that Canada is considering the possibility of making major reductions in our defence commitments in Europe. The situation may be different in the near future but the few weeks ahead of us are crucial.

J. LÉGER

316.

DEA/50046-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 23, 1955

106TH MEETING OF CABINET DEFENCE COMMITTEE
SEPTEMBER 27, 1955

ITEM I: Progress of the CF-100 and CF-105 Programmes

The Department of National Defence has apparently learned that its CF-105 programme is in jeopardy, and as a tactical manoeuvre intends to report on both the CF-100 and 105 programmes, presumably as a means of pointing out their importance in the development of the air defence system for North America.

2. I wonder if you would not wish to take advantage of the review by Cabinet Defence Committee at its next meeting of the CF-100 and CF-105 Programmes, to bring out into the open some of the fundamental problems of continental air defence which we have brought to your attention from time to time in recent months and which are most pertinent to any decisions which may be taken by Ministers on the immediate problems of the CF-100 and CF-105 Programmes.

3. You will recall that some months ago the U.S. and Canadian Air Defence Commands reported to the Canada-U.S. Military Study Group on their plans for air defence up to 1960. After giving a detailed account of plans for new radar lines and elaborate communications systems in Canada, the report concluded with an analysis of the military advantages which would accrue if the present arrangement of "co-ordinated but separate" air defence commands were replaced by a "combined command". Subsequently, when the Canadian Chiefs of Staff were briefed on the Report by the Acting A.O.C. of the R.C.A.F. Air Defence Command, he expressed the belief that quite apart from the military logic of integration, if we did not move in that direction quickly there was a real danger that the U.S. air defence plan would develop primarily along national lines without regard for Canadian needs, and that the investment in fixed installations would rapidly make it rigid and difficult to modify later.

4. In spite of the arguments, both military and political, which point to the desirability of an urgent and serious study of the question, there seems to be a general reluctance to face up to it. The Canadian Chiefs of Staff have not discussed the matter since the A.D.C. report of last Spring. The United States Air Force Member of the P.J.B.D. made it plain that the U.S. Air Defence Commander was having so much difficulty in integrating the army and navy components of the U.S. air defence organization that he was not anxious, at this time, to superimpose the problems which would arise in developing a combined U.S.-Canadian Command. Dr. Hannah has said that, in any case, the United States did not wish to give any impression of pushing Canada on a matter of such political importance, and that any initiative would have to be taken by Canada.

5. D.L.(1) has recently received information, given on a personal basis by certain R.C.A.F. officers, which suggests that, as suspected, U.S. air defence planning is heading in the direction of the defence of the continental United States rather than including, except incidentally, the populated parts of Canada. As you know, we are now in an early phase of the transition from an air defence weapons system which places primary reliance on the manned fighter to one which will rely mainly on ground-to-air guided missiles. In the United States the installation of the first element of this new system is well advanced — the establishment of rings of NIKE missiles around large cities and key defence bases. The NIKE is a short range missile (about 25 miles) which takes the place of the anti-aircraft gun. This affects Canada because of the United States' desire to complete the defences of such border points as Detroit, Niagara, and Sault-Ste-Marie. We understand that the U.S. Army anti-aircraft commander raised this problem informally with General Simonds just before the latter's retirement. What further action will be taken remains to be seen.

6. Starting about 1959-1960, and perhaps earlier, two much longer-range missiles, known as TALOS and BOMARC, are due to come into operational use. TALOS has a range of about 100 miles, and we understand that the United States plans to put a ring of these around the major industrial regions. It is reported that the ring around the North East region would involve TALOS sites in Canada, perhaps at such locations as North Bay, Ottawa and Montreal. Indeed, it was said that this proposal was likely to be brought up in the P.J.B.D. in the near future.

7. The BOMARC missile has a range of about 250 miles and we understand that it is to have an atomic warhead. It is reported that the plan is to install a ring of these missiles right around the United States. The northern side of this ring would be just south of the 49th parallel, but the missiles would, of course, be fired at approaching hostile aircraft over Canada.

8. Both TALOS and BOMARC are dependent on heavy ground-control radar of the Pinetree type. It is clear, therefore, that the installation of an additional Pinetree-type chain in the vicinity of the Mid-Canada line is essential not only for fighter operations, but also any guided missile installations. In order to be ready at the same time as the missiles become available it would be necessary to start construction of the new radar and communications installations by 1956-57 at the latest.

9. As I mentioned earlier, much of the above information has been obtained on a personal basis without the official sanction of the R.C.A.F. One can never be sure to what extent schemes of this sort are merely the dreams of the planners, and in what measure they reflect officially approved intentions or policies. For this reason the Canadian Chiefs of Staff are reluctant to commit themselves to consideration of such schemes, or even to admit any knowledge of them, let alone bring them to the attention of the Government. On the other hand, the characteristics of both the manned fighter weapons systems and the guided missile systems which are due to come into service during the next five to eight years are sufficiently well-known to make the general pattern of development of air defence very clear. In my opinion Ministers should be made aware of this pattern, and of the very serious implications for Canada.

10. I suggest, therefore, that in the discussion on the CF-100 and CF-105, you might express the view that it is difficult to consider the fighter program out of context with the developing pattern of air defence over the next few years. Guided missiles, such as NIKE, TALOS and BOMARC will be coming into use before long, and American thinking and planning must surely envisage deploying them in, or firing them over Canada, and establishing the necessary control radar and communications. These facts would seem to be of critical importance to the Canadian Government. To what extent is Canadian planning taking these developments into account? Would it not be desirable to have the Chiefs of Staff prepare a report for an early meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee which would deal with this matter, and especially the following points:

(a) What is the probable pattern of development of the North American Air Defence System over the next 10 years, with particular reference to anticipated United States plans and requirements affecting Canada?

(b) How does the Canadian programme for the development of air defence weapons systems fit in with this over-all pattern, and are the Canadian and United States programmes sufficiently closely co-ordinated to ensure that their respective systems are compatible and make the best use of available resources.

(c) Are the Canadian and United States planning arrangements well enough co-ordinated to ensure that the weapons systems coming into use will be deployed with due regard to the protection of Canada as well as the United States?

(d) Is it considered that the present system of co-ordinated but separate air defence commands will continue to work satisfactorily as the new weapons systems come into use, and will it adequately protect Canadian interests if, as we understand, the concept is that the air battle will largely be fought over Canadian territory? If not, what are the alternatives and the factors affecting the timing of their consideration and possible adoption?

J. LIÉGER

317.

PCO

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 27, 1955

Present:

The Prime Minister (Mr. St-Laurent), in the Chair,
 The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe),
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson),
 The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson),
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris).
 The Secretary (Mr. Martin)
 The Military Secretary (Captain Lucas)
 The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes),
 The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice Admiral Mainguy),
 The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemon),
 The Chief of the General Staff (Lieutenant-General Graham),
 The Chairman, Defence Research Board (Dr. Solandt).
 The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
 The Deputy Minister of National Defence (Mr. Miller),
 The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Léger),
 The Deputy Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Golden),
 The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance (Mr. Deutsch).

I. CF105 DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

1. The Minister of National Defence recalled that at the 104th meeting held on March 3, 1955 the Committee had agreed to recommend a pre-production programme for 40 CF105 aircraft at an estimated cost of $191 million to be spread through 1954-1960 and a development tooling programme for 14 PS13 engines at a cost of $70 million to be spread from 1954-1958. The Committee also agreed that these programmes should be reviewed at appropriate stages and halted or abandoned if this were found necessary. The Cabinet subsequently approved these recommendations.

Since the 104th meeting of the Committee, developments had occurred which he thought he should bring to the attention of the members. The company undertaking these programmes — AVRO — had recently submitted a re-assessment of costs involving an additional $59 million. In the main this covered increased labour and raw material costs and additional engineering hours for the installation of the PS13 engine. In part, the revised figure was also due to an original under-estimation. Detailed studies were now being carried out to determine if some reduction might be achieved without seriously affecting the programmes.

Close attention was being paid to U.S. and U.K. developments in the fighter aircraft field with a view to determining whether any changes in the Canadian project would be justified. The U.S., for example, was making progress with its F102 and it was being closely compared with the CF105. A decision by the U.S.A.F. to modify its F101 long-range escort fighter to the all-weather role was also being examined. It was significant that the U.S. and the U.K. had recently drawn up requirements for an all-weather fighter closely similar to the CF105. It was proposed to investigate with the authorities in these countries what might usefully be done to avoid unnecessary duplication of effort and cost and to determine if what was being done in Canada could be fitted into these other two programmes in any way. Improvements in altitude performance and guided missile weapon capability for the CF100 were also being studied with the object of giving that aircraft more height capability against the future Russian bomber threat.

In the light of all these developments, he recommended that the CF105 development programme be re-appraised so that the Committee could consider it further before a decision was made respecting the increased costs now estimated.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, September 26, 1955, Document D16-55)†

2. Mr. Campney added that in the deterrent effort which included the warning lines and communications being constructed, the fighter element was vital. Particularly was this so as the northern part of North America came to assume greater significance in NATO. Any modern fighter aircraft was, however, extremely costly. Despite production difficulties encountered in the CF100, most people were probably thankful that we now had that aircraft. The RCAF was not at this time preparing to replace the F86, nor did it intend to acquire any bombers. As yet, progress in the missile field was slow. It appeared to him, therefore, that we must do our best in the fighter field to counter, as was our duty, the developing threat of Russian bombers. All the factors which he had mentioned seemed to make the suggested re-appraisal most desirable. In fact, plans should be reviewed every six months to keep abreast of developments.

3. The Minister of Defence Production said that his department had recently reviewed the costs of the whole programme and estimated that 40 pre-production aircraft plus 300 operational machines would come to just under $1 billion. Twenty-seven million dollars had already been paid out and even if the programme were to be abandoned at this stage a further $13 million would be required. Apart from the aircraft itself, it was understood that, except for one or two airfields, existing air strips were not long enough for the new machine. All of this was a colossal element in the defence budget as a whole. He would hope that a re-assessment could be made rapidly because his department was holding back payments on material and equipment.

4. During the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) In the proposed re-appraisal of the programme, Canada's air defence plans should be considered in relation to U.S. plans. How, for example, did Canadian air defence weapons fit in with U.S. weapons systems? What was the relationship of our system to the command structure? Would it be desirable to have a "combined command"? What effect would the development of ground-to-air missiles have on the CF105 programme? If the U.S. were to withdraw important defence elements back along the border, what would be the effect of such action on the CF105 programme, and what bearing would such action have on the system of command?

(b) When the pre-production programme had been approved earlier in the year, the Committee was advised that there would be a gap before the U.S. and the U.K. would have missiles available to deal with the Russian bomber threat, and during which a fighter of the CF105 type would meet a real need. Indeed, there was no certainty that suitable missiles would be available in time to counter advanced types of Russian bombers. It had to be recognized that the U.S. and U.K. would probably not procure equipment to fill this gap from outside their own countries. There was little possibility of these two nations participating in a combined development programme on the understanding that all three might produce their own machines. The cost of the programme in Canada was very large, although if it succeeded there was still a good possibility that the first aeroplane would fly early in 1958.

(c) The Chiefs of Staff had available now sufficient information to enable the Committee to be thoroughly briefed on the broad air defence plans for North America before reaching a decision on the increased cost of the CF105. There were five problems which would have a bearing on this briefing. They included the position of the CF105, improvements planned for the CF100, the inability of reserve squadrons to man all-weather fighters and the fact that this would create a serious gap in North American air defences, developments with respect to air-to-air missiles, and certain control and command problems. The briefing should include, insofar as possible, information as to what future weapons would likely become available. In this connection, it was observed that manned aircraft and guided missiles would together form part of the air defence systems and manned aircraft would not be abandoned entirely for some time in the future.

(d) In response to a question, it was stated that considerable information on the plans of U.S. forces was available now, although American intentions were not entirely clear yet. On the question of command structure, there had never been any suggestion that U.S. military authorities were dissatisfied. There had never been any proposal from them for a unified command but from the military point of view it was essential to have one control over a certain piece of air space.

(e) While Canadian authorities were generally aware of U.S. thinking, a recent substantial reduction in funds available to the U.S. Air Force had made the latter re-examine its overall plans for air defence. The U.S.A.F. was now considering a capabilities plan for 1959 based on such aircraft, missiles and other weapons as would be available at that time. There were indications that this plan, when completed, would look more like a scheme for the air defence of the U.S. than for North America. For example, it was understood that the plan involved a line of weapons firing guided missiles along the border. Such a weapon deployment would enable missiles fired from the U.S. to engage targets over a narrow strip of Canada. To a certain extent, any influence that could be exerted in the right direction on these plans depended on the contribution Canada was willing to make to the defence of North America. The U.S. was, rather belatedly, coming round to the view that since an air-tight defence of the whole continent was so expensive, the best that could be done was to create as great a hurdle as possible which the enemy would have to take into account and which would make him pay a severe penalty if he attacked.

(f) With respect to airfields for the CF105, it was pointed out that while one or two strips longer than those presently in existence at Toronto would be required for testing, for operational requirements it was not expected that the strips would need to be much longer than those for CF100's.

(g) The Department of Defence Production required instructions as soon as possible on whether the pre-production contract should be proceeded with. While the proposed re-appraisal of the programme was desirable, certain costs would have to be met during that period, although it would be possible to hold back some major expenditures for perhaps a few weeks. It was essential that the study proceed as rapidly as possible since the programme was approaching a most costly phase.

(h) The additional $59 million was an attempt to envisage everything over and above the original estimates that had been made. It might be possible to reduce this figure, but this was all predicated on the CF105 being successful. If there were any errors, the figure of $59 million would have to be revised. Even though difficulties had arisen, it appeared likely that the work on the PS13 would have some permanent value. Canada was well ahead of the U.S. and the U.K. on this type of engine and it was conceivable that the U.S. might buy the rights from AVRO to produce it.

5. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed that the R.C.A.F., together with representatives from the National Aeronautical Establishment, the Defence Research Board, the Departments of Defence Production and Finance, should re-appraise, in the light of the discussion, the development programmes for 40 CF105 aircraft and 14 PS13 engines, and report to the Committee within six weeks' time.

...

318.

DEA/50045-40

*Note du chef de la 1<sup>re</sup> Direction de liaison avec la Défense
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 2, 1955

REAPPRAISAL OF THE CF-105 DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

The meeting of the Chiefs of Staff yesterday, November 1, which you asked me to attend was marked by three significant developments in the reappraisal of the CF-105 programme preparatory to the submission of recommendations to the Cabinet Defence Committee:

(1) It was decided that the Chief of the Air Staff would brief the Ministers on the current and prospective developments in the continental air defence system, in the light of talks which he had in Washington at the end of last week.

(2) It was decided, at General Foulkes' suggestion, to revise substantially the draft memorandum to the Cabinet Defence Committee,<sup>31</sup> setting out more clearly the alternative courses which the Ministers will have to consider with the attendant "advantages", "disadvantages", and "risks" assumed, and also the budgetary implications of each course of action.

(3) Mr. Bryce has given me to understand that he is definitely in favour of continuing the CF-105 development programme, primarily because it would provide a high-quality manned interceptor, and thus reduce the risk of being outclassed by the new type carriers which the potential enemy might use in attacking North America.

2. At the beginning of the meeting, we were informed that Air Marshal Slemon and Dr. Solandt had visited Washington last Friday and Saturday, where they had a talk with Mr. Quarles, the Secretary of the Air Force, General Twining, the Chief of the Air Staff, and General Partridge, AOC, Continental Air Defence Command. In the light of these discussions, General Foulkes proposed that the Cabinet Defence Committee should be briefed orally by Air Marshal Slemon on the background information which the Ministers should have on the air defence system as it is today, including joint Canada-United States air defence plans and anticipated development in air defence in the future, so that they should be in a better position to consider the reappraisal of the CF-105 programme in its proper perspective. General Foulkes said that in particular Air Marshal Slemon's briefing should include an outline of the air defence system, the ground environment system, and, in particular, the prospective switch from reliance on manual methods to semi-automatic methods on control, known as SAGE; the new weapon trends include the use of atomic warheads and missiles.

<sup>31</sup> La version finale imprimée de cette note est jointe au document 320.

The final version of this memorandum is printed as an attachment to Document 320.

3. Air Marshal Slemon, in fact, had brought with him a prepared brief<sup>32</sup> which he read to the Chiefs. This brief had been prepared some six weeks ago. When comment was invited, I suggested that a clear distinction should be drawn between RCAF thinking, present Canada-U.S. air defence plans, and anticipated developments in the air defence system in the light of USAF thinking as it emerged from the briefing given to Air Marshal Slemon and Dr. Solandt in Washington. I also suggested that it should be made clear that the briefing was concerned with capabilities in outlining the nature and extent of the threat of air attack.

4. From the discussion, I gather these points will be taken into account in the preparation of the brief to be presented by Air Marshal Slemon. I also gather that the briefing in Washington did not bring to light anything very new. Inter-Service rivalry in the United States, particularly between the Army and the Air Force, on the future of missiles, makes it difficult to get a clear indication of the trend in Service planning in the United States as it concerns the introduction of various types of missiles into the air defence system. This, in turn, of course, affects planning of the radar control system, since apparently the radar requirements for the missile NIKE, which is an Army responsibility, are different from the radar requirements for the BOMARC and TALOS missiles, which are Air Force responsibilities.

5. One new, and obviously disturbing calculation emerged from the RCAF brief. According to their calculations, the number of thermo-nuclear weapons that would suffice to deal a knock-out blow to Canada would be something of the order of 40 or 50. Taking into account the number of aircraft the Soviet Union is capable of marshalling for an attack on North America, the RCAF estimates that something of the order of 95% attrition rate is necessary to ensure survival. While Air Marshal Slemon admitted that our defences could not be impregnable, the closer the joint continental air defence system was able to attain such an attrition rate against enemy attackers, the more likely it was to achieve its objective of protecting the population of this continent, its institutions, and enable us to carry on in the event of war. General Foulkes questioned the wisdom of using such figures which might throw doubt on the feasibility of ever attaining an effective defence of this continent. He suggested that, instead, the brief should bring out the point that the essential aim of air defence must be to avoid war by maintaining an adequate deterrent.

6. The RCAF brief brought out the fact that joint Canada-U.S. defence plans contemplated 18 interception squadrons in Canada as its share of 87 interception squadrons (manned) for North America. There was some discussion as to what the basis of sharing the responsibilities for air defence between Canada and the United States might be. Air Marshal Slemon recalled that the USAF had assumed the full burden for the offensive arms of the deterrent in the Strategic Air Command. It might, therefore, be expected that Canada would assume more than its proportion, say in the defensive arms of the deterrent. However, in discussions with the USAF, he had heard of no dissatisfaction of the share which Canada had assumed so far. However, he was not happy about the air defence plans for the future which were being worked out in Washington, particularly as regards the projected deployment of missile bases. The location of missiles on the Canada-U.S. border would have the effect of having atomic explosions take place over Canadian populated areas, including cities such as Edmonton, assuming that the range of the BOMARC missile, for instance, was of the order of 250 miles. As to the question of sharing the burden in the future, Air Marshal Slemon threw out the suggestion that Canada should assume responsibility for manning the squadrons envisaged in the joint plans (i.e., 18); while the United States should assume a relatively greater proportion of the capital costs required for the developing ground environment radar system. The United States would also, presumably, bear the costs for the development programmes involved in missilery. Mr. Miller, in this connection, recalled that in the development of the PINETREE project a rough division of capital costs were on a 2/3-1/3 basis.

<sup>32</sup> Non retrouvé./Not located.

7. How much of all this will go into the brief of the CAS, I do not know, but Mr. Bryce agrees with me that this will be the first time that the Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet Defence Committee will have been exposed to some of the problems of the air defence of North America and of the many difficulties which lie just ahead. I should imagine that Air Marshal Slemon will also be exposed to some pretty searching questions. Mr. Bryce threw out the suggestion that Mr. Gardner especially might be invited to attend this meeting.

8. As regards the revision of the draft memorandum to the Cabinet Defence Committee, General Foulkes made the general criticism that the alternative courses of action put forward in the Air Force draft had two main defects: (a) that they might delay rather than produce a decision by the Cabinet; and (b) that they did not clearly set out the budgetary implications of various possible courses of action, particularly as they would affect the other Services.

9. General Foulkes circulated, what he called, a "plot" of the alternative courses which might be recommended to Cabinet (not attached). You will observe that each course of action includes paragraphs on the "advantages", "disadvantages", "risks", and budgetary implications for the next seven years. The CAS was also asked, with the assistance of Mr. Miller, to clarify certain apparent discrepancies in the figures contained in the draft memorandum. It was agreed that a revised draft memorandum would be submitted for a further consideration by the Chiefs of Staff next Thursday, November 3, at a meeting to which you are invited, at 2:30 P.M. in the Chairman's Office.

10. After the meeting, I walked back to the East Block with Mr. Bryce, and in conversation he made it clear to me that he personally is in favour of the CF-105 development programme. As far as he is concerned, the question as presented is primarily a choice between quality versus quantity. In other words, in his judgment the CF-105 and the PS-13 engines are outstanding technical achievements which should not be sacrificed unless we are to run the risk of being outclassed in our interceptors in the period before we are in a position to rely more completely on an unmanned defence weapon system primarily based upon the BOMARC, supported by, what is called, a "sophisticated" ground environment radar system.

11. Mr. Bryce, apparently, is not happy about the idea of relying too heavily on U.S. types of manned interceptors, nor upon what might prove to be a premature reliance on unmanned weapons. Moreover, we were told at yesterday's meeting that a group of U.S. officers had been visiting the A.V. Roe Company and expressed particular interest in the PS-13 engine as a means of meeting the decided weakness in suitable jets in the United States. Mr. Bryce's mind seems to be turning to the possibility of lightening the financial burden on Canada if we were to proceed with the CF-105 development programme by having the engine, at least, sold to the United States, thereby reducing the overhead of the cost of the development programme.

12. Summing up my impressions of this meeting, it seems to me that the presentation of the CF-105 question, when it reaches Cabinet, will have received a far more searching and thorough examination than I, for one, had realized had been given to it. There is no agreement between the respective Chiefs at this stage, primarily because of the financial impact which the development programme, such its mounting expenditures, would have on their respective services. Air Marshal Slemon tried to meet the concern of the other two Chiefs by assuring them that, at the worst, the total cost required to meet the expanding needs of the RCAF is of the order of twice the present Air Force budget. However, the other Chiefs were not reassured, since that would absorb the remainder of the defence budget if the present ceiling is maintained.

13. In the light of the foregoing, I submit for your consideration:

(a) That this Department need not be as concerned as it has been to date with ensuring that the CF-105 question should be presented to the Ministers within the perspective of broader problems of Canada-U.S. air defence, since this is fully realized and provided for in the plans currently under consideration by the Chiefs;<sup>33</sup>

(b) that the meeting on Thursday will be primarily devoted to reconciling the views of the respective Chiefs of Staff, and we need not take an active part;<sup>34</sup> and

(c) that it might be desirable to reconsider the idea of submitting a memorandum to the Prime Minister on this question, bearing in mind that Mr. Bryce has certain definite views on the subject which I have reported above. You may wish to discuss with him the question of briefing the Prime Minister after the meeting next Thursday.<sup>35</sup>

G. IGNATIEFF

<sup>33</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Happy development [Jules Léger]

<sup>34</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I agree [Jules Léger]

<sup>35</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Let us consult further on this after this afternoon's meeting. Thanks [Jules] L[éger].

319.

PCO

Procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité du Cabinet sur la défense
Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 8, 1955

Present:

The Prime Minister, (Mr. St-Laurent), in the Chair,
 The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe),
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney),
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris).

Also Present:

The Minister of Labour, (Mr. Gregg),
 The Minister of Public Works, (Mr. Winters),
 The Minister of Veterans Affairs and Postmaster General, (Mr. Lapointe),
 The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, (Mr. Lesage),
 The Minister of Transport, (Mr. Marler).
 The Secretary (Mr. Martin),
 The Military Secretary (Captain Lucas).
 The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, (General Foulkes),
 The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemon),
 The Vice-Chief of the General Staff (Major-General Sparling),
 The Vice-Chief of the Naval Staff (Rear Admiral Lay),
 The Chairman, Defence Research Board, (Dr. Solandt),
 The Vice-Chairman, Defence Research Board, (Mr. Zimmerman).
 The Secretary to the Cabinet, (Mr. Bryce),
 The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, (Mr. Léger),
 The Deputy Minister of National Defence, (Mr. Miller),
 The Deputy Minister of Defence Production, (Mr. Golden),
 Mr. R.G. MacNeil, (Department of Finance).

I RE-APPRAISAL OF THE CF105 DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

1. The Minister of National Defence referred to the discussion of this subject at the previous meeting and said that, since then, the Air Force, other departments concerned and the Chiefs of Staff had made a thorough review of the CF105 development programme. Before dealing with the paper<sup>36</sup> which had been circulated and examining the courses of action suggested, it would be extremely useful if the Chief of the Air Staff were to brief the Committee, and members of the Government present, and provide them with the background information which had led to the original recommendation for the acquisition of the CF105. This aeroplane would form an integral part of the air defence programme. Its introduction and the facilities required for it to operate at all successfully would have a great bearing on the future of the R.C.A.F., on our coordinated air defence arrangement with the U.S., on any future guided missile programme, and on our role in NATO. It would affect seriously not only the expenditures in his department but the expenditures of the government as a whole. To assist in coming to a conclusion on this complicated matter he had sent the Chief of the Air Staff and the Chairman of the Defence Research Board to Washington to get the latest U.S. views on air defence problems generally, including missile development and the establishment of a suitable ground environment for the most effective defence of North America. The U.S. authorities had been most helpful. They had provided all the relevant information available to them and given an indication of their thinking on future developments in these fields.

<sup>36</sup> Voir la pièce jointe au document 320/See attachment to Document 320.

2. The Chief of the Air Staff said that in the studies which had been undertaken an effort had been made to keep as close as possible to those factors which were strictly related to the development and production of this aircraft and, in the light of these, to determine whether or not the large amounts of money involved were justified. However, it had been found that a large number of important related considerations had to be examined before it was possible to reach a conclusion as to whether or not the CF105 programme should be continued. As a result of his recent visit to Washington he felt, for the first time, that the U.S. authorities really regarded Canada as a true partner and an equal in the joint defence efforts being made. He had returned satisfied that at least his thinking with respect to the character of the Soviet threat and the manner in which this might be countered, was shared by the U.S. authorities.

The Threat

Until three years ago, allied intelligence sources did not think the Soviets were technically or administratively capable of putting forth the same effort in the air as the U.S. Recent developments, however, had forcibly brought home the fact that the Russians were just as advanced technologically and otherwise as the democracies. It had therefore been decided that, for planning purposes at least, the Russians would be given credit for just as effective a capability as the Western world.

At present the air threat to North America consisted mainly of the TU4 aircraft, known as the BULL, of which there were 800 in existence. The CF100 had been designed to deal with this type of attacker. The TU4 would continue in operation until 1961 but it would be gradually replaced by a number of jet aircraft known as BADGERS, BISONS and BEARS during that period. By that time, it was estimated Russia would have 400 BADGERS, 725 BISONS and a large number of BEARS, all of which could penetrate well into North America and return to base. Their altitudes ranged between 42,000 and 57,000 feet, but the present all-weather jet, the CF100, could fight effectively only up to 42,000 feet. After the BADGER, BEAR and BISON would come an aircraft of the HUSTLER-HORNET variety, which would be in use in the U.S. by 1962. It could travel up to Mach 1.5 and reach a height of 70,000 feet. It would be capable of carrying a guided missile which would travel at Mach 3.5 a further 100 miles after release. Since it would not be possible to deal with the missile, the aircraft would have to be disposed of beforehand. Following the HUSTLER-HORNET, it was expected that there would be a true supersonic bomber by about 1963 or 1964. All of these were manned threats.

About 1965 it was thought that the Russians would be able to introduce an unmanned bomber or guided missile similar to the NAVAHO travelling at a speed of Mach 2.5. Then would come the ultimate weapon — the intercontinental ballistic missile. Some of the U.S. authorities guessed that this latter weapon would arrive by 1965 but he thought it more likely in 1970.

All aircraft and missiles of which he had spoken could carry an atomic or nuclear weapon with a yield of 10 megatons.

Air Defence System

To meet the threat described, an effective air defence system, capable of refinement from time to time, was required. Such a system, to be at all successful, depended on adequate warning. The first form of warning was strategic. This would come from intelligence sources, some of which kept a particularly close eye on activity on enemy bases. How successful strategic warning would be was a matter of conjecture, but it was to be hoped that some indication of enemy intentions could be received before large-scale bombing missions were actually launched. The second type of warning was tactical, to be obtained when attackers penetrated the North American air defence system. This tactical warning would come from the DEW Line and its sea wings, the Mid-Canada Line and the Pinetree radar chain. The final location of the Eastern sea wing had not yet been settled but it was hoped that it would extend from Frobisher across Greenland to the Azores. These two wings involved a tremendous effort on the part of the U.S. Their cost in money, equipment and manpower was not yet fully known.

In the operation of an air defence system proper there were four distinct elements — detection, identification, interception and destruction. The first three depended largely on radars with their communication networks, control and command centres. Destruction was at present the function of the manned aircraft but without the first three elements in the system it could not be too effective. When an unidentified aircraft penetrated North America the whole warning system was alerted. Every possible means was used to identify the intruder. If it did not appear to be friendly, fighters were immediately put into the air. The take-off and positioning of these defending aircraft were assisted by ground radars until the defenders themselves got within range of the intruders.

At present our air defence system was developed to the point where it would be difficult for an aircraft to pose as a friendly one for very long. This system, however, was in large measure manually operated and its success depended on individuals. It was a subsonic system, but soon it would be necessary to make it completely automatic to cope with supersonic threats. This would be costly, intricate and highly technical. Two such systems were under development in the U.S. — one called BADGE which enabled one station to handle 200 tracks and 100 interceptions and the other more completely automatic, called SAGE, could handle 400 tracks and 200 interceptions. The cost of the latter was many times greater than BADGE.

Joint Canada-U.S. Planning

At present plans for the defence of Canada and the U.S. were initially evolved by the two Air Defence Commands with the planning itself taking place at the U.S. Air Defence Command at Colorado Springs, to which a small Canadian group was attached. These plans were, of course, subject to the approval of the government authorities in each country. It could be said that the system was an integrated one. It was satisfactory for present conditions but it would be necessary to put the machinery on a more formal basis in the near future.

Detailed Air Defence System for Canada and the U.S.

The planners had developed an air defence system which involved the following establishments, some of which were in existence at the present time:

- the DEW, Mid-Canada and Pinetree radar systems, together with the Atlantic and Pacific sea wings;
- 18 fighter bases in Canada, 60 fighter bases in continental U.S., 6 fighter bases in Alaska, 3 fighter bases in Newfoundland;
- 26 additional manned radar stations in Canada, 191 manned radar stations in the U.S., 21 in Alaska, 3 in Greenland, Texas towers<sup>37</sup> and picket ships off both coasts of the U.S.;

<sup>37</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 486.

- 123 unmanned gap filler radar stations in Canada and 423 unmanned gap filler stations in the U.S.

The R.C.A.F. felt it was only necessary to have 13 additional radars in Canada for the immediate future. The other 13 might come along at a later date. The maximum range of this equipment was 250 miles but much depended on the nature of the countryside in which each station was located. It was to be noted that some of them were proposed for locations on the Mid-Canada line. This was not a duplication of effort, since the main radars provided cover farther north than the Dopplers on the Mid-Canada line and would assist in control of the air battle. They did not provide detection from the ground up. This was the function of the Dopplers on the Mid-Canada line which could detect objects from the surface of the earth up to at least 70 or 80 thousand feet. Both complemented each other. Furthermore, the mid-Canada line would be in existence some time before these further heavy radars.

The manning of the 26 heavy radars would involve approximately 14,000 additional personnel, whereas about 400 were needed for the 123 gap fillers. It was believed that the U.S. had budgeted for this added coverage in their financial planning.

Of the 18 air defence bases, 5 were operational at the present time; 9 others were in existence, but a good deal of work would be required to make them fully operational; 4 new ones would have to be constructed. The Air Force had in its mind, at least, eliminated 3 from the 18 suggested by the planners, on cost grounds and because the greatest emphasis on air defence had, thus far, been placed in the areas in which these would be located. These three were at Seven Islands, Chatham and Halifax. The latter might be manned by the Navy although its capability would be limited. Protection from an attack from the Northeast was not too unsatisfactory now.

Air Marshal Slemon indicated where the possible intercept line would be situated and the air battle occur. This line dictated where the radars and the defence bases should be and was, it was hoped, sufficiently far north to prevent the launching of bombs or missiles from aircraft over the more heavily inhabited areas of the U.S. and Canada. It would remain more or less in the same location as the speeds of both the attacking and defending machines increased. While it was desirable to achieve as much defence in depth as possible, there was a limit to what could be done. The farther radars and other bases were moved northward, the greater the cost. Another point of interest was that the greater the defence in depth, the greater was the benefit to the U.S.

Possible Missile Development

Air Marshal Slemon described briefly a number of the guided missiles under development in the U.S., the most important of which were BOMARCS "A" and "C", TALOS and NIKE. BOMARC "C" would have a range of 250 miles with an atomic warhead, a capability up to 50,000 feet and a speed of Mach 2.7. It would be effective against a threat with a speed somewhat in excess of Mach 2.5. It was dependent for its operation on the type of heavy manned radars he had already described. The same kind of control machinery could be employed as would be used for the CF105. BOMARC "C" was supposed to come into operation in the U.S. in 1961. Its estimated operational use in Canada was 1962 but he thought the date might be somewhat later than that. TALOS was a shorter range weapon useful against a threat with a speed up to Mach 2. NIKE was already well advanced. It had a range of 50 miles and was a good air defence weapon as far as it went, but it had limited uses in Canada. When BOMARC "C" was available it was contemplated that it would be substituted for manned aircraft, although probably both would be in operation for a period together, with the latter gradually being phased out of the system as time went on.

Type of Fighter Aircraft Required

The selection of the appropriate type of fighter aircraft for the threat envisaged depended on a number of factors. The range was calculated on the distance between bases, the distance between the outer fringe of radar cover and the base deployed furthest from that coverage, the speed of the target and detection, identification, tracing and scrambling times. The U.S. were attempting to develop a fighter with a good range and at the same time some ability to loiter in the area of the probable battle. Other factors to be kept in mind in choosing a fighter were the amount of fuel to be carried, the radar equipment to go into it and the weapons with which it would be armed.

Our present fighters were equipped with .50 calibre guns and rockets. These were adequate for the existing threat but they were not lethal enough for the future. It was proposed therefore that they be replaced by missiles to be guided onto the target by radars or infra-red devices within the weapons themselves. Two such missiles presently being developed were the FALCON and the SPARROW. The FALCON weighed approximately 150 lbs., was about 7 feet long and carried an HE warhead. The SPARROW was larger, weighed approximately 350 lbs. and could carry an HE or atomic warhead. The U.S. was working on the development of a much larger missile which it was hoped would deal with mass raids. The CF105 was being designed to carry all three.

Air Marshal Slemon emphasized that it was impossible to create an impregnable air defence system. The best that could be expected was the development of a deterrent, as efficient as possible, which the enemy would have to take into account in his plans if he hoped to carry out a successful attack. This was tremendously expensive and how far the Air Force felt it could go in recommending such expenditures was a very difficult question of judgment. The U.S. had not in the past had too much regard for the financial problem but now they were becoming much more conscious of the full impact of the costs involved. Both the U.S. and, to a lesser extent, the U.K. were carrying a great burden through their contributions to the deterrent of the Strategic Air Force and Bomber Command. The development of bomber and fighter aircraft involved the design and planning of a large number of machines, many of which never got beyond the drawing board stage. The U.S., for example, had 44 and the U.K. approximately 24 aircraft under design at the present time. In Canada there was only one — the CF105 — and possibly two if the BRITANNIA<sup>38</sup> was included.

3. The Prime Minister asked Air Marshal Slemon to describe some of the characteristics of the proposed CF105.

4. Air Marshal Slemon produced an illustration and a model of the CF105. It was a big aircraft. It would be capable of carrying in its belly 8 FALCONS, 4 SPARROWS or one of the big weapons which the U.S. was developing for mass raids. It was designed for supersonic missions and could fly at approximately Mach 2. Speeds in excess of that might create a serious over-heating problem.

It had been thought originally that the U.S. Pratt and Whitney engine, the J75, would be used to power the airframe, but meanwhile AVRO had developed the PS13 which looked as though it would be a better piece of equipment. The U.S. had a real need for an engine similar to the PS13, but whether or not engines made in Canada would be bought was exceedingly doubtful. The PS13 was being developed for a 20,000-lb. thrust and it might go up to 25,000 lbs. So far it had been run to produce a thrust of 15,000 lbs. and, except for one serious complication, which had been overcome, development was going ahead satisfactorily. The aircraft was scheduled to fly in 1957 but he felt that everything must go well if this target date was to be achieved. The pre-production programme had called for 40 aircraft and he expected that if this was followed about one-half of these might enter into squadron service. While there was a difference of opinion on possible performance amongst those who had studied the programme carefully, the range of views was within limits which the R.C.A.F. considered acceptable. The U.S. technical experts were satisfied that development at this stage was as good as could be expected in a new aircraft.

<sup>38</sup> Un appareil de conception canadienne pour le transport de troupes et de marchandises.
A Canadian-designed troop and cargo transport.

The range of the aircraft itself depended on the mission which it might perform. At subsonic speeds, it could travel up to 350 miles away from its base and return, and up to at least 200 miles at supersonic speeds. Ranges could be boosted if other needs were sacrificed. The studies made so far indicated that what the Air Force had requested in this type of machine was a requirement for the air defence of North America. Comparisons had been made with the only other type of aircraft which might be suitable for similar missions — the U.S. F102B — and the Air Force had come to the conclusion that money could best be spent on the CF105. In certain respects the performance of the F102B was similar to the CF105, but in others it was quite different. The U.S. authorities had confirmed that the CF105 was not to be compared with the F102B in the light of the R.C.A.F.'s operational requirements. The F102B would, however, fly some time next year.

At the request of the Minister of National Defence, the U.S. had recently sent a team to AVRO to re-assess the whole CF105 development programme. It was expected that their views on this would be available shortly.

5. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) Attacking bombers were not likely to carry air-to-air missiles to ward off defending aircraft. The former depended for their security on speed and altitude. As far as was known at the moment there were no air-to-air missiles on Russian bombing aircraft. Their only armament was guns in their tails. Generally it seemed unlikely that bombers would be heavily armed.

(b) In making the re-assessment of the CF105, consideration was given to the fact that the F102B was in a more advanced stage of development than the CF105. So far Canada had been fortunate in its aircraft development programmes. If it failed on the one under discussion which involved such a large expenditure, criticism would be most severe. However, the CF105 could profit from the mistakes made on the U.S. F102B.

(c) The question was asked what relationship the CF105 and other defence developments in North America had to the air defence of Europe. In reply the view was expressed that the Europeans were coming to the realization that the security of North America was of just as great significance to them as it was to North America. However, the meeting of NATO Defence Ministers in October was disturbing on some counts.<sup>39</sup> There appeared to be a lack of the necessary energy and initiative to proceed with the most urgent measures, for example, an adequate warning system, required for the defence of Europe. There was a feeling in certain quarters in Europe that to meet added air defence burdens further assistance would be required from North America. However, if Canada undertook the CF105 programme and other related measures which had been described, it would be difficult to continue to give assistance to overseas countries either through mutual aid or otherwise on the scale which had been previously undertaken.

<sup>39</sup> Voir/See Document 217.

(d) The requirements for air defence in Europe were different from those in North America. The BADGER-BEAR-BISON types of aircraft were designed presumably for long-range operations against North America and not for attacks in Europe. What was needed to protect the European countries of the NATO alliance was a system of missiles fired to points beyond NATO borders. However, a shield of ground forces protected and supported by tactical air forces would still be necessary. In effect, there was no proper integrated air defence of Europe at the present time. SACEUR was struggling with this problem but was faced with great difficulties since many countries, particularly the U.K., did not wish to dedicate their air forces to an overall Air Defence Commander.

(e) If there was a wavering in Europe and an unwillingness to provide necessary air defences, would the U.S. and Canada be called upon for more assistance? To this it was said that the NATO authorities had been advised that Canada's mutual aid contributions could be expected to decrease. Nevertheless it was quite possible, for example, that we would be pressed to alter the role of the Air Division and provide it with more squadrons of all-weather fighters.

6. The Committee noted the briefing given by the Chief of the Air Staff on air defence problems and the subsequent discussion, and agreed to consider in detail at an early meeting the CF105 development programme.

W.R. MARTIN

Secretary

F.W.T. LUCAS

Captain, R.C.N.
Military Secretary

320.

DEA/50046-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

Ottawa, November 10, 1955

108TH MEETING OF CABINET DEFENCE COMMITTEE

10.30 A.M., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1955

ITEM I: RE-APPRAISAL OF THE CF-105 DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME<sup>40</sup>

You will recall that, at its 106th Meeting on September 26, the Cabinet Defence Committee agreed that the RCAF, with appropriate assistance, should re-appraise the development programme for 40 CF-105 aircraft and 14 PS-13 engines and report back to the Committee within six weeks.

2. An ad hoc interdepartmental committee was set up under the chairmanship of the Chief of the Air Staff, and I attended some of its meetings. (The membership of the committee and its working groups is contained at tab 2 in the attached Memorandum to the Cabinet Defence Committee.) The technical problems relating to the CF-105 programme

<sup>40</sup>Note marginale /Marginal note:

We are embarking on a CF105 program which [the] USA feels they do not need for continental defence [L.B. Pearson] were examined in detail by the working groups, as will be apparent from the report to the ad hoc committee commencing with tab 3 in the Memorandum to the Cabinet Defence Committee.

3. In addition Air Marshal Slemon and Dr. Solandt visited Washington on October 28 and 29, where they talked with Mr. Quarles, the Secretary of the Air Force, General Twining, the Chief of the Air Staff, and General Partridge, Commanding General of Continental Air Defence command. The information which they obtained about U.S. plans and trends in continental air defence formed part of the briefing by the CAS of which the 107th Meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee on November 8 consisted. Attached is a memorandum† containing an outline of this briefing as it was presented to Mr. Campney on November 7, in preparation for the Cabinet Defence Committee meeting the following day.

4. I suggest that you read in particular Mr. Campney's cover Memorandum to Cabinet Defence Committee (3 pages), together with Addendum 1 (9 pages). They were worked out in draft at two Chiefs of Staff Committee meetings on November 1 and 3. The cover Memorandum lists three possible main courses of action — "A", "B" and "C" — and agrees in principle with the most expensive, Course "C": to improve the high altitude capability of the CF-100 and equip it with an air-to-air missile; to proceed with the CF-105 aircraft and engine programme; and to incorporate into the air defence system surface-to-air guided missiles (Bomarc) as soon as their development makes this possible. Addendum 1 contains a comparison of the estimated costs of the three main courses, and of three possible modifications to them, to assist with the further consideration of the problem which it is recognized is necessary.

5. The re-appraisal of the CF-105 programme has been thorough and has been related to the probable development of the air defence system of North America as a whole over the next few years, as this Department hoped it would be. A good case has been made on military grounds for proceeding with the CF-105, and with the rest of the proposed air defence programme. However, I suggest that it is important to recognize that acceptance of this case may have important foreign policy implications.

(1) Mutual Aid

If the ceiling on defence expenditures is to be maintained at approximately its present level, and the army and navy are not to experience heavy cuts, our contribution to NATO Mutual Aid, including the aircrew training programme, will probably be affected. Certainly National Defence is thinking along the lines of downward revision of our contribution.

(2) European Defence Commitments

If a larger share of the defence dollar is devoted to continental air defence, our other European defence commitments (in addition to Mutual Aid) may have to be substantially reduced.

Whether (1) and (2) can be justified in terms of the broader considerations — political and military — of Canadian security, cannot be determined without examining the Canadian defence programme as a whole in terms of both political and military considerations. This leads one inevitably to the conclusion that no satisfactory decision can be made on the air defence segment of the defence programme, and on the CF-105 portion of this segment in particular, without referring to their implications for the defence programme as a whole, including the important political considerations concerned with Canada's relations with its allies. This points to the necessity of going ahead without further delay with the projected national security policy study.

(3) Defence Relations with the U.S.

The CF-105 programme raises the whole problem of the basis on which our air defences are at present planned and co-ordinated with the United States. The programme will only make sense if it fits into an overall air defence plan, which takes Canadian interests fully into account.

At present, as you know, there is, in effect, no unified air defence concept. Although there is some joint planning, principally through the Continental Air Defence Command, it is on the basis of no commitments to the respective governments and subject, in particular, to the implicit understanding that, roughly, the present ceilings apply to the availability of manpower and funds. Moreover, considerations of national autonomy have made us reluctant to pursue the problems of a Unified Command, which would be a necessary corollary of a Unified Air Defence system.

I submit that it is a matter requiring consideration, whether the current limits governing joint planning of air defence are capable of producing an air defence programme which can provide an adequate insurance against the risks of air attack on Canada, bearing in mind that our defence interests will not be provided for in U.S. plans and arrangements, except in so far as we constitute, because of geographical location, a peripheral area of the U.S. air defence system.

(4) Increased Rigidity in our Foreign Policy

Adoption of the National Defence recommendations implies that a large portion of the defence expenditures of Canada over the next 10 years will be committed to an enlarged programme of continental air defence, against the possibility of a hot war, at a time when Soviet tactics are fluid and are concentrating on cold peace manoeuvres. This defence commitment will inevitably produce a rigidity in our approach to foreign policy questions at a time when we need to be increasingly flexible if we are to provide effective answers to changes in Soviet tactics. To be more specific, it will, for example, be more difficult than ever to obtain approval for increases in our contributions to such measures of international cooperation as the Colombo Plan, even though our appreciation of the international situation clearly calls for such increases.

J. LIÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Note du ministre de la Défense nationale
pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Memorandum from Minister of National Defence to Cabinet Defence Committee

CABINET DOCUMENT D22-55

Ottawa, November 4, 1955

TOP SECRET

REAPPRAISAL OF THE CF105 DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

1. At the 106th meeting on 27 September, the Committee agreed that the RCAF, together with representatives from the National Aeronautical Establishment, the Defence Research Board, and the Departments of Defence Production and Finance should reappraise the development programme for 40 CF105 aircraft and 14 PS13 engines.

2. Accordingly an ad hoc interdepartmental committee was organized with membership as charted in Addendum 2.† The National Aeronautical Establishment participated only in the reappraisal of the aerodynamic design. This interdepartmental committee has considered reports of a number of working groups set up to examine various elements of this reappraisal. These reports are attached as Addendum 3, to which are attached Appendices "A" to "F" inclusive.

3. All studies indicate that the variation of opinion concerning the technical soundness of design of the CF105 lies within limits which are quite normal at this stage of development for a new aircraft. Even the most pessimistic estimates indicate that the aircraft will meet the manned bomber threat which will persist throughout the life of the CF105, and show also that it will be superior in performance to any comparable aircraft being developed by the United States or the United Kingdom and, furthermore, that its degree of superiority is essential in the light of the threat.

4. It has been brought out clearly that the development of the CF105 is a part of a much larger problem involving a great many factors and considerations, some of the more important being:

(a) the need to extend and improve the ground/air radar control coverage in Canada, in order to keep abreast of the developing air threat, and the introduction of a system of automatic data processing to cope with the volume of high speed fighter interceptions;

(b) the need to develop further and utilize to the fullest possible extent the potential of the CF100; and

(c) the need to introduce long-range surface-to-air guided missiles (Bomarc) into the air defence system, as soon as that type of weapon becomes available.

5. From the results of the studies of the working groups, there emerged three alternative courses of action:

Course "A". Abandon the further development of the CF105 and shrink our development effort to the improving of the high altitude capability of the CF100 aircraft and equipping it with an air-to-air missile, thus placing our dependence upon being able to get into effective operation a long-range surface-to-air guided missile system (Bomarc) soon enough and with enough reliability.

Course "B". To improve the CF100 aircraft as mentioned in "A" above; to drop the CF105 aircraft and engine development programme; and to introduce in its place the USAF F102B manned interceptor as an interim measure to cover the period until a surface-to-air guided missile (Bomarc) system becomes available and can be put into operation.

Course "C". To improve the CF100 as mentioned in "A" above; to proceed with the CF105 aircraft and engine programme; and to incorporate into the air defence system surface-to-air guided missiles (Bomarc) as soon as their development makes this possible.

6. The ad hoc interdepartmental committee considered that the weight of evidence indicates that:

(a) Course "A" involves an unacceptably high risk.

(b) Course "B" is unacceptable for a variety of reasons, the chief of which are that the USAF F102B aircraft is not a sufficiently long step forward and that this course of action would mean abandoning at considerable cost the very considerable advantage we have already gained in the CF105 aircraft and engine project.

(c) Course "C" has the greatest attraction since it will narrow the gap in the combined U.S. and Canadian air defence system during the period in which guided missiles are being introduced. This course of action makes best use of the heavy investment which has already been made in both the CF100 and the CF105 programmes, and since it backs up the American development effort as well as filling a gap therein, it is therefore an essential contribution to our common defence efforts.

7. To the extent that the CF105 development project, which is not duplicated in either the United Kingdom or the United States, adds to the total strength of NATO, it is regarded as an addition to the deterrent and hence as a contribution to the preservation of peace.

8. The Chiefs of Staff have considered the report of the ad hoc interdepartmental committee, and they concur in the conclusion of the studies shown in the appendices and agree in principle with the recommendations made in para. 6 above. However it was recalled that when authority was given for this development programme, the Cabinet made it clear that "the expenditures for this purpose were to be made from defence estimates presently contemplated for the next few years". Therefore the Chiefs of Staff agree that further consideration should be given to the cost of each of these recommendations and the impact of their acceptance on the defence budget over the next five years. It is considered that it is not practicable to make recommendations on the development of the CF105 and the PS13 engine without taking into consideration the requirements of the Navy and the Army and other relevant air defence projects which may be a charge against the defence budget during this same period; namely,

- (a) the improvement of the CF100 and the introduction of the Sparrow guided missile;
- (b) the introduction of a system of automatic data processing and the provision of additional radar coverage;
- (c) the additional regular squadrons of all-weather fighters required to replace the auxiliary squadrons now found to be unsuitable for the immediate air defence role;
- (d) the introduction of long-range guided missiles into the air defence system; and
- (e) improvements and additions to the air defence base complex to provide a total of 15 bases.

9. Therefore it was decided to prepare as a basis for discussion several alternative courses, together with estimated costs, which could be considered in arriving at a solution to this problem. The various courses and a rough approximation of the cost are attached as Addendum 1. It should be noted in considering these various alternatives, the following projects will require consideration irrespective of the decision which is taken regarding the future type of aircraft to be used in the air defence system:

- (a) an improved ground/air radar control coverage; and
- (b) the introduction of automatic data processing.

These projects are of a joint nature which will serve the USAF as well as the RCAF, and it might be possible to give consideration to a scheme of joint financing as was agreed in the case of "Pinetree" and the early warning system.

[R.O. CAMPNEY]

[ADDENDUM 1]

TOP SECRET

REAPPRAISAL OF CF105 DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

ALTERNATIVE COURSES OF ACTION

1. From the results of the studies of the working groups which carried out a reappraisal of the development programme for the CF105 supersonic long range all-weather intercept tor, there emerged three alternative courses of action, "A", "B" and "C", as discussed hereunder.

MEASURES COMMON TO ALL COURSES OF ACTION

2. Certain measures which are common to all three courses of action, and which are costed separately at the outset, are:

(a) The improvement and extension of the ground/air radar control coverage. This involves 26 additional heavy radars and 123 gap filler radars.

(b) The introduction of a system of automatic data processing, to cope with the volume of high speed fighter interceptions.

3. Cost Analysis

Requirement	Total Cost ($ Millions)	Annual Expenditure
		56/57	57/58	58/59	59/60	60/61
26 Heavy Radars (Appendix A-Para.5)	459.0	12.0	77.0	137.0	160.0	53.0
123 Gap Fillers (Appendix A-Para.5)	75.0	1.0	5.0	9.0	14.0	15.0
TOTAL CAPITAL (Radar)	534.0	13.0	82.0	146.0	174.0	68.0
Data Processing System (Addendum 3-Para.4(c))	333.0	—	5.0	25.0	42.0	53.0
TOTAL CAPITAL	867.0	13.0	87.0	171.0	216.0	121.0
ANNUAL RECURRING		5.0	16.0	33.0	60.0	81.0
GRAND TOTAL		18.0	103.0	204.0	276.0	202.0

Impact on Defence Budget

4. For effective operation the USAF require the additional 26 heavy radars and 123 gap fillers over Canada and have, it is understood, included them in their programme. It is possible, therefore, that they would be prepared to accept the total cost of this programme. It is also possible that some share of the automatic data processing system may be borne by the USA but this has not been reflected in these costs, and in this case the impact on the defence budget would be as follows:

1956/57	57/58	58/59	59/60	60/61
0	$12.0M	$38.0M	$62.0M	$79.0M

These amounts cover the total costs — capital and recurring — of the data processing system.

COURSE "A"

5. Acceptance of Course "A" would involve:

(a) Improvement of the high altitude capability of the CF100 aircraft and equipping it with an air-to-air guided missile (Sparrow II).

(b) Termination of the development project on the CF105 and the PS13 engine.

(c) Improvements and additions to the air defence base complex to provide a total of 15 bases.

(d) Introduction of a long-range ground-to-air guided missile defence system (Bomarc) as soon as possible.

6. Impact on Defence Budget

	Total Cost ($ Millions)	Annual Expenditure				60/61
		56/57	57/58	58/59	59/60
(a) Improvement of CF100 (Appendix A-Para. 4 & 7)
Extended Wing and Weight Saving	6.1	1.5	4.6
Simplified Reheat	35.5		8.0	12.0	15.5
Missile Capability	49.5		7.0	18.0	24.5
Sub-Total	91.1	1.5	19.6	30.0	40.0
Sparrow	150.1	1.5	11.0	22.4	28.0	87.2
(Appendix B-Annex 4)
Additional CF100's	67.3		12.0	55.3
Sub-Total	308.5	3.0	42.6	107.7	68.0	87.2
(b) Terminate Development CF105 & PS13	13.0	13.0
(c) Base Complex	128.0	10.0	25.0	25.0	25.0	25.0
(d) Add Bomarc when available (Appendix C)	210.0			25.0	80.0	105.0
TOTAL CAPITAL	659.5	26.0	67.6	157.7	173.0	217.2
RECURRING COSTS		5.2	23.7	62.0	72.8	88.3
TOTALS		31.2	91.3	219.7	245.8	305.5

Advantages

7.(a) Concentration of Effort. Elimination of the introduction of an interceptor aircraft such as the CF105 would permit greater concentration by the Service and industry upon the surface-to-air guided missile (Bomarc) when Canadian effort could be usefully employed on this missile program about three years hence.

(b) Cost. The obvious saving of not introducing another manned interceptor.

Disadvantages

8.(a) Limitation of CF100. Due to limitations in speed, altitude, and armament versatility, the CF100, even when improved, falls significantly short of the capabilities of an aircraft such as the CF105. This creates a serious gap in the defences, particularly from about 1958 until such time as Bomarc is installed and becomes operationally effective on a broad front which might not eventuate before 1963 or later.

(b) Any serious slippage in the Sparrow II programme or Bomarc "C" programme greatly aggravates the foregoing disadvantages.

Risk

9. Until well into the 1960's we would be completely dependent on the partially effective CF100, and upon the possibility of success of Bomarc, an operationally untried weapon which is still in the early development stages. This, coupled with Bomarc's comparative inflexibility of operation when viewed in the light of electronic countermeasures and other techniques which may evolve, highlights the great risks attached to this course of action.

COURSE "B"

10. Acceptance of Course "B" would involve:

(a) Improvement of the high altitude capability of the CF100 aircraft and equipping it with an air-to-air guided missile (Sparrow II).

(b) Termination of the development project on the CF105 aircraft and the PS13 engine.

(c) The production of the American F102B interceptor in Canada at the rate of 10 aircraft per month.

(d) Improvements and additions to the air defence base complex to provide a total of 15 bases.

(e) The introduction of a guided missile system (Bomarc) as soon as possible in substitution for that part of the manned interceptor programme replaceable by Bomarc.

11. Impact on Defence Budget

	Total Cost ($ Millions)	Annual Expenditure				60/61
		56/57	57/58	58/59	59/60
(a) CF100 plus Sparrow (Appendix A-Para. 4 & 7) (Appendix B-Annex 4)	308.5	3.0	42.6	107.7	68.0	87.2
(b) Terminate Development CF105 & PS13	13.0	13.0
(c) Base Complex	128.0	10.0	25.0	25.0	25.0	25.0
(d) Introduce F102B (Appendix B)	903.0	10.0	73.0	161.0	182.0
Falcon Missile	112.0	1.0	9.0	16.0	21.0	65.0
TOTAL CAPITAL	1464.5	27.0	86.6	221.7	275.0	359.0
RECURRING COSTS	—	5.2	23.7	62.0	72.8	88.3
TOTALS	—	32.2	110.3	283.7	347.8	447.3
BOMARC	—	—	—	25.0	80.0	105.0

12. The advantages and disadvantages of this course of action revolve around the relative merits of the CF105 and the USAF all-weather fighter, the F102B, which is the only aircraft with performance sufficiently comparable to the CF105 to warrant examination as a possible substitute. The air defence efforts of Canada and the U.S.A., because of their mutual dependence, are developed in concert. Canada's decision to produce the CF105 followed consultations with the USAF, it being agreed that such an aircraft was an essential element in the air defence arsenal, particularly for operation in the fringe areas. The advantages and disadvantages of Course "B" should be considered in this light.

Advantages

13.(a) The F102B has the earliest availability date of any manned interceptor which might be considered as a replacement for the CF100; it is likely to be available about 1 year earlier than the CF105.

(b) The development phase of the F102B is more advanced than the CF105 and, in consequence, it may be considered that there are less uncertainties involved in its ultimate success.

(c) Since the F102B is a single-seater aircraft, an economy would be effected in aircrew and aircrew training requirements. However, the CF105 is being developed to permit the elimination of the second seat if future technical developments and operational experience so warrant.

(d) Aircraft for aircraft the F102B is less costly than the CF105; however its lesser effectiveness and shorter range result in the need for a greater number of aircraft and bases and, dollar for dollar, the CF105 provides significantly more defence.

Disadvantages

14.(a) The F102B is inferior to the CF105 in:

- (i) aircraft performance, particularly in altitude and range capability;
- (ii) flight and fire control systems;
- (iii) radar ranging and tracking, which are highly important;

(iv) armament and weapon flexibility (Sparrow vs Falcon). The F102B is incapable of carrying as large or as effective a load of missiles as the CF105, and this comparative deficiency is particularly significant with respect to a large air-to-air missile of high security classification presently under development.

(b) The CF105 being a two-seater, larger, and more spacious, possesses greater development potential to cope satisfactorily with the threats that are envisaged for the period 1960-65.

(c) There are certain tactical situations (electronic counter-measures, broadcast control, and low level attacks) in which the single-seater aircraft is at a serious disadvantage compared to the two-seater aircraft.

(d) If there is a further slippage in the missile development programme, manned aircraft must continue to meet the threat alone for a longer period. The CF105 is in a position to do this much better than the F102B.

(e) This course of action would mean abandoning at considerable cost the very real advantages we have already gained in the CF105 programme.

Risk

15. The ineffectiveness of the F102B compared with the CF105 under certain important tactical situations makes the F102B a risky investment. There is a primary risk also that the F102B will not be technically successful. It is still a development project and any such project can fail. In this case with both Canada and the USA dependent on the same project, failure would be serious. Furthermore, should Russian capabilities exceed our present expectations we might well be caught with an aircraft (the F102B) incapable of handling the threat.

MODIFICATION NO. 1 TO COURSE "B"

16. A modification to this course of action which would effect a material saving would be to continue to use the CF100 in its present form without carrying out the improvements to the aircraft or fitting air-to-air guided missiles.

17. Saving Effected

	Total Cost ($ Millions)	Annual Expenditure
		56/57	57/58	58/59	59/60	60/61
(a) Improvement of CF100 (Appendix A-Para 4 & 7)
Extended Wing and Weight Saving	6.1	1.5	4.6
Simplified Reheat	35.5	8.0	12.0	15.5
Missile Capability	49.5		7.0	18.0	24.5
Sub-Total	91.1	1.5	19.6	30.0	40.0
(b) Sparrow (Appendix B-Annex 4)	150.1	1.5	11.0	22.4	28.0	87.2
TOTAL	241.2	3.0	30.6	52.4	68.0	87.2

Advantages

18. It eliminates the cost of improving the CF100 and of purchasing Sparrow, a missile which will not be used by the F102B.

Disadvantages

19. This does not make the best use of the large capital investment already made in the CF100. By improving the CF100 we are obtaining an aircraft with a limited but worthwhile performance against the expected threat. Additionally, the operational force will be equipped with CF100 and Sparrow much earlier than it can be fully equipped with F102B's. During the time it would take to replace the present CF100's (in an unimproved state) by F102B's, the improved performance of the CF100 with Sparrow will be extremely important to our air defence system.

Risk

20. The risk involved here is the same as that outlined in Para. 15, with the added danger of delays or failure in the F102B programme which would leave us naked without any aircraft capable of dealing with the threat. If the F102B programme went according to plan the period during which our defences would be vitally weak would be about 2 to 3 years.

COURSE "C"

21. Acceptance of Course "C" would involve:

(a) Improvement of the high altitude capability of the CF100 aircraft and equipping it with an air-to-air guided missile (Sparrow II).

(b) Continuation of the development of the CF105 aircraft and the PS13 engine projects leading to their production.

(c) Improvements and additions to the air defence base complex to provide a total of 15 bases.

(d) The introduction of a guided missile system (Bomarc) as soon as possible in substitution for that part of the manned interceptor programme replaceable by Bomarc.

22. Impact on Defence Budget

	Total Cost ($ Millions)	Annual Expenditure				60/61
		56/57	57/58	58/59	59/60
(a) CF100 plus Sparrow	308.5	3.0	42.6	107.7	68.0	87.2
(b) Development CF105	255.4	55.6	67.4	62.7	23.5
Development PS13 (Appendix B)	44.0	24.0	20.0
(c) Production CF105 and PS13	1544.4	18.2	122.2	275.6
(d) Base Complex	128.0	10.0	25.0	25.0	25.0	25.0
TOTAL CAPITAL	2280.3	92.6	155.0	213.6	238.7	387.8
RECURRING COSTS		5.2	23.7	62.0	72.8	88.3
GRAND TOTALS		97.8	178.7	753.6	311.5	476.1
BOMARC				25.0	80.0	105.0

Advantages

23. In addition to all the advantages of the CF105 discussed under Course "B", the following are additional advantages of Course "C":

(a) This course of action takes important advantage of the significant difference in concept of operation between the CF105 and the F102B.

(b) The USAF having programmed the F102B for operational use in the air defence system, the CF105 introduces another weapons system into the North American air defence arsenal and this alone would pose another weighty problem to the potential enemy. The CF105 also provides insurance should the F102B in the USAF prove to be a failure.

(c) With manned aircraft and surface-to-air missiles in the defence system, the system possesses a diversified capability against various threats. Therefore, combined use of such a high performance versatile aircraft as the CF105 and missiles in the same system will appreciably reduce enemy ability to exploit countermeasures and deception tactics.

(d) The greater effectiveness and greater range of the CF105 results in the need for less aircraft and fewer bases. Aircraft for aircraft the F102B is less costly but, dollar for dollar, the CF105 provides significantly more defence.

Disadvantages

24. The burden of cost involved in this course of action, while high, is inherent in an air defence system which is kept abreast of the developing threat.

Risk

25. The risk involved is that the CF105 might fail. Against this there is the insurance provided by the US F102B programme. This is the course of action involving the least risks over the years ahead.

MODIFICATION NO. 1 TO COURSE "C"

26. The modification is to reduce the commitment from 40 to 28 preproduction aircraft (Refer Appendix "D"†). Although the programme of 40 preproduction aircraft as previously authorized is still the ideal means of creating economically an operational force in minimum time, it is possible to withhold until January, 1958 the order for the final lot of 12 aircraft. This is at least six months after first flight and considerable knowledge of the performance of the aeroplane will have been gained. Under the circumstances, the hold-back on the total programme will be about $45M. Thus, we are able to postpone this costly decision until the chance of certain success in the project is more assured. Therefore, it is possible to proceed now with a commitment for 28 preproduction aircraft instead of 40 at a cost of approximately $210M without effecting any appreciable delay in creating the operational force.

MODIFICATION NO. 2 TO COURSE "C"

27. A modification to this course of action which would effect a material saving would be to embark on the improvement of the CF100 in new production aircraft only, commencing with the 331st aircraft scheduled to be produced. The ability to embark at a later date on a retrofit programme would provide insurance against any serious slippage in the CF105 programme. The hold back in expenditure and possible saving involved would be approximately $91.0M. This reduces the cost from $308.5M to $217.4M.

Advantages

28. The advantage lies in greater financial control, plus additional control over the volume of work available for AVRO's.

29. This course of action gives us the ability to make the most of the large capital investment already made in the CF100 while at the same time not committing ourselves to a costly programme. The Sparrow weapons to be used in the CF100 are to be purchased for the CF105 so that no additional cost is involved here.

[ADDENDUM 3]

Compte-rendu du Groupe de travail pour le Comité interministériel Ad HocReport by Working Group to Ad Hoc Interdepartmental Committee

TOP SECRET

REAPPRAISAL OF THE CF105 DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

Appendices:

- "A"—Report of the Plans Analysis and Requirements Group.†
- "B"—Report of the Comparison Group (Fighter).†
- "C"—Report of the Comparison Group (Missiles).†
- "D"—Report of the Cost Analysis Group.†
- "E"—USA and UK Aircraft Design and Development Programmes.†
- "F"—Phasing of Weapons in Air Defence System with relation to the Enemy Threat.†

1. This is a statement of the courses of action which might be pursued at this time in order to meet the requirement for suitable interceptor aircraft and/or surface-to-air missiles for use during the ensuing ten to fifteen years for the protection of vital targets in Canada and the United States. This statement is based on the conclusions presented by the sub-Working Groups together with the indications which came out of the discussions held with AVRO and NAE as to the aerodynamic soundness of the CF105.

BACKGROUND

2. The Air Threat in the period under review is detailed at Appendix "A" Annex 2 (Red Tab). The situation has changed in two principal respects since writing the original operational requirement for the CF105. Firstly, the USSR has improved her position in high performance bombers. Secondly, and of greater significance, the USSR has possession of the hydrogen bomb.

Technical Assessment

3. All studies to date by the technical authorities concerned indicate that the range of variation of opinion concerning the technical soundness of design of the CF105 lies within regions which are quite normal at this stage of development for a new aircraft of such advanced design. Even the most pessimistic estimates enable the aircraft to meet the threat and show that it is still superior to the F102B.

COURSES OF ACTION

4. In the discussion of the possible courses of action, it was agreed that:

(a) It was highly desirable to develop and exploit the CF100 aircraft to the fullest possible extent, including the fitment of Sparrow II missiles. By doing this the aircraft would have some ability to cope with the Bison/Badger/Bear threat.

(b) It was absolutely necessary to introduce a surface-to-air missile of the Talos or Bomarc type into the Canadian Air Defence System as early as possible. Because of the obvious advantages of Bomarc over Talos (refer Appendix "C", Green Tab), it was agreed that Bomarc "C" would be the weapon selected. However, Talos might have some application as an interim weapon or for short range requirements if later developments made such a weapon necessary.

(c) A highly developed ground environment was required. Although possible for the aircraft to operate in a less sophisticated ground environment nevertheless, to meet the requirements of the surface-to-air missile, there seems no sound alternative but to make provision for the full system now.

5. Accepting these three factors as firm ingredients in any possible course of action, there appear to be three courses which could be followed. The courses differ in these respects:

(a) To confine our activities to the introduction of the improved CF100 and Bomarc.

(b) In addition to the improved CF100 and Bomarc, to produce the F102B in Canada for introduction at the earliest possible date in the Canadian Air Defence System.

(c) In addition to the improved CF100 and Bomarc, to produce the CF105 in Canada for introduction at earliest possible date in the Canadian Air Defence System.

First Course of Action

6. To improve the CF100, including the fitment of Sparrow II missiles, and to introduce the Bomarc missile into the Canadian air defence system at the earliest possible date.

Advantages

7. Concentration of Effort. By elimination of the need for the introduction of a family of aircraft such as the CF105, this course of action permits greater concentration on the surface-to-air missile programme both in the Service and in industry.

8. To some degree the same can be said for the programme to improve the altitude characteristics of the CF100 and to introduce the Sparrow Missile Armament.

9. Cost. The obvious saving of not introducing another manned interceptor.

Disadvantages

10. Limitations of CF100. Due to speed and altitude limitations, the CF100, even when improved, falls far short of the capabilities of the aircraft such as the CF105 and the F102B. This creates a serious gap in the defences in the early 60's, that is, until such time as Bomarc is installed and becomes operational on a broad front.

11. Any serious slippage in the Sparrow II programme or Bomarc "C" programme greatly aggravates the foregoing disadvantages.

12. We would be completely dependent on Bomarc, an operationally untried weapon, which is still in the early development stages. This, coupled with its comparative inflexibility of operation when viewed in the light of electronic countermeasures and other techniques which may evolve, highlights the great risks attached to this course of action.

Second Course of Action

13. To improve the CF100, including the fitment of Sparrow II missiles and to introduce the F102B aircraft and the Bomarc missile into the Canadian air defence system at the earliest possible date.

Advantages

14. Time Factor. The F102B has the earliest availability date of any manned interceptor suitable as a replacement for the CF100, it is likely to be available about 1 year earlier than the CF105.

15. Economy

(a) Because it is a smaller and lighter aircraft, the cost of the F102B is much less than the cost of the CF105. Nevertheless, in considering whether it is better policy to design and produce an aircraft in Canada rather than purchase the rights to produce in Canada an aircraft of foreign design, it is erroneous to assume that all the design and development costs are thereby avoided. Regardless of whether a foreign design is bought and built in Canada or an aircraft is produced from a purely Canadian design, large engineering staffs are required. Also, in building a foreign designed aircraft licensing fees of considerable amounts are involved.

(b) Since it is a single-seater aircraft an economy would be effected in aircrew and aircrew training requirements. However, the CF105 is being developed to permit the elimination of the second seat if future technical developments and operational experience so warrant.

16. Standardization. The use of the same aircraft (F102B) in the United States and Canada would ensure common ground handling equipment, spares, etc., and would simplify the reinforcement of Canadian bases by American squadrons if this were required.

17. Probability of Success. Of the only two acceptable manned interceptor developments, the CF105 and F102B, the F102B is one year nearer to completion now and has the advantage of the larger and more experienced United States development resources behind it; therefore, it could be considered that the F102B is more likely to succeed as a design, and to meet its target dates.

Disadvantages

18. The F102B is inferior to the CF105 in:

- (a) aircraft performance
- (b) flight and fire control systems
- (c) armament and weapon flexibility (Sparrow vs Falcon)
- (d) radar-ranging and tracking.

19. If there should be a serious slippage in the surface-to-air guided missile programme:

- (a) The F102B would be outdistanced by the threat sooner than the CF105;
- (b) The F102B does not have the potential for further development in performance or for use in other roles possessed by the CF105.

20. Under this course of action both Canada and the United States would be preparing for production of the same aircraft and no insurance factor is provided against the possibility that the F102B will not succeed.

21. From present knowledge there are certain tactical situations (ECM and low level attacks) in which the single-seater aircraft is at a disadvantage compared to the two-seater aircraft.

NOTE:

As the F102B would begin to come into operational use some six months after the CF100 equipped with Sparrow II becomes operational, consideration was given to the possibility of making do with CF100s without Sparrow until they could be replaced by the F102Bs. This is not acceptable because by improving the CF100 and fitting the Sparrow missile to it, we are capitalizing on our present investment in the CF100 and obtaining an aircraft with a limited but worthwhile performance against the expected threat. In addition, the operational force will be equipped with improved CF100 and Sparrow missiles much earlier than it can be fully equipped with F102Bs, and during the time it would take to replace the present CF100s in an unimproved state by F102Bs, the improved performance of the CF100 with Sparrow will be extremely important to our air defence system.

Third Course of Action

22. To improve the CF100, including the fitment of Sparrow II missile, and to introduce the CF105 aircraft and the Bomarc missile into the Canadian air defence system at the earliest possible date.

Advantages

23. The CF105 has better performance and development potential than the F102B, and is thus in a better position to satisfactorily cope with the threats that are envisaged for the period 1960-65.

24. As the CF105 is a two-seater it had more operational flexibility than a single-seater when operating under certain tactical conditions (ECM and low level) which are known at present, and offers greater flexibility to meet the unknowns of the future.

25. The CF105 has a greater range on internal fuel than the F102B.

26. The fire control system of the CF105 is capable of providing considerably more radar range than that in the F102B, which is a highly important operational factor.

27. The CF105 has the capability of carrying a larger and more effective missile load than the F102B.

28. If there is a further slippage in the missile development programme, manned aircraft must continue to meet the threat alone for a longer period. The CF105 is in a position to do this better than the F102B.

29. With manned aircraft and surface-to-air missiles in the defence system, the system possesses a diversified capability against various threats. Therefore, combined use of aircraft and missiles in the same system will appreciably reduce enemy ability to exploit countermeasures and deception tactics.

30. Since the USAF have programmed the F102B for operational use in the air defence system, the CF105 introduces another weapons system into the North American air defence arsenal and this alone would pose another weighty problem to the potential enemy. The CF105 also provides insurance should the F102B in the USAF prove to be a failure.

Disadvantages

31. The CF105 is relatively costly to produce as compared to the F102B and will be in service later than the F102B. The development phase of the CF105 is not as far advanced as the F102B and, in consequence, it may be considered that it has more uncertainties.

32. The burden of cost will be increased if both supersonic manned aircraft and surface-to-air missile programs are proceeded with during the same period.

33. The introduction of both weapons at about the same time will aggravate manpower, training and logistic problems.

NOTE:

(a) The disadvantages in Paras. 32 and 33 are common for both the CF105 and F102B, although probably to a lesser extent for the F102B.

(b) It is possible that the burdens of cost and manpower mentioned in Paras. 32 and 33 will not, in fact, present serious difficulties. The numbers of aircraft programmed for each squadron are subject to alteration in the light of the success, or otherwise, of the long-range, surface-to-air missiles which are counted on to augment the manned inter-ceptor force. Experience at the time should, therefore, permit suitable and appropriate adjustments to both programmes.

Conclusion

34. The Working Group has considered the many arguments involved in this vast problem and it is the opinion of the Group that the third course of action, which includes the continuation of the CF105 programme, is the most logical method of developing the Canadian Air Defence System.

321.

PCO

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 17, 1955

Present:

The Prime Minister, (Mr. St-Laurent), in the Chair,
The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe),
The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney),
The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson),
The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson),
The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris).

Also Present:

The Minister of Labour, (Mr. Gregg),
The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, (Mr. Lesage),
The Secretary (Mr. Martin),
The Military Secretary (Captain Lucas),
The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes),
The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemmon),
The Vice-Chief of the General Staff (Major-General Sparling),
The Vice-Chief of the Naval Staff (Rear Admiral Lay),
The Chairman, Defence Research Board, (Dr. Solandt),
The Vice-Chairman, Defence Research Board, (Mr. Zimmerman),
The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Léger),
The Deputy Minister of National Defence (Mr. Miller),
The Deputy Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Golden),
The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance (Mr. Deutsch).

I. RE-APPRAISAL OF THE CF105 DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME

1. The Minister of National Defence, referring to the discussion at the meeting of November 8th, suggested that the Committee might now wish to discuss the paper on the re-appraisal of the CF105 development programme which had been circulated.

2. Mr. Campney recalled that at its 106th meeting on September 27th, the Committee had instructed the R.C.A.F., together with representatives from the National Aeronautical Establishment, the Defence Research Board and the Departments of Defence Production and Finance to re-appraise the programme for the 40 aircraft and the 14 PS13 engines. All studies indicated that the variation of opinion on the technical soundness of the design of the CF105 lay within limits which were quite normal at this stage of development for a new aircraft. They showed that the CF105 would meet the main bomber threat during its life and also that it was superior in performance to comparable aircraft being developed by the U.S. and the U.K.

The development of the CF105 was part of a problem much larger than merely the production of an aeroplane, and involved many factors. The most important were:

(a) the need to extend ground-to-air radar control coverage and the introduction of a system of automatic data processing to cope with high speed fighters;

(b) the need to develop further the potential of the CF100; and

(c) the need to introduce long range surface-to-air guided missiles (BOMARC) as soon as these were available.

Three alternative courses of action appeared to have emerged from the re-appraisal. Course A would involve abandoning the CF105, improving the altitude capability of the CF100 and equipping it with air-to-air missiles and placing dependence on getting into effective operation a long range surface-to-air guided missile system (BOMARC). Course B involved the improvement of the CF100, dropping the CF105 and replacing it with the U.S.A.F. F102B as an interim measure until SAMS (BOMARC) could be put into operation. Course C included improving the CF100, proceeding with the CF105 and incorporating BOMARC in the air defence system when its development made this possible. The Committee felt that Course A involved an unacceptably high risk, that Course B was unacceptable because the F102B was not a sufficiently long step forward and because it would mean the abandonment of the advantages already gained in the CF105 aircraft engine project. Course C held the greatest attraction because it would narrow the gap in the combined U.S.-Canadian air defence system during the period in which guided missiles were being introduced. It would also make the best use of the investment in the CF100 and the CF105.

The Chiefs of Staff concurred in the conclusion that Course C was the most attractive. However, they felt that further consideration should be given to the cost of each of the recommendations contained in it and the impact of their acceptance on the defence budget over the next five years. Other important projects which might be a charge on the budget during the CF105 development period included:

(a) the improvement of the CF100 and the introduction of the SPARROW;

(b) the system of automatic data processing and additional radar;

(c) the additional regular squadrons of all-weather fighters required to replace the auxiliary squadrons which it was agreed were now unsuitable for the immediate air defence role;

(d) the introduction of guided missiles;

(e) improvements and additions to the air defence base complex to provide 15 bases.

Estimates of costs of the various alternatives proposed and the advantages and disadvantages of each course had been set out. Regardless of what decision was made on the future type of aircraft required, improved air-to-air radar control coverage and the introduction of automatic data processing would have to be considered. These particular projects were, however, of a joint nature to serve both the U.S.A.F. and the R.C.A.F. and some scheme of joint financing might be arranged.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, November 4, 1955 — Document D22-55).

3. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) North America had to have an appropriate defensive system as well as an offensive capability. Was Russia, as the only possible aggressor, concentrating solely on offensive weapons, or was she developing defensive plans as well? In reply it was said that while the Russians were not developing lines such as the DEW and Mid-Canada systems, they were developing a radar chain similar in some ways to Pinetree. They had a good fighter in the MIG which was being improved step by step. There was not too much information on Soviet all-weather aircraft. It appeared that defences were being developed to deal with attacks from the north, the west and the south. Surface-to-air missile sites were being installed around the larger cities. In general, it could be said that there were indications that the Soviets were pursuing the same variety of projects as the Western world, and, as far as was known, they were distributing their effort. One bright spot on the horizon was evidence to indicate that the U.S.S.R. was not getting ahead as well as was thought on thermonuclear weapons. However, they did have a large number of atomic bombs.

(b) The estimate of $333 million for the data processing system was a very rough one. A different estimate had been prepared on the assumption that the U.S.A.F. might finance the additional 26 heavy radars and 123 gap fillers in Canada. If these were to be manned by Canadians, 14,300 men would be needed for the heavy radars and about 400 for the gap fillers.

(c) The SPARROW was in its development stage and if plans for improving the CF100 were approved, this missile would be available to equip it sometime in 1960. If Course A were followed, it was said that the U.S. might press Canada to allow more of their forces to be stationed here. On the other hand, this would hardly be reasonable in view of the fact that the U.S. authorities were relying on a weapon which was said to be inferior to the CF105 and also appeared to be unwilling thus far to take advantage of Canadian development on this aircraft and its engine.

(d) One of the main reasons for adopting the U.S. F102B aircraft as against the CF105 was that it was much less costly. The U.S. team which had recently visited AVRO had now reported to the U.S. Secretary for Air who in turn had written to the Minister of National Defence.<sup>41</sup> While Mr. Quarles stated in his letter that the F102B was preferred in the U.S., nevertheless he recommended that Canada proceed with the CF105. No mention was made of the possibility of the U.S. buying this aircraft. Such purchases would probably be politically impossible.

(e) An important reason which had induced the Air Force to recommend that the CF105 be proceeded with was that the F102B was a single seater aircraft and, generally speaking, much less effective for that reason. Furthermore, the F102B could only carry FALCONS, whereas the CF105 could carry either SPARROWS, FALCONS or the long range air-to-air missile for mass raids. Another significant advantage of the CF105 over the F102B was that it could operate more effectively in a sophisticated ground environment if the latter was impaired by electronic counter measures.

(f) Because of its size, the CF105 could carry a bigger radar and therefore pick up attacking aircraft at greater distances than the F102B. It was more efficient tactically and better able to deal with intruders. It had a good capability at low altitudes whereas the F102B did not. On the whole it was better able to deal with unexpected developments than the single seater machine.

(g) The CF105 would fill a need in a period when the U.S. would not have a suitable aircraft available for the threat existing at that particular time. If the air defence programme of North America were viewed as a whole, Canadian squadrons equipped with CF105's would provide a useful and desirable element in that system.

<sup>41</sup> Voir/See Palmiro Campagna, Storms of Controversy: The Secret Arrow Files Revealed, Toronto: Stoddart, 1992, p. 206.

(h) There was a varying range of opinion on the possible performance of the CF105. Some felt that, aero-dynamically, it was no better than the F102B but there were other important features of the aircraft which should be kept in mind. In Canada the most severe criticism of the design of the aircraft came from the source which had felt the CF100 would be unsuccessful. This latter aircraft had come quite close to the original specifications drawn up for it.

(i) It was said that because of the probable greater effectiveness of the CF105, not as many bases and radars would be required in the ground environment as would be the case if the F102B were adopted. It was true that the former cost more, but, dollar for dollar, it probably provided a more effective defence and involved a lesser risk. Its adoption would mean it would be simpler to phase into the air defence system the BOMARC C when it became available.

(j) If Course C were approved, a very rough projection of Air Force expenditures involving the cost of this alternative plus the remainder of the R.C.A.F. programme, less the installation of heavy radars which it was assumed might be undertaken by the U.S., indicated that the R.C.A.F. estimates would gradually rise to somewhat over $1 billion by 1961. It might be possible to make some savings by, for example, not refitting so many CF100's as was planned, but this would mean fewer squadrons with the most up-to-date machines at a time when they might be needed. While it might be desirable to go ahead with the SPARROW development, it might also only be necessary at this stage to complete the engineering for the refitting of the CF100's, and then decide later whether all aircraft should be modified.

(k) The most useful defence at the moment was the existence of the deterrent provided by SAC. There was a fear, however, that a surprise attack might be carried out before SAC aircraft could become effective. To this it was said that protection was supplied by the early warning system and not by fighter aircraft. On the other hand, it was pointed out that, at the supersonic speeds of attacking aircraft, SAC could only get 30%—40% of its aircraft out of harm's way. Further, if SAC did get all its aircraft off the ground, they had to have bases to which they could return.

(l) If it were decided to proceed with the programme which had been outlined, some cuts in other defence expenditures would have to be made. What were these? No clear answer could be given to this question, but a number of assumptions had been made about the future of other programmes. The Army and Navy estimates would be of the same order of magnitude as in the present year. Mutual aid might be reduced by, say, $70 million over the next two years. Some construction projects might be eliminated.

(m) The Chiefs of Staff recognized that it would not be possible to find the money to carry out the proposal under discussion and the other defence programmes as well. They felt they would have to come before the Committee subsequently with a list of the major defence elements and their cost with a view to the establishment of priorities. Items which should be considered in this connection were the brigade in Europe, the Air Division, and the naval aviation programme, for example. These matters were of course of political significance as well as of military interest. The effects of a withdrawal of the brigade or the Air Division from Europe on our NATO partners would have to be taken into consideration.

(n) The air defence of North America required a more integrated command structure. There was a certain measure of cooperation now but it was not sufficient to ensure protection of Canadian interests. Operational integration was perhaps satisfactory but the planning was not. It was said that the planning of where specific installations should be situated was carefully thought out. However, because of the lack of more formal machinery, the U.S. might press on faster than Canada and there was a danger of Canada being considered by some in the U.S. as a wasteland over which battles might be fought.

(o) The question was asked whether the automatic data processing system was part of an integrated system or whether it was for use by Canada alone. In reply, it was pointed out that the U.S. plans envisaged such machinery initially covering the North American heartland but gradually spreading out to other areas. SAGE was not designed for use on borders but to cover sectors.

At this point, the Chiefs of Staff and other officials withdrew from the meeting.

4. During the discussion amongst Ministers which ensued, the following points emerged:

(a) No air defence system could be perfect. Nevertheless we had to keep the Russians aware of the fact that if they attacked they would have a serious obstacle to overcome. The Canadian public expected the government to accept a reasonable share of the burden involved in creating and maintaining this hurdle. If U.S. authorities felt we did not do all that we reasonably could in this effort, there would be greater pressure from them to take over more of the burden, which would mean stationing still more U.S. troops in Canada as well as the installation of more equipment in this country. On the other hand, support for NATO in Europe seemed to be sagging and we also had to do our share to bolster the alliance, which involved men, money and equipment.

The major worry of the alternative Course C, favoured by those studying the question, was whether the CF105 would be a successful aircraft. If its development was allowed to proceed and it then failed, over $250 million would have been spent for naught. It did not take much imagination to envisage what the public's reaction would then be.

(b) The proposal for the CF105 and the related aspects of the air defence problem necessitated a thorough re-examination of every phase of our defence activities. It might be possible to find several things which could be cut. It certainly was difficult to conceive of increased defence expenditures but it was equally hard to see how these could be reduced. There would in fact be a struggle to maintain them at their present level in the face of any cutbacks in the U.S. and the U.K.

(c) It was impossible to avoid an increase in defence spending if the CF105 programme were approved. Very little was known about supersonic fighters, the development of which involved tremendous problems. It would be preferable if larger countries with greater resources undertook such programmes. Rather than going ahead with the CF105, the CF100 could be improved and fitted with the SPARROW when it became available. Such a programme could probably be carried out within the limits of the present budget.

(d) Soviet leaders were well aware that if they launched an attack their own nation would soon be destroyed. The deterrent was retaliation and the CF105 did not add much to that. Furthermore, even if the CF105 was in operation, a few attacking aircraft would likely get through our defences and that would be sufficient to inflict tremendous damage to North America. It could be said, on the other hand, that the existence of an efficient supersonic fighter would add to the deterrent. It was difficult to contemplate the Russians starting a war unless they were convinced they would be successful. A good fighter aircraft, in addition to other armament, would help convince Soviet leaders that such a war would not be easy.

(e) The Russians might start a war if they really felt they were in danger. It was essential to keep our defences strong but not to be unnecessarily provocative. Almost of equal importance to a suitable air defence system in North America was NATO. It worked in unity and was a force with which the Russians had to reckon. The proposals which had been put forward envisaged withdrawal from Europe and a weakening of the alliance. Nothing would suit the Russians better. This seemed a greater risk to take than a gap in our air defence system between the CF100 and surface-to-air guided missiles.

(f) If the U.S. authorities were faced with a decision on our part not to proceed with the programme, they might come in and help, either by taking over the whole programme or assuming a substantial share of it. Such a course, however, might ultimately involve requests for stationing U.S. squadrons, armed with their aircraft, in Canada.

(g) The morale of the Air Force would be materially affected if the Air Defence programme petered out and there was nothing in sight beyond the aircraft currently in use. There would also be serious political consequences which should be borne in mind in abandoning the programme.

(h) U.S. authorities regarded the CF105 programme as a worthwhile one and might well be interested in acquiring some of these aircraft if political pressures were not so great. It would be worth approaching the Americans to see if they would be interested in taking over the programme as they had previously done with the "saucer" development.

5. The Ministers deferred consideration of the proposal to proceed with the CF105 development programme pending enquiries to be made by the Minister of National Defence of the United States Secretary for Air as to the possibility of the United States sharing in or taking over the whole of the programme.

...

322.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 7, 1955

...

NATIONAL DEFENCE; POLICY ON AIRCRAFT DEVELOPMENT; CF-105
PROGRAMME; IMPROVEMENT OF CF-100; PROCUREMENT OF "SPARROW" MISSILE

24. The Minister of National Defence, referring to the programmes for CF-105 aircraft and PS-13 engines authorized at the meeting of March 8th, 1955, said the company undertaking the work — A.V. Roe & Company — had submitted, in September, a revised estimate of costs which brought the total expenditures on the 40 planes and 14 engines to about $300 million. When the Cabinet Defence Committee was informed of this situation, it had decided that a thorough re-appraisal of the whole programme should be carried out. As a result of this study various courses were suggested, but the one which seemed to the officials dealing with the matter as most sound was to improve the existing CF-100, to proceed with the CF-105 programme, and to plan to incorporate into the air defence system surface-to-air guided missiles when they were available.

The Cabinet Defence Committee had considered the re-appraisal reports and the possible courses of action. The committee had expressed concern over the extent of the programme recommended, particularly at the heavy expenditure to be incurred before it had actually been demonstrated that the new plane was a success. In view of this, he had requested that a modified programme for the CF-105 be prepared which would reduce the financial commitments made before the plane could be tested, while leaving freedom for future action and decision.

By delaying for one year the date at which the CF-105 would enter squadron service, only 11 aircraft need be ordered before the first machines had flown, as against the 28 originally proposed. Including the engine programme this would cost $170.4 million up to April 1st, 1958, less the $35.5 million already spent. In other words, new authority would be required to spend $134.9 million. If the programme were cancelled now, there would be cancellation charges of $17.7 million to be added to the $35.5 million already spent. Therefore, in authorizing a continuance of the programme on this basis, not more than $117.2 million extra would be risked over the next three years in proving the soundness of the aircraft.

There would be a serious gap in the Canadian air defence system before the CF-105 would come into squadron use but after the CF-100 became unable to deal with the Russian bomber threat to be expected at that time. It was possible to modify the CF-100 to give it greater altitude, to equip it with "Sparrow" guided missiles, and thus give it a good measure of effectiveness until the CF-105 was available.

It was proposed to provide four squadrons of this improved all-weather interceptor by introducing these modifications in the aircraft coming off the production line from September 1957 onwards. These modifications could be made in aircraft already produced if this were considered desirable later. The cost, including the "Sparrow" missile, would amount to $77.4 million spread from the current fiscal year to 1960. One advantage of equipping the CF-100 with the "Sparrow" was that it was planned to arm the CF-105 with the same missile.

The Minister recommended approval of the reduced CF-105 programme, the modifications to the CF-100 and the procurement of the "Sparrow" missile.

Explanatory memoranda were circulated.

(Minister's memoranda, Dec. 5† and 6†; Cab Docs. 241-† and 242-55†).

25. Mr. Campney added that the Cabinet Defence Committee had thought it would be desirable for him to discuss with the U.S. Secretary for Air the possibility of the United States assuming the whole, or part, of the CF-105 programme since they had no comparable plane as advanced in development as this one. Mr. Quarles and his advisers had a high opinion of the aircraft but felt it would be impossible for the U.S. government to participate in developing it, or to commit themselves to buy it, because of the strong influence of the U.S. aircraft industry in Washington. Only the day before he had spoken again to Mr. Quarles who had expressed some hope of being able to help, but this could not be relied on as a measure of real and tangible aid for the original plan.

The Minister felt the government could not allow the air defence programme to peter out once the CF-100 had outlived its usefulness. If no plans were made for a successor, there would be a gap in our defences and the morale of the Air Force would be seriously affected. On the other hand, no one knew yet whether the CF-105 would be successful. Nevertheless, this uncertainty did not relieve the government of the responsibility of preparing as effective a defence as possible. If the programme were abandoned now, the government would be faced with explaining why it had spent over $50 million on the project and then dropped it. By allowing this limited development to proceed, it could be said that, regardless of the results, at least a serious attempt had been made to plan for the years ahead.

The deterrent to a Russian attack consisted of two elements — the attacking power of the U.S. Strategic Air Command and a reasonable power to inflict losses on enemy aircraft attacking North America. At the moment, the CF-105 appeared to hold out the most promise as a defence against Russian bombers during the period for which it was being planned. If it were not developed in four or five years time, Canada would have to look to other countries for an all-weather fighter.

26. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The U.S. was developing a single seater supersonic fighter which would come into operation two years in advance of the CF-105 but, in many respects, it was nowhere near as suitable an aircraft. The U.S. and, to a lesser extent the U.K., were showing considerable interest in the CF-105 but not to the point of participating in its development.

(b) The cost for both the reduced programmes for the CF-105 and the modified CF-100 could be absorbed over the next few years in a defence budget of the present size.

(c) If conditions in the world did not change in the foreseeable future, it could be assumed that the R.C.A.F. would be re-equipped with the CF-105, provided the plane was a success. In effect, the added expenditures of $117 million would prove the aircraft or, at worst, show a serious attempt had been made to provide the best possible defence for the country.

(d) Abandoning the programme at this stage would be tantamount to an admission that Canada was not capable of providing its share of the common defence or unwilling to do so. This would have a serious effect on N.A.T.O. allies as well as being embarrassing domestically.

(e) The increased cost of aircraft was frightening. The F-86 now cost about $400,000, the CF-100 just under $1 million, and the CF-105 was expected to cost between $2 and $3 million. The scheme proposed at least reduced possible losses by a substantial amount and would postpone the time at which it might have to be admitted that the cost of adequate air defence was more than Canada could bear.

(f) It seemed incredible, in the face of such apparent interest and approval in U.S. official circles, that the U.S. could not find a way of taking some small part in the project. Every effort would continue to be made to exploit U.S. interest in the CF-105 programme but it seemed unlikely that much would be done, particularly just before a presidential election.

(g) Defence expenditures would probably be $1.75 billion again in 1956-57 and about $1.8 billion for each of the two years following. In other words there would only have been one cut in four years. This might lead to some criticism in the face of cuts in the U.K. and U.S. It was pointed out, on the other hand, that Mr. Quarles now saw no prospect of a cut in the U.S. defence budget in the coming year.

(h) Departmental estimates were now being considered. Statutory increases of $90 million together with increases for the Colombo Plan, for development in the north, and for vocational training, amounting to about $28 million, seemed inescapable. This did not include a possible further $20 million for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Altogether, it would mean that the estimates would be as much as $120 to $140 million greater in 1956-57 than in the current fiscal year. To say that the Canadian defence budget for each of the next three years would be $1.8 billion was looking forward to a bleak future. However, a real effort had been made to reduce the cost of developing the CF-105 and it was very difficult not to go ahead with the programme.

(i) As for the "Sparrow" missile, it would be sensible to proceed with this since the efforts now being devoted to the "Velvet Glove" were not likely to be successful. The "Sparrow" would be made and stockpiled in Canada. Dummies would be used for training.

27. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of National Defence on the development of the CF-105, the improvement of the CF-100, and the procurement of the "Sparrow" missile and agreed,

(a) that the CF-105 programme approved in March 1955, be revised to provide for the procurement of only 11 aircraft at a total cost of $170.4 million for both airframe and engines, to be spread over three fiscal years;

(b) that 137 CF-100's be modified to give them greater altitude and provide a missile capability, beginning with the 581st aircraft off the production line, at a cost of $12.4 million spread over the four fiscal years; and,

(c) that procurement of the "Sparrow" missile to support four squadrons of CF-100's be approved, at a cost of $65 million to be spread over five fiscal years.

...

323.

DEA/50245-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Ottawa, December 21, 1955

CANADIAN DEFENCE PROBLEMS

In its resolution of December 15 on NATO defence planning, the North Atlantic Council urged member governments to undertake, as appropriate, "a comprehensive review of the future pattern of their forces ...".

2. The most useful point of departure for such a review in Canada is the anticipated programme for North American air defence. It would appear from recent National Defence studies that expenditures of the order of $2 billion over the next six or seven years will be required for air defence in Canada. Now that a decision has been taken on the CF-105, it is necessary to consider what should be done about some of the other urgent questions, including the following which are of direct concern to External Affairs:

(a) what priorities are to be assigned to air defence as against other Canadian defence commitments?

(b) should Canada take the initiative in seeking to have the United States share the cost of air defence installations in Canada, and if so, on what basis?

(c) are planning and command arrangements for North American air defence adequate to protect Canadian interests, and if not, should Canada take any initiative?

3. There are two methods of approach, each with its advantages and dangers. The first is to deal with them on an ad hoc basis as they arise, with the existing Canadian defence programme as the starting point, and leaving it to the United States to propose any air defence installations it may wish to establish in Canada. The effect of this would be threefold:

(a) it would tend to apply the pressure of financial limitations to continental air defence rather than to the defence programme as a whole;

(b) it would tend to cause both the RCAF and USAF to develop their air defence programmes to meet limited national objectives rather than to provide an integrated system;

(c) it would encourage separate United States and Canadian defence installations in Canada, with large projects a United States rather than a joint responsibility.

4. The alternative approach is based on the assumption that a North American air defence system along the general lines indicated by the Department of National Defence in its study on the CF-105 is necessary and indeed unavoidable, and that it is therefore essential for Canada to take positive action to ensure that the scale and timing of Canadian participation is related to our other commitments, and that the system, to the greatest extent possible, meets Canadian requirements. In order to accomplish these purposes the following steps would seem necessary:

(a) review our defence commitments other than for air defence to determine whether the military and political benefits they provide are commensurate with their costs;

(b) study, and where necessary prepare proposed modifications to, the North American air defence programme to satisfy Canadian interests (e.g. positioning of surface-to-air missiles, stationing of U.S. forces in Canada, command arrangements, etc.);

(c) review the Canadian defence programme, including any revisions under (a) and (b) above, in the light of the anticipated financial and manpower resources available, in order to determine the extent to which Canada will be able to participate in the air defence programme;

(d) in the light of (a), (b) and (c) above, seek agreement with the United States Government on the pattern of development of the air defence system over the next five or ten years and on the principles of cost-sharing.

5. The considerations involved in the study described in (a), (b) and (c) above involve political and economic factors as well as purely military ones, and it has been our hope that an integrated analysis of the type required would evolve from the study of National Security Policy, which, as you know, the military authorities agreed some time ago should be undertaken by an interdepartmental committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Bryce. If you think well of the analysis set out in this memorandum, perhaps, as the next step, I might show a copy of it to Mr. Bryce<sup>42</sup> with a view to having it discussed in the interdepartmental committee and subsequently possibly submitting something along these lines to Cabinet Defence Committee for the purpose of obtaining ministerial approval for a comprehensive review.

J. LIÉGER]

<sup>42</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
Please do this L.B. [earson]

SECTION C

LE RÉSEAU D'ALERTE AVANCÉ DISTANT EARLY WARNING SYSTEM

324.

PCO

Note du ministre de la Défense nationale pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense<sup>43</sup>Memorandum from Minister of National Defence to Cabinet Defence Committee<sup>43</sup>

DOCUMENT NO. D-1-55

[Ottawa], January 20, 1955

SECRET

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN THE DISTANT EARLY WARNING LINE

The Cabinet Defence Committee, at its meeting of November 12, recommended, in a report subsequently approved by the Cabinet:

(a) that the government agree to the construction of the proposed distant early warning line as one element of an overall continental defence warning system, the establishment of which is being undertaken as a joint Canada-United States project;

(b) that at the same time the United States government be informed of Canada's intention to participate in the project, the nature and extent of such participation to be more precisely determined in the near future.

The DEW project may be considered in its two main phases:

(a) construction and installation;

(b) operation and maintenance.<sup>44</sup>

In respect of the first phase, namely, construction and installation, the joint press release of November 19, 1954, stated that Canada had undertaken responsibility for the construction of the mid-Canada line and that responsibility for construction and installation in respect of the distant early warning line would be vested in the United States, although both Canada and the United States would participate in the project.<sup>45</sup> It has therefore been indicated that the area of Canadian responsibility in respect of the DEW line would not extend to construction and installation, although Canadian Government agencies will be, from time to time, giving what assistance they are able.

In view of the fact that Canadian governmental resources will be severely taxed to achieve the mid-Canada line by the appointed date, any further effective participation by the Canadian Government in the work of construction and installation which would require supervision and inspection would probably prejudice the effort on the mid-Canada line.

Considering the second phase, it appears that the continuing aspects of the project are more important to Canada than the transient operations of a crash nature and that it would be desirable to have the RCAF take as substantial a share as practicable in the operation and manning of the line. It also appeared desirable to have as much as possible of the

<sup>43</sup> Pearson a approuvé l'ébauche de cette note./A draft of this memorandum was approved by Pearson.

<sup>44</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 482.

<sup>45</sup> Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1955, volume 2, pp. 1496-1497.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1955, Volume 2, p. 1419.

continuing logistic support performed by Canadian agencies so that traffic in the arctic should be, as much as possible, Canadian. This would be an effective way of exercising our sovereignty in a continuing manner. To achieve this, it might be necessary to provide special arrangements for shipping which might take some time to achieve. At the present time, however, not enough is known about the line nor will likely be known for some time, to permit specific recommendations to be made. It would be desirable, therefore, to initiate studies immediately in respect of manning and of transportation and resupply in the continuing phase in order to ascertain the possible requirements and the possibilities and consequences of Canadian participation in them.

If a substantial contribution to the operation and maintenance of the line were to be made once it had been completed and was in operation, it would not, in my view, be necessary to participate in the construction and installation phase, other than to ensure that Canadian interests were protected in the ways outlined in the proposed agreement.

I accordingly recommend that:

(a) Canada should not participate in the first phase other than to assist the United States in organizing and using Canadian resources, and to help by making available the various facilities of the Armed Forces and other agencies of the Canadian Government where practicable;

(b) studies be made looking to effective Canadian participation in the operation and maintenance of the line including logistic support following its completion;

(c) the United States be informed that Canadian participation during the construction and installation phase of the project will be limited as in (a) above, but that Canada intends to participate effectively in the operation and maintenance phase, the character of such participation to be determined on the basis of studies to be carried out during the construction phase.<sup>46</sup>

[RALPH CAMPNEY]

<sup>46</sup> Approuvées le 24 janvier 1955 par le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense. Le Comité a ajouté à la recommandation (b) une phrase stipulant que des études seraient également faites « covering the establishment of suitable liaison arrangements during its [le réseau DEW] construction. » Cette décision a été approuvée par le Cabinet plénier le 26 janvier 1955.

Approved by the Cabinet Defence Committee on January 24, 1955. The Committee added to recommendation (b) the stipulation that studies would also be made "covering the establishment of suitable liaison arrangements during its [the DEW line's] construction." This decision was endorsed by the full Cabinet on January 26, 1955.

325.

DEA/50210-C-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-642

Ottawa, April 6, 1955

SECRET

DEW LINE AGREEMENT

As you are no doubt aware, the only clause remaining to be settled in the DEW Line Agreement is 13(g), which deals with the restoration of sites. Thompson and Mayer had a discussion April 1 with MacKay and Robertson, the Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs. Clearly, the U.S. authorities would like to have us omit completely any suggestion that the last user of a site should be obligated to restore the site to a reasonable condition. If Canada does insist on such a requirement (which we do) the United States would wish that it be made the subject of a collateral exchange of notes which would not be made public, so as to avoid any possible effect on their agreements with other countries.

2. In the course of the discussion, the following language was evolved and it was agreed that Thompson would try it on the State Department:

"If in the opinion of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources the condition of buildings, equipment or other material which are no longer to be used for the project may have an injurious effect upon the Eskimos, the two governments will consult with a view to working out mutually satisfactory arrangements for razing any such buildings, removing or otherwise disposing of any such equipment, and restoring the site to a reasonable condition, bearing in mind the authorized uses to which the site has been put. In working out mutually satisfactory arrangements it is assumed that the last user of such buildings, equipment and other materials will, subject to the availability of funds, accept the responsibility for any razing and removal that is found necessary except where there are circumstances which in the opinion of the last user warrant requesting the other country to assume this responsibility in whole or in part. Such a request on the part of the last user would be negotiated through the consultation process called for above."

It remains to be seen whether the State Department will be successful in selling this wording to the Pentagon.

326.

DEA/50210-C-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 22, 1955

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES
CONCERNING THE DISTANT EARLY WARNING SYSTEM

On November 18, 1954, Cabinet approved a recommendation made by Cabinet Defence Committee on November 12, 1954, that an agreement be concluded with the United States Government which would enable that government to proceed with the construction of equipment of the distant early warning element of the joint continental defence warning system, in accordance with terms and conditions along the lines submitted.

2. Attached is the draft agreement negotiated with officials of the United States Department of State in accordance with the decision of Cabinet.<sup>47</sup> It was prepared in consultation with the Canadian Government agencies concerned in the matter. In addition to the main agreement, which it is anticipated will be made public shortly after coming into effect, there is also a supplementary exchange of notes which it is intended should remain classified CONFIDENTIAL.<sup>48</sup> The supplementary exchange of notes deals first with the question of restoration of sites after abandonment; the United States does not wish this clause made public because of the possible effect it might have on United States' agreements with other countries. Secondly, it makes reference to an administrative arrangement reached in the Permanent Joint Board on Defence concerning the use of United States military aircraft for air transport tasks within Canada; the Canadian Departments concerned do not wish to make public the existence of this arrangement.

3. The Canadian Departments concerned have all concurred in the declassification of the main agreement but the State Department has not yet obtained the concurrence of all the United States authorities, although it is hopeful that there will be no objection. We have emphasized to the United States Embassy that the Canadian Government will wish to make the agreement public within a reasonable period after its completion.

4. Since the terms and conditions of the agreement do not differ except in detail from those submitted to Cabinet Defence Committee last November,<sup>49</sup> and because it is desirable that the agreement be concluded and made public as soon as possible, I have suggested to the Deputy Ministers of the other Departments concerned that the agreement should not be referred again to Cabinet Defence Committee or Cabinet and that, provided the Ministers of the Departments principally concerned with the matter concur, the Canadian Ambassador in Washington should be instructed to enter into the exchange of notes imme-

<sup>47</sup> Pour la version finale de l'accord et le libellé des conditions, voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1955, N° 8.

For the final version of the agreement and the statement of conditions, see Canada, Treaty Series, 1955, No. 8.

<sup>48</sup> La note supplémentaire portait le numéro 307 et a été remise au département d'État le 5 mai 1955. Les États-Unis ont répondu le même jour. Cette correspondance est dans le dossier MAE/50210-C-40.

The supplementary note was numbered 307 and delivered to the Department of State on May 5, 1955. The United States replied the same day. This correspondence is on DEA/50210-C-40.

<sup>49</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 483.

diately. I informed the other Deputy Ministers that I was consulting you to see if you approved this course of action and at the same time asked them to see if their Ministers concur. I recommend that you concur in the completion of this agreement.<sup>50</sup>

[5.] A further reason for adopting that procedure is that it would be impossible, I think, to have a meeting of the Defence Committee of the Cabinet before your return from the NATO Meeting.<sup>51</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Projet de note supplémentaire de l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État des États-Unis

Draft Supplementary Note from Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State of United States

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE DISTANT EARLY WARNING SYSTEM

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my Note No. ____, of ____, 1955, and your Note No. ____, of ____, 1955, in reply, constituting an agreement for the establishment of the Distant Early Warning System. In accordance with paragraph 21 of the Annex to my Note, which authorizes the making of supplementary arrangements and administrative agreements for the purpose of carrying out the intent of the agreement, I propose that this Note and your reply should constitute an agreement effective from the date of your reply, with respect to the following matters:

(a) Concerning paragraph 13 of the Annex to my Note No. ____, of ____, 1955:
If in the opinion of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources the condition of buildings, equipment or other material which are no longer to be used for the project may have an injurious effect upon the Eskimos, the two governments will consult with a view to working out mutually satisfactory arrangements for razing any such buildings, removing or otherwise disposing of any such equipment, and restoring the site to a reasonable condition, bearing in mind the authorized uses to which the site has been put. In working out mutually satisfactory arrangements it is assumed that the last user of such buildings, equipment and other materials will, subject to the availability of funds, accept the responsibility for any razing and removal that is found necessary except where there are circumstances which in the opinion of the last user warrant requesting the other country to assume this responsibility in whole or in part. Such a request on the part of the last user would be negotiated through the consultation process called for above.

(b) Concerning paragraph 17 of the Annex to my Note No. ____, of ____, 1955:
The use of military aircraft by the United States in Canada in connection with the construction and operation of the DEW System in Canada shall be in accordance with the provisions of the Joint United States-Canadian understanding entitled "Procedures Governing

<sup>50</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
OK L.B. P[earson]

<sup>51</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal Note:
Apr[il] 25 — Mr MacKay said Minister doesn't like word "limited" in 2nd para[graph] of first Canadian note. He wants it to read "will consist of giving" M. W[ershof]

Operations of United States Military Aircraft in Canadian Territory on Point-to-Point Transport Tasks", attached as Appendix "A" to the Journal of the January, 1954, meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

*Projet de note du secrétaire d'État des États-Unis
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Draft Note from Secretary of State of United States
to Ambassador in United States*

CONFIDENTIAL

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE DISTANT EARLY WARNING SYSTEM

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge your Note No. ____ of ____, 1955, which refers to the agreement governing the construction and operation of the Distant Early Warning System and proposes supplementary language relating to paragraphs 13 and 17 of the annex to your Note No. ____ of ____.

2. My Government is in complete accord with the supplementary language proposed. I should like to bring to your attention, however, that the language contained in paragraph (a) of your Note No. ____ pertains only to the particular situation under present consideration, involving the Eskimos, and does not, in the view of my Government, constitute a precedent for other arrangements in the future.

3. My Government concurs in the proposal that your Note and this reply shall constitute a supplementary agreement, effective on the date of this note.

4. Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

327.

DEA/50210-C-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Ottawa, May 27, 1955

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE OF THE DEW LINE

At the April 1955 meeting of the PJBD, in the course of the discussion on the DEW line, the U.S. Air Force Member said that, although the line would not come into operation until mid-1957, it was necessary for a variety of reasons to come to some conclusion in the very near future regarding the policy to be followed in operating and manning the system. A training programme would have to be launched, and budgetary and logistic requirements would have to be determined for inclusion in the financial programme for the U.S. fiscal year 1957. He pointed out that decisions on these matters were contingent upon the views of the Canadian Government because of the reservations which Canada had included in the DEW Agreement. The DEW Agreement leaves open the Canadian position both with respect to the nature and extent of Canadian participation (except that it will be "effective"), and to the question of whether the line is to be manned by civilian or military personnel.

2. The U.S. Air Force Member of the Board put forward proposals on both of these points. His proposal concerning Canadian participation was that the central sector of the System, extending approximately from the mouth of the Mackenzie River to Bray Island in Foxe Basin, should be under command "of an RCAF officer". Presumably this would mean that the general responsibility for the effective operation of the sector would be vested in the RCAF.

3. The U.S. Air Force proposal concerning the operation and maintenance of the entire land-based segment of the line is that it be done by civilian personnel on a contract basis, and that military control would be exercised by stationing a military commander, assisted by no more than four military personnel, at the four main stations only. Civilian contract operation would include provisions for housekeeping, communication, electronic operation and maintenance, maintenance of facilities, medical attention, and operation and maintenance of aircraft that may be retained by the contractor on the line. It is estimated that there would be a total of 850 civilians on the line and an equal number providing back-up, including personnel in training.

Canadian Participation

4. In a memorandum to Cabinet Defence Committee, dated January 20, 1955, the Minister of National Defence wrote as follows:

"... it appears that the continuing aspects of the project are more important to Canada than the transient operations of crash nature (construction program) and that it would be desirable to have the RCAF take as substantial a share as practicable in the operation and manning of the line. It also appeared desirable to have as much as possible of the continuing logistic support performed by Canadian agencies so that traffic in the Arctic should be, as much as possible, Canadian. This would be an effective way of exercising our sovereignty in a continuing manner. To achieve this, it might be necessary to provide special arrangements for shipping which might take some time to achieve. At the present time, however, not enough is known about the line nor will likely be known for some time, to permit specific recommendations to be made. It would be desirable therefore to initiate studies immediately in respect of manning and transportation and resupply in the continuing phase in order to ascertain the possible requirements and the possibilities and consequences of Canadian participation in them."

Manning and Operation

5. The RCAF has made a study of the problem of manning the DEW Line and of the ways in which the RCAF might participate in the operation of the system, but the study has not yet been considered by the Chiefs of Staff Committee nor had it been seen until yesterday by any of the other departments concerned, which would include External Affairs, Northern Affairs and National Resources, Labour, and Defence Production.

6. The Department of External Affairs received yesterday from the Department of National Defence certain papers† dealing with this matter which are to be discussed at a meeting of the Chiefs of Staff Committee to be held on Monday. Two of these papers are of particular interest, one consisting of the recommendations of the RCAF and the other a statement of the views of General Foulkes.

7. The substance of the RCAF recommendation is that since Canada is doing its share by building the Mid-Canada line, the United States should be authorized initially to man and operate the DEW line using civilian or service personnel as they see fit. There should be only token participation by the RCAF during the initial period of operation, consisting of liaison officers at selected stations. Canada should reserve the right to take over any part of the system at any time without prejudice to the United States continuing to pay the full cost. Canada should clearly state its intention of ultimately (?) manning and operating the communications system for the line.

8. The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, argues that the Department of National Defence should not commit itself to any specific plan for RCAF participation until the United States has operated the system for a long enough period to get the "bugs" out of it and to demonstrate that it works effectively and satisfactorily. The application of this principle would defer Canadian participation for some time after the line goes into initial operation in 1957, possibly until as late as 1960. "I see grave difficulties in a decision being taken now that we will be responsible for the operation of any particular sector before the installations have been proven to work satisfactorily. It also seems to me that there will be some merit in having the same company operate the line as constructed it. If this were the case, all we would do would be to take over part of the cost of the operation of a sector and perhaps provide two or three RCAF personnel for supervision."

Resupply

9. So far as is known, the study of the problems of transportation and resupply has not yet been formally started. This is understandable, since it will not be possible to do much until the information acquired during the current airlift and the coming sealift is available for analysis. For example, the United States has made it clear that it would like to have Northern Transportation Company handle the resupply of all the stations in the sector from the Canada-Alaska border to a point east of Cambridge Bay. The Company, however, has insisted that before it can consider taking on any such commitment it will have to spend the next two summers getting detailed information on the hydrography and beach landing conditions in the area. It would seem to be a reasonably safe generalization that the limiting factor is the availability of Canadian Arctic shipping resources, and that the United States would welcome the opportunity to turn as much as possible of the task of resupply over to Canadian agencies, and to pay for the service provided.

10. If it should be argued then, that even if Canada is not prepared to make any commitment at this time with respect to taking responsibility for operating a sector of the line, it might do so with respect to resupply arrangements, it can be anticipated the operating departments would reply that:

(a) they would not be prepared to make any resupply commitments until more information is available as to what is involved;

(b) as the nature of the resupply problem becomes evident it is reasonable to expect that Canadian facilities to deal with it will be developed;

(c) in any case, the Canadian Government should itself pay only for the resupply of stations for which Canada has accepted responsibility.

Operation of the Line by Civil Contract

11. Having in mind the unresolved questions as to when and how Canada will participate in the operation of the DEW line, the U.S. proposal that the operation and maintenance of the entire land-based segment of the system be done by civilian personnel on a contract basis has obvious attractions from the Canadian point of view. However, before any recommendation could be made to Cabinet it would seem necessary to study a number of questions, including the following:

- (a) What, if any, are the political implications of manning the most northerly defence line with civilians when radar installations farther south are manned by military personnel?
- (b) Will an early decision to man the system with civilians adversely affect any subsequent decision by Canada to have the RCAF take over responsibility for part of the system?
- (c) What effect would the employment of civilians for the project have on existing wage rates in the Arctic and would special measures be required to meet this problem?
- (d) Should Canada require that any or all of the contracts for operation and maintenance be awarded to Canadian firms?
- (e) To what extent should Canada require that Canadian labour be employed?

External Affairs' Position

12. In the discussion at the meeting of the Chiefs of Staff Committee, it is suggested that the External Affairs representative might take the position that operation of the system on a civilian contract basis would seem desirable, subject to detailed consideration of the questions outlined in paragraph 11 above.

13. The position which External Affairs should take with respect to the nature and timing of Canadian participation is less obvious. It would appear that the United States is quite willing to make use of, and to pay for Canadian resources in the operation, maintenance and resupply of the system, thus reducing the number of American personnel, military and civilian, to whatever minimum the available Canadian resources make possible.

14. Basically, the External Affairs position is that in order that the Canadian Government can exercise effective control over a defence project which is important politically as well as militarily, Canada should at the earliest opportunity share in the operational responsibility for, and acquire a financial stake in it. On the other hand it is clear that National Defence is determined to defer any decision on the matter for as long as possible, and then to do as little as possible.

15. The question to be answered therefore is how far External Affairs should push the argument that Canada should reach an early decision on the extent of its participation and should plan on participating as soon as the operation of the system commences rather than waiting until some later date.

16. It seems to me that the answer to this question hinges on two points:

- (a) Since it is improbable that National Defence will yield its position at the official level, do you wish to carry the argument to Cabinet Defence Committee or Cabinet?<sup>52</sup>
- (b) To what extent is it desirable from the point of view of External Affairs that the RCAF should be tied to a continuing commitment in the far north which might run as high as $15 million per year, when we are almost certain that we will have several large projects in more populated areas thrust at us within the next two years?<sup>53</sup> We understand, for example, that the 1957 fiscal program of the U.S. Air Force includes provision for 21 heavy radar stations of the Pinetree type (150-200 men per station) to be constructed in the prairie provinces and Ontario between the Pinetree and Mid-Canada systems. In addition, we know of a Strategic Air Command project for 11 refuelling bases, with 8,000-9,000 foot

<sup>52</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
Yes [L.B. Pearson]

<sup>53</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
We should do this — unless we are certain it would make impossible later participation in or complete responsibility for these other projects [L.B. Pearson] runways, and a complement of up to 650 men at each station. These are only two of a number of anticipated United States defence projects. There is certainly a case to be argued that it would be wise at this time to keep the relatively limited resources of the RCAF as free as possible until we have a better idea of what is going to develop during the next 18 months or two years.

17. I should be grateful for your guidance on these points.<sup>54</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

328.

DEA/50045-A-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité des chefs d'état-major

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Chiefs of Staff Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], May 30, 1955

Present

The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes)
The Chief of the General Staff (Lieutenant-General Simonds)
The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice-Admiral Mainguy)
The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemon)
The Acting Chairman, Defence Research Board (Mr. Davies)

Also Present

C.M. Drury, Esq., Deputy Minister of National Defence.
R.B. Bryce, Esq., Secretary to the Cabinet.
R.A. MacKay, Esq., Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
Air Commodore Rutledge, Co-ordinator, Joint Staff.
Secretary, Chiefs of Staff (Commander Solomon)
Assistant Secretary, Chiefs of Staff (Lieutenant-Colonel Rutherford)

III. CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN THE OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE OF THE EARLY WARNING SYSTEMS

7. The Committee had for consideration a memorandum from the Secretary, Chiefs of Staff to which was attached memoranda concerning Canadian participation in the operation, maintenance and manning of the Distant Early Warning Line and the Mid-Canada Line.

(CSC 1855-5 and CSC 1855-4 of 25 May, 1955)†

8. The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff said that it would be necessary to consider the early warning systems as a complete unit and to attempt to determine how it would operate in four or five years time. A first requirement would be that the system must operate efficiently as a whole.

9. As far as the DEW Line was concerned it had been his understanding that the US authorities were to be given permission to construct the line and to work out the necessary proposals for its manning and operation and that the Canadian Government would, at a later date, decide what part it would take in the manning. The government would be in a

<sup>54</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Our position should be to take on the maximum effort possible in respect of all activities on our own soil — even if it may mean the reduction of our defence effort overseas [L.B. Pearson] better position to see how much of the line it was prepared to take over when costs for the maintenance and operation of the Mid-Canada Line had been determined. To take a decision at this time to be responsible for the operation of a particular section of the DEW Line before the installations had proved satisfactory could lead to difficulties.

10. If the principle was acceptable that the DEW Line should be operated by the prime contractor for a set period to prove its efficiency before consideration was given to Canadian operation, the same principle would appear to apply equally to the initial operation and maintenance of the Mid-Canada Line. The question might be raised as to why it had been recommended that the Mid-Canada Line be operated initially by service personnel.

11. The Chief of the Air Staff considered it important to bear in mind that the function of the DEW Line differed from that of the Mid-Canada Line. The former was primarily a warning system whereas the latter in addition to providing warning along the line would provide facilities for identification and traffic control of aircraft at 7 sector control stations at three of which there would be radar control. While it was both desirable and practical for the Doppler section of the Mid-Canada Line to be maintained and operated by the prime contractor until it had proved satisfactory, it was essential that the radar installations be operated by military personnel due to their function. In addition, the radar equipment had passed the test stage. With regard to construction, the RCAF had assumed a substantial portion of the responsibility for the planning and supervision of the Mid-Canada Line. The USAF had relegated these responsibilities to the civilian prime contractor in the case of the DEW Line.

12. The Secretary to the Cabinet said that if the DEW Line was not to be operated initially by military personnel the prime contractor should operate it for a set period until it was relatively trouble-free operationally. The cost to Canada of eventually paying for a portion of the operating cost would not likely be a major financial issue. A point of issue might be the question of whether the RCAF should share the military establishment of the line.

13. The Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs said that as the United States was constructing, and if it were agreed that it should man, the DEW Line it should be allowed a relatively free hand to decide how the manning should be accomplished. Canada should only indicate that there were no objections to the United States manning being done by a civilian organization. With respect to the proposal that the United States should be permitted to man the DEW Line for a limited initial period pending final decision it was not considered that the Department of External Affairs would offer any objections, provided that it was clearly understood that the question would be reviewed within a limited period and provided also that it was understood that in principle Canada should participate in operating joint defence installations in Canada to the maximum extent possible.

14. It was agreed, after further discussion, that:

(a) the Chief of the Air Staff would prepare a draft submission on the subject to the Cabinet Defence Committee. The submission would recommend that the US be advised that there would be no objection to the prime contractor operating the DEW Line with civilians for a specified period after which time the situation would be reviewed with respect to Canadian manning and payment. The submission would also indicate the desirability and feasibility of the Doppler section of the Mid-Canada Line being operated initially by the prime contractor with civilians while the main radar stations would continue to be a service responsibility; and 329.

(b) the draft submission referred to above would be considered at an early meeting of the Chiefs of Staff.<sup>55</sup>

...

DEA/50210-C-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], June 13, 1955

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE OF THE DEW LINE

The Chiefs of Staff agreed on May 30 to recommend to Cabinet Defence Committee that the United States be advised that there was no objection to the prime contractor (Western Electric) operating the DEW line for a specified period (say 2 years) with civilian personnel, after which the situation with respect to Canadian participation, both manpower and financial, would be reviewed. The RCAF would take over at the commencement of operation the rearward communication links at the points where they tied into the mid-Canada line, thus providing control over the communications. In addition an RCAF officer would be integrated into the staff of each of the 4 main stations on the line itself.

2. Before the above recommendation is submitted to Cabinet Defence Committee two further meetings are to be held. The first<sup>56</sup> is to be a meeting of Deputy Ministers, to give such Departments as Labour, Transport, Northern Affairs and Defence Production an opportunity to express their views on the details of the recommendations of the Chiefs of Staff and to consider further the possibility of Canada taking responsibility for the resupply of all or part of the DEW system. The second meeting is to be a meeting of Chiefs of Staff Committee to review the submission being prepared for Cabinet Defence Committee.

3. If you concur, I propose that the External Affairs representative at these meetings should seek to ensure that the following points are incorporated in the memorandum to Cabinet Defence Committee:

(a) the specified period for U.S. operation, at the conclusion of which the Canadian position with respect to participation is to be reviewed, should not exceed two years.<sup>57</sup>

(b) Canadian sub-contractors and labour should be used whenever possible; (It will be necessary for the Department of Labour to balance this requirement against arrangements desired by the contractor to provide the greatest possible stability of employment.)<sup>58</sup>

<sup>55</sup> Ce procès-verbal comprend les changements convenus à la 581<sup>e</sup> réunion du Comité des chefs d'état-major les 22 et 23 juin 1955.

These minutes include changes agreed to at the 581st meeting of the Chiefs of Staff Committee on June 22 and 23, 1955.

<sup>56</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
June 15 [Jules Léger]

<sup>57</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
Yes [L.B. Pearson]

<sup>58</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
Yes [L.B. Pearson]

(c) the plan for the operation of rearward communication links by the RCAF should be stated in specific terms in the memorandum to Cabinet, and in due course to the United States;<sup>59</sup>

(d) specific information should be included in the memorandum to Cabinet on the progress of studies to determine the possibility of Canada undertaking responsibility for the resupply of the system, including the payment of all or part of the cost.<sup>60</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

330.

DEA/50210-C-40

Compte-rendu d'une réunion

Record of Meeting

SECRET

[Ottawa] June 15, 1955

Present at the Meeting

Department of National Defence

Mr. C.M. Drury, Deputy Minister—Chairman
 General Charles Foulkes, Chairman Chiefs of Staff
 Mr. E.B. Armstrong, Assistant Deputy Minister (Finance)
 G/C W.B. Hodgson, Assistant for Logistics Planning
 W/C G.R.M. Hunt, Directorate of Air Plans Strategic
 Mr. J.F. Anderson, Deputy Minister's Office

Department of Defence Production

Mr. D.A. Golden, Deputy Minister

Department of External Affairs

Mr. M.H. Wershof, Assistant Under-Secretary
 Mr. W.H. Barton, Defence Liaison Division 1

Department of Finance

Mr. J.J. Deutsch, Secretary to the Treasury Board
 Mr. D.J. Gow, Treasury Board Staff

Department of Labour

Mr. H.S. Johnstone

Department of Northern Affairs & National Resources

Mr. R.G. Robertson, Deputy Minister
 Mr. G.W. Rowley

Department of Transport

Mr. J.R. Baldwin, Deputy Minister
 Mr. J.E. Devine

OPERATION AND MANNING

1. In opening the meeting Mr. Drury stated that its purpose was to obtain the views of government departments on the position that Canada should adopt with respect to:

- (a) the operation and manning of the DEW Line;
- (b) the annual re-supply of the DEW Line.

2. The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, presented the views of the Chiefs of Staff Committee on the operation and manning of the DEW Line, as contained in the draft submission to

<sup>59</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
 Yes [L.B. Pearson]

<sup>60</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
 Yes [L.B. Pearson]

Cabinet Defence Committee,† being considered by the Chiefs of Staff, copies† of which were circulated to those present.

3. General Foulkes stated that the Chiefs of Staff considered that nothing should be allowed to interfere with bringing the DEW Line into operation as soon as possible. They, therefore, favoured operation of the Line by the USAF through its prime contractor for an initial period of three years. He stated that the RCAF wished to have liaison officers at the four main stations and favoured Canadian operation and manning of the rearward communication system.

4. Mr. Wershof said that the Secretary of State for External Affairs held the view that the United States should be authorized to operate the Line for an initial period not exceeding two years.

5. Mr. Golden said that in his view and that in view of the Minister of Defence Production Canada should not offer to operate, man, construct or pay for any part of the DEW Line at least until such time as the System was proved, and further that for technical reasons, we should be prepared to allow the United States to operate the Line for an initial period of at least three years.

6. Mr. Wershof pointed out that a Public Declaration had been made to the effect that Canada would participate effectively in the operation of the DEW Line. He stated that Mr. Pearson strongly supports Canadian participation in the manning of the Line, and feels that as a minimum Canada should undertake the manning and operation of the rearward communications system. It was generally agreed that manning of the DEW Line itself by Canada was not practicable and, therefore, the recommendation in the draft submission, that the United States be permitted to man and operate the DEW Line by civil contract, if desired, and that Canadian civilians be given priority for employment in this system wherever feasible should be accepted.

7. Mr. Robertson supported the view of the Department of External Affairs that Canada should operate and man the rearward communication system. He observed, however, that the system now planned does not cater to commercial requirements in the Canadian North and he asked whether it would not be possible to move to the Mackenzie River Valley, the multi-channel voice and teletype tropospheric scatter link which it is now planned to run from Hall Lake down the west coast of Hudson's Bay through Churchill to Flin-Flon. Mr. Robertson noted that the main concentration of people in the Canadian North is along the Mackenzie River and that the establishment of commercial voice communications into this part of Canada was of far more value to his Department than to have such a system in the Eastern Arctic.

8. Mr. Baldwin pointed out that with the technological advances now appearing in the tropospheric scatter system of communications it was quite feasible that not too many years hence, the main communications links to Asia and Europe will extend across the Canadian North. To that end, the rearward communications plan currently envisaged would be more suitable than the alternative suggested by Mr. Robertson.

9. Mr. Robertson wished to know how this plan had been developed and it was pointed out by the RCAF that the USAF had developed the basic plan. The plan had then been brought to Canada for discussion and approval or otherwise by the RCAF. The RCAF had examined the plan in detail, bearing in mind that a requirement exists for a voice communications system extending northward from Hall Lake, via Resolute to Thule in Greenland, agreed that the plan fulfilled the military requirements and accordingly approved it with some minor modifications.

10. Mr. Robertson then asked if Canada undertook to pay for the construction and manning of the rearward communications system would it not be possible to move to Mackenzie River Valley, the link running from Hall Lake to Flin-Flon by Churchill.

11. Mr. Drury stated that the plan had been designed to meet a military requirement and the possibility of superimposing commercial traffic on this system would have to be discussed later. He felt therefore, that the basic plan which was now envisaged could not be altered.

12. In discussing the costs that would be incurred by Canada should it be decided to operate the rearward communications system, General Foulkes pointed out that the three Radar Lines in Canada should be regarded as one integrated system. For the benefit of the meeting, he mentioned that the Pinetree System had been constructed, manned and operated as a joint project of Canada and the United States and that no major disagreements on the sharing of costs for this system had been experienced. He went on to say further that the Mid-Canada Line was being constructed and operated solely by Canada and it was going to cost in the region of $170 million. The DEW Line is being constructed by the United States at a cost of approximately $250 million and, therefore, in examining these costs it is evident that Canada's share has been substantial. Because of the inherent difficulties of logistics support in more than one agency, constructing a radar line and for administrative ease it had been decided that Canada should construct the Mid-Canada Line and the United-States the DEW Line rather than operate on a joint basis as had been the case in the Pinetree System.

13. Mr. Robertson expressed concern as to whether Canadian labour, particularly Eskimo labour could be used in the operation of the DEW Line. It was pointed out by both Mr. Drury and Mr. Golden that there would undoubtedly be jobs available for the Eskimo and that the availability of positions for suitably qualified Canadian technical personnel would far exceed the supply and, therefore, there need be no fear on the part of the Departments of Northern Affairs and National Resources or Labour that Canadians would not have ample opportunity to work on the DEW Line.

14. Mr. Drury raised the question of whether Canada should contribute towards the annual cost of operating the DEW Line and the opinion of the meeting was that the entire cost of operating the system should be borne within the United States initially. It was generally agreed by those present that the draft submission to the Cabinet Defence Committee should be accepted, that is that the Canadian Government should authorize the United States Government to man and operate the Line through the medium of civilian contractors for a period of two or three years. It was further agreed that the rearward communications system for the DEW Line should be operated as a part of the DEW Line itself but preferably by a Canadian sub-contractor.

RE-SUPPLY

15. In the discussion concerning the annual re-supply of the Line it was evident that very little information is available as to what tonnages will be involved. Mr. Drury asked whether the USAF or the RCAF had examined this problem and it was pointed out by the RCAF that the USAF in the Project Office in New York had done nothing towards examining the problems of re-supply, although it was understood that some preliminary discussions had been held on this matter in the Pentagon. The RCAF had not examined the problem pending a decision on who should operate and man the system. It was pointed out that a rough estimate of tonnages involved could be gained from an estimate of the Western Electric Company that an Intermediate Station would require approximately 800 tons of POL per year and that an Auxiliary Station would require approximately 12 to 14 hundred tons of POL. Therefore, an estimate of 1000 tons of POL per station in Canada could be assumed. Mr. Baldwin stated that it had been the experience of the Department of Transport that supplies other than POL normally ran at about 50% of the requirement for POL and, therefore, an average figure of 1500 tons per station in Canada could be assumed.

16. Of general information was a statement by General Foulkes to the meeting that the United States are even now examining the feasibility of providing power for the DEW system by means of nuclear reactors. Should this prove practicable it would alleviate the re-supply problems to a marked degree.

17. Mr. Robertson expressed the view that the Mackenzie River Transportation system should be developed to handle the re-supply of all stations in the Western Arctic including those in Alaska as far west as Point Barrow. This task would undoubtedly require construction of new ships. Mr. Baldwin stated that no commercial company would accept such a commitment unless they were assured of a ten-year period of operation. In the Eastern Arctic Mr. Robertson thought it should be possible to establish a system of logistics support with sea transport running into Hudson Bay, Foxe Basin and the east coast of Baffin Island. Mr. Baldwin agreed with Mr. Robertson that such a system could be set up and he felt that we could proceed on the assumption that the entire sea support of the Line could be handled by Canadian commercial carriers.

18. In the discussion on air support on the Line Mr. Robertson thought it should be possible to set up scheduled air services from the settled part of Canada to the Line and also running east and west along the Line. With these services he felt it should be possible to handle the annual airlift support for the system. It was pointed out by the RCAF that the maintenance of the Line would require a very specialized form of air service in that maintenance crews would be held at Main Stations and would proceed along the Line to carry out major servicing at Intermediate and Auxiliary stations when this was required. Obviously this type of service could not be handled on a scheduled basis.

19. Mr. Baldwin stated that the Department of Transport will be investigating this summer the feasibility and practicability of the Department of Transport operating the air strips at the Main Stations as Department of Transport airfields.

20. It was evident that a study on the re-supply problems should be undertaken in the very near future. Mr. Baldwin was asked whether the Transportation Sub-Committee of the Advisory Committee on Northern Development, which Mr. Baldwin chairs, could not undertake a study of the re-supply problems. It was agreed that Mr. Baldwin's committee would undertake this task.

331.

DEA/50210-C-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], June 30, 1955

MANNING AND OPERATION OF THE DEW SYSTEM

As you know, discussions have been going on for some weeks in the Chiefs of Staff Committee, and between the deputy ministers of the departments concerned, as to what reply the Canadian Section of the PJBD should make to U.S. proposals regarding the manning and operation of the DEW system. These proposals were as follows:

(a) The line should be divided into three sectors; the first, from Kodiak, Alaska to Tuk-tuk, at the mouth of the Mackenzie River, to be commanded by a U.S. officer; the second, from the Mackenzie to Foxe Basin, to be commanded by an RCAF officer; the third, from Foxe Basin to Cape Dyer on Baffin Island, to be commanded by a U.S. officer.

(b) The line should be operated and maintained by civilian personnel on a contract basis; the military control of activities would be exercised by stationing military commanders and small military staffs (4 or 5 officers) at each of the four main stations only. The total number of civilians on the line is estimated at about 850.

2. Although External Affairs has pressed for active participation by Canada in the project as soon as it commences operation, it is clear that this view is not shared by any of the other departments concerned.

3. There is general agreement among officials that the following recommendations should be submitted to Ministers:

(a) the U.S. be informed that its authorized agency may, subject to the provisions of the following sub-paragraphs, man and operate the portion of the DEW system in Canada for the first three years of its operation and that prior to the conclusion of this period Canadian wishes concerning future participation will be made known;

(b) the U.S. be permitted to man and operate the DEW system by civil contract if desired, subject to the same general conditions, where applicable, as were agreed for the construction phase of the system;

(c) Canada reserves the right to participate actively to the extent dictated by Canadian interests, including taking over the manning and operation of all of the system on Canadian territory at the expiration of the three-year period of operation, should it be in the Canadian interest to do so. (In this connection, Canada wishes now to indicate a special interest in assuming responsibility for the rearward communication system in Canada) (See comment in paragraph 4);

(d) an RCAF officer, or officers, be integrated into the staff of each of the four main stations;

(e) the United States will be responsible for administration and control of their own personnel, both service and civilian. The responsibility for the efficient technical operation of the system shall rest with the USAF, through its prime contractor. The military command of the area and operational control of the system, within Canadian territory, will be the responsibility of the RCAF;

(f) the question of participation of the resupply of the DEW system is under active consideration and recommendations will be put forward at a later date.

4. It appeared, in the course of the discussion, that if Canada were to participate in the project from the outset, the most logical way would be to take the responsibility for the rearward communications. This involves a total of 11 stations, the capital cost of which is estimated at $15 million, and the operating cost about $3.5 million per year. However, no department, other than External Affairs, was in favour of this. The general opinion was that, for the present, there was no particular advantage in Canada taking on such a commitment, and that if it later proved desirable this could be done. External Affairs asked that the recommendation to Ministers should at least present the pros and cons on this question. The response of National Defence was the ambiguous sentence marked in brackets in paragraph 3(c) above.

5. I do not think there is any doubt but that Canadian transportation facilities in the Arctic will be developed over the next few years to the point where they can cope with the resupply of the DEW system as well as the requirements of all other residents of the area. It is the intention of the Departments of Transport and Northern Affairs that the transportation system should operate on a commercial basis, with the U.S. paying for DEW line deliveries in the same way as the Hudson's Bay Company would pay for supplies delivered to its posts.

6. In view of the short time remaining before the next meeting of the PJBD on July 11, General Foulkes has proposed that the concurrence of the Ministers directly concerned be obtained for General McNaughton to make a statement along the lines indicated above. The External Affairs answer would seem to depend on the following points:

(a) Do you wish to pursue with your colleagues the question of active Canadian participation in the project from the outset? On the basis of the discussions at the official level, I think it has become unreal to recommend such a course.

(b) Assuming that you agree that External Affairs should cease to press the case for immediate participation, then I urge that the sentence in sub-paragraph 3(c) with respect to the rearward communications should be deleted. Twice, so far, in our dealings with the Americans, we have said we intend to participate, and each time, when confronted with the need for a decision, we have backed away. I have little doubt that when the three-year period proposed for U.S. operation of the system is up National Defence will have new reasons for delaying participation. Under these circumstances I think it is undesirable and undignified to make a declaration of intention about the rearward communications that we may never fulfil. Even without making such a declaration now, Canada's right to operate what it wishes after three years is unchallenged.

(c) If you do wish to have the matter discussed by Cabinet Defence Committee, then General McNaughton might be instructed, pending such a meeting, to indicate to the U.S. Section of the PJBD that Canada agrees to U.S. operation of the horizontal line for a three-year period, by civil contract if desired, but that we have not completed our study of the rearward communications and wish to reserve our position with respect to them for a short time (perhaps a few weeks).

7. In the discussions of the past few weeks National Defence, supported by Defence Production, has stressed the argument that Canada is already contributing its fair share to the over-all warning system through its commitments to the Pinetree and Mid-Canada projects. In this connection General Foulkes has asked me to draw to your attention the fact that a memorandum† is to be submitted to Cabinet Defence Committee recommending that a civilian agency be assigned, by contract, the responsibility for servicing, maintaining, and providing the logistic support for the Mid-Canada line. The operation and control of the line would be the responsibility of the RCAF.

8. A copy of General Foulkes' letter (dated June 29) to me, together with his draft papers on the DEW and Mid-Canada lines, is attached for your information.

J. LÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

*Le président du Comité des chefs d'état-major
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Chairman, Chiefs of Staff Committee, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

Ottawa, June 29, 1955

Dear Mr. Léger:

MANNING AND OPERATION OF THE DEW SYSTEM

Attached is a copy of the revised paper on the Manning and Operation of the DEW System. You will recall that at the 581st meeting of the Chiefs of Staff held 22 June, it was decided to make certain changes in the draft memorandum for Cabinet Defence Committee. These changes have been made and have now been cleared with the Chiefs of Staff.

You will note that para. 2(b) has been rewritten to allow for consideration of all the general conditions included in the exchange of notes regarding the construction phase of the line. It was the view of the Chiefs that this should be a matter of negotiation at the next meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence as to just which of these conditions were applicable to the first phase of the manning stage.

You will also note that in sub para. 2(c) we have given indications of our special interest in the rearward communication system and our desire to take this over at an early date. You will recall it was suggested that this memorandum should not be sent to Cabinet Defence Committee at this time but should be shown to interested ministers; that is, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of National Defence, and perhaps the Minister of Defence Production, and cleared with the ministers as the basis of an aide mémoire for the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Joint Board on Defence for discussion at the July meeting. If you concur in the paper as now written as the basis of an aide mémoire for General McNaughton, would you advise me. I can then take this matter up with Mr. Campney and get his clearance so that your Department may refer the paper to General McNaughton for use at the next meeting of the Joint Board.

I am attaching for the information of your minister the agreed memorandum for Cabinet Defence Committee regarding the manning of the Mid-Canada Line as I consider it is necessary for ministers to realize the undertakings we are making regarding the manning of the Mid-Canada Line at the time they are considering the proposals for the manning of the DEW Line. This paper will in due course be put to Cabinet Defence Committee.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES FOULKES

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

*Note du ministre de la Défense nationale
pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Memorandum from Minister of National Defence to Cabinet Defence Committee

SECRET

[Ottawa], 24 June, 1955

MANNING AND OPERATION OF THE DEW SYSTEM

1. The Committee will recall that at the 105th meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee held on 7 June last, the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence was noted by the Committee. At that time it was pointed out that the United States Air Force had put forward certain suggestions as a basis for discussion regarding the command and operation of the Distant Early Warning Line. These suggestions were as follows:

(a) The United States Air Force proposed that the land segment be divided into three sectors: the western sector from Kodiak, Alaska, to Tuktuk, to be commanded by a USAF officer; the central sector, from Eskimo Lakes, N.W.T. to Bray Island, to be commanded by an RCAF officer; and the eastern sector, from the vicinity of Bray Island to the eastern terminal, to be commanded by a USAF officer.

(b) The United States have advised that they are giving consideration to the entire land-based segment of the DEW Line being operated and maintained by civilian personnel on a contract basis. Civilian contract operation would include provisions for housekeeping, communication, electronic operation and maintenance, maintenance of facilities, medical attention, and maintenance of aircraft that may be retained by the contractor on the line; and the military control of activities would be exercised by stationing military commanders at the main stations only. They have suggested that the primary reason for proposing the manning of the line by civilians was that there was a shortage of technical manpower in the USAF. They estimated there would be a total of 850 civilians, plus 4 to 6 military personnel at each of the five main stations.

(c) The U.S. Section of the Board have asked for our views on the manning and operation of the line by not later than 1 August.

2. This matter has been discussed by the Chiefs of Staff and by other interested government departments and the following recommendations are made:

(a) The U.S. be informed that its authorized agency may, subject to the exceptions set forth in sub paras (c) and (d) hereunder, man and operate the portion of the DEW System in Canada for the first three years of its operation and that prior to the conclusion of this period, Canadian wishes concerning future participation will be made known.

(b) The United States be permitted to man and operate the DEW system by civil contract if desired, subject to the same general conditions, where applicable, as were agreed to for the construction phase of the system (reference Annex to the Exchange of Notes of May 5, 1955);

(c) Canada reserves the right to participate actively to the extent dictated by Canadian interests, including taking over the manning and operation of all of the System on Canadian territory at the expiration of the initial three-year period of operation, should it be considered in the Canadian interest to do so. In this connection, Canada wishes now to indicate a special interest in assuming responsibility for the rearward communications system within Canada (see attached map);

(d) An RCAF officer or officers, be integrated into the staff of each of the four main stations which lie within Canadian territory;

(e) The United States will be responsible for administration and control of their own personnel both Service and civilian. The responsibility for the efficient technical operation of the system shall rest with the USAF through their prime contractor. The military command of the area and operational control of the system, within Canadian territory, will be the responsibility of the RCAF.

(f) The question of participation in the resupply of the DEW System is under active consideration and recommendations will be put forward at a later date.

[R. CAMPNEY]

NOTE: "Operational Control" is defined as the power of directing, coordinating and controlling the operational activities of deployed units which may, or may not, be under the command of the authority exercising operational control. It specifically excludes redeployment.

332.

DEA/50210-C-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

Ottawa, July 5, 1955

MANNING AND OPERATION OF THE DEW SYSTEM

In accordance with our discussion yesterday, I informed General Foulkes that, provided the other Ministers concerned agreed, you had no objection to authorizing General McNaughton to inform the U.S. Section of the P.J.B.D. that, apart from the rearward communications, Canada was prepared to allow the United States to man and operate the DEW System for a period of three years. However, before a decision was reached on the rearward communications, you wished to have the matter discussed in Cabinet Defence Committee or in Cabinet.

2. Subsequently, General Foulkes discussed the matter with Mr. Campney who said that he was unalterably opposed to the assumption by Canada of the responsibility for the operation of the rearward communications system during the first three years. In order to resolve the matter immediately, we understand Mr. Campney may have it placed on the agenda of tomorrow's Cabinet.

3. Attached is a brief for your use in discussing this matter at Cabinet if it comes up.

J. L[ÉGER]

333.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 6, 1955

...

DISTANT EARLY WARNING SYSTEM; RESPONSIBILITY FOR MANNING AND OPERATION

11. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of January 26th, 1955, said that the U.S. government had been informed, some time ago, that Canadian participation during the construction phase of the Distant Early Warning Line would be limited to giving assistance in organizing and using Canadian resources. It had also been indicated that the Canadian government intended to participate in the operation and maintenance of the project, but the character of such participation would be determined later, on the basis of studies to be carried out during the construction phase.

It now seemed clear that Canada should not, at this time, undertake to operate that portion of the new system in Canada. It was desirable that those who designed and built this new project should be responsible for getting it into successful operation. Consequently, he suggested that the U.S. government be informed, through the Permanent Joint Board on Defence which was meeting the following week, that Canada would not object to the proper U.S. agency taking on the operation of the line for the first three years, on the understanding that Canadian wishes regarding subsequent participation in operation would be made known within that period.

He was somewhat concerned, however, about the lack of Canadian participation in the operation and manning of the rearward communications. He suggested that General MacNaughton be requested to inform the U.S. section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the following week, that Canadian views on this particular aspect of the matter would be made known to the U.S. authorities within the next two months.

12. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It would likely be difficult for the government to reach a decision in two months on the operation of the rearward communications. It would be preferable to indicate to the P.J.B.D. that the government's views would be made known within the next six months. On the other hand, a decision could probably not be postponed for a six-month period without causing some delay in the whole operation.

(b) It was argued that, whatever else was done, Canada should retain some considerable share of responsibility for the manning and operation of rearward communications, which presumably might become quite useful for civilian purposes in the northern regions of Canada.

(c) It was argued, on the other hand, that there was some doubt that, from a technical point of view, the D.E.W. line and its rearward communications in northern Canada could be operated with complete success. In the circumstances, it might be in Canada's interests, in the early stages at least, to allow the whole system to be operated exclusively by the U.S. authorities on the understanding, of course, that Canada reserved its rights to participate to a greater or lesser degree at some time in the future.

13. The Cabinet noted the report by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the manning and operation of the Distant Early Warning line and its rearward communications, and agreed that the U.S. government be informed,

(a) that, subject to certain conditions, there would be no objection to the proper U.S. agency manning and operating that portion of the D.E.W. line in Canada for the first three years of its operation, on the understanding that, within that period, Canadian wishes regarding its future participation in manning and operation of the line would be made known; and,

(b) that, within the next three months, the U.S. authorities be informed of Canadian views on Canadian participation in the manning and operation of the rearward communications of the line.

...

334.

DEA/50218-D-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la Commission permanente
canado-américaine de défense*

Extract from Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

SECRET

...

4. (SECRET) Distant Early Warning System — Land Segment

The Canadian Chairman referred to item 4 of the Board's Journal for its meeting of April 1955, and in particular to the tentative views put forward by the USAF member regarding the policy to be followed in operating and manning the DEW system. He recalled the importance which the USAF member had attached to reaching an early decision on the general policy with respect to these matters and his request for the assistance of the Canadian Section in obtaining the views of the Canadian Government by July 1 if possible, and in any event by August 1.

The Canadian Chairman said that the Canadian Government had given careful consideration to the proposals advanced by the USAF member at the last meeting of the Board and that he was authorized to inform the Board of the Canadian Government's views, as follows:

(1) The Canadian Government believed that the principle of vesting responsibility in a single agency, which was being applied during the construction phase of the project, should extend into the phase of the initial operation, at least so far as the line itself was concerned, until the system had been thoroughly tested and proven to be operationally effective.

(2) For this reason, the Canadian Government was agreeable, subject to the limitations set forth in the following paragraphs, that the authorized U.S. agency might man and operate that portion of the DEW system in Canada for the first three years of its operation. Prior to the conclusion of this period the wishes of the Canadian Government concerning its future participation in the manning and operation of the system would be made known.

(3) The United States might man and operate the system by civil contract, if desired, subject to the same general conditions, where applicable, as were agreed to for the construction phase of the system. In this connection the Canadian Government required that sub-contracts for air communications, and the operation and maintenance of air-strips, should be placed with Canadian entities.

(4) The Canadian Government specifically reserved from the above authorization the rearward communications links. These facilities were of particular interest to Canada and a decision had not yet been reached by the Canadian Government as to its views regarding their operation. When the Canadian views had been determined, in about three months, the United States authorities would be informed.

(5) Canada reserved the right to participate actively, to the extent dictated by Canadian interests, including taking over the manning and operation of all or any part of the system on Canadian territory, at the expiration of the initial three year period of operation.

(6) Canada desired that an RCAF Officer or Officers should be integrated into the staff of each of the four main stations in Canadian territory.

(7) Although the U.S. would be responsible for administration and control of its personnel, both military and civilian, and although the responsibility for the efficient technical operation of the system would rest with the USAF through its prime contractor, the military command of the area and operational control of the system within Canadian territory would be the responsibility of the RCAF.

The Canadian Chairman said that the Canadian Government believed the application of the procedures outlined above should facilitate bringing the system to a high level of operational effectiveness at the earliest possible moment. He added that the statement he had just made referred only to the operation and manning of the system. It did not deal with the question of arrangements for re-supply. This problem was now under study by the Canadian Government and a separate statement on it would be made later.

The Canadian Chairman said that his remarks were intended only as a broad statement of policy and that it was recognized that it would be necessary, by means of consultation between the appropriate Canadian and U.S. authorities, to develop the detailed application of these principles to the specific problems which would have to be overcome in bringing the system into operation. As an illustration he referred to his remarks (paragraph 7) with respect to command arrangements. He said that the wording of this statement stemmed from the intention of the Canadian Government to maintain control over all flying and other military activities in or over Canadian territory. It was recognized that the application of this general principle would have to be worked out between the two Air Forces in view of their experience in evolving practical working solutions to other problems. However, he was confident that a mutually acceptable modus operandi could be reached.

...

335.

DEA/50046-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 26, 1955

106TH MEETING OF CABINET DEFENCE COMMITTEE
SEPTEMBER 27, 1955

ITEM III: OPERATION AND MANNING OF THE DEW LINE

You will recall that last June the Department of National Defence prepared a draft memorandum to Cabinet Defence Committee recommending the position which it considered should be taken by the Canadian Government with respect to the operation and manning of the DEW system. This Department finally agreed with all the recommendations except that concerning the rearward communications. The Department of National Defence considered that the rearward communications should be built and operated by the Americans for an initial period of three years, the same as the rest of the project, except that any DEW rearward communications stations situated on the Mid-Canada Line should be operated by Canada after they had been tested and were working satisfactorily. This Department felt that Canada should participate actively in some phase of the operation of the DEW Line and that the rearward communications would seem to offer the best opportunity.

2. As it turned out the draft memorandum to Cabinet Defence Committee was never submitted. Instead this Department prepared a draft statement for use by General McNaughton at the July meeting of the PJBD (copy attached). This statement, which was approved by Cabinet on July 6, reflected the agreed views of National Defence and External Affairs on all phases of the project except the rearward communications. Cabinet directed that the rearward communications problem should be studied further and the Americans informed of the decision "in about three months' time", i.e. early in October.

3. The Department of National Defence has now prepared the attached memorandum for Cabinet Defence Committee† which reiterates the view it expressed in June that the Canadian Government should inform the United States authorities that the rearward communications for the DEW line may be dealt with in the same way as the rest of the system, i.e. that the United States may build and operate them for a period of three years.

4. Although the views of the Department of National Defence have not changed there has been another development which affects this issue. During this summer an interdepartmental study has been carried out by an ad hoc committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Bryce on the whole question of United States military communications in Canada.<sup>61</sup> It is the tentative view of this Committee that in due course Canada should take possession of all of these communication facilities. It would appear, however, that the system which it would be most desirable to take over immediately is not the DEW rearward communications but the system which runs up the Northeast coast from St. John's to Frobisher and which is slated for extension to Thule. This proposal is now being given further study by the Committee. In the meantime, the Committee proposes that in all U.S. telecommunication projects in future, including the DEW rearward communications we should require:

(a) that the United States give Canada an option to acquire on reasonable notice any United States interest in the system on terms to be mutually agreed, and

(b) pending such acquisition by Canada, the United States should undertake to provide to the Canadian Government on request a reasonable number of circuits once the minimum essential military requirements of the United States have been met.

Mr. Bryce will report on this proposal at the Cabinet Defence Committee meeting.

J. L[ÉGER]

<sup>61</sup> Voir/See Document 365.

336.

PCO

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 27, 1955

Present:

The Prime Minister (Mr. St-Laurent), in the Chair,
 The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe),
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson),
 The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson),
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris).
 The Secretary (Mr. Martin)
 The Military Secretary (Captain Lucas)
 The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes),
 The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice Admiral Mainguy),
 The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemmon),
 The Chief of the General Staff (Lieutenant-General Graham),
 The Chairman, Defence Research Board (Dr. Solandt).
 The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
 The Deputy Minister of National Defence (Mr. Miller),
 The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Léger),
 The Deputy Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Golden),
 The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance (Mr. Deutsch).

...
 III. MANNING AND OPERATION OF THE DEW SYSTEM

9. The Minister of National Defence recalled that the U.S. had been informed at a meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, held in July, of the government's views on the manning and operation of the DEW System. This matter had subsequently been discussed by the Chiefs of Staff and other departments and, in order to clarify certain aspects of the situation, particularly with respect to communications, the Chiefs had made certain recommendations. They felt that the U.S. should be permitted to man and operate the portion of the DEW System in Canada for the first three years of its operation and that prior to the conclusion of that period, Canadian wishes concerning future participation would be made known. This could be done, if desired, by civil contract, under the same general conditions applicable to the construction phase but all sub-contracts for air transportation and the maintenance of air strips should be placed with Canadian agencies if this was feasible. Rearward communications should be treated in the same manner as the rest of the line except where they connected with stations on the Mid-Canada Line or passed through it. Canada should operate those particular installations when they were in a fully serviceable condition. The right to participate actively in the manning and operation of any part of the system in Canada after the initial three-year period should be reserved. An R.C.A.F. officer should be stationed at each of the four main stations on Canadian territory. While military command of the area should be a Canadian responsibility, U.S. agencies would be responsible for the administration and control of their own personnel and for the efficient operation of the system. The control of friendly aircraft would be handled in accordance with procedures to be agreed upon. The Chiefs of Staff were actively considering the question of re-supply and would submit recommendations on this subject in due course.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, September 19, 1955, Document D18-55†).

10. Mr. Campney added that the U.S. authorities had been informed at the last meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence that they would be advised in about three months' time of the extent of Canada's participation in the rearward communications system.

11. During the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The question was asked whether, if the U.S. authorities constructed and operated rearward communications, arrangements could be made for these circuits to be made available for the use of the Canadian government, for example if they were needed for aircraft control purposes in the north. In reply, it was stated that official concern was over the question of control, in the long term, of the overall communications in the area. The development of the north was a vital matter and one could not foresee at this stage all the things that would have to be met. It was felt that if the U.S. were now given responsibility for constructing these rearward communications facilities and testing them, at a later date, a decision could be made whether Canada might take them over in whole or in part.

(b) It appeared that there would be a number of circuits available for more than military purposes arising out of the existence of the DEW line, and that there would probably be facilities available for important commercial purposes. It was observed, on the other hand, that U.S. regulations would not permit these lines to be leased for other than military purposes. It all depended on the interpretation given to the term "military purposes". There would probably be little difficulty in Canada using circuits for search and rescue operations, the transmission of meteorological information, and the like.

(c) It was difficult to see how the DEW line rearward communications could be considered in isolation from other communications systems in Canada. A committee of officials was now studying this whole question and it was understood that it would soon be reporting on the principles which might be applied to the solution of these problems. It was reported, in this connection, that this committee felt Canada's interests in all U.S. military communications systems should be protected by obtaining an option to take over all or part of such facilities on reasonable notice, after they had been built and tested. The terms of take-over would also include an undertaking to maintain and operate any such system or segments of a system, which was taken over, for the purposes it or they were originally designed to serve. A separate decision would, however, have to be made for each system and no specific overall rule could be laid down. On the DEW system, it was felt, as the Chiefs of Staff recommended, that the rearward communications should be treated in the same manner as that portion of the line in Canada. In other words, the U.S. authorities would be permitted to construct them and man them for a period of three years. However, it was also felt that since we might not wish to wait as long as three years the operation of some of the circuits might be assumed prior to that time. At present, all that was proposed was that an option be secured to take over that portion of the system that was considered desirable. If and when the option was exercised it was thought that the U.S. might be reimbursed a share of the capital costs involved.

(d) The question was raised of what would happen if no agreement could be reached on the principles which might govern Canada's participation in these communications systems. If no agreement was reached, would the U.S. authorities be allowed to maintain ownership and operation? Canada should insist on the right to use the communications for Canadian purposes and to take them over at any time. In reply, it was stated that it was difficult to assess Canadian requirements but an endeavour to reach agreement on principles would be made as soon as possible.

(e) It would be difficult for the U.S. authorities to secure a contractor to build and maintain the rearward communications for less than the three-year period. If these communications were not operated satisfactorily, the DEW line was of no use. It would be all right to permit the U.S. to do this provided Canada's rights were assured and as long as during that three-year period we had the use of the facilities.

(f) The difficulties on the communications question could only be resolved by the terms of the contract permitting construction.

12. The Committee noted the report of the Minister of National Defence on the manning and operation of the DEW system and agreed to recommend:

(a) that the United States be permitted to man and operate the rearward communications from the DEW line under the same general conditions as applied to the line itself, except that where these connected at stations on the Mid-Canada Line or passed through that line, such links would be manned and operated by Canada when fully serviceable;

(b) that in notifying the United States of the decision recorded in (a) above, it be pointed out that Canada might wish to arrange to use for governmental purposes a fair share of the circuits over and above those essential for the DEW line itself; and

(c) that the condition mentioned in (b) above be incorporated in any future agreement relating to communications for the DEW line.<sup>62</sup>

...

337.

DEA/50210-C-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la Commission permanente
canado-américaine de défense*

Extract from Journal of Permanent Joint Board on Defence

SECRET

Halifax, [n.d.]

...

3. (SECRET) Distant Early Warning System — Land Segment

...

The Canadian Chairman then referred to the statement he had made at the last meeting of the Board concerning the views of the Canadian Government regarding the policy to be followed in operating and manning the DEW system apart from the rearward communications links. These facilities were of particular interest to Canada and a decision had not at that time been reached by the Canadian Government as to its views regarding their operation. The Canadian Chairman said however that he was now authorized to state that the Canadian Government was agreeable that the United States should man and operate the rearward communications from the DEW line under the same general conditions as those applying to the line itself, except that where these communications connected with the Mid-Canada line or passed through that line, such links, when fully serviceable, should be manned and operated by Canada. He added that the Canadian Government had been considering how to deal with its own communications requirements arising largely out of the operation of the DEW line, for example, the control of aircraft and other functions of the Department of Transport, the administration and responsibility of the Departments of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources, etc. With these requirements in mind the Canadian Government might wish to arrange to use for governmental purposes a share of the circuits over and above those essential for the DEW line itself.

<sup>62</sup> Ces conclusions ont été approuvées par le Cabinet plénier le 28 septembre 1955. Une partie des discussions du Cabinet n'a pu être consultée en raison des suppressions faites au dossier en vertu des articles 15 1) et 13 1) de la Loi sur l'accès à l'information.

These conclusions were endorsed by the full Cabinet on September 28, 1955. Parts of its discussion were not available for consultation because of deletions under Sections 15(1) and 13(1) of the Access to Information Act.

The Canadian Chairman then referred to his statement at the last meeting of the Board that the military command of the area and operational control of the system within Canadian territory would be the responsibility of the R.C.A.F. It was apparent from the subsequent discussion that clarification of this point was desirable. He wished, therefore, to restate it in the following terms:

“Military command of the area will be a Canadian responsibility. Operational control of friendly aircraft in the area will be handled in accordance with procedures in effect or jointly arranged by the appropriate authorities in the United States and Canada.”

The U.S. Air Force Member expressed satisfaction with the clarification by the Canadian Chairman and stated that the U.S. Air Force would proceed in accordance with the policy statement of the Canadian Chairman at the July meeting and this clarification.

...

SECTION D

SYSTÈME DE DÉFENSE RADAR : RÉSEAU PINETREE
ET LA LIGNE MID-CANADA
RADAR DEFENCE SYSTEM: PINETREE LINE AND MID-CANADA LINE

338.

PCO

*Note du ministre de la Défense nationale
pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

*Memorandum from Minister of National Defence
to Cabinet Defence Committee*

DOCUMENT NO. D9-55

[Ottawa], February 11, 1955

TOP SECRET

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF FOUR ADDITIONAL PERMANENT RADAR STATIONS IN CANADA

1. At the September 1952 Meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the United States Section of the Board submitted detailed information supporting a request for permission for the United States Air Force to carry out surveys leading to the establishment in Eastern Canada of six temporary radar stations (additional to those contained in the "Pine-tree" project) to improve cover against low-flying aircraft. These stations were planned to form part of a double perimeter chain, the other links of which were to be in the United States. One of the proposed units was to provide Early Warning/Ground Controlled Interception, the remainder Early Warning only.

2. Later, at the January 1953 Meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the United States Section of the Board expanded the request to include three site surveys in British Columbia. These new sites, while also for low-level coverage, were to be for mobile Early Warning Units.<sup>63</sup>

3. Studies of the United States request for nine stations were carried out, and the Chiefs of Staff Committee recommended approval from the Military and technical point of view and, after Cabinet Defence Committee consideration (91st Meeting, 10 February 1953), approval was granted to carry out the various site surveys although authority to construct the stations was withheld pending completion of the surveys. The United States was so advised in Note D-85 of 2 April 1953.<sup>64</sup>

4. Subsequently, at the January 1955 Meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, the United States Section advised that as a result of the surveys, careful reassessment, and consequent scaling down, the RCAF and United States Air Force Air Defence Commands have agreed that current defence needs would best be served by modifying the requirements and seeking authority to install four permanent type EW/GCI radar stations as opposed to the one EW/CGI and eight surveillance stations originally requested. Hence the primary purpose of these four stations is the improvement of the existing Pinetree system, rather than as low-level gap-filler radars. Detailed personnel, equipment and geographical specifications for these stations are set out in Appendix "A". † Each station is expected to provide approximate radar coverage of 175 miles above 20,000 feet, augment existing GCI radars, and enhance the coverage for flanking important United States target areas.

5. Paragraph VI(b), Minutes of the 103rd Cabinet Defence Committee Meeting of 24 January 1955, recorded that the Chiefs of Staff were studying this request and would make recommendations. It has been concluded that, from the Canadian point of view, the four stations, although not as important to the defence of the Canadian industrial complex as they are to United States target areas, are nonetheless essential and do contribute to the depth of the Canadian Defence System. A further benefit to Canada lies in the navigation assistance which these stations might be able to give to aircraft of all types.

6. It is recommended therefore, and in accordance with principles expressed at the Cabinet Defence Committee Meeting of 10 February 1953, that:

(a) The United States be authorized in principle to construct, operate and man the four proposed stations, subject to the conclusion of an agreement through diplomatic channels between the two Governments, in general line with the provisions of the agreement now being concluded for the Distant Early Warning System — it being understood that the United States will meet all costs of installation, operation and manning until the RCAF can take over the responsibility for their operation and manning; and

<sup>63</sup> Voir/See Volume 19, Document 680.

<sup>64</sup> Voir le volume 19, les documents 681, 685 et 686.

See Volume 19, Documents 681, 685 and 686.

(b) The RCAF should, as soon as manpower is available, assume responsibility for the manning of stations in populated areas.<sup>65</sup>

R.O. CAMPNEY

339.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], May 6, 1955

ADDITIONAL RADAR STATIONS ON THE LABRADOR COAST

4. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the decision by the Cabinet on June 30th, 1954, that Canada should construct and operate the mid-Canada warning line, reported that, subsequently, the United States had expressed the desire to extend the line from Hopedale, its eastern terminus, down the Labrador and Newfoundland coasts to Cape Race.<sup>66</sup> Since the U.S. already operated a chain of radar stations on this coast, as part of the Pinetree project, the proposal really meant the insertion of a number of gap-filler radars at appropriate points. In the circumstances, the Chiefs of Staff Committee had agreed that the project might be handled by the U.S. as a supplement to the existing Pinetree installations.

Surveys had been carried out by the North East Air Command of the U.S. Air Force and it was recommended that these gap-filler radars be established at six sites near Cape Makovik, Cut Throat Island, Spotted Isle, Fox Harbor, La Scie and Elliston Ridge. There would be accommodation at each for thirty people, although the permanent staff would probably amount to twenty per station. Not more than 50 acres would be required per station although, for technical reasons, larger areas might be needed in some instances.

The U.S. Air Force had delayed requesting permission to begin construction because it had been waiting for the conclusion of the D.E.W. Line agreement on the assumption that this would serve as a model for the agreement to authorize the construction of these stations in Labrador and Newfoundland. The D.E.W. Line negotiations, however, had taken longer than anticipated. The U.S. fiscal year ended on June 30th, 1955, and part of the funds allocated for the Labrador extension, if not obligated at that time, would revert to the Treasury. This might delay construction of the stations and prevent their being operational by January 1957, when it was expected that the mid-Canada line would be completed. For this reason, Canada had been asked to consider allowing the U.S. Air Force to begin construction immediately, pending the conclusion of mutually acceptable terms and conditions between the two countries. The Minister recommended, with the concurrence of the Minister of National Defence, that the U.S. government be allowed to construct and operate the gap-filler radar stations mentioned, subject to the conclusion of an appropriate exchange of notes.

<sup>65</sup> Approuvé par le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense le 3 mars 1955. Les stations radar étaient situées à Barrington (Nouvelle-Écosse), Oba et Marathon (Ontario) et Kamloops (Colombie-Britannique). Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1955, N° 30. La demande des États-Unis concernant ces stations a mené à une discussion sur la défense continentale entre Pearson et Dulles lors de la visite de ce dernier à Ottawa en mars. Voir le document 302.

Approved by Cabinet Defence Committee, March 3, 1955. The radar sites were located at Barrington, N.S., Oba and Marathon, Ontario and Kamloops, B.C. See Canada, Treaty Series, 1955, No. 30. The United States request for these radar sites led to a discussion of continental defence by Pearson and Dulles during the latter's visit to Ottawa in March. See Document 302.

<sup>66</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 466.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, May 2, 1955 — Cab. Doc. 89-55†)

5. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It was the usual practice for Canada to acquire and hold title to land needed for U.S. defence installations on Canadian soil. The Department of Transport acted as agents for the Department of National Defence and the provinces usually made their crown land available without charge.

(b) The proper provincial authorities should be kept as fully informed as possible about defence projects which involved the use of land belonging to the Crown in the right of a province. In acquiring such land, methods should be followed which did not offend the susceptibilities of the provinces who had the constitutional right to the land in question. If private property was required, normal expropriation methods were of course followed. It was pointed out that, as far as Newfoundland was concerned, the province had been kept informed, as a rule, about proposals to construct defence installations.

(c) As much consideration as possible should be given to Canadian contractors in the matter of supplying equipment and erecting buildings and living quarters. For installations in the Maritime Provinces, the work should be done by contractors from the area when this was feasible. In this connection, it was observed that, under the proposed conditions governing the establishment of the project, Canadian contractors would receive equal consideration with U.S. contractors and preference would be given to qualified Canadian labour.

6. The Cabinet noted the report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and agreed:

(a) that the United States be authorized to construct and operate gap-filler radar stations in Labrador and Newfoundland as the following six sites:

Site number and name	Parent Pinetree station
N-28A—Cape Makkovik	No. 1N-28, Hopedale
N-27A—Cut Throat Island	N-27, Cartwright
N-27B—Spotted Isle	N-27, Cartwright
N-26A—Fox Harbor	N-26, St. Anthony
N-26B—La Scie	N-26, St. Anthony
N-22B—Elliston Ridge	N-22, Redcliff

subject to the conclusion of an exchange of notes along the same general lines as the exchange for the Distant Early Warning System,<sup>67</sup> and that, pending the conclusion of the agreement, the U.S. could proceed with preliminary procurement, shipment and placement of materials and other measures for the construction of these stations;

(b) that the Department of External Affairs be authorized to inform the U.S. Department of State of this decision; and,

(c) that every effort be made to ensure that proper and tactful methods be followed when acquiring land belonging to the Crown in the right of a province.

<sup>67</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1955, N° 29 / See Canada, Treaty Series, 1955, No. 29.

340.

DEA/12349-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], November 22, 1955

ERECTION OF A "TEXAS TOWER"<sup>68</sup>
OFF THE COAST OF NOVA SCOTIA

Some months ago the United States section of the Military Cooperation Committee informed the Canadian section that the United States planned to erect a "Texas Tower" on Brown's Bank on the Continental Shelf about 75 miles south of Cape Sable, Nova Scotia. We checked the proposed location of the Tower with the assistance of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and found that Brown's Bank is a part of the Canadian Continental Shelf.

2. After consultation with the Interdepartmental Committee on Territorial Waters, we raised the matter informally at the July 1955 meeting of the P.J.B.D. We pointed out to the United States section of the Board that, although Canada had not so far asserted any claim to the Continental Shelf off its coasts, nevertheless it was the tentative view of Canadian officials that, taking into account the doctrine of the Continental Shelf as currently proposed (and particularly as presented in United States legislation), and notwithstanding the fact that Canada had not proclaimed its title, Canadian interests were of such paramountcy as to warrant the permission of the Canadian Government being sought for the erection of the Tower.

3. The State Department Member of the Board did not deny that the proposed Tower would be on the Canadian Shelf and seemed to agree that the United States ought not to do something without permission on the Canadian Shelf which, if the positions were reversed, would require United States Government permission. He indicated, however, that because the International Law relating to the Continental Shelf was now under discussion in the International Law Commission, the United States might be reluctant to take up a definite position at this time concerning the extent of Canada's possible jurisdiction. He suggested that perhaps Canada's potential claim to jurisdiction could be adequately protected without the United States asking for permission. He had in mind that some joint Canadian-United States body such as the P.J.B.D. might recommend that the USAF build the Tower on Brown's Bank. If such a recommendation were adopted, it would imply Canadian consent but would by-pass the question of jurisdiction and consent.

4. At the October meeting of the P.J.B.D. the U.S. section raised the proposal formally and the U.S. Air Force member gave an account of United States plans. He said that he was able to confirm that the Canadian Air Defence Command and the U.S. Air Defence Command had jointly determined that the proposed Tower was needed as an off-shore extension of the North American Early Warning System for Air Defence. Plans called for a detachment of approximately 40 U.S. Air Force personnel to man the Tower. He emphasized that actual construction depended upon the availability of funds and that no target operational date could be specified at this time.

<sup>68</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 486.

5. Following the October meeting of the Board the matter was considered again by the Interdepartmental Committee on Territorial Waters and it was agreed that an appropriate way of dealing with this matter would be to have the P.J.B.D. incorporate in the Journal of its next meeting a note along the following:

"The Board agreed that the establishment of a 'Texas Tower' on Brown's Bank off the coast of Nova Scotia was needed as an off-shore extension of the North American Early Warning System for Air Defence and noted with approval the intention of the U.S. Air Force to construct such a tower. The Board urged that Precautions be taken during the construction period to avoid undue damage to the fisheries on Brown's Bank and suggested that at the appropriate time the necessary data be forwarded to the appropriate authorities of both governments for inclusion in Notices to Mariners."

6. Subject to your concurrence and that of Mr. Campney, I propose to instruct the External Affairs member of the P.J.B.D. to proceed as recommended in the preceding paragraph.<sup>69</sup> I am sending a copy of this memorandum to the Deputy Minister of National Defence with the request that he obtain the approval of Mr. Campney.<sup>70</sup>

J. LIÉGER]

<sup>69</sup> Note marginale /Marginal Note:

Nov 24 Minister approves with one change. He'd like words "on the Canadian continental shelf" inserted after "Nova Scotia" in 3rd line of proposed entry. I see no reason why US should object to a geographical fact. M. Wershof

<sup>70</sup> Pour un rapport sommaire des progrès concernant les divers systèmes d'alerte continentale, voir le document 307.

For a summary report on the progress of the various continental warning systems, see Document 307.

SECTION E
GOOSE BAY

341.

PCO

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], January 24, 1955

Present

The Prime Minister, (Mr. St-Laurent), in the Chair,
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney),
 The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson),
 The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson),
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris).
 The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) (For discussion of Item I).
 The Secretary (Mr. Martin),
 The Military Secretary (Commander Solomon).
 The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes),
 The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice Admiral Mainguy)
 The Chief of the General Staff (Lieutenant-General Simonds),
 The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemon),
 The Vice-Chairman, Defence Research Board, (Mr. Davies).
 The Deputy Minister of National Defence (Mr. Drury),
 The Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacKay),
 The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance (Mr. Deutsch),
 The Assistant Deputy Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Hunter).

...

V. U.S. MILITARY OPERATING REQUIREMENTS — GOOSE BAY

13. The Minister of National Defence said that when the Goose Bay lease had been arranged with the United States in December, 1952, a Canadian proposal that the Canadian government would expect to be consulted whenever there might be a substantial increase in numbers of U.S. personnel had been concurred in by the U.S. government.<sup>71</sup> In accordance with this agreement, a request had been received for the rotation of certain Strategic Air Command units through Goose Bay airport. The purpose was to provide these units with familiarization and simulated combat operational training. The units involved included an Aerial Refuelling (Tanker) Squadron consisting of 20 aircraft and 400 personnel, to be stationed at Goose Bay on a continuing basis and rotated every 90 days, four additional refuelling squadrons consisting of 80 aircraft and 1600 personnel, for periods not exceeding 30 days; and the occasional rotation of one medium bomber wing for 90-day training periods, consisting of 45 aircraft and 2000 personnel. There were at Goose Bay now 418 R.C.A.F. and 3634 U.S. military personnel. If the proposal were approved, the numbers of U.S.A.F. personnel continuously at Goose Bay would rise by 400, and there might be as many as a further 3600 on a transient basis in the event that all the units were at Goose Bay at one time. These squadrons were involved solely in U.S. Strategic Air Command activities and would have no connection with the defence of the airport. The operation was one requiring special aircraft and special techniques which could not be carried out by the R.C.A.F.

<sup>71</sup> Voir/See Volume 18, Document 733.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, January 20, 1955 — Document D5-55)†

14. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) SAC was a vital element in the defence of the free world and to refuse a request such as this, which had been made in accordance with the original agreement for leasing Goose Bay, would be embarrassing and difficult. As part of the Canada-U.S. region we had an obligation to our NATO partners to support SAC operations which were one of the main missions of the United States in the alliance. On the other hand, before reaching an affirmative decision the government should be assured that such a proposal did in fact add to the overall defence strength of the free world. If the Chiefs of Staff agreed that a request such as this would contribute to strengthening further the defence of North America and NATO, there could be no objection to it.

(b) The proposal appeared to be the first of a series for the establishment by SAC in the northern parts of Canada of other bases for refuelling and support of their aircraft, and such proposals, if acceded to, would imperil more and more Canadian sovereignty over its own territory. So far there were no requests for stockpiling atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons on Canadian soil but this might follow. On the other hand, the provision of refuelling facilities could mean that such requests would not be made because aircraft carrying these weapons would be refuelled in the air and would not have to land.

(c) Adding to U.S. strength in Goose Bay was not too worrying because of the remote location of the base. However, it was possible there would be requests to provide further facilities at Edmonton for SAC and this would present greater difficulties.

(d) Unless Canada changed her attitude and policy and ceased to encourage the support and the making ready of retaliatory forces, it was almost impossible to refuse the request which had been made.

15. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed to recommend that permission be given for the location on a continuing basis of an Aerial Refuelling (Tanker) Squadron at Goose Bay, consisting of 20 aircraft and 400 personnel; the rotation for periods not exceeding 30 days of a further four refuelling squadrons consisting of 80 aircraft and 1600 personnel; and the rotation occasionally for 90-day training periods of one medium bomber wing consisting of 45 aircraft and 2000 personnel.<sup>72</sup>

<sup>72</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 26 janvier 1955/Approved by Cabinet on January 26, 1955.

SECTION F
 FROBISHER BAY

342.

DEA/703-AM-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
 au président du Comité des chefs d'état-major, au sous-ministre des Transports et au sous-ministre des Affaires du Nord et des Ressources nationales*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, Deputy Minister of Transport and Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources

SECRET

Ottawa, June 13, 1955

UNITED STATES AIR FORCE ACTIVITIES AT FROBISHER BAY

On March 15, 1955, the Department of External Affairs received from the Secretary of the Joint Planning Committee a copy of a memorandum,† dated March 10, 1955, from the U.S. Section of the Military Cooperation Committee to the Canadian Section, setting out a requirement for the establishment by the USAF of a VHF Forward Scatter Facility to provide a ground-to-ground communication link between Frobisher Bay and Thule Air Force Base in Greenland. The memorandum stated that establishment of such a circuit was necessary to provide a tie-in between the Greenland aircraft control and warning system and the Pinetree system. A copy of this memorandum is attached.

2. On June 9, the Department of External Affairs received a further memorandum† from the Secretary of the Joint Planning Committee attaching a copy of a memorandum† from the U.S. Section of MCC to the Canadian Section, (dated June 2) setting out a United States requirement for increasing the number of U.S. personnel at Frobisher from 150 to 350. The memorandum also indicates that the United States Air Force expects to propose the construction of additional buildings and other facilities, and because of the increase in United States investment in the base, will wish to have the tenure provision of the Frobisher Bay agreement revised. A copy of this memorandum is attached.

3. You will recall that in 1951 the United States was authorized to repair the wartime facilities at Frobisher Bay on condition that the repairs would not in any way affect the ownership of the land or existing buildings and that, in respect of any further construction, Canada would retain title to any immovable property. In 1951 the United States Air Force was also authorized to maintain a detachment of approximately 150 men at Frobisher Bay as a line of communication support base for northern bases and as a weather alternate and refuelling stop. This authorization was granted on the understanding that the station would remain under the command and control of the RCAF.

4. It should be appreciated that in addition to the 150 men at the station there are approximately the same number of USAF personnel at a Pinetree radar station which is nearby.

5. In 1952, as a consequence of a further request by the USAF for permission to improve facilities at Frobisher Bay, an agreement was prepared between the RCAF and the USAF designed to implement the External Affairs note of 1951 authorizing occupancy and use of the base by the USAF.<sup>73</sup> The agreement provided that the commanding officer of the station would be an RCAF officer, whose responsibilities were (a) to insure that USAF use of the station was in keeping with activities authorized by the Canadian Government, (b) to supervise the functions of the Canadian detachment at the Base, (c) coordinate base defence arrangements, plans and deployment.

6. Under this RCAF-USAF agreement, Canadian personnel at the Base are responsible for the central tower, ground/air communications, air traffic control and the operation of a dependent forecast office and associated communications. The total number of Canadian personnel is in the neighbourhood of 24 of which about 16 are employees of the Department of Transport. Apart from the Commanding Officer, it is understood that all RCAF personnel at the Base are employed on air traffic control duties. All activities at the station other than those enumerated above are carried out by USAF personnel.

7. I am of the opinion that under the circumstances described above the position of the RCAF officer in attempting to act as commander of the base is anomalous to say the least, and that if the size of the U.S. contingent is increased to 350, his position as commander will become a fiction which will be impossible to maintain.

8. Assuming that the USAF requirement for additional personnel and for expansion of Frobisher are militarily justifiable and should be concurred in by the Canadian Government, I think it is essential that we devise some different method of taking care of Canadian interests there.

9. There would seem to be three possible courses of action, each of which has serious drawbacks as well as advantages:

(a) increase the size of the RCAF detachment so that the base becomes an RCAF station in fact as well as in name;

(b) have the field operated by the Department of Transport as a civil air field, and increase the number of Canadians on the station by taking over responsibility for some of the base services now provided by the USAF;

(c) turn the field over to the USAF, reserving the right to take it over again on reasonable notice, and providing that Canadian civil and military aircraft may use it as required.

10. I expect that this subject will come up at the July meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence and I suggest therefore that it might be useful to have a preliminary discussion at the June meeting of the Advisory Committee on Northern Development. This could be followed by more detailed discussion between the departments directly concerned.

JULES LÉGER

<sup>73</sup> Voir le volume 18, les documents 747-751.
See Volume 18, Documents 747-751.

343.

DEA/50197-C-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord*
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Advisory Committee on Northern Development

SECRET

[Ottawa], June 20, 1955

Present:

Mr. R.G. Robertson, (Chairman)
Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources,
General C. Foulkes,
Chairman, Chiefs of Staff,
Major-General H.A. Young,
Deputy Minister of Public Works,
Commissioner L.H. Nicholson,
Royal Canadian Mounted Police,
Dr. G.S. Hume,
Acting Deputy Minister, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys,
Mr. J.R. Baldwin,
Deputy Minister of Transport,
General A.G.L. McNaughton,
Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence.
LCDR. A.A. Beveridge, representing the Secretary to the Cabinet.
Mr. M.H. Wershof, representing the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
Mr. G.W. Stead, representing the Deputy Minister of Finance.
Mr. R.F. Legget, representing the President, National Research Council.
Dr. H.A. Procter, representing the Deputy Minister of National Health.
Mr. G.W. Rowley, (Secretary)
Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Also Present:

Mr. A. Thomson, Department of Transport.
W/C G.R.M. Hunt, Department of National Defence (R.C.A.F.).
W/C B.R. Rafuse, Department of National Defence (R.C.A.F.).
W/C M. Thorpe, Department of National Defence (R.C.A.F.).
W/C K.P. Likeness, Department of National Defence (R.C.A.F.).
Mr. W.H. Barton, Department of External Affairs.
Major J. Morrison, Department of National Defence (Army).
Mr. C.J. Marshall, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

...
VIII. U.S.A.F. ACTIVITIES AT FROBISHER BAY
(SECRET)

30. Mr. Wershof explained that the problem at Frobisher Bay had been outlined in a letter dated June 13, 1955, from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff, and the Deputy Ministers of Transport and Northern Affairs. There appeared to be three possible courses of action:

- (a) Increasing the size of the R.C.A.F. detachment so that Frobisher would become an R.C.A.F. station in fact as well as in name.
- (b) Operation of the airfield by the Department of Transport as a civil airfield and increasing the number of Canadians on the station by taking over responsibility for some of the services now provided by the U.S.A.F.

(c) Turning the field over to the U.S.A.F. while reserving the right to take it over again on reasonable notice and making provision for use by civil and military aircraft as required.

31. General Foulkes said the Department of National Defence found that it was unsatisfactory for one organization to act as housekeeper for another. The R.C.A.F. did not have a military requirement for the base.

32. Mr. Baldwin considered that turning the field over to the U.S.A.F. would raise serious difficulties for civil users. Experience at Harmon Field had shown that whatever agreements were made it was practically impossible to protect the interests of civil aviation adequately at an airfield operated by the U.S.A.F. Even if the Department of Transport had the men and funds to take over Frobisher their position as civilians operating a predominantly military base would be difficult and it would be preferable for the R.C.A.F. to continue to control the airfield. The Department of Transport was considering assuming responsibility for the operation of certain other airfields in the north such as Cambridge Bay and Coral Harbour. This might be done within the next year, relieving R.C.A.F. personnel who could be used to increase the R.C.A.F. establishment at Frobisher. Canadian Pacific Airlines and Scandinavian Air Services were using Frobisher as an alternate on their polar air routes and at least two other airlines would soon establish similar services. It seemed likely that Frobisher would become a regular stop on the polar route but the greatest civil use at first would probably arise from an increase in domestic traffic for Distinct Early Warning line supply.

33. Mr. Wershof considered that if Frobisher were turned over to the U.S.A.F. it would be possible to provide greater safeguards in the agreement than at Harmon where the United States had a ninety-nine-year lease.

34. Commissioner Nicholson said that the situation at Frobisher had been discussed informally at the Administration Sub-Committee when it had been suggested that accommodation for passengers on trans-polar flights might be required. Though the present situation was unsatisfactory it might be preferable to any of the suggested alternatives.

35. Mr. Robertson said the Department of Northern Affairs would be very reluctant to see Frobisher turned over to the U.S.A.F. It would probably become the first place where many international travellers would set foot in Canada. In addition to other civil interests, plans were under way to make Frobisher a major administrative centre for the Eastern Arctic.

36. W/C Hunt said that at present an R.C.A.F. detachment of seven men provided flying control. Some addition would be necessary when the present U.S. plans were implemented but this would not improve the ratio of Canadian and United States personnel since the U.S.A.F. strength would also increase.

37. General Young suggested that a thorough examination of the situation might reveal some practical solution by which the R.C.A.F. could retain effective control by undertaking certain key responsibilities and by co-ordinating all agencies at the airfield. This would not necessarily entail an increase in the size of the R.C.A.F. detachment.

38. General Foulkes suggested that a small working group be set up to discuss the problem in detail. The R.C.A.F. and the Departments of Transport, External Affairs, and Northern Affairs should probably be represented.

39. General McNaughton said that the principle of having a Canadian officer in charge of such stations had been established at the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.<sup>74</sup> As U.S. activities increased the R.C.A.F. would necessarily assume more of a supervisory role. It was important to keep a firm grip on the country. The problem at Frobisher would probably be discussed at the July meeting of the P.J.B.D. Any decision reached in this case of Frobisher might establish a pattern for similar situations which were bound to arise at other points in the north.

40. Mr. Stead suggested that no step should be taken which might later prejudice the development of civil aviation at Frobisher. There were however many complicating factors which might make normal operation by the Department of Transport impracticable and the Department of Finance would be prepared to accept some compromise based on this principle.

41. The Committee agreed that a working group with representatives from the R.C.A.F. and the Departments of Transport, External Affairs, and Northern Affairs should examine the problem at Frobisher in order to establish means by which Canadian control of the airfield could be strengthened.

...

344.

DEA/50197-D-40

Note pour le Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord
Memorandum for Advisory Committee on Northern Development

DOCUMENT ND-142

[Ottawa], October 20, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

FROBISHER BAY

1. At its 27th meeting on 20 June, the A.C.N.D. considered the effect of increasing U.S. activities at Frobisher on Canadian control of the station. The Committee agreed that "a working group with representatives from the R.C.A.F., D.O.T., External Affairs and Northern Affairs should examine the problem of Frobisher Bay to establish means by which Canadian control of the airfield could be strengthened".

2. The Working Group held its first meeting on 27 June with the following representatives in attendance:

Mr. G.W. Rowley	- Secretary, A.C.N.D. (Chairman)
G/C E.M. Reyno	- R.C.A.F.
Mr. W.H. Barton	- External Affairs
Mr. J.R. Robertson	- Transport
Mr. B.G. Sivertz	- N.A. & N.R.
Mr. C.J. Marshall	- Secretariat A.C.N.D. (Secretary)
LCDR A.A. Beveridge	- Privy Council Office
Mr. Bevis Dewar	- Privy Council Office

3. The Working Group examined the whole subject of Frobisher at length. The possibility of placing the base under an appropriate Canadian civil authority was discussed and considered not to be advisable because of the special circumstances at Frobisher where the

<sup>74</sup> Voir le volume 19, les documents 672-673.
 See Volume 19, Documents 672-673.

U.S.A.F. is the major user. The Working Group agreed that in the light of the extent of probable U.S. increases at Frobisher the best means of ensuring effective Canadian control would be by establishing a properly constituted military command there. The degree of effectiveness of a military command would, the Group considered, be in direct proportion to the nature and extent of the functions of the base for which the military commander would exercise direct responsibility. The administrative organization should parallel that now existing at Goose Bay.

4. The establishment of such an organization will necessitate a considerable increase in the number of Canadian controlled personnel at Frobisher. This could entail added expense for Canada, but the Working Group recognized that a suitable formula might be worked out whereby these costs could be shared with the United States who, as the principal user, might pay a substantial part.

5. The Working Group considers it necessary to point out, however, that the plan for Frobisher which is eventually approved by the Canadian Government will set the precedent for Canadian supervision of many similar U.S. military operating requirements which should be anticipated in the Canadian north in the next few years. If no suitable arrangement can be made with the United States whereby costs are shared, the cumulative total of expense to Canada could be substantial, assuming that similar organizations were set up for each U.S. military requirement in Canada.

6. It was agreed that the following formula be suggested to the A.C.N.D. as a means of retaining "effective control" at Frobisher:

(1) The base should be under the command of a senior Canadian military officer but the policy and details of the arrangements would require discussion by the Chiefs of Staff.

(2) All functions connected with the operation of the aerodrome including flying control, communications, airstrip maintenance, and meteorological services should be carried out by Canadians. If service personnel were not available most of the tasks could be handled by civilian employees of the Department of Transport directly responsible to the station commander.

(3) The U.S. authorities should be requested to consider employing Canadian civil organizations for the provision of housekeeping services including refuelling of aircraft and messing. The U.S.A.F. now provide these services with military personnel. If they were performed by Canadian civil contractors, the preponderance of U.S. servicemen at the field would be greatly reduced.

(4) Detailed examination should be made of methods whereby the U.S. would pay part of the operating costs of bases they used. When additional facilities were required, the capital and operating costs could be shared by Canada and the United States in proportion to the use they would make of them.

G.W. ROWLEY
Secretary, A.C.N.D.

345.

DEA/50197-C-40

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité consultatif sur le développement du Nord*
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Advisory Committee on Northern Development

SECRET

[Ottawa], October 25, 1955

...

(C) REPORT OF THE WORKING GROUP ON U.S. ACTIVITIES AT FROBISHER BAY
(CONFIDENTIAL)

11. Mr. Robertson referred to the discussion at the last meeting on U.S. activities at Frobisher Bay. The Committee had appointed a working group with representatives from the R.C.A.F. and the Departments of Transport, External Affairs, and Northern Affairs and National Resources to examine the problem in order to establish means by which Canadian control of the airfield could be strengthened. The working group had held two meetings and their report, which contained four recommendations, had been distributed with the agenda.

(Secretary's memorandum Document ND-142 dated October 20, 1955).

12. General Foulkes said that, while the Department of National Defence would accept a plan that did not involve an increase in R.C.A.F. personnel, they would prefer to defer any change until the exceptional conditions resulting from the construction phase of the D.E.W. line were over, and the ultimate U.S.A.F. requirements were more certain. The station commander was now a R.C.A.F. Wing Commander, and the Department of National Defence would ensure that his command was effective.

13. Mr. Booth said the Department of Transport could supply most of the personnel required to take over the additional services suggested in the working group's report, but they considered the airfield should be under the control of a military officer since he would have to deal so closely with U.S. military services.

14. General Young said the R.C.A.F. should supply a small command element only. Any additional personnel required should be civilian employees of the Department of Transport.

15. General McNaughton considered it would be difficult to request the U.S.A.F. to employ a Canadian civil organization to provide their messing facilities.

16. Mr. Barton said the Department of External Affairs had raised the question of Canadian control at Frobisher Bay because the United States had requested permission to increase their establishment. This request had however now been withdrawn and the matter was no longer urgent.

17. The Committee agreed that no change should be made in existing command arrangements at Frobisher until the future U.S.A.F. requirements at the base were clear.

...

SECTION G
ESSAIS NUCLÉAIRES
NUCLEAR TESTING

346.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], May 13, 1955

NUCLEAR WEAPON TEST BY THE UNITED STATES IN THE PACIFIC OCEAN

16. Mr. Martin, as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, reported that the United States was going to test a large nuclear weapon in an underwater explosion somewhere off the western coast of this continent. Canada had not been advised where this would take place nor the direction or distance of the testing area from Canada. The U.S. authorities had been approached and had given an assurance that there would be no danger to Canadian ships, aircraft, or fishermen from the explosion or from the fall-out. The U.S. would have no objection to our making this assurance public.

17. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) Canada had been informed earlier of this year's testing programme, but this underwater explosion had not been mentioned until a few days previously. While the U.S. had said it would take all possible precautions to avoid damage, this did not mean that the effects of the test might not be unfortunate. Neither the U.S. nor Canada knew what effect the explosion might have on the salmon fishery, for instance. Mistakes in judgment had been made before and some of the results of previous tests had been unexpected.

(b) If Canada could persuade the U.S. to drop this test it might be worth doing. However, this did not appear to be possible and no formal protest had been made. In answer to any questions which might arise following the test, it could be stated that Canada had expressed concern.

(c) There was much public concern that the results of these atomic tests were not worth the dangers which might arise from them. Consideration might be given to making representations to the President. No such step had been considered but some officials had expressed their worries to U.S. officials on the effects of the tests made in the past. Canadian health authorities believed that there had been no serious effects so far from radioactivity but they could not be sure of this. Certain eminent authorities in the U.K. held a different view.

18. The Cabinet noted the report of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs on the forthcoming underwater test of a nuclear device to take place off the western coast of North America.

347.

DEA/50219-D-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-790

Washington, May 13, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our WA-785 of May 13† and telephone conversation Léger to Glazebrook.

UNDERWATER WEAPONS TEST

Following for the Under-Secretary, Begins: We have informally asked the State Department whether it would be possible, without perhaps giving the exact location of the forthcoming weapons test, to indicate whether it was in a southerly area.

2. We were told that careful consideration had earlier been given to whether or not there should be a closer identification of the location. The decision was against doing so mainly on two grounds:

- (a) That it would increase the worry of the nearest populated area;
- (b) That it might encourage inquisitive people to approach too close.

3. It was after this decision had been taken that the press release<sup>75</sup> included reference to the location being hundreds of miles from land and off the west coast of the United States.

4. The State Department fully appreciate the reasons for your concern that all possible steps should be taken to remove apprehensions as to the results of this test. They are at our request investigating the possibility of giving to us at least an approximate idea of the location. For reasons indicated above, it is most unlikely that they would give this information except on a confidential basis. They are far from sure that they can do even that, but will let us know as soon as possible.

5. Meanwhile, they expressed the confidence of the United States authorities that all necessary precaution had been taken to avoid danger to shipping, aircraft, and fisheries or to the effects of any fall-out.

6. This is a preliminary report sent as we do not know how long it will take to get an answer on your specific enquiry.

A.D.P. HEENEY

<sup>75</sup> Voir/See New York Times, May 10, 1955.

348.

DEA/50219-D-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum by Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], May 14, 1955

UNDERWATER WEAPONS TEST

Reference: Telegram No. WA-790.

I discussed the above telegram with Mr. Martin, the Acting Minister, this morning. He said that he did not feel that the telegram gave adequate assurance to the Canadian Government and he thought we should go back to the Embassy to ask them to press the State Department for information (a) on location of the test; (b) on the size and type of the weapon (whether, for example, it were a thermo-nuclear bomb). He said further that we could assure the United States that any information obtained would be treated confidentially by him personally. He wanted to be able to say to Parliament, if a question were asked, that he was personally satisfied that Canadian interests would not be endangered, and that in any case he would like to be able to say this to his Cabinet colleagues.

2. Subsequently I telephoned Mr. Heeney and gave him the substance of my conversation with Mr. Martin and asked him to try to find out through the State Department what he could on the size of the weapon and the location of the test. I told him to reassure the State Department that the information would be treated in complete confidence by the Minister. Mr. Heeney said that Mr. Glazebrook had been dealing with the matter; he will instruct Mr. Glazebrook accordingly. They expect to hear from the State Department on Monday.

R.A. M[ACKAY]

349.

DEA/50219-D-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-797

Washington, May 16, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL IMMEDIATE

Reference: Our WA-790 of May 13, 1955.

UNDERWATER WEAPONS TEST

The State Department have now told us that the location of the forthcoming weapons test will be "not at all in your area", i.e., it will be a considerable distance from the Canadian-American border. We were told this after we had given a firm assurance that the information would be held in confidence. It is, as you will see, still in general terms but we hope that it will be sufficient for your purposes.

2. We were also told in confidence that an announcement would be made within 24 to 48 hours that the test had taken place.<sup>76</sup> Even after the event no indication will be given of the location of the test beyond what has already been publicly said. We were consequently asked to draw to your attention that such information on location as we have indicated above should remain confidential even after the explosion has taken place.

<sup>76</sup> Voir/See New York Times, May 18, 1955.

SECTION H

CHAMP DE TIR AU CANON SUR LE SAINT-LAURENT
ST. LAWRENCE GUNNERY RANGE

350.

DEA/11359-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, August 5, 1955

USE BY THE USAF OF THE RCAF AIR GUNNERY RANGE
IN THE GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Following discussions between the RCAF and the USAF, the RCAF recently established an air gunnery range in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, primarily for use by fighter units of the USAF based at Goose Bay.

2. Attached for your initials, if you agree, is a note to the United States Embassy extending an invitation to the U.S. Government for aircraft of the USAF based in Newfoundland to make use of the range.

3. The extending of an invitation in this way and the terms of the note have been worked out in consultation with the Department of National Defence so as not to prejudice whatever decision the Government may eventually take with regard to claiming the Gulf of St. Lawrence as Canadian territorial waters, which is one of the subjects now being considered by the Interdepartmental Committee on Territorial Waters.

J. LÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur des États-Unis

Note from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador of United States

No. D-187

Ottawa, August 5, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of the United States of America and has the honour to refer to discussions which have recently taken place between the Royal Canadian Air Force and the United States Air Force concerning a United States requirement for an air gunnery range in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The Canadian Government is pleased to extend an invitation to the United States Government for United States military aircraft to make use of an air gunnery range recently established by the Royal Canadian Air Force in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The boundaries of the range are as follows:

"Commencing at the Northwest corner and proceeding clockwise, the co-ordinates are as follows:

49°48'N,	60°04'W.
49°46'N,	59°19'W.
48°27'N,	59°27'W.
48°29'N,	60°12'W.

and thence to the point of beginning."

Copies of the Notice to Mariners defining the range are attached† for the Ambassador's information.

The following restrictions and conditions apply to the use of the range:

(a) The use of the range will be restricted to aircraft of the United States Air Force based in Newfoundland.

(b) The area will be searched for surface vessels by aircraft before firing exercises are carried out.

(c) There will be no firing conducted while there are vessels anywhere in the area in which spent missiles may fall.

(d) Prior to any air firing exercise on the range, notification of intent, including time of use, will be passed to the ATC Centre at Gander.

(e) At all times, while the range is in use, surveillance radar will scan the area to ensure that it is clear of any civil aircraft. If it is apparent that any civil aircraft is about to enter the danger area while exercises are in progress, such exercises will cease until the area is once again free.

(f) All air firing exercises will be conducted in such a manner as to ensure that all missiles will fall within the designated danger area, and that there will be no interference to aircraft operating on Red Route 74 or Red Route 5.

(g) The United States and Canadian Governments agree that all claims arising out of damage or injury to persons or property occurring in connection with the use of the range by United States aircraft will be settled in accordance with Article VIII of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Status of Forces Agreement.<sup>77</sup>

(h) This invitation is extended to the United States Government for the period ending on December 31, 1956, and may be renewed by mutual agreement.

The Canadian Government wishes to be informed if it is the desire of the United States Government to accept the invitation for the use of the range subject to the conditions noted above.

L.B. PEARSON

<sup>77</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1953, N° 13/See Canada, Treaty Series, 1953, No. 13.

351.

DEA/11359-A-40

Note du chef de la 1<sup>re</sup> Direction de liaison avec la Défense pour la Direction juridique

Memorandum from Head, Defence Liaison (1) Division, to Legal Division

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], October 28, 1955

ST. LAWRENCE GUNNERY RANGE

Attached for your information is Note No. 97 of October 26, 1955, from the U.S. Embassy accepting the Canadian invitation to make use of the air gunnery range established by the RCAF in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Since the note contains a reservation to the effect that the United States does not recognize any Canadian jurisdiction over such waters in the Gulf of St. Lawrence as may lie outside the traditional three mile limit of territorial waters, I thought I should seek your advice before informing the Department of National Defence that the United States had accepted the invitation to make use of the range.

G. IGNATIEFF

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Note de l'ambassadeur des États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Note from Ambassador of United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

No. 97

Ottawa, October 26, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

The Ambassador of the United States of America presents his compliments to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has the honor to refer to the latter's Note No. D-187 of August 5, 1955, extending an invitation to the United States Government for United States military aircraft to make use of an air gunnery range established by the Royal Canadian Air Force in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The appropriate United States authorities were appraised of the Canadian Government's kind invitation, which is accepted with pleasure by the United States Air Force, subject to the conditions and restrictions set forth in the Secretary's above-mentioned Note. The United States Navy, which was also consulted, while appreciating the invitation, has indicated that it has no current need for the range.

In conveying the foregoing, the Ambassador deems it advisable to mention that the United States, in accordance with its views of long standing, does not recognize any Canadian jurisdiction over such waters in the Gulf of St. Lawrence as may lie outside the traditional three-mile limit of territorial waters.

He also suggests that the Northeast Air Command, United States Air Force, be authorized to get in touch direct with the appropriate Royal Canadian Air Force authorities for the purpose of working out details of the planned use of the range.

352.

DEA/11359-A-40

*Note de la Direction juridique
pour la 1<sup>re</sup> Direction de liaison avec la Défense*

Memorandum from Legal Division to Defence Liaison (1) Division

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 3, 1955

Reference: Your memo dated Oct. 28, 1955 and Note No. 97 of October 20, 1955 from U.S. Embassy.

ST. LAWRENCE GUNNERY RANGE

We have noted the reservation contained in the above mentioned note to the effect that the United States do not recognize any Canadian jurisdiction over such waters in the Gulf of St. Lawrence as may lie outside the three mile limit. We consider that there might be advantage, if time permits, in deferring informing the Department of National Defence that the United States has accepted the invitation to make use of the range until this reservation has been considered by the Inter-departmental Committee on Territorial Waters. A meeting of this Committee is tentatively scheduled for November 14, 1955 and we are suggesting to the Chairman of this Committee that the reservation in the third paragraph of the American Note be put on the agenda for this meeting.

2. It may be, however, that in view of the last paragraph of the American Note, the Department of National Defence will have to be informed on its contents and a reply given hereto before November 14. If you think this to be the case you might bring the reservation to the attention of National Defence. At the same time, we strongly recommend that you defer acknowledging the United States Note pending the receipt of the Committee's views. In any event, if this is not possible, we would recommend your avoiding any mention of the reservation in your reply to the American Embassy.

3. For your information, this Division is inclined to think that, subject to the views of the Inter-departmental Committee, acceptance of the arrangements proposed in the last paragraph of the United States Note would not prejudice any future action we might wish to take with regard to the Gulf. As I interpret it, the sense of the reservation in the third paragraph of the United States Note does not necessarily signify that the United States would not agree to our claiming the Gulf after consultation with them. The reservation would mean that at the moment they consider the Gulf to be international waters and do not intend that our act of setting up the range should ever be capable of being cited as evidence of an historic title of Canada to those waters. It seems to point out, however, that if we hope to establish in the future title to the Gulf, we shall have to seek United States acquiescence.<sup>78</sup>

GILLES SICOTTE

<sup>78</sup> Notes marginales /Marginal notes:

DL(1). I think that you must tell N[ational] D[efence] now what we've received, & that we are asking Int[erdepartmental] Committee to consider it. I suggest also [that you] tell N.D. that we wish to defer any reply to U.S. and any action on setting up range until after Committee meets. M. Wer-shof Nov 4

Mr. Barton informs me that the range is already set up. H.I. J[ones]

353.

DEA/11359-A-40

*Note de la Direction juridique
pour la 1<sup>re</sup> Direction de liaison avec la Défense*

*Memorandum from Legal Division
to Defence Liaison (1) Division*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 15, 1955

Reference: Our Memorandum of November 3, 1955.

ST. LAWRENCE GUNNERY RANGE

1. The United States Embassy's Note No. 97 of October 26, 1955, in which the United States Government accepted the invitation to use the R.C.A.F. Gunnery Range, but stated that it does not recognize any Canadian jurisdiction over the Gulf outside the traditional 3-mile limit, was considered by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Territorial Waters on November 14, 1955.

2. The Committee agreed that the best method of dealing with this Note would be to avoid a written reply and instead to:

(a) Request the R.C.A.F. to get in touch with the North Eastern Command, United States Air Force, to work out details of the planned use of the range, and

(b) At the same time, orally, to:

(i) inform the United States Embassy that this had been done, and

(ii) note the United States' reservation in the penultimate paragraph of the Embassy's Note, stating that, whilst we do not necessarily agree with their view, we do not wish to precipitate a debate on this question at this time since we consider the main question is to get the Gunnery Range in use.

3. I take it you will be prepared to speak to the appropriate official of the United States Embassy, accordingly.<sup>79</sup>

GILLES SICOTTE

SECTION I

TÉLÉVISION SUR LES BASES AMÉRICAINES TELEVISION ON AMERICAN BASES

354.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], October 12, 1955

...

<sup>79</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

Legal Division:

1. Letter sent to D[eputy] M[inister] of National Defence.

2. I spoke to Mr. Rewinkel, the Counsellor at the U.S. Embassy as suggested in para[graph] 2(b) of your memo. For your information and file W.H. B[arton] DL(1)

OPERATION OF TELEVISION TRANSMITTERS AT CERTAIN U.S. MILITARY INSTALLATIONS IN CANADA

23. The Prime Minister referring to discussion at the meeting of July 28th, 1955, said the United States had requested an informal expression of opinion as to whether there would be any objection in principle to the establishment of small television installations by U.S. armed forces at the leased bases at Argentia and Stephenville in Newfoundland, and at the base at Goose Bay. It had been indicated at the same time that, if these stations were approved, a further request might be made for a station at Fort Churchill.

The type of installation provided by the U.S. for isolated military bases costs approximately $50,000 had a power of 50 watts and a range of about three to five miles which could be modified to some extent. These stations used primarily kinescope recordings but had a limited capacity for transmitting local presentations. They were also required to comply with local regulations. Authority existed, under the Radio Act, to license them if considered desirable. However, the Minister of Transport would have to make certain modifications to the regulations for issuing licences and the regulations, established by order in council, concerning the employment of Canadian operators would also have to be amended. The Department of External Affairs had proposed that, if the stations were to be established, they should be licensed in the same manner as other stations, and be subject to the same general conditions except where it would be inappropriate to enforce a particular one, for example, that respecting free-time political broadcasts. At Goose Bay, the R.C.A.F. should perhaps be represented on a management committee to be responsible to the R.C.A.F. commander. An appropriate amount of Canadian programme material would be required to be shown. Finally, it should be made clear that, at the conclusion of the licensing period, it might be necessary, because of domestic needs, to cease operations.

The departments of National Defence and Transport had been consulted on the matter, but the conclusions reached were those of External Affairs.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Sept. 27, 1955 — Cab. Doc. 203-55†)

24. The Minister of Finance said he hoped it would be possible to avoid the annual costs of $50,000 to the C.B.C. involved in the production of Canadian telecast material for the stations. At the same time, it would be desirable to ensure that there was a reasonable measure of Canadian content in the programmes. The request brought to light once again the problem of C.B.C.'s increasing costs, and pointed up the necessity of deciding, as soon as possible, on the composition of the Royal Commission to consider television and to examine the operations of the corporation.

25. During the discussion the following points emerged:

(a) If the provision of appropriate programme material for each privately owned television station cost the C.B.C. approximately $50,000 a year, there was little wonder that these stations were so profitable.

(b) On no account did it seem desirable to agree to a station at Argentia, which was within the range of the C.B.C. station at St. John's.

(c) A decision on the Goose Bay station should not be reached until the Minister of National Defence was present. In any event, the R.C.A.F. did not wish to be associated with its management since this would lead to pressure for stations at other Canadian service establishments. This particular difficulty might, however, be met by having a C.B.C., Transport, or civilian National Defence official on the committee of management.

(d) It was possible that there would be a private television station at Cornerbrook in the near future. In such circumstances, the U.S. should not be permitted to install a station at Harmon Field. On the other hand, U.S. servicemen there were in a relatively isolated area. Nearby were some thousands of Canadian citizens with little prospect of ever having television. If the proposed U.S. service was good, with reasonable Canadian content in its programme, and if no private person was licensed to operate in Cornerbrook, the request might be approved.

(e) The U.S. armed forces radio station now in St. John's should be closed down if the new television stations came into operation. There would be no public re-action now against doing this.

(f) The Department of Transport did not object to the proposal providing the stations were low powered and the wave lengths could be altered, if required. However, when recent amendments were made to the Radio Act, Parliament had been informed that licences would be granted for non-Canadian stations only to meet strict defence needs. If, in fact, this statement of policy had been made, it would be necessary to advise members of the changed circumstances.

26. The Cabinet,

(a) deferred consideration to a later meeting of the United States request for the establishment of television transmitters at the U.S. naval station at Argentia, at Ernest Harmon Air Force base near Stephenville, and at Goose Bay; and,

(b) agreed to consider, at an early date, the composition and terms of reference of the proposed Royal Commission on Television.

...

355.

L.S.L./Vol. 218

*Le ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration
au premier ministre*

*Minister of Citizenship and Immigration
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 2, 1955

My dear Prime Minister:

As I told you Monday, I had set down a few points for consideration in the preparation of a reply to the U.S. note† about television facilities at the leased bases in Newfoundland.

I am sending copies of these suggestions to Mr. Marler, Mr. Pearson, Dr. McCann and Mr. Harris and also to the Secretary to the Cabinet and the Chairman of the C.B.C.

I presume External Affairs will take the initiative in raising the matter for consideration again before too long.

Yours sincerely

J.W. PICKERSGILL

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note

SUGGESTED POINTS FOR REPLY TO U.S. NOTE RE TELEVISION STATIONS ON NEWFOUNDLAND BASES

1. That the Canadian government could not consider any special arrangement for Argentina or Fort Pepperell which are already served by the existing television station at St. John's.
2. That the laws of Canada do not permit the grant of a broadcasting licence to persons who are not British subjects; but that the Canadian government views sympathetically the problem of the U.S. authorities and their desire to provide television for their personnel at Harmon Field.
3. In view of the national broadcasting policy and the fact that broadcasts would be available to a considerable number of Canadian citizens as well as United States military personnel, the Canadian government could not agree to the establishment of a station which did not include a reasonable proportion of Canadian material in its broadcasts.
4. To meet the situation the Canadian government would be prepared to have the U.S. authorities install and operate a station at or near Harmon Field under the direct supervision and control of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which would itself hold the licence. Such a station would be a part of the national network of the C.B.C. and one third of its broadcast material would be provided by the C.B.C. The initial period of operation would be five years, but the station would be closed at any time thereafter on the establishment of a Canadian station which could provide television coverage to the Base.
5. The Canadian government would be prepared to make a similar arrangement at Goose Bay, Labrador, if that should be desired by the United States authorities.
6. The Canadian government would be prepared to enter into these arrangements only on the understanding that the sound broadcasting now carried on without licence at the U.S. bases in Newfoundland would be terminated. This broadcast network was established at a time when broadcasting in Newfoundland was much less developed. Broadcasts from Canadian stations are now available at all the bases. These broadcasts are technically an infringement of Canadian sovereignty, the termination of which would make it much easier to justify to the Canadian public the new arrangements herein proposed.

356.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 9, 1955

NEWFOUNDLAND; OPERATION OF TELEVISION TRANSMITTERS BY U.S.
ARMED FORCES

11. Mr. Pickersgill said he had circulated to the Prime Minister and a number of his colleagues suggestions as to the nature of the reply which might be made to the U.S. note requesting permission for the U.S. Armed Forces to establish and operate television transmitters at U.S. military bases in Newfoundland.

He said the U.S. Ambassador and Minister at Ottawa had recently discussed this problem with him and had indicated that the television broadcasts from the station at St. John's, Newfoundland, could not be seen at the Argentia base. He doubted that this was entirely accurate. The St. John's station could, he understood, be seen in some parts of the camp and it would, in all likelihood, be possible to make whatever technical arrangements were necessary to ensure adequate coverage throughout the whole camp. He had informed Mr. Stuart and Mr. Thompson it was unlikely that the Canadian government would grant the requested permission for the establishment of a television station at Argentia base, but he, personally, had some sympathy for the request for the installation of television transmitters at Harmon Field and at Goose Bay.

He had also taken the opportunity to inform the Ambassador and the Minister that their request about the television transmitters would be more likely to fall on receptive ears if the U.S. authorities closed the radio broadcasting station operated at St. John's by the U.S. Armed Forces. Mr. Stuart and Mr. Thompson appeared to be unaware of the fact that this station was operating.

In all the circumstances, he thought it might be well to defer any definitive action for a while in the hope that the U.S. authorities might eventually agree to discontinue operation of their own radio station in return for permission to operate television transmitters at Harmon Field and Goose Bay.

12. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) An amendment which had been made to the Radio Act a few years ago was described to Parliament as being intended to permit persons who were not British subjects to operate radio stations in Canada for defence purposes only. It was clear that the television transmitters desired by the U.S. Armed Forces did not come within this intention, even if they came technically within the law itself.

(b) One of the suggestions made by Mr. Pickersgill was that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation might itself be the licensee for the proposed new television transmitters and that some arrangements might be made by the corporation for the actual operation of the stations by U.S. Armed Forces personnel. This might obviate the necessity of amending the Radio Act.

(c) It might be possible to have some sort of closed circuit arrangement for all these bases which would effectively prevent the coverage of the new stations from being extended beyond the limits of the military camps.

(d) The main objection of substance to these U.S. stations was that they cut into the area of the private stations operated at St. John's and thereby made it less feasible financially to operate those stations successfully.

13. The Cabinet noted the report by Mr. Pickersgill on conversations he had had with the Ambassador and the Minister of the United States at Ottawa about the U.S. request for permission to establish and operate television transmitters at Argentia, Harmon Field and Goose Bay in Newfoundland and deferred decision pending further consideration at a subsequent meeting.

...

357.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 21, 1955

OPERATION OF TELEVISION TRANSMITTERS AT U.S. MILITARY INSTALLATIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

19. Mr. Pickersgill referring to discussion at the meeting of October 12th, 1955 suggested a reply along the following lines to the U.S. request for television stations on the leased bases in Newfoundland.

No arrangements for Argentia and Fort Pepperell, which were already served by the existing television station at St. John's, could be considered. As regards Harmon Field, the U.S. authorities could be allowed to install and operate a station under the supervision and control of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, with the corporation itself holding the licence. The station would be part of the national network and one-third of its broadcast material would be provided by the C.B.C. If desired, a similar arrangement could be made for Goose Bay. These arrangements would be only on the understanding that the sound broadcasting now carried on without a licence at the U.S. leased bases would be stopped when this new television service came into operation.

He added that opinions differed on how much of the Argentia base was covered by the St. John's station. However, he was quite sure the owners would be willing to adjust their facilities to provide good reception for the whole of the camp, provided that no licence were given to the U.S. authorities. By doing this, not only would there be adequate service for U.S. personnel but also for many more Canadians in the surrounding district. It was more than likely that the C.B.C. would approve these plans for expanded coverage.

20. Mr. Howe said he had recently received strong representations from the U.S. Secretary of Defence about the establishment of television stations in Newfoundland, particularly at Argentia. These would be of low power and the programmes would not be seen very far beyond the boundaries of each base. The Americans did not make this kind of request very frequently. If it could be agreed to, it would facilitate the settling of much more important matters of greater interest to Canada.

21. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) When the owners of the existing St. John's station were granted a licence they were properly under the impression that they would be allowed to obtain the maximum possible coverage in the area. Television in Newfoundland was a precarious venture at best. Licensing even a low power station at Argentia would reduce the number of viewers of the St. John's station and therefore lead to a substantial cut in its advertising revenue.

(b) Present television licensing policy permitted the establishment of only one station in any one area. It would be impossible to justify substantial overlapping by an American station in Canada when Canadians were not allowed the same rights in other parts of the country.

(c) Newfoundland was the newest province, many of whose residents had not yet developed a close attachment to Canada. The establishment of a U.S. television station at Argentia, which would be seen by people beyond that base, as well as by civilians working on the base itself, would only add considerably to the problems of integrating the province.

(d) U.S. television installations at Harmon Field and at Goose Bay would not present the same difficulty as a station at Argentia. It was doubtful if Canadian stations would be set up there, at least for some time. Furthermore, the American authorities at these other two bases would supply a reasonable proportion of Canadian material in their programmes for the benefit of the local population. The Department of National Defence had no objection to a station at Goose Bay, provided they were not involved in any way in its management.

(e) At Argentia, half the people had good reception on their receivers and the other half did not. There was nothing more frustrating than being in a television fringe area. It was better to have no service at all rather than an inferior one. If the St. John's licensees were not willing to improve their service to a point where the U.S. authorities were satisfied, the matter should be considered again. Meanwhile, it would be worth approaching the U.S. on the basis of the Minister's proposal.

22. The Cabinet agreed,

(a) that the United States be informed that the Canadian government was prepared to authorize the establishment by U.S. authorities of television stations in Newfoundland at the Ernest Harmon Air Force leased base near Stephenville, and at Goose Bay, on the understanding that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would hold the licence in each case, and that the programme would contain a reasonable proportion of Canadian material;

(b) that no television installation could be permitted at the U.S. naval station at Argentia, Newfoundland, but that the licensee of the St. John's transmitter would be requested to install a "booster" to give coverage to this base to the satisfaction of the U.S. authorities; and,

(c) that it be indicated to the United States that the Canadian Government would prefer, once these television arrangements were in effect, that the sound broadcasting now carried on at the U.S. leased bases in Newfoundland be terminated.

...

SECTION J

STATIONS DE SONDAGE EXPÉRIMENTALE EXPERIMENTAL SOUNDING STATIONS

358.

DEA/50291-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], July 7, 1955

SOUND SURVEILLANCE STATIONS

You will recall that in May 1954 we entered into an agreement with the United States for the establishment and operation of a joint Royal Canadian Navy-United States Navy experimental sound surveillance station at Shelburne, Nova Scotia.<sup>80</sup> Under the agreement the United States Navy built the station (using Naval construction battalions) and the two

<sup>80</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 505.

Navies share responsibility for its manning, the R.C.N. supplying the commanding officer and 50% of the staff. The agreement also provided that after a period of evaluation which was not expected to exceed three years Canada would have the right at any time on one year's notice to take over complete responsibility for the operation and manning of the station.

2. Since that time there has been discussion in the P.J.B.D. about the proposed construction of two additional stations — one at Cape Canso, Nova Scotia, and the other at Cape Cook, Vancouver Island. Some months ago the Canadian Government authorized surveys to be carried out for these two additional stations without prejudice to a decision on their construction.

3. In the course of the discussions in the P.J.B.D. the Canadian Section indicated that it would not look with favour on the use of Naval construction battalions if it were decided to proceed with the building of these stations. At the January 1955 meeting of the Board the Canadian Chairman stated "it would be very desirable that plans should therefore be based on flexible fiscal arrangements so that the construction might be accomplished by means appropriate to the particular circumstances of each case".

4. In April of this year the State Department called in an officer from our Embassy in Washington and proposed that the United States should supply the very expensive deep sea cables which are required for the stations and the special detection equipment, that the two countries should jointly take care of the installation of the equipment, and that Canada should erect the buildings. The estimated cost to Canada would be about $3 million.

5. This proposal was referred to the Department of National Defence and in June Mr. Drury commented as follows:

"On the basis that these two stations would cost approximately $4 to $6 million each, there might not be too much financial difficulty in agreeing to an equal division of costs. I had in mind, however, that the precedent for these two would certainly be extended to further stations of this character which are now in contemplation and might also serve as a precedent for further possible air defence installations.

"I think, therefore, it is important that we try and get a look at the overall picture and try and evolve a policy which will be generally applicable to all proposals of this sort.

"I suggest, therefore, advising the United States authorities that we are still considering this question and may not be able to provide a definitive reply for some time. If it is necessary to proceed with these at an early date, perhaps the United States might undertake their construction on the understanding that the division of costs would be settled at a later date."

6. I replied to Mr. Drury that the Department of External Affairs would advise the United States authorities that their proposal was still under consideration and that it might not be possible to provide a definite reply for some time. I added, however, that this Department was reluctant to accept his further suggestion that if it is necessary to proceed with the construction of the stations at an early date the United States might undertake this on the understanding that the division of costs would be settled later. I said that we did not believe it to be desirable for the project to be launched until the position with respect to Canadian participation is settled both in respect of construction and of manning. Moreover, if the Americans were authorized to proceed in the absence of a Canadian decision on these matters it would be difficult for us to reject the request which they would no doubt make for permission to use Naval construction battalions in building the stations.

7. On July 6, I received a letter from General Foulkes,† copy attached, which argued that this system of submarine detection was still of an experimental character and that Mr.

Campney was not prepared to concur in the Americans' suggestions at this time for the following reasons:

(a) because of the doubt about the size of the defence vote in the coming year it would not be prudent to accept additional financial commitments at this stage;

(b) the R.C.N. has not yet put forward to the Chiefs of Staff any proposals for sound surveillance stations to cover the Canadian approaches, and it has not yet been established that there is a Canadian requirement for these stations;

(c) any such arrangement as that suggested by the United States might create a precedent for other United States defence requirements in Canada and until such time as we have had an opportunity to study all the U.S. defence requirements it is not considered prudent to establish a rate of manning or a proportion of sharing costs on these Naval projects.

8. General Foulkes then suggests that in order not to hold up the United States proposals for the two additional stations, the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the P.J.B.D. should be authorized to indicate to the U.S. Section that Canadian officials would be prepared to recommend to the Government the construction of these two additional stations on the same basis as for the Shelburne station. This would mean that the United States would pay the whole cost of construction and installation and that, during a period of evaluation of up to three years, the R.C.N. would provide the commanding officer and half the staff. The arrangements to be in effect after that time would be dependent upon the decision of the Canadian Government. In his letter General Foulkes did not refer to the manning arrangements I have just mentioned but in a subsequent telephone conversation with Mr. Wershof he asserted categorically that these were the arrangements which National Defence would follow.

9. In his letter General Foulkes suggested that General McNaughton might urge the Americans not to propose the use of construction battalions for the Canso station but that the same objection might not apply in the case of the station on Vancouver Island because of its inaccessibility. In his conversation with General Foulkes, Mr. Wershof said that if External Affairs did agree to General Foulkes' proposal that we would seek, at least in the first instance, to persuade the Americans to use civil contractors for both stations and that, if the Americans put forward strong arguments in favour of using construction battalions on the West Coast, we could consider them further.

10. A point which we should bear in mind is that if the system is successful the Americans are likely to propose the construction of up to four additional stations in Canada.

11. I should be grateful if you would let me know whether you are agreeable to the suggestion made by the Department of National Defence or whether you prefer to have the matter considered first by Cabinet or Cabinet Defence Committee.<sup>81</sup> In this case General McNaughton would merely state that the matter is under study by the Canadian Government and that a statement would be made later.<sup>82</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

<sup>81</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

I think that this is a matter which should first be considered by Cabinet Defence Committee. L.B. P[earson]

<sup>82</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

July 11 I told Gen. Foulkes the Minister's decision. M. W[ershof] 359.

PCO

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 27, 1955

Present:

The Prime Minister, (Mr. St-Laurent), in the Chair,
 The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe),
 The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney),
 The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson),
 The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson),
 The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris),
 The Secretary (Mr. Martin),
 The Military Secretary (Captain Lucas)
 The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes),
 The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice Admiral Mainguy),
 The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemon),
 The Chief of the General Staff (Lieutenant-General Graham),
 The Chairman, Defence Research Board (Dr. Solandt),
 The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
 The Deputy Minister of National Defence (Mr. Miller),
 The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Léger),
 The Deputy Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Golden),
 The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance (Mr. Deutsch).

...
 IV. SOUND SURVEILLANCE STATIONS

13. The Minister of National Defence said that the Royal Canadian Navy was presently sharing with the U.S. Navy the manning of a sound surveillance station at Shelburne, N.S. Before this station was completed the United States asked permission to make surveys for two additional stations which would extend a chain covering the full length of the U.S. coast line. When the Shelburne station was constructed, the United States had been given permission to use Naval construction battalions, but this was limited to one year and was not to be regarded as a precedent for other installations.

The United States had now asked for formal consent to construct two additional stations, one in the Cape Canso area of Nova Scotia and one near Winter Harbour, Vancouver Island. In seeking approval for these projects, the U.S. suggested that the various components of the costs might be shared and that each station be manned with fifty per cent Canadian personnel. If this pattern were followed the cost to Canada would be from $2 3/4 - $3 million. The U.S. had expressed the hope that a decision on this matter would be made by October 1st.

The LOFAR technique employed in the surveillance chains was still in an experimental stage and as yet it had not been established that there was a Canadian use for the stations. The financial and manning proposals made in this instance might create a precedent for other U.S. defence requirements in Canada and, in the circumstances, he did not consider it prudent to agree to them. However, in order not to hold up U.S. plans, he suggested that the two new stations be allowed to proceed under the same terms and conditions as were agreed to for the Shelburne installation, except that local labour and not naval construction battalions should be employed at the Canso station.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, August 10, 1955, Document D19-55†)

14. During the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) If the LOFAR technique was still experimental, the work might just as well be done in the United States rather than on Canadian soil. On the other hand, it was pointed out that the proposed installations at Canso and at Winter Harbour formed part of the chain which, if it were successful, would improve immeasurably detection of enemy submarines and lead to a complete revision of coastal defences. Furthermore, the experiment required a full chain to be established with stations on different parts of the coastline and covering waters of varying depths. Unless there could be operational trials of the system on the whole coastline it would not be of much use.

(b) Research on LOFAR had been undertaken some years ago, commencing at a station in Bermuda. It depended for success on a delicate type of sound detection, and to be effective the system had to have several stations providing cross bearings which were supposed to provide detection in deep water. The British were developing a system known as CORSAIR for detection in shallow water. Cooperation between the navies of the three countries in this field was closer and apparently more productive than in most other defence research matters.

(c) It was indicated that if the U.S. had not undertaken this programme, the R.C.N. would have given it high priority.

(d) Compared to the air defence installations, sound surveillance stations were much cheaper and appeared to be the type of project which Canada could do itself. There were occasions from the national standpoint when such joint defence installations should be undertaken completely by Canada and this appeared to be one of them.

15. The Committee approved the recommendation of the Minister of National Defence and agreed that the United States be authorized to negotiate for the construction of two sound surveillance stations in the Cape Canso area of Nova Scotia and near Winter Harbour on Vancouver Island, in accordance with the same conditions governing the establishment and operation of the station at Shelburne, N.S., on the understanding that local labour would be employed for the construction of the Canso station, and not a U.S. naval construction battalion.

...

360.

DEA/50291-A-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-ministre de la Défense nationale*

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of National Defence

SECRET

Ottawa, November 9, 1955

EXTENSION OF THE SOUND SURVEILLANCE SYSTEM

On September 27, 1955, Cabinet Defence Committee agreed to authorize the United States to establish two sound surveillance stations, one near Cape Canso, Nova Scotia, and the other near Quatsino Sound, Vancouver Island on terms similar to those embodied in the exchange of notes of May 1-May 6, 1954 authorizing the establishment of a station at Shelburne, Nova Scotia.

It will be recalled that the Government authorized the construction of the Shelburne Station by United States naval military construction battalions using materials provided from United States Government stocks. In the case of the two new stations, the United States Government has been informed that the Canadian authorities hoped that it would be possible to have construction work carried out by civilian contractors. However, it is recognized that in the case of the station in British Columbia its isolated location may make the use of naval construction battalions desirable.

On October 28 the United States Embassy gave to the Department of External Affairs a draft note† and annex† (copy attached) which the Embassy proposed should serve as the statement of conditions governing the establishment and operation of the two new stations. External Affairs' comments on the draft statement of conditions are as follows (numbers correspond to the paragraph numbers in the draft statement of conditions):

1. Sites. This paragraph follows the pattern used in other agreements of this type. External Affairs has no comment.

2. Plans. This paragraph is identical to that in the Distant Early Warning agreement. The only question is whether the word "airstrips" is needed. Perhaps this should be changed to "Helicopter pads".

3. Construction. Paragraph 3(a) is intended to provide for the contingency that naval construction battalions may be used. Paragraphs 3(b) and (c) are identical with those used in other agreements of this type except that in paragraph 3(c) the requirement that rates of pay and working conditions will be set "after consultation with the Canadian Department of Labour" have been omitted. The U.S. Embassy said that these words had been left out because the rates were always higher than required by the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act.

4. Electronic Equipment. This paragraph is similar to that in the Shelburne agreement.

5. Financing. This paragraph represents a considerable departure from the Shelburne agreement since it provides that after completion of initial construction of the stations by the United States, full cost of maintenance, other than special equipment and parts, will be the responsibility of Canada. Acceptance of this provision would seem to require approval by Cabinet Defence Committee.

6. Operation and Manning. This paragraph departs from the Shelburne formula in that it puts the basic responsibility for manning and operating the station on the Royal Canadian Navy rather than the United States Navy. It would seem that acceptance of this provision would also require approval by Cabinet Defence Committee.

7. Period of Operation of the Stations. The Shelburne agreement was based on the assumption that the station was experimental. Continued operation was therefore guaranteed only for a period of evaluation which was estimated to be approximately three years. In this case, the United States has proposed the same formula that has been applied to the DEW Line agreement and a number of other projects of this nature, guaranteeing operation for a 10-year period. This seems reasonable to the Department of External Affairs but since it departs from the Shelburne formula it will presumably have to be approved by Cabinet Defence Committee.

8. Ownership of Removable Property. This paragraph is the same as that in the Shelburne agreement. However, we intend to propose to the U.S. Embassy the addition of a sentence stating that the disposal of U.S. excess property in Canada shall be carried out in accordance with the Canada-U.S. Agreement Concerning the Disposal of Excess Property.<sup>83</sup>

<sup>83</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1951, N° 9/See Canada, Treaty Series, 1951, No. 9.

9. Radio Installations. No External Affairs comment.

10. Taxes. This paragraph is the same as that in a number of radar agreements. No External Affairs comment.

11. Canadian Immigration Customs Regulations. This paragraph is the same as in other agreements of this type, except for the addition of the word "contract" in the second line of sub-paragraph (a). The Embassy's reason for putting in this word is obscure and we intend to ask that it be deleted.

The remaining paragraphs of the draft are standard for agreements of this type.

It will be seen from the foregoing that the only questions of substance are those in paragraphs 5, 6 and 7. It is suggested that the Department of National Defence might wish to submit to Cabinet Defence Committee its recommendations on these questions, which are not in accord with the Shelburne agreement. In the meantime, I should be grateful for the comments of the other departments concerned on those features of the draft which are of particular concern to them.

G. IGNATIEFF
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

SECTION K

INSTALLATIONS DU RÉSEAU DE TÉLÉCOMMUNICATIONS DES ÉTATS-UNIS UNITED STATES COMMUNICATIONS FACILITIES

361.

DEA/3682-40

*Le sous-ministre de la Défense nationale
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Deputy Minister of National Defence to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

Ottawa, February 7, 1955

Dear Sir:

RE MANNING OF COMMUNICATIONS STATIONS IN EASTERN CANADA

Your letter of 23 November 1954<sup>84</sup> recommending a policy for the manning of a U.S.A.F. communications facility at Gander has been studied in the light of:

(a) General Twining's letter of 22 November 1954 to Air Marshal Slemon (copy attached†).

(b) U.S.A.F. plans for overseas ionospheric scatter circuits, and

(c) Your letter of 23 November 1954 to Chairman, Chiefs of Staff,† concerning the Commercial Cable Company's proposed voice and telegraph cable from U.S. to U.K. via Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Greenland and Iceland. (Reply not embodied herein.)

The attached map (Appendix "B"†) of major U.S.A.F. existing and proposed multi-channel long-haul communications through Eastern Canada shows that these circuits:

<sup>84</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 498.

(a) are being, or will be, used to carry U.S. traffic across Canada to the territories of third powers.

(b) are parallel to existing or required communications of our Government (See Appendix "A"†).

There are, additionally, considerable numbers of U.S.A.F. high-frequency and low-frequency point-to-point circuits already established in the same area. Many of these are multi-channel, and some are parts of U.S. international networks.

From a meagre beginning, and by asking for a circuit here today and another somewhere else tomorrow, the U.S. has gradually built itself a great network of North Atlantic communications based largely on Eastern Canadian soil. Although this uses the best available sites at many Canadian bases and has required the assignment of numerous Canadian frequencies from our limited holdings, it carries little or no Canadian traffic and is entirely under U.S. control.

Scatter and cable techniques are capable of giving reliable communications in the aural belt which covers much of Northeastern Canada and the North Atlantic. The conventional high-frequency and low-frequency radio circuits employed by our own Government in these areas are subject to serious disruption by magnetic storms and are, of course, prone to jamming. The Defence Research Board and the Services are turning their attention to the scatter techniques and have no doubt that the answer to many Canadian communications problems lies in this direction. Canadian manufacturers and operators must obtain experience in this field soon. Meanwhile, little by little, as one urgent demand has followed another, many choice sites and frequencies have been yielded and U.S. equipment has been installed in all sites.

I need hardly say how concerned I am about the mushroom growth of these foreign-owned international communications in our own defence area. All are legitimate requirements in the NATO defence arrangements, but the ownership and control of the circuits should be re-examined on the basis that any country's self-reliance is bound up with its ability to control the communications within its own boundaries. This is true, it seems to me, not only of military circuits but also of civil government and even commercial facilities.

I recommend that we consider taking over not merely the manning of one or two of the U.S.-owned scatter stations, but the ownership and control of all the U.S. long-haul communications facilities in Canada.

For both tropospheric and ionospheric scatter circuits, the following proposals appear in order of preference:

(a) Service ownership and maintenance.

(b) Service ownership: civil maintenance.

Because the Services are already over-extended in the technical field, (a) could not prove practicable within the next five years. Alternative (b) appears feasible and should be discussed at a meeting of interested departments. If the maintenance and technical operation could be done by the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation or by the Canadian National Telegraphs, full governmental control would be achieved and franchise rights in Newfoundland would not be violated.

Purchase of the scatter facilities will be costly. However, this purchase cost could be amortized over the next seven or ten years and much of it, together with maintenance costs, could be charged back to the U.S. on the basis of their proportionate use of available circuits (probably not less than seventy-five per cent). Alternatively, since many of these facilities have been installed as part of the radar extension plan, the one-third/two-thirds term of the Pinetree Note might be used in relation to these to ensure that Canada's one-third expenditure buys ownership and control of items of international significance and continuing peacetime importance such as communications, while the U.S. two-thirds provides facilities primarily of wartime use and of a geographically limited role, such as the heavy radars and their gap-fillers.

The coaxial cable proposed by Commercial Cable Limited, roughly parallels the northern overseas scatter circuits. I understand the company is being authorized, in so far as Canada is concerned, to proceed with this project, subject to certain restrictions on the acceptance of traffic of Canadian origin. If this cable remains under U.S. control, the USAF communications could be transferred to it and the scatter circuits made ineffective by closing the U.S. relays in Greenland and the Azores.

To guard against this, it would seem wise for Canada to have some positive and absolute control over at least those portions of the cable lying in Canadian waters or traversing Canadian soil. The costs of this could presumably be recovered on the same basis as for the scatter circuits.

Pending the outcome of the interdepartmental discussions proposed above and Cabinet decision on the recommendations resulting therefrom, Air Marshal Slemon has advised General Twining that the Gander station may be opened by the use of U.S.A.F. personnel, without prejudice to the future manning of this and other scatter facilities (copy attached†). Meanwhile, I suggested that the Government press forward with plans for early Canadian manning of the Gander station in order to begin acquisition of first-hand experience of the scatter technique by whatever agency is to be given responsibility in this field.

A copy of this letter is being forwarded to Mr. Baldwin.

Yours sincerely,
C.M. DRURY

362.

DEA/3682-40

Rapport du chef du Groupe de travail sur les aspect civils et militaires de la politique de télécommunications, pour le Comité Ad Hoc sur la politique de télécommunications
Report by Chairman, Working Group on Civil and Military Aspects of Telecommunications Policy, for Ad Hoc Committee on Telecommunications Policy

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

[Ottawa], August 18, 1955

1. The Working Group on Civil and Military Aspects of Telecommunications Policy, established at the direction of the Secretary to the Cabinet and with the approval of the Deputy Ministers of National Defence and Transport and the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, has made a survey of the various communications systems in Canada that are owned and operated by the United States with a view to determining the probable effect upon Canada's telecommunications interests, now and in the future, of large scale American developments in this country. The Working Group has held seven meetings and has carried out a number of technical studies essential to an intelligent analysis of the overall problem. These studies have progressed to the point where it is now possible to make this report to the Ad Hoc Committee on Telecommunications, and to suggest ways and means whereby these U.S. developments might be controlled in the national interest.

2. For the convenience of the Ad Hoc Committee in considering the results of these studies, the nature of the problem and the conclusions of the Working Group are summarized here. The various communications systems and the technical matters discussed by the Working Group are described in detail in the Annex.† The extent and potential capabilities of the principal systems maintained by the United States in Canada are graphically illustrated in Appendices A to J inclusive.†

3. While it is true that these developments are progressive and that the pattern is constantly changing, the Working Group hopes that this report and the attachments may provide a reference paper for use, at least, in the immediate future. The basic principles inherent in the plans and in the systems themselves will remain more or less constant, and the main difficulty will be to keep abreast of technical developments whenever communications policy is under discussion. (In this connection, attention is drawn to the fact that the technical data set out in the various sections of the Annex and in the Appendices, while based on the latest information, available at the date of this report, is subject to change).

4. In carrying out its assigned task, the Working Group has taken into consideration the known proposed plans of the United States interests involved, with emphasis on the intended location of any new installations or systems, the existing and future civilian requirements of the area to be covered by each U.S. proposal, the relationship of any particular proposal to the existing United States installations (which have been approved in the normal way) and the need for a long term progressive development of communication facilities to meet both civil and military needs. In addition, some attention has been given to such special aspects as the arrangements for financing Operation Pinetree and to such administrative and technical matters as the present system of controls and licensing maintained by the Department of Transport (following the repeal of the Emergency Powers Act) and the problems involved in controlling the use of radio frequencies.

5. The pattern of communications now developing in isolated parts of Canada, particularly in the North and East, is based on Canada/U.S. military requirements. The build-up of these military communications has produced a confused situation which could have a permanently unfavourable effect on the orderly development of Canada's telecommunications interests. We believe it to be in the national interest that communications in these areas be coordinated and developed with a view to meeting the integrated requirements of all users, civil as well as military, Canadian as well as American. The requirement for communications in and through these areas will continue beyond the period in which the requirement is predominantly a military one and ultimate Canadian ownership and operation must be contemplated as an outgrowth of normal economic development. Because of the physical and economic problems involved the best approach would seem to be through gradual assumption by Canada of responsibility for these communication systems, so that the right measure of control may be acquired on a progressive basis commensurate with our ability to take over and operate these facilities in the interests of all concerned. We think this can be done with careful planning.

Conclusions and Recommendations

6. The studies of the Working Group, while not exhaustive, have nevertheless covered the major questions inherent in the terms of reference assigned to the Group. Our conclusions and recommendations are as follows:

(a) the application of statutory and technical controls, insofar as radio is concerned, as provided in existing legislation and deemed adequate for the purpose by the Department of Transport, is capable of dealing with any serious impediment to the development and control of Canada's overall communications interests. (However, it is essential to take note of the fact that while the safeguards required to maintain control of this mushroom growth do, in fact, exist, any arbitrary application of them or any uncoordinated advance by Canadian entities into the ownership and management of these facilities might, in certain circumstances, be inimical to Canada's interests. We could conceivably be placed in a position where any breakdown in the development and/or operation of communications vital to the mutual defence arrangements of Canada and the United States might be attributed to Canadian interference. This would create an atmosphere in which orderly development of communications systems in these areas would be difficult if not impossible);

(b) Canadian agencies should insist that the U.S. authorities provide full technical data to enable the Department of Transport (in consultation as necessary with the Department of National Defence) to assess the technical implications of any proposal before issuing licenses;

(c) the United States should be informed that the purpose for which any project is approved is exclusive, and that uses for the facility other than those originally requested must be the subject of further agreement, through either the Permanent Joint Board on Defence or diplomatic channels;

(d) effective control of telecommunications facilities can be assured by Canadian ownership and operation;

(e) to ensure an integrated and effective programme of development and control, the acquisition of U.S. facilities in Canada should follow a progressive pattern of communications development in which Canadian entities participate, by stages, based on their capabilities and starting with the Northeastern system including POLEVAULT;

(f) the economic factors, manpower requirements and management problems involved in developing such a policy should be studied immediately to enable the Government to reach a considered view on this question. Consideration should be given to the methods which have already been developed in respect of the Northwest Communications System (see Section III, Annex I,) the object being to avoid large capital investment by some suitable plan for amortizing revenues over an appropriate period and under satisfactory arrangements with a suitable Canadian agency or agencies. Preferably, this should be a Government agency such as the Northwest Communications System;

(g) recognizing that the development of these communications systems to meet the integrated requirements of all users, civil as well as military, will need to be kept under constant observation, together with other associated problems, it would seem desirable to establish an interdepartmental advisory committee to follow their development and provide advice to the Government.

Summary

7. In brief, the Working Group has been concerned not so much with any challenge to Canada's commercial communications interests, either now or in the period following the lapse of any active military requirement for the facilities under review, as with the urgent need to ensure that U.S. sponsored telecommunications plans are compatible with the orderly development of the pattern of communications throughout the country.

8. We are of the opinion that an approach along the lines suggested above is capable of meeting this vital need.

E.F. GASKELL

363.

DEA/3682-40

Note du chef de la Direction économique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures<sup>85</sup>

Memorandum from Head, Economic Division, to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs<sup>85</sup>

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 2, 1955

PROPOSED MEETING OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE

As you will see from the attached correspondence, † there is expected to be a meeting of this Ad Hoc Committee at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, September 6. Will you be able to attend as in the past? I have gone over the material prepared by the Working Group and must say that on first reading I am not greatly impressed.

2. One of the things which seems to me to emerge clearly from the study is that a highly efficient communications system has been developed which would almost certainly not have come into being if we had been left to our own devices. We would have had little incentive, inadequate resources and insufficient technical knowledge to create such a network. Perhaps we should be just a little grateful that this system has come into being even though the United States may have been deeply involved in its creation and may still be participating in its operation.

3. I find little evidence in these papers that frequencies which we currently desire to use are being congested or monopolized by the United States in regions of current interest to us with the possible exception of Newfoundland.

4. I also have located nothing to indicate that the United States has really exceeded the limits of any concessions which we have made to them or that they have used military excuses for getting into this field for civil purposes. I think it still has to be shown that if the United States were to abuse these privileges in a manner which was objectionable to us, we could not withdraw them effectively. As you suggested in the earlier discussion, it would seem to be up to those who are urging a new course to demonstrate that it is not possible for us to tie down the Americans effectively with whatever conditions we choose to include in the intergovernmental agreements or understandings relating to these concessions. Possibly, we should have been more specific regarding such conditions in earlier arrangements and probably we should be quite precise about these matters in any subsequent understandings. That does not mean, however, that we have been, or are, incapable of stating our own terms and seeing to it that they are observed.

5. This Working Group has placed a good deal of emphasis on Canadian ownership and operation. Even if the term "Canadian" can be satisfactorily defined in this connection, it is not clear why such ownership and operation should necessarily be more effective than a carefully prepared and strictly enforced agreement concerning the activities of firms and agencies from the United States. The "Canadianizing" of the system would not necessarily work magic with respect to the efficient operation of the system, the avoidance of congestion, etc.

<sup>85</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
Mr Macdonnell: We spoke M W[ershof]

6. I am not suggesting that we should oppose the views set out in this report but I think we should attempt at Tuesday's meeting to get the members of the Working Group to provide more evidence and argument in support of their conclusions.<sup>86</sup>

A.E. RITCHIE

364.

DEA/3682-40

Procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité Ad Hoc sur la politique de télécommunications

Minutes of Meeting of Ad Hoc Committee on Telecommunications Policy

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 6, 1955

Present

Mr. R.B. Bryce (Chairman)
Secretary to the Cabinet
Mr. J.R. Baldwin
Mr. F.G. Nixon
Department of Transport
Mr. E.B. Armstrong
Department of National Defence
Air Vice Marshal M.M. Hendrick
Group Captain S.R. Burbank
Royal Canadian Air Force
Mr. R.M. MacDonnell
Mr. A.E. Ritchie
Department of External Affairs
Mr. R.G. MacNeill
Department of Finance
Mr. M.W. Sharp
Department of Trade and Commerce
Mr. B.G. Sivertz
Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources
Mr. E.F. Gaskell (Secretary)
Privy Council Office

The Committee had for consideration the report of the Working Group which had been directed to make a study of the civil and military aspects of large scale Canada/United States communications projects in this country with a view to determining the probable effect of these developments upon Canada's domestic and international telecommunications interests, now and in the future.

(Report of the Working Group on Civil and Military Aspects of Telecommunications, dated August 18, 1955, circulated for information).

2. The Chairman outlined the main problems, as reflected in the report of the Working Group, and said that it would be necessary to decide whether Canadian participation in the telecommunications projects now being developed in this country would create sufficient opportunity to promote Canadian interests to warrant any heavy financial commitment beyond our present obligations. It was for consideration whether the national interests

<sup>86</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Working Party of D[e]partment of] N[at]ional] D[efence] and D[e]partment of] T[ransport] is to prepare specific suggestions for a meeting by the last week of September A.E. R[it]chie really required us to "show the flag" by establishing ownership of these facilities, either wholly or in part, or whether the same purpose might be served by an arrangement whereby Canada reserved the right to purchase elements of the system or otherwise secure the national interest therein (e.g., by acquiring enough circuits to meet present and future needs). It would be desirable to examine the problem in the light of the approach made by the Working Group and then try to arrive at reasonable conclusions for the guidance of the Government in making a decision on this vital matter.

3. Mr. Gaskell said that the Working Group had been established primarily to examine a National Defence suggestion to the effect that these large scale developments actually constituted a serious threat to Canadian control of our own telecommunications interests. This aspect of the matter had been investigated with particular care, and the Working Group had concluded that the problem was not so much one of meeting an actual threat to Canadian control of these facilities as a matter of contriving and maintaining the means to ensure orderly development of the telecommunications services required to meet current and future needs, civil as well as military, in the areas affected.

4. The conclusions and recommendations of the Working Group, as expressed in its report under reference, were as follows:

- (a) statutory and technical controls relating to radio, as provided in existing legislation, appeared to be adequate to enable the Department of Transport to deal with any serious impediment to the development and control of Canada's communications interests, including any difficulties arising from large scale military developments in this country;
- (b) Canadian agencies should insist that United States authorities provide full technical data to enable the Department of Transport (in consultation, as necessary, with the Department of National Defence) to assess the technical implications of any proposal before issuing licenses;
- (c) the United States should be informed that the purpose for which any project is approved is exclusive and that the facility in question may not be used for any purpose other than that stated in the original request, except by further agreement through either the Permanent Joint Board on Defence or diplomatic channels;
- (d) effective control of telecommunications facilities can be assured by Canadian ownership and operation;
- (e) to ensure an integrated and effective programme of development and control, the acquisition of United States facilities in Canada should follow a progressive pattern of communications development in which Canadian entities participate, by stages, based on their capabilities. (It was suggested that a start be made with the Northeastern system, including POLEVAULT);
- (f) the economic factors, manpower requirements and management problems involved in developing such a policy should be studied immediately with a view to providing the information necessary to enable the Government to reach a considered decision on this question. (In this connection, it was suggested that consideration might be given to the methods used in respect of the Northwest Communications System, the object being to avoid large capital investment by amortizing revenues over an appropriate period);
- (g) recognizing that the development of these communications systems to meet the integrated requirements of all users, civil as well as military, must be kept under constant review, together with other associated problems, it would seem desirable to establish an interdepartmental advisory committee to follow their development and provide advice to the Government.

5. Air Vice Marshal Hendrick said that management responsibility, as opposed to a purely operational role, was desirable and could easily be undertaken by Canada. It was always good business to establish ownership of one's own communications. Ownership might be vested in a Crown Corporation or in private companies. It might be desirable for the Government to purchase the facilities, wholly or in part, and then arrange to have them operated by commercial interests.

6. Mr. Armstrong suggested that it would be unrealistic to involve Canada in the heavy financial commitment required to establish ownership of these facilities simply for the sake of providing Canadian personnel with on-the-job training in the use of the new techniques. There were other and less expensive ways of achieving the same ends. For example, it would be relatively easy to arrange for Canadian contractors to work on the project during the construction phase and, later, to have Canadian personnel assume a fair share of the operational responsibility for the system.

7. It was noted that, according to the latest estimates, the rearward communications from the DEW Line to be built in Canada might cost as much as $50 million. Earlier estimates, based on various criteria, had ranged from $15 million to $70 million.

8. Mr. Baldwin expressed the view that Canadian ownership and operation of these facilities was essential if the objectives set out by the Working Group were to be achieved. The degree of ownership would depend, in part, on the methods employed to bring about these objectives. It was in Canada's interest to take all possible steps to ensure that, in so far as possible, Canadian entities were placed in a position to operate and maintain facilities of this kind.

9. Mr. MacNeill agreed, in principle, that Canada should assume a major share of the operational responsibility for telecommunications services developed in this country. It would be desirable to have Canadian commercial entities rather than Government agencies take up these functions and operate the system.

10. Mr. Armstrong said that agreement on a long term communications plan for Canada was a pre-requisite for any serious recommendations respect of the problem now before the Committee. It would then be possible to decide how and to what extent we should attempt to adapt a military system to possible commercial use. In any event, a long term communications plan was very much to be desired.

11. The Chairman observed that it would be unrealistic to ask the United States to amortize all or any part of Canada's investment in what was essentially a joint undertaking for the defence of the two countries. It would be desirable to approach the question of increased Canadian financial participation with some caution, and recommend action along these lines only after it had been established that Canadian interests could not be secured in any other way. He was not convinced that a case had been made for heavy Canadian capital investment at the present time.

He expressed the view that if Canada wanted to secure the right to allocate circuits in the system in accordance with our own idea of priorities, it might be necessary to own the system, or a part thereof, and pay a fair share of the cost. All the factors would have to be considered.

12. Mr. Armstrong made a further point to the effect that it would be unrealistic to deal with this problem out of context and that in proposing a course of action for the consideration of the Government, the Committee should base its recommendations on a plan that would apply uniformly in respect of the DEW Line or any similar enterprise. It would be in the national interest to achieve and maintain a measure of consistency in dealing with problems of this kind.

13. In the ensuing discussion, it was noted that jurisdictional control over these communications, as opposed to any form of control pro rated to Canada's financial investment in the system, would have many advantages. There was a question of sovereignty, but in the special circumstances governing these joint undertakings, sovereignty could not be the sole factor in resolving the problems at issue. Canada should at least have an option to purchase at a price based on the depreciated value of the facilities whenever the United States might decide to abandon its interests therein, either wholly or in part. (The right to acquire ownership of these facilities in the right of Canada is secured by terms of the agreement between the Governments).

In putting forward recommendations designed to protect Canada's interests in this matter, care should be taken to ensure that:

- (a) the existing and/or projected facilities were adequate to meet all anticipated communications requirements;
- (b) Canada had the right to make whatever modifications might be necessary to take care of any needs that might develop in the future;
- (c) enough circuits were secured to meet all Canadian requirements.

14. It was agreed, after further discussion, that representatives of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport should meet, as a sub working group, to develop firm proposals, based on the views expressed at the meeting, for further study by the Ad Hoc Committee.

15. It was further agreed that the Ad Hoc Committee should meet again in about three weeks' time in an endeavour to get a submission ready for presentation to Cabinet.

E.F. GASKELL

365.

DEA/3682-40

Procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité Ad Hoc sur la politique de télécommunications<sup>87</sup>

Minutes of Meeting of Ad Hoc Committee on Telecommunications Policy<sup>87</sup>

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 26, 1955

Present

Mr. R.B. Bryce,
Secretary to the Cabinet (Chairman)
Mr. J.R. Baldwin,
Mr. F.G. Nixon,
Department of Transport
Mr. E.B. Armstrong,
Department of National Defence
Air Vice Marshal M.M. Hendrick,
Air Commodore C.L. Annis,
Group Captain D. Gooderham,
Royal Canadian Air Force

<sup>87</sup> Notes marginales /Marginal notes:

Note for File: I pointed out to Gaskell that I did not think para[graph] 12(b) accurately reflected the conclusion reached. Gaskell undertook to look into this and possibly to issue an amendment to the minutes. W.H. B[arton]

Amended at the meeting on July 16, 1956 [Auteur inconnu/Author unknown]

Mr. W.H. Barton,
 Mr. J.F. Grandy,
 Department of External Affairs
 Mr. R.G. MacNeill,
 Department of Finance
 Mr. H.A. Hadskis,
 Department of Trade and Commerce
 Mr. G.W. Rowley,
 Mr. B.G. Sivertz,
 Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources
 Major J.C. Morrison,
 Privy Council Office
 Mr. E.F. Gaskell,
 Privy Council Office (Secretary)

The Committee had for consideration recommendations prepared by a Sub-Working Group of representatives of the Departments of National Defence and Transport, in accordance with the directive of the meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee held on September 6th, 1955. (See annex).

2. The Chairman said that these proposals constituted a useful basis for further examination of the problems involved in determining what measure of control Canada should assume in respect of large scale Canada/U.S. military communications projects in this country. Basically, the proposals made by the Sub-Working Group involved authorizing the United States to proceed with their plans for the provision of these facilities on the clear understanding that Canada reserved the right to purchase and operate the communications system, either wholly or in part, after the period of initial testing.

3. Mr. Baldwin said that he was in general agreement with the proposals advanced by the Sub-Working Group and that while some modifications of the proposed approach might be desirable it would nevertheless constitute a useful starting point for discussion.

4. Mr. MacNeill suggested that it might be desirable to establish a holding company to assume ownership of all the facilities, and rent them out or sell them, as the case might be, to commercial entities. Such an arrangement would have certain obvious advantages from the standpoint of administrative and financial control.

5. Mr. Armstrong had reservations as to the validity of the assumption that Canadian ownership was an essential prerequisite for exercising control over these communications facilities. The requirement might be met if Canada merely reserved the right to take over the facilities whenever this might be desirable.

6. Mr. Barton stressed the importance of ensuring that Canada had a sufficient number of trained personnel available whenever a decision was taken to acquire ownership or exercise operational control in respect of any or all of these facilities. It was conceivable that we might be placed in an embarrassing position in the event of our inability to provide the trained personnel necessary for this task.

7. A question arose as to whether Canada's bargaining position might be weakened by proposing that commercial companies own these facilities rather than a Crown Company or Government Department (e.g., Transport), especially as the facilities in question would be used primarily for Government sponsored purposes, civil and military.

8. The Chairman suggested that it would not be to Canada's advantage to adopt any inflexible policy in this respect, and that the procedural questions to be resolved before a decision was taken to acquire ownership of these facilities would require very careful study.

9. Air Commodore Annis described Air Traffic Control (ATC) methods as a means of demonstrating the extent to which the facilities under discussion might be considered as being used for commercial purposes. He discussed the basic principles inherent in DEW line identification procedures, and noted that primary identification of aircraft would be made on the line itself. The heaviest volume of identification message traffic would undoubtedly occur in Northeastern Canada, and it was noteworthy that the bulk of this traffic would consist of ATC messages of non-military origin.

10. In the ensuing general discussion, it was noted that there were two major reasons for considering an arrangement involving the payment of capital charges in respect of the acquisition of the communications system. There was a political consideration. In addition, undisputed operational control would place Canada in an infinitely better bargaining position in relation to future developments.

11. Group Captain Gooderham suggested that use of the term "operator" in relation to the system under discussion was entirely misleading. The only persons in actual control of the facilities at field points would be technicians who might be classed as operators. This brought the discussion right back to the question of ownership. For example, POLEVAULT was being maintained by Marconi — a Canadian Company — but they exercised no control whatsoever over the system and it had been impossible for Canada to obtain the use of circuits in this system.

12. It was agreed, after further discussion:

(a) to recommend to the Cabinet Defence Committee that, in respect of the communications facilities inherent in these large scale Canada/United States military developments, Canada should reserve the right to acquire title to United States interests in the system, or any part thereof, on reasonable notice and on terms to be negotiated between the parties, with a specific undertaking on the part of Canada to make circuits available to the United States as required for military purposes;<sup>88</sup>

(b) that it should be made clear in all negotiations with the United States relative to these communications projects that Canada reserved the right to acquire a fixed proportion of the available circuits, beyond the minimum requirements of the DEW line itself, for the accommodation of Canadian users;<sup>89</sup>

(c) that the original Working Group should make a study of the practical application of the principle set out in para. 12(a) above in relation to a specific case (e.g., POLEVAULT), with emphasis on the actual terms of the option to be exercised by Canada in such cases.

13. The Committee agreed to meet again in about three weeks' time to consider the report of the Working Group in respect of the option to be exercised by Canada in acquiring title to any or all of these communications facilities.

E.F. GASKELL

<sup>88</sup> Cela a été brièvement examiné au Comité du Cabinet sur la défense, le 27 septembre 1955. Voir le document 356.

This was briefly discussed in the Cabinet Defence Committee on September 27, 1955. See Document 356.

<sup>89</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

N.B. I think 12(b) should read something as follows:

"That pending acquisition of any or all of the DEW rearward communications system, the Canadian Govt would expect the United States to make available to it, on request, a reasonable share of the available circuits, beyond the essential minimum requirements of the DEW line itself.["] W.H. B[arton]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

AnnexeAnnex

SECRET. CANADIAN EYES ONLY.

REPORT TO THE AD HOC COMMITTEE ON TELECOMMUNICATIONS POLICY

Representatives of the Departments of National Defence and Transport in accordance with the directive of the meeting of September 6th, 1955,

Having taken into account:

(a) that the pattern of communications developing in isolated parts of Canada particularly in the north and east based on Canada/U.S. military requirements could be inimical to the orderly development of an integrated national communication system if not properly controlled;

(b) that so long as ownership and operational control rests mainly in the hands of the United States, arbitrary application of existing statutory and technical controls to ensure an organized and co-ordinated development of a Canadian communications system is extremely difficult, for the reasons stated by the working group; (see Appendix A†);

(c) that there are Canadian military and civil requirements along the routes being covered by these U.S. owned communications which, although generally small in magnitude compared with the U.S. military requirement, place Canada in a position of dependency on U.S. owned systems which could be withdrawn and dismantled by the U.S. at the termination of their requirement;

(d) that civil requirements for communications along some of the routes is expected to expand and must either be satisfied by the use of the communication system under consideration or by the establishment of parallel systems;

(e) that a heavy financial capital expenditure by Canada to acquire ownership of these facilities is not desirable;

(f) that partial ownership of the long-haul communication circuits other than those which may be regarded as satisfying only a purely U.S. military requirement would militate against the development of a national integrated system, because the foreign owner would not have the same interest in interconnection and in fulfilling requirements other than his own;

(g) that the assumption of ownership by Canada of communication facilities for the D.E.W. line might be construed as a Canadian contribution to it;

(h) that the acquisition and careful control of development of the communications systems under consideration is, in itself, a basic long-term plan for the development of Canadian communications to provide for the needs of civil and military users both Canadian and U.S., and because the system as shown in the attached Appendix B,† together with present Canadian plans for the establishment of micro-wave systems, including the Trans-Canada micro-wave systems and other long-line communications, provides a basic communication structure capable of expansion by the addition of shorter feeders which could lead to an improved communication service over all of Canada;

(i) that it would be desirable to have Canadian commercial entities (including Crown Corporations), rather than Federal Government Departments, operate and subsequently own the systems;

(j) that acquisition of ownership by the Canadian Government in the first instance would facilitate the negotiation of any subsequent transfer of ownership to Canadian private enterprise;

(k) that it is desirable that any proposed course of action for consideration of the Government should be based upon a plan which would apply uniformly in respect of the D.E.W. line or any similar enterprise;

(l) existing agreements; (see Note 1)

and bearing in mind;

the estimated capital value and revenue shown in Appendix B are of the opinion;

that Canadian ownership of the system under consideration is the only effective way to acquire control of the development of a Canadian integrated communication system, and feels that this would not be inimical to the proper provision for the needs of the U.S. military services in Canada;

THEREFORE RECOMMENDS:

(a) that the U.S. would be permitted to construct such communication systems as are jointly agreed and would be permitted to retain ownership and control during initial testing; such work would be subject to the usual conditions regarding use of Canadian labour and materials;

(b) that when any system or portion thereof becomes ready for operational use it would be taken over by the Canadian Government under arrangements outlined in sub-paragraph (c);

(c) that title to any system would be obtained by the Canadian Government in accordance with the following:

(i) an outright payment to the U.S. of a share of the agreed capital cost proportionate to Canadian user interest in the system; (see Notes 2 and 4)

(ii) repayment to the United States of the balance of the agreed capital cost by annual payments from total revenue in excess of an agreed amount (subject to possible periodic review) representing operating costs and reasonable profit to the operating company. These payments would bear the same relation to the excess revenue as the United States share of the agreed capital cost would bear to the total agreed capital cost. The obligation to make capital repayments shall not extend beyond an agreed amortization period;

(iii) standard rental rates would apply;

(iv) notwithstanding (iii) above, revenue to be guaranteed by the United States in an amount which would bear the same relation to the agreed amounts required for operating costs and reasonable profit to the operating company, as the United States share of the agreed capital cost would bear to the total agreed capital cost for the period covered by the agreement (to be determined), subject to the provision of (c)(v);

(v) negotiation as to Salvage payment by Canada should the United States terminate the agreement before all capital costs have been repaid, or capital repayments terminated in accordance with (c)(ii) above;

(d) that coincident with title being assigned to the Canadian Government, the U.S. would pay rental for all circuits it desired;

(e) that if the U.S. subsequently required additional circuits which necessitated augmentation of any system, the additional equipment would be provided by Canada and leased by the U.S. under normal 10 year lease together with provisioning charges as necessary to ensure no cost to Canada;

(f) that the Government agency to have initial ownership of the system should be non-military, preferably, the Department of Transport;

(g) that ownership be transferred to Canadian commercial companies as soon as it is expedient, and as early as satisfactory arrangements can be made. Where this cannot be immediately achieved, the system to be operated by Canadian commercial companies under contract to the Canadian Government, such contracts to be arranged, where possible, with a view to the eventual ownership by the Company concerned. (See Note 3)

Note 1

Both the D.E.W. line and Pine Tree (assumed to include Pole Vault) Agreements are based upon U.S. ownership of the communication systems under consideration. If the foregoing recommendation is adopted, both Agreements will require revision.

Note 2

In formulating the above recommendation it has been assumed that Canada will make no contribution to D.E.W. line. However, in the event that it becomes Government policy to make a contribution, an adjustment could be made to the proportion of the out-right payment indicated in paragraph (c)(i) above.

Note 3

The foregoing proposal is intended to cover communication systems shown in the attached Appendix B and other similar systems which may be required by the U.S. and establishment jointly agreed. However, implementation of the assumption of Canadian Government ownership and transfer to Canadian company ownership or formulation of contracts for Canadian company operation may be variable depending upon such factors as completion of installation and initial testing, and potential revenue as compared with cost of operation.

Note 4

It is recognized that the application of any Canadian import taxes may have a direct bearing on the agreed capital cost.

3<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 3
QUESTIONS ÉCONOMIQUES ECONOMIC ISSUES

SECTION A

ÉLIMINATION DES SURPLUS AGRICOLES DES ÉTATS-UNIS : BLÉ DISPOSAL OF UNITED STATES AGRICULTURAL SURPLUSES: WHEAT

366.

DEA/24-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-1009

Ottawa, May 31, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

DISPOSAL OF U.S. SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

You will have seen Mr. Howe's statement in the House of Commons on May 16 expressing the Canadian Government's concern that the export of non-commercial terms of U.S. agricultural products, particularly wheat, was having an adverse effect on normal Canadian markets for such products.<sup>90</sup> The time would seem now to have come to express this concern formally to the United States Government. Accordingly, you should deliver to the State Department a Note along the lines of the text set out below. In order that our representations may be as effective as possible, the approach to the State Department should be at a reasonably high level.

Text Begins:

2. The Canadian Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and wishes to express the views of the Canadian Government with respect to the effects on normal commercial trade of the policies being followed by the Government of the United States for the disposal of surplus agricultural commodities, particularly wheat.

3. The United States Government has, from time to time, sought the views of the Canadian Government with respect to transactions under Title One of Public Law 480. There has been no consultation with respect to transactions under Section 402 of the Mutual

<sup>90</sup> Voir Canada, Chambres des Communes, Débats, 1955, volume 4, pp. 3971-3974.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1955, Volume 4, pp. 3781-3784.

Security Act and Title Two of Public Law 480, although these, too, can have adverse effects upon normal commercial trade.<sup>91</sup>

4. The Canadian Government understands that it is the intent of the foregoing legislation to interfere as little as possible with the normal commercial marketings of the United States itself and of friendly countries, whether or not the legislation contains specific provisions to that effect. The Canadian Government has in mind the assurances given on this subject by the United States side at the first meeting of the Joint Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs. The Communiqué of March 17, 1954 stated — "The Ministers of both countries recognized that if surpluses were to be disposed of without regard to the impact on normal trade, great damage might be done not only to the commerce of Canada and the United States but also to the world economy. The Ministers reaffirmed that it is the continuing policy of their respective governments, in disposing of agricultural surpluses abroad, to consult with interested countries and not to interfere with normal commercial marketings. They stated that it is their settled intention that any extraordinary measures that might be adopted to reduce surpluses should result in greater consumption and should augment, and not displace, normal quantities of agricultural products entering into world trade."<sup>92</sup> Moreover, the Canadian Government appreciates the efforts made at the outset by the Government of the United States to confine disposal programs for wheat to instances of famine relief, to instances of inability to pay for commercial purchase or to programs to encourage increases in consumption.

5. More recently, however, the Canadian Government has noted with increasing concern the disposal of wheat under the provisions of Section 402 of the Mutual Security Act and the provisions of Public Law 480 in Markets which have always been considered as normal commercial markets for grain or in amounts which result in a reduction in commercial demand below normal levels. As a result, commercial sales of Canadian grain have been seriously reduced and so have commercial sales of other wheat exporting countries, including the United States. Without necessarily providing an exhaustive list, the Canadian Government wishes to draw attention to the various programs of wheat disposal which have been announced with respect to Italy, Israel, the Netherlands and Colombia.

6. On September 9th, 1954, the President of the United States stated as follows:

"Today, the magnitude of the United States holdings of many commodities is such as to be capable of demoralizing world commodity markets should a policy of reckless selling abroad be pursued. This potential greatly alarms other countries despite the fact that

<sup>91</sup> La Section 402 de la Mutual Security Act of 1954 autorisait l'Administration à dépenser jusqu'à 350 millions de dollars pour la vente et l'exportation de produits agricoles excédentaires aux alliés des États-Unis. La Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance of 1954 (Public Law 480) autorisait l'Administration à dépenser jusqu'à 700 millions de dollars pour financer la vente et l'exportation de produits agricoles excédentaires aux alliés des États-Unis. Elle lui permettait également de donner [aux alliés des États-Unis] jusqu'à 300 millions de dollars de produits excédentaires pour les secours d'urgence sur une période de trois ans.

Section 402 of the Mutual Security Act of 1954 authorized the Administration to spend up to $350 million to finance the export and sale of surplus agricultural commodities to U.S. allies. Public Law 480, the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, authorized the Administration to spend up to $700 million to finance the sale and export of surplus farm commodities to U.S. allies. It also permitted the Administration to give American allies up to $300 million in surplus commodities for emergency relief over a three-year period.

<sup>92</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 525.

past behaviour of the United States has shown no intention of pursuing a harmful policy."<sup>93</sup>

7. Present policies for the disposal of wheat under Public Law 480 and Section 402 of the Mutual Security Act are contributing to a growing sense of alarm in Canada. In the view of the Canadian Government, their continuance could result in demoralization of grain markets with far-reaching consequences for world trade in general.

8. Attention is drawn to the obligations of importing countries signatory to the International Wheat Agreement of which the United States and Canada are members. Individual annual import quotas accepted by the importing countries under the Agreement were generally understood to be an indication of their normal commercial requirements. As one method of minimizing the adverse effects upon normal commercial trade, the Canadian Government would like to suggest that sales of wheat under Public Law 480 and Section 402 of the Mutual Security Act to countries which are members of the Agreement should only be considered as and when such countries have purchased commercially their normal requirements as reflected in their individual quotas under the International Wheat Agreement.

367.

DEA/24-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-918

Washington, June 3, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your telegram EX-1009 of May 31.

DISPOSAL OF UNITED STATES SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

I handed yesterday to Sam Waugh, Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs, our note on this subject.

2. In presenting the note, I said that the question of the disposal of United States surplus agricultural products, particularly of wheat, was one of real and continuing concern to Canada; some of the programs under Public Law 480 and Section 402 of the Mutual Security Act affected normal Canadian markets. I said I realized that the State Department had been endeavouring to protect the interests of other exporting countries and hoped that the views of the Canadian Government, as expressed in the note, would strengthen the hand of the State Department in its efforts to prevent surplus disposal sales from replacing normal commercial marketings.

3. Waugh remarked that in criticizing the United States programs, some governments, not particularly the Canadian Government, were forgetting how the surpluses had come about. Nor did they always appreciate the difficulties facing the administration, and the political and economic factors, domestic and international, which were involved. He said that one alternative to the present policies would be to dump the surpluses in the ocean.

<sup>93</sup> Voir/See United States, Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States: Dwight D. Eisenhower 1954, Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1960, Document 261, p. 842.

But with two-thirds of the people of the world under-nourished, it was quite obvious that neither the President nor the public would ever agree to that.

4. Another alternative would be to reduce commercial prices in an effort to move larger quantities of the products into world markets. Clearly such a policy could easily result in a serious and damaging decline in the structure of world commodity prices and in cut-throat competition. He was sure neither Canada nor other countries would want to see this happen. We readily agreed.

5. Waugh went on to say that he considered the problem of the disposal of their agricultural products as one of the main problems the administration had to deal with. He personally had been completely immersed in it — particularly of late, when he had attended many inter-agency meetings with Joseph Dodge and Arthur Burns. He mentioned a new detailed study of the whole problem which was now to be undertaken. (We enquired today about the study and learnt that the desirability of it was first discussed in the (White House) Council of foreign economic policy under Joseph Dodge. The proposal was passed to the Francis Inter-Agency Policy Committee on surplus disposals, which agreed last Tuesday to launch a comprehensive study of the whole problem, including its effects on United States commercial policy and commercial marketings, as well as on other exporting, and on recipient countries. It would appear that it will take a considerable time to complete a study of this nature.)

6. Waugh then spoke in more detail of the domestic and international considerations involved. Wheat was not the only problem. There were many other commodities and in the last two weeks he had appeared before congressional committees on cotton, rice and grapefruit. At home the administration was under constant pressure from Congress to dispose of the surplus commodities. Important sections of Congress were concerned at the cost to the Treasury. Other sections reflected the fear of domestic producers that such large surpluses would wreck the domestic price-support mechanism. Farmers themselves were of course quite vocal and powerful in making their own views known.

7. In the international field, Waugh said, they were quite aware of the fact that commodities which are in surplus in the United States accounted for as much as 85 percent of the exports of certain countries. The United States disposal policy in cotton, for example, was much more important to the economy of Egypt than the disposal of United States wheat surpluses was to the economy of Canada. There was also the politically all-important objective of bolstering the economy of recipient countries and helping them to meet the threat of Communism. The use of the local currencies held by the United States was a major factor in meeting this objective. Waugh referred to a visit he had had in the last few days from an Italian Cabinet Minister, who had expressed his government's appreciation of United States assistance through its surplus disposal program in that country. Waugh said that he was sure that the Canadian Government appreciated fully the importance of all these politico-economic considerations. He suggested that Canada should not be too disturbed about the help which the United States was giving countries like Italy, particularly those which suffer from a chronic shortage of dollars.

8. To move into export markets a billion dollars worth of agricultural commodities for local currencies could not help but affect commercial marketings in some measure, said Waugh. The State Department was doing all it would to maintain "moderation" in the disposal programs. In continuing to follow the directives of the President and to convince other government agencies to do the same, the State Department was, so to speak, flying in the face of large and important elements in Congress which were quite outspoken in their criticism of these efforts by the State Department.

9. On no other occasion, when Canada's concern about the United States programs of disposal of wheat was brought to his attention, has Waugh spoken so emphatically in defence of the surplus disposal program of the United States Government. It seemed to us that he was appealing for more understanding from Canada in the administration's difficult task of administering the laws which Congress has passed. It could be that he has grown weary of the protests, on the one hand, of exporting countries that their markets are being injured as a result of United States sales for local currencies, and of the criticism, on the other hand, by Congress that the State Department, by giving too much attention to the interests of other countries, of obstructing sales which could otherwise be made.

10. I remarked that the Canadian Government is well aware of the United States Government's large stocks of wheat and other commodities and of the difficulties involved. The Canadian Government knows too, that there are United States laws which require the sale of these surpluses to importing countries for the currencies of the recipients. Nevertheless I urged that, in implementing the provisions of these laws, the United States should exercise moderation to the greatest extent so that disruption of commercial sales will be minimized as much as possible. Waugh said this was their aim.

11. There was no discussion on the final paragraph of the note concerning the International Wheat Agreement although I made specific reference to it in my supplementary remarks.

12. As regards the reply which the United States government might make to our note, Waugh said that he could not see that their reply could do any more than to restate the determination of the administration to practise moderation in United States surplus disposal programs and, perhaps, to add that the whole complex of problems which these raised was at present under serious and detailed study. As we have reported separately, Waugh suggested that this whole question be put on the agenda for the next meeting of the United States-Canadian Joint Committee.

13. I raised the question of making the note public, pointing out that the Canadian Government might be under pressure to release the note perhaps as a follow-up to the remarks which Mr. Howe had made in the House of Commons on May 16. Waugh expressed, as his opinion, that publicity at this time would likely do more harm than good and he hoped that we would agree not to make the note public without further consultation.

14. Copies of the note (No. 369 of June 2) are going forward by bag. The only change from the text contained in your telegram under reference is the deletion of Colombia in paragraph 5 and the insertion of the Federal Republic of Germany.

A.D.P. HEENEY

368.

DEA/24-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-1142

Washington, July 11, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your telegram EX-1009 of May 31 and our WA-918 of June 3.

DISPOSAL OF UNITED STATES SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

We received today the reply† of the State Department dated July 7 to our Note No. 369 of June 2. Copies of this reply, which runs to seven pages, will be put in tomorrow's bag.

2. You will note that the reply reflects in large measure the atmosphere of the meeting at which I left our note with Sam Waugh. The final paragraph of the note states:

"In conclusion, the Government of the United States wishes to reaffirm its intention to continue to adhere to the policies announced at the first meeting of the Joint Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs. The United States Government welcomes the opportunities for arrival at mutual understanding on problems relating to Title I of Public Law 480 afforded by the agreed consultative procedures and by frank exchanges of view with regard to other types of problems raised in the Ambassador's note."

3. The distinction which is made between the "agreed consultative procedures" with respect to Title I and the "frank exchanges of view with regard to other types of problems raised" is explained at some length in the text of the reply: Title II and Section 302 of Title III of P.L. 480 (the latter was not mentioned in our note) are represented as being philanthropic in concept and consequently as falling outside the scope of normal trade or commercial marketings — hence formal consultations with third countries are "not considered essential"; similarly there is no "obligation to consult" with third countries concerning programmes under Section 402 of P.L. 665 (M.S.A of 1954). On the other hand, it is claimed that the United States has consistently adhered to the consultation procedures (announced in the F.O.A.) concerning transactions under Title I of P.L. 480. A large part of the note is devoted to supporting this assertion and justifying more specifically the Title I programmes for Italy and Israel. The proposal contained in our note relating to the annual import quotas under the international wheat agreement of countries receiving United States agricultural surpluses under public laws 480 and 665 is not accepted for two main reasons:

- (1) The I.W.A. quota criterion is "not the complete answer" and
- (2) "tying Title I programs including wheat to the end of the wheat marketing season would present quite insurmountable problems..."

369.

DEA/24-40

*Le sous-ministre adjoint du Commerce
au ministre du Commerce*

Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to Minister of Trade and Commerce

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 28, 1955

Dear Mr. Howe:

I am sorry I did not see you before you left for the West to report on my brief trip to Washington. I shall be leaving for vacation at the end of July and may not have another opportunity to talk with you for some weeks so I thought I should put down in writing my impressions in case they are of use to you.

As you know, I had been urged by our Embassy in Washington to spend a few days there to talk in a general way with United States officials about trade, but more particularly about surplus disposal problems. The Canadian Government has, of course, made a number of protests and representations to the United States Administration from time to time during the past year climaxed by a general memorandum expressing alarm at the way in which the United States had been disregarding Canadian interests in its surplus disposal program.<sup>94</sup> Just the other day we received a reply in which the United States Administration defended its actions, claiming that it had carried out its undertakings to avoid damage to the commercial interests of the United States and friendly countries, including Canada. All these exchanges, however, had been of a rather formal character and it had been some time since a senior Canadian official had talked informally with the United States Administration about the developing situation. I believe the last discussion of this nature took place more than a year ago when the joint United States-Canada Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs met in Washington.

On the whole, I think my visit was timely. The formal protests had been made and replied to. I had none to make and was, therefore, in a position to say that I was in Washington only for the purpose of exchanging views about the future. It was timely too in the sense that both Canada and the United States are entering a new crop season, the United States with a big crop and a big carry-over of all types of grain and with an Administration being pressed by Congress to intensify its surplus disposal activities; and with Canada likely to harvest another large crop of grain to be added to already bulging warehouses.

The Embassy had arranged a number of appointments with key officials of the Department of Agriculture followed by one meeting with a group in the Department of State and finally an appointment with Dr. Arthur Burns, Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers. Arnold Heeney also invited me to have lunch with him and Sam Waugh who heads the economic side of the State Department.

The first interview was arranged with Earl Hughes, Administrator of the Commodity Stabilization Service, Department of Agriculture, and Frank Daniels, General Sales Manager of that service. Hughes was called out of the meeting so that I did not have more than a few minutes with him. This was of no consequence since Daniels seems to be the official most concerned with surplus disposal. It is fortunate that Daniels was the first contact because his remarks led me to formulate the line of approach which I found to be most effective in all subsequent interviews. Daniels began by saying that he shared Canada's dissatisfaction about "give-away" programs. He had been on the point of selling some of the Government held stocks to foreign countries when the F.O.A. people stepped in to offer the same commodities for free. He thought this was nonsensical and proceeded to argue that the right way to dispose of surpluses was to offer them for less than competitors. He cited Pacific White Winter Wheat as an example of how he would merchandise. This wheat, he said, should be offered for 15 cents less a bushel so as to capture markets now being filled by Australia. I realized then that the United States Administration might have got the impression from some of our recent representations that we were less concerned about subsidization of exports than we were about "give-aways". Accordingly, I made the point as strongly as I could that surplus disposal must be looked at as a whole. Canada is just as much concerned about subsidization as about gifts or sales for local currencies. Our interests could be damaged just as much by the United States Treasury pouring out money in one form as in another. I then went on to develop the theme that there was grave danger that in the coming year Canada and the United States would come into extremely sharp conflict in disposing of wheat. Our exports now were on a fairly tolerable level, just sufficient to enable us to dispose of an average crop and not enough to prevent further accumulations if we had larger-than-normal crops. In all probability our farmers would be required this year to keep vast quantities of grain on their farms without receiving payment. They would be extremely sensitive to any further encroachments by the United States and under this pressure from the growers the Canadian Government could not stand by. The Government would be forced, whether it liked it or not, to take whatever measures were necessary to retain a fair share of world markets even if this meant price reductions. I pointed out that Canada and not the United States had been stabilizing the world market for wheat. Canadian prices had not been changed for many, many months whereas the United States had, in one way or another, made substantial reductions in offered prices in addition to their gifts and sales for local currencies. There was grave danger that in the conflict which might arise in the next year stability would be replaced by chaos. I expressed the hope that such a situation would not arise and that there would be restraint and patience on both sides. I think I made an impression on Daniels, who then went on to say that he had been trying to think of some way in which there could be co-operation between the United States and Canada. He suggested that "a leading member" of the Canadian grain trade might be appointed as a liaison man with the C.C.C. Naturally I said very little about this idea, which I think is quite impracticable, but I did welcome co-operation and consultation.

<sup>94</sup> Voir aussi volume 20, le chapitre 5, 4<sup>e</sup> partie, section A./See also Volume 20, Chapter 5, Part 4, Section A.

My next appointment was with Earl Butz, Assistant Secretary of Marketing and Foreign Agriculture. He brought along Gwynn Garnett, the newly appointed Administrator of the Foreign Agricultural Service and Gus Burmeister. In the main I repeated the comments I had made to Daniels. Garnett tried to defend to activities of the United States and, of course, pointed to the great pressure under which the Department of Agriculture was working. On this occasion, as on others, I expressed sympathy with the problem with which they are faced. I said that I had no ready solution to offer. All I could counsel was restraint and patience so that we did not find ourselves in collision, which would not increase total exports from North America but which would certainly bring about a sharp reduction in prices.

I then saw True Morse. In the main we talked about the prospects for the renewal of the International Wheat Agreement. Morse was as reticent and non-communicative as usual. He did not know what the United States would do about the Agreement. He hoped other countries would take the lead; then the United States could decide whether or not to join. I remarked that since Canada was not likely to give enthusiastic leadership to any move towards renewal, there was a strong possibility that nothing whatever would happen. He asked me whether we had any information about United Kingdom intentions and I replied that we knew very little and certainly the United Kingdom would not be a strong proponent even if they were prepared ultimately to join. I then went on to develop my theme about surplus disposal, to which he listened attentively, but did not offer any comment other than to express the hope that we could avoid open conflict.

Following a lead given by Burmeister at the earlier meeting, I arranged to visit him in his office to talk import restrictions. Burmeister surprised me by saying that he thought there was a good chance that the Tariff Commission would not be requested to make a further enquiry into oats and barley. It was possible — Burmeister thought — that no restrictions were necessary, that prices in the United States had fallen to such a point that there was no danger of a flood of these grains from Canada. Indeed, he questioned me about the possibility of import restrictions by Canada to keep out American oats and barley. I said that the withdrawal of restrictions on oats and barley would be a welcome development and I hoped that this would happen. Burmeister then asked whether, if there were no restrictions, we could be prepared to put a voluntary limitation on the movement of feed barley into the United States. I said that I thought this was a possibility but that I hoped that no restrictions at all would be required. I also offered to see whether we could furnish him with any information that might be helpful to him in supporting the view that restrictions were no longer necessary. I am sending a copy of this letter to the Wheat Board so that they might consider what information could be furnished to Burmeister along these lines.

At the close of the day Lou Couillard, Guy Smith, Don Burns and I met with State Department officials. First we presented the note on further tariff negotiations which was drafted before you left Ottawa.<sup>95</sup> I shall not take time to recount that part of the interview other than to say that the Americans welcomed our agreement to negotiate but hoped that we would delay any announcement or publicity until after Congress had risen so as to avoid prejudice to the Customs Simplification Bill. I then led off in a discussion of surplus disposal and repeated our concern about developments during the next year. Needless to say, we have strong allies in the State Department. There was no need to convince them of the desirability of moving carefully on both sides of the line.

These were the more significant interviews. The next day I had a useful talk with Roger Stewart, Chief of the Cereal Branch, Office of International Cooperation Administration (formerly FOA). This Administration is responsible for the Aid program but does not have much to say about the quantities of cereals that may be included. I gathered that the Department of Agriculture is a thorn in his side just as it is in ours.

Although I had not expected to talk about surplus disposal with Burns, Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, we did get around to the subject in our brief interview which was cut short unfortunately because the President of the United States wanted to talk to him at the White House. Burns admitted that he saw no solution to the surplus disposal problem. The situation was likely to get worse before it got better. You might be interested to know that Burns is one of the key men in the Administration today. The President has given instructions that all major legislation or policies of an economic character are to be discussed with Burns before they are put before him for approval. Burns is optimistic about the business outlook. He sees no big clouds on the horizon at the present time.

At lunch Tuesday the Ambassador and I had a useful chat with Sam Waugh about the forthcoming tariff negotiations, surplus disposal and the International Wheat Agreement. Nothing very new developed except a hint dropped by Waugh that renewal of the International Wheat Agreement was about to be considered at top level.

Arnold Heeney called a meeting in the Embassy in order to enable me to make a report on these talks. This I did, and it appeared to all of us: (1) That there is no point in making further diplomatic representations in the form of notes or aide mémoires protesting United States surplus disposal activities. We have made our position very clear and the Americans in turn have made their reply. The time now seems to have come for those directly concerned in the two countries to have frank and full discussions about the developing situation so as to minimize conflict; and (2) that surplus disposal should be the first and most important item on the agenda for the forthcoming meeting of the United States-Canada Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs.<sup>96</sup> I think the talks I had in Washington have paved the way for a strong presentation by Canada. Incidentally, the meeting seems to be confirmed for September 26 and 27. Lou Couillard has been appointed Canada Secretary and plans are being made for preparatory official meetings in Washington to agree upon an agenda.

<sup>95</sup> Voir/See Document 121.

<sup>96</sup> Pour un rapport de cette réunion, voir le document 407.

For a report of this meeting, see Document 407.

Kindest regards.

Yours sincerely,
M.W. SHARP

370.

DEA/24-40

Note du conseiller pour l'agriculture, ambassade aux États-Unis
Memorandum by Agricultural Counsellor, Embassy in United States

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, October 20, 1955

MEETINGS OF UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN OFFICIALS ON THE MARKETING OF WHEAT AND OTHER GRAINS

Dr. Earl Butz, U.S. Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, was chairman. In his opening remarks, Dr. Butz said that Canada and the United States both had large quantities of wheat and, to some extent, were in the "same boat" with respect to the marketing of this product. He said that the meetings which were now being held were the outcome of a meeting held in Ottawa of the Joint U.S. - Canadian Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Mitchell Sharp, Canadian Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, thanked the United States Government for arranging the meeting of officials. He spoke of the vigorous statement which Mr. Howe, Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce, had presented at the meeting in Ottawa on United States sales of wheat by various special methods, and that the meeting of officials was suggested by Mr. Benson, the United States Secretary of Agriculture. Mr. Sharp said that the programmes of disposal of wheat for local currencies, for strategic materials, and on a bid basis, were disturbing world commercial sales of wheat, and he doubted if these special methods are contributing to future international trade in this commodity. In fact, he said, the United States is using the resources of the United States Treasury to subsidize export sales of wheat in competition with Canadian farmers. It is the total programme of special sales in which the Canadian Government is interested. He realized, he said, that the United States has a very serious problem because of large surpluses of grains which are a source of embarrassment to the United States Government. He realized that the United States Government is anxious to dispose of these surplus supplies, but it should also be borne in mind that Canada also has large supplies of wheat, and the Canadian Government is under pressure, as is the United States Government, to move this wheat into consumption. He said that the special methods being used by the United States have possibly resulted in the sale of 50 million more bushels than would have been sold by ordinary commercial methods. The sale of this wheat on special terms has not really relieved the United States Government from political embarrassment as there are still large surpluses being held. Moreover, the sale of an extra 50 million bushels of wheat has little effect on the total economy of the United States. On the other hand, a reduction of Canadian exports of 50 million bushels is of vital importance to the economic life of Canada. Exchange rates are also affected by the methods of special sales which the United States Government is using. He asked that the United States Government not push the special disposal programmes for wheat to the point that they result in a substantial drop in Canadian Exports. "We have used great restraint", he said, "in respect to the pressures which have been put on the Canadian Wheat Board to reduce the prices. To Canada, wheat exports are absolutely vital. They are our life blood. While to the United States, wheat exports do not greatly affect the national income."

Mr. Marvin McLain, Director of the Grain Division of the Commodity Stabilization Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, remarked that he valued the relationships which he and other officials of the USDA have had in the past with the Canadian Wheat Board. "It is desirable," he said, "that these good relationships continue." When the United States saw the probability of surplus grains, a programme of reducing acreages was instituted, he remarked, but, in spite of these reductions, grain supplies have been building up. The carryover is now 2-1/2 times as much as in previous years. The United States Government has now in use commercial storage for surplus commodities to the extent of 600 million to 700 million bushels, and the Commodity Credit Corporation owns storage facilities for 900 million bushels. In addition, there are 100 million bushels stored in ships and 25 million bushels on the ground. Recently, the CCC has had to buy additional storage space. Congress and the taxpayers, he remarked, are telling the Government that this cannot go on. He said he did not think the United States has been unfair in its disposal methods or has taken Canadian markets. He thought that programmes of other countries, such as France, have been detrimental to Canada. The United States Government has reduced price supports and has been trying to increase the domestic use of surplus commodities. "We have been holding an umbrella on world prices", he remarked. "Unless we continue to export our surpluses, Congress will pass laws which will be much more difficult for Canada than those now in existence."

Mr. Ed. Bell, Director of the Grain and Feed Division of the Foreign Agricultural Service, USDA, said, "We have a common problem in respect to wheat." He referred to a table showing the world trade in wheat, which, he pointed out, indicates that France, Turkey and Argentina have been increasing exports and taking a larger share of the world trade in wheat. He asked, "How do the United States and Canadian policies compare with the policies of other countries, such as France and Argentina, in disposing of wheat?" He also asked, "What studies has Canada made of the policies being followed by exporting countries other than the United States?" He said France is selling wheat at about $1.57 a bushel, while the growers of that wheat are receiving $2.64 a bushel.

"Our general view", said Mr. Sharp, "is that the methods being used by the United States have been the principal disruptive factor in wheat marketing. Canada has been trying to maintain stability in the world prices, but Canada does not have a great effect on world opinion. The United States is the greatest nation in the world and the policies used by this country have the greatest effect politically and economically in world affairs."

Mr. McIvor, Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, suggested that the sales of wheat by France should not be interjected into the discussions which are being held, because the meeting was called to deal with United States and Canadian relations with respect to grain marketing. He said Canada and the United States are competitors for world trade in wheat, and the United States sales by tender, for foreign currencies and in exchange for strategic commodities are making it very difficult for Canada to compete in world markets. The special programmes of the United States cannot be considered as commercial trade. He said, "I have been coming to Washington for many years to discuss wheat problems. These discussions have been most useful in times of shortages and should be most useful also when there are surpluses. The Canadian Wheat Board has serious problems, as has the United States Government. We are congested with grain from one end of the country to the other", he remarked, "largely because of the decline in export sales. Growers cannot deliver their grain to elevators and the Government is now considering a programme to finance growers who are unable to deliver their wheat. We have had five large crops in seven years. We have never increased our acreage of wheat, while the United States made a substantial increase in wheat acreage during the second World War. We recognize that the response of the United States to wartime needs for wheat was of the greatest value and helped to provide food for many people who would otherwise have gone hungry. This increase in acreage was made with the highest of motives. We now have great quantities of wheat in both countries and we must have the closest consultation with respect to the movement of this wheat into consumption. I came to Washington in September", he continued, "and, while I met with many United States officials, I was not told of the special subsidy on spring wheat which was announced soon after my return to Canada. This special subsidy must have been under consideration when I was here. Consultation", he said, "has been a one-way street." In respect to the special methods being used by the United States, Mr. McIvor said that outright gifts of wheat were usually made to countries in great need, and Canada could not really object to such programmes. However, in the sales for local currencies and the exchange of wheat for strategic materials, he asked that there be more restraint used by the United States Government in the operation of such programmes. He pointed out, further, that both Canada and the United States are members of the International Wheat Council and, when Canada signed that agreement, it was assured that both countries would have equal access to importing nations. We believed, too, he said, that importing countries which signed the agreement would be able to provide the necessary exchange when taking up their quotas. "I have been asked", he said, "what would Canada do if we were in the position of the United States? In answer to that, I have said", Mr. McIvor continued, "that I do not think you will get rid of your problem by proceeding as you are now doing under the special methods you are employing." He thought that a substantial quantity of the present stocks of wheat in the United States should be used domestically for feed. "If you persist in these special programmes", Mr. McIvor continued, "Canada will have to do something about it and Canada will suffer economically if there is a price war between the United States and Canada. This would be very serious for the United States, as Canada is the best customer of the United States." He said that attempting to divide the markets was not an answer to export problems. Under such an arrangement the United States and Canada would be accused of setting up a cartel. "I think" he continued, "you should consider cutting back on sales for local currencies and on the exchange of wheat for strategic commodities." He expressed the opinion that sales on a bid basis have disturbed Canadian sales of wheat. He spoke of seeing some of this low-priced United States wheat in Holland which was going into the grist. He suggested that United States officials concerned with wheat should look at these sales on tender very carefully before agreeing to them. He said that Canada objects to the higher subsidies being allowed on flour than on wheat. Canada, he said, does not pay a double subsidy on flour.

At this point at the meeting, Secretary Benson appeared and addressed those who were in attendance. He said that he and his officials were glad to meet with the Canadians. "We have many things in common with Canada and our goals are very similar — prosperity and freedom." He said he hoped that the discussions would be frank, honest and forthright. Surpluses are one of the knottiest problems of the United States Government. To a degree, he continued, the United States Government has contributed to the surpluses, by wartime and post-war price incentives. The Government, therefore, has an obligation to assist in the disposal of these surpluses. He said that production and consumption of agricultural commodities in the United States this year are within one percent of being balanced. "We are pursuing an aggressive policy in the disposal of our surpluses, but we are trying to insist that these programmes do not disrupt world prices and world trade. We are trying to be fair in all our special programmes", said Mr. Benson. "We sold surplus commodities to the value of $2.1 billion in 1954-55. Cut-backs in acreage have reduced production, and this device has been used by the United States to a greater extent than in any other nation. We believe there can be an expansion of markets abroad and we are making an effort to bring price supports to a more reasonable basis", he added. "We have reduced the price supports for oats and barley and these are moving into consumption. We are trying to develop agricultural policies which will result in putting surpluses into consumption rather than into Government storages." He said he hoped that the officials present would examine the export policies of other countries, such as Argentina and France, as well as the policies of the United States and Canada. He hoped that the meeting would also seriously consider ways of getting rid of surpluses without unduly injuring commercial disposals. In concluding his remarks, he said that he hoped that conferences would be arranged on a continuing basis and that they would be mutually beneficial.

In responding to Mr. Benson's remarks, Mr. Sharp said that Mr. Benson is held in high regard in Canada and there is admiration in Canada for the courage which the Secretary has shown in facing domestic agricultural problems. Canada, he continued, is in an extremely difficult position because of some of the policies being followed by the United States in the disposal of wheat. Canadians, he continued, take a serious view of the special methods of surplus disposal being used by the United States which have been damaging to Canadian interests.

Mr. McIvor, in continuing his remarks, offered the following suggestions as to what Canada would like the United States to do in respect to wheat marketing:

(1) the United States should not sell wheat under any special plan to any country which has signed the International Wheat Agreement until that country has taken up its full quota under IWA;

(2) it is not fair to Canada to continue to sell grain on a bid basis;

(3) it is not desirable to have a double subsidy on flour.

Flour should only be sold on a subsidy equivalent to wheat.

The chairman then asked Mr. F.C. Daniels, General Sales Manager of the Commodity Stabilization Service, USDA, to make some remarks on the bid basis of selling commodities. Mr. Daniels said that the competitive bid basis is not an auction basis as the bids can be accepted or rejected. He said, "We are in a buyer's not a seller's market. We are turning down more offers than we are accepting. We have not the ability to set prices on some commodities", he continued, "so we offer them to buyers and they determine the value of the commodity by their bids." Congress recommended that the Commodity Credit Corporation should set up a sales organization and, as the General Sales Manager, Mr. Daniels said, he is trying to carry out the wish of Congress. "We have not gone to a bid basis to beat down prices", Mr. Daniels continued, "but we sell, rather, to the highest bidder. We have received twice as much for rice on a bid basis than we could have obtained on a negotiated basis", Mr. Daniels added. "Under the competitive bid basis, buyers and sellers get together to establish a price, but the United States Government reserves the right to reject any bid", he concluded.

Mr. Walter Berger, Associate Administrator of the CSS, then presented figures on sales of sorghum grains on a bid basis. He said that the first sales were made at $2.65 a hundred, then bids fell to $1.80 a hundred. The CCC then went into the establishment of a flat price, but made few sales. On September 7, the CCC offered sorghum grains on a bid basis and bids of $1.70 to $1.74 were made. On September 14, 2 million bushels were sold at $1.70 to $1.70-3/4. The next week, two million more bushels were sold, but the price had advanced to $1.80. Later, sales were made at $1.82 to $1.84. He then referred to the sales of cottonseed oil and pointed out that sales were made on a bid basis which probably could not have been made on a fixed price basis.

Mr. W.C. McNamara, Assistant Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, remarked that wheat is quite different from sorghum and cottonseed oil. Canada and the United States, he said, have been working together for many years on wheat problems and there have been certain understandings between the two countries. He said the United States has been selling wheat to IWA countries at discounts below comparable quality of Canadian wheat. He referred to a sale of No. 2 red winter wheat at a price below Canadian No. 5 wheat, and 60 cents below No. 1 Northern. He said the United States methods of selling wheat on a bid basis are killing not only Canadian, but United States commercial markets. Both Canadian and United States commercial exports have been below those of the previous year, and many United States sales are at such a low price that they cannot be registered under IWA. United States special sales are killing IWA and Canadian farmers and United States taxpayers are thereby suffering. United States special sales are destroying confidence and stability in normal commercial trade in wheat, and causing confusion in the minds of buying countries. Importing countries were withholding purchases in the hope of getting "give-away" wheat. What would happen if Canada engaged in such dumping operations?

Referring to the recent offer of 4 million bushels on a bid basis, Mr. McLain said this was because of the congestion at the New Orleans port. He said only light test wheat and garlicky wheat are being offered on a bid basis.

Mr. Sharp remarked that, if Canada were to engage in bid-basis selling, it would be considered a policy of panic-selling, and buyers would say that we now have Canada on the run. As a result of the United States special methods of sale, prices on the world market are now chaotic.

Mr. McIvor remarked that some United States sales of low test wheat were made at a price at least 20 cents below that which was necessary. These sales are injuring not only Canadian but United States export sales of wheat and flour. Referring to the sales of French wheat with a large export subsidy, he said that France is following the example of the United States.

At this point, Mr. Daniels observed that, with respect to sales on a bid basis out of Duluth, it was necessary to sell that way or dump the wheat into Lake Superior. Mr. McIvor observed that, in his opinion, this was not the case.

Mr. McIvor continued to say that United States sales of barley on a bid basis have undercut Canadian sales to the United Kingdom market. The Canadian price was about 30 cents above the price at which United States barley was sold in that market.

Mr. Daniels asked what would the Canadian Wheat Board do if they had ports plugged with wheat. Mr. McNamara answered that that is just the situation in Canada at the present time and yet we are holding the line on prices. "If we must embark on special programmes similar to those now being used by the United States, then meetings such as we are holding today will have no value", remarked Mr. McIvor. Mr. McIvor then referred to sales of wheat at prices ranging from $1.15 to $1.17 and $1.06 to $1.08 to certain European countries. He said the subsidy on such sales would be more than $1.00 a bushel and not much less than the subsidy on sales of wheat by France.

Mr. Earl Hughes, Administrator of the Commodity Stabilization Service, USDA, said that Congress is much concerned about the establishment of prices on cotton at levels which encourage cotton producers of other countries to grow cotton and sell it at prices below the established United States prices.

In the 1930's the price of wheat fell to 38 cents a bushel, said Mr. Sharp. "This is not occurring today", he continued, "because governments are holding the surplus." In the thirties millions of sellers were bidding against each other, and surely we would not want conditions like that today. If we sell wheat at any price which we can obtain, we will not sell any more wheat as food because the consumption of wheat is inelastic. At very low prices, a little more wheat might be sold, but not sufficient to get rid of the surpluses." Mr. McIvor asked if the recent offerings of 4 million bushels on a bid basis could not have been disposed of under Public Law 480. To this, Mr. Daniels replied that there were no programmes under 480 available, and the New Orleans port was blocked with wheat so that there was no space for other grains. "We had to sell the wheat or dump it in the ocean", said Mr. Daniels.

"Our policies needed correction", said Mr. Hughes. "The price supports for feed grains other than corn have been dropped to 75 percent of parity and the support prices for certain other crops to 70 percent of parity. We are moving in the direction of reducing price supports and thereby reducing the accumulation of stocks, Mr. Hughes added. Mr. McLain asked what would happen if the United States price supports and acreage restrictions were removed. In reply, Mr. Sharp said, "We have not raised serious objections to import restrictions as long as you have price supports. We have insisted however that import controls should not be used to restrict normal trade". Mr. Sharp emphasized that, if both countries were to sell wheat at any price they could obtain, no more wheat would be moved.

Mr. Ray Ioanes, Executive Assistant to the Administrator of the Foreign Agricultural Service, USDA, raised the question as to whether or not United States barley and oats could be exported to Canada. The Canadian officials, in reply to this question said that, traditionally, Canada has sold barley and oats to the United States, and Canada buys large quantities of United States corn. The Wheat Board has import and export control of oats and barley. Recently, barley prices have fallen, and are now not competitive with the United States, so that it is unlikely that United States barley and oats will be offered to Canadian buyers.

Then followed a discussion of the double subsidy on United States flour, to which Canada objects.

Mr. Ben Thibodeaux, Director of Office of International Trade and Resources of the Department of State, remarked that the differences between the two countries seem to be mostly on technical points, and he thought an opportunity was being missed if the policies of other exporters are not explored. Mr. Clarence Nichols, of the Office of International Trade and Resources of the Department of State, remarked that something should be done by way of a multilateral approach to wheat problems and impress on importing countries the importance of reducing price incentives to wheat production.

The chairman, Dr. Butz, said that the discussions of the day had opened up some difficult questions. He said the Canadian officials had been forceful and frank. "The United States, he continued, "does not want to injure Canada because Canadians are our friends and neighbours. We will want to discuss the various points raised among ourselves", said Dr. Butz.

Mr. Sharp remarked that, "Because we are friendly people, I hope that you will not think that we are not serious about the problems. No issue in recent years ..."<sup>97</sup>

[W.C. HOPPER]

371.

DEA/24-40

*Le conseiller de l'ambassade aux États-Unis
au chef de la Direction économique
Counsellor, Embassy in United States, to Head, Economic Division*

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, December 9, 1955

My dear Ed [Ritchie]:

As I indicated I would do when we spoke on the telephone last Wednesday, I enclose a copy of a memorandum which I did rather hurriedly on the Sharp/McIvor-USDA wheat talks which took place here last Tuesday.

This was the first of these meetings which I have attended. Furthermore there was very little time available, before Mitchell's and George's return to Canada, for a post-mortem. The memo no doubt suffers for both these reasons.

Nevertheless it may serve as an indication of the atmosphere in which the meeting was held, and as an outline (needless to say, non-technical) of the main discussions.

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS COUILLARD

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Note du conseiller de l'ambassade aux États-Unis
pour l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

Memorandum from Counsellor, Embassy in United States, to Ambassador in United States

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington], December 7, 1955

MEETING OF UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN OFFICIALS ON WHEAT
WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 6, 1955

As you know, there was not, unfortunately, very much time available on this occasion for discussions with Mitchell Sharp and George McIvor following their meeting with senior U.S.D.A. officials. It may be useful therefore to record those impressions which Sharp and McIvor themselves were able to mention in the short talk they had with you last night and to set out the main impressions which I gathered from the whole exercise.

2. This was the second of what (by joint agreement) will be periodic meetings; the first meeting was held on October 20. The U.S. team was led by McConnell, who acted as <sup>97</sup> La conclusion de ce document n'a pas été retrouvée. Sur ce point, voir Charles F. Wilson, C.D. Howe: An Optimist's Response to a Surfeit of Grain, Ottawa: Grains Group, 1980, p. 386. The concluding parts of this document were not located. On this point, see Charles F. Wilson, C.D. Howe: An Optimist's Response to a Surfeit of Grain, Ottawa: Grains Group, 1980, p. 386.

Chairman, and Hughes. A full list of participants is attached. Full notes on the meeting which lasted a bit more than three hours, will be available in a few days. No joint notes or minutes will be prepared.

3. It was generally agreed that the meeting had been most worthwhile and useful to all concerned. The "biggest single problem" in Canada-U.S. economic relations was reviewed dispassionately in an atmosphere of cooperation, with each team showing due consideration for the other's difficulties. There is no doubt that these meetings will serve a useful purpose as long as the level of representation remains as high as it was yesterday.

4. From the Canadian point of view, our worst fear was dissipated: United States officials did not show any sign of a desire to move to lower wheat prices — as you know, rumours had been circulating that they might. We took the opportunity nonetheless to emphasize that a cut in prices would solve nothing and that indeed it would cause major problems which responsible wheat importing countries were as desirous to avoid as were the exporters.

5. Sharp and McIvor were impressed with the easier atmosphere which characterized this second meeting. Apparently United States officials at the first meeting had been rather frantic about the immediate need to push the export of their wheat by whatever means and whatever the consequences; in yesterday's meeting they did not give the same impression of panic. Their attitude was rather to face their difficulties unexcitedly and to review the problems created by their surpluses in a rather more detached manner, as if they had been at least partly insulated from the domestic political pressures which of course are still present. I would guess that the firm line taken by Secretary Benson (e.g., his flat refusal to return to fixed parities) and the full support he has received from the President explain in part the change in the attitude of his officials. This is not to say, of course, that they are not still harassed by the difficulties and complexities of their surplus problems. But Sharp and McIvor felt that U.S. officials since the last meeting had gone through a detailed, business-like assessment of their disposal policies. In any event, they had obviously done a good deal of homework and were well prepared for the meeting. There may be, therefore, reason to believe that they have come to a realization that they will have to live with their wheat surplus for some time to come, and that no good will be served by losing their heads over it or running frantically from one program of disposal to another. It remains to be seen, of course, whether this attitude of moderation will survive the future waves of political pressures which are bound to come.

6. A number of different subjects were discussed. The following is a layman's brief summary of what transpired:

U.S. subsidy on flour. The Canadian side had raised at the last meeting the question of the United States subsidy on flour. United States officials yesterday went to great pains to explain that U.S. millers were not in fact being subsidized into a better competitive position vis-à-vis Canadian flour exporters. They stated categorically that the subsidy paid on the wheat was the same whether it was destined for export or for the grist. There was considerable discussion in an effort to elucidate the workings of the U.S. subsidy. The Canadian team had to accept the explanations and assurances given by the U.S. officials. Our people will however look further into this question (and discuss it with Canadian millers) in the light of the information given them and may raise it again at the next meeting.

Canadian exports of feed wheat to the United States. Hughes explained that these imports were rather embarrassing to them because of the strict restrictions which were imposed on U.S. farmers with respect to the use which they can make of their own wheat for feed purposes, including their own feed needs. He said that they might want to talk to us about this question and the application of the liberal import criteria which feed wheat had to meet. This was obviously a trial balloon, and the Canadian side was quick to explain why the Canadian Government would view with serious concern any attempt by the United States to limit these imports: the United States was a traditional market for Canadian feed wheat which should not be tampered with. Whereas the Canadian Government had recognized the logic of a situation in which the United States wanted to control the excess of imports into the United States brought about by high price supports, this was not the case with respect to the traditional exports of Canadian feed wheat to the United States. (I think it is clear that restrictions by the United States on these would have commercial policy implications beyond the immediate wheat disposal policies which were under discussion.)

Public statements on United States policies and practices. The United States side (through Hughes) raised sharply the speech which they said had been made by a Canadian official in the Netherlands, which allegedly was not only severe but wrong in important respects, e.g., that the United States was continuing its auction sales of wheat (which U.S. officials preferred to call a bid system). Furthermore no reference was made to the fact that the United States had removed its import restrictions on oats and barley. The Canadian side did not know about this statement but they said they would look into it. United States officials asked that all Canadian officials concerned be informed of the facts of the situation. They stressed that acrimonious statements on either side could only lead to the aggravation of an already difficult situation. With this the Canadian team readily agreed. However, we stated quite frankly (in particular when two statements made by Mr. Howe in Calgary were quoted to the effect that U.S. policies were "demoralizing" the wheat market and "replacing" Canadian exports) that the great bulk of these statements was true.<sup>98</sup> Mr. McConnell took a realistic attitude towards the tendency on the part of the press to headline in a rather violent manner what were in fact moderate statements. He said that he fully appreciated that statements had to be made and would continue to be made on both sides, in particular by Mr. Benson and Mr. Howe, which would have to state frankly the position of our two governments. He did, however, appeal for moderation, and we replied that we fully agreed that, as in the case of wheat disposal activities, public statements should be tempered with moderation. Both sides agreed that the care which Canada had taken not to claim credit for corrective measures by the United States, was the wise course to follow.

Harmful effects of wheat export practices of other countries. The United States officials made what was in effect a plea for Canadian support for United States efforts "through either I.W.A. or G.A.T.T." to control the export of highly subsidized wheat by certain other countries. (France was singled out.) No concrete proposals were made as to how subsidized wheat exports (which are competing with subsidized American wheat exports!) might be brought under control. While stressing the damage caused by subsidized exports (which includes the reduction of imports into the subsidizing country), we emphasized the responsibility of wheat importing countries with respect to their acceptance of these exports.

Other minor practices affecting U.S. competitiveness. The United States team raised two or three minor questions which reflected a desire on their part to remove any unwarranted impediments to the export of American wheat. One of these was the question of Canadian wheat price quotations at winter ports, in particular Vancouver. We were able to explain that the difference of a few cents on wheat moved through Vancouver was normal and merely a reflection of commercial considerations (the much longer haul from Vancouver and the fact that the bulk of the wheat moving through that port comes largely from Alberta and is of slightly lower quality than Saskatchewan wheat). Another question raised by the United States officials was the sale of flour by Canada under the Colombo Plan. They obviously had not thought about this question very much and raised it merely as a possible example of Canadian "unfair practices". (In fact they were not sure whether it was flour or wheat which was involved.) We were able to explain our aid operations under the Colombo Plan and to say that very little wheat or flour had been involved. United States officials also enquired about our sales of wheat on credit to Iron Curtain countries. The nature of these sales and the participation of the Export Credit Insurance Corporation were explained stressing the commercial character of these as of all Canadian exports. The U.S. side did not pursue the matter further.

<sup>98</sup> Voir/See Montreal Star, November 28, 1955; Winnipeg Free Press, November 28-29, 1955; and Montreal Gazette, November 29, 1955.

7. The Canadian side tried but without success to find out something about the Administration's future agricultural plans and programme, particularly in the light of Mr. Benson's "aggressive selling" statements. I understand that no more information was forthcoming at the dinner which the senior U.S. officials gave Canadian officials last night. McConnell did say at one point in the meeting that there was a good deal of wishful thinking on the quantity of wheat that could be disposed of on a barter basis. He implied that not much more wheat could be sold under this programme.

8. It was agreed that the next meeting would be held in Ottawa in January and that the I.W.A. would be discussed at the same meeting.

9. There was a brief discussion on the line to be taken with the press which was waiting the conclusion of the meeting. It was quickly agreed that no written communiqué would be issued, and that both sides would speak in very general terms and that no reference would be made to the I.W.A.

L.E. COUILLARD

PARTICIPANTS IN MEETING OF U.S. AND CANADIAN OFFICIALS ON WHEAT, WASHINGTON, DEC. 6, 1955

United States

James A. McConnell, Asst. Secretary of Agriculture
Earl M. Hughes, Administrator, Commodity Specialization Service
John H. Dean, Deputy General Sales Manager, CSS
John E. Tripp, Deputy Director, Grain Division, CSS
Richard H. Roberts, Deputy Assistant Administrator, Market Development and Programs, FAS
Leo J. Schoben, Acting Chief, Foreign Competition Br., Grain & Feed Div., FAS
A.A. Garthoff, Wheat Agreement Branch, Grain Division, CSS
Judson E. Evans, CSS
Ben H. Thibodeaux, International Trade and Resources, State Dept.
Edmond E. Pendleton, Jr., Assistant to Earl Butz

Canada

Mitchell W. Sharp, Associate Deputy Minister, Dept. of Trade and Commerce
George McIvor, Chief Commissioner, Canadian Wheat Board
Clive Davidson, Secretary, Canadian Wheat Board
Chas. C. Boxer, Washington representative, Canadian Wheat Board
D.H. Burns, Asst. Agricultural Secy., Canadian Embassy, Washington
L.E. Couillard, Counsellor, Canadian Embassy, Washington.

SECTION B

RESTRICTIONS DES ÉTATS-UNIS SUR LES IMPORTATIONS
UNITED STATES RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTS

372.

DEA/5420-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-342

Washington, March 1, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your despatch No. EX-1317 of the 2 November.<sup>99</sup>UNITED STATES CABINET COMMITTEE ON ENERGY SUPPLIES
AND RESOURCES POLICY

In yesterday's bag we forwarded to you ten copies of the recommendations of the Cabinet Committee on Energy Supplies and Resources Policy which were made public on Saturday morning, the 26th of February, in a release from the White House.<sup>100</sup> With the exception of the recommendations concerning imports of crude oil, the recommendations do not bear directly on Canadian interests, in our opinion. In the section on natural gas, for example, nothing is said about imports or exports. Nor are recommendations made about hydro-electric energy. The recommendations on coal will be read with interest by those in Ottawa who are examining the problems of the Canadian coal industry, but principally because they show how similar problems are being approached in this country.

2. On the other hand, we are seriously concerned over the recommendations on imported crude oil. The Committee states that, in its opinion, if the imports of crude and residual oils should exceed significantly the respective proportions that these imports of oil bore to the production of domestic crude oil in 1954, the domestic fuel situation would be so impaired as to endanger the ordinary industrial growth "which assures the military and civilian supplies and reserves that are necessary to the national defence." The Committee therefore recommends that, in the interest of national defence, imports should be kept in the balance that obtained last year and that this should be done by the voluntary restraint of individual importers. If, however, such restraint is not exercised, and if, in the future, the imports of crude oil and residual fuel oil exceed significantly the respective proportions that such imported oils bore to domestic production of crude oil in 1954, the Committee further recommends that "appropriate action" should be taken.

3. It seems plain that these recommendations are likely to jeopardize the plans to export greatly increased quantities of Canadian crude oil to the United States, particularly through the trans-mountain pipeline. It is true that the recommendations do not appear to have yet been formally endorsed by the President. But they have been made by a Committee which was chaired by the Director of the Office of Defence Mobilization and which comprised the Heads of the Department of State, Treasury, Defence, Justice, the Interior, Commerce, and Labour. When we called this morning on Willis Armstrong, Deputy Director of the Office of International Trade and Resources in the State Department, we asked him whether the recommendation on crude oil were to be regarded as administration policy. In reply he said, "they were contained in a White House press release; perhaps that is answer enough to your question."

<sup>99</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 595.

<sup>100</sup> Voir/See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXII, No. 821, March 21, 1955, pp. 487-491.

4. We also enquired whether it should be inferred from the recommendations that the Administration would be speaking to United States importers of crude oil to let them know that if imports were not held to the proportion of domestic production that they represented in 1954, "appropriate action" would be taken. Armstrong said that he doubted whether this would be done, since the Administration would be wary of taking any steps that might seem to invite infractions of the anti-trust laws. In this connection he drew our attention to the fact that it has been recommended that the limitation proposed should be carried out by "voluntary, individual action" on the part of United States importers. However, the Administration assumed that importers could read. The threat contained in the recommendation was nonetheless real and should be nonetheless persuasive even though, in all probability, it would not be communicated officially and directly to the importers. It went without saying that it would hang over the heads of those importing Canadian crude oil as well as over those importing from other foreign sources. When we suggested that, if that were the case, the recommendations would be bound to affect adversely the prospects for increasing Canadian exports to the Pacific Northwest of the United States, Armstrong said that he could not disagree.

5. That would be bad enough. But there is the further danger that these recommendation may be embodied in legislation. You will be aware that many bills have been introduced into Congress to restrict imports of oil into the United States. The obvious tack for spokesmen for the coal industry and the "independent" oil producers now to follow is to adopt as their own the recommendations of the Cabinet Committee on Crude Oil and Residual Fuel Oil and urge that they be given statutory authority. This could be done either when the new trade agreements bill is being considered in the Senate (where there is much wider freedom of debate than in the House of Representatives) or by submitting a separate bill on crude oil and residual fuel oil. Over the week-end Senator Daniel (dem.-Tex.) indicated that that was his intention. Indeed, he went further. In 1954 imports of crude oil and residual fuel oil had amounted to approximately one-eighth of domestic production. In his statement to the press he said that he would ask Congress to limit imports to one-tenth of domestic production.

6. We gathered from Armstrong this morning that it had been argued by some within the Administration that a recommendation of the kind that has now been made for voluntary restraint on the part of United States importers might serve to head off Congressional pressure for statutory restrictions. We doubt it. Moreover, it seems to us that, in the light of these recommendations by eight of the President's Cabinet officers, the Administration would be in a very poor position to resist an effort in Congress to give the degree of restriction that has been recommended the force of law.

7. We should be grateful to know whether you agree with our assessment of the seriousness of these recommendations. If you do, I think the proper course would be to instruct me to see Herbert Hoover, Jr., the Under-Secretary of State, and make our views known to him. As you know, he is in his own right a very considerable expert on petroleum problems and we gather that he represented the State Department at most of the meetings of the Cabinet Committee. My oral representations should be supported, it seems to me, by a document to be prepared in Ottawa, for the purpose of making representations we could, I think, assume that the recommendations of the Cabinet Committee have not yet been adopted as Administration policy, although we should not allow ourselves to be deluded about their real status. After mentioning the very large imports of United States crude oil that enter Canada through Montreal and the Atlantic provinces, and after describing the projects for increasing Canadian exports to the Pacific northwest through the trans-mountain pipeline, we might refer to the fact that when the pipeline was being built the United States Navy, on strategic grounds, gave support for its construction and for the construction of additional refining capacity in the State of Washington. We might also argue that, although the defence interest of the United States might conceivably be held to require that imports of crude oil from countries overseas should be limited to the proportion they bore in 1954 to domestic production, this thesis would not seem to be valid when applied to imports from Canada. In other words, here is a case in which we might perhaps with advantage be eclectic enough to advocate a continental approach to the problem in hand.

373.

C.D.H./Vol. 28

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-418

Ottawa, March 4, 1955

Reference: Your despatch [sic] WA-342, March 1st, 1955.

UNITED STATES CABINET COMMITTEE ON ENERGY SUPPLIES
AND RESOURCES POLICY

Begins. We agree that you should seek an interview with Herbert Hoover, Jr., the Under-Secretary of State, to discuss the unfortunate consequences which would ensue if United States legislation or policy should be formulated in accordance with the recommendations to which you refer in your telegram under reference.

2. We agree, on the whole, with your analysis of the line you should pursue. Our interest in the United States market is by no means exclusively restricted to the Pacific Northwest, however, and, as a second point, in view of our actual imports of crude from the United States and the growth of our own industry.

3. The remainder of this message indicates the substance of a memorandum you may wish to give Mr. Hoover along with your oral representations to indicate our views.

4. The Canadian Government has carefully noted the recommendations of the Cabinet Committee on Energy Supplies and Resources Policy which were made public on Saturday, the 26th of February, in a release from the White House. The Canadian Government is greatly concerned about the recommendations regarding imports of crude oil into the United States. If these were to be embodied in Congressional legislation or if the United States industry were led to believe that these recommendations are a reflection of United States policy, they would have unfortunate and damaging effects to which the Canadian Government wishes to draw attention.

5. Resulting from the development of the oil industry in Western Canada in recent years, there has been a development of refinery capacity and marketing plans in the United States to make use of the increasing availability of Canadian crude petroleum. Two refineries have already been constructed in the Pacific Northwest to operate on deliveries from the Trans-Mountain Pipeline. A refinery is now being built in East St. Paul to make use of Saskatchewan medium-gravity crudes. There is a notable concentration of refinery capacity in the Detroit-Toledo area which can benefit from access to oil carried eastward by the Interprovincial Pipeline. Reference is made to this refinery capacity already in existence because of the Canadian interest and, as we think, the interest of the United States, in making sure that nothing be done to impair the usefulness of these facilities. Both economic and strategic factors point to the desirability of increasing pipeline and refinery capacity to enable Canadian crude to find markets in the United States. The Canadian Government wishes to emphasize the importance of avoiding restrictive measures in the United States which might frustrate or prevent the continuation of these desirable developments.

6. Attention should be given also to the efforts in which the United States Government has taken a leading part, along with the Canadian Government, through the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and otherwise, to promote the growth of worldwide multilateral trade on an economic basis and unhampered by restrictions. For the United States to embark upon a restrictive policy with regard to oil would be directly discouraging to these larger efforts.

7. From the point of view of strategic considerations, it should be borne in mind that Western Canadian oil fields are internal to the North American continent. Nothing could be more discouraging to exploration for oil and development of this strategic industry in Western Canada than the adoption by the United States of a restrictive import policy. It will be remembered that the United States navy on strategic grounds gave support to the construction of the Trans-Mountain Pipeline and for the construction of additional refining capacity in the State of Washington. If the United States Government should conclude, in its best judgment, that its defence interests require that imports of crude oil from countries overseas should be limited to the proportion they bore in 1954 to domestic production, it might be difficult for anyone outside the United States to question such a conclusion. This thesis based on defence interests would certainly not be valid, however, if applied to imports from Canada. The Pacific Northwest is at present served by pipelines from Canada, the existing alternative being to transport crude to that area by tanker, whether from United States sources or from overseas. Tanker ships and ports are so much more vulnerable in wartime than overland transport that the Canadian Government would be unable to understand any decision by the United States to restrict imports from Canada for reasons of defence.

8. On economic grounds the oil industry itself has established a pattern of development which clearly envisages an increasing use of Canadian crude oil in the North-Central and Western areas of the United States. The continental marketing pattern would seem to permit Canadian oil to enter these markets without impairing the interests of the United States petroleum industry, because it has been traditionally difficult and costly to move United States oil into those areas which can be supplied most efficiently from Canada. Canadian oil is equally unlikely to affect the interests of the United States coal industry in these areas.

9. The United States oil industry should regard Canada not merely as a competitor but also as a market as is made clear by the statistics of trade between Canada and the United States in oil and refinery products. In 1954, Canada imported in excess of $130 million worth of crude oil and refinery products from the United States and exported only about $7 million worth of crude oil and products to the United States. With the great growth of the Canadian oil industry, it is apparent that its products will be increasingly utilized in Canada if export markets are to be restricted. As far as the United States oil industry is concerned, therefore, it is very doubtful that any increased markets would be gained on a net basis by implementation of the proposed recommendations in relation to Canada. A great deal would certainly be lost in terms of continental efficiency if both countries were to develop their respective oil industries along purely national lines.

10. Having referred briefly to the strategic and economic interests of both Canada and the United States in this matter, the Canadian Government wishes to draw attention to a related problem based upon the trade agreements of the United States Government. If it should be decided to impose restrictions upon crude oil imported into the United States, it might be concluded, as in 1951, that quotas should be allocated to supplying countries. If the recent and projected growth of the Canadian oil industry is taken into account, it is obvious that any allocation of quotas on past trade would be completely inadequate for Canada. This latter consideration leads again to the conclusion, on the part of the Canadian Government, that Canada at least should be exempted from any restrictive policy which might be adopted for reasons of defence. Ends.

DEA/2057-40

374.

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-423

Ottawa, March 7, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our telegram No. EX-418 of March 5, 1955.

U.S. CABINET COMMITTEE ON ENERGY SUPPLIES
AND RESOURCES POLICY

We are indicating below the two changes in our previous message which Ritchie mentioned to LePan this morning. With these changes you might proceed to make the proposed representations to the State Department. The following are the changes:

(a) In paragraph 2 (which is not, of course, part of the draft memorandum) delete the last clause since as indicated below we now consider that it would be desirable to say rather more about the importance of the Canadian market than we had originally contemplated.

(b) Delete the last sentence of paragraph 8 and insert after that paragraph the following additional paragraph to be numbered 9:

"The United States oil industry should regard Canada not merely as a competitor but also as a market as is made clear by the statistics of trade between Canada and the United States in oil and refinery products. In 1954, Canada imported in excess of $130 million worth of crude oil and refinery products from the United States and exported only about $7 million worth of crude oil and products to the United States. With the great growth of the Canadian oil industry, it is apparent that its products will be increasingly utilized in Canada if export markets are to be restricted. As far as the United States oil industry is concerned, therefore, it is very doubtful that any increased markets would be gained on a net basis by implementation of the proposed recommendations in relation to Canada. A great deal would certainly be lost in terms of continental efficiency if both countries were to develop their respective oil industries along purely national lines."

The paragraph which was No. 9 would now, of course, become No. 10.

375.

DEA/2057-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-378

Washington, March 9, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your teletype EX-418 of the 5th of March; and your teletype EX-423 of the 7th March.

UNITED STATES CABINET COMMITTEE ON ENERGY SUPPLIES
AND RESOURCES POLICY

Yesterday I called on the Under-Secretary of State, Herbert Hoover, Jr., to express the concern of the Canadian Government over the recommendations of the Cabinet Committee on Imports of Crude Oil. I left with him an aide-mémoire put together from your two messages under reference; and my oral representations followed the same lines.

2. Hoover seemed to be very well acquainted not only with the problems involved but also with the work of the Cabinet Committee. He said that the thinking of the Committee had been dominated by the following two objectives:

- (a) To ensure the maintenance of supplies of crude oil from Canada and Venezuela; and
- (b) To prevent the oil industry in the United States from being further "compressed", as he put it.

It was because the members of the Committee had tried to bear in mind those two objectives equally that they had decided against recommending the imposition of tariffs or quotas on imported crude oil. A tariff would probably shut out imports from Canada and Venezuela while still permitting imports from the Middle East, where production costs were lower, and would therefore be objectionable on strategic grounds. Under existing trade agreements, a quota would have to be allocated among the various suppliers and no matter what base year might be chosen would also militate against Canadian imports. Hoover thought that the larger "independent" producers in the United States, as well as the international oil companies, would try to make a success of the proposed system of voluntary restraint and would not press for Congressional action. On the other hand, some of the smaller "independent" companies would probably join with the coal producers in seeking statutory limitation.

3. When I enquired whether it would be possible to discriminate by administrative action in favour of Canadian imports on the ground that Canadian sources of supply would be available in time of war, Hoover replied that it was not intended to take administrative action. Indeed, the federal authorities did not have the power to do so. They were now giving wider and more constant publicity to the figures for imported crude oil and residual fuel oil and were depending on the state authorities that had jurisdiction over the use made of oil reserves in this country to bring sanctions to bear against firms importing in significantly larger quantities than previously.

4. I then remarked that, under these circumstances, it would seem difficult for Canada to increase its exports to the United States as had been planned. Hoover was inclined to argue that there would be considerable room for this, even under the present system of voluntary restraint. He pointed out, first, that there would be nothing to prevent imports from Canada increasing if imports from the Middle East concurrently declined and, indeed, suggested that he hoped this would happen. He complained, for example, that oil from the Middle East had recently been dumped by the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company at east coast ports in the United States at prices as much as 50 cents below the price posted in the Persian Gulf; and he said that he had taken informal steps to have Sir William Fraser of Anglo-Iranian put under notice that this must be brought to a stop. (This he told me confidentially and "not for the record"). He also drew our attention to the fact that the warning given by the committee about further "appropriate action" in the future would apply only to a situation in which imports of crude oil and residual fuel oil were exceeding significantly the respective proportions that they bore to domestic production of crude oil last year. Some modest increase in the ratio would not bring down further United States action, Hoover said. There was also the growth factor to be taken into account, which was steadily expanding production and consumption in the United States. This would provide some further leeway for increased imports from Canada. Finally, he pointed out that the committee had recommended that the problem should be reviewed from time to time. There was always the possibility that, after review, it might be decided at some later date that greater freedom to import was desirable.

5. I drew to Hoover's attention the wide disparity last year between the value of Canadian sales to the United States of crude oil and refinery products and the value of United States sales of similar commodities to Canada. It would hardly be in the interest of the United States oil industry, I suggested, for action to be taken which would hasten a reduction in sales to Canada. Hoover agreed. But he insisted once again that all the agencies represented on the committee had come to [the] conclusion that, in the interests of national defence, the United States oil industry must be given, however informally, some protection from greatly increased imports. At this point I commented that I hoped he did not share the opinion that Canadian supplies could not be relied on in an emergency. Although disclaiming any such view, he would not be moved from the position that, for reasons of national defence, the oil industry in the United States must be protected.

6. Before I left, Hoover said that the State Department would want to reply to our aide-mémoire and set out the United States position more fully. However, I am afraid that we cannot expect much satisfaction. The effect of the new United States policy on Canadian interests will not be entirely clear, I should imagine, until it is known how the oil companies in this country are interpreting and putting into effect the committee's recommendations; but I find it difficult to resist the conclusion that considerable damage may already have been done by the White House release.

376.

DEA/2057-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-401

Washington, March 14, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your teletype EX-461 of the 11th March.†

UNITED STATES CABINET COMMITTEE ON ENERGY SUPPLIES
AND RESOURCES POLICY

When on Friday we answered Armstrong's questions in accordance with your instructions, he told us that the previous evening the Under-Secretary of State had called a meeting to consider the most effective methods of resisting the amendment to limit oil imports that has been proposed by Senator Neely to H.R.1.<sup>101</sup> The State Department, Armstrong said, are extremely worried by the amount of support that this amendment seems to be commanding. In the course of the meeting Hoover remarked that he would very much like to have a second aide-mémoire from the Canadian Government directed specifically against the proposal to limit imports of crude oil by legislative action. This new document would not of course replace the original aide-mémoire, but could use the same line of argument.

2. In talking to Armstrong we showed little enthusiasm for this suggestion. This must have been apparent, for, an hour or so later, Raynor telephoned to stress that the request had emanated from Hoover himself and that the Under-Secretary attached considerable importance to it. Notwithstanding that, we are by no means certain that we should fall in with his wishes. As we see it, there might be the following two disadvantages in doing so:

(a) The submission of a second aide-mémoire directed against the Neely amendment might suggest that we were weakening in our opposition to the recommendations on crude oil made by the Cabinet Committee.

(b) If, with our help, the Administration were to succeed in defeating the Neely amendment, we might find them disposed to take the attitude that we should be grateful that legislative action had been prevented and not complain if results roughly similar to what might have been expected from Senator Neely's measure were produced by voluntary restraint on the part of United States importers.

3. How we should respond to Hoover's request clearly depends in part on how much worse, from our point of view, legislative action would be than the course recommended by the Cabinet Committee. Clearly, it would be some worse. But in the absence of information from the oil industry in Canada about the probably effects of the Cabinet Committee's recommendations, we find it difficult to compare the damage that would be done to our interests by the two alternative courses. On the other hand, if we can meet the Under-Secretary's wishes without compromising our own position, it would obviously be politic to do so.

4. In all the circumstances we are inclined to recommend that we should be instructed to tell Armstrong that in any new Canadian aide-mémoire we could not suppress our concern over the recommendations of the Cabinet Committee. If, however, a second aide-mémoire, using almost identical arguments and mentioning our anxiety over the committee's recommendations but directed more specifically against the Neely amendment, would be more useful to the Administration than the document they now have, we would be willing to submit a second aide-mémoire of that kind. How such a response would probably be received, we are unable to tell. Indeed, it is by no means clear to us why our original aide-mémoire is not considered fully adequate for the State Department's present purposes. But

<sup>101</sup> Le 2 mars 1955, le sénateur M.M. Neely (Démocrate—Virginie-Occidentale) a proposé un amendement à la House Resolution 1 (la Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955) qui aurait limité les importations de pétrole à 10 pour cent de la production nationale des États-Unis.

On March 2, 1955, Senator M.M. Neely (Democrat—West Virginia) moved an amendment to House Resolution 1 (the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955) which would have limited oil imports to ten per cent of U.S. domestic production.

we suspect the reason may be that Administration spokesmen anticipate some embarrassment if they make much use of a document which criticizes the Administration's own position. In that case, a second aide-mémoire of the type outlined would hardly meet their requirements. Nevertheless, we doubt whether we should go further than we have suggested in helping the State Department oppose the Neely amendment.

5. We should be grateful to receive your instructions as soon as possible. Armstrong gave us to understand that, if a second aide-mémoire could be submitted to the State Department, they would like to have it by the middle of the week.

377.

DEA/2057-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*
*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-483

Ottawa, March 15, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram No. WA-401 of March 14.

U.S. CABINET COMMITTEE ENERGY SUPPLIES
AND RESOURCES POLICY

While we recognize the force of the arguments contained in your teletype, we have concluded that on balance it would probably be desirable to accede (at least partially) to Mr. Hoover's request. We are willing to do so, however, only with certain reservations. Our second aide-mémoire should be passed to the State Department under cover of a message† which would indicate that it was being supplied at the State Department's request to be made public if they so desire and that its substance was intended to confirm rather than to amend what was said in the Canadian aide-mémoire of March 8. Further the new aide-mémoire, with the exception of the first paragraph, will be identical with the aide-mémoire of March 8. The new first paragraph should read as follows:

The Canadian Government is greatly concerned about legislation being considered in the United States to restrict the imports of crude oil. Legislation of this kind would have unfortunate and damaging effects to which the Canadian Government wishes to draw attention. The Canadian Government would be equally concerned if the objectives of this proposed legislation were to be carried out by administrative action or if the U.S. oil industry were to be led to believe that the policy of the administration is to discourage imports of crude oil from Canada.

378.

DEA/3677-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], March 23, 1955

PUBLICATION OF OUR AIDE MÉMOIRE CONCERNING POSSIBLE
U.S. CURTAILMENT OF OIL IMPORTS FROM CANADA

As you will have seen from telegram WA-443 of March 18,† a copy of which is attached, the State Department has been somewhat hesitant about publishing our aide mémoire but have intimated that they would be quite happy if we were to make it public. Since that message was received, certain developments have taken place which reinforce the arguments put forward by the Embassy in favour of early publication.

2. On Friday, the President of the Socony-Vacuum Oil Company indicated that his firm, in line with the requests of the President's Committee, had taken voluntary action to curtail imports of crude and residual oil. On Monday, the General Counsel for the Independent Petroleum Association of America appeared before the U.S. Senate Finance Committee to urge the adoption of the amendment to the Trade Agreements Bill which would limit oil imports to ten per cent of U.S. consumption. Apparently yesterday, according to the Dow-Jones ticker, the President of Socony-Vacuum became even more precise and indicated the exact percentages by which imports from Canada would be curtailed by his company.

3. These developments appeared to confirm that the U.S. market for Canadian oil, including the outlet in the Northwest for oil from the Trans-mountain Pipeline, was in real and imminent danger. They also seemed to make it desirable that the Canadian Government should publicize the steps which it had taken to discourage these legislative or voluntary actions by the U.S. Accordingly, Mr. Howe indicated to his officials this morning that he would wish to table our aide mémoire at the opening of the House this afternoon. At the same time, he would make a supporting oral statement. Later this morning, the President of Socony telephoned Mr. Howe, apparently as a result of an earlier — and vigorous — conversation which Mr. Howe had had with the President of Imperial Oil, to inform him that the position of Socony had been misunderstood by the press. Socony did not, in fact, intend to reduce its imports of Canadian oil into the Northwest, even though it might curtail imports of Canadian oil into the Eastern States. This explanation from Socony removed one of Mr. Howe's worries, but did not satisfy him entirely by any means (especially since the cuts in Eastern imports would presumably have to be more severe in order to offset the maintenance of imports in the Northwest). Plans are therefore being made for the tabling of the aide mémoire to proceed this afternoon, and an oral statement is being prepared in Trade and Commerce for use by Mr. Howe on that occasion.

4. The Embassy in Washington has been informed, and has been asked to advise the State Department, that the aide mémoire (with the revised introduction which the State Department had requested) would be made public here this afternoon and that Mr. Howe would probably be making a statement on the subject in the House of Commons.<sup>102</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

<sup>102</sup> Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1955, volume 3, 1955, pp. 2417-2418.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1955, Volume 3, pp. 2297-2298.

379.

DEA/3677-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-484

Washington, March 25, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our WA-378 of March 9.

UNITED STATES CABINET COMMITTEE ON ENERGY SUPPLIES
AND RESOURCES POLICY

We have received today from the State Department an aide-mémoire dated March 24 in reply to our first aide-mémoire on this subject that we left with the Under-Secretary of State on March 8. The text of the reply is as follows: Text begins:

"Reference is made to the Canadian Embassy's aide-mémoire of March 8, 1955, which expressed the views of the Canadian Government with respect to the policy regarding the importation of petroleum set forth in the report of the Cabinet Committee on Energy Supplies and Resources Policy dated February 26, 1955.

"There is serious concern over the possibility of legislation which would have the effect of placing restrictions on the importation of petroleum, in all probability at a level substantially below the level which prevailed in 1954. The Cabinet Committee holds the view that the pattern of oil imports in comparison with domestic production which prevailed in 1954 should be the target for oil imports at the present time. In reaching this conclusion, the Committee has not expressed itself regarding the source or sources of these imports, and is fully familiar with the circumstances regarding imports of oil from Canada which are outlined in the Canadian Embassy's aide-mémoire. In particular, the Committee is fully cognizant of the security implications with respect to Canadian oil and its possible importation into the United States. It is also conscious of the fact that Canada is a substantial market for oil from the United States. The Department of State is hopeful that the policy enunciated in the report of the Cabinet Committee can be implemented in such a way as to give full recognition to the factors which the Canadian Government regards as important in this situation, and greatly appreciates the clear exposition of the views of the Government of Canada set forth in the aide-mémoire under reference." Text ends.

380.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-497

Washington, March 28, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your Teletype EX-556 of March 24.<sup>103</sup>

LEAD AND ZINC

The amendment to H.R. 1 concerning lead and zinc was proposed, as you may know by Senator Bennett (R. Utah) with Senator Dworshak (R. Idaho) as co-sponsor, and calls for the imposition of a tax of 2 cents per pound on imports of lead and zinc when the market price falls below 13 cents a pound.

2. Late Friday afternoon we discussed the amendment informally with Getzin at the State Department. He spoke of the growing dissatisfaction in the domestic lead and zinc industry and of the resultant pressures being exerted by congressmen. Although the long-term stockpile program had brought some modest benefits to the industry as a whole, domestic producers were still clamouring for import restrictions. The chronic weakness in the price of zinc was, of course, the cause of all the trouble. He pointed out that since the start of the long-term program last August, the average of monthly imports of lead and zinc had not increased over the monthly average of the January-August period and had, in fact, remained at pretty much the same level. There had been, moreover, a gradual but modest increase in mine production of these metals and some mines had re-opened. He said also that they had noted a rise in the production of zinc outside the United States despite the prevailing low price. The statistical picture had improved in the United States for both lead and zinc, particularly for lead.

3. We mentioned to Getzin that Senator Bennett had remarked when presenting his amendment on the Senate floor that "domestic production still is decreasing". He replied that we could be assured that State Department would make certain that the record is kept straight in this respect. He could not hazard a guess as to the prospects of the amendment but he said he could not help feeling a little pessimistic. He remarked that the Administration still wanted H.R. 1 passed without amendments but it looked as if there would have to be some give and take on both sides.

4. In our view, we think it unlikely that HR 1 will pass the Senate unscathed, and the Bennett amendment might possibly survive. It is perhaps a little less ferocious than some of the other amendments that have been proposed and, therefore, the administration might accept it without putting up much of a fight as a gesture to the protectionists.

<sup>103</sup> Non retrouvé./Not located.

381.

DEA/11049-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-598

Ottawa, March 31, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram WA-497 of March 28.

LEAD AND ZINC

You will recall that we made formal representations on this subject last May when the President was considering a Tariff Board recommendation that the tariffs on lead and zinc be increased.<sup>104</sup> The President's eventual decision not to act on the Board's recommendation was welcomed here. The situation which has now arisen is somewhat different but it poses a similar threat to Canadian producers. There has already been a question in the House of Commons about the most recent proposal and about the action being taken by the Canadian Government.<sup>105</sup>

2. We realize that the proposed amendment to H.R.1 would have to proceed through several stages before becoming law. Your recent discussion with the State Department will have served to remind them of our concern in this matter, and I think it desirable that you reaffirm our views by again making formal representations. It is my hope that these views may be reflected in the testimony which Government officials will give at the current executive session of the Senate Finance Committee.

3. Please therefore make representations to the State Department by presenting the following Note.

Text begins. The Canadian Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the amendment to the proposed Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955, reported to be under consideration in the Finance Committee of the United States Senate, which would impose additional taxes on imports of lead and zinc. The Canadian Government wishes to convey its serious concern about the proposal embodied in this amendment.

The tariffs on lead and zinc are bound to Canada under a Trade Agreement, and the proposed action would have damaging effects upon trade relations between Canada and the United States. If this amendment were to become law it would have a very serious impact on Canadian exports by relegating Canadian producers to the position of marginal suppliers, welcome enough when they were needed, but to be curtailed at other times.

The Canadian Government confidently believes, at the same time, that this restrictive proposal will be found to be unnecessary, since there is even less occasion at the present time for such action than a year ago when comparable proposals were rejected. The prices of lead and zinc are now markedly higher than a year ago, with a firm and expanding market for these products. In addition, it is understood that stocks in the hands of producers have been greatly reduced. All of these factors confirm that the market for lead and zinc has greatly improved during the past year.

<sup>104</sup> Voir volume 20, les documents 530, 531 et 533/See Volume 20, Documents 530, 531 and 533.

<sup>105</sup> Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1955, volume 3, pp. 2455, 2558, et 2608-2609.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1955, Volume 3, pp. 2335, 2430, and 2478-2479.

In a note of May 28, 1954, the Canadian Government protested against proposals which were current at that time to increase the tariffs on lead and zinc. The views then expressed by the Canadian Government are equally applicable in the present case.

It would be particularly difficult for Canada and other countries in the free world to understand the reasoning which could lead the United States to attach such an amendment to a bill which is designed to reduce barriers to trade. It would be equally hard from the Canadian point of view to understand why the United States would wish to inflict serious damage upon the Canadian mining industry which is of crucial importance to the defence interests of both countries. Text ends.

L.B. PEARSON

382.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-544

Washington, April 1, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your EX-598 of March 31.

LEAD AND ZINC

Yesterday afternoon we called at the State Department on Kalijarvi, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Economic Affairs, and left the note with him. In order to emphasize that our representations were not merely pro forma and for the record, we first went over the ground orally before presenting the note. After expressing the hope of the Canadian Government that the amendment proposed by Senator Bennett to H.R. 1 would be defeated, we said that we wished to remind the State Department of the following facts:

- (a) The rates of duty on lead and zinc are bound to Canada under a trade agreement.
- (b) The President rejected recommendations made by the Tariff Commission on May 21, 1954, for higher protection for lead and zinc.
- (c) Since then the situation has considerably improved: the price of both metals has risen by approximately three cents and inventories held in the United States are believed to amount to only about five weeks' supply.

2. We then added the following observations taken from the note:

- (a) If the amendment were to become law, it would seriously damage trade relations between Canada and the United States and have the effect of reducing Canada to the position of marginal supplier.
- (b) It would be difficult for the Canadian Government to understand how such an amendment could be attached to a bill designed to reduce tariffs.
- (c) The Canadian Government would find it equally difficult to understand why the United States could countenance infliction of such serious injury on the Canadian mining industry in view of its importance for the defence of both countries.

3. Kalijarvi's first response to our representations was to put a question: why had the Canadian Government decided to make formal representations concerning the Bennett amendment, although it had not taken any action when similar proposals were being considered by the House of Representatives? We replied that, although we could not be sure of the answer, we could think of a number of explanations which seemed sufficient. In the first place, although we had gathered that similar proposals were considered in the executive session by the House Ways and Means Committee, we were not aware that any formal amendments to HR 1 similar in intent to the Bennett amendment had been submitted in the House of Representatives. Kalijarvi agreed that that was the case. We also said that, so far as we could judge, there had been more optimism in Ottawa about the prospects for HR 1 when it was before the House of Representatives than there was at present. Finally, we drew Kalijarvi's attention to the drumfire of questions there had recently been in the House of Commons about the various Congressional proposals designed to limit imports of particular commodities.

4. Kalijarvi then took up our remarks about increasing Canadian doubts concerning the prospects for HR 1, as we had invited him to do. He claimed to see no reason why the bill should fare worse in the Senate than in the House. As it had been unrealistic six weeks ago to believe that HR 1 would be approved easily in the House, so it was unrealistic now to think that the Senate would emasculate the bill. The Senate, to be sure, was more independent and undisciplined than the House; and the protectionist forces admittedly were showing great strength. But the crucial importance of HR 1, at least from the symbolic and psychological point of view, was fully realized both by the Administration and in Congress. He professed considerable confidence that HR 1 would be approved by the Senate and would be enacted into law in a form not very different from what the Administration had requested. Amendments had been made to the bill in the House and no doubt other amendments would be voted by the Senate. But the measure would go through, well, almost intact. Of that he felt sure, whatever might be the fate of GATT at this session, on which he explicitly reserved judgement.

5. Then, addressing himself specifically to the Bennett amendment on lead and zinc, he said that the Administration had taken the attitude during the hearings before the House Ways and Means Committee that it was not appropriate for amendments favouring particular industries to be attached to the Trade Agreements Bill. The Administration would be taking the same line in the executive hearings before the Senate Finance Committee. When we interjected that we had heard a report that Senator Millikin was of the same mind on this question, Kalijarvi refused to be drawn. However, he left the impression with us that influential Republican Senators agreed with the Administration on this point and that it should not be too difficult to avoid all amendments of this kind, at least at the Committee stage. It may be significant that Kalijarvi confined his remarks on lead and zinc to the Bennett amendment to HR 1 and said nothing about what the Administration's position would be if other efforts were made, unrelated to consideration of the Trade Agreements Bill, to raise the tariff on lead and zinc.

6. We took the opportunity to say that, although the Canadian Government had made formal representations only on the Neely amendment to limit oil imports and on the Bennett amendment to limit imports of lead and zinc, it should not be thought that little concern was felt in Ottawa about some of the other amendments that had been introduced. Some of the amendments for widening the escape-clause, for example, might prove even more damaging, although they might not be such appropriate targets for formal representations. Kalijarvi replied that this was well understood by the Administration. However, he indicated that in all probability some escape-clause amendment would be approved by the Senate. At the same time he stressed that everything would depend on the actual wording of such an amendment. It was conceivable that an amendment which might seem to limit the President's authority in this field would be in fact almost completely innocuous.

7. Before leaving, we reverted to the interest that has been shown in the House of Commons in the lead and zinc amendment and mentioned that the Canadian note had been given no security marking because it might have to be published in the near future. That would not be done, however, without obtaining consent from the State Department. We would also welcome the State Department's views, we said, on whether publication of the note would assist or hamper the Administration's efforts to have the amendment defeated. Kalijarvi replied that in general he could see no objection to publication. Much would depend on the timing, however. He hoped in any case that, if at some stage we wished to make it public, we would consult with the State Department beforehand. Our own opinion is that, if you wish to table the note, the present might be as good a time as any, while the executive hearings of the Senate Finance Committee are in recess until after Easter. If you do decide on that course, we should be glad to know as quickly as possible, since our conversation with Kalijarvi yesterday is not to be regarded as final clearance and we would have to get in touch with him again.

8. When reading this telegram, you will no doubt want to bear in mind that in a formal interview Kalijarvi would naturally feel obliged to take as optimistic a view as possible of the prospects for HR 1. Our anxieties, however, (as expressed, for example, in telegram WA-500 of the 28 of March†) were little, if any, diminished in the course of the meeting.<sup>106</sup>

383.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-613

Washington, April 18, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your EX-696 of April 18.†

PROPOSED UNITED STATES RESTRICTIONS ON OIL IMPORTS

In speaking to Willis Armstrong at the State Department on this subject this morning, we were quite short-tempered. After enquiring about the present position of the draft United States reply and being told that it was once again on its way back from the Under-Secretary's office after failing to be approved in its present form, we said that we could not understand the reason for all the difficulty and delay. We recalled that we had been asked by the State Department to submit a supplementary aide-mémoire which could be put to public use by the United States authorities, and had agreed without delay. Our supplementary aide-mémoire had gone to the State Department more than a month ago and still we had not received the United States reply. That seemed a poor return for our compliance with their wishes.

<sup>106</sup> La proposition d'une taxe sur le plomb et le zinc a été abandonnée le 26 avril pendant les audiences du Comité sénatorial sur les finances concernant la House Resolution 1.
The proposed taxes on lead and zinc were dropped on April 26 during the Senate Finance Committee's hearings on House Resolution 1.

2. Armstrong's only defence was to ask whether we would prefer to receive a reply that would be little more than an acknowledgment. To this we retorted that we felt under no obligation to answer that question. We felt that we deserved a proper reply. But we should not have to wait for it indefinitely. Armstrong then promised that, as soon as he had seen the notations made on the draft by the Under-Secretary, he would let us know what would be possible. He promised this information by tomorrow noon at the latest.

3. All that needs to be added to complete this sorry story is that we have been in touch with the State Department at least once a day during the past fortnight in an effort to extract the reply and have stressed repeatedly the Parliamentary problem that is involved. We now hope that the unaccustomed asperity we showed this morning will prove effective.

384.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-642

Washington, April 21, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our teletype WA-641 of today's date.†

PROPOSED UNITED STATES RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTS OF CRUDE OIL

When I called on Hoover yesterday evening, he had in front of him the United States reply to the second version of our aide-mémoire on this subject.<sup>107</sup> For that reason I did not elaborate so fully as I otherwise would have done on the difficulty that you have been caused by the delay in producing a reply. However, I did mention that Parliament has now reconvened after the Easter recess and described a little for Hoover's benefit the embarrassment that you have been in. He obviously had been made aware of this by his subordinates.

2. As you will now have seen, the reply contains extremely little. Although Hoover did not refer explicitly to its barrenness, he did outline some of the circumstances that have stood in the way of a more helpful reply. In the first place, he told us that the vote in the Senate Finance Committee on the Neely amendment would be "very, very close". He himself is to appear before the Committee within the next few days to discuss the amendment. He said that HR 1 seemed in such serious trouble that he did not propose to talk about it at all. Instead, he intended to recall that he had been in the oil business for thirty years and to argue that the surest way to fasten government control on the industry would be to have import quotas enacted. In that event, the oil industry would before long find itself in much the same position as the sugar industry, with the government virtually setting prices. That

<sup>107</sup> Pearson a présenté la réponse des États-Unis à la Chambre des Communes. Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1955, volume 3, p. 3177.
Pearson presented the United States reply to the House of Commons. See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1955, Volume 3, p. 3021.

Hoover feels obliged to fall back on such a defensive position is perhaps as good an indication as any of the strength of the opposition to HR 1 and of the nip-and-tuck fight that is expected over the Neely amendment. Although Hoover did not spell out the implications of this situation, he clearly intended me to gather that the Administration was precluded from giving us a more satisfactory reply by fear that such a message might just be enough to tip the scales in favour of the amendment in the Senate Finance Committee.<sup>108</sup>

3. Another inhibiting factor has clearly been the necessity to preserve at least an outward show of non-discrimination. Hoover told us yesterday that he had asked the legal adviser in the State Department to examine urgently whether there was any possibility of discriminating in Canada's favour and admitting publicly that this was being done. No way of doing so has been found. Obviously this difficulty would arise in the most acute form if the Neely amendment were adopted. But Hoover gave us to understand that the State Department lawyers thought it would also prevent the United States from providing any public assurance that, in implementing the policy of voluntary restriction, importers would be urged to favour Canadian sources of supply at the expense of suppliers in other countries.

4. There is no doubt, however, that this is the course the State Department are, in fact, following. Hoover said that he had spoken to Brewster Jennings, President of Socony-Vacuum, and persuaded him to maintain his company's level of imports at approximately their 1954 level by cutting back imports from the Middle East, while maintaining the planned programme of increased imports from Canada. In the short run this decision would involve some financial sacrifice for Socony-Vacuum both because of the low cost of crude oil from the Middle East and the high profits to be gained from its exploitation. However, Hoover had found that Socony-Vacuum put such a high value for the future on their Canadian interests that Jennings did not need much persuasion to agree to the method of implementing the policy of voluntary restriction that Hoover had suggested.

5. Hoover repeated yesterday the arguments he had used when I saw him on the 8th of March to support his view that the policy of voluntary restriction need not operate to the detriment of Canadian exports. He also said he was hopeful that the policy could be temporary and that unrestricted imports could be permitted before very long. Last year there had been a substantial increase in imports and a less than normal increase in consumption. As soon as the demand curve picked up significantly, however, the independent oil producers in the United States would be out of difficulty and the policy of voluntary restriction could be jettisoned.

6. Although there were some hopeful aspects in what Hoover had to say, I did not allow the interview to come to an end without re-stating our anxieties. I told him that when I had recently been in Texas, I had found that in speaking of the damage that might be done to the Canadian oil industry by either voluntary or statutory United States restrictions, I was almost invariably met with the rejoinder, "But of course, we don't want to limit imports from Canada". I had had to point out that, although that might not be the intention of those who were clamouring for restrictions, it would certainly be the result of an import quota system and might easily be the result of a system of voluntary restriction. I had also had to insist that, whatever validity there might be in the defence argument as a reason for protecting domestic production in the United States, that argument could hardly be applied to imports from Canada. United States producers would also do well, I had urged, to bear in mind the volume of their Canadian sales. Finally, I reminded Hoover that, just as there were pressure groups in the United States who thought that their own interests should be allowed to over-ride the national interest in freer trade on a multilateral basis, so there were such pressure groups in Canada. The more ground that was surrendered to protectionists in the United States, the harder it became to resist pressure from similar groups in Canada; and, if a downward spiral to restrict trade throughout the world were allowed to develop, the United States, as well as Canada and other countries, would suffer.

<sup>108</sup> L'amendement Neely a été rejeté le 4 mai 1955.

The Neely amendment was defeated on May 4, 1955.

A.D.P. HEENEY

385.

DEA/6780-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-759

Washington, May 10, 1955

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Repeat to Dr. C.M. Isbister, Department of Trade and Commerce.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION REPORT ON ALSIKE CLOVER SEED

1. The State Department handed us this afternoon in strictest confidence copy of the United States Tariff Commission report to the President on its supplemental investigation of imports of alsike clover seed. The findings of the Commission read as follows, Begins: Quote.—As a result of the investigation, including the hearing, the Commission finds:

1. That the continuation beyond June 30, 1955 of a tariff quota on alsike clover seed is necessary to prevent or remedy the serious injury to the domestic industry which, as a result of an investigation under Section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended, the Tariff Commission reported on May 21, 1954 to exist by reason of increased imports of alsike clover seed; and

2. That the tariff quota so necessary is as follows: A duty of 2 cents per pound on imports of alsike clover seed entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for compensation in any 12-month period beginning July 1 in 1955 and in subsequent years until 2-1/2 million pounds have been so entered or withdrawn during any such period, and a duty of 6 cents per pound on imports of such seed entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during any such period after 2-1/2 million pounds have been so entered or withdrawn during such period.—Unquote. Ends.

2. Summarizing the Commission's findings, the report states:

Quote.—The evidence obtained in this supplemental investigation shows:

(1) That, in spite of the sharp decline in the surplus supplies of alsike clover seed, tariff quota restrictions on imports of such seed are necessary in order to prevent or remedy the serious injury to the domestic industry which was reported by the Commission on May 21, 1954 to exist by reason of increased imports, but

(2) that the restriction which is necessary in order to prevent or remedy such injury is a tariff quota of 2.5 million pounds of alsike clover seed dutiable at the two-cents-per-pound rate, instead of a continuation of the present quota of 1.5 million pounds dutiable at such rate. It might be noted that the 2.5 million pounds of alsike clover seed which would be permitted to enter at a rate of 2 cents per pound in any one marketing year is larger than the actual total of imports of this seed in 4 of the 7 postwar marketing years for which import totals are now available.—Unquote.

3. The State Department must comment to the President on this report by May 18 and, therefore, if we have any representations to make, they should be in our hands by Friday of this week, May 13. In any representations which we make, we suggest that the President should take into account the prospects for a Canadian crop of seed this year and that the restrictions on imports recommended by the Tariff Commission should not extend beyond one year.

4. Copy of the report will be sent by diplomatic bag tomorrow.

386.

DEA/6780-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-897

Ottawa, May 12, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram No. WA-759 of May 10, 1955.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION'S REPORT ON ALSIKE CLOVER SEED

We would like you to pass on some comments to the State Department respecting the Tariff Commission's report that it is necessary to continue to enforce tariff quotas on imports of alsike clover seed in order to prevent or remedy serious injury to the domestic industry. In doing so, we would like you to acknowledge the courtesy of the State Department in making this information available to us promptly.

2. We note that the Tariff Commission has re-examined the special protective measures which were adopted last year, and have recommended that the tariff quota be increased by one million pounds a year. This latter step is welcome. If this recommendation were to be adopted, we would hope that it would be subject to a time limit of one year.

3. The Canadian Government had assumed, however, that the existing restriction would be removed after June 30th of this year. In the view of the Canadian Government, this step would be amply justified by recent developments affecting the trade in alsike clover seed. Furthermore, it is our hope that the Government of the United States will remove the present impairment to the trade concession on this item with the least possible delay. This concession was negotiated with Canada and is at present bound in the Trade Agreement in force between Canada and the United States.

4. We would like to draw attention to some of the current factors which have an important bearing on the case.

(a) The stocks held by the U.S. Government have now been completely eliminated. This should tend to strengthen the market for this product.

(b) Privately held stocks of alsike clover seed have greatly diminished in both Canada and the United States. In Canada there was a relatively small carryover of 580,000 pounds on April 1, 1955, whereas in 1953 and 1954 the end of season carryover amounted to 3 million pounds and 1.2 million pounds. This means that on June 30, when the existing quota period terminates, Canada will have less than 500,000 pounds for both domestic use and export.

(c) It is thought that Canadian production in 1955 will probably be at about the same level as in 1954, i.e. 5.5 million pounds. This estimate is necessarily approximate, and is conditional on weather conditions and certain other factors. Adverse weather conditions could, of course, reduce the figure substantially. Assuming, however, that this is not the case and that the crop is at about the same level as in 1954, Canada will have available less than 6 million pounds of alsike clover seed for both domestic consumption and for export. This quantity is considerably less than the 6.7 million pounds available in 1954 and 12.6 million pounds in 1953.

(d) In 1954, Canada developed new markets overseas for alsike clover seed. Exports to these markets amounted to nearly 3 million pounds. While it will not be possible to supply anything like these quantities in the forthcoming crop year, because of more limited availabilities, it is hoped, nevertheless, that substantial quantities can again be sold in overseas markets. This development has diversified the outlets for Canadian alsike clover seed.

5. For your information, we would think it appropriate to convey these views to Thibodeaux in the State Department, and we do not feel it necessary to make the approach at a higher level. You may think it useful to leave an Aide Mémoire to record the views contained in paragraphs 1-4.

6. Please do not make any representations to State Department until we confirm the above with you by telephone on Friday.

387.

DEA/6780-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-795

Washington, May 13, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your telegram EX-897 of May 12.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION'S REPORT ON ALSIKE CLOVER SEED — CANADIAN AIDE-MÉMOIRE

Our telegram WA-791 of today's date contains the text of the aide-mémoire which we laid at the State Department this afternoon.<sup>109</sup>

2. We opened by acknowledging the courtesy of the State Department in making the Tariff Commission's report available to us promptly. We then read out the aide-mémoire and answered a few questions of fact put to us. In the course of the brief conversation which ensued, we stressed the following two points:

<sup>109</sup> L'aide-mémoire du télégramme WA-791, qui n'est pas reproduit ici, est fondé sur les commentaires contenus dans le document 386.
The aide-mémoire in telegram WA-791, which is not printed here, is based on the comments in Document 386.

(i) There did not appear to be any need to continue, as was recommended, the tariff quotas.

(ii) Even if it were deemed necessary to continue them, we were concerned by the question of principle involved, namely, that the quotas be continued for an indefinite period. We referred to what we understood to be the President's position, that wherever at all possible restrictive measures would not be instituted for a longer period than one year at a time and that all such measures would be subject to at least annual formal review. This same over-all position had been stressed in the GATT debates on the waiver granted to the United States to operate Section 22 of the Agriculture Adjustment Act.<sup>110</sup> The United States representatives had made a point of the fact that the bulk of the restrictions under Section 22 were imposed on a yearly basis and consequently were subject to a formal review every year.

3. Thibodeaux thanked us for our quick reply to their invitation for our views and comments. They would be transmitted to the White House immediately. Thibodeaux expressed the view that our case was a strong one. From what he and Corse said, we take it that the State Department will file its own objections to the Tariff Commission's recommendation. We also gathered that they will object particularly strongly to the recommendation that the tariff quotas be applied for an indefinite period.

4. Burmeister, Assistant Administrator of the Foreign Agriculture Service in the Department of Agriculture, expressed his personal view to the Agriculture Counsellor yesterday that the new tariff quota of 2.5 million pounds a year will remove any injury which Canadian trade may have suffered under the smaller existing quota. He thought, therefore, that we should not object to the Tariff Commission's recommendations. He pointed out that the President had been under considerable criticism by some members of Congress because of the relatively large number of Tariff Commission recommendations which he had refused to implement. Burmeister thought that if the President accepts the recommendations of the Tariff Commission, something which is unlikely to hurt Canada, it should help to answer the administration's critics and should be of considerable assistance in rejecting recommendations on other issues in which Canada and other countries would have a more important interest.

5. It will no doubt have occurred to you, as it has to us, that the President in this case can have the best of both worlds by, on the one hand, complying with the Tariff Commission's recommendations and, on the other, specifying that the restrictive measure will apply for only one year.<sup>111</sup>

<sup>110</sup> Pour une définition de l'article 22, voir le volume 20, document 525, note 99.

For a definition of Section 22, see Volume 20, Document 525, note 99.

<sup>111</sup> Le 30 juin 1955, Eisenhower a limité à 2,5 millions de livres par année, pour une période de deux ans, les importations de trèfle hybride, à un taux de 2 cents la livre. Les importations dépassant ce quota étaient frappées d'un droit de douane de 6 cents la livre. Voir United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXIII, No. 838, July 18, 1955, pp. 116-117.

On June 30, 1955, Eisenhower established an annual import quota for alsike clover seed of 2 1/2 million pounds for two years at a duty rate of two cents per pound. Imports in excess of this quota would be admitted at a duty rate of six cents per pound. See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXIII, No. 838, July 18, 1955, pp. 116-117.

388.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-829

Washington, May 20, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Repeat to M.W. Sharp, Associate Deputy Minister, Dept. of Trade and Commerce.

RYE IMPORT QUOTA

1. By request, Smith, Couillard and Hopper, attended a meeting at the State Department yesterday afternoon on the subject of rye imports. Southworth, Robinson and Pappano, of the Department of State, and Burmeister and Scholl of the Department of Agriculture, were present.

2. Robinson informed us that the Secretary of Agriculture has requested the White House to ask the Tariff Commission to review the rye import quota.

3. Burmeister then developed the rye situation in the United States about as follows:

(a) Price supports for the 1955 rye crop will be at a national average of $1.18 or 70 percent of parity, as compared with $1.43 or 85 percent of parity for the 1954 crop. The average price received by farmers for rye at mid-April was $1.06 a bushel. By lowering the price support, the Secretary of Agriculture is hoping to bring the supply and demand more nearly into balance, but this will take time. The Secretary may lower the support price still further for the 1956 crop;

(b) It is expected that the carryover on June 30, 1955, will be about 14 to 15 million bushels. The estimated 1955 crop is 29 million bushels which is greater than the crop of 1954. The domestic supply, therefore, for 1955-56 will be about 43 million bushels, the largest since 1944-45. About 24 million bushels are used annually in the United States and exports are expected to be about 4 million bushels. Based on these forecasts and making allowances for some imports, the carryover on June 30, 1956, will likely be larger than on June 30, 1955. At the time of planting in the fall of 1954, farmers were aware of the reduced price support for the 1955 crop, so it would appear that the lower price supports have not checked the increase in production of rye. This increase was probably grown on land diverted from wheat production;

(c) The commodity credit corporation owns 1.7 million bushels of rye from the 1953 crop and will probably acquire 6 to 7 million bushels from the 1954 crop;

(d) The anticipated large supply of rye in the United States and the existence of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act have led the Department of Agriculture to recommend that the Tariff Commission should review the rye import quota but, Burmeister remarked, "We are not thinking in terms of tighter restrictions than are now being applied".

(e) The Canadian and Argentine positions, with respect to rye, were taken into account, said Burmeister, when the request was made for a review by the Tariff Commission, but he emphasized that the most important reason for this request was the supply and price situation in the United States.

4. We expressed the opinion that a continuation of restrictions on imports of rye would be viewed with considerable concern in Canada and we hoped that, if restrictions must be continued, the Department of Agriculture would recommend that they do not extend beyond another year. If this were not done, United States rye growers would be encouraged to continue production at a high level. In reply to this, Burmeister said that, although last year the Department of Agriculture had recommended that restrictions should be made effective for an indefinite time until the surplus had been worked off, the Department has now come to accept the view, in cases such as this where there is a hope that by lowering price supports production may be brought into line with requirements, that restrictions on imports should be applied for a short term rather than on an indefinite basis.

5. The Department of Agriculture will probably appear at the public hearing which will be held by the Tariff Commission. Although Burmeister made no commitments, we received the impression that the Department will ask for a year's extension of a quota at about the present level (we gained a similar impression from a recent talk we had with McConnell of USDA).

6. The Tariff Commission has been keeping the rye situation under review and, therefore, United States officials believe it can quickly develop its findings.

7. There was no mention of the waiver.

389.

DEA/3300-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-996

Ottawa, May 31, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

UNITED STATES COMMERCIAL POLICY

We are sending you by airmail copies of Mr. Howe's speech on Canadian trade on May 25 to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Montreal. In the meantime we are reproducing below the text of the part of the speech in which Mr. Howe touched on commercial policy matters now under discussion in the United States Congress.

2. We would be grateful if you would bring these remarks somewhat formally to the attention of officials of the United States Administration, including State Department officials, probably Mr. Hauge of the White House staff, and officials of other Departments who might be concerned.

Text begins. Quite rightly, Canadians look across the border at their friends in the United States to see how the wind is blowing as far as commercial policy is concerned. For in trade matters it can be said that, as the United States goes, so goes the world.

We can all draw encouragement from recent events. After a prolonged debate, the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955 was approved in the House and the Senate. This does not mark a significant step forward but it is nevertheless some progress. More important than the substance of the measures, which are in course of being approved, is the assurance that for the present at least United States commercial policy appears to have been stabilized. The United States is beginning to make clear its intentions that international trading arrangements are to be strengthened by its actions. This is an exceedingly important development which none of us should underestimate and is one strong reason why I have some confidence in the future.

May I offer a brief comment on one of the amendments introduced by Congress into the Trade Agreements Extension Act. I refer to the amendment which recognizes that imports may adversely affect the national security of the United States.<sup>112</sup> It is provided that measures may be adopted in such cases to reduce imports to a level consistent with the national security. The new Act provides the President with a great deal of discretion with regard to its implementation. It is appropriate, therefore, even at this early stage, to express the hope that the President will recognize that the security interests of the United States are vitally affected by its trade relations with other countries and particularly with Canada.

We, in Canada, are aware that the strength and unity of the free world depend, more than anything else, upon a sound foundation of multilateral trade arrangements. The events of the past ten years have confronted all countries with temptations to pursue trade policies which would be attractive enough in the short run but which would only lead to trouble. Some countries have dabbled with high tariff protection, others with exchange controls and discriminatory restrictions. In all cases these misguided efforts have reacted against the countries which initiated them. In some notable instances, these efforts have been dismantled. There are lessons to be learned from all of this experience. In economic terms, individual countries cannot afford to weaken their productive efficiency by policies of high protection. In terms of peace and security, the free world is not strong enough to endure the international bickering and disunity which would accompany the growth of barriers to trade. For this reason, I hope that, if the United States does consider imposing restrictions upon imports to safeguard its national security, it will not overlook the detrimental effects which such action might have upon those very same interests. Text ends.

<sup>112</sup> Le 26 avril 1955, les sénateurs Harry F. Byrd (Démocrate—Virginie) et Eugene D. Milliken (Républicain—Colorado) ont proposé un amendement qui permettait de limiter les importations de certains produits lorsque celles-ci nuisaient à la sécurité nationale. Cet amendement est devenu la Section 7 de la Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955. L'Administration avait bien réussi à rejeter les divers amendements visant l'imposition de restrictions juridiques aux importations de pétrole, de plomb et de zinc, mais sa décision d'accepter l'amendement susmentionné pour garantir l'adoption au Congrès de la H.R. 1 de la Chambre a été largement (et à juste titre) perçue par le monde des affaires canadien comme une nouvelle menace protectionniste pesant sur les exportations canadiennes des produits en question.

On April 26, 1955, Senators Harry F. Byrd (Democrat—Virginia) and Eugene D. Milliken (Republican—Colorado) proposed an amendment under which import barriers could be imposed when the importation of certain commodities adversely affected national security. This became Section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955. Despite its success in defeating the various amendments designed to impose legislative restrictions on oil, lead and zinc imports, the Administration's decision to accept this amendment in order to secure passage of H.R. 1 through Congress was widely (and accurately) assumed in Canadian trade circles to expose Canadian oil, lead and zinc exports to renewed protectionist pressures.

390.

DEA/3300-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-1005

Ottawa, May 31, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

HARDBOARD

The following paragraphs contain the text of an aide-mémoire on hardboard which you might leave at an appropriate level in the State Department.

Text begins. The Canadian Government wishes to draw to the attention of the United States Government the serious concern which is felt about a proposal to increase substantially the United States duty on imported hardboard. This proposal is understood to have been included by the Senate Finance Committee as a rider in a bill HR 5559, "to make permanent the existing privilege of free importation of gifts from members of the armed forces on duty abroad." The United States hardboard industry has recently been investigated by the United States Tariff Commission and the resulting report is not such as to support increased tariff protection. It is hoped, therefore, that strong efforts will be made, within the United States Government, to defeat this present measure which would have damaging effects upon the trade of other countries, including Canada, and damaging repercussions upon the attitudes of other countries in their trade relations with the United States.

It will be recalled that the Canadian Government made representations to the United States Government in a note of July 19, 1954, on the previous occasion when this measure on hardboard was before Congress. The Canadian Government drew attention in that note to the fact that tariff paragraph 1413, under which hardboard is imported into the United States, was negotiated with Canada and is bound by trade agreement.

To make brief reference to the events which have ensued, on August 9, 1954, the Senate Finance Committee directed the United States Tariff Commission to make an investigation of the hardboard industry and of the import classification of hardboard. In its report the Tariff Commission dealt only with the technical question of the classification of hardboard and it found hardboard to be a distinctive article of commerce of sufficient importance to justify specific enumeration thereof in the tariff schedules. In the majority findings, it was made clear that the Tariff Commission had not been asked to investigate the rate of duty appropriate to hardboard nor did it make any recommendations regarding the tariff rates themselves. The minority findings went further to say that "no information which they obtained in the course of the Commission's investigation, indicates a need for revising those rates at this time." In the statement of findings of the Commission it was said, "The domestic hardboard industry thus far has not invoked the escape clause procedure or otherwise claimed to be seriously injured or to be threatened with serious injury as a consequence of increased imports of hardboard."

In summary, while some support was given to the idea of a technical reclassification of the item of hardboard, there was no support whatsoever for increased duties, nor does a careful study of the report show any justification for increased duties.

Representatives of the Canadian industry affected went to Washington to appear at the hearings which were arranged by the Tariff Commission. The Commission made exhaustive studies and took evidence representing different points of view. When the Tariff Commission report was published, the Canadian Government felt this matter to have been disposed of after a fair and exhaustive study.

Hardboard manufacturers have evidently been expanding in the United States and doing well. According to the report, of 11 domestic plants producing hardboard in 1954, two of them commenced operation in 1954, two in 1953, one in 1952 and one in 1951. According to the figures of the Tariff Commission, almost half of the rated capacity of the industry in 1954 has been constructed since 1947. The Tariff Commission report indicated in addition that four or five hardboard mills were being planned at the time, with one actually under construction, and another to be started shortly.

With production and consumption rapidly increasing in the United States, and with imports still accounting for a very small percentage of domestic production, it is difficult to see any need for increased tariff protection. If this new rider, which has been attached to the bill, "to make permanent the existing privilege of free importation of gifts from members of the armed forces on duty abroad," were to become law, it would be quite contradictory to the spirit and intentions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which governs trade relations between Canada and the United States. The Canadian Government has on several occasions made clear the concern which is felt about the widening scope of escape clause procedures in the United States. Moreover, in this case action is being proposed which is entirely outside the procedures which have been established. Text ends.

391.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-902

Washington, June 1, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: EX-1005 of 31 May, 1955.

HARDBOARD — RECLASSIFICATION WITH RESULTING INCREASE IN DUTY

The text referred to in the message under reference was delivered this afternoon to the State Department. It was warmly received and Kalijarvi, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs, expressed the hope that their efforts to have the amendment defeated by the Senate would be successful. They left us with no doubt that they regard this measure with great alarm as striking at the very root of their foreign economic policy.

2. Unfortunately, at about the same time that they were giving us words of encouragement, the Senate passed the bill apparently without any argument, and with only a few Senators present on the floor. This action took the State Department entirely by surprise. We had been given to understand that the State Department and the White House had both mustered considerable support in opposition to the amendment. It will now go to the House, and we are again assured by the State Department that they are taking every possible action to have it defeated, there or in conference.

3. We are hoping to see Mr. Samuel Waugh, Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs, tomorrow morning, to further emphasize our concern over this matter, but it must be admitted that, so far, the State Department have been singularly unsuccessful in imposing their will on Congress. While there is a hope that the measure will be referred to conference and there defeated, we must be prepared to face the fact that the bill with its amendment may go to the President for signature.

392.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-912

Washington, June 2, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Our WA-902 of June 1, 1955.

HARDBOARD — RECLASSIFICATION WITH RESULTING INCREASE IN DUTY

We took up the question of hardboard with Samuel Waugh, Assistant Secretary for Economic Affairs, this morning, and left him in no doubt of the great concern that is felt by the Canadian Government over the procedure followed in this case to amend a tariff item that was bound in a trade agreement with Canada. I emphasized the fact that this would be damaging to one particular Canadian industry, but that we are particularly concerned over the procedure and the precedent that it might establish if the bill were to become law.

2. Waugh was equally emphatic in insisting that the State Department and the Administration were just as concerned as the Canadian Government, and insisted that they were doing everything possible to have the amendment defeated. The State Department has been in direct touch with Hauge, pointing out the danger that this procedure holds for the conduct of the President's economic policy.

3. Although the State Department were taken by surprise by the action of the Senate yesterday, they are now hoping that the bill will be referred to conference, and that it will be dealt with satisfactorily there.

4. Waugh went on to give as his personal opinion that if the bill, as amended, were to pass the House, or be accepted in conference, the President would veto it. This is, of course, only a personal view, but it was pointed out that if the President did veto the bill, it would be possible to introduce another bill similar to H.R. 5559 that dealt with freedom from duty on gifts from United States servicemen abroad, and to have it passed in the present session without any difficulty.

5. On the question of publicity, Waugh made it clear that they would have no objection to any publicity that the Canadian Government would wish to give to this measure and our representations. The press here is aware of the fact that I was at State Department this morning, and that hardboard was discussed. (I have admitted our protest.)

6. The bill came up in the House this afternoon, but on a motion from Jere Cooper, the majority leader, it was laid over for consideration until Monday when the House reconvenes. It was apparently agreed between Cooper and Rayburn, the Speaker of the House, that the bill would not be dealt with today. There is, therefore, a possibility that the bill will go to conference, but there is strong pressure to have the amendment debated on the floor of the House where, we are told, it would stand a more than even chance of being passed.

7. There is nothing more that we can do here at the moment. We are keeping in close touch with the situation and will let you know what develops.

A.D.P. HEENEY

393.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-1042

Washington, June 23, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Our telegram WA-998 of June 16th, 1955.†

HARDBOARD; RECLASSIFICATION WITH RESULTING INCREASE IN DUTY,
H.R. 5559

The bill under reference, with its amendment incorporating the proposed change in classification of hardboard, was sent to conference yesterday on a motion by Jere Cooper. This at least assures that the matter should be given more consideration by responsible legislators who presumably will be better informed and better able to appreciate the seriousness of this amendment than would the House of Representatives as a whole.

2. It is possible that the conferees will consider this matter tomorrow, but it is more likely that it will be dealt with sometime next week.

3. In the meantime, the State Department has received a very strong message from the United States Embassy in Ottawa, copy of which was given to us in confidence by a member of the State Department. This message was not classified, but presumably, in the interests of protecting the official who passed it on to us, it would be advisable not to admit to the Embassy that we have seen it. The message reads as follows:

"Canadian Government and press very concerned over what is considered highly inappropriate and improper manoeuvre used in connection with hardboard rider, and particularly at effort, in defiance of GATT, to win protection for United States hardboard industry, as the Tariff Commission had established fact industry had not suffered from foreign imports. Minister of Trade and Commerce Howe personally protested strongly to me, and Secretary External Affairs Pearson was most caustic when discussing matter with Embassy officer.

"On June 6th Howe gave Parliament text of Canadian Government note of June 1st to United States, and stressed that if rider "were to become law it would be quite contradictory to the spirit and intentions of GATT." Opposition Leader Drew made statement in reply which fell little short of impugning United States good faith with respect to GATT commitments, and another member suggested possible retaliation.

"Press has inflated issue far beyond real economic importance to Canada and its attitude generally one of affront that United States interests would resort to such a back door method to, in effect, nullify GATT. There has been unusually widespread comment on "the clever little hardboard rider" which has been outspokenly criticized as a devious trick in violation of United States GATT obligations.

"In Embassy's opinion, it is very unfortunate that hardboard rider issue should have come up at a time when protectionist sentiment in Canada is at flood levels and has already succeeded in forcing some concessions from the government.

"Department of Trade and Commerce Deputy Minister Bull informed Embassy Friday evening that government considers this "a most serious incident" and expressed view that it might have serious repercussions on Canadian Government's ability to maintain liberal trade policy."

4. It will be seen from the above that the representations made by Mr. Howe and Mr. Bull have had considerable impact on the Embassy. Moreover, the State Department appear to have been genuinely relieved to have such a strong message from Canada, and told us that it has been brought to the attention, among others, of Gabriel Hauge and Sherman Adams. It is hoped, therefore, that the conferees will stand firm and defeat the amendment. However, it is quite impossible to predict what will happen when the bill comes up for consideration in conference.

5. Senator George, who has probably been the key to this question, is in hospital and unless the conferees decide to wait until he is able to attend to business again, it may be that the Senate will put in a substitute in Senator Frear. The substitution of Senator George may act in our favour, since it seems that he is determined to support the amendment. This seems difficult to believe, as we had been under the assumption that if the facts of the case were made known to Senator George he would automatically seek a way out from his dilemma of having supported the issue in the first place. However, we have seen a copy of a letter that Senator George wrote to the league of women voters, which was dated June 13th, and which could have been written by the Secretary of the Hardboard Association. It is full of mis-statements and completely ignores the fact that the Customs Court has confirmed that hardboard is properly classified under 1413. It is therefore generally assumed that Senator George is not acting out of ignorance of the facts but has come down firmly on the side of the hardboard amendment even if he may have been aware of the full facts of the case.

6. The fact that Cooper has been successful in referring the bill to conference at least is encouraging, and there is still hope that the amendment will be eliminated, and that we will not have to reply on a presidential veto as a last resort.

394.

DEA/6780-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-1052

Washington, June 24, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION REPORT ON RYE

1. We have just received in confidence from the State Department the report of the United States Tariff Commission on its investigation on rye, rye flour and rye meal. The Commission recommends that imports be limited to an aggregate maximum quantity of 95,200,000 pounds, of which not more than 8,000 pounds may be rye flour or rye meal in any twelve month period, beginning July 1, 1955, and subsequent years. The report was signed by all of the four Commissioners who participated in the investigation.

2. Among the considerations of the Commission on their findings and recommendation the report states that domestic utilization of rye in the 1954-55 marketing year is estimated at 24 million bushels, indicating a carryover of about 15 million bushels on July 1, 1955. Such a carryover, it is stated, would exceed by a substantial amount the carryover in any year since the war period, except on July 1, 1954, when the carryover amounted to 14.9 million bushels. The report also states that in three important rye producing states (North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota) where rye is planted principally for grain and where the highest proportions of the crop are sold off farms, the 1955 crop is expected to be 28 percent higher than in the 1954 crop and the domestic utilization is not expected to be significantly higher than in the current year. Therefore, supplies of rye in 1955-56 will exceed requirements in that year even if imports for 1955-56 are substantially curtailed.

3. The report goes on to state that the quantity of rye in Canada for carryover on August 1, 1955, is estimated to be about 16.5 million bushels, which is the highest carryover into any marketing year since 1940-41, except for the year 1954-55.

4. Canadian rye moving into principal United States markets, continues the report, enjoys a freight rate advantage over domestic rye moving into the same markets and it might appear that United States farmers located near the border would take advantage of the lower Canadian freight rates and ship their rye in bond to Fort William and thence to Chicago.

5. Another point in the report is that of the 1954 crop in North Dakota 85 percent was put under price support, in South Dakota 73 percent, and in Minnesota 42 percent. This will no doubt also be true with respect to the 1955 crop.

6. One significant recommendation is that during any twelve month period, beginning July 1, 1955, and in subsequent years, not more than 93,296,000 pounds shall be imported from Canada and not more than 1,904,000 pounds from other foreign countries.

7. The State Department has been asked to present comments to the President on Monday, June 27, and, therefore, would appreciate any comments which you may wish to make to the State Department tomorrow, June 25.

8. Please telephone this message immediately to Mr. G.N. Vogel, of the Department of Trade and Commerce, at his home.

395.

DEA/6780-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-1159

[Ottawa], June 27, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram WA-1052 of June 24.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION REPORT ON RYE

The following confirms the text of the aide-mémoire telephoned to Hopper this morning for presentation to the State Department.

Text Begins. The Canadian Government has been informed in confidence that the United States Tariff Commission has recommended that imports of rye be limited to an aggregate maximum of 95,200,000 lbs. of which not more than 8,000 lbs. may be rye flour or rye meal in any twelve-month period beginning July 1, 1955, and subsequent years.

This recommendation represents a reduction of approximately 50 per cent from the quota in effect during the present crop year and is very much smaller than average imports during any representative period since the end of the war. The quota for the present year which is now in effect was based on average imports during the preceding three years, a period which was accepted as representative by the Tariff Commission in its report of March 8, 1954. When import quotas have been proposed to safe-guard an agricultural program of the United States Department of Agriculture, the Canadian Government has demonstrated its willingness to examine such proposals in an attempt to ensure that they appear reasonable having in mind the prevailing levels of trade and the purpose which such quotas are designed to serve. The Canadian Government has stated, however, that it would regard as unreasonable and unwarranted the use of import quotas to exclude normal imports, that is, imports which would have entered normally and in the absence of any United States price support or other domestic agricultural program. The quota recommended by the Tariff Commission is, in the opinion of the Canadian Government, far below the level of normal imports. In this connection, it is significant that the United States Department of Agriculture in its representations to the Tariff Commission recommended a continuation of the quota now in effect.

The Canadian Government feels sure that in making his decision the President will have in mind the importance which the Canadian Government attaches to this case and the Canadian Government hopes that the recommendation of the Tariff Commission will not be accepted. If the President finds that an import quota is necessary, the Canadian Government submits that the quota should be established at a level not lower than the quota in effect in the present crop year and for one year only. Text ends.

396.

DEA/6780-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-1063

Washington, June 28, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your EX-1159 of June 27.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION REPORT ON RYE

1. Yesterday afternoon we presented to Kalijarvi, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, the aide-mémoire, text of which was contained in EX-1159 of yesterday. Robinson, Southworth and Diroll of the State Department were also at the meeting.

2. We called attention to the fact that in 1951-52, which was one of the years included in the representative period by the Tariff Commission, less rye was imported by the United States than in any other year, except one, during the past fifteen years. We remarked that Section 22 provides that the President shall determine the representative period.

3. We commented on the fact that, if the representative period mentioned by the Commission is used, the Commission has reached the lowest limit allowed by the law in its recommendations in respect to the quantity of rye that may be imported.

4. We referred to the recommendation of the United States Department of Agriculture which was presented in the Department's brief at the Tariff Commission hearing, and emphasized the point made in the aide-mémoire that, even if there were no price supports, our normal exports of rye to the United States would be larger than the quota recommended by the Commission.

5. Kalijarvi remarked that he unfortunately had not had time to review the Commission's report but, in the light of our representations, he was of the opinion that the Commission's recommendations were quite drastic and the State Department would do what they could to modify them.

6. Please send a copy of this message immediately to Mr. M.W. Sharp, Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce.<sup>113</sup> 397.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-1070

Washington, June 29, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Our teletype WA-1042 of June 23.

HARDBOARD: RECLASSIFICATION WITH RESULTING INCREASE IN DUTY — H.R. 5559

Because nothing was emerging from the conference on this item and the end of the month (when free entry privileges for United States forces will expire) was rapidly approaching, I spoke to Governor Sherman Adams at the White House yesterday and expressed to him personally the very serious concern of the government lest this amendment be allowed to go through. I repeated that we took the darkest possible view of the procedure which left us without any means of effective representations.

2. Adams said he would look into the matter at once and he has just called me this morning to say that "he would not worry about it". The administration disliked the procedure as much as we did. It was "a sleeper" and they did not propose to allow it to become law. He had some grounds for hoping that the amendment would be knocked out in conference. If it were not, the President's advisers would certainly recommend that "it be knocked on the head".

<sup>113</sup> Le 30 juin 1955, Eisenhower a fixé un contingent d'importation annuel de 186 millions de livres pour le seigle. Voir United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXIII, No. 838, July 18, 1955, pp. 117-119

On June 30, 1955, Eisenhower established an annual import quota for rye of 186 million pounds. See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXIII, No. 838, July 18, 1955, pp. 117-119.

3. This, of course, is encouraging, but I would still not be certain that "the politics" of the situation may not result in this unfortunate amendment being included. Incidentally, Adams spoke to me on a very private and personal basis, and I would be grateful if his confidence were strictly observed in Ottawa.

A.D.P. HEENEY

398.

DEA/3300-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-1191

Washington, July 15, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference; Our WA-1158 of July 12.†

RECLASSIFICATION OF HARDBOARD

1. The Conference Committee on Hardboard met again this afternoon and agreed to delete the Hardboard Amendment from HR-5559. Although the meeting was in executive session, we have been told in confidence that the agreement to delete the Hardboard Amendment was reached only after bitter debate. Apparently Senator George was determined the reclassification should be effected, and it was only because Cooper was armed with the letter from the President stating that the amendment would be a direct violation of United States international agreements, that he was successful against all efforts of George and his supporters to put the amendment through.

2. We also understand that at one point in the argument one Senator asked if the Customs Court had ruled on the question of classification. When Cooper reported that the New York Customs Court had done so recently, he was challenged by the Secretary of the Senate Finance Committee, who claimed that the ruling did not deal with the problem of whether or not the product should be classified under paper sections, or the wood sections of the tariff. Cooper, however, was able to read the ruling from the Customs Court, and in the face of this the opposition agreed to the deletion but insisting upon further examination of the question by the Committee on Ways and Means.

3. We understand also that the Hardboard Association has now admitted privately that their principal objective is protection. This, as you know, they have never admitted publicly. We are informed by Abitibi that, based on Canadian export figures of hardboard for the month of May, it can be shown that the Masonite Corporation imported from Canada in that month hardboard to the amount of about three million square feet. They arrived at this conclusion by deducting Abitibi and Canadian Forest Products shipments from the totals as reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

4. We understand that Abitibi are preparing a brief for their importer who will testify at the coming Ways and Means Committee hearings. We have informed Canadian Forest Products of the decision and we will advise them that while they themselves could testify, we think that this would not favour their case. It might be construed as unwarranted interference by a foreigner in a domestic matter.

5. While it is good to know that the efforts being put forward by all concerned have been successful, nevertheless it is regrettable that the Canadian companies concerned are to be forced to spend considerable funds in further legal expenses in order to protect their position when the domestic industry has never shown that it is in need of protection and when the report of the Tariff Commission has not been given any real consideration.

6. We believe that our position is fairly secure. It would, in our opinion, be difficult for the President not to veto HR-264, which is exactly the same as the amendment to HR-5559, in the event that it could be rushed through Congress this session. Nevertheless, we cannot expect the Canadian interests to let the hearings go by default. We are advising them that whatever defence they organize should be along the line that is basically of little consequence if hardboard is reclassified or not, but that the rate of seven and one half percent is protected by international agreement and that the local industries have not produced any evidence to show that they are being damaged by imports.<sup>114</sup>

A.D.P. HEENEY

399.

A.D.P.H./Vol. 1

*La Direction économique
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Economic Division
to Ambassador in United States*

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, July 28, 1955

Dear Mr. Heenev:

Pressure of work while Ed [Ritchie] was away prevented me from attending more promptly to your request for a note on the meeting which you had with officials here on July 7.

The officials who were present at the meeting feel that it would be best to regard it as an informal conversation and they would prefer that no record of the meeting be kept because they were talking quite informally. I have therefore been asked to write you a personal and confidential letter about the meeting. The following paragraphs contain my notes.

On July 7 Mr. Heenev met with Messrs. Bryce, Plumtre, Sharp, Isbister, Rasminsky, Hockin, Barrow and Bridle in the Privy Council Office to discuss some aspects of Canada's commercial relations with the United States.

Mr. Heenev said that he sometimes felt that the extent to which the hard facts of political life determine United States economic policy is not always appreciated in Ottawa. In the last analysis, if the wishes of a substantial section of voters had to be weighed against the views of the Canadian Government on a specific economic issue, the former would win out. There is often a point of diminishing returns beyond which there is no point in pressing Canadian protests. On this question, as on the question of the right time at which to make a protest, Mr. Heenev felt that Ottawa should rely on the Embassy's judgment. In any case, there was a question in his mind as to how much profit there is in our filing protests on one matter after another, almost always in the same vein and in terms of well-known general principles. He felt it was important that Ottawa should understand how Canadian views and actions are regarded in Washington, and he encourages his officers to report these re-actions. This, he felt, was as important as presenting and supporting Canadian views or obtaining information about United States views and intentions.

<sup>114</sup> À la fin de juillet, les audiences sur la H.R. 264 de la Chambre ont été reportées jusqu'à la prochaine session du Congrès.
Hearings on H.R. 264 were postponed at the end of July until the next session of Congress.

Mr. Rasminsky said he could understand Mr. Heeney's feeling about repetitive protests but he wondered if there is really an acceptable alternative. It is perhaps inevitable that one becomes boring or appears doctrinaire if one continually enunciates a principle. Admittedly this is what Canadian representatives do in the O.E.E.C., in the Fund and in discussions with United States officials in Washington. The question really is whether there is not a certain point in this. We should not underestimate the influence which Canada can wield on behalf of liberal commercial policies. As long as Canada continues to pursue such policies herself, her representatives can uphold them with some effect. So far as Washington is concerned, there is of course no doubt that the State Department stands on the side of liberal commercial policies, but our representations can frequently help them to substantiate their case in discussions with other Departments and agencies or before Congress. In the White House the President, whose own views are liberal, is surrounded by advisers who must be open to political arguments, and it must be useful to remind them from time to time of the way United States policies are viewed abroad, and of the sort of commercial policies which successive Administrations, including the present Administration, have endeavoured to uphold in spite of Congressional opposition. Reverting to the Canadian side of the question, Mr. Rasminsky noted that perhaps in part as a result of the vigour of Canadian protests the United States had so far refrained from taking actions which seriously damage Canadian interests or which raise in an acute form the possible need for retaliatory action.

Mr. Sharp felt that we had to be very careful in adopting public attitudes on such questions as surplus disposal and import restrictions, not to imply that we might take retaliatory or corrective action unless we were in fact prepared to do so. At the same time he did not feel that our protest on United States wheat disposal was without real justification. Indeed, it was essential for us to state our views and, if necessary, to go on stating them. Mr. Heeney conceded this but felt that this was nevertheless a good example of a case in which we should be realistic in our approach and at least recognize the bedrock of the American problem.

It was agreed that the Embassy's views on how long and hard to press a particular protest should be a major determining factor; and it was made clear that officials in Ottawa welcome advice as to how Canadian views are received or regarded in Washington. On the main question of the nature and scope of Canadian representations, it was agreed that representations in terms of principle and in relation to international obligations should still be made, though occasionally the Canadian case might be put on more restricted grounds.

The other main point made by Mr. Heeney related to the trend of Canadian commercial policy. He said it was important to him, in his relations with United States officials and members of the United States Government, to have a reasonably accurate fund of information about the direction in which Canadian commercial policy is moving. He hoped that officials in Ottawa would bear this need in mind. More specifically, he had recently noted indications, which were by no means conclusive, of a growing groundswell of protection in Canada and even in Canadian Government circles. He asked for information on this point.

Mr. Plumptre said it is certainly true that the tide of protectionism is rising in Canada. This is borne out by the representations, both oral and written, received by his Department. On the other hand, one could hardly say that government policy has given much sign of being moved in a protectionist direction. Recent tariff changes, both in the budget and subsequently, have been modest and reasonably well balanced; nor have the findings of the Tariff Board been open to much criticism from the supporters of liberal tariff policies. Ministers seem to be increasingly aware of the attitude of the manufacturing interests. By and large, however, he felt that there was no disposition to be impatient and that the government would stand by the main tenets of present Canadian commercial policy so long as developments outside Canada, particularly in the United States, did not move in a restrictive or protectionist direction.

Mr. Bryce thought that the relative political power of the exporter is declining and that in perhaps ten years, the political climate will be such that the influence in Ottawa of the farmer, the producer of primary products, and even of the consumer, will be a good deal less than that of the manufacturing and industrial interests. This will not necessarily mean that a high tariff policy, or any other sort of "national" policy would necessarily be best for the economy — or for the consumer — in the long run; but there was a real possibility of such a policy becoming popular. Any serious worsening of domestic or international economic conditions would of course make this the more likely.

Mr. Sharp remarked that civil servants might seem to have become the heirs of the "Liberal" tradition in commercial policy.

Dr. Isbister suggested that at the present time exports represent the major part of the rise in our G.N.P. and that, at least from the economic point of view, it would be a mistake to underestimate the importance of exports now and in the foreseeable future. With this there was general agreement; it also seemed to be generally felt that, at least for the foreseeable future, the interests of exporters, and the interest of consumers in competitive trading conditions would continue to be very important politically.

Mr. Rasminsky doubted if the time had yet come, or necessarily would come, when it could be said that Canada was embarking on protectionism. He thought that basically our commercial policy remains the same, and that the most important single factor likely to affect it one way or the other in the immediate future is the nature of the commercial policies followed by the United States, the United Kingdom and the countries of western Europe. The trend of economic conditions in the United States would also be an important factor.

Mr. Bryce concluded that, on balance, it was certainly too early to say that there has been any change in Canadian commercial policy, or that there is likely to be a significant change in the foreseeable future. He thought that Mr. Heeney should, and confidently could, continue to uphold the banner of Canadian liberalism in commercial policy matters. Mr. Heeney accepting this, added that he thought he ought occasionally to warn his American friends that protectionist policies in the United States would almost certainly give rise to similar policies here. He was the first to admit, however, that this prospect might cause less grief in Washington than we would wish; indeed, Mr. Heeney said, in answer to a question, that when we sin, as we occasionally do even now, our transgression causes hardly a ripple in the United States. It seemed to be felt, however, that official circles watch our actions quite closely and know how to evaluate — or occasionally to regret — Canadian actions which now and then fall short of our declared policies.

Mr. Heeney expressed his appreciation of the exposition of Canadian commercial policy which his enquiries had elicited. He concluded by saying that 70% of his Embassy's time is now devoted to economic and financial work. This means that officers from several departments have to share this work. Within the numerical limitations of available staff, they were doing their best to give us the service we require and want. Speaking for the officials present, Dr. Isbister expressed appreciations of the Embassy's painstaking and energetic work in the economic field. Mr. Bryce said that the Ottawa "team" were very glad to have had the opportunity of a full and frank discussion with Mr. Heeney.

I would be grateful if you would regard this letter as for your personal information only. You may wish to show it to Lou Couillard but it would be appreciated here if it was not shown to anyone else in the Embassy.<sup>115</sup>

Yours sincerely,
PAUL BRIDLE

400.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], September 21, 1955

POTATO GRADE STANDARDS, UNITED STATES AND CANADA

14. The Minister of Agriculture said that potatoes could not be exported to the United States unless they complied with standards set in marketing orders issued from time to time by the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture. By law these orders had to reflect standards imposed by state governments.

The size requirements for round potatoes in the Maine marketing agreement were imposed on all imports of round potatoes in February of this year. At the same time, imports of long potatoes were prohibited unless they met the size requirements of the Idaho marketing order. These prohibitions applied only to imports and did not affect potatoes produced and marketed anywhere in the United States by other states. Despite Canadian protests over this action restrictions had been intensified as the year wore on.<sup>116</sup> The latest Maine order, which was expected to apply to imports from October onwards, required most varieties shipped from Maine during the period September 19th, 1955 to June 30th, 1956, to be 2-1/4 inches minimum and 4 inches maximum diameter in size. This U.S. action contravened the G.A.T.T. which stated that, after paying customs duty, no less favourable treatment shall be accorded to imports than that accorded to those of national origin.

There were two courses that could be followed in the face of these restrictions. The same standards could be applied to imports from the U.S. as the U.S. applied to our exports. This would be the Maine standard. Such action would, however, contravene the G.A.T.T. Alternatively, imports into Canada from the U.S. could be required to meet Canadian standards. These were higher than the U.S. No. 1, Grade A, but lower than those

<sup>115</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Mr. Couillard: Would you thank Paul B[ridle] for me & return to my personal file [A.D.P. Heeney]

<sup>116</sup> Aucun compte rendu de ces protestations n'a été retrouvé.
Records of these protests were not located.

prevailing in Maine. Action of this nature would be in accordance with the G.A.T.T. provisions.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Sept. 21, 1955 — Cab. Doc. 194-55†)

15. During the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The second alternative seemed more desirable than the first since there would be no violation of the G.A.T.T. It would also be advisable at the same time to improve Canadian standards. If this were done all U.S. potatoes, except those from Maine, would be excluded from the Canadian market, and the quality of domestic potatoes marketed in Canada improved.

(b) It might be preferable not to take any action now if Canadian standards were to be raised in a short time. However, this would mean, for the present, no retaliation against U.S. restrictions and a delay in attempting to get these revised or removed. Canadian standards should be applied immediately against imports and improved as soon as possible.

16. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Agriculture on the proposed U.S. import restrictions on potatoes and agreed that, effective immediately, imports from the U.S. be required to meet the standards for Canada No. 1 Grade potatoes and that such standards be improved as soon as possible.

...

401.

DEA/2057-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

LETTER NO. 1821

Washington, November 4, 1955

PETROLEUM IMPORTS AND THE SECURITY ESCAPE CLAUSE

We saw yesterday Mr. Hugh A. Stewart, Director, Office of Oil & Gas, Department of the Interior. While the visit was made under the guise of a courtesy call it was soon obvious that Mr. Stewart was anxious to talk about petroleum imports as ourselves. In fact, we noticed on his desk a proof copy of the letter from Dr. Flemming to the oil importers released for publication at 3.30 October 31st.<sup>117</sup> You have received the text in a previous message.†

We said that the letter of October 31st was not too surprising as we had an indication from Dr. Flemming last week that the Canadian position would not be too hard done by. We said, however, that it was still not quite clear as to what the letter meant, and particularly its references to Canada. To be specific, we asked his opinion on what he felt the word "appreciably" in para. (b) of the conclusions meant. Did it mean that if import rates from Canada and Venezuela rose above current levels that imports from other areas would have to be cut back by more than the 7%, or did it mean that the United States would not tolerate imports "appreciably" above the current levels from Canada and Venezuela? We went on that if the interpretation of "appreciably" in the reference to imports from Canada and Venezuela is considered in the same light as the word "significantly" in the recommendations of the Energy Supplies and Resources Policy Committee when they said, "The Committee recommends, however, that if in the future the imports of crude oil and residual fuel oils exceed significantly the respective proportions that such imported oils bore to domestic production of crude oil in 1954, appropriate action should be taken.", then probably the latter interpretation would obtain. We said the right thing for Stewart settled back and said that he would give us the background on how the petroleum import situation got where it is today.

<sup>117</sup> Voir/See United States, Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS), 1955-1957, Volume X, Washington D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1989, Document 207, pp. 546-549.

The following is a resumé from memory of his very extended remarks. The history (he said) of the battle against petroleum imports goes back about 35 years when an organization of producers with no specific interests abroad formed the Independent Petroleum Association of America. Its purpose in life was to crusade against imports. To this end they built up a highly competent professional staff of "crusaders". With the tremendous increase in the Texas exploration and production, another organization known as Tipro (Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association) came on the scene with as much the same purpose, and with the battlecry that for every barrel of oil that enters the United States from a foreign source it is one barrel of oil that is not produced in Texas. Over the years, primarily through the efforts of the highly paid professional staffs of these two groups, legislators and the Executive side of the U.S. Government were never permitted to forget the grave dangers of permitting foreign oil to contaminate the United States. During the World War II period those concerned with preventing imports for the most part found jobs in the wartime organizations established to control the distribution of petroleum and to get their hands on as much petroleum from any source as they could. The same thing was true during the Korean period, and particularly so with the loss of Iranian production. (This may have been a snide comment on some of those who held responsible positions in P.A.D. as recently as two and three years ago.)

With the end of the Korean war the "crusaders" quickly reorganized and commenced their proselytizing. Positive evidence of their activities was the considerable number of bills introduced into both Houses of Congress aimed at embargoes on petroleum imports or at the very least quotas. It was, of course, not difficult to find some oil state Congressmen quite happy to be identified with such bills. In addition to the oil interests as such, the coal groups set up a tremendous clamour over imports of residual fuel oils as did coal-carrying railroads and labour groups associated with both coal and labour. (In this connection, it is perhaps of interest that imports of residual fuel oil at the current rates represent on an annual basis about 11 million tons of bituminous coal. The total coal production of the U.S. this year will be close to 450 million.)

The group's interest in keeping oil imports out did not meet with any degree of success up to 1954. In that year the economic situation had flattened out somewhat and this occasioned a drop in overall demand for petroleum and its products. This, together with considerable increases in imports of crude from the Middle East, created a situation in which the "crusaders" could operate. The focal point became HR-1. The independent petroleum groups, labour, coal, and railroad interests got their heads together and through their efforts two amendments to HR-1 were offered, both aimed at restricting oil imports. Then, in the horse trading that went on in order to save HR-1 for the President, the petroleum interests saw in Section 7 of the national security escape clause the glimmering of opportunities to forward their cause. To them it seemed to offer a more direct avenue than to keep on trying to get legislation through the Congress or to invoke proceedings under the peril point clause which was dependent upon slow moving hearings before the Tariff Commission and the raising and lowering of tariffs which usually take long periods of time.

Immediately the legislation was passed the "crusaders" landed on Flemming's doorstep. He had no comprehension of the ramifications of the problem and was conscious only of the pressures being exerted upon him not only by the independent petroleum people and their friends but by many legislators, both in large groups and single handedly. By August the pressure on Flemming had become so great that he wrote a letter to the oil companies requesting information on their current crude and residual oil imports and their plans for the future. He asked the companies for suggestions pertinent to the problem and any recommendations they cared to make. He also in the letter issued a warning that unless imports were curbed in line with the recommendations of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Energy Supplies and Resources Policies, action would be taken under the Trade Agreements Extension Act. The replies to this letter were not particularly satisfactory but the whole affair did serve to attract a great deal of attention to the question of petroleum imports. Flemming acted without consultation with other agencies concerned and had he not acted unilaterally the letter would most probably not have gone out in the form it did, and possibly may not have been written at all. At that time he had no one designated in his agency to handle Section 7 matters and no one familiar with the sort of situation set up by his action. The letter was a complete failure as far as getting worthwhile information out of the importing oil companies.

Shortly thereafter, Mr. H.D. Gresham (see Despatch No. 1642 of October 7th†) was appointed to advise Flemming on Section 7 matters. The other interested agencies got into the fray. The Office of Oil and Gas, Department of the Interior, "loaned" a few men to the offices of Flemming and Gresham to assist in their deliberations on oil imports. In addition, the other side of the case began to come to the front. Senator Payne of Maine pointed out to Flemming that restrictions on the imports of residual fuel oil would work a hardship on the New England area which is dependent in great measure upon imports. Consumer organizations and fuel oil distributors took up the cry. While this was going on the Office of Oil & Gas, Department of the Interior rushed statistical studies and other material to completion in order that Flemming and Gresham could be briefed. As O.D.M. began to more fully appreciate the relationship of imports of both crude oil and residual fuel oil to the domestic petroleum picture, the slide towards using Section 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act slowed up. Flemming became aware that if he willy nilly advised the President that imports of crude oil and residual fuel oil were such as to endanger the national security or threaten to impair the national security, that the Administration could be put into the position of having a first class row on its hands, between producers and special interests in the industrial field on the one hand and highly organized consumer groups on the other. This did not look good, particularly in a political year.

As evidence that he had benefitted from the briefings, Flemming, around the middle of October, wrote to Senator Payne (R-Me) that "the maintenance of an equitable sharing of an expanding market by both importers and domestic producers" was possible. Within the agencies concerned there was a growing feeling that a "new approach" had to be made; something based on facts rather than pressures. The Departments of the Interior, Commerce, and others (presumably State, Defence, and the Attorney General) re-examined the arithmetic and drafted a letter which they felt might be acceptable to Flemming, and at the same time put the whole oil import affair in proper perspective. The letter to the oil importers which was released on October 31st by O.D.M. was based upon the joint draft but there was one very significant change; Canada and Venezuela had been singled out for "special consideration".

The above, in barest outline, is the story told by Stewart.

The remainder of the interview was mainly devoted to a discussion of the so-called "Canadian position". We asked if, because Flemming insisted on singling out Canada and Venezuela, the idea had originated with him. We were told that despite the consistency of this approach with the stated policy of O.D.M. (and the President) re consideration of sources of material for the long-term stockpile, i.e. "the continental approach", that Interior, State and Defence had been the proponents of exempting Canadian oil from being considered as part of the current problem.

Stewart sketched this in by saying that Interior and Defence had actively supported the construction of refining capacity in the U.S. Pacific Northwest to be based on Canadian crude. This was done on three main grounds, the national security, secondly that it made good economic sense, and thirdly and related to both, it diminished the pressures on California crude which could be utilized more advantageously closer to home. He also recalled the active support given the Trans-Mountain Pipeline by several U.S. agencies including the assistance in obtaining line pipe extended by the Petroleum Administration for Defence.

He then mentioned that in addition to the Shell Oil Companies and General Petroleum's refineries now "on stream", there was still a chance that Standard of California and another company would build refineries in the State of Washington. If this came about he could see no impediment to them contracting for Canadian crude. As for the Minnesota-Wisconsin area, he felt that conditions were somewhat different, but here all the refineries except that of Great Northern were small and he reminded us that small business had a disproportionate voice in Washington and a habit of long standing of obtaining what they wanted. The simple fact, he went on, is that Canadian crude can be bought in the Minnesota-Wisconsin area so much cheaper than comparable competing crude from U.S. sources that it would be difficult indeed to try to stop the flow of Canadian oil. In addition, both the Pacific Northwest and the Minnesota-Wisconsin areas are oil deficit areas.

In addition to spelling out Canada and Venezuela and thus, according to Stewart, "protecting the Canadian position", the Flemming letter of October 31st succeeded in separating residual fuel oil from crude oil. This, he said, would chagrin the exponents of oil quotas and embargoes as they always tried to lump both together and thus point to the over one million barrels per day of imports flooding the country. The fact is, Stewart said, that despite the increase in imports of Middle East crude over the past few years, domestic availability of residual fuel oil had declined. He mentioned that within the past few weeks it was necessary to bring 11 million barrels of residual from the West to the East Coast in order to bolster low supplies. By separating residual from crude, Stewart felt that much more accurate and reasoned approaches will be made on any activities in the petroleum imports sphere in the future.

As we were leaving he surprised us by saying that he could think of reasons why Canada might not be too happy about being specifically pinpointed. He then reiterated that he had argued against publicly proclaiming any special considerations for Canada and Venezuela and it was still his view that it was a mistake to say so in a letter of that nature.

We asked him if he thought Congress would take any action when they come to town in January, and he replied in the negative. His reasoning is that domestic production is at an extremely high rate. The domestic petroleum industry is expanding faster in all its branches, exploration, transportation, and production, than at any time in the past, and even so they are just a little better than able to keep up with increasing domestic demands. In addition, the consumer reaction would be great and would be aroused quickly. Another factor is that the jobbers and distributors, particularly on the East Coast, are for the first time organized to combat the independent producer groups. He concluded by saying that there would undoubtedly be a great deal of good paper wasted in printing bills aimed at restriction of petroleum imports, but felt they would come to naught.

Dr. Flemming on Wednesday and Thursday made appearances before the House Judiciary Subcommittee (the Celler Subcommittee). Rep. Celler (D-N.Y.) questioned Flemming on his letter of October 31st and a specific question was asked concerning the special consideration being given Canada. In reply to the question on Canada he said, in effect, that this had been done in the interests of international relations and the national security. (When an actual transcript becomes available we shall forward it to you.)

What all this adds up to we are not quite sure. It would, however, appear that a large number of U.S. agencies are of the view that Canadian crude oil imports into the U.S. Pacific Northwest in the Minnesota-Wisconsin areas should not be included in any consideration to quota foreign imports of petroleum. While the reasons may be associated with national security, supply to petroleum deficit areas, etc. it is of more than passing significance that Canadian crude in those areas can compete successfully with crude from any other source.

We expect to have the figures on which the Flemming letter was based today and we shall send them along to you.

Unless there are developments which cannot now be contemplated, it would look as if as far as the position of Canadian oil imports into the United States is concerned, we can breathe a bit more easily. Whether or not the U.S. may be required to answer for this action to GATT is another matter.

For your information the following is the picture obtained in the Department of the Interior of refineries in the two areas under discussion. In the State of Washington there is a Ferndale General Petroleum's refinery with a 35,000 B/D capacity. At the present time it is taking about 27,000 B/D of Canadian crude. The Shell Company has a 50,000 B/D capacity refinery at Anacortes which commenced operation on September 22nd, and which has worked itself up to 26,700 B/D of Canadian crude.

In the Minnesota-Wisconsin areas there are several refineries with an 11,000 B/D plant at Renshall, Minnesota, which is now taking about 4,000 B/D of Canadian and the balance for domestic sources brought in by tank car. Lake Superior Refining Company has a 6,000 B/D refinery at Superior, Wisconsin, which has just started to use Canadian crude. In the St. Paul-Minneapolis area Northwest Refining Company has two small plants, one with 3,000 B/D and the other with 8,000 B/D capacity. They have contracted with Canadian suppliers for 3,000 B/D to commence about now. It is interesting to note that heretofore the crude for these refineries was of domestic origin and came from Wyoming and Montana by pipeline and river barge. The largest refinery in the area is that of the Great Northern Company which has 25,000 B/D capacity solely on Canadian crude. Great Northern, in order to obtain the Canadian supply, built a considerable length of pipeline in the United States and also in Canada.

In summary, the total refining capacity of the two areas is 138,000 B/D. There will be a flow of about 75,000 B/D from Canadian sources to these refineries between now and the end of the year.

N.R. CHAPPELL for Ambassador

SECTION C

RÉUNION DE LA COMMISSION MIXTE CANADO-AMÉRICAINNE DU COMMERCE
ET DES AFFAIRES ÉCONOMIQUES, OTTAWA, 26 SEPTEMBRE 1955
MEETING OF JOINT CANADA-UNITED STATES COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS, OTTAWA, SEPTEMBER 26, 1955

402.

DEA/50316-2-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-605

Washington, April 15, 1955

SECRET

Reference: Our despatch No. 1915 of November 9, 1954.†

JOINT UNITED STATES-CANADIAN COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

1. The purpose of this message is to propose that a meeting of the Joint Committee should be held in early June. As you know from previous messages, very strong opposition has developed to the President's modest programme for liberalizing United States foreign economic policy. In our opinion an early meeting of the Committee might do something to stiffen the Administration's resistance to protectionist pressures and to prevent the worst of the possibilities latent in the present situation from being realized.

2. Moreover, we believe it is in Canada's interest that the Joint Committee should be kept alive; and we are afraid if too long a gap is left between meetings we may find it withering. The last meeting of the Committee was held on March 16, 1954 — more than a year ago.<sup>118</sup> Admittedly there was a meeting last January between Canadian and United States Ministers which was somewhat similar, both in composition and in intent, to a meeting of the Joint Committee.<sup>119</sup> But the meeting here on January 6th, by deliberate decision was not billed as a meeting of the Committee and was not regarded as a substitute for it by the United States authorities. Already the Joint Industrial Mobilization Committee is at least moribund, if not dead; and, in our opinion, the Joint Committee on trade and economic affairs may go the same way unless action is taken on the Canadian side before the summer to arrange another meeting.

3. In our judgment, a meeting early in June would come at a very appropriate time. According to present forecasts, Congress will not adjourn until about August 15. As a result, the fate of many of the economic measures in which we are most interested will, in all probability, still be undecided by early June. On the other hand, the situation here should have clarified enough by then so that the risks and possibilities will be readily discernible. We have no doubt that there will be as much for Canadian Ministers to worry about in six weeks time as there is at present. And their representations would come at a salutary moment.

<sup>118</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 525.

<sup>119</sup> Voir/See Document 105.

4. We do not mean that Ministers would be meeting in an atmosphere of crisis. Nor would we look for any spectacular agreement or any very marked change in United States foreign economic policy as a consequence of the meeting. But preventing undesirable developments can be as important as promoting some advance. As we have previously reported, protectionist pressures here have shown themselves to be surprisingly strong. If we are not to be too much hurt by them, the application of some contrary pressure on a continuing basis is necessary. A meeting of the Joint Committee, in our opinion, is best considered as a part of that continuing process. It seems to us that, even if it led to no very concrete results, it would serve a very useful purpose in reminding United States Ministers of how Canada is affected by United States foreign economic policy and by suggesting to them that what might seem like the easy way out of their domestic difficulties might not be so easy after all if the international repercussions were taken into account.

5. We realize that, in considering this proposal, you will require some indication of how we think matters are likely to stand here early in June. In the rest of this telegram we will synopsise our present forecasts in the various fields that might be the subject of discussion at a meeting of the Joint Committee.

6. Trade Agreements Act. We would imagine that by early June Congress will have extended the Trade Agreements Act in some form, or at the very least, be on the point of doing so. As we have indicated in previous messages, we doubt whether the various amendments to give additional protection to particular commodities will be successful. On the other hand, we expect that some amendment to limit the President's discretionary power under the escape-clause procedure will be approved. It hardly needs to be emphasized that such an amendment could be of major concern to us. The possibility must also be borne in mind that, as part of another general surrender, the Administration might agree to an extension of the act for only one year; but we think there is only an outside chance of that being the final outcome.

7. GATT. By early in June we would not expect the new GATT agreements to have reached the floor of either House Consideration of them, however, in the House Ways and Means Committee may well have progressed some distance. On the present showing, it seems almost as likely as not that Congress will not act on the agreement to establish an organization for trade co-operation until next year.

8. Customs simplification. The new bill on customs simplification which has been prepared by the Treasury, we think you will agree, is a very satisfactory measure. However, it has not yet been introduced into Congress, although we have been assured that that will happen within the next few days. By early in June we would expect its fate to be still undecided. So far it has not been the target for protectionist attacks. That may be due either to the fact that it has hardly yet been brought into the open, or to failure on the part of the protectionist forces to realize that its effect would be to facilitate foreign imports. Its great strength at the moment is that it has a convinced champion in the person of the Secretary of the Treasury. But we find it difficult to believe that the bill will not attract strong opposition once its terms become known.

9. Particular protectionist measures.<sup>120</sup> Even if the various amendments to HR 1 to raise protective barriers against imports of textiles, lead and zinc, crude oil and residual fuel oil, are all defeated, efforts must be anticipated to accomplish the purpose of these amendments by special legislation. In addition, the Administration's policy of restricting oil imports by voluntary restraint on the part of United States importers must cause us concern. There is also a measure before Congress to limit imports of fluorspar which we cannot overlook.

<sup>120</sup> Pour les détails, voir Section B./For details, see Section B.

10. Agriculture. When George McIvor, of the Canadian Wheat Board, was here earlier this month and saw many officials in the Department of Agriculture with the Agricultural Counsellor, he came to the conclusion that continuing and perhaps increasing difficulty for Canada's grain trade must be expected from the disposals policy of the United States. The Department of Agriculture, he observed, was under pressure from Congress to get rid of surpluses at a more rapid rate. He told us that he doubted whether Canada could do much to restrain the United States authorities. But some timely words from you and your colleagues might again have the effect of putting a brake on precipitate and damaging disposals, as they have done in the past.

11. Convertibility. It is widely assumed here, as elsewhere, that the Government of the United Kingdom will go to the country late in May, will be returned, and that further moves towards convertibility will probably follow shortly thereafter. On that assumption, it might well be that a discussion between Canadian and United States Ministers of some of the collateral problems would be useful at a meeting of the Joint Committee, if it could be arranged for early June. We will try to send you before long a separate message† on the present United States views on convertibility.

12. Defence Production. As we have already mentioned, the Joint Industrial Mobilization Committee now hardly exists. Only last week, for example, the Washington Office of the Department of Defence Production was informed by the Office of Defence Mobilization here that raw materials questions, on which a direct approach could have been made under the JIMC arrangements, were now to be referred to the State Department. Moreover, as we reported in our telegram WA-13 of January 5,† the United States authorities are likely to propose that the JIMC should be merged with the Joint Committee on trade and economic affairs. It seems to us that there are a number of defence questions which might well be considered at a meeting of the Joint Committee in June. In spite of Chappell's very vigorous and skillful activity, he has the impression that we are not now getting the kind of close cooperation in defence production matters that we had only a year or so ago. As one illustration he would cite the diffidence that has been noticeable here about letting contracts to the Canadian electronic industry to supply equipment for the distant early warning line. Another illustration would be the confusion there has been about the status of the waiver of the "buy-American" legislation granted by the United States Air Force to Canadian suppliers ever since the Department of Defence began to implement the President's executive order on the "buy-American" legislation of last December. Failure of cooperation in the defence production field might create serious difficulties for the Canadian defence programme; for example, the plans to build forty CF-105's will clearly require considerable cooperation from the United States services. At a meeting of the Joint Committee in June, therefore, it might be well to try to repair and improve cooperation in the defence production field.

13. If you agree with the proposal for a meeting of the Committee in early June, no doubt you would want us to invite United States Ministers to visit Ottawa. However, in view of the recent visit of the Secretary of State, we should perhaps be prepared to accept a meeting in Washington if a meeting in Ottawa were to prove inconvenient for Ministers here.

14. This telegram has been approved by the economic officers of the Embassy in synod assembled. Its contents had been thoroughly discussed with the Ambassador before he was called to Ottawa and we know that he is in complete agreement with it.<sup>121</sup> 403.

DTC/7-1385

Bref pour les ministresBrief for Ministers

[Ottawa], September 12, 1955

TRADE AND COMMERCIAL POLICY

The Canadian Government has informed the United States Government of its decision in principle to participate in the tariff negotiations which are planned to commence early in 1956 under the auspices of GATT.<sup>122</sup> At the same time, the Canadian Government has reserved the right to reconsider this decision if circumstances alter materially during the period which is to elapse before actual negotiations are commenced. In making this reservation, the Canadian Government had in mind uncertainties regarding possible restrictive legislation by the United States Congress and regarding the use that may be made of the new and revised escape procedures incorporated in recent legislation and of the waiver on agricultural products granted to the United States by the Contracting Parties to the GATT. The Canadian Government has expressed its hope that there will be no developments in the United States which would impair commitments made to Canada in trade agreements, and that the United States in administering its laws will continue to have regard to the common interest of all friendly countries in multilateral trade.

The Canadian Government has welcomed this initiative on the part of the United States Government to reduce tariffs, and thus promote the restoration and expansion of multilateral world trade. Even though the tariff negotiations will be somewhat limited in their scope, they may constitute a worthwhile step forward in the general reduction of barriers to international trade, a task which is of crucial importance to friendly and cooperative working relations among countries of the free world.

Arrangements for multilateral trade which have been worked out in GATT and in the policies of individual governments constitute the most realistic approach to these problems. Multilateralism, most-favoured-nation treatment and the reduction of barriers to trade provide a maximum opportunity for increased standards of living and prosperity in each of the countries which participate in world trade. Not only is this important in itself, but it is the indispensable basis of friendly and efficient working relations in other fields and in particular, in the fields of security and defence. If any other approach were to be adopted by Canada and the United States, the inevitable result would be to encourage isolationism and regionalism in the rest of the world with economic and strategic consequences which would be intolerable.

The United States and Canada share a common objective in the establishment of a system of multilateral trade and payments. There has, in recent years, been encouraging progress in the removal of discriminatory restrictions against the dollar area and in the adoption of policies looking towards freer trade. It is of the utmost importance that this momentum should not be lost.

<sup>121</sup> Une réunion de la Commission mixte s'était tenue en septembre. Voir le document 407.

A meeting of the Joint Committee was held in September. See Document 407.

<sup>122</sup> Voir/See Document 121.

The fact that some relaxation has taken place in international tensions gives added importance to the strengthening of international economic arrangements. There are disturbing signs at present that various countries may increasingly go their own way, with trade policies based on protection and discrimination, perhaps to a greater extent than at any time since the early 1930's. Competition in world markets is becoming keener and pressures for the maintenance of restrictions and for a consolidation of regional arrangements in Europe are stronger.

Policies of multilateral trade must rest chiefly upon the willingness of individual countries to recognize the principles of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The requisite strengthening of this Agreement can only be accomplished through United States leadership. It was concern on this point, more than any other, that led Canada to oppose the request of the United States to obtain a waiver in the GATT for the operation of Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The Canadian Government was concerned about the effect that this waiver would have in weakening the GATT as a whole. The United States waiver in the GATT inevitably makes it harder to resist requests by other countries for special arrangements to meet their own difficulties.

There have, in recent months, been disturbing indications that the pressures for a 'go slow' policy on dollar liberalization, and for the strengthening of regional arrangements in Europe, have gained some ground. In recent OEEC discussions of dollar liberalization, various European countries attempted to justify their lack of progress, or their absence of further plans for liberalization, by referring to the uncertainties surrounding the nature and direction of United States commercial policy. Reports from Europe indicate that liberal trade policies in Germany are suffering a serious setback. The new three-year bilateral agreement between France and Germany, which provides for substantially increased agricultural exports to Germany, is a case in point. Canada would hope, therefore, that in its consideration of commercial policy, and of particular demands for increased protection, the United States Administration will bear in mind the serious effects which a lack of positive leadership on the part of the United States would have upon the rest of the world.

The Canadian Government has repeatedly stressed the importance of the contribution which the United States Government might make by improving its customs laws. Imports into the United States, particularly of manufactured goods, are often appraised for duty at values far above their actual values. Other potential imports are prevented from taking place. The Canadian Government fully appreciates the repeated efforts which have been made to obtain new legislation to provide for customs simplification. The Canadian Government was disappointed, however, that the Treasury Department made it known that it was prepared in late August to compromise the substance of the Customs Simplification Bill in order to obtain its passage. The proposal that the new procedures should not be allowed to reduce effective tariff rates by more than 5% would mean that there would be no hope of real relief from existing valuations.

In reply to criticisms about procedures before the Tariff Commission for increased protection, the United States Government has frequently pointed to the cases in which the Tariff Commission has rejected applications or in which its recommendations for increased protection have been rejected by the President. There is, in spite of this, an impressive list of items, agricultural and otherwise, to which higher tariffs or quantitative restrictions have been applied. In addition, there has been some disturbing evidence of willingness on the part of the United States to restrict imports by advice to industry rather than by formal controls and this expedient is just as damaging as import quotas. The very number and the continuity of cases have had an unfortunate impact on exporters in other countries who might be interested in finding markets in the United States. In countries outside the United States, the opinion is frequently expressed that to build up a successful export business to the United States is to be exposed to an undue risk of adverse governmental action.

The Canadian Government has been disturbed at the inclusion in the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955 of the new escape clause which provides powers to restrict imports which are considered to impair the national security.<sup>123</sup> The Canadian Government sincerely hopes that it will not be found necessary to use these powers. If these powers were to be used, they would have unfortunate and adverse effects on friendly countries which consider themselves as allies and associates of the United States. Use of these powers, furthermore, would strike at the basic principles of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The Canadian Government has been able to envisage no method by which these powers could be used consistently with the GATT. In view of these considerations, the Canadian Government would urge continuing recognition by the United States that its security interests are vitally affected by its trade relations with other countries.

The United States Government has provided itself with powers to take a forward step through further tariff negotiations. The fact that these powers are accompanied, however, by other provisions for the extended use of escape procedures represents a step in the contrary direction. It is recognized that the forms of these broadened escape clauses do not impose any more restraint upon the President than in the past and it is to be hoped that executive discretion will be exercised in full recognition of commitments made by the United States to other countries. When it is remembered that the entire parcel of new provisions in the field of United States commercial policy have reference to a period of three years ahead, it is questionable whether the United States initiatives in this field, which are now in sight, are sufficient to maintain the forward momentum which will be required over the whole period. When commercial policies become defensive or stagnant, there is always the danger that protectionism will take over. With a further round of tariff negotiations now in prospect, it might be premature to raise the broad problem of new initiatives in international trade policy. We cannot possibly over-emphasize, however, the continuing importance of avoiding and minimizing the occasions in which individual governments resort to protective measures, such as the increasing of tariffs and the introduction of quantitative restrictions.<sup>124</sup>

<sup>123</sup> Voir/See Document 389.

<sup>124</sup> Bien que libellé dans une forme présentable à la délégation américaine, ce mémoire n'a apparemment jamais été communiqué aux États-Unis. Although drafted in a form suitable for presentation to the American delegation, this brief apparently was not given to the United States.

404.

DTC/7-1385

Bref pour les ministresBrief for Ministers

[Ottawa], September 14, 1955

VOTE ON THE "CONTINENTAL APPROACH"

The question may be raised by United States Ministers of preferred treatment for imports from Canada in cases where the United States decides to restrict imports for national security reasons. There may, at first sight, appear to be some immediate advantages for Canada in some form of permanent arrangement analogous to the wartime "continental approach", by which Canadian suppliers would obtain special status over more distant suppliers with respect to U.S. trade restrictions.

However, such an approach to Canada's trade relations with the United States presents most serious dangers. Much of the strength of Canada's position in seeking to influence United States trade policies is based on the fact that both Canada and the United States are formally committed to internationally agreed principles and rules of conduct in world trade. It is in Canada's own interest to strengthen this broad basis for its trade relations with the United States, rather than to accept a special status which would isolate her from other countries and undermine the international arrangements in which she has taken such a leading part.

Even from the point of view of narrow advantage, Canada's acceptance of preferred treatment in the context of the "continental approach" would provide no assurance against new arguments by U.S. producers for restricting imports from Canada, based on other than national security considerations. Such acceptance of preferred status would almost certainly involve exposing the Canadian Government to U.S. government pressures for special treatment for the United States, not only in the field of trade, but also in the development of Canadian natural resources, and these pressures would be difficult for Canada to resist. In addition, such special arrangements between Canada and the United States would have serious and damaging effects on the commercial policies of other countries, and would give new stimulus to the adoption of discriminatory and regional arrangements in Europe and elsewhere.

In the formulation of its commercial policy, the United States should clearly appraise its national security interests, not solely in terms of Canada's partnership in continental defence, but in terms of the economic strength of the Western world as a whole.

It is appropriate to hope that the United States government will recognize that the national security of the United States is vitally affected by its trade relations with other countries. Far from being an inhibiting factor in the development of liberal trade policies, national security considerations would seem to make it imperative for the United States to press forward with such policies.

405.

DEA/50316-2-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], September 23, 1955

JOINT UNITED STATES-CANADIAN COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS: CONTINENTAL DEFENCE CONSIDERATION IN UNITED STATES TRADE RELATIONS

You might wish to have this supplementary note on the so-called "continental approach", which I understand was the subject of some discussion by Ministers yesterday when the brief for the Joint Committee meetings was under discussion.<sup>125</sup>

In preparing the notes on this subject for Ministers, officials were concerned at the possible acceptance of "continentalism" as a principle in trade relations with the United States. It may be that in individual cases such as, for example, in connection with the U.S. "voluntary" restrictions on imports of crude oil, it will be found expedient for us to accept a favoured position. But by accepting such a relationship for a wide range of items, we would run the danger of subjecting Canadian production to the changing whims of the U.S. Congress and Administration. "Continentalism" as a principle would also expose the development of Canadian natural resources to U.S. Government pressures, which it would be difficult for us to resist.

A broad application of the so-called "continental" approach might also have unfortunate political consequences; it might appear to our allies overseas that we had lost some interest in their economic fate and, with the United States, were prepared to go it alone. Aside from obvious economic dangers, such a course would make it difficult for us to obtain from abroad, and particularly from our NATO partners, the necessary co-operation in the political and military fields. It would encourage uneconomic regionalism in Europe and would likely have an adverse effect on the maintenance and development of important overseas markets for Canadian goods.

In the reasonably precise field of military defence the acceptance of the "continental approach" has served us reasonably well, although I think we have found occasion on non-military grounds to reject its full application. When considering the application of "continentalism" to the trade field, it should be borne in mind that the U.S. interpretation of "national security" is too often based on political expedience rather than on legitimate security considerations.

J. L[ÉGER]

<sup>125</sup> Aucun compte rendu de cette réunion n'a été retrouvé./No record of this meeting was located.

406.

DEA/50316-2-40

NoteMemorandum

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], September 26, 1955

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PROGRAMMES FOR THE DISPOSAL OF AGRICULTURAL SURPLUSES<sup>126</sup>

On September 9, 1954 President Eisenhower said:

".....it is essential that our agricultural foreign trade policy take into account the position of other countries and that our policy be understood by them. Today, the magnitude of the United States holdings of many commodities is such as to be capable of demoralizing world commodity markets should a policy of reckless selling abroad be pursued. This potential greatly alarms other countries despite the fact that past behavior of the United States has shown no intention of pursuing a harmful policy."

In the view of the Canadian Government the surplus disposal policies being followed by the United States are having the demoralizing effects on world grain markets referred to by the President.

While the purpose of the various methods of surplus disposal may be to enlarge consumption, the main effect seems to have been to displace commercial sales of the United States and other exporting countries, including Canada.

In an effort to dispose of surpluses, the United States has provided grain without charge to various countries in the form of famine relief and emergency assistance and has sold grain for local currencies and in exchange for strategic materials. Each of these methods can be defended in principle. In recent months, however, it appears to the Canadian Government that the various methods of disposal have been pushed to the point where the avowed purposes have been submerged in the attempt to enlarge United States exports.

In addition, the United States has embarked upon a policy of disposing of parcel lots of grain on a bid basis. This is a most destructive and demoralizing form of marketing.

While the United States has been engaged in promoting exports by these non-commercial transactions and concessionary sales, Canada has maintained a high degree of stability in her offerings of grain, particularly wheat. Since the end of 1953, Canadian prices of wheat, basis Fort William/Port Arthur, have moved within a comparatively limited range. From March 21 to September 7 of this year, the price of One Northern wheat was held at $1.76 per bushel, Canadian funds. On September 8 the price was lowered by 1 cent, where it has remained since.

In effect, Canada has held an "umbrella" over the United States for many months. Without this stable marketing policy by Canada, there is every reason to believe that wheat marketing conditions would have been chaotic.

The United States, naturally enough, wishes to sell its accumulated surplus. Canada recognizes, too, the strong efforts that are being made by the United States Administration to adjust domestic production so as to avoid the further accumulation of surpluses.

On the other hand, it should not be overlooked that whereas failure to reduce farm surpluses at a rapid enough rate is embarrassing to the United States, a failure by Canada to maintain reasonable markets for grain abroad is not only embarrassing, it threatens the very foundations of our economic structure and affects immediately and intimately the lives and incomes of all the farmers of the Prairie Provinces.

<sup>126</sup> Voir aussi/See also Documents 366-371.

As illustrations of the effect of the United States surplus disposal methods upon markets for Canadian wheat, the following table compares the proportion of imports of certain countries supplied by Canada in the 5 years ending July 31, 1954 and the past year.

EFFECT OF U.S.A. SELLING POLICIES ON TRADITIONAL CANADIAN WHEAT & FLOUR MARKETS

Country	Total US/Can. Export [Wheat and Flour] 1949-50 to 1953-54 (Thousand Bushels)	% Canadian	Total US/Can. Exports [Wheat and Flour] 1954-1955 (Thousand Bushels)	% Canadian
	Bolivia	13,513	49.7	3,697
Egypt	56,027	32.7	2,258	-
Israel	38,516	39.4	10,977	23.7
Lebanon	14,742	51.1	3,370	3.1
Libya	2,644	100.0	1,159	19.3
Peru	27,450	42.1	2,497	12.3
Spain	41,043	26.6	2,254	-
Yugoslavia	49,096	30.8	43,877	8.3

Not all markets have been equally affected, but it may be said that all markets have been affected to some extent by United States surplus disposal methods.

During the crop year ended June 30, United States exports of wheat and flour rose by 56 million bushels. In approximately the same period, Canadian exports dropped by 4 million bushels. Continuation of present policies will have even more detrimental effect on Canada's position in the present crop year.

Our impression is that sales of United States wheat on ordinary commercial terms have suffered even more than Canadian sales by the methods of non-commercial surplus disposal being followed by the United States. It is certainly doubtful whether these methods do promote the long-run development of export markets for United States grain.

In brief, the Canadian Government urges that the United States should change its surplus disposal methods immediately so as to restore some measure of confidence to world grain markets, avoid further serious damage to the commercial interests of the United States as well as those of other smaller and less diversified exporting countries such as Canada, and avoid the chaotic situation that would arise if Canada were forced to abandon her stable marketing policies.

407.

DF/8522/U585-1

Résumé du compte-rendu de la réunion de la Commission mixte canado-américaine du commerce et des Affaires économiques

Summary Record of Meeting of Joint Canada-United States Committee on Trade and Economic Affairs

SECRET

Ottawa, September 26, 1955

Mr. Pearson as Chairman expressed the sympathy of the Canadian side with President Eisenhower in his illness.<sup>127</sup> It was to be hoped that he would soon be restored to his full health and vigour. Not only the Canadian members but all of Canada appreciated the President's attitude towards trade matters and the efforts which he was making to improve international relations generally. As the leader of the Allied Forces during the war and during the early period of NATO's history, President Eisenhower had come to belong to Canada and the other North Atlantic countries as well as to the United States.

<sup>127</sup> Le 23 septembre 1955, le président Eisenhower subit une crise cardiaque.
On September 23, 1955, President Eisenhower suffered a heart attack.

Mr. Pearson thought that this meeting was being held at a time when the questions with which it was concerned were all of even greater importance in the new international atmosphere than they had been before. Whether or not there was a sound basis for this change in atmosphere, the fear which had helped to bring and hold the Western countries together had diminished. It was therefore all the more important that economic policies should strengthen and not weaken the associations of which Canada and the United States were a part.

Mr. Pearson then noted that the Provisional Agenda for the meeting consisted of the following items:

- (1) Exchange of views on general commercial policies and prospects;
- (2) Review of progress of international trade and payments problems;
- (3) Discussion on agricultural policies and problems of surplus;
- (4) Other business.

In reply Mr. Dulles expressed the appreciation of the U.S. Secretaries for the remarks which Mr. Pearson had made concerning President Eisenhower.

Mr. Dulles also agreed with Mr. Pearson's observations concerning the importance of economic relations in the new atmosphere which had developed in recent months. He noted that with the lessening of fear the cement which had been holding the various Western groups of countries together was in danger of dissolving. He himself was not certain that there was sufficient justification for the dissipation of fear which had occurred. There was still at least the possibility that the Soviets might engage in manoeuvres which could lead to small wars involving the United States and the West (for example, in connection with relations between Israel and the Arab States). He felt that the Soviet actions were also increasing the tension between Eastern and Western Germany.

Mr. Dulles indicated that the Agenda which had been proposed was agreeable to the U.S. members.

Trade and Commercial Policies

Mr. Dulles then went on to refer to the fact that the United States was the greatest productive unit in the world and that everyone was concerned in whatever the United States did. Something which had to be borne in mind in connection with attitudes in the United States was the fact that while international trade in the aggregate is important for the United States, it is much less so in relation to individual countries. It was, therefore, often difficult for people in the United States to realize how seriously their actions affecting such trade could hurt other countries which were more dependent on international transactions. Moreover, in the rather smaller part of the economy represented by international trade, imports were much more conspicuous than exports. The problems created by imported goods were there for all to see. Goods which were exported just disappeared across the border and were lost sight of. The fact that such exports yielded important returns for individual U.S. producers was not as apparent to the general public as was the fact that imported goods were causing or aggravating difficulties for particular localities.

Despite the political difficulty in resisting protective pressures, the United States was continuing to adhere to a settled liberal policy and to provide a large domestic market for other countries. It had to be recognized, nevertheless, that a certain measure of protection would inevitably be given to domestic industries, where imports threaten domestic production.

Mr. Dulles remarked that protective actions attracted a considerable amount of attention mainly for the reason that the U.S. record generally was so good. Any exception was bound to stand out rather prominently. He remarked that in commenting on views expressed to him by one of the U.K. representatives, he had made this point by observing that a small speck on the face of a beautiful girl was more conspicuous than grime on the face of a coal miner.

As a practical matter, Mr. Dulles thought it is important for the rest of the world to appreciate that if imports passed a certain percentage the pressures for protection would become irresistible. Such percentage limits should be regarded as danger signals and other countries would be wise not to try to exceed them. They should endeavour to show a certain amount of self restraint.

Mr. Dulles then referred to certain specific instances in which protection had been sought very vigorously. For example, in the lead and zinc case, the arguments for protection had been strong but the Administration had found a solution which avoided direct action against imports. This "solution", to be workable, required that other countries should not attempt to sell too much of these commodities in the United States for stockpiling or other purposes. Similarly, in connection with petroleum, the Administration was pleased that it had been able to avoid formal restrictions so far by encouraging U.S. importers to be moderate in bringing in oil which would compete with the domestic product. In the bicycle case, sales of foreign bicycles in the United States had risen to a point where it would have been "very difficult" not to provide some domestic protection; the Administration had given the minimum amount of protection that could be got away with (a little over 88 cents per cycle). In the case of the Chief Joseph Dam, the full facts did not seem to have been appreciated abroad; the Administration had understandably found it necessary to take account of the serious unemployment situation existing in the electrical industry of the Pittsburgh area.

On balance, Mr. Dulles was satisfied, U.S. policies were liberal. This was evidenced by the fact that the gold reserves were going down. He thought the U.S. economy was bearing more than an equal share of the maintenance of buying power of other countries. The U.S. record, in Mr. Dulles' view, compared well with that of other countries.

Mr. Weeks described the "escape clause" mechanism. He remarked that such a device was necessary if tariff rates were not to be put at a very high level. He noted that over the past several years, the "average" rates of duties had been greatly reduced. At the same time, actions taken under the escape clauses had not really been very numerous. The Tariff Commission had reported on only 61 cases, which was a small number in comparison with the thousands of items in the U.S. Tariff. In only 13 of these cases had the Commission recommended action and the President had in fact acted in only 6 instances. Mr. Weeks enquired whether it would be preferable to have high tariffs with no safety valve or a lower tariff with escape clauses. Whatever the answer, the "political facts of life" made such a mechanism unavoidable. Mr. Weeks acknowledged that the escape clauses had recently been "liberalized" but not, he thought, in a sense harmful to trade relations with other nations.

Mr. Humphrey indicated his agreement with Mr. Dulles' remarks and described it as a "classic statement" of the U.S. position. Mr. Humphrey regretted that U.S. policies, and the considerations which lay behind them, were not adequately understood abroad. The methods which the United States had been using were necessary if the objectives were to be pursued in a practical manner.

Mr. Humphrey noted that the "dollar scarcity" had been reduced over recent years and expressed the view that this had resulted largely from a re-distribution of U.S. wealth through such means as trade, tourism, investment, and military and FOA assistance. The gold reserves of the United States had declined by about $8 billion. The gains of reserves by other countries, at about $11 billion, were somewhat larger. In Mr. Humphrey's view, this trend could not continue.

Mr. Humphrey thought that it would be a mistake for the rest of the world to expect that it could cover its dollar requirements by trade alone. It was just not practicable for other countries, which would have had considerable dollar deficits if special forms of assistance had not been available, to make up the difference by trade; not only trade but also tourism, investment and other private forms of financing would be necessary. In his view "an awful lot" must be done in the rest of the world to attract U.S. investment. Nationalistic tendencies and socialistic systems of governments and the state control of industry deterred private investment in many countries. Everybody must recognize that an indefinite increase in imports was just not possible. If other countries attempted to take too large a share of the U.S. market there would be political revolution against liberal trading policies.

The rest of the world must accept these facts and limitations on the United States. There was a slowing down elsewhere and there would also be a slowing down in the United States. Undoubtedly, there would be a period of transition while other countries came to realize that they can only get U.S. capital with an effort. They would have to appreciate that they could not rely only on trade and that they would have to make such an effort. There must inevitably be a reduction in "putting dollars abroad" by the U.S. Government.

Mr. Pearson remarked that perhaps trade could not do the whole job but that job could not be done without trade.

Mr. Howe pointed out that Canadian policies had never envisaged a bilateral balancing of accounts. We could only manage by earning surpluses with others with which to cover our trade deficits with the United States. Canada, therefore, naturally favoured a multilateral system of trade.

The U.S. authorities had been informed the Canadian Government was intending to try to take part in the forthcoming tariff negotiations.

Mr. Howe stressed the difficulties which Canadian exporters experienced in getting into the U.S. market. Customs procedures were a serious obstacle. He hoped very much that the Customs Simplification Bill would be passed.

Mr. Howe noted that there had been some reduction in discrimination in several European countries and in several countries of the Commonwealth. He was not sure how long this situation would last since a good number of countries were undergoing a fair degree of inflation.

Mr. Howe indicated that he was "alarmed" by some of the new escape clauses in the U.S. trade legislation; he expressed the hope that additional duties would be applied only when real injury to domestic production had been proven. In connection with the "national security" escape clause, he wondered whether Canada should be regarded as in a preferred position. In connection with oil, which Mr. Dulles had mentioned, Mr. Howe hoped that if restrictions were applied, voluntarily or otherwise, Canada would be considered as a case apart. Our oil reserves after all were reserves for the whole continent.

Mr. Howe expressed some concern at the tendency for cases to reappear frequently before the Tariff Commission, thus creating almost continuous uncertainty. He mentioned particularly unprocessed fish which had been considered by the Tariff Commission before and was now apparently coming up once again.

In connection with Mr. Weeks' question, Mr. Howe thought it might be better to have higher rates of duties and no escape clause since then, at least, the uncertainty would be removed.

Mr. Howe welcomed the action which the United States had taken on oats and barley. He indicated that Canada would be anxious not to add to the burdens of the United States by sending too large quantities of oats and barley to them. He hoped that this action taken with respect to oats and barley would encourage and stimulate further removals of restriction.

Mr. Humphrey remarked concerning the Customs Simplification Bill that the Committee which had been considering it will hold it where it is until the next Session. The fear of a filibuster had made it seem unwise to attempt to complete action at the recent Session. The Bill will come up at the earliest opportunity at the next Session and the process of acting on it will not have to start at the beginning.

Mr. Pearson enquired whether the Bill which will be dealt with at the next Session will include the amendment which the Administration had accepted. Mr. Humphrey replied that it would. Mr. Weeks commented that there was a certain amount of protection embedded in present customs procedures and it would be very difficult to interfere with this protection which had been enjoyed traditionally by various industries.

With reference to the national security escape clause, Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Dulles asserted that the Office of Defence Mobilization, in determining security requirements, would treat all of North America and the Caribbean as a unit. Mr. Weeks agreed that in all of the interdepartmental discussions which he had attended in Washington concerning the security escape clause North America had been treated as a single unit.

Mr. Dulles returned to a scheme which he had stated earlier and said it was a pity that the people who export had not developed political influence comparable with that of those who are affected by imports. It would be most desirable if they could do so.

Mr. Benson reported that all of the U.S. farm organizations had supported the Trade Agreements Extension Act (H.R. 1), including those farm groups whose commodities are not exported (e.g. the dairy producers). He detected among the farm population a growing support for freeing and increasing trade. This trend was so evident today compared with ten or fifteen years ago.

Mr. Dulles recalled the struggle which the Administration had had in getting H.R. 1 through Congress. He had never confronted committees which were more hostile than those which were considering this legislation. Mr. Benson said that he had had a similar experience with the congressional committees on this matter. Mr. Weeks thought that a good deal of the opposition to H.R. 1 was based on fear of Japanese competition. Mr. Howe remarked at this point that the competition which Canada had encountered since concluding a most-favoured-nation trade agreement with Japan had not been on an unfair basis. The Japanese apparently were trying hard to be very careful. They were selling "quality" goods at prices which could not be regarded as unreasonable. Mr. Dulles also thought that the Japanese were trying to behave better than in the past. He observed rather sadly that the United States had not received as much help as it had hoped for from its friends in accommodating Japanese exports in international trade. Mr. Pearson remarked that perhaps the United States had a special responsibility in view of its objections to Japanese trade with the Chinese mainland. Mr. Dulles thought that any idea of a large volume of trade between Japan and the Mainland was a mirage. It was an illusion which had been encouraged by some in Japan for domestic political purposes. Mr. Weeks added that Japan was merely subject to the CHINCOM list, like all the rest of us. He confirmed that the Japanese appeared to be attempting to do better than they had before the war and referred to problems which two U.S. silverware companies had run into, involving a pirating of designs. He understood that the Japanese were now straightening out this particular case.

International Trade and Payments Problems

Mr. Humphrey observed that the U.K. situation had become a good deal tighter in recent months. It seemed clear that they were going to have to delay convertibility and to "take some more restrictive measures on trade and expenditures".

Mr. Humphrey noted that, in any case, de facto convertibility was already pretty widespread for sterling. Other currencies also looked rather promising. For instance, the position of the franc had improved greatly. France now had (partly as a result of the absorption of U.S. aid intended for Indo-China) about $1.9 billion in reserves compared with $2.3 billion for the whole sterling area. Moreover, the French reserves were going up steadily while the sterling area's reserves were going down.

Mr. Humphrey asserted that the United States would support the United Kingdom in moves towards convertibility whenever the latter judged the time to be right. In his own view, it was better to move later than too soon. If convertibility were to be undertaken too soon, and it was not possible to maintain it, "chaos would follow". If the move were to be delayed it would always be possible to correct the situation by undertaking convertibility at any time thereafter.

He thought that the United Kingdom had pushed fiscal and monetary controls about as far as they could go. They had used "everything in the book". They now had to cut down government expenditures and restrain import demands. In Mr. Humphrey's view, the United Kingdom had gone too fast too soon, and now had to turn back somewhat. They had to readjust themselves to the practical world. He thought that Mr. Butler's approach was at present more realistic than it had been.

Mr. Benson enquired whether our sales of apples to the United Kingdom were restricted. Mr. Howe and Mr. Gardiner indicated that they were limited and referred to the history of the apples case, including the fact that the United States and Canada were usually consulted in some degree.

Mr. Humphrey repeated that "we want sterling convertible — when they can do it".

Mr. Pearson enquired whether the convertibility which was desired was convertibility without discrimination.

Mr. Humphrey declared that this was the objective so far as practicable but he thought the question of how much discrimination could be dispensed with without endangering convertibility was a delicate and difficult one.

Mr. Harris remarked that it was hard to see how countries (such as the United Kingdom) could go on buying raw materials at a reasonable rate (from the United States, Canada and other countries) if they were not given the opportunity to sell the finished products abroad. Mr. Harris described the attitude which the Canadian Government had adopted towards pressures for an increase in the woollen tariff. He realized at the time that there were some risks in not providing additional protection but in fact the consequences had not been too serious. He wondered whether the United States might not occasionally be prepared to take calculated risks of the kind which Canada had taken in the case of wool. In general, he hoped that a large part of the unbalance in international payments could be covered by trade.

Agricultural Problems

Mr. Howe went over in detail the recent history of U.S. wheat transactions including deals based on local currencies and referred to the damaging effect of the tendency of late to sell wheat to ordinary customers on the basis of prices resulting from bids at a good deal less than the normal level. He supplied the U.S. members with several statistical tables and a memorandum setting forth the Canadian views.<sup>128</sup> He noted particularly the extent to which Canada had been displaced during the past year in markets where considerable quantities of Canadian wheat had been sold between 1949 and 1954. Mr. Howe doubted that the special programmes which the United States had undertaken had resulted in more than five or ten million bushels increase in consumption. The rest of the special sales or gifts made by the United States had been largely at the expense of ordinary trade. He enquired whether it was a good thing in the mutual interests of the two countries to proceed on the present basis. He reported that no forward positions were being taken in Canadian wheat now although normally there would have been a good deal of forward purchasing at this time of year. Most countries wanted to wait to see what bargains might be available from the United States. The practices which the United States was following were destroying confidence in the U.S. prices and probably in wheat prices generally. Mr. Howe was afraid the situation would get worse from year to year. He indicated that he would be delighted to have those in Canada directly concerned with the wheat trade go down to Washington and try to work out something which would restore confidence.

Mr. Benson agreed wholeheartedly with Mr. Howe that consultations should take place on the surplus and marketing situation. At the same time he felt that the United States had held an umbrella over world wheat prices. If the United States had not supported its wheat prices and showed considerable restraint in disposing of its surpluses, prices generally would have been a good deal lower.

Mr. Benson thought that the United States was trying conscientiously to observe the principles set out by the FAO. They were trying to increase consumption and reduce production within the United States. They were endeavouring to dispose of surpluses in an orderly manner. When special terms seemed necessary they always tried to get assurances that the quantities involved would be additional to normal takings (although he realized that it was hard to enforce such assurances effectively). The United States was also consulting so far as practicable with other countries concerned, both currently and in advance.

Mr. Howe questioned whether there was much consultation in recent months and noted that several deals had come as a surprise to him and to the Wheat Board Representatives in Washington.

Mr. Benson said that he would look into the question of present arrangements for consultation and that he would be quite happy to sponsor special consultations directly between the United States and Canada on the subject of wheat. He thought that three or four people from each side might meet together and go over individual cases. Mr. Gardiner suggested that it would be desirable to include in the Canadian party a representative of the Department of Agriculture acquainted with the production side. Mr. Howe agreed.

Mr. Benson noted that current production of wheat in the United States was about in balance. They would not have a significant problem if only the accumulated surpluses could be removed.

Generally, Mr. Benson was optimistic about the future of U.S. agricultural policies. The Administration had got about 90% of what it had wanted in the way of flexibility. The Bill for fixed supports for farm prices would be picked up next year at the point which it had reached this year. There would be a real struggle ahead in the Congressional debates next year.

<sup>128</sup> Voir/See Document 406.

In the case of wheat, the United States did not feel that the amount which it was exporting represented an improper share of the world market. Mr. Benson then quoted some statistics for the period 1940-1949 and certain figures for last year. His general conclusion was that Canada had not done badly since 1940.

Mr. Howe again emphasized the disastrous effects for world trade in grain of the recent U.S. practice of offering lots of grain on a bid basis. He suggested that there might be scope in the U.S. for the domestic disposal of a part of the existing surplus at export prices.

Mr. Benson replied that the question of domestic surplus disposal for feed purposes of the lower grades of wheat (produced in the corn belt) was one which was being considered actively by the U.S. Administration. While special legislation would be required for this purpose with the corn crop down and livestock production at an all time high (and domestic consumption of meat products increasing), this might well be an appropriate time to initiate such a programme.

Mr. Howe and Mr. Benson agreed again that consultations on the whole range of questions involved would be desirable.<sup>129</sup>

Mr. Benson then enquired concerning Canada's attitude towards the International Wheat Agreement. He indicated that the United States had not yet reached firm conclusions although the general sentiment was inclined towards continuation.

Mr. Howe expressed the view that the IWA provided a useful forum and he thought it should be continued particularly if the United Kingdom and the United States joined in. His very definite impression was that the United Kingdom would come in. Mr. Benson, on the other hand, understood from his conversations in London that the United Kingdom had not yet firmed up its position. Concerning the U.S. attitude, Mr. Benson remarked that what was in the Randall Report on this subject might have dampened enthusiasm in some quarters.<sup>130</sup> The farm organizations, however, were supporting the Agreement. It was not possible to say what Congress would do in the end.

Mr. Pearson emphasized that there was no single subject in relations between the two countries today which was more controversial in Canada than the trade in wheat.

Mr. Benson asked whether anything was being done in Canada to reduce production or increase consumption. Mr. Gardiner replied that the planted acreage was currently about eight million acres below average. He thought that the position in Canada with respect to changes in production and consumption was not unlike that in the United States.

Mr. Gardiner expressed his appreciation at the fact that the United States was allowing relatively free importation of Canadian livestock. He referred to the troublesome imports of cheese which were at present coming into Canada from New Zealand. The New Zealanders apparently expected that Canada should be willing to receive about the same amount of cheese from them as Canada was exporting to other markets. In other dairy products the position was not too difficult although there was a butter surplus of some ten million pounds which created problems. Mr. Gardiner thought that the United States had behaved very well in its disposal of surplus dairy products and other perishables. Mr. Gardiner indicated that Canada would not wish to produce dairy products for export and was trying to keep production down near the domestic consumption level.

<sup>129</sup> Voir/See Document 370.

<sup>130</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 525.

Mr. Dulles expressed his admiration for the job which Mr. Benson was doing even though they sometimes had differences of opinion. If the Administration were to be defeated on the general broad programme which Mr. Benson was sponsoring the future would be difficult indeed.

Mr. Pearson appreciated the problems confronting the United States but hoped that they in turn would realize that their actions had disproportionate effects on Canada.

Mr. Pearson and Mr. Howe shared the views which Mr. Dulles had expressed concerning the very great imagination and courage which Mr. Benson was showing in connection with his general agricultural programme.

Mr. Benson suggested that whatever might be said about Public Law 480<sup>131</sup> it was a good deal better, from the point of view of other countries, than the uninhibited use by the C.C.C. of its existing authority to sell on almost any terms.

Other Business

Mr. Weeks referred to what he understood was the Canadian practice of valuing goods which had passed through foreign trade zones in the United States as though they had been subject to U.S. duties (or at least to value them at U.S. market prices rather than at the prices prevailing in the country from which the goods came originally). The Canadian side indicated that this question would be looked into.

Mr. Weeks also raised the matter of compulsory licensing of pharmaceutical manufacture in connection with Sections 41 and 42 of the Canadian Patents Act. Mr. Howe remarked that a Royal Commission was now reviewing the Patents Act and he thought this subject could be drawn to the attention of that Commission.

In connection with the subject of "securities frauds" which had been indicated as a matter which might be discussed by the Joint Committee, it was noted that this topic had been talked about privately the previous evening and that the Canadian Government would shortly be considering a possible reference to the Supreme Court of the decision by Justice Scott in the Link and Green case. It was also observed that Mr. Brownell, the U.S. Attorney-General, and Mr. Garson would be attending some meetings together within the next few weeks and would probably have an opportunity for some discussion of this matter at that time.<sup>132</sup>

Communiqué

The Committee discussed the draft communiqué. There was a reluctance on the U.S. side to retain a reference to the fact that, in making progress in trade and payments problems, other countries looked to the "larger trading countries" for leadership. It was suggested that if the United States was intended to be embraced in this term the impression might be created that they were contemplating something beyond their present legislation. The U.S. Secretaries thought that this would be quite misleading. The reference was, therefore, dropped.

In the section on agricultural surpluses, the draft communiqué had referred to "consultations with Canada and other interested countries". It was suggested by the Canadian side that the word "closer" should be inserted before "consultations" in order to indicate that some improvement was expected. The reference to "other interested countries" was deleted partly because this was a communiqué having to do only with the United States and Canada and partly because the inclusion of this reference might weaken the effect of the sentence on Canadian public opinion since it would then appear to be merely a re-statement of something which had been said many times before.

<sup>131</sup> Voir/See Document 366n91.

<sup>132</sup> Voir/See Document 410.

The draft communiqué had also intimated that the progress which had been made in removing restrictions and reducing discrimination during the past year was "heartening". The accuracy of this statement was questioned by Mr. Humphrey and others and it was therefore modified merely to record the fact that some progress had been made without indicating whether or not it was particularly heartening.

The final text of the communiqué is attached.<sup>133</sup>

SECTION D

FRAUDE EN MATIÈRE DE VALEURS MOBILIÈRES SECURITIES FRAUD

408.

DEA/12216-6-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, October 24, 1955

EXTRADITION

POLITICAL REASONS FOR SUBMITTING LINK AND GREEN REFERENCE TO THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA1. Scope of Memorandum

The Minister of Justice is presenting to the Cabinet, at this week's Cabinet meeting, a draft submission to the Governor in Council, recommending that two questions be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada for hearing and consideration in regard to the Scott Judgment in the Link and Green extradition case. The Minister of Justice's draft submission to the Governor in Council will explain the legal position. The purpose of this memorandum is to set out the political reasons that make this action necessary.

2. Extradition Convention

Extradition arrangements between Canada and foreign countries are carried into effect in this country by the operation of the Extradition Act. In 1951 Canada and the United States signed a Supplementary Extradition Convention which was expressly designed to extend the existing extradition arrangements between the two countries to cover offences involving fraudulent dealings with securities.<sup>134</sup>

3. Link and Green Case

In December, 1954 Associate Chief Justice W.B. Scott of the Superior Court of Quebec, Montreal District, refused the application of the United States Government for the extradition of W.H. Link and H.M. Green on charges involving fraudulent dealings with securities under the Extradition Act, pursuant to the 1951 Supplementary Extradition Convention. The United States Government applied to the Supreme Court of Canada for leave to appeal the decision. The Supreme Court refused the application. The Court did not pass on the substance of the judgment, as it considered that it did not have jurisdiction to hear appeals in extradition cases.

<sup>133</sup> Voir Canada, Ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, volume 7, N° 10, octobre 1955, pp. 275-276.
See Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Volume 7, No. 10, October 1955, pp. 270-271.

<sup>134</sup> Voir/See Volume 17, Document 840.

Subsequently the United States Government has expressed in two official Notes to the Canadian Government its concern over the problem caused in the United States by fraudulent securities offerings emanating from Canada; at the same time indicating that its fears are heightened by its concern lest the decision of Scott, J. have the effect of nullifying the 1951 Supplementary Extradition Convention. Furthermore, it has asked indirectly whether the Canadian Government might refer the judgment to the Supreme Court of Canada.

4. Action taken by the United States Congress

Subsequent to the Scott Judgment, strenuous press campaigns developed in the United States against the so-called "Canadian stocketeers". Also, Senator Wiley in a statement in the Senate on June 17, 1955, proposed the adoption of certain methods for the control of trans-border operations of fraudulent securities. Moreover, on July 29, Senator Fulbright introduced in the United States Senate a bill designed to prohibit the use of United States mail, telephone and telegraph facilities by foreign security dealers who refused to enter the United States to face charges of violating United States securities regulations. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee is scheduled to conduct a hearing on Senator Fulbright's bill. As yet, however, the Canadian Government has no information as to when this hearing will be held. At this hearing the State Department expects to be asked to comment upon the international aspects of the securities frauds problem.

5. Views of the Minister of Justice

The Minister of Justice is of the opinion that it is important to the administration of the Extradition Treaty between Canada and the United States that this reference should be made to the Supreme Court of Canada.

6. Conclusions

By making this reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Canadian Government will be taking the measures open to it to meet the problem of fraudulent securities offerings across the border. Should the Canadian Government, on the other hand, decide not to make this reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, an awkward situation would be likely to develop. The United States Government would be frustrated in its efforts to solve the fraudulent securities problem and it would be in a position to place the blame on the Canadian Government. Such a situation clearly must be avoided if at all possible.

For these reasons the Department of External Affairs supports the recommendation of the Minister of Justice that the Scott Judgment be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

J. L[ÉGER]

409.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], October 26, 1955

CANADA-U.S. EXTRADITION TREATY; REFERENCE TO THE SUPREME COURT

12. The Minister of Justice, referring to discussion at the meeting of September 28th, 1955, submitted a recommendation for a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada of two questions arising out of difficulties which had been encountered in the administration of the Extradition Treaty between Canada and the United States.

In April 1954, a grand jury of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division, had returned two indictments charging two corporations and thirteen individuals with having violated U.S. law by the use of the mails for obtaining money or other property by means of false or fraudulent pretence. The indictments were based on the illegal use of U.S. mails during the period March 1st to April 1st, 1953, in conjunction with a fraudulent scheme to sell securities to residents of the state of Michigan.

On September 30th, 1954, the Department of External Affairs had received from the U.S. Embassy at Ottawa a request for the surrender, with a view to extradition, of two of the accused, Walter H. Link and Harry H. Green. Messrs. Link and Green were apprehended and brought before Associate Chief Justice Scott at Montreal on November 3rd, 1954. On December 17th, 1954, Mr. Justice Scott gave judgment refusing to issue a warrant for the committal of the fugitives for surrender to the United States. The judgment seemed to be based on arguments of doubtful validity.

It was important to the administration of the Extradition Treaty between Canada and the United States that this matter be cleared up and it was suggested that the following questions be referred to the Supreme Court under section 55 of the Supreme Court Act:

(1) Assuming that Associate Chief Justice Scott was satisfied that such evidence was produced at the hearing of United States of America v. Link and Green as would, according to the law of Canada, have justified the committal of the fugitives for trial, if the alleged crimes had been committed in Canada, was the learned Chief Justice in error in refusing, on the grounds relied on in his reasons for judgment, to issue his warrant for the committal of the fugitives to surrender to the United States?

(2) If a person engaged in a scheme for the sale of securities to residents in the United States, which scheme is devised or intended to deceive or defraud, posts mail matter in Canada concerning the scheme directed to addressee in the United States, which posting, if done in the United States would constitute an offence against sections 1341 or 77q(a) of the United States Code, is such person liable to be extradited from Canada to the United States to stand trial there on charges under those sections?

13. Mr. Garson added that, if it were felt undesirable, and he was inclined to think that it was, to mention, specifically, in the reference to the Supreme Court, the Scott judgment of December 17th, 1954, it would be possible to make a much more general reference to the courts possibly along the following lines:

(1) Is it competent for a judge hearing a case under the Extradition Act to refuse to issue his warrant for committal of the fugitive for surrender to the requesting state on the ground that, in his opinion, the rules of evidence or procedure applicable in the courts of the requesting state will operate to unfairly prejudice the accused at his trial?

(2) If a person engaged in a scheme for the sale of securities to residents in the United States, which scheme is devised or intended to deceive or defraud, posts mail matter in Canada concerning the scheme directed to addressees in the United States, which posting, if done in the United States would constitute an offence against sections 1341 or 77q(a) of the United States Code, is such person liable to be extradited from Canada to the United States to stand trial there on charges under those sections?

14. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) The alternative suggested by the Minister of Justice seemed preferable. However, even in the case of the more general reference, the wording seemed to be too specific. It might perhaps be sufficient to ask the court to determine whether or not it was competent for a judge to take into account the kind of rules of evidence applicable in another country in cases where there had been commission of an offence in that other country, which offence was also considered to be a crime in Canada.

(b) As there was no appeal to the Supreme Court from Mr. Justice Scott's judgment, any reference such as that suggested would merely result in obtaining the Supreme Court's opinion in this matter, but Judge Scott's judgment would still stand in the particular case under review.

(c) Circumstances had made it appear desirable to make a rather unusual reference to the Supreme Court in the recent Coffin murder case.<sup>135</sup> It would seem undesirable to take unorthodox action with regard to this extradition difficulty so soon after the Coffin incident. It might, perhaps, be preferable to wait until such time as another judgment similar to the Scott judgment of December 17th, 1954, was rendered before taking any such action.

(d) On the other hand, unless some action were taken, the government of Canada would likely be blamed for doing nothing to prevent the fraudulent use of the mails by unscrupulous brokers.

15. The Cabinet noted the report of the Minister of Justice and deferred decision on a proposed reference to the Supreme Court with regard to difficulties which had recently been encountered in the administration of the Extradition Treaty between Canada and the United States, pending further consideration at a subsequent meeting when the Secretary of State for External Affairs could be present.

...

<sup>135</sup> Le 14 octobre 1955, le Cabinet a demandé à la Cour suprême du Canada de revoir la condamnation prononcée par les tribunaux du Québec contre Wilbert Coffin pour le meurtre, en 1953, de Richard Lindsay, à la suite de suggestions voulant que Coffin n'ait pas eu un procès juste. Le Cabinet a demandé à la Cour de répondre à la question suivante :

« If the application made by Wilbert Coffin for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada had been granted on any of the grounds alleged on the said application, what disposition of the appeal would now be made by the court? »

On October 14, 1955 Cabinet asked the Supreme Court of Canada to review the conviction in Quebec courts of Wilbert Coffin for the 1953 murder of Richard Lindsay after suggestions were made that Coffin had not received a fair trial. Cabinet asked the court to answer the following question:

"If the application made by Wilbert Coffin for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada had been granted on any of the grounds alleged on the said application, what disposition of the appeal would now be made by the court?"

410.

DEA/12216-6-40

Note de l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
Memorandum by Ambassador in United States

CONFIDENTIAL

[Washington], November 8, 1955

SECURITY FRAUDS; EXTRADITION; LINK AND GREEN CASE<sup>136</sup>

Conversation between the Minister of Justice and the United States Attorney General, at Toronto, November 7, 1955.

It had been arranged through the Embassy that advantage should be taken of the presence of the United States Attorney General in Toronto on November 7th, for a private and informal discussion of this subject with the Minister of Justice, who was to be there for Mr. Brownell's speech to the Canadian Club. It had also been agreed that the United States Ambassador and I should be present. This had first been suggested at the meeting on September [26th], in Ottawa, of the Canada-United States Committee on Economic Affairs, when the Secretary of State had referred to the United States Government's concern.<sup>137</sup>

The conversation took place in Mr. Brownell's suite at the Royal York Hotel on the afternoon of November 7th. It was agreed by all present that it would be entirely informal and private — a frank exchange of information and views.

The Minister, after referring to the suggestion that a "reference" be made to the Supreme Court of Canada on the points of law arising out of the judgement of Associate Chief Justice Scott of the Quebec Superior Court and describing briefly the law and procedure which govern such references, went on to explain to the Attorney General the position of a current reference to the Supreme Court in Regina v. Coffin.

This (Coffin) reference raised difficult and delicate issues for the Federal Government in regard to the administration of justice in the Province of Quebec, since the Supreme Court would appear to be reviewing the verdict of a Quebec Court after the unanimous refusal of an appeal by the Provincial appellate court. The Government, nevertheless, had felt bound to proceed with this reference (for reasons which Mr. Garson had explained) and the hearing would take place in December.

For the Government, the Minister went on, to make now a second reference to the Supreme Court which would reflect on the Quebec Courts (since it would at least indirectly impugn the finding of Chief Justice Scott in the Link and Green case) would exacerbate an already complicated and delicate situation. In the opinion of the Federal authorities the Scott judgement was bad law and had the effect of frustrating the purposes of the Extradition Treaty of 1952 between Canada and the United States. The Canadian authorities, like those of the United States, were anxious to rectify the position and restore the régime which the Treaty had intended.

In due course, Mr. Garson felt, it should be possible for a reference to be made which would achieve this purpose. The Government would wish to have this done just as soon as possible.

<sup>136</sup> La version de la note reproduite ici est celle qui a été modifiée à la fin novembre pour tenir compte des observations faites par Garson sur l'original rédigé par Heeny. Celui-ci a été retiré des dossiers et détruit.

The version of the memorandum reprinted here was amended in late November to take into account Garson's comments on Heeny's original draft which was removed from the files and destroyed.

<sup>137</sup> Voir/See Document 407.

The Minister said that Canadian authorities had read with interest a proposal put forward by the General Counsel for the United States Securities Exchange Commission that the Extradition Treaty should be amended to provide for an appellate procedure. The Canadian Department of Justice would be interested in exploring this possibility (which from the Government's point of view would provide, at least prima facie, a politically easier course than a reference to the Supreme Court), but before doing so wished to know whether the United States Department of Justice had considered fully the implications of such an innovation in extradition procedures. Having regard to the fact that it would seem to be politically impossible to provide an appeal for the state without similar provision for the accused, Mr. Garson was inclined to think that the delays in litigation caused by such appeals might make them unworkable.

The Attorney General said that Mr. Timbers' proposal had not been examined fully by his Department and was not now being put forward as a suggestion to the Canadian Government. He personally was inclined to think that it would be a doubtful expedient; as Mr. Garson had observed, the delays involved would probably be intolerable.

If, Mr. Brownell continued, the situation could be restored to the pre-Link and Green position by a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, this would be preferable from the United States point of view, provided that the lapse of time before a judgement were obtained were not too great. United States authorities were already subject to very considerable pressures and these would build up seriously when Congress got under way in January. What length of time did the Minister foresee before the Canadian Government would be willing to refer the question to the Supreme Court?

Mr. Garson replied that unfortunately it was not possible to be precise on the timing of a reference. If his colleagues agreed to a reference (and he was awaiting the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs before taking the matter up in Cabinet) the timing would be affected by the course of the Coffin reference and hearing. The Canadian authorities were also anxious to clear up the present unsatisfactory situation with regard to extradition for security frauds, but had obviously to take account of the considerations which he had set forth.

I suggested, in attempting to sum up, that the two Governments had the same objective, namely to establish as promptly as possible the régime contemplated when the Treaty was negotiated. The baleful effect of the Scott judgement should be got rid of as soon as could be. The problem was one of method and timing — not objective. To this all present agreed.

The Canadian position, I continued, had been frankly explained to the Attorney General but he would be unable to make this explanation to those in Washington who were pressing him for action. It seemed to me important, before any statement were made by the United States authorities, that agreement should be reached on the form of such statement. To this, too, there was agreement.

Mr. Brownell expressed his appreciation of the full and candid explanation which Mr. Garson had made and it was agreed that the Minister and the Attorney General would keep in close touch with one another, through me.

It was agreed that, in the circumstances, no purpose would be served by further suggestions from Canadian Counsel for the United States Department of Justice or others, with regard to any references that might be made to the Supreme Court or other procedures in this matter.

On the following day, returning to Washington, I mentioned to Mr. Brownell the importance, if any reference was to be made to the Supreme Court, of avoiding any impression that this procedure was being taken under pressure from United States authorities. He readily understood this and agreed to caution his officials. When the time came that something had to be said, the two Governments would agree on the form of statement.

A.D.P. HEENEY

411.

DEA/12216-6-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, November 16, 1955

Dear Mr. Pearson,

On November 9th I wrote you a personal letter reporting upon the conversation in Toronto between your colleague, the Minister of Justice, and the United States Attorney General concerning extradition in relation to security frauds.

At that time I sent you a copy of the memorandum which I had made of the conversation.

Mr. Garson spoke to me last evening on the telephone from Ottawa, and told me that (with a few minor additions which he wishes to have made) he is satisfied with my memorandum as a record of what transpired between him and Mr. Brownell. When these additions have been made I am to give a copy of the memorandum to the Attorney General for his personal record.

In speaking to me yesterday, Mr. Garson said that he would expect you to bring up this subject in Cabinet shortly. When you did so he would be willing to agree to a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada which would rectify the present unsatisfactory situation. In this connection he mentioned again the desirability of having the question put to the Supreme Court in such a way as to avoid explicit reference to the judgement of Associate Chief Justice Scott, whence our difficulties arise. On the timing of the reference to the Court, Mr. Garson would be guided largely by the views of your Quebec colleagues, but he himself would have no objection to the reference being made reasonably soon.

In raising the matter in Cabinet as one involving our relations with the United States, you would certainly be justified in saying to your colleagues that the present situation is one which has caused, and continues to cause, difficulties between us. Furthermore, the pressure upon the Administration to take action of some kind within the competence of the United States executive and legislature may be expected to increase sharply once Congress reassembles after Christmas. No one can say now precisely what proposals may be put forward in the Senate or in the House in attempts to satisfy demands made upon Senators and Congressmen by those who have been defrauded through the operations of stock racketeers. But the Administration may well prove unable to resist undesirable courses urged in the legislature unless they can show that the present unsatisfactory situation is being rectified.

As you will note from my memorandum of November 8th, Mr. Brownell has agreed to consult us when he feels it necessary to make some public statement on this subject. I would hope that by that time we will be in a position to announce the reference to the Supreme Court along the lines now favoured by your colleague, the Minister of Justice.

One final consideration — from the point of view of External Affairs, the sooner the reference is made and announced the better; from the point of view of the Government in Ottawa too I should think it is highly desirable that the reference should be made before the clamour in this country increases and the Government are put in the position of acting in response to public pressure from the United States.

I would be grateful if you would let me know when the matter is raised in Cabinet and what decision is taken.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Under-Secretary.

Yours sincerely,

A.D.P. HEENEY

412.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], December 7, 1955

CANADA-UNITED STATES EXTRADITION TREATY; REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of October 26th, said that, unless steps were taken in a reasonable period of time to clear up the difficulties which had arisen as a result of the Scott judgment of December 17th, 1954, in the Link and Green extradition case, there might be difficulties with the United States, particularly if Congress took up the matter, as it might.

8. The Minister of Justice said he had recently had an opportunity to discuss this matter at Toronto with the U.S. Attorney General. He had pointed out that it would be difficult for the government to refer the matter to the Supreme Court at the present time. Mr. Brownell had indicated that he understood the Canadian government's position. He said that a suggestion had been made to him that an appeal procedure might be provided in the Canada-United States Treaty and in the Canadian law. Mr. Brownell, himself, wished to study this suggestion because he did not feel that it was very practical, since an appeal of this sort granted to the governments should presumably also be granted to the accused person, which was contrary to practice of long standing and the practice in other countries. It would likely result in greatly prolonging extradition cases. Mr. Garson shared these doubts about an appeal provision.

9. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It was feared that unless something was done to clear up the extradition situation between Canada and the United States, the U.S. Congress might take steps to tighten, considerably, controls over trading in securities which might be harmful to bona fide Canadian brokers trading in the United States.

(b) There was jurisprudence to the effect that an extradited person could only be tried for an extraditable offence. Notwithstanding this, it seemed that some of the alleged offences mentioned in the application to Mr. Justice Scott for the extradition of Messrs. Link and Green were matters that were not covered by the Canada—United States Extradition Treaty.

10. The Cabinet agreed that, while it would be desirable, eventually, to clear up the difficult situation which had arisen as a result of the judgment by Associate Chief Justice Scott on December 17th, 1954, on the application for the extradition of Messrs. Link and Green, no steps would be taken at this time to refer the problem to the Supreme Court.

SECTION E

VOIE MARITIME DU SAINT-LAURENT
ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

413.

DEA/1268-AD-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-15

Washington, January 5, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference; Your telegram EX-2414 of December 30, 1954.†

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

I am now able to provide what I think is the real explanation of Mr. Lewis Castle's request to meet Mr. Chevrier in Ottawa later this month.

2. Earlier in the week Taylor learned from George Vest, on the State Department's Canadian desk, that Castle wished to meet Mr. Chevrier to discuss with him the question of navigation facilities to be built on either side of the boundary in the Cornwall area. According to Vest, Castle was becoming increasingly concerned that it would be necessary for the Administration to provide members of Congress with a satisfactory explanation of the plans of the Canadian and United States Governments in the Cornwall area.

3. Yesterday, when I was speaking with Deputy Secretary of Defence Robert Anderson about another matter, he outlined for me the position of the United States Administration on this question. Anderson began by saying that he was pleased to have the opportunity to discuss this question with me, especially as I had been associated with the talks that had taken place in November between Mr. Howe, Mr. Wilson and himself.<sup>138</sup> He referred to those conversations and said that it was the firm intention of the United States Administration not to proceed with the construction of navigation facilities across the river from Iroquois and that they intended, in due course, to seek from Congress an amendment to the Wiley Act, which would relieve them of the obligation set out therein to build a canal and lock at Point Rockway.

4. The Administration was disturbed, he said, over the growing rumblings among those interested in the seaway here, that Canada and the United States intended to build parallel

<sup>138</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 585.

27 foot navigation facilities on both sides of the St. Lawrence in the Cornwall area. This had led to some concern in the Administration that unless these rumblings could be effectively forestalled, they might lead to strong criticism from supporters of the seaway, as well as from its former opponents, that the United States Administration was spending unnecessarily large sums of money to build facilities that would parallel those to be built by Canada. Anderson mentioned that Dr. Danielian and the railroad interests, for instance, would be only too eager to criticize the Administration on this score. He indicated that the pressure of criticism against Lewis Castle was already very heavy.

5. In view of this situation it had been suggested that letters might be exchanged by members of the two governments, which would set out plainly the plans and intentions of Canada and the United States. He thought that the exchange might be initiated from the United States side with a letter that would say that it was the intention of the United States Administration not to build at Point Rockway and that it was proposed in due course to seek from Congress the necessary amendment to the Wiley Act. The letter would say that the United States Administration understood that the Canadian Government had no present intention of constructing 27 foot facilities in the Cornwall area and that until traffic and economic conditions warranted, neither government would duplicate on its side of the boundary, navigation facilities which had already been constructed by the other in its territory. He suggested that the Canadian Government might reply with a letter confirming that these understandings were correct.

6. The letters, Anderson thought, would not necessarily be made public. On the United States side they would probably be used to show any Senators or representatives who might criticize the known arrangements for seaway construction, that in fact there would not be any duplication of navigation facilities in the St. Lawrence seaway until conditions warranted.

7. As I implied earlier in this telegram, I am convinced that Anderson gave me a frank and sincere statement of his government's position on this question. From my point of view I think there would be considerable advantage for us in accepting his suggestion. I think I need not elaborate on the advantages for us in having on paper a statement that the United States does not intend to build at Point Rockway and that the Administration will seek the required amendment to the Wiley Act.

8. Mr. Anderson proposed that he might discuss this question with Mr. Howe on Thursday. I have passed this suggestion, by telephone, to Mr. Howe, who has agreed to meet Mr. Anderson on Thursday morning.

A.D.P. HEENEY

414.

DEA/1268-AD-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-28

Washington, January 7, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Our WA-15 of January 5.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Yesterday morning Mr. Howe, Mr. Pearson and Mr. Heeney met with Secretary of Defense Wilson and Deputy Secretary Anderson, to discuss the United States proposal for an exchange of letters on the plans of the two governments for the construction of navigation facilities in the Cornwall area on the St. Lawrence. Also present on the United States side were Ambassador Stuart; Governor Brucker, Legal Counsel for the Department of Defense; and Mr. C.B. Elbrick, Deputy Assistant Secretary for European Affairs in the State Department. Taylor was present as well.

2. Anderson opened the discussion and in his remarks went over much the same ground that he had covered with Mr. Heeney on Tuesday. It was interesting to hear Anderson say yesterday that Senator Wiley, presumably as the result of representations made to him by some group interested in the seaway, had sent President Eisenhower a letter in which he outlined in some detail the sort of criticism about unnecessary United States investments that might be directed at the Administration if Canada and the United States were to build parallel navigation facilities in the Iroquois and Cornwall areas.

3. Anderson said that the Canadian interest in building at Iroquois was well understood and reconfirmed that the United States did not intend to build navigation facilities across from Iroquois at Point Rockway. In considering the problem raised by Senator Wiley, the Department of Defense (to whom his letter had been referred for a reply) had conceived the idea of an exchange of letters between Canada and the United States along the lines indicated in my telegram WA-15 of January 5. He explained that this proposal had not yet been cleared with President Eisenhower, but he seemed quite confident that full approval could be obtained fairly easily. Anderson went on to say that the United States letter would indicate that the Administration intended to seek the necessary amendment to the Wiley Act at "an appropriate time." In explaining the timing of the proposed amendment, he said that it would probably be unwise to seek an amendment in the near future because of the danger that opponents of the seaway might seize the opportunity to reopen the whole seaway issue. Specifically, he thought they might say that since the Administration now found it unnecessary to build at Point Rockway, this showed that it was not really necessary to build any of the navigation facilities authorized by the Wiley Act. This danger was especially strong now when only a relatively small amount of money had been spent on seaway construction. But once some really substantial expenditures had been made, he thought that the danger would be a great deal less and the required amendment could be handled much more easily.

4. Mr. Howe and Mr. Pearson said in reply that the proposal for an exchange along the lines outlined by Mr. Anderson was agreeable to the Canadian Government. Mr. Howe spoke briefly about the necessity for retaining at least part of the 14 foot canal at Cornwall, saying that although the Canadian Government could not give up this existing facility, it was not contemplated that its retention would affect the volume of traffic that would use the 27 foot facilities to be built by the United States across the river from Cornwall.

5. During a short discussion on whether the letters should be exchanged between Mr. Howe and Mr. Wilson or Mr. Pearson and Mr. Dulles, Mr. Pearson indicated that this point presented no difficulty for the Canadian side and that we would be willing to effect the exchange in the way that seemed most suitable to the United States. Another possibility that was briefly touched on was that the exchange should take the form of diplomatic notes, which might be somewhat preferable from our point of view. However, the manner in which the exchange should be effected was left open. In any event, Anderson said that he would have prepared a draft United States letter to be sent to Ottawa through this Embassy, together with a suggested draft Canadian reply to indicate more clearly the type of exchange they had in mind.

D.V. LEPAN

415.

DEA/1268-AD-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-35

Ottawa, January 11, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your WA-28, January 7.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY — PLANS TO BUILD AT BARNHART AND IROQUOIS

Although Mr. Howe and I told Messrs. Wilson and Anderson on January 6 that the Canadian Government would agree to their proposal for an exchange of letters setting out the intentions of the two Governments, we shall have to watch the wording carefully in order to safeguard the reservations we made known in August.

2. In our Note of August 17, 1954 the Canadian Government's intentions at Barnhart Island were expressed in these terms:

"The Canadian Government wishes to state, however, that it will construct forthwith a canal and lock at Iroquois and that in addition it intends, if and when it considers that parallel facilities are required to accommodate existing or potential traffic, to complete 27-foot navigation works on the Canadian side of the International Rapids Section."

The vagueness was deliberate because the U.S. representatives said that the Administration would be embarrassed if we insisted on saying in our Note that we had in mind either increased traffic or interference with Canadian shipping as a reason for duplicating at Barnhart. Accordingly we made ourselves clear in our press release of August 18 in which we said:

"An important factor bearing on the requirement for parallel facilities on the Canadian side, near Barnhart Island, would be increasing volume of traffic. Another factor, which however we hope and expect would not materialize, would be unreasonable or unwarranted interference with, or delays to, Canadian shipping."

This reference to interference with shipping was considered important by the Government and has been similarly regarded by the press. On August 24 we sent a letter to the U.S. Embassy here enclosing the press release, for the purpose of getting our declaration into the record of inter-governmental correspondence.<sup>139</sup>

3. We should have difficulty now in accepting a wording of the proposed letters which said only that we will not duplicate at Barnhart "until traffic and economic conditions warranted" (the words used in para. 5 of your WA-15), because such a wording seems to refer to only one of the two contingencies we have in mind.

<sup>139</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 580.

4. At the moment these alternative solutions occur to me:

(a) The proposed letters could mention both contingencies in relation to both governments, which was not feasible in August. In other words, the letters could say that the United States and Canadian Governments do not intend to build at Iroquois and Barnhart, respectively, unless traffic and economic conditions warranted or there was unreasonable interference etc. with United States shipping in Canada or with Canadian shipping in the United States (This is not intended as drafting language).

OR

(b) So far as Canada's intentions are concerned, the proposed letters could adhere to the language of the August 17 note and say that, in the light of the statements made public in August, Canada does not intend to build at Barnhart until it considers that "parallel facilities are required to accommodate existing or potential traffic". As we were willing to use this ambiguous phrase in August, we could I think do so again and take the position that it means just what it meant to us previously.

5. I should be glad to have your comments on this and, if you see no objection, you might talk over the problem with Anderson. My preference is, of course, for alternative (a) though I realize that there may be objections to this on the U.S. side. If Congress decided not to amend the Wiley Act regarding Iroquois as suggested in para.3 of your WA-15 of January 5, 1955, Canada's position would be no different than that which obtains today. You might seek to ascertain from Anderson when he thinks the letters might be made public. When they are shown to U.S. Congressmen and Senators, I shall probably have to table them in the House here.

[L.B.] PEARSON

416.

DEA/1268-AD-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], January 21, 1955

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY — PLANS TO BUILD AT BARNHART ISLAND AND IROQUOIS

Attached, for ease of reference, are three telegrams from Washington on this subject, namely, WA-61, WA-62 and WA-64,† dated January 14. I have some comments to make on the proposed letter from Mr. Stuart (contained in WA-62). In making them, I assume that in your talks in Washington, neither you nor Mr. Howe contemplated making any substantial changes in the arrangements which were concluded on August 17, 1954 and that your desire was to record the present intentions of both governments, namely, that the United States Government does not intend, at present, to build 27-foot facilities at Iroquois and that the Canadian Government does not intend, at present, to build 27-foot facilities opposite Barnhart Island.<sup>140</sup>

2. The proposed letter from Mr. Stuart is open, I believe, to two objections. In the first place, it seems to create an "understanding" that Canada does not intend, at the present time, to construct new 14-foot canal facilities in the Cornwall area and links this "understanding" with Canada's undertaking of August 17, 1954 NOT to construct 27-foot facilities opposite Barnhart Island. Officials of this Department see no valid reason for linking a statement of intention regarding the construction of 14-foot facilities (as distinct from the undertaking to consult regarding non-imposition of tolls in the 14-foot system) with a formal undertaking to consult before constructing duplicate 27-foot lock facilities. Canada should be prepared, of course, to repeat its undertaking as regards 27-foot lock facilities in the Cornwall area and may, separately, announce what are its present intentions as regards the continuation of 14-foot navigation facilities in the Cornwall area. I believe Mr. Howe stated clearly in Washington that the Canadian Government had decided, for the time being, against continuing 14-foot navigation facilities around the powerhouses at Barnhart Island. This statement can be inserted in the proposed letter in such a way as not to circumscribe Canada's freedom of action.

3. The second point in which the proposed Stuart letter is not very helpful is that it declares merely the "intention" of the United States Administration "to seek" authority from Congress to "defer" construction opposite Iroquois. On this premise the Canadian Government is asked to agree that the Canadian canal at Iroquois and the United States canal at Massena would be the "exclusive" or "sole" means for shipping to by-pass the power project for an indeterminate period. Again this might be an impediment to the freedom of action of the Canadian Government in future.

4. The Hon. Lionel Chevrier wrote the attached letter† to you on January 19 on the subject of the proposed Stuart letter. Mr. Chevrier makes four points:

- (a) that it would be "unwise" to anticipate government policy regarding the continuation of 14-foot navigation at Cornwall;
- (b) because Canada may have to do 27-foot channel dredging in the Cornwall area, no commitment should be given that Canada will do no 27-foot works in that area;
- (c) in building opposite Barnhart Island, the United States should undertake to conform to the Welland Ship Canal dimensions;
- (d) Canada and the United States should agree to forego duplicating in future facilities on their respective territory at Iroquois and Barnhart Island but should agree that, when added facilities are required, they will be built by Canada at Barnhart Island and by the United States at Iroquois.

5. If you agree, the proposed Stuart letter should be modified considerably. The attached draft takes into account the two points made earlier in this memo and has been modified to take account of the second point made by Mr. Chevrier.

6. As regards Mr. Chevrier's point (a), I assume that Mr. Howe would wish to have mentioned in the letters what are the Canadian Government's present intentions regarding the continuation of 14-foot navigation at Cornwall.<sup>141</sup>

<sup>140</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
Yes [L.B. Pearson]

<sup>141</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
This assumption is not necessarily correct & should be checked with Mr Marler and Mr Howe. L.B. P[earson]

7. Mr. Chevrier's third point regarding lock dimensions has validity because of the way in which the United States Corporation has been changing its mind on this subject. In view of the fact, however, that the proposed Stuart letter is to emanate from the U.S.A. and that it purports to record views expressed on January 6, I believe that the question of lock dimensions should be taken up separately by you with Ambassador Stuart. If you agree, I shall prepare a separate letter for your consideration.<sup>142</sup>

8. As regards Mr. Chevrier's fourth point, namely, a mutual undertaking to forego future construction of duplicate facilities by Canada and the U.S.A. respectively on their territory at Iroquois and Barnhart Island, this is a major departure from the August 17, 1954 Notes and would require negotiations by both governments and Cabinet approval.

9. If you agree with these views, would you say if a draft<sup>†143</sup> along the lines of the attached meets with your tentative approval? In this connection, you may wish to have a word with Mr. Howe before the Embassy is instructed to raise the matter with the State Department.

10. Attached for your signature, if you agree, is a letter to Mr. Chevrier,<sup>†144</sup> explaining your views.<sup>145</sup>

J. LIÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-61

Washington, January 14, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE

Reference: Your teletype EX-35 of January 11, 1955.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY — PLANS TO BUILD AT BARNHART AND IROQUOIS

In answer to an invitation from the State Department we met on Wednesday, the 12 of January, with Mr. Outerbridge Horsey to discuss the text of a United States draft letter on the plans of Canada and the United States for the construction of navigation facilities in the Iroquois and Cornwall areas. We were able to suggest some changes in the original wording of the draft and these have been incorporated in the text of the draft given in my immediately following teletype.

2. Horsey began by saying that a preliminary draft letter had been prepared by Mr. Lewis Castle of the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation and that Castle's draft had

<sup>142</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

OK [L.B. Pearson].

<sup>143</sup> Une version révisée de l'ébauche de lettre est reproduite comme document 420.
A revised version of the draft letter is reproduced as Document 420.

<sup>144</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Revised & signed by Minister Jan 27 M. W[ershof]

<sup>145</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Note: Mr Pearson OK'd attached draft subject to (1) checking with Mr Howe & Mr Marler on 14ft and (2) checking whole letter with them & Mr Chevrier. M. Wershof Jan 27 been submitted to the State Department where some changes, which Horsey did not specify, had been made. The present draft, he said, had been cleared with Deputy Secretary of Defense Anderson and officials in the State Department, but it was expected that the Canadian authorities would have some changes to suggest.

3. Our first comment in reply was that this was not exactly the kind of letter we had expected to receive but it was not necessarily less acceptable because of that. We had expected, we said, a little more about the future intentions of the two countries and the conditions or circumstances under which they would contemplate the building of parallel navigation facilities near Cornwall and Iroquois. We thought, however, that the present draft which, as you will notice, is concerned more with the present intentions of the two governments, might in general be satisfactory.

4. Commenting more specifically on the wording of the United States draft, we went on to say, referring to the second paragraph, that although the acquisition of land in the vicinity of Cornwall by the Canadian Government had been discussed at the meeting in Secretary Wilson's office, we did not think it was an essential part of the discussion. We suggested, therefore, that the third paragraph of the draft might well be omitted from the final text. Horsey at first was inclined to agree with our suggestion but later he said that he would prefer to retain the paragraph because it dealt with a point which had been the basis for some of the criticism against the Administration's seaway policy, and also because it was the only part of the letter which spoke about the construction of the additional navigation facilities by the two countries in the future.

5. At that point we immediately referred to your telegram, EX-35 of January 11. We said that although the point had not been discussed at the meeting on January 6, the Canadian Government wished to make clear its desire to safeguard the reservations we had made in the August 1954 exchange of notes about the construction of future navigation facilities. (Fortunately we had had an opportunity earlier in the week to discuss this same point with Vest of the State Department so that they had been forewarned on what we would probably wish to do.) We continued by saying that the Canadian authorities would like, if possible, to have included in the letter something along the lines of alternative (a) given in paragraph 4 of your telegram EX-35, and we indicated the sort of wording which might be used.

6. Horsey replied that he understood the position of the Canadian Government on this point but he indicated, as we expected him to, that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to have that kind of wording accepted by the United States authorities. We then said that, as an alternative, the Canadian Government would probably be satisfied if the letter repeated the wording that had been used in the August, 1954, exchange of notes. Horsey was agreeable to that suggestion and you will see that the third paragraph of the draft contains part of the wording from the exchange of notes on this point.

7. Referring to the fourth paragraph of the United States draft, we said that there might be some disposition on the part of the Canadian authorities to question the wording used near the end of the second sentence, where it is indicated that the United States Administration will seek authority "to defer this feature" from its work programme. We explained that we had had a slightly different understanding, namely that the amendment that would be sought would relieve the Administration of the obligation to construct facilities at Point Rockway. Speaking on a personal basis, we said, it seemed to us that the difference essentially was one of timing and we would not press for any change in the wording now. It was possible however, that the authorities in Ottawa might raise some comment on this point and if so, we could discuss it again.

8. We then raised the question of when the letters might be made public. We were pleasantly surprised when Horsey said that in the State Department's view it would be preferable to make the letters public as soon as possible, since that was the way in which they would best serve their purpose. We told Horsey that we were sure that the Canadian authorities would welcome the immediate publication of the letters and mentioned that you had been thinking that the letters would have to be tabled in the House in Ottawa when they were shown to Congressmen and Senators here.

9. We should point out that Horsey's position on the publication of the letters does not coincide with what we understood Anderson's position to be originally. You will recall that in our telegram WA-15 of January 5 we reported that Anderson thought that the letters would not necessarily be made public. It may be, of course, that the State Department and the Department of Defense now have agreed that immediate publication is preferable, but, on the other hand, it is possible that there may have to be some further discussion on this point within the United States Government.

10. You will notice that the United States letter is to be sent from Ambassador Stuart to you. Although this particular channel was not discussed as one of the possibilities at the meeting in Secretary Wilson's office, we see no objection to it and we did not, therefore, make any comments to Horsey.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-62

Washington, January 14, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our immediately preceding telegram WA-61 of January 14.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY — PLANS TO BUILD AT BARNHART AND IROQUOIS

The following is the text of the United States draft letter handed to us by Horsey at the State Department of Wednesday, January 12, Begins:

Dear Mr. Pearson:

I refer to the conversations which were held in Washington on January 6 between yourself, Mr. Howe and Ambassador Heeney and, on our side, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Anderson and myself, on our respective plans for St. Lawrence Seaway construction.

It is our understanding that the Canadian Government does not at this time intend to construct any new 14-foot canal facilities in the Cornwall area or to construct a 27-foot channel or lock accommodations in the vicinity of Cornwall or Barnhart Island.

It is understood, however, that the Canadian Government does plan to acquire land at this time in that vicinity for the purpose of providing navigation facilities to by-pass the powerhouse there, should such additional facilities be required to accommodate existing or potential traffic at some future date.

The United States Government has a statutory obligation to construct a canal and lock in the vicinity of Point Rockway, New York, opposite Iroquois, Ontario. However, since the Canadian Government had announced its intention to construct forthwith a canal and lock at Iroquois, it is our intention at the appropriate time to seek from the Congress the authority to defer this feature from our program of work.

Consequently, the Canadian canal and lock at Point Iroquois will be the exclusive means for shipping in the International Rapids Section to by-pass the power project control dam. Similarly, the Long Sault canal with two locks near Massena, New York, to be constructed by the United States, will be the sole means for shipping to by-pass the powerhouse in the Massena-Cornwall area.

This arrangement eliminates any duplication of canal facilities on opposite sides of the river, and retains the development on a co-operative basis of this common undertaking by our two countries.

I would appreciate your confirming that this letter represents the understandings which resulted from our meeting in Washington.

Sincerely yours,

R. DOUGLAS STUART.

417.

DEA/1268-AD-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], January 24, 1955

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

As a result of meetings held in Ottawa on January 21 between the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and its United States counterpart, you will be receiving a letter† from the President of the Canadian Authority setting forth his views on some steps which the Canadian Government should take now regarding the construction of twin locks on United States territory and the depth of locks. In this memorandum I will cover this point. In other memoranda, I propose to give you an idea of other — but no less important — problems affecting the Project.

2. Messrs. Paul Pelletier and E.A. Côté obtained the following information at a luncheon given by Mr. R.A.C. Henry, consulting engineer of the Authority, on Saturday, January 22. Also present were Messrs. Chevrier and Carl West.

3. Mr. Chevrier said that he had learned from Mr. Castle (in the presence of Mr. Mayer, of the United States Embassy) that the United States Seaway Corporation intends to build twin locks opposite Barnhart Island. When he questioned Mr. Castle more closely, Mr. Chevrier learned that what Mr. Castle really intended to say was that, in preparing its engineering plans for the two locks opposite Barnhart Island, the United States Corporation would so site the whole works along a centre line that would allow for the construction, at a future date, of twin locks. (This, of course, is a totally different matter. It is evidence of prudent planning — the sort of planning we too would expect of Canadian engineers.)

4. Mr. Chevrier pressed the matter further and reminded Mr. Castle of the "agreement" (of which we only heard two or three days ago) reached with him and Mr. Anderson in November, 1954, namely that when any future addition to facilities are required in the International Rapids Section, Canada will be allowed to build locks and a canal at Cornwall before the U.S.A. builds twin locks on its side in that area and that, reciprocally, the U.S.A. will be allowed to build on its side at Iroquois before Canada duplicated the Iroquois lock. Mr. Castle is said to have acknowledged that this was so. He is said to have gone further and to have been agreeable that this point and the point concerning the United States decision to conform to the Welland Ship Canal lock dimensions should be included in the "Exchange of Letters" you are now considering (see my memorandum of January 21).

5. It is, of course, doubtful that Mr. Castle has any authority to say what should be included in the "Exchange of Letters". On the other hand, any understanding along these lines propounded by Messrs. Chevrier and Castle would be helpful to Canada. An exchange of diplomatic letters which embodied such views would be better than nothing even if it did NOT constitute a binding international agreement.

6. There are two ways, at least, of seeking to clarify this matter. In the first place, we could seek to ascertain from Mr. Mayer if the Embassy believes that the United States Administration would agree to include in the proposed "Exchange of Letters" an assurance concerning (a) dimensions of locks and (b) first duplication of locks on the other national territory. If Mr. Mayer said that the United States Administration agreed, the "Exchange of Letters" accordingly could be redrafted. If Mr. Mayer said the United States Administration did not agree to the inclusion of these matters in the "Exchange of Letters", we could pursue the question of dimensions of locks in a separate letter (as proposed in my memorandum of January 21) and we could open negotiations now or later for point b).

7. Another way of dealing with this matter would be to write a separate letter now regarding lock dimensions and take up later the matter of the first duplication of locks. There is danger in this second course because, as time goes on, Canada may lose its bargaining power. In the first place, it will be difficult, one, two or ten years hence for Canada to compete in price. The building of two locks and a canal at Cornwall on Canadian territory would be a much more expensive job than the construction of twin locks on United States territory to fit into an already existing canal system. If we sought to find out United States Government intentions now and found out that the United States wishes to duplicate on its side before Canada should build at Barnhart Island, Canada could presumably do some 27-foot works now (say two miles of canals on the Canadian side) so as to put Canada later in a "competitive" position. It should be remembered that if and when duplicate facilities are required in the International Rapids Section, Canada shall be required to double and — where twin locks now exist — triple the Welland, Beauharnois and Lachine locks. Our American friends could thus press us, in public, to "play our marbles" in those areas and leave the International Rapids Section development to them. This public pressure would always be difficult to resist except that Canadians may probably wish to parallel the United States duplication by doing work at Iroquois. It would, at that time, be cheaper to build twin locks on the Canadian side of Iroquois than to build a lock and canal on the United States side in that area. Thus each country would be hostage unto the other! Accordingly, while I believe it would be useful if we could get an understanding between both countries that duplication in each of the Barnhart and Iroquois areas shall take place on the other side of the river from the works now to be built, I do not believe such undertakings are essential if only one of the main works is now built in either country.

8. On balance, I suggest that we try to ascertain informally from Mr. Mayer if the United States Administration would favour the inclusion in the proposed "Exchange of Letters" of the two items concerning lock dimensions and duplication. If the United States Government is not willing to do so, then you might write separately to Mr. Stuart and ask for a clarification of the United States intention about the dimensions of the proposed single locks opposite Barnhart Island in accordance with the attached draft letter.<sup>146</sup> Do you agree?<sup>147</sup>

9. This footnote may interest you. One of the U.S. engineers (Mr. Roy Stellar) told Mr. E.A. Côté that a definitive decision was taken two months ago by the United States Administration that the locks on the United States side would conform to Welland standards. This seems to show that there was little substance in Mr. Castle's curious contradictions in this regard during the last few weeks.<sup>148</sup>

R.A. M[ACKAY]
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

418.

DEA/1268-AD-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-152

Ottawa, January 28, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your WA-142, January 26.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY — PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

We have been having considerable difficulty in settling the terms of a counterdraft to the draft letter prepared by the United States and given in your WA-62 of January 14. That draft, I regret to say, is not acceptable for reasons given in the Under-Secretary's memorandum to me dated January 21, a copy of which was referred to you.

2. Additional complications have been created by Castle's rapidly changing position on lock dimensions and his unexpected reference (at his January 21 meeting in Ottawa) to preparations now for future "twinning" of the Barnhart locks on the United States side. Chevrier feels that these points ought to be covered and clarified in the exchange of letters and this request must be discussed here.

3. Mr. Howe and I have promised Anderson that there will be an early exchange of letters stating the intentions of the two Governments regarding duplication at Barnhart and Iroquois, and this promise will of course be fulfilled. However, our American friends will have to be patient in the negotiation of the actual terms of the letters.

4. I hope that definite instructions and a counterdraft can be sent to you next week.

<sup>146</sup> Une copie presque identique de cette ébauche est reproduite en tant que document 422.

An almost identical copy of this draft is re-produced as Document 422.

<sup>147</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

Mr Mayer should NOT be broached with this beforehand E.A. [Côté]

<sup>148</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

Note: Mr Pearson wants us to check letter with Mr Marler & to consider whether U.S. need be asked to agree to its text before the other Exchange of Letters is settled. M. W[ershof] Jan 27

5. In the meantime please use your judgment on what to tell Horsey. I think that he might as well be told now that the draft in WA-62 will require considerable modification from our point of view.

L.B. PEARSON

419.

DEA/1268-D-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-199

Ottawa, February 3, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your WA-142 of January 26, 1954.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

As soon as your WA-62 was received, we considered it and concluded that it required modification in several ways. A re-draft, restricted to the primary topic at issue, was prepared, i.e., reciprocal assurances concerning present construction at Barnhart Island and Iroquois. However, several questions arose concurrently to complicate the consideration of this letter.

2. You will recall that, as soon as it became known some weeks ago that Mr. Castle had requested a meeting with Mr. Chevrier on January 21, you informed that his purpose was to discuss larger lock dimensions. Subsequently you said that the "real reason" for the meeting was the question of reciprocal assurances regarding the possible present duplication at Barnhart and Iroquois. When, as a result of a meeting of Ministers in Washington, this "real reason" disappeared on January 6, Mr. Castle is said to have again desired to discuss larger lock dimensions. Yet, one day before the meeting, Mr. Chevrier was informed by Mr. Castle that this subject should be removed from the agenda because the Corporation had now decided to build according to Welland Ship Canal dimensions. The Seaway Authority was, naturally, anxious that, if possible, the matter of lock dimensions should be settled once and for all in diplomatic correspondence. In its view, the presently proposed exchanges of letters might be appropriate. Some officials believe that the matter of lock dimensions (as indeed the matter of twinning of locks by the United States) was settled in the Exchange of Notes of August 17, 1954. At all events, since the proposed exchange of letters is to cover what was said on January 6th and the letters are to start with one by the United States, it was not thought appropriate to seek to cover this point now. In a separate telegram, you will be receiving instructions on this specific point.

3. A second factor was not only the linking, in the United States draft letter, of an "undertaking" by Canada NOT to continue 14-foot navigation works through the power pool with Canada's undertaking of August 17, 1954 not to build now a canal and two locks to by-pass the power-houses but a broader statement of the position that Canada should build NO 27-foot works whatsoever in the Cornwall area. This latter point brought our attention by the Seaway Authority, is of considerable importance. Though Canada has NO intention to complete now deep-water works which allow 27-foot navigation to by-pass the power houses at Barnhart Island, we may find it useful and even necessary to undertake, for example, 27-foot channel enlargements in the vicinity of Cornwall to restore the balance of flow which will, in all likelihood, be disturbed by the U.S. Seaway Corporation's channel enlargements for navigation purposes south of Cornwall Island.

4. A third complication arose out of the discussions between the Corporation and the Authority as a result of which the Canadians at the meeting understood that there might be a present intention on the part of the Corporation to twin its locks at Barnhart Island. Our own understanding is identical with yours, namely that the United States Corporation intends to position its works at Barnhart Island so as to be able, in the future, to twin the locks if necessary. We assume, however, that when the United States desires to twin at Barnhart Island, it will, in accordance with paragraph 4(b) of our Note of August 17, 1954, consult Canada.

5. With these considerations in mind, we have prepared a counter-proposal to the United States draft letter contained in your WA-62 of January 14. This draft, contained in my immediately following telegram, now carries the judgment of Ministers. You might, therefore, propose it to Horsey for Mr. Anderson's consideration. In doing so, you might make the following points:

(a) It is not intended that the proposed exchange of letters shall constitute a departure from the Notes of August 17, 1954 except insofar as there is a statement of the present Canadian intention concerning 14-foot navigation and a statement of United States present intention concerning the construction of 27-foot navigation works opposite Iroquois;

(b) We will be seeking to obtain in the near future, through the diplomatic channel, confirmation of our understanding that the U.S. Corporation will build its locks to the dimensions of those of the Welland Ship Canal.

6. For your own information, when the Canadian reply is given to the United States letter, Mr. Pearson has agreed that we should repeat orally the point made during the negotiations, namely that an important factor bearing on the future requirement for parallel facilities on the Canadian side at Barnhart Island would be increased volume of traffic; another factor would be unreasonable or unwarranted interference with, or delays to, Canadian shipping.

420.

DEA/1268-D-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-200

Ottawa, February 3, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: My immediately preceding telegram.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

Following is text of the Canadian counter-proposal of the text of the letter which Ambassador Stuart might send to Mr. Pearson: Begins:

Dear Mr. Pearson:

I refer to the conversations which were held in Washington on January 6 between yourself, Mr. Howe, and Ambassador Heenev and, on our side, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Anderson and myself, on our respective plans for St. Lawrence Seaway construction.

In the light of these conversations and of the arrangements and statements made public in August, 1954, we understand that the Canadian Government does not intend to complete the works necessary to allow 27-foot navigation to by-pass the power houses in the Cornwall-Barnhart Island area until it considers that such works are required to accommodate existing or potential traffic at some future date but that the Canadian Government intends to acquire land now in the vicinity of Cornwall to meet such an eventuality. It has also appeared to us that the Canadian Government does not intend, at this time, to construct a new 14-foot lock to by-pass the power houses in that area.

The United States Government has, as you know, a statutory obligation under Public Law 358 to construct facilities for 27-foot navigation in the vicinity of Point Rockway, N.Y., opposite Iroquois, Ontario. However, since the Canadian Government has announced its intention to construct forthwith facilities for 27-foot navigation at Iroquois, it is the intention of the United States Administration to seek from Congress, at the appropriate time, the necessary authority to be relieved of this statutory obligation.

Consequently, if this authority is granted by Congress, it will mean that the Canadian canal and lock at Iroquois will be, for the time being, the exclusive means for 27-foot navigation to by-pass the power project control dam at that point. Similarly, the Long Sault canal with two locks near Massena, N.Y., to be constructed by the United States, will be, for the time being, the exclusive means for 27-foot navigation to by-pass the power house in the Cornwall-Barnhart Island area.

Such an arrangement would eliminate duplication of facilities for 27-foot navigation on opposite sides of the river in the International Rapids Section until such time as these facilities may be required as aforesaid.

I would appreciate your confirming that this letter represents the views expressed at our meeting in Washington.

Sincerely yours,

R. DOUGLAS STUART

Message ends.

421.

DEA/1268-D-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-201

Ottawa, February 4, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: My telegram No. EX-199 of February 3, 1955.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: ASSURANCES ON LOCK DIMENSIONS

We are inclined to believe that the question of the lock dimensions was definitively settled probably much earlier than it was realized in the United States. In Public Law 358, the Seaway Corporation is authorized and directed to construct navigation works "substantially in accordance with" the controlled single stage project 238-242 in the Joint Report dated January 3, 1941 of the Canadian Temporary Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin Committee and the United States Advisory Committee. The engineering part of this Report specifies that the locks shall have 30 feet over the sills and shall be, generally, of the dimensions of those in the Welland Ship Canal. Public Law 358 fixes the depth over sills at 30 feet. (Incidentally, the twinning of locks would be, in our preliminary view, a "substantial" departure from the existing Law and arrangements of August 17, 1954).

2. In order to remove some uncertainty which seemed to originate with the U.S. Seaway Corporation, Mr. Pearson (with the approval of his colleagues) would be prepared to send to Mr. Stuart a letter in the sense of the draft shown in my immediately following telegram. If you think it appropriate, you might find an occasion to show it, as a matter of courtesy, to Horsey in the State Department and to say that Mr. Pearson or the Acting Minister may soon send a letter along these lines to Mr. Stuart. You will notice that, in the last paragraph, we are asking assurances concerning the dimensions of "single locks". This might, coincidentally, remove any doubt concerning twinning. At all events, this Note would be designed to ascertain the United States intentions and we are not seeking to ascertain, in advance, what might be the United States reaction to it. Ends.

422.

DEA/1268-D-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-202

Ottawa, February 4, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: My immediately preceding telegram.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: LOCK DIMENSIONS

Following is text of draft letter to Ambassador Stuart, begins:

My dear Ambassador:

As you know, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority of Canada is now preparing, under statutory authority, to construct a number of locks at Lachine, Beauharnois and Iroquois in order to provide deep-water navigation in the St. Lawrence River. The statutory authority for these works, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act of 1951, specified that facilities are to be provided for navigation requiring a controlling channel depth of 27 feet with a depth of 30 feet over lock sills. These dimensions are in accordance with the joint recommendations of the Temporary Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin Committee and the United States Advisory Committee dated January 3, 1941 and they conform to the dimensions of locks in the Welland Ship Canal which are generally 800 feet in length, 80 feet in width and 30 feet in depth over the sills.

In recent months there appear to have been some question as to whether the locks to be built on United States territory by the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation of the United States will be of dimensions different from those described above. Recently, however, the Administrator of the United States Corporation wrote to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority of Canada that the Corporation had decided to adhere to the Welland Canal lock dimensions in its construction of locks in United States territory.

In order to remove the possibility of any further doubt about this question, I should be grateful if you would confirm that the United States Government has decided that the dimensions of the single locks to be constructed on the United States side of the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River will confirm to the dimensions of the locks of the Welland Ship Canal. Draft ends. Message ends.

423.

DEA/1268-D-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-216

Washington, February 5, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your teletype EX-199 of the 3 of February.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

1. Thank you for getting to us so quickly the Canadian counter-draft, which seems to us to be very skilfully drawn. We called on Horsey yesterday afternoon at the State Department and left copies with him.
2. After reading it, he said that he would prefer not to comment in detail, since before doing so, he would like to consult with other officials in the State Department, the Department of Defense, and the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation. He did, however, ask us what significance should be attached to the differences between the last sentence of the second paragraph of your draft and the first part of the second sentence of the United States draft, which also deals with 14-foot navigation at Cornwall. We explained that, since it would be necessary for ships passing up and down the St. Lawrence to be able to put in to Cornwall, even though they would not be using the 14-foot canals to by-pass the power houses at Barnhart Island, some new construction might be required for a turning basin, etc., at Cornwall. On that account, the Canadian authorities would not be willing to express the intention not to construct any new 14-foot canal facilities in the Cornwall area. Horsey seemed quite satisfied with this explanation. He still wondered, however, what might be the significance of the use of the words, "it has also appeared to us ...", which seemed to him rather odd. Would the Canadian authorities agree to that sentence beginning: "We also understand?" We replied that we did not know why those particular words had been chosen, but expressed the personal view that you might be agreeable to the change he had suggested.

3. Horsey did not enquire about the statement earlier in the same paragraph "that the Canadian Government does not intend to complete the works necessary to allow 27-foot navigation to by-pass the power houses in the Cornwall-Barnhart area..." We rather regretted this, since we were prepared to explain why it might be necessary for several practical reasons to undertake 27-foot channel enlargements on the north side of Cornwall Island. However, since he did not question this passage in your draft, we did not think it appropriate for us to draw it specifically to his attention.

4. On the other hand, we did bring to his notice that your draft confines itself to the subjects discussed at the meeting between Canadian and United States Ministers that took place in the Pentagon on the 6 of January. The question of lock dimensions had been deliberately excluded from this proposed exchange, we told Horsey. But, because of the uncertainties there had been over the dimensions of the canals to be built in United States territory, there was some uneasiness over this matter in Ottawa and a desire that it should be finally settled in diplomatic correspondence. For that reason it was likely that the Secretary of State would shortly be writing to the United States Ambassador in Ottawa:

- (a) To inform him that the Canadian canals would be built to the Welland dimensions;
- (b) To express our understanding that the United States canals would be built to the same dimensions; and
- (c) To ask for confirmation of the latter point.

We did not show Horsey the draft letter you have prepared on this subject because we were afraid that, if we did so, it might be impossible to avoid discussion of the terms in which it had been drafted. We were also apprehensive that the introduction of your draft on lock dimensions at this stage might complicate and delay the process of reaching agreement on the proposed exchange of letters to record the understanding that was reached on the 6 of January.

5. Horsey's only comment on our indication that the United States Embassy might expect to receive shortly a letter on lock dimensions was that he hoped this would not cause any reflection on Mr. Castle's word, who, after all, had written to a member of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to state that the development corporation here is "quite determined to adhere to the original Welland dimensions". Although we fully agree with you that it would be useful in the near future to have this point settled in more formal correspondence, we wonder whether it might not be possible to defer the exchange of letters on lock dimensions until letters have been exchanged on the Canadian and United States intentions for construction at Cornwall and Iroquois, respectively. In our opinion, such a slight delay should make for smoother sailing.

6. Before leaving, we told Horsey that we did not regard the proposed exchange of letters currently under negotiation as constituting a departure from the notes of the 17 of August.

1954, except insofar as they contained a statement of the present Canadian intention concerning 14-foot navigation and a statement of the present United States intention concerning construction of 27-foot navigation works opposite Iroquois. Horsey noted our remarks to that effect and did not demur.

7. Finally, he promised that he would be getting in touch with us again as soon as the Canadian counter-draft had been considered by the other United States authorities concerned.

A.D.P. HEENEY

424.

DEA/1268-D-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-234

Ottawa, February 8, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your WA-216 of February 5, 1955.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

The reason for our re-draft of para. 2 of the United States draft letter is as follows. The only undertaking on 14-foot navigation given by Canada during the August, 1954 negotiations was to consult the United States if we intended to continue 14-foot navigation oll-free (our "collateral letter" of August 24, 1954). Therefore, in para. 2 of the United States draft letter, we did not like the linking of the present "understanding" that Canada would not continue 14-foot navigation with the Canadian undertaking, as expressed in our Note of August 17, 1954, not to build now complete 27-foot navigation works at Barnhart. Furthermore we used the phrase "it has also appeared to us...", rather than "we also understand..." because we wished to distinguish between a new verbal expression of intention and a formal commitment in the past.

2. We too regretted that no opportunity arose to explain to Horsey why Canada might wish to construct a 27-foot channel north of Cornwall Island. You will doubtless seek to explain this matter to Horsey on a suitable occasion and should take the initiative if necessary. If you need further background information on this matter, kindly let us know.

3. We agree that it would be profitable to complete the present exchange of letters before sending the new letter to Ambassador Stuart on lock dimensions. After the present exchange is completed we shall give you ample notice before sending the letter on lock dimensions to Ambassador Stuart; meanwhile your comments on our draft would be welcome. We have of course endeavoured, in our draft, not to cast undue reflection on Mr. Castle (your para. 5). I might say that whatever uneasiness may have arisen here on lock dimensions is in no small part due to Mr. Castle's contradictory statements. He did publicly announce last November that the United States Corporation would adhere to Welland dimensions; nevertheless he did seek to raise the question of dimensions again, and then withdrew it from the agenda of the last Corporation-Authority meeting only at the last moment. Because of the financial engineering and political implications (on both sides of the border) of any proposals to deepen navigation facilities — and also for domestic purposes — it seems desirable to end any possible uncertainty about lock dimensions before the new construction season.

4. For your own information and in view of paragraph 5 of your telegram, we are asking Mr. Chevrier if he can suggest an amendment to Mr. Pearson's proposed letter to Ambassador Stuart which would ease the position for Mr. Castle.

425.

CEW/3175

Le chef de la Direction de l'Amérique au ministre-conseiller de l'ambassade aux États-Unis

Head, American Division, to Minister-Counsellor, Embassy in United States

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, February 8, 1955

My dear Doug [LePan]:

We were all very grateful for telegram WA-216 on the St. Lawrence Seaway which Mr. Heeney sent to us on February 5th. He was, as ever, generous both in work and spirit.

In this telegram, Mr. Heeney indicated that Horsey had not questioned the significance of the changes which had been made as regards the 27-foot works in the vicinity of Cornwall. I thought it might be useful to give you a bit of background as to some of the thinking in the Department.

In passing — and before getting into this question — I might probably say that Max Wershof, Sid Freifeld and I had thought (in varying degrees) that the draft letter proposed by the State Department in WA-62 was somewhat impertinent. Candidly, it seemed to me to be an unmitigated attempt by our friends to modify the agreement contained in the August 17 Exchange of Letters! Be that as it may, I think that it would be useful to give you some background on what we expect might be the turn of events as regards the 27-foot channel excavations in the vicinity of Cornwall and the necessity for Canada to keep her rights unfettered in that connection.

If you turn to the St. Lawrence Seaway map contained in the Application of June 30, 1952 to the L.J.C. you will note that below the powerhouse are to be found three splotches of brown which indicate areas where cuts or dredging may have to take place. Paragraph 8(a) of the Application provides in the penultimate sentence that "Downstream from the power houses channel enlargements will be carried out for the purpose of reducing the tail water level at the power houses". The last sentence of this paragraph provides that the final location and cross section of these channel enlargements "will be determined from further studies". Paragraph (a) of Appendix A to the Order of October 29, 1952 repeats this language of both these sentences in identical terms.

As the studies of Ontario Hydro and of the Power Authority of the State of New York progress, it is becoming apparent to them that dredging for the purpose of reducing the "tail water level at the power houses" may be required only in the one area (shown in brown on the map) immediately adjacent to the power house. Little, if any, dredging may be required South or North of Cornwall Island for power purposes. The Canadian section of the St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers and General McNaughton (as well as members of the Canadian Seaway Authority) are becoming convinced that this will prove to be the case. The corollary is, of course, that a large amount of dredging may be required for the navigation approaches to the United States 27-foot canal and locks in that area

South of Cornwall Island now that the U.S. Seaway Corporation is to build the canal and two locks near Massena. Such dredging may affect the distribution of the flow of the River in that area. At present, possibly 60% of the St. Lawrence River flows through Polly's Gut, South of Cornwall Island while 40% flows North of Polly's Gut. Indications are, from model tests carried out at the National Research Council in Ottawa, that any dredging whatsoever South of Cornwall Island will disturb this distribution of flow and level. Indications are that such dredging for navigation purposes may disrupt the flow to the extent of drawing 80% of the water South of Cornwall Island through Polly's Gut thus leaving only 20% of the flow North of Cornwall Island.

Article III of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 provides that, in addition to the uses, obstructions and diversions heretofore permitted or "hereafter provide for by special agreement" between the parties no further uses, obstructions or diversions of boundary waters on either side of the line affecting the "natural flow or level of boundary waters on the other side" shall be made except by the Authority of the United States or Canada within their respective jurisdiction "and with the approval" of the International Joint Commission. The second paragraph of this Article goes on to say that these provisions are not intended to "limit or interfere" with the existing rights of governments "to undertake or carry on governmental works in boundary waters for the deepening of channels", etc., "for the benefit of commerce and navigation", provided that such works are "wholly on its own side of the line" and "do not materially affect the level or flow of the boundary waters on the other" and do not interfere with the ordinary use of water for domestic and sanitary purposes. It therefore appears to some of us that the dredging for navigation purpose South of Cornwall Island is likely materially to affect the level of flow of boundary waters on the Canadian side. In addition, the works which the United States would have to do South of Cornwall Island are not "wholly on its side of the line". We conclude, therefore, that, before dredging South of Cornwall Island for navigation purposes, the United States will require either the permission of the I.J.C. or a special agreement with Canada. For the reasons shown hereafter, I think it possible — and even probable — that Canada will prefer to have a special agreement with the United States.

If the United States wishes to dredge for navigation purposes South of Cornwall Island, Canada will certainly require that compensatory works (possibly in the form of dredging) should be done on the Canadian side North of Cornwall Island. (I understand that if there is dredging done for power purposes South of Cornwall Island, compensatory works in the form of dredging would be done North of Cornwall Island: the I.J.C. would insist upon this under its Order of October 29, 1952 — General McNaughton dixit!) I understand that the cheapest form of dredging to restore a given volume of flow would be to dredge over a broad, shallow area. If Canada has any hope of having 27-foot locks and canals in the Cornwall area it might be the part of wisdom to ensure that the compensatory works should not be done over a broad, shallow area but over a narrower and deeper area and in such a manner as to constitute part or the whole of a 27-foot channel in being on the Canadian side. The additional cost attributable to this latter method of dredging would, of course, be borne by Canada. We would thus ensure that in future we would not have to seek the consent of the United States or the approval of the I.J.C. to dredge North of Cornwall Island in order to obtain a 27-foot channel and we would have put to better use the compensatory works which the United States would presumably have to do on the Canadian side. In addition to wishing the U.S.A. to do compensatory works in Canada (at its expense) in a given manner, the question of the régime to govern soil disposal and dredging on Canadian territory South of Cornwall area all militate, as I see, in favour of a "special agreement" foreseen by the Treaty. I am afraid, our American friends (who are aware of this problem, I am told, on the engineering level) are not going to like this in the least! It explains, in part, I think, their desire for our "undertakings". The more so, that we have now "discovered" that it may be dangerous — once the level of water is raised in the power pool — to breach the dykes on the Canadian side! We may, therefore, wish to reverse the field and to have the groundwork at least for 27-foot (in fact for 30-foot) navigation works done in the dyke now.

It is for these reasons that we are not too anxious, at this time, to commit ourselves to the Americans that we shall do no 27-foot works in the Cornwall area!

I hope that this may prove to be useful to you. If there are any points which are unclear, please let me know.

Yours sincerely,

ERNEST [CÔTÉ]

426.

PCO

Note du chef du Comité du Cabinet sur le projet du Saint-Laurent

Memorandum by Chairman, Cabinet Committee on St. Lawrence Seaway Project

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 25-55

[Ottawa], February 8, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

ST. LAWRENCE POWER PROJECT; SPECIAL CUSTOMS AND IMMIGRATION
ARRANGEMENTS RESPECTING CHANNEL EXCAVATIONS

The special Cabinet Committee established by Cabinet on February 1st to review any problems that might arise with regard to the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project considered on February 3rd and 4th a report on special customs and immigration arrangements that might be made with regard to channel excavations required for power purposes in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River. The report, copy of which is attached, was prepared and submitted by the Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence Project.

The Cabinet Committee, after considering the implications of the various courses of action open to the government in this matter, generally favoured the third alternative set out on pages 6 and 7 of the Interdepartmental Committee's report. This would involve remission of customs duty and excise taxes on all equipment to be used both for wet and dry excavations to be undertaken for power purposes in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River and also a complete waiver of normal immigration requirements for persons employed on such excavations.

It is suggested that this course of action would be in the best interests of Canada because,

- (a) it would likely ensure the employment of many hundreds more Canadian workmen than if no such special arrangements were made;
- (b) although the customs waiver would have to apply to all countries and not only to Canada and the United States, this would not likely be prejudicial to the interests of Canadian manufacturers because practically all of the heavy earth-moving equipment that would be used in the dry excavations is manufactured in the United States in any event, and because the dredges required to do the wet excavations are already in the hands of

Canadian and U.S. firms (European dredging firms will probably not be in a position to bid on the contracts to be let by Ontario Hydro as all of these contracts will involve a fair amount of dredging in U.S. waters and there is an outright prohibition against the use of other than Canadian and U.S. dredges on the U.S. portions of this project); and

(c) the international boundary crosses through most of the blocks of excavations to be undertaken and it would consequently be very difficult to apply customs requirements and virtually impossible to apply normal immigration requirements.

In view of the above, the Cabinet Committee recommends that customs duty and excise taxes be remitted on the equipment to be used for wet and dry excavations for power purposes in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River and that normal immigration requirements be waived with regard to persons employed on such excavations provided.

(a) that the U.S. Administration enter into a reciprocal arrangement on the above basis with regard to the excavations for power purposes on the U.S. side of the International boundary;

(b) that customs duty and excise taxes are not waived with regard to consumable materials such as gasoline, oil, food, etc., to be used; and

(c) that satisfactory assurances are received that nothing in U.S. federal or state law will prevent Ontario Hydro from requiring that Canadian wage rates shall apply to the labour employed on its excavation contracts even though some of these excavations may be in U.S. territory.<sup>149</sup>

GEORGE C. MARLER

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Note du secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Assistant Secretary to Cabinet
to Cabinet*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], February 2, 1955

ST. LAWRENCE POWER PROJECT; SPECIAL CUSTOMS AND IMMIGRATION
ARRANGEMENTS RESPECTING CHANNEL EXCAVATIONS

At a meeting held on July 13, 1954, the Cabinet considered recommendations of an Interdepartmental Committee of officials with regard to special customs and immigration arrangements with the United States on the movement of equipment, materials, and personnel across the Canada-U.S. boundary during the course of construction of the St. Lawrence Power project by the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission and the New York State Power Authority.<sup>150</sup> At this time, the Committee reported that it had come to the conclusion that the most practical and defensible course of action would be to make a distinction between the "international" and the "national" components of the project and to waive all duties, taxes and normal immigration requirements in respect of the former while making no concessions of any kind with regard to the latter.

<sup>149</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet, le 9 février 1955.

Approved by Cabinet on February 9, 1955.

<sup>150</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 570.

The total Canadian and U.S. investment in the power project is of the order of $500 million. Of this, something more than $350 million will be expenditures on components of an essentially "national" rather than "international" character and clearly located on one side of the boundary or the other. These national works include both power houses, the generating equipment, the Long Sault dam, the dykes and all rehabilitation undertakings such as relocation of highways, railways, bridges, towns, etc. The remainder of the power project amounting to slightly more than $130 million for both Ontario and New York consists of works which are predominantly "international" and include three main items — i.e. the cofferdams, the channel improvements and the Iroquois control dam.

After considering the Interdepartmental Committee's recommendations, the Cabinet agreed,

(a) that all duties and taxes on materials to be incorporated in the cofferdams and on equipment to be used in the construction of these cofferdams be remitted, and that normal immigration requirements be waived in respect of persons employed on these works;

(b) that without commitment — except with regard to cofferdams — as to which works should be classed in each category, approval be given to the principle that all duties and taxes should be remitted and normal immigration requirements waived in respect of "international" works; and

(c) that the U.S. State Department be informed that the Canadian Government was prepared to reciprocate in the matter of special customs and immigration arrangements on cofferdams as set out in (a) above, and that the Department of External Affairs be authorized, in consultation with the government departments concerned and subject to final Cabinet approval, to negotiate with the State Department a reciprocal customs and immigration agreement covering the whole power project along the lines suggested in (b) above.

Following the Cabinet's decision of July 13th, final arrangements for a complete waiver of duties and taxes and immigration requirements on the cofferdams were worked out by the Department of External Affairs and the U.S. State Department and work on the cofferdams is now under way.

I. THE CHANNEL EXCAVATION PROBLEM

Although a decision is not required immediately with regard to the Iroquois control dam, there is some urgency in reaching an early decision on the channel excavations to be undertaken on both sides of the boundary since both Ontario and New York plan to draw up specifications for these works in the near future in order that tenders may be called, contracts awarded and the works started as early as possible in the spring of 1955.

(a) Work to be done

It is estimated that there is approximately $91 million worth of channel excavation to be done in the international section, including approximately $10 million of excavation for seaway purposes below the power houses. The nature, value and location of the excavation to be done is shown in the following table:

	Cost and Nature of Excavation for Power and Seaway Purposes in International Section of the St. Lawrence River
	In United States	In Canada
Wet excavation	$26.6 million	$15.0 million
Dry excavation	42.3 million	7.1 million
TOTAL	$68.9 million	$22.1 million

(the excavation for seaway purposes below the power-house will be mainly wet excavation of which approximately $7 million worth will be in the United States and $4 million in Canada).

It is important to note that of the total channel enlargements to be undertaken more than half ($49.4 million) will be in the form of dry excavation while only $41.6 million worth will be wet excavation requiring the use of dipper and ladder dredges. It is also important to note that although almost all the dry excavation to be undertaken lies within the United States, something less than two-thirds of the wet excavation is in U.S. territory and the balance in Canada.

(b) Division of total works between Ontario and New York

Before work was undertaken on the St. Lawrence project, it was agreed between Ontario Hydro and New York State Power Authority that responsibility for construction of the works would be divided, both in dollar value and in man hours, as evenly as possible between Ontario and New York and without too much regard to the international boundary. To date, the only special customs and immigration arrangements that have been made concern the cofferdams and it has been agreed that Ontario Hydro will construct all the cofferdams required at the power houses while New York will construct all the cofferdams required both at the Long Sault Dam and at the Iroquois control dam. Assuming that the international boundary will decide what entity is to perform the remainder of the works, the total expenditure (excluding generating equipment, interest during construction and certain other charges) by New York on the completed project will be $218 million as opposed to an expenditure of only $184 million by Ontario Hydro.

The power entities claim that the only really practical way of re-establishing a more satisfactory balance between the two entities would be to allocate to Ontario Hydro the responsibility for undertaking a considerable portion of the channel enlargements which lie within U.S. territory. Such a reallocation has been informally agreed to by both Ontario and New York and on January 6th the Chairman of the Ontario Hydro Power Commission and the Assistant General Manager (Engineering) submitted the details of this reallocation and enquired whether the Canadian and U.S. governments would agree to a complete waiver of customs and immigration requirements in order that both Canadian and U.S. contractors might bid on the blocks of excavations allocated to New York and Ontario respectively regardless of the international boundary. If this were done it would mean, in effect, that for channel enlargement purposes the international section of the St. Lawrence River from Prescott to Cornwall would become a free zone and that both Canadian and U.S. contractors could bid on tenders called either by Ontario or by New York.

Under the plan suggested by Ontario and New York, channel enlargements would, generally speaking, be divided into two large blocks — Ontario Hydro undertaking the excavation to be done above, through and below Galop Island, while New York would do most of the excavation downstream from Sparrow Hawk Point. Under this scheme the total value of the excavation to be undertaken by Ontario would be $55.5 million while New York would spend approximately $27.4 million on its share. If this were agreed to, the total expenditures by both entities on the completed project would be $212 million by Ontario and $213 million by New York.

(c) The legal position

The laws of the United States prohibit any dredge from operating in U.S. waters unless it has been and registered in the United States. However the U.S. Collector of Customs at Ogdensburg informed the General Counsel of the New York State Power Authority on November 17th, 1954, that on the written recommendation of the Deputy Secretary of Defence who deemed the action necessary in the interests of defence, the U.S. Commissioner of Customs had waived 46 USC 292 to the extent necessary to permit any Canadian built dredge to be employed in dredging operations on the U.S. side of the international boundary in connection with the St. Lawrence seaway and power projects without being documented as a vessel of the United States. The customs problem does not arise in connection with this waiver since there is no U.S. tariff on dredges.

The legal situation in Canada is not as clear cut. The Deputy Minister of Justice has, under date of January 27th, expressed the opinion that the only provision in the Canada Shipping Act which appears to have any bearing on the matter is Section 672 which provides that the master of any steamship, not being a British ship, engaged or having been engaged in towing any ship, vessel or raft from one place in Canada to another, is liable to a fine of $400. However the government would no doubt be reluctant to use a provision of this kind in the matter under reference and, in any event, an American dredging company could circumvent this section by employing a Canadian ship to tow its dredge. The Deputy Minister of Justice has advised further that persons employed in dredging operations within Canadian boundaries would of course be required to comply with the terms of the Immigration Act and that, with the exception of Canadian citizens or persons with Canadian domicile that might be employed on the dredges, it would be necessary for the persons so employed to qualify as non-immigrants within the meaning of section 7 of the Immigration Act or as an immigrant who is a person seeking admission into Canada for permanent residence. Finally, there are the provisions of the Customs Tariff (Item 440A) under which dredges destined for use or service in Canadian waters are subject to duty of 25 percent of the fair market value of the hull, rigging, machinery, boilers, furniture and appurtenances thereof, on arrival in Canada. A sales tax of 10 percent is also payable on U.S. dredges brought into Canada.

II. THE CONSIDERATIONS

A recent survey of Canadian facilities has indicated that Canadian companies have all the equipment required to do all the dredging to be undertaken for both seaway and power purposes in the International Rapids Section, including those portions of the work which lie in U.S. territory but which have been allocated to Ontario. On the other hand, Canadian construction companies claim that they would have to purchase a considerable amount of new machinery if they took on a substantial part of the dry excavation.

The problem, however, is not so much one of determining whether Canadian contractors have the equipment to do the work but rather of deciding what special arrangement, if any, would be in the best interests of Canada.

One important point to keep in mind is that a large portion of the block of excavation tentatively allocated to Ontario Hydro in and around Galop Island would involve the use not of dredges but of ordinary earth-moving equipment. The waiver by the U.S. Commissioner of Customs relates only to dredges and if the plan submitted by Ontario and New York is to be carried through this would involve some form of agreement between Canada and the United States covering not only dredges but other excavating equipment such as bulldozers, trucks, etc.

Both Ontario and New York are interested in obtaining a complete waiver of duties and immigration requirements with regard to excavation because this will contribute to lower the costs of the work. It has been suggested that costs would be reduced not only because there would be no customs duties to be paid but also because lower bids may result from the fact that Canadian and American dredging companies would have to compete against each other on equal terms for all the business available, whether on the Canadian or on the U.S. side of the boundary.

In order to determine how the Canadian contractors themselves would react to a complete waiver of customs and immigration requirements with respect to the channel excavations, informal approaches were made to the three largest Canadian dredging companies (Marine Industries Limited, Canadian Dredge and Dock Limited, and J.P. Porter and Sons Limited), and to the General Manager of the Canadian Construction Association and representatives of a number of the larger construction firms in Canada. Without exception, they all argued against any waiver in the international section of the St. Lawrence. The reasons advanced by these companies in support of their stand are set out in Appendix A hereto.†

At least some of the argument advanced by the dredging and construction companies are open to question. For example, the dredging companies pointed out that wages in the United States were 60 to 70 percent higher than in Canada and they feared that, if the International Section was declared a free zone, Canadian wage rates would inevitably be pushed close to the U.S. level. In answer to this argument, it should of course be pointed out that an increase in Canadian wage levels will likely occur in any event, since Canadian and U.S. dredges will be working in close proximity to each other whether or not any special customs or immigration arrangements are made. The Canadian construction companies pointed out that they must import all of their heavy equipment and must pay duties ranging from 10 to 30 percent. In actual fact, the duty on the heavy earth-moving equipment required in the International Section ranges from "free" to 22 1/2 percent, and the average duty on the bulk of the machinery to be used is 7 1/2 percent. The construction industry also pointed out that Canadian companies would have to purchase a considerable amount of new machinery if they took on a substantial part of the dry excavation. On the other hand, engineers of Ontario Hydro have stated that there is no more yardage to be excavated in the dry in the block tentatively allocated to Ontario than there was at the recently developed Hydro project at Niagara, where all the excavation was done by Hydro itself, either with its own equipment or with equipment rented from Canadian companies.

The effect of a customs waiver on Canadian manufacturers would likely be negligible since materials are not involved to any significant extent in either wet or dry excavation.

Assuming that the dredging and construction companies are right and that a waiver of customs and immigration requirements in the International Section would be to their disadvantage, it remains to be determined what would best serve the interests of Canadian labour. According to figures supplied by Ontario-Hydro, it is estimated that the total number of workmen employed on dry excavation the year round for four years would be 70 in Canada and 1,000 in the United States while the total number of men employed on dredging 200 days a year for four years would be 290 in Canada and 1,000 in the United States. In other words, during the summer months of four consecutive years, 2,000 men would be working on excavations on the U.S. side of the boundary while only 360 men would be similarly engaged in Canada. On the other hand, if the International Section is declared a free zone and approximately two-thirds of the work is done under contracts let by Ontario-Hydro as envisaged under the proposed redistribution scheme, it would seem likely that even though American firms were the lowest bidders and got the Hydro contracts they would almost certainly have to employ Canadian labour since all specifications issued by Ontario-Hydro have a clause stipulating wages to be paid and these wage rates are worked out in consultation with the Labour Unions on the basis of Canadian standards which, at present, are substantially lower than U.S. standards. It is to be expected, however, that during the four years it will take to complete the project, Canadian wage rates will gradually be raised closer to the U.S. rates and, obviously, the narrower the margin between the two levels becomes, the less will be the advantage enjoyed by Canadian labour.

A practical reason which militates in favour of the waiver is that the international boundary crosses through most of the proposed contract blocks of dry and wet excavation and it would therefore be difficult to apply the customs tariff on the equipment and materials used on this work and virtually impossible to abide by normal immigration requirements. No dredge can be expected to respect an intangible boundary line in mid-stream and workmen will have to go back and forth across the border while excavating the channels in the dry.

A final consideration is that, faced with the fait accompli of the waiver issued by the U.S. Commissioner of Customs in favour of Canadian dredges, the Canadian Government may be placed in a rather awkward position if it appears to take a less liberal stand than the United States Administration in this matter.

III. CONCLUSION

The committee of officials which has been studying this problem has considered a number of possible alternative courses of action which could be followed by the government in this matter. The committee discarded as impractical all the alternatives except the three set out hereunder. As the committee of officials was unable to arrive at a unanimous conclusion as to which of the three alternatives it should recommend to the government, it merely wishes to draw attention to the alternatives and point out the advantages and disadvantages of each.

The first alternative would be to refuse to make any special arrangements of any kind and to allow customs and immigration requirements to apply as best they can. If this were done, it does not necessarily follow that Canadian firms would be assured of getting the contracts for the dry and wet excavations on the Canadian side of the boundary, although Canadian labour would almost certainly have to be employed on the Canadian portions of the excavations whether or not Canadian companies actually got the contracts. Furthermore, if the contracts for excavations are to be awarded by Ontario and New York on the basis of the boundary, the total value of the contracts to be let by Ontario on the shareable portions of the overall project would only be $184 million as opposed to $218 million by New York. Under this alternative, there would be certain customs problems and almost insuperable immigration difficulties. In addition, in circumstances such as these, the U.S. Commissioner of Customs might withdraw his recent waiver of the prohibition against Canadian dredges with the result that U.S. dredges could operate in Canadian waters, provided they paid the appropriate customs duty and sales tax, while there would be an outright prohibition against any Canadian dredge operating in U.S. waters. The only merit of this course of action would be that the Canadian government could say that it had merely left existing laws to operate as best they could and that practical difficulties which might be encountered by Ontario and New York did not result from any positive governmental action.

The second alternative would be to allow present laws to apply in respect of dry excavations, but to waive all customs and immigration requirements with regard to dredging equipment and crews. Ontario Hydro maintain that it is not practical to award contracts separately for dredging and for dry excavation but presumably it would be possible for several contractors on both sides of the border to bid jointly on the same contract. This course of action would, of course, have most of the disadvantages of alternative one.

A third course of action would be to have a complete waiver of all customs and immigration requirements on all channel excavations, wet and dry, to be undertaken by Ontario and New York in the International Section of the River. Such a complete waiver would remove any protection that U.S. contractors might have in the United States and that Canadian contractors might have in Canada. Canadian contractors have represented that such a complete waiver would make it more difficult for them to get any of the business available in the International Section. Whether or not the work is done by Canadian firms, however, this course of action would likely ensure employment for a period of four years for many hundreds more Canadian workmen than would be the case if there was no waiver. Incidental advantages would be that the total cost of the project, and hence of the power eventually produced, would be somewhat lower and that the total dollar and manpower content of the project would be divided almost equally between Ontario and New York. Even if the dredging on the Canadian side of the boundary is done entirely by U.S. firms, this might not be too serious for Canadian dredging companies. There are only 8.3 million cubic yards of dredging to be done for power purposes on the Canadian side of the boundary. On the other hand, some 12 million cubic yards of dredging must be done for the Seaway Authority at the Iroquois Canal, in Lake St. Francis, at Beauharnois and in the Lachine Canal section. Canadian dredging companies are assured of getting the contracts for this 12 million cubic yards. Furthermore, a number of Canadian dredges are now engaged on a government contract for the removal of some 9 million cubic yards of material from the ship channel below Montreal. Although this contract is 86 percent completed, it is likely that additional dredging will have to be undertaken in the ship channel in years to come. A complete waiver might not necessarily be too injurious to the interests of the Canadian construction industry either. It will be recalled that a Canadian firm, Mannix-Raymond, obtained the contract for the construction of the cofferdams at the power houses and this firm had to compete with U.S. contractors on a customs free basis. Furthermore, even if the Canadian construction companies were to miss out on much of the dry excavation contracts to be let by Ontario Hydro, it must not be forgotten that these same companies will be assured full customs and immigration protection, for what it is worth, in bidding for the several millions of dollars worth of other contracts to be let by Ontario Hydro which will involve much the same type of operation as the dry excavations, i.e. rehabilitation — $71.5 million, dykes — $11.5 million, etc.

The Committee suggests that if any special customs and immigration arrangements are made they should apply only to the excavation to be done exclusively for power purposes and should not apply to the seaway excavations to be undertaken at the Iroquois canal and north and south of Cornwall Island. In the case of the Iroquois canal all excavations, both dry and wet, will be entirely in Canadian territory and therefore no problem should arise. With regard to the dredging to be done north and south of Cornwall Island, it has not yet been determined whether a portion of this work can properly be attributed to power. Furthermore, the excavation north of Cornwall Island is entirely in Canadian territory while the excavation south of the island (which is required to provide a navigable exit from the U.S. canal at Barnhart) lies partly in Canada and partly in the United States. The Committee feels that separate arrangements for the channel excavations north and south of Cornwall Island can be made at a later date after it has been determined whether or not part of the cost of these excavations is to be borne by the power entities.

The Committee finally wishes to point out that our obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade are such that, if the government decides to adopt the third alternative, the customs waiver will have to apply multilaterally to all countries and not be restricted to a bilateral arrangement between Canada and the United States. The United States, of course, have similar obligations under G.A.T.T. This, however, does not appear to present serious practical difficulties. As construction materials are not involved, the rather awkward problem that arose in connection with the importation of German steel for the construction of the power house cofferdams will not recur in this case. It is possible, of course, that some earth-moving equipment may be purchased from foreign sources if customs are waived, but this is not likely to happen on a large scale if Ontario Hydro is correct in its assertion that there is now enough equipment of this sort in Canada to do the dry channelling tentatively allocated to Canada. The likelihood that other than Canadian or U.S. construction companies would be successful in obtaining dry excavation contracts is remote. On the other hand, it is possible that foreign dredging companies (from the Netherlands for example) might underbid both Canadian and U.S. companies for the wet excavation. There are practical considerations, however, which would make it very difficult if not impossible for foreign companies to take the contracts. In the first place, many of the large self-propelled ocean-going dredges used by these foreign companies could not get through the 14-ft locks in the St. Lawrence River. Furthermore, the waiver by the U.S. Commissioner of Customs on the use of dredges in U.S. waters applies only to Canadian dredges and it would therefore not be possible for European dredging companies to accept Hydro contracts since most of these would involve at least some dredging on the U.S. side of the international boundary.

PAUL PELLETIER

427.

DEA/1268-D-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-243

Washington, February 10, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your EX-234 of February 8.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

May we first offer a few comments on the proposed exchange of letters to record the understandings reached at the meeting here on January 6, and then go on to consider the proposed exchange on lock dimensions?

2. We appreciate that you do not want a link established between the formal commitment (registered in the exchange of notes of the 17 of August, 1954) that Canada would not build now complete 27' navigation works at Cornwall, with the new and less formal statement that Canada does not intend to continue 14' navigation in that reach of the river. However, we must admit that the phrase chosen to avoid that pitfall seemed to us strange. We wonder whether it might not be possible to achieve the same result without introducing into the text words which are likely to prove such a stumbling block to readers as "it has also appeared to us ...". For example, might the new expression of intention not be sufficiently distinguished from the formal undertaking of last August if the last sentence of the second paragraph of your draft were amended to read, "we now gather also that ...". We should be grateful to know if you would be willing to let us suggest such a formula as a compromise when next we meet with Horsey. Even though the present expression of intention does not have the same legal status as the undertaking given last August, we think it would be a mistake to embody it in words which seemed to cast doubt on the firmness of the Canadian Government's present intentions.

3. We will be glad to explain to Horsey on some suitable opportunity why Canada might wish to construct a 27' channel north of Cornwall Island. If our understanding is correct, this might be desirable if in any case some dredging there is required in order to maintain the same flow through that channel as at present and to provide proper navigation facilities. Before we offer explanations on this point, however, we should be grateful to know whether or not you would wish us to mention to Horsey the possibility that it might also be necessary during the course of the construction now being undertaken to breach the dyke north of Cornwall, since to do so at a later stage might so weaken the dyke as to endanger the city by flooding.

4. We are glad you agree that it would be wise to complete the exchange of letters recording the understandings reached last month before sending a letter to the United States Ambassador in Ottawa concerning lock dimensions. We should also like to suggest that without sacrificing our position in any way, it might be possible to use a rather easier style in such a letter and so minimize the risk of giving offence to Castle. Certainly that risk would have to be incurred if in no other way could we achieve our objective of formalizing in diplomatic correspondence the understanding on lock dimensions. But if we can achieve our purpose and at the same time use a tone adapted to maintain good relations with Castle, we think that the effort would be worthwhile. Our immediately following telegram contains an alternative draft for your consideration.

5. There is one passage in your draft which we think you will agree, however, is best considered separately from the general run of the letter. It is the passage in which you refer to "the single locks to be constructed on the United States side of the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence River." From the Under-Secretary's memorandum of the 24th of January on this subject we have inferred that this adjective has been included in the draft with a view to allaying fears that the United States intends to build twin locks at Barnhart Island when traffic and other conditions warrant. We very much doubt if the expedient you are thinking of adopting would succeed in its purpose. In the first place, if it is not intended to seek agreement with the State Department on the text of the letter before it is despatched (and we have no quarrel with that tactic), the United States Ambassador is almost certain in his reply to take up your reference to single locks and to reserve the United States right to build twin locks, subject only to the obligation to consult contained in the exchange of notes of the 17th of August. In that event, it seems to us that the last state would be worse than the first. Secondly, even if the United States Ambassador were to reply to your proposed letter without referring to your mention of single locks, the United States would be no more bound not to build twin locks at Barnhart Island after the letters had been exchanged than they had been previously. Our view is that if this question is causing real worry in Ottawa, it should be raised explicitly and at a high level with the United States authorities. However, we would hope that the exchange of letters both to record the understandings reached on the 6th of January and to settle finally the lock dimensions would have been completed before you broached the question of twin locks on the United States side of the river.

G. DE T. GLAZEBROOK

428.

DEA/1268-D-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-244

Washington, February 10, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our immediately preceding telegram.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

Following is our re-draft of the proposed letter to be sent to the United States Ambassador in Ottawa concerning lock dimensions.

Draft begins:

I have been glad to hear that Mr. Lewis Castle, Administrator of the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, has written informally to a member of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority in Canada expressing the decision of the Development Corporation to adhere to the original Welland Canal dimensions for the locks to be built on the United States side of the river in the International Rapids Section. The President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority of Canada, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, has several times, I know, similarly assured Mr. Castle that the locks to be built in Canadian territory at Lachine, Beauharnois and Iroquois will have these same dimensions. Indeed, so far as the Canadian canals are concerned, those dimensions have been fixed by legislation passed by the Canadian Parliament.

However, I hope you will not consider it an unnecessary formality if I suggest that the intentions of the two governments in this regard should be embodied in diplomatic correspondence. The purpose of my letter, therefore, is to inform you that the locks to be built by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority of Canada at Lachine, Beauharnois and Iroquois are to be provided for navigation requiring channel depth of 27', with a depth of 30' over the lock sills. The dimensions of the locks to be built at those points will be in accordance with the joint recommendations of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence basin committee and the United States Advisory Committee, dated the 3rd of January, 1941, and will confirm to the dimensions of locks in the Welland Ship Canal, which are generally 800' in length, 80' in width, and 30' in depth over the sills. I should be grateful if you could confirm that the dimensions of the locks to be built on the United States side of the river in the International Rapids Section will also conform to the dimension of the locks of the Welland Ship Canal.

Draft ends.<sup>151</sup>

G. DE T. GLAZEBROOK

<sup>151</sup> Une version légèrement modifiée de cette ébauche a été envoyée à Stuart le 4 mars 1955. L'ambassadeur des États-Unis a confirmé la dimension des écluses dans sa réponse du 23 mars 1955. A slightly amended version of this draft was sent to Stuart on March 4, 1955. The United States ambassador confirmed the dimensions of the locks in his response of March 23, 1955.

429.

DEA/1268-D-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-274

Ottawa, February 11, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your WA-243 and WA-244 of February 10, 1955.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: PROPOSED EXCHANGE OF LETTERS

The suggestion contained in paragraph 2 of your WA-243 seems satisfactory and we agree that you might suggest the compromise wording "we now gather also that ...".

2. You should refrain, however, from mentioning to Horsey at this stage (para. 3 of WA-243) anything regarding the possibility of having to breach the dyke north of Cornwall. We understand that government has no intention, at present, of doing anything of this kind. On the other hand you could usefully, I believe, explain to Horsey why, in the dredging that may have to be done north of Cornwall Island, Canada might wish to have it done in the form of a 27-foot channel.

3. The re-draft, in your WA-244, of the proposed letter to be sent to the United States Ambassador on lock dimensions is excellent in its approach and tone. Our desire for a clarification of the matter of dimensions arises out of Mr. Castle's tergiversations. Nevertheless, it seems preferable to minimize any possible embarrassment to Mr. Castle and we have already referred our first draft to Mr. Chevrier for his suggestions with this point in mind.

4. Officials of this Department are not inclined to insist on the inclusion of the word "single" in the phrase "the single locks to be constructed on the United States side ..." in our draft letter to the United States Ambassador on lock dimensions (para. 5 of WA-243). We should, however, state that if such a word did precipitate, as you predict, a reply in which the United States reserved its right to build twin locks, subject only to the obligation to consult contained in the Exchange of Notes of August 17, 1954, we do not think that that in itself would be necessarily undesirable in the present circumstances. On the contrary, this might serve to confirm our own preliminary view that the twinning of locks by the U.S.A. would require consultation with Canada under the Notes of August 17, 1954. On balance, in the present circumstances, it would possibly be wise to omit the word "single". Ends.

430.

DEA/1268-AD-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], February 16, 1955

VISIT OF ROBERT B. ANDERSON ON FEBRUARY 18

I—Exchange of Letters

Clearly, Mr. Anderson will wish to talk to you, Mr. Howe and Mr. Marler about the Exchange of Letters. Mr. Anderson is, I believe, unhappy about the draft letter proposed by us on February 4 (see Annex A).<sup>152</sup> Mr. Anderson now wishes to revert to the principles discussed on January 6 and he will presumably seek your assent to something like the draft he proposed (see Annex B).<sup>153</sup>

2. For use in the U.S.A., the Canadian draft is obviously less effective than the United States proposal. The Canadian draft simply adheres to the August 17, 1954 arrangements, and adds a declaration of Canadian intent regarding 14-foot navigation. The Anderson draft, however, varies the August 17, 1954 Exchange of Notes. The advantage to Canada in the Anderson draft lies in what purports to be an assurance about the non-duplication of locks at Iroquois. From the United States viewpoint, however, the Canadian draft is probably too specific on the subject of non-duplication at Iroquois.

3. If Ministers accept Mr. Anderson's draft, they should do so in the knowledge that it is the sort of arrangement which the United States Administration could regard with equanimity since it imposes on the United States no obligation apart from that of seeking from Congress, at an opportune moment, authority to "defer" the Iroquois works. In return, however,

(a) Canada would undertake not to construct "any new" 14-foot facilities in the Cornwall area;

(b) Canada would undertake not to construct a "27-foot channel or lock accommodations" (whatever these words mean) in that area;

(c) Canada would agree that the Iroquois and Barnhart Island canals and locks would be the "sole" navigation works for an indeterminate period.

4. The United States "arrangement" or "understanding" (Mr. Anderson uses these terms in his draft) would, I suggest, have the following results:

(a) it would vary the existing arrangements and embody the commitment for the future NOT to construct 14-foot works to by-pass the powerhouses;

(b) Canada would be barred from constructing a turning-basin for 14-foot navigation in the Cornwall area (as you will remember, Cabinet decided in August, 1954, to build such a turning-basin);

(c) Canada could not require that the dredging which must be done at the expense of the United States Seaway Corporation or the power entities in Canada North of Cornwall Island (see attached map) should be done in the form of a 27-foot channel;

<sup>152</sup> Voir/See Document 420.

<sup>153</sup> Voir/See Document 416.

(d) accordingly, such an arrangement might preclude 27-foot navigation coming to Cornwall and could have other adverse effects for the future (see paragraph 9).

5. It would certainly be useful to have a written United States assurance of non-duplication at Iroquois — even though the assurance were only that the United States would seek to “defer” the works rather than to be “relieved” of the obligation to build a canal and lock opposite Iroquois. The long-term advantage for Canada is that once Canada builds works at Iroquois, it will be cheaper to twin the Canadian lock there than to build opposite Iroquois on United States territory should our American friends decide later to twin their locks near Barnhart Island: Canada would thus have a twinned counterpart at Iroquois of the United States twinned locks near Barnhart Island. Such an arrangement would ensure non-discrimination by either as each would be hostage to the other’s fortunes. You might wish to bear in mind, however, that the United States offer to “defer” the works opposite Iroquois probably stems from the fact (as engineers pointed out in November 1954) that — unless the cost were considerably increased — there is insufficient elbow-room on the United States side to build a lock and canal concurrently with the Iroquois Control dam which latter work is now being built by PASNY. In addition, the United States decision not to build opposite Iroquois was taken by Mr. Anderson, I believe, sometime early in December 1954.

II—Channel Excavations near Cornwall Island

6. It is just possible that Mr. Anderson may wish to discuss the problem of channel excavations North and South of Cornwall Island. This may be the cause of some trouble between Mr. Anderson and Mr. Robert Moses, the Chairman of the Power Authority of the State of New York (PASNY).

7. Briefly, it appears likely — as a result of preliminary model tests at the National Research Council in Ottawa — that the power entities may not need to do much dredging South of Cornwall Island. If this is so and the International St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers (which approves plans on behalf of governments) agree, it will mean that the United States Seaway Corporation will probably have to do considerable dredging south of Cornwall Island if 27-foot vessels are to enter the United States canal near Barnhart Island. In that event, the United States Seaway Corporation will probably have to do compensatory dredging in Canada North of Cornwall Island — also at its expense. The United States Seaway Corporation is seeking to avoid this contingency not only because of the cost (possibly $10 million) but because it lacks statutory authority and funds to do such works. Likely as not, Mr. Moses, PASNY and Ontario Hydro also wish to avoid picking up this bill!

8. Under the Canada-Ontario Agreement of 1951, Canada had arranged that — as between it and Ontario — Ontario would pay the check but the point does not appear to have been included in the United States arrangements. Would it be Mr. Anderson’s hope that, by using this Agreement, Canada could force Ontario Hydro (and thus PASNY which shares the costs) to do the dredging North and South of Cornwall Island? He might hope that the two sections of the St. Lawrence Board of Engineers (being government agents) could require the power entities to do so in the same way as it might have required them to do if Canada had built the seaway in the International Section. (The situation, in that case, would have been different, however, in that Canada agreed — if it was to build the seaway alone — to relieve the United States power entity of half the replacement cost of the Canadian 14-foot canal (about $7 million) and to contribute $15 million to navigation costs.)

III—Agreement with Canada for Channel Excavations

9. If, however, Mr. Anderson is or becomes resigned to having the channel excavations North and South of Cornwall Island done by the United States Seaway Corporation, the fact that the Corporation dredging in the United States will disturb the flow and level of the water in Canada requires Canada's agreement or the Approval of the International Joint Commission. An agreement with Canada wherein the dredging in Canada (if required) will be done in the form of a 27-foot channel might be preferable to approval by the I.J.C. An agreement of this nature could assure to Canada, in the short-term, that 27-foot navigation could get to Cornwall. In the long-term, such an agreement could mean that if a 27-foot canal and locks were to be built later by Canada near Cornwall, the completion now of a 27-foot channel North of Cornwall would obviate the necessity of obtaining the subsequent agreement of the United States to dig this channel later.

IV—Dredges and Barges Operating in the International Rapids Section

10. I learn that the United States authorities — principally in the Defence Department and the Customs Bureau — are disturbed over the use by Messrs. Mannix-Raymond (the contractors for the Barnhart Island cofferdams) of barges in a manner considered by the U.S.A. as "coastwise" trading. This is a small matter which can readily be settled. But bearing in mind that it was at Mr. Moses' urging that the Secretary of Defence declared the Power and Seaway works to be a project essential to U.S.A. defence (and thus there was arranged a general waiver of customs regulations and of the prohibition against foreign dredges operating in the U.S.A.) Mr. Anderson may wish to raise this or related matters with you and Messrs. Howe and Marler. As you know, Cabinet has considered the waiver of customs and immigration requirements for the power project and has — for the time being — specifically excluded the seaway project from the waiver.

V—Continuation of 14-foot Navigation

11. There is a problem as to the manner in which the power entities (in conjunction with the United States Seaway Corporation) will be able — in 1958 or 1959 — to continue uninterrupted 14-foot navigation during the critical period of the change-over from 14-foot to 27-foot navigation and the raising of the power pool. Wheat and iron-ore shipments must not be impeded during the navigation period. To meet this requirement, I hear the engineers muttering about the problems associated with a temporary breach in the dyke to continue 14-foot navigation. If Mr. Anderson did raise this point, it might be left over for future study because the time element does not seem too pressing.

J. L[ÉGER]

431.

PCO/W-10-1

Rapport du secrétaire adjoint du CabinetReport by Assistant Secretary to Cabinet

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], February 21, 1955

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY; NON-DUPLICATION OF NAVIGATION FACILITIES

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Transport met with Mr. Robert Anderson, Deputy Secretary of Defence of the United States at 12:30 p.m. on Friday, February 18th 1955, in Mr. Howe's office in the House of Commons, to discuss further the terms of the proposed exchange of letters between Canada and the United States following earlier conversations in Washington on January 6th with regard to the non-duplication of navigation facilities in the International Section of the St. Lawrence River. The U.S. Ambassador to Canada and the undersigned were also present.

1. Mr. Howe, after welcoming Mr. Anderson and Ambassador Stuart, said there was apparently some misunderstanding with regard to plans now being made for the continuation of 14-foot navigation at Cornwall during the period of construction of the power projects. He submitted drawings which had been prepared in this connection and explained that, as 14-ft navigation could obviously not be interrupted during the four or five years it would take to complete the project, some means had to be found to maintain the existing 14-ft canal in operation until such time as shipping could use the new 27-foot canal to be built on the U.S. side of the river. In order to do this, it would be necessary to have a breach in the dyke at or near the point where it would cross the existing canal. There would be concrete works on either side of this breach to retain the earth dykes that would be some 75 feet high at that point. Thus, 14-foot navigation could continue uninterrupted while work proceeded on construction of the dykes, dams, power houses, etc. When the time came to raise the level of the pool, this would be achieved by dropping stop-logs into the concrete works and the 14-foot canal would then of course no longer be accessible from the power pool but only from the lower Cornwall end and, from then on, all through shipping, both 27-foot and 14-foot, would have to use the 27-foot canal south of Barnhart Island.

2. Apparently this had been misinterpreted in some quarters as indicating that Canada was now preparing to continue 14-foot navigation indefinitely at Cornwall. This was not at all the case. As a matter of fact, these plans had nothing whatever to do with the seaway but were part and parcel of the power entities' obligation to ensure that there was no interruption in navigation while the power project was under construction. The entire cost of this temporary 14-foot facility during the period of construction should be borne by Ontario and the New York State Power Authority. It was of course possible that the concrete works might facilitate the construction of a 27-foot waterway at some time in the future when duplication was required, but these works in themselves could certainly not be used for any kind of navigation in their present state after the water levels had been raised in the pool. Furthermore, the location which had tentatively been marked for the 27-foot canal on the Canadian side of the boundary was farther removed from the power houses than the concrete breach would be.

3. Mr. Anderson thanked Mr. Howe for his explanation of the situation and said he was perfectly satisfied that the proposed breach in the dyke and temporary continuation of 14-foot navigation at Cornwall was not only entirely reasonable but necessary. He thought, however, it would be in everyone's interest if it could be made perfectly clear that this was being done as part of the power project to ensure continuation of 14-foot navigation only during the several years it would take to complete the project and that it had nothing whatever to do with the seaway.

4. Many of the difficulties and misunderstandings that had arisen in the United States were due to the existence there of two or three groups with conflicting interests. Daniellian and his organization were busily engaged in making statements of one kind and another at every opportunity. On the other hand, it was not unlikely that when the U.S. Administration asked Congress to release the U.S. St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation of its obligation to construct a 27-foot canal and lock at Point Rockway, the railway interests would take that opportunity to suggest that, since Canada was building the canal at Iroquois, it would be best to let Canada build at Barnhart as well. There had also been a lot of discussion about increasing the dimensions of the locks in the new canals. He gave unequivocal assurance that, insofar as the U.S. Administration was concerned, the Welland ship canal specifications and none other would be used in the Barnhart Island locks.

5. Mr. Howe noted in this connection that the suggestion had been made from time to time that instead of spending money on the waterway in the International Section of the St. Lawrence, the Canadian Government should devote these funds to providing larger locks at Welland. The authors of these suggestions apparently failed to realize that the Welland ship canal had cost close to $150 million and that, at today's costs, similar facilities could not be duplicated for twice that amount of money. As a matter of fact, the present development in the St. Lawrence was a relatively modest undertaking compared to Welland.

6. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the American draft letter of January 14, 1955, which was designed to embody the understandings arising out of the conversations at Washington on January 6 between the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Canadian Ambassador and himself on the one hand, and Mr. Wilson, Mr. Anderson and Ambassador Stuart on the other. This draft could not be accepted by Canada for a variety of reasons. Under the terms of the second paragraph, for example, which stated amongst other things that the Canadian Government did not intend at this time to construct any new 14-foot canal facilities, it would not be possible for Canada to construct the turning basin which would be necessary to enable shipping to service the many industries located along the Cornwall canal below the point where the power pool dyke would eventually block off the canal. This same paragraph also stated that the Canadian Government did not at this time intend to construct a 27-foot channel or lock accommodations in the vicinity of Cornwall or Barnhart Island. This would effectively preclude the Canadian authorities from dredging a 27-foot channel in the bed of the river north of Cornwall Island even though this channel may be required in order to re-establish the flows and velocities which will be disturbed by the 27-foot dredging to be done by the U.S. Seaway Corporation south of Cornwall Island, which latter dredging will be required to provide a navigable exit from the 27-foot Barnhart canal to be constructed by the Corporation. Furthermore, the U.S. draft of January 14 seemed to go considerably beyond the terms of the Notes exchanged last August.

7. In view of the above, a Canadian counter-draft dated February 3 had been prepared. This counter-draft attempted to overcome all these practical difficulties while at the same time embodying the understandings reached at Washington on January 6 and remaining as close as possible to the terms of the Exchange of Notes of August 1954.

8. Mr. Anderson said he fully appreciated the practical difficulties which the second paragraph of the U.S. draft of January 14 presented; but he thought that these could be overcome quite readily. It might be preferable, throughout the letter, to refer to "canals" and to avoid any reference to "channels". Furthermore, it should be made quite clear that what Canada did not intend to do at this time was to construct navigation works which effectively by-passed the power dams at Cornwall.

9. In his view, the letter should contain three essential features. These were,

(a) that the U.S. Administration did not intend at this time to construct navigation facilities at Iroquois and would seek the required congressional authority to be relieved of the obligation imposed on the U.S. Seaway Corporation by the Wiley Act;

(b) that Canada did not intend at this time to construct any 27-foot or 14-foot through navigation facilities at Cornwall; and

(c) that if either country in the future wished to duplicate in its territory navigation facilities already existing in the other's territory, that Government would first consult with the other government in the context of the Notes exchanged in August 1954.

10. Mr. Anderson then submitted a third draft† which he had prepared in the light of the Canadian counter-draft of February 3.

11. During the lengthy discussion that ensued, several modifications were made to this draft. Finally, a mutually satisfactory letter was drafted (see Appendix A)† and it was agreed that it would be delivered to the Secretary of State for External Affairs by the U.S. Ambassador some time early the following week. It was also understood that the Canadian reply would likely be nothing more than a brief acknowledgement and confirmation that the U.S. letter represented the views verbally expressed at the Washington meetings.<sup>154</sup>

12. Mr. Anderson said that the U.S. Administration was faced with a fairly difficult political problem in connection with this matter. In view of the fact that Congress would have to be approached in order to have the U.S. Seaway Corporation relieved of its statutory obligation to build at Iroquois, it was important that the proposed letter should clearly indicate that the Canadian Government did not at this time intend to provide through navigation of any kind at Cornwall.

13. Mr. Pearson replied that the Canadian Government was also faced with its own political problem. Throughout the past few years, there had developed a considerable amount of popular support for the so-called all-Canadian seaway. In the circumstances, it was not unlikely that the Canadian Government might see fit to interpret publicly the expression "under present conditions" in the second paragraph of the letter as meaning all those things clearly set out in the press release issued following the exchange of Notes of August 1954, and indeed might also include the inability of the Administration in Washington to secure from Congress release from the obligation to build the canal at Iroquois. It might be necessary to repeat publicly that the new letter would not in any way limit the right of the Canadian Government to build a 27-foot canal at Cornwall, if changed conditions — which might go beyond traffic conditions — warranted it.

<sup>154</sup> L'échange de correspondance est reproduit dans United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXII, No. 820, March 14, 1955, p. 437.

The exchange is reproduced in United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXII, No. 820, March 14, 1955, p. 437.

14. Mr. Anderson said he understood this perfectly and that, in fact, he had such an eventuality very much in mind when he had inserted the expression "under present conditions" in his latest draft.

PAUL PELLETIER

432.

DEA/1268-D-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], March 29, 1955

DELAY IN COMPLETING THE ST. LAWRENCE POWER PROJECT

Officials of the Department are coming to the conclusion that the St. Lawrence Project may not be completed in late 1958 as has hitherto been supposed. The delay may be caused by the fact that the channel excavations for power purposes will not get under way as promptly as they should have during the construction season of 1955.

2. There is between $80 or $90 million worth of channel excavations at the head of the power project. It will take at least three full construction seasons to get this large block of work done. One block of excavations will take almost two construction seasons and should be begun by May 1, 1955 at the latest. This is required in order to allow further excavations to be done thereafter in such a way as to not affect the levels of Lake Ontario or the project downstream.

3. While the power entities have been generally agreed as to how they wanted to carry out these excavations, they have not been able to get the necessary clearances in the United States. As officials understand it, U.S. policy as regards dredging waivers for both the seaway and power projects is to be formulated by the Deputy Secretary of Defence on recommendation of the Administrator of the U.S. Seaway Corporation, Mr. Lewis G. Castle.

4. Canadian officials became aware of the importance to Ontario Hydro of a speedy decision on this matter at the turn of the year. Cabinet took a decision on February 8, 1955 to the effect that customs and immigration regulations would be waived to the extent necessary provided (a) these should not apply to consumables used on the project; (b) United States granted reciprocity; (c) Canadian wage rates apply to contracts let by Ontario Hydro.

5. The boundary dictates that 1/3 of the channel excavations for power purposes lie in Canada and the other 2/3 lie in the United States. In order to restore an equitable division between the total of the work and manhours to be done under the supervision of either power entity, both entities agreed that the proportion should be reversed, i.e. that Ontario Hydro should do 2/3 of the channel excavations regardless of the location of the boundary.

6. Rather than ask United States federal officials to give an assurance which might be embarrassing to them, we asked Ontario Hydro by February 15 to obtain the necessary assurances from their New York counterpart that there would be nothing in U.S. federal or state law which would oppose itself to Canadian wage rates applying to contracts let by Ontario Hydro. After much delay, we were informed that such an assurance could not be given by the New York Hydro authorities unless, in effect, the matter were cleared with Mr. Castle. At a meeting held in New York on March 21 between the two power entities and a representative of Mr. Castle (which was attended by Messrs. Paul Pelletier and E.A. Côté), it became apparent that our American friends had a formidable list of difficulties in the way of facilitating the power entities' project.

7. For its part, time has been running against the completion of the whole Project. No calls for tenders have been made so far for the channel excavations and it is therefore unlikely that any excavation work will get under way before June 1 or later.

8. Canadian officials have taken the line so far that they are merely trying to facilitate the power entities' plans. Officials of this Department are confident that, as a result of the meeting on March 21, U.S. officials will try to examine their problems as speedily as possible in order to find a solution.

9. It is clear, however, that the U.S. dredging owners and unions are determined to get the maximum work for their dredges. As it is, about $41 million worth of dredging lies on the U.S. side of the boundary. If they do not get this work, they could effectively tie up the power project and hence the seaway project.

10. We are therefore on the horns of a dilemma. If the Canadian federal authorities try to advance the interests of the power entities (which happen to coincide with Canadian interests) too quickly, we may be placing the U.S. federal authorities in an untenable position and they may incur the determined opposition of the U.S. dredging interests and thereby slow down the completion of the project. On the other hand, if the federal authorities do nothing, the excavation works may be delayed anyway, due either to the ordinary course of events or to a deliberate procrastination on the U.S. side with the object of causing the ripe plum to fall into the hands of the U.S. dredging interests which, with their larger dredges, would be the only ones later able to do the job.

11. I would be inclined to let matters take their course.<sup>155</sup> The main interested parties are the power entities who will seek a solution best calculated to serve the interests of both countries. If the Americans are adamant and do not agree to allow Ontario Hydro to do 2/3 of the excavations on the U.S. side, we may have to reserve dredging on our side of the boundary to Canadians.

12. I am attaching an additional copy of this memorandum in case you should wish to send it to Mr. Marler, Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on St. Lawrence matters.<sup>156</sup>

J. LÉGER

<sup>155</sup> Note marginale :Marginal note:
at least for the time being [L.B. Pearson]

<sup>156</sup> Note marginale :Marginal note:
Please do this [L.B. Pearson]

433.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le Cabinet*
*Memorandum from Secretary to Cabinet
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 91-55

Ottawa, May 4, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

ST. LAWRENCE POWER PROJECT; SPECIAL CUSTOMS AND IMMIGRATION ARRANGEMENTS

1. At a meeting held on July 13th, 1954, Cabinet approved in principle a recommendation of a special interdepartmental committee of officials that those portions or components of the St. Lawrence Power project which actually straddle the Canada-U.S. boundary be considered as "international" works and that duties and taxes and normal immigration requirements be waived with regard to these "international" works, while no concessions of any kind should be made with regard to "national" works — i.e. works such as dykes, re-location of highways, etc. which did not touch the boundary and were situated entirely within the boundaries of one country or the other.<sup>157</sup>

2. At the same meeting, Cabinet specifically agreed that the cofferdams to be built by Ontario-Hydro and the New York State Power Authority be considered as "international" works and that all duties and taxes and immigration requirements be waived in respect thereof. Concurrently, similar treatment was accorded to the cofferdams by the U.S. Administration.

3. In addition to the cofferdams, there are only two other classes of works in the St. Lawrence Power project which can appropriately be considered as "international". These are the channel enlargements (both wet and dry excavations) which must be undertaken by the power entities and the Control Dam to be constructed between Iroquois Point in Canada and Point Rockway in the United States.

I. Channel Enlargements

4. On February 9th, 1955, Cabinet agreed to extend to the channel enlargements the same customs and immigration treatment previously accorded the cofferdams provided,

(a) that the U.S. Administration entered into a reciprocal arrangement with regard to the channel enlargements on the U.S. side of the boundary;

(b) that Canadian customs duties and excise taxes were not waived with regard to consumable materials such as gasoline, oil, food, etc.; and

(c) that satisfactory assurances were received that nothing in U.S. federal or state law would prevent Ontario-Hydro from requiring that Canadian wage rates shall apply to the labour employed on its excavation contracts even though some of these excavations might be in U.S. territory.

5. It will be recalled that, in order to achieve a division of the overall project between Ontario-Hydro and the New York State Power Authority on a fifty-fifty basis both from the point of view of man-hours and of cost, the two entities had agreed that, although one-third only of the channel enlargements was situated on the Canadian side of the boundary, Ontario-Hydro should be responsible for letting contracts for roughly two-thirds of these excavations. It was further understood that bidding on these channel excavation contracts, whether let by Ontario or by New York, were to be open to Canadians and Americans alike.

<sup>157</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 570.

6. The powerful dredging interests in the United States were opposed to this arrangement since it would result in giving Ontario-Hydro responsibility for letting contracts for the larger share of the wet excavations even though the bulk of these wet excavations lay on the U.S. side of the boundary. It now appears that it will not be possible to get a reciprocal arrangement with the United States on the basis of the Cabinet decision of February 9th, 1955, unless the two power entities can divide the wet excavations roughly on a fifty-fifty basis.

7. In the light of these developments, Ontario and New York have reconsidered the dredging problem and have ascertained that it is possible, from an engineering point of view, to achieve an almost equal division of responsibility for the wet excavations. Furthermore, in order to overcome a number of practical difficulties, the power entities have now agreed that bidding on dredging contracts to be let by Ontario-Hydro will be restricted to Canadian firms and that bidding on dredging contracts to be let by New York will be restricted to U.S. firms even though portions of the dredging to be undertaken by Ontario-Hydro will lie in U.S. territory while portions of the dredging to be done by New York will be in Canadian territory. Bidding on dry excavations will continue to be open to contractors from both countries.

8. On the basis of this most recent re-allocation, it is estimated that Ontario-Hydro would be responsible for letting contracts on the overall project totalling some $175.8 million while New York would let contracts to a total value of approximately $183.6 million.

9. The committee of officials is satisfied that this is probably the best arrangement that can be hoped for in the circumstances and therefore recommends that the Cabinet reaffirm its decision of February 9th on the basis of the new re-allocation provided, of course, that the three conditions referred to in paragraph 4 above are met.

II. Iroquois Control Dam

10. The third and last work in the St. Lawrence Power project which can be considered to be "international" is the Control Dam to be constructed between Iroquois Point in Canada and Point Rockway in the United States.

11. Quite some time ago, the U.S. Customs Bureau declared that the Iroquois Dam was regarded by the United States as an international structure and that, accordingly, all customs and immigration requirements would be waived in respect thereof.

12. This dam will straddle the boundary with approximately 9/10ths of its length being located in the United States. Only two, or at the most three of the dam's thirty-two steel gates will be on the Canadian side of the boundary. The following table shows the estimated cost of materials and equipment to be incorporated or installed on either side of the boundary:

Item	Canadian Cost	United States Cost
Concrete	$1,601,000	$ 5,302,000
Grouting	16,000	87,000
Structure Steel including Rails	222,000	1,404,000
Steel Gates and Guides	438,000	4,234,000
Gantry Cranes	275,000	275,000
Electrical Equipment	30,000	120,000
	$2,582,000	$11,422,000

13. A contract has already been awarded to a U.S. firm for the two mobile Gantry cranes (Dominion Bridge of Canada was the second lowest bidder). There is some urgency in reaching a decision as to the customs and immigration treatment to be given to the small portion of the dam which will be located in Canada since specifications are in the course of preparation and tenders will soon be called for the four main contracts not yet awarded — i.e., (a) concrete and grouting; (b) structural steel including rails; (c) steel gates and guides; and (d) electrical equipment. The whole dam is to be constructed under contracts let by the New York State Power Authority and will be built entirely from the U.S. mainland.

14. Briefly set out hereunder are the more important factors to be taken into consideration with respect to the above:

(a) Cabinet has already approved the principle of waiving customs duties and immigration requirements in respect of international works, in which group the Control Dam clearly belongs.

(b) Some special immigration arrangement must necessarily be made if this Dam is to be built and the Canadian Government might be placed in an embarrassing position if it maintained the tariff on the very small portion of the dam located in Canada while the U.S. Administration has already waived customs on the 9/10ths of the structure located in the United States.

(c) It is unlikely that any Canadian contractor or group of Canadian contractors will be in a position to bid on the main contract for the concrete works.

(d) The cement to be used in both the Canadian and U.S. portions of the dam will be manufactured, and the concrete prepared, from rock and other materials on or near the site of the dam on the U.S. side of the boundary.

(e) Removal of customs should be to the advantage of Canadian suppliers since it is thought that they can compete with U.S. suppliers for the structural steel and steel gates and guides valued at $6.2 million.

(f) Removal of the tariff on steel items will increase the competitive position of European firms. However, the U.S. Bureau of Customs has already removed the tariff on steel valued at $5.6 million in the American portion of the dam while only $660,000 worth of steel will be incorporated in the Canadian portion.

(g) The waiving of duty and taxes on the Control Dam would conform with the long established Canadian and U.S. practice of granting such waivers in respect of international bridges.

15. In the light of the foregoing, the Interdepartmental Committee felt it would be reasonable to extend the customs and immigration waiver to the Control Dam on the same basis as has already been done for the cofferdams.<sup>158</sup>

<sup>158</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 6 mai 1955/Approved by Cabinet on May 6, 1955.

16. No further "international" problems can be foreseen at this moment with regard to the power project. The Interdepartmental Committee wishes to point out, however, that a somewhat similar situation may arise with regard to the channel excavations to be carried out for seaway purposes north and south of Cornwall Island; but this matter has not progressed sufficiently to enable firm recommendations to be submitted at this time.

R.B. BRYCE

434.

DEA/1268-AD-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

RESTRICTED

[Ottawa], July 7, 1955

CHANNEL EXCAVATIONS NORTH AND SOUTH OF CORNWALL ISLAND

At the request of the State Department, a meeting was held in Ottawa on June 17 between representatives of the State Department, the United States Embassy, the Department of External Affairs and the Seaway entities of Canada and the United States.

2. It became apparent during this meeting that the U.S. Seaway Corporation was seeking the permission of the Canadian authorities for dredging in the channel south of Cornwall Island, as required for the U.S. 27-foot channel. The Canadian side pointed out that any excavations in the channel south of Cornwall Island would disturb the level and flow in the channel north of Cornwall Island and would therefore, under the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909,<sup>159</sup> require either a special agreement with Canada or the approval of the International Joint Commission; furthermore, restoration of the level and flow in the north channel would require compensatory works to be constructed there by the U.S. Seaway Corporation. Mr. Castle was informed that some Canadian officials considered that, as a condition for granting its assent to United States excavations in the south channel, the Canadian Government might well require that the compensatory works north of Cornwall Island take the form of a 27-foot navigation channel.

3. The reasoning behind this is as follows: If the Canadian Government ever desired in the future to complete 27-foot works by constructing a 27-foot channel north of Cornwall Island, it would require, under the Boundary Waters Treaty, a special agreement with the United States or the approval of the International Joint Commission. For reasons which will be obvious to you, it may prove very difficult in the future to obtain United States concurrence for the construction by Canada of a competing 27-foot facility. For this reason, some Canadian officials desire that, as a condition to granting Canadian consent to the U.S. 27-foot channel south of Cornwall Island, we reciprocally obtain United States assent to the construction now of a 27-foot channel north of Cornwall Island. An alternative of course would be to obtain now the agreement of the United States that Canada would be allowed in future to do excavations in the north channel provided that Canada carried out, at its expense, the compensating channel excavations that would in turn be required in the south channel. However, these Canadian officials considered that the only binding promise from the United States that would be valid 25 years hence would be a treaty ratified by the United States Senate. As it is unlikely that such a treaty could be obtained quickly, if at all, it was considered by these officials that, as and when the matter came up for consideration, the responsible Canadian officials and the Canadian Government would most likely require that the compensating excavations that must be done now in the north channel should take the form of a navigation channel which could be used as a 27-foot deep waterway in future years.<sup>160</sup>

<sup>159</sup> Voir/See Canada, Treaties and Agreements affecting Canada in force between His Majesty and the United States of America with Subsidiary Documents, 1814-1925, Ottawa: King's Printer, 1927, pp. 312-318.

4. I am reporting this matter to you now in the event that you might consider that officials should not continue to pursue this particular line of reasoning.

J. L[ÉGER]

435.

DEA/1268-AD-40

Note de la Direction de l'Amérique
Memorandum by American Division

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 19, 1955

VISIT BY MR. MAYER RE CORNWALL ISLAND NORTH CHANNEL, TEST BORINGS, ETC.

Mr. Mayer, Counsellor at the U.S. Embassy, accompanied by Mr. Dubs, Second Secretary, came in to see me this morning regarding our letter of July 12, 1955† in which was conveyed the Canadian Government's waiver of customs duties and excise taxes on equipment to be used in a test boring program in the north channel at Cornwall Island and on Cornwall Island itself. In our letter of July 12, we had informed the U.S. Embassy that Cabinet had sanctioned these waivers on the understanding

(a) that the results of the boring program would be made available to Canadian Government agencies, and

(b) "that the granting of these waivers is without prejudice to the agreement which must be entered into by our two Governments before any channeling not required for power purposes is undertaken north and south of Cornwall Island".

2. Mr. Mayer began by expressing his regret that the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers had made a direct request to our Department of National Revenue in this regard and he promised that henceforth such transactions would be carried on through the appropriate channels. He added that the U.S. authorities would, of course, be glad to make available to Canadian Government agencies the data derived from these tests. However, he then stated that Mr. Castle had expressed very great concern over the wording of our condition (b), quoted above. Mr. Castle thought that this might cause him grave embarrassment and, according to Mr. Mayer, he abhorred the word "agreement" and, incidentally, was concerned about the word "must".

3. Mr. Mayer then went on to say that Mr. Castle, frankly, was hopeful that the model studies would dictate that a 27-foot channel be required as compensatory works north of Cornwall Island so as to "let him off the hook" and forestall the political embarrassment that he would otherwise be caused. According to Mr. Mayer, Mr. Castle was hopeful that the construction of a 27-foot channel by Canada would not require a written agreement and that an understanding (of whatever kind) could be reached with Canada in this regard.

<sup>160</sup> Note marginale /Marginal Note:
I agree L.B. P[earson]

4. I replied that I thought that Mr. Castle was, possibly, unduly apprehensive about the wording of para (b). I pointed out that para (b) was general in its terms and presumably embraced all of the many facets of the Cornwall Island question; it did not specifically mention a 27-foot channel. I added that, in any event, our use of the word "agreement" did not constitute any attempt to prejudge the form of document which would result from subsequent discussions between the two governments.

5. I then went on to state that there were a large number of things to be settled between the two governments with respect to the north and south channels, e.g., if the United States wished to place its excavation disposal on Canadian territory, it would require agreement; if the United States wished to dredge in Canadian waters in the south channel (through which the International Boundary runs) this would also require agreement; agreement was also required with respect to re-locating the Cornwall Island south bridge, etc., etc. Therefore, in view of the many facets of this question, it was surely understandable that some agreement must be reached between the two governments, and this was surely inevitable regardless of the results of the model studies, the amount of excavation (if any) for which the United States Seaway Corporation would be responsible in the north channel, the form which such excavation would take, etc. In any event, I stated, it was our intention in the letter of July 12 to ensure that any granting of waivers with respect to test boring in the Cornwall Island area would be made without prejudice to the subsequent negotiations that would surely have to be undertaken and agreements that would inevitably have to be reached regarding the many-sided Cornwall Island question. I added that it was not our intention to secure any commitments from the United States with respect to a Canadian 27-foot north channel via this letter on test boring; we had explained our position to Mr. Castle at the last meeting and our position was presumably fully recognized.

6. Mr. Mayer then wondered what manner of reply could be made to our letter that would not prove subsequently embarrassing to Mr. Castle, regardless of how unjustifiably sensitive he might be about para (b). I said that, speaking personally, I wondered whether it would not be appropriate for the Embassy, in its reply, to accept condition (a) and to use a form of words, with respect to condition (b), along the following lines:

"... is without prejudice to any arrangements which may have to be concluded by our two governments before any channeling not required for power purposes is undertaken in the Cornwall Island area."

7. Mr. Mayer seemed very pleased with this suggestion but I cautioned him that this was my off-hand personal thought only and that I would want to consider it further and possibly consult with my colleagues. He added that, if the Embassy were to reply to us in such language, it would in effect constitute an interpretation of our para (b). I agreed that this was so and he then suggested that, if such a form of wording were agreeable to us, the U.S. letter might read: "with respect to paragraph (b), it is our interpretation that the granting of these waivers is without prejudice to any arrangements which may have to be concluded..."

8. I discussed this question with Mr. Wershof later in the day. Mr. Wershof agreed that there was some justification for Mr. Castle's apprehension and that the wording of para (b) might be considered by the United States to be an attempt to prejudge the 27-foot north channel question in a context far removed. Mr. Wershof thought that the reply I suggested would be agreeable and also suggested alternative language such as "without prejudice to the views of the Canadian Government on the necessity for an agreement...". I suggested that, before I confirm this to Mr. Mayer, I would attempt to contact Messrs. Rogers and Côté by telephone tonight (Mr. Pelletier is in the country and uncontactable by telephone; Mr. Cunningham is also away until Thursday).

9. Mr. Wershof added that he felt quite strongly on this question, i.e., that our Government had long ago reached fundamental decisions regarding the St. Lawrence Seaway and that officials should not attempt to throw road blocks at every little point along the line. I subsequently ascertained from the file that the language in our letter of July 12 was taken over directly from a letter of July 8† to Mr. Léger from Paul Pelletier.

S.A. FREIFELD

P.S.: As an alternative Mr. Wershof was also amenable to our sending a supplementary letter to the U.S. Embassy giving an interpretation of our para (b) in the language contained in my suggested reply by the United States given above.<sup>161</sup> 436.

PCO

*Note du chef du Comité du Cabinet sur le projet voie maritime du Saint-Laurent
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Chairman, Cabinet Committee on St. Lawrence Project,
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 193-55

Ottawa, September 20, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY; RELOCATION OF ROOSEVELT BRIDGE

The south span of the Roosevelt Bridge, which connects the south shore of Cornwall Island, Canada, with the U.S. south shore of the St. Lawrence River, must be removed and a new bridge built east-west across Polly's Gut between the west end of Cornwall Island and the U.S. shore, in order that ships may be able to use the new 27 foot deep waterway now under construction. The railway line and roadway on Cornwall Island between the north and south spans of the bridge must of course also be relocated. (See plan hereto attached).†

PARTIES INVOLVED

1. New York Central Railroad Company—through its subsidiary, the Ottawa and New York Railway Company, owns both the north and south spans of the Roosevelt Bridge and the portion of the railway on Cornwall Island. The Ottawa, Ontario-Roosevelt, New York line of the NYC crosses the St. Lawrence over these bridges.

2. Cornwall International Bridge Company Limited—has an agreement which terminates at the end of 1983 with the NYC giving the Bridge Company the right to maintain roadway facilities on both bridge spans and to collect tolls from highway traffic using the bridges. The Bridge Company also has with the Indians on Cornwall Island, which is entirely an

<sup>161</sup> Dans une lettre datée du 28 juillet 1955, les États-Unis ont accepté les conditions énoncées dans la lettre du Ministère en date du 12 juillet, selon les modalités discutées au paragraphe 7.
In a letter dated July 28, 1955, the United States accepted the conditions outlined in the Department's letter of July 12 in the terms discussed in paragraph 7.

Indian Reserve, an agreement terminating at the end of 1957 regarding the right of the Bridge Company to build and maintain a roadway between the two bridge spans for highway traffic crossing between Canada and the United States. The Bridge Company also built and maintains the Canadian customs house on Cornwall Island, and pays the NYC a percentage of the $1.25 per automobile (some 200,000-250,000 automobiles a year) that is collected at the tollgate at the north end of the north span at Cornwall.

3. Indians on Cornwall Island—Indian lands were taken by the railway company for the railway right-of-way shortly before 1900. The Indians leased the original bridge Company a right of way for a road between the two bridge spans for a term of 25 years from 1932. It was agreed that the Indians, missionaries and Indian Affairs officials could use the road and bridges free of charge provided vehicles were not used for gain. The Indians have complained about the manner in which the free passage concession is applied. The Indians also have in mind demanding a fixed percentage of toll revenues. The total consideration of the Bridge Company-Indian 25 year lease was $798.46, which appears rather modest in comparison to toll revenues. The lease must be renewed before the end of 1957.

The principal Indian problem arises from the fact that Canadian Indians of the St. Regis Reserve on the south shore of the St. Lawrence east of Cornwall and entirely surrounded by U.S. territory, at present have to travel 9 miles to reach Cornwall, their centre for churches, hospitals, schools, supplies, etc.; but with the proposed relocation of the bridge and the re-routing of the highway in the U.S. westward to cross the new Long Sault Canal at the Robinson Bay Lock by means of a tunnel, the distance to Cornwall would be lengthened to 20.6 miles. Strong representations have been made to the Canadian Government by the Indians themselves, church authorities and others regarding the provision of a shorter route to Cornwall.

The U.S. Seaway Development Corporation is well aware of this situation and its Administrator, Lewis Castle, has offered to plank the proposed railway bridge at the Grass River Lock, which is closer to Cornwall than the Robinson Bay Lock, and to build a new roadway roughly north-south to connect with the new Polly's Gut Bridge. This would shorten the distance between St. Regis and Cornwall to 13 miles. Mr. Castle has also mentioned providing the Indians with a bus to run between Cornwall and the Reserve, at the expense of the Seaway Corporation. However, although the Grass River Lock Bridge would be continuously open to traffic during the winter season, it would be closed to traffic during a large part of each day during the rest of the year to allow ships to pass in the Canal. It has been suggested to Mr. Castle that the Seaway Development Corporation should provide twin road bridge facilities similar to the arrangement for the Victoria Bridge at Montreal so that when one bridge swings to allow ships to pass, highway traffic is temporarily diverted to the other. Mr. Castle has said that the Seaway Corporation operates on a very tight budget and that even to plank the Grass River Lock Bridge and provide road facilities is a strain on the Corporation's resources.

4. The U.S. Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation—the U.S. counterpart of the Canadian St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, is charged with the removal and relocation of the south span of the Roosevelt Bridge in order that ships may use the new U.S. 27 foot channel. The low level south span is close to the eastern end of the new Long Sault Canal. Under ordinary circumstances this work would be a routine rehabilitation project which the Corporation would carry out and finance out of Seaway tolls.

5. Government of Canada—is indirectly concerned because of the Indian problem and the possible need to demolish the existing north span of the Roosevelt Bridge if and when 27 foot navigation is provided on the Canadian side at Cornwall.

Directly, the Government is involved because of a recent opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice that no entity may build the new bridge at Polly's Gut without legislation of the Parliament of Canada.

6. St. Lawrence Seaway Authority—may become involved in the event that the Government decides that a Canadian entity should participate in the relocation because such action might lead to a U.S. commitment for better facilities for the Indians at the Grass River Lock, and because of the inevitable pressure and need for a modern high level highway north channel bridge, particularly if Canadian 27 foot navigation is provided. The present bridge is 17 feet wide and only one-way traffic is possible. The Seaway Authority could participate upon being so authorized by Parliament and could charge the costs to Seaway tolls.

COST OF RELOCATION OF SOUTH SPAN

The NYC has estimated that the new bridge alone would cost some $1.5 million but probably had in mind primarily a narrow railway bridge like the present one. The Seaway Corporation proposes to build a bridge that will provide for two twelve foot traffic lanes and a separate allowance for the railroad, and estimates the costs as follows:

Bridge	$4,056,000
Cornwall Island track and embankment	162,000
Rail communications and signals	5,000
Removal present rails and grading old fill	116,000
Highway and highway embankment	155,000

Cost of land on Cornwall Island, right of way, and customs facilities have not been estimated.

Taxes—a most important item is the size of the property taxes that may be levied by the Township of Cornwall on the improved bridge. The NYC submitted that the increase would be some $25,000 a year based on its $1.5 million estimate for the bridge. If the Seaway Development Corporation figure is correct the increase might be substantially greater.

COURSES OF ACTION

There are four courses of action that can be followed in this matter. They are briefly outlined hereunder.

1. The relocation of the south span of the Roosevelt Bridge is primarily a rehabilitation work. The U.S. Seaway Development Corporation might therefore be expected to do all the work and bear all the costs without disturbing in any way (except for location) existing titles, leases, contracts, etc. This is the most straightforward approach to the problem; but the U.S. St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation is not disposed to follow it for a number of reasons. One of these is that the New York Central can claim compensation for interruption of traffic, lengthening of the route, etc. New York Central, however, is prepared to waive these claims provided the U.S. St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation will not only construct but retain title to the relocated bridges and thus relieve the railway of the necessity of meeting increased taxation on the considerably improved relocated facilities. Furthermore, the U.S. Seaway Corporation is naturally anxious to remain on good terms with the New York Central because of the U.S. railways' anti-seaway lobby.

2. A second alternative would be that the U.S. Seaway Corporation not only build the new facilities but also retain title to them. Such an arrangement would be very agreeable to the New York Central. It would, however, mean that an agency of the U.S. Government would own in perpetuity certain facilities in Canada.

3. In third course of action would be to follow alternative two above subject to a reversionary clause under which the Canadian half of the new Polly's Gut Bridge and the relocated facilities on Cornwall Island would revert to Canada upon the amortization of the costs thereof or upon the expiration of a certain period of time whichever was the shorter. This would not be unlike arrangements under which several international bridges have been built in the past.

4. A fourth and final alternative would be to have the Canadian Seaway Authority pay for and construct the Canadian portion of the works. If this plan is adopted, it could be determined later whether the capital costs should be charged to seaway tolls or whether all or a part thereof should be amortized out of bridge tolls.

CONCLUSION

At first glance, alternative three above appears to be the most attractive from the Canadian point of view. It is not at all certain, however, that the U.S. authorities will be prepared to conclude an arrangement on this basis. Furthermore, the interests of the St. Regis Indian Band and of any future 27-foot canal on the Canadian side of the boundary would be better served if the Canadian Seaway Authority participated now in the construction of the new bridge over Polly's Gut and the relocation of the road and rail facilities on Cornwall Island.

The Committee therefore recommends that the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the U.S. authorities that the Canadian Government is prepared to have the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority join with the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation in the construction of the new rail, road, customs and other facilities between the two spans on Cornwall Island, provided,

(a) that the necessary legislation be introduced in Parliament to authorize the Canadian Seaway Authority and the U.S. Seaway Corporation to undertake the construction of the said new bridge;

(b) that the U.S. Seaway Corporation undertake to provide adequate highway facilities between the Polly's Gut Bridge and St. Regis via the Grass River and the Grass River Lock bridges; and

(c) that further consideration be given to the position of the U.S. and Canadian taxing authorities, the retention by the Canadian Seaway Authority of title to the relocated facilities on the Canadian side of the boundary and the arrangements to be made between the Authority and the Corporation on the one hand and the New York Central and the Bridge Toll Company on the other.<sup>162</sup>

GEORGE C. MARLER

<sup>162</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 21 septembre 1955.
Approved by Cabinet on September 21, 1955.

SECTION F

TAXE SUR LE TRANSPORT
TRANSPORTATION TAX

437.

DEA/12029-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], April 7, 1955

U.S. TRANSPORTATION TAX

Last summer, the Minister of National Health and Welfare drew the attention of our Department to the fact that, pursuant to a ruling issued by the United States Treasury Department, a U.S. transportation tax was being collected in Canada on rail travel tickets purchased in Canada by residents of the United States intending to travel in the U.S.A. Mr. Martin had been made aware of this situation by one of his Windsor constituents who is a ticket agent employed by the New York Central Railroad. What actually takes place is, for example, that a resident of Detroit, wishing to travel to Dallas, crosses the border to Windsor and buys his ticket in that city, so as to avoid payment of the U.S. tax to which he would normally be liable. To counteract this practice, the U.S. Revenue authorities issued a ruling instructing American railroads to collect the U.S. transportation tax through their agents in Canada from purchasers resident in the U.S.

The tax is imposed by virtue of the U.S. Internal Revenue Code and "applies to amounts paid without the United States on or after November 1, 1950, for the transportation of persons on or after such date by rail, motor vehicle, water, or air which begins and ends in the U.S. ...". In this connection we have ascertained that at least one Canadian carrier (T.C.A.) collects the U.S. tax on tickets sold by them in Canada for transportation between two points in the U.S.A. when the said trip does not begin in Canada. For example, a resident of Ottawa intends to motor in his own car to New York and to fly from N.Y. to Miami; if he buys the air ticket from T.C.A. in Canada, T.C.A. collects from him the U.S. transportation tax.

The collecting of United States excise tax on Canadian territory can be regarded as an endeavour to establish a part of the U.S. fiscal system on Canadian territory, and as such, is contrary to widely recognized principles of international law. As a matter of fact, when our Embassy at Washington raised the matter informally with them, State Department officials agreed that any formal complaint we might make would be justified on the basis of international law.

The advisability of our lodging such a protest, and its possible effects, were considered this month by officials of our Department, Finance and National Revenue. The conclusion was reached that a protest might well create difficulties for our own citizens greater than the advantages derived from the assertion of the principle involved. For instance, it might become impossible for Canadians to purchase, in Canada, transportation between two points in the U.S., or again the U.S. might establish a system of collecting on the U.S. side of border points, in some way or another, from both Canadian and U.S. residents, the U.S. tax on the U.S. portion of any trip begun in Canada.

In the view of the representative of the Department of Finance (Dr. Eaton) such a situation would likely come about if we formally protested to the U.S. Government: that Government in turn would probably then ask the Canadian Government for permission to collect the tax in Canada, and in Dr. Eaton's view the Canadian Government would be bound to refuse on grounds of principle.

On balance, it appears to the officials concerned to be preferable to close our eyes, for the time being at least, to the practice followed by the U.S. authorities. This is the suggestion which I am recommending to you today and I should be grateful if you would let me know whether it is agreeable to you. A similar recommendation is being made to the Ministers of Finance and National Revenue by their officials.<sup>163</sup> In addition, I am attaching for your signature if you approve, letters† to Mr. Martin and Mr. Marler enclosing copies of this memorandum for their consideration.

J. L[ÉGER]

SECTION G

CÂBLE TRANSATLANTIQUE TRANS-ATLANTIC CABLE

438.

DEA/11709-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], January 6, 1955

APPLICATION OF THE COMMERCIAL CABLE COMPANY WITH RESPECT TO A TRANS-ATLANTIC CABLE

You will recall that when this subject was recently considered by Cabinet no final decision was made.<sup>164</sup> It was thought that before a conclusion could be reached it would be necessary to have further information regarding the provisions of the Charter of the Company, possible amendments which might be made in the Telegraphs Act to enable the Government to enforce conditions attached to any licence, and the judgment of the Canadian military authorities on the defence aspects of the application. In these circumstances, it was not possible to say anything very precise to the Company or to the U.S. Embassy.

2. Mr. Ritchie of this Department was, therefore, not very well placed to deal with a telephone enquiry which he received on January 4 from Mr. Gordon MacLaren, the Company's legal adviser. Mr. Ritchie did not feel free to disclose the particular aspects of the question which were being investigated further and was not, of course, able to inform Mr. MacLaren concerning the probable outcome or even concerning the date by which a decision might be made. He merely observed that the application raised a considerable variety of pretty complex questions and that, although he appreciated that the application had been filed four months ago, there was still nothing definite that could be said about it.

<sup>163</sup> Approuvé par les ministres/Approved by ministers.

<sup>164</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 596.

3. Mr. MacLaren was obviously not happy with the reply which he received, and he remarked that this was an important and urgent matter, as evidenced by the fact that the U.S. State Department and Department of Defence were taking an interest in it. Mr. Ritchie assured Mr. MacLaren that the importance and urgency of the question were fully appreciated. He went on to say that no doubt the same kinds of considerations which accounted for the interest of several U.S. Government Departments also explained why various Canadian Government Departments were having to examine the question pretty carefully. Mr. MacLaren did not see why this should take so long, since, in his view, the Company was merely asking to be allowed to do something which was already permitted under its Charter.

4. Mr. Ritchie later spoke with Mr. Baldwin of the Department of Transport and with the Privy Council Office concerning the stage which had been reached in the consideration of this application and concerning the answer which should be given to enquiries of the kind which he had received. It would seem quite apparent that it will take some time to complete the studies relating to the application. (In particular, the views of the military authorities are not likely to be available until the end of the month). In the meantime, it will be difficult to deal consistently with the enquiries which can be expected from the representatives of the Company, and the Company may later be able to allege that it had been put off or misled.

5. I understand that Mr. Baldwin will be considering the matter further and will probably be recommending to his Minister that some interim reply be given to the Company at an early date. Mr. Marler may, accordingly, raise the question in Cabinet in the near future.<sup>165</sup>

6. In the light of the previous Cabinet discussion, we have not felt free to say much to the American Embassy. In particular, we have not thought that it would be appropriate for us to tell the Embassy that, if the U.S. Government saw fit to present an alternative proposal of a strictly military character, we would be prepared to give it the same expeditious consideration as is normally given to defence matters between our two Governments. It seems to us that it would be rather pointless to make such an offer to the Embassy before we are able to say what is likely to be the fate of the C.C.C. application. If it is decided by Ministers that some interim explanation should be given to the Company, it may be well to decide at the same time that a similar explanation (together with an offer to consider quickly any strictly defence project which might be put forward) should be made to the U.S. Embassy as well.

7. Mr. Marler may mention this subject to you within the next few days (and you may also, of course, receive a call from Mr. MacLaren).

J. L[ÉGER]

439.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], January 17, 1955

...

<sup>165</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

It is important that this should be done [L.B. Pearson]

COMMERCIAL CABLE COMPANY; APPLICATION FOR LANDING RIGHTS

29. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of December 16th, 1954, said the Department of Justice had submitted an opinion, earlier, as to the powers of the Governor in Council either to refuse to grant the application of Commercial Cable Company of New York for permission to land in Canada a coaxial submarine cable, which they planned to lay between the United States, Canada, Greenland, Iceland and the United Kingdom, or to approve the application with certain conditions or limitations. The opinion, submitted on November 10th, 1954, made it quite clear that the Governor in Council had full power to refuse outright the landing in Canada of such a cable or to allow the landing with any limitations or conditions it might be deemed fit to impose. The opinion, however, did not indicate the precise extent of the legal rights of the Company under its Charter of 1884.

The Minister further pointed out that the Chiefs of Staff had not yet submitted an opinion as to the merits of this application from the purely military point of view, and he felt that the government might wish to have the benefit of the views of the Chiefs of Staff before a final decision were made.

On the other hand, the Company naturally was anxious to find out as soon as possible whether its application would be granted or not, and it was understood that the U.S. Embassy at Ottawa was also pressing for a decision in view of the importance placed on this project from the point of view of U.S. defence.

30. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It was not unlikely that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization might be interested in the Commercial Cable Company project on military grounds. It was understood that the United Kingdom was also interested in the project on a purely defence basis but was not at all interested in the commercial use to be made of this cable.

(b) Consideration was being given to the possibility of having the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation purchase the contract that the Canadian National Railways now had with Western Union for external telecommunications. If this could be done, it would tend to reduce the extent to which foreign companies controlled Canada's external telecommunications.

(c) Pending receipt of a supplementary opinion from the Department of Justice and the views of the Chiefs of Staff as to the desirability of Commercial Cable's proposal on defence grounds, it might be desirable to give an interim reply to the Company and to the U.S. Embassy at Ottawa which would be rather discouraging in tone and merely indicate that, because of the serious implications of the proposal and because all the required information had not been received, the government was not yet in a position to reach a final decision.

31. The Cabinet noted the report by the Minister of Transport on the application of the Commercial Cable Company of New York for permission to land in Canada a coaxial submarine cable they proposed to lay between the United States and the United Kingdom, and agreed,

(a) that a final decision in this matter be deferred pending receipt of a supplementary opinion from the Department of Justice as to the precise extent of the legal rights vested in the Company by its 1884 Charter, or by any other authority, and the views of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff as to the merits of the proposal from the purely military point of view; and,

(b) agreed that the Minister of Transport inform the Company, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the U.S. Embassy at Ottawa that, because of the implications of the Company's application to the government's policy on external telecommunications, it had been necessary to examine the whole problem with the utmost care and that sufficient information on which to reach a final decision had not yet been made available to the government.

...

440.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], February 1, 1955

...

TRANS-ATLANTIC CABLE; APPLICATION OF COMMERCIAL CABLE COMPANY

10. The Minister of Transport, referring to discussion at the meeting of January 17th, 1955, said the Chiefs of Staff had informed the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs that they were of opinion that the proposed trans-Atlantic cable to be laid by the Commercial Cable Company of New York between the United States and the United Kingdom via Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Greenland and Iceland, would, from the purely defence point of view, be an important and desirable addition to telecommunications facilities.

11. The Minister of Justice also reported that he was satisfied that the Governor in Council had all the statutory and other powers required to withhold the granting of a licence for the landing of this cable in Canada, or to grant a licence subject to any conditions or limitations the Governor in Council might deem fit to impose.

12. Mr. Marler recommended, therefore, that the Commercial Cable Company be informed that the government was prepared to grant a landing licence for the proposed cable, subject to certain technical stipulations, on condition that the company undertake not to terminate circuits in Canada except for,

(a) purposes of defence communications from Canada to points outside Canada so far as circuits now available were insufficient; and,

(b) commercial purposes, but only in respect of circuits that were leased with government approval to Canadian owned and controlled telecommunications companies.

...

441.

DEA/11709-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], March 14, 1955

TRANS-ATLANTIC SUBMARINE CABLE

The attached Note No. 180 from the United States Ambassador was left with us late on March 10. We are sending copies of it around to the members of the Ad Hoc Interdepartmental Committee on the Commercial Cable Company's Trans-Atlantic Cable Project and have suggested to the Chairman, Mr. R.B. Bryce, that a meeting should be called within a few weeks to discuss the nature of the reply which should be sent to the Ambassador.

You will observe that the first two paragraphs of the Note are factual (indeed, the second paragraph might also be thought to have no proper place in the Note at all, as it appears to do no more than endorse representations which the Company has already made on several occasions to the Government). The third paragraph, however, raises an interesting point by suggesting that United States "defence requirements" may (sometimes) take into account the need to duplicate existing facilities in order to have "alternative" means of communications. Hitherto we had assumed that all of the United States defence requirements for facilities in Canada had been related to their actual needs without any spare or duplicate facilities. The Ambassador's Note appears to throw some doubt on whether our past assumptions have been well founded.

There seems to be a possibility that the Government's decision, which is correctly stated at the end of the first paragraph, was not fully understood by the United States Government because, if it had been, they would have realized that it already provides for United States defence needs to be met as they arise. However, I would not make too much of the Note's third paragraph because the whole question of defence needs is revealed to be of secondary importance. The penultimate paragraph makes the fundamental point that unless the Company is allowed to exploit the cable as fully as possible as a commercial venture, the United States Air Force would not enjoy the benefit of having an alternative means of communication with Newfoundland.

In anticipation of the next meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee, I should be grateful for your views on whether the representative of this Department should raise once more the suggestion made informally last year that, if the Company abandons its project, we might offer to consider joining the United States, the United Kingdom and Denmark, in sharing the cost of laying a cable to be used exclusively for defence purposes within the framework of NATO.<sup>166</sup> If such an idea were practicable and our respective shares of the cost reasonable, then, by putting forward the idea, we would be protected from any United States criticism that we had acted unreasonably.

J. LIÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*L'ambassadeur des États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador of United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

NOTE NO. 180

Ottawa, March 10, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

The Ambassador of the United States of America presents his compliments to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and has the honor to refer to the application by the Commercial Cable Company addressed to the Governor-in-Council of your Excellency's Government for approval of landing sites in Canada for a trans-Atlantic submarine cable under the provisions of the Charter granted to the Company by an Act of Parliament in

<sup>166</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

I think that this might be raised for examination L.B. Pearson]

1884. Reference is made in particular to the Secretary's letter of February 10, 1955† informing the Ambassador that the Canadian Government is prepared to grant authority for the landing of the proposed cable but would place restrictions on the use of the cable to the extent that circuits shall not be terminated in Canada except for:

1. Purposes of defense communications from Canada to points outside Canada so far as other available circuits are insufficient, and
2. Commercial circuits in respect of circuits leased to Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation.

With respect to the foregoing exceptions, the Commercial Cable Company has advised its Government that:

1. The Company has operated in Canada since 1884 under the provisions of its charter without any restrictions whatever.
2. The Company has requested approval for landing sites in Canada for six trans-Atlantic cables during the years since 1884 and all have been approved without delay and without any restrictions whatever on the service to be rendered over said cables.
3. The Company has never been notified of any change in its charter rights to lay, operate, maintain, repair and renew its cables. The proposed cable is in fact a renewal of one of the Company's 1884 cables which, because of its age and deterioration has been out of service for several years. However, it follows a new route across the Atlantic for military reasons of which Your Excellency's Government is aware.

In the light of exception No. 1 in the Secretary of State's letter of February 10, the Government of the United States wishes to point out that a quantity of circuits over a single route would not necessarily indicate that the defense requirement had been met. On the contrary, it is considered reasonable to expect that the Government of the United States would wish to lease channels in the proposed submarine cable to provide an alternate means of secure communications from the United States to Newfoundland, thereby decreasing the vulnerability of the single route. It is therefore considered that the United States Air Force should be authorized to lease facilities in the proposed cable to meet requirements as they arise. Such leased facilities would provide an alternative means of communications.

Heretofore the United States Air Force has not been concerned with the commercial aspects of the proposed cable. It is now recognized that if all the countries with which the Commercial Cable Company is negotiating for landing rights were to impose restrictions similar to those suggested by your Government, the cable would not be a sound commercial venture. The Commercial Cable Company has stated that the expense of laying the cable could not be justified from the standpoint of military use alone. On the other hand, the United States Department of Defense could not justifiably support the huge expenditure involved in laying the cable solely on the basis of defense requirements.

In view of the foregoing urgent considerations affecting the defense of North America, the Government of the United States hopes that the Government of Canada will reconsider its earlier position with a view to withdrawing the restrictions outlined in the Secretary's letter of February 10, 1955.<sup>167</sup>

R.D. STUART

<sup>167</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

A copy was handed to Mr. Ross of Earncliffe on April 27 David B. Wilson 442.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 127-55

Ottawa, May 9, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

APPLICATION OF THE COMMERCIAL CABLE COMPANY FOR LANDING RIGHTS
IN CANADA FOR A NEW CO-AXIAL SUBMARINE CABLE

It will be recalled that Cabinet decided early in February that the Company might be allowed to lay its proposed cable across Canadian territory subject to certain technical and related stipulations, and on condition that no circuits be terminated in Canada except for

(i) purposes of defence communications from Canada to points outside Canada so far as other available circuits are insufficient, and

(ii) commercial circuits in respect of circuits leased to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation.

The United States Ambassador was so informed in a letter dated February 10. However, he has since asked, in a Note dated March 10, that the above mentioned restrictions be withdrawn. A copy of the Ambassador's Note No. 180 is attached.

I have consulted my colleagues, the Minister of National Defence and Transport, and we are agreed that the attached Note brings forth no new considerations which were not taken into account before the Cabinet's decision on the Company's application was taken early in February. We are not satisfied that there are sufficient grounds on which a reversal of that decision might be justified. In these circumstances I recommend that the Ambassador be informed:

(a) that, with respect to the Company's commercial interest, the Government's decision respecting the terminating of commercial circuits in Canada made adequate provision for the Company to benefit from such Canadian business as might appropriately be available by allowing the use of the facilities of the proposed cable, through the leasing of circuits to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation. (In this connexion it has been noted that the proposed cable, which would have a capacity of 120 duplex teleprinter channels each operating at a speed of 60 words per minute in each direction, is stated in Note No. 180 to be a replacement for one of the Company's 1884 cables which, however, are understood to have a capacity of less than 2 duplex teleprinter channels. It has also been noted that the 24 duplex channels which the Company wishes to terminate initially at Canso for traffic between Canada and other countries would exceed the total capacity of all the present submarine cables between North America and Europe, which aggregate about 18 1/2 duplex channels in capacity.);

(b) that, with respect to the United States Government's defence interest, the Government has already agreed that, in the event the Company proceeds with the laying of this cable in the light of the access which it would have to Canadian and other business as mentioned above, circuits may be terminated in Canada for purposes of defence communications with points outside Canada to the extent that other available circuits are insufficient, and consequently adequate provision has been made for meeting United States defence communication needs (including, in that event, the need for an alternative secure means of communication) as requested in the Ambassador's Note. The Canadian position with respect to this matter would, of course, be reviewed in the event of any grave emergency arising;

(c) that in addition, alternative routing will be possible over the Newfoundland-Canadian mainland portion of the proposed trans-Atlantic coaxial telephone cable between the U.S.A., Canada and the United Kingdom to be constructed and jointly owned by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the United Kingdom Government and the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation.

(d) that if, despite the opportunities which there might be for carrying Canadian commercial traffic on the conditions mentioned in paragraph (a), the Company would not consider it worthwhile to lay the proposed cable, it would not seem reasonable to suggest that, on the grounds of United States defence needs which might arise, the Canadian Government and Canadian firms should be required to sacrifice their established telecommunications interests in order that the laying of this cable might proceed, especially in circumstances in which the United States Government does not consider that defence requirements alone would justify them in making any substantial expenditures in order to have the cable laid. Moreover, having in view the far greater volume of traffic between the United States and Europe than exists between Canada and Europe, it would also appear unreasonable to imply that the denial of unrestricted freedom to the Company to exploit 24 duplex channels terminated in Canada would deprive the Company of revenues sufficiently large to determine their decision whether to proceed with the cable project;

(e) that, in the light of the foregoing and of other considerations, the Government is not satisfied that there is sufficient justification for altering the conditions outlined in the letter to the Ambassador dated February 10, 1955.<sup>168</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

CONCURRED IN:

Minister of National Defence

Ralph Campney

Minister of Transport

G. Marler

<sup>168</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 8 juin 1955. L'ambassadeur américain avait été informé de la décision du Cabinet par la note n° E-159, du 22 juin 1955, qui faisait état des recommandations de (a) à (e).
Approved by Cabinet on June 8, 1955. The American Ambassador was informed of the Cabinet's decision in Note No. E-159 of June 22, 1955, which reproduced recommendations (a) through (e).

4<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 4
ÉNERGIE ATOMIQUE
ATOMIC ENERGY

SECTION A

ACCORD DE COOPÉRATION SUR LES UTILISATIONS CIVILES
DE L'ÉNERGIE ATOMIQUE AGREEMENT FOR COOPERATION ON THE CIVIL USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY

443.

DEA/14003-U-4-3-40

*Note de la 1<sup>re</sup> Direction de liaison avec la Défense
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Defence Liaison (1) Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 18, 1955

AGREEMENTS FOR ATOMIC ENERGY COOPERATION WITH UNITED STATES

You may recall that this division informed you some weeks ago that Mr. Bennett had sent to the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission a copy of a draft agreement† for cooperation on the civil side of atomic energy. In a telephone conversation today Mr. Bennett informed Barton of this division that General Nichols, the General Manager of U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, had sent to Mr. Bennett informally a U.S. version of the draft agreement.† Bennett told Barton that after studying the U.S. draft he had talked to Nichols on the telephone and informed him that in its present form it was quite unacceptable. Bennett proposes to go to Washington in the course of the next week or ten days, when General Nichols indicates that it is convenient, to discuss the draft with him in detail. He mentioned in particular two points in the agreement which were unsatisfactory. The first was that it excluded any information which had "military significance". If this were interpreted literally it would exclude any information on radiological effects, health and safety, detection methods, etc. The second point that Bennett found unacceptable was that information on specific types of power reactors would be given only if Canada were building or were planning to build the same type of reactor. Since the basis of the Canadian plan is to compare the performance of the Canadian heavy water reactor with the other types being made in the United States in order to determine relative efficiencies, this condition would largely nullify the value of the agreement.

2. Bennett then said that he was slated to make a speech in Ottawa about the middle of February and if progress had not been made by that time he was giving some thought to chiding the Americans publicly. Presumably before doing this Bennett would check at least with his own Minister, if not with this department.

3. Barton then told Bennett of Mr. Bryce's illness and asked Bennett if he had thought of discussing these developments with the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy. Bennett thought that there would not be much point in discussing the matter with the Panel until he had met with Nichols and learned how firmly wedded the Americans were to those features of the U.S. draft agreement which were unacceptable to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

4. Bennett concluded the discussion by inviting Barton to go over to his office and have a look at the U.S. draft agreement. If a study of the draft reveals any further features of interest I will send you a further memorandum.

J. TEAKLES

444.

C.D.H./Vol. 10

*Le président de l'Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée.
au ministre du Commerce*

President, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, to Minister of Trade and Commerce

PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, February 23, 1955

Dear Mr. Howe,

In a letter of October 28th, 1954,<sup>169</sup> I quoted the pertinent sections of the amended United States Atomic Energy Act affecting the exchange of information, the mutual use of services, et cetera, in the power reactor field. I have also reported to you verbally from time to time on our progress in negotiating an Agreement for Co-operation, as provided by the amended Act.

At the suggestion of the United States Atomic Energy Commission we submitted a draft proposal for an Agreement in November last. At a subsequent meeting with the United States Atomic Energy Commission this draft was discussed, and it was agreed that the U.S.A.E.C. would prepare a draft Agreement incorporating our material. The first draft was received in mid-January and has been discussed with the U.S.A.E.C. The second draft,† incorporating certain revisions which I suggested, was received a few days ago.

I expect to attend a meeting in Washington next week, at which time I would hope that the Agreement can be put in final shape. Before I attend this meeting I would like to have your comment on two questions of policy which are still outstanding. These concern the sale of plutonium and the sale of uranium in the period beyond our present contractual obligations.

The clause in the U.S.A.E.C. draft covering the future sale of plutonium reads as follows:

"Canada will give to the United States a first refusal of any special nuclear materials which Canada may desire to transfer outside Canada. Canada and the United States Atomic Energy Commission will consult with each other on the international significance of any proposed transfer of any such materials to any other government or to any person beyond the jurisdiction of the respective governments, but this provision shall not be construed to modify the restrictions provided in Article X B or XI C."

This clause means simply that we would not be in a position to sell plutonium produced at Chalk River or produced elsewhere in Canada during the ten-year period of the Agreement, without giving the United States the right of first refusal. As a matter of principle, I do not believe we can accept this proposal. I would, however, have no objection to consulting with the United States Atomic Energy Commission on the proposed sale or transfer of plutonium to another country, as provided in the second sentence of the clause.

The clause in the U.S.A.E.C. draft concerning the sale of uranium reads as follows:

<sup>169</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 511.

"Canada confirms an understanding with the United States that it will make all uranium produced in Canada up to March 31, 1962, except for that portion which is reserved for its own use, available to the United States under terms similar to those of existing contracts, which will remain in force. Canada will also give the United States the option to purchase under terms similar to those of existing contracts all uranium thereafter produced in Canada during this agreement in excess of such quantities as may be required in Canada's atomic energy program to the extent that such uranium is needed by the United States for defense purposes."

This clause has the effect of giving the United States Atomic Energy Commission first call on uranium produced in Canada after March 31st, 1962, to the extent that such uranium is needed for the United States military programme and excepting such quantities as Canada may wish to reserve for her own use. Inasmuch as the U.S.A.E.C. is now underwriting all uranium contracts and is paying a price which provides for the complete write-off of capital and pre-production expenses during the life of the present contracts, it is my view that we are under some moral obligation to continue to sell to the U.S.A.E.C. beyond March 31st, 1962, providing that the uranium is needed for the military programme. It is the thought of the U.S.A.E.C. that, should the military demand continue beyond March 31st, 1962, the present contracts would be extended. However, a new price would be negotiated which would take into account the fact that capital and pre-production expense had been fully written off in the original contract. The one complication in the picture is the possibility that a civilian market may have developed outside of Canada in the early '60's. There is no doubt that the United Kingdom will be in the market for uranium for its power programme by that time. There may be also markets in other countries. We must anticipate that the Canadian producer will wish to meet some part of this demand. As you are aware, Plowden has already discussed with me the possibility of contracting for Canadian uranium after March 31st, 1962. If the clause stands as written, we would have to give the United States first call on Canadian uranium if the military demand in the United States continues after 1962. As a way around this difficulty, I have suggested to both Plowden and to Johnson of the U.S.A.E.C. that the Combined Development Agency which is now responsible for allocating uranium for military purposes should also assume responsibility for allocating uranium for civilian purposes during such period as there may be a twofold demand. Under such an arrangement, we could ensure that some part of the civilian demand would be met from Canadian production. The problem now is whether we should accept the clause as written, in anticipation that the Combined Development Agency will move into the picture.

I would appreciate an opportunity of discussing these points with you before I go to Washington.

Yours sincerely,

W.J. BENNETT

445.

C.D.H./Vol. 10

*Le ministre du Commerce
au président de l'Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée.*

*Minister of Trade and Commerce
to President, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited*

PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], February 24, 1955

Dear Mr. Bennett,

Thanks for your letter of February 23rd, regarding the United States Atomic Energy Act affecting the exchange of information, the mutual use of services, etc., in the power reactor field as they affect the agreement for cooperation.

Since receiving your letter, you and I have discussed the situation, and I think that you understand my viewpoint on the matters referred to in your letter.

I will be glad to know the results of your further meeting with the Atomic Energy Commission.

Yours sincerely,
C.D. HOWE

446.

C.D.H./Vol. 10

*Le président de l'Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée.
au ministre du Commerce*

President, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, to Minister of Trade and Commerce

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 14, 1955

Dear Mr. Howe:

Further to our recent conversation concerning the clause in the proposed Agreement for Co-operation with the United States Atomic Energy Commission covering the arrangements for the sale of uranium, George Bateman and I have made a second revision of the proposed clause. A copy of this is attached. I am also attaching, for comparative purposes, the first draft of the clause and the first revision of the clause which I discussed with you some days ago.

We believe that the clause as now drafted expresses the intent of the parties satisfactorily. Paragraph two expresses our intent to supply uranium to the United States as long as the military demand continues. Paragraph three provides an opportunity to supply the civilian requirements of other countries, particularly those of the United Kingdom, should uranium be available for civilian allocation.

Yours sincerely,
W.J. BENNETT

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

ARTICLE VI — NON-RESEARCH QUANTITIES OF MATERIALS

First Draft

F.

Canada confirms an understanding with the United States that it will make all uranium produced in Canada up to March 31, 1962, except for that portion which is reserved for its own use, available to the United States under terms similar to those of existing contracts, which will remain in force. Canada will also give the United States the option to purchase under terms similar to those of existing contracts all uranium thereafter produced in Canada during this agreement in excess of such quantities as may be required in Canada's atomic energy program to the extent that such uranium is needed by the United States for defense purposes.

First Revised Draft

F.

Canada will continue the present arrangements with the United States whereby all uranium produced in Canada up to March 31, 1962, except for that portion which is reserved for its own use, will be made available to the United States under terms similar to those of existing contracts, which will remain in force. Canada will use its best efforts to make contracts with its producers which will enable it to give the United States the option to purchase, under terms no less favorable than those of existing contracts, all uranium thereafter produced in Canada during this agreement in excess of such quantities as may be required in Canada's atomic energy program to the extent that such uranium is needed by the United States for defense purposes. It is recognized that the time will come when the supply of uranium will exceed defense needs, and the parties will consult with each other from time to time with respect to the proportion of Canadian production which will be needed by the United States for defense purposes.

Second Revised Draft

F.

Canada will continue the present arrangement with the United States, under which all uranium produced in Canada up to March 31st, 1962, will be made available to the United States under terms and conditions comparable to those of existing contracts, except such quantities as Canada may reserve for her own use.

Since this Agreement will be in effect for a period beyond March 31st, 1962, Canada will use its best efforts to provide that in making further contracts for new production, the United States shall have the option during the period by which this Agreement extends beyond March 31st, 1962, to purchase such new production to the extent that it is needed for defense purposes.

It is recognized that the time will come when the supply of uranium will exceed defense needs. It is also recognized that, since the production of uranium in Canada will exceed greatly the anticipated domestic requirements, Canada may desire to contribute to the civilian requirements of other countries, particularly those of the United Kingdom. With this in view, it is agreed that the United States and Canada will consult with each other at an early date, and from time to time, as to the amount of Canadian production which is to be made available for such purposes.

447.

C.D.H./Vol. 10

*Le ministre du Commerce
au président de l'Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée.*

*Minister of Trade and Commerce
to President, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], March 17, 1955

Dear Mr. Bennett,

Thanks for yours of March 14th, enclosing clause covering arrangements for the sale of uranium contained in the proposed Agreement with the United States Atomic Energy Commission.

Your second revised draft seems to cover the situation very well and has my approval.

Yours sincerely,

C.D. HOWE

448.

DEA/14003-U-4-3-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, April 22, 1955

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT FOR COOPERATION IN THE CIVIL USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY

You will recall that on April 6, when I showed you the draft "Agreement for Cooperation"† between Canada and the United States in the civil uses of atomic energy, you expressed the view that it should be revised to include an element of reciprocity. The Secretary to the Cabinet consulted the Prime Minister, who made a similar observation.

2. Attached is a copy of the latest draft, incorporating changes made to meet the point you raised. These changes include the following:

(a) Throughout the agreement, except in one or two places where it seemed undesirable (e.g. Article ILD(2)(a)), the words "the Commission will not communicate information", were amended to read that the parties to the agreement would not exchange information.

(b) The Article on "Limitations" (Article II A) was amended by adding the following sentence: "It is mutually understood and agreed that unless otherwise specified, any limitations to cooperation imposed pursuant to this Agreement shall be reciprocal."

(c) Article XI B, in which Canada guarantees not to use any materials transferred pursuant to this Agreement for military purposes, has been modified to read that such materials will not be used for military purposes "by Canada". In addition, Articles VI B and C have been reworded to emphasize that the supply of uranium metal and heavy water for the NRX and NRU reactors is covered by agreements already in existence (and implicitly, therefore, not subject to the undertaking in Article XI B). These changes take care of the fact that Canada is using NRX to test U.S. submarine reactor loops and is under contract to sell plutonium from NRX and NRU to the United States for use in its weapons programme.

They would also make it possible for Canada to use these reactors for its own military purposes if it so desired.

(d) A new Article XII has been inserted entitled "Guaranties by the United States" to reciprocate the guaranties required from Canada in Article XI.

3. Mr. Bennett has sent this draft to the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission for comments at the official level. It is my understanding that, if the Commission has no further changes to propose, Mr. Bennett intends to have the draft referred to Cabinet.

4. If you concur, I propose to inform Mr. Bennett that the revised Draft would seem to meet your objections to the original version and that this Department agrees that the draft might be referred to Cabinet after it has been ascertained that the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission has no further changes to propose.<sup>170</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

449.

DEA/14003-U-4-3-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, May 27, 1955

AGREEMENT FOR COOPERATION CONCERNING CIVIL USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY
BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

Attached is the latest version† of the proposed agreement for cooperation concerning civil uses of atomic energy between the United States and Canada. As you know, Mr. Bennett is anxious to have the agreement considered by Cabinet next week (June 2), since the U.S. Atomic Energy Act requires that the document must be submitted to the Joint Committee of the Congress and a period of 30 days must elapse while Congress is in session. Thus, if this is not done within the next two weeks, the conclusion of the agreement may be delayed until the next session of Congress.

2. Also attached, as a cover paper to the agreement, is a draft memorandum to Cabinet‡ which Mr. Bennett proposes should be submitted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce with the concurrence of the Secretary of State of State for External Affairs, recommending that authority be granted for conclusion of the agreement.

3. With one important reservation, which is discussed below, I am satisfied with the Agreement and I believe that it could be defended without difficulty if it were decided that it should be made public.

4. My one reservation is about the security provisions associated with the agreement. Article X A reads in part at present, "The two governments agree that all classified information and material ... within the scope of this Agreement, will be safeguarded in accordance with the security safeguards and standards set forth in the Appendix, which is hereby made a part of this Agreement."

5. The proposed security appendix (copy attached),‡ which officers from this department saw for the first time this week, has a number of features which seem to me to be undesirable, particularly if the appendix is "made a part of this Agreement". The following are examples:

<sup>170</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
OK [L.B. Pearson]

Page 5, paragraph BI: requires that if one party to the agreement sends a visitor to an establishment of the other, not only must he identify the level of clearance granted the individual, but also the scope of the investigation upon which the clearance determination was based.<sup>171</sup>

Page 6, paragraph III: provides that the parties to the agreement will permit respective security groups to examine and view at first hand the implementing procedures of the agencies responsible for the administration of the atomic energy programs. For example Scott McLeod, or some of his ilk, will be able to come to Canada and check up on our procedures.

Page 7, Criteria for determining eligibility for security clearance: These criteria, which are to be applied not only to the individual but also his spouse, spell out all the features of "guilt by association" which are an element of United States security procedures but which Canada has hitherto avoided, at least to the extent of putting in writing. Even if we are prepared to live with the rest of the document, I do not believe we can accept paragraph 3. Pinned to the annex is a possible revision of this paragraph which would meet Canadian requirements.

6. In the course of the research we have done on this matter since we first saw the proposed security annex, we learned to our surprise that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, under the authority of the Atomic Energy Control Board, has for a number of years been operating on special security procedures and criteria which are quite different from those observed by all other agencies of the Canadian Government, and which in fact are almost identical to United States standards. Thus the proposed new security annex is not much different in substance from procedures which Atomic Energy of Canada has been operating under on its own initiative for a number of years.

7. It now appears possible (we should know by the time of your meeting on Monday with Mr. Bennett) that the U.S. authorities may agree to a rewording of Article X of the Agreement, along the following lines:

"Atomic information made available pursuant to this Agreement will be accorded full security protection under applicable Canada-United States security arrangements, and where applicable, national legislation and regulations. In no case will either government maintain security standards for safeguarding atomic information lower than those set forth in Canada-United States security arrangements in effect on the date this Agreement comes into force."

8. This revision would at least have the merit of separating the main agreement from the security agreement, thereby making it easier to keep the latter secret even if the main agreement is published. It does not alter the main question, however, of whether the Government would be willing to pay the price of entering into a security agreement<sup>172</sup> of this kind in order to obtain the atomic information which the United States can make available to Canada, and which our atomic energy authorities are convinced is of the greatest importance in the advancement of the Canadian programme.

<sup>171</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
What does "scope" mean? [L.B. Pearson]

<sup>172</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
Is there any agreement now[?] [L.B. Pearson]

9. We have asked Bennett why it would not be possible for Canada simply to give to the United States Government a copy of the Canadian atomic security regulations, accompanied by an undertaking not to lower our security standards as they apply to this agreement. This would avoid the problems of a "security agreement". Bennett is convinced, however, that this procedure would not satisfy the United States.

10. As you know, the Department of National Defence has been discussing with the U.S. Defence Department the substance of a similar agreement for cooperation on the military aspects of atomic energy. It is a coincidence that the two Defence Departments are holding discussions on this same question of security today. To our pleased surprise National Defence seems to be much more aware than Mr. Bennett of the objections to the Canadian Government becoming a party to a security agreement, particularly one which spells out "criteria" in United States terms. National Defence was hopeful that it could convince the Americans that it should be sufficient simply to supply the Canadian regulations and a guarantee to maintain existing standards. If it is successful we will have a useful precedent for arguing the civil case. We should know the results of the Defence Departments' discussions by Monday.

J. LIÉGÉRI

450.

DEA/14003-U-4-3-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], June 7, 1955

AGREEMENT WITH THE UNITED STATES FOR CO-OPERATION
CONCERNING CIVIL USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY — SECURITY PROVISIONS

About May 20, Mr. Bennett gave us for the first time the draft security annex which was to be attached to the main agreement and to be regarded as an integral part thereof.

2. Mr. Barton and I felt that there were many things wrong with the security annex and we discussed it with Mr. Bennett in a meeting in Mr. Bryce's office on May 24. The security annex contains many provisions of a kind distasteful to Canadian authorities and not included in any general Canadian security regulations. Apart from our objections to the substance of the security annex, we felt that it was unwise to have it attached to the main agreement as an integral part thereof — which would mean that the security annex would be expressly agreed to by the Canadian Government. Some of the provisions of the security annex were, in our view, of a kind that should not be expressly accepted by the Government as such.

3. Mr. Bennett said that there was really nothing new in the security annex because a similar agreement has been in force for several years between the Atomic Energy Control Board and the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission (A.E.C.). However, after further discussion, Mr. Bennett made it clear that there has not been in force a definite security agreement. What has been in force is a set of atomic security regulations adopted by the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited under the authority of the A.E.C.B. These regulations were adopted and a copy given to the A.E.C. some years ago because there was no other way of obtaining the atomic information which A.E.C.L. has in fact been getting from A.E.C.

4. Mr. Bennett undertook to discuss with the Commission possible alternatives to the form of the proposed security annex. In the meantime we submitted a memorandum to Mr.

Pearson explaining the problems. A meeting was held in Mr. Pearson's office on May 30 with Messrs. Bennett and Bryce, and Messrs. Wershof and Barton of the Department of External Affairs.

5. At this meeting Mr. Bennett reported as follows. There could be no substantial departure from the content of the security annex. Also, this document would have to take the form of an agreement. However, the Commission was willing to put what had been the proposed security annex to the main agreement into a separate agreement which will be signed between the Commission and the Atomic Energy Control Board. This will not be annexed to the main agreement between the governments. However, there will be a clause in the main agreement to the effect that all information exchanged thereunder will be governed by reciprocal security arrangements in force at the time of the signature of the main agreement (i.e., the new security agreement).

6. Mr. Bennett said that there was no thought of making public the security agreement. In fact, the Commission people were not anxious to make public the main agreement.

7. After discussion, Mr. Pearson agreed to the procedure proposed by Mr. Bennett. Mr. Pearson emphasized that we would not ever want the security agreement to be made public. However, there is much to be said in favour of making public the main agreement later this summer. It is understood that External will consult with Mr. Bennett during the summer with a view to approaching the State Department and the Commission for permission to declassify the main agreement, with a view to tabling it in Parliament.

8. In view of the status which is to be given to the security annex and in view of the fact that the A.E.C.B. has legal authority to make such an agreement, neither this Department nor Cabinet is called upon to agree to the substance of the security agreement. Of course, the Department of External Affairs knows what is in it and is acquiescing to the extent that Mr. Pearson is not going to raise any objection to it in Cabinet. However, the plain fact is that External is not required to approve or consent to the wording of the security agreement. Mr. Bennett realizes that there are many things in it that we do not like. At the same time, we in External realize that it is necessary for the A.E.C.B. to make the security agreement in a form acceptable to the Commission because, if they do not, Canada will not be able to obtain the main agreement which is undoubtedly of great value to Canada.<sup>173</sup>

M.H. W[ERSHOF]

<sup>173</sup> Le Cabinet a approuvé l'accord le 2 juin 1955, l'article X ayant été modifié selon les modalités établies au paragraphe 5 ci-dessus. Pour la discussion du Cabinet, voir le document 454. Pour le texte final de l'accord, voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1955, N° 15.

Cabinet approved the agreement, with Article X amended along the lines indicated in paragraph 5 above, on June 2, 1955. For the Cabinet discussion, see Document 454. For the final text of the agreement, see Canada, Treaty Series, 1955, No. 15.

SECTION B

ACCORD DE COOPÉRATION EN MATIÈRE D'UTILISATIONS MILITAIRES
DE L'ÉNERGIE ATOMIQUE<sup>174</sup>AGREEMENT FOR COOPERATION ON THE MILITARY USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY<sup>174</sup>

451.

DEA/50219-AK-40

Projet d'accord de coopération entre les États-Unis et le Canada<sup>175</sup>Draft Agreement for Cooperation between United States and Canada<sup>175</sup>

SECRET

[Ottawa, n.d.]

Concerning the communication of data, as contemplated in the United States Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"), for the purposes of defence planning, the training of personnel in the employment of and defence against atomic weapons, and the evaluation of the capabilities of potential enemies in the employment of atomic weapons.

It being recognized that the exchange of such data between the United States and Canada is in the common defence interests of the two countries and can be undertaken without threat to the security and best interests of either.

Now therefore the United States and Canada mutually under take and agree that:

1. Subject to the terms and conditions hereof the United States will co-operate with and communicate to Canada, through channels of communication established or recognized by this agreement, Restricted Data as authorized in subsection (b) of section 144 of the Act, and data declassified or removed from the Restricted Data category pursuant to section 142 of the Act.

1st USA change is new clause similar to Clause 1 but providing for flow of data in opposite direction.

C[anadian] J[oint] S[taff] W[ashington] 1943

2nd USA change is added clause stating that final decision on transfer of US Restricted Data rests with US.

CJSW 1943

2. The Restricted Data referred to in paragraph 1 above shall be such as is necessary to the development of defence plans, the training of personnel in the employment of and defence against atomic weapons, and the evaluation of the capabilities of potential enemies in the employment of atomic weapons, to the extent permitted by the Act.

3. Without limiting the generality of paragraphs 1 and 2, the communication of Restricted Data and other data under the terms of this agreement shall include, to the <sup>174</sup> Un accord semblable sur le partage de l'information dans le domaine de l'énergie atomique a été conclu entre les pays membres de l'OTAN le 22 juin 1955. Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1956, N° 4. A similar agreement for sharing information on atomic energy was reached between the NATO member countries on June 22, 1955. See Canada, Treaty Series, 1956, No. 4.

<sup>175</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

Note for file: This was given to the advisory Panel on Atomic Energy by Gen. Foulkes on March 3, 1955. The original draft is Canadian. The red marginal comments relate to the changes which it is understood the U.S. intends to make to the document. W.H. B[arton] extent permitted by the Act, the maximum possible cooperation in tests, trials, exercises, training programs, staff and operational research studies, medical and intelligence activities.

4. Canada undertakes and guarantees

(a) that the security safeguards and standards as set out herein will be maintained; 3rd USA change requires Canada to reaffirm that established security agreements will be maintained.

CJSW 1943

(b) that any Restricted Data communicated pursuant to this agreement will not be communicated to unauthorized persons or beyond the jurisdiction of Canada except as specified herein.

Also some rewording of 4(b) to ensure that information intended only for Canada will not be released to any agency under UK jurisdiction.

CJSW 1943

5. Nothing herein shall be interpreted or operate as a bar or restriction to consultation and co-operation by the United States and Canada with the United Kingdom in all fields of defence, but Canada agrees that it will communicate Restricted Data to persons within the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom only as authorized by the United States.

This paragraph is included on the understanding that the U.S. desires such a clause.

6. Data communicated under the terms of this agreement will be transmitted through mutually agreed channels of communication.

7. Security safeguards and standards mutually agreed by the United States and Canada will be maintained.

8. This agreement shall continue in force as long as Canada is participating with the United States in a regional defence arrangement.

9. This agreement, being primarily concerned with matters set out in subsection (b) of section 144 and section 142 of the Act shall not operate as a bar to the entry into further agreements for co-operation under the Act.

10. Words and terms used in this agreement shall have the same meanings as in the Act.

THIS DRAFT HAS NOW ACQUIRED AN "ANNEX" WHICH LISTS IN GENERAL TERMS THE SUBJECTS COVERED BY THIS AGREEMENT, e.g.

(a) Characteristics, size, shape, weight, yield, etc. of "A" weapons.

(b) Configuration of aircraft to carry "A" weapons.

(c) Structural analysis and blast effects.<sup>176</sup>

CJSW 1943 etc.

<sup>176</sup> Pour une ébauche de cette annexe, voir le document 453.
For a draft of this annex, see Document 453.

452.

DEA/50219-A-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique
Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy

SECRET

[Ottawa], March 3, 1955

Present:

Mr. R.B. Bryce, Chairman
Dr. C.J. Mackenzie
Dr. O.M. Solandt
Mr. J. Léger
Gen. C. Foulkes
Mr. W.H. Barton, Secretary

...

PROGRESS OF BILATERAL AGREEMENTS FOR ATOMIC ENERGY CO-OPERATION

(a) Agreement with the United States on Non-Military Aspects of Atomic Energy

8. The Secretary reported that Mr. Bennett had telephoned from Washington to say that negotiations with the United States Atomic Energy Commission on the Agreement for Co-operation on the non-military aspects of atomic energy were going very well.

9. The Panel agreed that when Mr. Bennett had a draft text with which he was satisfied it would be desirable for the Panel to discuss it with him.

(b) Agreement with the United States on the Military Aspects of Atomic Energy

10. General Foulkes informed the Panel that the draft Agreement for Co-operation which he had prepared had been given to the United States Department of Defence. Copies were referred to the members of the Panel at that time. The Chairman of the Canadian Joint Staff in Washington had learned that the United States authorities were largely in agreement with the substance of the Canadian text but were redrafting it in a form which would suit United States requirements. General Foulkes then gave the members of the Panel copies of the Canadian draft annotated with the anticipated United States changes. Once the NATO Agreement regarding the provision of atomic energy information had been considered and approved by the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, the draft agreement with Canada would be taken under consideration. In due course it would be proposed to the Canadian Government through diplomatic channels.

11. The Panel noted the progress being made in the negotiation of the Agreement for Co-operation on the military aspects of atomic energy.

...

453.

DEA/50219-AK-40

Annexe à l'Accord dans le domaine de l'utilisation de l'énergie atomique aux fins de la défense commune
Annex to Agreement for the Exchange of Atomic Energy Information for Mutual Defence Purposes

TOP SECRET

[n.d.]

It is agreed that the types of atomic information which may be exchanged at their discretion between the Governments of the United States and Canada under the Agreement for Co-operation Regarding Atomic Information, of which this Annex is a part, will be limited to the following:

1. Effects related to yield to be expected from the detonation of atomic weapons.
2. Response of structures, equipment, and personnel to the effects of atomic weapons, including damage or casualty criteria.
3. Systems for analysis of the response of structures, equipment and personnel to the effects of atomic weapons.
4. Characteristics of atomic weapons including size, weight, shape, yields, and fuzing options.
5. The general magnitude of the number of atomic weapons, by types, yields and fuzing options which may be allocated in support of joint Canada-United States plans for the defense of North America; and the logistic aspects and storage requirements of such weapons.
6. Information regarding delivery systems, including tactics and techniques, and duties of delivery crews as regards weapons.
7. Information required to determine aircraft compatibility for atomic weapons, including instruments required for purposes of in-flight monitoring and check-out of atomic weapons.
8. Basic safety features of atomic weapons including disposal of damaged or defective weapons.
9. Training of personnel in the employment of and defense against atomic weapons. Requests for attendance of personnel at schools, exercises and tests will be processed on an individual basis.
10. Information on the capabilities of potential enemy nations for atomic warfare.
11. Information regarding civil defense against atomic attacks.
12. Information regarding military nuclear propulsion systems for ships and aircraft.
13. Information regarding military nuclear power plants.
14. Information pertaining to the adaptation of commercial reactors to military use.
15. Information, including samples, on the amount and geographical distribution of radioactive debris resulting from past and future nuclear explosions.
16. Acoustic, seismic, electromagnetic, and other geophysical data from nuclear explosions, provided they reveal only general characteristics of weapons or devices.
17. Time and locations of scheduled nuclear explosions.

Nothing in the Agreement is designed to preclude the transfer or exchange of defense information which does not come under the provisions of the United States Atomic Energy Act of 1954.

For the United States of America:

For Canada:

454.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du CabinetExtract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], June 2, 1955

V. ATOMIC ENERGY; AGREEMENT FOR COOPERATION IN CIVIL USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY; AGREEMENT FOR COOPERATION REGARDING EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION FOR MUTUAL DEFENCE

13. The Minister of Trade and Commerce submitted a draft agreement for cooperation between Canada and the United States concerning the civil uses of atomic energy which had been negotiated by the President of Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited, with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. The agreement had to be such as to comply with the U.S. statute and, at the same time, include the greatest possible element of reciprocity, particularly with respect to the limitations on fields of cooperation. The agreement would remain in effect for a period of ten years.

Article X of the agreement referred to security arrangements between the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission and the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada. The commission and the control board would make an agreement on security standards and procedures to replace the existing arrangements regarding security.

It was noted that, under U.S. legislation, the agreement would not come into effect until it had been submitted to the joint committee of Congress and a period of 30 days had elapsed while Congress was in session. It was hoped that it would be possible to have the agreed text sent to the joint committee by June 15th, in which event it should be possible to conclude the agreement late in July.

He recommended, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that authority be granted for the entry into this agreement for cooperation with the United States concerning the civil uses of atomic energy along the lines of the draft submitted, and that the Canadian Ambassador at Washington and the President of the Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited, be authorized to sign the agreement on behalf of the Canadian government.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, May 31, 1955 — Cab. Doc. 120-55†)

14. The Minister of National Defence submitted for consideration a draft agreement between the United States and Canada for cooperation regarding the exchange of atomic information for mutual defence. He recommended that this draft agreement be approved in principle on the understanding that if, during the course of negotiations, there were any changes in substance proposed to be made to the agreement, or in the secret annex defining the information to be enhanced or the collateral agreement on security† submitted as an appendix, the matter would be referred back to Cabinet for consideration.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Draft agreement between the United States and Canada for cooperation regarding atomic information — Cab. Doc. 123-55†)

15. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It was not intended to make public the text of the agreement on civil uses of atomic energy. It was likely, however, that the agreement would, in time, become public, and this might cause some embarrassment as in it the U.S. had provided Canada more favourable terms than had been offered to the United Kingdom.

(b) It was noted that these draft agreements on cooperation in the exchange of atomic information were permissive only, and therefore Canada had no firm assurance that the type of atomic information which might be wanted would, in fact, be forthcoming. However, the proposed agreements would give the U.S. authorities the legal powers, which they did not possess at the present time, to pass certain information to Canada and would remove any excuse of legal or congressional obstacles to furnishing such information.

16. The Cabinet,

(a) authorized the conclusion of an agreement for cooperation with the United States in the civil uses of atomic energy along the lines of the draft submitted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and agreed that the Canadian Ambassador at Washington and the President of the Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited, be authorized to sign the agreement on behalf of the Canadian government; and,

(b) approved the entry into an agreement with the United States for cooperation in the exchange of atomic information for mutual defence, substantially along the lines submitted by the Minister of National Defence, on the understanding that the agreement would be re-submitted if any substantial modification were made in it.

...

455.

PCO

*Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion
du Comité du Cabinet sur la défense*

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Cabinet Defence Committee

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], June 7, 1955

Present:

The Prime Minister (Mr. St-Laurent), in the Chair,
The Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Howe),
The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney),
The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin),
The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson),
The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris).
The Secretary (Mr. Martin)
The Military Secretary (Commander Solomon).
The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff (General Foulkes),
The Chief of the General Staff (Lieutenant-General Simonds),
The Chief of the Naval Staff (Vice Admiral Mainguy),
The Chief of the Air Staff (Air Marshal Slemon),
The Chairman, Defence Research Board (Dr. Solandt).
The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Bryce),
The Deputy Minister of National Defence (Mr. Drury),
The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Léger),
The Deputy Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Golden),
The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance (Mr. Deutsch).

...

VI. ATOMIC ENERGY; AGREEMENT FOR COOPERATION REGARDING EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION FOR MUTUAL DEFENCE

16. The Chairman of the Chiefs of Staff said he understood approval had been given to enter into an agreement with the U.S. for cooperation in the exchange of atomic information for mutual defence, substantially along the lines submitted to the Cabinet at a meeting in the previous week, on the understanding that the agreement would be resubmitted if any major modifications were made in it. He had been advised that the only probable changes of substance involved were the deletion by the U.S. of Sections 15, 16 and 17 of the annex relating to the exchange of information concerning military reactors. This was a controversial issue in the U.S. and the final decision was dependent upon a ruling from the U.S. Attorney General. Nevertheless, it was felt desirable to have the agreement without these provisions in the annex rather than no agreement at all. The U.S. were suggesting that the agreement be declassified but that the annexes remain confidential. It was considered that the agreement should not be declassified until it had received the approval of the U.S. Congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy thirty days after it had been laid before that committee.

17. In the course of discussion the following points emerged:

(a) It would be preferable not to have the draft agreement which had been initialled become public before the agreement itself had been signed. If this happened, there would be public discussion of an arrangement which had not become final and which therefore might present awkward and difficult problems.

(b) It was understood that the U.S. proposed to install a reactor in the DEW line. Canada had advised the U.S. authorities that they could not expect to do this unless it was possible to exchange the type of information referred to in Sections 15, 16 and 17 of the annex. The sort of information mentioned was covered in the civil agreement. If the Attorney General of the U.S. were to say the reactor was being used for civil purposes, the civil authorities might give this kind of information to Atomic Energy of Canada.

18. The Committee noted the report on the agreement for cooperation with the United States regarding exchange of atomic energy information for mutual defence, and agreed to recommend that even if the sections in the annex on exchange of information regarding military reactors were deleted, the agreement with the U.S. and the two annexes be initialled, provided there were no further changes; and that the agreement itself remain classified Confidential until after signature, which would presumably occur after approval by the Congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy thirty days hence.<sup>177</sup>

<sup>177</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1955, N° 16. Les clauses 12, 13, et 14 dans l'annexe (document 453) ont été omises dans le texte final à la demande des États-Unis. La version finale de ce document comportait également un bref paragraphe d'introduction stipulant que « [t]he exchange of atomic information may include cooperation in tests, trials, exercises, training programs, staff and operational research studies and intelligence activities ». Au paragraphe B (4), était ajouté « ballistic accuracy, and vulnerability to natural phenomena ». Le paragraphe B (7) a été modifié de manière à inclure l'échange d'informations sur la « compatibility for atomic weapons of all delivery vehicles ... ».

See Canada, Treaty Series, 1955, No. 16. Clauses 12, 13, and 14 in the annex (Document 453) were omitted from the final text at the request of the United States. The final version of this document also included a brief introductory paragraph which noted that "[t]he exchange of atomic information may include cooperation in tests, trials, exercises, training programs, staff and operational research studies and intelligence activities". To paragraph B (4) was added "ballistic accuracy, and vulnerability to natural phenomena". Paragraph B (7) was amended to include the exchange of information on the "compatibility for atomic weapons of all delivery vehicles...".

SECTION C

URANIUM

456.

DEA/14002-2-6-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], July 20, 1955

CANADIAN URANIUM PRODUCTION

Yesterday, July 20, Mr. Barton of D.L.(1) was requested to attend the meeting called by Mr. Bennett, the President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Also present at the meeting were Mr. Bryce, Mr. Deutsch and Mr. Bateman.

2. Mr. Bennett said that Mr. Howe was becoming seriously concerned about the commitments being assumed by the Canadian Government in underwriting contracts placed by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission for uranium production in Canada. At present these commitments total about $500 million but, due to the rapid expansion of production in the Blind River area, it is anticipated that by 1957 they will exceed $1 billion. Mr. Howe was concerned over the possibility that the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission might, without warning, cancel these contracts in which case the Canadian Government would be seriously involved. He was considering the possibility of having the Canadian Government cease to act as middle man and instead allow the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission to negotiate directly with Canadian producers.

3. None of the officials at the meeting were in favour of this course of action. In the first place, it would put Canadian producers in the position of having to deal with a single buyer. Secondly, there would be a danger that the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission would cover future production with options to purchase which might make it difficult for the Canadian Government to arrange for exports to other countries if this should be deemed desirable. Thirdly, the Canadian Government is heavily involved in the Atomic Energy business and has established an elaborate system of controls. Under these circumstances, a decision to throw the uranium mining industry on its own would appear to be illogical and would doubtless lead to general criticism.

4. The meeting concluded that the best course of action would appear to be for Canada to continue underwriting these U.S. contracts but to tell the United States that this would only be done if agreement was given to making public the pricing formula and production figures which would enable investors to make an intelligent appraisal of the risks they were taking in developing new mines.

5. It was agreed that it would be desirable to have a meeting of the Ministers directly concerned before the matter was discussed in Cabinet. This meeting has been arranged for Friday, July 22 at 12 noon. The meeting would be attended by the Prime Minister, Mr. Howe, Mr. Harris, and you. I understand that Mr. Bryce has informed your office of the details.

J. L[ÉGER]

457.

C.D.H./Vol. 10

Note du président de l'Énergie atomique du Canada Liée.
Memorandum by President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited

[Ottawa, July 1955]

URANIUM PURCHASING POLICY

1. Arrangements covering the supplying of uranium to the United States were first entered into in 1942 as a result of the Government's decision to participate in the development of the atomic bomb.<sup>178</sup> Initially, the contract was between the Manhattan District U.S. Engineers and Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, which at the time was a private company. The contractual arrangements were continued following the expropriation of the Eldorado Company by the Government. In 1946 the United States Atomic Energy Commission was established to take over the operations, including the contractual obligations, of the Manhattan District U.S. Engineers.
2. With the completion of deliveries on the last wartime contract in August, 1947, a new contract was entered into covering production from Eldorado's Port Radium property. At the same time Eldorado was requested to undertake exploration for new sources of uranium. These exploration activities resulted in the discovery of the Beaverlodge property in 1949.
3. Late in 1947, following the breakdown of discussions in the United Nations concerning the international control of atomic weapons, Eldorado was advised of the decision of the United States Atomic Energy Commission to undertake a major expansion of atomic weapon development and production. This expanded programme called for a very large increase in the requirements for uranium. It was the desire of the United States Atomic Energy Commission that these requirements should be met from U.S. and Canadian sources to the fullest extent possible. Early in 1948 discussions took place between Eldorado and the United States Atomic Energy Commission as to the best method of encouraging the investment of private funds in prospecting and development in both countries. As a result of these discussions, it was agreed that a purchasing programme would be established in Canada and in the United States.
4. On March 16th, 1948, Mr. Howe announced in the House of Commons that the Government would purchase, through Eldorado or other designated agencies, acceptable uranium-bearing ores and concentrates on the following basis:
  - (1) A minimum uranium content equivalent to 10 per cent by weight of uranium oxide ( $U_3O_8$ ) in the ores or concentrates will normally be required.
  - (2) Price will be based upon the uranium content of the ores or concentrates and will be at the minimum rate of $2.75 per pound of contained  $U_3O_8$  f.o.b. rail and will be guaranteed for a period of five years.
3. This price includes all radioactive elements in the ores or concentrates, but consideration will be given to the commercially recoverable value of non-radioactive constituents by adjustment of price or by the redelivery of the residues containing such constituents.

<sup>178</sup> Voir volume 9, les documents 399-416.

See Volume 9, Documents 399-416.

(4) Under special circumstances, consideration may be given to payment of a higher price or to acceptance of ores or concentrates of lower grade.

(5) All operations will be carried on subject to the provisions of the Atomic Energy Regulations of Canada.

It will be noted that the purchasing policy provided for purchases of uranium concentrate at a fixed price for a guaranteed period, and that it also made provision for purchases at higher prices under special circumstances.<sup>179</sup>

5. The United States Atomic Energy Commission also established a public price schedule for U.S. production, with guarantees similar to those in the Canadian schedule.

6. On January 5th, 1949, the United States Atomic Energy Commission undertook to purchase from Eldorado all production which was obtained under the public schedule. Subsequently, a quantitative limitation of 16,000,000 pounds was agreed to. The Commission also undertook to purchase any uranium which might be obtained under a special price arrangement but on the understanding that the Commission must approve the terms and conditions of each contract.

7. Both the price and the period of the guarantee have been revised from time to time. At the present time the guarantee provides for the purchase at $7.25 per pound of all uranium contained in acceptable concentrates which is offered for delivery up to March 31st, 1962. The United States Atomic Energy Commission has amended its undertaking to cover revisions both as regards price and the period of the guaranteed market.

8. The public buying schedules in both the United States and in Canada were predicated on the mining and milling experience then available. This indicated that uranium would be produced in the form of raw ore or a low-grade concentrate. Early in 1952 it was apparent in Canada that production from the new deposits would involve the installation of large chemical processing plants, with high capital and operating costs. Because of this, it was likewise apparent that production from these operations would not be economic under the public price schedule. Accordingly, an arrangement was entered into with the United States Atomic Energy Commission on December 10th, 1953, whereby the Commission agreed to purchase any uranium which Eldorado might obtain at prices to be calculated in accordance with the following formula, but not exceeding $12.00 per pound of contained uranium:

$5.00 per pound of uranium contained in a high-grade concentrate plus 70% of the cost of mining and milling, this cost to include the amortization of preproduction and capital expenditures on a five-year basis.

There was no limitation as to the quantity which might be purchased at the time the arrangement was entered into. However, it was agreed that each contract must have the approval of the United States Atomic Energy Commission. Consequently, in negotiating contracts under the special price formula it has been Eldorado's practice to obtain a Letter of Intent from the United States Atomic Energy Commission prior to the execution of a contract with the producer. In each case Eldorado's contract with the producer is covered by a contract between Eldorado and the United States Atomic Energy Commission. In each case the contracts call for deliveries in a five-year period commencing from the date of production, deliveries to be completed not later than March 31st, 1962.

<sup>179</sup> Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1948, volume 3, pp. 2352-2353.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1948, Volume 3, pp. 2284-2285.

9. As of this date, no uranium has been offered under the public price schedule. All contracts negotiated to date have been written in accordance with the special price formula, and it is anticipated that all future contracts will be negotiated on this basis.

10. The existing commitments are as follows:

Gunnar Mines Limited

8,100,000 pounds at $9.50 per pound for a total of $76,000,000

Pronto Uranium Mines Limited

5,500,000 pounds at $10.00 per pound for a total of $55,000,000

Algom Uranium Mines Limited

19,800,000 pounds at $10.45 per pound for a total of $206,000,000.

11. Eldorado has received proposals from two additional properties which, if accepted, would result in the following commitments:

Bicroft Mines Limited

32,500,000 pounds at $11.00 per pound for a total of $35,750,000

Consolidated Denison Mines Limited

187,000,000 pounds at $9.60 per pound for a total of $180,000,000.

The United States Atomic Energy Commission is prepared to purchase this production but as yet Letters of Intent have not been received.

12. As regards further production which may be offered if the present policy is continued, this is difficult to estimate accurately for the following reasons:

(a) The properties are not developed sufficiently to permit a firm estimate of grade and tonnage.

(b) Bearing in mind that it requires a period of from 18 months to 2 years to bring a property into production, any future contracts negotiated will not provide for a five-year write-off of preproduction and capital expenditures. This is likely to create problems in financing.

Taking these two factors into account, it is estimated that further production may be offered as follows:

35,650,000 pounds at an average price of $10.00 per pound for a total of $356,500,000.

13. The following shows a summary of existing commitments, proposals under consideration, and probable proposals, should Eldorado continue to accept production for delivery up to March 31st, 1962, under the special price formula:

Existing commitments	$ 337,000,000
Extensions to existing commitments covering deliveries which can be made prior to March 31st, 1962	42,000,000
Proposals under consideration	215,750,000
Probable proposals	$ 405,250,000
	$1,000,000,000

14. As indicated in paragraph 8, no limitation as to the quantity which would be purchased under the special price formula was established when the agreement covering this type of purchase was entered into with the United States Atomic Energy Commission on December 10th, 1953. However, during the discussion of the raw materials clause in the Agreement for Co-operation between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States it was agreed that a limitation of quantity would be established. By an exchange of letters between Eldorado and the United States Atomic Energy Commission, it was agreed that the United States Atomic Energy Commission would purchase up to 36,000,000 pounds. This amount will be in addition to the existing commitments as set out in paragraph 10 and in addition to the 16,000,000 pound commitment as set out in paragraph 4. The amount was established on the basis of Eldorado's assessment in May, 1955, of the additional production which might be offered, if the present purchasing policy were continued. The most recent assessment of additional production which may be offered indicates a figure of 64,000,000 pounds — or an increase of 28,000,000 pounds. This revised figure was given to the United States Atomic Energy Commission during meetings held in Washington in the week of July 11th. It is expected that the United States Atomic Energy Commission will extend its undertaking to include this additional estimated production.

15. Assuming that the United States Atomic Energy Commission is prepared to purchase from Eldorado the additional production set out in the previous paragraph, and assuming that the Government of Canada approves the continuation of Eldorado's purchasing policy, it will be noted that Eldorado will have contractual obligations to purchase approximately 100,000,000 pounds at a total approximate cost of $1,000,000,000. The amount underwritten will, of course, decrease as deliveries of concentrate are made to the United States Atomic Energy Commission approximately as follows:

January 1st, 1956	$1,000,000,000
January 1st, 1957	$965,000,000
January 1st, 1958	$840,000,000
January 1st, 1959	$635,000,000
January 1st, 1960	$430,000,000
January 1st, 1961	$230,000,000
January 1st, 1962	$40,000,000
March 31st, 1962	Nil

16. It will be appreciated that the current U.S. uranium buying programme is exclusively to meet U.S. military requirements and there is at present no indication of how long the programme will be extended after March 31, 1962, or in what form. The Director of the Raw Materials Division of the United States Atomic Energy Commission has submitted to the Commission a proposal that the guarantee period for the U.S. domestic production be extended to December 31, 1963 — a further period of 21 months and that thereafter the Commission should undertake to purchase up to December 31, 1966, uranium in high grade concentrates at a fixed price of $8.00 (Eight Dollars) per pound. These proposals are now under consideration by the United States Atomic Energy Commission. We are advised that the decision will depend on two factors as follows:

- (a) The projected requirements for military purposes beyond March 31, 1962.
- (b) The need to maintain a programme of exploration and development in the U.S., bearing in mind that the nature of existing U.S. deposits is such that a long range forecast of ore reserves is not possible.

While the Director of the Raw Materials Division of the United States Atomic Energy Commission has invited Eldorado's comment on his proposals, there is no assurance at this time that the United States Atomic Energy Commission will wish to include Canada in this arrangement, even though the arrangement may be adopted in the United States.

17. At this time it is impossible to make an accurate forecast of the probable demand for uranium for peaceful uses. The most optimistic forecast of the probable role of nuclear power in meeting future power demands in Canada indicates clearly that domestic uranium requirements will take up a very small part of the Canadian production. Consequently,

Canadian producers will have to look to export markets should the military demand cease altogether, or be cut back severely, after March 31, 1962. It is not possible to develop an estimate as to the magnitude of the export market. However, it does appear evident that this market would not be sufficient to take up the available production in the period up to 1970, unless stockpiling programmes are undertaken. We are advised that consideration is being given to stockpiling in the United States. In the event that there is over-production in the period between March 31, 1962 and 1970, it may be expected that price will be the governing factor in obtaining markets. On the basis of present information as to the cost of producing uranium in other countries it can be anticipated that those Canadian producers who have written-off pre-production and capital expenditures will be in a strong competitive position.

18. It is desirable that the Canadian uranium buying policy should be re-examined in the light of the facts set out in the foregoing paragraphs. There would appear to be two possible courses of action. These are described hereunder:

(a) The Government of Canada, through its agent, Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, could discontinue purchases under the special price formula. This would limit the Eldorado commitment to those covered by existing contracts, i.e. $337,000,000, plus the commitment to purchase any uranium that may be offered under the published price schedule up to March 31, 1962. If the Government of Canada discontinued its purchasing policy under the special price formula, it can be anticipated that the producer would be permitted to enter into sales contracts with foreign countries, subject to export control as provided in the Atomic Energy Regulations. However, it would be difficult to exercise export control in such a manner as to fulfil the obligations in the raw materials field which Canada has undertaken in the recently signed Agreement for Co-operation with the United States. These obligations provide for a continuation of the arrangements (including purchases under the special price formula) and contracts now in effect.

In considering the possible effect on Canadian relations with the United States of a discontinuation of the present purchasing policy, account must be taken of the other contractual relations which Canada has entered into with the United States Atomic Energy Commission, notably those covering the sale of plutonium and the purchase of heavy water and uranium metal. Account must also be taken of the possible effect on future arrangements which it is hoped to make under the terms of the Agreement for Co-operation, including the purchase of uranium enriched with U235, which is not produced in Canada.

In this connection it should be noted that the Agreement for Co-operation between the United States and Canada provides for a greater degree of co-operation in all fields affecting the civilian use of atomic energy, than that which is provided in Agreements with any other country.

(b) The Government of Canada, through its agent, Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, could continue purchases under the special price formula. This would involve probable commitments on Eldorado's part in the approximate amount of $1,000,000,000. In accordance with the present practice, each contract between Eldorado and a producer could be covered by a contract between Eldorado and the United States Atomic Energy Commission. The Government purchasing policy has already resulted in the creation of a large industry. Bearing in mind the uncertainty as to market conditions following March 31st, 1962, it is most desirable that the further development of this industry should be carried out in such a manner as to avoid serious dislocation in future years. If it is decided to continue the present policy, it is recommended strongly that an announcement be made — which announcement would establish the ceiling on the quantity of uranium to be purchased under the special price formula and the date beyond which special price contracts would not be negotiated. If the Canadian Government policy of purchasing under the special price formula is discontinued, it is assumed that the United States Atomic Energy Commission will be permitted to negotiate direct with the producers. It is most unlikely that the United States Atomic Energy Commission would announce any quantitative limitation for Canadian production. On the contrary, it could be expected that the Commission would encourage a continuation of the present high rate of exploration and development in the hope that this would result in the production of low-cost uranium.

At the present time supplies of uranium for the military programme in the United States and in the United Kingdom are allocated by the Combined Development Agency, a tripartite agency on which Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom are represented. It has been agreed, in principle, that the Combined Development Agency should also assume responsibility for allocating uranium for civilian requirements, although no system of allocation has been adopted. It is obviously in Canada's interest that some part of the uranium allocated for civilian use should be supplied from Canadian production. This can only be assured if Canada retains control over uranium produced in Canada.

[W.J. BENNETT]

458.

C.D.H./Vol. 10

*Le ministre du Commerce
au président de l'Énergie atomique du Canada Ltée.*

*Minister of Trade and Commerce
to President, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited*

SECRET

[Ottawa], July 22, 1955

Dear Mr. Bennett,

The Prime Minister and a Committee of the Privy Council discussed with you this morning the subject of future purchases of uranium for U.S. delivery under the special price formula.<sup>180</sup>

The decision was to accept your proposal [18] (b) as shown on pages 14 and 15 of your memorandum which was submitted to the Prime Minister.

It was however decided that an effort should be made to determine how much uranium the U.S. is willing to contract for under the special price formula. When this amount is determined, an announcement should be made of the amount, and contracts will be signed on the basis of first-come-first-served up to the stated amount.

It was decided that Canada should retain control over uranium produced in Canada until such time as the Government may decide to reverse this policy.

In the circumstances, it will be in order for you to complete contracts with Bicroft Mines Limited and with Consolidated Denison Mines Limited, following your usual practice in that regard.

Yours sincerely,
C.D. HOWE

<sup>180</sup> Aucun compte rendu de cette réunion n'a été retrouvé.
No record of this meeting was located.

459.

PCO/R-100-1-U

*Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary to Cabinet
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, July 28, 1955

Late this afternoon, I saw Mr. Bennett of Eldorado about the uranium business which we discussed in your office late last week with Mr. Howe, Mr. Harris and Mr. Pearson. He has now concluded further discussions with the Atomic Energy Commission and is proposing to give to Mr. Howe a draft press release next Tuesday, of which I am asking my secretary to enclose a copy with this note, when Mr. Bennett has re-drafted it tomorrow following our discussions this afternoon.

The Atomic Energy Commission has agreed to accept all the contracts that can be negotiated up until March next on the basis of the estimate which Eldorado has given them of what this is likely to amount to. Consequently they are not proposing to include any specified amount that will be sold. I think this is an improvement as the amounts do not mean anything to the public. I think the proposal that Bennett is making now is sensible in this regard although it will mean a difficult job for his organization as the deadline approaches, because everyone will want to try to get in on it. It is for this reason that they are emphasizing that there must be satisfactory evidence as to tonnage, grade and costs.

They are also proposing to indicate the nature of the special price formula, but not the details. The Atomic Energy Commission would only agree to a ceiling of $10 per pound if it were going to be announced but would go to $11 per pound if it is to be kept confidential. We decided that it was better to get the higher ceiling in the interests of Canadian export trade and revenue where it is appropriate.

We discussed whether we should give some indication of willingness to permit other exports for civilian use when the negotiation of contracts is discontinued, but we came to the conclusion that it was better to defer any announcement of this kind until it could be thoroughly considered next fall.

This whole announcement is not in the terms that I would have written it, but I did not have the time to make any drastic revision or re-writing with Bennett, and he was prepared to accept all the points of importance that I suggested.

I spoke to Mr. Harris late this afternoon following our meeting and he is prepared to acquiesce albeit a little reluctantly in our continuing the contingent commitment that is implied in these contracts, should the U.S. government default on theirs.

I am leaving word with Mr. Bennett that Mr. Howe can get Mr. Harris in Markdale if he would like to speak to him about it, but I think you may take it that Mr. Harris is prepared to see a statement made along these lines without further action on his part. He wondered just why it was necessary for our agency to be the intermediary in this way, but I explained that we officials felt that it was worthwhile for the Canadian agency to assist the Canadian producers in negotiation with what is really the only major buyer in the whole world, and avoid having our people confront this powerful monopolist unaided.

Mr. Howe may call you next Tuesday about issuing this statement. I told Bennett that there probably would not be a Cabinet meeting until the 15th or 16th of August, but that I doubted if it was necessary to await Cabinet action on the statement if you, Mr. Harris and Mr. Pearson agreed to it being issued. The statement is really just an explanation of and limitation on the kind of action that has been taken up to date. You will perhaps wish to have this point in mind, however, in discussing the matter with Mr. Howe should he call you on the telephone. I would think on the whole it is not desirable to delay longer in getting out a statement of this general nature.<sup>181</sup>

R.B. B[RYCE]

5<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 5

COMMISSION MIXTE INTERNATIONALE
INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

SECTION A

POLLUTION TRANSFRONTALIÈRE
CROSS-BORDER POLLUTION

460.

DEA/8010-40

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], March 23, 1955

POLLUTION OF BOUNDARY WATERS

You will recall that because certain municipalities in Ontario have taken no corrective measures to eliminate municipal sources of pollution in boundary waters you wrote to Premier Frost on November 10, 1954 [sic],<sup>182</sup> to ask for information as to what steps are being taken by the Province for the abatement of this pollution. Attached is a copy of Premier Frost's reply dated December 23, 1954<sup>183</sup> to which you sent an interim acknowledgement on January 3, 1955.†

In view of the stand taken by Premier Frost in this matter it would appear that another letter to him is necessary to ascertain more precisely what steps the Province, in conjunction with the municipalities, is taking for the abatement of the pollution of boundary waters from municipal sources. Discussions between the Departments concerned (Finance, National Health and Welfare, Northern Affairs and National Resources and External Affairs) have now resulted in agreement on the substance of the attached letter to Premier Frost which is submitted for your signature if you approve.

This second letter to Premier Frost retains much of the conciliatory tone of the first approach because it is hoped that the Province of Ontario may yet be persuaded to take action to compel the municipalities to build the necessary sewage treatment plants. Should <sup>181</sup> Pour un compte rendu sur la déclaration de Howe, voir Montreal Gazette, August 4, 1955. Voir aussi Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1956, volume 2, pp. 1793-1794.

For a report on Howe's statement, see Montreal Gazette, August 4, 1955. See also Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1956, Volume 2, pp. 1739-1740.

<sup>182</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 610.

<sup>183</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 611.

Premier Frost again give an inconclusive reply, the Canadian Government will then be faced with a serious and complicated problem.

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Le premier ministre au premier ministre de l'Ontario

Prime Minister to Premier of Ontario

[Ottawa], March 24, 1955

My dear Premier,

I refer to my letter of January 3, 1955 in which I mentioned that your letter of December 23, 1954 on the subject of the pollution of boundary waters would be discussed with my colleagues and appropriate officials.

I wish to thank you for the information you have provided concerning progress made in your Province in the treatment of municipal sewage and wastes and in the treatment of industrial wastes. The latter seems to be well in hand. However, there is urgent need to find a solution to the problem of the treatment of municipal sewage and wastes.

The Canadian Government is at this time particularly concerned with the pollution of boundary waters and it is gratifying to note, therefore, that your Government recognizes both the gravity of the pollution problem in boundary waters and the necessity of finding a complete solution to this question. I am pleased to see that your Government has advised the municipalities concerned that it is imperative for remedial measures to be adopted. The importance of completing plans and undertaking construction of the necessary works with the minimum of delay cannot be too strongly stressed because the continued discharge of raw sewage into boundary waters may constitute, at any given moment, a violation by Canada of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909. Such a violation would raise questions of considerable importance which would have to be resolved between the Federal and Ontario Governments and the municipalities or persons concerned.

After careful consideration the Canadian Government has come to the conclusion that the abatement of pollution in boundary waters cannot usefully be considered within the context of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. It is true, of course, that expenditure on the abatement of pollution — like expenditure on any other municipal service — must impinge in some fashion upon the complex of municipal or provincial-municipal finance. But the pollution with which we are here concerned is confined to a small number of places and could be corrected by the expenditure of sums which are relatively small in provincial terms although they may be significant in the case of individual municipalities. It should be added, too, that the Canadian Government does not consider that in equity it can undertake to subsidize the construction of essential sewage disposal plants in municipalities situated on boundary waters when, for a number of reasons, similar treatment could not be extended to communities elsewhere in the country.

There is an urgent necessity to find a solution to boundary waters pollution, and the prime responsibility for finding the solution rests, we believe, with the Province of Ontario and the municipalities. I would be most grateful to know what specific steps your Government is taking, in conjunction with the municipalities bordering the connecting channels of the Great Lakes, for the abatement of the pollution of boundary waters through municipal sewage and waste.

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

461.

DEA/8010-40

*Le premier ministre de l'Ontario
au premier ministre*

*Premier of Ontario
to Prime Minister*

[Toronto], May 24, 1955

Dear Mr. St. Laurent,

With reference to your letter of March 24, 1955 dealing with the pollution of boundary waters, we have been giving this complex problem a great deal of consideration.

The municipalities have been advised that remedial measures must be taken to minimize pollution. Many of them have had detailed engineering plans prepared, and others have them in the course of preparation. The problem, of course, extends far beyond those municipalities located on the international boundary waters. It includes many of the communities inland. For instance, representatives of the Government have recently had discussions with the communities in the Grand River Watershed, and it is expected that plans will be brought into operation providing for more complete sewage treatment. Our officials are constantly pointing out to the municipalities concerned the need for full treatment sanitation. As a result of these efforts, many of these municipalities are facing up more realistically to requirements.

While the larger urban municipalities located on the boundary waters present the most obvious points for the adoption of remedial measures, it must be recognized that the pollution which ultimately finds its way into the Great Lakes has its origin in widely scattered sources, and it would not be satisfactory, nor would it be equitable to the municipalities, for the Province to provide remedial measures in some communities and not for communities elsewhere in the Province where the need may also be urgent. For this reason, and also because one of the biggest causes of pollution is industrial waste, we regret that you have concluded that the abatement of pollution cannot be considered within the purview of Federal-Provincial fiscal arrangements. We, however, recognize the seriousness of the problem, and we will do what is feasible to bring about an abatement of this problem.

Yours sincerely,

LESLIE M. FROST

462.

DEA/8010-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], October 20, 1955

POLLUTION OF BOUNDARY WATERS

The International Joint Commission held its semi-annual meeting in Ottawa on October 4-7, 1955. One of the items on the agenda was the question of the pollution of boundary waters. During the meeting devoted to this question the representatives of the State of Michigan made representations to the Commission stressing the failure of the Municipality of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, to take any action whatsoever to abate the pollution of boundary waters. The representatives of the State of Michigan concluded their remarks by requesting the Canadian authorities to give some sort of assurance that something would be done in Canada to abate the pollution of boundary waters by municipalities.

Mr. Wershof, Counsel for Canada at these meetings, undertook to bring this matter to the attention of the Canadian authorities. In consequence, a letter has been sent to the Chairman of the Interdepartmental Committee on Water Use Policy, requesting that consideration be given to this serious question.

By accepting the recommendation of the International Joint Commission of October 11, 1950 on the pollution of boundary waters, the Canadian Government by implication undertook to see that some steps were taken to improve the situation.<sup>184</sup> Although the question has been referred to the Province of Ontario and the municipalities concerned, neither the provincial nor municipal authorities have so far been willing to make the necessary outlay for treating or processing sewage.<sup>185</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

463.

DEA/11839-A-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité consultatif sur la politique relative à l'utilisation de l'eau

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Advisory Committee on Water Uses Policy

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 8, 1955

WATER POLLUTION IN CANADA

3. In introducing the first item on the agenda, the Chairman referred to documents of which members had received copies: the letter of October 20† to him from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs requesting that the Committee consider the problem of the pollution of boundary waters, and the memorandum of October 24† prepared by the Committee Secretariat on water pollution in Canada. The responsibility of the federal government respecting water pollution was put in question from time to time; it had been raised in the past year, for example, in connection with the pollution of the interprovincial North Saskatchewan River.

<sup>184</sup> Voir/See Volume 17, Document 855.

<sup>185</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Mr Wershof might see that a memorandum is prepared for Cabinet. L. St. L[aurant]

4. Dr. Cameron said that, in its general responsibility concerning water pollution, the Department of National Health and Welfare had had a recent experience in dealing with the pollution of the North Saskatchewan River. The pollution originating in Alberta from the raw untreated sewage of the city of Edmonton and from the industrial wastes of oil refineries and a large new petrochemicals plant endangered health not only in Alberta but in the other prairie provinces. The assistance of National Health and Welfare and of the western office of the National Research Council had been enlisted and consequent investigation and research had led to action which had substantially reduced the pollution created by industrial wastes. A meeting at which representatives from the governments of the three prairie provinces, with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) attending, considered the problem of the pollution along this river, but no tangible results followed. The North Saskatchewan exemplified the need for a firm and fair method of dealing with the dangers presented by river pollution. In subsequent discussion, it did not appear that there exists an effective remedy at law respecting the pollution of an interprovincial river.

5. On the pollution of boundary waters, General McNaughton recounted the procedure whereby the International Joint Commission had formulated its "objectives for Boundary Waters Quality Control", which had been approved by the governments of Canada and the United States as the criteria to be applied under Article IV of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, by which the two governments had agreed that boundary waters "shall not be polluted on either side to the injury of health and property on the other". To the Canadian Section of the I.J.C. the continuing pollution on the Canadian side of certain boundary waters had become the source of keen and growing embarrassment. The U.S. Section of the I.J.C. and certain states (notably Michigan and New York) which had endorsed the I.J.C. objectives in full, regarded these objectives as the subject of "international agreement" between the two countries. This view the Canadian Section naturally resisted but without some discomfiture. General McNaughton had twice reported to the Prime Minister. The problem had now become an acute international issue. Both New York and Michigan were tackling the pollution problem as best they could, were exerting pressure on their municipalities, and were endeavouring (particularly Michigan) to devise entrance into Canadian courts. At present the dispute centred upon the sewage from five Canadian municipalities. The need for arranging means for remedial measures and instituting them was urgent. Having no policing powers, the I.J.C. was limited to persuasion, which with the cooperation of industry had proven so effective as almost to eliminate the industrial pollution of boundary waters.

6. Mr. Wershof said that External Affairs, whose interest in the problem of water pollution was confined to its international aspects, viewed Canada's present position before the I.J.C. as most embarrassing. Despite approval of the I.J.C.'s recommendations by the federal and Ontario governments, no federal action, apart from sending letters to the Premier of Ontario, had been taken. The need for action in boundary waters was acute, either alone or as part of a broad national policy. In the context of the boundary waters problem considered by itself there were four courses open to the federal government. First, it could argue that Canada's is a federal system, that persuasion was accordingly the only course open to it, and that it had taken that course. Second, it could adopt the view that the $24 millions required to end the pollution of boundary waters by municipal sewage might be advanced to the municipalities involved for the sake of Canada-U.S. relations. Or third, as a step intermediate between the first two, it could propose to the Ontario Government that the three levels of government — federal, provincial and municipal — each bear one-third of the cost of solving this international problem. Finally, there existed the possibility, if only remote, that the federal government could compel the municipalities concerned to install sewage disposal plants.

7. The Committee agreed that a comprehensive opinion should be sought from the Department of Justice on the powers of the federal government to compel action on water pollution by provinces and municipalities. To this end, the Committee Secretariat is to obtain from the Department of National Health and Welfare the opinions, limited in scope, which that department had already secured from Justice on this subject, and circulate them to members for their recommendations as to additional questions. Once a full list has been prepared, the Committee, or its Chairman, will submit these questions to the Department of Justice. On the subject of federal powers, it was political grounds, to seek to coerce other levels of government.

8. In order primarily that the Committee might ascertain the significance for the boundary waters problem of the long-range program which the Government of Ontario is understood to have instituted for the abatement of the municipal sewage problem in that province, the Department of National Health and Welfare will prepare for the Committee a memorandum in which the position of border municipalities under that program will be set out separately.

9. The Committee then discussed the boundary waters problem in the context of the broader problem presented by the pollution of Canadian waters generally. The dimensions of this broader problem were suggested by the estimate that an expenditure of $300-400 millions would be required to eliminate the sewage pollution which needed treatment now. It was noted that responsibility for sewage disposal rested with the provinces and was a primary charge of municipalities. It is important to examine thoroughly the question whether federal assistance, if granted, should be on a narrow or broad basis. Limited to international rivers, such assistance might be said to be discriminatory and directed to abating the menace to the health of non-Canadians. The suggestion was also made that federal aid to the "rich" province of Ontario, in which the offending boundary municipalities lie, would be open to serious question unless such aid were only part of a broad program of federal assistance. Were both international and interprovincial rivers the object of federal aid, the political weakness would be that three provinces — Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island — would gain nothing from such a program. Applied to boundary waters, these considerations suggested that the justification for any federal participation would have to derive from the obligation resting upon the federal government from its international commitments.

10. As to the form which federal aid might take, whether limited to boundary waters or granted more generally, several views were expressed, particularly as to the effectiveness of conditional grants. In their favour the progress made under the hospital building program was cited, and it was also said that such grants had been shown to be next in effectiveness to compulsion. On the other hand, it was said that the trend was away from conditional grants, that the Trans-Canada Highway exemplified how relatively unsuccessful they could be, and that in general the heavy demands on provincial funds limited their potential effectiveness. The question was raised whether the problem of water pollution in Canada might be dealt with under an expanded Water Conservation Act or under other federal legislation, with the objective of conserving a natural resources, clean water. It was also suggested that were federal participation to be recommended, a step-by-step approach should be adopted.

11. Mr. Wershof said that the Prime Minister had asked the Department of External Affairs to prepare for Cabinet a memorandum on boundary waters pollution. This would be an interim report which would include due reference to the Committee's study of this problem.

12. The Committee agreed that the Department of External Affairs should prepare this report. The Chairman requested, however, that it be circulated to the bodies most interested in boundary waters pollution: National Health and Welfare, Northern Affairs and National Resources, Finance, Agriculture, the Cabinet Secretariat, the I.J.C. The Chairman noted the importance of having Cabinet guidance on the subject of federal responsibility for international waters and for water pollution in general. Dr. Cameron undertook to have a companion memorandum prepared in National Health and Welfare on the problem of water pollution in Canada. This would classify the waters concerned according to their being boundary, interprovincial, or other waters, and would show the costs of remedial measures. This memorandum would be sent to Mr. Côté for circulation.

...

SECTION B

LE BASSIN DE LA RIVIÈRE ST. CROIX ST. CROIX RIVER BASIN

464.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 116-55

[Ottawa], May 25, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO THE INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION ON THE ST. CROIX RIVER BASIN

On May 6, 1954 the Premier of New Brunswick wrote to the Secretary of State for External Affairs asking for advice and assistance in the preparation and submission of a Reference to the International Joint Commission on the water resources of the St. Croix River basin. In reply the Premier was informed that the Department of External Affairs, in conjunction with other interested Departments, would undertake a study of the proposed Reference and that federal officials would be glad to consult with New Brunswick officials in drafting a Reference for consideration of the Canadian Government.

2. The Premier of New Brunswick was also informed that it is customary to discuss proposed References to the International Joint Commission with the United States Government, after their general terms have been agreed upon by the various Canadian interests involved, with a view to having the two Governments submit References jointly to the Commission. With this object in mind, officials of the Departments concerned and of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission met with representatives of the Province of New Brunswick in Ottawa on September 17, 1954 and agreed on the general terms of the text of a draft Reference on the St. Croix River basin.

3. Informal discussions were then initiated with officials of the State Department and after considerable delay the various interested agencies in the United States have now accepted the draft Reference proposed by Canada. If this draft Reference meets with the approval of the Canadian Government, the Department of External Affairs will request the Government of the United States to join in the proposed Reference to the International Joint Commission.

Recommendation

4. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the concurrence of the Ministers of Finance, Public Works, Fisheries, Trade and Commerce, and Northern Affairs and National Resources, recommends that a joint Reference to the International Joint Commission along the lines of the draft attached as Appendix A be approved.<sup>186</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Appendice A

Appendix A

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO THE I.J.C. — ST. CROIX RIVER BASIN

In order to determine whether greater use than is now being made of the waters of the St. Croix River Basin would be feasible and advantageous, the Governments of the United States of America and Canada have agreed to refer the matter to the International Joint Commission for investigation and report pursuant to Article IX of the Treaty concerning Boundary Waters between the United States and Canada, signed January 11, 1909.

2. Having regard to the legal, engineering and economic aspects of the matter, it is desired that the Commission shall, after making the necessary preliminary investigations, indicate whether, in its judgment, further development of the water resources of the St. Croix River Basin would be practicable and in the public interest from the point of view of the two Governments and which projects would seem to warrant further detailed study.

3. In making its report the Commission should indicate:

(a) what projects or regimens should be further considered to improve the use, conservation and regulation of the waters of the Basin, taking into account the previous actions of the Commission as well as the present and future interests of both countries in the Basin;

(b) how the interests on either side of the Boundary would be benefited or adversely affected by any of the projects or regimens so indicated;

(c) the order of magnitude of costs of the indicated projects or regimens, including indemnification for damage to public and private property;

(d) how the costs mentioned in (c) should be apportioned.

4. In the conduct of its investigations and otherwise in the performance of its duties under this Reference, the Commission may utilize the services of engineers and other spe-

<sup>186</sup> Approuvée par le Cabinet le 26 mai 1955 et soumise à la Commission mixte internationale par les gouvernements du Canada et des États-Unis le 10 juin 1955.

Approved by Cabinet on May 26, 1955 and submitted by the governments of Canada and the United States to the International Joint Commission on June 10, 1955.

cially qualified personnel of the technical agencies of Canada and the United States and will, so far as possible, make use of information and technical data heretofore acquired or which may become available during the course of the investigation.

SECTION C

LES NIVEAUX D'EAU DU LAC ONTARIO
LAKE ONTARIO LEVELS

465.

DEA/1760-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], March 10, 1955

LEVELS OF LAKE ONTARIO

The troublesome problem of the levels of Lake Ontario is almost certain to come to the forefront of the news during the next few weeks. Because of the publicity put forward by the (U.S. and Canadian) Lake Ontario Beach Protective Associations and the Globe and Mail, the Governments of the United States and Canada will be the object of pressure and criticism as regards Lake Ontario levels.

2. The Great Lakes are, as you know, subject to cyclical fluctuations of water level. We know that, since 1860, the level of Lake Ontario has ranged from about 242.7 feet above mean sea level to about 249.2 feet. The highest levels reached were in 1870 and 1952. Though the range of elevations over the cyclical period of 95 years has been about 6 feet (excluding the effect of wind or barometric pressures which sometimes add two or more feet for brief periods), the annual fluctuation of range has never exceeded 4 feet though it has often varied between 2 and 3 feet.

3. The range of levels of the Great Lakes depends on flows into and out of the Basin. An inflow at the upper end may take several years before its full effect is felt at the lower end. Apart from some minimal control of inflow at Sault Ste. Marie (under I.J.C. supervision) the only way man can affect the levels of Lake Ontario is by increasing the potential out-flow through the St. Lawrence River, i.e. at the International Rapids Section.

4. The proposed channel excavations in this Section will eliminate some underwater obstacles (such as parts of rock ledges which create rapids) which, naturally, impede the free flow of water. Coupled with the hydroelectric and control dams, it will become theoretically possible to lower the level of Lake Ontario by passing through these dams twice the otherwise natural output of the St. Lawrence at that point. While the output can be increased there, it should not take place, for example, during the spring freshets of the Ottawa River. Such a conjuncture of events would inevitably flood Montreal.

5. Under the Lake Ontario Reference of 1952, the I.J.C. is trying to see what, if anything, can be done to ameliorate the range of levels on Lake Ontario so as to benefit lakeshore owners.<sup>187</sup> With the construction of the St. Lawrence Project, the power and seaway entities must know soon to what low level the I.J.C. Board of Control will allow the River level to drop in the International Rapids Section. This level is dependent not only on the Lake Ontario range of levels to be selected by the I.J.C. but also on the Method of Regulation of the waters in the International Rapids Section. Such a Method of Regulation must be so cast as not to flood downstream communities, maintain a reasonable level and velocity of water for navigation purposes, assure a satisfactory regimen for the production of hydro power, be sufficiently high to allow domestic water pumpage and sewage and be sufficiently low to protect the landowners on the foreshore of Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River.

<sup>187</sup> Voir/See Volume 18, Documents 849-853.

6. The wisdom of Solomon will be required to satisfy all interests. The I.J.C. will probably suggest a range of levels for Lake Ontario on March 15, 1955. Thereafter, it will be up to the United States and Canadian Governments to decide what that range shall be.

7. The experts of the I.J.C. are likely to suggest that the I.J.C. accept for Lake Ontario one of the three following ranges:

(a) 243 to 247 feet

(b) 244 to 248 feet

(c) 244 to 248.9 feet.

8. Technically, I understand that, because of the uncertainty of inflow into the Basin, it will be impossible to guarantee that a given range would not be exceeded. In the present state of development of hydrology applied to the Great Lakes Basin, it is said to be impossible to devise a Method of Regulation which will maintain a range within narrower limits than 4 feet. Accordingly, a range could theoretically be selected from between 242 feet and four feet or so above this scale for any number of combinations such as 242-246, 243-247, 244-248. Any Method of Regulation would be designed so that the maximum and minimum would NOT be reached more often per cyclical period than has hitherto been the experience in a "state of nature".

9. The Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 fixes the following order of precedence in the use of boundary waters:

(a) domestic and sanitary purposes;

(b) navigation;

(c) power and irrigation.

These provisions are not to disturb the existing uses of boundary waters. For domestic, sanitary, navigation and hydro purposes, a low limit of 242 (with its corresponding high of 246) is out of the question, though landowners would welcome a corresponding high of 246. A low limit of 243 is said to be too low for navigation purposes and not favoured by power interests though it might be acceptable from the landowners' viewpoint because of the reduced maximum of 247. From the viewpoint of navigation and power, a lower limit of 244 is probably close to ideal. But it does mean a maximum of at least 248 feet. The flood level for Lake Ontario is said to be 248.1 and was exceeded 18 times in the past 95 years. On the other hand, water went below the minimum of 244 feet only 8 times in that period — of which only 4 were during the navigation period.

10. The landowners have vociferously requested that Lake Ontario be kept within a range of 244 to 246 or 247 feet. They will be sorely disappointed if the I.J.C. recommends a range (as I believe it will) between 244 and 248 or possibly 248.3 feet (the maximum NOT to be exceeded more often than in a "state of nature"). If the I.J.C. makes such a recommendation, the Government will probably be bound to accept it.

11. If the Governments were to insist on a minimum of 243 feet, the cost of additional dredging in the International Rapids Section would be at least $15 million, not to speak of the cost of other works and the loss in hydro potential. (On reading the Department of Transport's brief to the I.J.C., I doubt that Mr. Marler would agree to anything but 244 feet. For that matter, Mr. Howe is likely to take the same view.)

12. In these circumstances, the Governments — directly and with the assistance of the technical experts and the I.J.C. — will have to put the case to the landowners. This will probably be attempted, in part, at public hearings to be held in Rochester, N.Y. and Hamilton probably towards March 31. Government representatives will have to say that the maximum levels will not be reached more often than in a state of nature; that there will be some improvement as the top levels above 248 feet and the bottom levels below 244 feet will be eliminated and that the Commission will keep a vigilant eye on future developments.

13. There is very likelihood that questions will be asked in Parliament either relating the problem to the I.J.C. or to the domestic situation. In the latter case, the responsibility for a reply may be Mr. Marler's or Mr. Lesage's rather than yours.<sup>188</sup>

R.A. M[ACKAY]
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

466.

DEA/1760-A-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], April 21, 1955

LAKE ONTARIO LEVELS

A small but important crisis is developing in the International Joint Commission on the subject of the levels of Lake Ontario. If it is solved in the manner proposed by the United States section of the I.J.C., the cost of the St. Lawrence Project may be enhanced by about $50 million and its completion may be delayed materially.

2. You will recall that the Commission had tentatively agreed on March 16, 1955 that the range of levels of Lake Ontario should be between 244 and 248 feet above mean sea level and had so informed the two governments. The Commission held public hearings in Rochester and Toronto on April 12 and 14 and heard many arguments from lakeshore owners directed towards reducing the maximum level to 246 or to 247 feet. There were submitted also a number of briefs advocating ranges of levels between 244 and 248.5 feet.

3. On April 20, 1955, General McNaughton received a telegram† from the Chairman of the U.S. section of the International Joint Commission, Governor Jordan, saying that after a review of all the evidence, the United States section had concluded tentatively that a new method of regulation should be based on levels between 243 and 247 feet. Governor Jordan suggested a meeting in Toronto to discuss this matter and an apportionment of costs.

<sup>188</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

This is going to be a difficult, controversial and explosive matter L.B. P[earson]

4. General McNaughton is preparing to reply that, reviewing all evidence at the public hearings and otherwise, nothing has changed his opinion that the elevation of Lake Ontario should be held between 244 and 248 feet, except possibly that the intensity of some maximum peak levels might be reduced. The Head of the American Division urged General McNaughton not to say that Canada would consider maintaining levels at 243-247 feet only if no costs were attributable to Canada (because of Canada's monetary contributions under the St. Lawrence Order.) Rather, he urged General McNaughton to accept to discuss these matters, say, on May 3 and to suggest that the Americans provide the necessary data (based on the last 93 years' experience) to establish what would be the engineering and economic implications of maintaining Lake Ontario at a range of 243-247 feet. General McNaughton is disposed to adopt this attitude.

5. At first sight it appears that the added costs of such a lower range of lake levels for works in the International Rapids Section would be of the order of at least $47 million. There is, however, some doubt that it would be possible to achieve this lowered level without even greater costs due to the natural controlling barrier at Lachine Rapids and the necessity of making much greater channel enlargements at and below Montreal. As you appreciate, an increase in the discharge of the large Lake Ontario basin cannot be carried through the Rapids and the small and shallow "saucer" of Lakes St. Louis and St. Francis without enlarged channel outlets which could prevent the flooding of Montreal or without carrying the level of Lake St. Louis through to Montreal Harbour between high dykes as was originally planned in 1942 under the combined power and navigation proposals.

6. General McNaughton is likely to accept an I.J.C. discussion on this matter on May 3 or 4. Accordingly, the views of your colleagues should be ascertained soon in order that the Government's position may be put authoritatively before the I.J.C. by Counsel for Canada at the time of this meeting.

7. I therefore submit for your signature a letter† to your three remaining colleagues on the St. Lawrence Cabinet sub-Committee (Mr. Howe being absent) and a letter† to Mr. Chevrier, asking for their views at their early convenience.

8. Because of the lack of time and of the vital interests involved both in Quebec and Ontario, it seems important that the views of these provinces should be ascertained. I have accordingly prepared for your signature, if you agree, the attached letters† to the Premiers of these provinces. It might be useful for you and Mr. Marler to discuss this matter informally with Premiers Duplessis and Frost toward the end of the Federal-Provincial preliminary meetings on April 28 in Ottawa.

9. I am not certain whether the United States Section's proposal is made with a tactical end in mind such as to have available a rejection of the proposal by Canada to oppose to a Congressional request for levels not higher than 247 feet. It is quite possible, nevertheless, that such a proposal is to be recommended as an alternative course for the consideration of governments. It is improbable that the Administration is aware yet of this latest proposal. I am having enquiries made immediately in the State Department. If the United States Section's request has the Administration's backing, we should learn its reasons which must be compelling to accept at least half of an added $47 million burden and the delay involved in completing the Project. If the Administration's views are not formulated, our enquiries may cause them to be prepared in ten days' time. My belief is that the onus of rejecting a level of 243-247 feet should not be placed solely on Canada. Though Quebec has a preponderant interest in ensuring that lower Montreal is not flooded out, the interests of Ontario

Hydro and of the Canadian Seaway Authority are surely matched by those of New York State Power and of the United States Seaway Corporation.

J. L[ÉGER]

467.

DEA/1760-A-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-732

Ottawa, April 21, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

LAKE ONTARIO LEVELS

On April 20, the Chairman of the U.S. Section of the I.J.C., Governor Jordan, informed General McNaughton that his section had now tentatively concluded that on completion of the St. Lawrence Project the levels of Lake Ontario should be kept at between 243 and 247 feet. Governor Jordan requested an early meeting of the Commission in Toronto to consider this matter and a possible apportionment of costs. General McNaughton proposes to agree to a meeting which would be held during the first days of May.

2. We are naturally considering actively what attitude Canada — federally and provincially — should take in this matter. Though Quebec has a preponderant interest in ensuring that such a new proposal will not result in a flooding of lower Montreal and that its hydro potential is not adversely affected in a serious way, the interests of Ontario Hydro and of the Canadian Seaway Authority are matched by those of the Power Authority of the State of New York and the U.S. Seaway Corporation. If the levels are maintained at 243-247 feet, rough estimates of the increased capitalized cost of the St. Lawrence Project in the International Rapids Section due to increased channel excavations and for harbour facilities as well as for power losses has been put at $47 million. A lowering of levels to 243 feet would mean redesigning channel excavations and — in all likelihood — a material delay in the completion of the St. Lawrence Project.

3. We are undecided as to the backing which the U.S. Section has for making such a proposal and the purpose for which it is made. If the Administration supports the proposal, it must have serious reasons for doing so because it would presumably cost the U.S.A. at least half of the increased cost of $50 million and delay the completion of the Project. It might also reflect, in a measure, the weight of the public and congressional pressure. On the other hand, the Administration (in its principal ramifications) may not know of this new proposal by Governor Jordan and his colleagues. Because of the growing pressure generated by Lakeshore owners on Congress and because of earth-tilt which — in 100 years — will effectively remove one foot from the channel depth at Galops Rapids and concurrently spread more of Lake Ontario inland on the Southern shore, Governor Jordan and his colleagues may consider that it is better to deepen the channels now and to hold the levels between 243 and 247 feet. At first glance, it is not clear why today's generation should pay at once the costs which should normally be borne by succeeding generations.

4. Bearing in mind, however, that no new facts were revealed by the public hearings at Rochester and Toronto on April 12 and 14 to change the basic data on which the Commission tentatively agreed to levels of 244-248 feet, it is hard to understand this latest proposal. The more so that it was appreciated in January by the entire Commission that a decision had to be taken by May 1, that once a tentative decision was taken by mid-March, plans could be worded on one range of levels but thereafter the point of no return would have been practically passed. In mid-March the range of 244-248 was tentatively selected. An unduly suspicious mind might imagine that by putting this new proposal to the Canadian Section, the reaction would be both immediate and negative. Hence, a meeting in Toronto (on the Ontario Hydro home ground) would neatly direct the public opprobrium of landowners against hydro interests and would afford the U.S. Section a strong answer to Congressional pressures for a 247 maximum: Canada would not have it and Congress cannot compel the I.J.C. to achieve such a maximum by legislation!

5. Casting aside such unworthy suspicions, it would be extremely desirable to know soon and authoritatively what are the views of the United States Administration on the following points:

- (a) Is it aware of this new proposal of the U.S. Section of the I.J.C.?
- (b) Is it prepared to accept the delay consequent upon re-designing channel enlargements for the new depths?
- (c) What are its views on the apportionments of the added cost of about $50 millions? (Incidentally, we believe a good case can be made for Canada being relieved of any such added costs.)
- (d) Is the U.S. Seaway Corporation agreeable to levels being fixed now at 243 to 247 feet in view of the contracts already let?
- (e) To what extent has congressional pressure built up regarding the levels of Lake Ontario?
- (f) What attitude may we anticipate the U.S. Administration will take at the proposed I.J.C. meeting? (You can already guess what the Canadian attitude will be: it might be useful to stress to the State Department the parallelism between the Ontario Hydro and New York Hydro interests as well as between the federal seaway interests.)

6. Please ascertain discreetly what attitude the Power Authority of the State of New York will take. We consider tentatively that it may be useful to have the revue of the meeting at Buffalo rather than at Toronto.

7. I realize it will not be possible for you to get answers to all these questions at once. There remains, however, only a working week or so before the projected meeting. Hence the desirability, if the Administration's views have been formulated, of learning of them soon; if the Administration is relatively unaware of these proposals by the U.S. Section of the I.J.C., it may be useful to "build a fire" under the State Department, the Seaway Corporation and New York Hydro. Ends.

468.

DEA/1760-A-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-667

Washington, April 27, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL IMMEDIATE

Reference: Your EX-732 of April 21.

LAKE ONTARIO LEVELS

We called at the State Department late on Friday, April 22, to put to them the question contained in paragraph 5 of your telegram under reference. In the absence of Outerbridge Horsey, who is on leave, we spoke to Robert Minor and George Vest.

2. We began by saying that we had been informed by the authorities in Ottawa that Governor Jordan, Chairman of the United States Section of the International Joint Commission, had requested an early meeting of the Commission to re-consider the question of the levels of Lake Ontario. We recalled that at the IJC meeting in Montreal in mid-March, it had been tentatively agreed by both sections of the Commission that the waters of Lake Ontario should be controlled at levels between 244 ft. and 248 ft. The Canadian authorities, we said, were concerned that the United States section should now wish to diverge from that tentative decision. We pointed out that in examining Governor Jordan's proposal, the Canadian authorities would have to take into account the loss of power that would be involved, the possibility of flooding in lower Montreal and the potential hydro developments below the International Section of the St. Lawrence River. We said also that in the view of the Canadian authorities, the proposal to control the levels of Lake Ontario at between 243 ft. and 247 ft. would mean that the deeper channel excavations would have to be re-designed and that the costs of the St. Lawrence projects would be increased substantially, possibly by some $50 million, over and above what they would have been if the levels had been controlled at between 244 ft. and 248 ft. and what might be even more important, we said, the Canadian authorities were concerned that Governor Jordan's proposal could mean substantial delay in the completion of the St. Lawrence Projects. We said that the United States authorities would be aware of the parallel interests that Hepco and Pansy and the Canadian Seaway authority and the United States Seaway Development Corporation would have in the final outcome of the water level question.

3. We went on to state that we had been instructed to seek information on a number of specific questions. We realized that it might be difficult for the State Department to give us definite answers immediately, but we would hope that firm replies could be obtained before the proposed meeting of the IJC.

4. With reference to your question (a), we are fairly sure that the State Department did not know about Governor Jordan's proposal when we first requested an interview on this subject. It was clear, however, that between the time of our request and the time of the interview, the State Department had been fairly well briefed.

5. We then put the questions designated (b) to (f) inclusive in paragraph 5 of your telegram under reference. We were told in reply that no official answers could be given immediately but it was possible to indicate, unofficially, the views of the State Department officials on at least some of the questions we had asked. Vest and Minor then gave us most of the information contained in the rest of this telegram. Since the interview we have spoken to Vest again, and on some of our questions he has been able to supplement the information we received on Friday; this later information has been incorporated in this telegram. We have not yet received any "official" answers, however.

6. In reply to question (b) on whether the United States Administration was prepared to accept the delay consequent upon re-designing of the channel enlargements, we were told that in the State Department's view the delay would not necessarily follow and that consequently no thought had been given to the possibility of delay. Stress was placed on the fact that the Administration was aware of, and sympathetic to, the Canadian Government's wish that construction of the power project should not be delayed. Governor Jordan's proposal was a bona fide suggestion that was made in good faith after further consideration and inter-agency discussions on this question. From what the State Department knew of the proposal, they did not think that it would result in any long drawn-out discussions. The State Department were not convinced that Governor Jordan's proposal would result in any more delay than was already inherent in the situation following the meeting in Montreal. They emphasized that the decision in Montreal was a tentative one and that to their knowledge no plans for submission to the two governments were being formulated on the basis of that tentative decision. Even if it had been intended that plans would be based on the Montreal decision, it seemed unlikely to the State Department that they would have been completed before May 1. Therefore, they were not convinced that Governor Jordan's proposal for another meeting would cause delay.

7. Nor did they see why we used the phrase "re-designing of channel enlargements". The word "re-designing", they said, implied that a final decision on this question had been agreed to previously; how could a design have been agreed to in advance of a final decision on the levels of Lake Ontario?

8. Your question (c), concerning the views of the United States Administration on the apportionment of the increased costs, brought forth these comments. By the application of the reasoning used to question the use of the word "re-design", doubt could be cast on the appropriateness of the phrase "increased costs". But putting that point to one side, it might be said, unofficially, that the Administration probably would be prepared to see the power authority of the State of New York and the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation assume the United States share of any additional costs involved. It was the impression of the State Department officials that the allocation of increased costs that would accrue to the power project would have to be worked out between Pansy and Hepco. They understood that all of Pansy's contracts included an "open-end" provision that would permit specifications to be more closely defined to take into account the final decision on the levels of Lake Ontario. They thought that the Seaway Development Corporation's contracts probably had included a similar provision.

9. On Monday, when we spoke to Vest after our telephone conversation with Côté, we explained to him that in the view of the Canadian Government, Canada should not be asked to assume any portion of the additional costs that would arise from Governor Jordan's proposal. Vest's reply was that he found this statement difficult to accept. Nevertheless he would make our position on this point known to the United States Section of the International Joint Commission immediately. When he called later in the day he said that he had discussed our statement with the United States Section of the IJC. Their view, according to Vest, appeared to be that there was no firm legal basis for our position; and that the allocation of costs was a question for discussion at the meeting requested by Governor Jordan.

10. Your question (d), concerning the willingness of the United States Seaway Development Corporation to agree to a régime of 243 ft. to 247 ft., at first drew only a promise to seek the Corporation's views. Later we were asked how it was that contracts that had been let could have called for a specific depth when a definite decision had not been taken concerning the plans for the regulation of the waters of Lake Ontario.

11. In reply to your question (e), concerning the build-up of congressional pressure, we were told that there had been no change in the pressure from members of Congress; it had neither increased nor decreased.

12. Your question (f) concerning the attitude that the United States Administration was likely to adopt at the proposed IJC meeting, brought forth the following comments. It was the unofficial view of the State Department that at the proposed meeting the United States Section of the IJC would have the backing of all the interested agencies of the United States Government, including the State Department. Even after the meeting in Montreal, the Department of Interior, the Corps of Engineers, and the IJC had continued to review this question. After the hearings in Rochester and Toronto these agencies had met in an inter-departmental meeting when all the evidence had been reviewed again. On the basis of what was considered by the United States Section of the IJC to be new evidence brought out at the Rochester and Toronto hearings, and on the basis of the continued review of the question, it had been agreed at the meeting that the 243 ft. to 247 ft. régime would serve the interests of the United States Government better than the régime of 244 ft. to 248 ft. This decision was taken in the full knowledge that there would be some loss of power and a substantial increase in costs. (Vest mentioned a figure of $60 million.) On a practical basis, however, the United States Government was more concerned with the long-term welfare of lakeshore landowners and with the prevention of damage to lakeshore property than with the loss of power or increased costs. The Administration anticipated some difficulty in persuading Pasny to accept the proposed 243 ft. to 247 ft. régime, but they felt that this problem could be handled. (Vest indicated that the task of "handling" Pasny would probably fall to Governor Jordan.) We have had no indication that they expect to have any difficulty with the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation.

13. One point that carried considerable weight at the recent inter-agency meeting, we were told, was that the Administration was now being presented with a "last-chance" opportunity to get a régime for the control of Lake Ontario that would ensure maximum protection to lake-shore property by "guaranteeing" a stable shoreline. It was our impression that the Administration clearly considered that the 244 ft. to 248 ft. régime would not give sufficient protection to lake-shore property owners and that the political problem they may have to face, if they do not make arrangements that will guarantee the maximum possible degree of protection, looms larger than the loss of power or increased costs or the anticipated difficulties with Pasny.

14. Another important consideration that had been taken into account at the inter-departmental meeting was that in the United States view the value of the lost power would decrease in time, since it appeared that sooner or later, to meet the power needs of the United States in the area to be served by the St. Lawrence Power Project, thermal power will have to be used to supplement hydro power.

15. At the conclusion of our meeting on Friday we emphasized the Canadian Government's strong concern over the possibility of delay and reminded the State Department that there were domestic problems for both governments to face on the St. Lawrence Projects. Vest undertook to let Governor Jordan know immediately the concern of the Canadian Government over the possibility of delay.

16. Vest told us after the meeting that Governor Jordan's decision to re-open this question was based partly on an impression he had gained during the Rochester-Toronto hearings that the Canadian Section of the IJC might be willing to have the water levels controlled at between 243 ft. and 247 ft., so long as adequate provision could be made for emergency situations in which the levels could be increased to 248 ft. We understand from our telephone conversation with Côté that the Canadian position on this point has now been clarified.

17. As we indicated previously in this telegram, we expect to receive "official" answers to at least some of our questions. Although the information in this telegram was given to us merely as the views of State Department officials, it would be our guess that any official replies we may receive may not be very different from what we have already been told.

469.

DEA/1760-A-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-679

Washington, April 28, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Our telegram WA-667 of April 27.

LAKE ONTARIO LEVELS

The State Department have given us some additional information concerning Governor Jordan's proposal that the waters of Lake Ontario be controlled at levels between 243 ft. and 247 ft.

2. Jordan sent a telegram to Mr. Moses of Pasny, Mr. Castle of the Seaway Development Corporation, and Mr. Atterby of the Lake Ontario Landowner's Association, that said in effect that as a result of the hearings in Toronto and Rochester, the United States section of the IJC have recommended to the Canadian section that the IJC adopt for the control of Lake Ontario a régime of 243 ft. to 247 ft., or other alternatives. The telegram asked the recipients to let Jordan know their views in advance of the proposed executive session of the IJC on May 5. Our source in the State Department, who has asked not to be identified by name, is inclined to interpret this telegram as an indication that the United States section of the IJC are not "dead set against" the 244 ft. to 248 ft. régime that was tentatively agreed to in Montreal.

3. We understand, also from the State Department, that Castle of the Seaway Development Corporation, has given only preliminary consideration to the reply that he will send to Governor Jordan. According to the information we received today, Castle does not favour Jordan's proposal since it obviously will mean additional expense for the navigation project.

4. In an attempt to find out how far the administration might go to support Jordan's proposal, we asked what their attitude was likely to be if the Seaway Development Corporation's share of the extra costs was high enough to require an additional appropriation. The first reaction to our question was that it was improbable that the Corporation's share of the costs would be so high. We were told, however, that some members of the Administration almost certainly would oppose any proposal that would entail another request to Congress for funds for the navigation project. (The information in this paragraph was given to us on a personal basis, with a special request not to reveal the source).

470.

DEA/1760-A-40

Note de la Direction de l'Amérique
Memorandum by American Division

RESTRICTED

[Ottawa], May 12, 1955

MEETING OF THE I.J.C. IN BUFFALO ON MAY 5, 1955

This Executive Session of the I.J.C. heard representatives of the Joint Board of Engineers, Counsel for the Governments of Canada (Mr. E.A. Côté) and the United States (Mr. George Vest), a representative from the Province of Quebec Hydro Commission (Mr. Dupuis) and representatives from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. (Minutes of the meeting were taken in the usual way by a public reporter.)

2. At the opening of the meeting the Chairman, Governor Jordan, explained that this meeting had been called following an exchange of telegrams† between the United States and the Canadian Sections of the I.J.C. on April 28 and following days. Mr. Jordan read these various telegrams, the substance of which was a suggestion by the United States Section to consider a range of levels of 243-247 feet.

3. In answer General McNaughton stated that the Canadian Section was not prepared to discuss a range of 243-247 feet but agreed that the United States Section could make a statement on this question if it so desired.

4. At the invitation of the Chairman, the engineers presented a verbal report on the meeting which was held on May 4; the purpose of this meeting was to choose a regulation plan out of the four existing ones. Mr. Hathaway Patterson indicated that since the meeting of the engineers he had learned that plan 12-C-4 would not be practicable. The advantage of plan 12-C-4 was that it provided for a greater power output than plan 12-A-9, but Mr. Patterson had discovered that the revenues derived from this additional power would be annulled by the additional excavation costs entailed by plan 12-C-4.

5. It was therefore agreed to limit the discussion to plan 12-A-9. Before Mr. Smith (one of the authors of plan 12-A-9) commented on this regulation method, Mr. Patterson explained to the meeting the reason why the other plans were rejected: Mr. Snyder's plan would not meet the downstream requirements; the B plan (Mr. Clark's plan) required too much excavation and would have been too expensive; these two plans would have provided more power than plan 12-A-9.

6. The few copies of Mr. Smith's report having been distributed to members of the I.J.C. and copies of the stage duration curve having been distributed to everybody, Mr. Smith proceeded to explain his plan. Analyzing each of the criteria agreed to by the Commission, Mr. Smith pointed out that his plan met all of them. This plan was arrived at by computing plan 12-A-8 on a 95-year basis and reducing the elevation curve by .3 feet so that it would meet the criteria and be within the general range of 244-248 feet. Mr. Smith agreed that this plan does not provide for the maximum power potential. The reduction of power as compared with plan 12-A-8 might be close to $10 million in capital value, Mr. Bryce estimated. The optimum power production would have been attained by plan 12-A-8 computed on a 95-year basis, but this would have meant a high level of 248.3 feet which was contrary to the criteria. Compared with method No. 5 the quantum of power derived from plan 12-A-9 will also be lowered. Project No. 5 would have given about 13.4 kilowatts while plan 12-A-9 will give only 13.3 billion kws. annually. It must be noted, however, that the actual power derived from project 5 might have been higher than 13.4 billion kws. if the additional flow computed in 12-A-9 and not computed in project 5 were taken into account. These figures, Mr. Bryce pointed out, are approximate and are only indicative of relative values.

7. General McNaughton commented that the matter may have been narrowed too much by limiting the range of fluctuation of the water to 4 feet; more flexibility would have been assured by adopting a maximum of 248.3 instead of 248 feet.

8. Governor Jordan protested immediately that it had already been agreed that any range higher than 3.5 feet was a concession to power and that the meeting should not consider any range higher than 4 feet. In point of fact the meeting had been called with the view of reducing the maximum level from 248 to 247 feet. After seeing the damages which had been caused on the shores of Lake Ontario by the high level of the water, Governor Jordan stated, he was convinced that everything should be done to try to lower the levels of the lake for the protection of the riparian owners. General McNaughton replied that the reason for suggesting a higher range was not to support the power interests but the downstream ones. Mr. Côté pointed out that the Canadian Department of Transport had indicated that a range of 4.5 feet was the ideal one that could be reached.

9. Mr. Weber pointed out that the downstream requirements were already met with a range of 4 feet so that he did not see why additional flexibility would be needed.

10. Mr. Dupuis stated that while he had never disagreed with any of the projects presented to the Commission, he had never agreed with any, always reserving the right to study the project. Even the criteria of the Commission, Mr. Dupuis added, had never been accepted by the downstream interests as a final test, the meeting of which would automatically bring about the agreement of the downstream interests to the regulation plan of the waters of Lake Ontario meeting these criteria. The position of the downstream interests is that they do not want any damage whatsoever to be caused because of the regulation of the waters upstream.

11. General McNaughton then read a statement. Recapitulating the events which have taken place since 1952, the General pointed out that the Commission had agreed in its Order of 1952 on the St. Lawrence project on fifteen criteria, four of which are the following:

- (a) all downstream interests must be protected;
- (b) navigation interests should be protected;
- (c) the rights of the power interests should be safeguarded;
- (b) as far as possible the interests of the lakeshore owners upstream should be safeguarded.

There is a difference, he said, between the obligation to protect the downstream interests and the intention to protect as far as possible the upstream interests. There is a positive prohibition by law against affecting the downstream interests. Any damage caused would be attributable to the project and would give rise to an absolute claim for damages. Upstream, on the contrary, damages already exist; the suggestion put forward by the Commission was to relieve these inconveniences as much as can be done, but it should be obvious that relief cannot be granted to the upstream interests to the detriment of the downstream interests. It is also evident, General McNaughton said, that there can be no relief for the lakeshore owners of Lake Ontario until and unless the Iroquois work is finished. It is therefore in their interest that the Commission reach a decision on the water level of Lake Ontario so that work can proceed on the power project. On March 15 the Commission had agreed tentatively on a range of 244-248 feet subject to revision following hearings in Montreal, Rochester and Toronto and subject also to any correction arising from the adoption of a 95-year basis of study instead of the then 48-year period. The hearings in Rochester and Toronto brought forward no new facts or evidence. The adoption of the 95-year period, on the other hand, indicated that a range between 244 and 248.3 feet would be more satisfactory for power interests and also for downstream interests. This plan was after all the same as plan 12-A-8 to which the Commission had agreed already, save for the change from a 48-year period study to a 95-year one. It would be normal, therefore, to agree with this plan since no new facts justified a change of attitude.

12. Governor Jordan commented warily that General McNaughton's statement was interesting but not at all convincing, and adjourned the meeting until 3 p.m.

13. The Chairman opened the afternoon session by declaring that the United States Section of the I.J.C. would be opposed to any proposal to raise the duration curve of 12-A-8 by .3 feet. This position would be untenable because it would regulate the level of water at a level which would be higher than that of nature for 85% of the time. Upon due consideration of plan 12-A-9, however, Governor Jordan continued, the United States Section was of the opinion that it could be acceptable by the Commission subject to some possible slight amendment resulting from the close study the engineers (especially Mr. Dupuis and the downstream interests) will give it.

14. Mr. Dupuis explained why he wanted to study plan 12-A-9 carefully; while he did not foresee any change he might be forced to suggest in order to protect downstream interests, he could not agree with the plan before studying it in detail. The study of plan 12-A-9 would not only be a verification of the criteria, but would necessitate an even closer verification of the possible effect of the regulation upstream on the interests downstream; to that effect the flow which is actually evaluated on a monthly average will have to be reduced to a daily average. Mr. Dupuis suggested that this verification could be done in Montreal in cooperation with Mr. Smith. It was estimated that this would take from three to five weeks. It was agreed that the United States Section of the Board of Engineers would also send an observer to Montreal during these verifications and adjustments. General McNaughton observed that plan 12-A-9 being verified by downstream interests, some slight amendment may be brought about to the present project. It would be useful, therefore, to accept project 12-A-9 but indicating that the maximum level would be 248 feet or as near as may be. If this additional clause was agreed to, the Commission could send to the Governments its recommendation indicating the adoption of plan 12-A-9 as a firm working basis for the power and seaway entities, this plan 12-A-9 being subject to slight variations only. The addition of the phrase "as near as may be" would have the advantage of permitting a recommendation to be sent right away while leaving sufficient flexibility to amend plan 12-A-9 according to the result of the verifications by the various engineering groups: downstream interests, United States Section of the Joint Board of Engineers, seaway interests and power interests.

15. Following this statement a discussion took place on the meaning of the clause "as near as may be" and on the necessity of this clause. General McNaughton pointed out that the insertion of this clause would allow for adjustments of the level of Lake Ontario at critical times, at short notice and for a short period, if at a given time the conditions of the much smaller downstream basins (for example the Lake St. Louis basin) necessitated such an adjustment. As was pointed out by Mr. Dupuis the people downstream could be drowned out or dried out within the criteria which are based on a monthly mean. The added flexibility which this clause brings in would permit adjustments of the flow in the lower basins which probably would affect very slightly the monthly mean upstream.

16. Mr. Snyder suggested that if the level of the water is adjusted by bringing up the range, this in fact is done to benefit power. The General answered that the navigation authorities had themselves requested the range of 4.5 feet. It therefore seemed that unless they are satisfied that their interests are protected with a lower range they would insist on a range of 4.5 feet. Mr. Côté added that this required range of 4.5 feet was not necessarily for navigation and pointed out that downstream effects are felt as far as Three Rivers and Sorel. Mr. Ripley then commented that the range in Mr. Smith's plan was 4.4 feet. He added that while plan 12-A-9 on the face of it seemed satisfactory to navigation, the navigation people would like to study it in detail. Messrs. Hathaway, Weber and McWhorter then asked if any engineer could deny that a range higher than four feet profited power interests only. Mr. Hathaway asked that the "Canadian power interests" deny that a range above three feet benefited power only.

17. Mr. Côté commented that this question was asked in a somewhat unfair manner: its effect was to throw suspicion on the power interests. Any discussion on the range of levels should use the natural range as a point of departure and in discussing the ideal range it should be remembered that it is the power interests that permit this project of regulation to go ahead. It is the power entities which are paying for this project. They could not be expected to finance a project from which they would derive no benefit whatsoever.

18. Following these clarifications, the two sections of the I.J.C. agreed to send a letter to both Governments recommending their approval of a regulative level of Lake Ontario ranging from 244 feet (during navigation season) to 248 feet or as near as may be. The letter further recommends the adoption by the Governments of plan 12-A-9 subject to minor adjustments following verification with a view to protecting especially the downstream interests.

19. The letter,<sup>189</sup> a copy of which is attached, was approved by the committee and it was decided to send it to both Governments on Monday, May 9, with an attached report of Mr. Smith's explaining method 12-A-9. The Governments are required to transmit this information to the power entities so that work can proceed very shortly on the basis of project 12-A-9.

20. It was agreed that the final report of the Commission on this Lake Ontario Reference should be sent to the Governments at a later date, possibly in 3 or 4 months. The adjusted and final regulation curve should be ready in 3 to 5 weeks.

M.D. BAUDIN

<sup>189</sup> Pour le texte de la lettre, voir International Joint Commission, International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, Regulation of Lake Ontario: Report to the International Joint Commission, Volume 1, Text, March 1957, pp. 48-49.
For the text of the letter, see International Joint Commission, International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, Regulation of Lake Ontario: Report to the International Joint Commission, Volume 1, Text, March 1957, pp. 48-49.

471.

PCO

*Note du ministre du Transport et du secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of Transport and Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 224-55

Ottawa, October 31, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT — REGULATION OF WATER LEVELS UPSTREAM AND DOWNSTREAM OF THE INTERNATIONAL RAPIDS POWER DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

On September 21, 1955, the Minister of Transport reported to the Cabinet that, in letters of March 17th<sup>190</sup> and May 9th, 1955 to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission had stated that the Commission recommended for Government approval that a set of criteria, ranges of elevation and a new Plan of Regulation (No. 12-A-9) should be substituted for the Plan of Regulation referred to in the Commission's Order of October 29, 1952 approving applications of the U.S. and Canadian Governments for a hydro electric development project in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River. Similar recommendations had been made by the Chairman of the U.S. Section of the I.J.C. to the U.S. Government.

Although it appeared at the time that the new Plan of Regulation would satisfactorily deal with the Lake Ontario water levels problem, it seemed that the new plan might not be acceptable to Quebec authorities for two reasons. The first was that it would tend to lower the levels of Lake St. Louis in the summer months and, therefore, be harmful to the property owners on the lake shore. The second was that, under this plan of regulation, the flow in the Lake St. Louis and Laprairie Basin section of the river would be such as to make it difficult, if not impossible, to provide an early ice cover, which was required for maximum power output at the Lachine power project to be constructed at some time in the future.

The Cabinet Committee on the St. Lawrence Project had been informed that it would likely not be too difficult to modify Plan of Regulation No. 12-A-9 so as to protect the interests of the shore owners in the Montreal area. It was also understood that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority could widen the proposed new 27-foot Lachine Canal so that it might be used as a by-pass during December and January through which some 40,000 cu.ft. per second could be put, thus reducing the velocity in the main stream to a point where an early ice cover could form. It was estimated by the Seaway Authority that remedial works of this nature would cost $7 or $8 million.

The Cabinet Committee felt that Seaway Authority engineers should ascertain immediately whether engineers of Quebec Hydro were prepared, from an engineering point of view, to concur in a somewhat modified Plan of Regulation 12-A-9 on the understanding that the Authority would arrange the by-pass through the new Lachine Canal as mentioned above. If such concurrence was obtained at the engineering level, it was suggested that the Minister of Transport should inform the Premier of Quebec of the arrangements which had been made and that the Canadian Government intended to approve by a certain date the recommendation of the I.J.C. with some modifications, if required, so that the Seaway Authority might proceed, subject to any further enabling legislation that might be found necessary, with the re-designing of the Lachine Canal and the letting of contracts, and so that there should be no delay in connection with the channel excavations which might have to be altered in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River as a result of the adoption of the new Plan of Regulation.

<sup>190</sup> Pour le texte de la lettre, voir IJC, International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, Regulation of Lake Ontario, pp. 44-47.

For the text of the letter, see IJC, International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, Regulation of Lake Ontario, pp. 44-47.

The Cabinet, on September 21, 1955, approved these recommendations of the Cabinet Committee. It is understood that the proposed Plan of Regulation No. 12-A-9 with appropriate modifications, together with the provision of facilities to by-pass water through the new 27-foot Lachine Canal during the ice-forming period each winter, will meet the engineering requirements of Quebec Hydro. The Premier of Quebec is familiar with these arrangements and has raised no objection to them.

It is now necessary to approach the United States Government regarding the nature of the replies which must be sent by the governments to the International Joint Commission, since it is obviously desirable that both letters should be substantially alike.

It is therefore recommended that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, after consultation with the U.S. Government, send to the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the I.J.C. a letter substantially in the form hereto annexed informing the Commission of Canada's approval of the range of elevations for Lake Ontario, of the criteria recommended by the Commission and of plan of regulation No. 12-A-9 for the purpose of calculating critical profiles and the design of channel excavations, it being understood that the Commission will continue its studies with a view to perfecting the plan of regulation so as best to meet the requirements of all interests both upstream and downstream of the International Rapids power development project.

A decision is also required as to who should bear the cost of the remedial works in the new 27-foot Lachine canal to permit certain quantities of water to be by-passed from Lake St. Louis into the Laprairie basin during the winter months. As stated above, the cost may be $7 or $8 million. It seems impractical to consider that this cost will be borne by other than the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority or the Canadian Government. The main purposes of the remedial works are to afford better control of the outflow of Lake St. Louis and to ensure that ice forming conditions can be achieved in the Lachine Narrows during the winter months when power is developed at that point. On the other hand, although the spillway to be constructed at Côte Ste-Catherine to take the additional quantities of water out of the canal into Laprairie basin will be of no use whatever to navigation, the widening of the canal between Caughnawaga and Côte Ste-Catherine, which is an essential part of the remedial works, will be of some benefit to navigation. It seems to the undersigned that the less objectionable course of action would be to have this cost charged to the Seaway Authority and amortized out of navigation tolls. In this respect, however, it should be borne in mind that the Seaway Authority is concerned about the additional charges being made against the Seaway and about the unduly high tolls which it may eventually be necessary to impose if the full cost of the seaway, including ancillary developments such as the Lachine by-pass, are to be amortized over the period contemplated in the legislation.<sup>191</sup>

GEORGE C. MARLER
Minister of Transport

ROCH PINARD
Acting Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au président de la section canadienne de la Commission mixte internationale*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chairman, Canadian Section,
International Joint Commission*

[Ottawa], October 31, 1955

Dear General McNaughton:

I have for reply your letter of May 9, 1955, on the subject of Lake Ontario levels. I note that the International Joint Commission has reached agreement on a range of elevations for Lake Ontario, namely, 244 feet (navigation season) to 248 feet, as nearly as may be. I am pleased to inform you that this range of mean monthly elevations is approved by the Government of Canada.

2. In your letter of May 9, you also stated that the Commission recommended approval of the criteria for the operation of the regulatory works being built in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River, set out in your letter of March 17, 1955. I am pleased to inform you that the Government of Canada approves these criteria as recommended in your letter of May 9.

3. Copies of Plan of Regulation No. 12-A-9, which had been developed within this range of elevations and according to these criteria, were enclosed with your letter of May 9. It is apparent that the Plan of Regulation will of necessity be modified in minor details from time to time, both during the construction stage and afterwards as the several works are completed and come into operation. Accordingly, it is important to preserve the flexibility for adjustments and progressive improvements which, subject to specified requirements and procedure, is prescribed in paragraph (i) of the Commission's Order of Approval of October 29, 1952. It is of paramount importance that the St. Lawrence River Joint Board of Engineers and the power and seaway entities be provided with a plan of regulation in substitution for Plan of Regulation No. 5 referred to in the Order of Approval, as the basis on which they may proceed with the determination of the critical profiles and the design for channel excavations, if the whole St. Lawrence project is not to be delayed seriously.

<sup>191</sup> Le 3 novembre 1955, le Cabinet a approuvé le projet de lettre joint et convenu que l'Administration de la voie maritime du Saint-Laurent paierait les ouvrages de protection dans le nouveau canal de Lachine. On November 3, 1955, Cabinet approved the attached draft letter and agreed that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority would pay for the remedial works in the new Lachine canal.

Therefore, the Government of Canada approves Plan of Regulation No. 12-A-9 for the purpose of calculating critical profiles and the design of channel excavations.

4. The Government urges the Commission to continue its studies with a view to perfecting the plan of regulation so as best to meet the requirements of all interests both upstream and downstream, within the range of elevations and criteria approved above.

5. The Government of Canada is naturally much concerned about the effects which the regulation of Lake Ontario levels might have downstream in the exclusively Canadian section of the river. This concern relates more particularly to:

(a) flows during the ice-forming period from December 15th to January 31st each year; and

(b) the flooding hazard in February and March each year in the Montreal area.

With regard to (a), studies which have recently been made by the parties concerned in Canada indicate that, with the "supplies of the past as adjusted" referred to in the criteria and within the range of elevations, criteria and design of channel excavations referred to above, it is possible to adjust the plan of regulation in such a manner that the outflow from Lake St. Louis is maintained at or below 280,000 cu.ft. per second from December 15th to January 31st each year, which is the ice-forming period in the Lake St. Louis-Laprairie basin area of the St. Lawrence River. As to (b), it appears that minor modifications can be made in the plan of regulation to avoid aggravating the danger of flooding in the Montreal area. The Government of Canada wishes to inform the Commission that in order to assist the Commission in perfecting a plan of regulation under which the total outflow from Lake St. Louis can be maintained at or below the level referred to above from December 15th to January 31st each year, arrangements have now been made for the redesign of a portion of the new 27-ft. canal in the vicinity of Montreal in order to allow certain quantities of water to be by-passed from Lake St. Louis to Laprairie basin through that portion of the canal during the non-navigation season.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

472.

DEA/1760-A-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1845

Washington, November 4, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your telegram X-1847 of Nov. 1/55.†

LAKE ONTARIO LEVELS — DRAFT REPLY TO THE INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

On Wednesday we left at the State Department a copy of our draft letter to General McNaughton, amended in accordance with your instructions.<sup>192</sup> The State Department now given us the United States comments on our draft. These comments, we were told, have been agreed by representatives of the State Department (Legal Division and BNA Office), the International Joint Commission and the Department of the Army (including the Corps of Engineers). According to Vest of the Canadian Desk, who passed these comments to us this afternoon, no other agencies of the United States Government need to be consulted. We were told also that if the United States comments and suggestions are acceptable to Canada, the United States Government will have no further comments and their reply to Governor Jordan's letter of May 9 could be cleared very quickly here. If these comments are acceptable, the United States letter, we understand, will be the same as the Canadian draft amended and modified as outlined below.

2. The most important comment concerns the inclusion of paragraph 5 in the Canadian letter. Vest told us that all of the United States agencies concerned recognized that a statement along the lines of paragraph 5 of our draft letter would have to be made by Canada, and they were indeed pleased that Canada had decided to make such a statement. The timing and method of presenting the statement, however, created a serious difficulty, and there was a strong feeling that the statement should not be included in our reply to General McNaughton. In the opinion of all the United States agencies concerned, the inclusion of paragraph 5 in our letter might well create for the administration the risk of serious difficulties with representatives Keating and Ostertag of New York State, as well as Atterby and other Lake Ontario property owners. It was the consensus of all the agencies that the inclusion of paragraph 5 in the Canadian letter would give the Lakeshore property owners an opportunity to criticize the administration for not providing for upstream interests the same degree of protection that the Canadian Government had provided for downstream interests.

3. It was readily recognized by the agencies concerned, however, that their proposal that paragraph 5 be deleted from our letter would represent an important change in the Canadian Government's position. They have suggested, therefore, the amendments outlined below, which they hope will serve, at least in part, the same purpose as paragraph 5.

4. Their proposed amendments are as follows:

(a) Paragraph 3, the second sentence—It has been suggested that this sentence might be amended to read "You state that the plan of regulation will be modified in minor details from time to time, both during the construction stage and afterwards, as the works in other portions of the St. Lawrence River are completed and come into operation". We were told that if there is any objection to beginning the sentence with "you state", the United States would accept our present wording, i.e., "it is apparent". They would, however, like to drop the phrase "of necessity". It was explained to us that the object of this proposed amendment was to make it clear that modifications to 12-A-9 might be required, not only for works that are underway or contemplated at the present time, but also to works downstream that might be undertaken in the future. The United States Government, we were told, is willing to go as far as possible to ensure that the instructions to the Chairmen of the IJC give the Commission the widest possible latitude.

<sup>192</sup> Le texte modifié auquel il est fait référence dans le télégramme X-1847 est le même que le texte imprimé joint au document 471.

The amended text referred to in Telegram X-1847 is the same as that printed as the attachment to Document 471.

(b) Paragraph 3, final sentence—The State Department suggested that this sentence might be amended to read as follows: "Therefore, the Government of Canada approves, as a basis for calculating critical profiles and the design of channel excavations, Plan of Regulation 12-A-9, with such minor modifications as may be found necessary to allow for possible future developments downstream, as well as to maintain satisfactory conditions upstream and on Lake Ontario". We were told that if the Canadian Government thought it desirable, the last part of this sentence might be made to read "...as well as to maintain satisfactory conditions downstream, upstream, and on Lake Ontario". The purpose of this amendment is to spell out not only the purpose of Plan of Regulation 12-A-9, but also to indicate what must be taken into account by the IJC in determining what modifications may be necessary to the plan.

As we mentioned earlier, these proposed changes in the text of the first four paragraphs of our draft letter to General McNaughton have been suggested with the idea in mind that paragraph 5 would be dropped from our letter. It was emphasized to us that the United States Government has no objection to the Canadian Government making known to the IJC the information which is now contained in paragraph 5 of our draft letter. Their objections relate only to the timing and method of presenting the information to the IJC.

When we pressed for an opinion on what the United States attitude was likely to be if the Canadian Government could not see its way clear to drop paragraph 5, we were told that the view of United States authorities was that the United States reply to Governor Jordan would have to include a paragraph which would show more clearly than the proposed final sentence in paragraph 3 now does, that the United States Government was prepared to give to property owners on Lake Ontario the same kind of protection that paragraph 5 indicated the Canadian Government was giving to downstream interests in Canada. The United States would be very reluctant to take such a step since they were aware that if such a paragraph were included, the Lakeshore property owners would have a piece of paper which they could use to insist that the United States Government give further consideration to the protection of their interests.

473.

DEA/1760-A-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM X-1902

Ottawa, November 10, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your Telegram 1845 of November 4.

LAKE ONTARIO LEVELS — DRAFT REPLY TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

We should be obliged if you would make the following comments to the State Department in reply to their observations contained in your telegram 1845. You might first of all express our satisfaction that they have so few comments to make about the first four paragraphs of our letter, and hence it appears that the two Governments are now very close together on this subject and it should be possible to send replies to the International Joint Commission very soon.

2. On review of the comments given in your telegram 1845, it would appear that the anxieties of the United States officials arise mostly by reason of the inclusion of paragraph 5 in the Canadian draft letter to General McNaughton. We do not, of course, wish to create difficulties for the United States authorities and, accordingly, we would be prepared to recommend to Ministers the deletion of this paragraph. We notice that the United States Government has no objection to the Canadian Government making known to the International Joint Commission the information contained in paragraph 5, but that their objections relate to the timing and method of conveying the information. Accordingly, we will probably send a separate letter along the lines of paragraph 5 at a later date to General McNaughton, with the request that he give the information to his fellow Commissioners.

3. With respect to amendment (a) proposed in paragraph 4 of your telegram, we would suggest that the second sentence of paragraph 3 be worded as follows: "It is apparent that the Plan of Regulation will be modified in minor details from time to time, both during the construction stage and afterwards, particularly as the works in other sections of the St. Lawrence River are completed and come into operation." We would prefer "it is apparent" to "you state", because this sentence is not a direct quotation from a communication from General McNaughton. The word "particularly" is inserted so that the sentence does not have a limiting effect.

4. With respect to amendment (b) in paragraph 4 of your letter, we prefer the text in our draft, and we do not find that the State department re-draft assists to make up for the deletion of our paragraph 5. We consider that what is needed now is a firm basis for the design of channel excavations, and our wording was intended to fulfil this purpose. A plan is not required for other purposes now, and in view of the pleas for flexibility which were made at the session of the International Joint Commission at the beginning of October, it seems unnecessary to make the approval more general. The purpose of regulation and the considerations which need to be taken into account by the Commission are given in the order of approval and in the criteria, and it does not seem necessary to repeat them in general terms in this sentence.

5. As we have indicated above, this telegram represents official views only. If the State Department agrees to the views expressed above on the two proposed amendments, we will then seek ministerial approval for the letter as amended.

474.

DEA/1760-A-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1896

Washington, November 15, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your X-1902 of Nov. 10/55.

LAKE ONTARIO LEVELS — DRAFT REPLY TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Yesterday at the State Department we presented to George Vest of the Canadian Desk, the comments contained in your telegram No. 1902 of Nov. 10. We pointed out that these comments represented views of officials and were still to be approved by Ministers.

2. Vest's reaction was favourable and he asked us to express to you the State Department's appreciation for your helpful co-operation in helping them avoid difficulties.

3. Vest indicated his full agreement to the comments in paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 of your X-1902. The final draft of the State Department's letter would, he said, have to be submitted to the Under-Secretary's office for approval, but he would not hesitate in saying that he was almost 100 per cent certain that our comments would be accepted. Vest thought that the final clearing process probably would not be completed before the end of this week. He will let us know as soon as final approval has been given.

4. Vest asked during the conversation whether or not the Canadian Government intends to issue a press release when the letters are sent to the Chairmen of the IJC. He said that it was unlikely that the United States Government would issue any release, since they would prefer any public statement on their letter to come from the IJC. We should be grateful if you would let us know your plans on this point.

5. During our conversation with Vest he re-affirmed that the United States Government would have no objection to a subsequent letter from the Canadian Government to General McNaughton along the lines of our "old" paragraph 5.<sup>193</sup>

<sup>193</sup> Pour le texte final de la lettre des États-Unis à Jordan, et les deux lettres du Canada à McNaughton, qui ont été approuvées par Pearson sans changements substantiels, voir IJC, International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, Regulation of Lake Ontario, pp. 51-54. Une ordonnance supplémentaire approuvant les niveaux convenus dans ces lettres a été rédigée lors de la réunion extraordinaire de la Commission mixte internationale les 19 et 20 décembre 1955, et publiée le 2 juillet 1956. Voir ibid, p 55.

For the final text of the U.S. letter to Jordan, and the two Canadian letters to McNaughton, which were approved by Pearson without substantial changes, see IJC, International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, Regulation of Lake Ontario, pp. 51-54. A supplementary order approving the levels agreed to in these letters was drafted at a special meeting of the International Joint Commission on December 19-20, 1955 and issued on July 2, 1956. See ibid, p 55.

SECTION D

LE SYSTÈME DE LA RIVIÈRE COLUMBIA
COLUMBIA RIVER SYSTEM

475.

DEA/5724-E-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur aux États-UnisUnder-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

LETTER X-22

Ottawa, January 7, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your telegram WA-2119 of Dec. 17/54.<sup>194</sup>POSSIBLE USE OF COLUMBIA FLOOD WATERS IN CONJUNCTION WITH THE FRASER RIVER

Your telegram under reference was referred to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources with a request for comments on the two questions raised by Mr. Vest of the State Department as well as your own enquiry concerning the relationship between the possible Columbia-Fraser diversion and the proposed Mica Creek project. These comments have now been received and form the basis of the observations which follow.

2. The first point raised by Mr. Vest touches on the implications of the possible diversion of the Columbia River into the Fraser River as it would affect the existing generating facilities on the Columbia River in the United States. As mentioned in the Press Release of December 20, 1954,<sup>195</sup> flood waters of the Columbia River are wasted each summer due to lack of control and storage facilities. It will be necessary, as part of the diversion investigation, to determine as accurately as possible the actual volume of water which could be diverted in Canada without injury to United States interests. Data presently available indicates that in a low-water year such as 1943-44, approximately fifteen million acre-feet of water exists surplus to the power requirements at Grand Coulee. Allowing for irrigation projects now under development, it appears that the minimum annual diversion which could be made without injury to present users of Columbia River water in the United States amounts to approximately ten million acre-feet. There is the possibility, of course, that additional generating installations now under construction or under consideration in the United States may place a greater demand on the available flow of the Columbia and this is one of the main arguments in favour of proceeding with the investigations without delay.

3. Until additional information becomes available on this aspect of the problem it would be inadvisable to attempt to be specific about the actual requirements of any possible diversion or about the apparent surpluses of flood waters in the Columbia system. The enquiry should be answered in general terms to the effect that large volumes of flood waters are presently being wasted and the investigation now being undertaken is directed towards determining if these can be put to beneficial use.

<sup>194</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 608.

<sup>195</sup> Non retrouvé./Not located.

4. The second point raised by Mr. Vest concerns the relationship between the independent studies undertaken by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the studies arising out of the Columbia River Reference of 1944.<sup>196</sup> In point of fact the large scale studies carried out in the Columbia River Basin since 1944 arose directly from the 1944 Reference and are planned by and on behalf of the Engineering Board established under that Reference.

5. To answer this question, it is suggested you point out that while the studies on the Columbia River basin carried out by the Canadian Government have resulted from the Joint Reference of 1944 to the L.J.C., enquiries have also been under way concerning many other major water resource possibilities in Canada. Since the end of World War II, enquiries and investigations have been made into the use of the waters of the Yukon Watershed, the Hamilton River in Labrador, the St. John River in New Brunswick and other waters. Mention could also be made of the Dominion-Provincial Board, Fraser River Basin, established December 11, 1948 to investigate the resources of the Fraser River Basin. Thus, while the Columbia River investigation arose out of the Reference of 1944, it also fits into the general pattern of investigation that has been sponsored by the Canadian Government throughout the country.

6. Turning to your own enquiry concerning the relationship between the Columbia-Fraser project and the Mica Creek project, the latter appears to be the key to the ultimate development of the Columbia River water resources, either in the Columbia River Basin itself or by means of a diversion to the Fraser River system. The Mica Creek dam and reservoir will provide the storage capacity for flood waters which are now wasted and which under one scheme would be released during low stage on the river to enlarged power installations downstream, and in the other case would be released for diversion to the Fraser River Basin for use in the power installations which would be made on the Thompson and Fraser Rivers. The Mica Creek project and the possible Columbia-Fraser diversions are not alternative developments or mutually exclusive. Only through developing the Mica project or some alternative upstream storage of large capacity would the diversion to the Fraser from the Columbia be practicable.

S.A. FREIFELD
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

476.

DEA/5724-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH NO. 481

Washington, March 21, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

COLUMBIA RIVER BASIN

Over the past few weeks we have been trying to obtain some idea of the present United States attitude towards the development of the water power resources of the Columbia

<sup>196</sup> Voir volume 11, les documents 1077 et 1078./See Volume 11, Documents 1077 and 1078.

River Basin. It was only recently, however, that we received any definite indication of how United States officials, and perhaps even the Administration, are beginning to look at this question.

2. We have learned from the State Department, on a confidential basis, that the United States authorities now seem to be considering seriously whether or not they should go ahead and develop, as quickly as possible, the hydro-electric power sites in the United States section of the Columbia River Basin. According to the information we were given, there are three elements in the present situation that are becoming increasingly important. First, there is a feeling in some parts of the United States Government that scientific developments may enable atomic energy to be used for the generation of industrial power fairly soon. In the face of that prospect the value of the potential hydro-electric power sites on the Columbia will decrease as the industrial use of atomic power becomes more and more imminent. Therefore, to ensure the maximum return on the large investments that will be required to develop the hydro-electric power, construction on the projects must begin soon.

3. Second, there is a body of opinion in the United States Government that leans to the view that "co-operative" development of the Columbia Basin by Canada and the United States will take too long when measured against the need for power in the Pacific Northwest. One specific reason cited for the growth of this feeling was that Canadian studies of potential uses of the waters of the Columbia "always seem to be at least two years from completion". If the Canadian studies cannot be speeded up, the argument goes, then it might be better for the United States to concentrate on the development of the water power resources in their own reach of the Columbia than to await the completion of the Canadian studies.

4. As it was explained to us, this feeling has been developing gradually for some time, partly, at least, as a reaction to what some United States officials are prone to describe as Canada's "nationalistic" attitude on this question. This interpretation of Canada's attitude, we were told, was strengthened by two recent events. The first of these was the news that Canada planned to study a possible diversion of the flood waters of the Columbia into the Thompson and Fraser River systems; the second was the introduction into Parliament of legislation for the control and improvement of international rivers.<sup>197</sup>

5. The information about Canada's plans to study the possible diversion of the Columbia into the Fraser, we learned, generated a sharp reaction in Washington. At first it was proposed that the United States ought to reply immediately by sending a diplomatic note in which the United States would "reserve their rights" to the waters of the Columbia. This suggestion was pressed fairly hard but in the end it was dropped, mainly on the advice of the State Department, who pointed out that the rights of the United States were protected by the terms of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 and that the action of the Canadian Government in informing the United States of their plans was a good example of the kind of co-operation that seemed desirable, and that it should not, therefore, be answered in the way that had been suggested.

6. The debate on the international rivers legislation was followed with keen interest by officials and others in Washington. It was an important point of focus for those in the United States Government who have been concerned about the possible effects that Canada's attitude towards the waters of the Columbia River Basin might have on United States plans in that region, and served, apparently, to crystallize their views.

<sup>197</sup> Voir volume 20, document 605. Voir aussi Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1955, volume 1, le 10 janvier 1955, p. 17.

See Volume 20, Document 605. See also Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1955, Volume 1, January 10, 1955, p. 17.

7. The third important element in the present situation is the increasingly strong pressure from political and other interests in the United States for the rapid development of hydroelectric power to meet the needs of industries in the Pacific Northwest. On this point the State Department's comments went as follows. The Administration, as we knew, were keenly aware of the potential power shortage in the Northwest. If they had not been aware of the intense interest in this question previously, they certainly had not failed to read the lesson of the election of Senator Neuberger in Oregon. Neuberger's election was being interpreted, we gathered, as a clear indication that action would have to be taken, and taken soon, on the development of the water resources on the Columbia. Another point that was beginning to assume more and more importance in United States thinking on this subject, was that a Presidential election would be held in something less than two years from now, so that the period of two years has assumed critical significance in the eyes of the present Administration. If there is, as there must be, a chance that the Republican Party may not be returned to power, the development of the resources of the Columbia River Basin takes on added urgency, since, if the Administration wish to see those resources developed in accordance with their own philosophy, they must act quickly. Therefore, the Administration may come to the conclusion that, for important political reasons, they cannot afford to wait for the completion of the Canadian studies on the Columbia.

8. As we indicated at the beginning of this despatch, this information was given to us in strict confidence. We were told also that it represents a kind of "pulling together" of information obtained from a number of United States agencies, including the Department of the Interior, the Army Corps of Engineers, the State Department, and possibly the International Joint Commission and the Department of Defense as well. Although it was not given to us as "official" United States thinking, we are inclined to believe that it represents a fairly close approximation to the kind of attitude that is likely to develop in the United States Government. If that is true, then the present situation holds obvious, but nonetheless serious, implications for Canadian policy concerning the development of the Columbia River Basin. It is evident, for example, that if the United States, in spite of the continuing debate on the question of public versus private development of water power resources, should go ahead quickly with their plans to develop the potential power sites along their own reach of the Columbia, their vested interest in the use of the waters of the Columbia would be greatly increased. And although, as we gathered, there is little or no inclination among United States authorities to dispute Canada's right to use the waters of the Canadian reach of the Columbia in any way we see fit, we should be prepared for the possibility that we may have to consider the question of compensating United States interests if Canada should take a decision on the Columbia that would affect the supply of water needed for the operation of large-scale power installations along the lower Columbia.

9. It is possible, of course, that this information has been passed along to us in the hope that it may serve to speed up the completion of Canadian plans for the use of the waters of the Columbia. In any event, no matter how it is to be interpreted, it seems to us to indicate a growing restlessness among the United States authorities which should not be ignored in the development of Canadian policies for the use of the water resources of the Columbia River Basin.<sup>198</sup>

A.D.P. HEENEY

<sup>198</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
Submitted as Document for Cabinet. S. Freifeld

477.

DEA/2492-A-1-40

*Note du chef de la Direction de l'Amérique
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, American Division,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], April 14, 1955

SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING OF THE INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION,
WASHINGTON, APRIL 5-8, AND HEARINGS OF THE I.J.C.
AT ROCHESTER ON APRIL 12, 1955

Both the semi-annual meeting of the I.J.C. in Washington and the Lake Ontario levels hearings at Rochester went off well. Much of the credit is due to the new U.S. Chairman, Governor Jordan.

2. In the course of the semi-annual meetings, two significant factors became apparent to me. The first is that Governor Jordan is probably one of the key figures in U.S. power planning policy. The second is that U.S. technical planning in the Columbia basin is far advanced, having been projected to 1985.

3. In retrospect, therefore, the re-statement by General McNaughton of the views he had already, in a large measure, expressed before the External Affairs Committee, must have partaken — in the eyes of his U.S. colleagues — of the qualities of a second showing of a Don Quixote film.<sup>199</sup>

4. The United States section of the Commission was upset, thereafter, by the firm and almost deliberately abrupt manner in which the Waterton-Belly Rivers Reference was terminated. As it was one of the few occasions in the Commission's history when the Commission divided equally, it was somewhat of a blow to Governor Jordan on the occasion of the first semi-annual meeting over which he presided. He and his colleagues showed remarkable restraint when General McNaughton adamantly pressed the divisive motion. This stage was inevitable, however, because the Commission had been stalemated for four years over this reference. Two years ago, the governments had already called for the termination of it and Alberta seemed determined now to start works to put the waters of these Rivers to use. Any further delay would, in the long run, have tended to bring the Commission into disrepute: either the Commission could solve the problem within the terms of the reference or outside it by using its good offices. As it could not settle the issue either way, it was better to admit it (even by a split in the Commission) than to delay another year and risk seeing Alberta start developing their resource regardless of the I.J.C. reference.

5. Two days later, on Thursday, April 7, I was expressing these views privately to Governor Jordan when he asked me to retire with him to his office. He asked my private view as to the attitude he should take in his relations with General McNaughton. He had not seemed yet to be able to get on the same "wave-length" as the General. He was concerned because he would have to make some public statements in the U.S.A. to counter some of the General's "fantastic" statements about downstream benefits made before the External Affairs Committee. He was concerned, he said, lest such statements prevent the establishment of that close personal relationship which should exist between them. (General McNaughton had previously expressed the view that Governor Jordan was really more of a front man and he (the General) was, at one point, before the Washington meeting, almost ready, as it were, to punch the bag.)

<sup>199</sup> Pour la déclaration de McNaughton devant la CMI le 5 avril, voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Comité permanent des Affaires extérieures, Procès-Verbaux et Témoignages, N° 13, séance du 7 juin, 1956, Appendice A, pp. 27-30. Pour le témoignage de McNaughton devant le Comité des Affaires extérieures, voir Chambre des Communes, Comité permanent des Affaires extérieures, Procès-Verbaux et Témoignages, N° 1, séance du 1<sup>er</sup> mars, 1955 et du 9 mars, 1955, pp. 34-50.

For McNaughton's statement before the IJC, see Canada, House of Commons, Standing Committee on External Affairs, Minutes of Proceeding and Evidence, No. 13, June 7, 1956, Appendix A, pp. 355-358. For McNaughton's testimony before the External Affairs Committee, see Canada, House of Commons, Standing Committee on External Affairs, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, No. 1, March 1 and March 9, 1955, pp. 32-47.

6. I ventured the personal opinion that if the Governor felt it necessary to speak publicly in contradiction of his colleague, it would be proper and useful for him to tell the General in advance of his intentions. It was, I thought, of capital importance that trust should grow up between both chairmen. If the Governor had some basic data which was not in the possession of the General and which the Governor felt free to disclose to the General, I was sure it would be most welcome because there was a lack of information in Canada.

7. In the course of the conversation I understood from Governor Jordan that his main duty was to act as the Administration's coordinator of the country's power development policy — with access to the White House. Governor Jordan said that the Corps of Engineers Columbia River Study 308 (which had been completed between 1935 and 1950, if memory serves, at a cost of some $10 million) was now outmoded. He told me that the U.S. government now had a preliminary forecast of its power requirements up to 1985 for — as I understood it — the Columbia basin in the U.S.A. A report had been prepared as of January 1955 and — subject to checking — it illustrated two basic facts for which he showed me the charts and figures:

(a) in 1985 the power requirements for the Northwestern United States would be so high that (as I estimated from a chart) something of the order of 60% or better of the power in this U.S. sector would be other than hydro produced; and

(b) that while the value to the U.S.A. of stored Canadian water now would be of the order of, say, 120 million megawatt hours annually, by 1985, the value of stored water downstream would have diminished to, say, about 40 million megawatt hours annually.

8. Governor Jordan (who, incidentally, stated that he had followed closely the application of nuclear fuel to the production of electrical energy during the last several months) said that the U.S. scientists were progressing favourably in this field and some had hopes of converting atomic to electrical energy directly without passing through the thermal stage. (This is the sort of development which General McNaughton had said in Ottawa a week previously could completely upset his calculations.)

9. I said to Governor Jordan that his information seemed to be of the highest interest. I urged him, so soon as he could do so, to discuss these and other problems quite frankly and in all confidence with General McNaughton. If the Report he had shown me could be examined and studied in confidence by Canadian authorities, it would be a useful basis for confirming or informing some views therein contained. As it appeared that the U.S.A.'s thinking and technical studies had gone further in the field of application to the Columbia basin, making such information available to Canadian officials could only bring us into the picture and help to remove the seeds of future misunderstandings. The Governor said he would consider the matter and try to go fishing with the General ... He said he would be delighted to maintain contact also on these matters with Mr. Heeney or his Minister.

10. It might be that what Governor Jordan told me was calculated to try to "panic" the Canadian side. I doubt that, in doing so, Governor Jordan would be in character and whether he would have acted in this manner so late in the Washington meeting. However that may be, it is probable that

(a) Governor Jordan is a key figure in the Administration for the formulation of the power development policy; (incidentally, he appears to be anti-Morse and anti-Neuberger);

(b) U.S.A. thinking is much further advanced than the Canadian thinking as regards the requirements and possibilities of power development in the Columbia basin.

E.A. CÔTÉ

478.

DEA/5724-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], September 26, 1955

DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS IN THE COLUMBIA RIVER

One of the important international water problems before the International Joint Commission is the uses which are to be made of the waters of the Columbia River system by Canada and the United States. As yet, the surveys and studies being made in Canada by the International Columbia River Engineering Board under the Columbia River Reference are not complete. At the last semi-annual meeting of the I.J.C., however, in April 1955, good progress was reported.

2. One of the major issues between Canada and the United States is the question of downstream benefits. The question revolves on the point that if Canada provides storage facilities upstream by means of reservoirs and regulates the flow of the water to the United States thus enabling present outputs of power downstream to be increased, then Canada would expect to receive suitable compensation for this added power. It is obvious that downstream areas would like to keep for themselves all the downstream power made available through regulated flow and to provide compensation only for the damage caused by the construction of the upstream storage facilities. Canadian interests upstream, however, argue that mere compensation for damages would not be a fair return for this added wealth. They contend that it is the construction of storage facilities upstream that render possible an increase in power potential downstream; this additional power should therefore be shared equitably between upstream and downstream interests. It appears that a compromise will have to be worked out whereby the Canadian upstream areas will receive an adequate and fair share of downstream power.

3. The Canadian position respecting downstream benefits was reaffirmed at the semi-annual meeting of the I.J.C. in April 1955 by General McNaughton, Chairman of the Canadian Section, when he outlined present Canadian plans for the possible development of the Columbia River water resources in Canada. In addition, General McNaughton outlined to the Commission four projects, which might be developed in cooperation with the United States, all of which involve storage of water in Canada and development of power in the United States:

- (1) Temporary use downstream of a regulated flow from Mica Creek storages.
- (2) Murphy Creek storage on a cyclical basis.

(3) The possibility of Canada permitting an increase of level of approximately 42 feet at the point where the Columbia River crosses the boundary at the United States. This would permit a corresponding increase in the height of the Grand Coulee Dam.

(4) The possibility of Canada permitting an increase of level of 37 feet at a point where the Kootenay crosses the boundary into the United States, that is, the eastern crossings, thereby flooding upstream to the tail waters of the Dorr Dam. This would permit a corresponding increase in the height of the proposed dam at Libby, Montana, above the water level at the boundary.

4. General McNaughton pointed out that if the United States Section of the I.J.C. was willing to discuss these projects it must be understood that safeguards must be included to preserve and protect all Canadian interests.

5. General McNaughton has discussed this matter with us recently, pointing out that he did not think that the United States members of the I.J.C. were ready to discuss the projects or the issue of downstream benefits. At the same time, he is prepared, if this Department agrees, to remind the United States Section of the I.J.C. that these offers of discussion are still open.

6. This matter has been discussed with Mr. E.A. Côté, Assistant Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and it is his view that the above proposals should not be repeated at the October meeting. He considers that we are, in effect, offering very little and that to repeat the proposal would only serve to irritate the United States Commissioners.

7. Although it was doubtless desirable at the time to outline our long term interests by a statement before the International Joint Commission, it does not appear necessary to repeat anew the suggestions made in April 1955. Moreover, until the new Interdepartmental Committee on Water Use Policy has started to function, we are not in a position to make much progress in defining Canadian policy on the Columbia River.

8. If you agree, therefore, Mr. Wershof, in his new capacity as Counsel for Canada at the International Joint Commission semi-annual session which begins on October 4, might suggest to General McNaughton that it does not seem necessary to repeat the proposals made in April nor to set out at length Canadian views on the Columbia River Basin, unless, of course, the United States Commissioners initiate a general discussion on the matter.<sup>200</sup>

J. LÉGER]

479.

DEA/5724-D-40

*Rapport de la réunion semi-annuelle
de la Commission mixte internationale*

Report on Semi-Annual Meeting of International Joint Commission

RESTRICTED

[Ottawa], October 4-7, 1955

I.J.C. DOCKET NO. 51 (AGENDA ITEM NO. 1) COLUMBIA RIVER REFERENCE

Mr. J.D. McLeod presented the Twenty-third Progress Report to the International Joint Commission by the International Columbia River Engineering Board for the period April

<sup>200</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:
OK [L.B. Pearson]

1, 1955 to September 30, 1955. This report indicates that good progress continues to be made on mapping, damsite and hydrological investigations in both Canada and the United States and that studies are being made in British Columbia on irrigation, domestic water supplies and soil surveys. On the matter of planning, studies are continuing in Canada on alternative methods of development of the Kootenay River including diversion of headwater flow to the Columbia at Canal Flat and the development on the main stem of the Columbia River at the Murphy Creek site near Trail. In the United States two special inter-agency reports providing factual data relating to the effect of various storage projects in the United States and Canada on flood control and power generation at downstream projects in the United States were released. Progress on construction in the United States in the Columbia River Basin was also included in the report read to the Commission.

In reply to the statement made at the April 1955 meeting of the International Joint Commission by General McNaughton concerning plans for the possible development of the Columbia River water resources in Canada, Governor Len Jordan requested that he be permitted to make public a statement which he would read at the meeting outlining the views of the United States section of the Commission. Governor Jordan's request was granted.<sup>201</sup> In his statement Governor Jordan challenged the legality of Canada's proposed diversion of the Columbia River and expressed the following views as to what constituted basic rights:

(1) Both the United States and Canada recognized the doctrine of appropriation as being applicable in the area under construction.

(2) Under the doctrine of appropriation, the appropriator who is first in time is first in right.

(3) A right is established when the actual appropriation is made.

On these axioms, the United States Chairman contends that should Canada proceed with the Columbia-Fraser diversion very great injury would result to downstream interests in the United States. He further expressed the view that if this diversion were to be effected by Canada, the United States as an injured Sovereign would not be limited to the redress provided for an injured "party" by Article II of the Boundary Waters Treaty. The four proposals made by General McNaughton at the April 1955 meeting concerning the projects which might be developed in co-operation with the United States for mutual benefit were not acceptable to the United States Section of the International Joint Commission. General McNaughton, in reply, stated that as far as he could see from first observation, all the arguments in Governor Jordan's statement had been considered before the Canadian proposals were made.<sup>202</sup> The legal aspects raised by Governor Jordan would be a matter for further study but he considered that what Canada had proposed was right and generous to the United States.

The discussion closed with General McNaughton's proposal that in the light of the importance of Governor Jordan's statement, a thorough study of it should be made by the International Joint Commission.

<sup>201</sup> Pour le texte in extenso de la déclaration du gouverneur Jordan, voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Comité permanent des Affaires extérieures, Procès-Verbaux et Témoignages, N° 13, séance du 7 juin, 1956, Appendice B, pp. 44-50.

For the verbatim text of Jordan's statement, see Canada, House of Commons, Standing Committee on External Affairs, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, No. 13, June 7, 1956, Appendix B, pp. 374-380.

<sup>202</sup> Pour la déclaration de McNaughton, ibidem, Appendice C, p. 51.
For McNaughton's statement, see ibid, Appendix C, p. 381.

480.

DEA/5724-E-40

*Note de la Direction de l'Amérique
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from American Division to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

RESTRICTED

[Ottawa], November 3, 1955

VISIT OF SENATOR NEUBERGER TO COLUMBIA RIVER VALLEY
IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

A few days ago Senator Neuberger made a visit to British Columbia seeking information about the Columbia River Valley. He made a speech to the Canadian Club; he made some statements to the press, and he called on Messrs. Herridge and Green, who are respectively CCF and Conservative Members of Parliament. He also spoke with the District Engineer of the Water Resources Division of Northern Affairs. Senator Neuberger's visit first came to the attention of people in Ottawa through a report from the District Engineer to his Department. In his speech to the Canadian Club (not attached) and in other statements, Senator Neuberger was quite friendly in tone, although he upheld the United States attitude on the diversion of water from the Columbia Valley. He endorsed, for example, the theory of compensation in electric power by the United States to Canada. He expressed the view that both the United States and Canada would have to move somewhat from their present positions in order to provide for a solution. He later wrote a letter to Mr. Lesage, Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, describing his trip and asking for certain information. Mr. Lesage wrote a friendly letter back, giving the information.

2. There is one aspect of Senator Neuberger's trip which seems to call for some action by this Department. In his letter to Mr. Lesage, and in his speech to the Canadian Club, Senator Neuberger said that he had made the trip on behalf of a Committee of the United States Senate and at the behest of the Chairman of the Committee. Mr. Lesage's letter made no reference to the fact that he had acted on behalf of the Senate Committee. In a recent conversation between Mr. Côté and Mr. Dubs of the U.S. Embassy, this question arose. Mr. Côté told Mr. Dubs about the exchange of letters and about Senator Neuberger's statement that he was acting on behalf of a Senate Committee, and the fact that Mr. Lesage's reply made no reference to this. Mr. Côté said to Mr. Dubs that he might be hearing from us on this point.

3. It seems to me that we might mention this matter in an informal way to the United States Embassy.<sup>203</sup> We might remind the Embassy that if a Senate Committee wants to conduct investigations in Canada, certain formalities are required. An extreme example of which might be involved is the elaborate arrangement made for the questioning of Gouzenko by two United States Senators. It was then arranged that a Canadian judge should preside at the questioning and other Canadian officials were present. If the investigation were of less political importance, it might be possible, of course, to arrange a sim-

<sup>203</sup> Notes marginales /Marginal notes:

I strongly concur. M. W[ershof]

This should be very informal. Neuberger is very friendly towards Canada & nothing should be done or said that might indispose him. We may need him over difficulties with the U.S. over the diversion of water problem. J. L[éger] pler procedure. However, rather than embark on this sort of thing, it would seem preferable that, if Senator Neuberger wishes to make a fact-finding expedition to any part of Canada in future, he might do so on his own account rather than on behalf of a Committee of the United States Senate. This would not, of course, prevent him from using any information he gained in his capacity as a member of a Senate Committee. He would probably gain just as much information in this way as by proceeding in a more formal capacity, and the procedural difficulties indicated above would be avoided.

4. If you concur, therefore, we shall speak along these lines to the Embassy, after receiving copies of the exchange of letters which Mr. Côté has undertaken to send to us.<sup>204</sup>

T. LEM. CARTER

481.

PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet
Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET

[Ottawa], November 21, 1955

...

COLUMBIA RIVER, B.C.; POSSIBLE DIVERSION INTO FRASER RIVER BASIN

6. The Secretary of State for External Affairs noted that the Chairman of the U.S. Federal Power Commission was apparently prepared to use his good offices to expedite the granting of applications now before the commission relating to construction of the natural gas pipe line between Alberta and eastern Canada. This was gratifying but sight should not be lost of the fact that an increasingly difficult situation was developing with the commission and other U.S. authorities about the study being made on the possibility of diverting water from the Columbia River into the Fraser River basin.

7. The Minister of Trade and Commerce thought a committee might be established to consider problems connected with the Columbia and Fraser River basins in British Columbia.

8. In the course of discussion it was suggested that, if the current surveys indicated the possibility and practicability, from an economic point of view of diverting certain waters from the Columbia into the Fraser to increase the latter river's power potential, this might prove to be a very useful bargaining point in obtaining reasonable downstream benefits on the Columbia River. However, this whole matter should be handled with the greatest caution. Whatever the legal situation might be, it did not seem equitable or practicable politics for Canada to divert waters which in their natural state would flow into the United States. Furthermore, there was the real problem of possible serious harm to the valuable salmon fisheries of the Fraser if the proposed diversion took place.

9. The Cabinet noted the various comments on the current survey of the possibility of diverting water from the Columbia River into the Fraser River basin and the harm that might be done to Canada's good relations with the United States if this delicate problem were mishandled in any way.

...

<sup>204</sup> Note marginale :Marginal note:

Note: At Mr Carter's request I spoke informally to Mr Dubbs of the U.S. Embassy along the lines of para[graph] 3 & keeping in mind the remarks of the Under-Secretary. Nov 16/55 A.F. B[roadbridge] 482.

DEA/5724-E-40

*Note de la Direction juridique
pour la Direction de l'Amérique*
Memorandum from Legal Division to American Division

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 25, 1955

Reference: Your memoranda of November 1, 1955† and November 3, 1955.†

LEGAL STATUS OF THE PROPOSED DIVERSION OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER INTO THE FRASER RIVER

Your memoranda under reference appear to raise the following questions:

- (1) Is the statement of Governor Jordan, Chairman of the United States Section of the International Joint Commission, on the doctrine of appropriation a correct statement of Canadian law applicable to the Columbia River Basin?
- (2) Is Governor Jordan's statement on the doctrine of appropriation a correct statement of the international law applicable to the Columbia River Basin?
- (3) What steps are necessary to make an appropriation in the sense referred to by Governor Jordan insofar as international law is concerned?
- (4) What steps are necessary to make this appropriation insofar as Canadian law is concerned?
- (5) Do we share Governor Jordan's view that the injury within the meaning of Article II of the Boundary Waters Treaty, which would result from the proposed diversion of water from the Columbia River, would be suffered by the United States as a high contracting party rather than by an injured party as described in Article II of the Boundary Waters Treaty?
- (6) If the answer to question (5) is in the affirmative, do we likewise agree with Governor Jordan that a high contracting party to the Boundary Waters Treaty is not limited in seeking redress to the provisions of Article II of the Boundary Waters Treaty?
- (7) If so, under what other authority would a high contracting party be entitled to seek such redress?
- (8) Do any of the foregoing questions require a reference to be made to the Department of Justice?

2. It is proposed to deal with all these questions together in my general remarks and then to deal with each one separately in the light of what I have said. Before going any further I would like to quote the precise language used by Governor Jordan in referring to appropriation doctrine in his statement on the Columbia River Reference at the semi-annual meeting of the International Joint Commission in Ottawa on October 4, 1955:

"With respect to the above-quoted remarks, (referring to General McNaughton's statement made at the semi-annual meeting of the International Joint Commission in Washington in April 1955 outlining the Canadian plans and views concerning development of the Columbia and adjacent basins), certain basic axioms should be mentioned. They are:

- (1) Both United States and Canada recognize the doctrine of appropriation as being applicable in the area under consideration.

(2) Under the doctrine of appropriation, the appropriator who is first in time is first in right.

(3) A right is established when the actual appropriation is made."

3. I find great difficulty in understanding exactly what Governor Jordan had in mind when referring to the "doctrine of appropriation". It would appear, however, that in developing this doctrine Governor Jordan was attempting to rely on the general international law principles governing the method by which states can add to their territories or lay claim to a particular piece of territory which may be in dispute. Arguing from this premise Governor Jordan is apparently taking the position based on an analogy to the doctrine of appropriation, that Canada is prohibited from taking any action on her side of the border which would impair or endanger the enormous power projects that the United States have constructed in the Columbia River Basin.

4. The heart of Governor Jordan's argument seems to be contained in the following quoted portion from page 5 of his statement on the Columbia River reference at the semi-annual meeting of the International Joint Commission in Ottawa on October 4, 1955.

"All of these projects were planned and all of the funds are committed in anticipation that the waters of these international rivers would not be utilized by Canada in such a way as to jeopardize downstream interests.

"Frankly, we are convinced that the diversion of 15,000,000 acre feet of water annually from the Columbia to another watershed wholly in Canada would result in very serious injury to downstream interests in the United States."

5. However, our view is that the appropriation theory — which relates solely to the acquisition of new territory or to territory in dispute — has no application whatsoever to the questions under consideration. Although we are dealing here with a question relating to boundary waters no actual boundary is in dispute. For these reasons no useful purpose would appear to be served to attempt to pursue the doctrine of appropriation further in relation to this matter.

6. This brings us to the question of what are the general principles of international law involved here? The fact of the matter is that the applicable international law principles have been embodied in the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 with particular reference to Article II.

7. Under international law it is recognized that rivers are a part of the territory of the riparian state through which they flow. "consequently (a) if a river lies wholly, — that is, from its source to its mouth, — within the boundaries of one and the same state such state owns it exclusively. As such rivers are under the sway of one state only and exclusively they are named national rivers ... but many rivers do not run through the land of one and the same state only, (b) whether they are so-called boundary rivers, that is, rivers which separate two different states from each other, or (c) whether they run through several states and are therefore named not-national rivers. Such rivers are owned by more than one state. Boundary rivers belong to the territory of the states they separate ... [A]nd rivers which run through several states belong to the territories of the states concerned; [e]ach state owns that part of the river which runs through its territory." (See pp. 370-372 of Oppenheim's International Law Volume I, fourth edition.)<sup>205</sup> Also no state in spite of its territorial supremacy is allowed "to alter the natural conditions of its own territory to the disadvantage of the natural conditions [of the territories] of a neighbouring state, for instance, to stop or to divert the flow of a river which runs from its own into a neighbouring territory". (See p. 254 ibid.)

<sup>205</sup> Voir/See Lassa Oppenheim, International Law: A Treatise, Volume I: Peace, London: Longmans, Green and Co. Ltd., 1928.

8. These general principles of international law have been clearly incorporated in the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 with particular reference to Article II. Thus the real question which has to be considered is whether the proposed diversions would be in violation of the Boundary Waters Treaty and the only article of this Treaty which appears to be strictly relevant to this question is Article II. In our view Article II vests in Canada: "the exclusive jurisdiction and control over the use and diversion whether temporary or permanent of all waters on its own side of the line which in their natural channels would flow across the boundary or into boundary waters" subject however to the condition that if Canadian interests divert or interfere with any such waters in such a manner as to cause any injury on the United States side of the boundary the United States interests concerned shall have the same rights and be entitled to the same legal remedies "as if such injury took place in the country where such diversion or interference occurs".

9. Thus in the event of any of the proposed diversions causing injury within the meaning of Article II of the Boundary Waters Treaty to any interest on the United States side of the boundary a claim can be made accordingly.

10. Turning now to the specific questions that you have raised, as indicated above I have had great difficulty in following Governor Jordan's arguments as to the relevancy on the doctrine of appropriation to this particular situation. In any event our view is that this doctrine as expounded by Governor Jordan is not in any way applicable to the present situation. This would seem to provide a complete answer to the first four questions.

11. As regard the fifth question, I assume it has reference to the following quotation from page 6 of Governor Jordan's statement:

"I think it proper to point out at this time that the injuries downstream occasioned by the annual diversion of 15,000,000 acre feet of Columbia water to another basin will be suffered by a Sovereign — one of the High Contracting Parties — namely, the United States of America. Obviously, therefore, the United States, as an injured Sovereign, will not be limited to the redress provided for an injured party (spelled with small letter 'p') by Article II."

12. As you can see from this statement Governor Jordan does not rule out the possibility of private interest being able to claim. He merely states that United States as one of the High Contracting Parties would also be able to make a claim which I think is perfectly correct assuming it became an injured party within the meaning of Article II.

13. As regards questions 6 and 7, as indicated above, the international law principles governing this matter have been incorporated in the Boundary Waters Treaty. While the Boundary Waters Treaty does not specifically limit the remedies of either Contracting Party to the provisions of the Boundary Waters Treaty nevertheless as a practical matter there is no other remedy open to the High Contracting Parties in view of the fact that the Treaty in effect furnishes an even more precise remedy than would be available under international law.

14. Coming to the last question, in our view the necessity of consulting with the Department of Justice does not arise, as all the points raised in your memorandum are of a purely international law character.

15. In conclusion I might say and with particular reference to paragraph 10 of your memorandum of November 1 that there is considerable similarity between this and the Chicago diversion question as discussed at length in our memorandum to you of November 15, 1955.† Exactly the same principles appear to be involved except that in the case of the Chicago diversion question the roles of Canada and the United States are reversed with Canada looking at the situation from the point of view of being a prospective injured party.

GILLES SICOTTE

SECTION E

DÉTOURNEMENT DE CHICAGO
CHICAGO DIVERSION

483.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 159-55

[Ottawa], July 22, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

CHICAGO DIVERSION — DRAFT NOTE TO THE UNITED STATES

On July 6, 1955 the House of Representatives of the United States Congress approved a bill concerning a proposal to divert from Lake Michigan at Chicago into the Illinois waterway for a period of three years, a maximum of 2500 C.F.S. in addition to all domestic pumpage, instead of the present maximum of 1500 C.F.S. An identical Senate bill is expected to be referred to the Senate Committee on Public Works and then to the Senate before the end of the current Congressional session.

2. Our Embassy in Washington predicts that the bill will be passed and that the President will not veto the bill as he did a similar bill last year.

3. In the past, the Government of Canada has always opposed any attempt to increase the diversion at Chicago on the grounds that such a diversion will adversely affect navigation and power in Canada. From a report to the International Joint Commission by the International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, dated June 14, 1955, it appears that the increased diversion of 1000 C.F.S. provided for in the United States bills would not have any substantial adverse effect on navigation in Lake Michigan and downstream. Such a diversion would, on the other hand, cause to Canada, over the next 15 years, a total loss in power of 310,100,000 kilowatt hours. It is therefore proposed that a note be sent to the State Department at an appropriate time. This note would express the view that Canada would prefer that the International Joint Commission terminate its studies of the levels of the Great Lakes before any unilateral action be taken as regards the Chicago diversion. It would further state that unless an agreement is reached by Canada and the United States to replace the power lost by Canada because of the diversion. Canada reserves the right to claim for damages under Article II of the Boundary Waters Treaty. The note would also refer to Article VI of the Treaty between Canada and the United States concerning the Niagara River signed on February 27, 1950,<sup>206</sup> and suggest the revision of this article, which provides that the water made available for power purposes by that Treaty be divided equally between the two countries.

<sup>206</sup> Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1950, N° 3./See Canada, Treaty Series, 1950, No. 3.

Recommendations

4. The Secretary of State for External Affairs therefore recommends that the Embassy in Washington be instructed to deliver to the United States Department, at an appropriate time, a note along the lines of the attached one.

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Projet de note

Draft Note

On instruction of my Government, I should like to refer to Bill H.R. 3210, approved by the House of Representatives on July 6, 1955, concerning a proposal to divert water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois waterway for a period of 3 years at an annual average rate of 2500 c.f.s., in addition to all domestic pumpage.

The Canadian Government considers that implementation of this legislation would have a serious detrimental effect on the power potential of the Niagara and the St. Lawrence river. The interim report dated June 14, 1955 to the International Joint Commission by the International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, appointed to study the water levels of Lake Ontario indicates that the effect on Lake Ontario levels of an increase of 1000 c.f.s. in the diversion at Chicago for a period of 3 years, would cause an aggregate total loss of power to the actual and planned power developments in Canada amounting to 310,100,000 k.w.h. over the next 15 years.

The Canadian Government therefore considers that, unless the United States Government agrees to replace the quantity of power which Canada would lose if this diversion were effected, the Canadian Government would have a right, under accepted principles of international law and under paragraph 1 of Article 2 of the Boundary Waters Treaty, to claim for damages to compensate this serious loss of power.

The Canadian Government considers also that the loss of power potential at Niagara Falls due to the diversion of waters contemplated in H.R. 3210 would necessitate a revision of Article VI of the Treaty between the United States and Canada concerning the Niagara river signed on February 27, 1950, which provides that the water made available for power purposes by that Treaty shall be divided equally between the two countries.

The Canadian Government wishes to draw attention to the fact that the Interim Report on the effect on Lake Ontario of an increase of 1000 c.f.s. in the diversion at Chicago for a period of 3 years deals with one aspect of a matter now before the International Joint Commission and that it would be in the best interest of Canada and the United States to allow the Commission to complete its studies under the Reference of 1950 on the levels of Lake Ontario, before any change in arrangements affecting the levels and the power developments in the Great Lakes basin and the St. Lawrence river are authorized.<sup>207</sup> 484.

DEA/1760-B-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 26, 1955

CHICAGO DIVERSION

I attach for your approval the text of a revised draft Note to the State Department on the Chicago Diversion question.<sup>208</sup>

2. The text of the revised draft differs in several respects from the draft which was previously submitted to you and which you submitted to Cabinet. We learned from the Cabinet Secretariat that Ministers made various observations on the previous draft and indicated that it might be improved. Accordingly, a meeting was called of representatives of the Cabinet Secretariat, the Department of Northern Affairs and this Department. In the course of discussion one or two other changes in the draft Note were suggested. It appeared particularly that the reference to the Niagara Treaty was unfortunate as it was not in the Canadian interest to open up the question of the revision of this Treaty and, particularly, the question of the division of water between the two countries which is dealt with in Article 6 of the Treaty. Furthermore, on the basis of the engineers' report of June 14, 1955 to the International Joint Commission, it seems clear that the basis of our argument should be the damage to our power interests rather than the damage to our navigation interests. Accordingly, it seemed best not to rest the argument on the Boundary Waters Treaty as the protection afforded to our power interests by this Treaty is not very strong. It also seemed preferable to alter the reference to the proceedings before the International Joint Commission and, in this connection, to refer to the President's memorandum of last year when he vetoed the previous Bill.

3. A revised text was accordingly prepared at the meeting. It has been approved by Mr. Pelletier of the Cabinet Secretariat. Mr. Côté, of the Department of Northern Affairs, has shown it to Mr. Lesage who has expressed his concurrence. As the congressional Session is drawing to a close, it seems desirable to present this Note as soon as possible. If you approve, therefore, I will instruct the Embassy in Washington to present this Note to the State Department.<sup>209</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

<sup>207</sup> Le Cabinet a examiné cette note à sa réunion du 22 juillet 1955 et suggéré qu'elle soit modifiée de manière à rendre plus spécifique la référence à la perte potentielle d'énergie électrique, et à protéger la position future du Canada dans l'éventualité de conséquences négatives sur la navigation et les niveaux du lac.

Cabinet considered this note at its meeting of July 22, 1955 and suggested that the note be amended to make the references to the loss of power potential more specific and to protect Canada's future position in the event that there were adverse effects on navigation and lake levels.

<sup>208</sup> Voir/See Document 486.

<sup>209</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

postpone sending this in view of news from Washington L.B. [earson] [July 28, 1955] 485.

DEA/1760-B-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-1338

Ottawa, July 26, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your WA-1188 of July 15.†

CHICAGO DIVERSION

My immediately following telegram contains the text of a draft Note on this subject. We are seeking approval of the Minister for this text. In our view it is desirable that this Note should be presented to the State Department as soon as the Minister gives his approval. We assume that at this stage of the congressional Session the Chicago Diversion Bill may be raised in the Senate at any time, and we think it advisable that our view should be presented to the State Department before this takes place. If you object strongly to this course or to any part of the text of the Note, would you telephone either to Carter or to Rogers. We have in mind that a further short note should be presented if the bill passes the Senate, as was done on August 24, 1954,<sup>210</sup> in an attempt to obtain a presidential veto.

2. The text may have to be adjusted in some respects, particularly if the Bill before the Senate has a different number from that before the House as indicated in your telegram WA-1188.

486.

DEA/1760-B-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-1339

Ottawa, July 26, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

CHICAGO DIVERSION

Following is text of draft Note. Text begins:

"On instructions from my Government, I should like to refer to Bill H.R. 3210 approved by the House of Representatives on July 6, 1955, concerning a proposal to divert water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway for experimental purposes in aid of navigation for a period of three years at an annual average rate of 2,500 cubic feet per second, in addition to all domestic pumpage. Similar bills have been introduced in the past few years requesting that Congress authorize such a diversion to promote navigation and for other purposes.

<sup>210</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 616.

2. The Canadian Government has consistently objected to such a proposed diversion because of the harmful effects it would have on Canadian interests. The President of the United States on September 3, 1954, withheld approval from a previous bill submitted for his signature and gave written reasons for his action. In his memorandum the President pointed to the fact that studies were currently before the International Joint Commission on this subject.

3. Since that date, the International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, in accordance with instructions from the International Joint Commission, submitted an interim report dated June 14, 1955. This report indicates the effect on Lake Ontario levels of an increase of 1,000 cubic feet per second in diversion at Chicago for a period of three years. From the viewpoint of navigation the loss is estimated at between three-eighths and five-eighths of an inch on Lake Ontario and in the harbour of Montreal. The aggregate total loss of power to actual and planned power developments in Canada which would result from the three year experimental diversion is indicated to be 310,100,000 kilowatt-hours over the fifteen years during which the effects of the three year diversion would be felt.

4. The Canadian Government has not yet had an opportunity to assess the full effects of the proposed diversion on navigation and commerce using the lower Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River. The Canadian Government considers, however, that the implementation of this legislation would have a serious detrimental effect on the power-potential of the Niagara and St. Lawrence rivers.

5. If, notwithstanding these considerations, Bill H.R. 3210 is enacted, the Canadian Government considers that the Canadian power and navigation interests affected should be compensated in an appropriate manner."

487.

DEA/1760-B-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-1274

Washington, July 27, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your teletype EX-1338 and EX-1339 and our teletype WA-1261 of July 26.†

CHICAGO DIVERSION

As we indicated earlier today by telephone, we are now inclined to think, on the basis of the information in our WA-1261 and further information obtained today that it would be better not to deliver a note on the Chicago diversion at this time.

2. We have been able today to obtain information from the State Department which, in our view, confirms the report given in our WA-1261 of July 26 that it was unlikely that the Senate would act on the Chicago diversion legislation at this session. George Vest of the State Department's Canadian desk told us today that the information he gave us yesterday came to him from Senator Dirksen's office via the State Department's congressional liaison office. In our view this adds to the reliability of the information in our WA-1261. In the second place we learned today from the Senate Public Relations Committee staff that the Committee still has not scheduled any action on the Chicago diversion legislation and Senator Dirksen's legislative assistant told us that he was "quite certain" that no further action would be taken at this session. Thirdly, and this, in our view, is quite conclusive, the State Department told us that in a recent letter to the Secretary of State, Senator Dirksen asked the State Department to examine all aspects of the Chicago diversion in detail "during the fall and summer" so that as much information as possible would be available when the Senate re-convenes.

3. We deduce from this information, (and we are, of course, relying heavily on the substance of Senator Dirksen's letter to Mr. Dulles) that the Senate will not act on the Chicago diversion legislation in the few remaining days of this session. In our view this would mean that the impact of a note delivered now would be considerably less than we should like it to be. It seems to us that a better time for the delivery of a note would be when the Senate begins to consider this matter again at the next session. Perhaps the best course would be for us to hold in reserve the draft note given in your EX-1339 of July 26 and to deliver it only if, despite our prediction, the Senate should act on the Chicago diversion legislation at the present session.

4. As far as the State Department is concerned, it is clear that they consider the Chicago diversion to have run its course for this session. They do not intend to reply to Senator Dirksen's letter until their legal division has had an opportunity to study all aspects of the Chicago diversion in the light of the interim report prepared by the International Lake Ontario Joint Board of Engineers. One of the questions the State Department's legal division will be asked to examine is whether or not a protest on the loss of power would be valid under Article II of the 1909 boundary waters treaty. Specifically they will examine the question whether, if additional water were to be diverted at Chicago, Canada would automatically be in a position to protest concerning the adverse effects on Canadian power potential at Niagara, and to claim compensation. Another question which may be examined is whether or not, if a Canadian protest on the question of power were filed, claims for compensation would be heard in United States or Canadian courts. We gathered also that some thought will be given to the relationship between a possible Canadian protest and request for compensation on the Chicago diversion and similar action by the United States in connection with proposed Canadian developments on the Yukon and Columbia Rivers.

5. You may be interested to know that Vest told us on a personal basis that in his view the State Department should continue to oppose the Chicago diversion and should, if the time comes, recommend presidential veto. Vest adopts this view, he said, because it seems to him that the proposed increased diversion at Chicago is a direct infringement on the Niagara Treaty.

488.

DEA/1760-B-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States*

TELEGRAM EX-1378

Ottawa, August 3, 1955

RESTRICTED

Reference: Your WA-1274 of July 27 and our EX-1338 and EX-1339 of July 26.

CHICAGO DIVERSION

We concur in your suggestion that it is not necessary to present the Note now as it is most unlikely that the Senate will act on the bill at this session. If you learn that the Senate will act on the bill, you should inform us so that we may seek the Minister's approval for the text sent you in our telegram EX-1339.

2. It does, however, seem desirable that we should give some indication of our stand to the United States authorities in view of statements that have been made to the effect that Canada has not objected to this legislation this year. We suggest that this might be done by a letter from Glazebrook to Outerbridge Horsey or at about that level. This letter could say that the Canadian Government remains opposed to the passage of this legislation. It could further say that we understand that the Senate will not act on the bill at this session. The State Department could, however, be asked to let us know when it appears likely that action would be taken on the bill in order to give the Canadian Government a chance to present its objections in more detail. We appreciate that you would not want to rely solely on the State Department for information as to possible action on the bill, but would want to make enquiries in various places, as you have done in the past.

489.

DEA/1760-B-40

Le ministre de l'ambassade aux États-Unis au directeur de la Direction des Affaires du Commonwealth du département d'État des États-Unis

Minister, Embassy in United States, to Director, Office of Commonwealth Affairs, Department of State of United States

Washington, August 5, 1955

Dear Mr. Horsey,

You will be familiar with the exchange of views which have been held periodically in the past many months between officials of the State Department and of this Embassy concerning what is commonly called the Chicago Diversion. Recently these conversations have been more frequent, particularly after the House of Representatives on July 6 approved H.R. 3210, and after S-2550 was introduced and referred to the Senate Committee on Public Works on July 14. In view of the statements, however, which I understand have been made to the effect that Canada has not objected to this proposed legislation this year, I have been instructed to confirm in writing that the Canadian Government remains opposed to the passage of this legislation.

I have also been requested to ask that you be kind enough to inform us when it appears likely that action might be taken on S-2550, in order to give the Canadian Government an opportunity to present its objections in more detail than we have done so far.

Yours sincerely,

G. DE T. GLAZEBROOK

6<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 6EAUX TERRITORIALES : ENTRÉE DIXON ET DÉTROIT HECATE TERRITORIAL WATERS: DIXON ENTRANCE AND HECATE STRAIT

Les documents traitant de ce sujet n'ont pas été déclassifiés.

Documentation on this subject has not been declassified.

7<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 7LA CHASSE AUX PHOQUES PELAGIC SEALING

490.

PCO

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 229-55

[Ottawa], November 18, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

NORTH PACIFIC FUR SEALS CONFERENCE

A conference on North Pacific fur seals will meet in Washington on November 28, 1955, and the participants will be Canada, the United States, the Soviet Union and Japan. The purpose of the conference is the negotiation of a convention to replace that of 1911 between the same four countries (the United Kingdom represented Canada in 1911).<sup>211</sup> Russian co-operation under the 1911 convention was never complete, and it ceased in 1924.<sup>212</sup> The convention was denounced by Japan in October, 1940.<sup>213</sup> Since 1942 a bilateral agreement between the United States and Canada has taken the place of the convention insofar as these two countries are concerned.<sup>214</sup> By the Yoshida-Dulles exchange of letters of February 7, 1951, Japan undertook voluntarily to prohibit pelagic sealing by its nationals until a new convention could be negotiated.<sup>215</sup>

2. Since 1911, Canada has joined in a number of regional agreements for the conservation of fish and sea mammals, and such agreements are desirable not only for conservation reasons but also because they help to prevent international disputes. If Japan and the Soviet Union agree to a new convention at the Washington meeting, this will be some indication of their willingness to join in similar agreements for the conservation of fish. If, on the other hand, no convention is agreed to, there is a possibility that the Soviet Union might make direct concessions to Japan in order to reach bilateral understandings on fur seals and fish.

<sup>211</sup> Voir/See Volume 1, Document 701.

<sup>212</sup> Voir volume 3, les documents 836-839 et 842./See Volume 3, Documents 836-839, 842.

<sup>213</sup> Voir volume 8, les documents 288-291./See Volume 8, Documents 288-291.

<sup>214</sup> Voir/See Volume 9, Document 1164.

<sup>215</sup> Voir/See Volume 17, Document 953.

3. The 1911 convention was negotiated because widespread pelagic sealing (the killing of seals at sea) had seriously reduced the number of fur seals in the North Pacific. The Convention prohibited pelagic sealing, and the result was a great increase in the number of seals. Preliminary discussions between United States, Japanese and Canadian officials show that there is general agreement on the desirability of continued conservation of the seal herds by controls on pelagic sealing. Japanese officials maintain, however, that the seals are too numerous and that they are depleting stocks of fish, and thus Japan will likely propose that the new convention should permit limited pelagic sealing. Because of the difficulties of enforcement, there has probably always been some pelagic sealing along the Japanese coast. It is not desirable to include a provision in an international agreement, if its observance is almost impossible for one of the signatories. The United States has proposed that the new convention should "provide for the maximum sustainable productivity of the fur seal herds, modified to the extent found to be appropriate because of any demonstrable effect of these herds upon commercially important stocks of fish." The Canadian delegation should support acceptance of this formula or one like it, and could accept provisions for limited pelagic sealing, if the Japanese delegation makes a sufficiently strong case. The skins taken by Japan pelagically could be deducted from her share from the Pribilof Islands.

4. The alternative to pelagic sealing is to kill the seals on the islands to which they go each year for mating. These islands are the Pribilof Islands (United States territory), the Commander Islands (Soviet) and Robben Island (formerly Japanese, now under Soviet control). As far as is known the Pribilof herd is many times the size of that on either the Commander or Robben Islands. In return for agreeing to prohibit pelagic sealing, in which some Canadians engaged, Canada received 15% of the skins from the seals killed annually on the Pribilof Islands under the 1911 convention. This was increased to 20% under the bilateral agreement of 1942 with the United States, under which the two countries divided up the share which formerly went to Japan. In recent years the net proceeds from the sale of Canada's share of the skins have averaged over $600,000 annually, which sum has been paid to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. As Japan is now anxious to resume participation in a fur seal convention, the United States has proposed that the new convention should distribute the Pribilof skins according to the shares in the 1911 convention. This is a reasonable proposal and should be supported by the Canadian delegation.

5. Under the 1911 convention, Canada was also to receive 15% of the skins from the Commander Islands, and 10% of the skins from Robben Island. The total value of the Commander skins received up until the Soviet Union ceased co-operation in 1924 was less than $6,000. Under the San Francisco Peace Treaty with Japan, Japan renounced its sovereignty over Robben Island, but the territory was not ceded to another state. The Soviet Union is exercising de facto control, but the delegation should ensure that the wording of the new convention does not prejudice the final decision on the sovereignty over Robben Island. The total skins received by Canada from this island under the 1911 convention were worth about $11,000.

6. There have been no preliminary discussions with Soviet officials, and the Soviet Union has not given any indication as to whether or not it will agree to divide the skins from the Commander and Robben Islands in accordance with the 1911 convention. The delegation should press for such an arrangement, but if it is not possible to secure Soviet acceptance, the practical importance to Canada will not be very great in view of the small number of skins from these islands received in the past. It may be that a concession could be made on this question to the Soviet Union in order to secure agreement on other points.

7. It is proposed that the new convention should provide for a scheme for co-ordinated or joint research on fur seals and on their management. The delegation should support this proposal. The research reports will assist in formulating future policy on the size of the seal herds.

8. The 1911 convention permits pelagic sealing by Indians and other aborigines by primitive methods. The number of seals taken by Canadian Indians in recent years is small. The United States has proposed that there be no corresponding article in the new convention. The delegation should oppose this suggestion, but if it is agreed to, the Canadian Indians might be compensated from our share of the Pribilof skins.

9. The United States has suggested dropping the provisions in the 1911 convention on sea otters and patrols, as they have been inoperative. The provision on enforcement is, however, similar to that recently incorporated in the North Pacific Fisheries convention, and so it is suggested that it be retained.

10. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the concurrence of the Minister of Fisheries, therefore recommends:

(a) That a delegation to be named by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in consultation with the Minister of Fisheries, be authorized to negotiate and sign a North Pacific fur seals convention with representatives of the United States, Japan and the Soviet Union;

(b) That the head of the Canadian delegation so named and one other nominee be granted full powers to sign a convention, subject to subsequent ratification by Canada, based upon the 1911 convention, with the modifications set out hereunder;

(c) That the convention should provide for the maximum sustainable productivity of the fur seal herds, modified to the extent found to be appropriate because of any demonstrable effect of these herds upon commercially important stocks of fish, and that this formula may be interpreted to provide for pelagic sealing on a limited government-controlled scale;

(d) That the delegation should seek a division of fur seal skins based on that in the 1911 convention, on the understanding that it may not be possible for the other parties to secure a share of the skins from the islands under Soviet control, due care being taken to ensure that the wording of the convention does not prejudice the question of the sovereignty over Robben Island;

(e) That the convention should provide for a scheme for co-ordinated or joint research on fur seals and on their management and on the problems connected therewith;

(f) That the delegation should seek the retention of the provision on the rights of Indians, but may agree to its elimination;

(g) That the delegation should support the retention of the provisions of the 1911 convention on enforcement and the omission of the provisions on sea otters and patrols.<sup>216</sup>

L.B. PEARSON

<sup>216</sup> Ces recommandations ont été approuvées par le Cabinet le 23 novembre 1955. La délégation canadienne était dirigée par George R. Clarke.

These recommendations were approved by Cabinet on November 23, 1955. The Canadian Delegation was headed by George R. Clarke.

491.

DEA/12386-10-40

*Extrait d'une note du chef de la Direction de l'Amérique
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures*

Extract from Memorandum from Head, American Division, to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], January 5, 1956

NORTH PACIFIC FUR SEALS CONFERENCE

The North Pacific Fur Seals Conference which opened in Washington on November 28, is still in session. An attempt will be made in the next few days to reach agreement on a new convention. Although it would be premature to make any report on the conference, therefore, you may be interested in some general observations which derive from my attendance at the conference for two weeks in December.

7. The principal issue at the conference is whether or not pelagic sealing, or the killing of seals at sea, is to be permitted. The 1911 convention prohibited pelagic sealing because an undue number of seals had been killed in the years prior to 1911, and the herds had been reduced to very small numbers. Accordingly, drastic conservation measures were required. In 1955, on the other hand, the Pribilof (U.S.) herds are at a very high level — the population is possibly too large — and hence some relaxation in conservation measures may be possible. It is in the light of the high population of the herds that the Japanese delegation put forward proposals for the permission of pelagic sealing. Their arguments were that pelagic sealing would increase the number of seals killed and hence the revenue derived from the herds, and secondly, that there were special domestic considerations off the Japanese coast. The Japanese coastal fishermen have boats which would lend themselves to sealing, and they would catch seals when they were not engaged in catching sword fish and porpoises. In fact, at present a good deal of poaching goes on along the Japanese coast, so that an international convention permitting pelagic sealing would amount partly to legalizing what is already going on. A further argument of the Japanese is that the seals are so numerous that the amount of fish they eat is a considerable factor. This argument is of interest to Canada, for the fisheries are of much more importance to us than the seal herds, and if the fish eaten by the seals is really a considerable factor, then for this reason we would also favour cutting down the size of the seal herds.

8. Unfortunately, there had been no prior consultation before the conference, with the Soviet Union, and as a result the Soviet delegation came prepared to advocate a convention similar to that of 1911 and without much apparent flexibility in their instructions. Moreover, the majority of the seals off the Japanese coast come from the Soviet-controlled rookeries, and hence their initial reaction to the Japanese proposal was one of opposition. The Soviet delegation in general seemed to be guided by the instructions of the Soviet department which controls seal herds, and did not seem to have much general background on fisheries convention questions; nor did political considerations appear to play much role in their attitude. For instance, their opposition to the Japanese proposal was very clearly put, whereas from a political point of view one might have expected the Soviet Union to avoid direct opposition to the Japanese position.

9. The Canadian delegation is considering putting forward a compromise proposal in an attempt to bridge the gap between the Japanese and Soviet positions. A convention would be signed which would provide for an organization similar to that in other fisheries conventions. There would be a commission representing the four governments for organizing co-operative research and advising on the numbers of seals to be killed. During the next five years in particular, there would be an intensive research programme. At the end of the period, the parties would make a decision on the Japanese proposal for pelagic sealing. As the rules of procedure for the convention would require unanimous agreement on measures by all the four parties, any one would still be able to veto pelagic sealing five years hence. However, the convention would leave open the question of pelagic sealing, and an attempt would be made to resolve it on the basis of scientific investigation. If the delegation puts forward these compromise proposals, it will do so on the grounds that it is in the Canadian interest, for the general reasons set out above, that the conference should succeed in drawing up a convention. If the conference fails to agree on a convention, it will make the future prospects of the North Pacific Fisheries Commission, and to a lesser extent other similar commissions, somewhat less promising.

T. LEM. CARTER

8<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 8

SOUVERAINETÉ DANS L'ARCTIQUE
ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY

Les documents traitant de ce sujet n'ont pas été déclassifiés.

Documentation on this subject has not been declassified.

9<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 9

PUBLICITÉ SUR LE CANADA AUX ÉTATS-UNIS
PUBLICITY IN UNITED STATES ABOUT CANADA

492.

A.D.P.H./Vol. 1

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, June 9, 1955

Dear Mike [Pearson],

Bob Farquharson has just recently completed a memorandum giving his first conclusions on the business of Canadian information in the United States, and has embodied them in a memorandum to me dated June 8th. I am sending this on to you in this personal letter, first because of your own close interest in and knowledge of the subject, and secondly because the memorandum might be taken in one or two paragraphs as being somewhat critical of the Department's information operation and perhaps unsuitable for "official" submission.

I feel pretty sure that you will agree with me that the memorandum is as sound as it is direct. I think that without exception I can corroborate (for what that is worth) Bob's own evidence. His whole approach in the memorandum is a reflection of the wise and successful way in which he handles information matters himself here in the Embassy. He is quite invaluable in his present post.

As you may know, I have asked Bob during the summer to visit a number of our "outside" posts to review what they are doing and what else they might do in the way of information activity. This next week he is to spend a couple of days in Detroit and in Chicago. Later on he will visit our posts on the coast. Thereafter he will no doubt have additional advice to give us.

There are no further comments I need make on the memorandum, except perhaps to say that if we can bring about slowly a modest expansion of staff in the United States under Bob's direction, I feel sure that we would get good value out of it — despite the tight situation the Department is in. It might be, for instance, that we could add a couple of officers a year for use in the United States, and Bob himself might be associated in their selection.

When you have a chance I will be glad to have your comments.

Yours ever,

[A.D.P. HEENEY]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Note de l'agent d'information
pour l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis*

*Memorandum from Information Officer
to Ambassador in United States*

June 8, 1955

CANADIAN INFORMATION IN THE UNITED STATES

The major criticism of the present Information organization in the United States is that the four officers in Washington and New York are in danger of being engulfed in routine. They are already captives of their telephones.

Answering enquiries and circulating major policy announcements represents far too large a part of their work. It slows down the very important business of making personal contacts with newspapers, correspondents, members of the House and Senate, and government officials.

As a long term project contact is being made with University professors and other educational leaders and the response indicates that a rewarding field has yet to be really worked. There is a real opportunity to get an important group of key men to understand the Canadian viewpoint. In this connection I would like to see machinery established to keep in touch with Canadian professors spending a year at an American University and also to keep Canadian post graduate students well enough informed of developments that they are in a position effectively to answer questions.

Information officers are not seeking to increase the mill run of news from Canada. They are trying to provide material and stimulate interest which will lead to more interpretative articles, more editorial discussion and some glimmering understanding "of the nice people up in the north". It is the particular objective to act when difficulties are seen developing with the hope that the more serious publications and more of the leaders will know Canada's case. Sometimes Canadians here have the feeling that despite the very real good-will that exists towards our country, most Americans do not know the Canadian case, do not even know that a dispute exists.

Successful work along this line can be accomplished only when writers and leaders have confidence in the integrity of the Information service. It requires a factual and not a propaganda approach. It means that questions of fact have to be answered even when the answers individually do not always support the Canadian position.

It is most important that the Canadian case be placed before individual congressmen and senators. So far the policy has been followed of sending material to the Hill only when requested or to politicians known personally to the officers. This approach is slowly widening and there has been an increasing use of Canadian documents in the Congressional Record. Enquiries originating from Congressmen and Senators are now largely for information which can be used to needle the government or alternatively for use in the preparation of legislation. There has been, for instance, a lively and unpromoted interest in Canada's handling of the Salk vaccine. The Embassy had the material mimeographed and ready but it was handed out only to those who asked for it.

The officers in Washington are striving to stimulate the flow of more material from other government departments and at times from provincial governments. They are doing their best to provide as much guidance as possible for information-starved consulates. Under difficult conditions consulate staffs have done their best and the friendly relations have made the work pleasant. I hope before the end of the summer to have visited most of the posts in the United States.

The work at New York is quite different from the work in Washington. New York has the national magazines, the news and picture services, the great concentration of free lance writers, the television and radio networks. It is the place to create interest in Canadian feature stories, in magazine articles, in pictures, in any Canadian development that has a dramatic touch.

A staff of two officers — recently reduced from three — is not enough to provide proper service for people who call in person or telephone the New York office. And if the officers in New York are desk bound the unfortunate spiral starts. Because they don't get around fewer writers call and in the end the information job is reduced to doing the many things in an information way that would have to be done by other officers if there was no Information personnel. It should be remembered that the senior officer at present is, in addition, the press officer to the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations and for long periods of the year this takes up all his time. Only an officer without ambition and without imagination would fail to be frustrated in this situation.

Just in passing, and not suggested as something to emulate, the British Information Service has in New York a total staff of 141 with an additional 20 in Chicago and 16 in Washington and information officers at all other consular posts in the country.

At the seven other Canadian posts in the U.S. information work is divided among the staff with in each case the head of post taking a lively and an active interest. Reports from all posts collected in advance of writing this memo, indicate a strong feeling that opportunities are being missed through lack of staff and lack of time. There was a repeated request for more guidance papers from Ottawa. The consuls general have done their best to get to know editors but have found difficulty getting around their large areas.

All posts reported a need for material in shorter and more useful form than the texts of speeches which are the main ration at the moment. They would like condensed up-to-date papers on Canadian developments, more library material.

Several emphasized the importance of the universities as a place to send Canadian information. Recent experience in the posts has indicated a more promising return from speeches distributed to university professors than from speeches passed on to newspapers many days after delivery.

The posts are all expanding their distribution of teacher's kits and fact sheets. With more help this could be very much enlarged and I believe that the effort would have good results. There has been nothing but commendation for the material we have been distributing. I believe, however, that specific study should be given to the age groups we are trying to reach when we have found out what these age groups are. I would like to see more attractive printing of the fact sheets and a wider selection. While, as I said, circulation is increasing, we are, after all, only providing a trickle of information into the vast school system of this country.

Films represent the greatest expenditure the government is making in the Information field but apart from National Film Board commercial and travel film distribution the time and effort we put into seeing that these films are shown is so far out of line with the original expenditure as to constitute a serious waste of resources. Film demands vary directly with promotion. It is only fair, however, to say that every post puts as much time as it can spare into servicing films.

My criticism is not with the posts. There has not been enough liaison with the Film Board and clerks looking after films have not been given enough guidance. Mr. T.V. Adams of the Film Board has been making a tour of consulates and I believe that his recommendations will lead to a more efficient operation. There is enough capital invested in the film libraries to justify frequent visits from Film Board officers and to justify at least one person working full time at distribution.

All posts have a problem with speeches to be made as well as circulated and an easily revisable speakers' handbook would be welcomed in posts in all countries. The rest of the world does not face the opportunity, however, that the Kiwanis BE KIND TO CANADA week affords.

And now that Canada no longer celebrates Empire Day, Kiwanians in the U.S. have started to do so and this means another round of requests and another scurry for material, on the Commonwealth as well as Canada.

The Information Division in Ottawa is the natural fount of the knowledge the posts seek. It has, however, been steadily reduced in size and there is again the problem of the day by day enquiries taking up the time needed for more creative work.

I would like to see a re-evaluation of the feature photo operation. Pictures are a valuable source of information and picture editing in one of the most technical of Information jobs. Pictures are also expensive and a well trained picture editor, with nothing else to take up his time, would prevent wastage of money. In the picture field there is room for a pooling of all Canadian resources.

A team of writer-researchers could fill a need all posts feel for new material. I am not suggesting articles ready to pop into papers but rather the information on which newspapers could write their own stories, and speakers could write their own speeches. For special occasions, such as July 1, a name writer, or name writers in both French and English, could be assigned to do by-line features.

Canadians have long complained of the ignorance of Canada south of the border. Leaving out Time Magazine staff reporters — who, incidentally, write almost entirely for the Canadian edition not seen here — there were, when I last counted, only three staff employees of the American press in Canada. Neither AP nor UP employ their own men but rely on CP and BUP. News from Canada lacks an American accent, is quite often not understood and so an unfortunate amount is scrapped.

That is one reason why answering enquiries from the press is such an important job in every Canadian post. The volume of enquiries varies directly with the ability to provide information.

It is also the reason why it is so important that posts in this country be supplied with advance texts of important speeches and kept informed of Canadian developments. And because of this comparative block in press links with Canada it is all the more important that high level persons make more important speeches in the United States.

But back-stopping for press failures is at best a makeshift and there are hopes that sometime the Canadian Press will not be able to say that it alone, of all the national news services, covers its country for A.P.

If Canadian Information in the United States were to be scaled on the basis private industry now practises, it would require many times the present budget. But large information operations by governments are even more suspect abroad than they are at home and are in danger of doing more harm than good. Therefore I am in favour of maintaining a strictly factual Information Service with a small staff and a small budget.

The modest operation I believe to be desirable requires expansion from the present token level. This is particularly true in New York but it is also true in Washington and in the other posts as well.

Recruiting the proper type of person is the real difficulty and I would sooner carry on with the present limitations than rush into hiring men or women of whose judgment I was not sure. I would also like to see the staff built up on a gradual basis with the work developing first rather than engaging the man to build up the work.

It is some time since Information officers have been recruited as such. While good work has been done by untrained officers, the department has not the facilities for training professional Information workers. The type of men needed cannot be secured as long as the government limits the promotion of all recruited in this category.

The Department does not hesitate to ask young foreign service officers to take on all types of work including Information. In the same way young Information-trained men could be engaged as foreign service officers and given the opportunity to do Information work and in smaller posts take on other duties as well. This might be the answer to the problem in some of the consular posts. On the present rotation system it would provide a haven of professionals in Ottawa.

R.A. FARQUHARSON

CHAPITRE V/CHAPTER V
EUROPE ET L'UNION SOVIÉTIQUE
EUROPE AND THE SOVIET UNION

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1
EUROPE DE L'OUEST
WESTERN EUROPE

SECTION A
INTÉGRATION D'EUROPE DE L'OUEST
WESTERN EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

493.

DEA/11143-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], September 23, 1955

MR. SPAAK'S VIEWS ON EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

In preparation for your talks with Mr. Spaak,<sup>1</sup> you may be interested in the latest information available to us on the progress of the Commission set up by the Messina Conference to study various aspects of European economic integration.<sup>2</sup> Mr. Spaak has, as you know, been spending a good deal of his time and energy this summer with these Commissions of technical experts and has been Chairman of the Steering Committee to which they report.

The Foreign Ministers of the Six Messina Countries (of the European Coal and Steel Community) met in The Hague on September 6 to consider Mr. Spaak's first report on the work of the Commissions. Our Embassies in The Hague and Brussels have reported that Mr. Spaak requested and received confirmation that the other Foreign Ministers concerned stood by the decision in principle which they had taken at Messina "to find means to establish a United Europe by developing common institutions, by the gradual merger of national economies, by the creation of a common market and by the progressive harmonization of <sup>1</sup> Pearson avait l'intention de rencontrer Spaak en novembre 1955 en revenant de sa visite en Union soviétique et en Inde. Des problèmes d'horaire ont forcé l'annulation de la réunion.

Pearson planned to meet Spaak in November 1955 en route home from his visit to the Soviet Union and India. Scheduling problems forced the cancellation of the meeting.

<sup>2</sup> Les ministres des Affaires étrangères de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, de la Belgique, de la France, de l'Italie, du Luxembourg et des Pays-Bas se sont réunis à Messine (Italie), les 1<sup>er</sup> et 2 juin 1955, pour étudier la formation d'une Europe unie, par le biais de la création d'un marché commun.
The Foreign Ministers of the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium, France, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands met at Messina, Italy, on June 1-2, 1955 to discuss the establishment of a united Europe through the creation of a common market.

their social policies.<sup>3</sup> He has evidently had difficulty with some of the Commissions of experts, particularly the Commissions studying transportation and a common market, because all of the experts did not accept without question the political decision taken at Messina that these objectives were attainable and desirable. He was, however, able to report that the work of the Commissions to date had confirmed his opinion that the most helpful direction for future progress was towards the development of a common market. In other words, Mr. Spaak has now come around whole heartedly to subscribe to the approach of his Netherlands colleague, Mr. Beyen, who has for some time believed that the "sector" approach to European integration (such as has been tried for coal and steel) could not be progressively extended to other major fields — or at any rate that integration by sectors was no substitute for establishing a common market.

The only important qualification raised by any of the Ministers was apparently by M. Pinay. Since the Geneva Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy,<sup>4</sup> the Messina proposal to integrate the atomic research and development of the Six has been losing ground since there is now a good chance that an International Atomic Energy Agency under the United Nations will be established and regional European cooperation might well be organized under its aegis. Since the development of European atomic energy research for industrial power was one of the main French motivations in furthering European economic integration, M. Pinay now seems less inclined than he was on his return from the Four Power Conference in Geneva to push such schemes as a common European market. At The Hague, he spoke of the need for harmonising economic and social standards and of proceeding by "stages" towards the establishment of a common market, but apparently did not dissent when Mr. Spaak suggested that the aim of the Ministers should be to create a common market over a period of six or seven years.

Although the United Kingdom Government had participated in the expert Commissions and in the Steering Committee, they were either unwilling or unable to be represented at the Ministerial meeting in The Hague. They have served notice that although they might participate in a "freer trade area", they would not be a party to a European common market customs union. They have also declined to participate in any West European atomic energy agency and have continued to oppose all supranationalist trends.

The hour of decision for the Messina Powers has been put off. The Commissions are not now expected to submit their final report until October 31, and the final report of the Steering Committee will be circulated to Foreign Ministers about one month later. This means that no decisions by Governments will be taken before December, and if the Ministers decide to proceed with the establishment of a common market, treaty negotiations would not start until next spring — preferably, Mr. Spaak thinks, before the French elections.

A good deal will, of course, depend on the development of United States, United Kingdom, French and German commercial policies in the meantime. If there is to be backsliding on both sides of the Atlantic and if the convertibility of the major European currencies is not achieved as soon as we have been hoping, the movement already under way towards the establishment of a common market (in the sense of a customs union) for the Messina countries may be given more impetus and might take a more restrictive and protectionist trend, to our obvious disadvantage.

<sup>3</sup> Voir/See Documents on International Affairs, 1955, London: Oxford University Press — Royal Institute of International Affairs, 1958, pp. 163-166.

<sup>4</sup> Pour une évaluation canadienne de la Conférence de Genève sur l'utilisation de l'énergie atomique à des fins pacifiques, voir Canada, Ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, volume 7, N° 11, novembre 1955, pp. 300-303.

For a Canadian assessment of the Geneva Conference on Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy, see Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Volume 7, No. 11, November 1955, pp. 297-300.

Although we do not yet have enough information on which to base any long term judgement or policy, I think, it is probably fair to say that the European Coal and Steel Community experiment has not increased restrictions and barriers between the Community and the outside world. It has certainly facilitated trade within the Community. On balance, therefore, we may say provisionally that it has probably not had a bad effect on our economic interests. In terms of its political importance, I think we could reasonably say that it had served to strengthen our Western European allies.

Whether we would be able to say the same about any of the prospective developments which are being examined by the Messina Commissions, I do not know. I can see nothing against atomic energy cooperation on a Western European basis which could be fitted into broader international cooperation under the United Nations. But we would hope that any progress towards the development of a common market would meet the requirements of GATT, which provides in Article 24 for waivers for regional arrangements which do not add to existing discriminations and restrictions and would, therefore, be least prejudicial to Canadian economic interests. Fortunately, the Messina Commissions have shown no interest in agricultural integration.

It would, I think, be valuable for us to know more about how Mr. Spaak's mind is running on these questions. No one is more committed than he to the development of the Atlantic Pact and an Atlantic Community. You will recall Mr. Spaak's article in the April edition of Foreign Affairs advocating a degree of political integration among the Atlantic countries comparable to that already achieved in the military sphere.<sup>5</sup> He concluded that an Atlantic Council was required for the formulation of a common foreign policy on all matters affecting the Community. No doubt he would also like to give more practical significance to Article 2, particularly now that there is a lessening of tension and a consequent slackening in the cohesiveness of NATO as a military organization.

Mr. Spaak may have heard of your proposed initiative in suggesting that there should be a general discussion, at the Ministerial Meeting of the NATO Council in December, on Article 2 and its implications. We have submitted to you separately draft letters to Mr. Howe and Mr. Harris sending them copies of a draft Departmental memorandum which carries the approval in principle of the officials of the other Departments concerned.<sup>6</sup> Copies of these papers are attached in case you wish to take them to Brussels with you. The memorandum is less specific than we ourselves would have wished from the political point of view, but the December Council would, in our view, provide a useful opportunity for a NATO discussion of the international economic and commercial policies of member States; this would at least be a beginning — already long delayed.

Indeed, since Geneva, there is, I think, a real danger that, with a less immediate sense of military danger, the need for close cooperation among countries of the free world in economic and political, as well as military matters, will seem less urgent. Yet the dangers of economic friction undermining the unity which has been created are in fact likely to become more real. In the new circumstances, serious strains may appear, if the economic policies of NATO countries are not more effectively harmonized. The maintenance of our collective security requires the reduction of economic and commercial frictions within

<sup>5</sup> Voir/See Paul-Henri Spaak, "The Atom Bomb and NATO", Foreign Affairs, Volume 33, No. 3, April 1955, pp. 353-359.

<sup>6</sup> Voir/See Document 227.

NATO. Fresh initiatives designed to maintain the present momentum towards a world-wide system of trade and payments would seem to be required on both sides of the Atlantic.

From the economic point of view there are perhaps as strong arguments against the formation of discriminatory regional economic arrangements on an Atlantic basis as there are against tendencies towards uneconomic integration in Western Europe. Mr. Spaak no doubt recognizes the validity of our general reservation towards regionalism and would agree that Western European economic or political integration should not be pursued at the expense of NATO. The rather tenuous beginnings of an Atlantic Community would suffer if the development of Western European economic integration were to conflict with the principles of GATT. If, however, a common Western European market or other measures of integration can be achieved within the latitude permitted by GATT, then there need be no conflict of interests. Indeed we would naturally welcome any such strengthening of our Western European partners.

At the same time, if Western European economic or political integration were to go forward without a corresponding strengthening in Atlantic cooperation, "third force" tendencies in Europe (which see NATO merely as a temporary military stop-gap) might be encouraged to the detriment of the future of the Atlantic Community. This is not so much an argument for less European integration as for closer Atlantic cooperation in the political and economic fields. Hence our desire to discuss economic problems in NATO where such questions could be critically examined from the point of view of their impact among all members of the Community.

Mr. Spaak's enthusiasm for European economic integration may be based on the assumption that the United States Administration will not be able to make progress towards multilateralism sufficiently rapidly to maintain the momentum of European liberalization. Admittedly we share some of the doubts and face many of the same difficulties as the Western Europeans in this regard. But despite the clear signs of danger ahead, it is still our hope that United States policy and practice will permit and perhaps even encourage other countries to move forward on a multilateral basis.

Above all, with the post-Geneva slackening in military pressures, combined with the rising economic pressures for protection due to keener trade competition in all countries of the Atlantic area, the paramount need is to maintain and increase the unity of the Atlantic Community at a time when it is in danger of erosion.

During the summer, while reviewing our policy towards Article 2, we have been giving some thought to the problems which the various Western European movements towards political and economic integration pose for the Atlantic Community as a whole. As a first step, we prepared a review of current developments.† This is attached. Although no attempt is made in this paper to define the Canadian attitude towards these movements, you may find the memorandum useful for reference purposes before your talk with Mr. Spaak. The primary purpose of the memorandum is, however, to brief our European Missions and encourage them to report and comment more fully on this interesting topic. For although the United States can afford to adopt an uncritically encouraging attitude towards virtually all movements promoting Western European unity, Canada's trade position does, I think, require that we should take a more circumspect look at what is happening, not only from the political but also from the economic point of view.

J. L[ÉGER]

494.

DEA/11143-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

LETTER NO. 3518

Paris, November 16, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your circular letter No. 9-755 of September 29.†

WESTERN EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

We have read with interest your paper on Western European Integration prepared for the Minister's brief which we are taking as a starting point for this letter of comment on the Canadian interest in the new initiatives for relaunching Europe now under discussion in the Brussels Preparatory Commission.

2. At the basis of the move to relaunch Europe is the concern that (1) the interests of Europe are currently being presented by relatively weak and divided voices in a world dominated by the two large powers — the U.S. and the U.S.S.R.; (2) Even a Europe united to the extent that it spoke with one voice could not make its full force felt if it remained economically divided into high cost regions with slower rates of expansion than the two great powers. The present concentration on economic unification is the result of the setback suffered on the political front as a result of the rejection of EDC. It is well to bear in mind the strong political objective, however, when considering realistically the possibilities of forming a common European market. Without the political "necessity" (as Spaak describes it) a common market would almost certainly not have any hope of success. Even with strong political pressure behind it the result would seem very doubtful indeed because of the entrenched economic interests built up behind national tariff walls and other forms of restriction. We would not hazard a guess about the outcome of this new initiative to launch a common market, but we can stress that it is a strong initiative and that it seems likely that every effort will be made to bring it to fruition.

3. We feel that it is important at this stage to consider the Canadian interest in such a move toward a common market bearing in mind that it may founder because of national interests, but also bearing in mind that if political momentum carries it forward even a few stages, the results may be more harmful for outside countries than if it were realized quickly or rejected at the outset.

4. We are not, of course, in close touch with the preparatory work in Brussels but our understanding of the results of it are briefly as follows:

(i) The main effort has been on the common market and on nuclear energy. Proposals concerning the latter have not reached us due to the delay in completing the work after the Geneva Conference on Nuclear Energy. We are therefore considering only the developments of the studies on the creation of a common market.

(ii) We would emphasize that the discussions in the common market committee have been carefully directed by Mr. Spaak away from an exposé of national difficulties and towards the technical possibilities of creating a common market and the best alternative, in the view of the experts, for bringing it about.

(iii) The experts have agreed that the best means of creating a common market is a customs union. This would mean that the six countries would have a common tariff vis-à-vis third countries and ultimately no tariffs on trade between themselves. A customs area of this nature would be in accordance with article 24 of GATT if the common tariff of the six countries were set at a level which would not "on the whole be higher or more restrictive than the general incidence of the duties and regulations of the constituent territories prior to the formation of such a union...".

(iv) Having accepted this general means for launching the common market, and after having rejected other discriminatory methods by which (in contravention of GATT) Member countries might retain separate national tariffs vis-à-vis third countries, the main points of discussion have centred on the following questions:

- (a) the level of the common tariff vis-à-vis third countries;
- (b) the rate at which tariffs vis-à-vis other members of the six should be reduced to zero;
- (c) whether harmonization of fiscal and social policies needs to precede the creation of the common market or proceed pari passu with the achievement of stages in the development of the common market;
- (d) the need for a readaptation fund to compensate for industries which are unable to compete in a common market.

5. The setting of a common tariff vis-à-vis third countries has run into difficulties due to the fact that the Benelux countries have low tariffs and France, Italy and to a lesser extent Germany have high tariff levels. The French have insisted that the GATT criterion for setting the tariff level vis-à-vis third countries is an absolute minimum while the Benelux countries would prefer a lower level. A point of considerable importance, however, is the general feeling in Europe that a higher European tariff would provide a very useful bargaining counter vis-à-vis the United States in future staff negotiations.

6. The rate at which tariffs between Member countries of "the Six" should be reduced has reached a greater degree of agreement among the technical experts than might have been expected. There is general agreement that the intra-European tariffs should be reduced by yearly stages to zero over a period of between 10 and 15 years. The low tariff countries want a high degree of automatism by stages while the high tariff countries wish a certain degree of flexibility. The implication of flexibility is of course highly important as it would involve the possibility of halting or slowing down the move toward the common market and perhaps solidifying the whole movement, if national pressures gained the upper hand, into a system of regional discrimination.

7. The French have been the main advocates of prior harmonization of fiscal policies and social service charges, equality of wage rates as between male and female workers etc. so that competition on the European market can be equal and fair. This of course is a very real stumbling block. The Benelux countries insist that harmonization should be accomplished by stages as tariff levels are reduced, but as far as we are aware there has, as yet, been no agreement even in principle by the experts.

8. There is general recognition of the need for an adaptation fund but of course no conclusive discussion on the amount required. Another conclusion is that the whole sector of agriculture will have to be treated in a special way and the experts are obviously aware of the close connection between trade and monetary policy and of the potential pitfalls of inflation, exchange rates etc, but as far as we are aware there has been no careful consideration of what might practically be done about these questions.

9. Canadian Interest. In the departmental memorandum under reference it is stated:

"From the economic point of view there are perhaps as strong arguments against the formation of discriminatory regional economic arrangements on an Atlantic basis as there are against tendencies towards uneconomic integration in Western Europe. M. Spaak no doubt recognizes the validity of our general reservation towards regionalism and would agree that Western European economic or political integration should not be pursued at the expense of NATO. The rather tenuous beginnings of an Atlantic Community would suffer if the development of Western European economic integration were to conflict with the principles of GATT. If, however, a common Western European market or other measures of integration can be achieved within the latitude permitted by GATT, then there need be no conflict of interests. Indeed we would naturally welcome any such strengthening of our Western European partners."

We would agree fully that, from the political point of view, we should welcome an initiative which is directed toward the economic and political strengthening of Europe. We would also stress, as the memorandum does, that the economic integration of Europe need not necessarily be an exclusive or neutralist development, but might be directed along lines in harmony with the objectives of North Atlantic co-operation. We agree that it is of the greatest importance that NATO as an organization should discuss the development of this initiative and examine its consequences critically from the point of view of its impact on all members of the Community.

10. While agreeing in general with the political objectives involved in a European customs union we would hasten to point out that under some conditions a customs union might be harmful both for the general and particular interests of "the Six" and countries which trade with them. If the tariff vis-à-vis third countries were set at a high level, trade with the dollar area could be curtailed substantially and a larger high cost area might develop in the customs union. Even if a moderate tariff vis-à-vis third countries were established, it would be possible for de facto discrimination against dollar goods to take place depending on the means by which different rates were established.<sup>7</sup> In any event the creation of a common market would almost certainly involve drastic changes in trading patterns which could affect Canadian trade. The ultimate result might or might not be beneficial to our trade, but the transition to the common market could involve considerable readjustments which would, in the short run, be detrimental to Canadian export industries and prospective export industries. The influence on U.S. trade could, of course, be even more severe. If it could be established that these adjustments were really necessary and that third countries were not being unnecessarily excluded from competing in the new customs union, there would be grounds for supporting it. But there could be many protective influences which might result in a customs union which would not, from certain aspects, strengthen the economy of Europe or of its trading partners.

11. The primary focus of concern would be the level of the tariff vis-à-vis third countries and in particular the level of the tariff on Canadian exports and potential exports. This would presumably be discussed in detail first of all among the six countries and then presented to GATT for its approval. It is conceivable that, even at the outset, bargaining considerations principally vis-à-vis the United States would become an important factor. In this matter we would have a dual interest in securing low tariff levels for our exports and potential exports and yet welcoming the additional pressure that might be exerted toward the liberalization of U.S. commercial policy.

<sup>7</sup> Note marginale :Marginal note:

but not more possible than now, surely A.E. R[itchie]

12. Another key point of interest is the question of the timing of the successive stages by which the common market of "the Six" might be achieved. If, for example, automatic reductions were made for one or two years so that European tariffs within the area were reduced by 10%—20% and if at that stage the movement ran into difficulties, the effect might be to create a semi-permanent or permanent discriminatory tariff block with a relatively high tariff rate vis-à-vis third countries. Since the French are to be included in the customs union under study it is not difficult to imagine this sort of situation arising. Nor is it difficult to imagine attempts to relate further movement toward a common market to a reduction in U.S. tariffs.

13. We have mentioned only a few of the main devices which might be exploited by a European customs union to warp its purpose and detract from its usefulness in strengthening the European economy. M. Spaak, when speaking at Strasbourg last month (see our letter No. 3322 of October 28)† made the following rather ambivalent statement: "We have no desire to be a protectionist area. Once we have become a Community of 150 million inhabitants, we shall be able to negotiate with those who do not belong to our organization with a view to obtaining increasingly large reductions in return for similar reductions in our own tariffs." Spaak emphasized that when fixing tariffs vis-à-vis third countries, "a channel of negotiations must be opened up with those who do not propose to enter the Community". We got the impression that he was referring principally to channels of negotiation with other European countries.

14. Our preliminary conclusion is that while we should not discourage the initiative to establish a customs union among "the Six" we should qualify our support and at an appropriate time make known our concern that it should develop along the right lines and that the interests of countries outside the area should be carefully safeguarded.

15. We might consider what safeguards could be established through the GATT and in more general terms through reference to Article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty. Finally we might consider the question of bilateral channels of liaison and negotiation between the Canadian Government and whatever body may be set up to administer the customs area.

16. A convenient opportunity to discuss the initiative for the creation of a European customs union in the context of the North Atlantic Community might be provided at the next and/or subsequent meetings of the North Atlantic Council if the proposed item on Economic Co-operation under Article 2 were placed on the agenda. M. Spaak could be asked to open the discussion and we would have the opportunity of airing whatever views appeared appropriate at the time — vis the necessity of close liaison and co-operation with North America.

17. In sending you these preliminary thoughts on possible developments and Canadian interest in a European customs union, we would again stress the many difficulties which are bound to be encountered if and when discussions begin on the form of an agreement between the six countries. Our own guess is that this initiative is very likely to founder when commitments have to be taken — or it may take a more modified form.

18. The next stage in the development of proposals for the customs union will be a meeting of Ministers of the six countries which had been scheduled for early December. Whether this meeting takes place may depend on whatever decision is taken by the French Government on elections. At this Ministerial meeting, whenever it is held, a report will be submitted on the findings of the Preparatory Commission. This report is currently under preparation in Brussels under the guiding hand of M. Spaak.

L.D. WILGRESS

495.

DEA/50105-E-40

*Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au gouverneur suppléant de la Banque du Canada, au sous-ministre des Finances, au sous-ministre du Commerce et au secrétaire du Cabinet*

*Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Governor, The Bank of Canada,
Deputy Minister of Finance,
Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce and Secretary to Cabinet*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], December 6, 1955

EUROPEAN ECONOMIC INTEGRATION

You will have already received a copy of Letter No. 3518 of November 16 from our Delegation in Paris, commenting in some detail on the new initiatives for "the relaunching of Europe", which have been under discussion in the Brussels Preparatory Commission. In his letter, Mr. Wilgress draws particular attention to the dangers of an exclusive discriminatory régime being set up among the six European countries concerned, which might involve arrangements or devices which would detract from the usefulness of the proposed European Customs Union in strengthening the European economy.

2. Letter No. 3632 of November 24,† which has just been received from the Delegation and a copy of which is attached, provides further information on the report of the Common Market Commission of the Brussels Preparatory Committee set up by the Messina Conference. In this letter Mr. Wilgress indicates that he has become increasingly apprehensive regarding the possibility of the Common Market initiative foundering after one or two years and solidifying into a regional tariff bloc, possibly with present national tariffs in force vis-à-vis a third country. In connection with any negotiations on the establishment of a common tariff, Mr. Wilgress stresses that the low-tariff countries are not likely to be willing to increase their costs and reduce their competitive position at the outset of the transition period any more than the high-tariff countries will be willing to reduce their tariff protection vis-à-vis third countries. Thus, the momentum behind the Customs Union, though initially in conformity with Article XXIV of the GATT, is likely to be quickly lost with the creation of a regional preferential bloc.

3. The Office of the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa has just made available to us copies of Commonwealth Relations Office Telegram W-323 of November 23, attached herewith, which reveals that the United Kingdom Government (a) is not prepared to join in a European market of the kind suggested, and (b) considers that "a common market as it is now seen would tend to be a regional discriminatory bloc; such a development would be contrary to the general principles of freer trade and payments to which we, and other Commonwealth countries, together with the other members of OEEC have been working".

4. I think you will agree that the question of European integration, particularly insofar as it involves present proposals for the creation of a European Common Market or a European Customs Union, is one which deserves the early attention of Canadian authorities. While the United Kingdom authorities have not specifically sought our views on these proposals, they have indicated that they would appreciate Canadian reactions. Further, it now appears quite probable that Mr. Spaak will be given an opportunity to report to the Ministerial meeting of the NATO Council on questions relating to European economic integration, particularly among the six countries which participated in the Messina Conference. Our Ministers at the NATO Council meeting should therefore be in a position to comment on these developments.

5. Subject to the views of others to whom this letter is addressed, we would be inclined to suggest that the Canadian authorities take the following line.<sup>8</sup>

The Canadian Government has not had a full opportunity to study the various documents which have been prepared for the Brussels Preparatory Committee or to consider in detail the implications of the various suggestions which have been advanced for a European common market. It is, of course, well known that Canadian authorities in the past have been somewhat skeptical about the practicability and desirability of some of the more ambitious schemes for the economic integration of Europe. These authorities have been particularly apprehensive about the adoption of any plan or programme which might seriously impede or perhaps indefinitely delay progress towards the achievement of a broader and freer system of trade and payments. We would hope that any new suggestions looking towards the economic integration of certain European countries would be so designed as to avoid these pitfalls. We have in mind, in particular, the desirability of ensuring that any arrangement contemplated would show definite promise of increasing within a reasonable period the political and economic strength of the members. Any arrangement should also be so framed as to avoid, in the light of Article IX of the Atlantic Treaty, damaging relations among the NATO countries and weakening individual members of NATO or the Alliance as a whole. More specifically, it is the Canadian Government's view that satisfactory progress can best be made if the countries involved keep fully in mind their obligations as contracting parties to the GATT. To be consistent with these GATT obligations, common market arrangements for particular commodities can only be concluded if the other Contracting Parties to the GATT are prepared to grant each country a waiver from its relevant obligations. A customs union or a free trade area should only be created subject to specific procedures and recommendations of the Contracting Parties, as provided for in Article XXIV of the GATT.

This, then, is an indication of some of our present concerns. Although we fully appreciate the cogent arguments for promoting political stability in Europe, it is our view that it is not in the interests of the European countries themselves to participate in a discriminatory trading bloc which would constitute an exception to the general goal of multilateral non-discriminatory trade and payments and which would tend towards the fragmentation of the NATO association.

6. In making the above suggestions, we have tried to avoid any criticism in principle of the current proposals for the formation of a European common market. The proposals themselves are vague and adequate information is not available to us at this stage which would permit a detailed criticism, even if this were desirable. I think you will agree that it is unnecessary for Canada to do more at this stage, particularly in the NATO forum, than sound a note of caution. It may, however, be useful for us to let the United Kingdom authorities know that we share the concern which has been expressed in the attached message from the Commonwealth Relations Office.

JULES LÉGER

<sup>8</sup> Une lettre en date du 13 décembre 1955 et signée par W.F. Bull, sous-ministre du Commerce, est la seule réponse ayant été trouvée. Bull appuyait les vues de Léger.
The only response located was a letter, dated December 13, 1955, from W.F. Bull, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce. Bull endorsed Léger's views.

SECTION B

ORGANISATION EUROPÉENNE DE COOPÉRATION ÉCONOMIQUE ORGANIZATION FOR EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COOPERATION

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

RESTRICTIONS QUANTITATIVES SUR LES IMPORTATIONS DE LA ZONE DOLLAR QUANTITATIVE RESTRICTIONS ON DOLLAR IMPORTS

496.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC*

TELEGRAM 1

Ottawa, January 3, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your telegram No. 1168 of Dec. 23.<sup>9</sup>
Repeat London No. 1; Geneva No. 1; Washington EX-1.

DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

We have considered interdepartmentally the position in which we find ourselves as a result of the United States representative reserving his position pending discussion with you on January 3. We would like to see the dilemma resolved but cannot see how you can go further than you did when you welcomed indications that all OEEC members agree that the resolution was not intended to involve a modification of other existing obligations. You could elaborate on this by saying that you regard the statements made in Council on this point, and the evident concurrence of all members in the United States minute, as a welcome statement of intention to continue adhering to principles which have been internationally accepted; but you should still maintain that this is unfortunately not what the resolution itself says. We are, therefore, not able to withdraw our objections to it. It follows, of course, that we cannot accept as adequate the United States entry in the minutes.

2. In thus explaining your attitude to the United States representative you could remind him that, while not associating ourselves with the resolution, we would wish to be as helpful as possible in connection with any studies or discussions which might be undertaken under the resolution, including the provision of such information as may be desired concerning our own commercial policies and practices; and that it is for the United States authorities to decide whether or not to support the resolution on the basis of their entry in the minutes.

3. If you find it necessary to make a further statement in Council you will, I am sure, continue to maintain our position firmly while at the same time indicating that we wish to be as co-operative as possible.

<sup>9</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 641.

4. We are repeating this telegram to our Embassy in Washington, asking them at their discretion to inform the State Department.

497.

DEA/4901-F-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-12

Washington, January 5, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your telegram EX-2 of the 3 of January. †

DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

On Tuesday afternoon we were called to the State department by Barnett of the Office of European Regional Affairs to discuss the situation as it was left after the meeting of the OEEC Council on the 22nd of December. Ryss of the commercial policy staff of the State Department was also present, as well as Kaplan of the Foreign Operations Administration and Shearer of the United States Delegation in Paris.

2. Barnett said that he did not want to go over the differences that had separated the United States and Canadian positions during the recent discussions in Paris. That was all water over the dam. However, he did want to explain the importance that was attached within the United States Government to the dollar liberalization exercise as distinct from the resolution that was considered by the Council on the 22nd of December. It was widely considered that some publicity for this exercise would be helpful in the effort to obtain congressional approval for the president's foreign trade programme. Mr. Dulles and Mr. Stassen also wished to be able to point to this OEEC activity as a mark of the organization's vitality. For these reasons, it was hoped that some means might be found whereby the Ministerial meeting of the Council, which is to take place on the 13 of January, might note with approval the dollar liberalization exercise without becoming involved in the doctrinal disputes that marked consideration of the resolution.

3. With that end in view, Barnett said that he wished to ask two questions about the Canadian position:

(a) How far would Canada be able to participate in the dollar liberalization exercise?

(b) What terms of reference would we suggest for our participation?

4. Fortified by a telephone conversation earlier in the afternoon with Ritchie, we felt free to answer the first question by saying that so far as we could see, Canada would be in a position to participate in the exercise as fully as if it had been able to support the resolution. So far as the terms of reference for our participation were concerned, we suggested, on a personal basis, that since our representative would be appearing to discuss Canadian commercial policy at the request of the full members of the organization, it would be for them to propose appropriate terms of reference, if indeed such were thought necessary. It was probable, we imagined, that the Canadian Representative would be able to accept any reasonable terms of reference proposed by the full members of the organization, provided, of course, that there was no question of the discussion veering towards the possibility of an exchange of tariff concessions for reductions in quantitative restrictions.

5. After this initial period of question and answer, Shearer attempted to reopen the differences that had been expressed at the meeting on the 22nd of December about the United States interpretative note and to make known his annoyance over the terms of the second Canadian statement. However, he was quickly choked off by the other United States officials who were present, and attention was directed instead by Barnett to the procedural steps that might be taken in order to bring the dollar liberalization exercise before the ministerial meeting of the Council without reviving discussion of the resolution. Pleading ignorance of OEEC parliamentary practices, we managed to avoid saying anything about this problem, except to emphasize that the more sharply a distinction could be drawn between the resolution and the exercise, the easier it would be for our representative to forward the objective the United States authorities had in mind, either through his silence or through a statement expressing Canada's willingness to cooperate fully in the exercise.

6. One possibility that was canvassed was that the United States Representative should now inform the Secretariat that the reserve placed on United States participation in the exercise on the 22nd of December had been removed. The Secretariat would then notify the ministerial members of the Council to that effect, and through that device the way would be laid open for the ministers to note with approval that arrangements had now been successfully completed to permit the dollar liberalization exercise to go forward. Barnett said that within a few days he would be getting in touch with us again to let us know more exactly the procedural steps that the United States would like to see followed. Before setting them in train, the United States authorities would like to secure Canadian concurrence so that the unfortunate differences which had manifested themselves last month would not be repeated. We said that we would be glad to forward for your comments any precise procedural suggestions that they might wish to make.

7. It was clear throughout the meeting that the United States has now decided to participate in the exercise without making any further effort to have us change our attitude towards the interpretative note. Indeed, we received the impression that the other United States officials thought that Shearer had allowed his irritation to get the better of him when he stated in the Council meeting on the 22nd of December that, in the light of the supplementary statement made by our representative on the interpretative note, he must reserve the United States position.

A.D.P. HEENEY

498.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 60

Paris, January 15, 1955

RESTRICTED. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your telegram No. 45 of January 12, 1955.†

DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

The question of dollar import restrictions came up in OEEC Council on Thursday. As we indicated in our telegram No. 26 of January 10,† the Secretariat were strongly of the opinion that since the normal procedure would be for the OEEC to make a public release of the Council resolution (C(54)317) to keep it restricted would be irregular and would probably not prevent the press from getting wind of it. The United States were convinced by this argument and considered moreover that the type of publicity likely to result in this case might be most undesirable.

2. In view of these strongly held positions, when the subject came up at the Council, I made a general statement and concluded by indicating that we saw no need for the resolution to be de-restricted and made public. We hoped that it would not be, but if it were distributed to the press conference we would wish to be assured that the relationship of Canada to the resolution would be fully covered. Marjolin replied to the effect that it was the normal procedure for such documents to be de-restricted, but it could be stated clearly in the cover note that Canada had not been associated with the resolution.

3. Accordingly, a paragraph for inclusion in the note to the resolution has been agreed with the Secretariat. The text is as follows: "Canada was not associated with this resolution. The Canadian Government, however, has indicated that it wishes to be as helpful as possible in connection with future studies on dollar import restrictions and has agreed to provide such relevant information as may be desired concerning Canadian commercial policies and practices."

4. At the Council meeting, Marjolin introduced the subject with a short historical statement summarizing the work already done and describing the type of exercise proposed. Waugh of the United States followed with a statement emphasizing the importance attached by the United States to the review of dollar restrictions. He noted that the United States would cooperate fully with the OEEC in this exercise and stressed the benefits which the United States considered would result to the European countries themselves from the liberalization of dollar imports. The question of reciprocal United States action was dealt with as follows: "On our part, we recognize that measures taken by the United States to facilitate imports will increase the opportunities of other countries to earn more dollars. Such earnings will provide added stimulus for the removal of restrictions by other countries. The President has recently taken administrative action to modify our "buy American" policy and has placed a high priority on the enactment of legislation — as evidenced by his message on Monday of this week to the new Congress — to provide the basis for a more liberal United States trade policy. We are encouraged by the outlook both here and in our own country for progress towards the goal of freer trade and are ourselves desirous of seizing every opportunity to achieve this end."

5. My statement followed immediately after Waugh's. Stassen then made a few remarks indicating that the United States and Canada were in full agreement on the problem which had led us to take this stand.

499.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC*

TELEGRAM 965

Ottawa, September 9, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your letter of August 8.†

OEEC STUDY ON RELAXATION OF DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

We have reviewed the replies of Member Countries to the OEEC Questionnaire on Dollar Import Restrictions.<sup>10</sup> The content of a number of these replies confirms our earlier apprehensions about the probable results of the Council's resolution. The Resolution and the Questionnaire have been used by a number of countries as an opportunity to put forward a negative view of dollar liberalization; to justify a policy of moving slowly, and to place the onus on the United States and ourselves. A number of countries give no evidence in their replies that they regard the relaxation of restrictions on dollar imports as being in itself a desirable step in their own interests.

2. We leave it to you to judge whether a general restatement of the Canadian position taken at the time the resolution was discussed should be made. In commenting on specific points in the replies you will no doubt be drawing upon the arguments you put forward in the earlier discussions, and you may find that a general recapitulation of our attitude would be redundant.

3. As regards the individual replies we are particularly concerned with a number of the points raised by the French. Their comment that import restrictions provide necessary protection to higher cost economies is contrary to the generally accepted principle that import and exchange controls are justified only as a temporary expedient to safeguard a country's balance of payments position. The replies of certain other countries, including Germany, the United Kingdom and Italy, indicate that a relaxation of these restrictions in fact tends to reduce the cost structure of an economy. The French imply that the liberalization of dollar imports should not be allowed to disturb the trade pattern among the OEEC countries and underdeveloped areas which has been built up through regional arrangements and bilateral trade and payments agreements. This represents a serious disregard of the advantages to be gained from the widest possible multilateral trading system, and of the obligations which the members of the IMF and the GATT have assumed in this regard. France has enjoyed the advantages of membership in these organizations, and has on occasion reminded other countries of their GATT and IMF obligations. As far as their reference to the underdeveloped areas is concerned, special provisions have been worked out in the wider context of the GATT.

5. Other points which we have noted with concern are:

(a) References by a number of countries, notably Norway, Austria and Denmark, to alleged high tariffs in the United States as a deterrent to further relaxation of import restrictions. As you know we are opposed to any such attempts to link the relaxation of quantitative controls with the reduction of tariffs.

<sup>10</sup> Pour les origines de ce questionnaire, voir le volume 20, document 629.
On the origins of this questionnaire, see Volume 20, Document 629.

(b) The Danish and Norwegian justification for slow motion because of vague uncertainties regarding future dollar earnings. In our view, the positive advantages to be gained from a liberalization of dollar imports would outweigh any such vague worries about future dollar earnings. Liberalization should make a substantial contribution towards expanding a country's export opportunities.

(c) The Austrian fear that a relaxation of dollar restrictions would impede the operation of her bilateral trade and payments agreements with a number of Eastern European countries. While we are aware of Austria's traditional interest in these markets, this justification for dollar import restriction is particularly dangerous. We wonder if competition from dollar goods might not result in lower cost Austrian imports from these countries.

5. On the other hand a number of replies include points which are most encouraging: the Austrian recognition that relaxation of dollar imports is a necessary step in the move towards convertibility; and the United Kingdom, German and Italian observations on the favourable effect of dollar liberalization on their domestic cost structures. These views should provide clear indications that such liberalization is in a country's own interest.

6. We suggest that you take a reasonably active but not a leading part in the discussions; we assume that the United States delegation will make the running. Your main objective should be to try to get the Working Party to produce as positive and constructive a report as possible.

500.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

LETTER NO. 2995

Paris, October 3, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your telegram No. 965 of September 9.

OEEC MEETING OF THE "AD HOC" GROUP OF EXPERTS ON DOLLAR
LIBERALIZATION — SEPT. 26-28

An ad hoc meeting of experts on dollar liberalization took place from September 26 to 28 and it is generally agreed that it was both useful and successful. The meeting was arranged after the U.S. Representative on the Working Party on Dollar Liberalization had made repeated suggestions. The reaction in the Working Party was cool on the part of the continental representatives and negative on the part of the United Kingdom. The U.S. Representative however persisted — offering the Member countries the opportunity to quiz three U.S. experts on their commercial policies if the Member countries would agree to send experts to Paris to exchange information on the effects of dollar liberalization and discuss prospects. The Agenda of the meeting and the names of the experts are attached.†

2. The U.S. persistence in calling this meeting was based on their view that Member countries are not taking full advantage of the present favourable situation to reduce discrimination and that the effect of reducing QRs on dollar products would not have a serious effect on country balances of payments positions, but would increase the competitive power of their economies. The U.S. Delegation felt that an exchange of views between experts might serve to allay fears and provide a catalyst for further relaxations. This view was vindicated by the results of the meeting to the extent that countries which have undertaken dollar liberalization were not able to give any indication of its having had harmful effects on their economies. As a consequence, the Working Party's report which is due to be ready for Council by November 1 will probably be more positive than it otherwise might have been.

3. At the meeting questions of principle were kept in the background as much as possible. Discussion centered on the latest statistical information relating to dollar liberalization and the experts' interpretation of it. The second part of the meeting, which was devoted to an exposé of U.S. commercial policy was of a different nature. The Member countries' representatives attempted to impress the U.S. officials with the need for a more liberal commercial policy, and while the U.S. Delegation did its best to convince the meeting that its policies were generally liberal and that their aid programmes were likely to continue, they could not do more than repeat what the U.S. representatives have said over and over again in the OEEC and, of course, could not make any commitments for the future.

4. The United Kingdom Position

The United Kingdom expert, Leckie, in an opening statement, referred to the recent deterioration of the U.K. position and the increase in recent months in U.K. imports from the dollar area. He said the causes were complex but thought they must stem from measures of internal decontrol associated with the removal of dollar QRs. Although dollar exports were improving, an unsatisfactory imbalance had developed. He emphasized the Chancellor's intention to correct the imbalance by internal measures and repeated the warning that there would be no early moves on the trade and exchange front until the effects of the internal measures had been reflected in the balance of payments. Having said this, Leckie pointed to the necessity of increasing the world dollar supply. U.S. aid had been helpful in the past but since aid was increasingly taking the form of surplus commodities, this did not help the balance of payments situation. What was needed was a more liberal U.S. commercial policy (he mentioned that the U.K. had been particularly disappointed by recent developments.)

5. In later interventions, Leckie recalled that over half of U.K. imports had been liberalized (according to the rather artificial OEEC method of measurement). He said that 1/3 of the U.K.'s U.S. imports and 3/4 of her Canadian imports were entered free of quantitative control. Of the totals, 75% of food and feeding stuffs are freed; 66 2/3% of raw materials and 5% of manufactured products. Leckie emphasized that although the QRs on many of the products in the controlled sector had been imposed for balance of payments reasons, these controls had been in operation for over 15 years and their current fortuitous protective effect created real problems. He thought this problem of protection was real and could not be brushed aside. In summary, however, he admitted that the protective aspect as a relatively small problem.

6. When questioned about the effects of dollar liberalization, Leckie admitted that the increase in the U.K.'s dollar import reflected the increased requirements due to a high level of internal activity and demand. He did not think the increase was the result of dollar liberalization. Nor had dollar liberalization measures which had been taken by other Member countries had the effect of displacing U.K. exports to Europe. The U.K.'s share of the improving European market had decreased, but this was due more to increasing German competition than to competition from the dollar area.

7. Leckie gave the following figures on increased U.K. imports from the dollar area:

	Categories	Increased imports from July 1954 to June 1955
	Total dollar imports	up £ 144 million
	Goods on which QRs had been relaxed	up £ 57 million
	(cereals	up £ 26 million
	(iron and steel	up £ 20 million liberalization	(non ferrous metals and ores excluding aluminum	up £ 17 million
	(coal	up £ 17 million
	(wood pulp	up £ 9 million relaxation	(paper	up £ 6 million
	(chemicals	up £ 11 million
	(industrial machinery	up £ 1 million

8. Having admitted that these increases would have been necessary regardless of relaxation and removal of QRs in order to support the higher level of activity that had developed in the U.K., Leckie went to great pains to emphasize the U.K. view that the past did not provide a guide for future action. He said that the U.K. had not attempted to make a forward estimate of the effects of further liberalization. He thought future steps in liberalization would have to be looked at individually by sectors and that action would depend on the prevailing economic climate. Finally he agreed that, "some considerable margin for increased expenditure on dollar goods certainly does exist".

9. The U.K. position was somewhat contradictory for several reasons. The U.K. wishes to have the OEEC report on dollar liberalization point up the need for action by the U.S. to make possible larger dollar earnings by European countries. On the other hand it is obviously in the U.K. interest to have continental countries reduce dollar discrimination to the greatest extent possible in preparation for convertibility. Add to these two rather divergent interests the fact of the present U.K. economic difficulties which have apparently led them to postpone any possible moves to increase their own dollar liberalization compared with the extremely favourable developments on the continent and it is not difficult to understand this contradictory U.K. line. We suspect the U.K. may possibly be considering the effects on their trade, and leadership of the move to convertibility, if discrimination is reduced very much more rapidly on the continent than in the U.K. The total effect of the U.K. interventions was negative and it may be expected that they will take the lead in the working party to secure a report which is less positive and less optimistic than the situation warrants.

10. The German Position

The effects of German dollar liberalization over the last two years were of first importance to the success of the meeting. The German Delegation came to the meeting prepared to play up the large increase in dollar imports which had developed after the liberalization measures had been taken. The United States Delegation had, however, studied the German situation most carefully and the resulting discussion between the U.S. and the Germans provided a turning point in the meeting.

11. Schmiett (Germany) introduced the German position by pointing to the deterioration of the German dollar position. German dollar imports in first half 1955 were $520 million — an increase of 57% over the first half 1954 when dollar imports amounted to $330 million. During this period total imports increased by only 31%. If the first half 1955 figure were projected for the whole of 1955, the German dollar import bill would be $1.1 billion reflecting an increase of $400 million over 1954. Schmiett implied that such a large increase, which was far larger than previous forecasts, suggested, that future dollar liberalization should be approached with caution, but added that no large unsatisfied demand for dollar goods existed in Germany.

12. At this point Strauss (U.S. Department of Commerce) pointed out that 85% of the increase could be accounted for by large increases in four or five raw materials (cotton, copper, hides and skins, non ferrous and ferrous scrap). Only 15% of the increase was due to moderate increases in 4000 or 5000 other items. The large increases in raw materials could be attributed to special features in the world markets of these materials and the remaining 15% increase was not abnormally large when the high rate of expansion of the German economy was taken into account. Schmiett agreed with this analysis but gave the following statistics on increases resulting from liberalization:

	1954	1st 1/2 1955	1955
goods liberalized in first German list	$407 million	$240 m	$480 m
goods liberalized in second German list	$ 43 million	$ 57 m	$114 m

13. In later interventions Schmiett indicated that the pattern and level of European trade had not suffered because of dollar liberalization either on the part of Germany or on the part of other countries. On the contrary, intra-European trade had increased and German trade in particular had undergone large increases. There had been some indication of a shift of imports of certain commodities from Europe to the United States. However, the decrease in imports from non-dollar sources appeared now to have come to a halt and these imports were now increasing after price adjustments had been made to meet dollar competition. It was felt by the German authorities that dollar liberalization had increased the competitive position of the German economy and had served to restrain an incipient inflationary condition.

14. The Position of Sweden

Masreliez (Sweden) informed the meeting that the far-reaching measures of dollar liberalization which the Swedish Government announced in October 1954 in fact took effect from December 1954. These measures amounted to a 58% liberalization of total imports from the dollar area (60% of finished goods). The remaining imports were under license, but in practice these licenses were granted with great freedom. Only a few commodities were under a restrictive régime.

15. The effects of this liberalization had only begun to be felt but it appeared that there had been no great influx of dollar imports. In fact the Swedish authorities had been surprised at the relatively small reaction to the liberalization measures. Increases had been greater in the non-liberalized than in the liberalized sector. Total imports increased quite considerably but this increase was largely attributed to the high level of activity in Sweden. The following table gives an indication of the increases:

	Average monthly value of dollar imports
	July-Sept 1954	July-Sept 1955
total dollar area	83 million kr.	116 million kr.
U.S.	56 million kr.	82 million kr.

Assuming the present liberal régime is to be continued, the Swedish forecast of dollar imports for 1955 and 1956 was as follows:

	1954	1955	1956
U.S. and Canada	1 million kr.	1.4 m. kr.	1.55 m. kr.

Prior to the war 17% of Swedish imports were derived from the dollar area. In 1954 the percentage was 11% and this was expected to increase to 14% in 1955.

16. While the Swedish authorities considered that no problems had developed following dollar liberalization, they were nevertheless expecting a continuing demand for dollar goods particularly when replacement needs would have to be met in the future.

17. The French Position

The French expert, who was not a very senior official, took very little part in the meeting. When invited to comment he merely reiterated the position set out in the French memorandum. He noted that French imports from the dollar area had risen substantially and attributed this to a relaxation in the application of the licensing system. When asked whether the French Government might not remove some of the QRs, he stated that this would be difficult. For example, he said, the French Government might wish to allow the importation of a certain type of chemical products which were not produced in France. A year or so later after production had been built up in France, they would wish to cease importing from the dollar area. Accordingly it was preferable to keep such categories under quantitative control. This gratuitous disclosure given in a frank but tactless manner drew sharp criticism both from our representative and from the U.S. representative.

18. Later in the meeting, when prospects for further liberalization were discussed, our representative pointed to the extremely favourable French reserve position as well as other favourable factors in the French economy and trading situation and stressed our conviction, along the lines of your instructions, that a reduction of French dollar restrictions was long overdue. We also referred to the favourable results of liberalization in other countries and hoped that the French Delegation would give careful consideration to the valuable information which had been provided at the meeting on the results of liberalization and the general absence of harmful effects. We referred obliquely to the French commitments in other organizations, but did not develop this point as questions of principle were not under discussion.

19. Frank of the U.S. Delegation told us that the U.S. had recently made strong representations to Pinay expressing their concern at the French reluctance to take any move toward dollar liberalization. The French Delegate told us in confidence after our statement that his government now has under consideration a plan for liberalizing a small percentage of dollar products. He thought the announcement might be made within a few weeks.

20. The Norwegian Position

Halvorsen (Norway) referred to his country's precarious dollar balance and indicated that his government did not intend to introduce measures of formal liberalization. At present all dollar goods are under quantitative control. However, 75% of Norway's dollar imports were in practice allowed free entry. Halvorsen referred to the European structural trade deficit with the dollar area and to the need for a more liberal U.S. commercial and shipping policy. He ended his statement by saying, "It is not reasonable to expect the removal of dollar QRs without some reciprocity".

21. The Benelux Position

The Netherlands and Belgian experts did not play a large role at the meeting. They pointed to relatively large increases in dollar imports but did not attempt to attribute these to dollar liberalization as such. The Netherlands expert said that dollar imports into his country increased from 660 million guilders in first half 1954 to 860 million guilders in second half 1954. This increase had been largely in the raw materials sector and in large part represented "normal stocking". Other factors influencing the increase in particular sectors were: the poor South American wheat harvest in 1954, the poor copra harvest and poor delivery conditions in Europe for scrap steel.

22. The Belgian expert reported that the percentage of dollar imports compared to total imports had been relatively stable for the past three years at about 12% or 13%. Increases in imports from European sources had been somewhat greater than the increases from the dollar area.

23. The Swiss Position

As you know the Swiss Government does not discriminate against dollar products. Consequently the Swiss market gives an indication of the competitiveness of dollar products when percentages before and after the war are compared. The Swiss expert said that dollar imports accounted for 8% of total imports before the war. This percentage had risen to 12.8% last year. He indicated however that from 1953 to 1954 imports from Europe increased more than imports from North America—i.e.

	1938	1953	1954
Imports from Europe	77%	67.6%	70.7%
Imports from North America	8%	12.1%	12.8%

24. There was no indication that Swiss exporters have suffered adverse effects due to dollar liberalization by other countries.

25. Other Country Positions

Other country delegates took little part in the discussion. The Italians reported on a relative increase in dollar imports and appeared convinced that dollar imports would increase substantially if QRs were further removed. The Greek expert was able to report that since 1953, there had been only a 4% increase in dollar imports. After QRs were removed there had been an immediate reaction to dollar sources but soon importers reverted to traditional sources of supply. The Danish expert reported that, although dollar imports had increased following the removal of certain QRs, the greatest increases had been experienced in the non-liberalized sector where controls had been relaxed. The Danish Government is planning to remove QRs on additional sectors in the near future.

26. Our Attitude

We took a fairly active part in the meeting in support of the United States experts. We did not think it appropriate at this meeting to restate our general position of principle on dollar liberalization. Our main object was to point up all the favourable indications which had been disclosed at the meeting. The points we mentioned are included in the summary of the results of the meeting given below.

27. We did, however, take issue with several experts who raised the question of reciprocity for dollar liberalization. We referred to our liberal commercial policy since the war which provided full reciprocity for all past and future abolition of QRs on dollar goods. In emphasis of this point we referred to Member countries' obligations under GATT and IMF and gave our view, which was reiterated by the U.S. Representative, that lack of progress in the removal of dollar QRs coupled with implications of bargaining vis-à-vis the dollar area were the worst possible means of securing a more liberal U.S. commercial policy and maintaining a liberal Canadian policy. While there could be no question of discussing this problem in terms of reciprocity, we did however sympathize with the European desire to secure larger export opportunities in the U.S. market. We had agreed with the view that one of the prime elements in paying the way to the convertibility of currencies and a wider trading system was a more liberal U.S. commercial policy. It was important however that the European efforts to secure a more liberal U.S. commercial policy should be placed in the right context and that they should not attempt to link progress in the removal of dollar restrictions to the requirement of a more liberal U.S. commercial policy.

28. The United States Position

The United States Delegate, Frank, conducted himself very skilfully and can take a large measure of credit for directing the exchanges of views on European dollar liberalization along positive lines. He also provided a frank and able interpretation of U.S. commercial policy in the second part of the meeting. We are not reporting in detail on the discussions of U.S. policy. Nothing new emerged. The U.S. Delegation, however, took great pains to answer every query in detail and left the impression that the Administration recognized the desirability of increasing the European share of the U.S. market.

29. The continental countries laid great stress on the instability of their dollar payments situations which were favourable now only because of extraordinary U.S. expenditures. Frank could not, of course, cite a U.S. commitment that the extraordinary expenditures would be continued, but he did his best to reassure the Europeans on the basis of the past history and present trends in the U.S. Government.

30. Conclusions

Unfortunately little time was spared at the end of the meeting for a full discussion of conclusions to be drawn from this useful exchange of views. Frank, however, was able to give a quick resumé of the impressions of the U.S. Delegation and made the following points:

- (1) The ad hoc meeting had been most useful and thought might be given to a similar meeting in six months or a year.
- (2) It appeared that the increases in dollar imports which European countries had experienced in the past year and a half were due to the increased level of activity in Europe and were not the result of the relaxation of dollar restrictions. The relaxations were an enabling factor. The influx of dollar products had the additional effect of providing a deflationary tendency in Europe at a time when inflationary trends were perceptible. Another favourable effect was the lowering of raw material prices for third countries due to the competitive influence of liberalized raw materials.
- (3) Dollar liberalization had not had any harmful effects on European trade. No country had claimed it had lost markets as a result of dollar liberalization, on the contrary, intra-European trade had also increased.
- (4) No country had claimed that its balance of payments had been endangered by measures already taken. Current levels of reserves and balance of payments positions confirmed this conclusion.
- (5) With regard to the future effect on balance of payments, some countries had expressed fears and doubts. These were speculative but perhaps none the less real.
- (6) The competitive position of European industries vis-à-vis the dollar area seemed generally very good.
- (7) The meeting had pointed up the value of testing the effects of dollar liberalization by liberalizing in stages. It might even be concluded that some European countries might show a little less caution.

31. The German Delegate, Schmielt, who had been visibly impressed by the disclosures at the meeting, intervened to support the U.S. summary. He reemphasized that Germany had suffered no balance of payments difficulties as a result of dollar liberalization and no other difficulties. He said: "Maybe the problems have been overestimated and the advantages under-estimated". He noted, however, that there was a need for improving the structural dollar balance through more liberal U.S. commercial policies. Finally he said that Germany, which had already reached a high level of dollar liberalization, was convinced that further progress should be made and intended to take further steps. He thought Germany was now entering a critical stage in dollar liberalization and that each new item liberalized might give rise to more serious problems.

32. Leckie (U.K.) intervened at some length and stated flatly that the U.K. could not go along with Frank's summary. Even though liberalization measures taken so far had not produced harmful results, this was no indication that further liberalization would not do so. There would be more and more difficulties as the percentage of liberalization increased. On the balance of payments side he referred to the Randall Commission<sup>11</sup> finding that a dollar gap of 1 1/2 billion still existed. The U.K. had been very disappointed at the developments on trade policy during the last session of Congress and concluded that, on the basis of U.S. policies, there was no argument for the further removal of discrimination in Europe.

33. At this point we intervened again in support of Frank's summary and in contradiction of Leckie's final remarks along the lines of the views given above and shortly thereafter the meeting ended with the U.S. Delegation and ourselves disappointed that Leckie had felt obliged to cast a shadow over the rather favourable outcome of the meeting. The U.K. for their part felt rather strongly that the summary made by Frank had been too favourable and had not referred to U.S. commercial policy.

34. The Working Party of the Joint Trade and Payments Committee which is charged with the task of preparing the report for Council by November 1 met shortly after the ad hoc meeting of experts. There the struggle over what conclusions were to be drawn from the ad hoc meeting was revived but it was decided that the Secretariat should be charged with the preparation of the draft sections concerning effects of liberalization and prospects for further liberalization before a discussion of substance was broached. These sections should be ready by October 15 when we shall forward them to you.

L.D. WILGESS

501.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 1204

Paris, October 20, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our letter No. 3087 of October 12.†

OEEC REPORT ON DOLLAR IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

The Working Group on dollar import liberalization met on October 19 to continue consideration of its report to the full committee. All four parts of the report were available and it was proposed to start a detailed discussion beginning with Part I. The fourth Part, which appeared only shortly before the meeting, was a secretariat draft purporting to summarize the conclusions suggested by the Working Group's study. In fact, it was entitled "problèmes soulevés par de nouveau progrès dans la voie de la libération", and consisted exclusively of a catalogue of obstacles to further dollar liberalization, ending with a very critical account of United States commercial policy.

2. The United States Representative, Henry Barlerin, took a very strong line and insisted that he would not regard the draft as a suitable basis for discussion. He was supported by the German and Belgian delegations, and to a moderate extent by the Dutch. The Canadian

<sup>11</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 653, note 11.

Representative indicated that the draft as it stood would not be acceptable. As the discussion went on, it became clear that whatever their individual reserves regarding dollar liberalization, no delegation (except possibly the United Kingdom) would be prepared to accept in toto the jeremiad produced by the Secretariat. It was therefore agreed, in accordance with the views expressed by the United States Representative, first, that another factual chapter should be added detailing the measures taken by the United States and Canada to promote freer trade and second, that the existing draft of the concluding chapter should be revised to give a more balanced assessment including the advantages as well as the dangers of further dollar liberalization. This new draft is supposed to be ready by Monday, October 24 and will probably be discussed in that week.

3. Yesterday's discussion reinforces the impression mentioned in our letter [2995] of October 3, that at this juncture the United Kingdom would probably not accept a report which might lead to specific recommendations for early moves towards liberalization.

L.D. WILGROSS

502.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OEEC*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC*

TELEGRAM E-1097

Ottawa, October 25, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram No. 1204 of October 20.

DOLLAR IMPORT LIBERALIZATION

We have studied your letters No. 2995 of October 3 and 3087 of October 12† attaching Parts I and II of the draft Working Party report on dollar liberalization. We do not feel it necessary to give you detailed comments on Parts I and II. Part I is a factual report on liberalization measures now in effect, and corresponds to the information we have on this subject. Part II appears to be generally acceptable from our point of view since it clearly brings out that dollar liberalization so far has not directly led to increased imports and that the net result has been beneficial in reducing costs and increasing competitiveness.

2. We note that you will be involved in the negotiation of Part IV of the report this week and this is obviously the most important section from our point of view. It would be most unfortunate if the conclusions in Part IV could be used as a basis for justifying a "go slow" policy on the part of OEEC countries. We are therefore most concerned over the contents of the draft outlined in your telegram of October 20, and strongly support the line you are taking in the discussion. We realize that some countries may have uncertainties as to the possible effect of liberalization in other sectors, but these uncertainties should be heavily outweighed by the concrete evidence and positive conclusions brought out in Part II. We are disturbed over the tone of the discussion which you have reported, which gives the impression that dollar liberalization should be pursued only where the necessary readjustments are completely painless. In this connection, you may wish to emphasize that liberalization of dollar imports is one of the basic undertakings of OEEC countries. The fact that dollar imports are still at prewar levels in spite of higher production and income levels in Europe raises the question whether dollar liberalization is not something that OEEC countries should begin to look upon with some degree of urgency. The Canadian economy also has sensitive areas, and there are pressures for protection which the government has successfully continued to resist on the basis that we are engaged in a common endeavour with other countries to remove trade barriers and to establish conditions for multilateral trade. It is important that this report should reflect a more positive and constructive approach towards the objective of dollar liberalization as being desirable and necessary in spite of possible difficulties for particular industries.

3. We have been somewhat disturbed by the suggestion that a new factual chapter should be added to Part IV outlining the measures taken by the United States and Canada to promote freer trade. This does not seem to be a relevant subject in an exercise specifically devoted to dollar liberalization. If the inclusion of such a chapter cannot be avoided, you should try to ensure that it does not give the impression that the OEEC links dollar liberalization to reciprocal measures by the United States.

503.

DEA/4901-F-40

*La délégation permanente auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OEEC
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Delegation to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

LETTER NO. 3671

Paris, November 29, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our letter No. 3633 of November 25.†

OEEC DOLLAR LIBERALIZATION REPORT

The draft report (see our letter under reference) has been the subject of close negotiation in the Working Group. We are sending you these comments so as to give you some idea of the balance of views in the Working Group to provide you with background for the preparation of your comments and instructions for the discussions which are to take place on the report in the Joint Trade and Payments Committee and the Council.

2. As a basis for the various country viewpoints we would refer you to our letter No. 2995 of October 3 which reported on the ad hoc meeting of experts. The final sections of the draft report have been strongly influenced by the disclosures at that meeting which, in general, indicated that countries which had relaxed dollar restrictions had suffered no demonstrable harmful effects (see para 30). In the Working Group, however, the Europeans, including the U.K. Representative, have made a concerted effort to play up the importance of a more liberal U.S. commercial policy in connection with further progress toward dollar liberalization in OEEC countries. The U.K., French, Italian and Norwegian Representatives have concentrated most of their attention on this theme while the German, Belgian and Dutch Representatives have also devoted their efforts to insuring a realistic report on the effects of and possibilities of future progress in Europe. The French Representative has been particularly negative. She reserved the French position on all chapters of the report, scarcely took part in any of the discussions and, when the work was over, submitted a statement of the French viewpoint which is to be annexed to the report (4 copies attached). She was evidently under a general instruction not to implicate the French Government in any way in the views expressed in the report.

3. The U.S. Representative has taken a rather lenient line regarding the European efforts to link progress in the U.S. to progress in Europe although he has supported us when we objected to statements which implied that further progress in Europe depended on prior U.S. moves. He has adopted a technique of "reciprocity negotiation": i.e., if the Europeans wish to strengthen the sections on U.S. commercial policy he would only agree if the sections on European policy were strengthened. This has resulted in an element of balance in the report. Our own efforts in the Working Group were directed toward ensuring that the positive aspects of the experience of countries which have liberalized were given full prominence in the report and that there should be no hint of the need for reciprocity for European liberalization or of the necessity of prior U.S. moves to liberalize their commercial policy.

4. Chapter I: This chapter is entirely factual. The technique for drawing up percentages of liberalization is of course open to all the well known objections, but there seems to be no other practical way of comparing degrees of country liberalization. You have already expressed your approval of this chapter.

5. Chapter II: This chapter has not yet been circulated in its final draft. It is not likely to cause trouble except for a section on balance of payments and reserves. We shall bring this section to your attention when we send you the draft.

6. Chapter III: This chapter is the result of the first attempt by the Organization to study the restrictions on invisible transactions and services vis-à-vis the dollar area. The chapter was drawn up by a restricted group of experts on the liberalization of invisible transactions on which we were not represented. We should be grateful if you would send us, in addition to your comments on this study, a background paper† on the Canadian position regarding invisibles vis-à-vis OEEC countries. We are not clear on the extent to which Canadian interests are affected by present controls and it would be most helpful to have your views on the most important aspects to be stressed.

7. In our view TFD/PC/167(2nd Rev) contains a useful summary of the present position and ends on a rather enlightened note. After pointing out that increased liberalization of dollar invisibles would undoubtedly lead to a greater dollar expenditure in a number of cases, it stresses that, "there would be benefits which could be derived from the liberalization of invisible items related to export trade, productivity and foreign investments. It can be assumed that in the long run additional expenditure on these items would be more than offset by direct and indirect earnings in the form of expanded exports, more efficient production and replacement of dollar imports by domestic goods". The final paragraph states that, "Where dollar invisibles are restricted in order to protect domestic industries or similar interests, liberalization might result in a certain amount of dislocation and hardship but in many cases the economy, as a whole, would ultimately be stronger and healthier if resources were thus gradually directed into more productive fields".

8. Chapter IV: This chapter concerns the effects of measures taken by the Associated countries affecting their trade relations with Member countries. It corresponds to the factual chapters 1 and 2 on the European situation and is not intended to be controversial. You will note that your suggested text with some amplifications in the right direction have been incorporated into the chapter (paras 10-12). See your telegrams Nos. 1124† and 1125.† These Canadian paragraphs quite definitely place the responsibility for increasing exports to Canada squarely on the shoulders of the OEEC countries. There is no indication of any fault to be found with Canadian commercial policy and the chapter merely underlines the fact that Canada has adopted liberal and helpful policies. We did not intervene in the section of the chapter relating to the United States as we considered this was their affair.

9. Chapter V: This chapter concerns the conditions and possibilities for new progress toward liberalization. In order to avoid the necessity of balancing individually every sentence and paragraph of the chapter, the Working Party agreed to divide it into two parts. In Part A, problems arising from the Extension of Liberalization, the European countries were provided with an opportunity of stating what, in their view, were the chief problems. In Part B, we and the U.S. Representative, supported by the more enlightened members, were given the opportunity of setting out the advantages and possibilities of further progress. Both of these sections underwent many revisions and modifications and neither is entirely satisfactory from everyone's point of view. Taken together, however, they represent a balance. This technique for dealing with the divergent points of view has probably resulted in a stronger statement of the advantages and possibilities for further liberalization than could otherwise have been achieved. It has also, admittedly, resulted in a stronger statement on the problems, but it would have been difficult if not impossible to prevent the European members from securing some mention of their doubts and fears. In our view it was well worthwhile giving them this in return for a forthright statement of "advantages and possibilities".

10. Conclusions: In view of the obvious difficulties of finding a middle course between two rather divergent points of view, it is not surprising that the conclusions have taken a rather modified form and lack the precision and clarity which we would have wished. On the other hand the conclusions are probably more positive than might have been expected due to the almost complete withdrawal of the French Representative.

11. Paragraphs 1-4 present factual conclusions and, since the facts are favourable, these paragraphs tend to allay fears of harmful effects of liberalization. Para 5 contains the main statement on future progress:

"Because of the advantages of liberalization and the serious drawbacks involved in prolonging the maintenance of restrictions vis-à-vis the dollar area, Member countries have every interest in continuing their efforts towards the gradual abolition of these restrictions. The world situation remains favourable, the reserves of Member countries, considered as a whole, continue to rise and extraordinary expenditure by the United States in Europe will still remain at a high level for some time to come. It seems therefore that there is room for a further advance in liberalization especially in countries which have so far freed little or no commodities in one or all of the three categories, insofar as the situation of their balance of payments and reserves is, on the whole, satisfactory."

12. This paragraph is not more than a restatement of the decision taken last December C(54)317 in modified form. It would be difficult to strengthen it. Paragraph 6 relates progress in Europe to the OEEC/North American bilateral trade balance. The Europeans are very much attached to this concept. As it is presented in the second sentence, it is certainly a fact that some countries are concerned ... about the deterioration of their trade balance and this has undoubtedly affected the rate of liberalization. Their concern should, of course, be related to their general gold and dollar position and we would suggest a suitable amendment bringing this point out. If the general gold and dollar position is the criteria, the concern is of course less acute!

13. Para 7 is a relatively strong reference to the undefined "hard core" of non-competitive goods. We should appreciate your comments on this paragraph.

14. Para 8 is aimed at the U.S. and it may be that they will propose modifications. At the final meeting of the Working Party we proposed that "enable" in the second last line be replaced by "facilitate". Both we and the U.S. Representative understood that this was agreed and we would intend to raise the point again in Committee.

15. Para 9 is a combination of a deleted paragraph and a final paragraph of a previous draft. In the deleted paragraph an attempt was made to link progress in Europe directly to progress in North America without indication of priority. The U.S. and German Representatives were prepared to accept this statement but we thought it was better deleted. The U.K. Representative supported the deletion since their position was that the next step should be taken by the U.S. Para 9 is thus a procedural conclusion proposing another exercise next year and another meeting of experts.

16. The French Appendix: We are attaching four copies of the proposed French appendix. You will see that this paper is rather mild and that most of the points have already been covered in modified form in the text of the report. Our feeling is that the French Representative could easily have entered into the negotiation of the report if all that had been at issue was the inclusion of the French reservations. The principle point we think is that the French administration wish to reserve their position on the report and conclusions as a whole and this was a convenient technique for doing so.

17. One advantage of the French technique is that it centres attention on their case (which is a relatively weak one) and invites comment from other Delegations at the Joint Committee and the Council. We should be grateful for your views on what might be said about the French position in these meetings.

18. With regard to the report as a whole we are of the opinion that it is probably as positive as can be expected. The Council decision that will ultimately be passed has not yet been drafted but there may be an opportunity at that stage to clarify and strengthen the recommendations to Member countries. At the moment we are not hopeful about this however in view of the French position. Also it must be borne in mind that any attempt to strengthen the recommendations to European countries will inevitably result in an attempt to strengthen the recommendations to the U.S. and to reintroduce the idea of reciprocity or priority of progress in North America. The net effect might be to turn attention away from the advantages and possibilities of liberalization in Europe.

19. In our view we should in general be content with what we have. We cannot be sure, however, what the reactions of other capitals will be; it is quite possible that they will have substantial revisions to suggest when the Joint Committee meets. The Joint Committee will not meet until after December 12 so that your instructions need not reach us before that date. (We previously asked for them by December 8).

20. It is hoped that the report can be passed through the Joint Committee before Christmas leaving passage through the Executive Committee and Council for January. As there is some chance that a Ministerial Council may be held in February, we would hope that whatever decision is taken will be brought to the attention of Ministers. If it is thought advisable to focus attention on the French at that stage, arrangements might be made for a separate discussion on dollar liberalization.

F.G. HOOTON

504.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OEEC*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC*

TELEGRAM E-1278

Ottawa, December 13, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your letter No. 3633 of November 25.

OEEC REPORT ON DOLLAR RESTRICTIONS

We have reviewed the revised chapters IV and V and the conclusions of the draft report. This draft is an improvement over the earlier version, and we note that the major changes that we had suggested have been incorporated. Without suggesting detailed drafting changes, we would wish to make the following comments on the key points of importance for your guidance, both in the discussion, and for any general statement you may wish to make.

2. Chapter IV is purely factual and we have no comments.

3. Chapter V still places too much emphasis on obstacles to further progress, and this almost obscures the fact that the balance of payments situation of each individual country should be the sole criterion. Some of the "obstacles" to which considerable detail is devoted in Chapter V appear to us to be more imaginary than real, and would not, in any case, provide justification for continued restrictions. Most of the countries concerned have commitments with respect to import restrictions in other agreements and nothing in the OEEC report should appear to derogate from those commitments. We are particularly concerned about the detailed references to U.S. commercial policy and the implication of reciprocity. We assume that the United States Delegation will wish to propose changes in drafting that would remove this kind of implication, and we should, of course, support this. We are also concerned about the references to intra-European trade and trade with primary producing countries as being a possible obstacle to liberalization. We note that paragraph 33 of chapter V states that "fears with respect to intra-European trade and trade with other non-dollar countries would appear unfounded so far". In our view, even if such fears were not unfounded, i.e., if the statistical picture were to show some adverse effect on intra-European trade, this would not provide a justification for continued discrimination. The system of bilateral and regional arrangements in trade should be considered as a temporary expedient at a time when currencies are inconvertible, and not as something that should be safe-guarded at the expense of dollar liberalization. This is an important point of principle, and the OEEC report should not leave the impression that regional and bilateral arrangements could, in themselves, constitute an obstacle to the removal of discrimination once balance of payments justifications cease to exist. In this connection, it should be clear that the commitments of most OEEC countries in other agreements are overriding.

4. With respect to the draft conclusions, we are glad to see the statement in paragraph 5. However, this seems to be the only indication in the report that there is some urgency about dollar liberalization; that conditions are favourable for further progress, and that such progress is in the member countries' own interests. The statement in paragraph 5 is considerably weakened by the emphasis and detailed review of the obstacles to be overcome.

5. We are particularly concerned about paragraph 7 of the conclusions. The final comment in this paragraph which affirms that there will be "no possibility of removing restrictions on certain products in the near future" should, we believe, be deleted. We question whether a statement of this kind is appropriate in this report in view of the specific obligations of most OEEC countries under the GATT. The only justification for continued restrictions is an individual country's balance of payments problem. The GATT has recognized that there may be transitional difficulties with respect to a "hard-core" of restrictions, and a special framework within which individual requests for waivers may be considered has been agreed to in the GATT to meet this transitional problem. The GATT hard-core waiver decision lays down detailed criteria and commitments with respect to restrictions (which must be non-discriminatory) maintained after the balance of payments justification has disappeared. Paragraph 7 of this draft report seems to provide a wide and unqualified basis for protective restrictions which are contrary to the objectives and obligations of most OEEC countries.

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

CONVERTIBILITÉ

CONVERTIBILITY

505.

DEA/4901-F-40

*La délégation permanente auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OEECE
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Delegation to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

LETTER NO. 196

Ottawa, January 20, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our telegram No. 1181 of December 27.

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL, JANUARY 12-14, 1955; CONVERTIBILITY

The Ministerial Examination Group on Convertibility met under the Chairmanship of Mr. Butler on January 12, for the purpose of discussing its report to the Council (GMC(54)13 rev. 2).<sup>12</sup> The morning was devoted to the discussion of Part I of the report, which dealt with trade questions, and the afternoon to Part II, on payments. It soon became clear that the Chairman had a carefully thought out plan for dealing with this subject and matters never showed any real tendency to get out of hand. He later proposed, and his suggestion was accepted by the Group itself and also by the Council, that whereas it would be possible to take a resolution on Part II (Payments) providing for immediate further action in the form of a mandate to the Managing Board of the EPU, Part I should be put on ice, so to speak, for reconsideration by the Group or its Deputies after the GATT talks had finished.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>12</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 658.

2. Sir Hugh Ellis-Rees, as Chairman of the Group of Deputies, introduced Part I of the report, stressing the difficulties which had been encountered in its preparation, largely because of the work on the same subject being carried on "in another place". He was immediately followed by the President of the Board of Trade, who indicated that the United Kingdom, though like others, not entirely satisfied with all details of the report, was prepared to accept it as describing "broadly the kind of trade pattern" to be aimed at. He made specific reference to the section on bilateral agreements, which he commended as providing for an early and extensive study of the problem, and to paragraph 7 on the progressive removal of trade barriers. This paragraph sets out a difference of opinion between Members regarding the further removal of quantitative restrictions as providing "a fruitful means of making further progress towards the achievement of their common objectives" and those who consider the early reduction of high tariffs as the most pressing problem. Mr. Thorneycroft indicated that the United Kingdom supported the first view.

3. In the debate which followed, no delegate opposed Part I as a whole, but a number again stated the positions of their governments on specific points. The United States gave a general approval on the same lines as the United Kingdom. The Canadian statement followed shortly after that made by Mr. Randall Burgess. You will note from the attached text that Mr. Wilgress firmly and unequivocally stated our position on the abolition of all trade discrimination, including that arising from the application of regional trading rules. Owing to the way the agenda was handled, there was no extended debate on these questions in the Council itself and this was therefore the only general statement that we made.

4. At the beginning of the afternoon session, the Chairman asked Sir Hugh Ellis-Rees to outline the procedure proposed for dealing with the trade section of the report. Sir Hugh then proceeded to state that the morning's discussion had shown that this part of the report was acceptable as a broad survey of the problems to be faced, but also that a detailed brief was not at present possible, particularly until the results of the GATT meetings were known. He therefore suggested that the Chairman should ask the Council to note the work done to date and, by means of an entry in the minutes, to request the Convertibility Group to meet again after the GATT negotiations were finished to see if any agreement could then be reached. As noted above, this proposed procedure was accepted, without debate, by the Convertibility Group and later by the Council itself.

5. A debate on the Payments section of the report revealed the following principal positions;

United Kingdom: reiterated its previously expressed unwillingness to give any undertaking now on fixed exchange rates; stated that any mandate to the Managing Board of the EPU should provide for a study of all methods of transferring EPU capital to the proposed European Fund; indicated that it did not regard the provision of continuing machinery for multilateral compensation along the present lines of EPU as being necessarily indispensable and endorsed the approach on this subject adopted in paragraph 22 of the report.

United States: welcomed the plan for a European Fund, repeated the view that the assets of EPU originally provided by the United States must be transferred to the Fund and stressed that the United States would expect to have the same rights vis-à-vis the new

<sup>13</sup> Les membres du GATT étaient en train d'examiner le fonctionnement de l'organisation commerciale. Voir le chapitre premier, 2<sup>e</sup> partie, section A.
The members of GATT were in the process of reviewing the operations of the trade organization. See Chapter 1, Part 2, Section A.

Fund, including a voice in the ultimate disposition of their assets, as it at present enjoyed with EPU.

Sweden: (speaking through Denmark which is the Scandinavian Representative on the Group): repeated its view that the European Fund should be postponed until the economic circumstances in which the Fund would be operating were better known, though it did not propose to stand in the way if others wished to go ahead, only reserving its position on eventual participation; and make the second point that the loan terms of the new Fund, if it were set up, should not be competitive with private credit.

Benelux and Switzerland: were concerned about paragraph 22 on multilateral compensation and wished to have something in the report to establish that the provision of continuing machinery for multilateral compensation was necessary and would be studied; the Swiss preference was for assuring multilateral compensation through private institutions on the basis of agreed multilateral arrangements among governments and central banks.

Denmark: reiterated its position that the arrangements under consideration for setting up the Fund would not supply sufficient incentives to creditor countries to take appropriate action to rectify imbalances; despite strong pressure from the United Kingdom and Germany, and from the Chairman himself, the Danish Delegate therefore refused to agree to the deletion of the sentence at the end of paragraph 7 which recorded that one Member considered that countries in "extreme and persistent over-all creditor positions" should be required to pay their contributions before calls were made on other Members.

Germany: made a proposal, which was accepted, that some sort of general preamble should be drafted which, for public consumption, would "maintain the momentum" of the move towards convertibility; the German Delegate also repeated his earlier statements to the effect that, though detailed work on the arrangements for setting up a Fund should go forward at once, there should be no binding commitments undertaken until the circumstances in which the Fund would have to operate were better known.

6. In the light of the diverse views expressed, it was obviously not possible either to limit or to give precision to the mandate transmitted to the Managing Board of the EPU. The attached draft resolution (CES/348) was therefore proposed and adopted. You will note that it agrees to continue the operation of the EPU after June 30, 1955 and instructs the Managing Board, (1) to report to the Council by April 16, 1955 on the conditions on which, and the period for which, the EPU might be extended, and (2) to study simultaneously the conditions for setting up a European Fund and submit detailed proposals to this end by the same date.

7. In answer to specific enquiries from the United States and Switzerland, it was made clear that the Managing Board of EPU was meant to take into account both the report of the Ministerial Group and the views expressed at the current meetings. As the Chairman said, somewhat wearily, "the resolution excluded nothing".

8. Immediately after the resolution was adopted, M. Faure asked to speak and announced that, since the EPU was to be continued, France intended, before June 30, 1955, to repay part of the non-consolidated portion of its debt in the Union. He stressed that no multilateral or bilateral bargaining was involved. The details would be given to the Managing Board the following day and the operation would be carried out immediately.

9. The final section of the report, Part III, Organizational Matters, was also left to be examined by the Ministerial Group or its Deputies, after the GATT talks had terminated.

10. On the whole, it appears undeniable that Mr. Butler, as Chairman of the Ministerial Group, skilfully separated the wheat from the chaff and made it possible to "maintain the momentum" of the work on convertibility without becoming involved in a debate on trade policy which could only have been conclusive at the expense of being unfortunate.

PAUL TREMBLAY

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Déclaration

Statement

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL MEETING — JANUARY 12-14: MINISTERIAL EXAMINATION GROUP ON CONVERTIBILITY
STATEMENT BY THE CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE ON THE REPORT OF THE MINISTERIAL EXAMINATION GROUP ON CONVERTIBILITY

Mr. Chairman,

Members of the Ministerial Group are already aware of the importance which the Canadian Government attaches to the ultimate reestablishment of a freely operating multilateral system of world-wide trade. We regard it as an important step in this direction that each country should move towards the general convertibility of its currency as quickly as its own individual circumstances permit. The report now before us for consideration examines the problems which might accompany this move to convertibility, both from the financial side and from the point of view of the trade rules which could or should be accepted and enforced.

It is no criticism of the work of the Ministerial Deputies to say that the report they have drafted shows marks of their efforts to reconcile views which at some points have been divergent; but in these circumstances it is I think particularly important that we should not, in our search for an agreed formula, lose sight of the original and overriding objective — clearly stated in the report itself — which is the freeing of trade, the removal of quantitative restrictions and the abolition of discrimination on an eventual world-wide basis.

It must be recognized that the adoption of convertibility by some of the major trading countries might create a situation in which there would be a strong temptation to resort to restrictive and discriminatory practices to cushion the impact on the economy of one country or another. It is the Canadian view that the only healthy approach to this problem is to proceed as far as possible with the removal of quantitative restrictions now — before convertibility — and thus to minimize the possible dislocation consequent upon C-day.

We therefore welcome the proposals which are to be considered at this meeting of the Council for a substantial increase in the already high degree of trade liberalization achieved by the Members of OEEC among themselves. But it would, in the view of the Canadian Government, be regrettable if intra-European trade liberalization were to be regarded as an end in itself and were in any way to derogate from the world-wide liberalization which is the pre-eminent objective of us all. The transition from the smaller to the larger area of liberalization is bound to have some effect upon the patterns of trade. It is our view, however, that such changes when brought about by the move towards world-wide multilateral trade would be, in fact, an indication of healthy flexibility and would also undoubtedly be in the long-term interest of the countries concerned.

Canada, as an associate Member of the OEEC, is glad to recognize the value and scope of the work that the Organization has done and is doing. Its activities have been conducted on a high — indeed an unprecedented — level of international co-operation. Its achievements in helping to rebuild the European economy and in freeing a large and important area of world trade from the restrictions consequent upon the crippling effects of the war, have done much to prepare the way towards the restoration of a freely functioning trading system throughout the world. In view of these great achievements and of the ultimate purpose which we consider they serve, the Canadian Government has, up to the present time, been prepared to accept the fact that purely intra-European liberalization does, in effect, imply discrimination towards the rest of the world. But after the adoption on convertibility and the elapse of what we would hope would be a strictly limited transitional period, there would, in our view, no longer be a valid reason for maintaining, for its own sake, a regional trading group which was in any sense exclusive or discriminatory. We would rather hope that the spirit of co-operation and frank discussion which has pervaded the activities of the OEEC might be transferred to the larger field and play its part in the common effort to frame and to make effective world-wide rules for the freeing of trade.

506.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 524

Paris, April 28, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Our telegram No. 389 of April 2; † our letter No. 1336 of April 26. †
Repeat London No. 69; Washington No. 27.

EUROPEAN PAYMENTS UNION: EUROPEAN FUND

We have sent you by airbag (our letter No. 1336) copies of the Managing Board's report (C(55)91) on EPU, the European Fund and transitional arrangements. The report provides very substantial agreement on all the main points relating to the renewal of EPU and the creation of a European Fund. We dealt with these in our telegram No. 380. † The question of exchange rates in the period after the formation of the European Fund remains an issue of fundamental disagreement. The Managing Board has included two alternative solutions in its report: i.e. the complete liquidation of EPU according to the United Kingdom proposal and the maintenance of EPU without credit facilities after the transfer of its assets to the European Fund as a means of continuing the monthly compensation mechanism at fixed exchange rates. The continental countries remain convinced of the necessity of maintaining the monthly compensations at fixed rates while the United Kingdom refuses to give any ground on its conviction that a floating rate for sterling is an essential part of the move to convertibility.

2. While the positions have not altered on this point, we should like to comment at greater length on (group corrupt) convictions of the Europeans in the light of the comments contained in London telegram No. 487 † and Rasminsky's letter (April 6) to Ritchie. † Rasminsky comments that, "should sterling and other European currencies come under pressure the countries which compete with the United Kingdom for export markets are unlikely to wish to maintain fixed rates for long if sterling is depreciating". This of course would not be denied, but it is precisely because the continental governments envisage that they will have to devalue with sterling that they are so concerned. Devaluation on the continent, being traditionally associated with inflation and a general breakdown of internal equilibrium with all that it entails in economic, social and political terms, it is of no use to argue that the governments — in particular the French Government — should take appropriate internal measures to correct inflation as they may be unable to do so. They are firmly of the view that fixed exchange rates are fundamental to European economic stability and they are fearful lest a devaluation of sterling might set off a series of competitive devaluation with serious trade consequences. An indication of the degree of conviction of the continental countries is the possibility, which has been discussed privately, that a compensation mechanism at fixed exchange rates might be established between the six ECSC countries and perhaps under a widened mandate of the Coal and Steel Community with provision for participation of other OEEC countries. This might theoretically be necessary if the United Kingdom vetoed an OEEC arrangement of this type, but it seems unthinkable that the United Kingdom could allow itself to be forced to a veto of this kind.

3. The Steering Board for Trade met this week to consider the trade aspects of the report but, of course, the question of exchange rates was constantly before them. On the renewal of EPU the Steering Board had grave doubts about the effect on trade liberalization of increasing the gold ratio to 75 percent. It is unlikely, however, that their doubts will undermine the substantial agreement to move to 75 percent.

4. The Steering Board was even more upset about trade prospects after a move to convertibility coupled with a floating rate for sterling. They envisaged a possible if not probable falling off of the sterling rate to 272. There was fairly general agreement that European exports would not be severely affected if sterling did not depreciate further (except for a few high cost export industries especially in Belgium) but there would be severe competition in third markets. It was felt, however, that, if the rate fell below 272, the French would probably have to devalue either de jure or de facto and this would be followed by similar moves in other European countries. The continental representatives considered this a most foreboding and gloomy prospect with far reaching consequences including a return to bilateralism, inflation and at worst a general disintegration of European trade relationships.

5. In this discussion there was little evidence of support for, or belief in the ability of GATT to prevent a return to bilateralism. Even the OEEC code has not been able to entirely eliminate bilateral agreements between member countries. There was unanimous agreement that the OEEC code of liberalization should be maintained and it is significant that the United Kingdom are now no longer talking of a transition period at the end of which the OEEC code would be subsumed by the GATT rules. The United Kingdom are, of course, not happy about the results of the GATT review. Although they have not said so openly it may be that the United Kingdom are now prepared to accept the OEEC code on a longer term basis after convertibility as a protection against continental discrimination if the continental countries maintain fixed rates. If this is so, a serious problem of jurisdiction between GATT, OEEC and in some cases, the IMF will arise.

6. The continental countries apparently wish to have European problems discussed in the first instance in OEEC and then, after securing agreement of OEEC members, and if possible associate members as well, proceed to a full discussion in GATT and/or IMF.

7. Apart from the jurisdictional problem there is the difficult question of adapting the OEEC percentage liberalization system to include countries with floating rates. How, for example, could the percentage of liberalization of fixed rate continental countries be bargained against a high level of United Kingdom liberalization at a depreciated sterling rate. Clearly the old procedures would have to be revised, but it is difficult to envisage how.

8. We have great difficulty in envisaging how these negotiations will end. Clearly the continental countries, or at least their trade experts, have grave misgivings about convertibility. They would prefer a continuation of EPU with a gradual slackening of dollar discrimination to any outright break in the near future. On the other hand the financial experts in the Managing Board are apparently proceeding on the assumption that convertibility of sterling will follow shortly after the election — although the view is expressed that Mr. Butler may await the third quarter returns (which are the least favourable for the United Kingdom) before making the move.

9. As we see it, the problem facing the continental countries in forthcoming negotiations is how best to present their bargaining position so as to influence the United Kingdom to give specific assurance of sterling stability. One such bargaining position is the threat to set up a separate compensation mechanism without the United Kingdom, another is the assurance that the continental central banks will refuse to hold sterling after convertibility if the rate is allowed to fluctuate. (The Bank of England has recently approached central bankers in Europe requesting some assurance that they will hold sterling and they have been turned down flatly). Another bargaining position is the threat to discriminate against the United Kingdom. We do not agree with Rasminsky that this is farfetched. It is not inconceivable that a European fixed rate gold block in difficulties might attempt to solve them by means of QR's against the dollar area and sterling area. This would not imply that they would cut themselves off from sources of cheap foodstuffs or raw materials. These could be allowed in freely as they are today from dollar sources. It would be dangerous to count on the provisions of GATT to prevent such discrimination if the European countries as a group are convinced of its necessity.

10. The United Kingdom will have to balance the possible effects of these potential continental moves against the desirability of maintaining complete freedom of action on rate policy. Of course, if the rate could be kept stable in practice but without commitment for a long enough period after convertibility it is likely that continental confidence would return and the continental countries might gradually make the psychological adjustments necessary to take them out of regional thinking to that required in a convertible system.

11. The Managing Board report along with comments of the Steering Board which are to appear shortly, will be discussed in the Joint Trade and Payments Committee next week. It is most unlikely, however, that that Committee will attempt detailed negotiation or comments and we expect that the report will receive perfunctory passage. The next stage of serious discussion will be at the deputies of the ministerial group on convertibility, May 9-11. The agenda has not yet been drawn up for this meeting, but the papers to be discussed will include the Managing Board's report, the Steering Board's comments and the Council paper on the administration of the European Fund C(55)89. We expect the deputies meeting will be an important one. It may be that arrangements will have to be made to continue discussion of the main issues by heads of delegations up to the ministerial Council (scheduled tentatively for June 9-10). If agreement is not reached at the ministerial Council, there will be little time left for negotiation before the end of the EPU year, June 30. There is, of course, the possibility that the EPU will be prolonged for one month to give time to complete the negotiations for renewal and the European Fund which are, of course, regarded as a package.

12. We should be most grateful for your comments on the situation which has developed and on the papers which will be considered by the deputies. We shall, of course, require instructions on how you wish us to intervene at the deputies. Before it is necessary for you to draw up these instructions, we would hope to send you further comments on some of the main country positions. You will appreciate that we are not members of the Managing or Steering Boards where the debate has taken place and some of the accounts we have had differ in emphasis. We are seeing Shearer of the FOA tomorrow and Owen — United Kingdom, next week.

L.D. WILGRESS

507.

DEA/4901-Q-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 633

Paris, May 13, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your telegram No. 515 of May 9.†
Repeat London No. 84; Washington No. 34.

DEPUTIES OF MINISTERIAL EXAMINATION GROUP ON CONVERTIBILITY
MAY 10-11

We are reporting by despatch† on the details of the deputies discussions. Our general conclusions on the results of the meeting are as follows:

(1) A useful exchange of views was held. While official country positions showed little evidence of change on most of the items, there were signs of a shift of emphasis. The United Kingdom was not in a position to give a lead to the discussion in view of the elections.

(2) There is behind the scenes evidence of a slackening of the continental insistence on the maintenance of a compensation mechanism. The Benelux countries and Germany are apparently satisfied with the United Kingdom proposal for a new high level forum for consultation. The Swiss, which were the strongest advocates, have now backed down to the extent of regarding the compensation mechanism as a transitional arrangement which might be adopted for one year and then renewed only by unanimous consent. The United Kingdom hope they can eventually break down the Swiss resistance.

(3) The main change of emphasis came from the French who had previously not expressed intransigent views. Calvet (closely advised by Kojeve) adopted a firm regional position in support of a compensation mechanism, a permanent OEEC code and the strictly regional operation of the proposed European fund.

(4) The deputies reaffirmed their unanimous view that the OEEC code should be maintained after convertibility. The United Kingdom were not prepared to agree to its continuance for more than a transitional period (i.e. 12 months). Rowan was at pains to point out that the OEEC code could be maintained after a transitional period only if the trade advantages were extended to other members of the GATT. He proposed that a discussion of this question should be postponed until some experience had been gained of the working of convertibility and the GATT. The Benelux and German official position was that the code should be extended for an indeterminate period. Privately we understand that these countries are beginning to face the realities of convertibility and are now thinking of the OEEC code as a transitional arrangement. The French insisted on the necessity of deciding now that the code should be a permanent feature of OEEC and left no doubt about their wish to deal with GATT and IMF conflicts by insisting on regional waivers. The United Kingdom are quite concerned at this new resurgence of French regionalism but are hopeful that they may be able to isolate the French in view of the relaxed German, Benelux and Swiss attitudes.

(5) There was little discussion on the United Kingdom proposal for a new high level forum although there was general approval of the idea. As Rasminsky reported, the United Kingdom regard their proposal as a sop to the regionalism of the continent. They do not regard it as a substitute for a broader bridge body but they have purposely made their proposal in vague terms with the intention that the continental countries should participate to the fullest extent in giving it precision. It is not the United Kingdom intention that the proposed body should replace the Steering Board or the board of management of the new European Fund. However, its position in the organizations committee structure has yet to be worked out.

2. We agreed fully with your instructions not to intervene at the meeting and did not do so.

L.D. WILGESS

508.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OEEC
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 712

Paris, June 3, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Our letter No. 1662 of May 27.†
Repeat London No. 98; Washington No. 39.

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL

Although the draft agenda will not be out until Monday, it is certain that the Ministerial Council will devote most of the forthcoming meeting to the trade and payments problems connected with a return to convertibility. The issues unresolved after Council discussion of the Managing and Steering Board's reports on the renewal of E.P.U. and the establishment of a European fund, were listed in document C(55)124 sent to you with our letter under reference. A revised version has been sent by telegram today.† Two heads of delegation meetings this week have not led to any substantial modification of positions, though it seems probable that there are private conversations taking place which may facilitate ministerial discussion. In particular, we understand that Calvet, of the French delegation, is in London, and that an attempt is being made to whittle down the difference between the United Kingdom and France (which has recently, as we reported, taken a strongly regional position).

2. The sum of the decisions to be taken on the points listed from A-J in C(55)124 will determine the extent to which further progress may be made in the multilateral approach to the move to convertibility over the regional and hesitant approach now evident in varying degrees of emphasis on the continent. We assume you will wish us to re-emphasize the advantages to all countries in hastening the achievement of a non-discriminatory worldwide trading system. Although the subject of dollar discrimination is not on the agenda and although we would not wish to make a lengthy statement on this subject, you may wish to consider whether you would like us to raise it in connection with the main items under discussion.

3. We have in mind the desirability of pointing out that many of the difficulties which the OEEC countries are encountering in connection with the setting-up of the European Fund and the trade rules after convertibility would be eased in direct relation to the extent to which progress is made now and in the immediate future in eliminating discrimination, including dollar discrimination. We might note the progress made by some countries in eliminating discrimination and also the lack of any progress in other countries. In this connection we have noted the position taken by the Canadian member at the I.M.F. consultations on Germany and France. We should be grateful for instructions on the extent to which you wish us to press a similar line at the OEEC Council.

4. Though in their total effect all the issues raised in Document C(55)124 are of importance to Canada, some of them refer to specific procedures or techniques with which we have little direct concern. Unless we hear otherwise from you, we would assume that you would not wish us to take any explicit stand on the following matters (lettered in accordance with C(55)124, 1st revision).

- (a) gold-credit ratio in the EPU
- (b) termination clause for the EPU
- (d) rates of exchange among member countries after the adoption of convertibility.

Although the continental countries, led by the Swiss, continue to attach the greatest importance to stable exchange rates, they now appear to have concluded that the United Kingdom will not give any commitment to maintain the sterling rate between fixed points. The Swiss, at a heads of delegations meeting on Wednesday, proposed that all OEEC members should make a declaration of intention to maintain stable rates. It may be possible for the United Kingdom to associate itself with a proposal along these lines which will be discussed at the Ministerial Council.

- (e) European Fund.
- (i) Criteria for grants of credit.

We are, of course concerned that the criteria and policies adopted are not discriminatory or regional in their intent. However, we have no stake in the fund and feel that the running on this must be left to the United States and others of like mind.

- (ii) Amount of members' contributions.
- (iii) Basis of members' contributions.
- (iv) Distribution of EPU assets upon liquidation.

5. The remaining items are of more direct concern to us and might be the points upon which to base our intervention or interventions in favour of the multilateral approach. We summarize below our understanding of the Canadian position on each of these points in order that you may inform us of any comments or modifications:

(c) Multilateral compensation

The outcome on this point is still very much in doubt. At the recent meeting of heads of delegations an almost solid continental position developed for examining at expert level the technical feasibility of a compensation scheme based on the Swiss paper. A meeting for this purpose begins today. This tactic has been used as a counter to the United Kingdom attitude that the point was not debatable. If the technical findings are favourable, the United Kingdom may find it difficult to avoid some sort of scheme being arranged which will at least partially meet the objection of the continentals without prejudicing or hampering proposed moves to convertibility. The outcome of the experts' study will not be known until shortly before the ministerial meeting. Until then it will be difficult to know what the position will be at the time of the meetings. If you agree, we would be inclined if the continentals are still pressing for a scheme which would be prejudicial to convertibility, to give the United Kingdom support by, in particular, supporting the proposed forum for consultation in OEEC as an appropriate alternative to a compensation mechanism (see Item K).

(f) Co-ordination and co-operation between OEEC and the IMF after convertibility.

This concerns a Swiss preoccupation that there should be close liaison between the IMF and the European Fund, particularly with respect to the examination of countries seeking credit. This has been agreed in principle by heads of delegations on the basis of paragraph 10C(55)89. Since the subject is now one of working out the details of the liaison, there is general agreement, subject to a Swiss reserve, that it need not be considered by ministers.

If the Swiss force a ministerial discussion, we assume you would agree that close liaison should be maintained between the IMF and the EF.

(g) Continuation of the code of liberalization after convertibility.

At the heads of delegations meeting yesterday, the United Kingdom made an effort to have this item taken off the list of questions by attempting to meet the continental position. The United Kingdom representative said he could agree that "the code (suitably amended) should continue to govern commercial relations between member countries for an unspecified (new English translation for "indéterminé") period after convertibility subject to the review of its working in conditions of convertibility." The continental countries welcomed this United Kingdom attempt to meet their views, but they were not inclined to remove the item from the list of questions to be put to ministers. Though it seems the United Kingdom now wish to postpone the debate on the continuation of the code until some experience has been gained in the working of convertibility, the French and perhaps the Swiss and other weaker countries may wish to get some more explicit declaration of regional solidarity at the ministerial meeting. We should be grateful for your instructions on the position we might take on this question if an intervention seems desirable. The line we have in mind is the following:

Would you agree with the language now acceptable to the United Kingdom, qualified by a statement first that the code must be applied in a non-discriminatory manner except where countries receive individual waivers from their obligations in GATT, and second that the move towards full non-discrimination should not be prejudiced or hampered thereby?

(h) Basis for waivers under Article 3(c) of the code

The point to be put to ministers is whether, if the code is continued, a member may invoke Article 3(c) when it is in deficit in its relations with the whole world, even if, in its relations with other member countries, its trade balance is in equilibrium or even in surplus.

At heads of delegation Ellis-Rees turned this question around, and asked the French delegate whether they felt that a member which is in surplus with the rest of the world but in deficit with the OEEC area should be entitled to a loan from the European Fund. There was no answer. The United Kingdom and United States representatives pointed out that it was quite impossible (except perhaps for the Swiss whose exchange authorities keep a close watch on every transaction) to separate regional from total positions. The French still maintain that this will be possible. The question which is going forward to ministers is thus in a most vague and unclarified state.

We would propose that, if it seems desirable, we should support the United Kingdom and United States position strongly indicating our view that after the re-establishment of convertibility the total position is the only practical criterion for a waiver. We might then support a United States view that this subject should really be considered in relation to (i) below. The criteria for waivers under Article 3(c) must not in any way prejudice the cases for waivers under GATT and IMF rules.

(i) There is fairly general support for the Benelux proposal for dealing with this question, which is in line with United Kingdom views. (See our letter No. 1604 of May 18, † paragraph 36), i.e. by dealing with future conflicts as they arise. The French, however, are not satisfied with the Benelux proposal and apparently want an OEEC declaration of intention which in effect would imply a resolve to maintain intra-European trade in spite of all commitments in other organizations. We do not think that the French will have much success in forcing their views on other OEEC members and we would hope not to have to enter into any detailed wrangling over this issue.

We would propose to play down the possibility of conflicts between GATT and OEEC rules in conditions of convertibility while making it clear that trade rules are subject to the provisions of GATT or to GATT waivers. We might add our view that in the event of special problems arising which cannot be foreseen at the moment, there is no reason to doubt that the case can be settled equitably through procedures provided in the general agreement.

(j) OEEC policy on tariff questions.

Discussion will be based on a memorandum submitted by the low-tariff countries which was distributed only today. We shall therefore deal with the question in a later telegram. †

(k) Arrangements within OEEC for dealing with questions which may arise out of the working of the new trade and payments system.

This is a reference to the United Kingdom proposal for a high-level consultative body. We would base our attitude towards this proposal on the comments and suggestions in your telegram No. 516 of May 9, † stressing that the purpose of the new body should be to exchange views and not to formulate rules or exceptions therefrom on trade and exchange matters. We have recently been approached several times by the United Kingdom delegation regarding support for their proposal. Would you agree that as the United Kingdom proposal has been supported by the other members, we might support it in principle, subject to the proviso that its functions are kept within the limits described in your telegram.

6. Owing to the unusually large number of unagreed points on the agenda, the discussions are likely to be both detailed and difficult. The issues are, however, far-reaching, and the outcome of considerable importance to Canada. We should be glad to know, therefore, whether you would consider it advisable for us to enter actively into the discussions along the lines sketched above and to use this forum for a strong statement of our general position on multilateralism, non-discrimination, and convertibility. The adoption of such an attitude on our part would certainly be welcomed by the United Kingdom delegation, and probably by that of the United States, though we have had no recent opportunity for discussions with the head of the United States OEEC delegation, who has been in Washington. Your instructions should reach us, if humanly possible, by Tuesday, June 7th.

L.D. WILGRESS

509.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC*

TELEGRAM 629

Ottawa, June 7, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram No. 712 of June 3.
Repeat Washington EX-1045; London No. 916.

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL

The following are our general comments on the main points arising at this meeting and on the observations which you have made concerning them.

2. Paragraph 2. We think it would be appropriate to restate the advantages in the early achievement of a non-discriminatory trading system. You might emphasize that the OEEC has always recognized this as a desirable objective. You could then point out that conditions have been, and continue to be, very favourable to the achievement of such a system. Gold and dollar reserves of countries outside North America have been rising almost continuously since 1948 (when the OEEC operation began) and are now 60% higher than they were at that time. Even during the recent recession additions were made to these reserves, thus reflecting in some degree the extent of the basic recovery which has been achieved and also the economic resilience of the European countries. The change-over to a non-discriminatory system would not involve a leap in the dark or any drastic transformation at this stage for many countries since very substantial progress has been made and a good deal of experience on which to base a further move has been acquired. Finally, although action by other countries should not be too dependent on the state of the U.S. economy, the transition might be eased at the present time by the fact that the U.S. economic outlook is generally considered to be strong. All in all, it is hard to imagine circumstances more favourable than the present. It is assumed, of course, that countries making such a move would be determined to achieve or maintain domestic stability. If any countries are restrained in the present situation by doubts that inflation can be avoided, it should be recognized that no alternative system can really protect them against the consequences of inadequate domestic policies for any length of time.

3. If, against this "favourable" interpretation of the factors in the present situation, it is argued that a good deal of the recent progress has been due to special U.S. expenditures abroad which cannot be counted on for the future, you might remark that there is no evidence yet that such expenditures (particularly those of a military character) will be curtailed. You might add that the circumstances in which such expenditures might be expected to fall off would almost certainly be such that the European countries themselves would be able at the same time to release substantial amounts of their own resources for other uses. Such special expenditures (as has also been the case with a considerable part of foreign aid) involve some calls on the resources of the European countries and a reduction need not entail anything like a corresponding decline in the total resources at the disposal of those countries. There is no reason, therefore, to assume that the positions of the European countries concerned would necessarily be substantially worsened on balance as a result of such a development.

4. Paragraph 3. It will be evident from the preceding paragraphs that we would consider it desirable to make in general terms the same kinds of points as have been made in the IMF consultations with respect to individual countries.

5. Paragraph 4. We agree that it would not be appropriate for you to comment in detail on the various specific EPU issues. On the other hand, we think that you might welcome the tendency to "harden" the EPU as representing some further progress towards the convertibility of intra-European transactions. We would be diffident about commenting on the exchange rate question but if you think it would be helpful you might refer to our experience with a fluctuating rate. You would not want to imply, however, that what has been true in our case would be entirely applicable to other countries in different circumstances. It is, however, a fact that in our experience short-term capital movements which were an unstabilizing factor under a fixed rate have exerted a stabilizing influence with a fluctuating rate. We have, of course, maintained pretty firm internal policies during this period and the position of our currency has been strong.

6. Paragraph 5(c). We are troubled by several aspects of the proposals for multilateral compensation and by their regionalist implications. We think, however, that it might be left to the U.K. to handle this one, especially in view of the particular consequences which such proposals might have for the position of sterling. We are not greatly attracted by the possibility of diverting some of the European countries from such a scheme by the establishment of a high level OEEC "forum". There would seem to be some danger that, if the "forum" were to be represented as a substitute of some sort for the compensation mechanism, there might be a tendency to use it to bolster a regional and discriminatory approach. We would, therefore, not wish to support actively the setting up of such a body although we might acquiesce in its establishment if it were to be agreed that this body would function in the limited manner suggested in our earlier message. You should not imply that Canada would necessarily accept membership in this body if it were to be established.

7. Paragraph 5(f). We would naturally favour intimate collaboration between OEEC and the IMF after convertibility if it was clear that the criteria and objectives of the two bodies were the same; in other words, if the OEEC accepted that the main criterion was the overall balance-of-payment position and the principle objective was the elimination of discriminatory restrictions and exchange and trade practices.

8. Paragraphs 5(g) and (h). Although we are not certain of some of the details of the U.K. proposal, we are not much attracted by it in the rather vague form reported in your message. Our position is that we are willing to accept the continuation of the OEEC code for a time but not as a substitute for the GATT rules when they can be brought into force. We consider that the GATT rules should be made effective as early as possible and that they should then govern all transactions including those within Europe. We would not wish to give any encouragement to the idea that OEEC countries might remain indefinitely under a European code despite their other international obligations. In this connection, we were rather shocked at the attitude expressed by the French delegation in particular as described in your paragraphs (g) and (h).

510.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 745

Paris, June 13, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your telegram No. 629 of June 6 [sic].
Repeat London No. 101; Washington No. 41.

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL — JUNE 9-10: TRADE AND PAYMENTS QUESTIONS

Substantial agreement was reached by Ministers on all points outstanding in connection with the renewal of EPU, the European Fund, and trade rules after convertibility. The only point on which agreement was not reached concerned the arrangements for multilateral settlement after the reinstatement of convertibility by some countries. The Managing Board has been given a mandate to submit by 15 July compromise proposals for "a multilateral system which will facilitate settlements between member countries" or, in other words, a compromise between the present system of multilateral compensation and free market system. The final acceptance of decisions on the renewal of EPU, the European Fund and trade rules is dependent on a satisfactory solution for settlements being agreed. In the meantime the EPU has been renewed for one month until July 31.

2. Decisions on other items were made possible by United Kingdom agreement, at a Managing Board meeting prior to the Council, to study sympathetically proposals for a clearing mechanism which would involve a short-term floor to the sterling rate. The mandate to the Managing Board is purposely vague, but it provided that the system to be proposed shall in the first instance, be for a limited period and shall permit fluctuating exchange rates. The United Kingdom are apparently prepared to go a considerable way to meet the continental wish for a compensation mechanism, but they are likely to make every effort in the Managing Board to secure continental agreement for a system which will place greater reliance on central banks and avoid, if possible, a system of formal compensation.

3. Subject to a satisfactory agreement on a settlement system being reached before the end of July, the following are the most important decisions taken at the Ministerial Council which will become operative. If no agreement can be reached, the Union will have to be renewed on a monthly basis and Ministers will probably have to meet again during the summer.

(a) For the accounting periods after August 1, 1955, settlements will be on a 75 percent gold basis.

(b) The Union will be terminated or transformed if members representing 50 percent of quotas notify the organization.

(c) A European Fund, for which a legal text is to be prepared by July 15 will be established on the date on which the Union is liquidated or transformed in accordance with (b) above.

(d) European Fund credits are to be granted on request after taking into consideration "the existence, for the country concerned, of overall balance of payments difficulties which would endanger the maintenance of its level of intra European liberalization".

(e) The OEEC liberalization code will be extended for an "unspecified" period after convertibility and "in the light of experience of conditions prevailing upon the adoption of convertibility, the organization shall proceed to a further review of the provisions of the code".

(f) The benefits and obligations of the code shall apply to all members of OEEC.

(g) The organization, in determining whether a member country may invoke the escape clauses of the code, shall pay regard principally to the incidence of specifically European factors on its balance of payments position, or for a member country if the balance of payments is fundamentally influenced by its relations with non-member countries, whether a recourse to Articles 3(c) and 20(c) constitutes an indispensable means of re-establishing its balance of payments. In formulating its recommendations to the member country concerned, the organization shall take into consideration the desirability of maintaining intra-European liberalization, the advantages of reciprocity and the fact that for a country whose balance of payments is fundamentally influenced by its relations with non-member countries, a recourse to Articles 3(c) and 20(c) may constitute an indispensable means of re-establishing its balance of payments.

(h) The code shall provide for the case of a member country which, in pursuance on its international obligations and in spite of the consultations within the organization and other international organizations concerned which are provided for such cases is compelled to extend to non-member countries the liberalization measures adopted by it in accordance with Articles 2(a) and (b) in circumstances where such an extension would cause it serious balance of payments difficulties endangering the stability and the development of its European liberalization measures."

3. After agreement was reached on the method of handling the differences over the compensation mechanism, the main debate was focussed on the criteria for granting credits under the European Fund and the criteria for using the escape clause of the code — with the French adopting a strongly regional attitude. The solutions indicated in paras. 3(d) and (g) appear to be a workable compromise since they cover both the continental and United Kingdom positions. Obviously, much will depend upon how the arrangements are worked out in practice.

4. A related and fundamental French fear concerned the GATT/OEEC relationship. You will recall that the French, at the Deputies meeting in May, pressed for an OEEC declaration that intra-European trade liberalization would be maintained in spite of commitments in other organizations. This got no response from other delegations, many of which found the suggestion as "shocking" as we did. At a Ministerial Council Drafting Group the French delegation reversed this position by proposing that countries which got into difficulties because they were obliged to extend liberalization on a non-discriminatory basis should be relieved of their percentage liberalization obligations under the OEEC code though continuing to regard them as desirable objectives. This was an even more shocking suggestion to the Europeans. This move was foreshadowed in para. 8 of the London telegram of June 8† (to Ottawa No. 816, to Canac No. 79). A compromise was reached (para. 3(h) above) which does not provide a solution but provides a basis for more reasonable discussion in the period up to July 15 when firm proposals for amending the code must be agreed.

5. Without much detailed comment Ministers agreed to the establishment of a new body of high-level officials from capitals to meet periodically (United Kingdom proposal) although the Netherlands Minister thought it a "bad idea" for procedural reasons. Detailed proposals are to be submitted by July 15.

6. Council also passed a recommendation on tariffs, the principal operative paragraph of which read as follows:

Text Begins:

"Recommends that member and associated countries which are contracting parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), should co-operate actively during the coming discussions within the GATT, with a view to the speedy adoption of an automatic plan or any other method which would bring about a reduction of the general level of tariffs." Text ends.

7. I made a statement in accordance with your instructions, copies† of which will be sent by air bag along with our more detailed comments† on the meeting.

L.D. WILGRESS

511.

DEA/4901-F-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OECE*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC*

TELEGRAM 813

Ottawa, July 18, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Repeat London No. 1168.

OEEC MINISTERIAL COUNCIL MEETINGS

Your telegrams on the June meetings of the OEEC Ministerial Council have been read with much interest. Formal decisions have already been taken on most points at issue and agreement reached on the remainder. The following comments are therefore designed merely to let you know our reactions to these decisions. It is not likely that you will find it desirable to make another general statement at the forthcoming ministerial meetings since you outlined our position so well at the June meetings. But these comments of ours may be useful to you in any event.

2. With reference to paragraph 2 of your telegram 745, in which you mentioned a short-term floor to the sterling rate, we have noted the fuller indications of United Kingdom views contained in your letters Nos. 1993 of June 27† and 2101 of July 6.†

3. We were disappointed to learn that the regional balance of payments factor has been adopted as a specific — and, we fear, the main — criterion in determining derogation from the Code of Liberalization under Articles 3(c), 20(c) and 25(c). The battle seems to have been lost when the compromise reported in paragraph 2 of your telegram 819† was accepted by the U.K. Once the reference in Article 25(c) to the overall balance-of-payments position of a member country was replaced by a reference to its regional balance-of-payments position, the inclusion of a similar reference in respect of Articles 3(c) and 20(c) was incidental.

4. We were also disappointed to see the manner in which European regionalism has been asserted in connection with the procedure to be applied when a country is torn between its obligation of non-discrimination in GATT and its liberalization obligations in OEEC. Paragraph 1 of the amendment to the Code reported in your telegram 843† appears to go even further than the action contemplated in paragraph 21(b) of C(55)144. The latter called for the development of procedures for dealing with this sort of problem after consultations in OEEC and the GATT and Fund had revealed a real conflict. The amendment to the Code calls for procedures to be used when a country expects that it might be compelled to extend its liberalization measures on a non-discriminatory basis and if it fears that such an extension would cause balance-of-payments difficulties. This amendment is obviously designed to ensure that any differences between OEEC countries concerning the plight of any one of their members will be hammered out in the OEEC before being discussed in GATT and the Fund. Probably the least that European countries hope to achieve is that any active critics among their fellow members of OEEC will be muzzled when discussion is carried into the wider forum of GATT and the Fund.

5. As you can see, we are more disturbed than you about the outcome of these ministerial meetings. Admittedly, things could be worse, but we dislike the decided emphasis on regionalism in these decisions and the implication that so much is to be discussed and decided in the OEEC rather than in GATT and the Fund.

SECTION C

AUTRICHE : TRAITÉ D'ÉTAT
AUSTRIA: STATE TREATY

512.

DEA/50129-40

*Note du secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 13, 1955

AUSTRIAN TREATY NEGOTIATIONS

I attach for your information a memorandum reporting on the progress to date in the negotiations on the Austrian State Treaty which have been taking place in Vienna.

The memorandum examines the question from the point of view of Canadian interests.

[PAUL MARTIN]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note de la Direction européenne
Memorandum by European Division

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 13, 1955

AUSTRIAN TREATY NEGOTIATIONS: A PROGRESS REPORT

It now appears certain that the Foreign Ministers of the U.S.S.R., U.S., U.K., France and Austria will sign the Austrian State Treaty in Vienna next Sunday, May 15. A communiqué issued in Vienna last night — May 12 — announced that the Conference had successfully completed its work on the text of the State Treaty and that full unanimity had been reached on all articles of the draft treaty.<sup>14</sup> We have not yet been informed of the details of the terms agreed to in Vienna. However, all information available to us at present has been reviewed with the particular object of ensuring that the Canadian Government's interests in the Treaty are satisfactorily met.

2. As the Allied and Associated Powers were never at war with Austria, the proposed Austrian State Treaty has been conceived as a Treaty with "its official title" for the "Re-establishment of an Independent and Democratic Austria". It is not in the strict sense a peace treaty. Canada never recognized German sovereignty de jure over Austria, although de facto recognition was accorded. Never having been at war with Austria, Canada recognized Austria as an autonomous state after its liberation from German occupation and the Canadian Government agreed on January 25, 1949 to accept an Austrian Consul Général in Ottawa.<sup>15</sup> The absence of a treaty has not therefore greatly affected our political relations with Austria.

3. The general views of the Canadian Government on an Austrian settlement were transmitted to the negotiating powers on February 25, 1947.<sup>16</sup> In this statement the Government supported the expressed intention of the Four Powers to see a free and independent Austria re-established and noted with satisfaction the steps which had already been taken to this end. These principles are now re-affirmed in Article 1 of the draft treaty.

4. The Canadian memorandum also suggested that the boundaries should be those existing before the anschluss and this has been agreed in Article 5. Our memorandum also supported an early withdrawal of occupation forces after the ratification of the Treaty, a prohibition against a future anschluss and other political points of less importance which have all, in one form or another been embodied in the Treaty as at present agreed.

5. During the present negotiations in Vienna, a number of protests have been received from Canadian organizations and individuals regarding Article 16 of the Treaty. As in other Western countries, a number of people in Canada were deeply concerned at the prospect of agreeing to give the Soviet authorities free access to political refugees camps in Austria. They were afraid that the Russians would exert pressure upon these refugees to ensure their repatriation against their will. However, agreement has now been reached in Vienna to drop this article. From the political point of view therefore, the Austrian Treaty appears to be satisfactory to the Canadian Government.

6. The economic articles of the Treaty would also appear to be satisfactory from the Canadian point of view. The Allied and Associated Powers have long been in agreement that no reparations shall be exacted from Austria as result of the war (Article 34). The position as regards the other economic articles is however more confusing and requires a word of explanation.

<sup>14</sup> Voir/See United States, Department of State, Bulletin, Volume XXXII, No. 830, May 23, 1955, p. 833.

<sup>15</sup> Voir/See Volume 15, Document 5.

<sup>16</sup> Voir/See Volume 13, Document 119.

7. The negotiations among the Ambassadors in Vienna were since the beginning deadlocked on Article 35 which deals with German assets in Austria. It now seems that the Soviet Ambassador has accepted a compromise submitted by the U.S. that Article 35 stay in the Treaty but be enlarged by a paragraph referring to the agreement reached by the Austrians and Russians in Moscow for the definite return to Austria of oil fields and the Danubian Steamship Company. The Russians had in mind to retain this article in its present form while the Western Powers insisted that it should be reviewed to take account of the recent Austro-Soviet negotiations and other events. The Western negotiators had also contended that other economic articles had become out-dated during the past twelve months and had come to Vienna with 97 formal amendments to the Treaty they had been prepared to sign during the Berlin Conference of 1954. For their part both the Russians and the Austrians have also had a number of amendments and deletions to propose.

8. In pressing the Western Powers to sign Article 35 in its present form, the Soviet Union appeared to have had two principal objectives:

(a) to prevent any risk of the Austrian Government returning to German or Western ownership Austrian oil fields in the Soviet zone, and,

(b) to take every possible political advantage from the success of the Austro-Soviet bilateral negotiations by dealing with them separately from the Treaty so as to retain all the political kudos for themselves. The principal interest of the U.K., U.S. and Canadian Governments in this article was to protect the oil interests of their respective nationals. One of the largest oil fields in the Soviet zone of Austria is owned by a Canadian, Mr. R.K. van Sickle. Representations have been made through the U.K. Government on his behalf and the Austrian Government have recently agreed, in private negotiations with the U.S. and U.K. Ambassadors, to compensate foreign oil companies who were forced to sell to the Germans at unfair prices after the anschluss and have been nationalized by the Austrian Government since the liberation. The van Sickle company is in a stronger position than other British and American interests because it has had its claim recognized under Austrian law.

9. Article 42 is the other principal economic clause of interest to Canada, because it provides for the Austrian Government to restore to U.N. nationals any property of theirs which had been seized by Germany. This article has been revised but its final terms have not yet been brought to our attention. As you may be aware, a number of Canadians will have claims under this article and provisions of the Treaty ensure that their claims will receive equal treatment with those of other U.N. nationals. However, here again the Soviet Union has made an effort to retain the article in its original form while the Western negotiators were seeking to have it revised.

10. Despite the fact that agreement has been reached on all articles, the latest press reports indicated that two main questions remained unsettled:

(a) the form of the Austrian declaration of neutrality, and,

(b) the proposed Four Powers' guarantee of the integrity of Austrian territory.

11. Now that the Soviet Union has agreed to drop Article 17 from the Treaty, Austria will be relieved of the obligation to restrict her armed forces to the very limited levels (53,000 men for the army) which would have been permitted under this article. The text of an Austrian parliamentary declaration of neutrality has been drafted for consideration by the Foreign Ministers but we have not yet received a copy. It would simply note Austria's intention voluntarily to adopt a neutral policy and refrain both from entering into any military alliances and from permitting the establishment of foreign bases on Austrian territory.

12. Western negotiators have privately agreed with the Austrians to keep the question of a Four Powers' guarantee separate from the Austrian parliamentary declaration of neutrality. The reason for this is partly to make it harder for the Russians to seek excuses later for undue intervention in Austrian affairs on trumped up allegations that Austria is not maintaining her neutrality and partly because the U.S. would have conventional difficulties on guaranteeing Austrian territorial integrity. For this reason the U.S. Ambassador declared that Mr. Dulles would be unable to sign a treaty if the Russians made signature conditional on obtaining firm U.S. commitments to a guarantee of Austrian territorial integrity. The Soviet Ambassador replied that his Government had never suggested guarantees were a pre-condition of signature. The Ambassadors have apparently not been able to dispose of this question which will in all probability be reserved for the Foreign Ministers' Meeting.

13. The U.K. has been considering a formula for a guarantee which would be within the framework of the United Nations. Under it, the Four Powers would solemnly declare that if in the opinion of any of them, there was a threat to, or violation of Austrian territorial integrity, they would treat this as a grave threat to peace and bring the matter immediately to the attention of the United Nations, with a view to securing appropriate United Nations action to meet the situation. We do not yet know whether the French and Americans have accepted this suggestion or whether it has been discussed with the Russians and Austrians.

14. If an Austrian Treaty is signed in Vienna on Sunday, the question of Canada's accession to the Treaty will arise. The Treaty is drafted for signature by the Four Powers and by Austria but provides in Article 58 for any member of the United Nations to accede, and upon accession to be deemed an Associated Power for the purposes of the Treaty. According to the old Article 14 of the Treaty, any bilateral Treaty in existence between Canada and Austria before 1948 would have had to be recorded bilaterally unless Canada acceded to the Treaty. Article 14, however, has also been dropped during the current negotiations. However, if as would appear probable, a number of other Western countries, in addition to the U.S., U.K. and France, decided to accede to the Austrian Treaty, then it would seem desirable for Canada to do so. Even if there was no legal advantage in Canada's accession, it might, in our opinion, be politically desirable to indicate our satisfaction at the re-establishment of an independent Austria.

513.

DEA/50129-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], December 9, 1955<sup>17</sup>

AUSTRIAN STATE TREATY

By Article 37 of the Austrian State Treaty any member of the United Nations at war with Germany on May 8, 1945 may accede to the Treaty. When we raised with you on July 27 the possibility of Canada's acceding, you agreed that at that time there appeared to be no particular reason why Canada should accede but that we might raise the matter with you later if circumstances changed.

<sup>17</sup> Ce mémoire avait d'abord été rédigé pour présentation au ministre le 22 novembre.
This memorandum was originally drafted for presentation to the Minister on November 22.

2. On October 21 a meeting of representatives of interested departments considered whether Canada should accede to the Treaty as a gesture of support to Austria and as a counter-weight to Czechoslovakia, which had announced its intention to accede; there was also the possibility that Poland might do so. At this meeting, the representatives of the Department pointed out that from conversations with the Austrian Foreign Office and with the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires here, we understood that the Austrians would be satisfied to have Belgium's accession to balance Czechoslovakia, assuming that Poland did not accede. A representative of the Department of Trade and Commerce suggested that there might be a slight advantage in acceding to the Treaty if, as a result, Austrian authorities would be better disposed towards Canadian traders, but that the opportunities offered under the Treaty for the establishment of economic relations with Austria were no better than those under GATT. The Foreign Office, however, have commended accession to us on general political grounds. Even so, the political advantages to be derived from Canada's accession appeared to us very limited.

3. The principal objection to acceding to the Treaty is that the Austrians have shown little disposition to reach a satisfactory settlement of the principal Canadian claims arising out of the Treaty and particularly the claims of the Van Sickle oil interests and the Woodcot Estates (sugar). Although a settlement of these claims has not been formally linked with the Canadian accession to the Treaty, nevertheless the Austrians might interpret our action as indicating that we did not take the Canadian claims very seriously. If the Austrians were sufficiently interested in having Canada accede to the Treaty they would make greater efforts to reach a settlement of outstanding Canadian claims. The Canadian Chargé d'Affaires in Vienna has also recommended against our acceding to the Treaty for the same reason. Moreover, the wording of its Article 22 conflicted with the Canadian interpretation of the Berlin protocol of August 1945 concerning German assets in Austria and Italy, since it gave the right to dispose of these to the Four Powers rather than to all the allies.

4. From our discussion with the representatives of other Departments it appears to us that the reasons for not acceding still outweighed the political arguments for accession. I would, therefore, recommend that in the present circumstances Canada should not accede to the Treaty. You might, however, wish us to raise this question with you again in the event that:

- (a) the Austrians make a satisfactory settlement of the major Canadian claims, or
- (b) Poland should decide to accede to the Austrian State Treaty and no other Western country seemed prepared to balance its accession.

Do you agree?

5. Although the Austrians have not shown much interest in having Canada accede to the Treaty they have asked us to recognize officially the perpetual neutrality of Austria as defined in a Constitutional Law passed by the Austrian Parliament on October 26, 1955. I shall consider this problem in a separate memorandum.

J. LIÉGER

514.

DEA/50129-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], December 6, 1955

AUSTRIA'S NEUTRALITY

The Austrian Legation has forwarded to us the text of an Austrian Constitutional Law establishing the perpetual neutrality of Austria and has requested on behalf of its Government that the Government of Canada recognize the perpetual neutrality of Austria as defined in this Statute.

2. You will recall that in their negotiations in April 1955 with the Soviet authorities, the Austrians renewed the suggestion they had made at the time of the Berlin Conference in February 1954 that Austria declare its perpetual neutrality and undertake not to enter any military alliances or permit the establishment of military bases on its soil. The proposal was made primarily to overcome the Soviet Union's insistence that it be allowed to retain troops in Austria until the signing of the Peace Treaty with Germany. Austria also indicated that it would seek a Four Power guarantee of its territorial integrity. The Three Western Powers agreed that Austria should assume a neutral status though no specific provision to this effect was written into the Treaty nor was the nature of a Four Power guarantee for Austria discussed in other than very general terms.

3. The Austrian Constitutional Law establishing Austria's neutrality was passed on October 26, the day after Austria's complete sovereignty was finally restored, and entered into effect on November 5. The Austrian Government has now communicated the text of the Law to all governments with whom it maintains diplomatic relations and has asked them to recognize Austria's neutrality. So far as we know Austria has not yet approached any of the Four Powers concerning a guarantee of Austria's territorial integrity, having waited at the request of the Western Powers so that Four Power recognition of Austrian neutrality would not be complicated by any reference to the question of a guarantee. The Four Powers will be recognizing Austria's perpetual neutrality in identical Notes to be delivered to the Austrian Government today. (The text of the United Kingdom Note is attached). We may now, therefore, expect that the Austrians will soon be raising with the Four Powers the further question of a guarantee. Canada will not, of course, be expected to participate in any guarantee. By recognizing Austria's neutrality, Canada would merely be undertaking an obligation not to violate it and would not be involved in any military guarantees.

4. As explained by Chancellor Raab, Austrian neutrality will be virtually restricted to the military sphere, obliging Austria only to refrain from engaging in military alliances and to prevent the establishment of military bases on her territory. Austria will not be prevented from joining international organizations such as the United Nations or regional economic or political bodies and would feel free, for instance, to participate in East-West trade controls in cooperation with the OEEC. In building up its armed forces, Austria will be free to accept military equipment from all of the nations formerly occupying it and will endeavour to be scrupulously impartial in its official dealings with all nations. Chancellor Raab pointed out, however, that Austria will be able to maintain and develop its European and Western ideals and traditions. Austria's neutral status will not make it less friendly to the West.

5. In addition to the Four Powers, I believe eleven other governments have already recognized Austria's neutrality. Of these eleven countries, Italy is, so far as we know, the only NATO member — apart from the great powers — which has recognized, having taken this action before the three powers requested, at a NATO Council Meeting on November 14, that other members of the alliance should defer their replies until the replies of the Four Powers have been delivered.

6. I would recommend that we assure the Austrians, by means of a note† to the Austrian Legation, (draft attached) that the Government of Canada recognizes the perpetual neutrality of Austria as defined in its constitutional law. The draft reply follows closely the terms of the Four Power Notes.<sup>18</sup>

7. In case you wish to consult your colleagues in the Cabinet, I am attaching a draft memorandum† to the Cabinet, asking their approval of the Note to the Austrian Legation.<sup>19 20</sup>

J. L[ÉGER]

SECTION D

ITALIE : TRAITÉ DE LA PAIX
ITALY: PEACE TREATY

515.

DEA/50178-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 22, 1955

ITALIAN DENUNCIATION OF ITALIAN PEACE TREATY

The Italian Ambassador informed me on April 21 that his Government intends to denounce the Peace Treaty (except those clauses relating to territorial and economic matters) at the same time as it deposits the instrument of ratification of the Western European Union in Brussels next week. The Ambassador was not in a position to tell us the reasons which had motivated his Government's decision.

<sup>18</sup> Voir/See Documents on International Affairs, 1955, London: Oxford University Press — Royal Institute of International Affairs, 1958, p. 239.

<sup>19</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

Not necessary. [L.B. Pearson]

<sup>20</sup> Léger a ajouté à la main la note suivante./Léger added the following note by hand:
This, I think, could be raised in Cabinet without circulating a memorandum. We should, I presume, wait until your return. J. L[éger]

Pearson a répondu./Pearson replied:

Yes.

Rien n'indique que celle-ci ait fait l'objet d'une discussion au Cabinet en 1955. Le ministère des Affaires extérieures a envoyé une note reconnaissant la neutralité perpétuelle de l'Autriche à la légation de l'Autriche à Ottawa le 13 décembre 1955.

There is no evidence that it was discussed in Cabinet in 1955. The Department of External Affairs sent a note recognizing the perpetual neutrality of Austria to the Austrian Legation in Ottawa on December 13, 1955.

2. After the signature of the Italian Peace Treaty in 1947, the Italian Government on a number of occasions expressed a desire for revision of certain articles which stigmatized or imposed permanent restrictions on Italy. In 1951 the Italians raised the question of revision of the Treaty with all the signatories. Most of the nations concerned were in favour of removing obstacles to cooperation with Italy on an equal footing, but the Soviet Union and the satellites would not agree to revision unless Italy withdrew from NATO. In these circumstances, the United Kingdom, the United States and France suggested to the Italians that de facto revision might be achieved by a declaration of the signatories that they no longer considered certain clauses of the Treaty to be operative. On October 4, 1951, you informed a press conference that Canada would give sympathetic consideration to any approach from the Italian Government on this question.<sup>21</sup> On December 8, 1951, the Italians delivered notes to all the signatories asking agreement that the preamble and certain articles of the Treaty should be considered obsolete. Canada and most of the other signatories replied in identical terms. Our reply stated:

"The government of Canada agrees that the spirit reflected by the preamble of the peace treaty no longer exists and has been replaced by the spirit of the United Nations Charter and that the political clauses of the treaty, articles 15-18, are superfluous. The government of Canada also agrees that the military clauses of the treaty are not consistent with Italy's position as an equal member of the democratic and freedom-loving family of nations and hereby releases Italy from its obligations to Canada under articles 46-70 and annexes relevant thereto".

3. When the Paris Agreements were debated in the Italian Chamber of Deputies, the Neo-Fascist Party presented a draft resolution asking for revocation of the Peace Treaty. The Foreign Minister, Sr. Martino, accepted the motion as a recommendation in the following terms: "In practice, Italy is present in the sphere of international life in the fullness of its sovereignty. We could ask and certainly will decide to ask ... for a more explicit recognition of our equality or rights, so that no shadow of the past may cloud the future, but I should like to point out ... that one does not become equal to others by decree or concession, and that each people succeeds in playing in the history of the world that role which it achieves by virtue of its efforts." Martino's intention was no doubt to persuade the right-wing parties to vote in favour of the Paris Agreements and there was subsequently no indication that the Italian Government contemplated any further step.

4. It is difficult to see what practical advantages the Italians hope to gain by denouncing the Treaty because those parts of the Treaty which are objectionable to them are to all intents and purposes inoperative in view of the de facto revision achieved by the exchange of notes in 1951. In principle we find it difficult to approve of a unilateral denunciation of an international engagement and the precedent might well prove unfortunate. The Italian action is hardly likely to increase that country's international prestige and the denunciation would probably make more difficult the eventual entry of Italy into the United Nations. Furthermore, the timing of this step seems somewhat inopportune when negotiations for a peace treaty with Austria are well under way and when plans are being made for negotiations with the Soviet Union which would touch on the question of a peace treaty with Germany. The principal Italian objections to the Treaty seem to be psychological and the advantages which the Italian Government sees in denouncing it at this time appear to be internal.

<sup>21</sup> Voir/See Volume 17, Document 900.

5. The Peace Treaty has been a continuing source of irritation to Italians because of the inferior international status it confers upon Italy. It is popularly known as the "diktat" and the Monarchists and Neo-Fascist Parties never miss an opportunity to remind Italians of the inequality and inferiority it imposes. Italy's international prestige is an important plank in the Christian Democratic Party platform, and Prime Minister Scelba's visits to London, Ottawa and Washington have drawn public attention to Italy's foreign relations. Public interest in Italy's international position was demonstrated by the enthusiasm with which Sir Winston Churchill's statement that Italy had regained her position as a great power, was greeted. In addition, in view of the prospect of restored sovereignty in neighbouring Austria, there may be considerable public pressure in Italy for an overt act to eliminate any vestige of Italian inferiority.

6. The Italian Government must submit its resignation to the new President of Italy who will be inaugurated on May 12. Considering the unsuitability of the present coalition of Christian Democrats, Liberals and Social Democrats, the offer of resignation might be accepted. In recent weeks there has been a good deal of political manoeuvring and Sr. Scelba may be taking this step to curry favour with the Neo-Fascists and Monarchists as a counteraction to recent negotiations between the Nenni-Socialists and Sr. Fanfani, Political Secretary and left-wing spokesman of the Christian Democratic Party.

7. Italy has frequently expressed anxiety over the possibility of a Franco-German axis developing once Germany's sovereignty is restored and this uneasiness is particularly profound in the economic field. It is difficult to imagine what difference denunciation of a treaty which is largely inoperative would make but the Italians may feel that this kind of an assertion of sovereign equality would buttress their position. There is a still more remote possibility that the United States may have inspired this step in an attempt to throw the Russians on the defensive once more on the Austrian and German questions but this appears to be extremely unlikely.

8. The Italian plan is most easily explained in the context of Sr. Martino's undertaking to the Chamber of Deputies, coupled with possible advantages in internal political manoeuvring. We wonder whether the Italian Government might consider this obligation to the Chamber of Deputies would have been met if the reaction of friendly signatories was unfavourable and the Government decided that denunciation at this time was not desirable.

9. We had considered the possibility that the Italians might agree to change from an outright denunciation of the Treaty to a request to all signatories to declare that they considered the Treaty no longer applicable, as was done in December 1951. It might well be, however, that the Italian Government have decided on denunciation in order to strengthen their hand internally, and nothing less than an outright denunciation would satisfy the nationalists.

10. We can hardly take a decision on the question of whether or not to urge reconsideration on the Italians until we hear from London, Washington and Rome. If the Big Three are not prepared to oppose the move, then we can hardly do so alone. We will prepare a further memorandum as soon as more information has been received from Rome, Paris, London and Washington.

11. In the meantime our missions in London and Paris, whom we asked for local reactions, have reported that no Italian approach had been made to the United Kingdom or French Governments. We have as yet no explanation for this, since we took it for granted that the Italians would have notified the French and British.

R.A. M[ACKAY]
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

516.

DEA/50178-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], April 27, 1955

ITALIAN DENUNCIATION OF THE ITALIAN PEACE TREATY

The following developments have taken place on this question since my memorandum to you of April 22:

(a) The Italian Ambassador here has been informed that our preliminary reaction at the official level to his statement that his Government intends to denounce the Peace Treaty was unfavourable, for the reasons outlined in paragraph 2. He seemed receptive to alternative procedures and was interested in our suggestion that Italy's associates in WEU were more directly concerned than Canada and that revision of the Treaty might be discussed in WEU and subsequently in NATO.

(b) Reports from our European missions indicate that our misgivings about the juridical and political consequences of unilateral denunciation of the Treaty are shared by the United Kingdom, United States, France and The Netherlands. These countries would be agreeable to concerted action in Rome, if necessary. The Italians are said to have given assurances to the United Kingdom, the United States and Dutch Ambassadors, that a unilateral denunciation will not be made without prior consultation with Italy's allies and that Italy intends to abide by its international obligations under the Treaty.

(c) All the indications are that internal political considerations inspired the proposal and our Embassy in Rome has reported that the Italian Foreign Ministry is opposed to denunciation. The proposal is a personal initiative of Martino and the Embassy has called attention to the undertakings of the Italian Foreign Minister during the debates on the Paris Agreements in the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. At that time Sr. Martino agreed to seek a more explicit recognition of Italian international equality. In addition, there is apparently considerable criticism of the Government in Italy for its failure to obtain terms as favourable as those incorporated in the Peace Treaty with Japan, the arrangements with West Germany and the proposed Austrian Treaty.

2. When we informed the Italian Ambassador here of our preliminary reaction at the official level, we stressed that we had not had an opportunity to discuss this question with you. We pointed out that our attitude would, to some extent, be conditioned by the reaction of Italy's associates in WEU who were more directly concerned. We found it difficult in principle to approve of a unilateral denunciation of treaties because of the juridical and moral effects. We pointed out that such a step would reflect on Italian international prestige and add to the difficulties of Italy gaining admission to the United Nations. We said that we thought the timing was inopportune when prospects for an Austrian Treaty were good and we wondered why Italy, if it considered some action necessary, was contemplating a unilateral denunciation instead of repeating the procedure that was followed in 1951 when most of the signatories agreed that the preamble and certain political and military clauses of the Treaty were no longer applicable.

3. The Italian Ambassador stressed the importance in Italian internal politics of a denunciation of the Treaty. He pointed out that his Government was constantly being criticized in Italy for its meekness in ratifying the Treaty without extracting concessions. He said that the Peace Treaty with Japan and the arrangements with West Germany were held up as examples of the terms Italy might have obtained. The Ambassador suggested that an unfavourable psychological reaction outside Italy might be avoided by a declaration to the effect that the Italian Government considered the pertinent clauses of the Treaty to have expired.

4. Apparently Italian representatives were instructed to ascertain the reaction in Ottawa, Washington, Brussels and The Hague, but not in London and Paris. CRO telegrams indicate that some Italian Ambassadors interpreted their instructions to mean that they should sound out the Government to which they are accredited, while other Ambassadors simply announced the intention to denounce the Treaty. The United Kingdom and French Governments were not sounded out because their favourable<sup>22</sup> reaction was anticipated. However, Foreign Office reaction has been anything but favourable. The United Kingdom Embassy in Rome has expressed to the Italian authorities the United Kingdom's strong disapproval of such a unilateral step, which might have to include a formal rejoinder to any public declaration. The Foreign Office was in favour of our suggestion that this question might be discussed in WEU and subsequently in NATO if the Italians persisted but considered that the Italians should not be given encouragement.

5. In the absence of Mr. Dulles and pending further study, the State Department gave the Italian Ambassador in Washington an indication of serious doubts at the official level. The State Department was apprehensive for reasons similar to those outlined in our first memorandum, and thought that the Italian proposal was designed to meet criticisms that the Japanese and Austrian Peace Treaties provided better terms for former enemies than were accorded to Italy, a part-time wartime ally. When Sr. Martino visited Washington at the first of April, he made a passing reference to the Peace Treaty and indicated he would be writing to ask for Mr. Dulles' views about action which might be taken, but no communication was subsequently received.

6. The French Government has not been approached but considers a unilateral denunciation of the Peace Treaty by Italy to be ill-advised. The Quai d'Orsay suggested that Martino aspires to the Italian Presidency (election April 28) and he may be seeking a spectacular step to enhance his prestige. The French think that the Italians will not take any participate action now because of the unfavourable reaction here, in Washington and Brussels and that no further action is desirable unless Italy raises the question again. In the latter event, the French agree to our suggestion of discussion in WEU and NATO with a view to formulating a joint declaration.

7. You will recall that the Italian Ambassador informed us that his Government intended to denounce the Peace Treaty at the same time as it deposited an instrument of ratification of the Paris Agreements in Brussels this week. Our understanding is that Italy has deposited this instrument in Brussels. Consequently, it seems likely that the Italians have dropped the idea or postponed implementation of it. We have asked our Embassy in Rome whether, from our point of view, the internal political situation in Italy is sufficiently critical to offset the serious objections which we see to the Italian proposal. Unless there is an imminent possibility of the Communist Party coming to power in Italy — and it is difficult to see how this could come about at the present time — I think we should continue to oppose unilateral action by Italy. The Italian Ambassador probably expects an official response to his inquiry and, if you agree, I will inform him officially of our views but will not suggest any alternative course unless further representations are made by the Italians.

<sup>22</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:
? (or otherwise) [auteur inconnu/author unknown].

J. L[ÉGER]

517.

DEA/50178-40

*L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM WA-750

Washington, May 9, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMPORTANT.

Reference: Your teletype EX-859 of May 7.†
Repeat London No. 26; Paris No. 10, Canac No. 13.

ITALIAN PEACE TREATY

James Engle, desk officer in the Office of Western European Affairs, told us this afternoon that yesterday in Paris Foreign Minister Martino gave Secretary Dulles the text of a statement on the Italian Peace Treaty which Martino would like Dulles to make soon, presumably at a NATO meeting. If Dulles agrees to make a statement, the Italians will ask the British and French to associate themselves with it.

2. The draft submitted by Martino is very short (six or seven lines) and in effect reaffirms the declaration of December 1951 by Canada and other signatories of the Italian Peace Treaty. According to Engle, Martino's text includes a sentence to the effect that the United States now considers Italy to be released from the "discriminatory features" of the Peace Treaty. Engle said that Martino's text is being "processed" in the State Department and no decision has yet been taken about it. He thought that notwithstanding the earlier decision that a declaration was undesirable, there is now a good possibility that the Department might recommend that Dulles make some reference to the Peace Treaty (perhaps along the lines suggested by the British, French and United States Ambassadors in Rome). If so, it is unlikely they would adopt Martino's text; and in no case would a United States declaration include a reference to "discriminatory features".

3. We took the opportunity to tell Engle that the Minister had spoken to the Italian Ambassador in Ottawa (your teletype EX-859 of May 7).† Engle agreed with you that Fenoaltea was somewhat behind the times.

4. The State Department will inform us when a decision has been reached about a statement by Dulles.

A.D.P. HEENEY

518.

DEA/50178-40

*Le représentant permanent auprès du Conseil de l'Atlantique Nord et l'OEECE
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Permanent Representative to North Atlantic Council and OEEC
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 611

Paris, May 11, 1955

SECRET

Reference: Your telegram No. 508 of May 9.†

COUNCIL MEETING, MAY 10; DENUNCIATION OF THE ITALIAN PEACE TREATY

Your telegram under reference only arrived towards the end of the meeting. In spite of its content, Dulles, directly after the discussion on Item III (reported in our immediately preceding telegram)<sup>23</sup> stated that he would like to raise a related, if slightly different, matter following from the remarks made by Martino pledging continued Italian support to WEU and to NATO. The United States were aware of the very important role which Italy had played and on the occasion of the entry into force of the Paris Agreements the United States Government wanted to give recognition to that fact. They consequently declared that they regarded any discriminatory aspects of the Italian Peace Treaty to be superfluous and their future relationship with the Italian Government would be guided by that spirit.

2. The United Kingdom, France and ourselves asked to be associated with Dulles' declaration. Spaak stated that he was quite unprepared to consider the question and had not heard previously that it would be raised. He had not thought that there was discrimination, but, if it did exist, he, personally, would like to associate himself with the previous speakers. However, it was essential to know what was required. If the Italian Government desired such a declaration, it should be agreed among all other NATO partners and should presumably be made public to have the desired effect. If it were not handled according to some common procedure, the unfortunate impression might be given that those countries which made no declaration similar to that of the United States were, in fact, implying by default that discrimination should continue. It would be best to try to agree on some brief statement for inclusion in the communiqué. Beyen was in a similar position to Spaak and Zorlu was unable to express any views of his government. Spaak's suggestion was accepted and the communiqué is to include a suitable reference to the matter.<sup>24</sup>

L.D. WILGRESS

<sup>23</sup> Voir/See Document 187.

<sup>24</sup> Voir OTAN, Congrès, Textes des communiqués finals, 1949-1974, Bruxelles : Service de l'information OTAN, s.d., p. 94.
See North Atlantic Council, Texts of Final Communiqués, 1949-1974, Brussels: NATO Information Service, n.d., pp. 89-90.

SECTION E
IMMIGRATION

519.

PCO

*Note du ministre de la Citoyenneté et de l'Immigration
pour le Cabinet*

*Memorandum from Minister of Citizenship and Immigration
to Cabinet*

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 228-55

Ottawa, November 15, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

FINANCIAL MEASURES TO ASSIST IMMIGRATION

1. During the first nine months of 1955, 86,607 immigrants have been admitted to Canada. This is approximately 32% less than during the corresponding period of 1954. Some of the reasons for this decrease appear to be the adverse publicity given in Canada and abroad to employment conditions in Canada last winter, the improved economic conditions resulting in a high level of employment in many European countries, and more complete social security benefits available in most European countries, particularly in the United Kingdom.

2. On December 14, 1950, Cabinet authorized the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to advance on a recoverable basis part or all the cost of transportation for immigrants whose services were urgently required.<sup>25</sup> The Assisted Passage Loan Fund Regulations were promulgated as a result of Cabinet's decision, providing for the granting of loans to heads of families and single persons whose services were urgently required in Canada. These loans are repayable over a period of two years by monthly instalments, determined in relation to the immigrant's earnings and family circumstances.

3. Since its inception 32,255 persons had availed themselves of the Assisted Passage Loan Scheme up to the end of September, 1955. This represents an expenditure of $5,231,702.07 of which, by the end of September last, $4,874,754.36 had been collected; that is, for every dollar actually paid in loans, 93.2 cents had been recovered by the end of September, 1955.

4. It is significant that immigration to Australia is remaining at a high level and the important factor is undoubtedly the subsidized passages that are available under their assisted programme. It is believed that Canada should adopt somewhat similar arrangements if immigration to this country is to be increased to a useful proportion. In this connection, two proposals have been considered:

- (a) Broadening the scope of the Assisted Passage Loan Scheme; and
- (b) Participation in the British Empire Settlement Scheme.

5. Assisted Passage Loan Scheme

(a) It is suggested that loans under this scheme be made available to all immigrants and to wives and unmarried minor children of immigrants, and that the amount to be advanced be according to the needs and circumstances of each case. Under this plan, loans on behalf of dependents would be made whether or not the head of the family is himself taking advantage of the loan; but in the case of those who have preceded their family to Canada and who came forward by means of an Assisted Passage Loan, further loans with respect to the dependents would be made only if the head of the family was up to date with his payments.

<sup>25</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 976.

(b) The period of repayment should be determined on an ad hoc basis, as in some cases the total amount of the loan, if it had to be repaid within a period of twenty-four months, might be a serious handicap to the proper establishment of the immigrant in Canada.

(c) It is believed that the main advantage accruing from a liberalized Assisted Passage Loan Scheme is that it would attract immigrants who are interested in migrating to Canada but have not done so because they are unable to pay transportation costs or are reluctant to leave their families behind or lack sufficient funds to make the move to this country as a unit. Another important advantage would be that any change in our policy with regard to Assisted Passages would certainly receive favourable publicity abroad which in itself would stimulate an interest in immigration to this country.

6. The British Empire Settlement Scheme

(a) The Empire Settlement Act which is in force in the United Kingdom provides for joint assistance for suitable persons of the United Kingdom intending to settle in any part of the overseas Dominions under:

(i) a development or land settlement scheme; or

(ii) a scheme for facilitating settlement in or migration to any part of the overseas Dominions, by assistance with passages, initial allowances, training or otherwise; provided that the United Kingdom's contribution shall not in any case exceed one-half of the expenses of the scheme and provided that the total amount extended by the United Kingdom should not exceed £1,500,000 a year. This Act will be in force until 1957. It is understood that Australia is the Commonwealth which has taken the largest number of immigrants under this Scheme.

(b) With a view to reaching an agreement on subsidizing immigration from the United Kingdom in combination with our Assisted Passage Loan Scheme, an approach could be made to the United Kingdom authorities suggesting that Canada would be willing to take advantage of the Empire Settlement Act under the following conditions:

(i) British immigrants from the United Kingdom would pay the first £10 of their ocean and inland passage, the balance being provided for under the Canadian Government Assisted Passage Loan Scheme.

(ii) At the end of one year, upon evidence that the immigrant is properly established in Canada, the amount advanced under the Assisted Passage Loan Scheme for his ocean and inland transportation would be paid by the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments on a fifty-fifty basis. Payments made by the immigrant on the repayment of his assisted passage loan would be returned to him. This would help the immigrant in his establishment here.

7. The advantage of combining the British Empire Settlement Scheme with our Assisted Passage Loan Scheme and imposing the aforementioned conditions would be to ensure that those immigrants participating in it were sincere in their desire to settle in Canada.

8. Should it be agreed that an approach be made to the British authorities along the lines suggested, then it is deemed appropriate to offer a similar arrangement to the French authorities.

THE UNDERSIGNED, THEREFORE, RECOMMENDS:

(1) THAT assisted passage loans be made available to all immigrants, and to the wives and unmarried minor children of immigrants who are accompanying their family to Canada or have preceded them to this country; the amount to be advanced to be determined in each case according to the needs and circumstances. The period during which such loans are to be repaid, to be fixed administratively on an ad hoc basis.

(2) THAT the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration be authorized to discuss and conclude arrangements with the United Kingdom authorities whereby Canada will take advantage of the Empire Settlement Act on the basis of the immigrant paying £10 towards the cost of ocean and inland passage, the balance to be provided under the Canadian Government's Assisted Passage Loan Scheme, to be reviewed in one year's time and, if the immigrant is properly established in Canada, the amount of the assisted passage loan to be paid by the Government of Canada and the United Kingdom on an equal basis, with any payments that might have been made being refunded to the immigrant.

(3) THAT the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration be authorized to offer the French authorities an arrangement similar to that offered to the United Kingdom authorities.<sup>26</sup>

[J.W. PICKERSGILL]

2<sup>e</sup> PARTIE/PART 2EUROPE DE L'EST ET L'UNION SOVIÉTIQUE EASTERN EUROPE AND THE SOVIET UNION

SECTION A

VISITES OFFICIELLES OFFICIAL VISITS

520.

DEA/12230-40

*Note du chef de la Direction européenne
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

Memorandum from Head, European Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

[Ottawa], August 3, 1955

THE EXCHANGE OF OFFICIAL VISITS WITH SOVIET BLOC COUNTRIES

Over the past several months, there has been a great increase in the exchange of visitors between Canada and the U.S.S.R. The increase has resulted largely from Soviet initiative; Canadians have been asked to visit the U.S.S.R., while permission has been asked for groups from the Soviet Union to visit Canada. In this memorandum, which has been prepared in consultation with the other Divisions interested, I shall consider some of the problems raised by the exchange of visits by government, leaving to a later memorandum the broader question of "cultural" exchanges.

<sup>26</sup> Approuvé par le Cabinet le 30 novembre 1955/Approved by Cabinet on November 30, 1955.

2. We think that the exchange of visits should be encouraged. We have always assumed that we would benefit from a freer exchange of ideas with the Soviet Union; it was evidently the Soviet Union's fear of such an exchange that led it to erect the Iron Curtain. We should try to exploit its present change of heart, particularly since we have no idea how long it may last. We may not be able to convert from communism the sort of people selected to go on official tours of Western countries, but we can show them Canada, its people and its accomplishments, and explain to them our policies. These advantages should far outweigh the increased opportunities for subversion and espionage which will be opened to the visitors. We could benefit greatly from sending competent observers to the Soviet Union, especially since visiting delegates are frequently shown things which members of the Embassies are not allowed to see and since officials sent over might bring to their observation a degree of specialized scientific or technical training which members of our Embassy do not normally possess. In the exchange we would come out much the better, since Soviet observers in Canada would be unlikely to see things about which they could not have learned from many other sources, while our people in the U.S.S.R. might pick up information otherwise unavailable.

3. If we take the initiative, we can, to a great extent, prevent visits to Canada being exploited by Communists for propaganda purposes here, and also, by arranging for conducting officers, can eliminate to some degree the security risks involved. Visits to the Soviet Union by intelligent government officials would help to offset the effect of the many visits currently made there by Canadian communists and fellow travellers.

4. At the moment, the exchange of visits is not as profitable to Canada as it could be, for a variety of reasons. So far, the exchange has taken place largely at the request of the Soviet authorities, although very occasionally we have taken the initiative. The recent invitation to two Canadian scientists to attend a Moscow conference on atomic energy and the Soviet request that their agricultural delegation to the United States be allowed to come to Canada as well are typical. As a result, the Soviet Union is able to decide what sort of visit should take place and to choose a time most convenient for its purposes — when it has a special exhibition to impress observers, for instance; when the presence of officials of a foreign government in the U.S.S.R. would add point to a particular propaganda move; or when it hopes to make contacts in a sphere of immediate interest to its intelligence people.

5. The Soviet Union has so far financed almost all of the visits. We do not normally pay the expenses of Soviet officials visiting this country, although they occasionally enjoy the hospitality of private Canadian firms, while the U.S.S.R. generally pays for the lavish reception given to Canadian visitors there. The Soviet financing of visits both ways has tended to re-enforce its control over the planning of the visits. It may have had the added disadvantage of rendering even official Canadian visitors to the Soviet Union less willing to criticize objectively a country which was acting as host in such an ostentatiously generous way than they would have been had they been sent at Canadian expense.

6. To make the exchange of visits more profitable, there is an obvious need to develop a consistent Canadian policy, instead of dealing with each invitation or request for a Soviet visit as it comes. This department should first of all consider how extensive these exchanges should be. We could then ask other departments to consider whether any of their officials might benefit from a chance to inspect Soviet work in their field. At the same time, consideration could be given to the type of Soviet official who might be asked here. An exchange of specialists in a field in which Canada is particularly interested and in which Soviet and Canadian problems are similar, such as agriculture or Arctic research, might be found desirable. In any case, an analysis of the type of exchange we preferred would enable us to take the initiative.

7. Since we have not followed a consistent policy with respect to the exchange of visits, the security and intelligence aspects of it have not always been too well arranged. We have not provided guides and interpreters to Soviet delegations here or interpreters and advisers to Canadian delegations behind the Iron Curtain. The Joint Intelligence Committee is already considering the intelligence aspects of the visits, and the Security panel has been invited to consider the security aspects. Attached for your information is a JIC paper of July 7, 1955† on the subject. The utility of having Canadian officials visiting the U.S.S.R. accompanied by their own interpreters and advisers is obviously great, although possibly difficult to arrange, particularly for smaller delegations. The groups could, of course, be given political advice by this department and briefings by the relevant intelligence organization. By providing guides and interpreters to Soviet groups here, we would have a better check on security, and would gain more information about the reaction of the groups to what they saw. We would also give the groups themselves a more accurate impression of Canada by improving the arrangements for their visits, and removing them to some extent from complete dependence on their Embassy.

8. We should try to obtain enough money to finance some of the visits, particularly those of Canadians to the Soviet Union when the visit is to be made at our request. Some government departments may already have funds to pay for trips by their experts, and if the positive value of their trips to the Soviet Union could be demonstrated, more money might be made available.<sup>27</sup> The present government hospitality budget would not, I understand, allow us to pay for many Soviet visits here, but we might be able to obtain a special grant for this purpose. Paying for Canadian delegations would be easier, of course, if the Soviet Union dropped its artificial rate for roubles, but even at the present disadvantageous rate, we should insist on paying a greater share of the costs.

9. To consider the problems raised by the exchange of visits a departmental committee should be set up, perhaps with an assistant under-secretary as chairman.<sup>28</sup> It could include the heads of the Information, Consular, Defence Liaison (2), European and Protocol divisions and the Political Co-Ordination section, and the Press Officer, with an officer of D.L. (2) as secretary. The committee could first consider long term policy, and might later be consulted about individual cases. It could also advise other departments concerning the visits. You will note that the J.I.C. expressed the hope that this department would set up such a committee.

10. I consider that we should welcome the Soviet Union's interest in exchanging visits and should encourage it, since the exchange will allow us to explain Canada to Soviet officials while giving our people a chance to obtain valuable information about the U.S.S.R. To make the exchange more profitable to Canada I would recommend:<sup>29</sup>

(a) that a departmental committee be established to consider the problems posed by exchanges, to formulate a general policy for handling them as well as considering particular cases, and to consult with other government departments;

(b) that other departments be asked to advise us as to the type of exchanges which they consider most useful, and to inform us of any Soviet invitations they may receive; overt or covert funds? i.e. come clean with Parliament? R. M[acdonnell]

<sup>27</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

<sup>28</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Yes. Mr. Chapdelaine to chair. R. M[acdonnell]

<sup>29</sup> Macdonnell a approuvé ces trois recommandations dans une note marginale.
Macdonnell approved these three recommendations in a marginal notation.

(c) that, on the basis of recommendations by the committee and other departments, Canada take the initiative in proposing visits by Canadian officials to the U.S.S.R., and inviting Soviet officials here.<sup>30</sup>

R.A.D. F[ORD]

SECTION B

POLOGNE

POLAND

521.

DEA/9533-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], July 6, 1955

WHEAT FOR POLAND

As you know, this matter was considered by Cabinet on June 15, following an offer by Poland to buy wheat and rye on credit. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was authorized "to inform Poland that the Export Credits Insurance Corporation would be prepared to enter into a contract of insurance for the sale of a maximum of 250,000 tons of wheat, valued at approximately $22.5 million, on the terms of 15 per cent cash at time of purchase, with the balance of 85 per cent payable 12 months, from the date of shipment if payment were guaranteed by the Polish government". It was decided that "export credits insurance be not extended to cover sales of rye".

The wheat transaction was agreed to on June 29 by an exchange of letters† between Mr. Sharp of Trade and Commerce and the Polish Chargé d'Affaires. The relevant papers are attached. The salient features of the transaction are that an authorized Polish National Trade Organization will obtain the wheat from Northern Sales Limited, an agency of the Wheat Board. The credit, covering 85% of the shipments, is to be extended by a commercial bank. The Canadian Government enters into the transaction by insuring the exporter under the Export Credits Insurance Act.

The Canadian Government has made similar arrangements during the past three years to facilitate the sale of wheat to Brazil and Yugoslavia. In both cases payments have been made on due date, although in the case of the latest arrangement with Yugoslavia we have recently been informed that the Yugoslav Government would like to postpone payments. (This information has not, of course, been made public.)

The United States does not sell wheat on credit to Iron Curtain countries. The United States has, however, provided surplus wheat to Yugoslavia as well as to a great many "friendly" countries. This method of disposing of surplus grain tends to disrupt normal commercial markets and normally involves payment in local currencies. Argentina sells wheat to several Iron Curtain countries on a barter basis but this is not comparable with our

<sup>30</sup> Note marginale :/Marginal note:

Bear in mind that the Minister's visit [to the Soviet Union] will be a big (and fairly expensive) item on one side of the ledger. R. M[acdonnell] 9/8/55 transaction with Poland, or with the United States surplus disposal programme. Australia shipped £295,000 worth of wheat to Poland in 1949-50 and 262,000 bushels of wheat to Rumania in 1954-55. We have no information that either of these shipments involved credit arrangements, although this is possible. Australia shipped £122,000 worth of wheat to Communist China in 1950-51.

Our arrangement with Poland can, I think, be regarded as a straight commercial transaction. The initiative came from the Polish Government, which wanted to buy our wheat "on credit" and which was clearly not prepared to pay cash for more than a small percentage. It was felt that the Canadian Government would be justified in authorizing export credits insurance to cover the deal, as had been done in the case of similar sales in the past to Yugoslavia and Brazil. (Incidentally, according to our information, there has been no Government-backed sale of wheat on credit to Czechoslovakia, as was indicated in the House by the Prime Minister.)<sup>31</sup> This decision, of course, is consistent with our general policy of trading in non-strategic goods with Iron Curtain countries.

Even the export credits aspect is not entirely new. Between 1947 and 1949 exports to Poland of rags and hides totalling about $600,000 were insured by the Export Credit Insurance Corporation, as were shipments of hides to Czechoslovakia totalling $2,800,000 in 1949. These arrangements, unlike the arrangement for wheat to Poland, were made directly by the Corporation and did not come under Section 21 which requires Government sanction and backing of the consolidated revenue fund. Nevertheless they do indicate that there are precedents for insurance of commercial deals worked out with agencies in Iron Curtain countries so long as this can be done in a business-like manner.

To my knowledge the Government has received no formal requests for wheat on credit other than those mentioned in this memorandum. (I am, of course, leaving out of account the wheat which we have provided to Pakistan and India on a grant basis inside and outside the Colombo Plan.) The Polish deal will probably sharpen the interest of grain merchants who make a practice of "shopping around" among wheat-consuming countries to see if the latter would be interested in buying wheat on credit from exporting countries. The Department of Trade and Commerce is not worried by this prospect; they have had "feelers" from such merchants in the past and they will examine any firm offers which develop on their merits — for example, a possible deal with Hungary which Cabinet has approved in principle. In any case most countries consider it uneconomical to buy wheat on credit.

Mr. Black of the United States Embassy enquired about the wheat deal with Poland by telephone on Tuesday. We gave him the salient facts, stressed that it is a straight commercial deal and referred him for details to the Department of Trade and Commerce. We believe that, while the United States authorities might be disposed to regard the arrangement we have made with Poland as regrettable politically, the Departments of government in Washington concerned with disposal understand our motives. In fact, we understand that they have considered disposing of such surpluses to Iron Curtain countries but have so far been restrained by general policy considerations.

J. LIÉGER

<sup>31</sup> Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1955, volume 5, p. 5821.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1955, Volume 5, p. 5557.

522.

DEA/9533-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à la Légation en Pologne

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Legation in Poland

LETTER E-469

Ottawa, August 5, 1955

SECRET

POLISH-CANADIAN TRADE DISCUSSIONS, MAY 1955

Pressure of work has held up preparation of a report on our trade discussions with the Polish Delegation in May. I now attach a copy† of the informal record of the meetings held in Ottawa between Canadian and Polish representatives.

2. The meetings were held without the slightest difficulty being raised by Polish representatives and in a cordial atmosphere. Discussion was entirely in English which appeared to be understood to varying degrees by individual Polish representatives but which was spoken fluently by the Chairman of the Polish Delegation and the Commercial Counsellor of the Legation in Ottawa who was a member of the Delegation for intergovernmental discussions. Unlike Czech representatives at similar meetings last year,<sup>32</sup> the Poles agreed very readily to separate discussions of particular problems and to discussion of the customs valuation problem before discussion of general trade matters. At the first meeting on May 6, the Polish representatives indicated that they were in no hurry to conclude arrangements and that they intended to stay some time in Canada and in particular wished to visit the Trade Fair. Subsequently, on May 10, they revealed that they were somewhat anxious to conclude arrangements in connection with the customs valuation problem since shipments of glass subject to anti-dumping duty were expected to arrive in Montreal towards the end of May. The progress of the meetings was facilitated primarily by the knowledge of Polish officials in regard to the customs arrangements concluded last year with Czechoslovakia. Indeed, at the first meeting with officials of the Department of National Revenue, they appeared to have copies of the relevant documents which had been exchanged last year with Czech representatives (although those documents had never been made public). Progress was also facilitated by the calibre of the Delegation, particularly Mr. Dobrzanski who remained urbane throughout the discussions. An example of his tactics occurred at a meeting with officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce when, after the Poles had expressed interest in purchasing aluminum and copper and it had been explained that these goods were subject to strategic controls, Mr. Dobrzanski stated that an explanation of our controls was unnecessary and that these products had merely been mentioned to indicate Polish willingness to purchase when we were in a position to sell. This was an entirely different tactic from that of the Czech representatives last year who insisted upon a full explanation of our control system and pressed for arrangements to be made to sell such products to Czechoslovakia despite strategic controls.

3. In addition to the meetings of which the record is attached, Mr. Dobrzanski and Mr. Markowski, the Polish Chargé d'Affaires in Ottawa, paid calls on the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs in the Minister's absence. These visits were all made on May 13. Immediately prior to these calls, it was mentioned to them by Mr. Ritchie that in the near future, Canada might propose formally that representatives of the two Governments should meet to discuss settlement of claims of Canadian citizens against Poland, and possibly the question of Polish assets held by the Canadian Custodian. Mr. Markowski undertook to communicate this to his Government and made a rather subtle reference to the question of the Polish Art Treasures. Prior to their call upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce, they presented a draft memorandum† on trade matters which they proposed might be agreed upon by representatives of both governments. This was somewhat unexpected in view of the results of the two short meetings held earlier in the week with representatives of Trade and Commerce to discuss general trade questions; but since we agreed upon a somewhat similar memorandum with the Czechs, we were not surprised when the Poles requested agreement upon the trade memorandum. It would appear to be a matter of "keeping up with the Joneses".

<sup>32</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 696.

4. On the whole, the Polish Delegation appeared to be an able group and was quite familiar not only with the customs valuation arrangement worked out with Czechoslovak representatives but also with the general trading practices of the Canadian Government and of private businesses in this country. Unlike Czech representatives in last year's discussions, they understood on their arrival that Canadian trade is almost exclusively conducted by private traders. Included in the Delegation were representatives of Polish Trading organizations who came to Canada primarily to discuss business matters with Canadian importers and to a lesser extent with exporters. Two of the representatives of Polish export agencies were not included in the delegation for intergovernmental discussions and those who were included in the delegation did not really take part to any great extent. From informal discussions at social gatherings they did however appear to be well briefed on the matter of Canadian trade and upon the areas of the country in which each could best discuss trade prospects with the Canadian traders.

5. The two members of the Delegation who took part in discussions with Canadian representatives were the Chairman Mr. Dobrzanski and the Commercial Counsellor of the Legation here, Mr. Arthur Zyto. These two alone discussed the problems of customs valuation and general trade from the Polish view point. Mr. Dobrzanski, we were informed, is the equivalent of an Assistant Deputy Minister and has represented Poland at trade discussions in many countries in Europe and Latin America. He impressed us as being an able, intelligent, and skilful negotiator. He refused to be drawn out on any major point or to put forth Polish proposals and he commented on any proposal only after specific suggestions had been put forth by Canadian representatives. Originally, we had intended to have Polish representatives submit proposals before any specific suggestions were put forth on our side, particularly in regard to the problem of customs valuation. However, when it became obvious that they had a thorough knowledge of arrangements made with Czech representatives last year and that such arrangements would be acceptable to them, we proposed a similar arrangement should be made with Poland. A similar arrangement had been our original intention and there was no point in dragging out discussions when it was obvious that such arrangements would be satisfactory to representatives of both countries.

6. In contrast to our discussions with Czech officials last year, when local Czech representatives kept in, or were forced into, the background, local Polish representatives took a major part in the discussions. Zyto, as mentioned above, was the only one besides Dobrzanski to contribute substantially to discussions and it was noted that he put forth the primary views of the Polish representatives in many instances, and did much of the talking for the Poles in the meeting with officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce. In addition, Mr. Markowski, though not a member of the Delegation, signed the letters exchanged with the Ministers of Trade and Commerce and National Revenue as authorized by an instrument of full powers which he had submitted to us before discussions actually commenced. He gave final approval for the Polish side to the drafts of the letters, the agreed memoranda and the press release† resulting from the discussions.

7. Three social functions were attended by representatives of both governments, a luncheon sponsored by this Department on May 10, a luncheon sponsored by the Polish Legation at the Chateau Laurier on May 13 and a buffet supper at the residence of the Polish Chargé d'Affaires for Canadian representatives and their wives on June 10. All of these functions were, generally speaking, informal, friendly and enjoyable.

8. The Polish representatives lost no time in contacting Canadian businessmen in regard to trading prospects. They left in a group for the Montreal district on May 14 when customs arrangements had been agreed upon but had not yet been formalized. Thereafter they visited Toronto and points in Southern Ontario, and spent some time at the Toronto Trade Fair where Mrs. Kalazowa, the representative of MINEX, occupied a booth displaying cut-glass and other wares exported by that agency. Some of the Polish representatives intended to travel to the West at least as far as Winnipeg, but on the whole their travelling was limited to Southern Ontario and Quebec where most of the interested Canadian traders were to be found. It was reported that they planned to travel home not as a group but individually or in small groups as their particular business was completed in this country. For instance, Piglowski, the representative of Cetebe (textiles) planned to leave alone and to return via the United Kingdom and France where he expected to do further business.

9. Mr. Dobrzanski called in shortly before he was scheduled to return home to express his admiration for this country, the people and the treatment they had received in Canada. He claimed to be genuinely sorry to be leaving.

10. On the whole, the discussions with Polish representatives went extremely smoothly. One reason was that Canadian representatives were working in a field which had already been thoroughly examined last year. In addition the Poles were well briefed on all aspects of importance in connection with their visit. We have not as yet been able to assess their success in conducting business with private Canadian traders though they themselves appeared to be satisfied. It is, of course, doubtful that trade between the two countries will increase substantially above pre-war levels as a result of these discussions due to the quality of Polish export products.

11. Under the arrangement with regard to customs valuation procedure, a Canadian customs official will visit Warsaw from Prague as the case demands. He will be posted to the Legation in Warsaw as an Attaché and will collect appropriate information for his Department. When the Department of National Revenue is satisfied with the information provided to this official through the cooperation of Polish authorities, the anti-dumping duties applied to certain imports from Poland will be removed. The Attaché in Warsaw will forward to his Department invoices for goods exported to Canada. Invoice values must conform generally to values of similar goods from other countries and low values will no doubt be adjusted by the Poles when these are brought to their attention in order to avoid the imposition of anti-dumping duties. If the arrangement works as well as that agreed upon with the Czechs, no great difficulty concerning customs valuation should arise. Specific instructions regarding the posting of the Customs official to the Legation in Warsaw as an attaché have been already sent to you. You will also have received the PITEL and other papers† concerning subsequent discussions on a wheat credit.

12. In addition to the informal minutes of the meetings I an enclosing various papers† which have been exchanged with the Polish Legation here concerning meat inspection requirements affecting the trade in Polish hams, and copies of the letters and memoranda exchanged at the conclusion of the talks.

13. Also attached (to Warsaw only) is a copy of the brief† prepared by the Department of Trade and Commerce in preparation for the trade talks with the Poles.

A.E. RITCHIE
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

523.

DEA/9533-40

*Note du chef de la Direction économique
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Head, Economic Division,
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], November 30, 1955

POLISH PURCHASES OF WHEAT IN CANADA

As you will be aware arrangements were made some months ago under which Export Credits insurance might be made available by us to enable the Poles to import up to 250,000 tons of wheat from Canada. Shortly after that the Poles purchased their first 50,000 tons and insurance for 85 percent of the cost was issued by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. Within the past few days a further 150,000 tons have been ordered by the Poles and insurance is again being provided for 85 percent of the cost (with the remaining 15 percent, interestingly enough, being made available to the Poles as an ordinary credit by one of the Canadian commercial traders without involving the Canadian Government).

2. The interesting thing about this second purchase — apart from the fact that it will enable us to sell some more wheat — is that the Poles could have secured more suitable wheat on more favourable terms from another country. They nevertheless have gone ahead and bought the wheat from Canada. It therefore appears that they have some special reason for favouring us with their wheat business. The people concerned in Trade and Commerce are quite puzzled — even though pleased — about this transaction. They apparently do not feel that the Poles think they can default on their payment obligations when they come due more readily in the case of Canada than of the other country which could have supplied the wheat more cheaply. They can only conclude that the Poles are extremely anxious to improve relations with Canada for their own political reasons.

A.E. RITCHIE

524.

DEA/10258-40

*La délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Delegation to United Nations General Assembly
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 439

New York, December 14, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

INTERVIEW WITH POLISH VICE-MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

At his request I met with Naszkowski, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs of Poland, today. He said that Poland is very interested in normalizing relations with Canada and went on to enumerate several matters over which his government is concerned.

1. Polish Art Treasures. Naszkowski referred to promises which he alleged had been made by the Canadian government to facilitate a solution of this problem and emphasized his government's concern that an early solution be found. He mentioned that public opinion in Poland on this question continues to be greatly concerned.

2. Commercial Relations. Poland is prepared to purchase annually, commencing next year, 150,000 to 300,000 tons of wheat. They propose that purchase be on the same credit basis as was the sale transacted this year. Poland would also like to see Canada Post a permanent trade representative in Warsaw as has been done in Prague.

3. Diplomatic Representation. The Polish government is desirous and is prepared to install a Minister in Ottawa if Canada would do likewise in Warsaw.

4. Cultural Relations. Naszkowski thought cultural relations important to better understanding and referred to some exchanges which have taken place between Poland and Canada. He complained, however, that within recent weeks a Polish author Kubacaiski, who had intended to attend a cultural celebration in Canada, had been refused a visa by our mission in Warsaw. On the other hand, a Canadian author, Hébert (?), had attended a similar celebration in Poland recently.

5. I replied to Naszkowski in a general way saying that Canada is also interested in friendly relations with all countries. I promised him that I would transmit his representation to Ottawa and that I would see him again tomorrow if I had any further information. If any more definite reply can be given to him on any of these questions, would you please let us know tomorrow morning.

525.

DEA/10258-40

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Delegation to United Nations General Assembly

TELEGRAM S-220

Ottawa, December 15, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Reference: Your telegram 439 of December 14.

RELATIONS WITH POLAND

Would you please see Naszkowski and tell him that we have received his representations and are giving them detailed study. You can assure him that Canada would welcome better relations with Poland. The following roughly is the position with regard to the specific points raised by him.

2. Polish Art Treasures. We have been trying to find a partial solution which would give some satisfaction to the Polish government by devising a formula for the release of the treasures held by the Bank of Montreal. Would you therefore assure Mr. Naszkowski that we are seriously trying to give them some satisfaction and hope within a few months that a solution can be found to the problem of the trunks in the bank.

3. Commercial Relations. We are naturally interested in selling wheat to Poland as to other countries. The question of possible terms of sale is one which would have to be considered carefully. We would be pleased to discuss this matter further with the Polish authorities (presumably through the Legation in Ottawa).

4. We are not sure what the Vice Minister may have had in mind when he raised the question of a "Permanent Trade Representative". If he was thinking of the Attaché at our Mission in Prague who is concerned with customs matters, he no doubt realizes that this officer is responsible for dealing with similar matters in Poland as well. He happens to be located in Prague because the arrangement with Czechoslovakia preceded the arrangement made with Poland for dealing with customs valuation problems. We were assured by the Polish Delegation at the time that it would be quite agreeable to the Polish Government to have the officer in Prague function in this deal capacity.

5. If the Vice Minister was thinking of a regular commercial secretary, the fact of the matter is that there is no such officer permanently resident in Prague. Czechoslovakia is covered by the commercial secretary from our Embassy in Switzerland who visits Prague occasionally as necessary for discussions on trade matters. After explaining this to the Vice Minister you might indicate that the Department of Trade and Commerce here has under very active consideration the possibility of making a comparable arrangement for Poland whereby a trade officer at one of our missions in Europe would be accredited to Warsaw which he would be expected to visit from time to time to discuss trade questions that might arise.

6. Diplomatic Representation. Would you tell Naszkowski that we welcome his suggestion in principle, and that we would naturally be pleased to accept a Polish Minister in Ottawa, but that, for personnel reasons it would be difficult for us to reciprocate in the near future. We have expanded very rapidly and would find it next to impossible to send a Minister to Warsaw in the near future. This should not, however, be interpreted as a lack of interest in better relations, and you may point to the many friendly countries with which we have been unable to exchange ministers or ambassadors.

7. Cultural Relations. We also would like to see an improvement in cultural relations. Would you explain that the case of Kubacki, however, is, in our opinion, the type of cultural exchange which does not, repeat not, facilitate the aim of better relations. He was sponsored by a Communist front organization in Canada in order to give lectures under their sponsorship. I think Naszkowski will easily understand that this is something we do not intend to condone. We should be happy to discuss with the Polish Chargé d'Affaires here ways and means of improving cultural relations on a legitimate basis.

[J.] LÉGER

SECTION C

UNION SOVIÉTIQUE
SOVIET UNION

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

TENDANCES DE LA POLITIQUE ÉTRANGÈRE FOREIGN POLICY TRENDS

526.

DEA/5198-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministreMemorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], February 14, 1955

RESIGNATION OF MALENKOV

I am attaching a copy of a memorandum concerning the resignation of Malenkov which was sent to Mr. Pearson on February 11. He thought that you would be interested in seeing this tentative assessment of the changes in the Soviet Government.

J. L[ÉGER]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieuresMemorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], February 10, 1955

RESIGNATION OF MALENKOV

Until about the middle of December none of the foreign missions in Moscow appear to have considered major changes in the Soviet Government to be very likely in the immediate future. There had been signs of disagreement both with respect to internal and external policy, but these signs had not provided really convincing evidence that Soviet leaders would be unable to carry on for some time yet without any major upset within their ranks.

2. In the field of foreign policy it was not until the end of November, when the Moscow Conference of the Soviet Union and satellite states was held, that the emphasis in Soviet statements began to change. This shift went definitely from suggestions of peaceful coexistence, European security pact and four-power or general European conference to threats of retaliation in case of German rearmament or to warnings that there could be no fruitful negotiation between the East and the West if the Paris agreements were ratified.

3. Early in November, at the celebration of the 37th Anniversary of the October Revolution, Malenkov had impressed the United Kingdom and United States Ambassadors with his apparent desire to avoid further tensions and to discuss major issues rationally with Western representatives. On the question of a meeting between East and West after ratification of the Paris agreements, Malenkov's remarks were naturally ambiguous. He did not, however, answer with the blunt negative or with the harsh warnings which have since become characteristic of almost all Soviet utterances on the subject. By way of contrast, in December the French Ambassador was told by a group of Soviet leaders, including Malenkov, Molotov and Khrushchev, that ratification of the Paris agreements would end all chances of negotiation with the Soviet Union. Malenkov said his piece to this effect possibly at the suggestion of other members of the Government and of the Party.

4. Our Ambassador reported in December that "the notable effort which the Soviet Union has been making to impress its anxiety at the prospect of West German rearmament on the Soviet people, coupled with its apparent earnestness in threatening to increase its armament if ratification is achieved, what looks like the emergence of a new emphasis on heavy industry and Malenkov's reception of the Patriarch (of the Russian Orthodox Church) have together, I think, surprised most observers here. This surprise has not had any of the attributes of alarm..." At about the same time he pointed out that "there is no doubt a genuine fear in the minds of the Soviet Government at the prospect of German rearmament but several observers here have suggested that they may also wish to use the threat of it for internal purposes. If plans to increase consumer goods are not working out satisfactorily, the authorities may wish to have a good excuse for the tightening of labour discipline". When the Lenin celebrations, supposed to take place in January, were deferred several months, our Ambassador pointed out that, since the celebrations were normally the occasion for important pronouncements, this postponement might mean that there was "some sort of indecision or lack of final agreement among the collective leadership on the final course of their internal or external policy or both."

5. In terms of internal economic policy the two most important developments in the last few months were the considerably increased emphasis on the priority to be given heavy industry and the increasingly important role played by Khrushchev in a number of fields. The involved questions of economic policy and of relations between individuals in the Government going back several years are being considered in a separate memorandum.† I would like to note tentatively in this memorandum those considerations of foreign policy which might have helped to bring about the resignation of Malenkov and the implications of his resignation for future relations between the Soviet Union and the non-Communist powers.

6. The reaction to a harsher policy with respect to German rearmament in December probably can be explained by the fact that the more moderate approach of earlier months had not deterred the Western powers from seeking more energetically than ever a workable alternative to the EDC and had even led them to believe that the Soviets would make concessions on European problems after the ratification of the Paris agreements. This belief was attacked frequently in the Soviet press along with what Soviet commentators claimed was the intention of the Western powers to use the accretion of military strength resulting from German rearmament as a threat to force concessions from the Soviet Union. The argument used in Western countries that negotiations were impossible as long as there was a serious imbalance of power in Europe and as long as the problem of relations with the German Federal Republic was not solved was thus distorted to indicate that the West was building up a direct military threat to the Soviet Union. It is not easy to say whether this attitude to Western policies was developed as a justification of an intention to reverse the emphasis on consumer goods or as a reaction of fear to the imminent prospect of German rearmament. In any case, this situation appears to have played into the hands of the group in the Soviet Government which had long had doubts about the "soft line" towards the West.

7. Although Malenkov had, on one occasion, referred to the destruction of all civilization, including the Soviet Union, as the result of atomic warfare, Marshal Bulganin and others had carefully reiterated the orthodox view that, while the capitalist nations would probably be finally destroyed by any conflict which they precipitated, the Soviet Union would not go down with them. On this question and on other questions affecting the relationship between the East and West one could detect important differences in the tone and implications of official statements. Khrushchev made several speeches last year which were arrogant and blustering and out of keeping with the tone of the peace offensive.

8. At best, of course, the so-called peaceful coexistence policies of the Soviet Government under Malenkov were more interesting because of what they implied about the possibility of serious negotiation in the future than because of any achievement. It is not expected that the resignation of Malenkov will create any immediate danger of provocative or belligerent policy with a real risk of war. It means rather that relations between East and West will be based simply on the stalemate which has not really been broken since Stalin's death, with no very strong prospects of the kind of settlement implied by peaceful coexistence.

9. The immediate implications for Soviet foreign policy of the resignation of Malenkov are difficult to comment upon until we have the full texts of the statements made by Molotov, Bulganin and others. This meeting of the Supreme Soviet was obviously intended to make clear to the world that any disagreement or instability in the ranks of the Government would no longer exist. Until we can examine the texts of the various statements made during these meetings and consider the implications of the budget brought down last week it will be impossible to give any settled opinion about these future policies.

10. On the Formosan issue Molotov made his suggestion for a conference in the Far East only a few days before the resignation of Malenkov and appeared to be closely interested in preventing any worsening of the situation. The statement by Bulganin yesterday pledging "full support" to Communist China on the Formosa issue and assuring the Chinese that they can count on help from their "true friend, the Soviet Union" may or may not indicate a change in what we have thought was a fairly strong Soviet desire not to become directly involved or to pledge military assistance in taking Formosa.

11. On the German problem the Soviet statement about offering free elections was made only three weeks ago. This statement has, apparently, been having a considerable effect on German opinion and it does not seem probable that the Soviet Government would drop any promising means of impeding ratification of the Paris agreements. It seems generally most likely that changes in the Government were being worked out in the past month or so and that recent moves with respect both to the Formosan and German problems do have the backing for the time being of Khrushchev and Bulganin. Although the change in the Government appears to mean in general a toughening line towards the West it does not necessarily follow that a number of the moves in foreign relations since the death of Stalin, such as the attempt to improve relations with Yugoslavia, will be abandoned. The peace offensive may be continued with effort being focussed chiefly on the neutral and Asiatic nations.

12. Although whatever Malenkov may have intended in the way of an agreement with the West was never made specific enough for Western nations to take up any offer while the Russians were in a more friendly mood, it would be unfortunate if any hardening in the Soviet position were met immediately by warning statements from the West which would only, it seems, help to confirm the position of those who disagreed with Malenkov.

J. L[ÉGER]

527.

DEA/5198-40

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], February 15, 1955

RESIGNATION OF MALENKOV

With reference to the memorandum on Malenkov's resignation sent to you yesterday, you may be interested in the attached memorandum carrying forward our consideration of the "foreign policy implications of changes in the Soviet Government".

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures<sup>33</sup>

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs<sup>33</sup>

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa], February 15, 1955

FOREIGN POLICY IMPLICATIONS OF CHANGES IN SOVIET GOVERNMENT

An examination of the texts of some of the important statements made last week in Moscow during the meeting of the Supreme Soviet leaves one with rather mixed impressions of the future course of Soviet foreign policy. Apart from any question of interpreting general statements on East-West relations there are, of course, some obvious facts which are bound to cause anxiety in the Western countries.

2. The new defence budget is apparently the highest in real terms in the post-war period. Khrushchev, who now seems to have a greater power than any other individual in the governing group, is an orthodox Marxist revolutionary and consequently must believe that everything which does not bow to the revolution in the world will, eventually, by force or by guile, be destroyed by it. He may have his disarming moments, but we can hardly derive much hope from that fact. Stalin was jovial on occasion too. The Soviet reaction to German rearmament has become increasingly sharp over the past few months. Mr. Molotov has reaffirmed his Government's previously expressed intention of creating a unified command for the Soviet Union and satellites and of bolstering defences in that bloc of

<sup>33</sup> Sur une copie de ce mémoire trouvé dans le dossier MAE/2802-40, Pearson a rédigé la note marginale suivante :

A very useful & interesting analysis.

On a copy of this memorandum found on DEA/2802-40, Pearson wrote the following marginal note:

A very useful & interesting analysis.

nations. Marshal Bulganin has given Communist China what appears to be the strongest promise of support on the Formosan issue yet made.

3. These are the kind of facts which provide support for the argument that the changes in Government imply a good deal harsher line towards the West.

4. The actual statements made by Molotov, Bulganin and Zhukov do not, however, provide clear and definite support for any straightforward interpretation of recent events in the Soviet Union as they affect foreign policy. This situation may be explained by a general uncertainty in Soviet minds, or by the existence of a still delicate balance of power and an uneasy compromise on policy between Party, Army and other elements in the governing hierarchy, or perhaps by the failure of people in the West to find the correct frame of reference within which to place the various observable facts about Soviet attitudes.

5. Whatever the reason, it is important to note that Molotov's speech on foreign policy, those parts of Bulganin's speech dealing with the same object and remarks made by Zhukov to Western correspondents are not, on the whole, violent or bellicose in tone. They are only partially put in the ideological frame of reference and, in spite of ideological animosities, they retain the hints about negotiation, relaxation of tension and realistic acceptance of facts which we have become accustomed to find in Soviet statements for the past couple of years.

6. Mr. Molotov began his speech with a review of the strong position attained by the Soviet Union and Communist China in world affairs. "One cannot speak" he said "of the USSR and capitalist encirclement in the same sense as this was spoken about before the war." Almost half of Europe has turned to Communism and almost half of Asia. He seemed to be saying, in effect, to the Western nations — "you must accept history and not think of reversing it". Despite the confidence in their growing influence, Marshal Bulganin expressed the conviction that "in the capitalist countries there are sound forces that will find means to improve relations between countries in the interests of maintaining peace and the security of the peoples". He reiterated a desire for "easing of international tension and the establishment of normal relations with all the peoples".

7. In more than one section of his speech, Marshal Bulganin approaches the kind of language which we have associated more with Malenkov. "We stand for such negotiations and aim at such agreements with foreign countries as would lead to a relaxation of tension in international relations. It is self-evident that any negotiations can be successful only if the other side too strives to the same goal. We think that under modern conditions this is the only real road which would produce positive results."

8. The phrase "under modern conditions" would be more or less a cliché in the West where it is taken for granted that any policy has to be governed by "modern conditions" and that conditions change. Any reference to "modern conditions" is interesting in the completely different context of an authoritarian political faith in which basic facts of their changing conditions have been ignored.

9. Marshal Zhukov approached matters in a not very partisan Bolshevik spirit either. He told Kingsbury Smith and William Hearst "You are bound to justify your point of view. We are bound to justify ours. We must not simply look for justification of our respective viewpoints. We must try to make a new war impossible." He spoke of President Eisenhower in much the same way as the President had spoken of him and added "I know our relations will get better. Then I hope to be able to visit the United States." We must set against this Molotov's stubborn insistence on the inevitable results of German rearmament and on the "open propaganda and preparation for an atomic war" undertaken by the United States, the logical implication of which would appear to be that he believes that relations are going to get much worse.

10. One might simply ignore such general statements and turn to what is said about the most pressing problems of German and Formosa. Even on Germany, however, we find a few hints that everything is not yet cut and dried in Soviet attitudes. Mr. Molotov says that "one must not underrate the negative, even dangerous, consequences of the Paris agreements in the event of their ratification and of their becoming effective". He goes on to point out that ratification "would become the principal obstacle in the way of a solution of the German problem". It would render impossible "for a long period" the reestablishment of German unification". This is apparently the first stage in the worsening of the German situation.

11. The next stage is revealed in his remarks that "After West Germany is remilitarized and after it has become a militarist state" reunification will be "impossible" presumably forever.

12. Mr. Molotov is, of course, quite sure that the German Federal Republic will become a militarist state once the Paris agreements are ratified but he could hardly generate much indignation about the Paris agreements if he did not keep repeating this conviction. In the meantime, there are two stages in Germany's decline. One cannot help wondering whether the Soviet Government has not got carefully concealed for the moment some offer which, even after the ratification of the Paris agreements, will represent "positively the last chance" for a bargain by which the Soviet Government, out of the goodness of its heart, and in spite of United States' desire for war, will rescue the German Federal Republic on the very brink of the abyss.

13. Marshal Bulganin blandly assured his audience that the Soviet Government will continue to "work to restore German unity on a peaceful and democratic basis", as if there were no abyss at all in immediate view.

14. On the Formosan issue Marshal Bulganin noted that the policy of the Communist Chinese Government "has called forth our complete approval and support" and that the Chinese people can reckon with the help of "their faithful friend the great Soviet people". This is an emphatic statement of support for Chinese policy — up to date — but it is still some degrees short of a blank cheque which Peiping can use as it wishes in deciding whether or not to risk conclusions with the United States Seventh Fleet.

15. Finally, the remarks of Marshal Zhukov to the newspapermen provide an interesting indication of the strange mixture of misconceptions and motives which may exist among the career generals and the administrators who have not mastered or accepted entirely the Communist explanations of world affairs. Zhukov said that it was nonsense to think that the Soviet Union ever had any aggressive intentions. "You know he said "how strong the Soviet army was and how weak Europe was, including England" after the last war. As for the United States, "You had too few bombs then to have had any bearing on the military situation". If the Russians did not strike then, surely that was proof that they did not intend to expand by conquest. The Marshal did not apparently stop to consider that it was this terrible disparity between East and West which forced the creation of NATO or that this concentration of Soviet might was under the control of a dictator whom Zhukov himself had little cause to like, or that this dictator had, according to Bulganin's statement to Turkish and Iranian Attachés last fall, made serious mistakes in foreign policy. Marshal Zhukov's points are remarkably weak as a criticism of Western fears of the Soviet Union but they are also credible as the sincere attitude of a man who cannot put himself in the position of the other side but who does not adhere blindly to a Communist intransigence with which argument is impossible.

16. The purpose of this memorandum is that of pointing out the complex pressures affecting Soviet foreign policy. There are at least three possible kinds of relationship with the West and no one can say which direction Soviet policy will take.

17. There is the Stalinist type of revolutionary policy depending on increasing military strength, on heavy industry, on rising production and on shock tactics in foreign relations all in the service of world revolution. There is the Malenkov type of more sophisticated Communist turning to an emphasis on private pleasures, a post-revolutionary relaxation and reasonably correct dealings with foreign powers. There is, perhaps, an Army alternative combining heavy industry, austerity and defence expansion as a warning to the West not to proceed from a new "position of strength" to any adventures in liberation, but, at the same time, offering a realistic settlement with the West, outside of ideological considerations, involving something like "mutual self containment" to avoid the horrors of thermo-nuclear warfare. The Army career men, and others too, may have as their goal an authoritarian, conservative state, orthodox in its Communism internally but not expanding beyond present limits of control or influence, which would still leave it among the two or three "Great Powers" of the world in one of the greatest periods of Russian history.

18. The Malenkov approach was apparently, from our standpoint, too "revolutionary" in its implications for present day Soviet society and it has lost out so far as domestic policies are concerned. What will happen so far as foreign policy is concerned is extremely difficult to say. The only immediate conclusion we can draw for the purposes of Western policy is that if we treat Soviet gestures or redraft our own policies on the assumption that the worst has happened, we may simply help to drive the Russians into the hands of those who speak of "inevitable conflict".

J. L[ÉGER]

528.

DEA/50128-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 30, 1955

SOVIET POLICY IN EUROPE

I attach a paper on this subject which attempts to draw together the main lines of recent developments in Soviet policy in Europe.<sup>34</sup> Its aim is to provide an over-all view, of what is clearly still a very fluid situation. I hope to send you later more detailed memoranda on various aspects of this question, such as the idea of a band of neutral states in Europe,† the Warsaw Pact,<sup>35</sup> a plan for Germany,<sup>36</sup> European security proposals,† the situation of Yugoslavia,† etc.

J. L[ÉGER]

<sup>34</sup> Note marginale /Marginal note:

This is a very good memo L.B. P[earson]

<sup>35</sup> Voir/See Document 545.

<sup>36</sup> Non retrouvé./Not located.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du chef de la Direction européenne
Memorandum by Head, European Division

SECRET

[Ottawa], May 30, 1955

SOVIET POLICY IN EUROPE

Introduction

In recent weeks the Soviet leaders have indicated by their deeds and their words that many important changes in their foreign policy are taking place. Among these are the sudden reversal on Austria and the signing of a State Treaty which is relatively favourable to the Austrians; the acceptance in principle of a top-level conference of the Big Four; the attempt to heal the breach with Yugoslavia both by sending Khrushchev and Bulganin to Belgrade and by the public admission that there is a place in Marxist ideology for the Yugoslav type of socialism; indications of an increasing desire to co-operate normally with the West (participation in the Canadian Trade and Air Shows); the acceptance of many of the Western proposals on disarmament; and signs of wishing to reduce tension in the Far East. Against this must be placed the signing of the Warsaw Pact and the "little" blockade against Berlin.

2. Each of these steps cost the Russians a good deal. On Austria they are giving up important economic interests, withdrawing their troops and, most important of all, they are playing one of their biggest trumps in Europe. They are also having to accept the possible consequences for their prestige in the satellites of a Soviet retreat. As for the Soviet "Canossa" on Yugoslavia, the consequences of public admission of error could be very great in the satellites, but more important in Soviet eyes is the enormous ideological, political and psychological re-adjustment it must have demanded of the Soviet leaders. Finally, as regards Four Power talks, the acceptance of the principle means in fact a reversal of their publicly proclaimed policy that negotiations would become almost impossible if the Paris Agreements were ratified.

Motivation

3. It has been in the power of the Soviet leaders for many years to make any or all of these moves, but it is only now that they have done so. It is important, therefore, to try to estimate the motives which led the Russians finally to decide on abandoning their previous policies — that is of out-right hostility to non-communist governments, of holding firm to what they had gained after the war, and appealing over the heads of governments to their peoples. The Russians are now acting in the fashion we have always hoped they would. They have decided it was necessary to negotiate with other governments, and, furthermore, that compromises and concessions are required in diplomacy.

4. There appear to be four main factors influencing the Soviet decision. First, there is the situation inside the U.S.S.R. The Russians themselves make no bones about the serious state of their agriculture, and they are making frantic efforts to bolster up their food production. But the methods they are using are bound to have an unsettling effect on the economy; if they succeed, and many Soviet leaders must have their doubts on this score, it will be many years before they could consider it in a satisfactory state. The consumers' goods programme has had to be scrapped, and Stalinist methods of trying to increase production have been revived. This must leave a certain apathy if not resentment among the people, and doubts among the technicians and intelligentsia of the advisability of these methods. There seems little doubt, however, that the economy cannot indefinitely meet the needs of heavy industry, re-armament caused by the situation in Europe and the Far East, atomic energy development, consumers' goods, and Chinese industrialisation.

5. Added to this is the still unsettled problem of the leadership. Khrushchev has not yet by any means established himself as the undisputed master. It may be possible for some time for the country to continue with a collective leadership, but it must tend to create both uneasiness among the hierarchy and a trend towards moderation in order to avoid serious crises. Mr. Bohlen has reported that he has sensed this feeling of uncertainty among the leaders. Nevertheless they have been able to come to important decisions on foreign policy. The reason is possibly that they were able to agree on the need for a relaxation of international tension precisely because of economic and political pressures inside the country.

6. This leads directly to the second factor — Sino-Soviet relations. The Yugoslav experience has taught the Russians how difficult it is to control even a people close to them in race, ideology and temperament, and the last five years must have increasingly shown that China cannot be easily controlled from Moscow. The three Western foreign Ministers at Vienna apparently decided that the Russians were apprehensive both on economic and political grounds about the progress of the Chinese Communist revolution. To assist it economically by providing even the basic supplies for its conversion from a primitive economy, let alone to supply the help required to turn it into a powerful industrial state, as the Chinese must want, would seriously weaken the Soviet economy. This would mean the indefinite postponement of the desire of the Soviet people for a better material standard of living. It might also turn over to the Chinese the leadership of the communist world. And in the short run there is the danger of stumbling into war as a result of Chinese rashness.

7. The third factor is certainly the re-emergence of Germany. I think the Russians may well have made a new assessment of the German problem after they had disposed of Malenkov and after it became clear that the Paris Agreements would be ratified. They may have come up with the same kind of estimate as ourselves, i.e. that what mattered more than the twelve German divisions was the alliance of a newly prosperous, industrious, vital and energetic nation with its tremendous supply of scientists and technical know-how, to the West. The Russians may have therefore decided that the time had come when some serious steps had to be taken in order to prevent the spectre of a revived threat from Germany united with the most powerful nations of the West.

8. Finally there is the factor of the hydrogen bomb. The Western Ambassadors in Moscow have reported that they think that a genuine and deep fear of the H-bomb is the most important of the motives inspiring a change in Soviet tactics. They felt that the Soviet Government had come to the conclusion that while they could stand atomic bombing longer than European countries could, they were all equally vulnerable to the annihilative effect of the hydrogen bomb. The step which may have crystallized their decision could well have been the adoption of MC-48 by the NATO Council.<sup>37</sup> The Russians must have realized that if the NATO powers were determined to use nuclear weapons from the beginning of any war, then it would be practically impossible to prevent the use of the big bombs. The Russians may also have been influenced by their own long-range bomber build-up and the realization that advanced air bases were no longer absolutely essential to their defence or striking power.

<sup>37</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 379.

Other Factors — Timing

9. Apart from these basic motivations, there are a number of other considerations leading to the change in Soviet tactics. The first is the growth of neutralist sentiment in the United Kingdom and Germany. The strength of the feeling in favour of an attempt to relax tension has apparently been growing in Britain, on both sides of the political fence, and, of course, it has never been far below the surface in France and Italy. Combined with this was a definite upsurge of interest in West Germany in the last few months in the question of reunification, and an accompanying distrust of re-armament. Even in the United States the Russians might have been able to sense, underneath the official statements, a growing impatience with the idea of war, and the Zhukov-Eisenhower correspondence, about which we still know nothing, may have helped to convince the Russians that overtures would not now be coldly rejected.

10. There remains the situation in the satellites. Our information is meagre but what there is points to continued economic and political troubles, with little sign that, even ten years after, the Soviet régimes are any more popular than they were. Dr. Adenauer has told Sir Anthony Eden that 90% of the population in Poland and 95% in East Germany were still hostile. The necessity of adding to their armaments cannot have therefore been very agreeable to the Russians. In particular the raising and arming of a large conscript army in East Germany, where they can have little confidence that it would not be turned against them, must have been a discouraging prospect. These factors might therefore have also helped to fashion the Soviet decision.

11. Mr. Stewart Alsop has criticized the theory that the Russians have been forced to adopt new diplomatic tactics by the strength of the West, and up to a point he is probably right. Militarily the Russians are certainly as strong in relation to the West as they were a year ago, possibly stronger with advances in H-bomb production and long-range bombers. But they are weaker politically and if they have decided the contest must go on on the political-economic plane, then their moves make good sense. They are ceding terrain which may be no longer essential in the light of new weapons and military strategy, in order to regroup for a peaceful contest for the allegiance of Europe.

12. As for the question of timing, one can only guess. It would have been logical to launch this offensive before the ratification of the Paris Agreements, but the Russians are usually late in their moves. Also internal political dissension may have made it impossible to reach a final decision before the (at least temporary) disposal of the problem of Malenkov. However, once the decision was taken, it is remarkable the speed and despatch with which it has been executed up to now. Presumably the next stages have also been thought out in advance.

Soviet Aims

13. One can always repeat that ultimate Soviet aims remain unchanged, but I, for one, think these aims have always been limited in fact to practical realities, and in this connection believe my paper of last November re-assessing Soviet policy is still valid.<sup>38</sup> It is probably more useful to see if immediate, practical Soviet aims in Europe have altered, and in this context it is reasonably safe to say that they have not. But their tactics in pursuing these aims are changing.

14. Their major aim is undoubtedly to secure the withdrawal of United States forces from Europe, the abandonment of United States bases too close to Soviet territory for comfort, or at least their transfer to European control, and the detachment, even at this late date, of Germany from NATO. The purpose of these aims is not necessarily to set the stage for Soviet military conquest but to reduce the pressure on the USSR by the Western military alliance, to obviate the direct threat of atomic bombing from the advanced bases, and to make it easier to advance Soviet political aims in Europe on the economic, political and social level, that is either to expand the area of communism slowly and peacefully, or at least to assist in creating régimes in Europe more friendly to the USSR. The withdrawal of US troops from Europe would also mean the slackening of the tempo of economic assistance to Western Europe, which would be an important additional aim of the USSR.

<sup>38</sup> Voir/See Volume 20, Document 692.

15. The Russians presumably are realistic enough to realize that considerable diplomatic skill, and real concessions will be required to accomplish these aims. But a secondary, though certainly important goal, is clearly to reduce the danger of a clash in Europe, and to diminish the feeling of urgency in the West, as the basis on which NATO has been built up. This would be the first step in the long process of creating the right atmosphere for taking on more substantial and difficult problems.

16. To lessen tension they can, and are, making the kind of re-assuring moves which they must have known for years were required to allay some of the West's fears. But in the long run, if they are to keep this up, they will need to follow on from the Austrian Treaty. Even last year this in itself would have been enough to quieten our suspicions. Today it only whets our appetite for greater concessions and more substantial settlements.

17. This means, in fact, an attempt at settling the German problem. I shall examine it, and the related questions of a band of neutral states and European security in subsequent memos. In this one I shall simply treat it in general lines in order to try to establish an over-all picture of Soviet policy.

18. A divided Germany suited Soviet ends for some time, but only so long as the Western portion did not become substantially stronger and more influential than the Eastern Zone. With that happening the balance, not only in Germany, but also in Europe, begins to turn against Russia. It is therefore likely that the Russians will wish to detach Western Germany from NATO, and prevent its re-armament and revival as a European power. Failing to do that by Germany's division, they may how decide that unity must be the bait, and a price paid for it.

19. The Russians know the limitations on their freedom of action in this question, and presumably those on the Western Powers as well. They are also unlikely to wish to move very precipitately towards a solution of this problem which must have many pitfalls for them. A retreat from Eastern Germany carries great implications for the other satellites, and the gamble of German neutrality must appear to have many disadvantages.

20. The propaganda advantages of apparently imaginative proposals by the Russians could have far-reaching effects. It seems to me that what we are likely to see develop in the next few months is a cautious approach to negotiations through high level Four-Power talks, which could continue for a long time at the Foreign Minister level while the Russians attempt to probe their adversary and try to get some idea where, and how far, they can hope to reach agreement.

21. In the meantime they would try to develop direct relations with Bonn, and to secure recognition by the Federal Republic of the East German régime. This is what they are clearly after in the dispute over road tolls in Berlin. If they succeeded in this they would then be in a position to negotiate not only with the Western Powers but directly with the Germans. They may well wish to let the German situation simmer for some time, waiting for Adenauer and his government to weaken and popular demand for re-unification to increase before actually taking the concrete steps necessary to reach a settlement. The increase in diplomatic flexibility offered to the Russians by the ability to deal directly with both the Germans and the Western Powers is obvious.

22. There are certain limitations, however, on the Russians' timetable. At the present moment the Germans are "free" but unarmed. In a few years' time, unless something happens, they will be not only armed but a real independent political force. I would think that the ideal time for the Russians to make their big move on Germany would be in about a year. But then, the force of feeling in Germany in favour of re-unification would force Mr. Adenauer to talk, and yet Germany would not yet be in a position to bargain seriously with the Russians. But in spite of this there remains the inescapable fact that the Russians have played their big card in Austria and have made a very great retreat over Yugoslavia. Neither move would have been made except with bigger game in view, and therefore we cannot dismiss the possibility of a really big offer over Germany in the near future. But this we can only know for certain after the Big Four meeting.

23. There are many signs that the Russians do now see the advantages of a neutral band of states. The first advantage is simply that it keeps these countries from direct domination by the West. Previously the Russians had refused to believe this, as witness their attitude towards Sweden. But their diplomatic activity in Austria, Sweden and Yugoslavia indicates that they are now beginning to see that who is not with them is not necessarily against them. In this connection we may well see an attempt, by a combination of threats and inducements, to entice Italy into a more neutral position.

24. If Germany could be genuinely neutralized, I think the Russians might now make the sacrifices necessary to achieve this, and, as I shall point out in a later study, the idea may have many attractions for the Russians. I doubt, however, that they seriously believe that an imposed neutral solution is now possible for Germany itself. But the idea has great usefulness for Soviet propaganda not only in Germany but also in the peripheral states. To extend it, however, to the satellites as well is another question and I see no proof up to now that the Russians have any intention of loosening their grip on Eastern Europe. The Pravda article of May 22, and the reply to the Western notes, is a clear warning that Four-Power talks cannot include this subject. But we also had no sign that the Russians were planning to leave Austria, and in the present fluid situation even this cannot be entirely dismissed.

25. In any case the Russians have taken pains to point out the connection they see between the German question, disarmament, the Far East, trade relations, cultural relations, and foreign bases. A general relaxation of tension is what they seem to have in mind, the setting of an ambience in which later specific problems might be tackled, but always with an eye on their inter-connection. They have produced their first draft of a general settlement in the Malik proposals, but these are probably just the bare outline of what they want. We can, I think, expect the Russians to follow them up with more diplomatic activity on these lines.

26. In the meantime they have completed their own "anti-NATO" by signing the Warsaw Pact and the Eastern Unified Command agreement. But the military participation of East Germany has not been decided, and the Pact is to be abandoned in the event of a system of collective security being set up in Europe. Thus the Warsaw agreements seem to have the aim primarily of being a formal counter to NATO which can be used later for bargaining purposes. I am examining the Warsaw Pact in greater detail in a separate memorandum.

Conclusion

27. Mr. Kennan developed the theory in 1947, as part of the containment policy, that there were continuing pressures of various kinds on the USSR.<sup>39</sup> These can be divided generally into two categories: internal pressures and external pressures. It is only when the two pressures coincide that there is any chance for the West of making any real progress in negotiation with the USSR. That time seems now to have come, and it is imperative that the West do two things: keep up the pressure (in a peaceful and political but nevertheless firm fashion), and provide the opportunities for the Russians to reach agreement.

28. That agreement can only be very limited, and that a large measure of "cold" war is bound to continue, are practically axiomatic because of the nature of the Soviet state, and the Communist Parties. So long as the international Parties remain large, and important forces in the life of Western countries, the USSR is going to employ them to further its own foreign policy aims, and this is the first and basic limitation. The second is that the threat from the West is essential to the whole Soviet system. It can only continue to justify its dictatorship, its huge police system and arbitrary methods, its standing army, and further sacrifices on the part of the people if some strong threat to the régime exists. Since they claim the internal threat has disappeared, this has to come from the West. I doubt, therefore, if the Russians can go all the way towards lessening tension, though, of course, they may be able to operate a double policy, of actually solving serious problems with the West, while continuing in domestic propaganda to paint a different picture.

29. We will, of course, have to be ready, first to meet the Russians half-way if they seriously wish to solve our differences, and secondly, to counter any proposals they might make even if they appear to us as essentially insincere. For this purpose I shall be incorporating some ideas in the later memoranda which I have mentioned above. Up to now, however, I do not think any advances in negotiations with the Russians since 1945 have really resulted from a positive Western proposal. It is essential for us to make these proposals since they create the right atmosphere and often keep intact the line of communication with the Russians. But, as in the case of Austria, actual progress can only be made in the long run when the Russians have made up their minds a step forward is necessary. This leaves the initiatives to a certain extent in Soviet hands, but it is something we need not necessarily deplore.

30. The important point is that there is now a chance, which hardly existed before, of solving some of the main European problems. If, in so doing, we create others, that cannot be helped. It was hardly likely that the European situation would remain indefinitely fixed, or that two opposing armies could sit for another decade or two glaring at each other across the middle of Europe. Perhaps a period of relaxation may give the Russians the opportunity they need to improve their internal situation and then recommence the strongest pressure on us. But this is a gamble which cannot be avoided and one which we have just as good a chance as the Russians of winning.

R.A.D. FORD

<sup>39</sup> Voir/See 'X', "The Sources of Soviet Conduct", Foreign Affairs, Volume 25, No. 4, July 1947, pp. 566-582.

529.

DEA/50354-40

*Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

SECRET

[Ottawa], September 29, 1955

GERMAN-SOVIET AGREEMENT

The German-Soviet meetings in Moscow, after five days of hard and occasionally acrimonious bargaining, led to an agreement which may prove reasonably satisfactory to Germany and the Western Allies as well as to the Soviet Union.

2. The principal result of the talks was an exchange of letters calling for the establishment of diplomatic relations and an exchange of ambassadors, subject to the approval of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, and of the Federal Republic's Cabinet and Bundestag, which is now reported by the press as having been given. In a supplementary letter to Premier Bulganin, Chancellor Adenauer noted that the establishment of diplomatic relations did not constitute recognition of the present territorial situation (since final determination of German borders would depend on a peace treaty) nor did it constitute a change in the Federal Republic's claim to represent all the German people. Chancellor Adenauer's contentions were, of course, vigorously refuted by the Soviet Union, which emphasized its support of the East German régime by inviting its Premier, Otto Grotewohl, to Moscow as soon as Chancellor Adenauer had left and subsequently by signing a treaty establishing its sovereignty. Arrangements for an increase in trade — another matter to which the Soviet Union had given top priority — were left for future discussion.

3. As evidence of the importance which Chancellor Adenauer attaches to his formal reservations to the agreement, he has evidently instructed German Ambassadors in friendly capitals to seek confirmation that Western Governments agreed with the decision to establish German-Soviet diplomatic relations and with the German view that this would not alter the legal authority of the Federal Government to represent the whole German people in international affairs. I told Dr. Dankwort, when he came to see me last week, that the Canadian Government stood by the declaration which was part of the London and Paris Agreements to the effect that we consider "the Government of the Federal Republic as the only German Government freely and legitimately constituted". This seemed to satisfy him.

4. As his part of the bargain for agreeing to an exchange of ambassadors, Chancellor Adenauer received Premier Bulganin's "word of honour" that the 9,626 German "war criminals" which the Soviet Union admits to holding would very shortly be released, subject in some cases to retrial in German courts, and that consideration would be given to the freeing of German civilians detained in the Soviet Union if their names were submitted to Soviet authorities. (The Germans claim about 120,000 civilians are held in the USSR.) The terms of the release of the prisoners were not included in the final joint communiqué and were not too clearly stated in press conferences given in Moscow and Bonn by Chancellor Adenauer. Apparently the Soviet Union abandoned its early insistence that the prisoners could be released only as the result of a collective approach by both the Federal Republic and the German Democratic Republic. Instead, to the Chancellor's chagrin, the position of the German Democratic Republic has been saved by the Soviet publication of a letter from Voroshilov to Pieck of August 31 which indicated that the Soviet Government was considering the release of the prisoners as requested by the East Germans and has not, therefore, made the release as a special concession to Chancellor Adenauer. The Russians had, in other words, "sold the same horse twice".

5. In a somewhat ambiguous statement during the negotiations, Premier Bulganin referred to more than 100,000 Soviet citizens living in the Federal Republic, many of whom he claimed were being prevented from returning to the Soviet Union, and said he hoped that "the Government of the German Federal Republic will take the necessary measures and afford its cooperation for the return home of displaced Soviet citizens". Whether the Premier intended to make cooperation by the Federal Republic in returning to the Soviet Union these former Soviet citizens a condition for the return of German prisoners remains uncertain, but his implied acceptance of the principle of "voluntary repatriation" is interesting. At any rate, Soviet "war criminals" in German hands are also to be repatriated.

6. There has been a good deal of criticism of Chancellor Adenauer both in Germany and elsewhere for "giving in" to the Soviet Union, though the United Kingdom Foreign Office has indicated its approval of his performance and the United States State Department has said officially that it regards the agreement as a triumph of diplomacy. According to the critics, both German and foreign, Chancellor Adenauer's agreement to exchange ambassadors has led to a hardening of the division of Germany, since he chose to enter into diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union at a time when it continued to recognize the East German government. Non-German observers have gone further to suggest that the Federal Republic will now find itself under almost irresistible Soviet pressure to consult more frequently with representatives of the German Democratic Republic. Topics which were formerly discussed by the Four Powers, including reunification, may now be discussed directly between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union may accordingly be inclined to attach less weight to Four Power talks and instead to offer attractive terms on reunification directly to the Federal Republic, or indirectly through the East Germans, in order to draw Germany out of NATO.

7. These criticisms seem to us not so much unjustified as beside the point. The agreements will not necessarily weaken German association with the West nor compromise the Western stand on how reunification should be brought about. The Soviet Union will now recognize the creation of the Three Powers which it had vigorously opposed for the past six years. It has honoured the man whom its propaganda had castigated for leading the Federal Republic into NATO. Its action, combined with the release of the German prisoners, could hardly help but be beneficial to Chancellor Adenauer's position in Germany and hence to Germany's Western Allies. The Soviet Union's attempts since Adenauer's departure from Moscow to qualify its support for him by ascribing the release of prisoners to East German intervention and by indicating that it still accepts the Oder-Neisse line as the German border to the East have probably helped Adenauer more than they have hurt him by demonstrating to the German people the continuing intransigence of the Soviet approach to German problems.

8. The joint communiqué referred to the establishment of diplomatic relations as helping "the solution of the principal national problem of the German people — the re-establishment of the unity of the German democratic state". In fact reunification appears hardly to have been discussed. Chancellor Adenauer in his opening remarks simply asked the Soviet Union to devote all its energy to a rapid solution of the problem of German unity in collaboration with the United Kingdom, the United States and France and did not attempt to suggest that reunification should be dealt with by direct Soviet-German negotiations. The establishment of diplomatic links between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union can hardly create any additional problems for the Western Big Three before the Geneva Conference begins on October 27.

9. In the long run, if the USSR continues to block reunification by demanding that the two Germanies must negotiate, the Chancellor may live to regret the agreement he has made in Moscow, not so much because of the unfavourable reactions which it has received in some Western countries as for its impact on his own domestic and political situation. For the unpalatable fact is that the Chancellor has been justifying his foreign policies, and in particular his policies towards the USSR, on the grounds that they would help to create the conditions necessary for agreement on reunification. By bringing home some prisoners, he has temporarily silenced his critics. However, not only the Social Democrats, but some members of his own coalition are already more than doubtful about his Western ties as a long term policy because they seem to rule out reunification, instead, as the Chancellor had led public opinion to expect, facilitating it.

10. Once the diplomatic missions have been established, the Soviet Union will obviously have increased opportunities to consult directly with the Federal Republic about reunification and other problems which have formerly been the preserve of the Four Powers. Molotov, for instance, has already asked the Federal Republic to stop propaganda ballots being sent eastward from its territory. The Soviet Union may also, once a Federal Republic representative is in Moscow, attempt to induce the Federal Republic to consult with representatives of the German Democratic Republic, without necessarily extending formal recognition, on trade and reunification. If the West Germans were seriously interested in negotiating directly with the Soviet Union about reunification or any other problem, however, the fact that they had not exchanged diplomatic missions would make as little difference as it did when the Rapallo Pact was concluded.<sup>40</sup>

11. The danger of the Federal Republic deserting its Western Allies as the result of Soviet overtures still appears to be negligible at least so long as Adenauer remains Chancellor. The pressure for reunification is strong; but not overwhelming. And since July the USSR has said much less about neutrality for Germany and has been demanding nothing less than NATO's dissolution. Perhaps the principal result of the German-Soviet agreement may be that the Western Powers will be under even more pressure than they have been up to now to demonstrate their genuine interest in German reunification and to explain convincingly the compelling security reasons behind Western rejection of reunification on any terms which the Soviet Union has so far shown itself willing to accept. One measure of Western sincerity will be how far they are prepared to go to meet Soviet fears in a European security system.

12. Press and semi-official reactions to the visit in Western countries have run the gamut, some hailing Adenauer's great "victory" and others calling it a "catastrophe". From beginning to end there has been an unfortunate lack of balance, commencing with the Chancellor's own reactions which ranged from elation when the invitation was received to wishing, after the Geneva Conference, that he had never been invited. The very mixed reactions of German and other Western officials is the more surprising because the visit yielded almost exactly the expected result. Indeed if the Federal Republic were to play the role in Europe and the world to which it now naturally aspires the establishment of direct ties with Moscow was inevitable and probably the sooner it was accomplished the better. Certainly the Chancellor maintained his reputation as a tough bargainer; the negotiations produced some very interesting and frank exchanges between the two sides (see Hayter's telegram of September 11 to the Foreign Office, copy attached). Yet Mr. Bohlen was so horrified at Premier Bulganin's offer to exchange prisoners for recognition that he told Mr. von Brentano it was "appeasement" and foresaw Germany's departure from NATO as the next step. This can have made no better impression on the Chancellor than the subsequent discovery that before promising him the return of German prisoners, the Russians had already made similar promises to the East Germans.

<sup>40</sup> Aux termes de ce traité de 1922, l'Allemagne et l'Union soviétique se reconnaissent mutuellement et échangent le statut de la nation la plus favorisée.

Under the terms of this 1922 treaty, Germany and the Soviet Union recognized one another and exchanged MFN status.

13. In our opinion the German-Soviet agreement has received both too much praise and too much blame. As in the case of the Austrian Treaty, the United States has once again appeared to be accepting in very bad grace agreements with the USSR which should have been welcomed in measured terms as progress towards a more normal world made possible by Western policies.

14. With the formal recognition of East German sovereignty to balance the establishment of diplomatic relations with the Federal Republic, the Soviet leaders have confirmed their post Geneva promises to the East Germans that their régime would not be sold down the river. The Russians have now put themselves in a stronger and tougher bargaining position. They can now repeat with greater emphasis their insistence that the East and West Germans themselves must negotiate on German problems — though the Russians will still presumably agree to negotiate with the Western Powers on subjects such as reunification which are specifically reserved in the Potsdam Agreement for the Four Powers. Already the East German leaders have served notice that they may use their newly acquired control of West German traffic to Berlin in order to put pressure on the Federal Government.

15. Here again is further evidence that the fruit of the Geneva Conference — at least on the most important issues — is a consolidation of the status quo in Europe. Perhaps the only contrary evidence from the Chancellor's Moscow talks was Premier Bulganin's remark that they were "looking for a new system of security", about which they would be submitting proposals at Geneva.

16. Since these comments were prepared, the NATO Council has discussed Herr Blankenhorn's report on the Chancellor's Mission to Moscow. Mr. Wilgress' account† of this interesting review is attached, as is also the text of the German Soviet Agreement.

J. L[ÉGER]

530.

DEA/50128-40

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

Ottawa, September 29, 1955

The attached memorandum on Post-Genève relationships with the Soviet Union indicates the line I think that we should follow in discussions of this all-important subject with our friends in Washington and London and Paris. The second memorandum attached which we received some time ago from Washington, indicates that the American approach to the problem is not exactly the same as our own.<sup>41</sup>

I thought you might like to have a look at these documents.

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum by Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET

CANADIAN POLICY IN THE LIGHT OF SOVIET TACTICAL CHANGES SINCE GENEVA

This paper examines advantages and disadvantages for the West in the present post-Geneva situation and suggests in what way we can exploit the changes that have taken place to our advantage.

2. For this purpose it is assumed that for a number of reasons the Russians have decided to alter, at least for the time being, their foreign policy tactics. Since one of the reasons is probably to give them a breathing-spell in order to correct some economic, political and social difficulties inside the U.S.S.R., the new trend may continue for 4 or 5 years; though, of course, developments may alter it quickly.

3. Once the Western powers were fully alerted after the war to the expansionist policies of the U.S.S.R., and the dangers this represented to the West, they gradually came to adopt a policy which aimed at preventing any further spread of Soviet power. It was essentially a defensive policy, both because there were no aggressive intentions on our side and because of the relative military weakness of the West at that time.

4. A second stage has now been reached and accepted pretty explicitly by each side — that of an approximate stalemate in power, based on a fairly clear estimate of the nuclear and military strength of the protagonists, and a reciprocal realisation of the horrors of atomic warfare. This ought to be accepted, therefore, by the West as an advance. We have progressed from a purely defensive position to one in which both sides are pretty evenly balanced, as far as all the factors for making war are concerned i.e., conventional armed forces, atomic weapons, strategic situation, economic strength, etc. In order that this position be not confused with, and casually dismissed as, a facile acceptance of the status quo, it is necessary to consider whether, for the last two years, we had not already in fact reached a position in Europe in which we realized that no advance was possible except at the cost of atomic war, and that no conceivable gain was worth the mutual destruction this would create.

5. Having reached a kind of tacit understanding with the Russians that our differences would not be settled by war-like means, we have at least created the conditions for an advance by either side — by peaceful means.

<sup>41</sup> Le mémorandum américain est réimprimé dans United States, Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS), 1955-1957, Volume V, Washington D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1988, pp. 551-554.

The American memorandum is reprinted in United States, Department of State, Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS), 1955-1957, Volume V, Washington D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1988, pp. 551-554.

6. It is likely that the Russians are now prepared to accept the present division of the world for some years, or at least to refrain from attempting to change it by any action which might conceivably lead to general war, though naturally they will try to improve by other means their position at home and abroad. The reasons are obvious. In the first place the relative superiority of the West in nearly all spheres is going to decline over the next two decades, provided the graphs of increase in the Soviet bloc (U.S.S.R. and satellites) and the NATO countries continue as in the first post-war decade. In terms of population and industry the percentage superiority of the West may be illustrated as follows:

	1955	1965	1975
Population	1.4	1.37	1.33
Industry	3	2.33	1.75

The inclusion of China would radically alter the population but not the industrial figure.

7. In the second place the Russians would no doubt hope during this period of prolonged détente to secure substantial reductions in Western armaments, and a general "softening-up" of the West. Economic dislocations and political instability, unemployment and unrest would, in the Marxist view, result, and lead to a general decline in public morale which would in turn facilitate the activities of domestic Communist parties and Soviet subversive activities. At the same time Soviet disarmament would add much needed labour to the farms and industry. (Recent figures show that the number of able-bodied males now coming forward in Russia are declining by about 100,000 per annum. This is a direct result of the decline in the birth-rate during the purge years —36-38; and is likely to continue for another decade).

8. It is not suggested that this softening-up would necessarily be preparatory to the launching of a military attack after the U.S.S.R. had corrected its present difficulties at home, and after its strength was closer to that of the West, but rather that, in Marxist terms, such a development would prevent the capitalist powers from attempting to destroy the citadel of communism, and also create the conditions for the gradual advance of communism by other means.

9. It also means, however, that this new position, based at least in part on mutual fear, heavily favours the Russian aim of maintaining the status quo. Apart from the basic question of threats to the national survival of the major powers, there may be an increasing tendency to slide over other problems because no issue except the basic one would become important enough to risk a war. This situation is theoretically the same for each side, but in practice is easier for a dictatorship, especially a communist one, to exploit than for the democracies.

10. The picture from the Western point of view need not, however, be completely black. Obviously the Russians would not have adopted this new tactic if they did not think it was more advantageous to them than their previous policies. But, while we may have drifted into the "spirit of Geneva", nevertheless it is the situation which we have essentially been aiming for — that is, not necessarily of friendly co-existence, but at least of mutual toleration and peaceful competition. There are still many holds which are not barred, even though neither side aims at a knock-out. It must, however, be recognized immediately that in a period of détente the onus on us to deal effectively with the internal problem of communism is very much greater and probably more difficult.

11. Our main, indeed perhaps our sole, hope of effectively containing communism has, I think, always rested in the possibility of a change within the U.S.S.R. itself; one that came from within and was not imposed from outside. If we can avoid a war with Russia for a further ten years or so, there is a very strong chance that the régime will gradually mellow and settle down into the conservative mould that revolutions historically have followed. It has taken longer in the case of Russia, for a variety of reasons, but it has been happening in spite of the Stalinist straight-jacket, and everything that is now going on inside the U.S.S.R. points to a tremendous development in that direction. This should, in turn, have implications for the effectiveness of international communism which might, in the course of time, cause that threat to diminish also, at least in its present form, as an arm of Soviet foreign policy.

12. As the new Soviet bourgeoisie begins to enjoy the fruits of its labours, and the intelligentsia to revel in the privilege of thinking more freely, and of judging for itself the rest of the world, the system is going to alter radically in spite of itself. At the present time this ambiance in Russia is something that can be turned on and off at will. But given a few years of this, and it will be almost impossible for the collective leadership, without a police terror of the Stalinist type, to put back the clock. As the satellite governments are a reflection of the U.S.S.R. this change may gradually permeate there also with interesting possibilities inherent in it.

13. This is not to say that there is not the danger that one of the present leaders might eventually emerge as undisputed dictator and attempt to revert to a Stalinist type régime, stressing the inherent nationalism and messianism in the Russian character. There is, however, little evidence at present that any of the Soviet leaders have in them the capabilities for this. It also seems unlikely that any people could produce three great leaders in succession. Nevertheless it is one of the possibilities that must be kept in mind and its realization would alter, of course, all the conclusions advanced above.

14. In the present circumstances — however they may develop — it would be wise to maintain the strength and unity of the West at a level capable of dealing with a possible reversion to earlier tactics. No matter what happens, even if the revolutionary fervour continues to decline and the system begins to become conservative, Russia will still remain a vast and powerful country, the very existence of which can constitute a menace to its neighbours so long as its standard of living remains lower than the West and its ideology despotic and anti-capitalist.

15. The primary aim of the West remains the preservation of peace. To attain this our unity and strength must be maintained. The acceptance of restraint in the use of force to settle international differences does not necessarily mean the removal of basic conflicts of national interests.

16. In the long run, however, the best hope of lessening the danger to the West may be in separating the messianic urge in Russia from its material strength. The Russians have regularly gone through periods of tremendous vitality and then lapsed back into long stretches of relative quiescence. If the analysis is correct, the conclusion to be drawn is that we should do nothing to slow up the process of evolution in Russia, and indeed try to speed it up in every way possible. In other words we should try to transform what may be only a tactical change by the Soviet leaders into a basic alteration of the Soviet system.

17. This means, in the first place, that we should try to reach acceptable compromises with the Russians on certain foreign policy issues, such as disarmament, if we can do so without sacrificing any basic security interest. At the same time we would have to be careful to avoid a series of concessions which in the end might weaken us beyond the danger point. Secondly we should encourage the present readiness of the Russians to permit greater numbers of visitors, official and unofficial, to enter their country, and to send delegations abroad. The Russians are an intellectually curious race, and any light which we can help to let in will have a cumulative effect over the years out of all proportion to the number of individuals actually affected.

18. If, however, the Soviet leaders and people should become convinced that the West was not interested in their present desire to establish a kind of modus vivendi, and decided to try to withdraw once more within a Stalinist shell, it would carry very serious dangers for the West. It would also, of course, be a risky proposition for the present Soviet leaders because of the internal political, economic and social problems with which they are faced. This return to Stalinism was, they might claim, forced on them by the lack of response from the West to their efforts to relax tension and bring about a genuine accommodation of views and interests.

19. If a new and tough Stalinist policy succeeded in speeding up the process of narrowing the gap — economic and developmental — with the West we would be confronted with an armed, embittered and xenophobic despotism, which would be an even greater menace to us than that which we have already feared. If the Soviet leaders felt, however, they were failing in their attempt to return to Stalinism, they might turn to some foreign adventure to save their position. In either eventuality, the result would be disastrous for all of us.

20. There is, it seems to me, one specifically Canadian side to these developments. In general our interests in, and our policies towards, the U.S.S.R. are undistinguishable from the rest of NATO. But they also have a direct bearing on our relations with the United States. So long as the latter country feels menaced by the U.S.S.R. it is going to feel the insecurity of its northern defences — perhaps increasingly so if over the course of the next decade there is a gradual withdrawal of trans-Atlantic troops from Europe. And if the Americans believe a real danger of attack across Canada remains, there will be pressure on us to accept United States bases and troops in the North, and ipso facto pressure on our sovereignty.

21. If, therefore, one of our main foreign policy aims is to maintain our position of friendship with, but as much independence of, the United States as possible, it follows that we can best accomplish this in a world where the danger of war has diminished. Thus, the two basic Canadian aims — security vis-à-vis the U.S.S.R., and the maintenance of our national independence — coincide at the present time in the policy of attempting to exploit the present Soviet willingness to establish more peaceful and normal relations between the two big power blocs.

22. The viewpoint stated above is not precisely that held in Washington, where it is felt that in the new situation and the changed atmosphere, the pressure should be kept up on the Soviets; in particular about the following issues: Germany; the Satellites; slave labour conditions; and the subversive activities of international Communism. The State Department believes that the Soviets are in great need to continue the relaxation of tension and that they will pay some appreciable price for this. The U.S. seem ready therefore to pass [press?] their advantage at this time in the hope of early successes based on the gamble that the Russians are in no position to reverse their tactics.

23. Our conclusions, however, are that the greatest hope in the long run for the creation of a sensible modus vivendi between the U.S.S.R. and the West is by the gradual transformation of the Soviet Union into a more conservative society anxious for peaceful, normal relations with the West. If this premise is accepted, we should therefore do all we can to speed up the process and should certainly not adopt an uncompromising attitude now which might drive the Russians back into xenophobic isolation. It is likely that impatience on the part of the West to have the Soviet Union loosen their hold on the satellites too rapidly would only confirm their worst suspicions of us and lead to a reinforcing of the Iron Curtain. We should therefore aim at a long period of détente which would remove suspicions and weaken the Curtain piecemeal. The Soviet hold on the Satellites, a resource-consuming hold, is retained for defensive reasons primarily. The Soviets may become impatient to turn those resources to more productive ends as the imagined threat to the U.S.S.R. diminishes in their eyes. In any event, a more forthcoming attitude towards the West by Moscow is bound to have extremely important repercussions in the Satellite countries. It is difficult to see how Soviet Russia can at the same time maintain the Satellites in subjection and continue to explore avenues of cooperation with the Western Powers.

24. The activities of international communism in the new situation are more difficult to classify. Naturally in a period of détente the communist parties, particularly in their overt activities, are likely to find the going easier, as witness the period of the war-time alliance. It seems improbable that they will lessen their activities, nor that the Russians will abandon a useful weapon of their foreign policy, and long-term ideological aspirations. But this surely is primarily a problem for our governments to solve on the domestic front. While there can be no question of forgetting the international nature of the communist movement, nor of its tremendous ideological attraction, I do not see that we would gain very much in trying to force a show-down with the Soviet Union on this issue at this time.

25. If the above analysis is accurate, then our policy is clear — if difficult. We should exploit in a forthcoming way, every Soviet move which might prolong and deepen the present détente, while maintaining our strength and our collective policies under NATO. We should give our people no reason to believe that tension has now ended, that danger is past and relaxation can safely be indulged in, while convincing them that we are doing everything possible to bring about such a desirable state of affairs.

L.B. PEARSON

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

VISITE DU SECRÉTAIRE D'ÉTAT AUX AFFAIRES EXTÉRIEURES,
5-12 OCTOBRE 1955

VISIT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, OCTOBER 5-12, 1955

531.

L.S.L./Vol. 220

*Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, June 28, 1955

CONVERSATION WITH MR. MOLOTOV

Mr. Sobolev indicated last Thursday evening, and again on Friday morning, that Mr. Molotov was anxious to have a few words with me. We met, therefore, on Friday during the Assembly session in a room off the main hall. It transpired that Mr. Molotov wished to extend to me an invitation to visit Moscow as an official guest. He said that his ambassador in Ottawa had reported some time ago that I had expressed a desire to visit Russia, and this official invitation was the result. I told Mr. Molotov that I had indeed told Mr. Chuvahin that I hoped one day to visit his country to see how the Russian people lived and worked. I still hoped to do that but was not sure when it could be arranged. Mr. Molotov then asked me at once to name a date which would be convenient. I told him that I could hardly do that without consideration; that I had a very busy summer ahead of me, and in any event I would wish to discuss the matter with you. Mr. Molotov seemed somewhat disappointed and wondered why we could not decide the matter immediately. He certainly does not indulge in any diplomatic finesses in these matters. I was not to be pressed, however, and told him that I would get in touch with Mr. Chuvahin in due course about the possibility of such a visit, and that I was sure that his ambassador would report it at once to Moscow.

I then told Mr. Molotov that we found Mr. Chuvahin a friendly and popular ambassador and that he was doing his best to improve relations between our two countries.

We parted with the usual reciprocal, if conventional, expressions of mutual regard. I doubt if he was more sincere in this exchange than I was. He was, however, very cordial throughout and did his best to smile and appear "peace-loving". I must add that I do not find him unusually attractive in this new role. He obviously has not developed a sense of humour with his new and friendly manner. I told him, for instance, that a Canadian Cabinet Minister, Mr. Sinclair, was leaving for Moscow in a couple of weeks<sup>42</sup> and I doubted whether even the great and strong Soviet Union could stand two Cabinet Ministers in succession. He did not seem to think that this was very funny.

L.B. PEARSON

532.

L.B.P./Vol. 67

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur en Norvège*

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in Norway

TELEGRAM 59

Ottawa, July 8, 1955

CONFIDENTIAL

Reference: Your telegram 56, July 5.†
Repeat Moscow No. 94.

MOLOTOV INVITATION

I have sent a tentative reply through the Soviet Ambassador here expressing appreciation of the invitation, but saying that the only opportunity I would have this year to visit the Soviet Union would be en route to the ministerial meeting of the Colombo Plan Conference which opens at Singapore on October 17, and that I would be glad to spend a week in Russia en route. I have also indicated that I would be travelling by RCAF plane and would wish to fly on to Singapore after my Russian visit.

2. I have taken this line because I do not wish to make a special trip to Moscow. I would hope, therefore, to minimize the possibility of the Soviet Government exploiting, for prop-

<sup>42</sup> Sinclair était en Union soviétique pour assister à une réunion de la commission baleinière internationale.

Sinclair was in the Soviet Union to attend a meeting of the International Whaling Commission.

agenda purposes, my visit. They may not wish to have me on these conditions and at that time, in which case the visit would be postponed indefinitely.

[L.B.] PEARSON

533.

L.B.P./Vol. 67

*Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur en Norvège*

*Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in Norway*

SECRET

Ottawa, July 20, 1955

Reference: My telegram No. 59 of July 7.

VISIT TO THE U.S.S.R.

Following from the Minister. Please inform Lange that the Russians have now replied that they would be happy to receive me in Moscow any time between the 5th and 9th October until my departure on the 13th for the Colombo Plan Conference in Singapore. They have also agreed to my suggestion of travelling in a Canadian aircraft.

I should be grateful if Lange could treat this information, for the time being at any rate, as purely for his own information. I should be grateful in turn if he could let me know what he plans to do about the Soviet invitation.

L.B. PEARSON

534.

L.B.P./Vol. 67

Note

Memorandum

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, October 17, 1955

MR. PEARSON'S TALKS WITH SOVIET LEADERS

Mr. Pearson had discussions in Moscow [on October 6] with Mr. Molotov ranging over a wide variety of subjects. The discussion of international affairs was largely on well-known ground. Mr. Pearson put forward no new proposals or solutions, but confined himself to a frank statement of the Canadian, and Western, points of view. Mr. Molotov refused to be drawn out by the few leading remarks which Mr. Pearson put to him.

Geneva Meeting of Foreign Ministers

2. Mr. Molotov's remarks generally were discursive, ambiguous and followed the familiar current Soviet line. He kept his remarks short, he said, because he had put forward the Soviet position on most of the current problems already in his statement before the United Nations General Assembly. He placed particular emphasis on effects of the meeting at the summit [in Geneva] in reducing international tensions and the need now to make further progress in that direction by stressing those problems on which it was possible to find common ground between powers. He said he hoped that the United States at the forthcoming conference [of Foreign Ministers] would not insist on giving priority to German reunification, whose solution had been complicated by the Paris agreements, but would be prepared to approach the problem from the point of view of trying to establish European security.

3. In commenting, Mr. Pearson said that although not a participant in the forthcoming conference, Canada had a big stake in Geneva and hoped for positive results. While Germany was the most difficult problem, its re-unification could not be separated from European security since Europe could not be secure if it included two German states bitterly hostile to one another and each in an opposing camp. He also emphasized the importance of considering assurances against possible German threats to the Russians as well as ourselves.

Disarmament

4. Mr. Molotov noted that the positions of the powers seemed to be getting closer and expressed the hope that Canada might contribute further to agreement. Mr. Pearson replied to the effect that while our responsibilities were not as great as those of the big powers, our aim was to contribute what we could to agreement; he strongly supported the Eisenhower proposal as an important contribution, and hoped that the growth of mutual confidence would lead to a comprehensive plan for disarmament.

East-West Contacts

5. Mr. Molotov made cordial reference to Mr. Pearson's visit as constituting a practical example of effective East-West contacts in action. In reply Mr. Pearson said he hoped the visit would enable him to return with a better understanding of Soviet problems as well as giving the Russians a better understanding of our point of view. There was a very general conversation about the mutual advantage of a greater exchange of information. On consular questions, such as information on persons in the U.S.S.R. with relatives in Canada, etc., Molotov said that if this were raised by the Embassy they would do what they could in accordance with their laws.<sup>43</sup>

United Nations

6. Mr. Pearson told Mr. Molotov that we felt that the time had come to make the United Nations more nearly universal, if not at this session then surely at the next. Mr. Molotov said he was aware of the "Canadian proposal" and he thought that we should see if we could have the question settled at this session.<sup>44</sup> When Mr. Pearson raised the question of the Soviet Union's special difficulty over Japan, however, Mr. Molotov did not comment.

7. In the course of a general statement Mr. Pearson mentioned his regrets at the necessity for France's withdrawal from the Assembly.<sup>45</sup> When Mr. Molotov subsequently expressed agreement with this attitude of regret at withdrawal Mr. Pearson pointed out that he was not criticizing the French but regretted the developments that had provoked it. Mr. Molotov did not comment further on this or on Mr. Pearson's observation that inclusion of "domestic" items on the agenda was becoming dangerous for the functioning of the Assembly.

Indo-China

8. Mr. Pearson asked Mr. Molotov as co-chairman for his views on Indo-China emphasizing that although the Commission was a burden on us and we should like to bring our men home we would stay as long as the Commission was doing useful work in the area

<sup>43</sup> Pour une élaboration de la politique canadienne sur les relations Est-Ouest, voir le document 209.

<sup>44</sup> For an elaboration of Canadian policy on East-West contacts, see Document 209.

<sup>45</sup> Voir le chapitre premier, première partie, section iii./See Chapter 1, Part 1, Section iii.

<sup>45</sup> Voir le chapitre premier, première partie, section vi./See Chapter 1, Part 1, Section vi.

under the Armistice Agreement. Mr. Molotov said the Russians attached great importance to Indo-China because they thought the Geneva Conference of last year did much to reduce international tension. Though the important question of the termination of the war was settled there remained many issues to be resolved. The work of the commissions was of international importance and far from terminating them we should seek to improve their work. He had maintained closest contact with Sir Anthony Eden and Mr. Macmillan on the subject at Geneva and New York. Mr. Macmillan had told him in New York that his Government wanted the work of the Commission to continue. The Russians attached particular importance to consultations and preparation of elections and he understood Mr. Macmillan to say in New York that he was hopeful of a better attitude on this subject from South Vietnam and particularly Diem in a few weeks. He had also spoken to Mr. Pinay in New York. He thought they would have to revert to the subject again in Geneva. When he finished Mr. Pearson spoke of our concern over establishment of the authority of the Royal Laotian Government in all parts of Laos under conditions fair to all parties but Mr. Molotov did not pick up this point.

China

9. Mr. Molotov said Canada could not fail to be interested in the problem of Korea and China. On the former Mr. Pearson merely mentioned our desire for appropriate arrangements to unify the country. China, Mr. Pearson said, was the biggest problem of all. No one could feel comfortable when two bitterly hostile Chinese régimes aligned to the East and West faced each other. Mr. Molotov said both Canada and the Soviet Union had an interest in this question and it required diplomatic discussion. In his view it would be in the interest of the United States to have it settled. Mr. Pearson spoke of our attitude on recognition mentioning doubts in Canada and more particularly the United States of Chinese intentions and our desire not to create unnecessary difficulty in our relations with the United States as these were very important to us. However, we were moving in Canada towards a recognition of the facts as they exist. Mr. Molotov said he was aware of Mr. Pearson's Vancouver statement and welcomed what he called the new approach.<sup>46</sup> The meetings between the Americans and Chinese in Geneva could contribute to the strengthening of peace in the Far East.

General

10. Mr. Pearson commented that Molotov during all his contacts with him seemed anxious to avoid coming to grips with any issue which might cause an argument. He at no, repeat no, time appeared as a decisive figure, but there was nothing in the apparently easy relations among his colleagues to suggest a crisis of any kind.

11. Molotov's bland platitudes were in contrast with the franker but jovial comments of Maganovich, and the amusing and intelligent remarks of Malenkov. Mr. Pearson took the opportunity offered by informal conversations to explain frankly the close and intricate nature of our relations with the United States. The Russians refrained from any but very indirect criticism of U.S. policy and stressed that Canada could be a bridge or interpreter.

<sup>46</sup> Voir/See Document 749.

535.

DEA/12278-40

Résumé du procès-verbal de la réunion à Kremlin
Summary Record of Meeting at Kremlin

SECRET

[Moscow], October 10, 1955

U.S.S.R.

Mr. Molotov, Foreign Minister
 Mr. Zorin, Deputy Foreign Minister
 Mr. Chuvahin, U.S.S.R. Ambassador to Canada
 Mr. Erofeyev, Head of Second European Division, Foreign Ministry
 Mr. Troyanovsky (Interpreter)

CANADA

Mr. Pearson, Secretary of State for External Affairs
 Mr. John Watkins, Canadian Ambassador to the U.S.S.R.
 Mr. John Holmes, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
 Mr. Crépault, Adviser

Mr. Pearson began the discussion by expressing to Mr. Molotov his appreciation for the friendly reception which he had been given in Leningrad. He said that he had met many people in Leningrad who were convinced that their city was better even than Moscow! He realized, of course, that one day was hardly sufficient to know a city like Leningrad, but he was impressed by what he saw. He was now looking forward to his trip to the Crimea to meet Messrs. Bulganin and Khrushchev. The programme of his visit to the U.S.S.R. had been heavy, and he naturally felt a little tired at the pace, but the warm welcome and generous hospitality which was being shown them helped alleviate fatigue.

Mr. Molotov remarked that it was a good thing that Mr. Pearson would be able to see the leaders of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Pearson, referring to the rest of his programme in Moscow, said that the talks on trade were continuing with Mr. Sharp as the Canadian spokesman.<sup>47</sup> He was also hoping personally that there would be useful talks this afternoon at the Ministry of Culture.

Mr. Molotov said that he had no doubt that exchanges of views on trade and culture could only be beneficial to the relations between the two countries.

Mr. Pearson said that the Canadian Government was sincere in its desire for a trade agreement with the U.S.S.R. It was naturally difficult to conclude one because of the differences in the two systems, and the discussions would ultimately have to be referred to and continued in Ottawa. But good progress, he felt, had already been made and he wanted to reaffirm that Canada was genuinely anxious to have such a trade agreement, even though one could not be concluded here. He hoped that something on this question could be concluded in the joint communiqué and that the trade talks would be continued.

Mr. Molotov said that this would be well.

Mr. Pearson said that he had been assuming from what he had been told that a joint communiqué would be issued at the end of the visit, but on this point he was in the hands of Mr. Molotov. As far as he was concerned, he was quite prepared to have a release which would just say that he had come to Moscow, had an enjoyable and useful visit, and that he had left; but if Mr. Molotov desired to have a joint communiqué, that would also be all right with him.

<sup>47</sup> Voir/See Document 543.

Mr. Molotov replied that a joint communiqué would be the correct way to conclude this visit, and to underline its importance.

Mr. Pearson explained that after having discussed the matter with Mr. Chuvahin yesterday, he had prepared a draft text† which was acceptable from the Canadian point of view. He had given the draft to Mr. Chuvahin. Mr. Pearson wanted to know whether this draft was suitable as a basis for discussion. (Note: at this stage, Mr. Molotov exchanged some comments with Mr. Chuvahin, which seemed to indicate that Mr. Molotov had not yet seen the Canadian draft. It appeared that Mr. Chuvahin, who received the draft last evening at about 7.30, had sent it directly to the translators. Mr. Molotov appeared somewhat displeased at hearing this.)

Mr. Molotov replied that unfortunately he had seen the translation of the Canadian draft only a few minutes before the Minister had come into his office, and had had, therefore, no time to study it in detail. He thought perhaps that the best procedure would be to discuss the communiqué in general. Mr. Pearson could make any other observations that he might have at this stage, so that this afternoon Mr. Pearson's deputy, Mr. Holmes, and his deputy, Mr. Zorin, could meet and discuss it in detail; the Ministers might then approve it at the reception planned for 6.00 this evening.

Mr. Pearson said that he had one more observation to make; he wondered whether mention should be made of his proposed visit to the Crimea.

Mr. Molotov thought that this would be quite natural and, indeed, necessary, and that reference should certainly be made to it in the text of the communiqué. Mr. Molotov thought it would also be desirable to refer to the discussions with the Ministries of Trade and of Culture.

Mr. Pearson thought that the names of the officials from these two Ministries could be mentioned in the first paragraph of the communiqué along with the names of the other leaders of the Government whom he had met.

Mr. Molotov agreed that this would be right.

Mr. Pearson said that he was also in agreement, since a copy of the translation had only reached Mr. Molotov this morning, to the suggestion that their respective deputies could try their hand at a final draft.

Mr. Molotov said that this would be correct procedure, and that if after Mr. Pearson's visit to the Crimea it was found desirable to make additions, these could be made then.

Mr. Pearson told Mr. Molotov that it was his intention this afternoon in his talks with the Deputy Minister of Culture, to raise the question of tourist, scientific, cultural and other exchanges. He wanted to mention this to Mr. Molotov now, in case he had anything that he wanted to say on this point.

Mr. Molotov asked Mr. Pearson what particular fields he had in mind when he referred to scientific and cultural exchanges.

Mr. Pearson replied that since his stay in Moscow his understanding of these terms had been enlarged, and that they might now include, for instance, agricultural experts. This field had become of particular interest after his visit to the Moscow Agricultural Exhibition, where the director was an expert cerealist, and where it had become evident that useful information could be exchanged in this field. There was also the subject of information on Arctic developments. Mr. Pearson remarked that Canada was not perhaps doing as much as the U.S.S.R. in this field, but that some of the Canadian work might nonetheless be of interest to the Russians, and vice versa. There was also meteorological information; some of the Canadian experts in this field would be prepared to come to Moscow, and Mr.

Pearson thought some Russian experts would also no doubt like to reciprocate the visits. He knew that both countries had been carrying out experiments in this field, which could be usefully exchanged, and which would lead to an improvement in the various techniques at present in use.

Mr. Molotov concurred that exchanges of information in these fields could be advantageous, including the field of meteorological information, and thought that arrangements could be made on both sides.

Mr. Pearson went on to say that he would be grateful if the Canadian Ambassador in Moscow, Mr. Watkins, could take up with the appropriate Russian authorities, procedures for securing information about relatives of Canadians who were residing in the U.S.S.R. He thought that there might be a possibility of using the services of the Canadian Red Cross and of the Soviet Red Cross and Red Crescent in this regard. There were also a few Canadians who were resident in the U.S.S.R. and who have been wanting to go to Canada. Some of them were dual nationals. He had no wish to raise individual cases at this time, but he would like to think that something could be done through the good offices of the Canadian Embassy.

Mr. Molotov indicated that judging from what Mr. Pearson had said it was difficult for him now to say exactly what could be done. Naturally, however, the Embassy would be able to raise any question that the Canadian Government wishes, and the Russian authorities would see what could be done to meet the Canadian wishes, within the framework of the Russian laws. Mr. Molotov then enquired whether reference could be made in the communiqué on the common grounds which exist on disarmament since Russia and Canada were both on the Disarmament Sub-Committee and their views had recently been closer on a number of points.

Mr. Pearson agreed, and thought that mention indeed could be made of the fact that Russia and Canada have worked together on the Sub-Committee; that their views had come closer together, and their hope for further progress in this field.

Mr. Molotov thought that this would be desirable and that what Mr. Pearson had said was acceptable to him. He added that he would also like reference to be made to the mutual desire which existed between Canada and Russia that there be no kind of discrimination in the field of trade.

Mr. Pearson said that the paragraph on page two dealing with trade could probably be expanded somewhat.

Mr. Molotov said that it would not be difficult to find some wording which would meet their mutual wishes.

Mr. Pearson said there were two other points which he would like to mention and he apologized for their detailed nature. He hoped that if the Canadian Government were to request an increase in its Embassy staff in Moscow, such, for instance, as the addition of an Agricultural Secretary, there would be no difficulty in providing the necessary accommodation. One or two additional Secretaries might be coming, and he would be grateful if the necessary arrangements were possible at this end.

Mr. Molotov said he thought there should be no difficulty in making those arrangements to meet the wishes of the Canadian Government.

Mr. Pearson said that the second point was one that Mr. Sharp had already mentioned to the officials of the Ministry of Trade; it was being mentioned, of course, in a purely preliminary way; it was the question of an air transport agreement between Canada and Russia. Mr. Pearson said that when he returns to Canada and reports on what he has seen in Russia, there might be more Canadians who would wish to come here! There would then be the question of transport. It might be possible to work out an air agreement. This might take some time but he just wanted to mention at this time the possibility of such an agreement.

Mr. Molotov remarked that of course this matter would require some special consideration. Mr. Molotov then enquired whether mention could be made in the communiqué to an exchange of parliamentary delegations.

Mr. Pearson said that this would be possible if it was desired. He explained that he had mentioned this proposal to the Speakers of the two Houses before leaving Canada. He felt that they were in favour of such visits, but as Mr. Chuvahin would know, Mr. Pearson could not very well impinge upon the privileges of Parliament. Nonetheless, he thought that some words could be found which would avoid this difficulty.

Mr. Molotov said that he appreciated that the matter had to be decided by the Members of Parliament; what he had had in mind was simply the principle of desirability of such exchanges. He did not wish to refer to specific questions, such as that of dates, but only a general expression of desirability.

Mr. Pearson thought that some formula could be found. He mentioned that the Prime Minister of Canada had already stated in the House of Commons that such exchanges could be helpful. Mr. Pearson said that if such visits became current, of course, there would be a still greater need for an air agreement.

Mr. Molotov replied that it will have to be seen how things develop in the future in this respect. It is possible that they will continue to develop favourably.

Mr. Pearson said that if there was no other point, the deputies in charge of the final draft of the communiqué might be allowed to get to work.

Mr. Molotov said this was a good idea. He was looking forward to seeing Mr. Pearson at the reception this evening.

Mr. Pearson said that he was looking forward to Mr. Molotov's reception. Referring to the reception which had been given at the Canadian Embassy two days ago, Mr. Pearson said that some newspapermen had probably made nuisances of themselves. He said he had felt at first that he should apologize for this, but he had then been given to understand that the press procedures and activities in question at such parties were not unusual in Moscow.

Mr. Molotov remarked that of course no one had to subject himself to press attention when there was no need to do so, but this was left to one's discretion. He noted that there had been good facilities at the Canadian Embassy reception for the newspapermen, and that some similar facilities would be available at his reception.

The meeting adjourned at 1105 hours.<sup>48</sup>

<sup>48</sup> Pour le communiqué publié conjointement à la fin de la visite de Pearson, voir Canada, Ministère des Affaires extérieures, Affaires Extérieures, volume 7, N° 11, novembre 1955, pp. 282-285.
For the joint communiqué issued at the end of Pearson's visit, see Canada, Department of External Affairs, External Affairs, Volume 7, No. 11, November 1955, pp. 278-281.

536.

DEA/12230-40

*L'ambassadeur en Union soviétique
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in Soviet Union
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

DESPATCH 728,

Moscow, October 14, 1955

SECRET

MR. PEARSON'S CONVERSATION WITH FIRST DEPUTY MINISTER OF CULTURE

On Monday afternoon, October 10, at 3:30 p.m., as you will remember, I went with you to call on Mr. Kaftanov, the First Deputy Minister of Culture. With him, in addition to the Soviet Ambassador in Ottawa, Mr. Chuvahin, and the translator, Mr. Pavlov, were two senior deputies of the Ministry of Culture, Mr. Tverdokhlebov and Mr. Surin, and one or two other officials whose names I did not get.

2. The most signal characteristic of the meeting was the alacrity with which the Russians agreed to all the exchanges proposed. On matters which did not come under the Minister of Culture, Mr. Kaftanov promised that they would be brought to the attention of the authorities concerned and expressed assurance that they would be interested.

3. The exchange of scientists and technicians for instance, Mr. Kaftanov said, was now under the Ministry of Higher Education, which he was sure would be agreeable. The exchange of scientific and technical literature, however, was still under Mr. Kaftanov's Ministry. This kind of exchange was not only possible but highly desirable and in his opinion would be mutually profitable.

4. Mr. Kaftanov did not seem to have the slightest hesitation in endorsing the suggestion for exchange of information on cultural, ethnological, historical, and scientific work in the Arctic regions. Mr. Tverdokhlebov mentioned especially the work which has been done in the Institute in Leningrad on the production of grammars and the development of means of writing the various Arctic languages. Mr. Surin said that some very interesting films on Arctic research had been produced in the Soviet Union and suggested that an exchange of these for Canadian films on the Arctic would be very useful. Arctic sculptors seemed to be prolific in both Canada and the U.S.S.R.

5. When you remarked that the exchange in meteorological information, which had been happy and constructive in spite of political relations, could perhaps, as you had suggested to Mr. Molotov, be further improved and developed in a better political atmosphere, for instance, in the field of ice and flood forecasting, Mr. Kaftanov replied that he considered this very important. It was outside the scope of his Ministry but he would refer the matter to the appropriate officials and the exchange could be arranged in the usual way. To Mr. Chuvahin's suggestion that some kind of convention might eventually be drawn up to cover this matter, you agreed that when there had been time to study the basis of such an exchange, it might be possible to embody the results in a document of some sort.

6. Mr. Kaftanov agreed that sports exchanges of various kinds would be desirable. These matters were handled by the Physical Culture and Sports Committee of the Council of Ministers. He could not foresee any difficulty, however, for as was well known, the Soviet Union sent its athletes to all countries which invited them. Mr. Kaftanov displayed some knowledge of Canadian prowess not only in hockey but in rowing, swimming and other sports. Hockey, they knew from their own experience, was also good training for football players and they had many who were good in both games. In reply to your remarks about the roughness of hockey, some of the officials referred to similar problems in football and agreed that sometimes both games were not as "cultured" as they might be.

7. Mr. Surin returned again to the question of the exchange of documentary films and the possibility of exchanges between our television centres. Mr. Kaftanov agreed that this would be of great interest and seemed to welcome your suggestion to send a television and radio expert to this country. Mr. Tverdokhlebov thought that the exchange of musical records for radio broadcasts would be a good idea.

8. When you remarked in conclusion that you had found the discussion interesting and useful and hoped that it would lay the basis and lead, now that contacts had been established — contacts which could be widened in Ottawa — to real developments, Mr. Kaftanov replied that all your wishes coincided with theirs and that all desired the mutual strengthening of relations between our countries.

J.B.C. WATKINS

537.

DEA/12278-40

*L'ambassadeur en République fédérale d'Allemagne
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*

*Ambassador in Federal Republic of Germany
to Secretary of State for External Affairs*

TELEGRAM 237

Bonn, October 15, 1955

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Repeat London No. 100 (Immediate); Paris No. 67 (Important); Washington No. 1 (Important).

VISIT TO U.S.S.R.: PEARSON-KHRUSHCHEV TALK OCTOBER 11

Following from the Minister, Begins: The two hours talk which I had with Khrushchev and Bulganin on the last night of my visit was undoubtedly the most interesting both on account of the two Soviet personalities involved and the frankness with which Khrushchev in particular put forward the Soviet attitude to such important matters as NATO and the security of Europe. I am having this summary report despatched by Ignatieff at first opportunity on his way back to Ottawa.

2. Khrushchev, who is as blunt and volatile as only a Ukrainian peasant, turned one of the most powerful political figures in the world, can be, came straight to the point before we even sat down. With a CBC microphone pushed in front of him (this was permitted for the first few minutes of our visit along with photographers and a few journalists) he asked me why Canada does not leave NATO, which he described as an aggressive alliance and a direct threat to Russia and to peace. I replied that I had talked myself hoarse (I had indeed almost lost my voice at the time) trying to convince people in Moscow that NATO was purely defensive and had no aggressive intent whatever. I added for good measure that I had also been trying to convince them that the Americans were fine people, good neighbors with no thought of attacking anybody. Khrushchev also said that he hoped I was convinced by my visit that there was no economic or food crisis in the Soviet Union. It was typical of wishful thinking in the West who were looking in vain for Soviet weaknesses. I said that I doubted any such reports of crisis and that my own experience would suggest there was lots of food!

3. After this characteristic outburst and after we had taken our places around a table I tried to direct the discussion into more orderly channels by referring to my talks in Moscow and the communiqué. Khrushchev said that he had been kept informed and regarded the communiqué as acceptable though disappointingly vague and non committal. From their point of view perhaps they cannot expect more at this stage in Canada-Soviet relations, he added somewhat revealingly.

4. This gave me an opening to say that Canada is increasingly conscious of the fact of being between two powerful neighbors; with the United States we are on very friendly terms of good neighborhood and we hope to be on better terms with the Soviet Union also. Khrushchev replied that Russia never had conflict with Canada and that he could not foresee any conflict arising. He did not neglect to point out, however, we were on the air route to United States cities if war was ever forced on them. In that tragic contingency he reminded me they also had buttons which could be pushed with devastating effect.

5. In reply to my remark that Canada cannot feel comfortable unless Soviet-United States relations are also satisfactory, Khrushchev agreed adding that he saw no special grounds for concern at present; things would work out all right he thought. People like McCarthy who flourished on the line that the Soviet Union wanted war had been discredited. I emphasized that no right thinking people in the United States and especially the President even considered any aggressive attack on anybody; that much of the news from the United States reaching Europe and the USSR was misleading as to United States intention and United States feelings. The sensational was shouted too much which distorted the picture so far as the United States was concerned. One of the advantages of visits was the opportunity to dispel misapprehensions and remove misunderstandings and distortions.

